
Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: The government introduces motions like this the better to order the progress of business in this House and to see that its program of legislation will be passed in a reasonable period of time. The government also introduces motions like this as a response to the opposition attempt to run parliament according to their schedule. As I said earlier, as long as they attempt to foreclose the program of legislation put forward by the government with attempts at closure by delay, repetition, and obstruction, we will respond with motions such as this.

If this motion passes there will be four more days in this second reading debate. There will then be a long period in committee where the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), myself, and our officials will go to explain the legislation. Other people in the country can come before the committee and put forward their views. There will also be a long debate at the report stage, and a long debate at third reading.

I will start taking the opposition seriously, when they talk about closure and time allocation, when they show me by their actions that they are willing to take a responsible approach to the business of this House.

● (2030)

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I might say, as a member who, since 1972, has been sympathetic to gun control and who has introduced two private members' bills in the House on the subject, that I am disappointed, disillusioned, and literally amazed at the stupidity of the government.

There can be no question about the importance of the legislation. It affects four million people in Canada and a stimulating debate has developed up to this point between those interested in the shooting sports and those interested in increasing public safety. The government's refusal to allow this debate to proceed uninterrupted is a knee-jerk reaction of an administration which does not understand the sensitivity inherent in legislation of this type. To impose closure thus soon is running the risk of losing sympathy for the legislation in terms of the public debate which is going on in the country at large. As one who has long supported the principle of gun control this action brings no credit on those who have advocated such a position.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) talks about the "closure of delay" and the "closure of obstruction". He has demonstrated clearly the closure of his own mind on the subject. It is absurd to try to pass peace and security legislation in the absence of a consensus, without support in the country, and the government is throwing this support away.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has told us he would like to see the gun control provisions severed from this package. I had reservations about that proposition because this is not just a gun control bill, it is a wiretapping bill, a dangerous offenders bill, a crime inquiry bill, and a parole bill. We had serious reservations with regard to the Conservative position on that aspect. At this point, however, we feel we ought to rethink that attitude in the light of the decision the government has taken.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has told us he would like to get the bill into committee so that witnesses might be called. I have been waiting for a commitment from him and his supporters that closure will not be imposed in the committee as well. I should like a commitment that a long and full debate will be possible with regard to this subject in committee and that we shall not find the Liberal members on that committee dictating to us how many witnesses will be called and how much time we can spend listening to their views.

The motion we are considering today is an indication of the fact the government has lost touch with the constituencies. I can understand the frustration of the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) when he said that members of the opposition were always on their feet talking while Liberal backbenchers do not have that chance. One justification for closure is the opportunity it provides for Liberal backbenchers to contribute. I can understand their frustration, having to sit there in silence or, worse, pound their benches after some of the nonsense we hear from over there. They want to get up once in a while and show they are alive.

The mail every member has received on both sides of the peace and security issue is overwhelming. There has been so much response that I cannot conceive any sensitive government cutting off debate.

Mr. Allmand: When are you going to move to adjourn the House?

Mr. Leggatt: It is another indication that these people are no longer merely arrogant; they are drunk with power. They are replacing arrogance with a stupidity they used not to show. The government will need all the friends it can get if it wishes to pass the kind of controversial legislation we are considering. It has made a silly, stupid, and arrogant decision to abandon those friends. It will rue the day when it decided there is no longer a place for meaningful debate in the House. To impose closure after such a limited time is a shame. In this party we have had four speakers out of 16. The Minister of Justice said the other day that this was just a debate on the principle. Mr. Speaker, the principle here is whether three million people in Canada will have to register themselves. Could there be a more important principle than that? That is the principle of the gun control provisions, and that is why it is so vital.

An hon. Member: Why don't you get up and move the adjournment of the House again?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Bélanger): Order, please. I think hon. members have enough experience to know that when an hon. member has the floor he must be allowed to speak and be listened to carefully.

[English]

Mr. Leggatt: We oppose this motion because all members should have an unfettered opportunity to make an input on the subject. We should be able to hear the views of members who are concerned on either side. The government is preventing hon. members from getting the advice they need in order to vote intelligently on this matter, and I suggest it will live to regret its arrogant stand.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this debate although it is a very sick motion. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is well known for his views on capital punishment and, while many would disagree with them they are respected because they are sincere. Yet a minister who has such strong views on an element that some people consider has to do with the protection of society comes into the House of Commons with this type of closure motion and, in effect, speaks for a type of capital punishment.

The Solicitor General is against capital punishment for those who commit murder, but now he wants to go beyond the pale and, after literally only 16 hours of debate in the House, has the nerve to stand up and practically refute his sincere belief in the abolition of capital punishment. By coming out for "capital punishment" on this bill, Mr. Speaker, that is what he is doing.

I thought that all of the April fool jokes came early in the day, Mr. Speaker. If I did not know better I would say that the motion before us today is one of the sickest April fool jokes that has been perpetrated in the House of Commons in many a year. One hon. member on that side a while ago asked what Bill C-83 was for. It is entitled "an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime". Is it not a sick April fool joke, when talking about a bill to protect Canadian society, to have the government gag the representatives of Canadian society?

The subject matter of the bill is protection against the perpetration of violent and other crime, but what is the most violent parliamentary crime, Mr. Speaker? It is parliamentary rape. It is parliamentary closure. This is a form of parliamentary rape, and I am not going to be raped by those government eunuchs over there!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: While the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may say that backbenchers on all sides are nobodies—and we can debate that—I never thought I would hear the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) promulgate his theory of parliamentary democracy by, in effect, ending parliamentary debate. This confirms that he shares the opinions of his boss, the prince from Pierreland, that he believes not only in parliamentary nobodies but in verbal eunuchs. That is what he wants to do, Mr. Speaker; he wants to cut off debate.

I had thought that some of the backbenchers on the other side of the House would have spoken to this motion. As my hon. House leader said this afternoon, having presented some well reasoned statistics, after only 16 hours of debate there have been 11 government members—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Where is your House leader now?

Mr. Nowlan: Would the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) just restrain his empty vessel. My grade six teacher told me many years ago that it is the empty vessel that makes the most sound. I know he is not fully empty but only half empty. Be that as it may, there have been 11 government members, 11 Conservative members, four NDP members, and four Social Credit members who have spoken in this debate. I agree with what the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) said, that—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): A point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the reason I am getting up is that I have two points of order really. One is to ask the hon. member which member he pointed to when he was talking about the House leader; my other point of order is tell him that if he keeps his mouth closed he will never get into any trouble.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I hope you do not take that time away from me but instead add another minute or two for such an irrelevant comment. The Solicitor General talked earlier this evening about government time and the orderly conduct of government business. How many Canadians know that we are now on the 276th day of the first session of this parliament after the election of July 8, 1974? This is the longest session of Parliament in our history. We have been in session over a span of three years, yet after only 16 hours of debate the government has the temerity to muzzle, gag, and throttle the representatives of the Canadian people on a matter affecting all Canadians.

In closing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —I should like to say, as others have said before me, that while the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) and the government House leader may be in favour of "muzzlitis"—and bringing in closure four times this session must be quite an uneasy record that the government will have to defend—may I say in all seriousness that with no commitment from the other side about what will happen to the number of people who will sit on the committee, and with no commitment that there will not be closure in committee, this type of closure is not only closure against members on all sides, including government backbenchers who have spoken equally with us up to today, but closure against all Canadians, and that is what is going to be resented by all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal club or muzzle has been wielded for the fourth time, but the second time within a month. The first time it was to impose a new tax distribution of medical costs between Ottawa and the provinces since no agreement had been concluded between the various governments and today because Bill C-83 amending the Criminal Code is extremely complex and difficult. This bill is thus giving rise to strong popular pressures against the government and this is why the closure has again been moved.

According to our rules, Mr. Speaker, there are three procedures to regulate the proceedings of this House: Firstly, under rule 75A, requiring the unanimous consent of the House or the parties; secondly under rule 75B, requiring the majority and thirdly under rule 75C which provides for unilateral action by the government which lays down the law for lack of a consensus or a majority.

After some very cheap consultations, the government has jumped immediately to take unilateral action and they are forcing their will upon Parliament by using Standing Order 75C and imposing the closure of debate. What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? In fact, 28 members have spoken on second reading of Bill C-83 in the House, which represents a percentage of 10.6 per cent of the members to have spoken on Bill C-83, the bill dealing with gun control. Surely 10 per cent does not amount to abuse, and no Canadian will accept the government's argument that members on both sides of the House have abused when only 10 per cent of them have risen to speak on this legislation. No Canadian will accept this argument.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Roy (Laval): You will speak in committee.

Mr. Fortin: —I would ask the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) to shut up. He should have risen before. Secondly, 11 Liberal members have spoken on the legislation, 11 Progressive Conservative members have also spoken, as well as four NDP members and three Social Crediters. That means that as many Liberals as Progressive Conservatives have spoken on the legislation. Therefore the argument of the Liberals who want to muzzle the Progressive Conservatives is absolutely senseless. The two parties have had an equal number of speakers. The NDP have had 11 and we, the Social Crediters, have had only three or four, half the number of Liberals or Conservatives.

Mr. Speaker, I say the federal Liberals behave exactly like their provincial counterparts in Quebec, and I draw the attention of colleagues from other provinces. In Quebec, we have a premier who gets a kick out of dividing people through fear of the PQ. He thus obtains the unanimity in the National Assembly. In Quebec, there is no majority any more, there is no longer any democracy. There is a dictatorship that works, a system of full patronage and here there are attempts to divide the opposition the better to reign. Mr. Speaker, that is the prevailing situation. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) could have risen on Standing Order 75C if the opposition had been filibustering this debate, but such is not the case.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals cannot therefore accuse the Conservatives nor the NDP nor the Crediters of listing too many speakers. They cannot accuse the opposition because they have had as many speakers as the opposition. As a matter of fact, 40.6 per cent of the speakers during the second reading debate, which is a discussion on principales, were Liberals and we agree that the Liberals should have the floor, Mr. Speaker, we are not opposed to that, we want backbenchers on the government side to stand up, but we request the same right for the opposition. We request the right to express ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, when opposition or public opinion begins to be felt, when the opposition begins to speak up and when the public gets interested, that is when they are gagged.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): What are you doing!

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, that shows one thing: the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) never stops interrupting me, he is not brave enough to stand up but he is enough of a coward to interrupt me.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp)—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I quite understand that the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) is in the running for the leadership, but when one starts calling others "cowards", Mr. Speaker, that is going a bit too far. I demand that the hon. member for Lotbinière treat the others as they do him. I will not allow being treated so shabbily. I demand that he withdraw his words.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. If the word "coward" was spoken, then I did not hear it. If it was uttered, I admit that it is harsh, strong, but I did not hear the word the hon. member has just used.

An hon. Member: That is what he said.

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I want the hon. member to understand me well. As I did not hear the word, I shall take his question as notice, and we can look at Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): It is a matter of personal privilege. If you did not hear the word, then I feel that tomorrow will be too late because the words will have been consigned to Hansard. I request that the hon. member withdraw his words immediately. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) knows himself what he said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member knows full well that when the Speaker does not hear or understand the words that are spoken, he can reserve the right to pass judgment the next day after having read Hansard.

The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) invokes Standing Order 75C today, that proves two things: the first, that he does not have the leadership required to conduct negotiations in the House leading to democratic debates. He has no leadership. Mr. Speaker, I was parliamentary leader for three years myself. I knew two other parliamentary leaders before the present one and Standing Order 75C was never used for one reason: the negotiations took place. Mr. Speaker, we have the worst President of the Privy Council we have ever had. When he sees we are unable to discuss, he simply imposes his law.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Lévis on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, if you did not hear what the hon. member for Lotbinière said about me, I think you have just heard what he says about the President of the Privy Council, the leader in this House. Mr. Speaker, allow me to go on with my question of privilege, because I have a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member probably did not like the words of the hon. member who has the floor but there is nothing unparliamentary in what he said.

The hon. member for Lévis on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to the House that, on a personal question of privilege, if we blame people for talking too much, if we say we must muzzle the House, as the hon. member now seems to be trying to prove, I think he is the one who should be muzzled for all the nonsense he is saying.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. the Hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am listening very carefully to these comments. However, despite the good will showed by the hon. member for Lévis, I have the strong feeling that the hon. member for Lotbinière only spoke the truth.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, if the President of the Privy Council resorts to Standing Order 75C, it shows that there is no leadership whatsoever left in the House, and that each time a legislation must be passed, the House is muzzled.

Moreover, the President of the Privy Council clearly indicates that he has no more confidence—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The time allowed to the hon. member is over.

The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik).

[English]

Mr. Cafik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had precisely ten minutes under the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. The hon. member for Lévis found ways to interrupt me, biased ways to prevent me from speaking. I claim my right to speak ten minutes like anyone else.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The Chair did allow for the interventions and all things considered, the hon. member for Lotbinière was allowed his ten minutes.

I recognize the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik).

[English]

Mr. Cafik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I gather from the—

Mr. Fortin: I am rising on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I have the highest respect for the Chair and I believe that in the past the Chair has given evidence of its great familiarity with the Standing Orders of the House of Commons and I think that today's ruling by the Chair was fair.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke a while ago and said candidly what I thought. I was interrupted on exactly four occasions, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I have already given my ruling by pointing out to the hon. member that, all facts considered, his ten minutes were up, and I stand by that.

[English]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the third time that you have recognized me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I think the opposition has made a very valid point in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I do not think it relates to the use of 75C but I do think it is important that we get some kind of understanding that, at the committee stage, we have a very serious opportunity to deal with this highly emotional subject matter that is of importance to all the people of this country.

● (2100)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Business of the House

Mr. Cafik: My understanding is that by moving it to the committee more quickly there will be that kind of opportunity.

Mr. Paproski: Don't you believe it!

Mr. Cafik: Just a moment. I am saying that I have not heard—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. It being 9.02 p.m., the time provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under Standing Order 75C has expired.

The motion is now before the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Read the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Read the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Sharp) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, since the House is in such an amiable mood I have another suggestion to make. It will be recalled that when I announced the business for today and tomorrow, I included as the first order of business second reading of Bill C-92 dealing with prisoners of war. Because of the hour at which we have arrived, I was a little afraid that we might not reach that item before ten o'clock. Therefore there have been discussions among House leaders. There is an agreement, I understand unanimously, to take the second reading of Bill C-92 now without further debate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the government House leader. We are in agreement with what I think is a very commendable move on all sides of the House. I just want him and others to know that we put the plight of veterans much higher than the necessity for closure on Bill C-83.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the government House leader is correct. We gladly agree.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, we are in full agreement with the suggestion put forward to the House by the President of the Privy Council. This proves that when the government introduces good legislation to help the poor, especially those who require it most, we always go along.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members should understand that, despite the lateness of the hour, the House is still dealing with Routine Proceedings. If the House were to deal with this measure now and put the motion and have passage of the motion without debate, the necessary steps would have to be taken with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR AND THEIR DEPENDANTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan) that Bill C-92, to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MOTION RESPECTING COMPLETION OF DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The House is now still engaged in the conclusion of Routine Proceedings, specifically, motions. Earlier this day the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) gave indication of his intention, with the consent of the House, to move a motion respecting the business of the House for Monday and Tuesday, namely, debate on the Electoral Boundaries Commission reports, at which time the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) raised a point of order.

The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Penner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seek your indulgence and that of all hon. members to raise a serious and pressing point of order with reference to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Ontario which was tabled on February 27 by Your Honour in this House. I raise the point of order at this time because, in my view, it must be considered by Your Honour prior to the debate which is to take place on Monday and Tuesday of next week, if in fact that comes about.

My point of order is that this document cannot properly be tabled and considered because the commission has failed to comply with the reporting provisions of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. The Commission has not complied to the extent that it has not included reasons justifying the recommendations as required by the act I have mentioned.

I would draw your attention to section 2(1) of the act and the definition therein contained of the word "Recommendation" which states:

> "Recommendation" with respect to a recommendation set forth in the report means a recommendation that is justified by a reason therefor.

It is the last phrase, Mr. Speaker, which I wish to stress, "a recommendation that is justified by a reason therefor." The section of the act I have quoted was a fairly recent amendment introduced in this House by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). It was a wise and useful amendment simply because when objections are filed, as they have been in large numbers, members quite naturally want to be relevant in debate, and in order to do so they must find specific reasons stated justifying the recommendations. Otherwise members have nothing before them upon which to base what should be cogent and pertinent comments.

Now, Sir, if I may, let me draw your attention to the Ontario report and let us see exactly in what way the commission has failed to abide by the terms of the act. On page three, we find Schedule B, purporting to be that part of the report complying with the requirement of the act as contained in the definition I have just read. The title of Schedule B is "Reasons for the Original Proposed Boundaries". Immediately we are confronted with error No. 1. The report which ought to be tabled by Your Honour is not that which contains the original proposed boundaries. It must be the report which has followed the public hearings the commission is required to hold.

Let us suppose for a moment that in the title to Schedule B the word "original" were simply deleted. Would the commission then have met its legal obligations? The answer, I submit, is categorically, no. What has the Commission said in Schedule B? They have done no more than paraphrase for us the language of the very law passed by parliament. In what way does that constitute the justification which parliament has demanded from the commission?

On page four, the commissioners, in this document which purports to be their report, go on simply to tell us what they have done. They say, for example, that all of the non-urban electoral districts in Northern Ontario are below quota. I submit that this statement is factually incorrect, but more seriously, and more pertinent to this point of order, the commissioners have made no effort whatsoever to offer any reason in support of their recommendations.

Consider, for a moment, what they have proposed for Northern Ontario—a reduction of the present level of representation from 12 seats to 11. This is a recommendation which has caused deep-seated dismay across the entire region of Northern Ontario. Where is the justification for this particular recommendation?

Mr. Speaker: I am reluctant to interrupt the hon. member but I do want to restrict him from talking about the merits of the report itself. We must be clear about what is taking place. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has put down a notice which would legalize the calling of this question tomorrow. The minister has now sought the consent of the House to deal with it today, not tomorrow. Before the consent of the House could be sought, the hon. member raised a point of order which has something to do with whether or not the motion could be dealt with at all by the House. I respect that. But I want to confine him strictly to the technicality of whether or not the House can deal with the report.

Mr. Penner: I appreciate very much what you have just said, Mr. Speaker. My reference to Northern Ontario was designed to illustrate the point I was about to make. A serious recommendation is made but it is supported by no reason or reasons whatsoever.

I hasten to add that in this proposed redistribution Ontario is gaining seven more seats than it has at present. All of these, of course, will go to the more populous southern part of the province, and understandably so. But why has the commission found it necessary to subtract one from Northern Ontario? My point is that it has offered no reason for such an important decision. However, in keeping with Your Honour's ruling, I do not wish to dwell on that point. I will conclude by simply reiterating my point of order.

The commission is required by statute to present reasons justifying its recommendations. This document fails to offer reasons and should, therefore, not have been tabled. Hence I contend, with respect, that it would be out of order to proceed with any debate regarding the distribution of seats in Ontario. The debate to take place next week, should it take place, and should Your Honour accept the point I am making, would have to exclude any discussion of the Ontario report.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on this point of order because I strongly believe that the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) has presented a very valid argument. His submission is strengthened by the fact that the Electoral Boundaries Commission has, in every province with the exception of Ontario, provided reasons to support the recommendations. Thus the commission as a whole recognizes the obligation to provide those reasons. However, in the case of Ontario the commission did not do so.

The second point I would make is that this argument is not exclusively a technical argument. I think the requirement to provide reasons for recommendations not only applies to this particular aspect of the report that has been tabled in the House or given to Your Honour, but is a requirement to provide that reasons existed for the original report that was given public debate and participation. The reasons did not exist at that particular point either. Therefore it appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the report is not only invalid and in fact fails to be a report under the law at this particular time, but it was so even prior to its arriving in this House.

I contend that the very essence of the function performed by the commissioners was to make recommendations as to the disposition of proposed new ridings. When one looks at the act giving rise to this commission, "recommendation" itself is defined in the interpretation section, section 2(1). A recommendation is defined as one that contains a reason to justify it. If there is no justification, then there is no recommendation, because a recommendation itself is defined to be that which contains within it a justification for a recommendation.

I therefore contend that there is in fact no recommendation whatsoever in the report of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Redistribution Commission. If that is true then you have withdrawn the very essence of the report, the very thing that gives it meaning, the recommendation itself. If those recommendations fail to exist, I find it extremely difficult to contend that the report in fact exists. I maintain that when you withdraw the essence of it, you have withdrawn the very thing itself. The report therefore does not exist, and it cannot be dealt with by the House of Commons if it is not here.

I make one other point, Mr. Speaker. The requirement for reasons is one that appears to be fully understood and recognized by Mr. Castonguay, the representation commissioner. On April 26, 1974, at the privileges and elections committee, there was in fact extensive discussion with the representation commissioner respecting a proposed amendment that would require these reasons. At that time the commissioner indulged in quite a lengthy discussion, and indicated to the committee that if such recommendations required reasons it would make eminent sense that those reasons would not only have to be present in the report to be tabled in the House of Commons but, by the same token, should be present prior to the public hearings.

That particular amendment was carried, Mr. Speaker. It was carried in this House. It was an amendment specifically requiring reasons in order to qualify it as being a recommendation in the first place. So I maintain that at that time the representation Commissioner was fully aware of this legal requirement, and in the case of Ontario for some peculiar reason that requirement was not met.

I would further argue that lack of reasons justifying recommendations in the case of Ontario puts Ontario members at a considerable disadvantage when discussing this alleged report. In the case of all other members of parliament from other regions of Canada, they are entitled to see those justifying reasons for the recommendations and thus address their remarks to that which gives rise to the recommendations. In the case of members from Ontario who wish to address themselves to the report of the redistribution commissioners, they are denied that which gives rise to the recommendations themselves. Therefore our position as members of parliament has been somewhat eroded in relation to other members in light of any discussion that would take place in respect to this alleged report. I therefore conclude that this report is non-existent and therefore cannot be dealt with by the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we must keep clear in our minds that we are still on routine proceedings. What has been sought at this point is the necessary unanimous consent of the House to deal with a motion during today's proceedings, as opposed to tomorrow when it could be called. It is important that the Chair be advised in advance of this point of order, and I have been grateful for the participation of the two hon. members. The Chair has been greatly assisted in any event by the opportunity to consider this matter overnight.

Since we have never really got to the point where I could ask for unanimous consent, and it is now approaching ten o'clock with Questions on the Order Paper still to come, perhaps the House would permit the Chair to reflect on this matter overnight, and when the matter comes before the House on motions tomorrow, as it normally would without the necessity for consent, it may be possible for the Chair to give some indication of its views at that time. I might say that it does not seem to me that there is a great deal of difficulty about the facts leading up to the argument. What is in doubt is the effect of those facts from a procedural point of view. Perhaps all would benefit if the Chair were to reflect on the matter overnight.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is a first, dealing with the last item on routine proceedings as the last item of business on a government day. The following questions will be answered today: 1,521, 3,530, 3,789, 3,839, 3,840, 4,072, 4,610, 4,613, 4,775, 4,912, 4,922 and 4,940.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO MONTREAL

Question No. 1,521—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the Prime Minister's trip to Montreal on or about January 31, 1975 (a) what exact means of transportation was used (i) was it government-owned (ii) what was the total cost to the taxpayers (b) how many persons accompanied the Prime Minister at public expense and what were all their names?

2. Was one of the items on the Prime Minister's Montreal agenda an address to a Liberal Party Fund Raising Dinner, and, if so, did or will the Liberal Party pay a portion of the cost of the trip and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, how much and on what date?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. (a) The Prime Minister travelled by official automobile. (i) Yes. (ii) In addition to gasoline, chauffeur's expenses and overnight accommodation, $53.55 (b) The following members of the Prime Minister's staff were in Montreal during the period January 31—February 1: P. O'Neil, Miss M. Macdonald, G. Dufault, R. Coleman, J. Moore, Miss A. McCabe; travelling expense totalling $551.23.

2. Yes. The visit also included official meetings with the Premier of Quebec.

P.E.I. COMPREHENSIVE DEVELOPMENT PLAN—PHASE 2

Question No. 3,530—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the Public Accounts for 1974-75 on the Fund for Rural Economic Development (a) for each programme and project in PEI under the category of Social Development, what (i) was the approved programme (ii) were the actual expenditure figures (iii) are the reasons for the difference between each approved programme and actual expenditure figures (iv) happens to those funds which were not spent in the fiscal year for which they were approved (b) what are the reasons for the expenditures under Resource Adjustment and Development exceeding the approved programme figure?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

	(a) (i) Approved Program	(a) (ii) Expenditure	(a) (iii) Revised Program
Education Capital Funds	3,790,772	2,609,108	2,752,772
Adult Education and Related Training	611,920	478,226	507,920
Housing	1,207,241	1,889,618	2,064,241

Total	7,213,280	5,404,466	5,844,280

(a) (iii); (b) Amendment No. 3 to the First Memorandum of Implementation (Schedule "A" to the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan Agreement) provided that "... the Ministers may, by agreement expressed in writing, in order to meet the program implementation requirements during the period April 1, 1973 to the end of the first phase of the Plan and on the recommendation of the Joint Federal-Provincial Advisory Board established under Article 13 of the Agreement, from time to time re-allocate, among the components of the Summary of Cost Sharing, the funds to be provided by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and by the Province. For the purposes of this sub-article, "the Ministers" means the Premier of the Province and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion of Canada—" Such a reallocation of the components of the Summary of Cost Sharing did take place with respect to fiscal year 1974-75. The original and revised allocations are shown below for each program:

	Approved Program	Expenditure	Revised Program
Development Grant	3,146,000	3,146,000	3,146,000
Resource Adjustment and Development	5,640,579	7,000,783	7,401,579
Social Development	7,213,280	5,404,466	5,844,280
Resource Supporting and Commercial Services	3,116,030	2,374,925	2,637,030
Implementation	987,862	969,576	1,074,862
Total	20,103,751	18,895,750	20,103,751

(a) (iv) The First Memorandum of Implementation provided for maximum FRED contributions of $81,937,000 during the first phase of the agreement (which was terminated on March 31, 1975). An examination of expenditures reported in the response to Question No. 3,531 will show that the federal government has contributed 99.2 per cent of that maximum.

JOB CREATION DURING OLYMPIC GAMES

Question No. 3,789—Mr. Matte:

Will jobs be created for the duration of the Olympic Games and, if so (a) how many (b) what type (c) for what length of time (d) at what cost?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): We are unable to provide any specific information on job creation in this regard during the 1976 Olympic Games as we are not involved in the actual management of the Games. However, COJO advises us that: (a) approximately 30,000 temporary employees will be hired for the duration, including some 10,000 students from Quebec, thousands of volunteers and staff supplied by the Department of National Defence; (b) apart from supervisory positions, most of the jobs will be for unskilled labour, i.e. hostesses, guides, ticket collectors, program distributors, ushers, cleaners, messengers, etc.; (c) the jobs will last from three weeks to six months, the average being about six weeks; (d) we were unable to obtain an estimate of the cost of this manpower. The actual cost will, of course, not be known until after the Games.

P.E.I.—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,839—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, have measures been taken since the Plan's inception to develop the capability in PEI for processing of specialized fish products and, if so, what have been the results?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: Yes. Measures have been taken to develop capability in the processing of specialized fish products such as chowders, smelts, fish cakes, breaded oysters and clam strips. In addition, measures to improve merchandising methods such as new packaging techniques for lobster and development of retortable pouches and improved labeling are in advanced stages.

[Mr. McIsaac.]

P.E.I.—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,840—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, is one of the objectives of the sectoral strategy to provide longer-term employment for workers in fish processing plants and, if so (a) what measures have been or will be implemented (b) on what date (c) at what cost?

2. Has any evaluation been made of such measures under Phase 1 and, if so (a) what were the conclusions as to their effectiveness (b) what changes in emphasis will result under Phase 2?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows:

1. Yes. (a) Measures taken have been: the production of new products, harvesting of fish over a longer period, and encouragement of more storage. New measures may be taken in the future. (b) These measures are part of the program started in 1969, and the date of adoption of any part of a measure by an individual fisherman is not recorded. (c) Records of the cost of each project do not allow for the breakdown of cost as requested.

2. (a) The measures were of limited effectiveness because of circumstances beyond the control of the implementing agency such as the finite quantity of fish available and the number of fishermen involved. (b) The objective is the same but changes in emphasis in the strategy are being discussed with the province.

DREE INCENTIVE GRANTS

Question No. 4,072—Mr. Brisco:

1. From 1969 to date, how many DREE incentive grants to industries in (a) British Columbia (b) the rest of Canada were made in respect of (i) new industries (ii) expansion of existing industries and, in each case, what were the amounts?

2. (a) How many such industries failed (b) what amounts were lost?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: The information requested in both questions is provided in the following table:

RDIA offers made and accepted between April 1, 1969 and September 30, 1975

		Number of Net Accepted Offers	Amount of Incentive Grants ($000's)
1. (a)	In British Columbia

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CRIMINAL CODE—SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF OTHER METHODS OF APPLYING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the past few months the Canadian public has once again been subjected to a flood of articles, editorials, commentaries, and so on in the media on the issue of capital punishment. For nearly a decade this debate has been raging, and I believe I reflect the sentiments of many in hoping that this present parliament will resolve the issue of capital punishment once and for all. In numerous articles that I have had the opportunity to read on the subject it seems to me that those who favour abolition of the death penalty are making a concerted effort, in some instances almost a blind crusade, to cloud the issue by attempting to make people believe that those who favour capital punishment are neanderthal, blood thirsty, mindless individuals.

It certainly is a shame when those with so-called humanitarian motives act in the shabbiest of political manner. They are in many ways bankrupt humanitarians. It leads one to wonder why there is this effort to discredit those who call for the enforcement of capital punishment. It probably stems from the fact that an overwhelming majority of Canadians favour retention. There is a real tragedy when an elitist majority led by the Liberal government manipulates the system to effect its own will irrespective of public opinion.

When one looks at the results of surveys such as the one I conducted in my constituency of Winnipeg South Centre, where 90 per cent of all the respondents were in favour of having the death penalty made applicable to anyone convicted of premeditated murder, one awakens to the sobering fact that the government has no interest in the will of the people. The use of power to thwart the public will is another step in the erosion of parliament.

It is interesting to note that the Solicitor General's office conducted a survey on capital punishment, as a result of which 80 per cent supported the death penalty. The government is so concerned about eradicating the ultimate penalty that it even squandered the taxpayers' money to hire a consultant to report that the public is blood thirsty about hanging. In a report to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), one Mr. Fattah reported:

Uninformed or irrational public opinion is not a justification for bringing back the noose.

In the same report this abolitionist goes on to give negative connotations to those who support the death penalty. I suppose one could say, what else did you expect him to say? After all it goes back to the old adage of don't bite the hand that feeds you. I contend an elitist minority is at work; an elitist minority that forgets that since 1967 the murder rate has increased 100 per cent.

To suggest that 90 per cent of the people in my constituency, or indeed a sizeable majority of Canadians are blood thirsty and irrational, is indeed an arrogant and elitist attitude. An overwhelming majority of Canadians favour the retention of capital punishment because they want to live in a society not constantly plagued with fear and rising crime. The government has been negligent in enforcing the laws of the country and people are no longer going to accept such a law approach to law enforcement.

In recent years the government has built up a theory on which much policy has been based, that the rights of the criminal are more important than the rights of society. This has brought about a backlash in public opinion even to the point where one Liberal Senator, Louis Robichaud, said:

I have a fourteen year old daughter. If anyone rapes and kills my daughter and justice doesn't take care of that man, I will do it myself.

Senator Robichaud is by no means a wild-eyed redneck, and neither are the majority of law-abiding citizens who want à return to common sense and a healthy respect for the law.

The death penalty represents the final right of organzied society to rid itself of those who will not conform in any respect to civilized life. Such people are a minority and are not to be confused with others who may take life in a moment of passion. There are abolitionists who would lead people to believe that those who favour retention want blanket capital punishment. That is a falsehood. The vast majority of Canadians are normal citizens who find the death penalty a distasteful subject to discuss. Common sense warns them that the removal of the final right of society to carry out the supreme punishment tells the criminal that, no matter how horrible and vicious the crime, his own life will be protected by a society for which the criminal has no respect.

In the many letters and phone calls I receive from constituents, they share with me their concerns about being safe and that their children will grow up in a safe society. They fear those individuals best described by the William Gold of the Calgary Herald, when he wrote:

Contemporary society is producing a singularly savage type of animal, entirely lacking in comprehension of, or respect for, the lives of other people. These psychopaths know perfectly well what they are doing is wrong legally and morally, but the act of murder causes them no sense of personal revulsion.

I reject the idea that society seeks vengeance. I call it simple justice and a desire for safety. Most people subscribe to the opening line of an Ontario Provincial Police advertisement which reads:

Let there be more respect for the law.

The government certainly has not subscribed to that notion. The government knows full well it has failed so many times to enforce existing capital punishment laws that abolition is its only way to cease its habit of ignoring the law.

I believe that so far in the course of my remarks I have made it clear I reflect the views of the majority of those who favour the retention of capital punishment. However, many people are saying that if executions are to remain on the books then people should be assured that the latest scientific and medical evidence is used to find an alternate to hanging.

When I presented a motion on February 10 of this year under Standing Order 43 to have the subject of capital punishment referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to find a more humane method of applying capital punishment, I did so because of two overriding concerns; first, the majority of Canadians favour retention; and second, many people consider hanging barbaric.

I did not appreciate the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, in response to a question of mine relating to an alternate method, said that if abolition is not accepted then we could address ourself to the question of how we should destroy these people. His whole attitude seems to be "holier than thou," as if he believed that somehow he might become foul and base if he seriously discussed this matter. I still contend that we must look at this in a sober, realistic manner and come up with an alternative, whether it be the electric chair, the gas chamber, medication, or whatever. A more civilized and efficient manner would help to ease the qualms of those who are repelled by the rope.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in the last few moments of his speech the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) addressed himself to the original question he asked, which is what are the other more humane methods of execution of people who have committed crimes that we should investigate. Surely that is not the issue to which we should be addressing ourselves either in this parliament on in this country.

We should be addressing ourselves to investigating ways in which to protect society against violent crime and to deter others from committing horrible crimes. If members of the House are concerned with finding humane ways of putting people to death, I begin to wonder whether they are not ashamed to agree to capital punishment, because it has not shown itself to be a deterrent in the commission of horrible crimes. As we all know, some years ago in England hundreds of minor crimes were punished by the death penalty, such crimes as pickpocketing or petty theft. The penalty was public execution, during which other pickpockets had the opportunity to make more money and were doing far greater business. But at least society at that time had the courage to have the execution take place in full public view in the hope that it would deter others from committing this type of crime. It was not a deterrent then, nor is it now.

I think the people of this country must decide whether or not society can be protected from terrible crimes by adopting capital punishment, whatever means are used whether by rope or otherwise, whether in public or otherwise, or whether we should hide behind some more humane way of executing people thereby not accepting our responsibility as members of parliament and leaders in this country to execute people who have committed crimes.

I say we only have one justification for capital punishment, that is, to protect society and guarantee to society that there will be no more horrible crimes committed because we execute one or two people by whatever humane method we adopt. All the studies that have been conducted in this and other countries of the world have indicated that there is no perceptible difference in the crime rate whether there is capital punishment or whether there is not, especially so far as such crimes as murder and similar types of offences are concerned.

The hon. member hopes that this debate into which we are about to enter in one or two weeks will resolve once and for all the issue of capital punishment. I do also, and I hope it will resolve it in a way that will show Canada is a leader among the nations of the free world in the humane way in which it treats people and protects its society against violent crimes. I believe we should abolish capital punishment.

INDUSTRY—DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT, MALTON—MEASURES TO SAVE JOBS—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF AEROSPACE POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, last Friday and again this afternoon I directed questions both to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) with regard to the announced lay off of almost 150 workers at the Douglas Aircraft plant in Malton. I also asked the appropriate ministers to state when we can expect an announcement in this House about a comprehensive and sound policy for the Canadian aerospace industry.

I directed these questions to the ministers not only because I am sure all hon. members of this House are saddened by the announcement yesterday by the management of Douglas Aircraft in Malton, Ontario, of the lay offs of 150 workers, but also because of the uncertainty of the preservation and expansion of the aerospace industry in Canada, which not only includes the highly skilled workers in the aircraft plants but also the auxiliary help in research and development, whether it be at those plants, at our universities, or at the National Research Council, where we know many government grants have been frozen.

At one time in Malton, Ontario, there were employed approximately 8,000 workers. In 1972 this was reduced to 5,000 employees, and we believe that with this present impending lay off beginning tomorrow the workers and staff at the Douglas Aircraft plant will be reduced to a mere 1,200. That makes a reduction of approximately 6,800 workers in 10 years. I think this is a great blow to the present and future of the Canadian aerospace industry.

The current problems at Douglas Aircraft are the result of the cyclical nature of the aerospace industry which is prevalent in many countries, not only because of increased production costs, but especially because of the increase in the cost of aviation fuels brought about by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries since 1972. These additional and unforeseen fuel costs have added to the difficulties which have beset all airlines in the world in the past three years and, of course, resulted in a marked slowdown in orders for new aircraft.

While the people at Douglas Aircraft in Malton, Ontario, are confident of an increase in market demand, perhaps in the next two or three years, unfortunately no viable solution to alleviate the present situation has been forthcoming. The tragedy is that many of the skilled teams of Canadians who worked so ably to create this high technology industry are being dispersed because of the impending lay offs, and when the cycle once again enters an expansionary period much time will be lost in training new personnel.

Another point worthy of note is the fact that Douglas Aircraft Company of Canada in Malton, occupying some two million square feet of space within a confine of 110 acres, has developed into one of the most efficient aircraft parts manufacturing plants in the world. The quality of its product is of the highest order, and its productivity superior even to American aircraft firms. These statements are hard to refute when it is considered that employees' salaries equate with U.S. counterparts, that shipping charges on components sent to California are paid by the firm, and yet the components are still less expensive than those produced locally in California.

I might add that in the past ten years productivity at the Douglas Aircraft plant in Malton has generated $1.1 billion in sales, or about $150 million per year. It would be a pity therefore to lose those export sales, and so many highly trained, skilled workers.

It has been proposed that to save this country's aircraft industry, which includes Douglas, the three major companies, de Havilland, Canadair, and Douglas, should be amalgamated, the new entity to be known as Canadian Aerospace Limited. In this way specialization would be retained, de Havilland being responsible for engineering and development, Canadair for high technology manufacturing, and Douglas for components production, assembly, and possibly flight testing.

The new company would be staffed by Canadians and, at the beginning, could be assisted financially by the U.S. parent of Douglas and, later, through a financial arrangement entered into between the federal government and the consortium of three Canadian aircraft companies.

I mention this possibility for restructuring the Canadian aerospace industry because it is not only important but urgently needed. I hope the federal government, in particular the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce, National Defence, Treasury Board, Supply and Services, and Finance, which have been briefed about this proposal, will continue negotiations with the management of Douglas Aircraft in order to save the 150 jobs and to give Canada a better footing in the aerospace industry.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the hon. member for the concern he showed for the workers affected here and also for the interest he has always had toward the development of the aerospace industry in Canada.

It was necessary that the employees of the Douglas Aircraft Company of Canada Ltd. be sent their notices of dismissal because of the shortage of work at the Malton factory. The company does regret it had to take this measure, following the common efforts put forth by the company and senior Canadian government officers during weeks in an attempt to avoid these layoffs.

In January 1976, the company announced it expected to dismiss 800 to 1,000 employees because of cutbacks in the production of DC 9 and DC 10 aircraft. The move would bring the total number of employees from 1,650 to 650. We are already concerned by the fact that not only would this jeopardize the DACAN project but the layoffs would also threaten the operations of the suppliers of DACAN, and Fleet Industries in particular, where 105 employees out of a total workforce of 385 are now working on the DACAN project.

Following that announcement, meetings were held with representatives of the UAW on February 9, and with Messrs. McDonnell and Reece, on February 12. The meeting with Mr. McDonnell resulted in an agreement to postpone the announced layoff. In the meantime, the people concerned were to examine all opportunities to obtain other contracts for the achievement of the work or find a way to maintain production at its present level.

An interim solution was considered which was to keep about 1,450 employees as a result of stock financing, but it was rejected because it was not practical. At a subsequent meeting between senior officials of the department and Messrs. Sanford McDonnell and John McDonnell on February 24, the lease financing of 10 DC 9 and 50 aircraft to Eastern Airlines was discussed within the GAPP and EDC program. The department agreed to undertake a feasibility study in that regard.

[English]

The lease financing was later expanded to include other airlines and increase the time period. This approach is still being investigated although no specific customer has been identified or definite request received from the company. Because of the depressed state of the entire aerospace industry at home and abroad, no additional work has yet been identified.

The company has advised that lay-off notices will be given to 30 employees on Friday, April 2, effective eight weeks later. It is their objective to carry out a selective gradual reduction of approximately 30 people per week up to a total of 150 maximum by July 15, which is the beginning of their holiday shutdown period. This will reduce total employment to between 1,300 and 1,350 at shutdown time. The lay-off will mostly affect indirect workers in an attempt to keep their overhead rate down. The company is trying to achieve a ratio of one direct to .65 indirect and will probably achieve .65 by July. The company will give us ample warning of any changes, up or down, to the above schedule.

The company said it appreciated the vigorous effort being made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) and the Canadian government, but said corporate responsibility to other employees and shareholders made it necessary to issue the notices.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CAMBODIA—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PROTEST AGAINST VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Miss Bégin) here for this great moment we are going to have in this jammed House of Commons.

A few days ago I opened up the subject of human rights with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) by asking him a question concerning the terrible situation with regard to the violation of human rights in Cambodia. I attempted to go on at that time to discuss the very much related question of Canada's ratification of the United Nations covenant of human rights as an expression of our concern. I opened this question up because of the escalation of brutality toward human beings which we have seen in flagrant cases in Chile and Cambodia, to name but two of the outrageous situations of the violations of human rights in the world today.

I read recently the report of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. It makes chilling reading indeed as a catalogue of primitive brutality committed against Chileans by their own rulers. The report concludes, and I quote:

> Denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, torture and inhuman, cruel and degrading treatment have become a pattern of governmental policies in Chile.

With regard to Cambodia, press reports from that country and neighbouring countries are conclusive in telling us of the mass executions in death valleys of Cambodians, mowed down in a cross-fire of bullets by Khmer Rouge forces. The old and the young are wasting away from starvation, disease, and exhaustion. All of this terrible violation of human rights has been confirmed by western diplomats in Peking. Therefore I ask what we in this country are doing to launch our protest to the United Nations about this violation?

I also ask why it is that, ten years after the U.N. covenant on human rights was passed by the United Nations, in the year 1966, Canada still has not ratified that covenant? There was a federal-provincial meeting last December 11 at which time the federal and provincial governments came to an agreement. Now, almost four months later, the necessary paper work still has not been done. We still have not ratified the covenant.

I received a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) informing me of some of the reasons why Canada has not been able to move. It comes down to the question of one of the provinces being extremely slow in putting its signature on the document for ratification. It makes me wonder why it is in this country we have to be slowed down by constitutional battles in order to express in a formal way our shock and protest at incursions on human rights around the world.

I do not agree that it is an unimportant matter that Canada has not yet ratified the covenant on human rights. Thirty-five countries have done so. I realize that the covenant would only be applicable in countries which have ratified it, but what is necessary is that we get on to a sound course of human conduct by using the charter of the United Nations and the Declaration of Human Rights as a basis of law, and proceed from there to the establishment of an international court for the enforcement of that law. This will require our creating instruments to express the standards and the obligations which countries of the world ought to respect. In other words, action by Canada in this regard would help to raise the moral climate of the world. Surely it is better to keep increasing moral pressure on nations than it is to keep quiet, thus appearing to tolerate the great evils which are taking place.

The final resolution of this matter necessitates the establishment of a universal court of human rights to which individuals could go for redress. Right now only countries can take such action. We have to move forward, as Sean MacBride, the distinguished Nobel Peace Prize winner says, to new ways of thinking, and bring about some form of supernational authority so that the individual can make claims under international law. This brings us right back to our immediate concern today. Canada must express, in the United Nations, its continuing protest against the violation of human rights, particularly in Cambodia and Chile, and expedite the ratification of the covenant on human rights, because it is a scandal that we should have allowed ourselves to be bogged down in our constitutional battles leading to our inability to take that action.

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat at a loss after listening to what has been said by the hon. member. I thought he was sincere in his questioning of the minister the other day, on March 24, on the situation in Cambodia. Tonight he made only passing reference to Cambodia after which he went on to speak of Chile, after which he criticized us for not having signed the human rights covenants. Then he went on to refer to a constitutional debate involving Quebec! As a result I think the House will understand if I found it difficult to follow the precise idea the hon. member had in mind.

With regard to the human rights covenants, which have not yet been signed by Canada, I can tell him that I represented the department at the federal-provincial conference, a meeting which went on very well. I would like the hon. member to reflect upon the fact, that maybe Quebecers somehow felt not very sure of their own rights when participating at the national level, probably because of abrasive statements such as the ones he just made.

I do not intend to speak about Chile; the subject has nothing to do with the question which was addressed to the minister the other day.

The hon. member spoke of Cambodia, and with a good deal of self-assurance he told us that everybody knew about Cambodia executing people on a massive scale—all the diplomats had confirmed it, Peking knew about it, all the journalists knew about it, as well as everybody else. But how did they know? The country has withdrawn into a state of isolation and has virtually cut off contact with the outside world. Canada recognized the present regime in April, 1975, but we have no official diplomatic accreditation to Cambodia. In these circumstances all we could do was to ask our embassy in Bangkok, Thailand, our diplomatic mission closest to Cambodia, to report on the situation there to the extent it is possible for them to do so.

If the case of alleged violations of basic human rights in Cambodia is true, we would have another problem in regard to taking unilateral action vis-à-vis the government of Cambodia. As with any other government, we would be expected to observe the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of another state.

There is one more avenue, albeit somewhat longer term, where we can act.

The hon. member accuses us of not being able to do anything, of being paralyzed because we did not ratify the United Nations covenant of human rights. This does not prevent us from following now the procedures of the United Nations through the agencies that are concerned with such questions.

When individuals, groups or non-government organizations that have direct knowledge of violations submit documents, they are analyzed by the United Nations sub-commission on Human Rights of which we are a member. Our Canadian representative is prepared to consider seriously any report on Cambodia which is communicated by this sub-commission.

To conclude I have a question to put to the hon. member: Why Cambodia and not all the other areas in the communist world or in the Third World where there are violations of the most fundamental human rights?

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.36 p.m.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL PERMIT TO JAN MORCINEK TO AVOID DEPORTATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In past years, the Government has given special consideration to individuals and groups of individuals from abroad in terms of the issuance of special ministerial certificates of acceptance into Canada, many of which were issued to self-proclaimed leftists from Chile who, at the cost of the taxpayer, were flown to this country, put up in Toronto hotels, fed, given spending allowances, clothing, job opportunities and all the other necessities. On the other hand, a 25-year-old Czechoslovakian political refugee, Jan Morcinek, who escaped from the Communist regime, who is currently employed and has all the necessary qualifications and guarantees for citizenship consideration, had his appeal refused by the Supreme Court this week and is being forced to return to Czechoslovakia where he could face imprisonment from five to 15 years. For humanitarian reasons, and for the sake of precedent, therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House instruct the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to issue a special ministerial certificate to Jan Morcinek in order to avoid his deportation.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the terms of the Standing Order, the motion cannot be presented in the absence of unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO METHODS OF PREVENTING VIOLENCE TO COMBAT POLITICAL IDEAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an important and urgent matter.

Given the serious revelations made by former RCMP officer Robert Samson concerning the secret activities of the police to check the political activities of some groups and since strong suspicions remain on the role of that same police in FLQ cells between 1963 and 1970, and in order to fully clarify the actions taken to oppose separatism in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau):

That a special committee of inquiry composed of representatives of all the political parties of this House be created to examine this matter and prevent that violence be considered as a means of fighting political ideas.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—ACCEPTANCE OF LIABILITY FOR WORK PERFORMED IN VIEW OF MISUNDERSTANDING ABOUT FINANCING

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday, the minister stated outside the House—and I am quoting him:

There was a misunderstanding but I would almost say it was deliberate by Lockheed since my negotiators tell me they were given a clear understanding that Lockheed could arrange interim financing.

Is the minister saying that the government is prepared to accept, or does in fact accept, liability for $16 million worth of work which was commenced on the basis of a deliberate misunderstanding as we now know from the facts?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): We have tried to describe that in detail. That there was a misunderstanding is clear. We are now in a contractual or quasi-contractual relationship as described to the House yesterday by the minister responsible for the legal definitions, the Minister of Supply and Services. This has been stated very clearly yesterday by my colleague the Minister of Supply and Services.

● (1110)

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—ACCEPTANCE BY MINISTER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR MISUNDERSTANDING ABOUT FINANCING

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The question is indeed unclear with regard to the obligation. The attitude of the government is the issue. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister this question. Either we are going to do $1 billion worth of business with a company that has misled the government or we are burdened with an incompetent defence minister; that is the choice. Has the Acting Prime Minister asked the Minister of National Defence to confirm that his officials, though conscientious, were misled, or in the alternative is the Minister of National Defence going to take the responsibility he should as a member of the government in regard to this matter and resign?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I neither accept the preamble nor the conclusion.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—JUSTIFICATION FOR CONTINUING NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The Acting Prime Minister never accepts either; that is one of the problems. May I ask him a final supplementary question. If the position of the government is that the situation is the fault of Lockheed—and the government's position is the important thing for us to understand—is the government now going to cut its losses rather than get involved in up to $1 billion with a company that the Minister of National Defence has said has misled the government and which the government has said it does not trust? I ask the Acting Prime Minister to justify this kind of shabby, sloppy business practice.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the negotiations that have been going on for some time has been to re-equip the Canadian Armed Forces with the kind of planes that are necessary to do the job that has been assigned to Canada by NATO.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, we all know and agree with that.

Mr. Sharp: We are continuing these negotiations and I hope my hon. friend agrees with me that they should be successful.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—ROLE PLAYED BY MR. GRANDY IN DECISION TO PURCHASE THE "ORION" AND "LOCKHEED L-1011"

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On Tuesday, as reported at page 12265 of Hansard, the Minister of National Defence indicated, and not surprisingly, that he could give no details on the role Mr. Grandy, the former deputy minister, played in the government's preliminary decisions on the LRPA. Would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce give the House a detailed answer on this question?

[Mr. Richardson.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but since I have not got Hansard in front of me perhaps the hon. member would do me the favour of specifying what the question is.

Mr. McKenzie: The question was, Mr. Speaker: What was Mr. Grandy's involvement as deputy minister with regard to making a decision on the LRPA? Can the minister give us details on that?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, as to the making of the decision, Mr. Grandy had, of course, retired from the department several months before the actual decision was made, so in that sense of the word he had no part in the final decision since he was not in the department at the time. During his period as deputy minister, he would be carrying on the normal functions of that office in relation to the various activities of industry, trade and commerce and related departments in terms of the various assessments that were being made and the whole study leading up to the decision regarding the LRPA. But, as I say, he was not there at the time the decision was made.

Mr. McKenzie: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the former deputy minister also involved in discussions and decisions with regard to the purchase by Air Canada of the Lockheed L-1011? If the minister cannot give a complete answer to this question, I would appreciate a reply from the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Jamieson: Quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that. This occurred a number of years ago, as the hon. member knows, and I would have to make inquiries, but it may be possible that some other minister can answer that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARGENTINA—ASSURANCES FROM NEW REGIME OF FULFILMENT OF TREATY OBLIGATIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government officially recognized the military junta which took over the government of Argentina? If so, may I draw the attention of the House to the assurance given by the Prime Minister on Friday, March 26, as reported at page 12182 of Hansard, that no such recognition would be granted until the new regime in Argentina had given assurances that it would fulfil its treaty obligations. I therefore want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if such assurances have been received from the new regime in Argentina and, if so, in what form, and what was the nature of the commitment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, such assurances were received by a message from the embassy in Ottawa to the Canadian government that the new regime intended to live up to its international intergovernmental commitments.

Quite apart from that fact, we have also, in recognition of that, extended recognition to the new government, as have scores of other countries throughout the world.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If I understand the minister's answer correctly, Mr. Speaker, he is saying that he has this assurance from the Argentina embassy in Ottawa. Has the minister not received any written assurance from that government, either from the Prime Minister of the country or from the minister of foreign affairs? Has the minister any written commitment in respect of discharging the responsibilities which that government has assumed under the treaty, and will he table such a written commitment if he has one?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the message with regard to living up to the international agreements was transmitted on the behalf of the government of Argentina by the embassy in Ottawa. It was not a message that originated in Ottawa, it was a message that was transmitted on behalf of the government of Argentina in the form of a note. It is quite unusual, Mr. Speaker, to table such intergovernmental exchanges. It has not been done in the past. We will look at the matter to see whether in this case there would be any reason to do so.

ENERGY

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF LOSS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a related supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the chairman of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited gave evidence before the standing committee to the effect that we stood to lose in the neighbourhood of $100 million on the Argentina agreement to sell them a CANDU reactor, and since it was possible to estimate the loss under the original agreement it should be possible to estimate what the financial position will be under the renegotiated agreement, would the minister indicate what Canada stands to lose under the renegotiated agreement, or how much have we reduced the $100 million loss? Can the minister give the House that information?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the House that information at this stage. This agreement is before my cabinet colleagues at the present time. I can tell the House that very substantial progress was made by the Canadian negotiating team in their renegotiation of the commercial terms.

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO METHODS OF PREVENTING VIOLENCE TO COMBAT POLITICAL IDEAS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

The serious revelations made by former police officer Robert Samson are so serious that it is beginning to look very much like the Watergate affair. The minister said this week that he asked the RCMP to make an investigation on this subject but sometimes it must be rather difficult to make an objective investigation into and judge one's own case. Would the minister consider the possibility of establishing a special commission to shed light on this matter and prevent the systematic use of violence to fight political ideologies?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in this House earlier this week, we started that investigation to get as many facts as possible with regard to this incident. We have not ruled out the possibility of a further independent investigation if we cannot get all the information we want. This is still a possibility.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Could the minister tell us whether he is aware of the fact that, during other periods, namely between 1963-70 and even after, there were complaints made to his department which are similar to those revealed by police officer Samson.

● (1120)

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, at this time we are not aware of any other incident similar to the one complained of by Mr. Samson, but this will be one of the subject matters of the investigation I began.

ROLE OF FORCE IN RAID ON QUEBEC NEWSPAPER OFFICE—OBTAINING OF WARRANT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Has the minister been able to ascertain if any other police force involved in the raid on the Quebec newspaper, to which reference was made earlier this week, obtained a warrant? Also, did the RCMP play a main, subsidiary or supporting role in that particular incident?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we know the RCMP played a supporting or assisting role in this investigation or raid. I have not yet been able to obtain a report from those who investigated this matter on behalf of my department and therefore do not know yet if a warrant was obtained.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister undertake to report as soon as possible on whether a warrant was obtained as, if no warrant was obtained, even if the RCMP played a subsidiary role, they could be considered as accomplices if they did not act with proper legal authority.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct. The other day I promised to give the House as much information as possible, including information on the point raised.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ILLEGAL ACTS BY FORCE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. As everyone is aware how serious this matter is, will the Solicitor General make an unequivocal statement to the effect that the Government of Canada does not condone in any way such illegal acts and that there is no justification for such illegality.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance to the House. The direction of the government to the RCMP is this: the members of the force are not to act illegally in any way. Mr. Samson alleged that an illegal act had taken place. We shall investigate that, and shall see if there are any incidents of a similar nature.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

APPLICATION OF RESTRAINT GUIDELINES TO STAFF—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN NUMBER OF COMPANIES UNDER CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As the staff of the Anti-Inflation Board of Canada is now almost as big as was the comparable staff operating in the United States at the peak of that country's control operation, although our country is only one-tenth the size of the United States, and as the Anti-Inflation Board is under the control of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, will the acting minister say if the restraint guidelines which apply to other federal government agencies apply also to the Anti-Inflation Board. If so, which guidelines apply and how stringently are they applied?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, just as stringently as necessary, but not so stringently that the board cannot operate.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Anti-Inflation Board now regulates eight times as many companies as the United States board regulated at the height of phase II of the comparable program in that country, does the minister think that the AIB's propensity to regulate more and more firms will continue, or does he think that the rate at which the board will bring firms under control in future will decrease?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the whole question of regulation is at the disposal of the Anti-Inflation Board which is within the purview of the Minister of Finance. The hon. gentleman ought to direct that question to that minister when he returns on Monday.

THE MINISTRY

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my final supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Noting that the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said he was resigning because he felt that his continuation in office would jeopardize the efficiency and value of his department in its work for consumers, and since the acting minister bears a great load on his shoulders in connection with other matters, would the Acting Prime Minister inform the House if it is proposed to appoint a new minister and, if so, when?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say the acting minister is doing an excellent job, but that was not the only consideration. He would not take another ministry. However, I will consult with the Prime Minister and I will tell him how urgently the hon. member thinks another appointment is necessary. I know he would not want to reflect upon the present acting minister.

Mr. Forrestall: I would not bet on that.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY TRANSAIR WILL BE CARRIER TO PROVIDE REGIONAL SERVICE TO WESTERN MANITOBA AND EASTERN SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has arrived at a complete impasse in his negotiations with the province of Manitoba with respect to providing an air service for western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan, would he indicate whether Ottawa is considering going it alone and would one of the solutions contemplated be the offer of the regional carrier Transair to provide a daily jet service in this important area of Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am reviewing the option of going it alone in trying to ensure a service to some of the communities which have been involved in the previous discussions. Now that, as the hon. member says, an impasse has been arrived at, with Manitoba clearly not willing to put in as much money as they had been willing to put in when their own Skywest project was considered, I have had discussions with the communities concerned and I am very conscious of their desires, at least as reflected through certain spokesmen, and the option to which the hon. member refers is certainly one at which I am looking.

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the fact that the service has been suspended for some three years, and in view of the Prime Minister's promise in 1974 that this service would be renewed, can the minister give an assurance that a service would be in place before the busy summer season?

Mr. Lang: I am not sure that I can give that assurance because there are certain complications in terms of the decisions by carriers and decisions by the CTC. But I can tell the hon. member that I consider the matter to be a high priority question and one to which I am giving close attention.

TRADE

REGULATIONS GOVERNING IMPORTATION OF EGGS—SUGGESTION DOMESTIC DEMANDS MET BEFORE CHANGES MADE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On March 25, as reported on page 12136 of Hansard, the minister gave the assurance to the hon. member for Lisgar that he would look into the question which the hon. member raised with respect to the importation of eggs and matters related thereto. My question is founded on the proposal currently before the minister to give exclusive jurisdiction to the Canadians Egg Marketing Agency over importation of eggs to Canada. In view of the inability of CEMA to be able to adequately control its own production to satisfy Canadian needs, and in view of the fact that one Canadian processing plant has already had to close down in Winnipeg because of its inability to get a permit to have eggs brought into Canada, may I ask the minister if he will satisfy himself that the Canadian market demands are satisfactorily met before any changes are made in the jurisdiction which he has over the importation of eggs?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and I have been discussing this matter at some length. The proposal which the hon. member has outlined is being considered, but certainly it is not the only one. I am quite sure we will be able to arrive at an arrangement which will meet the hon. member's concern, namely that the market be dealt with properly. I will certainly assure myself of that and so will the Minister of Agriculture, I am sure, before any decision is made.

EGGS—ASSURANCE OF SUPPLIES FOR BAKERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it his intention to take immediate steps to ensure that Canadian market demands are satisfactorily met and that the breakers' trade is able to get its supplies in order to make sure that the confectionery and bakery trades in Canada are assured of adequate supplies, and will he take immediate steps to ensure that the necessary import orders are granted to the Canadian breakers' trade?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have always said that if the marketing board could not make the proper supplies to the consumer market and the processing market, imports should be allowed into the country. But this is not as easy and as simple as the hon. member makes it sound, because I am told there are ample supplies in Canada. But some of the imports which are being requested at the present time are unwarranted because there are thousands of cases every week taken off the market as surplus and being put into the breaking trade.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PRICE OF GASOLINE SOLD TO FARMERS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the increasing percentage of input costs which energy has been taking with respect to the production of food, and in view of the fact that these costs are ultimately passed on to the consumer, will the acting minister undertake to have the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs investigate reports that the wholesale cost of gasoline to farm distributors is two cents per gallon above the rate at which similar gas is being sold to wholesalers for regular consumption, and if this is the case, will the minister instruct his department to take corrective action?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will look into this as early as Monday.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL CONSIDERATION OF ANGOLAN REFUGEES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he confirm the report that the Prime Minister told some representatives of the Portugese community in Toronto that special consideration—I think he used the phrase "bend the rules"—would be given to the residents or former residents of Angola and Mozambique who are now living in destitution in Portugal with regard to admission to Canada? If such special consideration is contemplated, could the minister tell us the nature of the consideration to be given to them?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the transcript of the comments of the Prime Minister. He expressed sympathy, which I have expressed as well, and he indicated that we would look again, as we have many times, at this situation. However, he told the representatives not to be optimistic in the sense that the Angolans in particular who have been displaced from the former province of Angola have gone to Portugal, of which they are citizens, and the move to come to Canada has been essentially one of economic hardship. We have indicated that we will expedite consideration of applications, particularly from Angolans with relatives in Canada and Portugese applicants with relatives in Canada, but we cannot declare this a refugee or a minority movement. That is the substance of what the Prime Minister indicated to the Portugese community in Toronto yesterday, according to the transcript which I have examined.

Mr. Hees: That is not the way it sounded on the radio this morning.

Mr. Brewin: I put it to the minister that there is a large number—I think about 300,000—of destitute people who have lost their homes and their jobs. We have a large Portugese community in Canada, and it would be consistent with Canada's generous attitude not to qualify refugees in different manners by legalistic phrases, but to admit at least a portion of those people, so that they can join their relatives and friends in Canada, without applying the very strict immigration rules which are generally applied.

Mr. Andras: I tried to explain this to the hon. member and certainly to the Portugese community. First, let me say that we all recognize that the Portugese people who have come here have made very fine Canadian citizens, so we applaud the way they have assimilated into our society. However, the description of the situation the hon. member has given is one I could apply to the people of many countries of the world. There is no question about that.

The Angolans in Portugal are now being helped to settle by the Portugese government. There has been a Canadian contribution of some $300,000 or $500,000 to the Portugese government to assist in that very endeavour, and beyond that I have indicated that we will entertain and expedite applications within the immigration laws which now exist, but we cannot establish the precedent of allowing these kinds of movements on the basis of economic hardship, particularly when we have, unfortunately, considerable unemployment in this country.

AIRPORTS

RUNWAY EXTENSION AT VANCOUVER—REASON FOR MINISTER'S SUPPORT OF NEW RUNWAY WITHIN DYKED PORTION OF SEA ISLAND

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It refers to the Vancouver airport runway extension. In the minister's press release of March 12 he said that a decision will be made in the next few months as to whether environmental or urban penalties will result from the proposed parallel runway. Then, the minister asked that all interested parties present their views to him. However, then the release goes on to say that the minister thinks the better solution is a new runway entirely within the dyked portion of Sea Island. Can the minister explain why he is expressing support for this runway when this particular proposal was not studied by the airport planning committee and in fact was expressly excluded from the study of the airport planning committee?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my expression of preference for the shorter runway within the dyked area was designed to focus attention on what I considered to be the most likely and reasonable alternative. In the course of the study this alternative did emerge more and more as a realistic one, and it certainly did in the eyes of the officials who advise me and who ordinarily judge what is possible and necessary with regard to airport facilities.

It also became apparent that the greatest area of concern which had a real and fundamental basis to it was the interference with the area beyond the dyke, and as a result I thought it better to indicate that this might not be necessary at all in considering another runway for Vancouver.

RUNWAY EXTENSION AT VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF ALL RELATED REPORTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I will have to come back to this on Monday, but the question to the minister now is as follows: on July 9, 1975 at page 7391 of Hansard the then minister of transport, who is now the Minister of the Environment, said all reports on the proposed expansion of Vancouver airport—and that would include that of the airport planning committee and also the environmental study which has been put in by the former minister's department—would be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for full discussion. Can the minister assure this House that the commitment of the former minister will be kept? Can the minister also assure us that in view of the recommendation of the environmental study that there should be no short runway within the dyke, of which the minister just spoke, unless it goes through the proper environmental planning stage, that there will be a referral back to the committee of this House and that the proposals to which he is referring will not be decided upon until it is also subjected to the departmental planning and assessment regulations of the government?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I can assure the hon. member that I will not be trying to rush any decision. I will be allowing for full time for appropriate discussions, but I will decide from time to time on the nature of those discussions and the kind which is, in fact, most appropriate. I will even give the hon. member time to make up his mind about whether he does or does not want some additional facility in Vancouver.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED APPEARANCE OF PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA TO COMMENT ON HIGH COST OF ENERGY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the conflict of opinions which appear to exist between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia, namely, the opposing views held by the premier of Nova Scotia, who is also chairman of the Nova Scotia Power Commission, regarding energy and the exhorbitantly high cost of electric power in Nova Scotia, would the minister invite the premier and his officials who have expertise in the subject to appear before the appropriate House committee as soon as possible, not only to give their views on the subject, but also to try to reach a solution which would ease the crushing burden of the cost of energy on the people of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the premier of Nova Scotia is perfectly able to make that suggestion himself if he wishes to see this matter go forward to the appropriate committee. I do not think it is for me to invite another person to appear before a committee of which I am not a member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on.

Mr. Muir: I thank the minister for his reply, but it indicates his lack of interest in trying to help the taxpayers of Nova Scotia. I realize the finance ministers' meeting is going on at the moment, and from reports emanating from that meeting not much progress is being made. However, I am sure the minister will agree that the minister of finance of Nova Scotia is not an expert in energy and does not profess to be an expert. The premier of Nova Scotia seems to indicate he is an expert on this subject, according to the comments he has made about the minister to whom I am addressing this question.

To clarify the situation, does the minister not agree that it would be in the interests of all concerned, particularly the people of Nova Scotia who have a crushing burden to bear with regard to energy, to excel himself on this occasion and to be kindly by inviting the premier of Nova Scotia to come to Ottawa and discuss the matter?

● (1140)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered that question. The hon. member seems to have overlooked the fact that the federal government is already providing a great deal of assistance to the hard pressed users of energy in Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada—indeed, Canada as a whole—through the compensation program. I can understand the hon. member if he is saying he wants more assistance. I ask him to suggest to me what kind of additional assistance we should be considering at a time of government restraint.

Oral Questions

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

MONITORING OF COMPANIES TO ENSURE FULFILMENT OF COMMITMENTS AT TIME OF TAKEOVER—POSSIBILITY OF PENALTIES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is in relation to his responsibilities for FIRA. Is the government monitoring the degree to which companies that are given approval for a takeover are fulfilling all the obligations they agree to at the time that takeover is permitted?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There is a monitoring process. Since the agency has only been in existence for 18 months or so, it is only now becoming urgent and important to do this monitoring because, normally speaking, the commitments involve an 18 months time span in most cases. We are working it out. There are some difficulties. I am holding discussions with the officials of FIRA to see how the procedure can be improved.

Mr. Gillies: Does the government propose to bring in legislation which will have specific penalties for companies that do not live up to agreements that are given under their commitments at the time the takeover takes place?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, nothing as specific as that is contemplated by me at the present time. However, I would be glad to discuss with the hon. member or anybody else interested just how such an arrangement might be made to work. In other words, one of the concerns is that we do monitor and ensure that the commitments are carried out, but just how we would phrase a penalty clause is something we are examining. As I said, I would welcome proposals as to how that might be done.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECONCILIATION OF POSITION AT LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE WITH PERMISSION TO DRILL FOR OIL IN BEAUFORT SEA

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the strenuous arguments being put forward by Canada to the Law of the Sea Conference for international recognition of the principles in the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act because of the need to protect the delicate ecological balance of our Arctic seabed, can the minister explain how the government can reconcile this stance which it is taking externally with its current consideration of a permit for oil exploration in the Beaufort Sea, a project which could present extremely hazardous environmental conditions and which could jeopardize Canada's position at the Law of the Sea Conference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that the problems posed by our general position at the Law of the Sea Conference and the pending decision upon exploration in the Beaufort Sea obviously is part of the consideration that is going on at present, and part of the consideration that is involved in our discussions with the United States which has expressed similar concerns about this particular possibility. Obviously, the job of a good government is to reconcile sometimes difficult alternatives and to produce an acceptable solution. That is what we are trying to do.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, given the minister's answer and the tendency of this government to try to come down on all sides of a question, may I ask the minister if he in fact has his arguments ready to justify drilling in the Beaufort Sea when he next attends the Law of the Sea Conference?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not got the arguments ready because I do not prepare arguments against contingencies.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF OPENING TRADE MISSION IN TAIWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At the present time there are some 16 million people living in Taiwan and their per capita income is one of the highest in Asia. During the minister's recent trade mission to five southeast Asian countries, all of which trade with Canada, did the minister give any consideration to visiting Taipei with regard to the possibility of opening a Canadian trade mission in that city so that we could assist Canadian exporters to improve their trade opportunities in this area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, not in the precise meaning that the hon. member has stated. The specific basis of the mission was to visit the Asian countries. It was confined to that. The question of establishing some kind of trade relationship with Taiwan has been under discussion for some time. Without wishing to pass the matter off, I might refer it to my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

IMMIGRATION

CRITERIA FOR ISSUING MINISTERIAL VISAS—DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST MR. MORCINEK

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It follows my motion under Standing Order 43 regarding a deportation case. Can the minister explain to the House the criteria used by his department in determining the issuance of ministerial visas vis-à-vis permitting and in fact recommending deportation orders to potentially sound new citizens, such as the case to which I referred?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, ministers' permits are not issued to people under deportation orders or when a deportation order has been confirmed in various levels of appeal. In the case of Mr. Morcinek, he entered Canada illegally as a ship deserter in July 1974, reported to immigration shortly thereafter and, quite properly, a hearing was commenced. It was adjourned when he made claim to refugee status. That claim to refugee status was heard by the interdepartmental committee and denied in August 1974. The inquiry was resumed and he was ordered deported, whereupon he quite properly appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board for a hearing on refugee status. The Immigration Appeal Board, which is an independent judicial body, examined his representation and decided that he did not have a valid appeal to refugee status and the deportation order was upheld. He subsequently appealed to the Federal Court and the Supreme Court. Only the other day was the Supreme Court decision issued to deny the appeal and uphold the deportation order. The hon. member's Standing Order 43 suggested a course of action I should take which is beyond my jurisdiction because Mr. Morcinek is now under a deportation order. I could not issue a ministerial permit for him to stay. The deportation order has to be implemented. He could, however, seek deportation to a third country. That is an option open to people in that situation. He could apply from that third country if such country would receive him, to return to Canada.

POSSIBILITY OF MR. MORCINEK LEAVING CANADA VOLUNTARILY AND THEN APPLYING FOR LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, another option that the minister did not mention was mentioned in a letter dated February 13 to Mrs. Ann Ridley. I would like to quote one sentence from that letter:

> Fortunately, there is a provision in the Act whereby persons ordered deported may be allowed to effect voluntary departure if they can make their own arrangements to leave Canada and be accepted by a country of their choice, providing that they are willing and able to do so.

If Mr. Morcinek voluntarily left Canada, would the minister expedite an application for landed immigrant status from a country outside Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I covered that option in my answer to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley when I indicated he could take departure to a third country of his choice, either voluntarily or through deportation. In this case, the fact that he is being deported would not be held against him. However, he would have to apply from a third country and that application would have to be judged by the criteria we use in such applications. Therefore, I could not give that guarantee, but it is an option open to him.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF OPENING TRADE MISSION IN TAIWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked earlier by the hon. member for South Shore to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia and Japan, just to name a few of the many nations that recognize Communist China but continue to have satisfactory trading arrangements with the free enterprise government of the Republic of China, can the minister indicate if he will take steps to see if a similar type of arrangement can be made with the government in Taiwan which would be of material assistance in overcoming the unfavourable trade balance Canada presently has with that country in the limited trade presently carried out?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we do have trade, as the hon. member pointed out in his question, with business interests within Taiwan. I do understand that there have been trading institutions; at least it is said that countries like the United Kingdom have maintained trading houses in Taiwan without jeopardizing their one-China policy. This is a matter which I have discussed privately with members of the House. I have taken into account some views which have been expressed by them and I hope to meet them at a later time with some results.

HEALTH

DEATH OF CHILDREN ATTRIBUTED TO SPRUCE BUDWORM SPRAY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is serious. I put it to the Minister of the Environment although it probably also concerns the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

As it now seems to have been established by a team of researchers at Dalhousie University in Halifax and also American researchers in the U.S. that four children died as a result of the presence in 1973 of certain solvents in the insecticides used against the spruce budworm in Nova Scotia, and as those solvents may possibly be used again this year, can the Minister of the Environment and possibly the Minister of National Health and Welfare assure this House that very strict controls will apply to avoid a possible recurrence of that tragedy this year as it is expected that the spraying program will be very intensive this year of eastern Canada's forests?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Nova Scotia government cancelled a project involving the spraying of the province's forests with certain solvents.

I believe the New Brunswick legislative assembly may set up a committee to study the situation and examine the whole forest spraying program in that province.

Still, I should like to clarify one of the statements of the hon. member in his opening remarks. The Medical Research Council and my department have financed the studies of a group of scientists located at Halifax in Nova Scotia. Those studies are still underway but at this point in time they do not allow us to conclude definitely that the insecticides used are linked with the fatal diseases found in some children. It is clear that further studies and research will have to be pursued in that field. It seems too early to conclude that the insecticides caused the diseases that were diagnosed.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO PUBLIC AND PRIVATE PENSION SCHEMES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the studies which have been made by the Canadian Council on Social Development with regard to public sector pensions and in view of the call which came recently from the Canadian Pension Conference for an inquiry into what is happening in the private sector with regard to pensions, will the minister consider undertaking a thorough review or establishing a public inquiry into pension policy, both public and private, so that we can be sure that things will go well down the road?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have on several occasions indicated that this issue is currently under study by the government, in particular by my department and the Department of Finance. It might well be that a public inquiry will be useful or necessary but no decision to this effect has yet been taken by the government. At the present time, the studies are taking place on an official level, that is, on an interdepartmental basis, but I am not ruling out the other possibility if it is found necessary to expand those studies.

POSSIBLE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN BILL C-83 AND ALLEGED RESISTANCE TO SEPARATISM

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Solicitor General.

Since the minister has already ordered an inquiry into the disclosures made by former RCMP member, Mr. Robert Samson, and since it says in Bill C-83, clause 105(2) which is now being rammed through this House, that any defensive weapon may, without warrant, be searched and taken away from a citizen even in case of organized or apprehended burglaries, I wish to put the following question to the minister: will he tell the House whether or not there is a connection between Bill C-83 and the fight against separatism?

REASON FOR QUEBEC'S INTENTION TO OPT OUT OF CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the hon. gentleman received information from the dairy producers of the Province of Quebec that they have served notice of their intention not to be represented on the supply-management committee of the Canadian Dairy Commission for the coming year? If he has received such notice, can he explain the reason given by the industrial dairy producers from the Province of Quebec for wanting to opt out of the Commission?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): They have given notice unofficially, I believe, but I have not seen the official notice. They are wanting out and they have to give one year's notice before they can opt out. I think it is part of their strategy to try to renegotiate a new market share quota program because they are dissatisfied. In the Province of Quebec they have both an industrial milk marketing board and a fluid milk marketing board. Practically every province has a different organization for administering the milk marketing system. These are the groups which get together and decide how the quota is to be distributed. I do not decide this for them.

Mr. Murta: Since the implications are very serious as far as the future operations of the Dairy Commission are concerned, may I ask what plans the minister or the department have got to work with, or negotiate with, the dairy producers of Quebec to ensure that they will be in the plan for another year and that the future of the Dairy Commission will not be badly damaged as a result of this move?

Mr. Whelan: We are concerned that the Dairy Commission should operate in an efficient manner. There is a dispute as to how this quota should be divided among fluid producers and industrial producers. However, it is up to them to run their business. We, of course, would like to see it run as harmoniously as possible but the minister has no authority to direct the commission as to how it should operate its affairs. Under the Wheat Board Act the government can give direction by order in council, but this is not such a situation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NATIONAL FORESTRY POLICY—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PROPOSALS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of the Environment, is consequent upon the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River with respect to forest policy. Since any initiative by officials of the federal forestry service in developing a national policy have been stifled by the government as a result of divided jurisdiction among at least 20 federal agencies meddling in this field, can the minister tell us whether it is the intention of the government at least to co-ordinate the various activities of these agencies, all of which, or many of which, may be in conflict or at cross-purposes with each other?

[Mr. Allmand.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that this question is much more clever and a lot clearer that the one which was put to me yesterday regarding forestry policy in Canada. As the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte fully knows jurisdiction over forestry belongs mostly to provincial governments. Only federal territories and the Northwest Territories come under our jurisdiction. However we have been in touch with each of the provinces in the hope that they will cooperate with us in working out a national forestry policy. So far the responses have been extremely encouraging.

[English]

Mr. McCain: I cannot agree with the premise on which the answer is based. For that reason I ask this supplementary question. With regard to the proposed federal-provincial discussion on the matter of a national forest policy, will the minister indicate what form the consultation will take and whether he intends to establish a national policy, as in agriculture, fishing, etc., and assume the cost of such a national program, or is it the intention of the government, as in so many other recent policy statements, to transfer financial responsibility in full or in part to the provinces?

● (1200)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will understand that before we can do anything in this field, since the provinces have the larger share of jurisdiction in this area, they would have to agree to have a meeting. I have received information from almost all provinces that they are ready to discuss with us and elaborate on some national policies in the fields I have mentioned.

HOUSING

REPRESENTATIONS TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ON BEHALF OF INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As the minister is aware, the housing industry is very sensitive to the economic cycle, and profits rise and fall depending on whether the industry is in a boom or a bust phase. With this in mind, can the minister tell the House whether he has made any representations to the Anti-Inflation Board on behalf of the housing industry, and, if so, what has been their reaction?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Certainly there have been boom and bust cycles, Mr. Speaker, and the booms have outweighed the busts by a long shot in recent years. I did meet today with representatives of the housing industry and discussed relationships with the Anti-Inflation Board. We are working closely with them. Fortunately, somebody must have been doing something right, with starts up 200 per cent in the first two months of this year compared with last year.

Mr. Darling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether the Anti-Inflation Board is considering a modification of the profit guidelines for the benefit of the housing industry and, if so, can the minister tell the House when he expects clarification from the Anti-Inflation Board?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, this question is properly for the Minister of Finance, but I am aware that discussions are going on, with a report expected very shortly. I cannot say anything more; it is the province of my colleague.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

COMMENT MADE IN YESTERDAY'S DEBATE

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I only had the opportunity of giving you notice of my question of privilege when I entered the House because the French edition of Hansard was not available before 10:45. I therefore rise on a question of privilege pursuant to Standing Order 35 which reads as follows:

... No member shall use offensive words against either House, or against any member thereof.

So, referring to yesterday's Hansard, on page 12386, one can read the words used by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin)—and I am very polite in calling him the hon. member for Lotbinière—who used offensive words against me, calling me a coward. The Acting Speaker at the time, the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), deferred until today the decision on the question of privilege I raised yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, page 117, citation 133, reads as follows:

When the Speaker takes notice of any expression as personal and disorderly, and tending to introduce heat and confusion, and calls upon the offending member to explain, it is the duty of the latter immediately to explain or retract the offensive expressions, and to apologize to the House for the breach of order, in terms large and liberal enough both to satisfy the House, and the member of whom the offensive expressions were used. The Speaker's demand usually produces the required explanation, at once;

Mr. Speaker, those same words which appear on page 12387 of yesterday's Hansard were endorsed by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle)—I think he gave up since he is not here, this morning, Mr. Speaker.

To help you make your ruling, I should like to read the definition of the word "coward" in the Shorter Larousse dictionary. It means a person who lacks courage—

Mr. Matte: Right on!

Mr. Guay (Lévis): —fearful, shameful. I shall also ask the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) to withdraw when I have completed my remarks, because he just said:

Right on. I continue the definition: ... base and contemptible ...

Mr. Matte: This is the right definition!

Mr. Guay (Lévis): According to the Quillet dictionary, the definition of coward is: lacking in energy, funky, contemptible. "To give up" means to let go, surrender, abandon, and that is no doubt what the hon. member for Joliette is doing this morning: abandon his friends once again. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette has already abandoned the Progressive Conservative Party for the party to which he has returned today. Maybe he has already left the Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, to run for the leadership of the Union nationale in Quebec. Last night, when he supported the Social Crediter member, I wondered if he was not becoming a Social Crediter.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of the comments made last night by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), with the support of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), I would ask that these comments be withdrawn and the question of privilege which I raised last night be maintained. I would not make the same kind of remarks as regards the hon. member for Lotbinière because I have been a member of this House for the last 14 years, I have always respected other hon. members and I do not think my colleagues and myself are cowards.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore ask that the hon. member withdraw his remarks immediately, as provided in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. Should you rule his comments as not being unparliamentary, I would in turn call each of those two members, one of whom is not here, coward, fearful, base and contemptible.

Mr. Matte: It is cowardly to make such comments in the absence of the hon. member.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is never easy to deal with a question of privilege. However, in this case concerning the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), the situation is quite clear. Here is what is provided in citation 113, page 102 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, and I quote:

Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the House.

And the citation goes on to say:

Wilful disobedience to Orders and Rules of Parliament in the exercise of its constitutional functions; insults and obstructions during debate are breaches of the privileges of the House.

And I would draw Your Honour's attention to the following words: insults during debate, which I did, according to the hon. member for Lévis or obstructions during debate, which I blame the hon. member for Lévis for doing when he prevented us last night from doing our work pursuant to Standing Orders. Therefore I think we must set the facts in their true light.

In what circumstances were those remarks made? After a motion was introduced to silence the opposition by allowing for a two hours maximum debate, I rose for a 10 minute period as every other member. I did not support the government's motion, and neither did any other member of the opposition. I said so frankly and clearly. I realize that the hon. member for Lévis is perfectly entitled to disagree with me and with the opposition. That is quite normal since he is on the government side. However, it is my right and privilege to express my disagreement.

Anyone reading my speech will realize that I did not go beyond my rights under our Standing Orders. Every member however that was in this House yesterday evening will testify that the hon. member for Lévis did not stop for a minute interrupting me, shouting his disapproval, voicing protests while I was speaking. He repeatedly interrupted my speech, contrary to our rules.

That is the reason, Mr. Speaker, why I told him to keep quiet while we were making speeches, as appears in the official reports on page 12386. This is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, we are experiencing that problem. I show every respect for the hon. member for Lévis. And he knows it. I will not throw back to him what he said earlier about an absent member. I feel that attacking the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) in his absence, the way he did, is rather debasing.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that Opposition members, in situations where they are constantly interrupted by government members, make this kind of remark, as "Let him stop bothering me during my speech. Let him stop railing at me. Let him rise to speak on the subject when his turn comes, if he has the courage to do so." This happens hundred of times during our debates. And the hon. member for Lévis knows it.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore submit I said nothing that went beyond my rights and privileges under our Standing Orders, and I respectfully wish that hon. members on the other side would let us make our speeches unhindered.

Mr. Speaker, it is enough that we are muzzled without being constantly interrupted when we speak in this House.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Chair intervened during the speech of opposition members from three parties. On pages 12383, 12372, 12367 and 12366 of Hansard, we find four interventions by the Acting Speaker who wanted to restore order in this House so as to allow the speakers to be heard, especially since speeches were limited to ten minutes. Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that as recorded in Hansard, the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) interrupted me exactly eight times, while—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, citation 113 in the 4th edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms says, and I quote:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

Mr. Speaker, the last point that I want to make is this. The hon. member for Lévis, who feels so injured today, seems to forget that, as Hansard shows, he himself called me a coward yesterday. On page 12386, the hon. member for Lévis is reported as having said:

> . . . I demand that the hon. member for Lotbinière treat the others as they do him . . .

Which meant that he was calling me a coward.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lévis called me a coward in the heat of the discussion. I understand him and do not bear him any grudge. I just wonder why he himself dramatizes such things. As reported on page 12387 of Hansard, he himself said yesterday:

> . . . if we say we must muzzle the House, as the hon. member now seems to be trying to prove . . .

Mr. Speaker, this was not true. The hon. member was imputing motives to me. I was trying to prove exactly the opposite. No one would pretend that it was the opposition who introduced the closure motion under Standing Order 75C.

The hon. member for Lévis added

> . . . I think he is the one . . .

—talking about myself—

> . . . who should be muzzled for all the nonsense he is saying.

—talking about myself. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, that is not parliamentary language either. I think the hon. member for Lévis exceeds the limit. First, he gives a wrong interpretation of my words, he wants to muzzle me, prevent me from speaking in the House, and then he states plainly that I talk nonsense today in order to taint the reputation of the hon. member for Joliette.

Finally, as evidenced by the debates, the hon. member interfered with my right to speak by interrupting me more than eight times in ten minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I refer to the 18th edition of Parliamentary Practice by Erskine May, chapter XIX dealing with > . . . Maintenance of order during debate . . .

In paragraph 2 entitled:

● (1210)

[English]

In Erskine May's eighteenth edition, chapter XIX concerning the maintenance of order during debate, paragraph (2), in reference to minor breaches of order, states:

> When any members transgresses the rules of debate, otherwise than by using disorderly or unparliamentary expressions, or makes any noise or disturbance whilst another member is speaking—

In that event, Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, the Speaker calls the offending member to order.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am asking you today, to call the hon. member to order so that he will understand like the other government members that he must let the opposition fulfill its duty without degrading it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is always hard for the Chair to make a ruling on a question of privilege, especially when the matter concerns the definition of one word or other. It is obviously clear that often in the past, a member has been allowed to express the feelings of another member who had tried on many occasions to interrupt another member. Either one must have the courage to rise and take part in the debate. I therefore accept the explanation given by the hon. member for Lotbinière, whatever words were used during yesterday's debate. His intention was quite clear. Then again, I accept the explanation of the hon. member because, in my opinion, there is no question of privilege under the circumstances.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, lately the opposition has been experiencing great difficulty in posing questions to ministers because when they are in the House they are continually visiting with their colleagues. Some days you allow the minister a chance to return to his seat. Today I posed a question to the Minister of Transport but you did not allow him to return. I would strongly suggest to the Acting Prime Minister that he issue a directive to his ministers that when they are in the House during the question period, they stay in their seats. This will help speed-up the question period considerably.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I, on behalf of all the members of my committee, have the honour to present the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, in both officials languages. If you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, there was an amendment to clause 15 which says that this act shall be deemed to have come into effect on April 1, 1976.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MOTION RESPECTING COMPLETION OF DEBATE

On the order: March 31, 1976—The President of the Privy Council.

That, on Monday, April 5, 1976, the House shall continue to sit between 6.00 p.m. and 8.00 p.m.;

That, on Tuesday, April 6, 1976, the House shall not adjourn until the completion of the business provided for in this order;

That, on the aforementioned days, no private members business shall be taken up;

That, on the aforementioned days, the business taken up shall be the consideration of objections to reports of Electoral Boundaries Commissions;

That all objections to any given report be considered at the same time;

Electoral Boundaries

That the objections or groups of objections, as the case may be, be considered in the order in which the objection or first objection in the group, as the case may be, was laid upon the Table; and

That during the consideration of any objection or group of objections, as the case may be, no member shall speak more than once, nor for more than twenty minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), supported by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), raised a point of order about the possibility that the House might give consent, yesterday, to the consideration of this motion. I have carefully considered the point of order. Of course, the motion today is properly before the House without the need for unanimous consent. The hon. member argued that since this motion concerns itself with debate on objections to do with the reports of several provincial electoral boundaries commissions, and since, according to the argument, there has been a technical or legal failure, or non-conformity with the act on the part of the province of Ontario in that the filing of this report was not accompanied with reasons, the House ought not to deal with this motion. Indeed, as I understand the point of order, the House ought not to deal with any reports concerning themselves with Ontario when it debates the matter next Monday and Tuesday.

I have carefully considered the points raised. First, since this motion may now properly be called without needing unanimous consent, I feel that the point of order should not interpose itself in respect of the calling of the motion today and should not interpose itself with respect to our dealing with two reports, at least, pursuant to the terms of the motion if the motion is adopted.

My reasons for so finding are simple and clear. This House must concern itself with the procedures and practices of this House, not with other legal practices or questions concerning non-conformity with a statute unless those questions relate to the Standing Orders of the House.

The House has before it a motion. The Chair must, therefore, ask if the motion is procedurally correct and receivable. If the House takes a decision on the motion, then that is a decision for the House and ought not to be the concern of the Chair unless there is some procedural irregularity.

Questions to do with reasons attached to reports, or whether those reasons comply with the statute in the first instance in fulfilling statutory requirements, are surely legal questions. They concern legal opinions and are matters to be taken up in debate when the debate takes place. Further, if there is some question of a legal nature which in any way would prevent this House from taking legislative action, commissions from acting in a certain way, of officers thereof from implementing any decisions of commissions in drawing boundaries, that is a legal question.

Again, if remedies lie in the hands of hon. members who brought forward the point of order, or in the hands of any other citizens, then surely the question goes far beyond the procedural confines which are under the authority of the Chair. Therefore, on procedural grounds I must find the motion properly before the House and eligible for consideration at this time pursuant to our Standing Orders. If the motion is adopted, the House cannot be prevented, on procedural grounds, from discussing the matter on Monday and Tuesday next.

Electoral Boundaries

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, on Monday, April 5, 1976, the House shall continue to sit between 6.00 p.m. and 8.00 p.m.;

That, on Tuesday, April 6, 1976, the House shall not adjourn until the completion of the business provided for in this order;

That, on the aforementioned days, no private members business shall be taken up;

That, on the aforementioned days, the business taken up shall be the consideration of objections to reports of Electoral Boundaries Commissions;

That all objections to any given report be considered at the same time;

That the objections or groups of objections, as the case may be, be considered in the order in which the objection or first objection in the group, as the case may be, was laid upon the Table; and

That during the consideration of any objection or group of objections, as the case may be, no member shall speak more than once, nor for more than twenty minutes.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Actually, I would indicate at this time that I wish to raise a question of privilege on Monday and present argument, not about Your Honour's decision which I respect and acknowledge, but about important matters fundamental to this House and affecting all members of parliament, particularly those from the province of Ontario. I wish to enter that caveat now and reserve my right to argue the question of privilege on Monday next.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Standing Orders provide that the Chair must be given written or effective notice of such intention to raise a question of privilege. I cannot think of more effective notice than the kind of notice which the hon. member for Ontario has just given.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to do with the motion which the House just adopted. I think it would help if we could settle the order in which the various objections shall be considered. The motion provides, in part, that the objections or groups of objections, as the case may be, shall be considered in the order in which the objection or first objection in the group, as the case may be, was laid upon the table. That will be the general principle governing the debate. But there may be some confusion as to how that provision is to be interpreted. I should like to settle the question so as to avoid differences of opinion later.

The first of the objections tabled was with respect to Nova Scotia; then there were tabled, in the following order, objections respecting Alberta, the Northwest Territories, Ontario, British Columbia and Quebec. The House will remember that it has also taken under consideration some objections relating to Nova Scotia, Alberta and British Columbia. It is the opinion of the House leaders who have been consulted on the question that the order of consideration should be, first the Northwest Territories and then, in the following order, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Alberta, and British Columbia. I suggest that it would serve the purposes of the House and would result in orderly debate if that suggestion were to be made an order of the House.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

RETENTION OF LAWYERS IN OKANAGAN BOUNDARY CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 3,733—Mr. Whittaker:

1. What were the names and addresses of all lawyers and law firms in the Constituency of Okanagan Boundary, British Columbia who performed services for the Department of Supply and Services during 1973 and 1974?

2. By year, what was the total amount paid to each?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Nil.

2. Not applicable.

PEI—FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,846—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, what criteria have been used by the Joint Advisory Board in (a) evaluating the overall effectiveness of the sectoral strategy in relation to the Plan objectives (b) determining the effectiveness of the various programmes and projects within the sector?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a) The criterion used to evaluate the overall effectiveness of the sectoral strategy in relation to the Plan's objectives is its contribution to Gross Provincial Product in relation to the dollars expended. (b) The various programs and projects are examined to ensure that their continuation will contribute to ultimate realization of the sector objective.

LEASE ON KOOTENAY INDIAN RESERVES—CRESTON RECLAMATION COMPANY

Question No. 4,776—Mr. Brisco:

Did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development ever give written or other permission to the Creston Reclamation Company of Creston, British Columbia, to grant, demise, transfer or set over or by any other act cause any term or interest to be granted, assigned or transferred to anyone, all that portion of Lower Kootenay Indian Reserve No. 10, surveyed as Lot 999, Group 1, which lies North and East of the right bank of Kootenay River; all of Lower Kootenay

Indian Reserve No. 2, surveyed as Lot 10000, Group 1; all of Lower Kootenay Indian Reserve No. 3, surveyed as Lot 10001, Group 1; all that portion of Lower Kootenay Indian Reserve No. 5, surveyed as Lot 10003, Group 1, which lies South of a line drawn East and West approximately 12 chains South of the North Boundary of Section thirty-two (32) Township eight (8) of the lands of the Lower Kootenay Indian Band held in trust by the Crown according to the terms of surrender of October 1, 1934?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Department has no record of written or other authority to Creston Reclamation Company to transfer or otherwise dispose of any interest in their lease on the Kootenay Indian Reserves.

EXCISE TAX COLLECTED ON AIRCRAFT

Question No. 4,965—Mr. Kempling:

How much excise tax has been collected through the 10 per cent tax imposed on all privately owned (non-commercial) aircraft since the budget announcement of 1974?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): The amount of Excise Tax paid on private aircraft owned by individuals is not available. The Excise Tax paid to January 31, 1976 on aircraft owned by individuals and corporations for which no exemption was available, was $2,594,208.55.

APPOINTMENT OF EACH PRESIDENT OF CADC

[English]

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Wednesday, March 24, my notice of motion for production of papers No. 96 was passed, with the approval of the parliamentary secretary. When I made my latest inquiry of the parliamentary papers returns office I learned that the return had not yet been tabled. It consists merely of two letters, the resignation of the Minister of Public Works and the rejection thereof by the Prime Minister. Does it take this long to produce copies of two simple letters?

● (1230)

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to my notice of motion No. 68 for the production of papers. It is a very simple motion relating to Canada's $11 million claim against the government of France as a result of the opting out by France of the NATO military alliance. This is the second time that I ask whether I could get an answer to my motion. It is worth $11 million to Canada.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, with reference to both representations, I will take note of them and make sure that a reply is forthcoming.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions with respect to the order of business on orders of the day today. Having particular regard to the fact that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs reported to the House today, and the way in which the House might handle the debate with respect to Bill C-92, I should like to say that discussions have gone on and it has been generally agreed by representatives of all parties that in any event Bill C-92 be given third reading today, and that in the debate leading to third reading there shall be one speech from a representative of each party, such speech not to exceed five minutes in length. I hope there will be no objection on the part of the government House leader or others in that respect because it is the intention of all of us to get this bill passed by the House immediately.

I presume there is consent. If that is the case, then that would be the first order of business, and I want to ensure that in fact the bill will receive third reading today. If that is the case—and the government House leader might wish to join me in this suggestion—it might be necessary for a House order to be made with respect to that bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have dealt with this matter in a very extraordinary fashion, but the reason is evident. It is the general desire of all members of the House that the bill should come into effect as soon as possible. You will have noted, sir, that the report made by the chairman of the committee mentioned the one amendment that had been made in committee, namely, that the bill shall be deemed to have come into effect on April 1, so that its benefits will not be denied former prisoners of war until it comes into effect. We do not have formally before us the printed bill, but I want to say that if it is agreeable to everyone in the House, and I believe it is, I would like to call third reading of Bill C-92 as the first order of business today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The report of the committee has just been received. To proceed to third reading on the same day would require the unanimous consent of the House. I must, therefore, ask whether the House gives unanimous consent to taking into consideration the further stages of Bill C-92 on this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House having given its unanimous consent, the Chair can scarcely ignore the advice that has been given by the hon. member for Mercier that the bill was in fact amended in the standing committee; at least, that is what I understood was referred to in the committee report, that there was an amendment as to the coming into force of the bill.

I would, therefore, again indicate to the House that it would require unanimous consent to proceed in the ordinary way with third reading debate at this time, in view of the fact that the bill has come from the standing committee with an amendment, because this would preclude the entire report stage of the bill. Not only would two stages be taken on the same day, but it would obliterate the report stage of the bill. So I want to be clear that the House gives unanimous consent to that procedure.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR COMPENSATION FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR AND THEIR DEPENDANTS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-92, to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war and their dependants, and to amend certain other statutes in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? By unanimous consent, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the House wishes an order to be made now that there will be one speech from each of the parties in the House, of five minutes duration. Is that understood by the House and agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel very happy to be speaking at this time. We did not expect anyone to be speaking on this matter. Yesterday we had more evidence of the unanimity of all parties in the House. First we were going to limit the length of speeches and then, finally, after several more consultations, we decided to cut out further speeches, which would allow more rapid passage on second reading by unanimous consent. This morning we took it to committee, where we also had unanimous consent. This has been brought about because we think that the veterans in question have been waiting a long time and another delay of a month or so would be detrimental to them. I think the fact that we accepted the amendment which makes April 1 the date on which the law will become effective was a very wise move.

I will not make a speech in favour of the bill. We are all in favour of it as it stands. I would just like to make a few points. First, our minister had a great deal of support from our caucus and he pushed this bill through cabinet. It took him a great deal of effort to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Railton: I still think that the cabinet was very generous to find the necessary $10 million by scraping the bottom of the barrel, or by scraping it out of some other departmental projects. This shows the government's concern for our former prisoners of war. Also, we have particular cause to be proud of our Liberal caucus members and committee members because not one of them has taken the opportunity to speak, just so we could get the bill passed before the weekend. I thank them all very much. I also give great credit to hon. members on the other side. This just shows that Canadians as a people are fond of their veterans and know that they should have continuing hearings with this committee and with this House of Commons until all their grievances and requests are settled to the best of our financial ability.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have been asked to speak on behalf of our party on this bill for the next five minutes. This bill is a very welcome one. Its content was unanimously recommended by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I think it will especially be appreciated in those areas of the country where units were recruited which later were taken prisoner in Hong Kong or in Dieppe. These groups are the members of our forces, generally speaking, who were prisoners of war for the longest period of time. I am particularly pleased that the anomaly which exists with regard to the benefits already paid to Hong Kong prisoners of war has been removed.

I want to spend a minute or two to express my regret that the minister insists on creating another anomaly. I think it is a great misfortune that the definition of "prisoner of war" does not include evaders and escapers. This refers chiefly—not entirely, but almost entirely—to air crew members of the Royal Canadian Air Force who, along with other members of the allied air forces in those dark days from 1940 to 1944, when the invasion of Europe took place, were about the only harbingers of hope for the people of occupied Europe.

It was the duty of these people, if they came down in an occupied country, to attempt to escape. They were especially equipped and trained to some extent to do this. It seems to me morally wrong and completely unjust that those who were able to take advantage of a situation which allowed them to evade capture for a time, or to escape entirely, should be precluded from benefiting under this bill when, on the other hand, if they had been immediately captured and remained prisoners of war, they qualify under the bill. Instead of rewarding risk-taking and enterprise the reverse is true, these military virtues are being penalized. The reverse is true. When the legislation as amended is administered, some very hard cases will emerge whcih will be difficult for the minister to refuse, and I hope the law will be amended at a later time so that these people can be accommodated. They are very few in number, perhaps a couple of hundred as far as Canada is concerned, and I hope the minister will take what I have to say to heart and give further study to this particular problem.

It seems to me completely unjust that one man out of a crew who, under great hardship, succeeded in avoiding being made a prisoner of war for perhaps months, should be excluded, by virtue of that, from benefiting under this legislation. I want to tell the minister, as he probably knows, that under those conditions the greatest problem an escaping airman had was to reject the temptation in his mind and the terrible psychological pressure he was under to turn himself in, because in turning himslef in he would have been relatively safe and his next of kin would have known he was alive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, some of us have pressed vigorously and for a long time for this legislation, and I am very happy to be able to participate in these few minutes in the final stage of Bill C-92 in this House. I believe, there are congratulations which can well be extended, and I will start with the minister. I suspect he had a difficult time in the cabinet getting this bill brought forward and that it was only the case he was able to make that won the day. We congratulate him on this important battle and on this important victory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I also want to pay tribute to all the members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs representing all parties. I have seldom been involved in a project in the House of Commons where there was so much unanimity and such universal determination. I also congratulate the organizations representing veterans from Hong Kong, Dieppe and other prisoner of war veterans. They, too, did a good job in the material that they brought to our attention. We extend our thanks, also, to Dr. Hermann for his report which was the basis for the recommendations we made.

Of course, one cannot look at this bill without realizing that there are two or three things missing which we wish were in it. I support wholeheartedly the plea just made by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) regarding escapees and evaders. In the recommendations of our committee which were sit out in our seventh report, we recommended that they be included. Unfortunately, they are not included in the bill, but I hope at some point, especially as the applications come in, that the minister will find it possible to amend the statute in that respect.

I also regret that there is nothing in the bill to carry out Dr. Hermann's recommendation and the unanimous recommendation of our committee that there be a change with respect to the way pensions are granted to widows of disabled veterans. Without going into detail, I am referring to the present 48 per cent cut-off. I remind hon. members that the Woods report suggested a change in that, that several reports of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs recommended a change in that respect, and that the report on which this legislation is based also recommended such a change, namely, that there be pensions for widows where the veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent on a pro rata basis.

As strongly as I feel about that and about the point raised by the hon. member for Malpeque, we do not want to hold back this bill. It is good that we are getting it. It will mean a great deal to Hong Kong veterans to have their position improved, and it will mean a great deal to those who were prisoners of war in Europe, after all these years, to have the recognition and the compensation which are provided in this legislation. I believe that in achieving this legislation the House of Commons has shown itself to be the kind of place it ought to be. The Chair reminded us this morning of all the difficulties because of the rules we are setting aside by unanimous consent. No matter what objection there was, time after time the Chair heard the House say "Agreed." We are unanimous in supporting this bill. We are unanimously pleased that in a moment it will be passed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if it would be appropriate now to call it one o'clock and proceed directly with the next order of business at two o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.51 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate, but I suppose we will have to wait a few moments because there is no one here who can move the next order of government business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Shefford on a point of order.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, since we cannot proceed with the consideration of the next legislation, maybe with the unanimous consent of the House we could resume the debate on Bill C-83, for I would be ready to speak now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Trudel: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. We are ready to proceed with the order established among the various leaders of the House, namely the consideration of Bill S-32. As soon as I have the permission to speak, I will give my remarks to the House.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I can understand the embarrassment of the parliamentary secretary. There is no one here to move the order of business on which he proposes to speak. But we have to observe the rules of the House and it is necessary for two ministers to be here. Perhaps the government whip could be prevailed upon to go up to the dining-room to get one.

Mr. Breau: It seems we will have to wait for the minister. I believe a resolution would be needed to change the orders of the day.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was merely going to point out to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that we have one cabinet minister in his place, but we need two.

Mr. Breau: I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) does not like to waste any time. He might wish to use this interval as a grievance period.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was thinking of moving that the House adjourn.

Mr. Poulin: I see that the official opposition has one member of its front bench here, and we have one cabinet minister. The other ministers are very busy conducting the affairs of the nation and looking after their departmental responsibilities.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): One of their responsibilities is to run the House.

Mr. Poulin: That is right. I think we should continue with this kind of agreeable comment. We are seated in a chamber which is within my riding, and it is pleasant to find this happy feeling prevailing. I see one member of the Creditiste party, and there are two members of the New Democratic Party—

An hon. Member: Why not recite the alphabet? We know you can count.

Mr. Poulin: That interjection made me lose my train of thought.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, we normally take points of order in succession, but the point raised by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Poulin) is so long that perhaps we can allow the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) to intervene.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I was proposing to put a question to the hon. member. He has spoken graciously of the good feeling which prevails here, but I should like to ask him whether he is inclined to take the action which seems to be called for, that is, to telephone to see whether he can find a couple of ministers.

Mr. Poulin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. But as I was saying, the ministers have varied responsibilities other than sitting in the House. There will be a minister here very shortly. They are attending to their departments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council whether he has any news. Otherwise, we shall have to adjourn the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Might I just say, Mr. Speaker, that the troops have just come in.

An hon. Member: Only one.

FINANCE

MEASURE TO AVOID DOUBLE INCOME TAXATION BETWEEN CANADA AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. Judd Buchanan (for the Minister of Finance) moved: That Bill S-32 (from the Senate) to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel. Moreover, in order that these conventions remain up to date after any amendment to the tax legislation in the countries involved, the bill provides that the Governor in Council may, subject to a resolution of Parliament, decree that any supplementary agreement has the force of law.

After the 1971 tax reform, Canada did undertake a major extension of its program of fiscal agreements with other countries. To this day, we have signed 16 such agreements and we intend to revise them all. As a matter of fact, once the agreement between Canada and France will have been ratified, it will replace the agreement signed in 1951 by the two countries and which is now in effect. Mr. Speaker, we hope that new agreements such as the one signed by Canada and Belgium and the one signed by Canada and Israel will be entered into in the same way between Canada and some forty other countries.

The extension of the network of fiscal agreements signed by Canada and other countries had been implicitly suggested in the 1971 tax reform for various reasons. For instance, before the tax reform, the dividends drawn by a Canadian corporation from a foreign branch were automatically exempted from corporate income tax in Canada; under the Income Tax Act, as amended in 1971, the universal exemption granted with respect to the dividends drawn from a foreign branch is restricted. Since January 1, 1976, only the active income dividends of a foreign subsidiary established in a country with whom Canada has agreed on the overall content of a tax convention are exempted. Tax reform has also brought about, for instance, changes in the taxation of capital gains and has provided that from now on foreign teachers will no longer have their Canadian-earned income exempted.

The three conventions on double taxation being studied have much in common. They take after the format and language used in the draft model convention prepared by the committee on taxation of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, better known as the OECD. Canada usually accepts the wording of the provisions recommended in the draft convention. In some cases however, the content of the OECD proposals does not reflect Canadian policies and, therefore, cannot be adhered to in our bi-lateral conventions. The most important of these provisions are related to taxation by the source country of dividends, interests and royalties paid to non-residents.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that when they are negotiating fiscal arrangements, industrialized nations are inclined to ask for specific rates for tax deducted at the source, according to the pattern followed in OECD countries that is 5 per cent on dividends paid to parent or affiliated companies and 15 per cent on other dividends, no deduction for branch profits, 10 per cent on interests and no deduction on royalties. On the other hand, developing countries usually try to maintain higher rates for taxes deducted at the source because the greater part of the income flow moves from the developing country where the investments are made, towards the industrialized county where the investors are based.

In the course of its negotiations with the other countries, Canada has tried to get a general rate of 15 per cent on the dividends, interests and profits of branches and a rate of 10 per cent on royalties. However, we are prepared to accept higher rates, in the course of our negotiations with developing countries, only if those rates are consistent with those the country in question has granted in its tax conventions with other industrialized countries.

The conventions with France, Belgium and Israel provide that all dividends can be taxed in the country of which the company paying the dividends is a resident so that the charge shall not exceed 15 per cent.

A general rate of 15 per cent is also considered when interests coming from one particular country are paid to a resident of the other. A limited number of exceptions has been provided for certain categories of interests in order to promote better relations between Canada and these countries in the financial, economic and trading fields.

As for royalties, the conventions with France and Belgium provide a flat rate of 10 per cent and that with Israel, a rate of 15 per cent. The three conventions contain an exemption for royalties on copyrights for artistic works, but not including royalties in respect of motion picture films and works on film or videotape for use in connection with television. It must be noted that the Income Tax Act provides such an exemption for copyright royalties. The convention with France provides in addition an exemption on royalties in respect of cultural motion picture films such as defined in the convention.

There are some other points covered by the income tax conventions on which I would like to comment, especially about capital gains. The provisions on capital gains in the three conventions reflect the Canadian position authorizing the country at the source to tax gains from the alienation of immovable property, the assets of a company and the shares of an immovable company. For the purposes of the conventions, an immovable company is one whose assets consist mainly of immovable property.

I would like to bring in a few details concerning teachers. According to most tax conventions in force in Canada, foreign teachers benefit from a fiscal exemption during two years. These provisions have certainly raised a lot of dissatisfaction and the white paper on fiscal reform stated precisely that this concession would be removed from new Canadian tax conventions. The conventions with France, Belgium and Israel do not contain such provisions.

Canada has also upheld its general right to tax pensions and annuities paid to non-residents. Moreover, the three conventions reflect the provisions of the Income Tax Act in providing a tax exemption on pensions paid to veterans.

As for double taxation, the provision dealing with specific procedures to eliminate double taxation is obviously one of the most important of a convention concerning double taxation agreed to with various countries. The Income Tax Act contains unilateral rules whose objective is to relieve Canadian residents from double taxation on incomes from foreign sources. The rules applying to foreign income credits are usually satisfactory but, because of their unilateral character, they cannot make allowances for the particular circumstances inherent in each case. A convention for the avoidance of double taxation gives Canada the chance to adjust its rules on foreign tax credits to accommodate the specific problems that may come up when a Canadian taxpayer receives income from a foreign country. In addition, as I indicated earlier, Canadian companies can be forgiven certain dividends they receive from their subsidiaries only if there is a double taxation convention. Those two objectives are achieved by the conventions with France, Belgium and Israel. To encourage the flow of capital and investments, the three conventions stipulate, of course, that France, Belgium and Israel will do away with, in appropriate fashion, the double taxation in the case of income taxes paid in Canada.

The convention with Israel contains, in addition a stipulation commonly known as the provision for fictitious income tax credit. Let me explain myself, Mr. Speaker. That is a technical means of ensuring that fiscal incentives granted by Israel, through legislation on progressive industries, will in fact benefit Canadian enterprises and that those benefits will not be transferred to the Canadian treasury. This result is achieved in the following way: Canada accepts to include, for the purpose of calculation of foreign tax credit, the amount of Israeli tax which would have been paid without this special incentive legislation. Those provisions will apply to business profits, dividends and interests that a Canadian resident derives from Israeli sources. It is to be noted that in practice the cost for such a provision would probably be very low since there is already an exemption for dividends, which means that there will be no tax payable in Canada for dividends generated by an investment abroad.

One last recommendation: discrimination on the basis of nationality is not allowed under the conventions to ensure that a Canadian citizen will get fair and equitable treatment by the three countries concerned. However, certain tax incentives—tax deduction for small businesses and tax credit for dividends—available, independently of their nationality, to Canadian residents to induce them to invest in Canada will not be affected by the non-discrimination provision since they are applied on the basis of "residence" as opposed to "nationality".

Finally we must aim at working out a policy to keep the conventions up to date. In the past, a bill had to be introduced in Parliament to implement any further amendment to the tax agreement. Considering the expected extension of the tax agreement network in Canada, as I have already said, this method will shortly require much parliamentary time, only to consider technical changes in most cases.

To avoid this and make sure that tax conventions are kept up to date following changes in the bilateral tax relationship between Canada and other countries, part IV of the bill provides for the Governor in Council to be empowered with the implementation of future amendments to the agreements with France, Belgium and Israel, through an order in council subject to the approval of a resolution by Parliament.

Clause 12 of Part IV provides, if both Houses pass regulations such as was described above, for the implementation of those regulations.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the terms of the conventions with France, Belgium and Israel provide for a solution which is equitable and in many respects favourable for Canada to the problems raised by double taxation between Canada and those countries. Therefore I urge the House to pass the bill to implement the conventions.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the debate on Bill S-32, I think the House should first of all consider part IV, the part with which the parliamentary secretary has just dealt. It is important that we review the provisions of that part of the bill because in my mind they demonstrate the rather cavalier attitude on the part of this government to the role of the Parliament of Canada in relation to the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: We have sat here for 20 minutes, from two o'clock until 2.20 waiting for two cabinet ministers to come in, in order that we might start this debate on a bill that I would suggest is much more important than the government has indicated so far.

The three clauses I should like to refer to in Bill S-32 are 10, 11 and 12. If I may, I would put on the record certain comments concerning those clauses. It is our belief that clause 10 of Bill S-32 allows the governor in council to conclude supplementary agreements which would be made effective by proclamation. I believe the parliamentary secretary referred to this point. These are the supplementary agreements to the tax treaties between Israel, France and Belgium that we are now being asked to ratify. Clause 11 purports to set out a negative resolution procedure whereby this executive action can be disallowed if parliament objects, and clause 12 provides that when parliament acquires its own Standing Orders on negative resolutions, the temporary provisions of clause 11 will lapse.

There are two fundamental problems, I would suggest, with this approach. First, the procedure described in clause 11 is useless, because procedurally any resolution would have no claim to the attention of the House. Second, clause 12 anticipates procedural changes here and in the other place which are not even under discussion at the present time, to the best of our knowledge. The government may have something in mind, but it has not allowed the official opposition to know the nature of whatever rule changes it is now contemplating. If a negative resolution procedure is to provide any guarantee to parliament, we suggest that it must provide, first, means whereby a member can move a negative resolution which will appear elsewhere than under private members' motions on the order paper.

Second, there should be a guarantee that the motion will actually be brought before the House and receive adequate discussion. Third, there must be an opportunity for a decision on the matter before the statutory deadline expires. Fourth, there must be a procedure whereby a negative resolution will be brought before the House, other than the way in which it was introduced, in time to be dealt with before the deadline date has overtaken us.

The procedure in clause 11 does not do any of these things. All it really does is to ensure that the supplementary agreement will be tabled in both Houses of Parliament. The bill goes on to say that unless both Houses object within 30 sitting days, the agreement is in effect. In short, this changes the onus. Instead of the treaties having to be ratified by the Parliament of Canada, they may, as far as supplementary amendments to these agreements are concerned, be ratified by order in council and it is up to this House and the other place to move. If they do not move in the fashion I have just described, the order in council is effective.

Where does the negative resolution come from? What member in this House would propose it? Who puts it on the order paper, and where; and who calls it for debate, and when? What obligation is there to reach a decision on the resolution? Is it dealt with simultaneously in the other place and, if not, who guarantees it will be considered there within the deadlines to which I have referred? A negative resolution procedure that neglects these questions is so cynical as to be an insult to members who supposedly being respected by these provisions.

Members are invited to look at section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to see a negative resolution procedure with some significance, despite the timing ambiguity of which the government has taken full advantage. It states that where an objection is filed the House "shall" take it up. That is a definite direction which the government cannot ignore. In clause 11 of Bill S-32 the House, which is fully controlled by the executive, making any agreement must "resolve that the order shall have no effect". I repeat, what use is that if there is no objection to bring any proposed resolutions before the House for debate and decision?

Clause 12 holds out the hope, if you like, of changes in our own rules and refers to a time when we might have a negative resolution procedure in the Standing Orders. Then clause 11 will lapse. As this debate develops, perhaps the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) will inform the House whether he has something in mind. Does he have an amendment to the Standing Orders which will provide for some type of procedure to deal with negative resolution with which we are not familiar at the present time? In the Senate banking, trade and commerce committee, Mr. Cohen, the witness from the Department of Finance, said:

> Clause 12 is contemplating a point in time when each chamber will have established its own set of procedural rules for handling this concept of both affirmative and negative resolutions in terms of the Interpretation Act. What we have tried to do here is anticipate that when the houses have established their own rules, those rules will apply, and clause 11 will no longer do so. Clause 11 is an interim step, which will function until the procedural rules have been ironed out and evolved in the two chambers.

In response to that, Senator Lang said:

> As a member of the Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders, Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have never heard of these contemplated changes in the rules. What makes you think, Mr. Cohen, that there are going to be changes in the House rules?

Mr. Cohen then said it was his "understanding and impression". We must echo, on this side of the House, the words of Senator Lang. We in this House have never heard of these proposed Standing Orders. None of the subcommittees of the procedure committee are dealing with them. There is no promise to bring them forward that anyone on this side of the House has ever heard of. I see the President of the Privy Council now looking at me. He was chairman of the procedure committee, and perhaps he can tell us about this, or we would be glad to hear from his parliamentary secretary who was also on that committee. What does the protection of parliament's rights in relation to these treaty amendments come to? I suggest it is a meaningless, procedural, magic trick in the present and less than an empty promise in the future.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be allowed to ask the hon. member a question. Is he urging that one of his members on the standing committee bring this matter forward? I would certainly have no objection, if he is dissatisfied with the initiative on this side. Of course, any member of the committee can bring it forward, but it is a matter deserving very careful consideration.

Mr. Stevens: In reply to that question, I would point out to the President of the Privy Council that this is the government's initiative. I should have thought that either in the other place or in the introductory remarks of the parliamentary secretary today in the House there would have been some explanation of why clause 12 has been inserted. All this says is that the government did plan to put a proposal forward to cover this point. What is the government's thinking. After all, it proposed the inclusion of clause 12. It deserves further explanation. I submit that the President of the Privy Council should give a concrete explanation of how the government expects to bring in these procedural changes.

Although in essence this bill ratifying the three treaties referred to encompasses but four pages and 12 clauses, it is a pace-setter with respect to new treaties which Canada will enter into. This is the first time since we passed the tax reform bill that we have been asked to ratify new treaties. In a sense, this bill deals with the fall-out effect of that tax reform legislation. In short, we made such drastic changes in that tax reform legislation that it has now become necessary to renegotiate previously existing treaties which we entered into with various countries. My point is that this bill is a pace-setter. We ought to consider to what extent the international consequences of our tax reform legislation have been desirable or undesirable.

The parliamentary secretary talked about the capital gains tax and how that tax is to be dealt with in the treaties we shall ratify. The capital gains tax is a complicating factor in these treaties and presents difficulties connected with entering into such treaties at present. The interests of capital exporters conflict with those of capital importers. Naturally, those who export capital do not favour a capital gains tax in the country in which they invest. On the other hand, importers see nothing wrong with levying such a tax on the gains accruing from the capital invested. Hon. members must not feel that this is merely a technical bill, that we are doing something similar to what we did in the past. Actually, we are dealing with the first fall-out effects of the tax reform legislation, effects making themselves felt in international treaty agreements of the sort we are now contemplating.

In the committee of the other place, Mr. Cohen, to whom I have referred, said that at present 36 treaties are to be negotiated or are waiting to come forward, and in the end we may need to deal with between 50 and 100 various other treaties. I understand that the committee of the other place scrutinized the matter much more carefully than in previous years.

In amending treaties or entering into new treaties, parliament must exercise special vigilance. We ought to look carefully at the initial treaties and examine carefully any amendments. I say this because we live in a world of complicated capital movement. There are great interchanges of capital; there are great international flows of capital. If we arbitrarily do something which may jeopardize the well-being of Canadian-based international companies, we will act most unfortunately. On the other hand, we must make certain that we clamp down on the activities of companies whose offshore operations are really tax avoidance schemes.

It is our responsibility, as members of parliament, to remain vigilant and oversee what the government does in its international dealings. Certainly, there is little evidence of co-operation between various departments of government. The Department of Finance apparently has gone in one direction, the Department of National Revenue in another, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in still another. One wonders how much co-ordinated thought went into the drawing up of the treaties we are considering. What, exactly, was the involvement of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Judging from the testimony taken before the committee of the other place, the Department of External Affairs was not even involved.

I am raising these points because if one examines the broad picture of international taxation two possibilities present themselves: first, Canada has left itself unduly open in the sense that we have allowed the existence of tax loopholes through which huge amounts of money escape untaxed and do not find their way into government coffers. We are losing money because we are too lax. That is one danger and one possibility. The other possibility is that we are too strict; that our companies cannot compete internationally with competitors who are more liberally treated under their country's tax system.

There is evidence supporting the first view. Last June, in Ottawa, the then minister of national revenue in a dramatic speech said that this country is losing, literally, hundreds of millions of dollars in tax revenue as a result of the offshore activities of certain companies. He said that the government wanted to crack down, wanted to hire more investigators and wanted to tighten the entire system. That was said last June. Our newspapers gave extensive coverage to the minister's speech.

The present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) also spoke on this subject. The Globe and Mail of November 19, 1975, printed an article headlined "Tax dodgers major target of study group". According to the Washington article—

> A special task force on taxation has been set up by Canadian and U.S. authorities aimed at catching tax dodgers in both countries.
> The force has been told to submit recommendations by the end of this year that may lead to a new Canadian-U.S. tax treaty, revenue minister Jack (Bud) Cullen said.
> Canada's aim is to recoup an estimated $1.6 billion a year that is being lost through tax avoidance or fraud.
> Mr. Cullen said that multinational corporations, through dealings with subsidiaries in other countries, are suspected of being the major offenders . . .
> "We want to see if we can do this through existing tax treaties," Mr. Cullen said. "If not, we may need a special agreement."

Last February 25, Peter Cook—who wrote the original story concerning the previous minister of finance—wrote another story. He wrote as follows in the Financial Times:

> The government has shelved plans to close a "tax loophole which costs the country hundreds of million of dollars" because Ottawa cannot afford the expert investigators needed.

Which article is right? Last November we heard that Canada is losing possibly $1.6 billion through the offshore activities of Canadian-based companies. In February we were told that the government could not afford to hire investigators to check this. If $1.6 billion was at stake, could not the government afford investigators whose work might lead to recovery of that revenue?

Last June, the former minister of national revenue, now Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), said that the practice was costing hundreds of millions of dollars in lost revenue and he promised a series of proposals to significantly strengthen Canada's efforts. Department of National Revenue spokesmen said that the government's austerity measures have put the project "far down the road". I hope that the Minister of National Revenue, who is in the House today, will clarify this. What, in fact, is the truth? Is there a chance that we have been losing $1.6 billion in revenue as a result of what apparently are tax evasion schemes around the world, and in spite of that fact they have said they cannot get sufficient investigators as a result of this austerity program? Surely that is not a credible story. However, I should like to hear the Minister of National Revenue give his version.

I have indicated that this is one side of the question before us today. When we are considering tax treaties we have to consider whether Canada is, in effect, being ripped off as a result of multinational corporation activity or any other type of international activity concerning tax evasion which should be stopped. But the other thing that we have to question is whether we are being unduly harsh on our own corporations by subjecting them to tax treatment that is much more harsh than one finds in other comparable jurisdictions. After all, in our committee meeting this week, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) stated, after questioning, that perhaps the luscious area in the world today, so far as tax incentives and tax breaks or grants are concerned to get companies active within their boundaries, is the Republic of Ireland.

I asked the minister whether he could give us some type of synopsis or a review of the relative position, nation to nation, around the world, the position of the main trading nations of the world, concerning how they treat tax write-offs, grants and other incentives to enable people to open up to advantage within their country. He has promised to do that. I think that type of consideration is something we should also be asking ourselves, certainly in committee when we consider these treaties. What is the relative position of Canada as against the United States, Ireland, Japan, Mexico and many of the other countries which have commercial concerns with whom we have to compete?

In dealing with this question, I found in the September-October, 1975, Canadian Tax Journal an interesting article written by A. M. Pilling, entitled "Tax Haven Subsidies". Mr. Pilling is a lawyer in the city of Toronto. He is well regarded, and I find it very interesting that he takes up the comments made by the Minister of Justice to which I have referred. He referred to that speech in Ottawa. If I may, I will quote directly from the Canadian Tax Journal. Mr. Pilling says that the minister's comments——were contained in an address to the ninth general assembly of the Inter-American Centre of Tax Administrators (CIAT) in Ottawa on June 12, 1975. The address was largely about the elusiveness of multinationals in the tax context". The minister noted in connection with the "tax haven problems" that:

"Since 1968, our tax avoidance and special investigations groups have been searching out and challenging tax haven situations. A substantial number of reassessments, some involving prosecution, have been issued, and the related tax recoveries have amounted to many millions of dollars.

At present, there are more than twenty important cases, either under investigation or in the appeal process, concerning substantial diversion of income from Canada.

Although Mr. Pilling deals with the speech in the context of the aftermath of the recent case with which most of us are familiar, the Dominion Bridge v. The Queen, it was pretty strongly held by the Canadian Federal Court that an offshore operation which in any way appears to be a sham or a dummy will simply be wiped out, and that the taxation will be looked upon as if the entire operation, irrespective of whatever other jurisdiction is involved, is a Canadian operation. Mr. Pilling, in his rather thoughtful article, tries to look at the consequences of this decision and of the perhaps new and rather active approach of the Department of National Revenue. He states:

First, the judgment suggests tests to determine whether or not a tax haven subsidy is a sham. Secondly, shortly after the judgment the Minister of National Revenue stated that "we now intend to move, with more confidence and vigour, against other similar arrangements".

"Similar arrangements" was the term used by the Minister of National Revenue. Mr. Pilling then goes on to state as follows, after reviewing some of the highlights of that case:

Of broader interest is the question of whether, as a result of Revenue Canada's renewed confidence in dealing with tax haven abuses, it is now necessary to introduce the distinction between active business income earned by a foreign affiliate in a treaty, as opposed to a non-treaty, country . . . While after 1975 active business income earned by a foreign affiliate in a tax haven country will not be subject to Canadian tax until repatriated to Canada, if the affiliate is regarded as a puppet of its Canadian parent its income will be subject to Canadian tax whether repatriated or not.

Mr. Speaker, in committee I would like to go into more detail concerning the actual wording of the existing tax act, the intention as far as these treaties are concerned. But the point I would like to get to in Mr. Pilling's article is in the final paragraphs of the article where he asks whether there should be a time for reappraisal. He says:

The proposal, however, ignores the competition that Canadian business faces overseas from multinational companies with vast resources, from companies located in low wage countries, from companies whose governments are in a position to and do help in securing contracts and from companies whose domestic law permits the use of tax havens without the necessity of paying domestic tax on repatriation of earnings accumulated abroad.

He gives examples of where this is the case and, oddly enough, one of the examples he gives is France: he says that through the use of a special company, the French authorities permit—actually encourage—the use of the tax haven in relation to their domestic taxation. I would point out that we are dealing with a tax treaty involving France in Bill S-32. Mr. Pilling goes on to say:

It can be argued that a country with a limited domestic market and a heavy reliance on foreign investment benefits from encouraging its domestic companies to expand overseas. While no one would contend that tax haven operations play a significant part in developing Canadian trade overseas they can be significant in some areas. For example, in technologically-oriented industries R & D staff and program can be maintained if order books can be filled with overseas business when domestic business is lean. For the engineering and construction companies the uncertainty of bidding in foreign countries can result in margins for which the only protection in many cases is a low tax rate in a company located in a low tax jurisdiction on some portion of their contract income.

Mr. Pilling continues:

If the over-all objective of encouraging the expansion of Canadian trade overseas is of greater value than the fiscal advantages resulting from the proposed international tax system, and the writer submits that it may well be, the incentive of using a tax haven country should be made available to Canadian business as it is to many of its competitors. This would suggest that the treaty-non-treaty country distinction be abolished—

Here is an authority on this general international tax question suggesting that perhaps the old-fashioned idea of having these international treaties should be abolished. I certainly do not know. I am simply looking for some comment from the government benches, having considered this suggestion, the reason they persist in going ahead with the treaties we are being asked to ratify today.

Mr. Pilling goes on to say that the distinction should be abolished, and I quote:

. . . that all active business income of foreign affiliates be allowed to be repatriated to Canada free of Canadian tax as in the past. This is not to say that sham operations or the artificial diversion of income from Canada should be permitted. But if a company can establish an overseas operation in a tax haven country which can withstand the management and control tests and puppet and sham tests, which are no more stringent than those applied to domestic subsidiaries, there would seem to be no reason for Canada to tax its earnings when repatriated, and particularly not if the location of the subsidiary is an incentive to develop markets for Canadian products overseas.

Surely the debate on Bill S-32 should broaden to the point where we can get some explanation as to what extent the government has considered the trade implications of its whole tax approach, bearing in mind that there were rather dramatic changes made when the legislation was recently passed, and bearing in mind that certain provisions in these treaties begin, and can only begin, as of January 1 of this year. For example, I refer to FAPI.

I think we have before us a pace setting piece of legislation which we should debate thoroughly in the House at second reading. We should also intensively review the treaties and proposals in committee. I suggest that unless there can be a reasonable explanation for Part IV of the bill before us, that part should be amended substantially before it comes back for report stage in this House.

I am nervous about the possibility that we might be over zealous and that the negotiators will be running around the world entering into so-called treaties to avoid double taxation, and hitting countries with which, for some reason or other, they find it difficult to negotiate. Certainly they do not want to come up with a treaty which would be closely scrutinized in this House, and they end up deciding to have a token type of treaty, knowing that from then on all they need is an order in council to strengthen the agreement with subsequent amendments, and there is little possibility that this House will consider in a meaningful way what they will have done.

For example, in committee I noticed that Mr. Cohen suggested that the negotiators are now negotiating with certain communist nations to sign new treaties. I find this very interesting. I do not know exactly how you enter into a tax treaty between a communist nation—when you consider their ideology and their system—and a capitalistic or free enterprise system. I am not sure how you can put those apples and pears together, but presumably it is felt that there is some way to work out a tax agreement and protect Canadian interests at the same time. I believe Rumania is a country which is high on the list.

In short, we have an important bill before us today, Bill S-32. I hope that we, as members of parliament, will be vigilant before we pass the bill, and I believe that as this is a pace setting piece of legislation we must be careful that we do not unwittingly jeopardize Canadian business activity with regard to international trade, and second, that we do not allow—and I should like to hear more on this—any type of loophole to continue to exist whereby taxation which should rightfully fall to Canada does not do so. And certainly if it is to the extent of $1.6 billion per year which is being lost, as the Minister of National Revenue apparently indicated, I think it is time the government did something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, when we are considering Bill S-32 we would be remiss if some hon. members on this side did not point out the cost to the Canadian taxpayers of the reluctance of the government to take material steps to tighten up the tax laws by which it is possible for multinational corporations and their subsidiaries to divert income out of Canada, and therefore to lessen their tax liabilities, and therefore their taxes payable to the Government of Canada. As is well known by hon. members this is done by multinational corporations underpricing exports, overpricing imports, and charging artificially high expenses to their subsidiaries.

I want to read into the record an example taken from the files of the United States Internal Revenue Service which demonstrates how a multinational corporation can actually cheat governments out of tax dollars. Of course I will not use corporation names. I shall simply call the company involved company A. This is right out of tax files, and I suggest under the existing tax laws in Canada this could happen and likely does happen right here in Canada.

It reads as follows:

> . . . manufacturing company (A) in the U.S. had a wholly-owned subsidiary in another country that extracted raw materials. The multinational had another wholly-owned subsidiary shipping company in a tax haven country that chartered ships from unrelated companies.
> Most of the shipping company's activity was in transporting raw materials from the mining subsidiary to the parent manufacturing company in the United States.
> But the shipping company also supplied shipping services in a small way to other companies which were not related to the parent. The key point is that it charged the unrelated companies the same shipping rate as its parent company.
> On the surface this appeared to be reasonable, but on closer examination U.S. Revenue Service officials decided the shipping company was charging its parent company much too high a rate.
> By inflating the shipping costs the parent company was increasing its expenses allowable against income and therefore decreasing its tax. It was also increasing profits of its wholly-owned subsidiary, the shipping company, in a tax haven country.

So it can happen, and it does happen. It happens to the degree that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) suggests that it is responsible for a loss of revenue to Canada of $1.6 billion. I disagree with the minister. Like others, I think it is closer to 10 per cent of the total revenues of the government of this country, which would put it at $2.7 billion. Like Mr. Smallwood, the former premier of that great province of Newfoundland, I like to reduce things down to their lowest common denominator so that people such as myself and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) can understand them.

Mr. Buchanan: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: To understand what $2.7 billion can buy, one could use a Toyota Corolla, a 1200 model. I know ministers on the other side would not know what that is. That is a car which people other than cabinet ministers drive and have to buy. Let us take a Toyota, because we are in an affluent society, and put a radio in it of whatever colour we like.

Let us start in Victoria and put Toyotas together, bumper to bumper across British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, the keystone province of Manitoba, wind our way on the trans-Canada highway around the Great Lakes, through the Ottawa valley, down through Gaspe, the all Canadian route to the Maritimes, down through New Brunswick to the great town of Truro, Nova Scotia, to Halifax, take the trans-Canada to Cape Breton, put all the Toyotas we can possibly put on the ferry across to Newfoundland, all the way to St. John's, Newfoundland, and right up to the front door of Joey's oratory, and we would have 17 Toyotas left over. As if it were not bad enough that the Government of Canada takes all these Toyotas, it deprives the people of Canada of the 17 left over. That is what they are talking about in lost revenue to the people of Canada, revenue that was legitimate revenue.

The two dictums of taxation in this country, the two principles which every Canadian can understand and probably would agree with, are that taxation be fair and universal, and that governments spend taxes in a responsible and constructive way. My friend, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), says yes, after they get them. That is the whole problem. We do not get $2.7 billion of taxation that we ought to get. I suggest that is not fair taxation. It is not fair that all Canadians are taxed and yet multinational corporations can rip off, if we accept the estimate of the Minister of National Revenue, $1.6 billion. That $1.6 billion is not out of the minister's pocket, but out of the pockets of taxpaying Canadians. This government was elected to act, not to tell us what it wants and hopes to do.

The predecessor of the Minister of National Revenue made a promise. That, of course, is a word that the government takes rather glibly. I am not sure it even knows the meaning of the word promise. However, the former minister promised proposals. He said, "I promise significantly to strengthen Canada's compliance effort." In other words, he promised to take action to recover for the people of Canada taxation that is lost because of tax havens, subsidiaries, and the arrangements we have with other nations with regard to the multinationals.

Since then that minister has risen and fallen, moved on to other things, and we are left with the same state of disarray and bewilderment as before. However, there is hope. One thing that always lifts our spirits is that we have this great hope of better things to come.

We now have a new Minister of National Revenue. He has not been idle. He has been about the country and about the world. He is a man of great compassion. There is no question about that. He has even been to our city of Winnipeg opening temporary centres. I suppose he is attacking the multinationals in Winnipeg.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not mind being called compassionate, but I certainly do not like being misquoted. I never at any time indicated that the loss of revenue was $1.6 billion. I did indicate there was a significant sum. If the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) will re-read the article, he will see that part is not in quotes and is not attributable to me. I never made that statement.

Mr. Whiteway: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister might inform the House of his estimate.

Mr. Cullen: That is a good question. It is significantly less than $1.6 billion.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has the floor. He does not need to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I would gladly yield the floor to the minister if he would be more exact in his remarks to this House. If he says it is significantly less, he must have some figure in mind. To my mind, significantly less means less than half. Would the minister like to inform the people of Canada of his estimate of lost revenue to Canada? The minister has a blank look on his face. I do not know whether it is because he does not want to answer or because he does not know. In any event, until he comes up with a figure to refute mine, my estimate will be as valid as his. Until he explains, I will suggest it is $2.7 billion. Until the minister proves me wrong, that is where we will stand.

The minister says we cannot afford to hire experts. Before he rises in his place I ought to say the minister was reported as saying we cannot afford to hire the experts who could evaluate the cost of goods and services and material shipped in and out of Canada and assess a fair tax. The minister shakes his head when I say that that is what he is reported as saying. Is that not in fact the position of the minister?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I again rise on a point of order. I do not know how far ranging this debate should be. I thought we were talking about tax treaties and the treatment of them. I had the estimates before the committee where these questions should have been raised. If the subject matter is so interesting to the hon. member, maybe he should save this speech for another day. The hon. member says I am reported to have said that. I again indicate to him that I never made that statement. I challenge anyone to show that I made that statement.

Mr. Whiteway: The minister says I should save this speech for another day. That is what is wrong with the government. It always wants to save the problems for another day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: He is the minister. Why does he not get on with it now? They have been in government long enough.

An hon. Member: Too long.

Mr. Whiteway: Yes, I should rephrase that. They have been in government too long. Nevertheless, it has been long enough to have more of an answer than that my speech should be saved for another day.

I would like the minister to address himself to this question. We ought not to be asking whether we can afford the cost of hiring experts. Surely our brains in Canada can equal the brains of the world in terms of tightening up our tax structure. I believe we have that brain power. I do not think the question should be whether we can afford to hire them, but whether we can afford not to hire them, if for no other reason than to break even.

I know the way this government spends money. However, I cannot imagine it costing $2.7 million to tighten up the tax structure. The government will probably spend all of that to get the job done. Even if it did spend all that money to get the job done, Canadians could at least go to bed knowing that this unfairness and inequity in terms of our tax structure in this country would be eliminated. There would not be one tax for the multinationals and another for the common people of this country.

The minister has made some useful suggestions. He suggested a simultaneous audit from country to country to correlate the various kinds of activities of the multinationals. That is a good suggestion. I give the minister full credit and I commend him on that kind of suggestion. However, the problem is that that is all it is, a suggestion. The difference between being on the minister's side and on my side is that I suggest, but he can act.

Surely you must have something more for the people of Canada than to say, "I am making suggestions." We do not need any more suggestions. We need actions. These whimsical notions you get from time to time have to be translated into legislation, and surely you could present something better to the House of Commons than this dismal effort, as good as it is, which does not really address itself to the real problem facing Canada. I understand the difficulty of getting to the root of not being able to catch these multinational corporations in their tax games. I know the lag which occurs when they exchange information from country to country. I know the large number of tax havens in which they can get involved. But the government was elected not to identify problems only but to present programs and actions to right the wrongs.

I conclude by saying that if the government will bring in legislation to tidy up these tax loopholes I have no doubt that we on this side will give our support. Surely they are known to the department. Given the kind of staff the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has in his office I should think you could borrow a few dozen of them and he would still have plenty around to run his office. I say this for the reason that the Canadian people expect no more and deserve no less.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as I take part in this debate on Bill S-32 I cannot but reflect on the history of taxation in this country and the conventions we have entered upon in the past with many other states.

First of all, I should like to refer to the words of Senator Lang when he introduced the bill in the other place. He made reference to the so-called tax reform law which parliament passed in 1971. He referred to the fundamental changes which were made at that time and said these changes in the tax laws were so basic that they had necessitated renegotiation of the tax treaties in effect at that time between Canada and 16 other countries. It is now four years later and it is worth noting that the three tax treaties we are now examining are the first to be renegotiated according to the evidence given in the other place. The words of the hon. Senator were these:

> The first three conventions to be successfully renegotiated out of the 16 extant at the time of the tax reform legislation are reproduced in this bill.

The next day the Senate was informed that this information was incorrect. There had been 16 tax treaties in effect, all of which would require renegotiation because of the major changes made by Canada in its own tax law. However, the three treaties we are examining today are not among the 16 in force in 1972. The question thus arises: are these renegotiated conventions or are they new conventions? The implication is that we actually have 19 now, rather than 16.

It is difficult to know just what the government has planned in this regard. I refer to a list of tax conventions published by the CCH Canadian Limited under "Income Tax and Regulations." The information given here, and I think we might take it as being reliable, refers to the international tax conventions and states there are 16, and that since 1971 Canada has not concluded any treaties related to the avoidance of double taxation or of fiscal evasion. The reference here is to the Canada-France Treaty which was actually signed in May, 1975. Now, in April, 1976, parliament is being asked to examine it and approve it. I shall not read the list, but it runs from Austria to Zambia, and names 37 countries with which Canada is presently negotiating tax treaties.

The interesting thing is that the tax treaties with the United Kingdom and the United States, to name just two, are listed with those presently under negotiation. The reason this is strange is that the government does not seem to be aware of the treaties those countries are negotiating. The 16 countries with which we had treaties in 1971 seem to be in limbo. Mr. Speaker, you cannot have a treaty which is in effect if it is also being renegotiated, especially when the government has apparently no idea of the status of those treaties at this moment.

I attempted to ask the minister this morning what was the status of the Canada-United States tax treaty and what interim measures the government was relying on since there is no doubt, when one looks at the personal income tax forms of Canadians, that some relief is given to taxpayers in their dealings with that country.

Most of the bill we are asked to consider, indeed all but four pages, consists of the treaties themselves. I shall refer later to the contents of those four pages and I am sure the committee will be giving full scrutiny to the contents of the treaties as well.

I do not think many members will disagree with the principle involved here, which is that we should set down our tax relations with other countries in a proper and forthright manner. Before we get into some of the details I should like to examine the underlying causes of the need to be renegotiating these treaties at the moment. At the very least, the present debate emphasizes the failure of the government's so-called tax reform measures back in 1971 and the months prior to that. The stated purpose of the reform was, to put it in a few words, to achieve equity and simplicity. This is a commendable aim and it is sad for Canada that we were unable to achieve either of those qualities.

If anyone needs examples to show we have failed to achieve either equity or simplicity as a result of the tax reform it will not be necessary to look very far. I should like to give a little evidence right now. I refer to the government's tax statistics for 1975 analyzing the returns of individuals for the 1973 taxation year. It appears from the summary, table II, that the poorest sector of Canadian society, those earning less than $7,000, paid no less than $1 billion in income tax. Yet the government's agencies tell us that the poverty level is something less than $8,000 a year income. I am certain the people earning under $7,000 and who have paid $1 billion in taxes do not think the situation is very equitable at the moment.

Another interesting figure in table II of the statistics reveals that 46 per cent of the personal income tax bill is paid by Canadians earning less than $12,000, which after all is only one half the level of pay of the lowly backbencher of this House. A little higher up the scale we find that fully 65 per cent of the total personal income tax bill of the federal government is met by those earning under $16,000. The low income earners of Canada are also suffering from galloping inflation, and even with personal exemptions indexed their tax bill is high. Indeed they are suffering the combined effects of our bad tax laws and inflation.

What else, Mr. Speaker, does our present tax system do? Instead of giving us equity it also seeks to penalize the hard worker. This does not necessarily mean someone who is a huge income earner, though the tax system affects that person as well. I have in mind a tradesman who has a certain skill of the kind Canada needs. Such a person is encouraged not to work overtime, because although he earns a big buck while doing his normal work he knows that taxes will take away so much that it is not worth his while to continue to work hard. As for those in the higher income brackets, the really high earners, our tax laws not only deter them from bending their efforts to their best advantage but also tempt more than a few of them actually to quit living in this country.

A little later on I shall be making reference to that particular problem, but I think we are all familiar with examples where really able Canadians who can contribute to our society have been frightened away by this so-called tax reform and have gone to some other place, probably a tax haven. I shall cite some figures in a few minutes showing the huge write-offs required by Canada since we are unable to follow these incomes and collect some taxes.

Let me examine for a moment one other aspect, and this is the tax simplicity that the government promised. Along with equity we were going to get simplicity. In 1917 Canada introduced a temporary tax through a measure at that time called, I think, the income war tax act. Interestingly enough, income tax carried this name till 1949, when we had another kind of tax reform and passed the plain, ordinary, Income Tax Act. I had a copy of a 1917 tax return in my possession a few years ago. It was a one-page document with no schedules or fancy calculations required. It was simply a matter of paying 5 per cent of your income to the government. That is what I call simplicity, Mr. Speaker. In the government's efforts to achieve so-called equity, we all know what has happened to this simplicity over the years, and of course the equity has gone as well.

In 1951, 25 years ago, I had the privilege of completing my own income tax return for the first time and I still have it in my possession. It really is a thing to behold. It is a simple document that would fit into the breast pocket of your jacket and is known as the T-1 short form. I am sure that everyone remembers them, but they are now a thing of the past, having disappeared along with the old, outdated war tax act. I do not know whether I have it with me today, but I am sure we are all familiar with the 1976 version of the taxation form for 1975, known as the T-1 general. It consists of many pages. It is supposed to be simple to complete, but the government takes no chances and provides you free of charge with a 53 page booklet to guide you through your new simplified tax return just in case you find it a little bit complicated or have some trouble getting through it.

An hon. Member: Like the yellow pages.

Mr. Clarke: Yes. These 53 pages tell you how to complete the form. This would all have been unnecessary had we been allowed to coast along with our old tax law. However, I think people still have difficulty with their returns and tax services are booming businesses in Canada these days. Banks, trust companies, and even department stores are now selling a tax service so that the poor individual who just cannot through his forms get some relief, albeit at the lifting of some dollars from his pockets.

Before I came to this place I was in the accounting profession, and I well remember how accountants and lawyers were tearing their hair out trying to overcome the problems created by tax reform as presented by the government. This may have been overcome to some degree by now since they have been working at it all day and every day, but I think it is obvious that very few of them will agree precisely on what course of action should be followed because even they are confused by the regulations. Accountants and lawyers have one slight advantage over others in that they get paid for worrying about these problems, and in view of the professional fees being asked today I think they are doing very well.

What are the things, one may ask, that are so confusing to the poor taxpayer? What does he find so difficult to understand? I have thought of a few answers, Mr. Speaker. How do you explain to a widow who is surviving on pension and dividend income, for instance, the operation of grossing up? Why should she have to pay tax on $600 when she knows very well she received only $400? To answer that is impossible, Mr. Speaker. I have only been able to tell them to take it up with the government at the next election. I do not think the government itself has ever properly explained that.

Then there is reference made in the booklet and on the tax forms to the income averaging provisions of the Income Tax Act. There are many examples of income averaging, but a simple one that applies to everybody every year is if their incomes have changed by more than 20 per cent over the previous year. The tax department, however, does not suggest that you try to calculate what effect the general income averaging provisions, as they are called, will have on your income, because they know it will be difficult for people to understand them. So they recommend that taxpayers do not bother doing anything with that, but that the department will feed it into the computer and get an answer. Then these taxpayers will get some money back if that is what the computer says. No thought is given to the fact that a person might want to question the computer, or that the computer might be wrong, a frustrating experience as those of us who have had this experience know.

There are various kinds of annuities available to the taxpayer, the income averaging annuity, for example, which the taxpayer can decide to buy if he has received a fairly large capital gain. However, the taxpayer is very hard pressed to decide whether he is eligible to buy such an annuity or whether it would be to his advantage. I certainly would have difficulty advising anyone on that.

There is another kind of annuity which I think is really mandatory for a taxpayer, although many of them do not understand this, and this is the case with hundreds of thousands of Canadians every year. Every Canadian who reaches age 70—

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly this information about annuities is very interesting. The treatise of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) on annuities is undoubtedly of value, but we are dealing with a tax measure that seeks to enforce international treaties. I fail to see what the advantages of annuities has to do with the bill under discussion. I would commend to the hon. gentleman the provisions of this bill and its clauses so that he might himself be informed as to what we are debating.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, and with the greatest respect to the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) and his point of order, of doubtful value in any event, I do not believe any representative of any government which cannot start the business of this House until 20 minutes after starting time should complain about the content of speeches later in the afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I tried to make a serious point, contrary to the intervention of the hon. member who—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. I think perhaps the parliamentary secretary has made his intervention, and one bite is probably all that should be allowed under the rules. The Conservative House leader has also made his point. I hope at this juncture prudence will take over and that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) will be allowed to continue his speech. The debate does concern Bill S-32, an act to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium, and Canada and Israel. Having said that, perhaps I have outlined as much as the Chair should regarding the contents of the bill.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your direction. I really cannot understand the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) making such an intervention. It would appear that he has not paid attention to what I said in my opening remarks. Perhaps I should start again.

An hon. Member: Oh, no!

[Mr. Clarke.]

Mr. Clarke: I am well aware of the purpose of the bill and I will have something to say about that in a few moments. I thought it was important to establish the base upon which we were working, and hence my preamble. I was merely trying to establish that the government brought upon itself these very unnecessary and complicated negotiations, which have taken some four years to produce three treaties, those we are being asked to examine today.

I was talking about annuities, which are very confusing to many Canadians. Many thousands of Canadians every year who achieve the age of 70 have taken advantage of the government's provisions which allow them to defer a certain amount of their earned income through the purchase of a registered retirement savings plan. Many taxpayers are caught in a terrible bind because they do not understand the simple rules put forward by the government which allows them to defer some of their income and, therefore, some of their tax.

Unfortunately there is a penalty for the unwary taxpayer who arrives at age 70 and finds he has some money in his registered retirement savings plan and is required by this simplified tax law either to take it out into income in his 71st year, or buy a life annuity. This completely ignores the fact that this is a penalty in itself to the unwary taxpayer, because the rates for a life annuity at age 70 these days require an amount of cash almost identical to the amount that would be received if only the interest were taken into account.

Perhaps that is enough about annuities, but I do not think it is enough about the so-called simplicity of the tax system. Many taxpayers have great difficulty in finding their way through the capital gains rules. We all know that half the capital gains are taxable and put into income. We all do not know about the adjusted cost base and the other complicated terms that can lead us into traps.

As a result of these capital transactions we have an inequitable situation that allows someone to sell a capital asset and make a capital gain, providing he has invested and the value has gone up. He then has to pay a capital gains tax, but finds himself no longer in a position to replace that asset because of rising market prices, or because the tax has been paid on the gain. As a result this is not really a gain at all, it is really a tax on inflation which the taxpayer happened to have rolled into his hands.

Of course there is also the roll over provision which would allow the taxpayer to reinvest, but that has to be done within a certain time frame. I am not sure how many taxpayers understand the roll over provision. In addition, this does not always seem to work.

There is another difficulty which came to my attention the other day about this so-called simplified tax system, and this relates to a form produced by Revenue Canada Taxation. We know it is a valid form because it was revised in 1975 and is referred to as the T-5 form. There is a provision on this form regarding who shall complete it. There is also a relieving provision. I am only going to refer to the relieving provision that is of interest to me. It says that this return is not required to be filed for interest paid on money on loans from banks, financial houses or other institutions, or from persons whose ordinary business includes the lending of money.

That seems to be quite clear. It refers to money borrowed from a money lender or someone whose ordinary business includes the lending of money. This does not have to be a money lender, but could be a doctor who makes loans, or something like that. If you borrow money from a person whose ordinary business includes the lending of money, and that includes a bank, you do not have to file the T-5 form.

However, I ran across a taxpayer the other day who had not filed this particular form within the required time because that was not necessary. For the benefit of some people with whom he was doing business he decided gratuitously to file the form. The department officials came along and said that was fine, and they thanked him for filing it, but told him he would have to pay a $20 late fine.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clarke: Some members laugh, but the department was right in this case. It was the form that was wrong. Regulation 201 covers the filing of these forms and states who must file them on dividends, interests and so on. It seems that in 1971 when the tax form went through, intentionally perhaps, the relieving provision which allows the person not to file the form for interest on loans from banks and other lending establishments disappeared. It would appear to me now that the government is checking this up and perhaps we will have a proper answer, hopefully from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) on this point. It appears that anyone who has borrowed money from a bank and does not issue the bank with a T-5 slip may be in breach of the tax law.

● (1550)

Speaking to the Canadian Tax Foundation, the former minister of national revenue, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), said that he was concerned about the tax law. He said that he considers tax reform as a continuing process and asked business to help keep the system in balance by continuing to press for changes in the law. Well, members of the House on my side, and certainly the taxpayers of Canada, want to see progress in this regard. The minister also apparently was in favour of a "softer" government attitude to ministerial discretion, technical amendments, and all demands for files and records.

We all know that the Department of National Revenue carries the big stick. If you do not obey the law and pay your tax, the department can do terrible things to you, that is, if you are still in Canada. Later we shall deal with what happens if you have left Canada. Apparently the minister was concerned about ministerial discretion and those powers in the area of tax law that allow the Department of National Revenue to decide whether a transaction is aimed at avoiding taxes.

As lawyers in this House know, a man should be entitled to so order his affairs as to minimize the incidence of taxation. It was the view of the department that it knew better, that it ought to decide this question, not the taxpayer, as if it were a crime to claim your rights under the law and reduce your taxes. I am sure that lawyers in this House, and taxpayers outside, will be delighted to note that the courts recently decided that a man still has the right so to order his affairs as to minimize the incidence of taxation.

I hold in my hand another press clipping which illustrates the sort of thing that can happen when our so-called tax reform law fails. It is the hope of members on my side that, in addition to avoiding double taxation, the treaties we shall enter into with other countries will allow us to close certain tax loopholes. Just over one month ago the Financial Times reported that:

> The government has shelved plans to close a 'tax loophole which costs the country hundreds of millions of dollars' . . .

Why did the government decide to shelve those plans? Apparently Ottawa could not afford the extra investigators needed. This country employs 300,000 or 400,000 civil servants, depending on who counts them, and how the counting is done. It strikes me as odd that anyone should say we cannot afford a few expert investigators whose work may lead to the recovery of up to $2.7 billion. I think we heard that figure. At any rate the money lost to this country is enormous, and the work of the investigators would enable us to enforce collections against taxpayers who have left. The former minister of national revenue admitted that the loophole was costing hundreds of millions of dollars in lost revenue. He promised a series of proposals to "significantly strengthen Canada's compliance effort". I hope that this bill, and the treaties we expect will follow, will go some way to correct the difficulty.

Department of National Revenue spokesmen said that government austerity measures have put the investigation project "far down the road". I remind the House that an article written in November of last year dealing with tax dodgers and evasion outlined how the government was to attack this difficulty. According to the article appearing in the Globe and Mail of November 19, 1975:

> A special task force on taxation has been set up by Canadian and U.S. authorities aimed at catching tax dodgers in both countries.
> The force has been told to submit recommendations by the end of this year that may lead to a new Canadian-U.S. tax treaty, . . .
> Canada's aim is to recoup an estimated $1.6 billion a year that is being lost through tax avoidance or fraud.

I think the minister denied that the figure was $1.6 billion. The article mentions the figure, but I will not insist on attributing it to the minister. Without doubt the minister was interviewed. According to the news report he said:

> We want to see if we can do this through existing tax treaties . . . If not, we may need a special agreement.

It remains to be seen what we shall do. If existing treaties are responsible for our present position, we may need to examine dozens more of these treaties.

As I wish to make some further comments, may I call it four o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. It being four o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper. I understand we are to consider first notices of motions. The Chair understands that Notice of Motion No. 42 is to be proceeded with. Therefore Notice of Motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), No. 15 in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan), No. 19 in the name of the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr.

Watson), and number No. 20 in the name of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) shall stand at the request of the government. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FRESHWATER AND INLAND FISHERIES

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Standing Orders of this House should be amended to provide that there shall be a Standing Committee on Freshwater and Inland Fisheries, distinct from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, to which shall be exclusively referred all matters relating to the freshwater and inland fisheries of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak on this motion. The freshwater fishery of Canada is close to my heart and to the hearts of my constituents. The commercial, gill net freshwater fishery in many constituencies represents an important way of life. Freshwater fishing in Manitoba provides an important economic base and it is my concern that this valuable industry shall be kept alive and fishermen allowed the opportunity to remain in the freshwater fishing industry despite drawbacks—and believe me there are many—which have plagued them for years.

I am also concerned because freshwater fishermen are being short-changed because they do not receive from Ottawa the same recognition which coastal fisheries receive. I specifically refer to the present inability of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to deal adequately with the freshwater fishing industry. It is my conclusion that this standing committee does not—nay, cannot—spend enough time monitoring the workings of the freshwater fishery.

Today I shall propose to hon. members of this House that a separate committee be established to deal solely with the freshwater fishing industry of Canada. In doing so I have endeavoured to assimilate enough facts so that I can cogently present my ideas as to why a standing committee on freshwater and inland fisheries is desirable and, indeed, necessary.

First, let me review the history of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, the federal Crown corporation which, in effect, is the commercial freshwater fish marketing board in this country. I will then show how difficulties with the corporation and with the freshwater fishing industry in general have not been adequately dealt with in the respective standing committee of the House in the past.

The Freshwater Fish Marketing Act was assented to on February 27, 1969, and came into force May 1, 1969, at which time the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was established for the purpose of marketing and trading in fish, fish products and by-products, in and out of Canada. The corporation has the exclusive right in inter-provincial and export trade to market the products of the commercial fishery of the provinces participating in the program. The provinces, under Section 25 of the act, include the Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and western Ontario. As well, the object of the corporation is to increase returns to fishermen, promote markets, and increase inter-provincial and export trade.

The quality of the commercial freshwater fish that is regulated and handled by the corporation is comparable to any in Canada. Indeed Canada is unique in having a freshwater fishing industry that in many cases is the livelihood of hundreds of individuals and is the sole economic base of many regions.

Fishermen, however, have run into difficulties with their seasonal occupation since the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act was implemented in 1969. First of all—and this would especially apply to the province of Manitoba and in particular to my riding of Churchill—many fishing operations were disrupted as they were turned over to local co-operatives that would act as agents to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Fishermen were lost and some fishing was abandoned at this time because of alternative local job opportunities in the fields of farming, lumber, and logging, mechanics, carpentry, and general contracting, although hydro development in the north was a major controlling factor.

Many of the large commercial freshwater fish operations were out of production between 1972 and 1974. This was a crucial changeover period, the beginning of a regulated freshwater fishing industry that set the stage for a whole new area of responsibility for members of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Then there was one of the most devastating examples of how fishermen in Manitoba and other member provinces were adversely affected by the actions of the corporation. I am talking now of the long standing strike at the freshwater fish marketing plant at Transcona, Manitoba. If members will recall, that strike began with a walkout of plant employees on October 11, 1974, after they had worked without a contract since March of that year. The strike that officially went into effect the following day ended with a new contract settlement five weeks later—after the near destruction of the freshwater fishery in Churchill constituency, and throughout the province the Transcona strike caused losses for fishermen who were not able to catch their quota before the strike began. This is unacceptable in light of the fact that the corporation was aware that its employees might eventually strike once their contract had expired. Yet no additional cold storage facilities were made available, and fishermen were ordered to pull up their nets and stop fishing.

These fishermen had virtually no one to go to bat for them. They had no federal body which they felt confident they could turn to, so many of them blamed the provincial government for inaction in regard to settlement of the strike. Had there been an exclusive freshwater and inland fisheries committee—or at least a special committee to which these fishermen could have presented their grievances—then the situation could have been different. The Fisheries and Forestry Standing Committee, as it is presently structured, is simply unable to monitor effectively the freshwater fishery.

There are other problems with which fishermen had had to contend. These are problems that fishermen themselves have brought to me, or that the co-operatives have tried to solve through resolutions—the majority of which, unfortunately, have fallen on deaf ears in the past. Not only has there been an over-all reduction in the number of fishermen, as I mentioned earlier, but there has been a marked decrease in the pounds of fish harvested. Fish not removed from lakes in the 1973-74 fishing season, for example, represented a total loss to the northern Manitoba economy of $2,123,336.

One of the most obvious reasons for this loss—and again, let me assure you there are many—is in the area of economics. Money lost through transportation costs represents by far the largest loss to fishermen. Rail and air transportation costs have risen to such an extent that freshwater fishermen in Manitoba are having a hard time absorbing costs. For example, air transportation from lake to railhead went up from $1.80 per ton mile to $3.20. Railways have doubled their freight rates. They have suggested that freight equalization be applied on the lake to rail, and rail or highway transportation.

The co-ops have also been faced with rising equipment costs. In fact these have doubled in the last few years. Wages for hired labour have increased from $300 per month to $600 per month. Even more shocking is the fact that, under present circumstances, fishermen are unable to dispose of their licences to heirs, successors, or to other fishermen. The average age of fishermen who fish Lake Winnipeg is 60 years of age. It is so difficult for young men to obtain operators' licences that many have given up fishing or have not even attempted to get a licence.

We know that the freshwater fish produced are of a high quality and are of a species readily marketed. Why then are fishermen dissatisfied with the way in which their operations are being handled, and why then do they think that a separate standing committee to deal with freshwater and inland fishing is so important to the success of their operations? A letter I received from the manager of Northern Co-operative Fisheries Limited best answers that question. The letter stated that:

> ... Generally speaking the fishermen, the agents, the corporation are trying to work on 100 cents on the dollar, while the actual cost is 125 cents on a dollar.

One paragraph of the letter effectively summed up the feelings of fishermen. It went like this:

> I could almost assure you that it, lack of recognition, will destroy the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board within a year or two and I am saying this because the signs of erosion are all around us.

For example, the letter goes on to state:

> The 1,400 fishermen belonging to 25 co-operatives and associations in the province of Saskatchewan have already delivered their ultimatum to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation that they will no longer deliver their fish in the traditional manner. Instead, they are asking the corporation to market their fish on a fee for service basis. Failing to accept this proposal, they will ask their minister ... to withdraw the commercial fisheries from the participating region of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

A resolution submitted to the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan and Manitoba Co-operatives Fisheries held in Prince Albert March 23, 24, and 25 of 1975 stated, and I will read this resolution in its entirety:

> WHEREAS commercial fishermen in the Province of Saskatchewan and Manitoba are continuously experiencing difficulties in communication with the federal government,
> AND WHEREAS the fishing operations are being complex and requiring assistance similar to the East and West Coastal Fisheries,
> AND WHEREAS the present Parliamentary Fisheries Committee is made up of Eastern M.P.s who are not acquainted with the inland fisheries program,
> BE IT RESOLVED THAT the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, Minister of Fisheries, appoint an inland freshwater fish parliamentary committee to assist the freshwater fishing industry in their problems which lie within the jurisdiction of the Federal Committee.

This resolution refers to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Let me say that I first presented the idea to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry quite some time ago. In fact it was in 1974. I want to emphasize that again I am asking that consideration be given to this proposal.

I wish to refer to the resolution as submitted at the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan and Manitoba Co-operatives Fisheries held in Prince Albert on March 23, 24 and 25 of 1976, just this past week. At that meeting there were representatives from all the major fisheries in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Northwest Territories, and Ontario. This is the resolution, and it is hoped there will be a more positive response to it:

> WHEREAS the 1975 Resolution No. 10 requested that the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, Minister of Fisheries, appoint an Inland Freshwater Fishery Parliamentary Standing Committee to assist with the problems relating to the Freshwater Fish Industry within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government.
> WHEREAS, the Honourable Minister replied that there are three (3) Members on the Committee who represent the Freshwater Fisheries and that Quebec and New Brunswick also have a freshwater fishery and both Provinces have representation on this Committee.
> THEREFORE, be it resolved that another request be made to the Honourable Minister of Fisheries pointing out the volume of the freshwater fishery production in other provinces, such as Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and the Northwest Territories and that he give his utmost consideration towards appointing a sitting Member from each of the above-mentioned Provinces and Territories to the proposed Standing Committee of Fisheries in the House of Commons.

The resolutions of 1975 and again of 1976 came from concerned fishermen. They did not come from agents and so forth. They came from people who are trying to make a living from commercial fishing in the freshwater fishing industry. In Manitoba a group of fishermen from north of the fifty-third parallel have formed the Northern Commercial Fishermen's Association. Fishermen throughout the north are becoming more and more concerned. They are not operating in a piecemeal manner. They are operating as a group, but they want to get a fair return for the effort they put into the fishing industry. They have been in it all their lives. At one time they could make a fairly reasonable living from fishing, but the high cost of transportation today seems to be the most important aspect of their problem. I ask the minister to consider very seriously having a separate committee to deal with the freshwater and inland fishery. That is a resource we have had for a long time, and it is renewable.

We seem to spend an awful lot of time looking to the north for our energy resources, but we are not spending very much time considering the natural resources we have. In my opinion many of these natural resources are more important at the present time than much of the exploration work which is going on in the Arctic islands. I ask that every consideration be given to the immediate appointment of a separate committee to deal with this very complex problem and to help the fishermen solve this problem.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to have the opportunity to speak on the motion of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) requesting the appointment of another Standing Committee on Fisheries to which all matters concerning freshwater and inland fisheries in Canada will be referred.

The sponsor of this bill is a very active member of our Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forests. I do not wish to question the sincerity and the good intentions of the hon. member in presenting his motion, and without being an expert on the matter of fisheries, I believe that we are all sincerely working towards the improvement of the fishermen's lot and also to assist as much as possible fish processing plants, whether they are in the East, the West or even in the centre of Canada.

While I find many of the hon. member's arguments valid, I still cannot support this motion, since I believe that another standing committee of this House will not improve the freshwater and inland fisheries of Canada.

If my hon. friend is aware of the complexity of establishing committees in this House and the constant difficulty in having a quorum, he will realize it would be very difficult to find members to sit on that other committee.

● (1620)

As recorded in Hansard for March 31, 1976, this House has 20 standing and special committees, and six joint Senate and Commons committees. Most of these committees include 20 members. There are 30 members on each of the External Affairs, National Defence and Agriculture committees. Joint committees such as that of the Library of Parliament include 16 senators and 22 members of this House, 38 in all.

The hon. member for Churchill, quite coincidentally, sits on the same committees I am on, that is Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and also Fisheries and Forestry, where we also deal with environment. The hon. member is also on the Committee of National Resources and Public Works. It will be realized that when a member sits on three committees meeting at least twice a week, this means he has to attend at least eight to ten committee meetings each week.

Mr. Speaker, apparently the official opposition have some difficulty in making suggestions in this House. Apparently, that party lacks leadership and cannot agree on a particular matter. No doubt the hon. member for Churchill already discussed the proposals for a new committee on Freshwater and Inland Fisheries. He will have discussed it in caucus. But I doubt whether the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) agrees with him to establish another standing committee of this House, because on October 28, 1975, if I remember correctly, the hon. member for Peace River, in a statement dealing with the Standing Orders, had this to say, and I quote:

> . . . the government should introduce some flexibility in the control they are exercising on committee programs and chairing. Certain documents and reports tabled in this House should be automatically referred to committee, and certain committee reports such as that on public accounts for instance, should be debated in this House. Committees should be empowered to make inquiries when members feel they are needed. Committees should be reduced to a more limited size. Chairmen should be appointed in a more objective way, probably by a neutral source, and provision should be made for appealing the chairmen's decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat these remarks by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin): ". . . committees should be reduced to a more limited size . . ." This necessarily entails reducing the number of standing committees of this House, now totalling 30.

Mr. Speaker, why increase the number of committees when there are already too many. I believe that hon. members, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), would agree to reduce this number and have between 15 and 20 committees. Most members now sit on three or even four committees and it is difficult, indeed impossible, for a party like the New Democratic Party or the Social Credit Party to send a representative to each one of these committees.

That is why members of these parties, which have only 10 to 15 representatives in the House, are forced to run from one committee to another every day. For instance, in the fisheries and forestry committee on March 30, and the hon. member for Churchill could corroborate my statement, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) arrived in the committee room at about 9:45 p.m. and as the Committee was to adjourn at ten o'clock he could not put his question. He was told that at the next sitting of the committee he would be the first to question witnesses. So the hon. member came to the committee and was recognized first to ask his question. It took from 15 to 20 minutes, then he had to leave for another committee of which he was also a member. Mr. Speaker, how is it possible for members who have to attend the debates of 4, 5 or 6 committees the same day to be really efficient and perform their tasks conscientiously? I say this is not possible.

Mr. Speaker, the committees or the House are always faced with the same problem; the governing party has to keep the quorum, so when the provisions of a bill are about to be adopted or when budgetary estimates are to be voted, the party whip as to run from one committee room to another and try to get the quorum. I wish we would have discussed a motion proposing to reduce the number of the standing committees of the House, and not to increase them.

In his motion, my good friend the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) requests that the new committee be responsible exclusively for the questions concerning freshwater and inland fisheries in Canada. This proposal might cause much discussion and bring about a constitutional debate with the provinces.

I shall ask a question to the hon. member, if he wants to answer it later: has he consulted his province concerning his proposal that the federal government take exclusive control over freshwater and inland fisheries in his province? I can tell him that my province will not easily agree to let the federal government extend its responsibilities to the lakes and rivers of Quebec. It will be the same for the province of Ontario and for the other provinces, in the Prairies, in the Pacific or the Atlantic regions.

Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, we have many very interesting sittings, since members from all provinces are most interested and our chairman, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) is doing a tremendous job, and I also ought to mention the cooperation of our vice-chairman, the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Pearsall). We discuss all problems, those of the Atlantic region as well as those of the Pacific, and those of the fisheries in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and those of the Great Lakes. We always have the cooperation of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could take fifteen, twenty or thirty minutes at the meetings of the committees on which I sit, particularly the committee of fisheries and forestry, to explain the requests of Quebec fishermen and the demands of processing plants owners; but it is impossible because every member must be given an opportunity to participate in the proceedings of the committee regardless of the area he represents. This is why in most committees the interventions of members are limited to fifteen minutes during the first round, then to ten minutes and finally to five minutes.

In Quebec, Mr. Speaker, and particularly in the Gaspé Peninsula, there are years when the fishing industry suffers ups and downs. As far as the fishing industry and particularly the salt and dried fish processing plants are concerned, the plant owners have had to face very serious problems these last few years.

In the Committee on Fisheries, I have taken the time that was allotted to me by the chairman to explain to the minister and his officials the sorry financial plight of Gaspé producers. Two representations convinced the minister to send his officials around the Gaspé Peninsula in order to make a field study and attempt to find a solution under existing regulations.

Recently, at a meeting of this committee, we considered the new policies on redfish quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean. All members had enough time to express their views. I made several suggestions to the minister who will apparently take them under serious consideration when he drafts the new policies and establishes the redfish quotas for the years 1977 and 1978.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to underline the satisfaction we find in the Committee on Fisheries in working with the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc), and I believe that all committee members share this view. I also want to emphasize the dedication of his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I have represented for many years in the House of Commons the beautiful riding of Gaspé and a group of citizens for whom I like to work, the fishermen. I must say that we have received a great deal from the central government. The work was not done so much in this House but rather in committee. I must also admit that we always had good people in charge of this department, both under the Pearson administration and under this government, under the direction and wise guidance of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not mention the dedication of the officials of the Department of Environment, in particular the Fisheries and Marine Service, who are really concerned about the problems of fishermen as regards freshwater as well as the Atlantic Ocean, in Nova Scotia, in Newfoundland or in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, for the various reasons I have mentioned, I cannot support the motion of the hon. member for Churchill. Knowing how hard he tries to find more effective ways of helping fishermen, I am sure he will know how to convince them that his suggestion is not necessarily the best one.

● (1630)

[English]

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a good experience to stand and support a motion presented by my colleague from Manitoba. My colleague from Churchill is a man of vast experience, and everyone in the House knows it. He is a man who is close to the people, a man who is not prone to speaking in philosophical platitudes but one who has the capacity to grasp the problem, to see the need, and to respond to it. When I hear the kind of debate I have just heard it makes me wonder whether the hon. member on the other side even knows where Manitoba or any of the inland fisheries are.

Miss Bégin: Ungracious!

Mr. Whiteway: It is known in the west that the inland fisheries are in trouble. There is a problem of great magnitude. In 1969 when the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was formed the catch in the province of Manitoba was 75 million pounds of fish. Last year, for the entire area covered by the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, the catch was only 32 million pounds. Anyone from western Canada, anyone from any of the inland fisheries can tell you what the problem is.

If we want to understand the problems of the coastal fisheries we consult, for example, my colleague from South Shore. He can tell you about draggers, he can tell you about the continental shelf, he can tell you about the techniques which are used, he understands about Decca Loran and all the sophistication of electronic gear aboard modern trawlers. I can tell you that fishermen in my area, and in the area of which my colleague from Churchill speaks, have not even seen Decca Loran. My colleague from South Shore understands the problems of the coastal fisheries, but he does not pretend to know the problems of the inland fisheries or the solution to those problems.

It bothers me when we hear members opposite standing in their places as though they are the epitome of wisdom and pontificating upon solutions when they do not even know the problems. I can identify some problems very quickly for the benefit of members opposite. There are problems inherent within the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation itself. At the formation of that organization back in 1969 it was guaranteed by the then president that they would handle every pound of fish for a cent or a cent and a half. We find, six or seven short years later, that one or one and a half cents has risen to 80 cents per pound. Between the time one pound of usable fish reaches the corporation and the time it leaves, 80 cents is gobbled up and lost forever to the fishermen.

As was stated by my colleague from Churchill, the objective of the marketing corporation when it was formed was to increase returns to the fishermen, not to build a conglomerate for the inland fisheries. That was not the purpose. Back in 1969 there was no talk of processing fish. It was to embody the concept of a one-desk marketing agency. For members opposite to stand up and maintain that everything is O.K. in the west and that if you understand fisheries, fisheries are fisheries anywhere in Canada, is to display ignorance of and a kind of indifference to what happens in western Canada.

Mr. Goodale: Nonsense!

Mr. Whiteway: The hon. member opposite says, nonsense.

Mr. Epp: They put their building right in a wheatfield.

Mr. Whiteway: The hon. member opposite says it is nonsense. If he wants to hear about nonsense I will tell him about nonsense. I will put nonsense on the record for him. Down in the maritimes when you want to build a processing plant, generally you build it by the wharf, by the water so that the ships can unload readily. That is the ordinary, common sense thing to do. But not the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Its building stands in the riding of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), right among the wheatfields! There stands this great modern fish processing plant, and the closest water anywhere is 55 miles away as the crow flies.

Hon. members opposite want to talk about nonsense. Mr. Speaker, they are the originators of nonsense when it comes to inland fisheries. Oh yes, and as always with this government, although the original cost was locked in, guaranteed, fixed at $3 million, by the time construction was finished, with the landscaping done and the flags flying in the cool breeze of western Manitoba, and the sun shining down, the balance sheet showed $5.5. million, almost double the original figure. Who paid?

Mr. Epp: We, the people of Canada.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, if that were the case all would be well. The people who paid were the very people this great corporation was established to help. It was the fishermen who paid. They paid for it, pound by pound, fish after fish.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sucker after sucker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whiteway: They thought the fishermen were a bunch of mullets. And anyone knows, if he understands the fisheries, that the equivalent expression is "suckers". The fisherman in western Canada may only know about fishing, but they have more common sense in one little finger than one can find on the whole of the treasury benches.

I could go on and talk about the effects of inflation which have hit the inland fisherman, just as they have affected coastal fishermen. I could talk about the problems of the quota system. Some fishermen in Manitoba particularly on Lake Winnipeg, are locked into the prices of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation quotas. The government says that they can catch no more fish at that price, period.

My hon. friends opposite can go on talking nonsense, but we have more important things to talk about in this motion of my colleague, which is not an unreasonable one. He simply wants a separate committee. He wants certain members of this Chamber who know something about the inland fishery to band together in a little group so that they do not waste the time of the existing committee on fisheries. He wants a little group of members of parliament from the west to form a committee to deal specifically and only with the inland fisheries. Though their numbers be few in western Canada, surely the fishermen of western Canada deserve no less than that.

In addition, I think the committee structure of the House ought to be reviewed in terms of numbers and the function of committees. The numbers are certainly too large in most cases. I am calling for a review of the committee structure and I am asking the government to think again. If hon. members opposite were to repent, fall to their knees, shed tears of true repentance, and say they have changed their minds, that on closer reflection and on more critical analysis they have decided to support our suggestion, I know my hon. friend from Churchill would accept it. I know he is not a vain man and that he would go back to the west and give the government its fair share of the credit for recognizing that there is a problem in western Canada that is unique, one that needs special and specific responses from the government.

The kind of response that is needed in western Canada is not exemplified by what happened a week ago today in the province of Manitoba when the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) denied the fishermen of Manitoba and the north the transportation subsidies they need to make their industry viable. These people were not talking about hundreds of millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker; they were not even talking about $1 million. They were talking about less than $1 million—the difference in transportation costs which would make the fisheries viable, that would make the difference between existing and not existing. This is the kind of sober second thought that my hon. friends opposite should give, instead of the kind of nonsense that has characterized the entire attitude of the government.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the remaining time may I take a few moments to lend my support to the motion before us proposed by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith). I have come to respect the hon. member for Churchill for one specific quality that he has demonstrated not only in the House but in committee, and which is recognized by the majority of Manitobans.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have respected him all along.

Mr. Epp: I am pleased to hear the member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) agree with those words. The hon. member for Churchill came to this House after the election of 1974 a relative unknown in Manitoba, and he has demonstrated that he knows the north intimately, that he has staked his claim in the north, if I can put it in that way. He has presented to this House a number of unique viewpoints that can only come from a person who knows the north intimately. I would like to thank him for that contribution. I think this view is shared by members on all sides of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I may say that I for one am proud to have the hon. member for Churchill as a colleague of mine. Coming specifically to the motion, I should like to respond to the view of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) that the committee structure at the present time is complex, that as members we have difficulty sitting on committees, that we do not review our work in committee sufficiently, and that we are not well enough prepared in committees. I accept those criticism and agree with them. But I wonder whether using that tack is not putting our finger on the difficulty we so often have as members in communicating with our constituents.

I am sure that all members of the House have had constituents come to them with a serious problem that can be solved, yet we come back to the Hill and become so wrapped in procedure and with making our little operation "efficient" that we lose sight of the very request that moved us to act in the first place. This is not unique to this government. I think it is in the nature of the thing, if I can put it in that way. So often we lose sight of the very real problems that people back home have. We say action cannot be taken for this reason or that. While efficiency might be sacrificed at times, the first job of all members is to respond to the needs of their constituents. To solve the problems they present to us is our obligation and is really, I suggest, the only reason for our existence.

The problem that concerns me about the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is this. We know the corporation was established by joint agreement between the federal government and various provincial governments, in particular the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development through its responsibilities in the Northwest Territories. The way I understand the subsidy question at the present time—and the hon. member for Gaspé alluded to this—it is questionable whether the provinces would want the federal government to get involved in jurisdiction over the inland waterways, lakes, and so forth. Yet there is already an association in the minds of the fishermen, at least, that the federal government has become involved with the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation because of the very fact it has become operative.

I wonder whether here we are not discussing the same problem that I referred to earlier, and that is that the federal government has raised a constitutional question—rightly or wrongly I am not going to argue because I do not have the time. The fishermen are not concerned about constitutional problems. They are concerned about how they can retain a viable industry, one that has had real difficulty in the past. Efforts have been made by all parties to get the people who constitute this industry—their average age in Manitoba is over 60—to the point where they can retain their self-respect and earn their own income, so they can make their own way in life instead of constantly having to come to the government for subsidies.

I should just like to give a brief quotations from an article that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on Wednesday, March 31, as follows:

> The federal minister turned the requests down on the basis that the federal government isn't responsible for inland fisheries.

There is the constitutional question that he raised.

> "I was just incredulous. I couldn't believe his blunt statement disclaiming responsibility for inland fisheries," Mr. Bostrom said. "It puts northern fisheries in real jeopardy."

I am not quoting a Conservative, Mr. Speaker. I am quoting a constituent of mine who happens to be a minister in the present NDP government in Manitoba.

I should like to return to the motion of the hon. member for Churchill. He has made this suggestion. Surely members of good will can get together on this. If it turns out that a committee is not the right vehicle, let us develop some other structure. Surely through the House leaders we can take this step whereby a committee or subcommittee is formed to which a full time fisheries minister would report directly on inland fisheries. In this way members such as myself, who cannot sit on the other Standing committee on fisheries because of other responsibilities, could sit on that committee and represent the interests of our fishermen, for instance those along the eastern shores of Lake Winnipeg and in the northern parts of my riding. This is all the member is asking. I am sure hon. members opposite see his point of view.

Let us get together in that manner, with that kind of co-operation, in order to help those people who are asking for a minimum. This will give us a chance to help those who represent a very small number but are important to the well being of Canada. It is on that basis that I welcome the motion of the hon. member for Churchill and thank him for again making the House aware of the needs of these people.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think today you are seeing in the House what happens in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and the Environment when a discussion on freshwater fishery comes to the fore. There you will see other hon. members back off and make room for the worthy gentleman, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith), and for the somewhat histronic, at least today, hon. gentleman from Selkirk, and for the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). The committee always makes much room there for members who are inland fisheries oriented when it is time to discuss such important matters as the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

The hon. member for Churchill has requested that a special House committee be struck to deal exclusively with the concerns of freshwater fishing. I am sure the hon. member is just as sympathetic to the concerns of people on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts as we are to his. However, I believe it would be really quite extraordinary for us to attempt to augment the already 26 House committees with yet another committee especially devoted to freshwater fish.

When I began to think of this, Mr. Speaker, I began to think of the number of specialized group in fisheries which could very well be served by a single committee within the House. I think of coastal surveillance, the coastguard, production marketing and research, small craft harbours, vessel subsidies and vessel contruction, and Environment Canada which, by the way, the hon. member for Provencher will be interested to know, has responsibility for Northwest Territories fisheries.

Then we might also consider special species subcommittees. We would have one for lobsters, molusks, crustaceans and shellfish. We would have one for salmon, of course, the noble fish on the west coast, on which I am sure the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) would be glad to serve. We would have one for herring, groundfish, halibut, and all those other exotic Atlantic varieties.

We could then, of course, think of our friends at the Saltfish Corporation as well as the fish oil producers. We could have a special committee for some of those marine menaces of which we have an abundance on the west coast, and which represent a very serious problem to our fisheries. I have in mind the dogfish which load down the gill nets to such a degree that the fishermen must cut their corklines allowing their $3,000 lines to sink, because there is just nothing they can do about the dogfish.

Then there are those other menaces of the sea such as the lamprey, the harbour seals, and scavangers of all kinds which would have to be the subject of special committees. We could have a committee for the smoked saltwater and smoked freshwater fish, both varieties pickled, and all kinds canned. Then there are the meal producers who, of course, would want to be part and parcel of any special committee we would strike.

I believe all of these things are valuable and many of them have been the subject of discussion by the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. In fact this infinite variety of concern has been the matter of discussion at the standing committee. I have seen that committee deal with the whole spectrum from seal pups to pipeline threats to salmon smolts; from spawning grounds and ultra high frequency communications between vessels to everything else. This is an everyday occurrence at that vital committee.

Members opposite have played a very active role on that committee. Indeed I would say it is one of the least partisan committees on which I have had the privilege of serving since coming here. The present system is not perfect, but to single out one area of importance equal to at least ten others for a special committee is simply impossible and impractical. The 26 committees of the House would be augmented on fisheries concerns alone by 56 committees, and they in turn would have to be augmented ad infinitum. I might say that even with the committees we now have it is often difficult to get a quorum, in spite of the ambitious members on the other side.

It is interesting to note that the attendance at the committee dealing with the environment was very large the other day, but when fisheries came up for discussion the other night members opposite were indeed few to be found. It is interesting to note also that when we have a discussion on a question of very great importance to those hon. members, the members on our side back off, as I said in the beginning, and refuse to enter into the discussion so that more questions can be put in respect of those areas where we indeed lack expertise.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) does not have to tell me that I do not know what kind of fish swim in the water in his part of the country, but then again he does not know the difference between a troller and a trawler. However, that makes no difference to me. There are many places where co-operation, not partisanship, shines forth, and one such place is the present standing committee.

This is a government which has shown a concern unmatched by any previous administration in its positive actions on behalf of fishermen. The painstaking debate in New York on the extension of the 200 mile limit at the Law of the Sea Conference is but one example of the devotion and expertise that the Minister of State for Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) brings to his task.

There are fisheries enhancement programs in British Columbia. There are programs in respect of safety at sea. This has seen changed in surveillance and tracking and rescue techniques. This will result in greater search and rescue ability in this country, and this is the value of the new policy forthcoming on search and rescue.

There is also the Indian fishermen's assistance program whereby native fishermen can make their way into a business they once dominated. I like to think, as a native Indian in my part of the country always says, they are not using anything that is theirs when they are taking the salmon but rather they are taking their grandchildren's salmon. I should like to think that this committee would not become so specialized that I cannot take as much interest in the legacy of the grandchildren of the hon. member for Churchill as he does in the legacy of my own grandchildren. Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Indeed the hon. member may. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m. Have a nice weekend.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The same to you.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROPOSAL TO DEVELOP THE NON-FOSSIL FUEL GENERATED POWER POTENTIAL OF EASTERN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the maritime provinces have presented to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) a series of briefs on the rising power costs of their economies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to convene a special meeting with the first ministers of each of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec with a view to instituting a crash program in order to facilitate the early economic development of the tremendous non-fossil fuel generated power potential in eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CUSTOMS

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED UNDERSTAFFING OF STATION ON BORDER BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the continuing line-ups causing Canadians to be detained for up to three hours when returning from the United States at the Blaine and Douglas border crossings in British Columbia, and in view of the statement by Canada area collector Orville McRae that "Canadians are now discouraged from crossing the border, that to improve the staffing would only be a temporary panacea, and as soon as people start hearing it is easier to get across they will begin coming down in droves", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds):

That this matter be referred to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) for a statement on motions to explain if it is now government policy to discourage travel to the United States by understaffing the border crossings.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE REGULATIONS DEVELOPED UNDER MARITIME CODE WILL NOT AFFECT FREIGHT RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, move under the provisions of Standing Order 43 a motion that I hope will be of some concern to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). In light of the failure on the part of the government to continue, as they undertook, the consultative process with respect to regulations under the maritime code leading to the development of regulations which will give substance to the verbal assurances given by the former minister of transport, now the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), to the Council of Maritime Premiers and the authorities in the appropriate coastal provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport forthwith to convene a meeting or a series of meetings between the appropriate officials of the coastal provinces and Department of Transport officials for the purpose of developing regulations which will not unduly affect freight transportation costs in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House before presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—POSSIBILITY COMPANY WOULD BE PERMITTED TO BORROW WITHOUT GOVERNMENT OF CANADA GUARANTEE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be allowed to begin, on behalf of my colleagues and probably the House, by welcoming back to the House of Commons the first Canadian politician to be invested with the Order of the Companion of Honour.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Supply and Services, but in his absence I could perhaps direct it to the Prime Minister. Last Thursday the Minister of Supply and Services confirmed that the government agreed to pay a maximum of $16 million in order to keep negotiations open with Lockheed until April 30. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can tell the House if last Wednesday night, at the time of deciding to grant another month to find interim financing from Canadian banks, the government had in its possession—

I see the minister is back. My question was to the Minister of Supply and Services, and I should like to know whether as of last Wednesday night, at the time of the decision of the government to grant another month to find interim financing from Canadian banks, the government at that time had in its possession any formal indication from the United States Emergency Loan Guarantee Board that Lockheed Limited would be permitted to be the "technical borrower" of $200 million to $300 million without, and I emphasize the word "without", a guarantee from the government of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he had that assurance.

[English]

Mr. Clark: In view of the inability of the Minister of Supply and Services to answer, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could answer the question directly, or will he have to pass that on to the minister, and could he advise us which of his ministers is negotiating this contract?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Perhaps the hon. member would repeat the question.

Mr. Forrestall: Get up on your feet—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: There is too much noise; you better start again.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there are in fact two questions. One of the questions is to seek from the Prime Minister an indication as to which of his ministers, if any, is involved in negotiating this contract? Secondly, I should like to know, as I think the House would, if at the time the government decided to grant another month to Lockheed to find interim financing from Canadian banks, the government of Canada had any formal communication that the United States emergency loan guarantee board would permit Lockheed to be the "technical borrower" of the $200 million or $300 million, without a guarantee from the government of Canada?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Trudeau: On the first point, Mr. Speaker, the arranging of the financing and the supervising of the execution of the contract are the responsibilities of the Minister of National Defence. On the second point, there were two possible alternatives the government was examining and discussing with the Lockheed Company. One was that it would finance itself, with or without the support of the guarantee of the government of Canada and, secondly, that the money would be borrowed in Canada from Canadian banks by Lockheed.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—ALLEGATION COMPANY DELIBERATELY CREATED MISUNDERSTANDING ABOUT FINANCING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Then, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada does not at this stage have any assurance that the Lockheed Corporation is going to be in a position to be the technical borrower? The Prime Minister could perhaps indicate whether that is correct. In view of the fact that Hansard of last Tuesday at page 12265 indicates that the Minister of National Defence said that Lockheed had said it could provide the financing for which it was asking, and since the Minister of National Defence was quoted in the press last Friday as saying there was some misunderstanding, "but I would say it was deliberate by Lockheed", I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is also the position of the government of Canada that the confusion as to the terms of financing was caused by a deliberate attempt by Lockheed to create a misunderstanding?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is certainly not the position of the government of Canada, Mr. Speaker. I have no knowledge of the quotation the hon. member just put before the House. I would have to have a look at it.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence is not present, and in his absence I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the minister will be here during the latter part of the question period, if he knows?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—OBLIGATION TO PAY COMPANY PRIOR TO SIGNING OF AGREEMENT LAST WEDNESDAY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Could the minister inform the House whether the government had any legal obligation to pay Lockheed one cent prior to its signing of an agreement with Lockheed last Wednesday night at midnight?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained in the House that we advised the Lockheed Corporation at the end of December last that we eventually intended to sign a contract with that company under some reservations.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. That is precisely the reason I asked the question I did. I wish the minister would now answer it directly. Given the fact that the government has said in recent weeks that it expected from its understanding that Lockheed would raise on its own the front-end financing for the project, was that one of the considerations the government had in mind before it considered itself to have any legal obligation to pay Lockheed any money, and if so why did the minister sign the contract as he did last Wednesday night?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: No, Mr. Speaker; since the beginning of the negotiations and since questions have been raised here I have always indicated to the House that the basic problem which we had to face was one of financing. I have also indicated to the House that due to international events concerning the Lockheed situation, we wanted to be much more careful before signing a formal contract with the company and make sure among other things that it could assume all its responsibilities.

[English]

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—REASON FOR SIGNING AGREEMENT TO PAY $16 MILLION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of National Defence was quoted outside the House as saying that in his view, as one of the two principal negotiators for the Government of Canada, he had been deliberately misinformed by Lockheed—and he did not take the opportunity to correct that on Friday in the House—I should like to ask the minister, given at least that minister's view of the corporation with which he is dealing, why the government did commit itself for the period the minister referred to in the House by signing this $16 million contract. Even if the government goes ahead with the deal, which many of us think would be inappropriate, does the minister agree that the Lockheed Corporation is now over a barrel with the Government of Canada and would be under immense pressure to raise the money on its own, and if so why did the government lock itself into paying an unneeded $16 million.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, obviously, I cannot speak on my colleague's behalf and even less about things which were said outside the House. But what I can say is that in all the negotiations with Lockheed I did not have to complain at any time about the behaviour of the company nor about their ethics. This is the basis on which we negotiated, for we knew the financial difficulties facing the company, we assessed them and we finally reached the conclusion that the company was in such a financial situation that we could consider signing a contract.

Once again, however, if negotiations were so long, it is because we wanted to be sure that we were not negotiating with a company which would run into greater difficulties in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

FLOODS

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID FOR VICTIMS IN GATINEAU AND OTTAWA AREA—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL GRANTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of the Environment.

Given the tragic floods now occurring along the Ottawa and Gatineau rivers, did the department of the minister receive requests for assistance from the province of Quebec or the municipalities involved to help victims face this situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Strictly speaking, Mr. Speaker, I did not yet receive any request from the provinces.

● (1420)

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary.

Did the federal government earmark some funds to help these people should assistance from the federal government be needed?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I believe the only federal legislation concerning help to victims of disasters is the law administered by the Minister of Finance under which the federal government can contribute up to an amount higher than $1 for each inhabitant of a province. If there are 6,500,000 residents in the province of Quebec and if damages are over $6,500,000, it would mean then that the federal government can contribute.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO STIMULATE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As it was reported last week that industrial productivity in Canada during 1975 decreased by 2.4 per cent, by far the worst performance this country has experienced during the past 30 years since we first started recording industrial productivity, when does the Prime Minister intend to make a statement in the House regarding what the government intends to do to correct this serious situation, which he promised to do two months ago when on February 5, as recorded in Hansard at page 10656 he said:

I can assure the hon. member that the government is very concerned with it and that we will find the first opportunity to discuss further this important question of productivity with the House.

And on October 30, as recorded at page 8691 of Hansard, he said:

It is very important that we realize that we have to make serious improvements in productivity.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a few short days ago, I believe something like a week ago, I gave a rather substantial answer to the hon. member, listing around ten initiatives which are being taken in that area. If the hon. member would care to look back in Hansard he would see what is underway and what is proposed. As to the debate which he wishes, we will and do talk about this every time the economy comes up for discussion. There will be an occasion in May at budget time for the hon. member to make his point again. The House leader advises me there are also several opposition days. I think it would be, indeed, a good question and a very important question to have discussed, perhaps on one of the hon. member's party's opposition days. He has this one idea which he has been using since October, and it would be a shame if it were wasted.

Mr. Hees: As the Prime Minister said five months ago on October 30 that it was a very good idea in which he was extremely interested and he was referring it to the Department of Finance and to the Privy Council for study, I am surprised he has not taken an opportunity to say something about it in the meantime as he promised to do.

Regarding his reply that he gave a list of the studies that were going on, I went into those studies and I find they are all vague, general studies. I have checked with the people in government and I find that none of them are expected to be reported to cabinet before at least six months, which shows that there is no immediacy in the Prime Minister's mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I would therefore ask the Prime Minister as a supplementary question, as virtually all economists are agreed that the anti-inflation program cannot really be successful until very great strides are made towards improving productivity, when he intends to stop playing the role of the great procrastinator, get on with the job and get something done?

Mr. Trudeau: Soon.

Mr. Hees: The same old "soon" as five months ago. Soon never gets sooner with Pierre.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON REFORM—REASON FOR DELAY IN SENDING MATERIAL TO PROVINCES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister as well. Early last week the Prime Minister is reported to have indicated in respect of constitutional reform that for the last year he had been carrying on secret negotiations with the province of Quebec and, as a result solely of the leak to the press of these negotiations, the Prime Minister was going to send to all the provincial premiers within a few days of last Monday the whole file of the documents relating to these negotiations. My question to the Prime Minister is twofold: first, has that file yet been sent out to the premiers or to the governments of the other provinces; and second, why has it taken a year for this material to be sent out to the other premiers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is some misconception in the form of the question which was asked. Perhaps the hon. member will permit me to set the record straight. The discussions have not been only with the province of Quebec. When the ten premiers and myself agreed last April that we should try to make progress on this thing by way of talks on a bilateral basis, talks in effect did go forward with every province on the subject of patriation and the formula. The only province which was not involved was British Columbia because Mr. Barrett did not find time to meet the federal representatives before his province's election and his eventual political demise. There is a meeting scheduled for early April with Mr. Barrett's successor. So to that extent the discussions were carried on with all provinces on this precise question.

The letters have gone out to each premier reporting on the negotiations as they went on between the various governments and the federal government, so that all could be informed about the general picture. Those letters went out some days ago. I asked the premiers if there were any objection to those letters being tabled next week in the House, unless they have any serious objection, I plan to do so.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MANNER IN WHICH MINISTERS SHOULD MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO QUASI-JUDICIAL BOARDS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. In light of the recent ruling of the Prime Minister arising out of the dial-a-judge affair about how ministers in future should approach the courts, namely, through the Minister of Justice, a ruling which ought not to have been necessary at all because what most of us—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is, of course, the proper manner of dealing with the courts. However, can the minister assure the House that the same course will be followed in respect of representations which ministers or the government may wish to make to administrative and regulatory tribunals such as the Anti-Inflation Board, the CRTC, the CTC and so on?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the statement of the Prime Minister, in case the hon. member has not read it, indicates that the same guidelines apply to quasi-judicial administrative tribunals which were constituted as courts of record.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Will the minister also assure the House that in future all representations will be made through counsel in open court, in the judge's chambers in the presence of opposing counsel or publicly before the tribunal and not by telephone or by unrecorded and private means?

Mr. Speaker: That is precisely the question put earlier in the session by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN EQUALIZATION FORMULA AS RESULT OF INCREASED ENERGY COSTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is with respect to the conference last week of finance ministers and the specific request for assistance from the finance ministers of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia concerning skyrocketing electrical costs.

In view of the difficulty the minister had in accepting their request, the resistance expressed by other provinces and the specific suggestion of the minister of finance of Ontario, Mr. McKeough, with respect to the change in the equalization formula in order to take into account the skyrocketing energy costs for the two provinces, will there be specific reconsideration of this proposal, and will there be some report back to the finance ministers or to the first ministers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be discussing this with my colleagues. I think this might be a question which could be resolved prior to the meeting of the first ministers on energy at the beginning of next month.

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN REDUCING ENERGY COSTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Since the Minister of Finance seemed to think there was some problem in presenting the direct request for assistance, I wonder whether there was any consideration at that meeting with respect to assistance in converting present power plants or in developing alternate means of energy which would be much more economic and efficient for these two provinces, realizing the disastrous effect continuing high electrical costs will have on the whole pattern of regional development.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As the hon. member probably knows, for a long time there have been a number of federal initiatives to transfer from dependency upon imported petroleum to energy from other sources. Of course, the offer with respect to the CANDU has been taken up by New Brunswick. The reactor is now under construction. There are offers outstanding to assist a closer integration of the Atlantic provinces, indeed, of all the eastern provinces in a hydro grid. In this respect the provinces have insisted that any discussions on closer integration should be entirely at their own initiative and that the federal government should not be involved. To that extent I agree with the hon. member. It would be wise to have an eastern grid, but it is critical that the five provinces should get together and reach a basic agreement on closer integration, as I mentioned to the ministers at the conference.

ALLEGATIONS OF FRAUD IN CONNECTION WITH CONTRACTS FOR CLEANING GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General, may I address my question to the Minister of Justice? Five months ago I wrote to the minister, to request a police investigation into possible fraud and conflict of interest involving contracts for cleaning government buildings. I have said nothing publicly about this so far. Since the RCMP last week raided a Department of Public Works office in Toronto and seized relevant documents, I now ask the minister if he can report to the House on the progress of the investigation and the nature of the documents seized in the police raid; and, does he expect charges to be laid?

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's sending me, in my capacity as Acting Solicitor General, notice of this question at one o'clock. The material he sent me, which was referred to in the question, was immediately referred to the criminal law division of the Department of Justice and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for investigation. I have not, since one o'clock, been able to obtain from the RCMP the results of any investigation. I cannot say more than that at this time.

Mr. Benjamin: Phone the judge.

PUBLIC WORKS

POSSIBILITY OF CLEANING CONTRACT BEING AWARDED TO PUBLIC SERVANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I submit a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works? As I have in my possession strong evidence showing that at least one contract worth over a quarter of a million dollars has been awarded by the Department of Public Works to a company owned by a public servant employed in the Federal Government, and his wife, may I ask the minister if it is the practice of the Department of Public Works to award contracts to companies owned by public servants and their families? If so, does he consider that practice proper?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer the latter part of the question, the guidelines governing public servants are clear. A contract between the Government of Canada as employer and a company in which a public servant has a direct and immediate personal interest is not allowed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? Will the minister please answer the first part of my question? Is it the practice of the Department of Public Works to award cleaning or maintenance contracts to public servants and, of so, does the minister consider that practice to be legal or proper?

Mr. Paproski: Just moonlighting, eh, Bud?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, without knowing the particular circumstances of this case, I can generalize and say that it is not the practice of the Department of Public Works to award contracts, or cleaning contracts, to public servants who are in the continuing employ of the government.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN METHOD OF FINANCING CANADA PENSION PLAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of representations made by the provincial treasurer of the province of Ontario concerning the financing of the Canada Pension Plan, will the minister advise if he is having this "query" looked into, and if he will make a statement in the House in the next few days on whether the CPP is to be overhauled?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the brief which the Ontario minister put before the meeting represented nothing substantially new but involved the consideration of whether the Canada Pension Plan should be continued on a partially funded basis, as now, or go entirely to a pay-as-you-go basis. We have paid some attention to this question. I cannot assure the hon. gentleman that we will react to the question in the next several days although, obviously, it is of long-term importance to the government.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House if payments into the Canada Pension Plan, based on income, at this point are balancing payments out?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, at the moment more is being paid in than is being paid out. The crossover point has been identified as a result of changes made in this parliament in the last several years. By 1983 the amount of contributions from individuals available to the provinces under the plan will be exceeded by the carrying charges of the outstanding obligations.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INCARCERATION OF MR. VICTOR FISHER IN MEXICO—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OBTAIN RELEASE

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to Mr. Victor Fisher of Delta who, for over 92 days, has been a prisoner in a Mexican jail on a charge which his bank and the Mexican consul in Vancouver say is a mistake. Is the government prepared to demand Mr. Victor Fisher's immediate release from jail in Mexico?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been following this case—

An hon. Member: Yes, for over 90 days.

Mr. MacEachen: —which has already been drawn to the attention of the department. We got in touch with our embassy with respect to the case in Colima. They report that there have been no abnormal delays in dealing with this case, that the magistrate's hearing with respect to the case was to take place on April 1, and that Mr. Fisher will be represented by counsel. We are now awaiting the disposition of the court, to learn if Mr. Fisher will be released or held for further investigation.

Mr. Reynolds: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As many agencies, including the Mexicans themselves, say that Mr. Fisher is innocent, will the minister answer my first question? Is the government prepared to demand the immediate release of Mr. Fisher? Also, is the government prepared to spend money on advertising in this country, to tell Canadians that if they are arrested in Mexico, there is no bail and they must spend their time in jail until their case is disposed of?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we shall have to await the disposition of the case by the Mexican court.

AIRPORTS

RUNWAY EXTENSION AT VANCOUVER—REASON RUNWAY WITHIN DYKED AREA NOT CONSIDERED IN ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. As the Minister of Public Works favours a new runway entirely within the present dyking system at Sea Island when the Vancouver airport expands, can the minister explain why, if this proposal is now being considered, it has not been subjected to the environmental impact assessment procedures which were laid down by the government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I understand that we received a report on the environmental impact deriving from the expansion of Sea Island Airport at Vancouver. We have this report. We are aware of the impact of this expansion on the estuary of the Fraser river, and I understand that we will have the opportunity to discuss this problem with the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works before taking any decision.

[English]

RUNWAY EXTENSION AT VANCOUVER—REQUEST THAT ALL REPORTS BE CONSIDERED BY COMMITTEE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I point out that the environment and airport planning report which is now in the minister's possession does not consider the alternative about which the minister spoke. I ask the minister to check the facts. Also, can he advise the House if he will keep the commitment he made when he was minister of transport, namely, that all reports on the Vancouver airport expansion will be referred to the standing committee of this House for discussion? Can he say if the present Minister of Transport will keep that commitment?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire of the Minister of Transport.

HARBOURS

CONSULTATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OVER MONTMAGNY AND ISLE-AUX-GRUES FACILITIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

During the month of March the federal Minister of Transport had discussions with the Quebec Minister of Transport. Could the minister tell the House whether, on this occasion, there was mention of the two wharves, the one in Montmagny and the one on Isle-aux-Grues, which serve as points of communications between both sides and which are inadequate at present? In the light of the release which has been handed to us, have those questions of communications and wharves which are to be transferred under Quebec jurisdiction been the subject of particular discussions with respect to those two wharves?

● (1440)

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the two specific wharves being discussed while the minister and I were present. I will have to check to see whether the subject came up during the official discussions which occurred at the same time.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Since the matter is very urgent, would the minister be prepared to give it very special consideration in order to expedite the discussions concerning an eventual agreement between Ottawa and Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would first want to inform myself better about the present status of the wharves.

PRICE OF CANDY—SUGGESTED REDUCTION IN VIEW OF REDUCED COST OF SUGAR

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the rolling back of prices, specifically with regard to officials in the candy bar industry who have stated that the increase in their prices is due to the increase in the cost of sugar. As the cost of raw sugar has now declined, can the minister give some indication whether this industry will consider, as well, reducing its prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board has been following the question of candy bar prices with great care. As the hon. member has stated, I am advised that there has indeed been a drop in the price of sugar. In discussions with the industry, there has been some indication that the weight of candy bars will be expanded to take account of the difference in cost.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF PROPOSAL FOR IMPORTATION OF EGGS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Anti-Inflation Board, through a statement by the vice-chairman, has come out very strongly against the proposal that the minister now has before him to grant exclusive importation rights or first receivership rights to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, will the minister now reconsider this proposal and at least defer a decision until consumer groups, the egg processing trade and the breaker trade have an opportunity to make their views known to the minister?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, had a decision been made, I guess it would have been possible, as the hon. member suggests, to reconsider it. However, the fact is that no decision has been made. Certainly the kinds of representations the hon. member has mentioned will be welcomed. I have made note of them. No final decision will be made until all of these matters have been considered.

Mr. McGrath: In light of this very important statement by the vice-chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, will the minister or his officials contact the board to enter into discussions with them so that the views of the board will be well known to the minister in his consideration of this matter?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the very fact that the hon. member has been able to give in such a detailed manner the views of the vice-chairman of the board indicates that they are well known. If it is necessary to hold further consultations, I see nothing to prohibit that.

PROPOSED CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON REGULATIONS GOVERNING COASTAL TRADE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the growing urgency to ensure the appropriate authorities in the coastal provinces of Canada that the regulations under Bill C-61 will in fact meet the assurances given by the former Minister of Transport with regard to protection of coasting and so forth. Is the minister now prepared to reconvene the meetings which have taken place in the past? In addition, will he expand those meetings with the authorities of the council of maritime premiers to include all provinces in Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to have a little trouble following procedures that are in fact being followed. I indicated, as well as my predecessor, that in discussions with the four western ministers and also in discussion with the four Atlantic ministers there were agreements that the regulations proposed with regard to coasting trade would be discussed fully with all of them and in the Atlantic meeting, we agreed about the procedure. As far as I know, the Atlantic ministers of transport are fully satisfied with the procedure and the consultations they know will take place.

Mr. Forrestall: In the most recent communique from the council of maritime premiers, they expressed dissatisfaction with the direction the development of regulations is taking. Can the minister indicate to these people that he will, at the earliest moment possible, reconvene the meetings between his officials, the officials of the maritime provinces and indeed invite officials of other coastal provinces to join in those meetings?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to be reasonable. I have been following procedures and consultations which satisfy the ministers of transport in the regions of the country that are affected. As far as I know, those consultations, as they are going on, are satisfactory to them. I will be glad to ask them to make more widely known their satisfaction with regard to the process.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING COASTAL TRADE—DATE OF MEETING OF COMMITTEE OF MEMBERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Will the minister advise when he is going to convene the meeting of the special committee to which the hon. member for St. John-Lancaster and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni have been named as joint chairmen? This is an ad hoc committee to ascertain the views of members of parliament with regard to the development of regulations under Bill C-61. If the minister will not listen to the premiers, will he advise when and under what circumstances members of parliament will have an opportunity to make their views known to this ad hoc committee?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member drawing attention to the fact that in addition to the consultations going on with the provinces, I want to bring members of parliament fully into the consultations because, certainly on this side of the House, they all represent their regions very well. I have been having discussions with the two members to whom the hon. member referred. I look forward at an early date to the meeting to which the hon. member has referred.

RATES ON INTERPROVINCIAL FERRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INCREASE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister been in consultation with the Atlantic provinces' governments, especially the government of Prince Edward Island, with regard to the proposed rates for passengers and vehicles on interprovincial ferries? If so, has an agreement been reached as to the magnitude of an increase, if any, and when will the increase be announced?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions. The subject was raised at a meeting with the Atlantic transportation ministers and some follow-up discussions took place, particularly with Prince Edward Island. It is fair to say that, like anyone else paying rates, they prefer lower rates rather than higher rates. I would not want to make it sound as if they are delighted by any increase at all. However, within the framework, knowing that we felt some additional money had to be brought out of that service and having regard to the increase in deficits, we have had some useful discussions about the kinds of increases and where the increases ought to go.

Mr. MacLean: In light of the fact that much of the commerce carried on these ferries is of primary products and the persons concerned have no means of passing the additional costs on to the consumer, will the minister take action to advise the people concerned as to what the increase in rates will be at as early a date as possible so that they can make plans accordingly, especially in cases where the margin of profitability is so low that even a minor increase in cost may destroy the viability of the commerce?

Mr. Lang: Naturally, it would be our hope to have some period of notice between an indication of an increase and the actual implementation of the rate. However, that may have to be a very short period. Part of the delay in making the decision in principle to increase ferry rates generally has been because of the tremendous interest of colleagues of mine from the region and members of parliament from the Atlantic region to ensure that to the extent possible, the increases are as easy to accept as that can be possible.

COMMUNICATIONS

EFFECT OF ACCOUNTING CHANGES BY BELL CANADA ON REQUEST FOR RATE INCREASE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Will the minister confirm that her department conducted an internal analysis of the various accounting changes made by Bell Canada, leading to the conclusion that Bell's recent rate increase request amounting to over $100 million would have been significantly less had these accounting changes not taken place, and will the minister table this report in the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we did not ourselves make a study of the accounting practices used by Bell Canada. These studies were undertaken by the Canadian Transport Commission, which was given authority to do such a study.

The facts referred to by the hon. member are not true. But it is true that the Department of Communications checks the information it receives from the CTC. We think that the study was very useful and will help us better understand why Bell needs to change its rates in the future.

[English]

Mr. Symes: I am aware of the CTC analysis but I believe there was also a separate one conducted by the hon. lady's department. I should like to ask whether the CTC analysis and any analysis done by her department were taken into consideration when the cabinet turned down an appeal by Action Bell Canada against the recent rate increase?

Mrs. Sauvé: The CTC has done the study and there is no way the Department of Communications is going to duplicate that study. But we are equipped within the department to analyse the study, and this we did. It is on this basis that we are able to advise the cabinet to accept, vary or rescind decisions of the CTC.

MANPOWER

REPORT OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA ON JOBS, PROGRAMS AND GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In the light of the far reaching implications of the report of the Economic Council of Canada affecting people, jobs, programs and government performance, will the minister be making any comments by way of a statement in the House regarding this extremely important report?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There are many interesting comments and useful suggestions contained in the report of the Economic Council which I have now had an opportunity to examine, though somewhat superficially at this stage. I do not anticipate making a statement in the House though I look forward to discussing the subject and answering any questions when we meet in the standing committee to discuss the main estimates of my department.

Mr. Alexander: The main estimates are one thing, and this report, in which I am particularly interested, is another. Having regard to the importance of the report and the need for it to be given some study, might I ask whether the government House leader will use his good offices to see to it that this report, which affects people, jobs, programs and government performance is referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for study? Surely the minister realizes that this document is worthy of that type of action.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I find myself in sympathy with the hon. member. I did discuss at one time the project of referring the council's report and, perhaps, the annual report of the Bank of Canada, to the Finance Committee rather than to the committee to which he referred. I believe it would be useful to have the reports of the Economic Council given much wider study and I am quite sympathetic to the hon. member's views. I would be in a much better position, however, if we could manage the affairs of the House in such a way that there could be an opportunity for debate in this chamber after the reports are made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REPORT OF TASK FORCE ON AIR-SEA RESCUE POLICY—DATE OF DECISION ON INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF "SAN JUAN"

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman indicated some time ago that the task force review of the air-sea rescue policy would be presented to cabinet by April 1. Can the minister tell us what progress has been made by cabinet on this issue? Will the report be tabled? Will it be referred to the Transport Committee?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I do not believe those were my dates. The review is still under way.

Mr. Marshall: Has the minister reached a decision with respect to causing a judicial inquiry to be held into the sinking of the fishing vessel San Juan and, if so, may I ask when the inquiry will take place?

Mr. Lang: The final report on that matter, preliminary to any such decision, is not yet in my hands.

Oral Questions

CUSTOMS

NEED FOR ADEQUATE STAFFING OF BOOTHS AT DOUGLAS CROSSING DURING TOURIST SEASON

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of National Revenue. Spring has finally come to Ottawa, only another reminder that it came a long time ago to White Rock and the greater Vancouver area. It also heralds the tourist season which will bring thousands of people to the beautiful beaches of White Rock and Crescent Beach.

An hon. Member: This is a commercial.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a question to ask?

Mr. Friesen: Can the minister give some assurance that all seven of the customs booths at the Douglas Crossing will be staffed this year to process the tourists coming into Canada?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): I cannot give that assurance in view of the government's restraint program and the cutbacks—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Cullen: However, it is our hope that during the peak periods we would have adequate staff so that there would be few delays and people could get to the beautiful area the hon. member is talking about.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

EMISSION STANDARDS FOR SYNCRUDE PROJECT—CONFLICTING PROVINCIAL AND FEDERAL STANDARDS—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to Syncrude that it will be up to the provinces to set environmental standards, may I ask whether this means that the provinces could set and implement lower standards than those provided in the various statutes of Canada? Will Syncrude, through provincial action, be in any way exempted from the standards and provisions of the Contaminants Act, the Fisheries Act and other statutes related to clean air and water?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I believe it has been said at least a dozen times in this House that the provinces of Alberta has the authority required to set the standards. On the other hand, there has never been any talk of lowering the emission standards for sulphur dioxide; on the contrary, they should be more stringent; we have recommended lowering the standards from 270 to 280, that they now are, to 80 tons a day.

[Mr. Lang.]

Now, with the application of the new Contaminants Act, I will try to see what we can do to co-operate with the province of Alberta and lower the air pollution at Syncrude.

[English]

Mr. Wenman: Having regard to the statement made by the Department of the Environment that an emission rate of 287 long tons of sulphur dioxide was unacceptable and that the emission should be reduced to 40 long tons per day, may I ask whether the minister possesses the necessary legislative authority to ensure this objective? If not, will he seek such authority in the House of Commons?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think that before looking for more legislative authority I should try to work with the Province of Alberta through my colleague to determine whether it is possible to lower the standard to an acceptable level. While 40 tons is what we find ideal, if we could reach some compromise for the meantime I would be very happy and this is what I am doing right now.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,588, 3,699, 4,031, 4,107 and 4,947.

DIPLOMATIC IMMUNITY—TRAFFIC OFFENCES

Question No. 3,588—Mr. Beatty:

1. To the knowledge of the government, how much money is currently owed but apparently uncollectable by representatives of foreign governments in Canada ticketed for traffic offenses but safe from prosecution for their failure to pay any fines on the grounds that they enjoy diplomatic immunity?

2. (a) What are the ten countries whose representatives owe the most money (b) how much is currently owed in each case?

3. What attempts are being made by the government to collect such money?

4. What is the policy of the government concerning the claiming of diplomatic immunity by Canadian diplomats abroad who are assessed fines for traffic offenses?

5. Is the government aware of reports of the refusal by a number of foreign representatives attending the Stockholm conference on the environment, to pay hotel bills and other charges incurred by them while attending the conference and, if so, what measures are being taken to ensure that any debts owed by those attending the Habitat conference in Vancouver next year will be paid?

6. In the past twelve months, has the government been made aware of any instances including traffic offenses where foreign diplomats in Canada have invoked diplomatic immunity to avoid legal liabilities that would otherwise have applied to them and, if so (a) how many such cases is the government aware of (b) what was the nature of each

(c) were any diplomats doing so asked to leave the country as a result of their behaviour?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Persons in Canada having diplomatic status enjoy diplomatic immunity, and are therefore immune from the criminal, civil and administrative jurisdiction of Canada. Consequently they cannot be said to owe money in respect of traffic offences.

2. (a) See answer to part 1. (b) See answer to part 1.

3. See answer to part 1.

4. The general policy of the government in this matter is twofold: it upholds the immunities conferred upon Canadian diplomats by international law in order to protect them from harassment, but at the same time it expects Canadian diplomats abroad to observe local laws and regulations.

5. The official Swedish report received by the government makes no reference to unpaid hotel bills and charges.

6. Yes. (a) 5,516 cases in the twelve months ending November 30, 1975. (b) 5,512 parking and traffic violations, one case of shoplifting, two cases of impaired driving and one case of theft under 200 dollars. (c) No.

EXPORT OF ARMS

Question No. 3,699—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What safeguards does the government have to ensure effective control over the ultimate destination of arms being exported by Canada?

2. What percentage of the defence industry in Canada is foreign owned?

3. What is the amount of financial assistance under various government programmes for defence industries whether domestic or foreign owned?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of External Affairs and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. Government policy in this regard is to ensure that shipments are consistent with Canada's general policy on the export of military equipment; to ensure that the orders are bona fide; reach the declared consignee and are not destined to countries to which U.N. resolutions forbid the export of such equipment. A Canadian exporter in applying for an export permit is required to specify the country of ultimate destination and the name and address of the purchaser. There are severe penalties for supplying false information. At the same time it is recognized that the equipment once exported to another country becomes subject to that country's export control regulations and beyond the jurisdiction of Canadian regulations. In these circumstances it is possible that Canadian equipment might be diverted to a third country to which Canada itself would not approve such shipment. However, should a situation of this type come to the attention of Canadian authorities, further shipments of such equipment, spare parts for that equipment or indeed shipments of other military and/or strategic materiel to the countries in question may be denied. Knowledge of this fact is normally sufficient to deter such diversion.

2. Defence products manufactured for export and to meet Canadian requirements emanate from a number of Canadian manufacturing industries, e.g. aircraft and aircraft parts, motor vehicles, communication equipment, metal fabricating, etc. National statistics do not identify defence manufacturing as a specific industry. In addition, nearly all Canadian companies who manufacture defence products also manufacture commercial items and the relative values of each vary considerably from year to year. Information is not available which would enable an accurate estimate to be made of the percentage of foreign ownership of that portion of Canadian industry engaged in the manufacture of defence products.

3. FY75/76 estimates provided for financial assistance of up to $42 million for shared programs between the Canadian Government, Candian firms and friendly foreign Governments for the development and production of defence and defence related products for export. In addition, $8 million is available for repayable loans for procurement of advanced production and test equipment.

SUBSIDIES TO SMALL BUSINESSES IN CHAMPLAIN CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 4,031—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce ever subsidized small businesses in the Constituency of Champlain and, if so, what was the total amount?

2. For each such subsidy, what was (a) its purpose (b) the amount (c) the year it was granted (d) the area concerned?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Nil.

2. Nil.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO CROP INSURANCE

Question No. 4,107—Mr. Whittaker:

1. Did the President of the Treasury Board announce in December 1975 a $10.1 million cut from the federal contribution to crop insurance and, if so, what is the present maximum for the federal contribution?

2. What was the previous estimate of the maximum for the federal contribution to crop insurance?

3. Is the government committed by statute to pay out a prescribed level or scale of contribution to the Crop Insurance Programme and, if so, does the government plan to stand by its commitment if the prescribed level exceeds the present maximum?

4. If the government stands by its commitment, where will it acquire the necessary extra funds?

5. If the concept of insurance is to afford protection against unforeseen loss, what is the government's rationale for encouraging the Crop Insurance Boards to sell less insurance?

6. Was the President of the Treasury Board aware of the fact that the government is required to pay out a prescribed level of contribution when he announced the cut in December 1975 and, if so, for what reason did he announce that the cut would be effective in 1976?

7. Is the government required to give five years notice on any change it proposes concerning the cost-sharing arrangement of the Crop Insurance Programme and, if so, has the government given notice of its intention to reduce its contribution?

8. Do such changes have to receive unanimous consent by the government and the provinces before they can be put into effect and, if so, has the government received such consent from the provinces?

9. If such consent has not been received, will the government act unilaterally to reduce its level of contribution?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6. The importance of the restraint program led the government to allocate $51.9 million in 1976-77 funding for crop insurance contributions to provinces. This level of funding is up from the expected $49 million in 1975-76, and is up 67 percent over two years, but is less than the $62 million in funding needs which was forecast prior to the Restraint Program of the Federal Government, and similar programs of provincial governments. The government is aware of its statutory commitment to a scale of contribution for eligible provincial crop insurance plans, and to the existing agreements with provinces which commit a specific level of federal assistance. The government will honour its commitments, and the Crop Insurance Act itself provides the statutory authority to make these payments.

5, 7, 8 and 9. The Minister of Agriculture and his provincial colleagues have agreed to review their respective Crop Insurance schemes in the coming months. The federal goal is to maintain a viable and expanding crop insurance program, yet one with better balance between participation levels and increasing expenditures. The legislation provides for mutually agreed changes in crop insurance cooperation between the federal and any provincial government without any notice period, and this is the spirit in which the federal and provincial governments are proceeding to review their crop insurance plans. The legislation also provides for a five-year notice period if one party seeks unilateral change in the terms of the federal-provincial agreements under this Act. No such notice has been given by the federal or any provincial government.

BLAINE BORDER CROSSING, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 4,947—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 4,111 regarding the Blaine Border Crossing, British Columbia, could the Minister advise (a) for what reason were seven re-entry gates built if it is impossible to staff them (b) what steps have been taken to solve the problem of the average 45 minute to 1 hour wait on re-entering Canada during peak hours?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): (a) The number of entry gates at Douglas was increased to seven in line with anticipated increases in traffic volume, and especially to give greater flexibility during peak travel periods such as during summer and holiday weekends. The increase in the number of gates was made to handle the projected increase in traffic for the present and the foreseeable future. Due to the present policy of fiscal restraint, however, Customs is not in a position to hire the additional staff required to operate the facility at full capacity during peak periods. (b) Several steps have been taken in an effort to reduce the delays encountered at the Douglas and Pacific Highway offices; port facilities have been expanded, casual officers continue to be hired to assist with the increase in traffic volume during the summer months, and attempts are being made to anticipate traffic peaks during the rest of the year with staff and overtime being assigned accordingly. In addition, the clerical duties performed by our uniformed officers on the border have been reduced thereby allowing them to concentrate on their enforcement duties while facilitating the clearance of travellers.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAFIK—FAILURE OF REDISTRIBUTION COMMISSIONERS TO GIVE REASONS FOR RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Speaker: On Friday the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) indicated that in respect of one of the orders of the day today he had a question of privilege.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege that I raise today flows from the ruling that you made on Friday. Without in any way questioning the validity of that ruling, Your Honour indicated that in respect of the points of order raised by myself, and primarily by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), the legality of the report submitted by the electoral boundaries commissioners for the province of Ontario was essentially a legal question and not a question that could be properly dealt with by the Chair in respect of the orders of this chamber. I respect that ruling, but I contend that the redistribution commissioners' failure to follow parliamentary directives constitutes a violation of the privileges of this House and of all its members. I will attempt to justify this contention through a number of arguments. Unfortunately, I will need a little time to go through all these arguments in order to present the case to you for consideration.

The essence of the redistribution commissioners report is its recommendations. These recommendations are absent, according to the definition in the act, and consequently they have failed to meet the criteria set down for the recommendations, primarily because no reasons are given to justify those recommendations. I contend firstly that members of parliament from the province of Ontario, having to address themselves in the debate to a redistribution report which essentially does not contain recommendations or reasons, are placed in a disadvantaged position, and consequently they have lost some of their rights and privileges as members of the House.

Secondly, the failure to comply with the law itself in a very obvious way, not through some subtle requirement of the law but an obvious requirement to provide reasons for the commission's recommendations, in my view creates a legal uncertainty as to the effect of any redistribution in Ontario, regardless of how it is disposed of by this House. A subsequent move by an individual before the courts to set aside redistribution prior to or after any election would affect the very foundations of this institution. It seems to me that this Act gives rise to the existence of parliament itself, and as a consequence if there is a legal flaw within the Act this institution is very much in jeopardy. If in fact the redistribution is set aside by the courts after a subsequent election that may be fought on the boundaries that would flow from this faulty report, this would also potentially jeopardize the seats of many, if not all, members of parliament in the future.

When Your Honour ruled on Friday that this was a legal, not procedural, question I agreed and I agree now. But the legal question is one for whom to resolve? The need for a resolution is obvious, but who has the jurisdiction really to solve the question? I believe that this question can be viewed in three ways. First, as an internal matter for parliament itself to resolve; secondly, as an external matter to be dealt with by the courts; and thirdly, as a question that might be dealt with directly by the Crown. In this latter instance I will make no comment, trusting only that it will take into account the points I am making. If in fact this is an internal matter, I would contend that there is a prima facie case here of a breach of the privileges of this House.

My case rests, in terms of its being an internal question, on section 51 of the British North America Act, which in part provides, in addressing itself to the subject matter of redistribution:

> —after on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides—

This clear directive from the British North America Act leaves to the parliament of Canada the authority to describe the manner in which redistribution will take place, subject, of course, to the caveats in the British North America Act itself. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, plus the historical precedents, I would contend that redistribution up until November 20, 1964, when the present act for redistribution came into force, had historically been an internal matter for parliament itself to decide. It appears to me abundantly clear, therefore, that parliament, through one means or another, through its committees or through the House itself, decided upon what was to be redistribution.

The redistribution Act of 1964 delegated this responsibility to an independent commission, for obvious and understandable reasons, such as getting rid of charges of gerrymandering and so on. But I do not think that the existence of this act changes the internal nature of the job to be performed; it was in fact a delegated responsibility by parliament to the commission.

The uniqueness of this commission rests on a number of things, not the least of which is the manner in which the commissioners are appointed. Two of them are appointed directly by Your Honour, one is appointed by the courts, and one, who is the representation commissioner, is appointed by parliament through a resolution of the House of Commons under a separate act, the Canada Elections Act. To my knowledge, there is no other Act of parliament that adopts this particular approach of an independent commission; it is unique in that respect.

It is unique in the same way as the Canada Elections Act is unique: they both give rise to this institution itself. The interpretation of the Canada Elections Act is quite clear. If one looks historically to the Supreme Court in Great Britain, or to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine how it treats the Canada Elections Act in deciding, whether a member has or has not been elected, the law is interpreted in a very special and unique way. The courts have concluded that the Canada Elections Act provisions can never be interpreted against the people themselves, that their will is paramount. I use that argument, Mr. Speaker, only to indicate that in that limited sense there is a uniqueness about the Canada Elections Act, and I conclude that there is also a uniqueness about the redistribution Act. Both those Acts give rise to the very foundation of parliament itself and the institution of democracy.

As I have pointed out, the statute is unique. In my view, the commission is an extension of parliament, based on section 51 of the British North America Act, which allows its functions to be performed directly by parliament. It does not say "performed through law". Your Honour will find in the British North America Act reference to statutes and laws. In this particular case there is no reference to a law or statute to give rise to redistribution at all, but in fact in the manner that has been prescribed by parliament, which is a slightly different thing, but important nonetheless.

> Another collective right of the House is to settle its own code of procedure. This is such an obvious right—it has never been directly disputed—

Then, further it is stated:

This holds good even where the procedure of a House or the right of its members or officers to take part in its proceedings is dependent on statute.

The existence of the redistribution Act does not in any way abrogate the rights of the House to determine its own procedures and to settle its own problems, even though those rights may stem from an Act of parliament itself.

Further on page 65 of May's it is stated:

When any of these rights and immunities, both of the members, individually, and of the assembly in its collective capacity, which are known by the general name of privileges, are disregarded or attacked by any individual or authority, the offence is called a breach of privilege, and is punishable . . .

I go on further:

"The privileges of a legislative assembly would be entirely ineffectual to enable it to discharge its functions, if it had no power to punish offenders . . . or to enforce obedience to its commands."

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that parliament in fact gave a command through this House of Commons to the redistribution commissioners with which they have failed to comply, and under such circumstances, according to Beauchesne's 108(1), in my view there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege. It states:

Anything which may be considered a contempt of court by a tribunal, is a breach of privilege if perpetrated against Parliament . . .

Then it goes on, and I miss the words in between because it talks of offensive language, etc.:

. . . or by a mere failure to obey its Orders.

The orders of parliament were quite clear and quite specific in relation to its instructions to the redistribution commissioners. It is self-evident, too, that the commissioners failed to comply with the very essence of those instructions, which were to bring forward recommendations backed up by reasons therefor. I would contend on that ground that if this question is to be interpreted as an internal matter of parliament, then it raises a question of privilege for all members of this House as a result of the failure to comply with the provisions of that Act and the instructions that were sent to them.

If this question as to the legality of the reports submitted by the commissioners is to be resolved in an external way, then I contend I have a further question of privilege, as it would adversely affect all members of parliament. First of all, the intervening uncertainty in connection with the legal premise upon which our distribution rests adversely affects the privileges of all members of the House of Commons because no member would know for certain on what basis he or she may seek re-election, plan re-election or plan election in the first place. Secondly, if the uncertainty prevails until after the next election those who are elected will not know for certain if their election would be upheld by the courts, if in fact it is alleged before the court that redistribution itself is invalid, and, therefore, the effects of redistribution are invalid. That goes to the very root of parliament and the very existence of this institution. I would, therefore, contend that in order to protect the privileges of members of parliament today, and the existence of this institution in the future, this matter needs to be resolved in the interests of all members of parliament as quickly as possible.

I would, therefore, contend that if it is alleged that this is an external matter to be dealt with by the courts the Committee on Privileges and Elections should see that the courts deal with this matter in an expeditious way.

In light of the fundamental nature of this question of privilege which affects the very existence of parliament and the methods by which its membership is determined, if Your Honour concludes that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move a motion to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, referring this question to it with the recommendation that it consider the matter and advise this House on ways and means by which fundamental questions may be resolved.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see there are a number of other members who wish to contribute. I will recognize the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras).

Mr. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) in registering concern, and with the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner), whose intervention on a point of order the other day gave rise to the consideration in the House of Commons of this whole problem. I have deliberated with them in the ensuing days and I seriously believe we do have a fundamental problem that must be dealt with, and with dispatch. I do not want to take much time as I think the hon. member for Ontario has presented a very complete case, but there are two or three themes and links within his comments that in my view are of importance, and should be emphasized.

I note that in your ruling, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order of the hon. member for Thunder Bay you dealt with it on procedural grounds in light of the debate that was to be before us today. In dealing with it you did make the statement as recorded in Hansard at page 12391 of April 1:

—it does not seem to me that there is a great deal of difficulty about the facts leading up to the argument.

I take it that has relation to the view of the hon. member for Thunder Bay that indeed the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Redistribution Commission did not fulfil its obligation to give its reasons to parliament when it submitted its report. Indeed, there is an indication that it failed to fulfil its obligation at another stage. I understand it was required by parliamentary direction to state its reasons publicly in advertisements to be embarked upon or commissioned before the public hearings, at which stage it was also supposed to have given the reasons for its decisions about the original boundaries which were subject, of course, to adjustment by virtue of views expressed at those public hearings. It seems to me the commission failed on two counts, and it seems to me you recognized this when you said there does not seem to be a great deal of difficulty about the facts. If that is the case, then I think it leads directly to the comment by the hon. member for Ontario about the question of privilege.

I will not again quote Beauchesne, but just refer to Citation No. 108(1) at page 98 which says that it is a breach of privilege when there is a failure to obey the orders. Indeed, in view of Your Honour's comments about the lack of doubt on the facts leading to the argument, and in light of that section of Beauchesne's, it seems to me there is a case of privilege.

It may be, Sir, that many reports that are incomplete or inaccurate, are tabled before parliament by government agencies, and that this a weakness in those reports. In most cases, of course, a government agency is involved, the ultimate responsibility is that of the government itself. The Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commissions are not agencies of the government; they are creatures of parliament itself, and I believe it is only parliament, therefore, that can call them to order and correct such omissions or failures. Indeed, I think it is our responsibility as parliamentarians to do so. I do not know of any other avenue by which that could be accomplished, except perhaps by a referral of the question of privilege to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I believe too, Sir, that in your subsequent comments about this, dealing with it on procedural grounds by virtue of the debate before us today—and I do not want to take licence with your comments—you indicated that there might be legal recourse by an hon. member as an individual or, indeed, by, and I believe you used the words, "any other citizens". That implies to me belief in what I feel is the real problem. The hon. member for Ontario referred to this. At some stage—and we do not know the timing on this—an individual citizen or indeed a member could take this report to the courts and cast at least in doubt the whole process proceeding to or flowing from the next federal election, particularly for the members from Ontario.

However, I suggest that if their situation were in doubt, this might indeed cast a reflection on the whole election because, although we are dealing with the commission for Ontario and its failure to give us a basis in law for the boundaries for the next election, I suggest that could have an effect on all the members from all across the country because of the relationship of the numbers involved to the precise constitutional requirements. Indeed, the new Readjustment Act sets the number of members for various provinces. So, I do not think it is just a matter for Ontario. I believe it is a serious matter which should be resolved. It all hinges on whether or not there was indeed an omission or a failure on the part of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission to fulfil its obligation as indicated by an Act of Parliament which did instruct it to give reasons.

Also, there is a definition for the word "recommendation" which I believe establishes that there has been this failure in connection with this report and in the previous actions of the commission before public hearings. I do not believe we can leave this doubt around until the next election or until some private citizen or even individual member clears it up by referral to the court. Surely, since we are not dealing with an Act administered by the government but with one of those few commissions, agencies or organizations which report directly to Parliament and is appointed by Parliament, we cannot leave this report in the dubious state in which I certainly feel it now exists.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when you made your ruling on Friday on the point of order raised on Thursday by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) I thought that was the end of this issue. I thought of doing a bit of research but under the circumstances the research I had planned on doing did not get done. However, I have some rather strong views on the question raised today by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) supported by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras).

Before I get into what I want to say I must make the comment that some of the words being used today remind me of the debates we used to have in the old days when redistribution was done by a committee of Parliament. During the days when that method was so distasteful that the proposal was being made that we should have an independent commission, one of the arguments advanced against such a commission was that the seats in parliament were the concern of members of parliament and that this was an internal matter. That argument has been advanced today; that is, that the composition of parliament is an internal matter and that what is involved here affects the privileges of all members of this House.

What we are talking about is the next parliament, the thirty-first and thirty-second. These are parliaments that belong to the people of Canada. They do not belong to us. We do not have vested rights in the seats we now hold or in any changes which may be made in those seats. A previous parliament decided that this fact should be recognized by the referral of this matter to independent commissions. Some of us wanted those commissions to be completely independent of the idea that members should have their say in any way. We have this provision for the filing of objections and the discussions that are to take place today and tomorrow. It was a bit of a concession. However, I insist on the fundamental fact that parliamentary seats do not belong to those who happen to be here but to the people of Canada and that the seats which are to be determined for the next election and the election after that are not for us to decide. We have recognized that fact by appointing independent commissions.

Perhaps I should say at this point that I am a bit puzzled by the repeated reference to the fact that the Ontario Commission gave no reasons for its report that has been laid before parliament. It seems to me that is a matter of opinion or of definition. I find on pages 3 and 4 of the Ontario report under the heading "Schedule B" the subtitle "Reasons for the Original Proposed Boundaries". There then follow 2, 3, 4 or 5 paragraphs and some subparagraphs. Those reasons may not satisfy the members for Ontario. The members for Ontario may feel that the commissioners did not go into sufficient detail. However, I think the argument that the law is being ignored and that this House is being given a report without any reasons does not stand up. As I say there are reasons, limited though they may be, in the report as I have indicated on pages 3 and 4.

Sir, you made the point the other day that what is involved here, if anything is involved, is a point of law. When the day comes when we get Mr. Speaker to rule on points of law both he and this House will be in a great deal of trouble. I do not think members should try to get around that by saying that parliament has given orders to a commission, that there has been a parliamentary direction to the independent commission for Ontario. Sir, we sometimes set up committees or bodies to which we give instructions, but that is not what happened in this case. We passed the statute just as we have passed other statutes. Once we have passed a statute and it becomes the law of the land, it is not ours to judge whether that law is being fulfilled. If the law is not being fulfilled, that is a matter for the courts. I think the ruling you gave on Friday in that regard is perfectly correct. The hon. member for Ontario in his submission today, among other words, used the word "legality". If there is something here which is not in keeping with the legality of the situation, it is not for us to do something about it. The laws we pass frequently get broken, but we do not deal with those who break the law even though we have passed the law in this House of Commons. That is to be dealt with by the courts.

I contend that this is not an internal matter. It is not one that comes under the heading the hon. member for Ontario has tried to refer to as our own procedures. That applies to how we debate things, but it does not give us the right to say that the commission for Ontario has broken the law in respect of the distribution of seats in the House of Commons. The internal procedures, or the debating procedures in this House of Commons in this Thirtieth Parliament which is clearly under our control, do not give us the right to meddle in what the people of Canada will have as the make-up of their seats for the Thirtieth Parliament. Although we have moved from a point of order on which you ruled Friday, to a question of privilege, I submit it is the same issue and that your ruling of Friday should apply to the question of privilege today.

I think the Minister for Manpower and Immigration is correct in one point he made. If it were to happen that the process were to go through and the commissions, all ten or eleven of them, were to finalize their reports, then someone went to court and found that one of them was wrong and then an election were called before the matter could be settled, then obviously the next election would be fought on the old boundaries. We could not have the next election fought on new boundaries for eight or nine provinces and on old boundaries for one or two provinces. That would upset the whole apple cart. Either the final act of the commissions would all be wrong or it would all be right. But I submit that even if there is a case for this matter to be taken to court, it is to be taken to a court outside of this place. We are not a court to rule whether or not a body which has been appointed by law has or has not kept the law which we laid down.

Let me go on to say one other thing more or less conjecturally. If Your Honour rules that we proceed with this debate, certainly the Ontario members who speak in this debate will have the right to protest that the reasons set out in the report are not adequate and today's and tomorrow's Hansard will get sent to the Ontario commission so they will know that there is dissatisfaction. What they will do about it is up to them, as is everything during this debate entirely up to them. On the other hand, if the Ontario members decide that this is so offensive that they do not want to debate Ontario at all, then the commission has full authority under the Act simply to finalize the boundaries that they have already put down in the report before us.

As I said earlier in my remarks, I think that we are getting a throwback to the old days when parliament felt that redistribution was its business. I contend that it is not. The redistribution, the number of seats that we will have for each province, and how the boundaries will be drawn is the concern of the people of Canada Parliament wisely, with all parties agreeing to it, decided that therefore we should not do it in committees of the House but we should set up independent commissions. They are human, they can make mistakes or they can look at the law which says they must give reasons and give reasons which are skimpy or not satisfactory. But I do not think we have the authority to set ourselves up as a court to decide that a body appointed under the law has not carried out the terms of that law. I make the point again that there are reasons although they may not be satsifactory. I have looked at the reasons in the Ontario report and compared them with the reasons in the Manitoba report. There are more words in the Ontario reasons than there are in the Manitoba reasons.

Again in the case of Manitoba, they did not go into every last detail. They gave their reasons for significant or precise changes which have been made and they gave their reasons for changing a couple of names in their final report. None of us from Manitoba made any objection to that final report.

It is a short set of reasons, if you want to call it that in the Ontario report, but at any rate it cannot he argued that they have broken the law by not giving any reason at all.

Pardon me for wandering around in circles, Mr. Speaker, Frankly, I support the position you took when you ruled on the point of order last Friday, and I believe you should rule the same way today.

Mr. Speaker: There are three other hon. members who want to speak on the question of privilege. I do not want to eliminate the discussion or to cut it down unduly. This matter has been discussed as a point of order and it is now raised as a question of privilege. I see the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) wishing to speak. There was a very strong intervention on Thursday and Friday. The House is moving on to debate these reports for two days. The matter has been discussed rather thoroughly as a point of order and now as a question of privilege. There are others who may wish to contribute. Perhaps I can give the House the benefit of my thinking on the matter.

The House having set aside two days to debate the question, it should go on to debate it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The questions which have been raised, whether one accepts or rejects the quality of the "reasons" that have been attached to these reports, is that there was a striking similarity between the reports of four of the provinces which are proposed to be debated today and tomorrow. If the Chair is to be put in the position of looking at the reports, examining certain paragraphs, and saying that these are reasons within the terms of the statute and these are not, clearly the Chair is being put in the position of being a legal judge. The Chair will simply not accept such a position.

In addition, the relationship between this debate and the actions of the commissioners or the legal position of the commissioners or the right of the whole process to effect actual changes is not very clear. The fact is that this debate was ordered by statute. It will continue today and tomorrow, and frankly there does not seem to me to be any relationship between this debate and the ultimate actions to be taken by the commissioners. They may take into account remarks made here if they wish, but they are not bound to do so because to bind them legally to do that would be to put them in an impossible position.

Therefore, clearly the intent of the statute is that this House should seek a combination between the independence of the commissioners and the opportunity of the House to pass judgment and make comment upon their recommendations. That is what has been provided. There was never any pretension that these debates or the comments that will be made in the next two days will have any legal or binding effect upon the commissioners. That being the case, I cannot understand what hon. members would consider the desirable effect to be of interrupting this process, since it has no legal effect. Therefore it would be my suggestion that we get on with the debate and maximize the time allowed. If hon. members wish to participate in the debate after those remarks, I will be happy to see them but I had hoped to shorten the process by making my intervention.

Some hon. Members: Amen.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other hon. members who wish to participate in the discussion, we will go on to orders of the day.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO REPORTS OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS—NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

The House proceeded to the consideration of objections to reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for various provinces.

Mr. Speaker: The first objection is to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, when I and my colleagues sent a formal notice to Your Honour requesting that an objection be filed to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Northwest Territories, we used the traditional language of such a notice. In the formal language of that notice we said that the commission had failed to do one thing and overlooked or ignored something else. So, first of all, I should like to say that we did not file the objection because we doubted in any way the thoroughness of the commission's proceedings or the ability of any of the commissioners, but such is the language of tradition.

We filed the objection because the commission filed both a majority and a minority report. As I understand it, this does not happen very often. By filing our objection we hope to give the commission the opportunity to take a second look at the problems, a second look that would include the views of any member of the House who may wish to give them the benefit of his or her experience.

I presented a brief to the Electoral Boundaries Commission of the Northwest Territories last December in Yellowknife. In that brief I indicated that I favoured what is commonly called a north-south dividing line. I also told the commissioners that my own suggestion for names for our two new constituencies was western Arctic and eastern Arctic. One of the reports from the commission agreed with me about the boundaries, but neither of them agreed with my choice of names.

In the few months between now and the time that I gave that submission much has happened. The Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, or the Eskimo Brotherhood of Canada, presented its proposal for an Inuit land claim settlement in the Northwest Territories to the cabinet. When they were preparing this proposal, the ITC did a lot of work to make sure that the people in the communities were consulted. I have no doubt that their proposal represents a consensus on the matter of future political development in the Northwest Territories. Because of this I now feel that perhaps the boundary outlined in the majority report of the commission, commonly known as the tree line boundary, is the better choice, because the tree line boundary more accurately reflects the conditions which will exist if the ITC proposal is accepted by the cabinet, as I am sure it will be if the cabinet uses common sense.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't bet on it.

Mr. Firth: There are other factors which lead me to support the choice of boundaries of the majority report. The first is that the Indian people of Mackenzie valley—the Dene as we call ourselves—are in the process of defining their land claims. Although the proposal for a Dene claim has not yet been presented to the government, I have no doubt that the tree line boundary would be the best suited to the kind of claim these people will probably bring forward in about November of this year. The second point is that there are three northerners sitting on the commission. Of the three, two submitted the majority report.

However, there still remains the question of names for the two new constituencies. In my original submission to the commission I explained at some length some of the roles the member or parliament for Northwest Territories must play. I was speaking, of course, of any member of parliament for the Northwest Territories, no matter who it might be. I told the commission that in my view the person who does this job must, along with the other duties of a member of parliament, work to expand the knowledge of the people in the rest of the country about the particular problems we in the north face. Because I feel that this task is so important, we should name the new constituencies in such a manner that no one, no matter how little he or she knows about the north, would fail to recognize the part of the country to which reference was being made. This is the big job of the member of parliament for the north. He has to explain, as far as possible, the differences between that part of the world and down here.

Many constituencies have names which link them to their histories or to major landmarks. By using these names we are both able to preserve a little bit of that history and to instil pride in that heritage. In the case of the new riding which is to be formed in the eastern part of the Northwest Territories both the minority and the majority reports use the name Nunassiaq, an Inuit word which means something like beautiful land. There are very few Inuit words commonly used in the south, so there is little likelihood that this constituency name would cause any confusion for people in the rest of the country.

However, I do see a problem with the name of the other constituency. The majority report would call this riding Mackenzie River. The choice of the minority report is Mackenzie Arctic. Both these names are faithful to the history and tradition of the area. However, I still feel that they would be confusing because there is already a constituency in northern Saskatchewan known as Mackenzie. If these ridings were anywhere else in the country, I would not mind, but as I said, the general level of knowledge in the rest of the country about the north is very low, and anything which would tend to confuse northern issues even more should be avoided.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I should, therefore, like to ask the commission to reconsider its report with a view to retaining the tree line boundary and the names Nunassiaq and Western Arctic. This has the support of all my colleagues. It has the support of native groups in the Northwest Territories. It has the support of two of three of the northern members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and if my memory serves me correctly, this concept also had the support of hon. members to my right. As a matter of fact I hope that a former minister of Indian affairs and northern development who is now the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) will support this view.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the trouble with some younger members is that they do not understand anything about Canadian history. They think everything began in 1963.

Mr. Blais: 1940.

Mr. Dinsdale: However, this is an historic occasion, and that is why I take part in this debate. What is happening today is the fulfillment of initiatives which began back in 1961 when a proposal went forward from the Norhtwest Territories Council for a division of the territories. The proposal arose out of a speech to the Territorial Council by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) on July 20, 1961. He was then prime minister. At that time he said:

> I was particularly interested in one view that you expressed: More and more the Council believes that to a greater extent than ever before, self-government should be made available to the people of the north, and I'll join with you in that. Already the field has greatly widened the responsibilities of the Council, and I can assure you of this fact: that having seen at first hand something of the achievements of the past, something of the things that have already been done, anything that you may suggest—and the members of the Council—to increasing the field of your responsibility, and also providing, to a measure not before known, of self-government, will receive my warmest approval and support . . .
> When you mentioned that you hoped that there would be, not too far away, a division of this vast northern area into two districts, I think that too is something that deserves the most sympathetic consideration on the part of the federal government . . .

Based on that speech, the council moved a resolution in January of 1962 in the following terms:

> Whereas the construction and improvement of transportation facilities and increasing activity in the exploration for and development of mineral and petroleum resources in the Northwest Territories are bringing about rapid growth and change, especially in the western portion of the District of Mackenzie;

It went on to indicate that it was suggesting the division of the territories.

For the benefit of the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) there is where the plot thickens. There was legislation on the order paper back in 1963 to divide the territories. With the change of government in 1963 that legislation fell by the wayside, and it is not until some 13 years later that we see the great resurrection we are witnessing here this afternoon. In the meantime, many years have been lost. The target date of 1967, our centennial, which was to have seen greater autonomy and responsible government for the western Arctic district, has never been achieved. It was interesting that reporters of the stature of Don McGillivray stated on January 15, 1963 that this proposed division meant that the north was a step nearer independence. There were other things which went down the drain as well, such as accelerated exploration for Arctic oil which had been launched in 1961. Now we are moving forward once again, after this long delay, and I do want to support the proposal for the division of the territories into two districts.

I want to pay tribute to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who has kept this issue alive over the years. It became necessary, because of the proposal, to give the native people in the territories the vote for the first time in 1962. Believe it or not, they did not even have the right to vote, a basic right of all people in a democratic country, until 1962. As a result of their close involvement they were consulted as to how the territories should be divided and how they should be named, so the exercise we are going through this afternoon is largely based on the activities of that period of some 13 years ago.

The native people themselves, the Inuits in particular, chose between four names for the eastern district: the first was Nunassiaq, meaning the beautiful land; the second choice was Nunamarik, meaning the homeland; the third choice was Nattilik, meaning the land of seals; and the fourth was Inuit Nunanga, meaning the land of the Eskimos. It was interesting that the majority viewpoint was in favour of Nunassiaq, the beautiful land.

It was on the basis of that recommendation that the boundaries were drawn. The boundaries are similar in some respects to the majority report, with the exception that it was strongly recommended that the districts covered by Victoria Island, Banks Island and the surrounding smaller islands should be included in the western Arctic region. I support the hon. member for Northwest Territories. "Western Arctic" is much more appropriate. We have always referred to that area as the western Arctic. The name "Mackenzie River" is a survival of the past, surviving from the designation "Mackenzie District". The original decision made back in 1962, chose "Nunatsiaq" as the right name for the eastern Arctic. The inclusion of Victoria Island and Banks Island in the eastern division was recommended because of the natural lines of communication, transportation and trade with the Mackenzie Delta. These considerations concerning the natural line communication still prevail, because of geography.

The centre of communications and influence for Nunatsiaq, or the eastern Arctic, will be Baffin Island, at Frobisher Bay. If you look at the map of the vast district of the north of Canada above the sixtieth parallel, you will see that we are considering an expanse of land some 4,000 miles across the high Arctic barrens. I think a compromise will need to be worked out in this regard, if there is to be a division which makes sense in terms of lines of communication and trade. Certainly, Victoria Island and Banks Island should be included.

This afternoon I spoke largely in historical terms, because this question is of historical importance. The idea we are discussing has long been in abeyance, but has come to the fore because of the persistence of the northern peoples. They have evinced a desire for greater independence and responsible government. Although this move will not bring about two separate territories as was originally proposed in 1962, at least it is the beginning of a move in the right direction and, as such, all members of this House should support it warmly and heartily. I hope that in due course the division recommended by the Electoral Boundaries Commission will become two new territories. We look forward to the day when the great expectations of that area of Canada will come to pass, that the 3.5 million square miles of territory rich in resources, human and natural, will eventually come into its own. Perhaps it will need a change of government to achieve this. The people of the north will decide that in due course. This afternoon I wanted to draw the attention of all hon. members, and of the people of the north, to the historical precedents of this step that is being taken.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission of the Northwest Territories. I support the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth), who asks for the name of the riding in the western portion of the Territories to be changed. I agree that the part to which he refers should be known as the Western Arctic rather than the Mackenzie Arctic.

The report of the commission studying the Northwest Territories is unusual in that it made a majority and a minority report. The four commissioners split down the middle; the chairman cast the deciding vote. As a result we now have two maps, one based on the majority and one on the minority report.

Section 7(2) of the Northwest Territories Representation Act sets out the rules which the commissioners must follow in deciding the division of electoral boundaries in the Northwest Territories. Section 7(2) reads, in part:

(a) There shall be in the Northwest Territories two electoral districts each of which shall return one member; and

(b) in dividing the Northwest Territories into electoral districts and describing the boundaries thereof, the commission shall give special consideration to the following factors:

(i) ease of transportation and communication within the electoral districts;

(ii) geographical size and shape of the electoral districts relative to one another; and

(iii) any community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the Northwest Territories.

Those rules govern decisions for the drawing of electoral boundaries.

I now refer to the majority report, which reads in part:

... the commission in its proposal considers that the factors of geopraphical size and shape and community of interests of the inhabitants are more important and of a more lasting nature. The proposed division is the closest division that can be made so as to as much as possible give recognition to the traditional life and cultural patterns of the majority of the indigenous peoples while at the same time paying deference to the other factors.

In other words, the commission stated it made a decision according to geographic size and community of interest. If you examine the map accompanying the majority report, you will see that the eastern region is between four and five times the size of the western region. In other words, the majority decision was not based on geographic size. I suggest it was based on rule No. (iii), the community of interest rule. The minority report reads in part:

We are confirmed that after the public sittings and the subsequent meetings of this commission, the recommendations published in October 6, 1975, in the Canada Gazette and in various newspapers by the commission was, in our opinion, the product of the proper application of the rules set out in section 7(2) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act ...

As the hon. member for Northwest Territories said, the Inuit Tapirisat association of Canada has presented land claims to the Government of Canada. I have examined the claims of the ITC, looked at the boundaries suggested by the majority report, and at the land claims of the Inuit people. There is a considerable difference between the boundary lines. If the government accepts the land claims of the Inuit, the boundary of the territory which the ITC wishes to call Nunavut will not coincide with the electoral district proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission. Therefore, some time in the future we shall need once again to reconsider the electoral boundaries.

When I began I mentioned that the commission was divided in its opinion and that the chairman cast the deciding vote. Bearing that fact in mind, and remembering the rules laid down in the Northwest Territories Representation Act, I urge the commission to review the report and make a decision based on rules (i), (ii) and (iii) of section 7(2), to which I referred. The decision should not be based on one rule alone.

● (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Is there any further debate on the objection for the Northwest Territories?

The House having considered this objection, it will be my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the House, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The House will now proceed to the consideration of the objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario which were grouped for the purpose of consideration.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I will not take time to read the objection which was filed. It is in Votes and Proceedings. In order more properly to understand the reasons for my objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario as it relates to the boundaries of the Haldimand-Norfolk constituency, one must go back to the first Electoral Boundaries Commission of 1972-73 and look at the report which they presented in 1973. In preparation of its report, this commission held hearings in the city of Welland.

The elected representatives of the town of Dunnville and the adjacent townships of Canboro, Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke made representations at the Welland hearings asking that these areas be included in the then riding of Norfolk-Haldimand. When the commission reported in 1973, the map showed that the areas referred to above were indeed included in the proposed electoral district. Those citizens who had appeared in Welland therefore felt they had gained their point. What they did not realize was that by an act of parliament, the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario had been wiped out and the Norfolk-Haldimand riding had reverted back to its original boundaries. Further, these officials did not realize that a new commission had been established in 1974 to redraw the electoral districts for Ontario.

That brings us to the work of the present Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario and the report presently before the House, the report respecting which I have filed an objection. My objection, put simply, is that I want the present town of Dunnville, formerly Dunnville and the surrounding former townships of Canboro, Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke, to be included in the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk. That was where they were placed by the commission which reported in 1973. That is the wish of the elected officials of the town.

Let us now examine the decision of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario as contained in the report tabled in this House on February 27, 1976, and perhaps, more important, try to understand the reasons behind this decision. At outset, I concur completely with the change in the name of the electoral district from Norfolk-Haldimand to Haldimand-Norfolk. A mere reversing of the two parts of its name may seem of little consequence. However, to the residents of the riding it means a great deal. It removes the confusion associated with the name because this name is now the same as that of the region which was established April 1, 1975, as well as the name of the provincial constituency. This change is generally welcomed throughout the riding.

As one means of gathering facts and obtaining public opinion, the commission conducted hearings across the province. One such hearing was, again, held in Welland. A record of these proceedings shows three persons gave evidence with respect to the Haldimand-Norfolk constituency, none of whom was an elected official from the town of Dunnville. They advocated placing Dunnville in the new electoral district of Erie. The persons most knowledgeable of the wishes of Dunnville, namely, the elected officials in the persons of the mayor, deputy mayor and councillors were not present. They were not present for two very good reasons. First, they had already presented evidence to a former commission and won their point. Second, the Welland hearing was not advertised in the local press and they were completely unaware of the proceedings. The result of this hearing and further deliberations by the commission was to remove the town of Dunnville from Haldimand-Norfolk and place it in Erie electoral district.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to set forth in detail the reasons for my objection to this removal. First, and most important, is the fact that the mayor of Dunnville and his council are unequivocally opposed to their municipality being severed from the Haldimand-Norfolk constituency. Their reasons are well set forth in their brief to the first boundaries commission, and these reasons are even more valid in 1976 than they were in 1973 because the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk is now a reality. The sincerity and reasonableness of the official position can best be shown by reading into the record the brief presented by the then warden of Haldimand county to the first boundaries commission. I quote from that brief as follows:

> Presentation to the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission, Welland, Ontario, Monday, February 26, 1973.
> MR. CHAIRMAN: My name is Mrs. Lorna Miller of 125 Kneider Avenue in Dunnville, Ontario. I am the warden of Haldimand county and the reeve of the town of Dunnville.
> I thank you for the opportunity of making this presentation which I so do on behalf of the council of the county of Haldimand, the town of Dunnville and the townships of Canboro, Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke. The reeve of Dunn, Mr. Keith Richardson, is also in attendance this morning.
> It is the strong feeling of the municipal councils which I represent here today that the municipalities of Dunnville, Canboro, Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke should be included in the Norfolk-Haldimand riding rather than the newly-created riding of Lincoln. I am certian, although no opinion poll has been taken, that the majority of the voters in these municipalities have the same feeling.
> As you know, for the past few years the Haldimand-Norfolk study group has made a great number of detailed surveys and conducted a very comprehensive study of the two counties for the purpose of establishing regional government in Haldimand and Norfolk. During this study, all briefs and submissions made by individuals, organizations and other boards and bodies have expressed desire to remain within the boundaries of their respective two countries. Although the report has not yet been released, we are given to understand that the boundaries will remain the same, with a possible minor alteration in the west end . . .
> I am not certain whether Dr. Railton, the present federal member for the riding of Welland, and Mr. William Knowles, the member for Norfolk-Haldimand, have made or will be making a submission at this time; however, I have discussed this matter with both the members and they concur with my representation here today.
> We do feel that we are more closely allied, both economically, socially and politically with Haldimand county than with the region of Niagara, having been in the Norfolk-Haldimand riding until the last redistribution of seats. I would also mention that the counties of Norfolk and Haldimand make up the provincial riding.
> I do not believe it necessary to go into greater detail, but do submit that it is our wish to become a part of the Norfolk-Haldimand riding, as it is for provincial elections, and ask that you give favourable consideration to the request of the elected officials and the citizens of the municipalities which I have the privilege to represent here today.
> All of which I respectfully submit,
> Lorna J. D. Miller.

As further evidence of the wishes of Dunnville council, I wish to put on record a resolution passed by that body on March 9, 1976, and also a letter from the clerk-treasurer of the town of Dunnville. I quote the resolution:

> Moved by L. J. D. Miller, seconded by Keith Richardson:

That whereas at a sitting for the hearing of representations held in the city of Welland on February 26, 1973, the warden of the county of Haldimand, Mrs. Lorna J. D. Miller, also being the reeve of the town of Dunnville, on behalf of her respective councils and with the support of the councils of the then townships of Canboro, Moulton and Sherbrooke, respectfully requested that such municipalities as constituted at that time (now all within the boundaries of the present town of Dunnville) remain within the Norfolk-Haldimand riding;

And whereas at the same sitting, the reeve of the then township of Dunn, Mr. Keith Richardson, made a similar representation on behalf of his council as did the county warden and reeve of the town of Dunnville;

And whereas the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario, 1976, excludes the town of Dunnville from the Haldimand-Norfolk riding but includes the said town in the new riding of Erie;

And whereas the inclusion of the town of Dunnville in the Haldimand-Norfolk riding would not increase the population of the riding to more than 25 per cent of the electoral quota nor decrease the population of the riding of Erie to less than 25 per cent of the said quota;

● (1610)

And whereas the council of the town of Dunnville since the inception of the region of Haldimand-Norfolk is now more adamant in its belief that the town of Dunnville is much greater allied with the Riding of Haldimand-Norfolk politically, economically and socially, being a part of the provincial riding of Haldimand-Norfolk and an area municipality with the region of Haldimand-Norfolk and has no such ties with the proposed riding of Erie;

Now therefore be it resolved that the council of the town of Dunnville strongly opposes the inclusion of the municipality within the boundaries of the proposed riding of Erie and urgently requests that this municipality be included in the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk for the valid argument set forth above and the reasons submitted to the commission in Welland on February 26, 1973.

This motion was carried unanimously. I also want to read to the House a letter written to me by the Clerk of the town of Dunnville, dated March 10, 1976:

Mr. William Knowles, M.P.

Haldimand-Norfolk,

Parliament Buildings,

Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Knowles:

Thank you very much for the copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

The council of the town of Dunnville is opposed to the inclusion of the municipality in the proposed riding of Erie as evidenced by the attached resolution passed unanimously in regular session last evening.

It was our understanding the commission acceded to our wishes and included the town and townships within the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk.

As a result of this change, we did not make representation at a subsequent sitting again held in Welland on October 28, 1975, and I would add that there was no official objection from the town of Dunnville as a result of the change proposed by the commission nor was there an official request to be included in the new proposed riding of Erie.

Not until the report was issued were we aware of our inclusion in the riding of Erie. It is also our opinion that when the change was made, we should have been advised and then given an opportunity to resubmit our case.

We refer again to the resolution and respectfully request you do all in your power to include the town of Dunnville in the Riding of Haldimand-Norfolk.

He goes on to add a few more words, and signs himself "Frank Scholfield, clerk-treasurer." It should be obvious to even a casual observer that Dunnville and Haldimand country have been bound together geographically, historically, socially and politically. Let me expand on the importance of these four bonds of union. In a geographic sense, it should be noted that dating back to the creation of Haldimand county in the 1800s and prior, the county boundaries have always included the town of Dunnville. Dunnville has been an integral part of the county and made important economic contributions to the mutual benefit of all. This whole eastern area of Haldimand lies in the valley of the Lower Grand River. In early days, boats and barges of commerce moved up the river from its mouth in Lake Erie through Dunnville, Cayuga and Caledonia aided by a series of locks and dams. Today these same commercial and social relations are maintained and improved by a network of provincial and regional highways and railways. Today this region is part of the Grand River Conservation Authority.

Historically also, Dunnville belongs to Haldimand. At the close of the American revolution of 1774, the Six Nations Indians, under Chief Joseph Brant who had fought on the British side, were granted a large tract of land on the lower Grand River stretching from Lake Erie to Brantford. The town of Dunnville and Eastern Haldimand were within this tract. As portions of this tract were sold to white settlers, small towns and villages sprang up along the Grand at Port Maitland, Dunnville, Cayuga, York and Caledonia. Thus, it is evident that from the beginning Dunnville is part of the history of Haldimand.

Speaking from the view of social relationships, it should be pointed out that Dunnville had traditionally been the meeting place for social events for the county. Conversely, rural people of the present town of Dunnville use the Kohler agricultural centre near Cayuga as the focal point for meetings of all farm organizations, including Women's Institute meetings. Politically, Haldimand County has remained intact as a provincial constituency. The same applies for municipal politics and administration. It is important to note that the constituency organizations of the three major political parties feel that Dunnville should be in the federal riding. This is borne out by the opinions expressed in the following item appearing in the Simcoe Reformer of March 5, 1976. I should like to read a portion of that article. The heading is "Local party spokesmen want to retain Dunnville".

A study released recently by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, Ottawa, recommended that the town of Dunnville be included in a newly created riding of Erie. The commission also suggested that the name of the Norfolk-Haldimand riding be changed to Haldimand-Norfolk to correspond with the regional name.

Bill Knowles, member of parliament for Norfolk-Haldimand, announced his opposition to the exclusion of Dunnville from the riding after consulting with Dunnville officials.

Mr. Knowles said he would request a review of the boundary allocation and recommend that the riding boundaries coincide with regional boundaries.

Ken Green, president of regional Progressive Conservatives, said he agreed with efforts to retain the town of Dunnville in the federal riding.

New Democratic Party spokesman, Norm Walpole, said he felt it made a great deal of sense ot have the regional and electoral boundaries coincide. He said he did not know how the population-figures compared to other ridings, but felt the retention of Dunnville would result in less confusion in the minds of the people.

Don Daley, past president of the H-N federal Liberal association, thinks both the federal and provincial ridings should correspond with regional boundaries.

"The whole idea of regional government was to simplify things," he said. "This (proposal) just complicates matters."

Now we come to the basic principle which guided the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and that is equitable distribution of population. The electoral quotient for Ontario is 81,085. The proposal to place Dunnville in Haldimand-Norfolk meets this criterion. The population of Haldimand-Norfolk is 75,292; and the population of Dunnville, which is 11,500, and we reach the total of 86,792, well below the 25 per cent plus variable which is permitted—101,356. The population of the adjoining Erie district is 79,834. Subtract the population of Dunnville, 11,500, and we are left with a total of 68,334, well above the 25 per cent minus variable permitted—60,814. These figures come from the 1976 report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario. It is therefore obvious that the proposed change does not adversely affect the neighbouring riding of Erie from which Dunnville would be removed. There is no domino effect.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Campbell-Grant. With few exceptions, it has met the approval of most members of this House. The commission has grappled with an exceedingly complex problem and produced an excellent report within their terms of reference.

I am satisfied that such a fair minded group of men will see the reasonableness of the case I have put before the House. The facts speak for themselves. Now, being in possession of all the facts, plus the documented opinions of the citizens of Dunville, I am sure they will accede to the wishes of these very concerned people.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the report which has been tabled by the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario is, I contend, an extraordinarily deficient document. It is even questionable whether it properly constitutes a report as defined by the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. As I had an opportunity to say on another occasion, this document fails to provide reasons for justifying the recommendations made.

Earlier, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) talked about reasons and said it was a matter of opinion, or of definition, as to what constitutes a reason. In fact, the act is quite specific as to what a reason is: it is a reason justifying a recommendation. That takes it out of the realm of uncertainty and makes it very precise and definite. When a recommendation is made by an Electoral Boundaries Commission, it has to be supported and justified by a reason. Its report is incomplete, or may even be improper, if it fails to comply with this quite specific requirement of the act.

I further suggest that this glaring deficiency placed the citizens of Ontario at a serious disadvantage when they went about making their representations before the commission at the public hearings. In answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who suggested that somehow our concern is a selfish one on the part of members of this chamber, I would say "Not at all." We are here speaking for citizens, and the citizens whom we represent were at a disadvantage in expressing their views as to the recommendations of the commission because they had no reasons before them on which they could argue either for or against.

This lack of reasons also hampers members of parliament from Ontario in addressing themselves to the proposals of the commission in this debate. Hence, some of us have argued that this debate ought not really to have taken place at all. The failure of the Ontario commission to comply with the requirements of the statute has produced a reasonable measure of doubt about the validity of the redistribution process that has taken place to date in the province of Ontario. This is a serious situation. It is so serious that something really ought to be done to remove the uncertainty created by the raising of this issue.

I would think there are at least three things that could be done to remove this cloud of doubt that hangs over the validity of the report of the commission for Ontario. The first is that the commission for Ontario ought itself, in order to protect its own integrity, to recall its own report. It ought to do the job that parliament asked it to do.

Mr. Gillies: It did.

Mr. Penner: I did not. It did not supply reasons justifying its recommendations.

Mr. Gillies: It certainly did.

Mr. Penner: It should, therefore, take the report back, supply reasons and hold public hearings again so that the citizens of this province have something to which they may address themselves. Similarly, members of parliament may then deal with the report in terms of its justification, rather than simply a map and the description that accompanies it. A description is not a justification. A reiteration of what the act requires is not a justification. To say it has done certain things is not to provide reasons to justify its actions. This it has failed to do.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said there are five paragraphs under shedule B of the report. So there are, but if you take any one sentence in any of those five paragraphs, you are at a loss to find anything that, by any definition at all, constitutes a reason, much less a reason to justify, which is even stronger, more definite and specific. Secondly, if the commission itself will not recall its own report, perhaps the government ought to consider seeking a reference of this matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is hoped that this committee would recommend appropriate corrective measures which would result in removal of the cloud of doubt which hangs over the validity of the Ontario report.

It would be an interesting and useful exercise for hon. members opposite, who are protesting that everything is according to the act, to go back and look at the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections when they were in the process of examining the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) requiring reasons. At that time, the electoral boundaries commissioner himself said this was a very good idea and that it ought to be done. Members of parliament would then be able to address themselves to the issue in debate in a much more useful and appropriate way, in a way that would assist the commission. They would be on the same wavelength, if I may express it in that way.

The electoral boundaries commissioner then made a suggestion to the committee. He said, in effect, "Why not go a little further, and instead of requiring reasons just in the report that is tabled in parliament, also put the reasons in the newspaper along with the maps that are to be drawn, so that the citizens as well can study those reasons. Then, when they go to the public hearings they will be able to speak on the same wavelength that has brought the commission to the conclusion that it should draw the maps in a certain way?" Members of the committee thought that this was a good idea and the amendment was expanded to take it into account. Here was a recommendation by the commissioner himself, a man who sat on the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario. He encouraged this process, yet when, acting as an adviser, he brought forward the original proposals and then this report, there was no evidence of the reasons which he himself had suggested.

I have already mentioned the first course of action, the unilateral action of the commission, and the second, that the government should seek a reference from the House to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The third course of action would be a private reference to a court of proper jurisdiction for judicial determination. Surely it is important to all of us in this House that the laws of parliament be upheld by the commissions we appoint, to exactly the same degree as we expect compliance with the laws by any private citizen.

I began by saying that this report now being debated is incomplete and improper. I wish now to go a step further and suggest that it is also insensitive. The report is insensitive on at least two counts. First, it is insensitive to what parliament intends with respect to the entire process of redistribution. As the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) pointed out earlier, what parliament intends with respect to an act such as the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and the Canada Elections Act is of the utmost importance. The spirit behind the law is of equal importance to, or even more important than, just the letter of the law as may be the case with most other kinds of legislation where interpretation by the courts is required. I said that the report of the commission of Ontario is insensitive on two counts. In addition to being insensitive to what parliament intends, it is insentive to the overwhelming expression of opinion voiced by the people of northern Ontario.

It is perfectly clear that in everything parliament has done to date regarding the matter of redistribution, it wants the people of Canada to be as well represented as possible. It has taken a number of actions to ensure that this is so. First of all, by increasing the total number of members of the House of Commons, parliament sought to protect certain areas of Canada from losing seats. It has done so by providing floor provisions for certain provinces where the population is growing less rapidly than it is in other regions of Canada. That is an action that I can understand, one I applaud and accept. It is fundamental that this be done by parliament, and parliament has done it.

Secondly, parliament has departed from the strict principle of representation by population by adding a second seat in the Northwest Territories, again a decision that we all welcome. It is something that should be done in view of the vast area that has to be represented, even though there are comparatively few people who inhabit that great area of Canada. Thirdly, to protect representation in the less populated and less developed regions within a province, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act provides for a 25 per cent tolerance below the quotient for any province. Of course, to offset that, it also allows for a 25 per cent tolerance above the quotient in the urban areas where representation takes on another kind of quality to that of the less populated areas of Canada.

Each of these steps taken by parliament declares unequivocally that in order to maintain the nature of Canadian confederation, exceptions must be made to the principle of representation by population. This brings me directly to the situation which the commission seeks to create in northern Ontario.

For the information of hon. members, let me point out that northern Ontario is that region of the province which lies north of the French River and constitutes four-fifths, or 80 per cent, of the land mass of the province of Ontario. That is what we are talking about here. At the present time, the people of northern Ontario are represented in this House by 12 members of parliament. In the parliament which follows this one, the province of Ontario as a whole is to be allocated an additional seven seats. All of these, quite understandably, will go to the more heavily populated southern part of the province. There is no argument about that at all. That area has been growing rapidly in population. Some of the members here represent a much greater number of citizens than others, and there has to be something done to alleviate that serious situation. The seven seats will all go to that more heavily populated area.

Some hon. members of this House expressed as much shock and as much dismay as have the citizens of northern Ontario when they learned that the commission was proposing a reduction of representation in the region of northern Ontario, comprises 80 per cent of the land mass of Ontario, from 12 seats to 11. They did not have to do this. I am led to believe that some members of the commission proposed, in the strongest terms possible, that this not be done. How could they have avoided taking such a serious and drastic step, denying the people of that region of the province of Ontario the representation they deserve? They could have done so by using more fully the 25 per cent tolerance factor which the redistribution act allows them to do. If they had done that, the present level of representation in northern Ontario could have been maintained. They did not even have to go to the full limit of that 25 per cent tolerance. The quotient for Ontario is 81,085 and the minimum permitted, using the full 25 per cent tolerance, would be 60,814. The average population of the 11 ridings now proposed by the commission in this report is 70,413, well above the minimum permitted. If 12 ridings were maintained, the average would be 62,046. You can see, sir, that this is well within the terms of the act.

I submit that it was the intent of parliament that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act be used in this very way. I urge the commission once more to reconsider its decision and to deal justly with northern Ontario. After all, northern Ontario is not asking for anything which it does not deserve; it only asks the commission to be fair.

To underscore my argument, Mr. Speaker, that the commission for Ontario has failed to fully realize the 25 per cent tolerance factor I would point out that in the province of Quebec the commission there proposed to let 51 per cent of the ridings be below quotient. The commission for Ontario has proposed only that 42 per cent be below quotient. I submit that there is quite a difference in approach.

Now, it may well be asked why the commission for Ontario should pay any particular attention to one region within the province rather than just deal with the province as an entity, allowing what may happen to happen. I have already suggested one reason, which is that it should do so because northern Ontario makes up most of the land mass of the province.

In addition, the commission, in its report, makes specific reference to northern Ontario. I wonder why it did that? Why would it feel obliged in any way to even mention northern Ontario? This leads one to suspect that the commissioners may have been somewhat troubled by what they did. The report says, in this reference, that all of the non-urban ridings in northern Ontario are below quotient. That is not even factually correct. I point to the proposed riding of Nickel Belt which is well above the quotient, at 89,392. That is a non-urban riding in northern Ontario. The commission makes special reference to northern Ontario in its report. The commissioners recognize the problem but, I submit, they have failed to respond to it. In this debate, that will go back to the commission for study, I call upon the commissioners, on behalf of the people of northern Ontario, to respond to the problem in a responsible way, in a way in which they should have responded in the first place, and not put us in this situation and through this kind of agony and uncertainty.

Earlier, I referred to the more populous southern part of the province. It is quite astounding to me, as I look at the recommendations, so-called, of the commission to note that in this relatively compact region, the remaining 20 per cent of the province, heavily populated, the commission has proposed that no less than 30 ridings be below quotient. That has to be astounding. In northern Ontario there are ridings above quotient, and that is in 80 per cent of the geography of the province, and in the southern part 30 of the seats are to be below quotient. Some of them are well below quotient, almost to the bottom of the tolerance level. That is an astounding situation.

Why should northern Ontario be given special consideration? I think the answer to that was very well provided by a representation to the commission submitted by the board of directors of the Lakehead social planning council. Let me quote what it said as follows:

> The vast hinterland ridings of northern Ontario deserve special consideration over both the urban and rural ridings to the south. Transportation and communication between communities in the north is far more difficult and indeed, in some cases, non-existent. The availability of social, medical, educational and other governmental services of all kinds falls well below that of the southern areas. Disparity in accessibility to information increases the further away from governmental centres one goes. These conditions create unusual demands on the elected representative who must often in a very direct and personal way act as the official or unofficial representative of such public services and institutions. In addition, there are the special problems of the north, development, resource management and ecology which demand constant and conscientious representation for the sake of all Canadians.
> For these reasons, the Lakehead Social planning council objects to the loss of parliamentary representation in this area. We appeal to you to reconsider the proposed boundaries and population figures and urge you to accede to the 25 per cent tolerance below the electoral quota in order to maintain the present level of representation.

When one seat is taken away, as the commission is proposing for northern Ontario, it means much more for the region than simply the loss of one voice in parliament, although that in itself is a serious deprivation. The member of parliament, however, is more than a solitary person. The office of a member is more like an agency providing assistance to people in a wide variety of ways. The member of parliament, the constituency office, the member's staff in Ottawa, together comprise a team to which citizens can turn for help, advice or information, as the case may be. We are not talking about a solitary person being removed; we are talking about taking away an agency or an action team serving the people of that area. It may be said that perhaps the people in a region such as northern Ontario rely more heavily on their elected representives than do those in the heavily populated centres. Because of the relatively small size of the communities—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. I regret very much having to interrupt the hon. member, but I would remind the House of the special order made last week limiting speeches to 20 minutes. The hon. member may always ask for unanimous consent; then the Chair will see whether it exists.

● (1640)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, having been involved in the political life of this country and of the province of Ontario for longer than I would care to admit, and having been an elected representative at two levels of government for almost 20 years, I must say to you, sir, that I have seen many different forms of redistribution of political boundaries take place. I have seen abuses take place under the old system at the provincial and federal level to the point where obviously reforms had to be made.

The vehicle used by the provincial and federal administrations of this province and country, of course, involves the concept of a so-called independent commission. As I say, I have seen both bad and good redistribution. I have seen bad reports from independent commissions, and good reports. I must say to you, sir, that the current commission in the province of Ontario, to my mind certainly produced one of the worts reports I have ever seen in the form of the initial report that was brought down last year.

I must say that a complete change took place. I do not know whether it was because of representations made in respect of the crummy report of last year, but in any event in respect of southern Ontario the current commission has brought down, generally speaking, a very excellent and very complex report which we are now debating. I think, generally speaking, in southern Ontario attention has been paid to community interests. I think the commissioners have paid attention to traditional boundaries in southern Ontario.

Also, I think they have paid great attention to the mobility of the population which is now taking place right through southern Ontario. They have been saddled with a great burden by this House. I believe they have discharged their responsibility in respect of southern Ontario in a remarkably efficient and good manner in respect of this report. However, one specific area comes to mind. Generally speaking, the commission has chopped off an extremely good Tory area to the northeast of the existing riding of Northumberland-Durham. Instead, it has been put into the new riding which they have called Cobourg-Newcastle. I will have a few words to say about that. They have included in the new riding a Cobourg-Newcastle real fighting ground in respect of the northwestern area of the new riding, the area around the old township of Reach, the town of Port Perry and the area now included in the riding of Ontario.

I would say that from a political point of view, if I had the ambition to run in the new riding of Cobourg-Newcastle, I would probably be here complaining about that as I have noticed the present member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) is complaining in an objection about which I am sure we will be hearing. Generally speaking, however, I think this is a good report. Certainly it is a common sense report. Even from a political point of view, I would have some objection to what they have done to the riding of Northumberland-Durham; but in fairness to the commission I think the addition of the old township of Reach and the old town of Port Perry in the new riding of Cobourg-Newcastle is a common sense approach because that area is now included with the rest of the area municipally which basically is a rural part of central and eastern Ontario.

I think the addition of this area completes the over-all picture of urban representation. Even though the member for Ontario may be sad to see it go, nevertheless, as a taxpayer, resident and citizen of that area I am glad to see it included because I think it adds to the over-all picture.

I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I have two very minor—I stress the word "minor"—objections to the constituency marked No. 8 in the report which they have called Cobourg-Newcastle. I think the commission can do something about one objection. The second objection is one which I am not sure the commission can do anything about. Nevertheless, I want to comment on both minor objections in the House this afternoon. The name of riding No. 8 on the Ontario map is currently Cobourg-Newcastle. I object to that name only because of the number of objections I have received in the mail. Presumably, the commissioners chose that name because the new riding does include the new town of Newcastle and the town of Cobourg. That makes sense. However, there are many other communities in this riding. There is the town of Port Hope, for instance, and Port Perry. There are many rural municipalities in that riding.

It is not strange that I have received many objections from the citizens to the name of the riding. They object to being included in a riding which refers only to two municipalities within the constituency. If I were a member of the commission picking a new name for the riding, I think I would choose the name Durham-Northumberland, simply because the greater proportion of the new county of Northumberland is, and will be, included in the riding to the east which is currently ably represented in this House by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). That riding, I quite agree, should be called Northumberland.

However, I point out to the commissioners that because the new riding also includes a good portion of the new county of Northumberland, "Northumberland" should be included in the new name. It is traditionally an historic name in the area and I believe it should be included in the new name of the riding. I should also point out that the new riding includes a very great portion of the regional municipality of Durham, especially the northern and eastern portion. Therefore, I think a name for the new riding that would represent the geographical area and which would calm the ruffled feathers of many people in the area who do not want necessarily to be tacked onto the town of Cobourg or the town of Newcastle, would be the reverse of the existing constituency name.

I suggest to you, sir, and to the commissioners, if they should read this debate, that the name of the new riding shown in the Ontario map as No. 8 should be Durham-Northumberland. I think that would meet the approval of all the communities and municipalities in the area.

My final point is simply that this is an objection to the existing report and it is one that I am not sure the commission can do anything about. It must be an objection that will recur in many areas of southern Ontario between now and when the writs are issued for a new election, and that is the problem of changing municipal boundaries between now and then.

Let me give an example. The new riding envisaged by this report has as its easterly boundary the existing town limits of the town of Cobourg. That is a good boundary to use because it fits in with the municipal boundary and people in that area know whether they are within the town boundary or outside it. I think it is a sensible approach made by the commission in respect of that eastern boundary. However, there is a move afoot to change many of the municipal boundaries in the existing county of Northumberland. One of the proposals that has been made—and I am sure that before long it will land in the lap of the Ontario municipal board—is a move by the town of Cobourg to expand the town boundaries to the north and to the east.

It is an annexation proposal because the area right now to the east of Cobourg is one that has been built up very rapidly over the last few years and is continuing to expand. Quite rightly, the municipal council of Cobourg wants to expand and take that area in to provide the needed municipal services and balanced assessment that the town needs.

My inquiry to you, sir, and my objection in respect of this matter so far as the commission is concerned is that if the town of Cobourg is going to expand, as I am sure it will, then why cannot we make the boundaries flexible so that if it happens between now and when the writs for the election are announced, the federal riding boundary can move with the municipal boundary? I know this is pretty far fetched, and I know it raises all sorts of problems, but you can see the problem that will occur at the time of the next election, if we have one let us say around 1978, and the riding boundaries go to the existing eastern boundary of Cobourg while in the meantime Cobourg expands to the east. Then you would obviously have people within Cobourg and within the new riding who will reside and vote in the riding to the east.

My proposal is simply this. Where it is obvious there will be a change in boundaries so far as the municipality is concerned which forms part of the constituency or riding boundary, the commission should leave the matter flexible enough so that in a fairly easy way the boundaries can be changed when the municipal boundary changes. As I say, this requires some complicated manoeuvring perhaps, but in any event, as the new boundaries which we are discussing today will not become operable until writs for the new election are issued, presumably anything this parliament does can be changed before the effective date of the issuance of the writs.

I hasten to add that this is not a problem that is so earth-shaking that it will affect too much the electoral pattern in that part of the country, but I point out that in southern Ontario, especially with the great mobility of population that we now have, with the trend taking place of more and more people being resident in the urban or semi-urban area surrounding towns and cities, and with more and more of these annexations taking place whereby a municipality expands and gobbles up huge areas around it, it is a problem which I am sure will recur more and more often. I think there should be some way under our electoral laws of adjusting these matters fairly simply and quickly when the municipalities change their geographic shape.

Other than that, I think the report is a good one. As I said, I have been involved in one way or another in many of these redistributions. I must say that it is almost unbelievable to me that the same commissioners can come up with such a poor report as they did last year and a much better one this year. I do not know why they could not have come up with a good one last year; it would have saved a lot of heartache and effort. However, they must be congratulated for what they have done in southern Ontario.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social Security—Suggested inquiry into public and private pension schemes; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Transport—Request flour and grain rail subsidies be removed only after Seaway tolls increased; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Airports—Runway extension at Vancouver—reason for minister's support of new runway within dyked portion of Sea Island.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may not have been drawn to your attention, but I believe that at the request of the government my question which was posted for tonight has been postponed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

The House resumed consideration of objections to reports of Electoral Boundaries Commissions for various provinces.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) indicated that in his new riding of Cobourg-Newcastle he would be inheriting the area of Scugog, as it is now known, which consists of reach township, Scugog township and Port Perry. I must admit that he is a man of good judgment if he looks forward to inheriting that particular area. However, the people of that area have made very strong representations to me that they would prefer to stay in the area to which they presently belong, namely, Ontario riding.

I have indicated, not only today but previously in the presentations I made at public hearings and to the commissioners, that I should like to ensure that the Scugog area of my present riding remains part of the new riding which is presently called Durham West. I think it is important for that particular area that it remain associated with the new riding of Durham West because of its long-standing historic relationship with the Pickering area and with the old riding of Ontario.

The area of Reach and Scugog has been part of the Ontario riding for as long as I can remember, I think right back from the beginning of the riding. These people have a long-standing association with the area. The community of interest and the natural lines of communication are toward the south and to the west, as opposed to the east and southward. I believe that the commissioners really failed to adequately take into account the general disposition of the people in that area to remain associated more with the Pickering-Uxbridge area as opposed to the Cobourg-Newcastle area with which they have little, if any, association.

The second point I would like to make is in respect of the township of Georgina which is in the north end of the riding of Ontario which has been added, under the proposals now before us, to the riding of Victoria-Haliburton. Georgina township is part of York county. It has a natural association of very long standing with the south and the west, as opposed to the north and the east. I think the commissioners have failed to give adequate consideration to the community of interest and to the natural lines of communication and association of the people of Georgina by adding it to the new, proposed riding of Victoria-Haliburton.

I made representations, along with others, in this connection when a public debate was held before the commissioners, to try to ensure that Georgina was either maintained in the existing riding of Ontario or, at the very worst, added to the south and to the west with the rest of York county.

The municipality, the people and the press in that area are very concerned about being associated with Victoria-Haliburton, where there is no community of interest and where in fact the riding will extend for an area of well over 200 miles. This is unacceptable to those people and I am disappointed that the commissioners did not give adequate consideration to the representations I and others made in connection with the location of Georgina township.

The third point I should like to make representations about is in respect of the name of the riding. At the time of the last election and the one prior to that, Ontario riding, as it is presently called, consisted of the township of Georgina, the municipalities of Uxbridge, Scugog, Pickering, Ajax, part of the town of Whitby, Whitby township, and part of the town of Oshawa, East Whitby township. In terms of keeping within the limits this riding could well remain exactly the same riding after redistribution as it was prior to it, and I strongly recommend that is the ideal course of action to be taken by the commissioners. However, if the commissioners deem that it should not remain toward the high element of the quotient, then Georgina should be put into the York region, not into Victoria-Haliburton, and Scugog township, consisting of the former townships of Scugog, Reach and the town of Port Perry, should be added back to the riding now termed Durham West.

Furthermore, I argue that under this redistribution the name Durham West makes no sense whatsoever. It is a very confusing name because there is a community called Durham now in riding 24 which is the new proposed riding of Grey-Bruce. I understand that the people up there resent the new region of Durham in my own area, being called by that name because of the confusion with their own community. This is further complicated by the fact that there is a provincial riding called Durham West which almost parallels the new, proposed federal riding of Durham West, and having two ridings with precisely the same name, even though in differing jurisdictions, will cause a great deal of confusion for the local electorate.

I therefore recommend that riding No. 14, presently considered to be named Durham West, should be renamed Ontario riding, or at the very least, if the representations of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham bear any fruit about the changing of the name of his riding to Durham-Northumberland, then it would make some sense simply to call the riding Durham. There is no Durham North, no Durham East, no Durham South, and no Durham at all under redistribution, and it seems a bit silly to call the one riding with the name Durham, Durham West. West of what, I do not know. I hope the commissioners will give consideration to making a change in that respect.

The next point I should like to make is with respect to the size of non-urban ridings. I think the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) illustrated the point quite well when he spoke of the importance of ridings in rural areas, particularly large rural areas, having a population toward the low end of the limit in terms of redistribution because when the geographical area is very large it is difficult for a member of parliament to provide service. People in rural areas expect better representation, or at least more direct representation, than smaller, more confined urban areas. I think the commissioners did not adequately take this factor into account in their deliberations. They should try to keep large areas down to the low end of the quotient, and urban areas should tend more to the higher end in terms of population distribution.

I agree with the hon. member for Thunder Bay that on the surface it does not make very much sense that the northern end of the province, which has large ridings, should end up losing one seat when the whole province has gained, I believe, eight or nine seats. In my opinion, that does not make any sense, and I think the point the hon. member made was well made although I have no direct interest in it. It is a point upon which I made representations before the commissioners in the public hearings to show them that the concern for the rural areas of northern Ontario and others is shared by many hon. members, even those from more urban areas in southern Ontario. I certainly hope the commissioners will give consideration to the need for some adjustment in that regard.

The last point I wish to make—and I will not belabour it—is in connection with the question of uncertainty in this act. I will be very brief indeed. Today I tried to express, in the clearest terms I knew, the central point that redistribution, in light of the allegation that the essence of the act was not complied with by the commissioners, may cause some uncertainty and possibly mean that the whole process will be set aside by the courts at some subsequent date. Some may believe that this is not a possibility. I cannot really conclude that. I personally think it is a very real possibility and I strongly suspect that the question will end up before the courts.

I simply want to express this concern to the commissioners. Although, I regret very much that they did not take time to give the reasons underlying their recommendations. I am not being critical of the commissioners per se, prior to the recommendations we see before us now, I made representations, as did almost all municipalities which I represent, and they bore a great deal of fruit. The new map we see before us reflects many of those concerns although not all of them.

Therefore, I think the commissioners have been very responsible. They have worked very hard on this job, and I think it is important that they bear in mind the difficulty we as parliamentarians and as citizens of this country may face if this whole process is set aside by the courts. I suggested that it would be advisable to get this matter before the courts as soon as possible by way of a recommendation of a committee of the House, namely, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

It appears that this course will not be followed, at least on the basis of my question of privilege. But, hopefully, there may be some other mechanism by which a reference to the courts can be accomplished. It is unacceptable to me, and I believe to all members of this parliament who think about it carefully, and to all Canadians, to allow a redistribution of this magnitude, which provides the basis of parliament itself, to go forward without knowing that it has a solid base in law and is not subject to being set aside. I hope we can get rid of that uncertainty at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the objection which I filed set forth the areas which I respectfully suggest should be part of the proposed riding of Broadview-Greenwood. I also set forth recommendations for a revision. Therefore, I will follow the proposals and recommendations contained in the objection. In paragraph 2 I stated that the revision contained in the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for Ontario, 1973, gave a better and more accurate consideration of the geographical, historical, cultural and municipal aspects which constitute the riding. In other words, the boundaries were contained within the municipal boundaries of the city of Toronto with special attention to the northern boundary which existed from Broadview over to Woodbine Avenue, and they took into account the historical, social and community of interest aspects. That is why I did not object to the 1973 report. In fairness, the boundaries reminded me of a jig-saw puzzle. In 1976 an attempt was made to simplify the jig-saw. I said in paragraph (1) of my objection that in revising the boundaries of Broadview the commission did not give due consideration to the geographical, historical, cultural and municipal aspects which constitute the riding.

I hope my remarks will be considered as constructive criticism. I appreciate the difficulties the commission has encountered in attempting to determine boundary ridings in Ontario. It is difficult to keep in mind at all times community of interest, municipal boundaries and population. I made three specific proposals. I say in paragraph (3) of my objection:

> That part of the proposed Rosedale riding south of Queen Street and extending from Broadview Avenue east to Leslie Street forms an integral and composite part of the Broadview riding area immediately to the north of the above described area and extending from Queen Street to Gerrard Street and from Broadview to Greenwood Avenue. These combined geographical areas constitute a community of interests in geographical, cultural, social, religious and shopping interests.

Clearly, the area south of Queen Street, extending from Broadview Avenue over to Leslie Street, forms an integral and composite part of the area to the north, up to Gerrard Avenue and extending from Broadview over to Greenwood Avenue. The people of the area shop at a common shopping area within the confines of Queen Street, Gerrard, Broadview and Greenwood. They all use the same social and community centres; they all enjoy a similar community of interest; they all have access to the Jimmy Simpson, Woodgreen and Pape recreational centres. There are five or six churches in the area, Woodgreen United, St. Stephen's, Queen Street Presbyterian, St. Joseph's, St. Anne's and St. Clement's. The children of the area attend the same schools. That is why one can say that the people of the area enjoy a community of interest in their shopping, social lives and churchgoing.

The Don River provides the line dividing the people of Broadview from people to the west. People living to the west of Broadview and Queen tend to form part of the Rosedale riding. That is why I object to the part south of Queen, from Broadview to Leslie, being included in Rosedale. Historically and traditionally, the people of Rosedale have had no community of interest with the people encompassed in the area bounded by Broadview and Leslie south of Queen. Therefore, the people of the area should have available the type of representation available to those who live immediately north of Queen Street.

The commissioners may argue that the part south of Queen Street forms part of the provincial riding of St. David's. In arguing this way, the commission is thinking of the area between Broadview and Logan Avenue. Well, I have heard many people objecting to that idea. They do not feel part of the provincial riding. It has been my experience that people living south of Queen, between Broadview east, over as far as Leslie, come to me with constituency problems. They do not feel they belong to the provincial riding of St. David's or to the federal riding of Rosedale. I say in paragraph (4) of my objection:

> That a revision could be accomplished by making the proposed area of Rosedale described in paragraph (3) part of the riding of Broadview-Greenwood and by substituting the area commencing on the north side of Broadview and Mortimer Avenues and extending easterly on the north side of Mortimer Avenue to Pape Avenue and northerly on the west side of Pape Avenue to Millwood Road in the municipality of East York as part of the proposed riding of Rosedale.

This recommendation is almost the same as the commission's recommendation in their 1973 report and constitutes a geographical, cultural, municipal and community of interest area of the northeast part of the proposed riding of Rosedale. You can see what I have done. I have gone from the Don River to Pottery Road, gone up Pottery Road and used the Mortimer-Broadview site as the starting point for the revision. All the people of the proposed area enjoy a community of interest with the people in the Millwood-Southvale area. They shop at common shopping centres, frequent the same community centres, and so on. My next proposal concerns the Beaches area. I said in paragraph (5):

> That part of the proposed riding of Beaches commencing at Jones Avenue and Queen Street and running north on the east side of Jones Avenue to Gerrard Street and extending east on the south side of Gerrard Street to Greenwood and extending south on the west side of Greenwood to Queen Street constitutes an integral and community of interest area within the general area extending from Greenwood and Gerrard Street on the east, to Broadview Avenue and Gerrard Street on the west and south from Gerrard Street to Lakeshore Boulevard East.

The area mentioned constitutes the south end of the riding. In other words, the people living in the area bounded by Gerrard Street on the north, Lake Shore Boulevard on the south, Broadview Avenue on the west and Greenwood Avenue on the east enjoy a community of interest, attend the same churches, schools, social centres and shopping areas. I said in paragraph (6):

That a revision could be accomplished by making part of the proposed riding of Beaches described in paragraph (5) part of the riding of Broadview-Greenwood by substituting the area commencing at the south side of Mortimer and Greenwood Avenues and extending easterly on the south side of Mortimer Avenue to Woodbine Avenue to form part of the proposed riding of Beaches.

Mr. Otto, the former member, argued similarly in 1967 when seeking a revision of electoral boundaries. He knew that the area north of Danforth Avenue, especially north of Mortimer, should for the most part be considered as belonging to the township of East York. Therefore, the people of the area had a community of interest. I suggest that we should use a common northern boundary of Mortimer Avenue for the proposed ridings of Broadview-Greenwood and Beaches. It gets away from the awkward jig-saw that was attempting to be made in the 1973 report with regard to following the city limit line right from Broadview on the west to Woodbine on the east. The third suggestion is contained in paragraph (7). It reads:

● (1720)

That part of the proposed riding of Broadview-Greenwood north of the limits of the city of Toronto and extending to the Don River on the north and also extending to Greenwood on the east and Broadview on the west does not give due consideration to the municipal, geographical, historical, cultural and community of interests aspects of the area.

I have made the following suggestion in paragraph (8) by way of a revision:

In addition to the revision recommended in paragraph (4) above a further revision could be accomplished by making part of the proposed area of Broadview-Greenwood described in paragraph (7) commencing on the north side of Pape and Mortimer Avenues and extending easterly on the north side of Mortimer Avenue to Greenwood Avenue and thence northerly on the west side of Greenwood Avenue to Donlands and Pape Avenues and thence southerly on the east side of Pape Avenue to Mortimer Avenue to be part of the proposed riding of York East.

This recommendation is almost the same as the commission's recommendation in their 1973 report and constitutes a municipal, cultural, and community of interests area with part of the proposed riding of York East.

I sum up my proposals in paragraph (9) by saying:

That the three recommendations contained herein constitute a better geographical, municipal, cultural and community of interest integration of the general area, minimize the movement of people from the former ridings to the newly-proposed ridings and correspond to the electoral quota for the province of Ontario.

In other words, for the proposed riding of Broadview-Greenwood there would be a northern boundary from Broadview to Greenwood, a southern boundary of Lakeshore, an eastern boundary of Greenwood Avenue and Leslie Street and a western boundary of Broadview Avenue. With regard to the proposed Beaches riding, there would be a northern boundary of Mortimer Avenue, a southern boundary of Lakeshore, an eastern boundary of the city limits, and a western boundary of Greenwood. That would form a better riding geographically, historically and from the standpoint of community of interest.

What I have done is take into account the population quotient with regard to the three suggestions I have made. The proposed riding of Broadview-Greenwood now has a population of 89,900. With the Rosedale change, there would be a loss of 8,800 and a gain of 6,775, giving a net loss of 2,025. With regard to Beaches, there would be a gain of 5,650. With regard to York East, there would be a loss of 6,670. Therefore, the new total for the proposed Broadview-Greenwood riding would be approximately 87,000. However, there has to be added to that three new apartments which have been built since the census was taken in 1971. They are on the west side of Broadview just south of Mortimer Avenue. There is also a new apartment in the Cambridge area just east of Broadview and Danforth Avenue. Those four apartments would constitute at least 2,000 people, making a grand total for Broadview-Greenwood of 89,000.

With regard to the proposed riding of Beaches, there would be going to Beaches from East York 7,300, and going from Beaches to Broadview, 5,650, giving a net gain of 1,650 and a new total for the proposed Beaches riding of 92,300. With regard to Rosedale, there would be a gain of 8,800 and a loss of 6,775, giving a net gain of 2,025 and a new total for Rosedale of 89,800. Finally, with regard to East York there would be a gain of 6,770 and a loss of 7,300, giving a net loss of 530 and a new total for York East of 90,250.

If these suggestions were accepted it would help the proposed riding of Broadview-Greenwood. It would give parallel lines to the riding. It would help the riding of Beaches with regard to the community of interest aspect and give parallel lines to the riding. It would give a common boundary to the north of Mortimer Avenue for both the proposed Beaches and proposed Broadview-Greenwood ridings. It would give Rosedale the community of interest and the lines proposed in the 1973 report, with a slight modification. Those are the main aspects with regard to the proposals. With regard to the name, in paragraph (10) I state:

That the proposed riding name of Broadview-Greenwood be named Broadview to more accurately describe the constituency and to avoid confusion.

The area from Broadview on the west to Greenwood on the east is generally known as the Broadview area. It would create confusion by adding the word Greenwood because the present Greenwood riding is being replaced by the proposed riding of Beaches. The only part of Greenwood that is in the proposed new riding of Broadview-Greenwood is the west side of Greenwood. It really is not enough to suggest the change. Greenwood has a history of starting at Greenwood Avenue and going east. Usually it went over as far Victoria Park or to the city limits. The people of the present riding of Broadview and the present riding of Greenwood know these names. We would be adding confusion by merging the name Greenwood with Broadview in the new, proposed riding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him by the special order made on Friday has expired.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make a lengthy intervention at this point. I was a member of this House in 1964 when the legislation establishing the independent commissions to reapportion was created. I think it is something of a reflection on parliament that today, in 1976, we are debating redistribution based upon the results of the census of 1971, nearly five years ago. Indeed, another census will take place in June of this year. It will again be some time before the results of that census can be reflected.

I can only say I hope the commission will do its job and not make any substantial changes from this point on. There is no question that boundaries, wherever drawn, will always create problems. There is some difference of opinion between myself, as the member for Ottawa West, and my colleague who represents the adjacent riding of Ottawa Centre. I believe my colleague has added his name to those who are making objection to redistribution. Unfortunately, he is not able to attend this afternoon.

Briefly, the objection concerned my easterly boundary and his westerly boundary. The proposal placed before the House not long ago by the commission would have created an easterly boundary for Ottawa West following Fisher Avenue, Carling, along Holland Avenue to the Queensway, and easterly along the Queensway a distance of one mile to the point of intersection with the Canadian Pacific Railway track. That, to my mind, was a good boundary. It reflected the social and cultural characteristics of the community. In the latest proposal, the commission has seen fit to make a modest change. They have extended the boundary along Holland Avenue northerly to Wellington Street and then easterly along Wellington Street to the point of intersection with the CP railway track. This change splits a well-known and historic parish in two—the Parish of St. Francis. It is situated on the south side of Wellington Street and covers a fairly substantial area.

It is my opinion there is no further logical boundary to be considered other than that contained in the most recent proposal. When we cross Wellington Street, the language changes; the district becomes generally French-speaking. The parish of Notre Dame des Anges, north of Scott Street, is more recent than the parish of St. Francis and serves a large part of that community. On balance, it is my hope that the commission will not make any further changes in this boundary. I do not believe they could come up with more logical or more consistent proposals.

There is a point at which we must face the fact that redistribution does not represent one of the more glorious efforts of parliament. It is, in a way, an embarrassment to all of us who are concerned. The act of redistribution has contributed the word gerrymandering to our vocabulary. It was not very long ago that boundaries assumed the outlines, as it were, of strange or fictitious animals. I hope the commission will get on with its job. Although the boundaries are not the ones I would have chosen, I, personally, find that on balance they make as much sense and are as logical and I hope they will not be changed further by the commission.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Blais: No, Mr. Speaker. I was wishing to take part in the debate and I was under the impression I was next on your list.

[Mr. Francis.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): My position is a difficult one when there is so much enthusiasm around. The Chair is doing its best to co-operate with the whips of the various parties. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

Mr. John Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the enthusiasm with which members participate in this debate is understandable. I wish to speak briefly about some of the problems we have in northern Ontario in connection with the decision of the commission to reduce the number of seats there from 12 to 11.

We thought in 1965, when the former commission came out with its recommendation to increase the number of seats from 11 to 12, that northwestern and northeastern Ontario had been recognized for the growing and developing areas they are. I might point out that considerable distortions were created as a result of the addition of that seat in the traditional pattern of representation which had existed until that time. I must admit there was some grumbling about this distortion. Nonetheless, it was accepted, and as things turned out the new seat proved to be a tremendous addition, giving representation to areas which had not been as well represented in the past because they had been tied in with people living in city ridings, and those living in the rural areas felt their interests had taken second place. So we were shocked to find that northern Ontario would lose one seat in the new redistribution proposals.

Consequently, the Liberal members from northern Ontario came together to work out a map, and that map was presented by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) to the commissioners when they held their meeting in Thunder Bay. To demonstrate that it was possible to do things in another way, the northern Ontario members drew up a second map. This time we showed it to members of other parties who came from northwestern Ontario and obtained their agreement that it did provide a way of getting a twelfth seat for northern Ontario, although they did not commit themselves to the particular boundaries which were drawn on that map. It was my pleasure to present that map to the commissioners at the meeting in Sudbury. I might say I also attended the meeting held at Thunder Bay and had spoken there, too, on the need for 12 seats in northern Ontario. So we showed the commission two ways in which it could accomplish our goal of keeping northern Ontario's representation at 12 seats.

We thought this was not unreasonable, because as a result of the changes which had taken place in the number of seats in parliament there would be an increase of seven seats in Ontario and it was not an unreasonable thought that this would provide sufficient flexibility to enable the commission to allocate the extra seat to us or continue the 12 seats. In addition, the House of Commons had passed a private member's bill which gave primacy to the need for keeping rural seats up to date by removing the necessity for the commission to take cognizance of growth patterns in the suburban areas of cities.

We thought the combination of those two factors would provide the opportunity for the 12 seats to be retained. We recognize that if there is to be a twelfth seat, there must be distortion, there must be changes in the normal pattern of redistribution. Nonetheless, the geographical dimensions of the region, some 60 per cent of the land mass, indicates to me that there has to be a more reasonable division of the seats allocated. At present, two seats represent almost all that 60 per cent. Those seats are the constituency of Cochrane and the constiuency of Kenora-Rainy River. With such a vast area to be covered, there really ought to have been a third seat encompassing a substantial rural area.

At present, the two members concerned face an almost impossible task travelling around and trying to provide adequate representation for electors who live in all of northeastern and northwestern Ontario covered by those two seats. The latest proposals of the commission will mean a substantial dilution of the representation the electors affected had come to expect as a result of the decision of the previous commission to go from 11 seats to 12 seats.

Again I want to emphasise the desire on the part of all the members from northern Ontario, as well as those people who appeared at the commission's hearings, to accept the distortions which must occur if there are to be twelve seats in northern Ontario. We acknowledge the problem facing the commission. We understand the difficulty they face in carving out twelve seats when the population figure is barely above the number required to make 12 seats according to the act. Nevertheless, we urge the commission to take into account the arguments which have been put forward by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and the arguments I have put forward on this occasion.

I want also to touch on another aspect that was raised by the hon. members for Thunder Bay and Ontario. I refer to the question of giving reasons for the decisions arrived at. I think it is clear that nobody expected there to be detailed reasons for the drawing of every line in every constituency. What we did expect and what was anticipated was that where a major change was taking place, where there was significant alteration in the previous pattern of representation, the commission would have recognized what was being done and provided the rationale that would permit adequate debate to take place among those of the population who chose to appear before the commission at the public hearings. It was that intention that led the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to present his motion, and I think it was that intention that led the House of Commons to accept it and pass it into law.

In the case of northern Ontario, where a substantial alteration is taking place in the representation available to those who live in that region, no reasons at all were given. It seems to me that the intent of the amendment passed by the House was violated because the commission did not choose to take it into account in giving reasons why it found it necessary to make the change. Who knows, perhaps had the commission put down its reasons and outlined the thoughts and desires they had in reducing the number of seats in northern Ontario from 12 to 11, it would not have been possible for us to argue against its reasons and excuses. As it turns out, because no reason was given, when we made our presentation to the commission in Thunder Bay and Sudbury we did not know what kind of case we had to make. It was for that reason that the House provided the legislation to ensure that there be proper debate. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, it may be that the reasons were so compelling and the commission's conclusions were so logical that we would have had no arguments to present against them in any case. In point of fact, since we had no reasons we have had great difficulty in formulating arguments to influence the commission in the way we wish.

In closing my brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to make the argument that the pattern in previous commissions has been to provide us with the extra seat. This commission has reversed that decision and not given us reasons. Those of us who represent northwestern and northeastern Ontario, and those among the population who appeared before the commissions in Sudbury and Thunder Bay, all expressed a willingness to accept the inevitable distortions that must take place to keep the 12 seats. We respectfully appeal to the commission to re-examine the situation, to reverse the decision they made and to provide 12 seats in northwestern Ontario.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of trepidation that I join in this particular debate, in view of the fact that I have my neighbour to the south chastising me for coming into this debate late. I will await with anticipation his golden remarks when he speaks in this debate, though how anyone with such a charming riding is interested in placing objections, I cannot imagine.

With reference to the riding of Nipissing, very early on I showed interest in the question of redistribution. Your Honour may recall that in January, 1973, which was my first session, we had been dealing with redistribution and I spoke in the debate at that time, primarily because, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), there was an attempt to reduce the number of seats in northern Ontario from 12 to 10.

At that time I felt the commissioners were being as fair as they could, being stuck with instruments that were not adequate to do the job. I had hoped that having redistribution frozen, as it was, a new redistribution could be brought in that would do justice to northern Ontario. I felt that northern Ontario, more than any other part of Canada, exemplified the problem posed by redistribution, namely, that as a rural area it suffered from a reduction in its representative efficiency as a result of redistribution.

At a later time I proposed a private member's bill whereby commissioners would be permitted to deviate downward from the provincial norm of 25 per cent to 35 per cent. It was my hope that with that amendment to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act there would be the possibility that the commissioners would provide 12 seats in northern Ontario, notwithstanding the lesser proportionate increase in population in the area south of Lake Nipissing and the French River.

If I recall correctly, I was discouraged from proceeding with that bill by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, because it was believed that if there were a general increase in the total number of seats in the House of Commons, we in northern Ontario would be in the position where there would be no reduction in seats. So, effectively, the aberration that took place as a result of the first report, namely, the 11 seats eventually granted by the commissioners, would in effect not need to take place.

It was, therefore, with a great deal of anticipation that I awaited the new commissioners' report after the amendments to the constitution which increased the total number of seats in the House. Thus, you can imagine my consternation and dismay when the commissioners again reduced the number of seats from 12 to 11, although the total number of seats in Ontario was increased from 88 to 95. In effect, southern Ontario was given another eight seats; northern Ontario, covering 80 per cent of the total land mass in Ontario, had its seats reduced in number from 12 to 11.

I was not alone in my disappointment, Mr. Speaker. Not only did the commission reduce the number of seats, but they did not provide for protection of community of interest. We were caught in the position where the commission, prior to the public hearing was saying, "We can only provide you, in northern Ontario, with 11 seats, not 12". We replied that the commission had to keep the 12 seats in northern Ontario, so they said to us, "What would you rather have, the community of interest protected so that the people who are represented by one MP are attached to their representation in terms of logistics, communications, community of interest, social development, and so on; or do you want 12 seats?" We said that we wanted both, Mr. Speaker, and they gave us neither. They did not give us community of interest nor the 12 seats, and we are caught between hell and high water.

It is very unfortunate that this happened because I think northern Ontario has not changed in its make-up. It is still a typical example of how the power of parliament and the power of representation is evolving toward urban areas, where urbanization is taking its toll of members of the House. Because northern Ontario has a huge land mass but a relatively small population increase, it is being relegated to the position of second importance. There is no doubt in my mind that the representations which were made to the commissioners ought to have been listened to by them. When the initial report tabled in August, 1975, came out, I insisted that my communities have an input in order to make known their representations.

When the commissioners came out with their report, they cut off the whole northwestern portion of my riding. Coming from highly-developed areas in eastern Canada where populations are present in every segment of the province, you are not aware of the size of northern Ontario or how disjointed the populations can be. There is a section of my riding, namely, River Valley-Field, the townships of Springer and Caldwell, which are traditionally part of my riding but are now being put in with the district of Timiskaming which stretches between Moosonee, that northwest passage so sought by Champlain in 1615, and Highway 17, some 900 miles to the south. I am looking at the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), and I know the only way he is going to service that riding is by paddling a canoe up the Oricana River, down to Lake Timiskaming and down the Ottawa system. He is taking over a portion of my riding in the northeast, as well, that can only be serviced via Lake Timiskaming and the Ottawa River, or Highway 63 which goes through my riding.

An abortion of that nature is not deserved by the citizens or the electors of the district. I know the hon. member for Timiskaming is a very able representative, and I am not speaking of that at all. I am saying that this does not stand any scrutiny, having people within 40 miles north of the centre of my riding served by someone who is centred some 60 miles by water and a 120 miles by road. Nor does it stand to reason to have someone in River Valley, which is serviced by Highway 539, served by someone who is 120 miles away over really rough roads. If you have seen the neglect of the Ontario government vis-à-vis highways in northern Ontario, you have seen nothing until you travel between Highway 11 up River Valley to Glenafton and in that area. Not only did the commission cut off that particular area but it cut in half two townships in my riding. The southern halves are left with me and the northern halves are going up to Timiskaming.

I received a letter from the Corporation of Field Township which I should like to put on the record.

[Translation]

It is in fact a letter which describes specific problems faced by people who now belong to an area with which they have no link, no historical relationship whatsoever. I was sent this letter dated March 23, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

Dear Mr. Blais:

The municipal council of the township of Field has learned with bitterness and great consternation the decision made by the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission. We are strongly opposed to this decision to divide the western part of the Nipissing constituency. We expressed our views on this matter in a brief submitted to the commission last fall.

We are still insisting on cultural, economic and community relationships that link together the five municipalities of West Nipissing. The new proposed division would have disastrous effects on our region. The citizens' reactions to this decision are in support of our request for reconsideration of this adverse decision and we hope to come back to a status quo, in the best interests of the community of West Nipissing.

Sincerely yours,

Roger Lafond,
for Dr. N. Patenaude, Municipal Prefect.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the fear felt by these people not to be incorporated in the are that can best serve them. No matter how able their member of parliament, these people are concerned by regional and geographical unity.

I also received a letter from the Association of West Nipissing Municipalities. This association groups all the small towns of the western part of my riding. They have acted together and succeeded in making changes that are quite remarkable by taking their decisions together.

I will therefore read two paragraphs of their letter dated March 15:

[English]

We have now received a final report of the commission, dated February 27, 1976, and to our surprise and bewilderment, the West Nipissing electoral district has been guillotined, half of West Nipissing will be taken over by the district of Temiskaming.

The members of our association are very displeased with this decision, and the implications are far reaching. In fact this proposed division not only divides the few municipalities in two distinct districts, but certain townships are divided in half. We are at odds to find any logic in this decision.

Because of common problems, we had banded together in order to solve our problems, and by working together, we have been having excellent results. But with this proposed new division, our efforts will be nullified.

In all humility, I left a small portion of that paragraph out as it was complimentary to me. I am sure the House will understand. When I look at those particular pieces of correspondence it becomes evident why the section relating to community of interest was placed in the statute, but unfortunately it was not abided by.

Let me reiterate my second point. All rural members for ridings in northern Ontario as well as in northern Canada are faced with a dire and crucial problem, namely, the erosion of our power within this House because our numbers are disproportionate vis-à-vis members representing urban ridings, so much so that urban members now accept their right to control the destiny not only of their urban or high-growth centres but of the whole of the nation.

I was amazed last week, on March 29, when the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) participated in a debate regarding constitutional reform. Let me quote what he said as recorded in Hansard for that date at page 12238:

The rate of urbanization is nothing short of a phenomenon. Before the end of this century, 94 per cent of Canadians will be urbanized and three-quarters will live in 12 major cities. Urbanization is caused by an interlocking set of developments spawned by exploding technology. Government efforts must be directed toward managing the process of urbanization. The special problems of urbanization—public assistance, transportation, environmental management, leisure, recreation and housing—interact on one another and demand more money which municipalities have no way of raising, thus exacerbating their dependence on provincial and federal government grants.

The quality of life in urban centres is diminishing, despite local efforts; the institutional framework of government was established long before the social impact of urbanization was ever dreamed of.

That was said during a constitutional debate. In what direction was that hon. member moving? He was seeking an amendment to the constitution which would give more power to the municipalities. What else would he be after, and who is there to resist that sort of pressure? After all, rural members are being eliminated as a result of this decennial redistribution, which to my mind is silly and premature.

We are rapidly approaching the time of the Conference on Human Settlements in Vancouver. I am looking at the notes for a speech to the Montreal Rotary Club by a Mr. Jim MacNeill, commissioner general, Canadian Habitat secretariat. What does he tell the Rotary Club? Does he say that Habitat has to look at various problems, including that of urbanization? No, he says that "we in Canada must confront our own exploding urbanization". He is saying we have to look at how we will deal with those problems. He continues:

Few Canadians realize it, but we—in common with other developed countries—will have to build as many new communities in the next three decades as we have in our entire history.

He recognizes urban explosion as an irreversible fact. He says that in respect of the human settlement at this conference we ought not to look at how we should reverse the trend toward urbanization. He says it is a known fact which must be accepted. He goes on:

This is unprecedented—in terms of scale and rate of growth. We, fortunately, have the skills to turn this into a great opportunity, providing we learn from the experience of other nations.

Habitat gives us that chance. At Habitat we can begin a process of exchange with other countries about managing urban growth, about transit systems, about housing designs, about all kinds of things. We must seize that chance.

What will the commissioners of Habitat for Canada talk about in Vancouver? According to the commissioner, they will talk about urban problems, not human settlements in rural Ontario, rural Quebec, rural Alberta, or northern development which is essential to this particular nation and its continued development. They will talk about urban explosion and urban development as though that were the primary concern of Canada. That sort of misconception about Canadian growth is directly attributable to the decrease in the importance of rural representation in this House and the increasing representation from southern portions of Canada and the urban centres of Alberta, and so on.

When I see this, I have a great deal of trepidation. I said that at the beginning of my speech. We are not dealing with figures and how to elect members; we are dealing with development because, surely, if we believe in democracy we also believe in the fundamental strength of representation from all areas of Canada. That strength is being dissipated when we see that by the turn of the century 94 per cent of Canadians will live in 12 urban areas. Unless we change the instruments available to the commissioners, 94 per cent of the representation in this House will be urban. Those areas which have made the wealth of this nation, through raw materials and the processing of those materials and through agricultural products which are the products of rural Canada, will be given second place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does he have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Due to the fact that the House is sitting during the dinner hour, I might mention that I propose to call the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), in that order.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in making my comments this evening I perhaps will not have as much in the way of volume as my predecessor in speaking in this debate, but perhaps I can stick to the topic rather than to philosophy. I should like to draw to the attention of members of this House and, hopefully, the commissioners, the constituency marked No. 40 on the map called Lanark-Carleton. As the representative in that area, and as a person who spoke in making representations before the commission at one stage on behalf of certain municipalities in that area, I should like to urge the commissioners to consider the name Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton rather than Lanark-Carleton.

The reason is that there has been some community of interest between Lanark and Renfrew for many years and a community of interest between Carleton and Renfrew. In fact, Lanark, Renfrew and Carleton represent three historic counties in that area which came from the district of Bathurst. Within the boundary of the constituency marked 40 on the map there will be three townships, two towns and three villages of some size within that portion which is part of Renfrew county which will be included in constituency No. 40.

I ask the commission to consider the name Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton rather than Lanark-Carleton because I believe the poeple in that portion of Renfrew county are interested in being recognized. I know that subsequently the members may have private members' bills passed to change the names of constituencies with relative ease, but I think it would be better to try to finalize the names now in order to avoid the excess of printing involved in the changing of names on maps, and so on, at a later stage. In dealing with the riding marked 40, I have no further comments to make.

I have spoken to a number of people, especially those in eastern Ontario who, relatively speaking, are quite pleased with the redistribution. I know it is very difficult for a boundaries commission to give effect to redistribution within the guidelines, within the bounds of community of interest and within the parameters of population in respect of the divisions. It is interesting to note that in most areas throughout Ontario the commissioners have tried to respond to the criticisms and comments made at the commission hearings.

Having been chairman of the Conservative caucus for the province of Ontario, and having had to keep on eye on many of the areas in which people were interested, it would seem to me that the commission has given effect to the various concerns expressed by the municipalities and by the sitting member from whatever party, as much as it was possible to do so within the concept of community of interest within the population. Nothing is perfect in this world. There are a number of small technical errors. Some people would like to bring up some points.

I should like to mention the position I take in giving an over view on the province of Ontario. One thing that concerns me happens to deal with the constituency of Sault Ste. Marie. It has been drawn to my attention that there is a division of people within Sault Ste. Marie noted as No. 70 on the map, known as the constituency of Algoma. I have here a letter which I should like to read into the record. It is from the provincial member for Sault Ste. Marie who directs his attention to the fact that part of the city would be split in a set-off against the large rural riding of Algoma. Ward 1 on the map now before us of Sault Ste. Marie, which would be called Algoma ward 1, is the area of Sault Ste. Marie which has the highest density and greatest number of residential streets. This is the area in which 10,000 or 11,000 of the people of Sault Ste. Marie live. The letter reads:

Dear Mr. Dick:

As a member of parliament from Ontario, you no doubt are concerned about any matters that would have an adverse effect on the province and it is with this in mind that I bring the following to your attention.

[Mr. Dick.]

It is my understanding that the Electoral Boundaries Commission has recommended part of the City of Sault Ste. Marie be removed from the federal riding as it is now constituted and transferred to Algoma riding.

This in effect would remove 11,000 city residents from Sault Ste. Marie's federal election rolls, an action which I feel would be highly regrettable due to the urban nature of the riding.

I would point out that consideration was given to a similar proposal prior to the recent redistribution of provincial ridings but it was decided that it would be a serious error to tamper with the close urban ties this portion of the riding has with the rest of Sault Ste. Marie.

● (1810)

Even though this is a federal matter, I have received numerous complaints from people within this portion of the riding and this has prompted me to solicit your support when the matter comes up for debate in the House.

Your assistance in this matter would be greatly appreciated.

Yours sincerely,

John R. Rhodes

He is the MPP for the area. To give more effect to this, I would like to read into the record a copy of the resolution passed by the council of the corporation of the city of Sault Ste. Marie on March 22, 1976. It was moved by Alderman F. Manzo, seconded by Alderman R. Collins. It reads:

Whereas a report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission tabled in the House of Commons on Friday, February 27, 1976, would split and decrease the Sault riding by 11,000 voters; Therefore be it resolved that city council go on record as being opposed on the grounds that they are basically different ridings by nature, Algoma being rural and the Sault being predominantly industrial and that this resolution be forwarded to the relevant federal ministry as well as to Cyril Symes, MP, Dr. Maurice Foster, MP, John R. Rhodes, MPP, and Bud Wildman, MPP; and, further, that this city council go on record as opposing the elimination of the complete Cochrane riding.

I received a copy of this resolution and I read it for the record. I took it upon myself to talk to a number of people in Sault Ste. Marie about this problem because I wanted to make sure it came before the House. It appears that ward 1 is the area south of the Canadian Pacific railway, east of Churchill Boulevard and west of the city limits where it goes into the Garland River Indian reserve, with a small sliver being north of CP railway, the area goes right down to the Canada-U.S. border.

This is the area about which they were worried, and indeed it was suggested to me that this area is the heart and core of the major bedroom area of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, and if any decision had to be made that a portion of the city should not be included because of the population, that part of the city which would be west of Gooleigh Avenue would perhaps be excluded. I was informed that that is the area which has recently been annexed by the city. A large part of the area is still rural, many of the houses are scattered along the roads and are not tightly held together. It does not have the same community of interest as there is in ward 1, with the present redistribution going to the Algoma riding rather than staying with Sault Ste. Marie. So I want to emphasize that there was some concern. I will read a portion of another letter from a Mr. De Fazio of Sault Ste. Marie which states in part:

I am quite concerned that they are cutting off about one third of our city and putting it in the riding of Algoma East, which is predominantly a rural riding—This is very important to the future of Sault Ste. Marie riding.

Then he expresses a hope that this will not happen. There are another couple of points which I wanted to make briefly. One is that there seems to be a great deal of concern about the fact that there is not enough population in northern Ontario and they are losing one seat in the area. Unfortunately, I cannot comment on the whole of northern Ontario. We in this party have not had representation in northern Ontario since 1935 and perhaps I am not in a position to speak of it knowingly, but I do know Renfrew county, and to some degree Nipissing and some of the more urban areas in northern Ontario. One way in which the population was decreased was that certain townships, three to be exact, named Mattawan, Papineau and Cameron, were taken from the district of Nipissing and added to Renfrew county and to the new riding No. 65 to be known as Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. I note that there are almost 5,000 people involved in the town of Mattawa and these communities are part of the district of Nipissing. They are only 38 miles from the city of North Bay, whereas they are about 90 miles from Pembroke which is the heart and core of Renfrew county.

Indeed, the map is a very odd map in that this new constituency, No. 65 of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke would end up being about the largest constituency in southern Ontario, taking in half of Algonquin park, but in population the great bulk of it would be in the Deep River, Chalk River, Pembroke-Renfrew area, with a long highway line, Highway 17, which would then connect it to Mattawa some 90 miles away from the centre of the community.

I have had representations from people in the Mattawa area that their community is in Nipissing and North Bay; they do not come to Pembroke. I realize that the commission received representations from the council that they wanted to be with Pembroke. I can only indicate that four members of the council happened to be on the executive of the association of the present member for Renfrew North-Nipissing East (Mr. Hopkins) and that this is how it came about that the council passed the resolution. If northern Ontario will get those extra seats, they need all the population they can get. This does not enhance the Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke riding. It makes it the largest population in a rural riding in southern Ontario, with some 85,000 people, and it seems to be inconsistent with the number of representations I have received.

I want to bring it to the attention of the commission that the township of Cameron from 1867 to 1892, along with Papineau and Mattawan, were actually part of the riding of Algoma. From 1892 until 1924 all three of them were part of the federal constituency of Nipissing. From 1924 until the present, Cameron, the most easterly township, was part of Renfrew, but Papineau and Mattawan were never associated with Pembroke in a federal electoral district until 1966. So historically they have always belonged in the other area.

There is one other area to which I want to draw attention. That is constituency No. 78 which we are now discussing and which is known as Stormont-Dundas. For the first time, on this second map and in the present redistribution the township of Charlottenburgh was included in the constituency of Stormont-Dundas with the rest of the community. Historically, Charlottenburgh has been with the other four townships in the county of Glengarry, Kenyon, Lancaster and Lochiel. From 1867 until 1915 this was the federal riding of Glengarry. From 1915 until 1924 these four townships, added to Stormont, made up the federal riding of Glengarry-Stormont.

From 1924 to 1952 those four townships as a block were in the riding of Glengarry, from 1952 to 1966 they were in the federal riding of Glengarry-Prescott, and from 1966 to the present time those four townships, together as a block, have been in the federal riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. It seems odd that they now take that one township, break it away from its historical base and lower the population in riding No. 23, Glengarry-Prescott, to 66,074—by just the few people who happen to live there—to increase the Stormont-Dundas riding to 84,578. If that township were left with the other three in the county of Glengarry, it would continue the historical tradition and it would balance out those ridings more equitably. I wanted to bring that to the attention of this House and subsequently to the attention of the commission.

A few comments have already been made dealing with the township of Dunnville which is included in the new constituency of Erie which is No. 17 on the map. The suggestion has been that it should go to No. 27 which is to be known as Haldimand-Norfolk on the map we are dealing with. It has been suggested by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) that the name change be completed here, but also that Dunnville has a historical relationship and that is the area in which the people from Dunnville would like to be with regard to representation at the federal level.

I can only concur in that to the extent that the same type of representations have come to my attention and I indicated that I would be glad to pass them on to the commission via this debate in the House of Commons. But there might be a problem with regard to how many people would be left in the constituency of Erie as a result of moving one township.

I hope the commission will be able to change the name of the constituency of Lanark-Carleton, No, 40 on the map, to Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

I think that is all the time I have to put my representations on the record. I believe the commission has had an extraordinarily difficult task to perform. In the main, I think it has tried to listen to the objections and to put recommendations into effect. In general, I think the commission has done an excellent job throughout Ontario with the material and the guidelines it has been given. It is a complement to the commission that it has been able to do so. Sometimes we politicians think we are put into a difficult position. I can say that I prefer to be a politician rather than a commissioner who cannot reply. It seems we are always kicking them because they have not kept in mind community of interest, size of population, size of riding or whatever. I think the commissioners have done an excellent job within the guidelines to which they were confined.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take long in the House today speaking about the redistribution of the riding of Essex-Windsor. I will try to outline my concerns. I am concerned because the townships of Colchester North, Colchester

South and the town of Harrow are being removed from the riding. The people of those towns feel that they were not consulted about the fact that they are going to be in the new riding or Essex-Kent. They have been a part of the riding I have represented since I came to the House of Commons in 1962 in the old riding of Essex South. Since redistribution has taken place before, and they stayed in the same riding, which is Essex-Windsor according to the first maps which were published, they were under the impression that they were going to remain in that riding, so they had no way of knowing that they were being considered for redistribution.

I will be losing some of the most intensive agricultural and productive parts of my riding if those areas go into the other riding. I gain no new area under redistribution; I only lose areas because of the size of my riding. Parts of the city of Windsor are being taken away. I maintain that more of Windsor should be taken, and more of the agricultural area left for me. The other ridings should be absorbing more of the city of Windsor.

Part of the riding which is being taken away is made up of Colchester North, Colchester South and the town of Harrow. They have always formed a part of a unit with the townships of Amherstburg, Anderdon and Malden. I will try to outline as briefly as possible how this can be shown. First, there is a large farmer co-operative in this area which has historically served the four townships of Anderdon, Malden, Colchester North and Colchester South, with its headquarters located in the town of Harrow. There is a branch office with a grain elevator in the village of McGregor, and another one located in the town of Amherstburg. This organization has kept the farming community in that area together and has made a form of community life for the people from the different communities which I think should be allowed to continue.

The little village of McGregor—rather, I should say, the rapidly expanding village of McGregor—is on the border between the townships of Colchester North and Anderdon. Under the proposed redistribution, this little village would be split right down the middle on a road we call Walker Road which is actually the townline road between these two townships. They have always been together. This will also mean that the parish of the church in the area will be split down the middle, because the church serves both a big part of the township of Anderdon and a big part of the township of Colchester North.

The reeves of these six municipalities have always worked together on joint projects. The six municipalities have never been separated either in a provincial or federal riding since they were created. The people of those municipalities feel strongly that they should remain as a unit. These municipalities have always worked together as unit, and I know because I was the reeve of Anderdon township when I entered this House in 1962. I was also warden of the county of Essex at the same time. I know how closely these municipalities have worked together and I know that the ties which bind them together are important.

I also recognize that the commission had a real problem trying to decide how redistribution should take place in a fair fashion. I am sure, though, we must remember that if these people had known they were going to be taken out of the riding, they would have objected strenuously, just as the people in Tilbury North and Tilbury West, at the far east end of the riding, objected before the hearing of the commissioners held in Windsor because they noticed that they were going to be put into another riding.

I just want to say that I hope the commission somehow or in some way will see fit to make sure that the people in Colchester North, Colchester South and the town of Harrow stay in the riding of Essex-Windsor, which they are desirous of doing.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I agree with those who have said that the commissioners had an impossible job in redistributing seats. There probably was not a more difficult place than northern Ontario, where we have not had the same growth rate as has been the case in other parts of the country. I was pleased to note that the commission heeded advice and listened to the representations of the provincial member for Algoma with regard to Sault Ste. Marie. The commission removed part of the population of Sault Ste. Marie from the city riding and added it to the neighbouring rural riding. There is no conflict with the Sudbury area. I suggest that the people of the Algoma region, particularly those living in Sault Ste. Marie, will consider this an advantage. Two members will represent the city and both will probably open constituency offices. The people will not find that a disadvantage.

I contend that we ought to adopt the Ontario government system of representation. The Ontario government has established ridings surrounding growth centres in accordance with the doughnut theory. As the population in the area surrounding the growth centre expands, new ridings are established to serve the larger population.

The commissioners considered the question of population and considered the growth of our urban centres in the next 15 or 20 years. In future, most of our population will be concentrated in 10 or 15 large centres. The rest will live in sparsely populated regions. We shall find that urban ridings will become more numerous than rural ridings in which the people engage mostly in farming, forestry and mining occupations. We ought to consider changing the 25 per cent limit. Boundaries should be designed to make adequate representation possible. At present it is impossible to provide adequate representation for some areas of northern Ontario.

I listened to the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) complain because some people living on the edge of North Bay are in the constituency of Timiskaming. He is perfectly right in saying that they do not want to be in the constituency of Timiskaming. They have no community of interest with Timiskaming which in the main is a rural riding with a forestry and mining base. The people of West Ferris, Sturgeon Falls, Verner, Field and River Valley are not connected by radio, television, newspaper, or road and rail links, with the riding of Timiskaming. Many of the people of North Bay have never gone farther north than the city. Most people prefer to travel south in Canada. I am sure that many people in these towns have not been up No. 11 highway into Timiskaming riding proper.

The commission took some of the population of the Mattawa-Nipissing area and included it in the Renfrew

North electoral area. In my opinion, it would have been better if the people had remained in Nipissing because all their interests centre on the city of North Bay. I agree that all the little communities on Highway 64 up to the Quebec border have a greater community of interest with Nipissing than with the riding of Timiskaming.

It is not that I do not want to represent the people of North Bay, Mr. Speaker. It is odd to travel 60 miles through an unpopulated region only to find that your constituency ends in the outer limits of North Bay. You can tell where North Bay begins by the road markers which tell you that you are now entering North Bay. Actually, some markers are 14 or 15 miles out of the city. I submit that people living in the suburbs of North Bay have absolutely no community of interest with the people of Kirkland Lake, Dryden and Moosonee.

In order to represent some of this area, I must learn again to paddle a canoe. That is the only way to reach some of the people of the area. Many are close to the Quebec border and do more of their business on the Quebec side than on the Ontario side. There is also the matter of connecting Timiskaming with the area to the north with the rail line which ultimately runs through Cochrane. We should consider how Temagami has been connected with Timiskaming.

I am not suggesting that members of parliament should redesign their own ridings. I congratulate the commissioners on the job they did. In the final analysis, it is not terribly important who represents West Ferris, River Valley, Temagami, Moosonee or Kirkland Lake. It is far more important to make sure that the people of the region are historically related and enjoy a community of interest. It is difficult for a member to represent both the suburbs of North Bay, and these remote regions as well, and do an adequate job. As most members know, people come to us with municipal, provincial and local problems which have little to do with our work as federal members of parliament. So the relationships of areas should be kept in mind and strengthened. In the case we are considering, that is not being done. There has been an attempt to mix rural and urban populations in one riding.

One encounters different problems in representing vertical as opposed to horizontal ridings. For the sake of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is in the House, let me explain that a vertical constituency, so to speak, is one consisting of high rise buildings and of people living in built up city areas. A horizontal constituency is spread out, as are constituencies in rural Canada.

Mr. Whelan: What about roads?

Mr. Peters: Roads are a common problem. Roads run through vertical and horizontal communities. There is a great difference between some rural communities although they are only a few miles apart. If you drive from New Liskeard to Cobalt—there is another small town in between—you will be amazed to note the difference between the two communities. They are proud of their differences. Neither community is large, and their problems are many. However, their community spirit is maintained because they are, and operate as, a community. They are related to other communities around them, sometimes favourably and sometimes not. However, what is the relationship to Verner which is on the other side of Sturgeon Falls? Sturgeon Falls will remain in Nipissing, but I will have to go through there and on to the next community. Even though it is closer to Sudbury and Nipissing, it will be part of Timiskaming.

What is their community relationship? I know a number of people in that area; I have been there many times. I know that they have a strong community sense of development. However, they have a larger community development which is in the Nipissing area. It is certainly not connected to Kirkland Lake, Moosonee or some of the other places I will represent.

It would be far better for us to sacrifice equal representation than to sacrifice the community interests of rural Canada. I can see this redistribution not only happening this time, but again in the early eighties after another census. Timiskaming will probably take in all the town of North Bay or all the town of Timmins, possibly both North Bay and Timmins, Sturgeon Falls and possibly even part of the area represented by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). I can see the population not growing in areas such as northern Ontario, northern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan or any other rural area, and we will end up representing provinces rather than communities. That will not be representation as we know it. I do not think the answer is to provide us with more staff and offices throughout the constituency. It would be much more satisfactory if we could drive around the constituency and have communication through newspapers, radio and other media. In that way we could service the areas we represent.

It is true that people in Sudbury, North Bay, Timmins and Rouyn-Noranda in Quebec have the opportunity of listening to one or two outlets. However, no one in any of those areas has the advantage of listening to all. Some are 300 or 400 miles apart. I suggest the relationship of those communities must be important with regard to our ability to represent.

Let me leave the commission with one thought. Over the years I have listened to and looked at members of parliament. Some I violently disagreed with, some I did not like at all, and some I did. In travelling across this nation I found that those who were terrible members and terrible people represented the same kind of people. The whole riding was very similar to the member. Other members were overly sweet and represented that kind of people.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. member a question. Will he confirm that there are a whole bunch more in Timiskaming just like him? If so, I am not sure any of us will want to go there.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have overemphasized the point. I am sure I am not one of the favourite sons of members of this House. If the hon. member came to my constituency, he would find that the people there are aggressive. They would welcome him. However, if he wishes to get into an argument, that is the place to visit. It is a mining and lumbering community, with some farming.

Most members are representative of the people in their constituency. I may have overemphasized this, but they are truly representative of their people. If our ridings get too large, we will not be representing those who elect us because we will not be able to have that many faces. I strongly urge that the commission consider the problem which members from northern Ontario are outlining today. If not, the problem is going to magnify every time there is redistribution.

While we agree that the commission should be independent and should have certain guidelines, I would like to see that stretched as far as possible so that northern Ontario can retain 12 members. In that way we can continue to pay attention to the community of interest. In years to come you will be able to tell, from looking at a member, the kind of people he represents. You will know that he is representing those who elected him as well as their community of interest.

Mr. Peter Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, your reference will note I had not intended, by way of filing an objection, to rise and speak on this particular matter. However, I was moved to speak as a result of the objection put on the record by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I understand his objection and I believe it to be valid. It indirectly touches the riding of Kent-Essex as it now is, and Essex-Kent as it is proposed to be. I have no particular objection. Indeed, I would welcome the inclusion of the municipalities of Harrow and Colchester North and South to the new constituency of Essex-Kent. I would be quite happy to be representative of that area were I fortunate enough to be able to do so.

I must, however, agree with the minister in at least his third argument. Specifically, in making the changes from those proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, dated August 19, 1975, the commission failed to give the residents of the municipalities of Harrow, Colchester North and Colchester South an opportunity to express their views on the revised proposal. Most certainly it should be that the residents be afforded the same opportunity to express their concerns regarding the February 27, 1976, proposal as those who were affected by the draft proposals of August 19, 1975, were able to do at a hearing in Windsor in October of last year.

If one can make general comments and express general concern with regard to the method with which the commission has dealt with Ontario—and, I suspect, the rest of Canada—it is that there seems to have been some simple misunderstanding by the committee with respect to the manner in which individual people in these ridings should be dealt. One of the glaring absences in the method by which people were treated in the whole of this redistribution is that when a person is to be affected by the objection of another, the notice that one might expect to be given to those who would be affected was not in fact given. To bring it down to the specifics of Essex-Windsor and Kent-Essex, a proposal was made originally that two townships and some small municipalities be added to the riding of Essex-Kent to make up for the loss of the city of Chatham, some 36,000 voters.

I might point out that the constituents of the city of Chatham and the constituents of Tilbury North, Tilbury West and Rochester were made abundantly aware that something was happening which would have an intimate effect on their lives. Hearings were held in Windsor and people were invited to come and make objections if they saw fit to those boundary and riding changes. What the commission did, in response to whatever objections were made, was to make changes which would intimately affect other people who had no knowledge at all that those changes were made, what the changes would be or whether they would be affected at all by the changes which were made in Windsor.

If one can assume anything from the fact that those hearings were held in Windsor, it is that the majority of people in these ridings who had received knowledge or, at least, who should have received knowledge from advertisements which appeared in the newspapers, were to a large extent content with what was suggested. I suggest the commission has not given any weight at all to this contentment. I submit that at the end of the debate some changes ought to be made in the statute or in the regulations governing the way in which the commission is to conduct itself, to the end that if they are about to make changes which affect an area which has not been considered, notice should go out to the constituencies affected. In this instance, for example, notices should go out to Harrow, Colchester North and Colchester South before the boundaries of their areas are touched.

In the original proposal, the commission recommended, as I have indicated, that the riding of Essex-Kent include municipalities from Harwich westward to Gosfield North and South, and north to Lake St. Clair, including the municipalities of Rochester, Tilbury North and Tilbury West. I was entirely satisfied with the proposal. Indeed, I filed no objection to it at the meeting of the commission on October 19 in Windsor. I did not appear, nor did anyone on my behalf. In the revisions of February of this year, however, the commissioners, in their collective wisdom, removed the northern municipalities, namely, Rochester, Tilbury North and Tilbury West, and placed them in the proposed constituency of Essex-Windsor, while at the same time removing from the aforementioned riding the municipalities of Harrow, Colchester North and Colchester South, placing them in what will now be the constituency of Essex-Kent.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset of my intervention, I have no objection to the rearranging of the municipalities in terms of the proposal last summer or to the revisions presently under consideration. However, in the interest of fairness I would support any action which would elicit the views of the good people of Harrow, Colchester North and South before the citizens are affected.

The options open to the commission are, admittedly, few. First, there could be a reversion to the August, 19, 1975, proposal provided no serious objections were filed in connection with the municipalities of Rochester, Tillbury North and Tilbury West. This proposal would, I believe, be acceptable to all. As a second alternative, the commission could reaffirm the proposal laid before the House on February 27, 1976, after soliciting the opinions of the residents of Harrow, Colchester North and Colchester South. This, too, would be welcome and totally acceptable, at least to me.

The third option would involve a more complex juggling of various municipalities. For example, parts of Chatham could be included to make up for electors lost if Harrow, Colchester North and Colchester South were to revert to Essex-Windsor. Alternatively, the town of Essex could be exchanged for Colchester North and South. Both these proposals, however, contain serious flaws. Once again there would be a serious effect on people who would receive no notice that their interests were being dealt with. The absence of arrangements for public discussion would particularly affect the residents of Essex and Chatham. Further, any such proposals would add to Essex-Kent towns with a more distant historical relationship or slighter economic base than the municipalities of Harrow, Colchester North and South presently share with Essex-Kent. This would be a less satisfying solution to the concerns which all hon. members have expressed today.

The weakest option left to the commission would be to return Harrow, Colchester North and South to Essex-Windsor without adding to Essex-Kent the area to the north recommended in the August proposal. Not only would this make the proposed constituency of Essex-Windsor an extremely large and difficult area to serve, notwithstanding the fact that it is being served well at this point, but it would augment the existing disparity between the two constituencies with regard to the number of electors. We might bear in mind that the population of this area is growing substantially. If a census were to be taken today I am sure the figures would show a substantial increase over those used by the commission. This proposal would give Essex-Windsor a population of 90,000, while reducing the population of Essex-Kent to something under 70,000 electors. Clearly, it would be less acceptable than any of the other possible solutions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, permit me to reaffirm my qualified satisfaction with the August and the February proposals of the commission. I suggest, once again, that there is substantial difficulty with the statute as it now exists with respect to sufficient notice being given to people who will be intimately affected by changes made after the original announcement goes out. Substantial thought should be given to the possibility of providing notice to areas which will be affected when changes take place which are not announced in the original published proposals.

I look forward to continuing my representation of the people of Essex-Kent and will welcome enthusiastically the municipalities which the commission, in its wisdom, saw fit to add to my riding.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by remarking, as other members have done this afternoon, that the task of the commission is a difficult and thankless one. Faced with the need to decide among conflicting choices, they can never hope to satisfy all interested parties.

In the proposed redistribution of seats in Ontario, the commissioners have generally arrived at a population in rural ridings of about 70,000, and in urban ridings of about 90,000. It seems that the commissioners, while struggling with their admittedly difficult task, were very much aware of factors involved in geographical distance. However, the drastic changes made to downtown Toronto ridings lead one to conclude that the commissioners paid less attention to factors concerning social and cultural distance. It is to these that I wish to address my remarks.

The geographical spread of a rural riding imposes certain obvious and easily understood constraints on the service to a constituency by its member of parliament. However, a member who represents an urban riding with a high proportion of new Canadians must work within the framework of other constraints which are equally legitimate in the discussion of communication, service and representation. Service to constituents and representation of the views of a constituency require the maintenance of all possible channels of communication, and there is a special need to involve constituents in the political process in an area which cannot be described as a community in the way a suburban or rural riding with clearly defined geographical boundaries might be so described.

One of the responsibilities of a member of parliament is, of course, to represent adequately the views of his or her constituency and to report back to constituents on parliamentary action. Members also spend considerable time assisting constituents in their dealings with government. To the extent that a member represents a riding with a very high proportion of new Canadians who are not familiar with our governmental structures, the number of problems which are likely to arise will be increased. The number of languages spoken makes for further complication. While most constituents have some knowledge of one of the official languages, the extent to which more complicated issues can be understood and explained is limited where there is a limited command of English or French.

To members who represent ridings with a high proportion of new Canadians, a continuing concern is that of encouraging all citizens to develop a stronger and more effective sense of participating in the political process. Fuller and more broadly based participation in the political process yields many community and social benefits. It serves to reinforce the use of legitimate avenues toward, and mechanisms of, social change. It provides a training ground for future leaders. It exposes citizens to the political culture of our society and hence the broader values of our society. It is thus a force for constructive action. By providing a wider range of viewpoints and experiences, the participatory approach may well yield better decisions.

Canada is a multicultural nation within a bilingual framework. The realization of full and effective citizen participation in the political process in multicultural ridings such as Trinity presents special challenges. A major requirement for effective citizen participation is to preserve those circumstances that facilitate exposure to, and involvement in, political culture at the riding level. In ridings characterized by a large proportion of recent immigrants, such as Trinity, the process of exposure to, and involvement in, political culture is in large measure accomplished through informal group structures. These informal groups often grow up around community concerns and priorities. They represent a most important means for linking such concerns, priorities and needs with legitimate political mechanisms of change.

The residents of ridings characterized by a large proportion of recent immigrants have, by and large, established fewer traditional or formally organized means of transmitting political values or taking political action than is typically the case in more ethnically homogeneous ridings. Such formal arrangements take time to develop but they are, of course, the backbone of stable and healthy communities. On the one hand, broadly based citizen participation in the political process is vital to a healthy society. On the other hand, the structure of political culture in multicultural ridings is delicate and easily disrupted. I would therefore suggest, first, that wherever possible ridings such as Trinity not be subject to reorganization as this will inevitably disrupt the delicate balance of political participation that characterizes such ridings. Second, that when such reorganization is inevitable, it should be carried out with proper awareness of the social and cultural dynamics of multicultural ridings.

The concept of distance in rural ridings is well understood; the complex patterns of social and cultural distance and cohesion in urban ridings are less well understood. New Canadians generally have some difficulty in understanding the relative responsibilities of municipal, provincial and federal governments. In Ontario there has recently been a redistribution of provincial ridings. Now voters are being asked to adapt to yet another set of changes in federal ridings with a resultant breaking up of immigrant and minority groups who have worked together in a riding.

I am impressed with the arguments of sociologists who suggest that any move which increases the difficulty which members of ethnic groups have in voting or engaging in the normal political process decreases the group's feelings of participation in the life of their chosen country. Because of questions of communication and service and because of the arguments in favour of symbolic continuity, I would say that, ideally, ridings inhabited by a large number of new immigrants and a large variety of immigrant groups should be smaller than ridings with cultural homogeneity and a high proportion of native born Canadians.

But certainly there should be as much stability as possible in boundaries and in names of ridings which contain a large proportion of people who do not have a full command of one of the official languages. To change virtually all the boundaries in the ridings of greatest new immigrant density is to disrupt the symbolic organization of ridings and to increase the difficulties for new citizens of engaging in the political process. The higher the degree of continuity in boundaries and names, the greater will be the access to the normal political process of a large number of constituents in urban, immigrant-receiving ridings.

The need to service and represent the large proportion of new immigrant groups and the need for continuity to facilitate participation in the democratic process should receive priority consideration in redistribution. When we welcome as full members of Canadian society, with all the rights and responsibilities of citizenship, the thousands of people who each year become Canadians by choice, we have some obligation to be cognizant of the factors that make it easy or difficult for them to exercise their democratic rights and become truly and satisfyingly involved in the political life of their chosen country. The riding is the vehicle, the medium by means of which information is carried and political activity—that is, constructive and socially useful activity—is made possible. If we are to expect a proper level of intelligent, political activity, we should alter boundaries and names as little as possible in immigrant-receiving ridings.

The views I have expressed this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, have already been expressed in one form or another at the public hearings which the commission held. It appears that, faced with the conflicting needs of rural ridings and very large suburban ridings, the commissioners have made their decision, which in the case of Toronto involves most change in the immigrant-receiving ridings. I do not really expect that at this stage the commissioners will redraw the boundaries for all of Toronto, but I do hope that, whatever further changes they do make, they will be cognizant of some of the particular difficulties of new citizens. I hope that some of the considerations that I have described may also be considered in future redistribution and balanced against geographical considerations and considerations of distance involved for rural ridings.

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak for only a few moments, together with other members from the province of Ontario and other provinces, as we deliberate the report of the commissioners for redistribution. I want to deal with the question of redistribution over-all and then to share the natural affinity of members in talking about our own constituencies.

On the question of redistribution over-all, I think it is very easy for us in this House to see the report come out, look at it and find all the things wrong, and then be harshly critical of the commissioners. I want at the outset to recognize that they have had a tremendously difficult responsibility. They have met it, and I think have met it as best they can. Certainly in respect of representations I have put forward and that have been put forward by citizens of the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth, the commission has been responsive and has responded quickly. We only wish the commission had responded more favourably.

I think part of the difficulty stems from the constraints within which the commission has had to operate when looking at redistribution. In looking at redistribution we should be looking not just at the reports, the new maps or what will result because of what the commission has had to do, but also at the regulations under which the commission has had to operate. I suggest the regulations are inefficient and in many ways out of date. If the maps which the commission must redraw and the constituencies which they must redesign are out of date, then the commissioners should be given the tools with which to accomplish their task. We should give them proper and modern methods for bringing about more equitable redistribution of the constituencies.

For example, I want to deal with a specific guideline taken by the commission, and I take this from page 3 of the report for the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario, 1976. It says that chapter 25 provides that the commission may depart from such equality—equality being the electoral quotient of 81,085—for any of a number of reasons. First, it refers to special geographic considerations including sparseness or density of population, accessibility of regions and the size or shape of regions. Then it states:

N.B. Because of this amendment, relative rate of growth of population is no longer a factor to be considered.

I will deal specifically with the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth, suggesting somewhat later that that is no longer a factor which should be left out of consideration. In fact, in a growing province and a growing country it is a factor that should be very much taken into consideration, but which obviously was not taken into consideration when the commission redrew the maps for the city of Hamilton, the county of Wentworth and the Niagara region.

There is the point, brought to my attention by a constituent, as well about the cost of the commission and its hearings. We recognize that this has been a difficult process. It must be an expensive process if it is to be done in the necessary detail. One thing I would question, and I think this should be reconsidered when we next ask the next commission to begin its work, is whether it is really necessary to buy up all that space in every daily newspaper in each province to reproduce the maps, and whether in fact it would not be more economical and more advisable to search out other means of advising interested parties what the constituencies in which they live are to be following redistribution.

There should be other means of informing them that the commission is considering redistribution along certain lines. We should seek out other means through the media which would not always require buying space, and if the media is responsible it would not ask the commission to buy all this advertising. We could make these maps available at the city or town halls or some place convenient without burdening the taxpayer with the extra and unnecessary expense of showing them in black and white in their daily newspapers just what the commission has done to the constituencies.

I want to turn to the particular case of the riding of Hamilton-Wentworth. I will not go through the usual tour of the constituency, talking about the greatness of every part of it. I did that a number of years ago when I first entered this House, in keeping with the custom and practice of a new member. However, I think I should describe what the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth consists of today and what this commission wishes it to consist of in the future.

The constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth is a very historic one. I am sure no member will disagree with the suggestion that it is one of the finest constituencies in the country. It consists of an area that might roughly be described as a significant section of the city of Hamilton, the east end in which I grew up and, therefore, with which I have natural sentiments and ties. It takes in the new town of Stoney Creek. It takes in some of the rural portion of the old county of Wentworth and part of the township of Glanbrook. It then goes around to complete the horseshoe and takes in the town of Ancaster. This is a riding that has a community of interest. It has a riding that has historic ties in all of these areas, and it is a riding that makes sense.

One might also not take objection on these bases to the new constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth, because what the commission has done is to include part of the city of Hamilton on an extended basis. It then goes further into the old community of Wentworth, and includes the town of Dundas and the township of Flamborough, now being ably represented by my colleague, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling). These are understandable changes and would be most welcome in the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth by all the residents there because they have a community of interest and common ties. The city of Hamilton is experiencing tremendous growth, and many of these areas are historically a part of the old county of Wentworth. We take no objection to this fact.

Then we look at the areas of the proposed riding of Hamilton-Wentworth which the commission has lopped off in a way that can only be compared with an attempt by a medical student at surgery using other than the best of instruments. No doubt my colleague, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) is aware of more than one occasion when people have suffered as a result of this kind of thing and he has had to go in and correct others' errors of inexperience. To carry that analogy further, what all of us on both sides of this House are trying to do is get the commission, with the best intentions, to perform good surgery. They may consider the operation a success, but if the patient dies it really is to no advantage. We want to gently urge them, and we humbly ask them, to reconsider and to think about what they have done. We ask them to go back and reconsider: it is that simple.

They have taken a significant proportion of the city of Hamilton and also the town of Stoney Creek, now in the constituency of Hamilton-Wentworth, and put them into the new riding of Lincoln. If only Conservatives objected to this we might be accused of having partisan motives. The interesting thing to note is that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres), my present neighbour and an hon. member on the government side, has also put in a protest about this move. In addition, his predecessor, Mr. Ken Higson, who served with such distinction as the Progressive Conservative member for that riding, also put in an objection. The town of Grimsby and the riding of Lincoln objected to it as well.

I think it is most significant that a weekly newspaper in the town of Stoney Creek encouraged citizens and individual residents of Stoney Creek to indicate to the commissioners that they did not want to be part of the riding of Lincoln, but that in fact and in heart they were part of Hamilton-Wentworth and wished to remain that way. I think the hon. member for Lincoln in his notice of objection summarized the feelings that people of all parties and from both sides—from the Lincoln side and from the Hamilton-Wentworth side—have when he said:

The boundaries set forth by the Commission in its 1976 Report also digress from the provincial riding boundaries, municipal and regional lines. On page 4 of the report, the commission states the principle that:

"Keeping in mind density of population as well as community interests, the commission has drawn the boundaries of the major cities . . . so as to follow municipal boundaries wherever possible."

● (1920)

This principle was ignored in the case of Lincoln by bringing together sections of the regional municipality of Niagara and Hamilton-Wentworth which in terms of historic social, service and general interest are diverse and represent and reflect very different community ties and concerns. That is what the hon. member for Lincoln said, and I agree with him fully. He was supported in that by the man who ran against him in the last election and who preceded him in this House. He was supported in that by the town of Grimsby which also supported my submission at the hearings in Welland. I might mention that at Welland the constituency of Hamilton Wentworth was represented by three people. It is interesting to note who they are. One is Iain Hendry, Q.C., of the town of Ancaster. He is a former chairman of the school board for Wentworth county. He lives at one end of the constituency, 45 miles away. He was supported in those representations by Mrs. Shirley McLeod of Stoney Creek, a housewife, and by David Stempin, a businessman from East Hamilton.

There you have what makes up the constituency of Hamilton Wentworth—those three people of diverse interests from different parts of the constituency saying one thing, that they belong in Hamilton-Wentworth, that they have no community of interest in Lincoln, that they are not wanted there, and that they are quite happy to remain in Hamilton-Wentworth. The commission not only has seen fit to ignore those representations but has not given us good and sufficient reasons for doing so.

At the hearings in Toronto, of his own volition Mr. Jim Ridge, another past chairman of the Wentworth county school board, a lifelong resident from the rural part of the constituency, went before the hearing and said that he, too, wanted to remain in Hamilton-Wentworth. These people were supported, as I said, not only by Liberals and Conservatives and not only by representatives of civic government and regional municipalities, but by literally hundreds of individual citizens who took the time and the trouble to make individual submissions by way of the Stoney Creek News. We have had no accurate reply or adequate response concerning why those feelings of individual citizens were suddenly thrust aside. I think of a couple of examples. One is the Winona men's club. On February 5 of this year they wrote to me as follows:

> Last night, at a meeting of the Winona men's club, we circulated the attached petition concerning the proposed change in federal electoral boundaries in Stoney Creek. All the members present at the meeting who live in the municipality of Stoney Creek signed the petition regardless of political party affiliations. It was unanimously felt that the municipality of Stoney Creek has traditionally been an integral part of the Hamilton-Wentworth region in all respects, and would be completely lost as a small section of the region of Niagara.

Then in a postscript they wrote:

> You will note a few ladies names on the first page. These names were obtained last Sunday at the morning service at the Fifty United Church.

I also received a letter from the Reverend and Mrs. R. Matejka on behalf of the Lutheran Church of the Messiah at Stoney Creek. Not only have we the Winona men's club but we have the ladies of the Fifty United Church and the Lutheran Church all together. This is ecumenical; this is the day of liberation! Everybody is of one accord. The commission just puts aside these things and says it has a map and will stick to it. We get stuck with those results. They do not have to live there. It is not their community of interest which has to be represented in parliament. The people who suffer have voiced their concerns and opinions, and they have the general feeling which I must express on their behalf that their sentiments were not taken into consideration.

I go back to the point I made earlier, that the commission decided not to take into consideration the growth of population as a factor in drawing up the boundaries. That may be convenient. It may be in their terms of reference. Perhaps they have no choice, but if so we must change that because it is an irresponsible way for a commission to draw boundaries when they draw them on the census taken in 1971. These boundaries will come into effect at the next general election which many of us expect will be in 1978. So I asked some of the communities involved to give us their population projections for 1978.

I should like to cite a couple of examples. This year there are 29,281 citizens in Stoney Creek-Saltfleet. By 1978 there will be 40,000 because we have a satellite city being built at this very time in that area. In that part of the city of Hamilton which is to be put into the new riding of Lincoln they are going on the 1971 census which runs roughly at 56,000 people, but the city clerk in Hamilton tells me that they have projected for 1978 a population of 88,884.

The commission in its report says that the riding quotient for Ontario shall be 81,085 people. In that portion of the city of Hamilton alone which they want to put into the riding of Lincoln there will be, in 1978, more than that: there will be 88,884 people. That to me is an abdication of responsibility. They have closed their eyes to the fact that this is one of the most dynamic and fastest growing areas in this province, indeed in this country. They just cannot close their eyes to the cold hard facts that those are not just statistics but that people are involved. That is the point on which I should like to end my remarks.

In making these remarks I want to reiterate that the commission has had a difficult job. I respect the efforts of the commissioners, but I must reject them. Their efforts are unacceptable. I ask them to go back to the drawing board. I ask them to take into consideration something of a general overview. Perhaps to paraphrase Robert Zend, an author and philosopher from the city of Toronto, which may be known to be one of the major suburbs of the city of Hamilton, he said there are too many people and too few human beings. I suggest they should stop worring and looking upon people as statistics to fit neatly into these things called constituencies.

We have 264 people here who talk about constituencies. The people of Canada do not talk about constituencies; they talk about communities. That is what the commission should be addressing itself to—what is a community? If people as statistics form constituencies that may be legal, it may be technical and it may be very convenient for a commission but it is not taking into account the fact that human beings who individually and collectively form communities are having their lives affected by the decisions taken.

This commission has done its best to date. Its best simply is unacceptable. I ask it to go back to the drawing board, bearing in mind it may have a responsibility to stick to the technical aspects of the act, to worry about statistics and worry about drawing maps and fitting statistics into those maps. But they have a higher responsibility, if the House of Commons is to be representative, which is to stop worrying about constituencies and statistics and start worrying about communities in which human beings live.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this is a brief intervention made in the hope that eight or nine years from now the remarks that are being made by hon. members in this debate might perhaps be read by the people who will be in charge of the next commissions responsible for the next set of boundaries according to the law ten years hence. I should like, as others have done, to express my appreciation for the way in which the commission has carried out what is undoubtedly a difficult job when taken as a whole. In the recollection of those of us who can go back to the map published in late 1972, there is considerable improvement in the quality of the boundaries proposed in the map that is before us today for discussion.

It seems to me, however, that the present map could be even better had the commission made full use of the Ontario quotient figure of 81,000 plus or minus the 25 per cent provided under the law. In the case of Ontario it means that the 81,000 people per riding envisaged under the law could have been increased to a maximum of approximately 101 per cent, or decreased to a minimum of approximately 60,000 people, by the application of this 25 per cent quotient.

If you look at the proposed maps and populations for the municipality of metropolitan Toronto you are likely to come to the conclusion that the commission made little use, or perhaps even shied away from the quotient envisaged under the law. Of the 25 proposed ridings in metropolitan Toronto the population of 20 ridings ranges between 88,000 and 93,000 people. This means that the majority of the ridings proposed in metropolitan Toronto fall within a very narrow band of 88,000 to 93,000 people, almost as if the commission had somehow come to the conclusion that it is a desirable quotient for a metropolitan area from which it did not wish or intend to deviate. If my interpretation is correct, I really do not know the reasons why it applied and maintained such a narrow band.

But what seems to me fairly clear is that had the commission used the quotient provided under the law more boldly and vigorously, we would have better boundaries, and by better boundaries I mean ones that respect and reflect better values such as community of interest in the sense used earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), boundaries that would better reflect ethnic, cultural, and social factors and, frankly, ones that would better reflect the character of the existing neighbourhood and the role that neighbourhood organizations play in metropolitan centres across Canada. Had that quotient been used in metro Toronto as the law provides, the proposed boundaries before us here for debate would be less artificial.

I am ready to admit that ideal boundaries hardly exist in a metropolitan centre, but there are some boundaries that are less disruptive and artificial in an urban area than others, that are less disruptive to existing neighbourhoods and people than others.

For instance, a main artery, a major thoroughfare, or an expressway is a better boundary than a neighbourhood road or a neighbourhood street. A good boundary would be a major railroad, a park, or a cemetery, but it is very bad practice to use as boundaries, at least in the case of the municipality of metro Toronto, the so-called city limits. City limits probably had validity and meaning 40 or 50 years ago. Today city limits in metro Toronto only mean that on this side or on that side of the city limits there are heavily built up areas. The people living on streets on either side of the city limits hardly know that there is a boundary line dividing them.

I would also add to this category of poor boundary lines the streets that cut through the heart of an existing parish, or streets that are part of a tightly knit neighbourhood. As I said, our right of ways such as the CPR or the CNR are very good boundaries. So are cemeteries, parks, creeks and expressways. Major arteries are preferable as boundaries because, by their own existence, they seem to disrupt less the cohesion and character of an urban neighbourhood.

I hope that ten years from now some of the thoughts that have been put on record by hon. members will still have some validity at least in the drawing of boundaries of urban areas such as Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver. It seems to me that the success of a future boundary commission will depend, among other things, on the ability of the commissioners to take into greater consideration than has been the case so far the social factors that have been described so well earlier by the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). As we all know, ridings and their boundaries are there to serve people, and the present law, it seems to me, is well designed. There is flexibility built into the present law, in the 25 per cent plus or minus formula that has been made available to achieve exactly some of the objectives I have tried to describe in this brief intervention.

The future commission would really do a service to people living in urban communities by making greater and bolder use of this 25 per cent formula so as to serve better the social, cultural, and economic features of the people living in the ridings affected.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this particular occasion is the third time I have spoken on electoral boundary redistribution since the act came into effect back in 1965-66 when I was very critical of the work of some of the boundary redistribution commissions.

In 1974-75 I was able to satisfy members on the government side of the wisdom of an amendment I had been advancing ever since the original act was passed, that was that original proposals and definite plans for redistribution and final reports must carry the full reasons of the commissioners as to why they made changes. I suppose it was a little ironic to see the difficulties into which some commissions have entered vis-à-vis members in their provinces by refusing to enter reasons. That is not the way it is to be done and I am satisfied, after three experiences, that this House has made two fundamental mistakes.

The first mistake is to think that independent commissions could carry out the redistribution of electoral boundaries better than a parliamentary committee composed of members who will see if there is any attempt at gerrymandering, as so many people tried to suggest, but which is the figment of rather fertile imaginations.

They are people who think that citizens are mere statistical ciphers and that you can take a number of people in an area, put them together like so many head of cattle in a corral, and say that will be a constituency, regardless of the community of interests, the composition of that community or other factors. Yet all too often this is what we have had. In 1973, the last time the commission did such a universally poor job, this House put a stop, by law, to the operation of its reports.

Then I think it committed a second mistake, and that was to try to get out of that difficulty by agreeing to some sort of fanciful formula where by every ten years the number of members in this House and the number of ridings in this country would automatically be increased. Why to save face for someone, or so that a province would not diminish in numbers relative to others which have more rapid growth? We do the very same thing within provinces. We recognize that certain areas may have to have a seat suppressed or combined with another one, but it is all wrong in so far as a province is concerned.

I am not going to enter into the litany of complications which this will give rise to in this House after the next general election when eighteen more seats will have to be found in the Chamber. I think we will need baskets hanging from the ceiling, or we will have to appropriate some of the balconies in order to give appropriate room to all the members. Then ten years hence it is expected, at the same growth rate, that we might approach 300 in number. People will say that this House has too many speakers and that there are too many speeches made. This is only compounding the problem, but that is not what I am trying to get at in this debate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The members will all have to be my size.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Even though the hon. member represents two sheets of paper in size, looked at sideways—contrary to myself—he still occupies a desk the same size as mine, and his chair is the same size, and that is so for all the other hon. members. However, what I am concerned about is what I think has always been a fundamental mistake by both of the commissions.

Unfortunately the House committed a third mistake during the winter of 1974-75 when, persuaded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), there was removed from the list of factors which were to be considered by redistribution commissions the one known as growth potential, and this was adopted by hon. members on both sides of the House. I remember during private members' hour seeing that bill come up from the bottom of the list and then being passed. I moved a quick amendment, and I remember in my speech that I said the House did not realize the noose into which it was shoving its neck for general redistribution when that particular factor was being removed.

This came home to me during the hearings last September and October. I will be the first to say that the redistribution commissioner, Mr. Castonguay, said to me in public court that I was the only one who saw the trouble at the time, and that this was a factor which was causing all sorts of difficulties, particularly in urban and suburban ridings. I just heard the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) say that the commission ignored certain growth factors in parts of the city of Hamilton and its suburbs. Of course it did because the House, in its lack of wisdom or in a moment of mental aberration, removed the growth potential as a factor.

Now I should like to turn to the representations which were sent to me by the former member for St. Paul's, Mr. Ronald Atkey. He makes the same points which have been made by many members. First, with regard to the present boundaries of St. Paul's, the boundaries proposed by the commission are likely to cause confusion among the electorate in that there is no conformity with existing provincial and municipal boundaries.

How many times have we seen voters totally confused because of helter skelter boundaries? Gracious only knows, the clerk of the provincial house is usually a member of these commissions, and there is no way they seem to be able to bring the boundaries together. It passes the wit of man to see why they cannot do this. But no, if when one commission divides constituencies on, shall we say, a vertical pitch, north and south, you can bet your bottom dollar that the next commission will divide them on a lateral basis, east and west, merely to introduce total and utter confusion in all corners.

The federal riding of St. Paul's will overlap five provincial constituencies: St. Andrews', St. Patrick's, St. George's, Eglington, Bellwoods and Oakwoods; and five municipal wards, three wards in the city of Toronto and two wards in the Borough of York.

There is another factor. Federal members and provincial members must work in close liaison. It does not matter what party they represent; the paramount consideration is looking after the interests of citizens. I do not care a fig for the norm of some 76,000 which some people slavishly adhere to, trying as much as possible to keep to that norm—one man, one vote. That is a lot of tripe.

What is required is the best possible service from members of parliament and members of provincial legislatures to the people concerned. That is why we exist, and we know from the changing role of members of parliament, both provincial MLA's or MPP's, that the federal member today has a role he did not have 10 or 15 years ago, a much greater role of constituency ombudsman in which he has to give service, and people have to come to recognize this as the point. But gracious me, when you get a mish-mash of boundaries which make Clapham Junction just outside London look like a simple matter, I just wonder why commissioners cannot see that.

Third, there is a natural community of interest which exists in various parts and in various cities. There are community interests in my city of Edmonton and in the city of Toronto, and in mid town Toronto there are natural flows of community interest. In St. Paul's, for instance, by making the riding more of a lateral than a vertical shape the proposal seems to ignore the natural north-south community of interest which centres around the Yonge Street subway. People who work in downtown Toronto and take the subway to work—principally those east of Bathurst Street—do tend to share more of a community of interests than those who live west of Bathurst Street who may go into other parts of Toronto to go to work.

Here is another one—boundaries. One will find them in rural constituencies running down the middle of the main street of a small town. In the case of St. Paul's, Lytton Boulevard cuts right through a closely-knit community. It is a quitet residential street with little traffic and has no rational basis as a natural dividing line. Lawrence Avenue, a major artery several blocks to the north, is the more obvious choice.

Strangely, in its preliminary work the commission made conscious attempts to conform to both provincial and municipal boundaries. Yet with regard to the report for the province of Ontario, the commission departed entirely from that conformity and did not give reasons. I am told there are no reasons in the Ontario report. Why not? They must be there. It is not the task of members of parliament to punch at pillows. The commissioners do not have the God-given or legal right to hand down a ukase from on high and challenge others to prove them wrong. Their changes must be made on the basis of law. They must give reasons. If those reasons are invalid, they must expect to be attacked. Hopefully, as a result of criticism, they will change their conclusions. I submit that nothing should prevent the commissioners from making the changes required.

I have almost used up my time, Mr. Speaker. The former member, Mr. Atkey, made alternate proposals to the commission. He presented proposal A and proposal B. He considered some of the advantages of proposal A, and some of the disadvantages. Strangely enough, the commission disregarded both proposals A and B and brought forward a solution which runs counter to many of the principles I have tried to enunciate, and which members on both sides have repeated time and time again. I must confess that it is frustrating to find that people—and I do not say this patronizingly—who are certainly as intelligent as members of parliament should assess a situation in a vacuum, treat people as mere ciphers, ignore demographic factors and community of interest and arrive at the sort of results we now see.

I intend to speak with regard to the Alberta objections tomorrow, and will go into detail about my own city. I shall speak about some of the problems which have resulted from proposals made by commissioners who have, shall we say, considered facts which exist in a vacuum, which are a figment of somebody's imgination, and which do not exist in reality. They have used such facts in coming to a conclusion. I hope that hon. members are not arguing in a vacuum. I know that there are many submission concerning Ontario and many concerning the other provinces.

I hope the commissioners realize the disruption which a wrong decision can cause. I hope that the commissioners will consider the census figures, allow a tolerance of 25 per cent on either side, and remember that the best job of redistribution is the one which changes boundaries the least. As it is, the people in the constituencies have a tough enough time knowing who their federal and provincial members are. They know that their problems will eventually receive attention. As it is, our people have some difficulty in recognizing which member represents which constituency. It gives us no satisfaction when people come to our constituency offices with a problem and we have to tell them, "Well, no, this is the wrong place. You will have to go down there, to Mr. So and So, the provincial member."

Not all our constituents are perfect linguists in English or French. It does not behoove us to make their life that much more complicated. As it is, John Q. citizen has a tough enough time, and the commissioners should take another look at this matter and uncomplicate some of the tangled webs they have placed before the House in the form of redistribution plans.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Andras: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am the member for Port Arthur. Some ten years ago, shortly after being first elected to this House, I made reference to an article I had written for some publication, the name of which escapes me, in which I advocated government support for studies of the feasibility of creating a new eleventh province. I think it was to be called Aurora.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not Aurora Borealis?

Mr. Andras: No, but in the end it could have been called that. It was to comprise northern Ontario and parts of northeastern Quebec. I was astounded at the response to this whimsical idea of mine. There was a response from residents of northern Ontario, all the way over to the Quebec boundary, and in Quebec itself. People from Mattawa to Kenora, from Parry Sound to Nipigon, sent letters into my office supporting this suggestion. The letters poured in.

I raise the matter in this context for this reason: by doing this, residents of northern Ontario vented their individual feelings of frustration and isolation, and made known their discontent with the manner in which they had been treated by governments generally, federal and provincial.

I hasten to say, Mr. Speaker, that whatever separatist leanings I had in those days I soon abandoned, particularly after my own somewhat cursory study of the constitutional issues involved indicated that only the most drastic action, revolution, could bring it about. I did not, however, reject the legitimate aspirations, and very legitimate feelings of my fellow northerners. As a member of parliament and member of the government for many years I have been advocating and supporting legislation the aim of which is to relieve regional disparities and improve the social and economic well-being of Canadians everywhere. If the quality of life in northern Ontario has improved in the ten years since I made those comments, the reason is partly the vigour of the representation made in parliament on behalf of the 12 federal ridings about which we are talking.

As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said, few rights are as fundamental as the right of the people to have a voice in government. Canadian citizens demand representation which reflects their diverse and distinctive interests. That is the spirit in which the Parliament of Canada enacted the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. So, the suggestion that northern Ontario residents look upon the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission as disappointing would be an understatement. It would be a masterpiece of understatement. It is far more accurate to describe their feelings as those of anger, frustration, and resentment. Indeed, I must associate myself with those adjectives in expressing their feelings or describing them.

My colleagues from northern Ontario, particularly northwestern Ontario, have filed objections to the report. Most certainly we emphatically reject the reduction in the number of constituencies in northern Ontario from its present status of 12 to 11 particularly when we note that the province of Ontario is gaining seven seats. I do not need to dwell on the difficulties encountered by each of us in these more sparsely populated areas in attempting to carry out adequately our duties as members of parliament. The hon. member for Edmonton West has waxed eloquently on that. I agree with the comments I heard as I came into the House.

Northern Ontario is a vast, rugged region. Our communities are relatively small and they are very scattered throughout that whole incredible geographic area. Transportation routes by southern standards are not always convenient, and communications are frequently extremely difficult. The makeup of the population of northern Ontario also warrants mention. It contains citizens of English and French origin, as well as a significant percentage of those who speak neither English nor French, and indeed, and more particularly, one must recognize that northern Ontario contains a large population of our native people.

It is also important in conveying our views to the Electoral Boundaries Commission, which I hope is the point of this debate, to remember that in northern Ontario there are two time zones. At least three of our present constituencies in geographic area are larger than France. It is in fact further to drive from Toronto in Ontario to Kenora in Ontario than to drive from Toronto to Halifax in Nova Scotia. That gives some indication of the vastness of the area that we members from that part of the country have to try to represent adequately.

As the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, and I applaud him for speaking in a debate which appears to affect only Ontario, and as I said earlier, it really affects far more than the province of Ontario. It bears repeating that people in areas such as ours rely a great deal more heavily, and identify more closely because of their needs with their elected representatives, than those in heavily populated centres.

Because of the relatively small size of our communities and their distance from Ottawa, there is no question in my mind, even in the year 1976, that there is still a tremendous feeling and sense of isolation from the centres of power.

My own experience is that because government services very often do not extend into these remote areas and because access to the capital city, in this case Ottawa but it also applies to Queen's Park in Toronto, is difficult and expensive, there is a greater need for effective representation. It has been said, and it is very true, that a member of parliament in effect becomes an ombudsman. His role becomes far heavier because he is expected to supply to his constituents much of what is available by a phone call in Don Mills or a ten minute bus ride to an office in Windsor. That is not possible in our part of the country.

When the number of constituencies in northern Ontario was increased from 11 to 12 in 1968, that was applauded. It was looked upon as a great step forward. To reduce this number now by eliminating the riding of Thunder Bay would be, and is being considered as, a message to the people of this area that they will no longer be able to enjoy the excellent and exclusive representation that they presently expect, and justifiably so.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, have the problems which led to the creation of an additional constituency in 1968, just eight years ago, been resolved? Are the people of northern Ontario less deserving of adequate representation in 1976 than they were in 1968? I want to say for the record that the population of this area has not declined. What has occurred is that the rate of increase has not been as rapid as that in the southern part of the province.

It is little wonder that residents of the north have responded so quickly and so firmly to the electoral boundaries that they see thrust upon them. Throughout our region, municipal councils, chambers of commerce, labour unions, newspaper editorials and many individuals have objected strenuously to the proposal to reduce northern Ontario representation. I recall few issues which have upset our constituents as much as this. Residents are most concerned in northwestern Ontario, the area most affected. The municipal council of the city of Thunder Bay has unanimously passed a resolution protesting the change.

The communities of Geraldton, Schreiber, Longlac, Terrace Bay, Manitouwadge, Beardmore, Nakina, and Hornepayne felt so strongly about this issue that they jointly hired legal counsel to argue their case, so far to no avail.

There are precedents and ample evidence to maintain twelve seats in northern Ontario. First, in increasing the total number of members of the House of Commons, parliament sought to protect areas such as the maritimes, the Northwest Territories, and Northern Ontario, from losing seats. Second, parliament has departed from the strict principle of representation by population in adding a second seat in the Northwest Territories, an area not unlike our own in many respects. Third, the Ontario provincial commission recently went through the same process as we are in, and maintained the existing 15 provincial ridings. Surely residents should be given the same consideration by the federal commission. Fourth, the floor which is guaranteed smaller provinces is not only a safeguard of provincial rights, but also is a recognition of the difficulties of representing non-urban regions.

Finally, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act provides that the commission may depart up to 25 per cent from the electoral quota for the province because of, and I quote:

. . . special geographic considerations, sparsity or density of population, accessibility of regions, size or shape of regions, or for special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of the various regions.

The electoral quota for Ontario is 81,000, and the minimum permitted as a 25 per cent departure is 60,814. The average population of the 11 ridings proposed is over 70,000, well above the minimum permitted. If 12 ridings are maintained, the average would be more than 64,000, which is within the terms of the act.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it was clearly the intent of parliament when it enacted the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act that every allowance be made for geographical consideration, and I urge the commission to make every use of this section of the act to ensure that northern Ontario retains 12 seats.

The constituencies proposed by the commission are huge geographical monstrosities which sprawl across the region unmindful of traditional historical ties. They ignore transportation and communication patterns, and neglect linguistic affinities.

Consider for a moment a single constituency which would include both Windsor and Ottawa. The riding which the commission calls Cochrane North is larger and more diverse than such a constituency would be. But it certainly lacks the sophisticated communications network of a constituency in Southern Ontario. While reference has been made to urban and to rural ridings, much of Northern Ontario is neither urban nor rural; a great deal of it is best described as wilderness. But it is a wilderness which contains people, and these people need to be represented.

We have assigned to the commission a difficult and important responsibility. But while the task is difficult, it is not impossible. It is possible, as I have pointed out, to maintain 12 seats in Northern Ontario under the act. My fellow Liberal members of parliament from Northwestern Ontario and I appeared and addressed the commission during the public hearings. We submitted our own map to the commission showing how 12 constituencies could be maintained within the guidelines and quotas laid down by the act. I believe the act was drafted with areas such as ours in mind. That is why the 25 per cent tolerance, plus or minus, was provided.

I urge most strenuously, in this last stage of revulsion at the decision, the last opportunity we shall likely have, that the quality of representation enjoyed by our part of Canada should not be sacrificed by reducing the number of representatives to a level below that which our residents deserve and demand.

I have said nothing so far about the question of privilege raised earlier today. I respect the decision of Mr. Speaker—his feeling that he could not be the legal judge. But added to our concern with regard to the boundaries defined by the commission is concern over the very basis upon which the decision has been reached—that it has jeopardized and weakened the legal foundation for redistribution. Mr. Speaker, I trust you will convey to the Electoral Boundaries Commission of Ontario our strong feeling and our vigorous representation that a second look be taken at this situation, and that the Commission will, if I may say so, come to its senses and restore the representation we believe we are entitled to in my part of the country.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments as a member of parliament from Ontario. Let me assure my colleagues that I am not finding fault as far as my own riding is concerned. I represent a rural riding, the constituency of Parry Sound-Muskoka. It is a sparsely populated constituency, one with no large municipalities, but small ones scattered all through it. The commission added about 22 townships to my riding, which certainly represents a sizeable amount of land, but I doubt whether there would be more than 150 votes in the whole of those 22 townships unless the 8,000 or 10,000 wolves that eat the deer up there are allowed to vote, in which case it would be a different story.

I have listened with interest to my colleagues across the House speaking with regard to Northern Ontario, and as a Progressive Conservative representing a great party which has not had a member from Northern Ontario since 1935 I suppose I could sit back laughing about the proposal to reduce northern representation and say, "That's just wonderful". But with all due respect I do feel that the people of Northern Ontario are entitled to 12 members instead of 11, even though it would probably make no difference to us as a party in 1978.

I wish to make a few comments on that aspect and support the many fine members of parliament who feel that the decision of the commission was a retrograde step. I have the greatest sympathy for the Electoral Boundaries Commission which is pretty well hemmed in by the guidelines which have been set for it by way of minimum population figures and so on. However, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) who preceded me pointed out that the population of the region would warrant 12 seats, and I certainly hope the commission will consider his submissions on that basis.

In my own riding I am not far above the minimum of 60,000. The population of Parry Sound-Muskoka is around 62,900. The hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned talk of secession in Northern Ontario. I know there are certain people in Northern Ontario who feel that Northern Ontario should be an entirely different province. That feeling is brought about by the idea that they have been forgotten by higher levels of government to the south. I am hoping the commissioners will bear this in mind when considering the matter again.

I was interested to hear the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) speak today about the new boundaries to his riding. Looking at the map, it is certainly quite small in comparison to my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. He was complaining about difficulties of one kind and another, and in my view he has cause for complaint because certain comunities in that area were selected to go to the new and enlarged constituency of Timiskaming.

The hon. member stated that the new riding of Timiskaming would be 900 miles in extent. I think he must have been talking about kilometres. I think he was stretching it a bit. I doubt whether even in the new and enlarged riding of Timiskaming it would be much over 550 miles from the southern end to Moosonee and James Bay. He did not mention that he was being given a very choice part of the territorial district of Nipissing, the part that was in Renfrew North. That is the part which is very close to my own riding and which is actually oriented to the riding of Parry Sound, the township of Chisolm, which is now to be part of the new riding of Timiskaming.

The idea of moving down from 12 to 11 seats does not sit too well with us, Mr. Speaker. I consider myself a northerner. Half my riding is a territorial district. Territorial districts are for the most part in northern Ontario, with the exception of Parry Sound. The southern portion of my riding is the regional municipality of Muskoka. Representing a territorial district I have every sympathy with northern Ontario members and I hope the boundaries commission will see fit to let northern Ontario retain its 12 seats. As matters stand, Ontario will end up with seven extra seats. This great Toronto horseshoe will be getting eight seats and the rest of Ontario is getting no increase. One particular area, northern Ontario, is losing a seat.

As the hon. member for Nipissing so rightly pointed out, there is a great trend toward urbanization. He stated that by the year 2000 94 per cent of the people of Canada will be residing in 12 congested urban areas. Let us hope something will be done to keep more people in rural areas where they will be happier, healthier, and live a lot longer. Although they will probably not make so much salary, they will live a better rounded life.

I see the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) getting ready in anticipation of speaking. Having checked the boundaries of his riding I see the commissioners have done a slicing job and removed part of the city of Sault Ste. Marie and placed it in the riding of Algoma. I am sure the hon. member is not too elated with that. The city of Sault Ste. Marie is, I was going to say an island unto itself, but it is at least an entity. It is a community. The ten or eleven thousand people who are being cut away from the city so far as the federal riding is concerned are very unhappy about it, and I am sure he will be speaking most eloquently on behalf of his riding. As I mentioned to him, he has not been the only one to speak in support; the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) spoke on the matter and read into the record a letter from the Ontario minister of housing.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my comments will be brief. The purpose of this intervention, which has already been outlined to the Electoral Boundaries Commission on maps, is not to take issue with the proposed revisions of population distribution between the ridings of London East and London West. Rather it is to propose a simpler and less disruptive boundary between these two ridings while maintaining the same population distribution as proposed by the federal boundaries commission. It seems to me that one of the criteria which common sense would dictate should play a part in the considerations of the commissioners is that of minimizing the disruption of existing ridings.

[Mr. Darling.]

After the election of 1968, the first in the newly created ridings of London East and London West which resulted from redistribution, considerable confusion existed in the minds of residents as to which riding they lived in, and this was evidenced by the substantial amount of misdirected mail and telephone calls which both members received. This has now diminished to the point where, eight years later, it is safe to say that 95 per cent of the constituents know in which constituency they live. While accepting that some disruption is necessary with redistribution, it is suggested that new boundaries should keep disruption to the absolute minimum.

The proposal I am advancing has absolutely no bearing on any boundary of these ridings except the joint boundary, the common north-south boundary, between London East and London West. In the commissioners' proposal, in the northern section of the riding they carved out a much larger chunk of London West than was necessary. Then in order to compensate for this excessive carving in the northern portion of the riding, they had to carve an equally large chunk out of London East in the Southern section.

I believe that the boundary which would be achieved by a much smaller adjustment in the northern section of the riding would be considerably fairer and more reasonable from the point of view of the residents of both these ridings. It is a simpler boundary since it follows well-known thoroughfares, makes use of well-known streets, and will be much clearer for the residents to understand than will watercourses, less well-known streets, or relatively unknown railroad tracks.

Now I make a political comment, Mr. Speaker. Both ridings were won by the same party in the last election by substantial margins, and I think the fact that both sitting members support the proposed revision that I am advancing is a clear indication that it is felt that there is virtually no political advantage to be gained from either set of redistributed boundaries.

We believe, and I propose to the House, that one of the criteria that should be urged upon the commissioners is the minimizing of disruption for existing constituents. It seems to me that the disruption should be minimized to the greatest extent possible, consistent with the achieving of a proper distribution balance between the existing ridings.

I would therefore urge upon the commissioners of the federal boundaries commission that they re-examine their proposed boundary between the ridings of London East and London West and alter it so as to minimize the disruption they are imposing upon the residents of both ridings, and achieve their desired population distribution by substantially moving back the boundary in the northerly section of the riding, keeping the existing boundary between the two ridings in the southerly portion of the riding.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle) is rising on a point of order.

● (2030)

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, since I shall be unable to attend the sitting of the House tomorrow and I must submit a brief on redistribution of electoral boundaries in Quebec, particularly on the south shore of Montreal, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to interrupt the debate on the Ontario ridings for only 5 or 6 minutes so I may make my own comments. Will the House grant me unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my understanding that the hon. member for Chambly will talk about a riding in the province of Quebec and then we will immediately revert to the province of Ontario. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING QUEBEC

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank my colleagues for allowing me to interrupt the debate on the redistribution of the ridings in the fair province of Ontario, to hear a few comments on the province of Quebec and to give hon. members the opportunity to find out that it is not easy to change the electoral map; in particular the commissioners should have known more about the various communities when they carved out the Quebec territory.

Mr. Speaker, my comments are aimed at requesting that the Electoral Boundaries Commission review its decision concerning my riding of Chambly to which part of the present riding of Saint-Hyacinthe has been added, after which it has been split into two. What I would like to see, Mr. Speaker, is that the towns of Saint-Bruno, Montarville and Saint-Basile be taken out of the Chambly riding and added to the future riding of Verchères. The reasons are obvious and very simple. First, my intervention arises from explicit requests from the authorities of these two municipalities, public agencies such as chambers of commerce, school boards and all public and quasi-public bodies of that area.

At this time, if the commission did not change its figures, the new riding of Chambly would count 81,000 inhabitants and that of Verchères 71,000. However, we are aware that the riding of Verchères, as it is now and shall have to continue to grow, is a predominantly rural riding and therefore its growth rate will be relatively low, while Chambly, with towns like Saint-Hubert and Chambly, is mostly an industrial riding with a high rate of residential development. So the growth rate of the population is among the highest. If we made forecasts for 1981, it is obvious that the town of Saint-Hubert should constitute a riding by itself.

And we will have to separate the town of Chambly. But if we take the territory of Verchères to which we would add the municipalities of Saint-Bruno and Saint-Basile in 1981, it could still remain a riding. Anyway, according to 1971 figures, the population of Verchères, which is known to remain stable, would now be about 90,000 and Chambly's with its high rate of population growth would amount to about 62,000 or 63,000 constituents.

The reasons not to dissociate Saint-Bruno and Saint-Basile from municipalities such as Boucherville, Belœil and Sainte-Julie are quite simple. Under an agreement on tourism, our own government will grant $13 million for developing green spaces and agricultural area in this territory. Consequently, we will achieve once and for all what has been called the Bois de Verchères project. This implies the cooperation of all municipal boards because this project expands over all these municipalities. Therefore we need cooperation.

Clearly the commissioners could not know that policy. But the document will be signed soon and the municipalities must remain within the same constituency.

As far as environment is concerned, I wish to indicate there is not only a territorial distribution agreement, but also a land-use agreement.

As for rural zoning and municipal infrastructures, such as sewer and water systems, although we are evidently surrounded by rivers, we have nonetheless water supply problems, and the municipalities, whether Boucherville, Sainte-Julie, Saint-Bruno or Saint-Basile must be supplied from one source, from the same purification plants, and the bulk of the expenses are financed in the normal way. There is of course the Department of Municipal Affairs in Quebec, but it gets money from Ottawa.

I wonder why in areas of intensive development, in areas such as the south shore where we find headquarters of the CMHC which for the last two years made direct loans of about $60 million, I wonder why more consideration is not given to local factors and the role of the member of Parliament. In such areas, his role is not strictly that of a law-maker coming to Ottawa five days a week to ensure better quality of life to all. His basic duty is in the nature of an administration role, which is hard to perform when there is a multiplicity of problems.

Let us take the City of Saint-Hubert for instance. It is experiencing very active development. It is also a city where urban renewal must retain attention. Taking the municipality of Chambly, with the Department of Northern Development and Indian Affairs and the industrial park project, we have another type of problem although linking easily with those in Saint-Hubert. But with the airport between Saint-Hubert and Saint-Bruno, when the present member for Chambly leaves Saint-Bruno to go to Saint-Hubert, he feels he is getting into a different constituency. This is something I must live with. And if I do represent the eventual Chambly constituency, I have no wish to keep on shifting personalities, as I now have to, because of absolutely different sets of problems.

So, Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I ask the commission to review its work. This is not only the wish of the hon. member for Chambly, it is also that of the various town councils affected in this case, those of Saint-Basile and Saint-Bruno, which want to be part of the Verchères Riding, as well as those of Boucherville and Belœil, which would like to work and be in the same riding as these two towns which they will eventually lose if the commission does not modify its decision. Mr. Speaker, this is also the most sincere wish of the present member for Chambly, who still does not know which riding he will represent. But the wish I express as member for Chambly arises not from electoral concern, so to speak, but much more from my own experience of the evolution and expansion of that community. This experience I have acquired since 1970, first when I was an assistant to a provincial minister and representative for a riding from this area and, since 1974, as a federal member of Parliament closely linked to the development and expansion of this region.

So I urge the commission, which has refused to consider the report submitted by an ad hoc committee from Saint-Bruno and Saint-Basile and which has refused to change its first version, I urge it, following my speech tonight, to accept to review its decision. I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you very much, once again, dear colleagues.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The House will now revert to the consideration of the objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission of the province of Ontario.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have listened this afternoon with interest to the arguments presented on both sides of the House describing how hon. members and their constituents feel the constituencies should be divided. Some were very fair in their criticisms while others were a little selfish.

I want to begin by congratulating the commission before which I had the privilege, along with many representatives of my riding, of appearing. I congratulate the commission on its willingness and on its openmindedness in reconsidering its proposal of last August, and in its consideration of a number of objections.

Objections in the province of Ontario numbered 203 and were presented at hearings in Toronto, Thunder Bay, London, Windsor, Belleville, Ottawa, Welland, and Sudbury. As a result of these objections there were 67 changes made. This indicates that the commissioners were thinking of the people and taking into consideration the traditional and historic links as well as the cultural activities of communities.

The county council of the county of Haliburton appeared before the commission in Belleville. Haliburton county was severed from its traditional and historical ties with the County of Victoria and put into the great riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. We heard from the able hon. member representing that riding a few minutes ago.

It is my suggestion that there are actually next to no historical links between the County of Haliburton and the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka. They are not linked by watersheds, land borders or anything else. In making a direct representation, the Haliburton County Council along with many other people drew this to the attention of the Commission. The commissioners listened to the view of the people. They made this change and brought it back to the County of Victoria. This made much sense because in the county the administration, the businesses, the way of life of the people, the hospitals, the medical services, the chambers of commerce, the county council, what used to be the War Measures Association, and the local municipalities have much in common. I must congratulate the commission for taking this into consideration. They listened to the people and their wishes. I will have more to say about community of interest a little later.

The task of the commission is a most difficult one. It is impossible for a commission to come up with a solution that will be 100 per cent satisfactory to all concerned. However, when reason and common sense are injected into a problem of this nature the results often are very desirable.

Again, as I say, I think in the section of the province I have the honour and privilege to represent the commission was very favourable to the wishes of the people as far as possible. We must remember that we gave them a task to do. We gave them a formula and guidelines. They were confined to the guidelines set down by the House of Commons. They did not come up with what was altogether a solution in the first proposal. But they held hearings and made 67 changes; so they were listening. However, here we have some members criticizing them in respect of the difficult decisions they have had to reach. I must, in this regard, express my congratulations to the commissioners.

All sections of this province are different. I lost six townships through redistribution, townships which I greatly respect, and townships in which I have learned to work with the people. I knew their problems and had an understanding of the nature of life in those communities, including the expectations of the people and what would help them to live in some of the remote areas.

I must speak of the townships in North Hastings which I lost and regained in the redistribution in 1968. We had to go through the process of initiating the people into being a part of Victoria Haliburton. They were a little hesitant to come. We were new people to them. We probably operated in a different manner in respect of many of the services. But now they are a part of the community. They are very good people. However, they are now being placed in the riding of Hastings Frontenac. I am sure they will have very good representation there, but they really wonder why the change is being made. They say they have become accustomed to being in Victoria-Haliburton and wonder if they are being used as pawns. These people resent this. They do not know where they are going. I think we should pay a little more attention to the wishes of these people wherever possible. I realized it is difficult to please all people.

Another two townships involved are Rama and Mara. They were in the riding of Victoria-Haliburton when I first was elected in 1965. Now they are being placed in the riding of Simcoe. They are adjacent to the riding of Simcoe, and as much as I hate to lose them because the people there are fine people—and again they understand me and I hope I understand them—their proximity to the other riding probably means that we cannot argue too much about the change.

There is the problem of the lack of general knowledge concerning redistribution and what it is all about. I do not think the people are well enough informed about redistribution. I realize that there is the advertising in the newpapers and through other media, but possibly people do not take the time to think about the situation until it is too late to put in an objection. I believe that in future publications concerning redistribution we will have to put forward a better effort to enlighten our people and make them fully aware that it is in their interests to speak up at public hearings and express their wishes with regard to redistribution. This probably is more true in the rural ridings of Ontario than it is in the urban ridings. There is a different way of life. The representation is different.

I believe that the rural people are closer to their member of parliament. They expect him to attend as many functions as possible. As a rural member I enjoy these functions, but there are more than I really can attend. However, this is part of the role of a rural member of parliament. This is good for all concerned. It gives the member an exposure to his constituents. They feel freer to come to him with their problems when they can meet him at a hockey match, a fall fair, or other functions in which they participate with the member.

On such occasions the people will talk to their member with a much lighter heart and more freely than if they met him at some more formal function. I think this factor must be taken into consideration in respect of the rural parts of Canada. We must consider the rural way of life in Canada and the close relationship that members have with their constituents.

I know that many metropolitan areas are ably represented. But if I were free to do so I could tell the story as explained to me by an hon. member when he described some of the urban ridings in Ontario. I believe my language would be restrained. However, this is a story for another place.

The news media also come into this. A large riding may have up to 20 or more newspapers. In additon there are many radio and television stations which cover the area. In an urban area there may be two television stations and two radio stations. In the rural areas one has to cater to a smaller media. This also must be taken into account. It is difficult to get the message across to one's constituents in a large, spead-out rural riding.

The population growth picture probably is something else to which we do not give enough attention in respect of the formula concerning the electoral boundaries commissions. Many parts of rural Ontario, the smaller cities and larger towns, receive an influx of retired people who want the better way of life. We cannot blame them for that, but we must consider that. There will be many thousands more people in the ridings by the time this is enacted. This is why at this time the population growth potential should be considered.

Now I should like to return to the matter of community of interest on which I touched briefly a few moments ago. In the rural parts of Ontario because of the methods of transportation and communication the people mingle back and forth. They have different community activities. Senior citizens in senior citizens' homes are now being bussed to other senior citizens' homes, and up to Ottawa by special buses with wheelchairs in them and everything else. This is part of life in a rural riding which is not as common as it is in urban ridings, not that it does not exist in urban ridings but it is on a different scale. They suffer from a lack of closeness to their elected representative at either the provincial or municipal level.

Taking all this into consideration I think that the commission has done a reasonably good job. I know that approximately 75 per cent of the suggestions that were put before the commission by different organizations and groups within my riding were well received. This is a very good average. I know that probably we would all like to have 100 per cent of our requests accepted, but 75 per cent is a good average. It is a good average for a job that is hard to do if you wish to please everybody, and it is a good average for a job with a formula which was probably outdated before it was started. That is why I cannot be too critical and say that the commission should have done this or should have done things over again.

As I said a few moments ago, with regard to central Ontario, the heart of greater Ontario, the commission has done a conscientious and sincere job. Some of the criticisms that hon. members are making of the decisions of the commission as regards the boundaries of their ridings perhaps should not be directed at the commission but rather at the people who established a formula to be used by the commission. I hope that when electoral boundaries are reviewed again they will look back at some of the suggestions put forward here this afternoon and this evening—and I do not mean just my suggestions but other very constructive suggestions that I have heard here—and they will take them into consideration when the next guidelines are set down for the electoral boundaries commission.

I have often wondered who speaks for you, Mr. Speaker, in a debate such as this. I suppose that is a privilege which one who occupies your most respected position must give up, but I want to thank you again for paying attention to my recommendations. I am sure that we will hear much from members of the other provinces. I believe that the Ontario representation has been reasonably well put forth. As I said, I was a little disappointed at some of the criticism regarding boundary ridings proposed by the commission, which was hampered by the guidelines. However, I hope it has all been constructive.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief because I know several of my colleagues also want to participate in this debate that affects their riding. First of all, I should like to thank the commission for having included paragraph "d" in the designation of my riding, paragraph which in part says that the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton is included in the riding of Cumberland.

In paragraph "d", the commission took into consideration the cultural identity of the electors of that municipality, which used to be part of the federal riding of Russell and which it will be an honour for me to serve. Moreover, I shall make it a point to meet my new electors as soon as possible. Looking over the illustrious names in that municipality such as the MacDonalds, the Boudrias, the McTeers and the Lamothe, I can assure them that I will make it a point of honour to represent them well.

Mr. Speaker, while I am pleased that this municipality has been added I nevertheless deplore the fact that the commission has deemed it advisable to leave out Russell in the name of my constituency. I can hardly understand such a recommendation, because on page 16 of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario, we find in schedule "d" section 23, the definition and the make-up of my constituency named Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. However, they wanted to change that name for that of Glengarry-Prescott.

Section "a" concerning the make-up of the constituency mentions the county of Prescott, section "b" the county of Russell, section "c" the county of Glengarry, except the township of Charlottenburg and the village of Lancaster and the above mentioned section "d" the township of Cumberland. Section "b" refers to the county of Russell and not part of it. I therefore suggest that the commission did not take in consideration the fact that the population wished to keep their identity as citizens of Russell. On their behalf, I ask the commission to recommend that the name be changed.

[English]

Under section C the Township of Charlottenburg and the village of Lancaster are excluded from the county of Glengarry. My objection would have been only to the changing of the name of my riding had the commission omitted the last part of section C which states "but excluding the village of Lancaster and the township of Charlottenburg".

This part of my riding was referred to as Glengarry not only since the last redistribution, the one before or others in the past, but since well before Confederation. I should like to mention for the record that the hon. member who represented Glengarry before Confederation was none other than the Hon. Donald Alexander MacDonald. I should also like to mention for the record that he was born in St. Raphael in the township of Charlottenburg, which the commission wants to withdraw from Glengarry. The hon. gentleman was elected to the legislative assembly of the province of Canada in 1857 to represent the riding of Glengarry.

Because the riding existed before Confederation and because the hon. gentleman from Charlottenburg represented it when it became part of Confederation I have received many complaints from constituents who wish to remain Glengarrians, those in Charlottenburg and those from the village of Lancaster.

As one who has shared the first 50 years of his life with fellow Glengarrians, I also object to the recommendations of this commission. How would we explain to a young piper from Lancaster that he can still belong to the Glengarry Pipe Band but he is no longer a Glengarrian, or worse still, how would we explain to a veteran of the Glengarry Highlanders who lives in Charlottenburg and served his country as a Glengarry Highlander that he will no longer be a Glengarrian?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the area I represent is made of three former counties and all three have their own page of history. So I suggest that this recommendation of the commission be reconsidered and that these three historical counties be left unchanged.

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, by any political standards there is no reason for my objecting to the boundaries of the newly created riding of Prince Edward in Ontario. As outlined in paragraph 64 on page 27 of the Boundaries Commission Report for Ontario, it is made up of the whole of Prince Edward County and that portion of Hastings County comprising the towns of Thurlow and Tyendinaga, the village of Deseronto, and the city of Belleville where I live.

I have lived in this area all of my adult life and I have seen boundaries change, and change back again. As the sitting member for a major portion of the population of the new area since 1972 I do not, however, consider that I have any proprietary right to the new seat. Having said that, I wish to point out that my life has been spent in public service in the area, and I feel I am aware of its problems to a greater degree than some. Each time the boundaries have been changed, there has been a disruption of traditional communities of interest. Now we are faced again with a severance which will put aside these regional interests. This time there seems to be an opportunity, at least partially, to correct the situation without unduly disturbing any other boundaries.

So that there will be no misunderstanding, I should point out that I am going to speak in part about the proposed riding of Northumberland, most of which is now served by the most capable member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees).

Changes will also be suggested in the proposed riding of Hastings-Frontenac, but these will be of a nature which will not materially or drastically affect that area. Historically, commercially, from the point of view of municipal government, communications, and so many other factors, the area south of No. 7 highway in Hastings county has always related to the larger urban areas of Trenton and Belleville. Even the boundaries of this area set prior to 1968 when it was known as Hastings South took into consideration the natural bonds of the area south of No. 7 highway.

Let me now outline briefly the changes I propose, which are supported by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. I suggest that the township of Rawden, with a population of 2,115; and the village of Stirling, with a population of 1,500, should be rejoined to the riding of Northumberland, making a new population for that constituency of 67,901. Let the two townships of Huntingdon, with a population of 1,635, and Hungerford with a population of 2,292, and the village of Tweed with a population of 1,738, be rejoined to the area to the south to be called Prince Edward, which will increase that constituency to 72,394.

On checking the arithmetic this will leave the proposed riding of Hastings-Frontenac with a population of 65,636. Very quickly we will see that this leaves a population in the area spread much more evenly than would be the case under the proposal now put forward by the commission.

Ending my very brief intervention may I say that by and large I am not unhappy with the decision of the commission. Over the next few hours there will be a number of suggestions for minor variations, such as mine, all of which I am sure will bear close scrutiny. Only the commission itself will have the final opportunity to make changes.

Under the system we are bound by, there will be no further appeal, and I can only ask as strongly as possible that our representations be taken seriously.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario. I sympathize with the commissioners on their task to redesign the electoral boundaries of the province for the next federal election in 1978.

The commissioners have had the dilemma of trying to reconcile the criterion of representation by population with that of taking into account the geographical size of areas and community of interest, and I, along with many of my colleagues from northern Ontario, was quite upset about the first revision which showed that northern Ontario would lose two seats and that its representation would be reduced from 12 to 10. We argued against that reduction in the number of voices speaking for northern Ontario, which has peculiar interests and needs, and thought we had made some points with the commission. Lo, when it came out with this latest and final draft, this final revision, we were shocked to see that the representation had been reduced by one, but in so doing the boundaries of many ridings had been redesigned to the point where they did not seem to make sense, and one seat, the riding of Thunder Bay, was done away with entirely.

We in the north have strong feelings about the need for keeping up representation in our area of the province. Northern Ontario is a part of a province of vast size. There are great distances between a few major urban centres, and many small towns and villages. The point to be remembered is the great distance and a lack of accessibility, not only between communities but between these communities and the centres of governmental power, whether it be in Toronto or in Ottawa. Therefore, as other hon. members have said, it is important that the citizens of northern Ontario have as strong a voice as possible and as many voices as they can have to speak for their interests. Hence we need as many members of parliament from the north as can be justified on the grounds of population, geography, and community of interest.

We think it is important that our representation be kept at 12 seats because the people of northern Ontario see their members of parliament as ombudsmen, people who deal with many problems of government bureaucracy which the people themselves would be unable to deal with because of their remoteness from the centres of governmental power, the great distances between communites, and their inaccessibility to civil servants. Hence members of parliament provide a very important service on a one to one basis with their constituents.

Members of parliament always play important roles in making representations on behalf of municipalities to government officials, both at the provincial and federal levels. Therefore it is important that members of parliament have a real familiarity with the peculiar needs of the various communities within their constituencies. If we keep reducing the number of members of parliament in northern Ontario, that will mean that the size of the ridings will geographically increase, and one member will have that many more communities to take care of, to familiarize himself with, and to meet their needs equally as he tries to meet the needs of many other groups and interests within his constituency.

For my colleagues in northern Ontario who represent rural ridings or farflung ridings I have the greatest admiration and sympathy. It is a very onerous task and a tremendous one for them to represent communities which often are hundreds and hundreds of miles apart.

I represent an urban riding, the city of Sault Ste. Marie. It has been my privilege to represent that riding since 1972, and I find that, like my counterparts in the north, I have a very important role to play as an ombudsman and in making representations to the government. So it was with a great deal of surprise that I saw the final map as drawn up by the commissioners because, out of the blue, I found that part of the city of Sault Ste. Marie was lopped off and put into the rural riding of Algoma. In effect there are two sections of my former riding which now go into the riding of Algoma: the Prince Township area, including the village of Gros Cap, and a large section of ward 1, amounting to a total population of about 11,000 which now would be moved into the federal riding of Algoma.

I cannot fathom the rationale of the commissioners in doing what they did. I can understand their argument. They had to keep a minimum population in northern Ontario ridings, especially Algoma, a rural, sparsely populated riding. They had to keep a minimum of 60,814 voters in the riding. To do this they had to take away part of the population of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, and add it to the rural riding. That makes no sense, especially if one examines the criteria according to which the commissioners are supposed to work.

The province of Ontario, in its redistribution plans, at one time thought of dividing the city, but then thought better. It heard representations from the people of Sault Ste. Marie, heard arguments concerning community of interest, after which the provincial government decided to keep the provincial constituency intact.

The municipal council of Sault Ste. Marie has objected to the proposed plan to put part of the city into the new riding of Algoma, and the majority of residents affected have also objected. They have called and written to me, saying that they cannot see the logic of this proposal, and have nothing in common with the rural riding of Algoma, which is far-flung and contains many small communities. The people in the city who will be included in the new riding of Algoma are upset at the commissioners' decision. I share their concern.

If one compares the urban riding of Sault Ste. Marie with the rural riding of Algoma, one can see that there is little in common between both ridings. Algoma consists of a number of small communities, mainly one-industry towns; many of the industries are foundering. There is great unemployment in the region and the people live economically precarious lives. Hence such communities struggle to survive. They find it difficult to attract new industry. The municipalities are crushed by existing debts, and taxes are increasing. The people of the community are not in the same boat as the people of Sault Ste. Marie. The city is flourishing. It contains a major industry, Algoma Steel, and many subsidiary industries.

In addition the people of Sault Ste. Marie have no community of interest with the people of Blind River, Bruce Mines or Elliot Lake in Algoma riding. Nor can the citizens of the city find much in common with the dairy farmers of Algoma or other cash crop farmers of that riding. There does not seem to be much community of interest between those two parts of the province. The two ridings have little in common economically. Nor is there a cultural community of interest involving the larger urban centre, Sault Ste. Marie, and smaller communities throughout Algoma riding.

I cannot fathom the rationale for breaking up an urban riding, like Sault Ste. Marie, and adding 11,000 of its residents to the riding of Algoma. The hon. member representing Algoma will have to service the extra constituents. He will need to consider their problems and, at the same time, try to please the constituents of the other small municipalities and interest groups in his far-flung riding.

Once the commissioners made the philosophic decision to reduce the number of seats in northern Ontario, they manipulated boundary lines and arrived at a compromise solution. They took portions of large urban ridings in northern Ontario and added them to less populous rural ridings in which the populations were below the minimum magic figure. I understand that this has been done in the case of Sudbury and of Thunder Bay as well.

What the commission has done will not deal with the root of the problem, maintaining 12 seats. I would have preferred it if the commissioners had decided to keep 12 seats, and recognized, as we have argued for many years in the north, that you cannot always abide by a rigid formula of representation by population. You have to take into account the size of ridings in the north. By their nature they are sparsely populated. Therefore one must create ridings which are manageable, which can be serviced. We should not have ridings stretching hundreds of miles from end to end. You can get round this difficulty only by making at least 12 ridings in northern Ontario. Once you go below the 12 riding limit you run into all kinds of difficulties, as is evident in this latest redistribution attempt.

The commissioners tried to soften the blow by reducing the number of northern Ontario seats to 11, but in so doing negated a fundamental principle, the need to keep intact community of interest. The result is an illogical cutting up of urban ridings. One part of the city riding has been added to a rural riding, and both rural and city people are all at ease in the new riding. They find no common ground. Their focus is different, their needs are different, and the result is the sort of discontent we witness at present in northern Ontario.

I cannot propose a solution to the problem of the riding in Sault Ste. Marie alone. I only wish that some people had looked at the map before deciding. If you returned to Sault Ste. Marie those people the commissioners took from the city and added to Algoma, Algoma would still have to find 10,000 population somewhere else. If you tried to amend the Algoma boundary, you would bite into another riding and take population from it. There is a domino effect in this. Once you start tampering with boundaries, no matter in which direction, the population of one riding may go up, but the population of the next riding will go down. That riding may need to recapture some extra population. I do not think the solution necessarily is to leave Sault Ste. Marie alone and to let Algoma find the population it needs somewhere else. I say this because the domino effect comes into play and, in the end, you will be back to square one.

I submit that the commissioners should again examine northern Ontario, realize it is unique, recognize its problems and the difficulties members of parliament face who represent such a vast area, and go back to the drawing board. We say that the 12 seats of the area have worked well. The commission should say, "We shall take into account the geography of northern Ontario and relax the representation by population formula, to make sure that community of interest and geography take precedence."

I repeat, the people of my riding are upset that part of the city will no longer be in the riding of Sault Ste. Marie, but part of the new riding of Algoma. The population of the city opposes any part of the city being put in another riding. The Soo is an urban centre. It has worked well as a community in the past. The people have community of interest and want to see it maintained. I suggest that the commissioners should go back to the drawing board and begin with the basic proposition that we must maintain 12 seats in northern Ontario, and draw the map accordingly. I sympathize with the commissioners; their job is tough. However, we must consider the concerns of the people of northern Ontario. They have legitimate complaints. They have every right to send at least 12 representatives to the Parliament of Canada.

The commission's latest effort, although well-intentioned, has led to discontent and dissatisfaction. The people of the community object to the cutting up of the urban riding. I again say that I hope the commissioners will go back to that basic premise of 12 seats and not cut up urban ridings.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. My intervention will be very short because primarily I am satisfied with the recommendations put forward by the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Ethier) who was sorry to see the recommendation that Charlottenburgh Township and the village of Lancaster will be lost, although I am happy that the Electoral Boundaries Commission paid heed to the motion put forward by the township of Charlottenburgh, both in 1975 and 1973, requesting that they become part of the riding of Stormont-Dundas. Approximately one half of the population works in the city of Cornwall in the constituency of Stormont-Dundas. Therefore it will be a much more homogenous riding with Charlottenburgh included.

I am also happy to take the latter half of Dundas County. I know I will have big shoes to fill, following the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who was born in that area. Although I will not be able to eat as much chicken on the banquet circuit as the hon. member, I hope I can accomplish what he has—accomplished in past years.

One of my concerns with respect to the recommendations is that my riding will now be 50 per cent rural and 50 per cent urban, with a population increase of approximately 18,000 people. If you look at the electoral quotient of 81,000 and at the new ridings, you can see that the average population for a rural and partially urban area is between 66,000 and 70,000. Therefore I am a little concerned that I will not be able to maintain close relationship with the constituents in my riding with this substantial increase to 85,000.

It is important to note that in a lot of federal ridings, and this goes for all members but particularly in Ontario, we cover almost two provincial ridings. In my case I have approximately 30,000 people more than each of my provincial counterparts. It is important to note in the provinces where they are reducing areas to maintain a closer relationship with constituents, that federally with respect to rural areas the responsibility is getting greater. The Electoral Boundaries Commission must take this into consideration when making its final decision.

Primarily, I am very happy with the decisions taken by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I appreciate the opportunity to make this short intervention.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley). He expressed happiness with the decision of the commissioners with regard to the two great townships and one incorporated village in the county of Dundas, Mountain, Matilda, and the village of Iroquois which I now have the honour to represent in this parliament. His happiness was expressed in terms of those areas coming to him. I say to him that we will be watching very carefully to ensure that the good people in that area are properly represented. I would not want the amity of this situation to be changed in any way.

I want the hon. member to know they are fine people. They have problems in terms of representation here, in terms of agriculture, the drainage problems of the South Nation River and many other things requiring a great amount of attention and, more important co-operation between the three levels of government. I do not happily look forward to relinquishing representation in that area. I will be closely looking at the representation they receive in the furure, whether from the present incumbent for Stormont-Dundas or someone else.

As the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas said, these redistributions are not completely happy. Certain areas may be included in a constituency for a long period of time and, as a result of progress, they change. I have a double wrench in terms of this redistribution. One was mentioned by my friend for Stormont-Dundas, the fact that that part of Dundas County that I represent will go elsewhere. More than that, I am losing the Village of Cardinal. My home town is the Village of Cardinal. I know no one in this House would hold it against me if I were to admit that I am from the great village of Cardinal which has contributed in so many ways to the well-being of eastern Ontario.

In this mobile age in which we live I suppose I am among a minority, perhaps a sizeable minority, of members of parliament who represent the place where they grew up and where their parents lived, at least one of my parents still lives there and I can still call it home. The only problem with representing your home town is that many people in the town remember when you ran around in shorts and were perhaps more annoying than constructive to many of the neighbours, their gardens and chicken-houses. They sometimes cannot quite understand that there may be some hope in the progress of young people of their own town and that they can finally represent them in the parliament of Canada.

I do not think there is a greater honour that can come to any person than to represent the people among whom he grew up, and who were his friends as a youth as well as the friends and acquaintances of his family. Therefore this is quite a wrench for me in another way. However, I suppose we are all in one way or another the victim of change.

While there has not been a noticeable population growth in the southern part of Grenville County and the part of Dundas County which forms part of Grenville-Carleton, there has occurred in the northern part of that riding, that part of the township of Gloucester on Long Island, the new township of Rideau, the township of Nepean, the township of Osgoode, and the new township of Goulburn, a tremendous growth. This is as a result of the growth of public servants in this country and the attraction to the area of those employed in industry and business who, in one way or another, are dependent upon or related to the public service of this country. As a result, these changes have taken place.

I tried mightily to find some way within the criteria established by the statute to resist the change in boundaries, but regretfully that was not possible. Whether one represents an area for a long or a short time, he becomes used to balancing the various problems that exist. In the circumstances the report of the commissioners, which is the subject of this debate tonight and which was finally tabled as a result of the submissions that were made to the commission after it had originally reported, was the best possible job that could be done, not only with regard to my constituency but all constituencies on the Ontario side of the national capital.

Regretting as we must the change that occurs, I think it is the best possible balance and I commend the commissioners for doing an extremely difficult job so well. I know they lingered over the job a long time. I know they were concerned about it. However, what they did in terms of the national capital area, an area I can speak of with some authority, was a good job.

● (2130)

There was some feeling among members of parliament, and I heard it expressed on all sides of the House and in all the parties represented here, that there was not much point in making a submission to the commission, that their minds were made up and that they would not listen anyway. But I must say that this was not the case with respect to the ridings of which I speak and which were the subject of a lengthy submission dated October 29, 1975, prepared under the leadership of my friend, the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). As I say, it was a lengthy submission and it argued the case for a change from the first findings of the commission with respect to its original distribution to those which were ultimately found in the ridings which were covered by it.

There was a conscious canvas of opinion by all the members in the area of the municipal councils, the school boards, the historical atlases, the maps, the instruments of social communication and social intercourse within the area that was under discussion. That submission was prepared and submitted to the commission by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and others and it was accepted, not because of its length, but because it was a rational explanation of the way in which the commission had gone wrong, in our respectful submission, and how the criteria of the act, in terms of numbers, could be answered and the other criteria not be ignored, and the important community of interest preserved.

As a result, with the regrets I have expressed personally as to that redistribution, as any person who represents an area must, I believe the best possible job was done by the commission in terms of the ridings that make up the national capital area on the Ontario side of the river and slightly beyond. I know there may be differences of opinion with respect to that, but I hope my colleagues in the House will understand the basis upon which it is made and I would be very happy to show my colleagues, when this debate is completed, the submission to which I referred, which was complete and covered every detail and to which each of us was able to make what I hope was considered to be a constructive comment upon the original proposals for the area.

The northern part around the city has its roots in the old part of Carleton County, and its centre of gravity toward the county seat, now the regional government seat and the seat of the board of education in the area, and all of these things reflect a community of interest which is buttressed by employment factors and locations of places of employment in the area.

All in all, Sir, I believe the best that could be done was done. The wishes of the people, at least as expressed by their representatives in the local area, were answered. Those matters which contribute to that broad field of community of interests were honoured. So this redistribution is a sound one.

There is always a problem with names. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton would, I am sure, like to have his constituency remain with the name Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton. When one looks at the map and the location of the municipalities which are included in his constituency, one sees that the name "Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton" is still applicable because contained within the boundaries of that constituency is still the Township of March—an historic part of the County of Carleton and one which has produced many fine public men in the municipal field, some of whom became wardens of the county over the years.

It was important in my judgment, and formed part of my submission, that the name "Carleton" be maintained because of its historic significance to the Townships of Goulbourn, a newly constituted Rideau, a newly constituted Osgoode, and Nepean and the portion of Gloucester, all of which formed part of old Carleton County. I think it is self-evident that if Ottawa were to form the base of the names for constituencies within the area of the City of Ottawa, that certainly there was justice and propriety in maintaining the name Nepean, the Township of Nepean, as part of the area which focuses upon, in a geographical sense, the Township of Nepean. This was done.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

There has been a return, regretful from my point of view certainly, at least in my personal feelings, of the County of Grenville, to the historic area known at the municipal level as the united counties of Leeds and Grenville—there has been a return in that way and the area of Dundas has gone in with its historic association with the balance of Dundas into the area now called Stormont-Dundas. I think that is regrettable but there is not much one can do about it on the basis of statistics, strive as I did to try to find an argument to thwart that particular idea. The area known as Carleton, Nepean, Goulbourn, Rideau, Osgoode and part of Gloucester and Long Island now forms a constituency which, in terms of representation, is sound.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that quite often commissioners are criticized for joining rural and urban areas together. It is contended there is not a community of interest. I do not think that is so. I think there is a potential for this to happen but I do not think it necessarily follows. A lot depends on the attitude of those who occupy the political institutions on the municipal level within the areas we are discussing.

If there is a desire for alienation between the rural and the urban area, then I think alienation will take place. But if there is no such desire, but rather a desire the other way, to find a community of interest and to realize that fate and circumstances and redistribution and population growth and a lot of other things throw people together into relationships they would not otherwise have found, then a community of interest can be found. I have found that, Sir. I have found this to be true in terms of Grenville-Carleton, which in terms of north and south is as different as night from day. We managed to develop a community of interest over the course of the years,—my predecessor in this House and I worked hard to do that.

My predecessor has now gone to a reward that I think is just and fitting, but we did manage to develop a community of interest between the ends of the riding which, prior to that time, had been alien to each other, so it is not necessarily the case that the difference between rural and urban is irreconcilable. I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in the debate and to follow the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas. I trust that these submissions will go forward in the usual way to the commissioners.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour is aware there is still a considerable number of Ontario members who are seeking the floor in this debate. I have learned that it will be very difficult for the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) to be here tomorrow to take part in the debate when it centres upon the electoral boundaries commission for Quebec. I would therefore ask if the House would give unanimous consent to allow the minister to make a short intervention at this point, and then revert to the discussion on the Ontario boundaries.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, just to make sure I understand this before we deal with the matter, is the hon. member saying that in the event there are Ontario members wishing to speak who have not yet spoken they will carry on tomorrow, or at least the way would be open for them to carry on?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): At the least the way would be open for them to carry on, yes. Ontario members will continue tonight until the ten o'clock deadline once the minister has made his remarks.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we did it earlier tonight for a backbencher. I don't see why we shouldn't do it for a front bencher.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the House allow the hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Drury) to speak on the Quebec report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): No, I simply wish to point out that I am pleased to give my consent, on behalf of my party, to allow a bright minister like the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) to speak. I consider he has interesting things to say and he will not be able to say them tomorrow if he is not here. I thus give my consent.

[English]

OBJECTION TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING QUEBEC

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, before I make a very brief intervention let me first express my gratitude to the House for doing me the courtesy of allowing me to intervene tonight rather than tomorrow.

It is not often that a member of parliament has presented to him an opportunity to welcome back into his particular sphere of interest, into his fold, a significant number of his former constituents from whom he has been separated for some years by the plans and preoccupations of redistribution.

As some hon. members will recall, I was first elected to this House in 1962 representing the constituency of St. Antoine-Westmount. However, in 1966, following redistribution, the southern portion of St. Antoine-Westmount, which included the portion of the municipal area known locally as St. Henri bounded by the CNR track and St. Jacques West, was included in the constituency now known as St. Henri. The eastern portion of the present constituency includes the western portion of the old St. Lawrence-St. George constituency; that is, the area in Montreal between Atwater and Park Avenue. I therefore welcome heartily the commissioners' decision to include in the enlarged Westmount constituency the former portion of St. Henri which I was honoured to represent and also to have expanded this area southwards and westwards.

The area bounded on the east by Peel Street, on the south by Sherbrooke Street, and on the west by Guy Street and Cote Des Neiges, contains many people who have long had a community of interest with those living in the central part of the riding. It is hoped, and in my view it is entirely appropriate, that this relationship can and should be maintained.

With a view to achieving this I would propose that the inter constituency boundary begin and would fall naturally if a line were drawn beginning at the Camelien Houde Parkway over the mountain, down Peel Street to Sherbrooke Street West, westward along Sherbrooke Street West to Guy Street, south on Guy Street to St. Catherine Street, west on St. Catherine Street to Atwater Street. St. Henri would then include Concordia University, McGill University, Montreal High School, the Royal Victoria Hospital, as well as many historic buildings. At the same time it will leave the residents west of Peel able to continue their association with the constituency of Westmount. This line also generally separates the commercial district from the residential district.

I would like to say that it would appear that the commissioners have sought to develop and promote a social, economic, and linguistic balance which is truly representative of downtown Montreal. It was felt, therefore, following discussions with hon. members for St. Henri (Mr. Loiselle) and St. Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), that a compromise in the establishment of the boundaries in this downtown area would be most acceptable to the constituents and, therefore, hopefully to the commissioners. The other boundaries of Westmount which have been proposed by the commissioners are more than acceptable. I should like to say that these suggestions, which have a consensual basis, have been made in the spirit of co-operation to serve better the constituents of Westmount, St. Henri, and St. Jacques.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ONTARIO

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North-Nipissing East): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to express a point of privilege rather than make a specific comment on redistribution. Earlier this evening the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick)—I am sorry he is not in his seat to hear my remarks—was quoted as having said that he did not know very much about northern Ontario but wanted to make a few remarks about it. He then went on to talk about the northern part of my constituency and said he understood that Mattawa had a population of 5,000. The actual fact is that it has a population of 2,800 people.

He then on to another point that I personally feel he should be requested to withdraw, and that was to state that the Mattawa town council passed a resolution requesting that it come back into my constituency because four members of that council are on my association. Not one of the members of the Mattawa town council has been or is on my association. The hon. member should be requested to withdraw that remark.

To back up what I have said, the hon. member talked about the size of my riding and the fact that it had a large part of eastern Algonquin Park. I do not mind that because right now I have 30 out of 34 townships in Algonquin Park. Obviously he did not look at the present map.

These are the groups form the Mattawa area that supported returning the the new riding under redistribution; I have a list here: Mattawa Town Council, the Golden Age Club, (Senior Citizens), the Community Centre Board, the Chamber of Commerce, the Curling Club, St. Anne's Roman Catholic Church, which is one of the largest parishes between Pembroke and North Bay, Mattawan Township, Calvin Township, Bonfield Township, the latter two are on the north-west side of the town of Mattawa, St. Alban the Martyr Anglican Church, St. Andrew's United Church and the Catholic Women's League, plus a petition Who is left?

An hon. Member: Len Hopkins.

Mr. Hopkins: He is left, and I hope he will be. All these communities are tied together by highway 17. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton said he had received representations from people in Mattawa. Who are these people who are misinforming him? I phoned Mattawa tonight and talked with some people, and they are livid about an MP who lives in Kanata talking about their town which is 190 miles away, and about which he knows very little. They also told me to inform him that he is all wet, and the best thing for him to do is mind his own business because they are quite capable of handling their own affairs and when they express their views they at least check their facts first.

These people said they identified themselves by going on record before the commission and they feel that those people who are passing on this misinformation to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton should also identify themselves instead of helping that hon. member drag this kind of red herring across the floor of the House. I am sure the Electoral Boundaries Commission will look at this simply in the light in which it was presented. They will recognize it as a pure and simple—very simple—partisan, political play.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Never heard of in this House!

Mr. Hopkins: I want to congratulate the Electoral Boundaries Commission as I think it had sympathy, understanding and a feeling for what it was doing. In the case of the village of Madawaska, which is a community of approximately 300 in my riding which is situated on the highway between Whitney and Barry's Bay, this little community was placed in the constituency of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), which would mean he would have to drive through a large section of my constituency to get to that centre, while at the same time I would be driving through his riding in order to get to communities just a few miles beyond. Three delegations came down from that small community presenting the case, and the recommendations were accepted by the commission.

Three delegations came down from that small community presenting the case, and the recommendations were accepted by the commission.

Then we have Lake Traverse and Brent which are two small communities in Algonquin Park. Access roads to both those communities are off highway 17 along the Ottawa River. These two small places were also placed in the riding of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I had a discussion with him about this matter. Representations were made and the commission for that as well.

A very important thing the commission did was, to a very large degree, unite the county of Renfrew once again. There are three townships plus the town of Arnprior not in the constituency, and county council and the various municipalities across the county are very pleased that they are united in that way instead of being split up into three different ridings.

Another point the Electoral Boundaries Commission accepted was the new name for the riding which we suggested of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke; Renfrew to include the town of Renfrew and the county of Renfrew, and Nipissing to include those townships in Algonquin Park and the Mattawa area. Then we have the city of Pembroke which is the only city in that part of the valley. They also returned Mattawa, Papineau, Mattawan and Cameron to the constituency at the request of those resident people. There is a very strong desire on the part of Calvin and Bonfield Townships on the northwest side of Mattawa to remain in the constituency. They were not left in but each has written a letter to me requesting that the Electoral Boundaries Commission take another look at their situation. They feel much more at home with a large number of small municipalities and smaller places than in a riding with a large urban centre such as North Bay. That is really the basis of their argument.

In addition the Township of Calvin is on the border of Papineau Township and the town of Mattawa. That is really their small centre and they want to retain their relationship with it.

Some of my present riding will be going into northern Ontario. This will be adding to the population of northern Ontario, but I can sympathize with those people there who would like to retain their 12 ridings. I have spent some time working in the north and I have a feeling for it. I know how people feel up there and how important it is to have members who travel great distances maintaining liaison.

I am not concerned about the size of my new riding. Quite to the contrary, as I said at the beginning, I am very pleased with it. In the past years I have looked after many problems in the northern part of the riding of Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton as well as problems in the northern part of the riding of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington simply because the members for those two constituencies live some distance away. The two constituencies come within 10 or 12 miles of my home. As a result the people come to me because I am closer. These people will be coming into the new constituency of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I get letters from Renfrew, too.

Mr. Hopkins: Yes, and I hope you look after them as well as we try to do up there. I am sure you do.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Better.

Mr. Hopkins: You are noted as a very conscientious member of parliament, and I am sure you will allow me to conclude my remarks. May I call it 10 o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I could ask the hon. member if he has many remarks left. Perhaps the House could allow him two or three minutes if he can complete his remarks in that time.

Mr. Hopkins: I think I can finish in a couple of minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we do not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hopkins: As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Electoral Boundaries Commission was sympathetic, understanding, and logical. I say this because I know some of the people who appeared before it. Some were elderly and had never appeared before a commission, so naturally they were nervous. The commission gave them a very sympathetic hearing and was very understanding in its approach. That is a factor which I think must be mentioned.

I am basically very pleased with the work of the commission and I want to make it very plain that the size and the population of the new riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke do not bother me in the least. I know the area and many of the people. The people in that area are pleased to be tied together as they are by highway 17 and other key roads connecting the communities. This makes it a much easier job than having a large constituency where it is difficult to get to various communities. This is not now the case, but I hope the commissioners will take a second look at the representations of the townships of Bonfield and Calvin. Other than that I am totally satisfied with their work.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—REQUEST FLOUR AND GRAIN RAIL SUBSIDIES BE REMOVED ONLY AFTER SEAWAY TOLLS INCREASED

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the fourth occasion at this particular time of night on which I have raised the question of the future of Section 272 of the Railway Act.

Under Bill C-87, the government's restraint program, section 272 of the Railway Act would be knocked out and along with it the rail flour and grain subsidies which affect Montreal, Saint John, Halifax, and probably other east coast ports. This is a serious matter for the ports of Halifax, Saint John, Montreal, and for every flour mill in Canada as well as for the grain growers of western Canada, so I think that in time one could muster up a pretty fair debate in this Chamber on the repeal of section 272.

Unfortunately the repeal of Section 272 would take effect only when the clause of Bill C-87 is passed to this effect. This means we could be here quite a while. As I have indicated, many Conservative members of parliament are concerned about this matter. I dare say we could entice such members as the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) into some public discussion of this matter, as well as any number of Liberal M.P.s from the city of Montreal because that port is affected.

The purpose of this hearing tonight is the question I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) concerning the St. Lawrence Seaway and whether he intended to put up the tolls on the Seaway. As people are well aware, the deficit on the Seaway is expected to be $12 million this year, which is almost the same as the subsidy that would be removed under Bill C-87. The Seaway has a debt of some $700 million to $800 million already behind it. The minister indicated last year that the increase in the Seaway tolls would not take place this year although he hinted that it would take place next year. My suggestion is that in justice both programs should accompany one another.

If there is to be a removal of the rail flour and grain subsidy on shipments through east coast ports there should also be something to make the St. Lawrence Seaway tolls higher, and both should happen at the same time. The doing away with the subsidy without an increase in the rate of the tolls would give Montreal an extra advantage over the ports of Halifax and Saint John. Having regard to competition among those three east coast ports I do not think one should do something which would help one to the disadvantage of the other. I suggest that the minister hold off the repeal of Section 272, at least this year, until he has put together his new transportation policy to replace the policy which his predecessor aptly described as a mess.

I will suggest something else which I have discussed with my colleagues. I think I can suggest this on behalf of the official opposition. If the minister will withdraw the clause—I think it is clause 15—of the restraint bill, C-87, then I think we could promise on the part of the official opposition that there would be perhaps only one speaker on the other parts of the restraint program in the House of Commons, and then reference to the committee, so that at least the restraint program could pass with a minimum of difficulty.

I think we could also present to the minister some suggestions for savings that would total much more than the subsidies which we suggest be kept on at least for this year and until a new transportation policy is developed. I say this most seriously. I realize, since this is probably a fresh idea, that the minister would like to talk about it with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board would like to spell out some of the multimillion dollar savings that we actually have on the list at this point. That is a suggestion. Otherwise, as I told the President of the Treasury Board, if we are going to debate Bill C-87 and they try to remove the grain subsidy, that debate could keep us here until Christmas.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the hon. member's offer. As I understand it, if that section were deleted there would only be one opposition speaker on the rest of the bill. I do not know whether that would in fact—

Some hon. Members: Louder!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe the minister's microphone is not active.

Mr. McCleave: Mine is. Perhaps the minister could come over to answer from my place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister could move over. Perhaps he should change his portfolio.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the House agree to allow the minister to speak from another place than his own?

An hon. Member: Let him speak from the place of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that I was delighted with the offer of the hon. member assuring us that there would be only one speaker if we deleted this particular section. It is intriguing indeed to think we might actually get that kind of agreement, because the time of the House is very precious and we often fritter it away in long drawn out debates in which people simply repeat themselves.

I was also pleased to have the recognition by the hon. member that subsidies like this one contained in section 272 are not in themselves necessarily good. They in fact lead to a very large expenditure by the government, with probably little benefit. They probably hurt the ports of Saint John and Halifax, for instance, in not allowing experiments with unit trains direct from the west, a variety of things which could in fact compete quite effectively with the actual cost situation but cannot compete when artificial subsidies are in place.

The hon. member tied his suggestion about the future of these rates to the future of Seaway tolls. He has indicated that I said that they would not be raised this year. I have indicated that I believe they have to be raised to reflect real costs, and I will say that again quite clearly because there too it is important in our whole approach to transportation costs that we try to understand what those costs are. We should ensure that these costs are reflected in the prices, and that we make the right decisions about the expansion of the rail system or Seaway system according to that kind of understanding of costs.

I could say to the hon. member, however, that in moving against the section 272 subsidy we are not in any way disadvantaging the ports on the Atlantic costs because it is my intention to have a further indication of the St. Lawrence Seaway tolls by January 1, to be in effect by January 1, which is a really crucial time in comparing the two seasons. It means that prior to the winter season the change will take place, and therefore the unit train operation can be planned at this stage.

While I want the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) to consider the very kind offer made by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on behalf of the opposition, I hope the hon. member will consider the possibility of going with us in quick order on the bill, and we will accept his view on how to cut expenditures and try to make progress in that way.

[Mr. Lang.]

AIRPORTS—RUNWAY EXTENSION AT VANCOUVER—REASON FOR MINISTER'S SUPPORT OF NEW RUNWAY WITHIN DYKED PORTION OF SEA ISLAND

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my remarks tonight concern the proposed expansion of the Vancouver international airport.

As the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) knows, back in 1973 a decision was made by the then minister of transport to go ahead with airport expansion, and after a series of exchanges in the House of Commons over a number of weeks the government finally agreed that in fact there were no environmental studies done, that in fact there ought to be some consultative process set up to decide whether and under what conditions airport expansion should take place. As a consequence the airport planning committee was established, and for the last three years it has been considering the matter of airport expansion at the Vancouver airport, and especially a new or parallel runway to the main runway which is there.

In addition environmental studies have been done, and those studies, both the airport planning studies and the environmental studies, have now been completed, but on March 12 the minister put out a press release in which he said that he viewed as a better solution a new proposal which came out during the summer of 1975 from the Ministry of Transport, for a shorter within dyke runway. The curious thing about this is that now the minister is asking the citizens of Vancouver and other interested groups to give him their views on this particular runway despite the fact that the short runway proposal has not been subjected to the airport planning process.

If the minister has any doubts about that, he can refer to the airport planning committee report of March, 1976, where it is specifically stated that the proposal which the minister mentioned in his press release is not the subject of their considerations. Furthermore, the environmental study which has just come out and which did not include a study of the proposal the minister is now advocating, said on page VI of the report that any new concepts proposed for expansion in this context, that is, in the context of short runways within the dykes at Sea Island, must conform to the federal environmental assessment and review process.

It is very curious that on March 14, 1974, the then minister of the environment, the Hon. Jack Davis, put out a press release in which he announced the federal government's new environmental impact statement procedure. The press release said things like this: "In announcing Ottawa's new environmental assessment and review process, environment minister Jack Davis said that all federal departments, agencies and firms under federal jurisdiction would have to prepare 'suitable environmental impact statements'." Then he went on to describe the process which he at that time said would be mandatory so far as the regulatory aspect of environmental considerations of the federal government were concerned, and that would have to include expansion at the Vancouver airport. I refer the minister to that press release of Thursday, March 14, 1974.

Concerned about this last summer, on July 9, 1975, I had occasion to ask the former minister of transport, who is now the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand), if this matter would be put in front of the standing committee, and on page 7392 of Hansard the following appears:

"Mr. Speaker, I am ready to table all the reports and have them referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation of this House for full discussion."

I asked the Minister of Transport on Friday if that commitment would be kept. I asked the Minister of the Environment today whether the commitment made by him as minister of transport would now be kept by the new Minister of Transport, and if my memory serves me correctly the Minister of the Environment said he would consult with his colleague who, I wish to point out, is in the House tonight. I am very appreciative of that, but there are three questions which arise: first, will the commitment of the former minister that these matters will be put in front of the House transport committee be kept, and second, will there be a public hearing, which is called for under the environmental process? I have no patience with the minister because in his press release of March 12 he said that there have been 200 mini hearings. That is such a flagrant disregard of the truth it might be almost deliberate. Those were not mini hearings; they were meetings of the people who were putting together the material. I think the minister should take note of that and give his press release writer a lecture on speaking truth.

The third question is, will the new short runway about which the minister has been talking, be subjected to the environmental impact assessment procedure which the government laid down and repeatedly assured us will be followed?

There was a commitment to put this matter before the standing committee of the House. As there has not been a follow-through on the matter one is prompted to ask, when is a commitment not a commitment? I would hate to say that the unsatisfactory but brutally accurate answer is this: it is not a commitment when the promise is made by a Liberal minister.

I invite the minister this evening to make sure that the commitment is kept. It cannot do any harm but may do a great deal of good. If it is not kept it will be a demonstration of cynicism at its worst, truth abused and a wretchedly irresponsible destruction of confidence in the solemn word of a minister of the Crown. The undertaking was not elicited in the confusing hurly-burly of informal talk on a press release, but was made in answer to a specific, plain question asked in the House of Commons.

With respect, I ask the minister to meet those three specific requests. I ask the minister to please keep the commitment made by the former minister of transport last July 9.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that I am now operational, so to speak, on my side of the House, and will stay on this side.

When the hon. member asked his question I said that I would try to give him time to make up his mind and say whether or not he thinks there should be a runway in the particular location referred to in Vancouver. There is this difficulty in building airports: people want to fly, but they do not want an airport built anywhere near them. Eventually a problem is created, a problem which the opposition loves to bring to the fore. Hon. members opposite like to say that people will be inconvenienced by new airports and hope, no doubt, that people will blame the government for the inconvenience.

I wish the hon. member would make up his mind on where he stands. The hearings dealt with a broad range of facts to do with airport expansion in Vancouver and available alternatives. I do not think it is wrong to refer to mini-hearings—that is not a bad expression. Many interested people came before the committee. It was like a sort of parliament in which the views of the people of the Vancouver area were heard. In that sense we held mini-hearing after mini-hearing. Hundreds of these mini-hearings were held in the course of the Vancouver airport hearings.

I do not say to the hon. member that we will put this matter before the committee of the House. That decision will need to be taken at a time—I do not know when it will be—when I know exactly what we must look at, what the different considerations involved are, and what decisions will need to be made. I do not believe in crossing bridges ahead of time. I think this is a personal matter for the minister. It is up to him how he will discuss this matter in parliament and with the people concerned.

I believe my record is clear. I believe in consultation, but I often believe in going directly to the people involved. I do not believe in becoming involved in a petty political process in which members are unwilling to state their own views and to say if they favour an airport for their own city. Apparently some hon. members want hearings to go on and on. In the end people who want to fly will not have the use of airports from which they may fly.

Shortly after I assumed responsibility for my present portfolio I learned of the proposal for a shorter runway. There were certain concrete advantages favouring the shorter runway as against the longer runway. As the shorter runway avoided difficulties concerning the movement of earth beyond the dyke—difficulties to which the hon. member and his mysterious friends alluded—it seemed an attractive proposition.

As between the shorter runway and the longer runway, there may be differences with regard to noise. Somebody must determine if those differences are real or imaginary, and then decide how much more study needs to be done. Yet, sooner or later in the interest of saving money, we must put an end to study after study, an end to opposition to simple steps leading to progress in Vancouver. I think, Mr. Speaker, that in the end Vancouver will not thank the hon. member if he opposes additional airport capacity for Vancouver, capacity which we see may be needed in several years. But I do wish he would make up his mind and tell me clearly what his position is on that question.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF REASON FOR PROTEST DEMONSTRATION AT PRINCE ALBERT INSTITUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the sit-in at the Prince Albert penitentiary and its expansion to other areas within the Solicitor General's department in protest over the inadequate medical facilities and the rash of suicides over the last several years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu):

That this House instruct the Solicitor General to establish immediately an independent investigation into the circumstances surrounding the sit-in and protest, and in particular to investigate the alleged lack of medical facilities at Prince Albert and all other institutions within the penitentiary system.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC WORKS

SUGGESTED DISCLOSURE OF OWNERSHIP AND WAGE RATES BY CONTRACTORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Department of Public Works has admitted it does not require companies bidding on contracts to disclose the names of owners or the wage rates for contract work, and since this would appear to make it difficult, if not impossible, to enforce government conflict guidelines and federal minimum wage rules, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) to require full disclosure of ownership and wage rates from all contractors dealing with his department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DR. WILDER GRAVES PENFIELD

EXPRESSION OF GRATITUDE FOR HIS LIFE AND WORKS AND OF SYMPATHY TO HIS FAMILY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of importance to all members of the House and to all Canadians. Yesterday afternoon in Montreal my old friend and neighbour, Dr. Wilder Graves Penfield, O.M., passed away. On the banks of Mount Royal Mountain, the Montreal Neurological Institute will serve as an everlasting reminder of his greatness. Leading surgeon, teacher, researcher, organizer and author, he was above all a great humanitarian. His life, among other things, underlines the importance of medical research in Canada and the importance of learning a second language at a young age.

[Translation]

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I went to elementary school with Dr. Penfield's children in Montreal. He always talked to me about the importance of learning a second language at a young age.

[English]

I count it a privilege to have had as a friend this outstanding man, this great Christian gentleman. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That his House expresses the gratitude of the Canadian people for the life and work of Wilder Graves Penfield, O.M., and expresses its sincere sympathy to Mrs. Penfield and the family.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A motion presented pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER AND INTRODUCTION OF SECOND PART OF COMPETITION POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact this House no longer has a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, that the lack of such a minister may very well be used by this government to procrastinate in introducing the second part of its competition policy dealing with combines legislation, and in view of the fact that the former minister had promised this legislation this year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

The government immediately appoint another Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and that this minister's first priority be to bring before this House the second part of the government's competition policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there unanimous consent pursuant to Standing Order 43?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EXPRESSION OF DISPLEASURE AT COVERAGE OF DEATH OF DR. WILDER PENFIELD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 concerning the news coverage of the unfortunate and untimely death of Dr. Wilder Penfield. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House expresses its profound displeasure with the CBC for giving considerably more coverage on its National News to the death of a United States multimillionaire than to that of the distinguished Canadian, Dr. Wilder Graves Penfield.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House before presenting the said motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: What is the motion?

Mr. Lawrence: Would you repeat the motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House having given its unanimous consent as required, pursuant to Standing Order 43, it is moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

[Mr. Speaker.]

This House expresses its profound displeasure with the CBC for giving considerably more attention to the CBC's coverage of the death of a United States multimillionaire than to that of the distinguished Canadian, Dr. Wilder Penfield.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—COMPANY'S PROPOSALS FOR INTERIM FINANCING—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER DATED JUNE 5, 1975, FROM PROJECT OFFICE

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The minister has said that Lockheed led the government to believe it could provide interim financing and he cited Mr. Heppe's letter as proof of this, but that seems to be a complete reversal of what Mr. Heppe actually wrote. What he did write is that Lockheed could probably finance the shortfall sum of $27 million subject to the approval of the emergency loan guarantee board, and subject also to full repayment by Canada in April of this year. In other words, Lockheed believed it could probably finance $27 million, but only for eight months. Does the minister have any proof whatsoever to show that Lockheed did indicate it could borrow a much larger sum of money over a two or three year period?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I stated at the time of tabling that letter, it referred to the financing in the summer, long before the final negotiations in December. I made that very clear. However, in conversations which were held by my officials with officials of Lockheed, it was also our understanding that the Lockheed Company could finance the short-term or production phase payments.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister. Did the proposal that Lockheed should provide interim financing come from Lockheed itself or from the LRPA project office? Mr. Heppe's letter appears to suggest that the proposal actually originated on the Canadian side in item (c) of the project office letter 6000-07-1(L) dated 5 June, 1975. Will the minister table this letter?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member referring to the letter asking for information, the letter which brought the response which I tabled? If that is so, I have no difficulty in tabling it because it relates very directly to the other letter.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—DATE COMPANY INFORMED ONLY $30 MILLION AVAILABLE FOR FIRST YEAR OF PRODUCTION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for agreeing to table that letter. The minister has stated that Lockheed knew that his department had only $30 million available in the 1976-77 production year, but the letter from Mr. Heppe gives no indication of this. What it does indicate is that Lockheed was told that in the first six months of production, that is from August 1975 to March 1976, DND had only $25 million available instead of the required $52 million. Nowhere does Mr. Heppe appear to realize that DND's resources for the whole fiscal year 1976-77 would only total $30 million. Can the minister, now that he has begun to table letters to prove his points, table a letter showing when Lockheed was informed of the fact that DND would have only $30 million available in the first year of production?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I stated at the time of tabling this letter, it was to indicate very clearly there had been serious discussion with the Lockheed Company about its capability to finance the project, but I also made very clear at that time that we were talking about a different financing problem in July from the one we faced in December. The discussions in December, as is known, were verbal. They were related to the acceptance in principle by Lockheed that they could in fact help with the financing. It was from the letters that are tabled, and also from the subsequent discussions that my officials came clearly to the understanding that Lockheed could assist us in the financing of payment for the production phase.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE FUTURE BUDGET ALLOCATIONS SUFFICIENT TO PURCHASE NEW EQUIPMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same minister. As the present situation regarding the Lockheed Company has put into jeopardy this country's plans for buying a new long-range patrol aircraft, can the minister assure the House that future budget allocations are sufficient to buy the new tanks, ships and eventually the fighter planes for which this country is committed during the next few years so that we will not have a repetition of the present deplorable situation?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member that we have all the funds required for the long-range patrol aircraft approved by cabinet. The principal amount has been approved. The interest costs for the financing of the production phase have been approved. We have the total funds required. The only matter which is in the process of being solved is how we can finance the payments in the early years. This will not affect adversely the other programs mentioned by the hon. member.

Oral Questions

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—COST OF NOT SIGNING THE CONTRACT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I was of course referring to the great mishandling of the purchasing arrangements between the government and Lockheed. I shall direct my supplementary to the Minister of Supply and Services. As the minister has stated that Canada will pay $16 million to Lockheed if the contract is not signed, will he tell the House whether or not this includes the $12 million paid for the final definition phase, or is it in truth a fact that if the contract is not signed this country will be out $28 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to get the facts straight. I said that the government could pay Lockheed a maximum of $16 million. So, first, these $16 million are a maximum. Second, it is obvious that at the first stage of the definition of the contract, we had asked Boeing of Canada Limited and Lockheed to submit a proposal. That means that the payments were made to both these companies and not only to Lockheed.

Mr. Hees: I have one final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Therefore we are not mistaken that if this contract is not signed the country will be out $28 million, as I said.

ALLEGATIONS OF FRAUD IN CONNECTION WITH CONTRACTS FOR CLEANING GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Yesterday in the House I asked him for a report on a police investigation into federal cleaning contracts in Toronto. Can the minister now provide us with some information on that investigation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the report is that the investigation is continuing. I think in the questioning yesterday the hon. member spoke of a raid or a search warrant, and I indicated that the matter was referred to the criminal law division. I am now advised that all documents in the case were voluntarily produced by those being investigated and the investigation is continuing. When the results of the investigation are completed, if they involve criminality they will be referred of course to the proper prosecuting authority, and if they involve violations of governmental regulations, they will be turned over to the Department of Public Works.

Oral Questions

PUBLIC WORKS

POSSIBILITY OF CLEANING CONTRACT BEING AWARDED TO PUBLIC SERVANT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Public Works who said yesterday in the House that a contract between the government of Canada as an employer and the company in which a public servant has a direct and immediate personal interest is not allowed. I should like to know whether or not the minister can report to the House whether he has found any specific incident of a contract being awarded to a company of which a public servant has been or is the principal owner.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, subject to qualifying the last phase "the principal owner", we have discovered, as a consequence of the initiative of the hon. member I may say, a cleaning contract in which one of the participants was an employee of the federal government. That employment has since been terminated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: As of yesterday?

An hon. Member: How about the contract?

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether or not, in view of the fact that he has now found at least one incident where that has occurred, he will undertake a full investigation into his department to see whether or not there are other incidents of that type of contracting out, and can he also tell the House whether or not that type of practice will be allowed in future in view of the fact that yesterday he said that it is definitely not allowed?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that it is going to be allowed in the future. Perhaps I should point out that there are two aspects under examination here, one is the ability of the Department of Public Works to provide the most efficient and least expensive service to the taxpayer. To do this, we call for open tenders from the private sector, and provided the low bidder has the necessary financial and technical competence he is normally awarded the contract. The determination of technical competence is the result of an assessment made at an interview with those who are going to perform the work and a performance bond is also required before the contract is signed.

The other aspect is the carrying out of the guidelines governing the conduct of public servants. Perhaps I might read the first paragraph of the guidelines which are issued under the authority of the governor in council. It reads as follows:

> A public servant should not have a pecuniary interest that could conflict in any manner with the discharge of his official duties.

This is the essential element of the guidelines.

The hon. member has discovered—and I am grateful for this—a case in which a public servant did have a pecuniary interest in a contract with the government. He has asked whether we will be conducting a full investigation. I do not think this is warranted, but I welcome any information the hon. member or any hon. member of the House may have which is evidence of undesirable practices.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DATE OF PAYMENT AND AMOUNT OF SUBSIDY TO SAINT-FÉLICIEN PAPER MILL

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I tried to reach him by telephone but his line was always busy.

My question deals with the paper mill project at Saint-Félicien.

Without taking too seriously the article published in local newspapers which quoted the minister as saying Donohue would get $300 million, can the minister tell us whether the federal grant will represent 50 per cent of the provincial aid? In addition, when does he expect to announce it publicly?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as pointed out by the hon. member, there have been many comments in the provincial and even local press in the last few months and weeks. I shall not dwell on all those comments but, in reply to the hon. member, I must say that, unfortunately, I cannot divulge at this stage what point negotiations between the provincial and federal negotiations have reached. Of course, we will have to wait till a final decision has been reached before that information can be released. So, unfortunately, the hon. member will have to be a little more patient.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

May I ask the minister to give us a date, where negotiations are concerned?

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, all I can tell the hon. member I have already said publicly, that is, that I am trying to pursue this matter with a view to reaching a decision in the near future. I said in this regard that I really hoped that by the end of April a decision, one way or the other, would have been reached. To my mind, the discussions have already dragged on too long; I would like the decision to be taken, if possible, before the end of this month.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF GENERAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE OF WESTERN EUROPEAN UNION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning another round of questioning, may I ask hon. members to join with me in calling attention to the presence in the gallery of very distinguished visitors in the form of a delegation, being the Standing Committee on General Affairs for the Western European Union, who are here for two days before extending a further visit to the United States in an attempt to further good relationships between North America and this great union of European countries, headed by the distinguished member of the Bundestag, the Honourable Mr. Sieglerschmidt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—POSSIBILITY OF CANADA GUARANTEEING BANK LOAN FOR COMPANY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Lockheed, with the assistance of the Canadian government, is now engaged in seeking a large loan from Canadian banks to finance the first years of production of the LRPA. Will the minister state without equivocation that the Canadian government is not going to guarantee any loan by a Canadian banking consortium or by individual banks to Lockheed?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have said many times that the government of Canada will not be guaranteeing any loan.

Mr. McKenzie: Since the Minister of Supply and Services told this House yesterday that he had assessed Lockheed's financial position and found it such that he could consider signing a contract, what is the reason the government will not help Lockheed to get the money by guaranteeing the loan?

Mr. Richardson: Because it will not be necessary for the government to provide assistance. Lockheed is in the process of negotiating a major contract with the government of Canada, and that contract in itself will provide the basis for financing.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—ALLEGED COLLAPSE OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the minister whether he has been advised, since his return from the west, of reports in the press indicating the near collapse of the negotiations with respect to the Orion, and does he agree with the present situation as expressed by the press? If so, is he or the Prime Minister now prepared to give a simple assurance to the Canadian military that in fact the aging and venerable Argus will be replaced, preferably with an Orion?

● (1430)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear the support coming from the hon. member for the Orion. There is not any doubt in my mind that the aircraft we selected is more cost effective than any of the alternatives that were considered. There are many other factors which support the continuation of this contract. The negotiations which are taking place between the Lockheed Company and the banks are proceeding. To the best of my information, they are looking at it in a positive way and going ahead in a constructive way.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF GUN CONTROL MEASURE TO SUPREME COURT TO DETERMINE WHETHER JURISDICTION FEDERAL OR PROVINCIAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. It is with regard to the Di Iorio and Gerard Fontaine case in which the Supreme Court of Canada held that the provincial government should have the right to conduct a criminal inquiry within the terms "administration of justice of the province." In light of that, and in light of the fact that Bill C-83 contains several pages of provisions relating to provincial inquiries, giving jurisdiction, and the court having ruled that way, will the minister refer the whole or part of Bill C-83 to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether the gun control administration legislation is within the provincial powers rather than the federal powers as defined by the British North America Act? I ask this in light of the fact the Supreme Court of Canada ruling on provincial inquiries makes this redundant in the bill.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not really see what the Di Iorio case has to do with the gun control measure. Therefore, we have no intention of referring that to the Supreme Court of Canada. With regard to the decision of the court with relation to Bill C-83 and the provisions for crime inquiries, we are still examining the judgment very carefully. It is an extremely complex judgment. It is a matter I will want to discuss in committee when the bill is in committee after Easter.

Mr. Woolliams: Does the minister not consider that the sections dealing with the administration of gun control might well fall within provincial jurisdiction, in light of the decision on the other matter which is on all fours, and that the Supreme Court of Canada should have an opportunity to study and decide on this matter before we waste the time of parliament, the committee and the public? I ask this because the government has moved closure to gag the opposition in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, measures related to gun control have been in the Criminal Code for over 50 years. In my view, it is a valid exercise in the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. That seems to be a proper question to be asked in committee where I will be happy to examine it in detail. I certainly cannot accept the premise of the hon. member.

Oral Questions

BILINGUALISM

NEGOTIATIONS TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF SECOND LANGUAGE TRAINING IN OTTAWA AREA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Last Thursday the House instructed the government to enter into negotiations with the appropriate Ontario authorities in order to ensure the continuation of French immersion language training in four Ottawa-Carleton area school boards. Has the minister in fact entered into such negotiations? Can he inform the House what progress is being made, especially in light of Mr. Keith Spicer's ruling, as expressed on "CTV Question Period" on Sunday, that the provinces are willing to co-operate in such efforts?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had a discussion with the Ontario minister of education on the telephone. We are meeting on Monday.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that. May I now ask the minister whether he is considering taking the leadership in terms of advancing this program by agreeing to an extension? Is this among the possibilities or options of the government? I ask this in view of the fact that a lack of federal funding could have a great effect on this very valuable experiment, which is really a pilot program for the development of teaching methods in second language training in other jurisdictions aside from Ontario and the national capital area.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would want to be fair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Faulkner: I am prepared to make that assumption for the moment. The hon. member surely knows that program would never have happened in Ottawa if it had not been for federal leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Faulkner: We paid the total shot for that two year program.

An. hon. Member: Who is "we"?

Mr. Faulkner: The federal government, the taxpayers of Canada. That should be recognized by members opposite. The other point, and I am sure the hon. member is as aware of that as I am, is that we are prepared to continue to pay 9 per cent of the additional cost of an extended French program. If the boards of education are saying to the federal government and to the provincial governments that that does not cover the cost, let them identify the cost. That is what the discussion on Monday will be all about.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to concede to the minister the leadership of the federal government with regard to this matter. I commended him when he did it and I commend him now. I now ask the minister to carefully consider the effect on this program for the very reasons that he mentioned. Without the federal funding, that program, which is basically to benefit all of Canada, would place an unfair burden on the ratepayers of the national capital area. It is only in that regard that I ask the question.

OLYMPIC GAMES

POSSIBILITY LOTTERY WILL BE CONTINUED AFTER GAMES

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Bearing in mind that during the program "In Conversation" over Montreal CFCF radio station the Prime Minister stated that the federal government is still prepared to support the province of Quebec with self-financing programs for the 1976 summer Olympic Games, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether, first of all, the Quebec premier and the Mayor of Montreal have made representations to the federal government to ask for the continuance of the Olympic lottery program after the games, second, whether the federal government would consider such a request, which would not result in a direct disbursement from the federal treasury and, third, when he expects to be able to report to the House about the possibility of continuing the Olympic lottery program after the 1976 summer games?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House knows that the federal government has always had the attitude summed up by the hon. member as far as the Olympic Games are concerned, namely that we support self-financing programs but not the principle of taking funds from the taxpayer. These self-financing programs include lotteries and sales of stamps or gold coins. These are techniques which we are prepared to consider. I said so publicly. As recently as last summer, the House approved a new formula concerning the sale of gold coins. On the principle, the position of the government is always the same.

Practically speaking, I did not receive any urgent request on this subject from Premier Bourassa or Mayor Drapeau. However, I think there were discussions between provincial and federal officials to consider other possibilities. No specific proposal has been made to me by the Quebec government, by COJO or by the City of Montreal. Of course, my position is always the same.

FINANCE

SUGGESTION MINISTER WITHDRAW PROPOSAL TO CHANGE REVENUE GUARANTEE ARRANGEMENT WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister assure the House that he will not resubmit to the meeting of first ministers to take place in the first week of May his proposal to revamp totally and retroactively the revenue guarantee arrangements with the provinces covering the period 1974-76? I ask this because it has been rejected as an approach by all the provinces as being a reneging on an earlier commitment and, specifically, will cost the province of Ontario, for example, some $300 million and the province of Manitoba some $30 million.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the description by the hon. gentleman of the government's position with regard to revenue guarantee. The figures we have set forth are an accurate estimate of our obligation under the revenue guarantee program. Therefore, while this matter will be discussed, while the provincial reaction will be discussed prior to the meeting of first ministers, it would not be my intention at this point to change in that regard.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With respect, the minister's description of the facts flatly contradicts the understanding of all provincial governments. Is the minister telling the House that he did not propose to the meeting of provincial ministers of finance a change in the formula which was worked out in the early 1970's and which the provinces thought would apply to the end of 1976?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I pointed out to the meeting that the method of calculation originally proposed by Manitoba and Ontario, that is to say, side by side calculation, can now be carried out because of the additional information available. It now indicates with greater precision the amounts to which provinces would be entitled under the revenue guarantee.

PROPOSED CEILING ON EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the report concerning the minister's meeting with the provincial ministers also suggested that the federal government wants to impose a ceiling on yearly increases in equalization payments to the seven poor provinces, will the minister assure the House that the federal government does not intend to put a ceiling on equalization payments, because such a ceiling is a contradiction in terms and would negate the government's entire approach to equalization in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is our view that the federal government's obligation under equalization should not be infinite. If the hon. member shares that view, he must agree with me.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, what's equalization all about?

ALLEGED CHANGE IN CALCULATION OF REVENUE GUARANTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance? Is it correct that the change the minister is suggesting in the calculation of the revenue guarantee relates to 1975 and 1976? If so, how can he argue that this is not a retroactive change in the equalization formula, as interpreted to date by the federal government and the provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is confusing equalization with revenue guarantees.

Mr. Stanfield: With respect, no.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. gentleman is talking about the revenue guarantee, or the obligation to pay, the calculation commences two years after the year is closed. Therefore a calculation for 1974 will be possible with the information now available. The more precise calculation we can make relates to 1974, 1975 and 1976. From information available, it appears that there probably was an over-payment in 1972 and 1973. The federal government does not seek to recover that.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Who is the authority on the correct method of calculation? Is the Minister of Finance setting himself up as the unique authority on the correct method of calculation, or will this be done by some method of determination consistent with federalism as practised in this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the Parliament of Canada has given responsibility in this regard to the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council will exercise it.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLICATION "HOW YOUR TAX DOLLAR IS SPENT" TO SCHOOLS—ALLEGATION OF EXTRAVAGANCE

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. As most Canadian high school students at some stage in their school careers study the economics of government spending, is it the policy of the minister's department to distribute a modest number of copies of the annual publication entitled "How your Tax Dollar is Spent" to all Canadian secondary schools?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if that is the policy but, most assuredly, the publication will be available to those who want it.

Mr. Jarvis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain why his department, which is preoccupied with restraint, sent 2,000 of these booklets to Listowel high school which has a student population of less than 1,100?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I imagine the department listened to the hon. member's exaggerations and thought there was a bigger high school in Listowel.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister explain why his department sent six cartons of the publication to a school in my constituency with 80 high school students. They were so upset by this extravagance that they wrote to their member of parliament and complained.

Some hon. Members: Supplementary?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the students in the hon. member's constituency will do the same as students would do in mine, see that the pamphlets are distributed so that there is a proper expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

AIR TRANSPORT

ASSESSMENT OF LANDING FEE WHEN AIRCRAFT ENGAGE IN SEARCH AND RESCUE MISSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask a supplementary question, but another hon. member asked it. May I put my question to the Minister of Transport? It has to do with the proposed landing fee of $2.60 for light aircraft landing at Ministry of Transport airports. Will this fee be levied when aircraft are engaged on search and rescue missions or other errands of mercy, and how will it be possible to determine the difference?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the levying of the tax and the manner in which it is levied is being discussed with the Owners and Pilots Association. I am sure that such details and other matters of concern will be looked at.

ENERGY

TURNING OFF LIGHTS IN GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS TO CONSERVE ENERGY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On national television on Sunday night, April 4, the minister stated, "If you are not part of the solution, you are part of the problem." The presentation showed lights off in all our major cities except Ottawa, which was still ablaze after dark. In light of the government's expensive request on television, in which it asks Canadian citizens to conserve energy, when is the government going to practice what it preaches and turn off lights at night in all government buildings, in Ottawa and right across Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fairweather: What's the latest excuse?

Mr. Gillespie: —the government has already started to do just that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: Where?

Mr. Hees: Not in the external affairs building.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question, so I should be allowed to answer. I very much regret the way that particular program was handled. I spoke to the producer of the program and asked him when he took his pictures of the government buildings shown. He told me, at 8.30 p.m. I said, "Why did you take them then?" He said, "We thought we would find the lights on then." Of course he was right, because many offices are cleaned then. If he had taken those pictures around eleven o'clock, he would have found most lights off.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the contract.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that that specific information should be obtained some other way.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL OF CEILING ON PAYMENT OF DIVIDENDS

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the restrictions imposed by the Anti-Inflation Act on dividend payments by corporations, and in view of the fact that the payment of dividends to shareholders makes it possible to delay the reaching of the aggregate ceiling beyond which a small enterprise may benefit from a special tax rate if its annual profits before tax are not in excess of $100,000, can the minister tell the House whether the government intends to raise the aggregate ceiling so that small enterprises do not lose their entitlement to the special tax rate because of the provisions of the Anti-Inflation Act prohibiting the payment to shareholders of the dividends required to stay within the $500,000 aggregate ceiling?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I received some representations on that issue from the hon. member and others in the House. We are now considering whether there is such a conflict inherent in the provisions of the government policy. I hope I will be able to take a position and give an answer in the near future.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING IMPORTS TO IMPROVE POSITION OF WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Late last week I met the director of the Manpower Centre in Montmagny who declared that the unemployment rate is now around 20 per cent in the south shore area, following the heavy laying off in the textile industry. Would the minister advise the House whether or not he expects to take very serious measures in the near future to limit the textile imports to 33 per cent of the Canadian demand, in view of protecting our own industry and Canadian jobs?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have given a number of answers in committee on various aspects of the textile problem and I have also replied to questions here in the House on occasion. I believe I advised the hon. member recently that there are two or three different groups working at the present time to see what can be done to meet this problem. At the earliest possible moment, when we have all the information, we shall determine what steps it will be possible for us to take. At the present moment, however, I am not in a position unfortunately, to indicate what form policy may take.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the minister indicate to the House whether the import level during the last twelve months went beyond the recommendations of the Textile Board Commission and whether those massive imports are responsible for the present precarious position of the Canadian textile industry?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Since there are so many varieties of textile involved I would prefer to give the hon. member a written answer setting out the different categories and the levels of imports. My recollection is that there has been an increase in imports from the so-called low cost countries but whether that increase is of any great size or whether it is only marginal I could only determine by looking at the statistics, and I will get those for the hon. member.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE THAT STATUTE REMAINS BRITISH STATUTE FOLLOWING PATRIATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Justice stating government policy when he said, according to reports, that after the patriation process, which the right hon. gentleman has discussed recently, the British North America Act, which he described as the heart of the Canadian constitution, will remain where it has been since 1867, a statute of the United Kingdom Parliament at Westminster? In other words, it would appear more Canadian, seem more Canadian, but would remain a British statute?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not seen the reference and I would want to look at it and speak with the Minister of Justice. I am certain that historically what has been quoted seems correct: if a statute was a statute, it remains a statute of the British Parliament. The essence of the question in this case, and I believe I stated it clearly a couple of weeks ago, is this: patriating the constitution will mean that the British Parliament would declare, now, what it declared for other Commonwealth countries at the time of the Statute of Westminster, to wit, that they would no longer make laws for Canada. That is the essence of what we are trying to obtain.

POSSIBILITY OF PROCLAMATION OF NEW CONSTITUTION FOLLOWING PATRIATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): May I, first of all, tell the Prime Minister that the statement attributed to the Minister of Justice appears in the Gazette of March 29. My supplementary is this: has the Prime Minister looked recently at the recommendations of the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee with respect to a process of patriation which would clearly, in the committee's view, involve the proclamation of a new constitution by Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not looked at that recently, but this was part of many reports which were studied at the time of the discussion which led to the Victoria Conference. Of course, we realized that once patriation has been obtained a whole series of steps could be taken, some of them involving a new distribution of powers which we would certainly not want to contemplate at this time. Another is a modernization of the language of what was the former BNA Act and the provinces might wish to consider this aspect. The discussion which preceded Victoria did in fact cover a series of such possibilities. I have told the House that I do not want to complicate the present suggested operation by getting into all these matters. Once the constitution is truly Canadian, in the way I have stated, we would obviously wish to look at these various steps.

OIL—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PRICE—REQUEST THAT PRICE NOT EXCEED AVERAGE PRICE IN UNITED STATES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When will the federal government and the provinces complete negotiations and be able to announce a new price for domestic crude oil in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am sure the hon. member is aware that the first ministers will be meeting early in May to discuss this very question.

Mr. Gillies: Because of the uncertainty surrounding the pricing of Canadian oil, can the minister give a categorical assurance that the price in Canada will not be allowed to exceed the average price in the United States?

Mr. Gillespie: That is one of the questions the first ministers will want to discuss.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A related question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, will the Minister of Finance tell us whether the budget will follow shortly after that first ministers conference, bearing in mind the pattern set last year when the budget followed shortly after the agreement was reached with respect to the increase in the price of oil? Would May 17 be a fairly good date?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The Prime Minister has suggested May 5 and 6 to the premiers as dates for the first ministers meeting. I have suggested the last two weeks in May. So May 17 is within that two-week period.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS CONCERNING FRENCH LANGUAGE UNIT AT GREENWOOD—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It has nothing to do with such an esoterical thing as high finance and more to do with the sensitivity of French language units in the armed forces. Last week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was in the Annapolis Valley for many reasons, one of which was to make a speech before the Board of Trade in which he said, among other things, that no decision had been made regarding the French language unit squadron at Greenwood and that "preparations and proposals were being worked on in the Department of National Defence". Yet six weeks earlier, on February 11, General Dextraze, speaking at the same type of meeting in Moncton said, and I quote: "No amount of exercise on the part of anyone will make me change my mind on this." He was referring to the French language unit squadron at Greenwood. My question to the minister is: which one of these gentlemen is levelling, who is telling it correctly and has a decision been made?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No formal and final decision has been taken, but the Chief of Defence Staff was expressing the views of the department and my views.

Mr. Nowlan: Bearing in mind the high degree of interest in this subject across Canada where French language unit squadrons are being considered, would the minister undertake, in order that the public might be informed before a decision is taken, to make some type of statement either in this House or outside it, outlining not only the 18 French language unit squadrons presently in existence but defining the three experimental ones which are presently in place and especially outlining the 17 which are proposed in different parts of the country?

Mr. Richardson: The hon. member may not be aware that other bases using long-range patrol aircraft would be pleased to have a French language unit. Perhaps we shall have to close down Greenwood.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF CLEANING CONTRACT INVOLVING CIVIL SERVANT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Earlier in the question period this afternoon the minister refused an inquiry into the problem in Toronto. Would the minister give the House a few answers to the specific problem there and tell us who was fired and when? Since we are rather well into the question period, Mr. Speaker, and I probably will not be able to get in a supplementary, may I ask whether the contract was on public tender, when was it let, was it a low tender, and what is the current status of the contract?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Toronto is currently under investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The incident to which I referred concerning a contract in which a one time civil servant had been involved was in Ottawa, not Toronto. The contract has since expired and the public servant is no longer with the public service.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a very definite point of privilege. In view of the answer of the Minister of National Defence, which absolutely shocked me, I should like to know, in terms of my duty as a member, whether I am entitled to ask serious questions about government policy, pending or proposed, without the minister, in reply, suggesting that parts of the answer will be blackmail of that particular member or some other persons in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I was trying to elicit information on a matter that is highly sensitive and I am very much aware of the sensitivity of the issue. I was absolutely appalled when the minister inferred that perhaps government policy regarding the establishment of French language units across this country will depend on the blackmail, in effect, of members who have bases in their ridings, in an effort to prevent members putting serious questions on matters of government policy. My rights as a member of parliament to ask questions about a matter that is of fundamental importance to my riding are seriously and adversely affected by this kind of answer.

I was trying to elicit information, Mr. Speaker. As the Commissioner of Official Languages has said, it is time that the whole shroud and cloak of secrecy and hocus-pocus that is apparent in so many elements of the government's bilingual policy was removed, but the minister really polluted the atmosphere with that type of comment. I say that he has to withdraw his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, in response to the first question of the hon. member I gave a very clear answer. The Chief of the Defence Staff, General Dextraze, has made a statement on the intention of the department regarding the Canadian armed forces. I said that it was a statement that I supported, and I think that was sufficient answer for the hon. member.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order having to do with the statement made by the Minister of Public Works at the beginning of the question period in connection with the bidding practices of the government. First the minister asked for compliance with tendering practices, and I should like to take this opportunity to specify several inconsistencies in the government's apparent acceptance of the bid that was submitted by R. Owen Ltd., Box 838, Fort Nelson, B.C. To be concise, it appears that there has been a non-compliance with clause 5, subsection 1, page 1 (a) in that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: The minister wanted some information about compliance, Mr. Speaker. Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair notes the fact that the hon. member for Edmonton Centre has received expanded treatment of this question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with the meeting this morning of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which commenced examination of the estimates of the Department of Transport. During the course of this morning's proceedings the chairman of that standing committee recognized the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport for the purpose of asking questions.

I submit to Your Honour that under the Standing Orders of this House, specifically Standing Order 55, the rules of the House shall apply in committees. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the government whip, whom I hear interjecting, was responsible in the first place for the ruling I shall refer to, so perhaps he should sit quietly and listen.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have not said anything yet.

Mr. McGrath: Shortly after Your Honour was elected Speaker by this honourable House, Your Honour made a ruling on a question of privilege that was raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface. As reported at page 1060 of Hansard, for November 5, 1974, Your Honour said, in part:

> It is obvious, certainly, that members of the ministry ought not to enjoy the privilege of being able to both represent the government in answering questions in the House of Commons and, in turn, to use the time of the question period to ask questions.
> Similarly, the privilege, of course, of being elevated to the position of parliamentary secretary falls only on those among the government ranks. This extends to those hon. members not only the recognition, prestige and advantage that comes from their position but the obligation of answering questions—

The examination of estimates in committees of the House is a question and answer procedure. I submit that the rules of the House as defined by Your Honour apply equally in committee as in this House. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport receives an extra emolument from the Crown, he occupies a special departmental office within the Department of Transport, and he takes a special oath of office under the Parliamentary Secretaries Act which gives him, of course, special privileges and responsibilities.

I submit to Your Honour that by virtue of the position that the parliamentary secretary enjoys, and equally by virtue of the fact that there will be occasions during examination of the estimates when the minister will not be present and the parliamentary secretary will have to stand in for him, the parliamentary secretary should not enjoy the same privileges as other members of the committee and be permitted to ask questions of his own minister. This is especially so when we consider that under the present Standing Orders of the House which deal with estimates, all estimates are deemed to have been reported on or before May 31, which places a particular responsibility, in regard to pressure of time, on members of the House who have to try to do the best they can with what I submit is an inadequate procedure at best.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization has before it at the present time the question of allocation of time and the practices of committees of the House. I submit that the ruling Your Honour made on November 5, 1974, dealing with the role of parliamentary secretaries and their position in regard to questions in the House ought to apply equally and with the same validity in the standing committees of the House.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I wish to support the point of order that has been raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. I point out that the parliamentary secretary in question has on a number of occasions stood in place of the minister as a witness before the committee. I foresee a danger in allowing this procedure to continue. The committee is an arm of this House, and if one rule applies to the House, traditionally it also applies to the committee. The reasoning behind your ruling as recorded at page 1060 of Hansard for November 5, 1974, is quite clear. It takes away the right of an hon. member to continue this game of charades, having the same person ask a question and answer it as well.

This morning, at the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, the hon. member for Assiniboia, who is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, acted in the minister's place on a number of occasions and asked two questions which were clearly self-serving and intended, in essence, to allow the minister to explain a previous position he had taken or explain something he had previously said.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Horner: That is not the purpose of the committee. The purpose of the committee is to examine and inquire into government spending. The hon. member for St. John's East has pointed out that our time is limited and that we must be given as much time as possible in order to do that. Let me suggest, sir, that you not make any hurried ruling on this matter raised by the hon. member as it is very important and will certainly be precedent-setting in respect of the procedures of the committees of this House for some time to come.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order now under consideration. There has been a practice, not only in respect of the standing committees of this House but also in respect of joint committees of the House of Commons and the Senate to have parliamentary secretaries among their memberships. I am not suggesting they are not well-intentioned, but from time to time they leave their place at the committee table and move to the position of the witness being examined in the absence of the minister.

I can remember that happening in relation to the hon. member for Ottawa West on the joint committee in respect of the Finkelman report. It also happened on another occasion in relation to a joint committee on which I had the honour of serving. This involved the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. He was a member of that committee when it was dealing with the national capital.

It seems to me that in considering the point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, added to by the hon. member for Crowfoot, regarding this ability to both answer and ask questions in the committees and on the floor of the House of Commons, we ought to take into account the fact that they occupy a special relationship in respect of the operations of a ministry. Because of this special position which they enjoy, involving an additional emolument, with access to information and other things, with the ability to influence policy in a way not available to the average private member, we ought to consider this role in terms of the presence at all of parliamentary secretaries on committees. They are in a position to examine material not available to the average member, and if Your Honour is going to consider this question at some length you should consider the special position enjoyed by parliamentary secretaries.

I want to make it very clear, especially to the parliamentary secretaries whose names I have mentioned in the course of these remarks, that I am not suggesting they have in any way acted in bad faith. I make these remarks more in terms of proper practice or the practice that ought to prevail in committees of this House as well as joint committees.

In the event Your Honour does not find there is a valid point of order, I hope you will give this question consideration. I think it is important that this matter be considered in terms of the practices of the House. It may be that reference of this matter to the committee on procedure and organization would be in order. We cannot forget that parliamentary secretaries enjoy a special position in this House and a special position in terms of the ministries, and we ought to consider that special position in terms of having them form part of a committee of the House of Commons which may very well be dealing with a specific matter coming under their jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: There are at least four other hon. members who wish to participate in this matter. Let me make it clear, as a preliminary observation, that I do not intend to stop any hon. member participating in the discussion. However, I think I should point out that there are two points in respect of which my opinion is quite clear.

The first point relates to my opinion in respect of the role of parliamentary secretaries with the special responsibilities they have and, therefore, the limitations I would propose to exercise in presiding over the meetings of this assembly, specifically during the question period. I have no reason to change my opinion in that regard. I made that decision after careful consideration and representation. This is my view, and it is the view I take in exercising my decision whether to recognize a parliamentary secretary for the purpose of asking questions during the question period.

The second point has been amply demonstrated here, and I think it is worth while. We have under review another decision in respect of a complaint about the proceedings of standing committees, namely, a request that the Chair review a procedural decision concerning a complaint by an hon. member of one standing committee regarding the comments or remarks of another hon. member of the same standing committee. My second observation in this regard is that the Chair does not exercise procedural control over standing committees. Let me reaffirm my opinion that standing committees are, and must remain, the masters of their own procedure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Unless the rules of this House are changed in some way, I have no intention or desire of entering into, by way of appeal or review, in any way, shape or form, the decisions that ought to be made or taken into account by a standing committee. I am certainly not going to look over the shoulder of any chairman of any committee or enter into a procedural matter by saying it was proper or improper.

There is a question of privilege before the House and I at no time intend to restrict comment on that matter. The hon. member for Athabasca raised a question of privilege the other day and I heard a number of contributions on that matter. I intend to listen to the fullest possible development of any question of privilege, but that is not going to draw me across the line as far as supervising the procedures of committees by way of suggestion or appeal.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the position you have taken. There is one point I want to make. There has been an attempt by hon. members of the opposition who have spoken on this question of privilege to suggest that parliamentary secretaries in some way are conspiring to defeat the role of the opposition. Surely, in committees, as in the House of Commons, we are involved in an adversary contest. The government attempts to pass its estimates or its legislation, and the opposition resists or opposes.

Apparently the opposition is not satisfied with the effectiveness of its role in opposition. It is the right of hon. members to be dissatisfied with that role, but surely it is the right of government supporters, backbenchers or parliamentary secretaries, to debate or ask questions in the committees in the same way as members of the opposition. Their behaviour in that regard should not in any way be taken as a conspiracy to defeat the opposition. That is the whole purpose of this House and its committees, namely, to present legislation on the part of the government and to oppose it on the part of the opposition.

Parliamentary secretaries, as well as backbenchers, have an obligation to support the government in measures presented to this House or to committees. It should not be suggested that because they participate in that role they are frustrating the opposition in its attempt to oppose the government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member for Nipissing has seen fit, in effect, to cast a reflection on your ruling in respect of the position of parliamentary secretaries when you clearly indicated that under the Standing Orders they ought not to direct questions to ministers during the course of the question period.

I contend that when the hon. member in fact says that the same rights flow to parliamentary secretaries under the Standing Orders, he is clearly incorrect in that contention. The fact is that I almost felt obliged to raise the question as a matter of privilege rather than a point of order, in that I felt the rights and privileges of members of this House in a particular instance this morning were affected by the parliamentary secretary in question, because rather than ask his questions in the parliamentary context of the House of Commons, he took the circuitous route of asking questions of his own minister in the committee structure.

I would refer Your Honour, in the consideration of this matter, to Standing Order 55 (1) which provides as follows:

> The Standing Orders of the House shall be observed in committees of the whole House so far as may be applicable—

Then exceptions are stated with regard to the seconding of motions. In other words, I suggest, with great deference, that you as Speaker of the House, have an obligation to ensure that the rules of the House and the Standing Orders are applied fairly and properly with regard not only to the affairs of this House but also in reference to committee proceedings. I have mentioned the fact that almost a question of privilege arose by virtue of the incident this morning. I, personally, was affected as a member of the committee who wanted to examine the estimates.

The fact is that my privileges as a member to investigate and to question the minister were affected by the intervention of the parliamentary secretary who wanted to speak at the same time as me. I was excluded from getting on the list this morning by virtue of the fact that he was there. I would even question, for example, the right of a parliamentary secretary to ask a question of another minister, because it seems to me there is a special relationship between the ministry and a parliamentary secretary.

I take great exception to this practice, and I think Your Honour should be firm in respect of a parliamentary secretary asking questions of a minister of his own department and taking up the time of the committee when there is a time limit and when many members, including many backbenchers on the government side, want to participate and ask questions in the time that is available. In the committee system there is limited time. We have only ten minutes in which to ask questions. If the parliamentary secretaries continue to participate in these debates, it will very much affect the rights and privileges of each member of this House in representing his constituency as he feels he should and has the right to do.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I think I must refer to the legislation which created the role of parliamentary secretaries and what was said at that time, as well as what has been said by various Speakers along the way concerning their role. I think it would be superfluous to repeat what Your Honour said, to the effect that parliamentary secretaries have the right to ask questions except of their own ministers in this House. The same principle should apply in committees. After all, I think it heaps abuse upon abuse when one considers that often the parliamentary secretary is a substitute for his minister, as he should be, in a committee, and then the very next day or later in the same day he questions his own minister. I think this is a clear abuse of the role of parliamentary secretaries.

Regarding the other question which was put by the Chair and brought up is the matter raised by my colleague from Athabasca the other day as a question of privilege, I would, with respect, remind you, Mr. Speaker, that there does lie an appeal from the ruling of the chairman of the committee to the Chair itself; that is, from the chairman of the committee of the whole where the estimates are being considered and whether they should be brought back in when we are in committee of the whole on tax legislation. There the Chair not only has the right but must decide on the point of appeal. It must do it, also, on a question of privilege.

I pointed out the other day—I do not want to get into that argument again—that the chairman of a standing committee of this House will decide questions of order and the committee will be master with regard to order. There is an appeal on this question. But all through our Standing Orders there is a very clear distinction between a point of order and a question of privilege. My colleague the other day raised a question of privilege, and what my colleague today has raised is, I believe, a question of privilege. It is my humble and respectful submission to you, Mr. Speaker, that the responsibility lies strictly with Mr. Speaker on questions of privilege.

These privileges extend all through the House. In the particular instance of the other day it was in the House and just outside. They were related questions of privilege. I do not think anyone can draw any particular distinction between the two. Questions of privilege might arise in committee of the whole, and if an hon. member is not satisfied with the ruling by the chairman, the rule provides that there shall be an appeal directly to Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker sits in judgment and, to rather transverse the words used, Mr. Speaker is dragged into the affairs of the committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: There is no serious disagreement, of course, about the fact that procedure is provided specifically for such an appeal. There is a marked contrast, of course, in the relationship between the proceedings of committee of the whole and the proceedings of a standing committee in that regard. In fact, the contrast between the two is quite significant.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two points. First, it is clear there is a considerable difference between the operation of the House of Commons and the operation of a standing committee. In some respects there is greater power in the hands of a standing committee than in the hands of the House of Commons. The second point I want to make is that Standing Order 65 which governs committees of this House provides no restriction concerning who may or may not be a member of a standing committee.

In point of fact, we have had the example of cabinet ministers having been members of committees, and we now have a cabinet minister who is chairman of a committee. It strikes me that the fact that he should be able to join a committee of the House of Commons and act as its chairman also probably means he has the power to act as an ordinary member of that committee, and if so, surely the logic is that he can ask questions of witnesses who appear before the committee and can participate in the activities of the committee.

I think it is important to remember another purpose of a committee: it is not only to examine the minister, but also to invite a whole host of people to participate in the affairs of the committee and the discussions before it. Surely, anyone who is eligible to be on the committee should have the right to ask questions. On the question of whether or not a parliamentary secretary should ask questions of his minister, one could argue whether it is intelligent, wise or proper to do so; but in view of the ruling you gave, Mr. Speaker, about parliamentary secretaries asking questions in the House of Commons, I submit there is nothing in the Standing Orders which prevents a parliamentary secretary doing so. I would suggest that until there is something in the Standing Orders that prevents him from doing so, he should be permitted to do it: he has not broken the laws, regulations or traditions of the standing committees. Parliamentary secretaries have been asking questions of ministers and others ever since we developed the procedures for standing committees.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comment that you would not wish to breathe down the necks of all chairmen of standing committees. I can understand the physical difficulty of doing that, let alone the practicality of it.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I am trying to reconcile what your honour said earlier about what you would or would not permit in the House regarding parliamentary secretaries asking questions in the question period and what I invite Your Honour to read in the proceedings of this morning's meeting of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which will be printed in the next two or three days.

I appreciate the fact that what the parliamentary secretary did this morning at the committee meeting is something that Your Honour would not allow in the House in terms of the questioning of his own minister. But if the Standing Orders apply to this chamber, they should equally apply to the operations of the committees. I fail to understand how one rule can apply in the House during the question period and another rule can apply in the standing committee with regard to questioning of ministers. If you do not permit something in the House, I fail to see how it can be permitted in a standing committee.

Mr. Speaker: To put the matter in perspective, it might be more appropriate to say that I have certain powers to permit or prohibit something here, but I do not have the same powers to permit or prohibit certain things in the standing committees.

The hon. member for St. John's East raised what the hon. member for Edmonton West described as a question of privilege. I should like to draw his attention to the fact that it was raised not as a question of privilege but as a point of order. I think that is quite proper. It concerns business in the standing committees. It relates to proceedings and in fact is a procedural question pure and simple. It is, in fact, a point of order concerning the privileges of hon. members. As others have said, if it is not a point of order, they would quite readily volunteer to put forward the matter as a question of privilege if that would change its character. I do not think it would.

Hon. members have said that when a parliamentary secretary asks questions of his own minister in a standing committee, in fact he interferes with their right as opposition members to ask questions. You do not have to go very far from that proposition to see the difficulty that precisely the same thing would apply if it were another government member proceeding to take up some of the time of the committee and asking the very same questions of the minister. I do not say that in an effort to put forward an argument on one side or the other of the case; I say it only to illustrate the impossible position in which hon. members are seeking to put the Chair by asking the Chair to pass judgment on a description, on a second-hand basis, of events which have taken place in the standing committee, a description—which is certainly far from agreed upon—of the argument and nature of the proceedings.

For many years in this House, the Chair has refrained from sitting in appeal on procedural decisions taken in standing committees. Hon. members are seeking my guidance as to what steps I would take if I were chairman of the standing committee involved. Surely hon. members have the intelligence to appreciate the reasoning, that I have exposed under considerable fire, in respect of my attitude toward the role of parliamentary secretaries at proceedings over which I preside. However, with all due respect to hon. members who participated in this debate, let me point out that that is the limit of my authority, and unless procedural changes are made that remains the limit and I do not propose to attempt to exercise a non-existent authority to decide appeals of standing committees in procedural matters.

As I said, my reasoning is obvious and clear in respect of a situation in which one hon. member asks questions on one day and answers them on another. I exposed my reasoning on that, and one can only speculate as to what I would do if I were sitting in the chair of the standing committee involved. I do not propose to cross that line unless in some way members of the House deem it proper, in their wisdom, to amend the procedures that have been followed so carefully which keep the Chair out of questions of order—and essentially this is a very serious and important question of order—in the standing committees. A question of order it is, and the Chair will not sit in appeal on questions of order in standing committees.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order arising out of the remarks you just made. I am sure you must recall the time when in the twenty-ninth parliament I was chairman of the Standing Committee of Transport and Communications presenting the fifth report of that committee and I was ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker disagreed with the chairman of the committee and said that a ruling made by the chairman of that committee had been in error, and therefore the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was not in order and could not be introduced and concurred in at that time. I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that in the twenty-ninth parliament Mr. Speaker felt that as part of his responsibility for accepting and approving committee reports he had the right to change, and perhaps at times overrule chairmen of committees.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in a moment.

The hon. member for Crowfoot has raised a point of order in respect of a precedent. The fact is that the Chair has stayed out of the proceedings of standing committees, as required by the citation in Beauchesne's before the proceedings of a committee are reported to the House. Once the proceedings of a committee are reported to the House, the House has authority to come to grips with what has taken place in the standing committee. That is the clear distinction.

If, for example, the matter before a standing committee is legislation, the matter then comes to the House at the report stage if amendments have taken place in the standing committee. The fact is that an appeal against procedural rulings in a standing committee is not provided for, but the same amendment can be, and frequently is, introduced in the House at the report stage that was refused on procedural grounds in the committee. Therefore, the House has to address itself as a whole to the very same decision that was taken in the standing committee.

When the proceedings of a standing committee, such as the one referred to by the hon. member for Crowfoot, are reported to the House, a number of arguments may be put forward relating to the proceedings that took place leading up to the report. Then the House is seized with the proceedings that take place in the House in a regular, procedural way. That is quite different from asking the Chair to make a judgment on a second-hand description of a decision that was taken in a standing committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief. I merely wish to point out that not only is there the precedent in the twenty-ninth parliament to which the hon. member for Crowfoot referred, but there is a precedent in this parliament in which Your Honour did what you now say is your right to do. I refer to the report which came back from a standing committee on Bill C-44. You found something wrong with the report, and that was the same with respect to the report in the last parliament.

I support Your Honour's position. It is quite a different thing for you to deal with a report that has been tabled and to find in your judgment that there are things in the report which should not be there, from Your Honour ruling on what a chairman did in the handling of a standing committee.

MECHANICS' LIEN AGAINST PART OF CFB COLD LAKE PROPERTY

Question No. 4,039—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Is the government aware that a mechanics' lien registered in the Land Titles Office for the North Alberta Land Registration District at Edmonton on November 23, 1959 as Number 491, Book LS, Folio 16 is still registered against part of the Cold Lake Air Base property and, if so, does the government intend to vacate it?

2. Does the government intend to continue extradition proceedings against John Blandy Jenkins, former comptroller of City Construction Company Limited, in order that he may be tried in connection with fraudulent sworn declarations regarding monthly progress payments for the Cold Lake Air Base?

3. What progress has been made with the United States authorities in this case?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Justice as follows: 1. Yes. The Department of National Defence does not intend to vacate the mechanics' lien since such a lien filed pursuant to provincial legislation against property held in the name of the Crown federal has no force or effect.

2 and 3. At the request of the Attorney-General of British Columbia extradition proceedings were instituted in August 1966 to have John Blandy Jenkins returned from the U.S. to British Columbia to face charges of false pretences and obtaining money by swearing false documents. On November 30, 1966, extradition was refused on grounds that the evidence adduced was insufficient to commit for extradition. No instructions have been received from the Attorney General of British Columbia to pursue this matter.

PLAN TO CONTROL POSSIBILITY OF INTRODUCTION OF LASSA FEVER DURING 1976 OLYMPICS

Question No. 4,124—Mr. Robinson:

Does the government have a contingency plan to control the possibility of introduction into Canada of "lassa fever" during the 1976 Olympics from countries where this disease is prevalent?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): A detailed Canadian Quarantine Contingency Plan, specifically directed to the containment and control of the four major quarantinable diseases, smallpox, cholera, yellow fever and the plague, has been developed by the Department of National Health and Welfare in consultation with the Provincial Departments of Health; the guidelines therein form the basis for action in the event of the inadvertent importation at any time of such dangerous communicable diseases as lassa fever. Constantly updated contingency plans exist to deal with the possibility of the introduction into Canada of "lassa fever" during the 1976 Olympics, including the emergency adaptation of existing isolation facilities.

QUEBEC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,155—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Who is in charge of the Quebec Regional Psychiatric Centre?

Question No. 4,157—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Who is in charge of the Pacific Regional Psychiatric Centre?

2. Does his formal education include (a) first degree (b) second degree (c) any additional degrees?

3. What is his salary level?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. Dr. Chunanil Roy.

2. (a) Yes; (b) yes; (c) yes.

3. $34,500 to $44,900.

LOANS TO PROVINCES FROM CANADA PENSION PLAN FUND

Question No. 4,167—Mr. Gillies:

1. Have any loans been made to the provinces from Canada Pension Plan fund and, if so (a) to which provinces (b) in what amounts (c) at what rate?

2. Have any other loans been made from the Plan and, if so, at what rate of interest?

3. What steps exist to ensure that the funds of the Plan are recompensed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) and (b) The following statement reflects the total investments of the Canada Pension Plan Fund by provinces from March 1, 1966 to February 9, 1976. (c) The applicable interest rate is the weighted average of market yields of Canada bonds having terms of 20 years or more. The monthly interest rate on new Canada Pension Plan investments varied between 8.21 percent and 9.48 percent in 1975.

2. The only loans made from the Plan are those made to the provinces and, in some cases, to their provincial crown agencies; the residues not taken up by the provinces are loaned to the Government of Canada. The monthly interest rate is the same as that given in part 1(c).

3. All loans made to provinces and/or provincial crown agencies are duly guaranteed by the respective provinces.

Order Paper Questions

QUEBEC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE—OUTSIDE EVALUATORS

Question No. 4,301—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Were outside evaluators contracted to evaluate the Quebec Regional Psychiatric Centre and, if so, what (a) programmes were evaluated (b) are the names of individuals who evaluated such programmes (c) was the cost of each evaluation (d) conclusions were drawn from each evaluation?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): No.

Question No. 4,302—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Were outside evaluators contracted to evaluate the Ontario Regional Psychiatric Centre and, if so, what (a) programmes were evaluated (b) are the names of individuals who evaluated such programmes (c) was the cost of each evaluation (d) conclusions were drawn from each evaluation?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): No.

PACIFIC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE—OUTSIDE EVALUATORS

Question No. 4,303—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Were outside evaluators contracted to evaluate the Pacific Regional Psychiatric Centre and, if so, what (a) programmes were evaluated (b) are the names of individuals who evaluated such programmes (c) was the cost of each evaluation (d) conclusions were drawn from each evaluation?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): No.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SEARCH AND RESCUE HELICOPTERS

Question No. 4,595—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. How many Armed Forces helicopters stationed on the West Coast were serviceable and ready to take to the air and/or in the air on (a) February 26 (b) February 27 (c) February 28 (d) February 29 (e) March 1, 1976 and, in each case, what flights were made by each such helicopter?

2. In each case, were passengers carried and, if so, (a) what are their names (b) what were the points of embarkation and disembarkation (c) for what purpose?

3. For the same period, did the helicopters respond to calls from the Air Sea Rescue Centre at CFB Esquimalt and, if so, to how many?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. See following statements.

3. Yes. Ten calls were received and helicopters responded to all ten calls.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—BUDGET 1973-76

Question No. 4,768—Mr. Matte:

What was the (a) total budget for the Department of National Defence (b) budget for the Canadian Armed Forces in the Province of Quebec for (i) 1973-74 (ii) 1974-75 (iii) 1975-76?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): (a) (i) $2,248,509,780; (ii) 2,532,847,300; (iii) Figures for 1975/76 will not be available until the close of the fiscal year. (b) The Department of National Defence does not apportion its annual budget/estimates on a provincial basis but to activities in the Defence Services Program without regard to geographical location. However, the Department maintains a record of actual expenditures by province and they have been as follows for Quebec: 1973/74, $349,368,245; 1974/75, $394,468,343; 1975/76, not yet available.

PRIVATE RAILWAY CARS

Question No. 4,777—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) How many private railway cars are owned by the government (b) what are their numbers and/or name designations (c) how many miles has each travelled since April 20, 1968 (d) what is the present cost per travelling mile of each (e) what was the total cost for all travelling made by all cars since April 20, 1968 including salaries of personnel, etc?

2. (a) What are the names of all persons who have made use of such railway cars since April 20, 1968 other than the Governor General or members of the Royal Family (b) what is a complete list of all trips including (i) points of departure (ii) points of destination (iii) dates involved (iv) purpose of each trip?

3. What are the names, addresses and job designations of all passengers including those who made use of the cars during any of the trips?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) A two-car train set used by the Governor General is owned by the Government and two private railway cars are on loan from Canadian National. (b) Car 5; Car 53, Northwind. (c) Records are retained only one full year. Since April 1, 1974 Car 5 has travelled 25,269 miles and Car 53 has travelled 28,894 miles. (d) $1.95 per mile. (e) Total cost to Transport Canada since April 1, 1974 is $150,600.

2. (a) (b) (i) (ii) (iii)

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS TO REPORTS OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSIONS—ONTARIO

The House resumed, from Monday, April 5, consideration of objections to reports of the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for various provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The House will now resume consideration of the objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief comments with regard to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario, 1976. When the idea of an independent commission on electoral boundaries was first implemented in 1964 it was to get away from the government bringing in a bill setting out what the boundaries would be for redistribution, with the principal aim being to prevent gerrymandering of the ridings either by members or by the government.

The commission itself is a very independent one; it is not appointed by the government but by Mr. Speaker and other independent bodies. Another aim was to get away from the long debate and study of the redistribution question by parliamentary committees. One might ask, if this is the second time the independent commission has acted to bring in a report, has this all worked out? There can be no question that the commission has shown that it is an independent body. I think we may ask ourselves with regard to the present redistribution which has been going on since the 1971 census—really, since 1972—whether this is the most expeditious way to handle redistribution, because hon. members will recall that the commission brought in a report in 1973 which was not accepted by the House. That redistribution was stopped by an act of parliament and the number of seats in parliament was increased by a bill at that time. Since this redistribution started in 1972, this is the fourth set of maps which has been presented to the House.

Some hon. members feel that this report is a good one; some think it is terrible. I believe there is one matter on which there is a great deal of unanimity, at least on the part of the members of parliament and the people of northern Ontario, and that is that we are disappointed that this report proposes that the number of seats in northern Ontario be reduced from 12 to 11. The representations from communities, from municipalities and from other groups have been long and hard since the preliminary maps were published last August in an effort to maintain the present strength of 12 members in the House of Commons.

I believe that the town of Geraldton circulated a petition to practically every municipality in northern Ontario, and at least a dozen from my own constituency endorsed that petition asking that the present strength of 12 members in the House of Commons be maintained. Likewise, there were public representations at the hearings in Sudbury and Thunder Bay, as well as here in Ottawa, to indicate support for the present 12 members from northern Ontario as well as representations and support for this position by all hon. members on both sides of the House. When the number of seats in the House of Commons was increased by the 1973 bill, seven additional seats were given to the province of Ontario, and we believed that surely we in northern Ontario would be able to maintain our present number of seats. I certainly hope that the commission will review this matter after the representations have been made in this debate.

If the commissioners would consider the special situation in northern Ontario, they would see why we should maintain the present number of seats in the House. By northern Ontario standards, the riding of Algoma is a medium-sized constituency; but even at that it is some 390 miles from one end to the other and it is not all combined in two or three municipalities. There are literally dozens of villages, hamlets, rural municipalities and unorganized municipalities, as well as several good-sized towns. Ridings like Thunder Bay, Kenora-Rainy River and Cochrane North are rural ridings which are even larger. I believe that they are the three special ridings under schedule F of the Canada Elections Act and they have to have earlier nomination meetings.

The constituents of rural ridings look to members of parliament, their riding officers and staff for special services which often are not necessary in urban ridings. Often the office of a member of parliament in a constituency is the only federal government office serving that constituency which is able to deal with problems relating to every government department.

If we examine the proposed redistribution, we can see that in northwestern Ontario the five present ridings will be reduced to four, and we can only ask ourselves how we can expect to maintain the standard of representation with only four members as opposed to five. Likewise, the citizens of that area will ask how they can expect to have the same standard of service with one less member of parliament and his staff. It can only be expected that we have the kind of representation we have had during the last 24 years or so in the House if we maintain the present number of representatives from northern Ontario.

In the redistribution which took place in 1966, which I believe was the first under the independent commission, the tendency seemed to be to separate rural and urban ridings. Some described this as the doughnut approach whereby the rural riding contained the small communities surrounding cities and the outlying rural area and the cities were separate constituencies. I believe this method has served very well. Often the people of rural areas feel they do not receive as much attention as that of city or urban centres.

Using the approach of having urban and rural ridings separated has served very well. Previous to that, ridings—at least in the Algoma, Sault Ste. Marie and, I believe, the Thunder Bay areas—were composed of mixed rural and urban areas. If one looks at the map of northern Ontario it is easy to see the great difficulty in trying to redistribute the ridings on an equitable and fair basis. The present redistribution tends toward the low end of the average population, either in the low 60,000s or middle 60,000s. However, Kenora-Rainy River has a population of some 71,000, and Nickel Belt in Sudbury has about 90,000, so there certainly is enough population to justify at least that additional seat by maintaining the present number of 12 members of parliament from the north. Essentially, the commission has added to the riding of Algoma the township of Prince and a portion of the southeastern corner of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, which amounts to about 11,000 additional people added to the present Algoma riding.

The other boundaries do not add significant areas of territory or population. Essentially, I have not received any representations from Algoma opposing the proposed redistribution. There is a history of the city having been a portion of the Algoma riding up to the 1968 federal election. Many of the services and agencies serving the rural part of Algoma are provided by the city of Sault Ste. Marie. A great number of the people living in the rural riding work in the city of Sault Ste. Marie. I have, however, received representations from the city council and the MPP for Sault Ste. Marie opposing putting a portion of the city in with the Algoma riding. Mainly, this was on the basis of mixing rural and urban areas, the community of interest being different, and so on.

I received some favourable comment from individuals looking at it from the point of view that there would be two representatives from Sault Ste. Marie with additional service from two members. However, the main representations from the city were indicated by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) when he spoke last evening. Representations from at least the city council and the provincial member opposed part of the city going into the rural riding. With these objections, we might ask what the alternatives would be. I must say that they are probably less workable than the ones proposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. We have some idea of how the commissions would think, because this is the fourth set of maps that has been prepared; therefore we have some idea of the alternatives they would propose.

In the 1973 preliminary maps they proposed putting a large portion of the northern area of the Algoma district into the Algoma riding. That would have added some 20,000 square miles of territory. The disadvantage to that is the large amount of additional territory for a representative to cover and service, as well as the large number of miles to drive in order to provide service.

Another problem arises with this redistribution. Both Cochrane North and Timmins-Chapleau would lose if we were to bring the Algoma federal riding to the minimum levels required under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. Their population base would slide below the minimum limits. The second proposal made in the final set of maps in the 1973 report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission was to put a portion of Sudbury in the Nipissing riding in with the Algoma riding. That would be a difficult proposal to see established because there is very little community of interest even though the size of the communities may be very similar. There is certainly no working relationship that we have ever had historically.

The present riding has representation from three territorial districts. This would be a fourth. I think it is an unworkable proposal that was made in the report of the commission in 1973. Yesterday, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) spoke about the opposition to part of West Nipissing going into Timiskaming. I think the opposition would be even stronger to the 1973 report of the commission.

The third proposal which was made in the preliminary maps of the 1976 redistribution commission report proposes that a portion of the regional city of Sudbury be put in with the Algoma riding. There was strong representation from various representatives in the city opposing this before the Electoral Boundaries Commission when it held its hearings in Sudbury, as well as a long petition. I attended one meeting in Walden to hear the representations opposing this. I believe that on the basis of those representations and alternatives, the commission came to the decision to put a portion of the city of Sault Ste. Marie in with the Algoma riding which did not have adequate population to meet the minimum standards of the act. Perhaps this solution is not completely satisfactory. Perhaps it is impossible to come up with a completely satisfactory proposal. However, it is a workable solution to meet the minimum requirements of the act and to provide adequate representation and service to the ridings concerned.

I hope the commission will take a further look at the number of representatives from northern Ontario with a view to providing 12 representatives rather than 11 as is now proposed in the report of the commission.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think I could rise on a point of order in which I have less personal interest than this one, for we have very few speakers left in this debate. However, with the long list of speakers that I understand is still before us, and because of the fact we are dealing with these objections province by province, unless we do something we shall not reach British Columbia until about 3 a.m. I wish to suggest that the House now agree that from here on the speeches be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I would like to reinforce what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said. I have been asked to take some responsibility with regard to members of parliament from all parties from the province of Quebec who wish to speak on this matter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How many have you got?

Mr. Blaker: I have a list of 22 members from the province of Quebec who want to speak. However, that may grow as others also have the right to speak. If they each take the time allotted to them, we will be some time. It is a matter of courtesy to the other provinces that we adopt this procedure I do not want to see members sitting here until two or three in the morning simply because some members decide to take their full 20 minutes. I support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in requesting that we cut back speeches to ten minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I have a list of Liberals. They will take approximately an hour and 20 minutes. There are four Conservatives. I would say that within two hours we will be finished with the province of Ontario.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As you just said, Mr. Speaker, that is just the province of Ontario. The hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) mentioned Quebec. There are others as we go across the country. I certainly would not want to impede the right of any member to speak; however, I hope the consensus will be such that we can now obtain a House order with respect to limiting the speeches of ten minutes hereafter, following the hon. member who I am sure will follow the spirit of the order.

● (1600)

I submit that all members must be given a chance to make their comments. There is at present a House order governing the time set aside for this debate; but if each speaker speaks at length there may not be enough time to complete this debate in accordance with the terms of the House order. Frankly, I am trying to discover when one parliamentary day ends and another begins.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It ends immediately before the new day begins, at five minutes to 2 p.m.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Bearing in mind that we must be fair to all hon. members, and what this debate is all about, I wonder if the House would not be prepared to agree unanimously to an order limiting speeches to, say, ten minutes.

Mr. Philbrook: Mr. Speaker, I oppose the hon. member's suggestion. I understand his position. I prepared a speech which will take more that ten minutes to deliver, and closer to 20 minutes. It is unfair to expect someone, on about a minute's notice, to cut a speech in half. I do not think it can be done properly and I am afraid I insist on opposing the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Foster: If I may speak on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, as most members favour an agreement which would give all a fair chance to speak, would it not be better if the House leaders met, did their calculations and then returned with a proposal which the House could consider?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I understood that originally there were to be 13 speakers from the Liberal party. Several have already spoken, and two were to take only four or five minutes. I calculated that the Liberal side of the House would need about one hour and 30 minutes. It appears, from what I have heard, that the opposition party on my left wishes to put up four speakers. If they can tell me how much time they will need, we can make more accurate calculation

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak on the point you just mentioned, I am prepared to take less than ten minutes. I understand that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is also prepared to abide by the suggested restraint. Perhaps it would be useful, if the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) agrees, if the hon. member were to speak later. That would give him enough time to shorten his speech. Perhaps he could keep it within the confines which might be suggested in the House order.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern shown by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but I believe it should have been provided at the outset that speeches should be limited to 10 minutes. This formula should have have been adopted yesterday. Yesterday, members who had the opportunity to get the floor were allowed to speak for as long as they wished; in other words, those who wanted to take 20 minutes did take 20 minutes, those who wanted to take 10 minutes took 10 minutes.

On behalf on my party, I do not want to shoulder the responsibility of expressing the views of my colleagues without having consulted them, as well as my leader. That is why I would like to ask the Chair to allow me to consult them before giving my final decision. I am quite prepared to limit my speech to 10 minutes. However I believe it will be impossible since I am living in one of the most "chopped up" ridings in the province of Quebec and I would like to have the opportunity to make my point. Anyway, I will try to contact my leader and in a few minutes I will give you a definite answer.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest that we leave the question for the time being. Perhaps the House leaders could meet and agree to limit speeches to 10 or 15 minutes. Until they report, perhaps we could carry on.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I shall keep my remarks brief and allow my colleagues to put their comments on record. I shall talk about redistribution in Ontario. I, with others on my side, signed the objection filed by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). My objections to the commission's proposals relate strictly to the points raised by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton. I signed the objection to give hon. members the opportunity to address themselves to the points raised in it.

I shall now deal briefly with my constituency. I suppose most members of parliament do not like to see redistribution taking place. It is impossible, after representing a rural constituency for several years and becoming better acquainted with constituents and their problems, not to harbour reservations about redistribution. Members representing rural constituencies are especially concerned as with each successive redistribution the number of rural seats declines and the number of urban seats rises. That means that after each redistribution it is more difficult to make the voice of rural Canadians heard in parliament. Therefore, the people of my area do not altogether like this redistribution. They do not like the idea that rural Canadians will have a diminished voice in the House of Commons. We know that it is necessary and equitable: we know that after every census, redistribution should more accurately reflect the demographic changes which took place in the previous ten years.

I shall voice some of the immediate concerns of my constituents. The proposed redistribution will radically alter our constituency. No member of parliament who has a good working relationship with his constituents likes to see constituents taken away from him and placed in another constituency. You develop a sense of loyalty to your constituents, a working relationship which may be difficult to reestablish from scratch, as it were, after redistribution. Thus, when new boundaries are drawn, difficulties for members and constituents are created. Sometimes constituents do not know to which constituency they belong. There is initial confusion.

Having said that, allow me to commend the Electoral Boundaries Commission working in Ontario for the excellent work it has done. It was forced to make a number of changes about which I harbour reservations, as do other members of parliament, I am sure, whose constituencies will be affected. Having examined the final report, I am convinced that the commission considered my representations and the representations of constituents. It listened to representations made by two municipal bodies in my constituency, those of the town of Wellesley and of Mount Forest. Those two town councils passed resolutions asking that the proposals they were making to the commission be considered. The commission considered both proposals, and the proposed changes are acceptable to the people of the areas concerned. Mr. Justice Campbell Grant deserves great credit for the tremendous work he did, and the members of the commission deserve the approbation of members of parliament representing Ontario constituencies for the work done in connection with redistribution.

Clearly, the commission tried to do two things. It tried to take cognizance of local concerns expressed by members of parliament and delegations appearing before the commission, and it tried to take into account the community of interest as made evident to the commission. The commission did something else. It tried to simplify constituency boundaries and make them conform as much as possible to municipal and provincial boundaries.

At the present time, I represent three counties and one regional municipality.

I should make it clear that I am extremely conscious of the fact that one of the aims of an Electoral Boundaries Commission should be to make it easier for a member of parliament to represent the whole of the area which falls within his boundaries, to make it easier for the people in the municipalities, when presenting briefs to government, to establish well ordered lines of communication with the government. These are things which the boundaries commission has tried to do.

There are one or two other points I would like to make. This is the fourth set of maps which has been drawn up by the commission. It is clear that a tremendous effort has been made and that this has been done at tremendous public cost. I would hate to see the commission sent back to the drawing board and told to start over from scratch as a result of the objections which have been raised. I do not share the doubt expressed by some members as to whether the commission was acting within its mandate. I have no doubt it was, and I believe it tried to discharge its responsibilities in a responsible and effective way.

Before the closing, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that there is need for an early decision on this issue. It is a matter which has dragged on for some years. The census on the basis of which these proposals are based was conducted in 1971, five years ago, and the people in the areas affected are entitled to an early decision on the part of the government so they may know in which federal constituency they are to be located. I would urge consideration of the fact that if we are to start from scratch and redraw the maps once again, it would undoubtedly result in further delay before a final decision could be reached, resulting in considerable inconvenience for many people throughout Ontario who are entitled to an early decision.

The next election will be fought on the basis of the new boundaries, and one of our responsibilities to possible candidates and to the party associations is to clear up as soon as possible what the new boundaries will be in order to give them an opportunity to reorganize and start their work in preparation for the next election.

Once again, let me say I am generally pleased with the decisions which have been made with respect to my own constituency. I am sure the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) agrees with the general concept. I am pleased that Dufferin county, for example, will be put into one constituency instead of being divided among two. I am pleased that Grey county, instead of being split three ways, as at the present time, will be split only two ways. I am pleased that in the case of Waterloo county, the regional municipality of Waterloo, the commission was receptive to the brief put forward by the council of the township of Wellesley which objected to their being placed in the Perth constituency when they should more properly be kept in with North Waterloo. I am pleased, also, that the commission recognized the brief which was put in by the township of Wallace asking that they be kept with Perth county and not included in the county of Wellington. I think the commission deserves a great deal of credit for the work it has done.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, to come right to the point, the proposal of the Ontario Electoral Boundaries Commission, which would mutilate the traditional federal riding of Halton, is completely unacceptable to my constituents. The eastern half of the new municipality of Halton Hills, of which Georgetown forms the main part, should remain within Halton riding at this time. At any rate, Halton Hills, as an integrated municipality, newly created by the provincial government of Ontario, should remain intact whichever riding it is in.

Let me say at this point that we support the spirit of the representation of the hon. members for Ontario and Thunder Bay ridings that the Ontario commission has not satisfactorily justified its proposals with reasons. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) states that the commission is there to guarantee the democratic wishes of Canadians. Halton feels it unfortunately does just the opposite.

Again, let it be quite clear that Halton is not disputing the loss of the northern one-third of the riding in the current redistribution, that is, the part composed of Erin Village, Erin township and Hillsburgh village. That portion, delightful as it is, is more remote from the southern remainder of the riding, has stronger relations with Welington and other areas surrounding it, and was invariably lost to Halton sooner or later. Nor are the people of Erin apparently protesting the change.

[Mr. Beatty.]

We made our position quite clear in a combined presentation to the commission in Toronto on October 6, 1975, that we accept their first proposal on the northern Erin loss but totally reject their second proposal on splitting the eastern part of Halton Hills away from us and giving it to a federal riding to the East. Brampton apparently feels that it already has enough to handle and is as opposed to the change as is Halton, for similar reasons of rationalizing electoral boundary lines. However, the only change in the Halton proposal which the commission seems to have made since lat summer is to give the Georgetown area to the new urban constituency of Brampton rather than the new rural riding north of Brampton which was to be called Halton-Peel and is now to be called York-Peel. This would seem to make the situation even worse, rather than better. In fact, either change is unacceptable to both sides, either the over-all Halton or Peel regions, either the riding losing the Georgetown area or the riding due to receive it as an unsolicited gift. Last year the local people submitted a combined brief from the two regional governments, and a Halton Hills town council brief, both in support of my own brief as federal MP, all rejecting the commission's proposal.

Our Halton Hills mayor, his Worship Tom Hill, and the Halton regional chairman, Mr. Allan Masson, both appeared in person with me before the commission to present a united stand to keep Halton Hills intact and to keep it for now with Milton and Oakville in the federal riding of Halton.

There are no known differences of opinion on this controversy between anyone in the local areas concerned. Not between Georgetown and Brampton. Not between Halton riding and either Brampton riding or York-Peel north of it. Not between Halton region and Peel region. Not within the various parts of Halton. And there is no partisan difference of opinion, to the best of my knowledge. I have taken the trouble to check, and the political parties involved agree wholeheartedly that the commission's proposal is a tragic mistake. That is, all the citizens involved at the local riding level, whatever their electoral area, whatever their political affiliation, whatever their level of government, are united in being appalled and upset about the commission's proposal for the Georgetown area. There are no apparent dissenters. The commission was so informed last summer but chose to ignore the pleas of these citizens and their elected representatives.

The commission seems to have placed most or all of its emphasis on balancing up the numbers of voters in each riding within the stipulated range. That is one of their main guidelines, but only one. There are, I submit, other important considerations, some official, some just a matter of common sense and recognition of the democratic wishes of the citizens concerned.

We have heard the same points raised time and again in this debate, and I thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for their struggle against these injustices and inanities. The integrity of municipal boundaries must be maintained, that is, towns like Halton Hills must not be split up. After all, it was the Ontario provincial Conservative or Davis government which created this new municipal unit a few short years ago as part of its regional government movement. Welded together out of the independent jurisdictions of Georgetown, Acton and part of Esquesing township, this new integrated town has worked hard to unite itself and is just beginning to experience the sweet taste of success. When it finds itself torn in half by a small group of appointed officials who seem to place higher priority on a set of numbers than on a set of human and social values.

What about the dilemma from the federal perspective? Picture two different MPs representing two different halves of the same small town, perhaps on the same local issue at the same time. How rational and efficient is that? What if the mayor and the town council are in the other MP's half of the town? Can I still approach them directly, or does protocol oblige me to approach the other MP first? Halton Hills must remain united, not split in half. Picture one small town council having to deal with two MPs instead of one.

Federal riding boundaries must be kept simplified and in line with the electoral boundary lines of other levels of government, particularly provincial and regional lines. My constituents are becoming confused, frustrated, threatened and even angry by a plethora of riding boundary lines and relationships. In our area, they are finding more and more, to their horror, that they belong to a number of different administrative areas—four governments, several government agencies, like UIC, and a number of private or semi-private zones such as Bell Telephone. They are all expected to keep these various jurisdictions straight in their minds when even a genius would have trouble sorting them out. Perhaps due to lack of co-operation in planning, perhaps due to lack of interest in grass-roots opinions, boundary lines are becoming a bureaucratic nightmare. The constituent deserves a break, with simple coordinated boundary lines, before it is too late to save the credibility and acceptability of our social-political system.

Traditional, close ties between towns and villages in the same riding must be preserved as long as possible and only be severed when each part is populous enough to form its own riding units. The Georgetown area is not only an integral part of Halton Hills now, but has always had strong inter-community ties of every kind with Oakville and Milton-social, cultural, recreational, economic and political. I myself grew up in that amateur sports network and have many long-standing friends all over the riding as a result.

Halton has never had strong ties with the Brampton or Peel areas. In fact, the riding based on Lake Ontario between Toronto and Hamilton have been characteristically tall north-south ridings without strong east-west relationships. The people would travel farther north and south for their activities inside the old riding than they would east and west outside the riding.

Perhaps such patterns of human activity can change, but not rightfully against the will of the people, not overnight and not without full consultation. One day, perhaps the next time around, the population spill-over from Toronto and Hamilton into the Halton area might be great enough to let Oakville stand as a riding on its own, and perhaps Halton Hills to combine with Milton, but not yet; not as long as towns like Halton Hills are threatened with being torn in half for part of its existence.

Population figures and the number of voters in a riding are important, obviously, but should not be the only or even the main determinant in assessing boundary lines. Whatever the commission's rules and guidelines, the amount of work in a riding and whether an elected official can handle it is only indirectly related to the size of his flock. There are many other factors—the nature of the riding, the demands they place on their MP, the ability of the MP and his organization to cope. In the final consensus, as long as the MP and his constituents are happy and satisfied with the existing situation, why should a small group of appointees, unfamiliar with the area, presume to change it against everyone else's wishes? To prevent gerrymandering yes, but what gerrymandering is there when all parties agree? They should not, I submit, buck public opinion, Gouging Georgetown out of Halton would be like tearing off a man's right arm.

Finally, there should be some provision to consider rapid growth centres such as those in the Toronto-Hamilton area. More remote areas like northern Ontario are entitled to retain their representation just on the vastness of their ridings alone, in spite of small and slow-growing populations. They are welcome to keep their ridings if in the bargain we may keep ours. I would be only too happy to take on a larger load than the commission considers proper—in other words, to keep all of my present riding—if it would give an extra riding to northern Ontario.

However, areas like Halton, Brampton and Peel need their own rules to avert chaos, not those of a vastly different area like the north. If part of Halton were given to Brampton, which may well be growing faster than Halton, we might find to our alarm that long before the next boundaries revision Brampton riding was even farther beyond the maximum allowable voter population than Halton.

So, for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker—preventing the axe slaying of the new town of Halton Hills, keeping federal boundaries in line with provincial and regional boundaries, leaving Georgetown at home with her family of communities, putting sacred cows, like population figures, in their proper perspective, opening our eyes to the realities of growth differences between areas like Halton and Peel within metropolitan areas, in contrast to remote areas with vastly different considerations—we implore the commission to reconsider their unbending attempt at surgery in the interest of the patients.

In fact, let us hear from the patient at this point through the voice of the Georgetown Independent, a Halton weekly newspaper, in its lead editorial on March 10, 1976, "Keep Georgetown in Halton":

> The Electoral Boundaries Commission decision to lump Georgetown and the former northeast end of ward 2 (Esquesing) with Brampton in a new federal riding, has to be the most unrealistic alternative the commission has conceived to date.
> Surely, there is no advantage in taking Georgetown and the northeast corner of Halton region in with Brampton instead of a Halton-Peel riding that included Caledon, Vaughan and King townships? It's like jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

Then a little further on, Mr. Speaker:

> The stupidity of the decision is only ameliorated by the knowledge no one from this area had a hand in it. No one on the commission knows the situation well enough to be able to comment knowledgeably on already confusing political boundaries carved out by the province and the country. The commission apparently has ignored community of interest, concentrating on population to compile new ridings.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the editorial concludes:

Federal elections may be a long way off and the decision to change boundaries may seem unimportant at this time, but the situation will change when this area is overshadowed by a Brampton giant in the next trek to the polls. Let Georgetown district remain in Halton, a riding with which we have always held political, community and cultural ties.

The other Georgetown weekly newspaper, the Herald, reported that a non-partisan group of interested citizens was formed to oppose the loss of their area. A petition was circulated to obtain hundreds of signatures opposing the redistribution. The results of this petition, at least several hundred citizens' names protesting the commission proposal, have been forwarded to Mr. Nelson Castonguay, the Representation Commissioner of the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

Halton Hills Mayor Tom Hill contacted each of the political parties in town urging them to take an opposing stand on this issue and voice their concerns. Plans included the organizing of a committee of representatives from the chambers of commerce and service clubs in the area in charge of collecting and researching material for a second brief to be presented to the Electoral Boundaries Commission, stating the specific facts. Regional government put Halton Hills together and now the Ontario Commission is splitting it right down the middle at No. 10 sideroad, casting the Georgetown area adrift to an unfamiliar territory, the mayor contended.

These and other area papers, such as the Acton Free Press, reprinted the redistribution map along with a report of Mayor Hill's fight against the changes. The mayor said that perhaps Erin township should be returned to Wellington, as it was for years, but certainly Acton should not be split off from the rest of Halton Hills. Mayor Hill said he thought they had already submitted a strong brief based on population, assessment and community interests when the first boundary change was proposed, but it did not seem to do any good.

Last summer when the commission first proposed riding boundary changes for Halton, the proposals included Georgetown and Northeast Esquesing with Caledon, Vaughan and King townships to form a riding called Halton-Peel with a population of 66,700. Mayor Hill and I, along with Halton regional chairman Allan Masson, petitioned the commission to rescind their proposal, but to no avail. "Now we have to work to the best of our ability to try to persuade the commission to keep Halton, without Erin, the way it is and keep Halton Hills together", the Mayor stated. He said that interested citizens backed by the three political parties must band together to achieve this goal. Mayor Hill furthermore placed an "Important Message" in the local paper urging all Halton Hill residents to sign the form at the Bottom and send it immediately to his office.

However, in spite of all these considerations, what of this sole concern of the commission for riding population limits? Let us examine the figures. According to the 1971 decennial census, Halton had a count of only 82,679, well within the upper limit of about 102,000 even before losing a few thousand people from the Erin area. By contrast, the Brampton electoral district now has a greater population of 91,897 people, over 9,000, or 11 per cent, more than Halton, with Brampton growing even faster than Halton. The total voting count listed for Georgetown in 1974 was only about 10,000. Therefore, to leave Georgetown in Halton would only reverse the present count between the two proposed ridings and leave them both within the reasonable dimensions. At that Brampton, with the lower population, would be growing faster and would probably catch up to Halton by the next revision. Why, then, the urgency to rob Halton to pay Brampton? Does it make any sense at all? None that we in Halton can see.

[Mr. Philbrook.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the only thing which makes sense to the people of Halton is to leave Georgetown in Halton regardless of the population figures. Haltonites are apparently not complaining about how well they have been represented in the past, and their MP is not complaining about the workload. Failing such a sensible and acceptable move, the second and less preferable option would be to leave Halton Hills, including Acton, intact and let it join Brampton in a new riding called Halton Hills, Brampton, leaving Oakville and Milton together to form a small but fast growing riding still called Halton.

If the commission cannot accept either of these first two sincere and serious proposals, both of which are considered more sensible and acceptable than their own, then in my opinion, and undoubtedly in the opinion of those I represent, there is only one course left for them to follow as honourable men; that is, they should fold up their tents and steal away into the night. They should resign their posts and either permit new officials to be appointed or leave the federal electoral boundaries unchanged for Ontario for the present time.

The people of Halton realize that the last suggestion is a drastic one. However, in our minds it is no more drastic than the artificial proposal which the commission seems determined to inflict upon us and on the present system in general. We cannot register too strongly our complete disapproval of the commission's present position and whatever rules of the Electoral Boundaries Act they may feel contribute to that position. We would be more than pleased to meet with them again if they were willing, and we urge representatives of other governments in this area to make themselves available, including the Ontario provincial government.

Whatever the outcome, Mr. Speaker, the people of Halton Hills will never accept in their hearts being separated from each other, even just in federal matters.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario. In my opinion it has handled a difficult job in a fair and meaningful way. Some of the comments made yesterday and today by hon. members on the government side in respect of redistribution in Ontario approach the irresponsible. Let us remember that the ridings which we are now representing are based on 1961 census figures—15 years ago.

An hon. Member: No, 1971.

Mr. Stevens: I am very startled that some hon. members think they are representing ridings based on 1971 census figures. That is not correct; they are based on 1961 figures. Following the election of 1968 we began to represent the ridings we now have in this House. The suggestion that we are referring to 1971 figures when we look at our ridings is totally incorrect. I am startled that one hon. member who has already spoken about Ontario redistribution did not even know the elementary facts as to what we are trying to redistribute, namely, our ridings based on the 1961 figures.

The reason I make this statement is that our population figures in Canada have risen from 18,238,000 to 23 million between the years 1961 to 1976, or 26 per cent. That is an increase of almost 5 million. It would be most unfortunate if we were required to fight the next election with our present boundaries which, I emphasize, date back to the 1961 population figures.

There have been tremendous population changes in this country in recent years. I have in mind not only the 26 per cent increase but the tremendous population changes from area to area. I think it would be unfair to the Canadian public to suggest that an earnest attempt to redistribute and update ridings from the 1961 census figures was so irresponsible that the commission report, in the case of Ontario, should be scrapped. It is my belief that the redistribution proposal before us now is a great improvement over the first proposal by the commission. Redistribution which we are now considering is not perfect. But then, what is? Government members seem to want more political input in the matter. I think that would be a dreadfully backward step.

As we know, according to the 1971 census there were 7,703,106 residents of Ontario. This province, accordingly, is entitled to 95 members, seven more than at the present time, when and if this new redistribution goes through; that is, Ontario will have seven more seats, 95 compared to the 88 we have based on the 1961 census figures. In short, when hon. members suggest we should scrap what we have before us today, they are in effect saying they do not want seven more members representing Ontario ridings in this House. That is one of the reasons I suggest it is irresponsible for government members to be so adamantly opposed to the redistribution we are now considering.

Based on that figure of 7,700,000, the riding quotient in Ontario is 81,085. When we provide a variance quotient of 25 per cent, which the commission is required to do, we find that the largest riding in Ontario cannot be larger than 101,356 and the smallest cannot be smaller than 60,814. Under this redistribution, the region of York, the southern part of Simcoe county and the northern part of Durham region are included in six different ridings. In order of 1971 population, these ridings are Markham, Richmond, Vaughan with a population of 84,941, York-Peel with a population of 83,034, Durham West with a population of 77,905, Simcoe South with a population of 72,170, Victoria-Haliburton with a population of 68,743, and Dufferin-Wellington with a population of 66,817. Geographically, the biggest riding is Victoria-Haliburton which stretches for over 100 miles from one corner of the proposed riding to the other. Dufferin-Wellington, the second largest riding in geographical area, is about 70 miles across. Based on the population figures I have given, taking into account the relative geographical size of these ridings, I think the commission has done a pretty good job in apportioning the existing ridings.

While most of the people in my area of York-Simcoe appear to be satisfied with the commission's 1976 recommendations, I would point out a concern among the people of the town of Georgina who feel they would have greater affinity with the municipality adjacent to them, that is, if they were included in the northern part of the York region forming part of the proposed riding of York-Peel. To this end I received a letter from the chairman of the education committee of the Georgina chamber of commerce, Mr. Foss, who said:

> I would like to bring to your attention a matter which is of grave consequence to the future growth of the township of Georgina; that is, the redistribution of the federal electoral boundaries.
> At a general meeting of the membership of the Georgina chamber of commerce, it was unanimously voted that the chamber of commerce strongly oppose this redistribution. Our reasons are as follows:
> 1. Traditionally, Georgina township has always been York oriented. This York orientation is even more prevalent today and there is every indication that it will always be this way.
> 2. The majority of our residents "go south" every day to work, many of them to the commercial and industrial areas in York region.
> 3. We feel that York county hospital is "our hospital" and we look to York regional police for our safety and protection.
> 4. We have little in common with Brock, Beaverton, Bobcaygeon and Lindsay; indeed there is no public transportation available to the majority of the Victoria-Haliburton areas and little indication that there ever will be.
> 5. One of the major reasons given for the establishment of regional government in York in January, 1971, was the need for a unified planning process, one that would unite the area municipalities in York in an approved planning program under a regional official plan.

Mr. Foss continued:

> We are bound on the north and west by Lake Simcoe, on the south by our sister municipality and our future and destiny are vertically and not laterally inclined.
> Therefore, we are imploring you to do everything in your power to include Georgina in the York-Peel electoral riding, as certainly you can see our obvious affinity with your riding rather than our proposed isolation to the north and east.

I am sympathetic to the views expressed in Mr. Foss's letter, but I can also understand the difficulty faced by the commissioners in apportioning these ridings. As I have mentioned, the proposed York-Peel riding in 1971 had a population of 83,034: in 1971 the population of Georgina was 14,299 which, if added to York-Peel, would result in a total population of 97,333. That would make it the largest riding, after redistribution, of any riding now shown in the province of Ontario in the report now before us. Victoria-Haliburton, on the other hand, would be left with 54,444 people which is well below the minimum quotient to which I referred, which is 60,814. In short, I can understand the difficulty of the commission in finalizing the boundaries in our area. The smaller ridings in population, Victoria-Haliburton and Dufferin-Simcoe, are clearly smaller because they cover large geographical areas. On the other hand, the more urban areas have a faster population growth.

The municipalities within the proposed riding of York-Peel increased their population by 8,183 between 1971 and 1974 alone. In 1974, the proposed York-Peel riding had gone up to 91,217 people. Georgina, in 1974, had a population of 16,312 which, if combined with the proposed York-Peel, would give a riding of 107,529 based on 1974 population figures.

Personally, I should like to see Georgina join with a North York region riding. Historically, Georgina has been part of a North York riding and it is unfortunate that it cannot remain so. On the other hand, something has to go. As already has been mentioned—and I believe it will be mentioned perhaps by the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) following me—perhaps the town of Caledon could be joined with the proposed riding of Brampton. Here, again, we have an obvious problem because Brampton has a population of 91,897 and Caledon has 19,375, again based on 1971 figures. This would mean that that new riding would have 111,272 people, clearly well above the high quotient limit that has been abided by to date by the commissioners.

In short, it is difficult to adjust these ridings and be completely equitable and just to all regions and all people. However, on balance I believe the commission has hit a happy compromise. I think it is unfortunate that members insist overly strongly for changes without realizing that every change they ask for has a domino effect and will be felt in other ridings, perhaps with disastrous consequences for those ridings.

We know what we have here. We may not be 100 per cent sold on it, but let us accept the fact that we at least are 90 per cent satisfied, and for the other 10 per cent of protection the people might be striving for, let us not make the mistake of either having redistribution entirely discarded so that we will have to fight the coming election on the boundaries we now have, which I believe are quite unfair to the present population of Canada; or, secondly, that we trigger the commission into making changes which will be much worse in their final effect for most of us than the proposals now before us.

I believe it is unfortunate that there is not a York North designated riding in the present proposal. I understand that if the member for York North (Mr. Danson) is called upon, he will recommend that the riding of Markham-Richmond-Vaughan as proposed should have its name changed to York North. I believe that because of the historic significance of the riding of York North, and the fact that it was a riding represented in this House by a prime minister—granted, not a Conservative prime minister but one from the other side—and that we have had several cabinet ministers from the riding of York North, including Sir William Mulock, it is an unfortunate change if for no other reason than that the name York North not remain as it has since confederation as a riding represented in this House of Commons.

So I recommend that the commission take seriously the suggestion that the proposed riding of Markham-Richmond-Vaughan which, after all, is substantially made up of the present riding of York North, have its name changed to York North. In any event, if in their wisdom the commissioners see a way to include Georgina with my riding, I would point out that many people in my riding like the name York-Simcoe and would like to have it preserved. It may end up that we could have a York-Simcoe-Peel riding, if that is the solution the commission sees.

I should simply like to indicate that substantially we are in favour of the commission's proposal. There can be improvements, but basically let us not strive to get what some might consider to be perfection, only in reality later to discover that they have given birth to a monster which would truly be unsatisfactory to many people in this province and in this country.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments in this discussion on riding boundaries. I should like, through you, Mr. Speaker, to ask the commissioners if they would consider the statement I am about to make in relation to that made by my colleague the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook). The hon. member for Halton, in representing the riding of Halton, and myself representing Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe, are in adjoining ridings and I think we share some of the same concerns. I should like my comments to be construed as being in support of the basic argument put forth by my colleague, the hon. member for Halton.

Back in August, 1975, when reported in the Canada Gazette, part I, the proposal at that time was to have a riding called Brampton which would include only the city of Brampton, and secondly that part of Halton Hills which the hon. member indicated earlier would be included with Caledon, King and Vaughan townships in the region of York. At that time I made no representation when the public hearings were held, because I thought the city of Brampton as a riding by itself was a very good decision taken by the commissioners. It was a decision I wholeheartedly supported.

I understand, however, that many people did make representations on behalf of the area of Halton Hills north of No. 10 sideroad and east of the seventh concession based on the fact that they had very little relativity with the north end of the region of Peel or the north end of the region of York. I think that on the second draft, and on the report that is before us for discussion at this point in time, the commissioners did take into account that argument and on this draft have added that part of Halton Hills to the city of Brampton, as opposed to putting it back in the riding of Halton as desired by my colleagues.

I would just comment, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the commissioners that I think if one of the problems the commissioners are wrestling with is to add to the ridings around, then it might be more acceptable in this case to add the town of Caledon to the city of Brampton than it would be to add that part of Halton Hills. The town of Caledon, as a previous speaker mentioned, has some 19,000 people and is very close to the number of people in Georgetown, so it would not really alter very much the population figures.

I want to say, before going any further, that should the commissioners decide, in their wisdom, to leave the riding boundaries as they recommend at the present time, I would be very pleased to represent the people of Georgetown and work very diligently on their behalf. I have many friends and acquaintances in Georgetown. I have lived very close to there for a period of 15 or 16 years. In fact, I have worked in the Georgetown area.

I rose, however, to make the point that I think there is a case to support the expressed wish of the people of Georgetown and, second, to present to the commissioners the case that there might be more equal distribution between the proposed riding of Brampton and the proposed riding of Halton. I would think that one of the objectives should be—and many hon. members have raised this point—that there should be good relativity between the federal, provincial and municipal bodies. In this case, if the commissioners were to decide, in their wisdom, to have only the city of Brampton in a riding, this might be the only riding in Canada that would elect a mayor, that would elect a member to the provincial legislature and would elect a member to this House all within the same boundaries. That would be an ideal situation.

● (1650)

Returning to the point I was making previously, I think that the people in Halton Hills north of lot 10 and east of the seventh concession have the same point of view as the people in the town of Caledon, that is, that the north-south relationship is certainly stronger than any east-west ties. One could argue that the figures are difficult to relate to for the commissioners and that perhaps the town of Caledon would be a more acceptable area to add to Brampton than would part of Halton Hills.

I know that the commissioners are not allowed to take into account future growth. I think various hon. members have commented on how they think this should be handled the next time. I suggest that the next time redistribution is tackled, we should consider at least using up to date figures, if not giving some consideration to future growth. I want to put on the record the fact that the city of Brampton is the fastest growing area in Canada and possibly in north America. I should like to put some figures on the record to give the House an idea of the rate of growth in Brampton at present.

The city of Brampton has recently signed an agreement with the province of Ontario, through AHOP, to have 15,000 new homes built in that municipality in the next three years. This is a phenomenal rate of growth for any community. In 1971, using the figures that are available, the population of Brampton numbered 70,838. In 1973, it rose to 84,788. By 1975 it was 98,590. If we project those figures at 4.3 persons per home, and as a low estimate that perhaps two-thirds of these 15,000 homes will be occupied by the next election, that would give a population of 141,600. If all were occupied at that time, it would give a population of 163,000.

If you look at the voting statistics, you will find that in Brampton in the 1972 federal election there were some 41,000 voters. In the 1975 provincial election there were 52,419 voters. If you project this at approximately 2.3 voters per house owned, using the low figure for 1978, that would raise it to over 75,000 and it could well be in the order of 87,000.

The case I am putting forward for consideration is that if you add Georgetown to the riding, or that part of Halton Hills which we have described, in 1978 in terms of the population there would be 161,600 people there, or a possible total, if all the 15,000 new homes are occupied in 1978, of 183,000. That would be either 98,500 voters or 110,000 voters. This would make Brampton by far the largest riding in the whole of Canada. As a matter of fact, it would be 1½ times as large as the whole population of Prince Edward Island. I think we should give some consideration to that fact. I put these figures on the record for the consideration of the commissioners because I really want to draw the following conclusion.

I would like to recommend to the commissioners that riding No. 3 as set out in their report contain only the city of Brampton, and that riding No. 28 referred to as the riding of Halton be as described, plus that part of Halton Hills north of lot 10 and east of the seventh concession which it is now proposed be added to the city of Brampton. What I think is fairly easy for the commissioners to accept is that if they made this change it would not involve any riding other than the two adjoining ridings, in other words, the periphery boundary would not need to be changed in any way; it would only be a dividing line between the two adjoining ridings. In that case there is certainly unanimous agreement between the two members of parliament who represent the two ridings.

The whole purpose of asking the commissioners to reconsider this is simply the fact that having the city of Brampton in one riding only, and having Halton, as requested by my colleague, include that part of Halton Hills would give a better distribution of population between the two ridings because that change would align both these ridings very closely with the municipal and provincial boundaries and would give a better distribution of population between the two.

I think we should recognize—and I am sure the commissioners will—that making this very simple change will still mean that the riding of Brampton and the riding of Halton will be two of the largest ridings after redistribution. I think the commissioners would want to be very careful to achieve as close a balance as they can between the two ridings.

I should like to conclude by saying that if, in their wisdom, the commissioners should decide to leave the boundaries as set out in the report, I would ask that they give consideration to changing the name of the riding from Brampton to Brampton-Halton Hills or Brampton-Georgetown because that would reflect more accurately the make-up of the proposed riding. Finally, I should like to say that in general the commissioners have done a responsible job. It is certainly not an easy job to try to divide up Ontario with its various interests and various population densities. I think that one of the basic objectives must be to achieve as close a balance of population in adjoining ridings as possible. This could well be accomplished by transferring that part of Halton Hills north of No. 10 sideroad and east of the seventh concession to the riding of Halton and by establishing a Brampton riding embracing the city of Brampton only.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments about redistribution, particularly as it concerns northern Ontario where we had a net loss of one seat in 12, and northwestern Ontario with a net loss of one seat in four, or a 25 per cent loss.

First I would like to support the hon. parliamentary secretary, the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) in his concern about the legality of the present report of the commissioners, and also the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) who expressed his concern about long-term effects of the report of the Ontario commission. I think it is extremely important that before we go any further this matter be clarified—certainly before we go into another election—so that, as the minister suggested, the consequence of an election being for some members declared void because of inadequacy of the report of the commission.

I have considerable sympathy for the commission which had to write this difficult report. It was a difficult job. In this regard, Ontario is a very difficult province and very different from many others. The limits within which the commissioners had to work were such that their job was extremely trying.

● (1700)

However, the report of the commission has not been taken well in northern Ontario. As a matter of fact, since I was elected to this House in 1972 I do not think there has been an issue in northern Ontario which has bothered people as much as the loss of a seat through redistribution. People in northern Ontario, particularly in northwestern Ontario, see this as a basic reduction in their political power. This is an area of the country with many problems. There are problems of slow growth, economic problems, a series of communications and transportation problems. All these things need much attention, and the feeling is that there has been a noticeable reduction in power and that northwestern and northern Ontario do not count as much as they did before redistribution.

In many parts of the area government services are few and far between. We do not have the kind of services which are available in larger cities like Toronto or available to people 50 or 100 miles away from Toronto. The distances are great and the services are few; therefore, the role of the member of parliament becomes much more difficult and at the same time more vital.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) was talking about having one of the new ridings in his area and that the longest distance in it would be 100 miles. What about ridings where distances are 400, 500, 600, 700 and 800 miles, where communities are 100 and 200 miles apart and where constituencies run from Lake Superior to Hudson Bay and James Bay? These are the kinds of problems we face in northern Ontario.

I should like to deal briefly with one of my concerns. At the beginning I mentioned the legality of the report of the commission and the question of whether the report could stand up in court because no reasons are given. This point was made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay, but I should like to deal with another aspect of the report of the commission, and to give my opinion as to how the commission should view the meaning of the deliberations over the last three years in this House.

Most hon. members who were here in the twenty-ninth parliament will recall the long debate over redistribution as it was brought out in early 1973, and the fact that there was a change in the British North America Act to allow for more seats in the country so that no province would have fewer seats than they had at that time. If the commissioners would reread that debate—and I am sure they already have—I think they will find a strong feeling expressed that even though areas like northwestern Ontario are not provinces, they should maintain their political power.

Hon. members from northwestern Ontario and northern Ontario worked very hard and were instrumental in having the BNA Act changed. I think the meaning of the vote in this House was that northern Ontario, even though part of a province, should be treated as provinces like Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan and would not lose a seat in this redistribution. Northern Ontario comprises a unique area. It is quite different from the northern parts of any of the other provinces. It tends to be cut off geographically and culturally. It spreads over perhaps 1,000 miles. It is very large. It tends to have quite a separate existence. In the field of curling, for instance, Northern Ontario is treated as a separate province. It was not possible under the amendment to the BNA Act—unless, of course, we want to set up an extra province—to allow for the maintenance of these seats in northern Ontario. However, I think most hon. members will agree—certainly those who took part in the debates in 1973 and 1974—that the meaning was there. The spirit of the change in the law was that northern Ontario would not lose a seat in this redistribution.

I hope that when the commission reviews the debate of yesterday and today and before coming up with their final report, it will take another look at the earlier debates to try to garner from them the intentions of this House when it voted to change the BNA Act to ensure that no province would lose a seat in the course of redistribution. I submit that northwestern Ontario should not lose a seat if the spirit of that debate is to be maintained.

Because of the changes which were made in the BNA Act, four additional seats went to Ontario. As the act stood in the first redistribution report, the minimum number of people in constituencies was to be 63,487. If northern Ontario were divided by 12, the figure would be about 63,500, only about 300 over the minimum allowed under the act as it read in 1973. At that point there was no question that the commission could not just set up a set of 12 constituencies under these conditions with a maximum deviation of only 300 in population.

However, by reason of the amendment to the BNA Act, Ontario received an additional four seats and this gave the commission considerable leeway, about 3,700 people per constituency. It was possible under this latest legislation—and I think we from northern Ontario demonstrated this to the commission—to set up 12 reasonable constituencies, given this deviation of some 3,700 people between one constituency and another.

Between the mid-term census of 1966 and the census of 1971, the population of southern Ontario increased by 11.3 per cent. The population of northern Ontario increased by 5.1 per cent. They both increased, one at roughly twice the rate of the other. However, let us see what happened in terms of redistribution because of these increases. Southern Ontario, with a population increase of 11.3 per cent, had an increase from 75 to 83 seats: that is eight seats. Northern Ontario, with a population increase of 5.1 per cent, went from 12 seats to 11 seats. Southern Ontario had an increase of 10.8 per cent seats, and northern Ontario a decrease of 9.2 per cent. Given the changes over that period of time, it does not seem fair that southern Ontario should gain eight seats and northern Ontario lose one. This is the case we have to make.

I will conclude by restating one or two points. Most members of this House, especially those who debated this issue in 1973 and 1974, believe that no province or area like northern Ontario should lose a seat in redistribution. The members from northern Ontario and northwestern Ontario were some of the most assiduous in trying to make this case. Because of these efforts of members from northern Ontario and other provinces, this change was made. Southern Ontario, with its additional seats, is being well rewarded for its increase in population. Northern Ontario should at least hold its own. Northern Ontario, which needs help and does not have services like other parts of the country, should be looked after in terms of maintaining the number of seats it has at present. I hope the commission will look very carefully at the reduction of one seat in northern Ontario and reinstate the twelfth seat in its final report.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be as brief as possible because I know there are members in the chamber whose interests are of more concern, generally speaking, than mine. I want to make two points, one in a general sense and one in a parochial sense, about an area which I do not represent but about which I have a great deal of concern.

The first general comment I wish to make is that in my assessment this commission, in terms of its integrity vis-à-vis southern Ontario, an area about which I know quite a bit, is to be commended. Without reservation or qualification, I offer them my very humble thanks. With regard to the first map I did not have a reaction to the same degree as the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) because it did not affect me as directly as many of my good neighbours and came as a shock to many people. However, when they had their hearings, particularly in London—which was the only one I attended—I was very impressed with the honest desire of all the commissioners to achieve something that was in the best interests of the Canadian people, not just members of parliament but those we are elected to represent.

The commissioners turned their backs on the numbers game in southern Ontario and the artificial boundaries. They looked to the community of interest of people who were in danger of feeling further and further removed from their own government. I say again, without qualification or reservation, that I offer them my most humble appreciation. I believe I speak for a good number of my colleagues in southern Ontario when I say that. If there could be any evidence of that, the nature of some of the objections that have been made in the last two days—and I do not minimize even changing the name of a riding, because it is important to the people there—might be referred to as being of a minor nature. I think that is a great tribute to the commission.

Having said that, may I take a few minutes to take up the cause in northern Ontario vis-à-vis the riding of Sault Ste. Marie. Yesterday the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) mentioned this. I will continue in that vein because we received some additional information an hour or so ago regarding the difficulty in which the people of that area find themselves. Possibly the commission will be able to make some accommodation for them. I preface my remarks by saying that in a political sense all parties of that area are in general accord with the difficulties that will be faced by people in the area commonly known in Sault Ste. Marie as ward I if it is split from the rest of the city. I have before me an excerpt from the Sault Ste. Marie Star of Thursday, March 4, 1976, which I presume is an accurate report of the attitude of the three political parties in that area. They express grave concern about and, indeed, opposition to the fact that the most densely populated residential area of Sault Ste. Marie will be orphaned from the rest of the city.

I think it is appropriate to read into the record a very brief resolution that we just received from the Sault Ste. Marie chamber of commerce. It reads as follows:

> The Sault Ste. Marie and district chamber of commerce is opposed to any electoral boundary adjustment which will reduce the present geographical size of the riding of Sault Ste. Marie because Sault Ste. Marie is a cohesive, densely populated urban unit with goals and problems which are generally different from those of the adjacent rural riding of Algoma.

Obviously, they want to be made one unit. It may be impossible for the commission to accommodate them. If there is room for some flexibility, and I do not speak for any political parties but simply for some of my friends from that area, I ask the commission to consider, rather than splitting ward I which is in the southeastern portion of the city, directing their minds to the possibility of ward VI which is generally that area lying west of Goulais Avenue. That appears to be a relatively new area. It is not densely populated. In comparison to ward I, it may be an area which would lend itself more naturally to inclusion with the other riding rather than ward I. I can sympathize with those people in ward I who face the prospect of being divorced from their traditional riding, particularly when I know it is a highly populated, residential area. I had the same condition in my own constituency in the 1967-68 redistribution. I picked up one municipality in an adjacent riding. It was not a happy situation for many of the good people in that area.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I again direct my thanks to the commission. On behalf of the good people of Sault Ste. Marie, I hope the commission will be able to consider some form of accommodation to make that riding a more natural one by retaining ward I within the city riding and, just possibly, considering taking ward VI in its place if that should be necessary.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, we have initiated an important and vital debate in the House of Commons, a debate on our democratic institution of a freely elected parliament, the redistribution of federal electoral boundaries which are based on the important principle of representation by population.

May I take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to the members of the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission of Ontario for their efforts and for hearing our representations in the past and again this afternoon. I made a representation to them on October 22, 1975, when they came to Ottawa to hear us. Today, I want to take the opportunity of again expressing what I believe are some constructive suggestions which reflect the main viewpoints of the community leaders and residents of the historical region of Parkdale.

● (1720)

In 1879, the land area east of the Humber River to Dufferin Street and extending northerly from Lake Ontario was established as the village of Parkdale. In 1979, the people of the old constituency of Parkdale will be celebrating the centennial of the constituency's founding. The electoral district named Parkdale was first established under the redistribution act of 1914. Later, in 1924, it was included in the territory belonging to the city of Toronto. It would be desirable if the new federal constituency of Parkdale-High Park, as proposed by the Ontario boundaries commission and containing approximately 92,000 people, could be extended eastwardly from the Humber River and northwardly along Annette and Dupont Streets, thence to Dufferin Street and southwardly down Dufferin Street to Lake Ontario. The new boundaries which I have proposed will better take into account the community of interest and the nature of the social, political, cultural and geographical characteristics of Parkdale-High Park. The present constituency of Parkdale is populated by slightly more than 96,000 people. These people evince an ever-increasing pride, identity with and interest in the area.

The newly proposed constituency of Parkdale-High Park contains many organizations, groups and churches which are endeavouring to preserve and develop a new sense of community in this neighbourhood. For example, the area contains the Parkdale Citizen monthly community newspaper, the Polish language semi-weekly known as The Alliancer, and the headquarters of its parent organization. If contains, also, the Parkdale branch of the city of Toronto planning board, the Reymont Foundation, Parkdale Collegiate, the Lithuanian Cultural Centre, Parkdale United church, St. Casimir's church, St. Josephat's cathedral, St. John's Polish National cathedral Church, St. Stanislaus and St. Casimir's Parish Credit Unions, the largest credit union in Canada, I believe, with more than 15,000 members. It contains, also, St. Vincent de Paul Parish, Holy Family Parish, St. Joan d'Arc Church, St. James Church, St. Pius X Church, St. Anthony's Church, St. Helen's Church, St. Mark's Anglican Church, St. Jude's Anglican Church, the Church of the Epiphany, and many others.

These community churches and organizations help the people of the area develop a community of interest and provide many services. They help to integrate the people of the area, especially those coming from other countries as well as from other parts of Canada, into one cohesive community. The people of this area are becoming more aware of the historical beginnings of the village of Parkdale which, as I mentioned, was established in 1879.

These newly proposed eastern boundaries would better encompass the historic, reconstituted constituency of Trinity which I represented in the House of Commons during Canada's twenty-third parliament beginning in 1957. I also believe that my proposal would be less disruptive and less artificial. The constituency is urban in nature, and the new proposal would eliminate the highly undesirable boundary of the present CNR line. It is preferable to make a major arterial road a boundary line in urban neighbourhoods of today.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

There is a further consideration, Mr. Speaker. Federal constituencies and their boundaries should serve the people of the constituency and their interests according to law. The slightly enlarged constituency of Parkdale-High Park which is being proposed is a well-knit community with broad, common interests. Approximately half the population consists of new Canadians and their children. This characteristic imposes additional duties involving communication, education, service and representation. There is, therefore, an urgent and important need to involve constituents of the area which transcends artifical boundaries in the democratic, political process.

Another concern of members representing highly pluralistic, multicultural constituencies is this: they must encourage all residents of the riding to develop greater interest in the political process and involve themselves in all activities of our society. By encouraging them to use the legitimate avenues and mechanisms of social action we shall assist them to become full participants in and beneficiaries of the Canadian heritage of democratic institutions. We shall also enable them to participate in the spiritual and material well-being of our great land.

If we are to achieve this goal, our major requirements must be to preserve the community of interest of our people. This, I think, could be more easily encouraged if the members of the Ontario federal boundaries commission were to consider the extended boundaries which I respectfully propose this afternoon for the newly proposed constituency of Parkdale-High Park.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I think the commission did an excellent job of redesigning electoral boundaries. I rise to support the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) who said that northern Ontario is to lose one seat in this House. That means that members representing the north will need to cover a wider area and each will be responsible for more constituents. The situation across the border, in Manitoba, is similar. The member for Churchill represents a constituency 171,072 square miles in area. I sympathize with the hon. member who is concerned about the loss of one seat in northern Ontario. In Manitoba, one constituency of 171,072 square miles contains 62,758 people. At least one Manitoba constituency of 35,000 square miles contains 63,000 people. I cite these figures for comparison purposes.

I submit that the commission must examine all relevant factors. If a constituency is too large, its size ought to be adjusted in order to make representation easier. As it is, it is difficult for the member representing the constituency to visit all parts of it. Sometimes you cannot travel by road because there are no roads; you must use aircraft or a boat. If parts of the constituency are inaccessible, the member cannot service all his constituents adequately and, provide the kind of service he could provide if the constituency were smaller.

That is all I want to say. I support the hon. member for Fort William. I know what the loss of a seat in northern Ontario means. The members representing northern constituencies will have their work cut out.

● (1730)

Mr. John Roberts (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. Obviously the redrawing of constituency boundaries is a painful experience for us and a very difficult task for the commission. I want to support those who have complimented the commission on its work, on the effort it has made to arrive at a realignment of the constituencies to take into account shifting population patterns. It is important because of the mobility of the population, that, such changes should be made from time time so that the people may be more accurately represented in the House of Commons. I therefore have no great complaint with the conclusions the Electoral Boundaries Commission has reached.

However, with respect to the area I represent I cannot but regret that one of the traditional parts of the St. Paul's riding, the annex area which is one of the most vital areas of the city and long attached to St. Paul's, will disappear from St. Paul's and be attached to the Spadina riding. I regret very much its moving that part of the constituency. If I might put it in these terms, I feel a sense of loss at not being able to continue to represent the many good friends I have in that area.

The principal reason for which I rise today is to draw the attention of the commission to a small but important incongruence in the new boundary which has been chosen. Those of us who represent urban constituencies are aware that it is often difficult for our citizens to hold very clearly in their minds the boundaries of our constituencies. In a city such as Toronto, where there is a sense of community which far transcends constituency boundaries, it is often the case that people are not clear as to the constituencies in which they are registered. This often becomes evident during elections when workers from a variety of parties manage to put up signs in the wrong places. Many citizens are often not aware of who represents them in their federal parliament, or who is seeking to represent them during an election. There is a tendency in the voters' minds for boundary lines to be fudged. I think it is desirable to render as clearly as possible the boundary limits—to make them correspond to natural divisions within a city, the boundaries of existing provincial constituencies and even of municipal districts.

What is puzzling about the boundaries which have been drawn for St. Paul's is the incongruence I have mentioned. It is that in the northeastern part of the new constituency the boundary line runs steadily along Briar Hill Avenue and then, at Avenue Road, takes a short jog up to Lytton Boulevard. It would seem to me much more consistent if the northen boundary of St. Paul's continued straight across Briar Hill Avenue to Yonge Street. The boundaries of the constituency would then be Briar Hill Avenue, on the north, Yonge Street on the east, the CPR tracks to the south, and the Christie Road and Vaughan Road extension on the west. These boundaries would be more readily grasped by the public than the fudging which takes place by the slight jog in the northeast part of the riding.

The decision of the commission to jog the boundary in that way is puzzling because it runs contrary to the principle established in the legislation, that of attempting to equalize the populations of the constituencies.

The change I am suggesting would not give rise to a domino effect from one riding to another. It is only that there be a transfer of that small portion of what the Commission suggests should be St. Paul's—from Lytton Boulevard to Briar Hill Avenue—a transfer of that small portion from St. Paul's to the new constituency of Eglinton-Lawrence. If done there would be a more closely approximate equality of population.

By the Commission's proposal, the population of St. Paul's would be 90,732; the population in the Eglington-Lawrence constituency, as they have described it, would be 89,109. In other words, there is a net difference between the two constituencies of 1,600 citizens more in St. Paul's than in Eglinton-Lawrence. So it seems we would more closely approximate equality of population between the electoral districts if we were to transfer to Eglinton-Lawrence that one small part of St. Paul's, one which is almost, in geographical terms, an unexpected appendage on the northeast corner. In terms of logic and consistency it would appear better to maintain Briar Hill as one solid boundary, and in terms of the proportion of population the population balance would be better.

Since this seems to be a change which would not give rise to a series of repercussions affecting other ridings, and fits more precisely the idea that there should be equality of representation, it would constitute a more logical design and one more readily grasped by the citizens in the area. I would, through you, Mr. Speaker, earnestly beseech the commission to take very seriously into account making this minor but nevertheless logical change.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, having now had an opportunity to examine the proposed boundaries of the new constituency of Ottawa-Centre I may say to the commissioners, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I am very serious in making the proposals I am now about to put forward with respect to certain alterations which I believe really ought to be made before any final determination is reached as to the boundaries of this riding.

All the constituencies in the country are, of course, exceedingly important. There are ridings across the land representing the hearts or centres of our cities and they usually bear the names of those cities. The riding of which I speak has some additional significance in that it is in the very heart of the national capital, the city of Ottawa. Since first being elected in 1972, Mr. Speaker, I have had the distinct honour of representing the people of this community and, like the city citizens of so many other ridings, they represent all the ethnic strains which form part of this great country of ours, including the two major founding races, English-speaking and French-speaking Canadians.

After this brief preamble let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I do intend to be brief and I trust the commissioners will take seriously the submissions I am making at this time. The first is with respect to the easterly boundary of the riding of Ottawa-Centre, and in particular the part which has been deleted from the riding and which should properly continue to be part of the riding of Ottawa-Centre.

The commissioners, in proposing a new boundary on the eastern side of this riding, have taken the easterly boundary commencing at the north point of the Ottawa River, proceeding along the Rideau Canal to what we who have lived here all our lives commonly know as the Deep Cut. Then, instead of logically proceeding on along the CP line to Hurdman's Bridge, they take instead a cut to the south or southwest at that point along the Rideau Canal down to Craig Street, at which point they go back in an easterly direction to the Rideau River. The effect of this deletion is to divide what is and has been a community known for as long as this city has existed as the community of Ottawa-East—I refer to it as distinct from the riding of Ottawa-East, which is now Ottawa-Vanier.

This new division line going along the Rideau canal, rather than to Hurdman's bridge, and then following the natural geographic pattern along the river and so on, as in the new boundary, eliminates one half of that which has been an integral part of the city of Ottawa and a living community in itself. It has been a living community in that there is a community of interest as represented by the Ottawa East Community Association, the schools, and indeed the churches, all of which generally are on both sides of Clegg Avenue, or what has commonly been known from time to time as Upper Ottawa East and Lower Ottawa East.

The people of that area community for a long period of time have been represented by the member of parliament from the centre part of the city of Ottawa. It has been a pleasure to represent those people for these past years, and I ask the commissioners very seriously to consider that they continue to be represented by the same member of parliament who represents their neighbours and friends just immediately to the south of them. I also ask that the boundary not be from the Deep Cut to Clegg Avenue along the Rideau canal, but rather along the Rideau river, Hurdman's Bridge, and thence to the Rideau canal and back to the centre of Ottawa and the Ottawa river.

The second submission that I would make to Your Honour is that in extending the boundaries of the riding of Ottawa Centre considerably to the west the commissioners have also deleted from that national extension another community, and community of interest, that exist in the area known as Mechanicsville-Hintonburg. This area of Mechanicsville-Hintonburg, which can be defined in general terms as those lands lying south of Wellington street and between Bayswater Avenue and the CPR to the east and Holland Avenue to the west, also traditionally over the years has been an integral part of the city of Ottawa, but at the same time has formed a community and community of interest unto itself.

With respect, as the commissioners have proceeded along the westerly boundary of the proposed riding of Ottawa Centre, moving northerly along Fisher Avenue to Holland and then to Wellington Street, instead of continuing in a northerly directly, and I would propose, to the centre of the Ottawa river and then along the centre line of the Ottawa river to where it intersects with an extension of the centre line of the Rideau canal—instead of that logical, geographical pattern which would have the effect, that I submit is properly right, of continuing the community of interest and having those persons in the area represented by the same member of parliament who represented the persons on the south side of Wellington Street, by going from the corner of Holland and easterly along Wellington Street the commissioners have effectively divided this community in two, in a similar manner as they have divided the community of Ottawa East in two.

My submission is that in the best interests of these persons, and in order to avoid confusion as to which member of parliament represents them, it would be more logical from a geographic, demographic, and community of interest point of view for the people residing in the area that Holland Avenue continue to be the westerly boundary, that it continue to proceed northerly to the centre of the Ottawa river, and then along the centre of the Ottawa river as I have earlier described.

I am pleased to have had this opportunity of making these submissions, and I would ask the commissioners to consider very carefully the importance to the people of both communities of not having their communities divided, as well as the positive aspect that the entire communities in each of the Ottawa East and the Mechanicsville-Hintonburg area be represented by the same member of parliament.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I very much welcome the addition of the other areas that have been added to the riding of Ottawa Centre. It will indeed be a challenge to represent such an enlarged area and additional number of people. Although I do not have the exact measurements, I think the land area has just about been doubled and includes those newer areas in this great city of Riverside Park north and south, as well as others in areas south of the city.

Mr. Wm. Andres (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, may I thank you for the opportunity of participating in this debate. I intend to keep my remarks brief. The purport of my intervention has already been outlined and recorded in Votes and Proceedings, but I should just like to re-emphasize a few arguments on behalf of the constituents of the riding of Lincoln and the unique fruit growing area in the Niagara peninsula.

The Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act states very clearly that the commission may depart from a strict application of rules in a case where there is a special community of interest. In my argument I will maintain that the commission has ignored and overlooked the special community of interest found in the Niagara peninsula, especially as it relates to the fruit growing lands in the peninsula.

The commission's submission as it relates to the federal riding of Lincoln does not take into account the rural and agricultural community found therein, with its own economic, social, historic and traditional associations. Lincoln at present follows a long-standing and historic relationship based on its rural fruit growing and agricultural characteristics.

The Niagara fruitlands present a unique and essential industry and agronomy in Canada, especially as it relates to the Niagara peninsula. The fruit industry is beset with many problems and will not be served well if divided into five different ridings as proposed at the present time by the commission. It is agreed that the fruit industry must be preserved and supported. Therefore it needs strong representation at the federal level.

It would be beneficial to everyone if the fruit producing lands could remain under one federal representative in a unified federal constituency, as in the past. Since agriculture is the primary industry in this area, the majority interest and concern of the constituents relate either directly or indirectly to this unique industry. The new proposal for Lincoln riding fragments the economic unity of the riding and would result in less significant and declining consideration being given to this important fruit growing industry. A decline in effective representation of the fruit growing region would augment the problems experienced by the agronomy of the area, and the loss of this great heritage, which is unique to this part of the country, would be felt by all Canadians.

The city of St. Catharines has always served as the urban centre and service centre for the Niagara fruit belt. St. Catharines was made a separate riding in 1968. St. Catharines, as the urban centre, serves very well the rural people and the fruit growing industry in the Niagara peninsula. The Niagara fruit belt stretches from Niagara-on-the Lake to the east to the town of Grimsby to the west along the north shore of Lake Ontario.

Niagara-on-the-Lake under the new proposal would be forced to turn toward Niagara Falls for its representation, with which it has no historic, social or economic relationship. Indeed there is not even a satisfactory highway system between these two areas. In addition, the eastern part of the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth has been added to Lincoln in the new proposal. This area represents a very distinct and separate community of ties and interests.

Urban encroachment is already a serious problem and threat to the unique fruit growing lands of the Niagara peninsula. This problem would be further augmented by tying them in with the highly industrialized centre of Hamilton.

At this time I would like to direct your attention to a film recently prepared by the National Film Board on urban encroachment in the Niagara Peninsula and, indeed, on the unique fruitlands there. Omitting Niagara-on-the-Lake and including that part of Hamilton contradicts all historic, social, traditional and geographical interests, as well as the important economic and commercial links now found in the rural riding of Lincoln.

In addition, the new boundaries set forth by the commission digress from the provincial riding boundaries, municipal and regional lines, thus diversifying further the common interests traditionally held by Lincoln constituents.

I am in receipt of many objections to the commission's report, while I have not received a single representation in support of the new proposals of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. The Lincoln federal riding association, the town of Grimsby, the Niagara Falls riding association, and many others all noted the point that no consideration was given to the community of interest in terms of historic, traditional, commercial and social ties which have long maintained Lincoln as a distinct and special riding with particular characteristics and concerns. At the same time, the Port Colborne association and the Erie provincial association submitted that they had no ties whatsoever to the area of west Lincoln which is also designated to be cut off from the riding of Lincoln.

In conclusion I would strongly submit that the commission failed to give adequate attention to the economic, traditional, and social cohesion in the new electoral district of Lincoln, and ignored the community of interest, thereby rendering inadequate representation of the people of that particular riding in the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief points to make in connection with the joint submission placed before the House on behalf of myself and the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury). I will deal first with the point relating to my own riding of Scarborough West.

I should like initially to commend the commissioners for having taken into account the representations made both by myself and by the Scarborough West federal Liberal association last summer in connection with the boundaries which have been altered in a much more logical way, as a result of which the main traffic arteries and bus routes are now used to delineate the boundaries between ours and other ridings, as against the former system in which they proposed to carve up small little neighbourhood streets. I think this is important in the over-all attempt to minimize the amount of confusion which the electors face at the time of general elections, and I commend the commissioners for having moved in this direction.

The only real question in connection with the Scarborough West area is the request I would make that the name Scarborough West be retained for the riding currently proposed to be renamed as Scarborough South. I make this request bearing in mind that the particular riding will continue to contain 90 per cent of the existing population of the riding known for the last 10 years as Scarborough West. In other words, there is really little or no rationale, in my view, for implementing the name change.

At the present time the southern half of the borough of Scarborough is covered by two appropriately named ridings, Scarborough West on the one hand, and Scarborough East on the other. This situation will not change with redistribution and, indeed, the Scarborough East name is being retained intact. The point is simply made that the same should apply to the present riding of Scarborough West. Both these ridings would then continue to be known under their current labels. In our view this would contribute to an over-all lessening of confusion on the part of the electorate, and is well worth while and in order.

In the event that that rather reasonable argument is accepted, and I trust it may be, there remains then the matter of establishing another name for the new riding that enters into the borough of Scarborough, which is currently being suggested as Scarborough West. That new riding lies between Eglinton and Ellesmere Avenues with a western boundary at Victoria Park Avenue. We have made no specific recommendations in our joint submission in this regard, but a suggestion might be to name it either Scarborough-Ellesmere or Scarborough Centre, the latter of which names was slated for one of the Scarborough ridings in the earlier proposal put forward by the commission last summer.

I would just like to conclude with one short word about the riding of York-Scarborough on behalf of my distinguished colleague who unfortunately is unable to participate in this debate. It seems to us that this particular riding has indeed a long and distinguished record, having for many years in the past had the rather dubious distinction of being the most heavily populated riding in Canada. At the last redistribution it was cut up into almost four complete ridings, indicative of its vast size. The new Scarborough West and East ridings were created at that time as more and more people were tending to settle in this area of Metropolitan Toronto. In this connection the request is simply to retain the name of York-Scarborough and not switch to the proposed name of Scarborough North.

The other point I know my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for York-Scarborough, would like me to put forward, is the request that we maintain the western boundary of that particular riding which extends into the borough of York up along the Woodbine-Don Valley parkway, a very natural boundary line, rather than extending as it does now partly over the Don Mills road.

In concluding my remarks I should like to indicate my sympathy with the problems encountered by members from northern Ontario. I hope the matters they have placed before you will be resolved in some way in order that we will indeed know where we are going in connection with the over-all redistribution situation in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be an understanding or agreement not to see the clock at this time in order to allow the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) to speak. He would be the last speaker on the Ontario report, and we would then proceed to open the examination of the Quebec report with the speech of one member who has to catch a plane, the hon. member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you, like many members here, are very happy to see the hon. member for Bruce-Grey rise to his feet as it signifies the end of the list as far as speakers in respect of Ontario are concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You should have spoken last night.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I know that sentiment has been expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who, as old faithful, has stuck here through thick and thin during the debate on areas of a province some distance from his own.

I want to make a very few brief points, Mr. Speaker. Generally I agree with many of my colleagues from both sides of the House who have expressed consideration for the good work done by the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I speak specifically of members from western Ontario, such as the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis), and my colleague, who is very close to me, the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), who presented briefs and interventions to the commission when it met throughout Ontario. Generally speaking, in our particular cases we have found the commission to be very receptive and very open in its treatment of those briefs and interventions.

I want to raise a couple of points briefly that have been brought to my attention by other members. I speak basically of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) who mentioned the problem that could arise out of the naming of one of the constituencies "Durham West", as there is no particular Durham involved at the present time.

I speak primarily for the constituents who come to my riding as a result of the realignment of the boundaries, particularly the people of the town of Durham, Ontario. Perhaps some but not all members will know there has been some problem in respect of the town of Durham located in my riding and also of the municipality of Durham, which has been brought about because of the regionalization of government. That has been a particular problem to the residents of Durham. I think that the addition of Durham West as a constituency would add to the consternation the people now have. I would agree with the member for Ontario that if the commission could see its way clear to bring this about I believe it should take it into consideration.

The second point I should like to express to the commission concerns the change of the name that has been given to my riding. I think it will be very confusing for the constituents who live there because the name has been changed to the identical name of a provincial riding. I might point out that the riding of Bruce-Grey consists of townships in the county of Bruce which have emanated from the previous riding of Bruce when the county was a riding represented in the House of Commons.

Just before the election in 1972 there were five townships in Grey added to the easterly portion of Bruce. Since that time the name of the riding has been changed from Bruce to Bruce-Grey. That change was made by me through Bill C-228 which was given Royal Assent on March 13, 1975. Then we have the report of the commission which was tabled in the House of Commons, and lo and behold, for some apparent reason that I have not been able to determine, it changed the name around and it came out in the report as Grey-Bruce rather than Bruce-Grey.

At one time the name of the constituency was Bruce. Then it became Bruce-Grey, and now it is Grey-Bruce. The fact remains that the proposed name Grey-Bruce is almost identical to the name of a riding in the provincial legislature. For this reason I would like to draw to the attention of the commissioners that it is my feeling that the name Grey-Bruce would be very confusing to the people in the area particularly since there is now an almost identically named provincial riding in the area. I might point out to the commissioners that 12 townships in Bruce will be represented in the riding under the redistribution plan while only eight townships in Grey will be represented.

There is one other point on which I should like to dwell briefly. As many members have pointed out during the discussion in this House, there is a diminution in the power of the rural ridings and in their spokesmanship in the House of Commons. I think what should be lamented more than anything else is the diminution in the speaking power of the rural representatives of Canada. This situation of course has altered over the years, but this is a subject which I hope the commissioners, when they prepare their final report to the House of Commons, will emphasize. This matter was mentioned recently by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres), and was also alluded to by members from northern Ontario.

I hope the commission will recommend to the House of Commons that at the next redistribution these things be taken into consideration and that they consider not only the number of people in a constituency but also the fact that many constituencies have a large land mass, and the fact that we would like to see these ridings have as much say as the urban ridings.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by thanking the House for this opportunity to raise the points I have brought forward. In addition I wish to congratulate the commission for the work it has done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The House having considered the objections it is my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Ontario, together with copies of the objections and also a copy of the Debates of the House of Commons, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you and my colleagues for permitting me to proceed immediately as the lead off speaker for the Quebec group. I shall try to be as brief as possible because I realize that hon. members would like to go to supper now.

[Translation]

First of all, I would like to address the Electoral Boundaries Commission through you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity to meet with the commission members last summer when I appeared before them on behalf of the seven hon. members for the centre area of Montreal to suggest to them major changes in the boundaries of the seven ridings in the south of Montreal.

First, let me extend my sincere thanks to the commission for accepting the proposal I brought forth on behalf of the seven hon. members. I also would like to congratulate the commissioners for improving my original proposal in two ways, first by giving the Westmount riding the benefit of a north to south extension, and second by balancing the population of the constituencies, which I had unfortunately been unable to do, since I do not have the skills of the cartographers working for the commission.

I would like to recall for the benefit of the commission the highlights of the proposal providing for the ridings in the south of Montreal to be divided on a north-south basis rather than an east-west basis. The advantages of this proposal—and the commission was well aware of them—are that the ridings thus divided on a north-south basis are much more similar to what they are now. This means that all political associations, social organisations and even religious groups will be able to keep operating within the limits that are the closest to what they know now.

In addition, I had said that each riding would thus lie partly north and partly south of Sherbrooke street, which would enable each member to represent richer and poorer people, which I felt permitted a more balanced distribution.

I had mentioned also that a member of Parliament was more representative when he represented people of all social classes, because it is obviously too easy to represent a very specific section of the community and to ignore the views of the others.

However, I should like to point out to the commission that my remarks, even if they receive increasing support from most members for the southern part of Montreal, do not apply to the western portion of Westmount. I think I have made this very clear to the commission.

Now, speaking of the riding of Westmount, I should like to mention here that I am very pleased to support the remarks made by the hon. member for Westmount and Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury).

The hon. member rose yesterday in this House and asked to be given back that part of the riding of Westmount that he will lose through redistribution. He spoke of the area bounded on the north by the Camilien Houde Parkway, on the east by Peel Street, on the south by Sherbrooke Street and on the west by Côte des Neiges Road. The hon. member has every reason to ask that his constituents be returned to him because they have far more in common with the central part of Westmount than with the proposed riding of Saint-Henri in which they would find themselves.

That leaves in the riding of Saint-Henri the area which lies east of Peel Street, McGill University, whose student population extends in an easterly direction to Saint-Lawrence Boulevard, and which was included in the former riding of Saint-Jacques, now part of the proposed riding of Saint-Henri. In fact, an attempt is being made at regrouping the population around McGill University.

I can but support the remarks of the hon. member for Westmount; I am also happy that he should be pleased to welcome in Westmount the constituents of Saint-Henri, some of whom he represented in the past. Still, I should like to stress that there is a problem; I will deal with it only very briefly because I believe one of my colleagues wants to discuss it later on, and that is the problem of chosing names for the downtown ridings.

The proposed riding of Saint-Henri cannot be called Saint-Henri simply because the Saint-Henri parish, which gave it its name, is now part of the new riding of Westmount. In fact, the riding of Westmount should be called Saint-Henri-Westmount; then the people of Saint-Henri would have a greater sense of belonging; more-over, I am told that the riding did bear that name at one time. Still, I will leave it to my colleague from Saint-Henri to discuss this as he has indicated to me that the intends to pursue this matter.

One fact remains: the Saint-Henri parish will not be located in the proposed riding of Saint-Henri; when it come to chosing a name, the commissioners should have settled on either Saint-Jacques or Saint-Henri to take into account the areas added from other ridings. I think it is by mistake it was called Saint-Henri. However I leave it to the commissioners to re-name the ridings, but I wanted to draw their attention on that matter.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes the brief comments I wanted to make, and I thank hon. members for their attention.

Mr. Loiselle (Saint-Henri): Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): I thank the hon. member who will be recognized later today. I understand there has been a special order of the House that we recess. Accordingly, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.15 p.m. the House took recess.

[Translation]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Saint-Henri): Mr. Speaker, I hope the commissioners will be enthusiastic over my recommendations as my colleagues were when I rose to take part in this debate.

I wish first of all to thank the commissioners because during their hearings last summer in Montreal, I appeared along with my colleague from Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) in order to make a few recommendations and I heard representations made by various associations and individuals. I must admit that the commissioners have shown quite a remarkable degree of dedication and understanding and I thank them for the new electoral boundaries changes proposed for our area, following an initial draft.

Last night, the hon. member for Westmount and Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) made the following recommendation to the commission:

> The area bounded on the east by Peel Street, on the south by Sherbrooke Street, and on the west by Guy Street and Côte Des Neiges, contains many people who have long had a community of interest with those—

This is the sector which now appears on the map representing the new boundaries submitted by the commission. I must advise the commissioners that I have no objection to this area being incorporated in the new constituency of Westmount. The reasons for this annexation or extension have been given, and I am in full agreement on this point.

If the commission does not anticipate major changes, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I agree with this extension, but as the member for Saint-Henri, I feel I should convey to the commissioners a representation which was made last Friday evening at my office by seven spokesmen for the Saint-Henri district. As you know, the Saint-Henri constituency includes several wards of the city of Montreal. However, the seven people who came to my office Friday evening to explain the changes they required were from Saint-Henri proper, which includes the area extending from the CPR tracks to the Lachine canal, and from the western limits of Montreal as for east as Atwater Street.

Those people suggested that the new constituency of Saint-Henri should have as its northern limit the CPR tracks as far as Atwater Street, and that the boundaries should then go north up to Sherbrooke Street, and from there eastwards up to St. Laurent Street.

I have been advised through certain people that at this stage, the commissioners do not generally make major changes in electoral boundaries after completing their work. However, Mr. Speaker, I felt I had to pass on to the commissioners this suggestion which was made in good faith and which was supported by solid arguments.

On the other hand, I would like to strongly suggest to the commissioners who have set up these new boundaries that they realize that it is an addition of the whole Saint-Henri to the new riding of Westmount and I urge them strongly that in future the riding of Westmount should be called Saint-Henri-Westmount.

My proposal is not new, Mr. Speaker, because Westmount-St. Henri existed for many years and I suggest the commissioners read the Parliamentary Guide of 1974, page 443. At the general elections of 1917 and 1921, the following was stated:

● (2010)

> Former Division of Westmount-St. Henri (Established under the Redistribution Act of 1914.)

This means that at the time of the electoral redistribution in 1914, the Westmount-St. Henri constituency was established and at the 1924 redistribution, the St-Henri constituency was given the name of St. Henri alone. And to convince further the commissioners, I would urge them to read the book entitled: "Saint-Henri des Tanneries de Montréal». On page 17, the following can be read and I quote:

> Before 1874, writes again Mr. Massicotte, Saint-Henri des Tanneries included in the north, part of the city of Westmount today; at the south, it extended up to the St. Lawrence . . .

Therefore, I cannot see why the commissioners could not accept my definition, my proposal that the new constituency of Westmount should be called Saint-Henri-Westmount or Westmount-Saint-Henri, since it existed at the 1914 redistribution and even in 1875 St. Henri included part of Westmount.

Once that recommendation is agreed to, I presume, by the commissioners, we would want to give a new name to the riding of Saint-Henri. And I would like to suggest to the commissioners to call it St. Laurent for many reasons. If the commissioners wanted to honour a former prime minister of Canada, Mr. Louis St. Laurent, the people in the riding would be delighted and would readily accept that name. Moreover, St. Lawrence Street, from Sherbrooke to the river, is located in the present Saint-Henri riding which extends from Nuns Island in Verdun easterly as far as Delorimier Street the southern boundary of the county goes along the south shore of the St. Lawrence River; for all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, the only name I have to suggest to the commissioners for Saint-Henri riding, is St. Laurent, particularly to honour a former prime minister and for the other reasons I mentioned.

And I would like specially to reiterate my recommendation to the commissioners this new riding of Saint-Henri-Westmount, including the whole of the county of St. Henri represents a population which has its roots back till the founding of Montreal. It is an active working population.

The people in that area live in closer contact than in any other district of the city of Montreal. I feel strongly about this and I dare hope that the commissioners would be sympathetic towards my recommendation. If they do not accept to change the boundaries of the riding as I said earlier, I would recommend it be named Saint-Henri-Westmount since it cannot be named Saint-Henri anymore because they took out certain parts from that riding. The Saint-Henri district stops at Atwater Street and my western boundary is Atwater Street. Therefore, for those reasons, I hope that the commissioners would agree to my proposals and, in concluding, I would like to thank them for the work they have done.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, following the federal election of 1968, when I first came to this House it was subsequent to a redistribution. The result of these new boundaries was to delete the ridings of Dorchester and Montmagny. The Eastern part of Quebec was losing, by the same token, two representatives from a rural sector. The new Bellechasse riding results from the implementation of the 1964 legislation.

The changes which were brought about in 1968 caused reactions which are easy to understand. As a matter of fact, the Dorchester riding had a long history of which its people had every right to be proud. In the riding of Montmagny, there was a similar response. People from this ancient riding recall proudly of their fiery nationalist member, Armand Lavergne, who left his mark not only in the House of Commons but in the Parliament of Quebec as well.

For eight years now Mr. Speaker, I have attempted as a member to bring together the people from the various areas in the new riding of Bellechasse, and when these efforts are starting to show some results, the new distribution completely changes the limits of the Bellechasse riding.

I have carefully studied the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec. I am quite sure that the Commission did its best to distribute our ridings in an equitable manner however the fact remains that this report contains certain inequities which affect both the people from rural areas and the representatives from rural ridings. This is why I have tabled in the House my objection to the provisions of the report, which has been signed by nine of my colleagues in the House and I take this opportunity to thank them wholeheartedly for their collaboration.

The question of electoral boundaries has always prompted many discussions in our country. In fact, as far back of the Union Act of 1840 the people from Ontario thought it fair that their province as well as the Province of Quebec should have an equal representation. At that time, the province of Ontario or Upper-Canada was in a minority situation in terms of its population, in contrast with the situation of to-day. We have to say that representation by population, was to take place in Ontario as soon as its population would exceed that of Quebec, especially as a result of immigration.

The British North America Act passed in 1867 provides that the representation in the House of Commons shall be based on population as established by an official census taken every ten years. I think that the quota should be established at the national level and not at the provincial level. Lastly, we could adopt a percentage of plus or minus adjustments establishing the population of urban ridings let us say at 100,000 people and semi urban ridings at 80,000 and rural ridings from 50,000 to 60,000. This formula would facilitate a better balance in the representation of rural and urban population.

As our province is getting more industrialized and since industrial centralization tends to reduce rural population to the benefit of urban centres it is more imperative than ever to maintain the present number of representatives in rural areas otherwise their number will get very low. The governments have always been concerned with maintaining the quotas even between 1882 to 1900. The authorities were much concerned with this issue and they followed the principle by which they took into account riding boundaries as well as town and municipality boundaries regardless of the effects it could have on the size or shape of the riding.

In 1882, we find that the electoral quotient obtained by dividing the number of the Quebec population by 65 is 28,908. On the other hand, there were two ridings where the population varied between 6,000 and 9,000 another had a population of 45,000 and 36 others, a population of 21,000 to 24,000.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir John Thompson agreed on this subject. They were saying that urban electoral ridings were already over represented since the rural areas members came mostly from urban areas and represented to the House of Commons people from urban areas as well as the people of their own electoral district. How right they were!

There was a time where a general election provided many professionals from the cities the opportunity to go to rural areas in search of a seat, then they would come back to the city after the elections to live there until the next one. Fortunately, this mentality has changed and the rural areas are now in a position to elect someone chosen among themselves to represent them in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, many changes were made between 1882 and 1964 concerning representation. However, the present redistribution is conducted according to the law voted by Parliament in 1964. It seems that the members of the commission have applied section 13 to the letter but have not taken into account subsection (c) which states:

> The commission may depart from the strict application of rules (a) and (b) . . .

—of section 13, in any case where special geographic considerations, including in particular the sparsity, density on relative rate of growth of population of various regions of the province, the accessibility of such regions or the size or share thereof appear to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable, or any special community or diversity of interests of the inhabitants of various regions of the province appears to the commission to render such a departure necessary or desirable. And lastly, the 25 per cent tolerance, higher or lower, has not been used as far as the eastern area of Quebec is concerned. There are now 10 ridings covering the area from Thetford

Mines to Gaspé, an area which has 635,000 inhabitants, or an average of 63,500 inhabitants per riding.

According to the commission report, eastern Quebec loses another riding. Thus the rural area loses a representative in the House of Commons and the average population per riding will rise to 70,548, which will be a very heavy load for the member of Parliament who will have to cover great distances as compared to a representative for a city where the population is much more dense. Eastern Quebec is developing at a very slow rate. The government measures will promote the creation of industries in the Montreal area and the young people must necessarily leave their rural environment to go and make a living in the big urban centres.

Not only are we penalized on the economic level, but also as far as the administration is concerned. Not a single minister in the present Trudeau cabinet represents the eastern area of Quebec. Furthermore, according to the commission report, we will lose a riding. So, we will be deprived of another representative who would have fought for the development of that area.

Mr. Ouellet: There is the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard).

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I am still referring to the eastern region. The Lake St. John area is another region, to my mind. I have taken note of the remark made by the hon. member for Papineau—

An hon. Member: Because the hon. member for Papineau takes care of the Témiscamingue area.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Oh, come on! I am not criticizing.

I am dealing with facts, and I hope that some time or other, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will have an opportunity to appoint a member in what I call the eastern part of the Province of Quebec.

We may hear suggestions that the government wants to establish a just society, a new society, but that is at the expense of rural areas. I realize this is not within the commission's terms of reference. I would not like the commissioners to misunderstand my remarks.

The commission report proposes for Bellechasse a population of 80,504 as against 64,675 now, an increase of 15,829. Geographically speaking, Bellechasse covers as large an area as Belgium, and the report adds to it 95 percent of l'Islet, the neighbouring riding.

Mr. Speaker, the way things are going, I would not be surprised if I were given the whole of Quebec. The next thing would be to appoint me its president.

Since under the report five parishes are removed from the southwestern part of Bellechasse to be include in Lévis, the member will have to go through Lévis municipalities to reach the southern part of Bellechasse, which is preposterous and unacceptable.

Since in rural ridings, a member of Parliament has to visit every parish regularly, this adds to his responsibilities. It is therefore unreasonable to provide for a riding including 56 parishes as proposed for Bellechasse.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Another thing must be considered too. If democracy is to survive, it is important that electors meet their representative as often as possible. This will be almost impossible if such a large number of parishes is allowed. For the time element must be taken into account. There are but seven days in a week, even for the rural member of Parliament.

I would therefore ask the Commission to reconsider its report and amend it in order to maintain the same number of ridings in the eastern area which I have referred to.

At the time of the 1968 readjustment, there were 640,403 people living in this area which was divided into 10 ridings, with an average of 64,740 people per riding. In 1976, there are 635,000 people and the Commission has reduced to nine the number of ridings in the aforementioned area. As I said before, these will have an average of 70,548 people for each riding. The ridings I am referring to are the previous ridings of Mégantic-Frontenac, Beauce, Dorchester, Lévis, Bellechasse, Montmagny-l'Islet, Kamouraska, Témiscouata, Rimouski, Matapédia-Matane, Gaspé and Bonaventure. In those days, all those ridings were included in that area, but there were 12 ridings with an average of 53,358 people per riding. After the 1965-68 readjustment, that same area was divided into 10 ridings with an average population of 64,029. The 1976 report shows the following results for that same area: a population of 635,000, and nine ridings with an average of 70,548 per riding.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, if you will allow me, I should like to request consent of the House to table this document which I would very much like to see appended to the Hansard for this day.

Mr. Béchard: What is it?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The figures I have just quoted on the area and its population.

● (2030)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish I could agree with the hon. member's request to table this document in the House. But I regret that it is not possible, under the Standing Orders, to table and to append this document, unless, Mr. Speaker, I am mistaken.

[English]

In other words, as I understand it it is not the prerogative of individual members to table documents for any purpose.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry I do not agree with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais), but I believe that the figures just given by the hon. member for Bellechasse speak for themselves, and I see nothing in the Standing Orders which would prevent the tabling of a document, when someone refers to it. On the contrary, he can be asked and forced to table it. I think this document would be very helpful to the commissioners and would enlighten their discussions on electoral boundaries in the future.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Citation 159(4) in Beauchesne's fourth edition reads in part:

Official papers quoted during a debate should be laid on the Table of the House.

A private member cannot table an official document.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thus, Mr. Speaker, I regret that I could not get the unanimous consent of the House to table official figures from Statistics Canada—

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): If the House agrees, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this will help our commissioners make the revision I am asking for. This is the simple reason why I wanted to table this document.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that even if, at the political level, rural ridings have less importance in percentage than urban areas, we must not forget that the farm industry and agricultural producers in Quebec as well as small businesses we find throughout eastern Quebec deserve some consideration, that they have rights and that we should not reduce the number of the hon. members representing them in this House, because it is already too low.

I hope Mr. Speaker, that the Commission will seriously take into account the representations I wanted to make this evening so that in the future those who will survive us can see that we wanted to work very seriously on the distribution of ridings in our province, and also in our country, so that they commend us for the work we did, for our openmindedness instead of blaming us.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment very briefly before the House the new electoral boundaries for the province of Quebec, and especially the new constituencies in northwest Quebec. But first, I should like, with leave, to commend the commission for its excellent work on the whole.

I think the commissioners showed great competence in the performance of their duties. Not only were they very wise in the preliminary project, of June 30, 1975, but they were responsive to the population's needs at the public hearings held last summer, especially those held at Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke, Rimouski, Hull, Amos, Montreal and Quebec city.

I think it is proper to point out in particular the adroitness, humour and understanding of Mr. Justice Chevalier who conducted those hearings in a masterly manner. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that in such an undertaking, one cannot please everybody.

The commissioners were under pressure because Quebec was to have only 75 constituencies and consequently the commission had to rely on very specific criteria to please both city dwellers and rural communities.

I will not expound for long on the statements made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) who spoke before me and expressed grievances regarding rural communities. Clearly this is no easy task. One must try to maintain a proper balance in such a project and I think that, on the whole, the commissioners did a good job in redistributing the electoral map in Quebec in a manner which, in my view, appeals to the vast majority of the hon. members on this side of the House as well as on the other side.

They tried to find a middle of the road solution which, I believe, will meet the needs of practically everybody. It is clear that for certain modalities in some ridings, some cities, towns and communities, certain groups of people would benefit by belonging to one constituency rather than another. But I do not think there is any major flaw in this proposition which I feel should be accepted in the whole because it seems to meet the wishes of the general public.

I would like to emphasize tonight some findings concerning the ridings of northwestern Quebec, not because I represent such a riding, but because these last months I had several opportunities to visit this very beautiful area of our province. I was able to discuss with a lot of people and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that most of them have shown some reluctance towards the redistribution as it affects northwestern Quebec.

As a matter of fact, the new Abitibi riding proposed by the commission will include a section of the northern part of the riding, while the other riding, that of Témiscamingue, will include the two most densely populated, most important cities of this area of northwestern Quebec. I suggest that not only would such a change be drastic in several respects but it could adversely affect to a certain point the very interest of that whole area of Quebec. I do not think we should get serious objections against this part of Témiscamingue—formerly in the same riding as Rouyn-Noranda—being added to the riding of Rouyn-Noranda.

That is why, at the public hearings held last summer in Amos, many people made representations in order that Témiscamingue be finally added to the cities of Noranda and Rouyn. That step is entirely logical and acceptable, and indeed I commend the commissioners for having accepted it.

I think the most serious problem arises when these two ridings are cut off and the cities of Val-d'Or and Rouyn are brought together in the same riding. The problem stems from the fact that those two cities are natural attraction points in that area of Quebec. We might be concerned about the interest of these respective populations if those two cities are brought together in the same riding of Témiscamingue as suggested in the project of February 1976.

But aside from the argument that the population may be concentrated in these two urban areas, there are other factors just as important.

For instance, I point out that Val d'Or and Rouyn share the same communication, health and educational services. Would the new distribution not mean that any subsequent development of this immense territory might be detrimental to the whole area? Would it not be detrimental also to the economic and social development of the neighbouring riding which, according to the February report, would be cut from its main axis of development and influence?

I sincerely wonder how a true socio-economic consensus would be reached if the regional capital of northwest Quebec, Rouyn and Val d'Or, considered as the metropolis of this region because of its industrial activities were to be combined. Because of their status, Rouyn and Val d'Or should be included in two different ridings; the social balance of northwest Quebec might depend on such a distribution; the economic development of the entire region will most certainly depend on that decision. Physical communications throughout this vast territory is, in my opinion, closely connected to that fact.

It is therefore for all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I should like the House to look fully into this matter and I dare hope that it will do so not in order to fill what might be a gap but rather to act for the future benefit of a large part of Quebec, namely the northwest Quebec. I know that the town councillors of Val d'Or would particularly like their city to be part of a constituency including all the northern part of northwestern Quebec, or the Abitibi constituency, as was suggested in the project tabled in the House in February 1976. Of course, the airport of the city of Val d'Or must serve all that part of James Bay, all the enormous development which is now taking place in northwestern Quebec. It would therefore be only logical and desirable that Val d'Or form part from now on not of the Temiscamingue constituency as suggested in this project, but rather of the Abitibi constituency.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the first thing I should do—and it might be better if I spoke in English—would be to urge the other members to join me—

[English]

It was with some surprise, Mr. Speaker, that I learned that the last speaker, the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), has reason to receive the best wishes of the House. I would be most disturbed if my comments now were to be taken as being political input. I would simply ask the members of the House if they would give me their attention for one moment because I understand that today is the birthday of the hon. member for Papineau, and it might be a good time to wish him well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaker: I am not entirely sure whether or not anything that I have to say in this redistribution debate will be of any effect whatever. This matter has been going on now for approximately four years and I have been rather intensely involved, not only as a member of parliament from the province of Quebec but also because of my role as chairman of the privileges and elections committee. I have also attempted to assist other members from time to time, particularly in what is called the West Island of the Island of Montreal.

I have seen the riding that I represent divided into three parts. I have then seen it brought back together again. I have seen changes made to the organization of the riding; it was originally organized on a north-south basis, and it is now reorganized on an east-west basis. Finally we have the riding as it is at the present time.

I want to take only a few moments of the House's time to address myself to the commissioners in an attempt to try to explain some of the rather curious problems that result from the manner in which the riding of Lachine-Lakeshore, or as the commissioners propose to call it now, the riding of Lachine, is to be organized.

I would point out that we amended the law on redistribution, if I recall correctly, about two and half years ago at which time it was suggested that all redistribution commissions across Canada would take serious account of the desirability of not dividing municipalities. Having done that, unfortunately the redistribution commission of the province of Quebec, or perhaps I should say the federal Election Boundaries Commission of the province of Quebec, has found it necessary to divide one of the oldest communities on the face of Canada, the city of Lachine.

I am not going to use the technique known to some members of the House and to some politicians in Canada of attempting to blame the commission for doing something that is unfortunate or distasteful, at the same time attempting somehow to make every effort to persuade the federal Election Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec to reverse itself. I fully recognize that the law requires of the federal Election Boundaries Commission that we have an approximate average of 83,000 people per riding in the province of Quebec. I fully recognize as well that this results of necessity in the division of the city of Lachine.

I do not want to blame the commissioners. In fact I would support what the hon. member for Papineau has just finished saying, that the commissioners by and large in my view have done an excellent job in the province of Quebec. I do not like the fact that they have decided to divide a municipality like this, and I know for a fact, because these commissioners have stated so publicly, that they did not like the idea of dividing the municipality. However, we are faced with an overriding law and I think it would be improper for a commissioner or any member of parliament to attempt to go against the entire system, whether it be the Electoral Boundaries Commission or the House of Commons, by overriding that law.

Having said that, I can only suggest through this House that I would rather hope the shift of population in the area which I represent will in due course, by the next election after the one coming, provide for the entire city of Lachine being returned to the federal riding of Lachine.

That leaves me with the problem as to what the commissioners did to the boundaries of the riding I currently represent. If I may, I would ask for the sympathy not only of the commissioners, and this is the method by which we address ourselves to the commission, but also of whichever members of the House of Commons may be interested in this particular problem.

I find that the Boundary Commission has taken a particular street in my riding, that is, 24th Avenue, and extended it beyond the physical extension of the street itself. The result of this is that my neighbouring member of parliament, who happens to be the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), and myself, and three other candidates for the three other parties for each of the two ridings, making a total of eight candidates at the next election, will be meeting halfway across the floors of dozens upon dozens of stores, warehouses, shops and whatever.

The process the commission has gone through has resulted in buildings being divided in two by the federal electoral boundary. I have this recurrent nightmare of having to draw a chalk line down the middle of some factory floor so candidates for the riding to the east, that is the riding of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, are forced to stay on one side of the factory floor, and candidates to the west, that is to say of the riding of Lachine-Lakeshore, would stay on the other side. Quite obviously that is not the way we want to try to give the people some identity of what the community is all about. I have previously approached the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec on this matter. I want to review it very briefly so that this topic can be sent to them for as much consideration as possible regarding what they might do in these circumstances.

Having indicated it would be most desirable to have the entire city of Lachine in the riding, and having also indicated that if that is not possible I would at least look forward to that being done by the time of the next but one election, I would go on to try to make some more sensible division of the riding than that which the commissioners in their wisdom have done.

Right now we have a line in the middle of the city which looks something like an arthritic dog's hind leg. I would very much appreciate the consideration of the commission in doing something a little more logical.

The area between 24th and 15th Streets in Lachine, and the one I proposed at the public hearings, which is 32nd Avenue, comprises a bloc of some 19 polls with an elector population of some 5,300 people. There would appear to be no reason why it could not be so arranged that the dividing line for the city of Lachine be moved to 32nd Avenue.

I want to make clear to other members who may be bored out of their minds with these details that I am trying to pursue the same thing we put through the Privileges and Elections Committee as guidelines for hon. members that is, that we should not have communities divided up by some mathematical calculation, the result of which is that a line is drawn down the middle of a street, when it may make sense in terms of numbers of people in the riding, but no sense whatsoever in terms of community spirit, as is the case in the particular city to which I refer, the city of Lachine.

There is every reason to assume, expect, and hope that the commission would see some sense in drawing the line down a street which is a major thoroughfare rather than a major residential street, that is, drawing the line down a street which will be a take-off point of a major highway, autoroute 13 in the province of Quebec, and drawing it down a street which is now a dual lane street. In this way we could have a heavy traffic division.

What I proposed to the commissioners is that they give some consideration to the fact that there is a natural dividing line in the community rather than the line the commissioners have drawn. In addition I have proposed to the commissioners that they give some consideration to the fact that this particular city has traditionally regarded its own east-west line as being 32nd Avenue.

When I made these representations to the commission, Mr. Justice Chevalier, who was chief commissioner, asked me to give him some figures. I do so now as a result of this request. The difference, as I mentioned, would be approximately 5,300 voters, and about 19 polls. I would go a little further and point out that I represent a lakeshore community. If the matter of population is of concern to the commissioners they might have given some consideration to the idea of adding the city of Baie d'Urfe, which has a population of 2,200 electors and a total of some nine polls. The issue I want to refer to is not simply the mathematics of that division of the riding, but the community sense of that representation.

There is some reason to suggest, I believe, that the commission should give some consideration to historical development. I heard members yesterday and again this afternoon from the province of Ontario express extreme concern about the manner in which the boundaries commission of that province has seen fit to draw the lines in northern Ontario, reducing the representation of that northern section by one riding. In the same way I think it is worth bringing to the attention of the commission that the development of this lakeshore area is one of the most historical, contiguous, and homogeneous along the lakeshore that exists anywhere in Canada. It is my hope that the commission will see the point I make and give some reconsideration to providing boundary lines that reflect cultural concepts, historical concepts, traffic concepts, and transportation and communication concepts, rather than simply adding up a bunch of numbers and arriving at one or another particular street.

Having said all that, I want to go back to what I began with, and that is that the Quebec Redistribution Commission in my view, and I repeat again what I said earlier and confirm what the hon. member for Papineau has said, has done an excellent job. There are bound to be some of us who are discontent. I am one, but I will accept the decision. Obviously I must as I have no choice. I am governed by the law. I accept the decision of the redistribution commission, but I hope it will be shown this evening that we have problems, and I hope the commission will give second thoughts to some of those problems we are trying to examine. We represent the people and we do perhaps have more sensitive feelings about those communities we serve.

I should like to turn now to something which is going on at the moment and in terms of my responsibility as part of the organization I would reflect upon the fact that there are quite a number of Quebec members who want to speak this evening. There are also a number of western members of parliament who want to speak. I would simply indicate to members of the House that there is a list of those Quebec members who wish to speak. I dearly hope I have not spoken for too long because, if I did, that would make it difficult for me to ask my colleagues from the province of Quebec to give every consideration to other members of parliament who really do not want to sit here until four o'clock in the morning. If we can keep down our time they will be able to get to their homes earlier tonight. I thank the House for listening to me.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with a particular area or with the boundaries of the Champlain constituency that I have the honour to represent, I should like first to speak about the general principles on which is based this legislation under which the electoral boundaries are readjusted every ten years.

Mr. Speaker, when he tried to defend himself against the reflections cast on him by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), the Quebec premier indicated recently that it was essential for the survival of Canada to have in its constitution official guarantees for Quebec within Canada and the Confederation. Yet, the act governing the change and readjustment of electoral boundaries seems to support those who predict a rather bleak future for Quebec within Canada, since we have to admit that it is simple matter of mathematics. Because of this review of the Electoral Boundaries Act, Quebec's representation is reduced from 28 per cent to 26 per cent. This reduced number of Quebec representatives in Parliament bears out those who simply advocate a complete review of the constitution and even the isolation of Quebec.

This legislation proves they are right since even though the province of Quebec gets one, extra seat, its number of seats increasing from 74 to 75, one must not forget nevertheless that we will only be 75 out of 282. Mr. Speaker, this point has not been emphasized strongly enough, in my view, since the sense and the very nature of our country are being gradually destroyed. Should there be as a result a one way immigration in Canada, that is to say an immigration movement almost exclusively out of the province of Quebec, within the next 10 years the electoral boundaries would have to be readjusted once more and Quebec would fall to 20 percent. Within another period of 10 years, it would be reduced to 15 percent and after that, it would be the end of our existence within this country.

Mr. Speaker, I think this point is extremely important and had to be emphasized. I am therefore basically opposed to this method of continuously readjusting electoral boundaries. Moreover, I would even question the ability of those who were responsible for establishing these boundaries.

Mr. Speaker, here, I weigh my every word: when one considers this is the third attempt at redistribution and that the said commissioners have not learned as yet where to draw these boundaries, I think one is entitled to ask serious questions, especially when these people tell us precisely, and I quote from Schedule D of the report they submitted to us, that they considered all factors in their specific and general applications and that the aims of the proposal are as follows:

1. to maintain municipalities as a whole wherever possible;

The hon. member for Lachine-Bord-du-Lac (Mr. Blaker) described how the city of Lachine was split up.

2. to compensate for the sparsity of population in certain regions, for example, Gaspésie, Saguenay—Lac- Saint-Jean and Abitibi—Pontiac—Témiscamingue by using for these regions a considerably lower electoral quota than that applied to the urban areas:

And finally, the third aim:

3. to attempt to group, if possible, populations who have a community of interests, be they economic, social or ethnic.

If we objectively consider the proposed boundaries, we must admit that these aims were not reached, as if on purpose. To name only one, the municipal entity was not preserved, this was not in several constituencies. Secondly, three regions were mentioned where the sparsity of population and the geographical vastness must be taken into account. Well, what happened in that case? The hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) mentioned it briefly a moment ago, a vast territory, northwest Quebec or Abitibi, becomes a small territory, its representation is reduced from three to two constituencies, which is absurd. A constituency larger than many provinces is created, all that is included in one riding, so that two ridings are made out of the previous three, a vast territory is contained in one riding, with a population of 88,000.

That is far from the original objective, since it is acknowledged when an area is that large the population could be below the average, but this is much beyond the average, and I cannot understand how such acrobatics.

Of course, when the population is concentrated, when the demographic density is high, it is generally recognized as a determining factor. It is well known that in a riding which is about one square mile, one normally finds a population of 90,000 95,000 and even 100,000. That is quite normal. Agreed.

But given that principle, how is it that the area of particular concern to me, the riding of Trois-Rivières, has become an exclusively urban riding with a population less than a riding as large as a province, like the riding of Champlain. I cannot understand anything. The riding of Trois-Rivières now has a population of 70,000 next to a vast rural riding, which is 350 miles from north to south with a population of 80,000.

Mr. Speaker, I was most surprised when I found that out, all the more as I question the competence of the commissioners. In August, I had the opportunity to appear before the commission in Trois-Rivières and I found at that time that the chairman of the commission, even though the matter was under study since 1971, did not even know where La Tuque was located. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the commission was in that area to hear representations from a certain number of ridings but he did not know where the main city in the riding of Champlain was located.

Mr. Speaker, these results show that the matter was dealt with lightly if all the briefs and hearings ended in this freak report. Mr. Speaker, I must simply infer that the commissioners are incompetent.

Not only do I question the basic principle, but I think that the act should be amended because to go on like this would simply result in the distruction of a national entity called the French Canadians and the Quebecers. If we keep on readjusting the electoral boundaries exclusively on the basis of demographic factors, the Canadian entity we would like to preserve is doomed. There is much more truth in this than it seems. I refer precisely to what the Quebec Premier said only a few weeks ago. This is my main concern.

Besides, I must say, with supporting evidence, that those who drew those electoral boundaries are totally incompetent. They do not know their business and they set out with very lofty aims on purpose, and then they did their best to ignore them. I wonder why. Is it because they would like to start all over again.

I do not know exactly how much they are paid but they seem to take pleasure in starting their work over and over again. I say this and everybody here knows it is true, because it is the third time the same thing happens. After three times, they have not managed to submit something sensible that would truly reflect their own objective.

Mr. Speaker, for this reason, I think that the commission should reconsider its position and look further into the question.

I do not mean that we should allow ourselves to be influenced by the hon. members, but I think that those who know something about the population, the economic and the community interests of an area are the members of this House, and I did notice during the same hearings in Trois-Rivières last August that the chairman of the said Commission would quite maliciously snub me as he interrupted me during my speech telling me that we had nothing to do in this particular matter and that fortunately the matter was not our responsibility; he told me so many nasty thing then. My answer is: Sure enough, it was perhaps fortunate that the matter was not our responsibility but, as for as I am concerned, I think that it is unfortunate that it was theirs.

Mr. Speaker, when you consider all the stupidities that have been done such as cutting up North-Western Quebec and the north shore of the St. Lawrence River, you may think this is an excellent opportunity to correct some of the anomalies. But not only the situation is not corrected but it is worsened.

As a consequence, I am utterly confensed and this is why not only do I firmly object to the electoral boundaries readjustments, but I am also objecting to those who have established them. I think that another Commission like this one should simply be set up. The commissioners, even after years of work in this field, cannot manage to accomplish anything better than what we see in this report. I think they only deserve a badmark and I think we should ask ourselves not only whether these boundaries should not be set anew, but also whether that Commission should not be completely revamped because its members seem to be absolutely incompetent.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé): Mr. Speaker, after having heard the previous speaker who stated his case on the redistribution of electoral boundaries, I must say that I was present when he made some representations to the Commission during the hearings held last August in Trois-Rivières. It is perhaps unfortunate that my colleague should have tried to point out the political undertones of the Quebec Redistribution Commission and this is perhaps why he was unable to intervene, as he would have liked.

I myself, was called after him before the Commission and I must say now that the Berthier-Maskinongé constituency was to be abolished after the tabling of the first electoral map. However, when I pointed out the rural character of my constituency, the Commission reconsidered the problem and asked me to table my submission and I am pleased to say here this evening that I obtained all I had hoped for, since Berthier-Maskinongé has remained untouched, the rule providing that rural constituencies be considered as such being complied with to the letter.

However, Mr. Speaker, some municipalities have been carved off the constituencies of Saint-Maurice and Trois-Rivières, and thus I received representations from the new mayor of Saint-Étienne-des-Grés in the constituency of Saint-Maurice who has regretfully noted that the municipality of Saint-Étienne-des-Grés is scheduled to be carved off the constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé.

This village's population is under 2,000 and, considering the rural nature of this municipality, I understand very well their dismay, since I have been representing this municipality for the last eight years. I believe I had to rise today, Mr. Speaker, to ask the Electoral Boundaries Commission to review this decision to take Saint-Étienne-des-Grès of the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé.

There would also be in the riding of Trois-Rivières certain municipalities which belong to the provincial riding of Saint-Maurice, which I have also been representing for the last eight years and which in my opinion should also belong to the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé. And I will mention the municipalities of Saint-Barnabé, Saint-Sévère, Yamachiche and Sainte-Anne-de-Yamachiche. Those represent a population of a little more than 4,000 which, added to the federal riding of Berthier-Maskinongé presently proposed by the commission, would give a population of about 70,000 for the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé.

I feel the four municipalities I have just named should belong to the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé because of their rural character. Saint-Barnabé has an agricultural fair that groups all the parishes in the municipalities of Maskinongé, Berthier and Saint-Maurice. That fair has been held in that area for over 100 years now, and the municipalities I have just mentioned would like to belong to the rural area I have described.

Mr. Speaker, following the tabling of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission on March 1st last, I made representations on March 26, on four specific points: that the name of Berthier-Maskinongé, for which Berthier was substituted, remain as it was formerly. Barely a year ago, I believe, I introduced a bill to the House asking that the riding be named Berthier-Maskinongé. I note that in the new redistribution, the name of Maskinongé is nowhere to be found. This is a minor point, but I do feel that, to be fair with all my constituents, the name Berthier-Maskinongé should also appear.

The new boundary added about ten Joliette parishes to the Berthier-Maskinongé riding. Those new parishes are Saint-Côme, Sainte-Béatrix, Saint-Alphonse-Rodriguez, Sainte-Mélanie, Sainte-Marceline-de-Kildare, Saint-Cléophas, Sainte-Élisabeth, Sainte-Émilie-de-l'Énergie, Saint-Félix-de-Valois as well as a hamlet which is not a township in that sense that there is no administration office, and which is incorporated, if I am not wrong, to the village of Saint-Félix-de-Valois.

I am pleased to note that the people of those towns are very happy to belong to the new Berthier-Maskinongé riding since I did not receive any representation to the contrary, and they have accepted gladly to be included in the new constituency.

These are some of the claims I wanted to make to the Electoral Boundaries Commission through you, Mr. Speaker and I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to congratulate the commissioners for the magnificent job they did in surveying the various ridings.

As I say, we are very satisfied with the redistribution we have been given and, in order to meet the needs of the municipalities I mentioned earlier, if it were possible that a change be made in these municipalities so that they come back in the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé, I think it would be a complete success.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. First, I wish to take part in this debate not to object to the report of the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission, but to congratulate the members of the Quebec commission for their attitude concerning the redistribution of the ridings in the Gaspé Peninsula.

I was first elected to the House of Commons in 1963 and at that time the constituency of Gaspé included the municipalities from Newport to Les Méchins. At the 1966 redistribution, the municipalities of Cap-Chat, Capucins and Les Méchins were removed from the riding of Gaspé. That part of Gaspé Peninsula is now part and parcel of the riding of Matane. I therefore, approve the commission's decision to restore the natural sociological unity by reintegrating the town of Cap-Chat in the beautiful riding of Gaspé. The town of Cap-Chat has common interests with the town of Sainte-Anne-des-Monts, and I gladly welcome the return of Cap-Chat citizens in the riding of Gaspé, more especially as they are very sympathetic people and very eager to cooperate in the economic and social development, not only of their town but of Gaspé Peninsula as a whole. Mr. Speaker, it is always pleasant to meet friends again after 10 years of separation.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief to give all my colleagues from Quebec and from the other provinces a chance to take part in the debate. I shall not waste my time saying that the commissioners are totally inefficient because I think that the commissioners needed our advice since they produced the last report or the report before. As a matter of fact, like my colleague the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) who almost became one of my electors, I am pleased to see that I have been left with a huge riding but that the hon. member for Gaspé keeps the riding of Gaspé and that a portion of this riding, which until 1949 was part of the constituency of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, has been reintegrated in this riding; I mean the town of Causapscal which is today so adequately represented by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané).

By the way, the hon. member for Matane mentions in his objection it would be more advantageous for some towns and municipalities included in the constituency of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine and Gaspé to belong to the constituency of Matane. I do not understand his argument very well. It is impossible to figure out the intentions, and I do not want to attribute any intentions to him, but he says it would be more interesting for them to belong to the constituency of Matane. I want to reassure the future electors of Causapscal and the surroundings that their hon. member will do his utmost to represent them as adequately as the present hon. member for Matane did since he has been their representative in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with my colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and others in congratulating the commissionners to a reasonable extent however since as my colleague for Champlain (Mr. Matte) said quite rightly we should not comply only to the letter of the legislation but rather to its spirit and act with common sense.

I would not want to criticize the judges as it seems quite improper but at least, in this House, I enjoy parliamentary immunity.

I had asked, not only when the last Commission presented its report but before that and I did so on behalf of my constituents in that part of the Bonaventure riding called Iles-de-la-Madeleine that the Iles-de-la-Madeleine riding be recognized as a riding as it was since 1945, I think. Unfortunately, the commissioners who have to follow the letter of the legislation ignored my request because of the limited population of those islands and left them in the Bonaventure riding.

By the way, I am very grateful to my constituents of the Iles-de-la-Madeleine whom I have had the privilege to represent ever since 1968. But what concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is to find out that rural communities are going to disappear in this House just because the act sets a population level for a given riding. Gradually it will eliminate the rural representation from this House. And I think that it might be this lack of strong representation of the rural communities which explains why our area in eastern Quebec which includes the Gaspe Peninsula, the lower Saint-Lawrence and the Iles-de-la-Madeleine, has been neglected for too long.

And today, because of that business of figures, a rural member will be given an immense territory even with a low density population while urban representatives are particularly privileged. As I said, a Montreal member can cover his riding in 15 minutes while in my case and many others as the representative of the Bonaventure and Iles-de-la-Madeleine riding, it might take one week or two.

The Bonaventure and Iles-de-la-Madeleine riding, in its continental part, is 170 miles long from east to west. The Magdalen Islands are located 175 miles from the mainland as the crow flies. Mr. Speaker, you will have the honour of visiting this beautiful section of my riding during your next vacation. You will be able to see by yourself what distance you have to cover to drive from Valleyfield to the Magdalen Islands.

So the member who represents Bonaventure and Magdalen Islands must go to the islands from time to time and the problems of these islands are not those of Bonaventure, or the Gaspe Peninsula, Témiscouata, Rivière-du-loup or Kamouraska. This is why, therefore, we had asked to make an exception and to make the islands an independent riding, and the present member might have gone and introduced himself to the islanders and I would have considered it a great honour and a great pleasure to do so.

Another point, Mr. Speaker. When we appear before the commissioners and complain, then they tell us: You make the law, we enforce it. We need 86,000 people here; we need 56,000 there, we distribute them so that we have the number of people we are asked to include, that the act requires us to include.

But the act gives no indication as far as name changes are concerned, for instance, and the commissioners do not care for statute when it comes to that. The Bonaventure riding, before Magdalen Islands were included, was named Bonaventure. After 1968, and indeed Mr. Speaker the situation is the same in your case, I introduced a bill to change the name of Bonaventure to Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, and the bill was passed by Parliament.

Well the commissioners, who should act according to statute, decided in their wisdom that the riding when proclaimed should still be called Bonaventure. Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the way they go contrary to statute. If it is contrary to the act to maintain Magdalen Islands as an independent riding because there is not enough people there, it is also illegal to change the name of a constituency called Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. And I hereby serve notice, Mr. Speaker, that since there is no other way, I shall introduce another bill that will cost money to Canadians once more. It will also cost money to commissioners, because they also have to pay taxes, and to my constituents in Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. I shall take the time of this House and introduce a new bill that will cost more money to Canadian taxpayers, because of an error by the commissioners.

There is a lot I could say on that subject, but what is in order here is not to criticize judges, but maybe to criticize Parliament and ask that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act be amended to give justice to all the people, to our Canadian rural citizens, to our urban citizens and also to our members of Parliament representing these huge constituencies without being paid a penny more than those representing small constituencies.

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to contribute to the debate on the readjustment of electoral boundaries, especially as it concerns Hochelaga.

To better explain my position to the commissioners and also to express my agreement with what the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) has said earlier to the effect that the commissioners had somehow distorted the major intent of electoral boundaries readjustment by giving greater significance to numbers than to municipalities or sectors, it is important for me to be able to tell the House and the commissioners that the Hochelaga-Maisonneuve sector is made up of two former municipalities which were amalgamated with the city of Montreal, Hochelaga in 1883 and Maisonneuve in 1918. Even though the area is very well established geographically with natural boundaries, it remains that this separation between the two municipalities is still present in the minds of the residents. The life in this community and the feeling of belonging are something vital to our people.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I represent since October 14 of last year a constituency which is somewhat well delineated, I would naturally have liked to have the number of my constituents increased—at any event, I would like to say by the way that the commission did not have to add to my riding because I actually serve a great many people around Hochelaga. On the other hand, the commissioners could have done it by taking a part of Maisonneuve and a part of Sainte-Marie, and the Hochelaga constituency would still have remained the Hochelaga constituency.

But the way it is done Hochelaga actually replaces the Sainte-Marie riding, giving another fifty polls to Hochelaga. This means that the difference of 125 polling stations goes to the Maisonneuve riding. I still do not know the feeling of the people from Hochelaga because I have not dared inform them of the fact so far.

Mr. Speaker, these modifications can only cause confusion in the people's minds. Sometimes they do not know which riding they belong to and most often they do not even know which representative they should turn to. However you should notice that in Hochelaga the people know who is their member of Parliament!

I would like to make another point, Mr. Speaker. If the population of Hochelaga has diminished so considerably, it is not because of the people of Hochelaga, but especially because of so many demolitions in the southern part of the Hochelaga riding. When I said that we should have made encroachments to the east and to the west, this would have helped solve the problem and this is indeed what I propose.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the electoral boundaries should not be established so radically. The modifications should be made more logically and before I finish my speech, because I would like to give a chance to the other members who want to take the floor, I would like to suggest that next time around the Electoral Boundaries Commission organize meetings with the members of Parliament from each riding because they are the people concerned in this case and they should be consulted once and for all.

It is important that these commissions which have been given the task of making changes take the advice of the elected representatives of the people before getting down to work.

This wish I express to the House and the commissioners, hoping that the boundaries of the Hochelaga riding will be just and equitable so that I can better serve the people I have represented since October 14.

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, quite regularly, whenever there is a readjustment of electoral boundaries, there are bursts of protests from everywhere which show that this approach is certainly not the best.

To determine the population figure in a given area and then to set at 70,000 or 80,000 the number of constituents in any one riding is not a very difficult exercise. It is important to consider the georgraphical location, the distances, without forgetting the services to which the constituents are entitled when they wish to meet their member and make their representations all the right time. It is the legislation which provides that a commission has to use such an approach that should be changed to be better adapted to the situation. Several proposals have been made with respect to the number of seats. This personal should be considered. It would probably be possible to improve the situation in that respect.

Electoral Boundaries

In July 1973, I pointed out to the hon. members in this House that the residents of the Kamouraska constituency were highly interested in keeping the name and the limits of their riding. Kamouraska is a georgraphical and a well structured unit with its county seat being St-Pascal; it has a private college in Ste-Anne de la Pocatière, an agricultural school, a CEGEP and, in St-Pascal, and well-know teaching institutions catering to hundreds of students.

A number of villages have ostentatiously celebrated their tercentenary. The novel by Anne Hébert was made into a motion picture entitled "Kamouraska". So it is a riding hundreds of years old which its population cannot disown. That is why its residents insisted and still insist on keeping the riding's name. Apparently the commissioners have taken those geographical and historical factors into account with the result that the name of Kamouraska has been maintained. However, the 1976 Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec has again some unacceptable mistakes.

The commission has not given enoughh consideration to the area of the territories and to the distinction which must exist between rural and urban ridings. This problem of representation has been pointed out on many occasions and facilities have been supplied to allow the people living at the far end of the riding to get in touch with their representative through secretariats which may be located in certain districts of the territory. However all efforts made to get in touch with people and advice them will be jeopardized by officials who are not aware of regional problems. It is obvious that the residents of rural constituencies have excellent reasons to protest against that attitude of those responsible for such a mess in carving out the electoral map.

A few years ago, the riding of l'Islet was amalgamated with the constituency of Kamouraska with the addition of some parishes of Témiscouata. At that time, the commissioners tended to amalgamate towards the west, while in 1976 the trend is eastwards. The merging of Kamouraska and Témiscouata is a hardly understandable blunder and the residents of Témiscouata have every reason to make representations to keep the name and the present boundaries of their electoral constituency.

As I often have the advantage of meeting constituents of Témiscouata, many of them have told me about the struggle led many years ago by the late Senator Jean-François Pouliot to preserve the riding of Témiscouata whose existence was then being threatened. That attempt to delete the riding of Témiscouata from the map has already been called a cyclical calamity.

Several representative groups presented briefs exposing the views of the citizens of Témiscouata. Many people are rather surprised to see that the commission does not seem to have taken them into account. It should be possible to group some 60,000 to 80,000 people into a riding without hopelessly carving out the electoral map.

Circumstances would allow it easily enough that I can quote an excerpt from an article published in the local newspaper St-Laurent on this cutting up of federal ridings in the province of Quebec. I quote:

> The riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata as it now stands forms an indivisible whole both historically and sociologically.
> It is most unfortunate that, at regular intervals, the task of redistribution, federal and provincial, should be entrusted to drawing room cartographers. The latter, in their ivory towers, shuffle the electoral boundaries, most of the time unaware of the geographic, social and economic factors that together create natural entities endowed with a very strong feeling of belonging.
> It seems that these members of the judiciary, who are generally entrusted with the task of making the redistribution as a hobby, are not aware of or ignore the wrongs and the embarrassments they cause to the people of the ridings concerned by taking pleasure in moving them from one riding to another.
> The respectable gentlemen should know that in man as in any animal there is a regional instinct which, when submitted to such arbitrary constraints as those imposed by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, generates deep frustrations, persistent resentment and quarrels between neighbours whose first victims are the people of the ridings concerned and, that, against their will. In addition, the people of Témiscouata have fought too long already to make a place for themselves under the sun for us to affront them by making them disappear from the electoral map. Such undeserved humiliation and punishment are totally unacceptable to people who suffer the cruelty of being refused an identity.
> In the county of Témiscouata, such cyclical attempts to divide, disorganize, and destroy a natural unit are no less irritating than tragic, and that persecution must cease once and for all.
> In the very heart of a well organized and homogenous area, that of Témiscouata, the Church has been the first, for more than half a century, to maintain a dividing line which, although invisible, still contributes to separate communities linked together by a common economic interest and normally destined to have between them just as close social relations. Well, it is that diocesan demarcation, safe for a few parishes, that some people want to impose upon us under the disguise of a suggestion, as a dividing line in Témiscouata, between the counties of Kamouraska and Rimouski.
> To such a suggestion, we oppose a categorical no, and we reiterate that such a plan is stupid, unfair and totally unacceptable.

[Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska).]

This illustrates the reaction of the people in the riding of Témiscouata to this attempt to readjust electoral boundaries on the south shore of the St-Lawrence River.

The representatives from the constituency council in Rivière-du-Loup had summed up in their submission the reasons for their representations. That is why the citizens of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata are not accepting that decision, and the Electoral Boundaries Commission should wake up and try to be both consistent and fair. I hope that the decisions made earlier will be changed in a satisfactory way. It is not a matter of electoral advantage or disadvantage, it is a problem of fairness in the distribution of voters in each constituency of the eastern section of the province.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Orientals, we do not have the qualities required to accept to commit hara-kiri with a smile. That is why a general outcry was raised against the decision of the commissioners to eliminate the riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata.

It might be useful to recall that when the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act was introduced in this House, we were willing to prove our candor to such an extent that we did not want to let the government or the Parliament unduly interfere with the carving of the electoral map and we agreed to give the commissioners the responsibility for action, and to Parliament, merely the trouble of making representations.

It is all very good that we have been given the opportunity these last two days of making representations to the commissionners but, as happened at the hearing, it is hard to know wether or not they will take them into account.

Some hon. Members: Long live democracy!

Mr. Gendron: After listening to the hon. members for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), I would sincerely confess that I am under the impression that it would be easier between members even of opposite parties to come up with an agreement on a rational redistribution which would take into account the social and democratic facts as they exist in our area. In my opinion, it is a good thing to insist upon this for people are sometimes confused about it and everybody knows that at the provincial level the National Assembly has kept for itself the privilege of decision-making while, in this instance, we can only make recommendations to the commissionners witout knowing whether they will take them into account. But since Easter is forthcoming, I would, therefore, suggest to them that they take heed of the representations made by the members for Bellechasse and Kamouraska, as well as mine, if they truly intend to perform their Easter duties.

Mr. Speaker, since we have instructed the commissioners to proceed with this revision, before the establishing of new electoral boundaries which often gives the impression of being more of an arithmetical exercise than the pursuit of a true objective, we should seek to gather in as much as possible people having common economic, social, or ethnic interests.

I think that if we really wanted to go along with this quotation we should first seek advice from our people, from the members of parliament, as well as from the electoral county councils, the municipal councils. The latter actually know very well where exactly there are common interests, where there is a sense of belonging and they could readily indicate to which riding they wish to be attached.

However, this first consultation which should have been the preamble to the layout of the proposed electoral map was never done. I have not met a single voter in my riding, who has told me he had had any contact whatsoever or any opportunity to make any representations concerning the revision of the electoral map. And when the time of the public hearings came, these were only announced around mid summer and advertised in one newspaper only, Le Soleil which is read by only a quarter of the population so much so that a very large number of people knew nothing about it. And when they are faced with the facts, and hear that their riding has been eliminated, of course they go through the roof, they get mad and lose all patience and they cannot be blamed for it.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I invite the commissioners to reconsider this revision. I would not like to have to rehash all the briefs which have been submitted. I still shall indicate that, from a historical point of view this riding has been in existence since 1854. It has been illustrated by names which made the history of the riding and of the country, such as the Mailloux, the Pouliots, the Grandbois, the Gauvreaus; and as the hon. member for Kamouraska said earlier, the man who best illustrated this riding has been the Hon. Jean-François Pouliot who was a member from 1924 to 1957, that is for 33 years, and represented this riding in the House of Commons. I believe that if he were here tonight he would certainly explode in anger at the thought that a riding which was so dear to him should disappear.

There are some historic reasons which are easy to understand since that constituency has developed near main arteries. All the civilizations of the world were to be found in the vicinity of thoroughfares leading to the area where parishes and municipalities became established. There we find the Trans-Canada Highway, the Témiscouata railway and today the electronic system and the press. There are some common projects such as an outlet to the sea, the famous seaport the project of Gros-Cacouna, the airport and also all the government and judicial services, and others, which gives a riding a sense of identity and its people a feeling of belonging with the will to preserve it.

An hon. Member: It is justified.

Mr. Gendron: Yes, it is justified.

Then what could be done? I am referring to the statement made earlier by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) to the effect that it was possible by strictly following the objectives of the Commission to preserve the riding and I shall quote here from the submission of the Regional Board to the commissioners.

We believe that this margin of availability is sufficient to enable a sensible electoral redistribution in which the riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata may be maintained, thus safeguarding the geographical, social and economic entities around which the various population centers of Eastern Quebec are gathered.

Let us have a quick look on the following list of counties:

1) Gaspé	62,500 of population
2) Bonaventure	62,900
3) Matane	67,009
4) Rimouski	74,882
5) Kamouraska	75,210
6) Bellechasse	74,099
7) Beauce	72,313

which amounts to a total of 488,913 people for seven (7) counties, or a total of approximately 68,000 people over the quota, which leaves a sufficient reservoir to keep the riding of Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata.

And surely this kind of redistribution, as the honorable member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) pointed out, may give rise to public protests, to parochial disputes, while we need so badly in this particular region to put our energies together for the development of a region which is currently being drained of 95 per cent of its youth on average as well as its most active adult population, a region which suffers from a considerable alienation feeling from the social and economic point of view and which, for these very reasons, needs the most adequate representation possible. And we think we must delete one riding, when we are able to maintain it under the legislation.

I respectfully submit to the commissioners the need to proceed to this readjustment. Nevertheless, the two ridings of Kamouraska and Rivière-du-Loup which are to become the proposed riding of Kamouraska should not feel so much frustrated as to experience an alienation feeling that would paralyze their common efforts to put their energies together for the development of this part of the country. I think it is possible, and it was done within the great portage in school boards, it was done also in regional development movements, to work jointly in order to help one another. And we should, beyond nonrepresentative arbitrary electoral boundaries, not develop a feeling of alienation that would destroy the energies, the dynamism of our people but contribute to the well-being of our fellow citizens.

And I would suggest to the hon. commissioners, should they come to this conclusion, that for a proper identification and to remove any chance of confusing provincial counties and federal constituencies, they should add the name Rivière-du-Loup while retaining the historical name of the constituency of Kamouraska, which will then form the constituency of Rivière-du-Loup-Kamouraska. I am sure that my hon. colleague will endorse this project.

● (2200)

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate on the new electoral boundaries of federal ridings.

Mr. Speaker, I deplore the fact that because of bad communications in eastern Quebec, the people have been unable to really take part in this debate. Very few are aware of this federal act that requires that every ten years judges are put to work on redistribution and draw up new boundaries. I would even go as far as to say that even municipal authorities were not aware of this.

Having said this, I should like to congratulate the commissioners on their final draft tabled a month ago, which is a great improvement over the first rough draft dating back to three years as well as over the one tabled last June.

I should now like to make a few remarks. First of all, a part of the Matapedia Valley which is now in Matane riding, namely Causapscal and the neighbouring areas, would become part of Bonaventure. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a telegram sent to me by the following organizations; the town of Causapscal, the Administrative Committee of the County Council of Matapédia, Saint-Jacques-le-Majeur parish of Causapscal, Saint-Raphaël parish of Albertville, the municipality of Saint-Edmond, the municipality of Sainte-Florence, the municipality of Sainte-Marguerite, the Junior Chamber of Causapscal and the Chamber of Commerce of Causapscal. The telegram reads as follows:

This is to inform you of our opinion concerning the electoral boundaries readjustment for the ridings of Matane and Bonaventure. Our representations are belated because the diffusion of information is very bad in our area; thus the very large majority of the citizens involved have not been made aware of the state of the question.

Whereas the Matapédia valley constitutes a very characteristic human and geographical entity altogether different from the entity constituted by the riding of Bonaventure;

Whereas the citizens of the following localities: the town of Causapscal, the municipalities of Saint-Jacques-le-Majeur-de-Causapscal, Saint-Raphaël-d'Albertville, Saint-Edmond, Sainte-Florence and Sainte-Marguerite usually do business in the upper part of the riding in the towns of Matane and Rimouski and that they have almost no business relations with the present riding of Bonaventure;

Whereas there are uninhabited areas exceeding twenty-five (25) miles between the present riding of Matane and that of Bonaventure, which does little to encourage communications;

Whereas our area, the Matapedia Valley, is still one of the worst, economically speaking, in Canada, and that once again it would be at a disadvantage if it had to deal with more MPs;

[Mr. Gendron.]

Whereas in rural areas, it is extremely rare if not unique that a village should have been separated from its parish (Lac-au-Saumon and Saint-Edmond), that is to say the village is in the riding of Matane and the parish in that of Bonaventure;

Whereas our area has already lost its riding, that of Matapedia, and whereas it should not be used to "plug holes" since at the time of the last redistribution, the upper part of the valley was used to complete the riding of Rimouski while this time, that part is returned to the riding of Matane and the lower valley is used to complete the riding of Bonaventure.

For those reasons, we advise you that we are in complete disagreement with the current proposal of the Electoral Boundaries Commission and request that you intervene on our behalf to change the situation with a view to assuring that Matapedia remains within the riding of Matane.

I read, at the start, the name of the municipalities that sent me this telegram.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I agree whole-heartedly with them, and I support as strongly as I can the representations of the Matapedia Valley. I could of course add to their argument the fact that the people is the lower mainland deal far more with the upper part of the riding than with that of Bonaventure.

Causapscal and the first town in Bonaventure riding, Carleton, are 80 miles apart. That is far and services are non-existent. When people come down in the valley, they go to Campbellton in New Brunswick. It is unfortunate but, on the other hand, Causapscal and Matane are only 50 miles apart.

As for the other end of my constituency that is to be cut away, that is the area of Cap-Chat, Mr. Speaker, since the commission stated itself its intention to group in the same electoral constituency people with the same affinities, similar needs and a community of interest, I cannot understand why Cap-Chat is taken out again of the constituency of Matane to be included in the constituency of Gaspé.

I remind you that the children of Les Méchins attend high school in Cap-Chat, that people in Les Méchins, for instance, do as much business with Cap-Chat as with Matane, that Cap-Chat serves a good part of the constituents of Matane and is a most important centre.

As far as I am concerned, and the same holds true in respect of the people of Cap-Chat, I would be very unhappy to see this town leave the constituency of Matane to be become part of the constituency of Gaspé. Mr. Speaker, I do hope that the commissioners will reconsider their decisions and that they will ensure that Cap-Chat will remain in the riding of Matane. It will be recalled no doubt that Cap-Chat was in the Gaspé riding for a few years and I think it is unfortunate to move a municipality from one constituency to another every ten years. This does not make for a feeling of belonging.

Once again, I ask the commissioners to review that part of their report. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, having gone through the commissioners' very carefully and having looked in the Quebec Revised Statutes, and in particular chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of 1964, since the report refers to this Quebec legislation, I must say that the description of the constituency of Matane is rather obscure. For instance, it is not quite clear, according to the commissioners' description, that the parishes of Saint-René, Saint-Jean-Vianney, Sainte-Paule and Saint-Nil are included in the federal constituency of Matane. All the more as these parishes according to the plan put forward in June 1975 were to be included in the riding of Gaspé, and I would like to ensure they are actually in the federal riding of Matane.

Third, I think that in the proposed new federal riding of Matane, both parishes of Saint-François-Xavier-des-Hauteurs and Saint-Charles-Garnier should be left out. As everybody knows to get these two municipalities, you have to go through Saint-Gabriel in the Rimouski riding, and those two municipalities are 27 miles away from Sainte-Angèle-de-Mérici, the closest point to the federal riding of Matane.

A quick glance at the map is enough to note that it is not sensible to wish to go through St-Gabriel in the Rimouski riding to go to those two towns, especially as they happen to be situated outside the Matane riding but their interests and history are linked to the Rimouski constituency. The best proof of this lies in the fact that the present federal member of parliament for Rimouski wishes those two towns to stay in the federal Rimouski riding.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I would like to echo a demand which I have often heard in my riding, namely, to stop calling it Matane and call it by the name of Matapédia-Matane to which it is rightfully entitled. I do not know why but before I had the honour of representing this riding, a law had been passed to discard the name "Matapédia". When we look at the shape of this riding, we notice that it is made of two distinctive parts: The area along the coast and the one in the lower mainland.

I find that we should go back to the former name and call it the riding of Matapédia-Matane. I have never felt I represented the town of Matane, but the whole riding. I have sworn not to show preference for a parish or another and while I understand that the citizens of Matane are proud that the riding is called after their town, yet we have to admit that this name does not do justice to the people of the valley whom I also represent.

I strongly recommend that the former name of the riding of Matapédia-Matane be restored for it would better meet the requirements of the two groups which constitute the population of the riding. The town of Matane is undoubtedly the largest centre of the riding with its 13,000 residents but when we consider the population of the new riding, about 67,000 people, we must bear in mind that we have to be fair to everybody and that the member of Parliament must resist the temptation of favouring one section over another. I consulted an impressive number of people in the constituency, and many names were suggested if compound names are not appreciated. There are such names as Mitis, Metis, D'Amours, Kent, Fraser, Des Monts, Du Golfe. In Matane, the reference is of course to one of the pioneers in the area, the sieur Mathieu D'Amours de Chaufour, and we already have in Matane a school and a dam named after him. Others would rather insist on a family name that would be de Chaufour rather than keeping a town name that does not reflect all opinions and all the people in the other 50 municipalities in the riding.

Mr. Cyr: The De Bané constituency!

Mr. De Bané: My friend the hon. member for Gaspé also made a suggestion that should be discarded. I would like that this be brought to the commissioners' attention. Of course I would prefer the name of Matapédia-Matane. To conclude, I insist on both ends of the old constituency remaining in the proposed one. This includes both the area of Causapscal, an important municipality in the valley and Amqui's sister-town, and at the other end the municipality of Cap-Chat, an extremely important one where we hope, with the Quebec government's cooperation, to launch soon two significant projects that will finally allow the hard working population to survive the very serious depression they have been going through for a number of months.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the judges who are charged with the drafting of the new electoral map, independently of every partisan power, and on which we as members have no influence whatsoever other than some meek representations, will consider the remarks I am making this evening. I want to point out that these are not only my personal views, but the result of an extensive consultation process with people in every area of the riding I have had the honour of representing for a number of years.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Perhaps, following the usual procedure, it would be helpful if the Chair were to indicate the order of the next six members from the province of Quebec who will be taking part in the debate. I would propose that they be called in this order: the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Demers), the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard), the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard), and the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois).

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to comment this evening on a rather important matter concerning the representation here in Ottawa of my constituents.

● (2220)

Before the new redistribution, the city of Laval included two ridings and was divided in two approximately equal parts: the ridings of Laval and Duvernay. The commissioners used a very precise and above all excessively rigid tool. They took as a basis the 1971 statistics. As a result, Laval now extends over two and a half ridings. They took part of the riding of Duvernay and part of the riding of Laval; they blended that with the north of Montreal on the other side of the river.

I suggest that besides using a very rigid tool such as the 1971 statistics—and especially the fact that they used only that tool—the commission should have taken into consideration other factors such as geographic factors. As a matter of fact, as you know, the city of Laval is limited to the north and to the south by rivers. If it can be said that the motto of Canada is "A mari usque ad mare", it certainly can be said that the city of Laval stretches from one river to the other.

Three of Canada's boundaries are oceans and the city of Laval is an island completely surrounded by water.

Mr. La Salle: A small Canada!

Mr. Demers: A small Canada, like the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said. It therefore seems completely illogical to me to form a new constituency by taking the southern part of Laval commonly called Laval-des-Rapides and a sector of Northern Montreal on the other side of the river. A large number of the problems faced by Laval because of its geographic position are, if not restricted to Laval, at least quite inherent to Laval. We have problems and, especially at this time, floods which are not a problem on the Montreal side, but many people in Laval have had to move because their basement is full of water.

Since Laval is also a developing city, we also have a lot of road construction. We have transportation problems since people will have to be transported from northern Montreal to Mirabel. They will pass through the whole of Laval. We also have residential and industrial development like nowhere else in Canada. Furthermore, Laval must build hospitals. So, because of its geography, the city of Laval has very special problems which are very different from those of surrounding areas.

There is also the type of population. The commission should have considered and examined the kind of population of Laval. Unlike the Montreal constituencies, we have still in Laval many farmers and vegetable gardeners, people who from one generation to the other farm the land and who, as you all know, have problems with which all hon. members from rural constituencies are familiar. And next to these farmers and gardeners, we have the city of Laval that most people know, a bedroom area from which most residents work in Montreal where the businesses and offices are. From this point of view also, because of this mixture of rural and urban dwellers, the problems of the city of Laval are certainly very different from those of Montreal.

However, census commissionners, as I mentioned before, have used an excessively rigid tool, that is the 1971 statistics, and did not consider the local population's expectations. There is also an extremely important factor in Laval. Laval lies north of Montreal and south of the new airport of Mirabel, so the entire metropolitan expansion occurs in Laval and the Duvernay and Laval ridings absorb an annual growth rate of 7,000 people.

In other words, on the basis of the statistics for 1971 they say, for instance, that the Duvernay riding has 93,000 inhabitants. However, a little arithmetic reveals that at the next election in 1978 in the Duvernay riding alone, there will be about 135,000 inhabitants. And, as we know, the national census is taken only every ten years and the next one will be in 1981. Then, we can assume that it will take about two years to study the new electoral boundaries. Then, the new redistribution will probably not take place before 1983. I think that in 1983 a part of Laval only, the Duvernay part, will have about 160,000 inhabitants and this is a very conservative figure.

So I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Duvernay population should be represented as well as any other population in Canada and that these factors should have been considered in the new electoral boundaries. Laval should include three ridings all on the territory of the city of Laval.

And in the hope that the judges who worked on that redistribution will have the opportunity to carefully read my arguments, I suggest to them to divide the Laval territory in three separate ridings.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I know that our time is very limited in this debate. Therefore, I will simply put forward the arguments that justify, I suggest, some important changes in the findings of the commissioners' report on electoral boundary redistribution in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, obviously I am not the only one who believes that the commissioners' report, as tabled in this House, is not in the best interests of the Quebec voters. As a matter of fact, no less than ten objections were filed in the House for the province of Quebec alone. That means that at least 100 members of Parliament thought this report had to be amended for one reason or another. Even members who represent other parts of the country have signed the objections filed for the province of Quebec. These members recognize that representations made by most Quebec members to have the commissioners amend their report after taking in consideration the arguments put forward in the House, are well founded.

I know that the commissioners' task is not an easy one and that it is difficult if not impossible to satisfy everybody at the same time. However, one must admit that when 100 members of parliament regardless of their party or province, rise to protest against the proposed electoral redistribution, it is an indication that something is wrong.

I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the report as a whole concerning the province of Quebec. I know that other honourable members will address themselves to the regions they represent and that they will very ably make their points in favour of changes in the commissioners' report. I for one would like to deal in particular with the problems created by the commissioners' report as regard the Northwestern part of Quebec. I wish to congratulate the honourable member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who made a very good case for Northwestern Quebec tonight.

As I said, I represent the northwest Quebec with my colleagues the hon. members for Abitibi and Témiscamingue (Messrs. Laprise and Caouette).

Mr. Speaker, my two colleagues were first elected to the House of Commons in 1962. They have seen the name and size of their respective ridings change once since 1968 when the redistribution added a new riding in northwest Quebec. All the people in that area were happy with the new division. At last, that large territory would be represented by a number of members more consistent with its huge size.

Mr. Speaker, the riding I now represent is one of the largest in the country. It extends on hundreds, if not thousands of miles and includes municipalities such as Cadillac and Chibougamau more than 400 miles apart. My colleague the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) also represents the largest riding in the country. Its extends, so to speak, to the North Pole.

Both of us, and I am sure that I speak for him today, are proud to represent in the House of Commons people who put their confidence in us. We do our best to express their views in the House in all debates and we try to deal to their satisfaction with the problems they refer to us. I believe that the mere fact that the Social Crediters have been elected at every general election in those ridings since 1962 shows that we do our job as the people want. The citizens of the northwest are satisfied with our work as federal members.

However, Mr. Speaker, to do away with a riding in the northwest might place an overwhelming burden on the members of that area. It is hard enough to cover hundreds and hundreds of miles to travel across the constituency. If the size of the riding is doubled as required by the present redistribution, it will take an angel with wings or a superman to serve everyone as they expect to be by their member.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I object to the redistribution bill submitted by the commissioners. Whatever system is used for the redistribution, it is nonsensical to have only two ridings in an area as vast as northwest Quebec. The other point I want to strees today, Mr. Speaker, is the gross injustice done to the area I represent compared to other Quebec areas such as the Gaspé peninsula. In the bill tabled in the House, the three Gaspé area ridings hardly include 180,000 constituents, while in the northwest, the two proposed ridings contain more than 171,000 constituents.

How is it, Mr. Speaker that there are three members for the Gaspé area and only two for northwest Quebec for an almost identical mumber of constituents? All the more as the northwest Quebec constituencies cover a far larger territory. I do not mean to say, Mr. Speaker that the Gaspé area should lose a riding. Indeed I think it is large enough to be represented by three members of Parliament but I also believe that northwest Quebec with its vast territory and its population which, according to the last census, has only 10,000 fewer contituents than the Gaspé peninsula, should have at least three members as well in the House of Commons.

It should also be noted that the census on the basis of which the actual proposals for a redistribution have been made does not take into account the fact that thousands of workers live on the James Bay working sites. Even if the commissioners are to work from the 1971 census, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the James Bay workers will go on living there for many years to come. They will still be there when the next elections take place and they should have been taken into account when redesigning the electoral map for these voters are also entitled to have a representative worthy of speaking for them in the House of Commons.

This, Mr. Speaker, means that the Villeneuve and Abitibi ridings have each at least 5,000 more electors than is shown from the figures used to revise the electoral map. With all the work that is being done on the James Bay development sites, we can be sure that the number of voters will still be increasing at a very fast rate in the next few years. So, Mr. Speaker, it should be logical that they be provided for. This is what I ask the commissioners, when they read the Hansard, so that they can give a fair ruling in the case of the people of Abitibi.

We must recognize that the Villeneuve and Abitibi ridings have more voters than all three ridings in the Gaspé peninsula. On the proposed map, our huge ridings in Northwestern Quebec have a much larger population than some urban ridings like Langelier, which has 86,073 people as against 88,164 for the Témiscamingue riding, or that of Hull which has 81,195 people as against 83,667 for the Abititi riding. We could give many other examples such as Montmorency or Saint-Jean, or even Berthier which has 67,000 people, I think.

These urban ridings cover hardly three or four blocks. In these cases, the representative just need a "little walk" to go from one end of his riding to the other. These ridings are so small that you can hardly see them on the electoral map proposed by the commissioners. On the contrary, the Témiscamingue and Abitibi ridings are easy to see. In fact, those constituencies cover more than half of the map we are studying today. Mr. Speaker, I can say without any apprehension that giving such large ridings to members of Parliament does not make any sense. The tremendous distances between the various municipalities in one of the northwestern constituencies should be compensated by a smaller number of people. This is not the case with the electoral map discussed today. This map gives to the northwestern constituencies more people than many an urban one.

If we were to cut out three constituencies from the two proposed constituencies, the average number of people per constituency would be over 57,000. In the Gaspé Peninsula, the average per constituency is hardly 61,000 people. If we take into consideration the workers living in the James Bay area, it is obvious that the average for the northwest, even with three constituencies, would be higher than that for the Gaspé Peninsula ridings. If we wanted to apply strictly the rules governing redistribution, it would always be possible to take the three thousand people missing in each of the three constituencies which could be set up in the northwest in the neighbouring constituencies. It would be more logical to increase the area of existing constituencies by a few square miles than to bluntly eliminate a constituency, thus doubling the area of the two remaining ones.

I suggest the commissioners should consider this possibility in order to avoid creating two rural ridings that would have more voters than any of several urban ridings. All the more so, since these two ridings are the largest in the Province of Quebec. That is what I am suggesting to the commissioners today.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I would like to point out the fact that the population generally and that of Northwestern Quebec in particular, find it very difficult to accept this proposal. Considering the very different treatment given to the Gaspé Peninsula and Northwestern Quebec, several people do not hesitate to say that Gaspé has obtained three ridings while our northwestern region has obtained only two.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the objectives that the commissioners should strive to reach we can see, as several other members have already pointed out,—and I would also like to emphasize it,—it was expected of the commissioners to keep municipal unity wherever the situation allowed it, by compensating in some areas like Gaspé, the Saguenay, Lake St. John, Abitibi, Pontiac-Témiscamingue, the low density of population by attributing a quotient substantially lower than the one prevailing in the cities.

Mr. Speaker, if the commissioners would follow the guideline, they should give to northwestern Quebec what is due to this area, and without delay, and I mean three electoral ridings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): For the information of the House I can now indicate that there are six members remaining on the Quebec list, and I propose to call them in this order: the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard), the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois), the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the very patient member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief and I hope to set an example by the length of my intervention, not for those who will follow me because I think they have rights to indicate and views to express, but when it comes to the reform of parliamentary procedure one can express one's views very shortly without repetition and thus avoid political partisanship.

I just want to commend the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec for their exceptional work as regards the heart of Quebec, and particularly the constituency of Drummond which I represent. The centre of Drummond is in the middle of the Quebec City-Montreal-Trois-Rivières and Sherbrooke route and has the privilege of having on its territory a very important highway, a vital artery, which is Highway 20, the Trans-Canada Highway. And they have extended the Drummond riding northwest towards the St. Lawrence River, which is very rational since henceforth the Trans-Canada Highway will form a genuine backbone for this riding as it does for neighbouring Lotbinière.

It seems to me that the commissioners have shown practical experience and sound knowledge of the constituency I represent, and I am much obliged for this.

Following this change in the election map, the Drummond riding has now acquired two other municipalities, Saint-Léonard and Saint-Wenceslas, which is a very wise change since those two municipalities have a great deal of natural economic and social affinity with Drummondville, just like smaller municipalities in Bagot have with Saint-Hyacinthe.

I regret however that some municipalities located in the southwestern and eastern limits of the riding had to be cut off to be linked to other nearly ridings. I do understand of course that the commission had to abide by some criteria.

It had become impossible to prevent the municipalities which formerly belonged to Drummond from being integrated in other constituencies because of the changes made necessary by the population criteria, by economic and social affinities.

I simply wanted to stress how sorry I am to lose some municipalities but I understand that the commission, following the criteria established under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, had no other alternative than cutting them off. On the other hand I am pleased about the new municipalities. As far as my area is concerned, the work of the commission as a whole seems to me to be once again logical and practical, and to conclude I congratulate the members of the commission and I also thank the House which allowed me a few minutes to voice my views on these changes.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): I indicated that the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) would be recognized next. He, of course, retains his right to speak before the end of this debate, regardless of his temporary absence.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is my duty to speak like my colleagues from Quebec of all parties, at this stage of the debate on the proposals made by the commissioners.

Mr. Speaker, my first comments about the federal constituency of Lotbinière as such are to say how very satisfied I am with the proposals of the commissioners since they recognize as a constituency the same area that I have had the honour to represent since 1968.

It is normal, Mr. Speaker, and this will be my first point, that the commission should respect the historical, the geographical, and especially the economic entity of this part of the country. Indded, the Bois-Francs are an entity as such, and if I could make a suggestion, to be completely logical concerning the Bois-Francs, this regional entity should truly be respected. The commission should add to the constituency of Lotbinière the city of Plessisville and the five sister cities of Warwick, Arthabaska, Victoriaville, Princeville and Plessisville, which would be united as a whole and form a urban conglomerate which would respect not only our historical past, but also our cultural, social and economic entity. The only change proposed by the commissioners concerning the rural part of Lotbinière, since the riding is half urban and half rural, is that the municipality and parish of Saint-Apollinaire de Lotbinière be added to it.

Mr. Speaker, this is again a good thing that we accept with great pleasure since those who know this part of the country are well aware, as I said previously, that Saint-Apollinaire is a natural part of the rural entity of Lotbinière. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it was truly an anomaly for the parish and municipality of Saint-Apollinaire to be part of the Lévis riding since there was no social, cultural or economic community of interest between Saint-Apollinaire and the rest of the Lévis riding, except perhaps Saint-Agapit.

The only point, Mr. Speaker, on which I should like to make very positive comments is about the municipality of Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet, and I very sincerely hope that the commissioners will not only examine but also accept the proposal I make to them. Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet is home to about 650 or 700 electors. So it is not a big number, it is not a parish that might change anything on the quotient of the riding as a whole.

In other words, it is not by giving Dosquet to Lotbinière or by systematically projecting it into the riding of Frontenac, as proposed by the commissioners in their report, that numerically anything is changed as regards the quotient. This only represents 650 more electors in one riding or 650 fewer electors in another. In such case, given the small size of that municipality in terms of electors.

● (2250)

In view on the other hand of the very strong points made by people in Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet, who for decades and decades have had very close historicalties with the rest of the rural constituency of Lotbinière, and considering the insignificant number of people involved, logic would have it that commissioners willingly accept to leave Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet in the Lotbinière constituency. We indeed accept Saint-Apollinaire, quite naturally as I said before, but let Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet remain here.

Mr. Speaker, if Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet went to Frontenac, as proposed in the commissioners' report, the people in that municipality would be underrepresented. They would be represented in a totally inadequate way, not for partisan reasons, not because of lack of seriousness on the part of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau), but strictly because Dosquet has no contribution whatsoever either cultural, social, nor economic to make to the constituency of Frontenac. Mr. Speaker, Dosquet has no ties whatsoever with the whole of the constituency of Frontenac, which centers around Thetford Mines.

I therefore respectfully express the hope that the commissioners will accept to grant the absolutely unanimous request by the people in Dosquet that they remain as full-fledged citizens in the constituency of Lotbinière.

Mr. Speaker, Dosquet is quite near Saint-Flavien, not even five miles away, and very close also to Laurier Station. It is almost bordering the Trans-Canada Highway, and if it were to remain in Frontenac, it would be the last neighbouring parish in Frontenac, while they are naturally part of the rural basin of Lotbinière.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to bother the commissioners with that, but spontaneously the people in Dosquet, without partisanship signed a petition from which I shall quote, because I know that under our rules I cannot table it. But nevertheless, I want to show it to you, so that you may know how important that is to the citizens of Dosquet. We read this:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Saint-Octave-de-Dosquet, want to signify our objection to the transfer of our parish from the federal riding of Lotbinière to the federal riding of Frontenac.

For historic, geographic, economic and social reasons, we ask to remain citizens in the federal riding of Lotbinière.

In testimony whereof, we have signed:

Follow 571 signatures of citizens, constituents, from the municipality of Dosquet, who share the views I have just stated, indeed only as their humble spokesman to make the commissioners take their proposal into consideration.

In brief, to conclude that first point and introcuce the second one to the extent that we respect those famous quotients, since some principle must be the starting point in the redistribution of the electoral map, to the extent that it is materially possible and we comply with the principles of the representation quotient, we must make every effort to attain the highest degree of representativeness possible in Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, Canada does not have 1,000 representatives as in other countries. Not even 500; we are only 264 members at present. The proposed formula in the report of the representation commissioners tend to increase that representation very slowly. Because of the quotient principle, the trend is towards rural members representing ever larger and less populated territories as against urban constituencies which become overpopulated but cover very limited areas. All this arises from our assumption that in a country as vast as Canada we cannot enlarge our Parliament since we cannot enlarge or improve our representation. In so far as we are caught in that kind of administrative strait jacket which of course cannot be discarded overnight, I hope that the commissioners, in the course of their review, since the law provides for those debates to reach them through you, Mr. Speaker, will realize the importance Canadians give to their being represented in the House of Commons, regardless of their political affiliations, therefore I believe and most hon. members I am sure will agree with me, that this is the kind of representation the commissioners will make.

It is very important for the people of Canada to identify themselves with their Parliament and with their M.Ps. It is important that their M.Ps. give them the best possible services. It is important that they have access to their M.P's door and be able to meet him. It is absolutely essential that the member of parliament have excellent communications not only to make laws public but also to inform his voters so that they avail themselves of this information and do not become victims of a law they were not aware of. When I speak for instance of the municipality of Dosquet, which is very dear to me, I must say it is exactly in the kind of situation I am referring to. Naturally, the people of this municipality are always in Lotbinière, but for the purposes of representation, if the commissioners were not to reconsider their position, they would be included in Frontenac with which Dosquet has no relationship.

Mr. Speaker, and this is how I should conclude, I think we should take advantage of this debate and start putting forward ideas for the future. Amongst others, and some of the members who have spoken before me have expressed the same views, there should be two for quotients representation purposes, one for the rural ridings and one for the urban ridings. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely essential. We must provide solutions for the next 20, 30 or 40 years, as administrators and legislators. Otherwise, we will end up with an absurd situation where rural Canada will be under-represented and where urban Canada will also be under-represented, because we will then have huge groupings, under the pretence of a unique quota from coast to coast.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is extremely important to have the two quota principle admitted, one for rural areas and one for urban areas, for which legislation should eventually be amended in order for Parliament to have the last say in that respect. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the quality of the commissioners' work. It is not easy, but I recognize—and I think the commissioners will also recognize it—no one is more qualified to forge than a blacksmith. And that Parliament which is the highest institution of Canadian democracy, which is the instrument of representation of the Canadian opinion, that is exactly what we are. The member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) for instance, will never be made the member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), and similarly, the member for Lotbinière will never be made the member for Drummond or Bellechasse. Each one of us is different. Besides being different by our own personality and by our own political party, we are different by our mentality, by the village we represent, by the piece of country that we represent.

The problems which we have to tackle daily are not always the same. They differ from one part of the country to another. Some members solely represent a rural area and their problem is wheat or milk in the rural constituencies or textile and furniture in other urban constituencies.

Mr. Speaker, it is important, since Parliament is the best representative institution, that Parliament should not only have its say about representation, but the last word, not that I do not have confidence in the commissioners, on the contrary but the commissioners of the Redistribution Commission should be there with the same capacity as many other commissions which we have entirely set up, as consultants to prepare the work, do the research annd prepare the necessary statistics.

Mr. Speaker, because of the very size of our country, we need to have of course a standing committee responsible for studying and finding methods and making recommendations to Cabinet and Parliament in order to achieve the highest degree of representation possible; and eventually the legislators should have this report before them and take the decisions which have to be taken.

I would therefore seize this occasion, Mr. Speaker, to ask the President of the Privy Council to take this recommendation very seriously—and I believe many members share in my opinion on this point—and to introduce as soon as possible a piece of legislation that will eliminate this anachronism which is responsible for us having this debate tonight. We know very well the various areas of our country. For example, it is sheer nonsense that the town of Dosquet should be part of Frontenac. It is normal, natural that it should be part of Lotbinière, and that would have almost no effect on the quotient of representation.

It would be only normal that the legislators have the final say and make the final decision, and this under the authority of a legislation which would govern this area of representation. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, we refuse to face the problem. We just have to remember the last proposal that was made, which at that time had raised a general outcry among all hon. members and in every province of Canada because of the way the quotas had been established. Mr. Speaker, we know how much wheeling and dealing it took then to get Parliament to reject that proposal. Today, we have a proposal that, in the whole, as many members have pointed out, is generally acceptable except in a few areas such as Abitibi, eastern Quebec, and for instance the loss of the constituencies of Rivière-du-Loup or Abitibi to which hon. members have addressed themselves. Mr. Speaker, it is all the more important that Parliament have its say as regards representation. I would quote one more example to show the importance of the second point I made and point out how important it is for Parliament, through a particular piece of legislation, to have its say in this matter, since it is the representative body of this country. The Abitibi region is a typical example, it covers a huge area with a population as important as that of Lotbinière, Montreal, Quebec city, Trois-Rivières or Drummond. These people are entitled to the same representation. These people have the same rights as any other citizen. They are full-fledged taxpayers. As far as I know, the people from Abitibi must pay the same taxes as in other parts of the country. Why then should they be deprived of such an effective representation in Parliament, because they are living in a huge area that is not as densely populated as downtown Montreal?

Mr. Speaker, when such criteria are used, the result is sheer nonsense. The commissioners cannot be blamed for this kind of nonsense. They are working with the tools we gave them. We should be the ones to blame. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have somehow buried our heads in the sand. As they say in English, at a given point in time: "Give me the tools and I will do the job." That is more or less what is happening now. And I say, Mr. Speaker, that we do not have the right, as members of Parliament, to allow a reduction in the representation of some regions on the grounds that they are vast territories.

The people of Abitibi are not responsible for that, neither are the people of Rivière-du-Loup. When we are referring to a change concerning Saint-Octave de Dosquet, that is a very small change indeed. Actually, it means having a particular parish in one riding rather than in another. That is a kind of problem the Commission can easily solve, without disturbing anybody. But when it comes to the representation of a whole group of people or a given territory, that is quite another matter, Mr. Speaker, and I think that at that level the Canadian Parliament must protect—I repeat protect—the rights of Canadians to a fair and equal degree of representation in Parliament from sea to sea. Whatever the language, the location in the country or the education. Therefore, the President of the Privy Council who is responsible for this should put as soon as possible a legislation before this Parliament which would give the Canadian Parliament the authority required both to establish a standing commission on representativeness in Canada and on electoral boundaries. This commission would not simply draw lines but come up with figures, in particular on the participation of the Canadian people inside these fictitious lines, so that each citizen anywhere inside these fictitious lines has the same fair representation in Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, we discuss the salaries of members of Parliament. There are some exceptions so that some members from remote areas may have higher expense accounts to visit their ridings. It is a well known fact here. Why? To give a member greater facility and some equity compared to his other colleagues. If we do so and if we allow this type of exception because of the remoteness factor for some members, why not do so more especially for the citizens of these ridings? It costs nothing to Parliament. It only costs the principle of a citizen living in Malartic, in Rivière-du-Loup, in Drummondville, in Victoriaville, in Montmagny, who has the same representativeness in Parliament. It would then be up to him to choose a political option likely to give him that representativeness, but this Parliament will have at least given him the right to have his own member of Parliament in his riding, who typically represents his region. Then, Mr. Speaker, the member is more accessible and the citizen may then obtain some services and some information from him.

But if one starts out only on the basis of a quantitative numerical quota leading to fictitious lines, one ends up with extremely vast, extended territories like the riding of Abitibi which is absolutely extraordinary, in fact an aberration.

On the other hand, a riding in Montreal, for instance, with a population of 80 to 100,000 people, barely covers a few blocks. Mr. Speaker, that is important! Another factor is important and it will be my last point. In a municipality like Saint-Octave de Dosquet, everyone knows everyone else. It is an entity by itself, it constitutes a town. One knows everyone else, people help each other and join forces. People meet on the church steps and take part in the parochial life. In a municipality like Montreal, one does not even know one's next door neighbour in the same apartment building.

Mr. Speaker, many frustrations result when those small factors are not taken into consideration, as they are not actually so unimportant after all because of their human importance.

That is why I shall allow myself to conclude by expressing the wish, humbly and respectfully, that the hon. commissionners will take into account my representations, not so much about the bill to be introduced, since that is the responsibility of the President of the Privy Council, but with regard to the municipality of Saint-Octave de Dosquet, that it might meet the wishes of the people who want to be represented as they now are, within the riding of Lotbinière exactly in the same way, Mr. Speaker, as we are happy to welcome the people of Saint-Apollinaire, the municipality and the parish which naturally are part of Lotbinière.

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acquaint this House and the members of the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission for Quebec with the reason why I raised an objection to the recommendations contained in the commission report tabled in this House on Friday, February 27, 1976.

But before doing so, I should like to congratulate and thank the commissioners, more particularly its chairman, Mr. Justice François Chevalier, for the attention they gave to the 17-page brief that I had the privilege to present on Tuesday, August 19, 1975, at the commission hearing in Hull, Quebec.

On the whole, the commission accepted the recommendations I had made for the area north of Montreal which is of particular concern to me, and I think that the members of this area will support my view that most of us are satisfied with the changes introduced by the commission. Now, once more, I wish to thank the commissioners for the understanding they have shown towards our area.

The rationale behind the objection I raised are the following: First, the commission did not earnestly consider the feeling of belonging to a particular area in choosing the name they gave to a specific constituency, namely Deux-Montagnes. In addition, when the commission chose the name of this riding, it did not consider well enough the importance of the number of citizens who are identified with the area for geographical, political and historical reasons, particularly the region of Blainville to which I shall refer later. The commission should also consider the importance of the two very distinct territories which make up the new riding.

The first point I should like to raise, Mr. Speaker, is a historical point concerning the area of Blainville. Before telling the story of this region, I should like to thank particularly the hon. Lionel Bertrand, who was a member of the House of Commons for 17 years, a former minister of the Quebec government under Mr. Lesage, a legislative councillor, a journalist and a historian on occasion, who provided me with background for my remarks. In 1683, the king of France granted to the illustrious soldier Sidrac DuGué de Boisbriand the seigniory of The Thousand Islands.

It is the territory presently occupied by the towns of Sainte-Thérèse, Blainville, Boisbriand, Rosemère, Lorraine, Bois-des-Filion and some parts of Saint-Augustin, Sainte-Monique and Saint-Janvier. In 1714, the Thousand Islands fief is enlarged and covers then the area known today as Saint-Eustache added to the original territory. The new fief is divided between the son in law of DuGué de Boisbriand: Jean Petit takes the part of Saint-Eustache and Charles Gaspard de Langloiserie, the part of Sainte-Thérèse, the original territory.

In 1718, Marie-Thérèse DuGué de Boisbriand, widow of Charles Gaspard de Langloiserie takes over the seigniory and she makes the first concessions in 1740. Her daughter, Suzanne de Langloiserie, marries the soldier Jean-Baptiste Céleron de Blainville. The Blainville reside in the seigniory, more precisely in the territory of the present town of Boisbriand. In 1743, the Thousand Islands seigniory becomes the Blainville seigniory.

Their daughter, Thérèse de Blainville who takes over in 1768 develops intensively the seigniory and gives her name to the parish of Sainte-Thérèse de Blainville founded in 1789 and that serves all the territory mentioned above. In 1789, Thérèse de Blainville who became Mrs. Nolan Lamarque places the seigniory in the hands of notary Joseph Hubert Lacroix who became in 1792 the first hon. member for Terrebonne then the county of Effingham. Later, he will become seignior de Blainville in 1806 and his son Janvier Domptail Lacroix succeeds him in 1818.

Briefly, this is the history of Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville, of Boisbriand, of Saint-Janvier-de-Blainville and of Saint-Janvier-de-Lacroix. The parish of Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville, incorporated as a municipality in 1845, covers the same territory as in the canonical sense. Thus, the municipality of Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville, as years went by, gave away parts of its territory to make up the whole or part of other municipalities: Saint-Augustin (1845), Saint-Janvier (1846), the village or town of Sainte-Thérèse (1849), Sainte-Monique (1872), Sainte-Thérèse-Ouest ou Boisbriand in 1946, Rosemère in 1947, Bois-des-Filion in 1949 and Lorraine in 1960. The balance of the territory became in 1968 the town of Blainville. Thus, the towns of Sainte-Thérèse, Boisbriand, Blainville, Rosemère and Lorraine form a homogenous municipal group, united by 293 years of history, of religious and community life.

When reference is made to Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville, people immediately have in mind the area occupied by the above mentioned towns. When one hears Sainte-Thérèse, one thinks immediately of Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville.

And if you say: And if someone says Blainville, we know he means Sainte-Thérèse. We include Sainte-Thérèse-Ouest, that is the town of Boisbriand, established in honour of the founder and his daughter. As far as education is concerned, we have the regional board of Blainville-Deux-Montagnes. The name Blainville applies directly to one area and Deux-Montagnes the nearly region. All the territory of greater Sainte-Thérèse including Rosemère, Lorraine and Bois-des-Fillion is serviced by the postal office of Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville. For all this territory, the land register of the village and parish of Sainte-Thérèse-de-Blainville is being used and it cannot be otherwise. Mr. Speaker, all this underlines the importance of the name of Blainville in our area and in that which is being considered for this new riding. Now I would like to quote some statistics in order to stress the size of the population of both areas, namely Blainville and Deux-Montagnes.

The Blainville district covers a territory of 48 square miles and the Deux-Montagnes district covers a territory of 50 square miles, which make them almost similar. The Blainville district consists of five municipalities: Boisbriand, Lorraine, Blainville, Sainte-Thérèse and Rosemère; the Deux-Montagnes district has five municipalities: Saint-Eustache, Deux-Montagnes, Sainte-Marthe-sur-le-lac, Saint-Joseph-du-Lac and Pointe-Calumet.

If we examine the population of these two groups of municipalities in 1961, the Blainville district had a population of 25,087 while the Deux-Montagnes district had a population of 19,995. In 1971, if one examines again the statistics, one realizes that the population of the Blainville district was 43,938, that is 80 per cent more, while Deux-Montagnes has a population of 32,858 representing a 65 per cent increase.

We can see that the population of the Blainville district is slightly more important in 1971 than that of the Deux-Montagnes. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that after the 1981 census, and given the same increase that the one which has taken place between 1961 and 1971, this progression will be even a greater, due to the fact that the Mirabel project announced in 1971 is already having a considerable impact on the development of this region.

After 1981, it will be necessary to divide this new constituency in two, as a result of the population increase, and then it will be possible to name one of those constituencies Blainville and the other Deux-Montagnes. If this change were made now, as I suggested, we would settle the problem and kill two birds with one stone.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out a well-established practice recognized by this House and all political parties, namely that each time a change of name of a constituency is requested by an hon. member through a private bill, the change is accepted. If the Commission agreed to the proposed change, it would eliminate the need to introduce a private bill, which would save time for this House and money for the Canadian taxpayers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am merely asking the Commission to change the name of the constituency of Deux-Montagnes to that of Blainville-Deux-Montagnes.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to make a few remarks as so many of my colleagues on a matter which interests all hon. members and their constituents. I would like of course to congratulate all hon. members who have taken the floor, which clearly demonstrate their concern for their constituents, who give us their opinions on the electoral changes which are made at various times.

I would like to say right now, as many of my colleagues, that the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission is for from easy. I would also like to congratulate the Commission for the work they have done and especially for the concern they showed at meetings, or about the comments made at public hearings.

Of course, as far as my riding is concerned, the first proposal made, I think a year and a half or two years ago, was rejected. It would have provided 74 ridings in Québec and now the Commission is submitting a second proposal which will give 75 ridings to Québec. Being from that province, I am very glad to see that we will have an additional riding; as would be the case for any other member who would see the representation of his province increased.

So, I appreciate much more the new proposal, because in the first case my riding would have been dealt in a way that would have brought comments not only from my constituents but also from the municipal authorities. So the original proposal had to be modified and, after the hearing, the Commission took into account the recommendations which had been made. I can share the concern expressed earlier by my colleague from Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois) who submitted a brief at that same hearing. It was largely been taken into account. As for most of my colleagues on the northern side, I would not say they are entirely satisfied but almost so. As far as I am concerned, I am very pleased by this very interesting improvement. Therefore, in these circumstances, I would like to thank the chairman and the members of this commission who have understook the importance and the seriousness of the recommendations made by various people.

When population figures are being considered, I would like to invite the Commission to take into account as much as possible, and I know it is not always easy, the social and economic factors when changes are to be made.

I know it is difficult to coordinate all those aspects. But it is always the same issue that keeps coming back as there are changes really difficult to accept. Tonight we heard some comments which are definitively justified. But to what extent should we, as members of this House, examine this future possibility? And if some changes are to be made according to the proposals before this House, I suppose that the Commission will be tempted to listen to the comments made tonight and to recognize the difference between an urban and a rural area. I am one of those who believe it is unthinkable to give the same figures for a rural and a urban riding. Considering all the differences, the demands are different and the number of services is also different. Therefore I think it would be unthinkable to believe, if we want to be fair to the people that the member of an urban riding should have the same number of constituents than the member of a rural riding.

I do not wish to extend this evening further as I know that my colleagues of other provinces are interested in discussing and making their comments and they will certainly be very wise comments. However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention, as others did, and I think it is perfectly logical, this change that unfortunately made me lose very good parishes. I should like to say that when we have worked in parishes for years we know them better and we know better their problems and the people who live there. I am very sad that because of these changes I will lose very interesting parishes that I did know very well and with which I always cooperated in a large extent. Also, I must say that I am very pleased and I welcome the new parishes that will be added to my riding and that I shall try to represent as well as possible. Finally, can the Commission readjust the boundaries to seriously account for the relationship between parishes that are even more easily related to the constituency of Joliette? But even if those parishes are in the neighbouring constituency of Berthier, I will still have the privilege of living near them. It is not always easy, of course—

Mr. Prud'homme: You cannot represent both constituencies.

Mr. La Salle: I am not saying that, Mr. Speaker the hon. member for Saint-Denis reminds me I will not represent both ridings. I am aware of that. But I am happy to see that the parishes will still be close to Joliette, which will allow me to meet some good friends among the thousands of constituents the majority of whom have put their trust in me. I regret of course to see those parishes go. Must we submit to the findings of the Commission inasmuch as it did prepare good recommendations? I hope nonetheless that, considering the comments heard this evening, the Commission or subsequent ones making potential changes will take into account valid remarks, and I am convinced that everyone who participated in tonight's debate had in mind the well-being of their fellow-Canadians.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in view of the unanimous applause versus the point I am going to make, I hope we are going to remain as unanimous as we are this evening.

Because it is so very late, Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be extremely brief in presenting my case.

From the very start, the commissioners have been congratulated, and that is all very well. Still, I would like to stress the fact that I should have appreciated, even at this late hour, their presence in the galleries. I hope they were there during the day and heard the wishes expressed by the hon. members who made comments concerning the ridings they represent here in this House.

I should have hoped that the commissioners would have been here in the galleries; we know they cannot attend the sittings of the House, but they should at least have had the decency of sitting in the galleries to find out what is now going on. If that is an exercise in democracy, I agree whole-heartedly, but I really would have liked the commissioners to hear the debate on the electoral ridings.

The first point that I wanted to make concerns the report filed and read during the public hearings of September 4 last, that is the report submitted by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Laval concerning the new electoral boundaries.

The City of Laval is the second largest city in Quebec where population is concerned. The City of Laval is now asked to share its development, which has bad no equal in Canada in the last few years.

I believe that we should take for granted the fact that the population is as shown by the 1971 Census. In view of the development of Laval during the last five years, I hope that this considerable population increase will also be taken into consideration. A report was filed on September 4 last at the Court House by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Laval, and I also made representations on behalf of the City of Laval stating that the city represents a unit in itself as concerns economic and sociological problems, as well as political considerations perhaps, as the hon. member said earlier, but this I can easily brush aside. In my opinion, since we are a steadily growing city, we do not want—and I am now expressing the views of the mayor of the City of Laval, Dr. Lucien Paiement—to become some day a mere suburb of the Montreal urban community.

Mr. Speaker, you can be assured that I shall be the first to support the mayor of Laval by saying that we do not want to be incorporated in the Montreal urban community. I would like to submit again the brief tabled on September 4 last concerning the problems that this could cause eventually, and to once again submit my arguments, especially to prove that in view of the present development, the island of Laval should have three seats in the House of Commons and not two seats and a half; that is to say that one seat is now shared with the Ahuntsic riding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that if no change is eventually to be made, we shall welcome all the able and willing voters of the Ahuntsic riding to fall in with the City of Laval because our ambitions are known.

The potential as far as urbanization is concerned is there, but we must not forget that the reason why I am trying for the last time to sensitize the commissioners about the limits of the constituency in which the city of Laval is situated, is the report submitted on September 4 last. I hope that we will learn why the report submitted at the public hearing held on September 4 last by the Laval Chamber of Commerce was not accepted.

If I have risen this evening, Mr. Speaker, it is to try for the last time, on behalf of my constituents of the city of Laval, to explain that we should have three seats in the House of Commons. But once again, if the Commission wishes to divide part of the city of Montreal, namely the constituency of Ahuntsic, we will welcome it but we do not intend, as far as I am concerned, to become part of the metropolitan area of Montreal.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the members of the Commission who to some extent took into account the recommendations I had made during the hearing which took place in Montreal on September 4th, 1975. It is my duty tonight to take part in this debate in order to express my point of view to the members of the Commission which will have to make up the new federal electoral boundaries for Quebec.

I will limit my remarks to five ridings situated in the heart of the Eastern Townships, I mean the ridings of Sherbrooke, Richmond, Shefford, Saint-Hyacinthe and Drummond. I know very well that it is very difficult to bring many changes to the boundaries of the other ridings of the Eastern Townships which are already limited by the American border, as in the case of the ridings of Missisquoi and Compton.

I know very well, Mr. Speaker, the gwographic location of the five ridings as I mentioned as I know very well the impact of the variations in the electoral population of any of these ridings because, as a representative for one of these ridings, I have served in this majestic place many more years than any other of my colleagues who represent the four other ridings, and I mean my colleagues from Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), from Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), from Drummond (Mr. Pinard), and from Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner).

While studying very closely the population problem and while taking into account the geography of each of the ridings, I noticed first, M. Speaker, that the Richmond riding had 27,429 voters less on the 1974 voting lists than the Sherbrooke riding. Although these two ridings are close to each other, they are kind of competing with each other.

If I add the number of voters on the voting lists of Richmond in 1974 and on those of Sherbrooke the same year, I get the total of 104,581 voters and when I divide this figure by 2, I get a theoretical average of 52,290 electors by riding. This means 322 voters less in each riding and it also means that the average of 52,612 voters we get when we add the number of electors in each of the five ridings of the area is divided by five to get a theoretical average.

This means that, to get a better balance of the voting population in each of the five ridings and this is where the work of the Commission is very important, we should first study the possibilities which could allow us to get a better balance right from the start.

I refer to populations of voters in ridings next to mine, Richmond and Sherbrooke, the two ridings in the area which already had the greatest gap between them in 1974, before this tremendous difference in the number of electors, was maintained in 1976 in the new redistribution proposed by the commission.

According to the proposal before us, the riding of Sherbrooke would have a population of at least 84,595 electors, while Richmond riding would have 65,983, which would maintain a gap of more than 20,000 within two years or at the next federal general election, due to a possible greater increase in the urban riding of Sherbrooke in comparison with the slower growth of Richmond riding during the same period.

On the electoral lists of 1974 for the riding of Sherbrooke, 66,005 voters were registered.

There were 56,801 registered voters on the 1974 electoral lists for the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe, 51,856 for the riding of Shefford, 49,826 for the riding of Drummond, and 38,576 for the riding of Richmond, for a total of 263,064 voters registered on the 1974 electoral lists for those five ridings, or an average of 52,612 voters by riding.

The riding of Sherbrooke had thus 13,383 more voters appearing on its 1974 electoral lists than the average for the ridings in the area. And the riding of Sherbrooke also had 27,429 more voters on its 1974 electoral lists than the riding of Richmond. While the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe had 4,189 more voters than the average for the four other ridings, it had nevertheless 9,199 fewer voters on its lists than the riding of Sherbrooke.

However, of the five constituencies mentioned, it seems that the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe is the one that would undergo under the proposal before us the most important geographical changes compared to 1974. For the proposal before us would remove from the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe the town of Marieville and amalgamate it with Chambly, while the towns of Saint-Hilaire and Otterburn Park as well as the parishes of Saint-Charles and Saint-Denis-sur-le-Richelieu, and the parishes of Saint-Bernard and Saint-Jude would become part of the new constituency of Verchères.

Since the commission seems to have to do a rather important shift in the population of the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe of 1974 to create the new constituency of Verchères, my proposal will take this fact into account and recommend that these changes benefit the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe in order to correct at the same time the excessively large difference in population between the constituencies of Sherbrooke and Richmond, as I mentioned at the outset of my remarks, and finally to strike a better balance between the five constituencies concerned, without for all that making too many changes in several constituencies.

Following the numerous changes proposed in the 1974 geographical map of the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe, I very humbly ask the members of the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec to kindly consider the following proposal: Drummond would not undergo any change as proposed by the commission and would have, according to the 1971 census, a population of 69,109.

Saint-Hyacinthe would remain as proposed by the commission, excluding however the population of Acton Vale, Saint-André-d'Acton and Sainte-Christine-de-Bagot; these localities would remain in Shefford as they have always been, which would give the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe, according to the 1971 census, a population of 68,932.

Richmond, such as proposed by the commission, would get the populations of Rock Forest and of Deauville who belonged to the riding of Sherbrooke in 1974 and are now on the present boundaries of the riding of Richmond. According to the 1971 census, this would amount to a population of 71,842 for the riding of Richmond. According to the suggestion of the commission, after the municipalities of Rock Forest and Deauville are transferred to Richmond, Sherbrooke would have a population of 84,595 according to the last census.

Shefford would remain as in 1974; according to the 1971 census, it had a population of 79,083. I would greatly appreciate that the municipality of Bromont which, according to the last census, had a population of 666 in 1971 and which became one of the main tourist resorts in North America, would remain as before in the riding of Shefford because it is 6 miles away from Granby, which is presently the most progressive industrial town on the south shore.

However it is reluctantly that I would accept decision of the commission which, according to the proposal under debate, wants the electors of Bromont to be transferred to the riding of Brome-Missisquoi, because I would not like the commission to think I am against every change it has proposed for the riding of Shefford.

I should now like, Mr. Speaker, to comment on the changes or possible increases in the population of those five ridings, which will be felt at the next federal election and might substantially change the statistics relating to the population as compared to the last census. I would therefore like to proceed riding after riding and analyze those possible shifts in the population, based on the figures of the last census and on the proposal I made earlier, which I would ask the members of the commission to examine and accept. As I suggested, the last census of 1971 gave the riding of Sherbrooke 84,595 people. However, given the increase in Sherbrooke's population since 1971, that riding will still be the one among the five which will have the greatest population. I think it should have at least 100,000 inhabitants at the next federal election.

According to my forecast and the latest 1971 census, the Shefford riding will have about 79,000 people and I contend it will rank second out of the five with a population of 85,000 when the next federal election comes up.

Also according to my forecast and the latest census, the Richmond riding will come third, if not second, with 80,000 or perhaps 85,000 population, due to the substantial increase in the number of Black Forest residents which will be felt on the next federal electoral rolls, since there are at present over 1500 family dwellings being built for the year 1976 only. The same increase is expected for the two following years, which means the Richmond riding will have a better population balance compared with the other ridings concerned, and it would also help reduce the present population discrepancy between Richmond and its closest neighbour Sherbrooke, as I pointed out in my remarks tonight. According to my forecast and the latest census, the 68,932 population of Saint-Hyacinthe will increase substantially by the next federal elections, particularly in view of the development of the towns of Douville and Sainte-Rosalie which are situated on the outskirts of Saint-Hyacinthe, which means Saint-Hyacinthe will have at least 78,000 people by the time of the next federal election.

Under the proposal of the commission to which I do not suggest any change, I believe that Drummond will be the last of the five ridings with a population of about 75,000. In summary, according to the last census and my own estimation, Sherbrooke which now has 84,595 residents would be home to at leats 100,000 people at the next federal election. The population of the riding of Shefford, now 78,379, would be 85,000; the population of the riding of Richmond, now 71,842, would go up from 80,000 to 85,000 or may be more; the population of Saint-Hyacinthe, now 68,932, would be 78,000 and that of Drummond, now 68,109, could reach 75,000.

Mr. Speaker, those are logical comments. They are mainly statistics, taking into account better representation for all constituencies in the area and also taking into account the five ridings which would not have any important change but would have a better balanced population, than they did in the federal election of 1974. Then we had the riding of Sherbrooke, and the riding of Richmond, with a difference of 25,000 constituents. Simply by making the minor changes I suggested tonight, we could have five ridings in the Eastern Township without altering the boundaries proposed by the commission for a better redistribution within the boundaries of those five ridings.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very short because it is already very late. I should like simply to meditate publicly and to have the members of this House pondering with me over the problems which the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission for the province of Quebec must have met, as also must have the Electoral boundaries Readjustment Commissions for the other provinces. I shall address myself more specifically to the one I know best, the one for the province of Quebec. And I think that, for the sake of objectivity, we must congratulate the commissioners for carrying out their very difficult task with such gusto. I mean, Mr. Speaker, that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission for the province of Quebec, as undoubtedly the commissions for the other provinces, had a very hard job to do and had been given specific terms of reference by the House of Commons. The commissioners could not in any way take into account, for instance, population projections for the future. They had to base their decisions exclusively on the 1971 census. It is on the other hand what caused the problems. I am inclined to believe, after having listened carefully to representations which have been put forward since yesterday, that many members in the House were a little mislead when they asked the judges to follow criteria not allowed by the act, that is taking into consideration developments to come relating to the distribution they had performed. For example, I recall the statement made earlier by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) when he said: there are five ridings in my area, so why not have an equal number of constituents in those ridings? But the terms of reference of the commission is clear, or at least it seems clear to me.

For the commission must take into consideration geography and also entities it has to analyze. For instance, when it is said that Sherbrooke should be like the riding of Richmond, I say it is unfair to compare those two ridings like that.

As everyone knows, Sherbrooke is an urban riding, while Richmond is a rural riding. I suggest it is in agreement with the spirit of the law passed by the House to ask the commissioners to keep in mind in their discussions that a rural riding must have fewer people than an urban riding. That is provided for and they took that into account. They have submitted a report in that respect, which I find reasonable.

I must say that these are only examples. I could give many more; for instance when it is said that Rock Forest in the province of Quebec should not be part of the riding of Shefford but of another riding.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that the Eastern Townships throughway, for instance, is the backbone of the Shefford riding and when using it it hardly takes twenty minutes to go from one end of the city to the other. Surely this explains that the commissioners have been able to keep Rock Forest in the Shefford riding.

I only refer to a few small examples in order to point out how difficult it is to get satisfaction. If we want to be parochial or personal about it, I would be compelled to say I am really sorry to see my riding completely dismantled and that in my short political career of 12 years, it is the third time that my riding is completely changed. Of course, this will oblige me to establish all the new necessary political relationships.

The Electoral Commission is not here to please honourable members but—and it may be a bit idealistic to speak in this way—to discharge a mandate intented to better distribute the number of seats each province must have and to take specific criteria under consideration.

I think that in Montreal, for instance, the Electoral Commission has heard representations during appeals that were held in September and it took them into account especially as regards downtown and lower town in the city of Montreal. The Commission realized that it was reasonable to have ridings with north to south rather than east to west relationship. They realized that problems created at that time were almost impossible to overcome by any one member alone. I think the Commission was very wise in recognizing that situation and agreeing to the request made to them in Montreal when they held hearings in the Court of Montreal last September.

Mr. Speaker, I would like my riding to remain unchanged as well, but it is impossible. I regret as other honourable members do, I am sure, the parts of the constituency I represent that I should normally lose should I run in the next general election and that will go to another riding.

Mr. Speaker, the commission had a duty to fulfil, and I shall conclude my remarks with what I have said earlier, that the commission had clear and specific terms of reference. They are not responsible for the error made by lawmakers in not allowing them to take into account future developments in population transfers.

This could have allowed the commission to give three constituencies to Laval Island. This would have been an excellent suggestion. But the commission remained within their terms of reference. I therefore suggest that we, as lawmakers, or our successors think of the terms of reference we will have to issue to future redistribution commissions, in order that commissioners in various provinces may base their judgments and redistributions within each province on population moves that may happen between the time of their analyses and the next election.

Mr. Speaker, such is not the case today. Therefore, I feel the commissioners would be well advised and fully justified to come down with an electoral map quite similar to the one we have been discussing today, even though each one of us may feel sad about it.

[Mr. Prud'homme.]

I know my remarks are not that popular. But such is the way a member must speak in this House, even at this late hour.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say in conclusion, that I hope, as I said at the beginning and all through my comments, that in the future, Parliament, or the legislators will be very careful when a redistribution of the electoral districts will again be required and that they will make sure that the terms of reference which are given to the commissioners reflect the objectives of the House of Commons; meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, I think the commissioners must be commended for the efforts they have made and those who believe that the urban ridings have more people than the rural ridings have the right to think so. I represent an urban riding myself and I would like to see as everybody else does, an equal number of people all across the province but we have to recognize the vastness of the territory covered by some rural constituencies with all the problems this implies. It is, therefore, only normal that the urban ridings of metropolitan centres such as Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver should have more people than rural ridings. The commissioners have taken this fact into consideration as the law allows them to do so, since they were allowed margin of 25 per cent above or under their quotients.

In most electoral districts which I have examined across Canada, the redistribution they propose seems very wise. All they have to do now is to be good enough to read carefully the speeches delivered by the members of each province, and see if it would not be possible, not so much as to please the members of Parliament because I think this would be a little too personal as I said at the beginning of my remarks, and I would be myself inclined to make vigorous representations so that my native parish stays within the riding that I represent.

Admittedly, these are very personal remarks and even if I do hope for it, it should not be discussed in the House. What the commission must keep in mind is to consider again, in the light of all these representations whether they are all acceptable while keeping in mind the terms of reference of the Commission which requires that it must take into account only the population figure as obtained on the day, the census was made.

The error is not theirs but Parliament's in that it keeps the gap between rural and urban ridings. Let me give you as an example the riding of Richmond versus that of Sherbrooke; it is normal for the riding of Sherbrooke to have more population than that of Richmond. That is acceptable, and can be justified with the people, because it is logical.

Mr. Speaker, I close in thanking you for your patience. I feel the commission gave us a reasonable report and, reasonable as we know its members are, they will surely consider as much as possible the representations that are being made in this House; if they can, they will present us with a map that corresponds somewhat to those wishes, but they will change nothing for the fun of changing or of pleasing, and only as a result of representations that are not personal but concerned instead with the welfare and well-being of the people we represent.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It appears that there is no more debate on the objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec. The House having heard these objections, it is my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, together with copies of objections, and also a copy of the Debates of the House of Commons back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

The House will now resume consideration of the objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in what I call the Macbeth debate. Macbeth, as we know from reading the great play, murdered sleep.

Before I finish my remarks regarding Nova Scotia, and I will finish them very, very quickly, if I could be allowed to be out of order for about a minute—and I would not have been if I had taken part in the debate which preceded with regard to either Ontario or Quebec—I should like to say that I think the hon. members from northern Ontario really made a case to have that extra seat back. The hon. members from northern Quebec made a pretty good case as well. When there are wide open areas, there should be more generosity with regard to the number of voting bodies which have to be found in them.

When I was speaking previously in this particular debate, I said that the MacDonald electoral commission in Nova Scotia had done what I considered to be a good job, but I added, perhaps from an excess of verbosity, that I thought it had blundered in one area, and that is the area of western Nova Scotia. Actually, it was the Samuel de Champlain area before he moved on to lesser green pastures in La Belle Province, but Samuel de Champlain and his group originally settled on the shores of the Annapolis basin. It is on those shores that the only real dispute exists with regard to the Nova Scotia ridings today. It is a touchy situation, and probably is not helped very much by the remarks of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) in this House earlier today, or by his remarks on a previous occasion. However, I do not intend to get into that sort of situation. What I really want to do, in backing up the argument of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) that the electoral commission take another look at its work, is to suggest a place where there might be a remedy.

One thing which has impressed me about the debate so far has been that the members have been trying to help the electoral commission solve the problems, that is, that there were not just complaints, but there were the best suggestions hon. members could come up with as to how the commission might proceed to redesign boundaries. It is in that spirit that I take part in this debate.

I used the word "blunder" with regard to the divisions in western Nova Scotia; nobody asked me to, but I should like to withdraw that word. I think I was excessively verbose when I used it. Perhaps I was carried away by my own speech, and I did an injustice to people who have worked very hard and who have tried to make sense out of the decision which always takes place when seats have to be divided up in any province. Everyone in the House at least should be thankful that the commissioners have been given the job and that members of parliament no longer have to fall upon each other like cannibals, as happened in the old days when members of parliament themselves carried out redistribution rather than an independent commission.

When I was concluding my remarks the other day I suggested that if the commission were to look around for areas which could fit into different ridings, it should start at the hub of Nova Scotia, the Mount Uniacke area. I believe it is now the fastest growing area in Nova Scotia. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) may quarrel with that, but I believe Mount Uniacke is growing faster than Shubenacadie and Bedford, Shubenacadie being in my present constituency and Bedford being in the constituency of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. He may have a faster growing area in Cole Harbour. In any event, it seems to me that if the commission were to listen to our plea, it might very well take a look at the Mount Uniacke area as something which could either fit into the valley riding—that is assuming that the valley was to lose its East Hants portion—or it could still retain the Mount Uniacke portion which would represent a fair population.

Mount Uniacke could also fit into the western Halifax seat, so if the commission is going to make changes, that is an area where a very viable area can be placed into either one of two particular ridings. As far as the valley riding losing the East Hants portion or the rest of the East Hants portion of Mount Uniacke is concerned, East Hants is more Truro orientated or more Windsor orientated, so it could go in with a riding which has either one of those towns within it. It would be more especially Truro orientated if the Shubenacadie river crossing, for which I have argued all the time I have represented East Hants in this House, were ever to be built. It seems to have fallen the victim of restraint in Nova Scotia these days, and I will be saying something about that in another debate in a few days time. However, I point out that East Hants can go either way, into a valley riding or into a Truro riding. This also gives a little bit of flexibility.

It has been my privilege in this parliament to have represented 130,000 or more people, the largest number in Atlantic Canada, with the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East hot on my trail a few hundred behind. The reason is that between the two of us we represent the growth areas of Nova Scotia, and areas that are going to continue to grow. The commission might bear this in mind. The census upon which this boundary division is taking place will be tens of thousands below what is going to exist in both of those suburban areas of Halifax and Dartmouth in even a few years time. They might very well take this into consideration if they should decide to readjust the seats.

My closing remark in this debate is that the 130,000 that I represent and the 130,000 that my friend, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), represents, is about 50 per cent more than any other member of this House from the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate to lend support to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I share in the observations he made earlier in this debate as well as those made by my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), with respect to certain directions the commission should take if it reconsiders the report which it has presented to us. As the hon. member for Annapolis Valley and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants have indicated, they put in a lot of effort and gave a lot of thoughtful concern to this. I share in those views and support them.

I support the hon. member for Annapolis Valley because I was born in the Annapolis Valley. It is my home. I was born on the shores of the Annapolis basin. It was truly part, albeit one end, of the Annapolis Valley. I grew up there. I was ousted by the establishment of Cornwallis, the basically Canadian but actually Commonwealth naval training establishment during World War II.

After being ousted from that part of the country because of the full development of the naval training establishment, I went to Middleton, the home town of my grandparents. It was there I went to school and spent my formative years. Therefore, I do have some association with the Annapolis Valley. Indeed it is historic in terms of my father, grandfather, and his parents before him, although there is a little Irish mixed in there somewhere.

The Annapolis Valley has a connotation to Canadians. It has an international reputation. There is a fondness for those of us who from time to time concern ourselves with Canadian history. In the sense of English establishments, it is the oldest part of Canada.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants spoke about the contributions and the first development of that area by Samuel de Champlain. However, in terms of the history of the area, we speak about 100 years later than that. Whether it began in the early 1600's or the latter part of that century is not important. What is important is that the land of Évangéline, the Annapolis Valley, connotes something to everyone you talk to, be it in Canada, some other part of North America, South America, Europe, or some other part of the world. It is important historically.

It is incumbent upon us in this era when we so quickly and callously dispose of our symbols that we pause for a minute or two. I commend to the MacDonald commission this very brief sentiment. Perhaps we should once in a while take time to regret this continuous erosion of what may be intangible but nevertheless is very real when trying to find out from whence we came.

I find it very comforting in the city of my colleague and my city, although I have been across the harbour for most of my life, to walk down Spring Garden Road. I stop to look at the old courthouse. When I walk 100 feet to my right I pass the cathedra. This represents something to me.

When I walk another 50 feet and look to my right, I see the residence of the lieutenant governor of Nova Scotia. These are three important referral points.

When I am confused about where we have been and where we are headed, I find it very comforting to look at the law and the interpretation of it, that which guides and protects us. It interprets our work as legislators. That is comforting.

I find it comforting to look at the church. It is part of our heritage. It is comforting to look at the lieutenant government governor's residence. That is as much a part of my heritage as the Annapolis Valley. Hon. members may find it strange that I talk so much about the Annapolis Valley when my constituency is basically in Halifax county. I do so because it is important.

It is important to remember that the number of people we represent is not important. What is important is that we represent communities of interest. It matters not to me whether I represent 125,000, 130,000, 180,000 or 200,000. If that community of interest is common, my job is relatively simple. I could have one more person in my office at $10,000 or $15,000 a year. It would have the Chamber and the taxpayers of Canada between $150,000 and $200,000 a year.

Numbers are not important. What people require is their day in court. Whether they are right or wrong, they require representation. They need to know that when their member of parliament stands up in this place, most of the time he is representing their point of view. I point that out to Commissioner MacDonald and his fellow commissioners. All these considerations are important.

The number of members in this Chamber should not be increased but we should improve the quality of representation. God knows, my opponent will turn that comment against me and say, "Throw him out, I can do a better job." I am prepared to stand aside, so long as we do not lose sight of that principle which is important.

You see, Mr. Speaker, little girls in Dartmouth-Halifax East do not run around with little boys in Central Nova, because a mountain, woods, wilderness, and an entire way of life separate them. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) represents his constituents graciously and well. He has already taken over, in my area, all that part from Ecum Secum to Mooseland. The culture there is different, their economic background is different, but he has represented them well. Under the commission's proposal he is to take even more of my constituency. I know he will represent his new constituents well. I do not object to that.

Basically my objection is this: the area should not be broken up. The people of the area which it has been my honour to represent in this House for the last several years have always shared a common cultural, economic, and historical background. I plead, as the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) pleaded: do not break up this constituency. Do not separate it. The hon. member's remarks apply not only to the Annapolis Valley. They apply to my constituency too. It will be important for my grandchildren to know, God willing that I ever have any, and for the people in the rest of the country to know, even in 1,000 years that, yes, in Nova Scotia there is the Annapolis Valley. It has not been broken up, not torn asunder.

God bless the hon. member for South Western Nova (Miss Campbell) who, under Mr. Justice MacDonald's proposal, will extend her sphere of influence and good service up into the area about which I am concerned. I am sure she will represent those people ably. Mr. Commissioner MacDonald and his fellow commissioners are not imposing on her an unacceptable task. It is not a task with which she cannot deal.

Miss Campbell: Thank you.

Mr. Forrestall: The hon. member may speak, if she wants to. But the commission is asking her to represent people whose culture, history, and way of life are different.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants suggested a method for correcting numerical disparities in order to ease the strain, as it were, on our constituencies. Using the figures of six or seven years ago to establish an average today is utterly ridiculous, as our constituencies have now grown to the size of the original constituency before it was divided. I think that my constituency population is back to over the 100,000 figure, and I am sure that my colleague's constituency population is also well over the 100,000 mark. Perhaps I am wrong. Perhaps it contains slightly over 80,000 people. I do not think he objects to representing a fair number of Canadians. Indeed, I would welcome representing half a million Nova Scotians. Numbers are not important. More important are community of interest and a common heritage of history and culture.

I hope that Mr. Justice MacDonald and the commissioners will take note of our intervention. I say this to Commissioner MacDonald, who I hope will read these pages of Hansard: these questions are all important. I trust he will listen to me, to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. We say that numbers alone are not important. What is important is that people have their day in court, that people with common cultural and historical roots remain together in a constituency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The House having considered these objections, it is my duty pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to refer the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia, together with copies of the objections, and also a copy of the Debates of the House of Commons, back to the commission, for reconsideration thereof.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING ALBERTA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as reported at page 12477 of Hansard, I made some general remarks about the principles which should guide redistribution commissions, and particularly the considerations which ought to apply to the most important people involved in all this, the people who are to be represented. All too often, as I said yesterday, they are so many ciphers, so many head of cattle enclosed within the fence, within the confines of the corral. I suggest that is totally wrong. Those who insist on playing the numbers game, who insist on one man, one vote, are also wrong. A good rule of thumb is this: there should be six urban to four rural votes, within the tolerances as laid down by the act.

I addressed the redistribution commission in the Edmonton public hearing and want to put on record most of what I said on that occasion because, in my humble estimation, it bears repeating and should be part of the record.

Bearing in mind that the present redistribution is to have effect for the next decade at least, and in actual fact will have an undoubted influence on the future shape of the Edmonton area constituencies, it is imperative that notwithstanding the population figures of the 1971 census, most active consideration be given to the trends which affected those figures—sterile in themselves—and what future development of the Edmonton area is to be.

June 1, 1971, population figures are being applied, quite erroneously by the commission, to 1975 corporate boundaries. I think this is wrong. They are not the best base on which to establish constituency boundaries. The suggested boundaries, as were those effected in the changes made in 1966-67, are based on sterile figures and are not in conformity with actual or readily foreseeable developments over the next decade.

I know that potential development was discussed and eliminated as a factor by this House, I think in a moment of abject aberration. Still I think that the position taken by the commission with regard to the city boundaries of Edmonton and Calgary as confines for the city constituencies is totally wrong. One can already see that those two boundaries, will be changed. As a matter of fact, discussions are going on now involving the adjoining municipalities, the city of Edmonton, and the provincial government, with regard to changing those boundaries. Therefore if by reason of this exercise the constituency boundaries are limited to the city boundaries and the changes being discussed are made, all this work will go down the drain. I shall make some suggestions which would take care of that situation. In any case there should not be a repetition of the fundamental errors in judgment and assessment by the Electoral Boundaries Commission in 1966-67 as far as the Edmonton metropolitan area is concerned.

While the legislation governing electoral boundary realignment does place an emphasis on population as the basis for contituency composition, it must be clear that the 25 per cent tolerance either way from the average population quotient was intended to be fully meaningful, as were the references in the legislation to other factors to be taken into account, for example, georgraphical division, community of interest, historical tradition and, last but not least, consideration of the citizenry as persons vitally interested in and identified with, and by, their political representative and not merely as so many ciphers to be moved about by an authority merely on the grounds of "population neutral distribution", which in itself has many variables.

Surely the public interest demands more than such a statistical neutrality, a detached neutrality all too evident in the proposals for electoral boundary redistribution as they were contained in the initial or preliminary report of the commission as it dealt with the city of Edmonton and its environs. Strangely enough, and most pertinent at this time, those same recommendations were unchanged as a result of the representations made in the public hearings. Therefore the comments made for the public hearings are as pertinent today as they were then in September of 1975.

The proposals for redistribution in 1973 met with severe objections on a province-wide basis. Such objections, both in general and in particular, applied to the Edmonton city constituencies. They are well known to the commission since two of its members are on the present commission. Outside of a very few minor modifications, the proposals are repeated in 1975 initial report. They are subject to much the same objection in the 1976 report we are now considering.

Our colleagues in the House from all provinces have insisted that reasons must be stated. As far as the city of Edmonton is concerned, Edmonton East is eliminated as a constituency. Why? The report is silent. Areas within city boundaries are carved up and recast most drastically. Again, I ask why? The report is silent.

Edmonton Centre is turned around and made to include districts far to the west and east. The same question is put: why? No reasons are given.

A solid traditional piece of Edmonton West, comprising some 25,000 people, is tacked on to what is now called Edmonton South, with which it has no demographic connection. Again, why? Surely there must be a reason and we are entitled to have it. Preliminary reports must give reasons for change. Nevertheless, very few were given in the preliminary report, and I suggest that the present report does not include many more. Certainly none of the questions I have asked—and they are pertinent questions—have been dealt with satisfactorily. Since I was the principal protagonist for statutory change in this field, I respectfully suggest to the commission that the reasons given are not sufficient to support the changes proposed.

The reason advanced in connection with the fixing of constituency boundaries within the limits of the city of Edmonton is at best an arguable case, and there is the same thread running through the 1973 report and the 1975 report. I notice it too in the reports of some of the other commissions. I should like to know the inspiration of the idea that a city constituency must not go beyond the city boundary.

I will say at the outset with regard to this argument that the net result of the Commission's proposals has been totally the reverse. Its intention presumably was that the city should not dominate the adjoining rural area. But the commissioners have only translated it over one degree because in and around the city of Edmonton what the commission has done has been to set a constituency of Pembina with all Edmonton's dormitory suburbs. The result is that Pembina which should be, if it is to exist, a rural constituency, is dominated entirely by the urban suburbs and the rural subdivisions which pertain to the city of Edmonton.

In many ways, too, the recent changes made to the proposed constituency of Yellowhead place the emphasis on population which is urban-oriented. People who work in Edmonton, shop there, go to school there, exert a tremendous influence on the new constituency of Yellowhead. I will leave my colleagues from other parts of the city to indicate what happens with respect to other communities within the Edmonton metropolitan area and to call attention to factors which completely neutralize the reason advanced by the commission in connection with city constituencies.

I would suggest that since the commission treats Calgary and Edmonton the same way, it forgets that the Calgary city boundaries extend much further afield than those of Edmonton. They are, in effect, city and metro boundaries. Such is not the case in Edmonton which has a much larger metro pupulation just outside its corporate boundaries. Surely it is the metro area which has the greater community interest. Where do the people work, where do they shop, where do they go to school, where do they worship? That is what matters. These people should not be put in the position of the flea on the end of the dog's tail. The Edmonton metro area seats should be recast with this in mind.

I intend to recommend that the Edmonton metro area—and this is a matter of record as described in the so-called Hanson Report—should describe the perimeter boundaries for the Edmonton metro seats and that these should be six in number, two south of the Saskatchewan River and four north of the Saskatchewan River. The commission can readily draw, based on population, the dividing line in the south between what should be Edmonton-Strathcona on the west side and a new constituency which would include Sherwood Park and the Millwoods to the east. They could select whatever name they wished, but again I say I do not care for the mere descriptive terms "north", "south" and so on; there are some strong traditional names which ought to be considered.

On the north side we have Edmonton West. The north boundary of the three seats on the north side should be 137th Avenue, which is a natural division. We have Edmonton West, Edmonton Centre, and Edmonton East. The commissioners propose to abolish Edmonton East. Edmonton East is an old, traditional name, an old, traditional constituency that should not be abolished. Then north of 137th Avenue they could take in the town of St. Albert and the new subdivisions north of 137th Avenue, and go to the east to include Fort Saskatchewan.

There is a rural part included if one goes north to what I call the Mayo correction line, a natural division that existed for Edmonton West going back I do not know how many decades. These rural areas are filled with subdivisions of 10, 20, 30, 40 homes. The people work in the city of Edmonton and live in and around St. Albert or Fort Saskatchewan. Theirs is the interest and this is what should be considered.

Bearing in mind that constituency boundaries should be readily identifiable, that constituency boundaries should be changed where absolutely necessary, that constituency boundaries should take in people who have a community of interest, and all the demographic principles that are based on the parameter of the 25 per cent tolerance on either side, it seems to me that so far as the city of Edmonton is concerned the basic principle of the metropolitan area of Edmonton should be the guiding principle. To that extent I once again commend this idea to the commission so that it does not perpetrate the dislocations that were proposed in 1973 and found to be so repugnant, and which have been continued on this occasion.

I must say I was surprised and disappointed, but I was not nearly so disappointed or angry as a great number of the constituents in my riding who contemplate the changes that are being proposed by the commission. Along with my colleagues in the city of Edmonton I suggest the commission re-examine the situation and repair the damages that are being proposed by the 1973 report rather than perpetuate them. Then I think we will have a far better job done than has been done to date.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by commending the commission for its diligent work in the arduous task of redistribution. In my judgment it has attempted to be fair. It has certainly exhibited a conscientious effort to draw both urban and rural lines that seem to the commission to follow the requirements of the law. But I am concerned that the recommendations that were made at the time of the public hearings, especially those presented to the commission on behalf of several Edmonton constituencies, do not seem to have been taken seriously by the commission.

I am also concerned at the lack of reasons offered by the commission for the final maps that have been published following the public representations. I believe that if we are to do an adequate job of representing our constituencies we need to know the reasons why the commission has deemed it advisable to do such things as the following.

May I draw Your Honour's attention to the revised map which maintains the same split on the west side of the city of Edmonton both north and south of the river that was first advanced and to which we objected as far back as 1973 in the twenty-ninth parliament when this redistribution first came before us? What I am objecting to in particular, and what I am at a loss to understand is how the commission has deemed it advisable to take the southern portion of the present constituency of Edmonton West and put it in a new constituency called Edmonton South. As I look at the map of the new constituency of Edmonton South I note that if constituencies are to have as one of their criteria commonality of interest, the only commonality that I can find with Edmonton South is that it is a rich man's constituency.

I do not believe it is the purpose of democracy and good representation to have one of the five constituencies in greater Edmonton so disproportionately wealthy, with the social and economic status of areas such as Grandview, Westbrook, Laurier, Valleyview, Crestwood, Parkview, and River Bend, which are the richest areas in Edmonton. In this regard I believe the commission has done a disservice.

I sincerely hope that the commission will take the representation I am making very seriously and redraw the map so that the riding of Edmonton West goes down to the river on the south side, as at present, and the ridings on the south side of the river stay on the south side. Incidentally I think the people in the lower part of Edmonton West would be quite surprised to wake up on election morning and find that they will have to vote in a riding called Edmonton South when they do not consider that they live in the southern part of the city.

The riding of Edmonton South has an eastern boundary on the map before us that generally follows the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks to 82nd Avenue, jogs along 82nd Avenue to the west and then down 109th Street to the river. If the first recommendation that I have made, namely, that the riding of Edmonton South should terminate at the river rather than jump across it, is accepted, it follows that additional population will be gathered into it to meet the quotient contingency. Tberefore the eastern boundary ought to be moved further east, and I would strongly urge upon the commission that it consider 91st Street as the boundary on the eastern side. I do that for this additional reason. By running the eastern boundary along 99th Street and eventually into the river it would preserve the basic area of Strathcona rather than splitting it up as has now been done in the revised map I have before me.

I have been following the difficulties, the challenges, and the opportunities of the old Strathcona historical group. Indeed, the renovation of that part of the city has been of considerable interest in the last two or three years. I have tried to be of whatever help I could to that group as well as to the city administration in their attempt to restore the heart as well as the potential of the old Strathcona area.

What I find when I look at this map is that the federal boundary comes down the middle and divides this common area where there is a community of interest. I cannot imagine why this is, with one side of 82nd Avenue to be in the riding of Edmonton South and the other side in the riding of Edmonton Strathcona. If my proposal were followed the eastern boundary would be moved to the east and then the entire area of Strathcona, with this rich and vibrant community of interest, would remain within the one riding.

Needless to say, I am very much of the opinion that the riding I have been describing ought to be called Edmonton-Strathcona. That is the very area of the city which lays claim to the heritage vested upon it by Lord Strathcona, and indeed was the first entrance way to the modern city of Edmonton coming up the North Saskatchewan River. This is where the docks and wharves were first located.

My suggestion would mean or entail a switching in the names of the two contituencies on the south side of the city as shown in the plan we are debating. Specifically I am suggesting there ought to be a transposition of the riding. The southern riding on the west side ought to be called Edmonton-Strathcona, with its eastern boundary moved over to 9lst Street. The southern riding on the east ought to be called Edmonton-South.

I draw to your attention another very important factor which ought to be brought into these remarks. The riding called Edmonton-Strathcona on the map, about which I was speaking a moment ago, being on the eastern side, has a population listed in the report of the commission of 88,419, which includes the 1971 census figure for Millwood. The Millwood community development in 1971 was only getting off the ground with about 1,000 people, but today there are between 18,000 and 20,000 people living in Millwood. That means there will be a population in Edmonton-Strathcona of 105,000. As we can see, that will already exceed the 25 per cent tolerance of the quotient allowed in Alberta, being 77,518. In other words, the map we are considering here in the House is already out of date before being adopted.

By moving the eastern boundary of the riding of Edmonton South further east, as I have indicated, it would give us a population for that riding within the tolerance of the quotient, and also give us a population in the riding of Edmonton-Strathcona within the tolerance allowed.

Those are the points I specifically wish to draw to the attention of the commission along with the representations of my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West. I find myself in total agreement with his intervention. I would ask of the commission where it is in the law that the city boundaries must form the boundaries of the constituencies? This does not in fact exist in law to my knowledge and, moreover, would not make any sense in the case of Edmonton. As I already pointed out, the area would include Sherwood Park and Saint Anne lying off the south boundary of the city, but very much a part of the urban orientation, and ought to be considered as urban communities in the urban constituencies.

If these changes were made I believe the map and the character of the ridings in Edmonton would be much more realistic and would enable members of parliament to serve their constituents better. I plead with the commission to end this silly jumping of the river before it is too late, as it totally distorts both the ridings of Edmonton West and the present riding of Edmonton-Strathcona. The changes I have urged are in the interest of allowing us to serve our constituents better.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind the fact that many individuals wish to speak on the boundary proposals, my remarks will be brief.

I do wish to share with the House a portion of the presentation I made to the boundaries commission when it was in Edmonton. I will quote one page from the presentation I made at that time as follows:

The legislation governing electoral boundary realignment does place an emphasis on population as the basis for constituency composition, yet it must be clear that the 25% tolerance was intended to be fully meaningful. With this in mind, it should be noted that the Pembina constituency could easily reach a population of 120,000 by the time of the next election when these boundaries would be in effect.

This constituency has one of the highest growth rates of any in Alberta.

The population figures of the electoral districts are based on the 1971 decennial census. Since 1971 to the beginning of 1975, the population of the proposed Pembina constituency has increased by approximately 26,150. The population in 1971 was 70,352, based on the figures published by the commission and since that time, to the beginning of 1975, the population has increased in areas such as (1) Sherwood Park by some 11,500, (2) County of Strathcona, excluding Sherwood Park, 4,900 (3) St. Albert, 7,700 (4) Fort Saskatchewan, 1,800 and (5) Westlock, 250. This makes the present population approximately 96,502.

If these figures are projected to the time of the next election, it is conceivable that the population could be at the time in the vicinity of 120,000.

As was pointed out earlier, population does play an important role in regard to the constituency composition but other factors must also be taken into account. Surely the public interest demands more than mere statistical neutrality. Factors such as geographical divisions, community interests, historical tradition and, most importantly, the interests of the individual citizens who are to be served by their member of parliament, and the member of parliament's accessibility to serve them.

[Mr. Roche.]

I should like to commend the commissioners for their handling of this difficult task and for considering certain recommendations I presented at the time of their hearings. They did include in the constituency of Pembina certain parts of the county of Strathcona that have an historical and geographical link with the Pembina constituency.

We, as members, must recognize the difficult task the commission has in redrawing these constituency boundaries. With that in mind I should like to raise several points of concern to me.

There has been a certain amount of criticism levelled with regard to the geographical makeup of Pembina by several of its residents because it is a constituency comprised 50 per cent of urban individuals and 50 per cent of rural individuals. However, I feel strongly that there is not much the matter with a constituency that is comprised of a rural-urban mix, because if an individual comes to this Chamber with simply a narrow view of one segment of our society, he has no place in this Chamber. We must be more open minded. We must be able to recognize the difficulties and problems of the different individuals in our society whether they be of an urban or rural background.

Under the proposals put forward by the commission we in the Pembina constituency will lose a portion of both the rural area of our constituency and the urban area of our constituency. We will lose the area which is the city of Edmonton itself, plus the rural area in the Athabasca region and in the Barrhead region, but we will gain the town of St. Albert.

I welcome this area with open arms into our constituency. I feel that areas such as St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Fort Saskatchewan and Westlock all have similar problems. They are all rapidly growing areas on the outskirts of the city of Edmonton. I feel this will make it much easier for a member of parliament to represent these areas even though there might be a certain amount of conflict between the areas because they are èboth growing and have hopes concerning the recreational and other needs of a growing community.

While I recognize the wisdom of the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) I also recognize that a constituency such as is drawn by the commission for Pembina is a valid constituency, in my eyes. One thing I do not find to be valid, however, is the passage of a bill through this House such as we had a short while ago whereby we increase the representation in this House by 18 members. I was totally against that proposal. I do not believe there is a need for an increase in the representation in this Chamber.

A member should have the capability to serve quite easily a few thousand more constituents. Rather than increase the size of the representation in this House I believe it is essential that a member be given the accommodations necessary if he is to serve those constituents. I think it would be more valuable to invest a little more money for staff members to properly help opposition members than to spend the money on extra representation in the Chamber.

While travelling to Ottawa last Sunday evening I had a chat with an individual employed by the treasury department. This person told me that a great many individuals in that department do not have enough work to satisfy their own need of accomplishment. If individuals in such a department have the feeling that they are not accomplishing something worth-while for the government, why could a few of them not be made accessible to opposition members so that they could perform their duties in a much more meaningful way, while at the same time giving us more effective government?

We have also heard much criticism from various members concerning the work the commissions have done in redrawing these boundaries. Let me remind members that it was this House which gave the commissions the power to do so, and if members do not like what they have done, all the members need do is bring forward specific legislation in this Chamber so that this Chamber dictates the boundaries of the various constituencies.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to lend my support to some of the points the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) made. The one specific recommendation is the name change of the two constituencies on the south side of Edmonton. I feel as strongly as he does that the names should be switched so that the constituency named Edmonton-Strathcona would be called Edmonton South, and vice versa in respect of the constituency of Edmonton South, because there is a great deal of historical tradition based in the constituency on the west side of the south side of Edmonton which necessitates that the name ought to be Edmonton Strathcona.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Good morning, Mr. Speaker. I suppose one should start by complimenting the commission for the very diligent and time-consuming task it has undertaken. I am sure you would agree, Mr. Speaker, after the tremendous amount of work the commissioners have put into the study, and after the many complaints they have received, that one would wonder whether Hamlet could have been written by a commission. I am sure the commissioners must feel frustrated at times while performing their task of trying to resolve what probably is an unresolvable problem. I venture to suggest that if there were a group of commissioners which could come up with perfect boundaries a miracle would be performed.

Having said that I wish to register two general points, and one specific one relating to my constituency. First, I want to underscore the remarks of those who already have adopted the position that it is the wrong direction to take to suggest that the House of Commons should increase in respect of the number of seats every time the population census indicates that Canada has grown in population numbers.

The fact of the matter is that if the number of people represented in this Chamber increases, the other related factor must remain static. I refer to the factor of time. If we get more people in this House, the days do not become more frequent in a year and the hours do not become more numerous in a day. We will still have years of 52 weeks. More people in the House of Commons would simply mean that a member would ask less questions in the question period, would speak less often in the House of Commons, and in fact would represent less frequently the constituents of his riding. I submit the larger the size of the House of Commons, the more government there would be by cabinet.

In effect this would mean, in the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that the larger the House of Commons the more members of parliament would become nobodies. I suggest that ought not to be the trend. Perhaps at the time we are considering bringing home the constitution of this country we should consider establishing a permanent number of members of parliament so that in the years to come we do not end up in the same position of trying to expand the number of members of this House.

I suggest it might be better if we trimmed off 50 or 60 members rather than continually trying to add on. As a member who represents a constituency with a small population I suggest that the issues I consider day after day are just as numerous as those members of parliament who represent constituencies with larger populations. The only difference, I believe, is in the frequency with which we get responses to issues. But certainly everything that every other member has to handle as an issue I also have, even though the population of my constituency is small.

What I suggest then is that because the number of issues is not larger but only the frequency of issues is greater, the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) struck the right chord when he said that members from larger constituencies should be granted a larger staff. I see nothing wrong with representing two hundred thousand people provided the member can still communicate with them adequately.

When we take a look at what has happened in the British House of Commons which presently has 638 members we find there what I am trying to point out, a real lack of participation by many members of parliament. Although there are those who participate actively, there is also a large number of members there who have become totally disinterested in their work for the obvious reason that they do not have sufficient opportunity to participate fully.

The second issue that I would like to raise for the consideration of this House, and perhaps as a recommendation to the commissions, is with regard to the whole area of conflict that has arisen and which will continue to arise in the future between rural and urban representation. When we consider the statement made by the Fathers of Confederation that this country should have representation by population, we must remember that the statement was made over 100 years ago when this country was nearly 90 per cent rural and the population was widely dispersed. The situation has changed of course, and continues to change rapidly.

The demographic projection for Canada for the year 2,000 is that 95 per cent of all Canadians will live in five cities, which would mean that if we continue the trend of only having representation by population, by the year 2,000, 95 per cent of the members in this Chamber will represent urban ridings from five cities. I suggest that that would be a grave mistake and it would not be in the grand interests of Canada and Canadians. I think it would be much more logical to take the view that when the Fathers of Confederation spoke about representation by population conditions were different then, and that in this day and age we must consider the relationship of both those words, "representation" and "population".

A member of parliament cannot properly represent his constituency if he has very little contact with his people. So long as we take the view that rural constituencies can become bigger and bigger, we will only satisfy the aspect of population but we will destroy the more serious question of representation. I think that those two words must not be separated. They must be linked together, and it is folly to think only of population without focusing on whether or not it is possible for a member of parliament to visit his constituents and likewise for his constituents to have access to their member.

Remember the number of issues does not change, only the frequency of issues changes from constituencies with smaller populations to those with larger ones. Let urban members represent large constituencies. They often travel but a few blocks from one end of their riding to the other. If they have a higher rate of responses, they should be provided with larger staffs.

The third issue which I wanted to raise this morning relates to the naming of constituencies. That of course is an issue which relates specifically to the constituency in which I now reside. It has been the tradition in many of the urban centres of this country for the name of the constituency to reflect the name of the city. For example, let us consider Calgary North, Calgary Centre, Edmonton West, Edmonton Strathcona, and so forth. However, in the case of rural constituencies I think it is illogical to pick out the name of one or two centres and use those names when naming the constituency. I put forth this argument with respect to the riding which I now represent.

In my riding there are about five major towns, and when I say major I refer to those with a population of about 9,000. In total, however, I have 76 villages in my riding. In each and every one of those communities there are people with a sense of pride and identity connected very closely with their home towns. Yet in the naming of a constituency the commissioners often pick out one of the centres and claim this to be the new name of the constituency. In many parts of these constituencies ther are people who never see or visit that centre whose name was used for the constituency name. I suggest that the approach should be descriptive of the area, a name based on a geographical description of the area, or based on a genuine historical event.

As a member of parliament from the province of Alberta, in the case of a larger rural riding I would like people across Canada first to identify it as being western, and secondly as being a rural area. I would not want them to identify it with any particular town or community, because I think it is important for every farmer and rancher in that area to feel that the name given to their constituency is one which they can accept, and one with which they can easily identify, and not one which only represents a select group of people who for some reason have been favoured by having their home town chosen to represent the name of the constituency.

In the new proposal the recommendation for the area I represent was that the name of the constituency be Acadia-Camrose. The community of Acadia numbers less than 200 people in the south east corner of my constituency, and Camrose in the opposite diagonal has a population of around 9,000. In that area we would have nearly 100 villages, the transportation and communication lines would, in many instances, be southward toward Calgary, and would not even be close to the larger communities within the constituency.

One of the names which was recommended to the commissioners, and which I think would be an excellent name for this constituency was Paintearth, after Paintearth Creek which runs through the centre of the newly proposed constituency. The word Paintearth is derived from the orge pots in which the Indians used the vermilion mud to make their war paint. This has an historical significance which relates to the area. It is tied to the early history of east central Alberta and it has a ring to it which identifies if with the western prairies and the western plains in their early historical development. Other names could also be suggested such as Hand Hills, which is also located in the south eastern portion of the new constituency.

It is not my duty, nor is it my wish, to come up with a definitive name and to propose it here this evening, except to state this principle to the commissioners—and I hope they will consider it seriously—that in respect of every rural constituency in Canada an effort should be made to go to historical societies and to groups with knowledge of the area, to study the background of these areas and find a broad descriptive name for the individual region.

I do not think we need to impose upon any area the name of one or two towns, unless those towns make up the major shopping centre and market centre for virtually all parts of that constituency. For example, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) lives in a community where that is the case. Red Deer is the major shopping centre for virtually every part of his constituency, but it also has the major river system, the Red Deer River, running right through the middle of his constituency.

In summary, I think it should be an obligation of the commissioners to make a much more thorough study, and perhaps to make a special request to historical societies, museums, and foundations which study the histories of the various regions across Canada, to recommend names of large rural constituencies which describe them as regions according to some geographical landmark, some major historical event or some portion of their history, and which allow the constituents from each and every community within it to identify with the electoral area.

This would allow the member of parliament to explain in his early speeches how his constituency was named, and he would not be making reference to one or two villages, towns or cities which may or may not be related to the whole market area and the business which transpires within that constituency.

Those are my thoughts on this question. I offer the commissioners my best wishes in what I know is a very difficult task, but I hope they will give due consideration to the three points I have expressed here this morning.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, on behalf of my colleagues from the province of Alberta I should like to offer our thanks to the staff, the Clerks, the Hansard reporters, the protective staff, the press and you, Sir, for remaining with us during the course of this debate.

Petitioners appeared at the Electoral Boundaries Commission hearing for the province of Alberta in Red Deer last September 8 asking that they remain in Red Deer constituency instead of being placed outside the then proposed east boundary of the Red Deer River. I wish to commend the members of the commission for acceding to that request, a step in the right direction. This was of utmost importance to those residents because of the lack of bridges on the Red Deer River in their area, which would more or less have isolated them. Had the recommendation to place these people in the constituency east of the Red Deer River not been withdrawn, I would have lost faith in the work of the commission.

However, I am disappointed that favourable consideration was not given to the representation made, primarily by Mrs. John Talsma of Bentley, at that hearing, to include residents of that locality in Red Deer constituency. They are accustomed to doing their business in the city of Red Deer and are familiar with the surrounding community and all the related activities and events. If the north boundary line running east along the northern boundary line of Township 41 could be extended even as far as Gull Lake, the wishes of the Bentley people would be met. This proposal is certainly worthy of further consideration, and I hope the members of the commission will take another look at this legitimate request.

Should the commission feel that this proposed boundary line cannot be extended straight east to join the west boundary of Acadia constituency, surely it could agree to the plea of residents in the Joffre and Blackfalds region on the north side of the Red Deer River in the extreme southeast corner of the proposed Wetaskiwin constituency, who also want to be within Red Deer constituency. Formerly these residents were included in Red Deer constituency; then their constituency was changed to Battle River; and now the new proposal would place them in Wetaskiwin. This is extremely unfair and unnecessary. Why should one human being treat another this way without a legitimate reason? All that is required to place these people in Red Deer riding is to move the suggested northern boundary farther north.

In the original presentation the commission yielded to the residents on the west side of the Red Deer River, allowing them to remain in Red Deer constituency and saying that the river is a natural boundary in that area. Such is not true in the Joffre and Blackfalds area because there are three bridges there by which to cross the river. While the river does form a boundary on the lower reaches of the Red Deer River, it does not in this particular section.

I want to read some of the representations submitted to me with regard to the proposed boundary changes in Red Deer constituency. The first letter is sent to the members of the House of Commons and reads as follows:

Although the federal electoral boundaries commission for Alberta decision stated that our district (in the Joffre area) should go into the Wetaskiwin riding, we urge the members of the House of Commons to listen closely to the arguments presented by Gordon Towers why our area should be in the Red Deer riding.

In the original petition presented to the Commission 98% of the voters asked that we be part of the Red Deer riding; this, in itself should be reason enough to have this area in the Red Deer riding. Some of the other reasons we request that we be in that riding is that the city of Red Deer is only 12 miles from the centre of our area and is our banking, shopping, recreation and advanced education centre thus we are more attuned to what happens in the Red Deer area than Wetaskiwin which is 50 miles away.

Thank you for you time.

This is signed by Mr. A. Brock, Pat Brock and Douglas Brock.

The next letter reads as follows:

To Whom It May Concern.

We wish to register our strong disapproval of the proposed electoral boundary change, presently located in the Battle River Constituency, whereby we would be included in the Wetaskiwin constituency.

Residing eleven miles east of Red Deer, north of the Red Deer River, it would seem much more logical that this area could be served by the member from Red Deer better, being aware of the area residents' needs.

The boundary change some years ago from the Red Deer to Battle River Constituency made representation more difficult, this proposed change to Wetaskiwin would seem to us as a further step in the wrong direction.

This is signed by Donald Graham, Colleen Graham, Alex Graham and Amy Graham.

The next letter is addressed to Mr. Gordon Towers, M.P. for Red Deer Electoral District, and reads as follows:

Would you please present on our behalf, during debate on electoral boundaries, an earnest request that this area (the twp line between 38 & 39 being an extension of Hwy 11, range 25 and that portion of 26 to Red Deer River) be included in the Red Deer Electoral District.

We feel that since the land survey system in the west is on a straight line basis, such a division of boundaries would be less confusing, more realistic and more readily determined.

Portions of this area were originally within the Red Deer Riding. In view of present day road and transportation systems, rivers are no longer considered natural obstacles to communication. Residents of this area have close association with Red Deer area residents since business, health care, education and recreation are all obtained there.

We believe that becoming electors within the Wetaskiwin Riding would make it extremely difficult to have true representation and would therefore for practical purposes be almost disenfranchisement as many would not bother to vote.

We thank you for any efforts you make in our behalf.

This is signed by Mayme Morton and John Morton.

The next letter is to Mr. Gordon Towers, Member of Parliament, Red Deer Riding, and reads as follows:

Would you please represent our interests in getting this area transferred to the Red Deer Riding?

In the past and in the future Red Deer is the centre for business, hospital, markets and education for this area.

We feel geographical boundaries are quite arbitrary and the river bridge eliminates any communication problem that could exist.

Thank you very much for your assistance.

Yours sincerely,

Ken & Sally Morton

Here is another one:

Dear Sir: We are writing in regards to having to go into Wetaskinwin constituency.

Most of our business is done in Red Deer.

And we feel we would have much better representation in the Red Deer constituency.

This is signed by Mrs. Betty Glover and Doug Glover.

Another letter reads:

Dear Mr. Towers:

I understand our area may be changed from the Red Deer to the Wetaskiwin constituency. To me this seems to be quite remote as there is no one there that I know. I do my business in Red Deer, we have a Red Deer phone. I hope this does not happen as it would be more inconvenient to keep in touch with our representatives.

Yours truly,

Lawrence McMillan

The next letter reads as follows:

Just a few lines to add my voice to others who want to keep the north boundary of your constituency the same as before.

My land location is N.W. 24—38—26 W 4.

Yours sincerely,

Joseph H. Young

• (0130)

Another reads:

Mr. Towers:

We, the undersigned members of this family, do hereby request that the lands upon which we reside (S½—21—38—25—4) be included in the federal Red Deer riding.

W. B. Linklater
Margeret A. Linklater
E. Bernice Linklater

The next letter reads:

Mr. Gordon Towers,

Member of Parliament,

Dear Sir:

In regard to the boundary change in the constituency of Red Deer, we would like to remain in the Red Deer riding as we live eight miles east of the city of Red Deer on the NW ¼35—38—26—W4. We do our banking and most of our business in the city of Red Deer as well as using the recreational facilities of the city of Red Deer. We feel that Red Deer is our home town and for these reasons and the fact that we live as close to Red Deer as we do, we wish to remain in Red Deer riding.

Yours truly,

Bill and Carol Armstrong

I have one more. It reads:

Dear Sir:

We are much concerned about being moved into the Wetaskiwin electoral district. We would much prefer to remain in the Red Deer district. We live about seven miles from Red Deer on the north side of the river. Our home is on the NW23—38—26—W4. We would appreciate very much anything you can do to make our request known to the present government.

Thank you

W. O. and Ruth Armstrong

That is a sample of the letters I have received from people living in that area. Surely the commission representatives will be compassionate and realistic enough to give consideration to the requests of these people. They are logical and certainly deserve consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It appears there is no further debate on the objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Alberta.

The House having considered the objections, it is my duty pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to refer the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Alberta, together with a copy of the objections, and also a copy of the Debates of the House of Commons, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

[Mr. Towers.]

The House will now resume consideration of the objections to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia.

OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORT RESPECTING BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I thank my colleagues for their warm welcome.

The distribution of population in British Columbia is, to say the least, unequal. Of the 2 ½ million people who live in the province, it is of course well known that more than two million British Columbians are crowded into the metropolis of Vancouver and its southern mainland environs. Only one tenth of the people in my home province live above the 53rd parallel. In fact the two northern ridings of Prince George-Peace River to the east and Skeena to the west have for generations been, together, fully one half of the geography of the great province of British Columbia.

As I rise in my place tonight at this late hour to make a representation to the commission, I am mindful of those who have answered to the name of "the honourable member for Skeena" before me, New Democratic and Liberal alike, who have faced as I have the overwhelming geography of a quarter of the province of British Columbia; half the coastline of the province from Katasoo-Klemtu in the south, taking in the Queen Charlotte Islands, the length of the Alaska panhandle, a broad expanse of the Yukon border, south to Vanderhoof, 70 miles west of Prince George, south again through the historic lakes district, and back once again to the coast. This area contains four provincial electoral ridings. That is the geography of a giant land with a population of under 100,000 people.

The present redistribution divides the north of the province into three parts, divided in a north-south split, which will see the birth of the new constituency, Prince George-Bulkley Valley, and the central city of some 80,000 will be served by two members of parliament, each with an extensive rural area.

In 1978 the electoral boundary of Skeena will be placed between Smithers and Telkwa which have an historic community of interest and, in fact, people often live in one community and work in the other. Smithers is spectacular. It is a small city of some 6,000 people who, through prudent management, have controlled their growth and environment and cast themselves in the role of an alpine paradise.

Although I personally do not acknowledge the validity of the argument of the Smithers Chamber of Commerce in their desire that their city be placed in the new centre riding, it is my duty as their representative to place their concern on the records of this House. It was resolved by the Smithers District Chamber of Commerce that Smithers be included in the proposed Prince George-Bulkley Valley riding rather than in Skeena, and that the western boundary of this riding correspond with the northwestern boundary of the Bulkley-Nechako regional district. In the opinion of the Smithers Chamber of Commerce the new riding, Prince George- Bulkley Valley, would exclude the major community in the Bulkley Valley, which is Smithers.

It is generally acknowledged that Smithers is the service centre for the Bulkley valley. In fact it includes the towns and villages of Hazelton, Telkwa, Houston, Topley, Granisle and, to a certain extent, Burns Lake as being within its trading area. Major government agencies, federal and provincial, are established in Smithers and are responsible for serving the people of the communities mentioned, as well as the rural areas in between. Industries and features are all common to areas surrounding and east of Smithers, and dissimilar to areas to the west, in the opinion of the Smithers Chamber of Commerce. They state the following, and I quote:

Weather—being of the dryer, more extreme type common to interior areas which have a direct bearing on agriculture and forestry to name only two.

Topography—Smithers being the western edge of the interior or Nechako plateau consisting of more of a gradual sloping geography as compared to the mountainous areas to the west.

Agriculture—beef production mainly cow/calf operations stretch from northwest of Smithers all the way through to the Prince George area. Dairy farms are concentrated in the Bulkley valley from south of Moricetown to north of Houston. Root crops grown are similar to those grown eastward.

Industry—until recently, we have been the centre of exploration activities in the northwest central interior and this could become active again, as well we service the mining community of Granisle. Most mills are of the smaller sawmill type, with no pulp mills, using contract loggers and truckers to bring in the logs and the CNR to ship the lumber and chips. The CNR in Smithers is the divisional point for traffic east to Endako.

The forest industry which is common to Terrace, Kitimat, and Prince Rupert, is different in that the wood cut in the interior is generally smaller in diameter than that cut in the coastal areas, therefore, much different methods are used.

I have had further representations which contradict the views I have given. They are from a group of residents some 100 miles to the east of Smithers in the community of Houston. It is the desire of the Houston petitioners that their town and its environs not be included in Prince George-Bulkley Valley constituency, but that the eastern boundary of Skeena be extended to the school district 54 eastern boundary, thus placing Houston as the eastern terminus of the new western constituency of Skeena. The community of interest in wood products, transportation, communications and history is cited by Houston as reason for consideration of their request.

The constituency of Skeena is huge, with difficult transportation access and a population that is numerically vulnerable to influences from the south. As their member of parliament I have had the singular experience of seeing and traversing the whole of the area I represent.

The proposed changes placed upon the record tonight are sincerely put forward for consideration of the commission. I ask that the decade to come be fully considered in the proposed changes. The people of Canada's mid north will undoubtedly grow more numerous as years go on and ought not to be divided on the basis of the new resources they command but rather on human terms. In this, may I commend the Electoral Boundaries Commission in the exacting work they have done. As a representative of northern people I respect the work they have completed, If I elect to drive 80 miles through the mountain pass to reach Creston, I can travel north from Creston to service small communities such as Sikar, Gray Creek, Boswell, etc. and look forward to the contest in 1978 in less arduous geography as a result of their deliberations.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken in the House for some time at 1.40 a.m. Initially I shall make two observations about the commission responsible for redistribution.

Some feel that because a member presents briefs to a commission and makes representation, he is politically motivated. Some think that members of parliament or prospective candidates for election merely appear before commissions to grind their axes, in the hope that the riding will be carved up to the political advantage of the applicant.

When I appeared before the commission in 1972 or 1973, with a proposal for creating a new federal riding to be known either as Trail-Penticton or Penticton-Trail, the Secretary said that 99 per cent of all representations were of a political nature. On reflection I wonder if that is so bad. After all, who is more familiar with a riding than the member of parliament representing it? He knows only too well how easy or how difficult it is to move around and service the riding, particularly if it is a rural riding. Perhaps he must drive between 100 and 150 miles to get from one end to the other. For example, if I want to visit the small community of Edgewood on the western boundary of the riding, I must travel 163 miles and make one ferry crossing.

When the commission sat in Kootenay West it made two changes, both of which concern me for different reasons. First and most dramatically, it removed Creston from Kootenay West and put it in Kootenay East. In the last 30 years we have witnessed three proposals for moving the small town of Creston out of the constituency. This will be the fourth attempt to change its political identity. This proposal is not taken lightly, as was demonstrated at the commission hearing in Nelson. It is not taken lightly by the city council, which voted unanimously to remain in Kootenay West; it is not taken lightly by the chamber of commerce, which voted unanimously to remain in Kootenay West; and it is not taken lightly by those who replied to my questionnaire. The people feel that removing the town will lead to loss of political identity and of social and economic links.

In my riding, mountains and lakes constitute natural geographic boundaries which I feel the commission failed to recognize. It failed to recognize that the eastern boundary of Kootenay West has traditionally been the western line of the Purcell Mountains or, if you will, the eastern margin of the major portion of Kootenay Lake.

Let me explain how you can go to Creston. You can choose two routes. If you go one way, you drive over the Salmo-Creston Skyway, through one of the highest mountain passes in British Columbia and scene of landslides. This year avalanches took several lives. I do not say I was in jeopardy on that road. Nonetheless it is a hazardous road in winter.

Or if I want to avoid the mountain pass, which I must do sometimes in winter because of prevailing weather conditions, I can drive to Nelson and to Balfour, and then take a trip from Trail of some 75 miles. If I am on time, I will catch the ferry; if not, I must wait for one hour. Then I must take a 40-minute ferry trip. By the way, it is the longest free ferry ride in Canada and takes you across Kootenay Lake. Then I must drive another 50 miles over winding roads before I reach Creston. Even if Creston is removed from my riding I must still service those small communities to the north of Creston. I shall be still obliged to drive over the Salmo-Creston Skyway, or take the other route via Kootenay Lake and the ferry crossing.

Sometimes in winter the Skyway is closed. Inevitably the heavy traffic which moves by way of the Balfour-Kootenay Bay ferry occasions delays of up to three or four hours. In the summer months the heavy tourist traffic using that link can also occasion delays. People like to visit the beautiful Kootenay West countryside. As I say, even if Creston is removed from Kootenay West I shall still be obliged to make this trip.

I have established close ties in Creston and I regret the mere contemplation of losing them. I enjoy working for and with those people. They are more closely linked by social and economic ties to Kootenay West than to Kootenay East, and they will be the first to tell you. Indeed I fear the loss of one of the most productive agricultural areas in British Columbia, small in square miles but high in productive capacity.

As a trade-off for removing Creston, and this is the fourth attempt, as I mentioned before, the commission will give me Christina Lake to serve. I have many friends who are resident at Christina Lake. It is an area for the retired, a beautiful summer resort community. At present about 400 people live at Christina Lake and Cascade. I shall be delighted to serve those people to the utmost of my ability. However, the commission will oblige me to make another trip over another mountain pass, a new one known as Blueberry-Paulson pass, which is not quite as dangerous as the Salmo-Creston Skyway but which receives almost as much snow. As I say one encounters the same heavy snow loads, perhaps not quite to the extent as on the Salmo-Creston Skyway, but nevertheless it is a very high mountain pass.

● (0150)

I must drive some 50 or 60 miles through completely uninhabited country, drive from Rossland to Christina Lake through two mountain passes, the Nancy Green Summit—that name will, I am sure, ring a few bells with those who read the journals—and the Blueberry-Paulson. So in losing Creston and in gaining Christina Lake I have succeeded in gaining an additional mountain pass. Bearing in mind the distances I must travel in my riding I find that this additional gain represents a very serious imposition of one more mountain pass—actually, two—over which to navigate during the winter months. I must say I do not really look forward to the prospect with a great deal of enjoyment. The compensation, of course, will be the people at the other end of that drive.

There is another concern I have for Creston. I recognise that not a great deal can really be done about it because by act of parliament the ground rules have been established. The basis, of course, is the 1971 census which the commissioners must use as a guideline. How very unfortunate. In November of 1974 the British Columbia Research Council issued a report entitled "Population Projection". The report outlined certain statistics.

In 1974 the population of the regional district of Kootenay Boundary was 31,400. The projection for 1980 is 30,700. Conversely, in the central Kootenay area in 1974 the population was 44,600; the projection for 1980 is 47,200. In Columbia shuswap regional district the population in 1974 was 30,800. The projection for 1980 is 40,600. In East Kootenay the population in 1974 was 39,700, and the projection for 1980 is 52,400.

The first two regional districts correspond roughly to the land area of Kootenay West and will experience a growth of approximately 7.8 per cent by 1980. The second two regional districts correspond almost exactly with the new riding of Kootenay East and will experience an astounding 63.3 per cent growth by 1980. Even if we are pessimistic about future economic growth, Kootenay East will more than make up for the 5,000 or so constituents it will not get if Kootenay West keeps its present proportions, and does not include Creston. Conversely, Kootenay West, as demonstrated from the statistics, is an area of slow growth and slow development.

Therefore what will happen is that in 1980, when again we are faced with redistribution, we shall in all likelihood see the community of Creston coming back into Kootenay West after an absence of some four years. This would be the fifth political move for that community in 35 years, the fifth political trade-off, the fifth hit in the political stomach, a football that is being used to satisfy a minor statistic, a statistic which really in the long run will not have any bearing on the population density of Kootenay East.

On the basis of the burgeoning economy, the growth of the coal industry in the East Kootenays, we can continue to expect rapid expansion in the East Kootenays. Frankly, if I were debating economic development I would be inclined to observe that Kootenay West is not really anxious to accept that type of expansionary development and growth, certainly not for growth's sake.

In summary let me say I am grateful for the support I received from the municipal council of Creston, from the Chamber of Commerce and from individual constituents who have indicated to me and the commission their strong objection to being removed once more from Kootenay West.

Let me also say that should the commission in its wisdom decide that the community of Christina Lake is to be added to Kootenay West, even though it sits at the base of a natural mountainous boundary colloquially referred to as the Cascades, even though there is a 60 mile mountainous barrier, let me assure the people there that I will endeavour to represent them to the best of my ability. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of stating the case of Kootenay West in British Columbia.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate you, the Clerk of the House, the Hansard staff, the three reporters in the gallery, and two others—I cannot recall their names—for sitting through the extremely boring debate we have had to inflict on you tonight.

I must say that to wait here until two o'clock in the morning is far beyond the call of duty for anyone, as far as I am concerned. I think your members of parliament should be reprimanded for not being able to organize their time a little better in the House so that the people who have to spend many hours here can do so at a reasonable time.

I also wish to thank the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds) who kindly spoke on my behalf in this House on March 11. I think him for representing the concern felt by people in my riding.

One of the main reasons for the inordinate length of this debate is that members from Ontario and Quebec managed to occupy so much of the time. We in the West are used to getting hell from the East and being ignored by the East, but it gets a little much at two o'clock in the morning to sit around and listen to all those boring speeches from Quebec and Ontario and to realize that once again the West has been screwed.

I should like to say that in general the work of the commission in British Columbia has been extremely sound. I think the commission should be congratulated by hon. members. However, there are and always will be, in this very difficult job of trying to draw boundaries on a geographic and community basis, certain things perceived by the community to be errors, and I want to deal with them briefly.

● (0200)

The first area in the province that I want to deal with is Vancouver Island. New ridings of Nanaimo-Alberni and Cowichan-Malahat are proposed. First of all, the residents of both those communities are pleased and delighted that Gabriola Island in the Nanaimo-Alberni riding is included. It is certainly in line with submissions made by various groups to the commission. However, the decision regarding the boundary line, which was to move the line between the constituencies away from the Nanaimo River to the south, is, I submit, a questionable decision.

In 1973 the proposal was to follow the Nanaimo River as the natural boundary, and it seemed in terms of the geographic and population division that this boundary made a lot of good sense. As I have said, the present redistribution moves that boundary south to a line north of Ladysmith. Interested people from both sides of the boundary and both ridings have proposed that the line be restored to the Nanaimo River following the course of the previous boundary, except for the Island of Gabriola. Therefore I ask the commission to give serious reconsideration to that boundary. My information is that this is a non-partisan submission, that it does represent the general community interest.

I turn now to somewhere closer to home in my own area. I am at a bit of a loss to understand why the three communities of Burnaby, New Westminster, and Coquitlam were not more seriously considered as three new ridings, rather than the decision that has been made.

Dealing first with the municipality of Burnaby, this municipality is a bit too large to be a single federal riding. Nevertheless what the commission has done is take the Capital Hill region and add it to the riding of North Vancouver. I must say it is very difficult for anyone with a sense of objectivity to understand what the Capital Hill area has in common with the North Shore in an economic way, a geographic way, or from the point of view of community of interest. Certainly there is no connection municipally. There is nothing whatever common between the two areas. It seems clear that there must have been a decision taken on some very special population base that could be easily corrected in attempting to create three ridings, one for Burnaby, one for New Westminster, and one for Coquitlam.

The new riding of New Westminster is limited to the south of New Westminster, and then the area of Coquitlam is expanded to the east. The difficulty with that decision is simply this, that New Westminster, as the central core of the area, the original settled area, has as its first natural suburb Burnaby, particularly the area south of Burnaby Lake. I grew up in that area. All the traditional ties for shopping, cultural activities, etc. were with the city of New Westminster. Therefore, if the municipality of Burnaby is to be chopped up, and I can understand a certain amount of chopping that has to be done, surely it is far more logical that the portion immediately to the north of New Westminster be added to the New Westminster riding rather than taking the Capital Hill area and trying to join it to a completely unrelated area.

Then as we move east to the Coquitlam area we have three communities; Port Moodie, Port Coquitlam, and the municipality of Coquitlam. I served for some nine years on the school board there, and as chairman for two years. That is a natural single community. That community cries out to be a single federal riding and has all the qualifications in terms of population, community of interest, and geographical area. It also forms a single provincial riding in its present boundaries.

Incidentally, the Chamber of Commerce of the municipality of Coquitlam, and other chambers of commerce have long supported that community as being ideal for a single federal riding. Why it was not given serious consideration I am not sure, but it does seem to me somewhat illogical that we do not start from that premise with the municipalities themselves forming natural federal boundaries. We could work from that point rather than trying to join a portion of the Coquitlam area to the Fraser Valley area where the natural geographic division is clearly the Pitt River. This certainly makes it much more difficult for people to feel a sense of community in federal matters, particularly in light of this redistribution of the lower mainland.

Having said that, I recognize that the commissioners have listened to a great many submissions on the subject. They have given these submissions serious consideration, but I am asking the commissioners to have one further look at these two areas, one on the island and the other in this area of the lower mainland, with a view to the interest of the community in terms of federal representation.

It is now 2:10 a.m., Mr. Speaker. I see no one else in the Chamber anxious to stand up and make a contribution to this debate. I thank you, for having had the opportunity, apparently, of closing this remarkable exercise in boredom.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It appears there is no further debate on the objections to the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of British Columbia. The House having considered these objections, it is my duty, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, together with copies of the objections, and also a copy of the Debates of the House of Commons, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof. It being 2:11 a.m., this House stands adjourned until two o'clock p.m. today, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 2:11 a.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF TASK FORCE REPORT ON MARINE SEARCH AND RESCUE TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which I am sure will commend itself to the government House leader. The statement today by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on marine search and rescue activity admits that the organization is no longer entirely adequate, and this is emphasized by the increasing number of marine accidents in Canadian waters. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Canadian coast guard task force review be referred to a joint committee including National Defence, Transport and Fisheries representatives to make recommendations to the government of Canada on search and rescue policy.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MEASURES TO PREVENT LOCK-OUT AND PROTECT RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES OF FINANCE BRANCH AT WINNIPEG—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43 having to do with a matter that is urgent and pressing. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House urges the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour to take all possible steps to prevent a lock-out of Air Canada's finance branch employees at Winnipeg, and this House urges that the right of these employees to job security be recognized by Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PROPOSED STUDY OF FUTURE DEFENCE PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

As Canadian banks could easily become new creditors of the Lockheed Corporation should this firm have more financial setbacks, since it already owes $700 million to 28 other banks, and as the Department of National Defence of Canada intends to invest several billion dollars in military equipment during the next ten years and we should at all costs avoid creating more misunderstandings and problems such as those we are facing because of the Lockheed Corporation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House discuss now the policy of the Department of National Defence and particularly the specific and serious methods which should be used to establish the future defence programs of this department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON METHOD OF SELECTING ESCORTS FOR WOMEN PRISONERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

In light of the fact that the wives of the directors and assistant directors of British Columbia Penitentiary and Drumheller Institution have been sworn in as peace officers to escort female prisoners to the federal women's prison in Kingston, Ontario, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco):

That this House instruct the Solicitor General to make a statement on motions as soon as possible regarding the unusual procedure used in selecting escorts for women prisoners and furthermore that the Solicitor General assure us that if these women are being used because of the acute shortage of qualified staff, he will now see that the proper people are hired.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORDER OF CANADA

AFFIRMATION OF SUPPORT FOR ORDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion requiring unanimous consent.

Tonight His Excellency the Governor General of Canada will admit a number of Canadians to the Order of Canada. Throughout this country many individual Canadians contribute, through their own work or through public and charitable service, above and beyond the average. They do so without any thought of reward and often with the sacrifice of personal pursuits. I move:

That this House therefore affirms its support of the Order of Canada as a public recognition and expression of gratitude to these distinguished citizens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent, it is therefore moved by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), seconded by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen):

That this House therefore affirms its support of the Order of Canada as a public recognition and expression of gratitude to these distinguished citizens.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF SOLICITOR GENERAL FOR PROCEEDING WITH CONSTRUCTION OF INSTITUTION AT STURGEON IN VIEW OF OPPOSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that in excess of 240 property owners and residents in the vicinity of the proposed medium and maximum security prison in the municipal district of Sturgeon are opposed to the building of this institution on prime agricultural land when more marginal land is nearby and have voiced this opposition to the minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone):

[Mr. Reynolds.]

That the Prime Minister remove the Solicitor General from his present portfolio because of the lack of openness that the minister has shown in his dealings with the residents of Pembina by first, on October 28, 1975, stating he would not proceed with the construction of the prison if the residents were opposed and then, on February 25, 1976, by reversing his position by stating that he planned to proceed even though there was considerable objection.

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT OF FOOD INSPECTION SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent and important matter.

As the present legislation of the federal Department of Agriculture leaves the door wide open to gigantic swindles all across Canada through the use of the seal "Canada Approved" in meat classification; as the current number of food inspectors is really inadequate, which state of affairs results in paralyzing the production of law-abiding producers; and, as it is the duty of the government to protect the consumer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House enjoin the government to take all necessary steps to expand the food inspection services, with a view to ensuring that such unpleasant incidents as occurred last fall, in which carrion was distributed in Quebec, do not recur.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ITEMS OF AGENDA FOR CONFERENCE WITH PREMIERS— PUBLIC OR PRIVATE MEETING

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to gallop right along.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister with regard to the first ministers' meeting that is to be held in early May what items he has proposed for the agenda and whether he has in mind a private meeting at 24 Sussex Drive or whether he has suggested that at least part of the conference be open?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind if the Leader of the Opposition continues to gallop along, so long as he and his party continue to lose elections. That is fine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Why don't you call the by-election?

Mr. Trudeau: The meeting is early in May, and the main item on the agenda will be energy pricing.

Mr. Clark: If the preamble was a challenge, we would be prepared to accept it in Ottawa-Carleton.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: In light of the importance of the problems before the country, and the concern that the Prime Minister has expressed that there be a nationwide debate on these problems, I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he has not proposed following the format of last year's conference at least to the extent that the first part of the meeting is open to the public and that the agenda allow discussion on the general direction of the economy.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, at all these conferences the agenda and the format, whether it be in camera or before camera is decided by the premiers and myself. I made a proposal to them on the pricing of oil and gas and, based on our previous experiences, I think we unanimously agreed that we were never likely to reach a decision on the appropriate price for oil and gas in front of television cameras and that even in camera it was not certain we would reach agreement but that we had a better chance there than in front of cameras. That is why I suggested this format. Of course, if the premiers reply that they want to have it in front of cameras, that would be acceptable to me.

Mr. Clark: Rather than leaving all the initiatives to the provinces, I wonder if the Prime Minister might canvass his fellow first ministers on the question of expanding both the time and the terms of reference of the meeting, and also canvass them on the possibility of holding at least part of that meeting in public.

Mr. Trudeau: I have already written to them making a suggestion to them. They usually feel pretty free to express their views, and if they want to have the media and observers present, I am sure they will indicate it.

ALLEGATION ONE PREMIER DESIRES PUBLIC MEETING— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): I wonder if the Prime Minister would confirm that the only decided opinion he has received from the premiers so far has been an indication from at least one that the meeting should be open to the public and perhaps even extended beyond the one day.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I regret that I have not seen the answer from even one premier as yet. It may have arrived this morning and I will look at it. Naturally, I will be guided by the consensus which develops.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF THE AGENDA OF MEETING WITH PREMIERS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Can the Prime Minister tell us whether he has canvassed the provincial premiers to extend the meeting to include such matters as the breaking in period for the controls, constitutional reforms and many of the other pressing issues which many of the premiers would wish to discuss and hopefully wish to discuss in public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Let me remind the House that I did suggest another meeting of first ministers to be held in mid-June at which we would be looking more at the general economic matters, particularly the fiscal arrangements, equalization plans, and so on. Naturally, it is unlikely that we will take all the time, either in early May or in mid-June, discussing just the one item. I am sure that the premiers would want to bring other concerns. Whether they will let me know in advance by way of a suggested agenda or whether we will raise the subject informally when we meet is something which will be determined by the premiers and myself.

● (1420)

I repeat at this time that I have made a suggestion to them in line with our collectively expressed hopes at the last meetings, that we would try to meet in this way. If the premiers have other views, I would gladly entertain them.

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if the Prime Minister could at least undertake that the premiers will be canvassed as to whether there will be an open meeting or a closed meeting—and I certainly hope it will be open—and that the public at large and the members of this House would know in advance what the agenda is and the terms of that agenda.

Mr. Woolliams: Why all the secrecy?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member asks why all the secrecy. I think hon. members will understand that in the matter of 10 provincial premiers and the federal government trying to decide whether the price of oil at the wellhead in Alberta and Saskatchewan should remain at $8 or go up to some other figure, it is not likely that great amounts of public discussion will bring us any closer to a unanimous feeling. There was a meeting between the energy ministers just a few weeks ago. They spent quite some time trying to make progress toward a common position, and they were unable to do so.

Mr. Stanfield: That was in private.

Mr. Trudeau: That was in private. I doubt whether within this House or within the Tory Party there is any one feeling on what the price of energy should be. If the members of the Tory Party could open their caucuses to the public so that we would be hearing their discussions on the price of oil, perhaps they could reach unanimity, and then that would prove—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR ALLOCATING SUCH A LARGE PROPORTION OF DEFENCE BUDGET TO PURCHASE "ORION"

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In his recent television interview the minister acknowledged that the spending of approximately $1 billion on 18 Orion aircraft is based primarily on the assumption that they will head off a war of attrition in continental Europe by ensuring protective covering for convoys, a view of war which I would have thought disappeared in about 1945, and since most of the defence budget's allocation for new equipment for the next four or five years will go into the Orion aircraft, which the government concedes, would the minister explain briefly to the House why the government is putting all its eggs in this particular basket?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are not putting all our eggs in this basket, but we do have very strong reasons for wanting to proceed. As I have already explained to the house, this aircraft is the most cost effective of any of the alternatives. Its purchase also provides the greatest number of industrial benefits to Canada. However, in addition to that, this aircraft meets several major objectives of this country which have been mentioned in this House for the last three or four years. First, we will be obtaining new equipment for the Canadian armed forces.

Mr. Forrestall: Is that a promise?

Mr. Richardson: We will be meeting our commitment to the NATO alliance.

Mr. Woolliams: First time.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Richardson: Most important of all, as a sovereign nation this country will be able to know what is going on in the oceans which surround Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In his answer, the minister confirmed that he is preparing in a magnificent way for the second world war. He did not deny that the basic assumption for the purchase of the Orion aircraft is to protect convoys which are to be used only if there is a prolonged war in continental Europe which, on behalf of my party, I assert is an absolutely absurd priority. However, the white paper on defence states that our first defence priority is to maintain Canadian sovereignty. In the words of the minister on other occasions, the Orion purchase is primarily a NATO commitment. Given the amount of capital it would take up in the next three years, I should like to ask the minister how he intends to meet the number one defence priority stated by his own government, and, specifically, how we are going to provide patrols for the protection of our fisheries or for the control of pollution?

Mr. Richardson: To respond to those questions in order, let me say that our major objective is to play our part in achieving international stability, and the way we do that is by helping our NATO partners to achieve a balance of military force, a balance which for 25 or 30 years has maintained a peaceful world. That is what we are trying to do, not only by acquiring long range aircraft but by re-equipping our armed forces in other ways. We are also able to meet the other objectives of carrying out surveillance of our fishing fleets and surveillance of the north at the same time.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the absolute absurdity of the government's position, would the minister acknowledge that the main reason for going ahead with this deal is to live up to the government's perception of Canada's obligation to purchase more equipment from the United States because of its view of our past failure in terms of the defence provision sharing agreements—the Americans simply want us to spend a little more on the equipment they have produced.

Mr. Richardson: I think the hon. member might direct some of his inquiries on the buildup of aircraft and military equipment to the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact countries. We have clear evidence that the Soviet Union has been building up its military strength far beyond its defence requirements. We are playing our part in NATO to help to create a balance of military force which will be strong enough to maintain peace in the world.

ALLEGED SECRET DISCUSSIONS WITH MRS. FRANCIS WITH OFFICIALS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED INFLUENCES ACTING AGAINST GAMES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Would the minister advise the House as the results which have come up from the secret discussions between Mrs. Francis, an official of his department, and COJO representatives and other agencies eager to give a good image of Canada and Quebec during the preparation for the games and the actual Olympic Games in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not aware of such discussions, secret or otherwise.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They are so secret the minister does not know about them!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

The meeting which Mrs. Francis attended took place late in February, that means over a month ago and we still did not get any information regarding the outcome. Would the minister tell the House whether or not there is an international anti-Olympic campaign going on which might distort not only the image of Canada and Quebec in the whole world but also significantly reduce the impact of the policies carried out by various departments, federal or provincial, and which were aiming at publicizing the games and Canada?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: I will make inquires about the meeting that the hon. member suggests was held a week or a month ago. As far as Canada's image with respect to the Olympics is concerned, that will be determined by Canada because no move, to my knowledge, has been engineered in any other part of the world.

Oral Questions

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SOME OF THE INVESTIGATIONS UNDERTAKEN BY THE TORIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General who has been unusually silent with regard to a number of inquiries undertaken by his department. I suggest the people of Canada should be enlightened. Can the Solicitor General inform us as to the status of the following RCMP investigations: Sky Shops, the SIU, the Olympic village, cleaning contracts, Mirabel? Can he advise the House whether any charges are pending at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know whether the hon. member is serious in suggesting the Solicitor General should be given an opportunity to report on all those matters at the same time.

An hon. Member: Just one would do.

● (1430)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I said many times, it is not the custom to comment in the House on police investigations while they are under way. I can say this about the Sky Shops investigation: the investigation has been completed and the evidence given to the Quebec Department of Justice for consideration relating to prosecution. All the other investigations are still under way and many witnesses are yet to be interviewed.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I am not so much concerned about the investigations involving the minister's department. I am talking about the chaotic situation in penitentiaries in which we find a great deal of unrest, overcrowding, suicide—

An hon. Member: From which prisoners escape.

Mr. Alexander: —and questionable administrative practices. I am talking about the institutions at Archambault, Millhaven, Drumheller, about the B.C. penitentiary, Dorchester and, last but not least, Prince Albert. Is the minister aware of the very serious conditions in those institutions? Will he look into the matter? If so, when can we expect action and a report from the minister?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, these are all penitentiaries with very dangerous people inside.

Mr. Paproski: You sound more like the Prime Minister every day.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MARINE SEARCH AND RESCUE—MEASURES TO ENSURE EFFICIENCY OF ORGANIZATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport may I direct my question to the Minister of National Defence? As the Minister of Transport in the statement released at eleven o'clock this morning, made the tragic admission that the marine search and rescue organization is no longer entirely adequate; as, so far this year, ten fishermen on the east and west coasts of Canada have lost their lives; and as the special task force report will not be ready for cabinet until mid-1976, may I ask the minister what immediate steps he, as the minister responsible, is taking to ensure the maximum efficiency of the service protecting our fishermen?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there is a division of responsibility. The Department of National Defence is responsible for the air search, the Department of Transport for the coastal or marine aspect of search and rescue. I cannot comment on the statement my colleague made this morning, because I have not seen it or talked to him.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The division of responsibility is precisely at the core of the present situation. While the minister is considering spending millions of dollars to purchase equipment from a company in the United States, could he not find a few more extra dollars with which to provide our fishermen protection until the task force report is ready?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the long-range patrol aircraft we are buying will help us know the positions of fishing fleets, which is important in search and rescue operations.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CONFLICTING STATEMENTS ON ADEQUACY OF MARINE SEARCH AND RESCUE ORGANIZATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. On April 8, 1975, 365 days ago, the minister said in this House, as reported on page 4595 of Hansard, that our air-sea rescue facilities were, in his view, adequate. Today, on April 7, 1976, the Minister of Transport said they are inadequate. Is the minister prepared to alter the record? Will he get it straight, please?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I said a moment ago that I was not responding with respect to the responsibilities of the Ministry of Transport, which has a responsibility for the marine side of search and rescue. Many successful rescues have been made involving not only search from the air but by the Department of Transport as well. I was referring to the adequacy of the service in that sense.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister saying that there have been no consultations at all involving those two departments of government on this important matter? Meanwhile, we are still losing fishermen on both coasts.

[Mr. Paproski.]

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, no, I am not saying that. There have been close and continuing consultations between the Departments of Transport and National Defence on this matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC IMMUNITY TO CANADIAN LAW—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OBTAIN COMPLIANCE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from his answer to me of Monday, when he told me that in the past year some 5,516 foreign diplomats accused of breaking Canadian laws could not be charged because they invoked diplomatic immunity. As in no case could the charge be considered as harassment preventing the diplomat from discharging official responsibilities in Canada, I ask the minister, what is the government doing to prod recalcitrant governments, presently thumbing their noses at Canadian law, to ask their diplomats to abide by Canadian law and accept responsibility for their actions in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, obviously, I am familiar with the information made available in response to the hon. member's question. Foreign diplomats in Canada are beneficiaries, so to speak, of diplomatic immunity, and our diplomats in other countries have similar privileges. I believe that diplomats resident in Canada ought to look at this general performance and determine among themselves if there is no way to conform with Canadian practice. We encourage Canadian diplomats abroad to observe the laws of their host countries and not to escape from those laws under the general blanket of immunity.

HABITAT CONFERENCE IN VANCOUVER—MEASURES TO ENSURE PAYMENT OF HOTEL BILLS BY DELEGATES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As many delegates attending the Stockholm conference on the environment, in 1972, left Stockholm without paying their hotel and other bills, what action will the government take to make sure that delegates attending the Habitat conference in Vancouver will not leave the country before paying their hotel and other bills?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that will be a difficulty with Habitat. I think that guests in Vancouver will, with the assistance of hotel operators, pay their bills.

POST OFFICE

DATE OF COMPLETION OF JOB CLASSIFICATION—PAYMENT OF BONUS TO BILINGUAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General.

In the light of the situation prevailing in downtown Montreal post offices where postal employees systematically refuse to serve the general public in either official languages, could the Postmaster General inform members of the House if the classification of bilingual positions is completed, when he will proceed with the identification of bilingual positions and if employees filling these positions will be paid according to their additional linguistic aptitude?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, to answer the latter part of the question, it is for Treasury Board to say if workers in the Post Office or other government departments who must work in both languages will be compensated financially. The working language in the post office in Montreal has been, basically, French, to everybody's satisfaction. Slightly more than 300 jobs or positions in the Quebec region are classed as bilingual, and most were so designated when the Official Languages Act was implemented. I am glad to say that strangers, tourists, English speaking minorities in Quebec and French speaking people in places like St. Boniface and Vancouver are entitled to enter their post office and be served in their official language. I intend to see that policy carried out in the Montreal post office as well as in the St. Boniface or Vancouver post offices, and, indeed, in any other post office in Canada.

PUBLIC WORKS

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF GUIDELINES FOR CONTRACT TENDERING—ASSURANCE OF PAYMENT OF MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. As the minister admitted that his department let two contracts to a company owned by a public servant and a member of his family, contrary to what he said in the House on Monday, and since the government is in the habit of awarding contracts to companies whose principal owners are unknown, will the minister set out guidelines for contract tendering in his department which will require companies, before they can be considered for contracts, to disclose who their principal owners are?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked a complex question. An administrative group is looking into that precise matter.

Mr. Paproski: Oh, yes, how many horses do you have on the payroll?

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Department of Public Works does not require information concerning wages paid to workers employed by firms which obtain government contracts, will the minister so frame the guidelines as to make sure that firms which obtain contracts pay their workers at least the minimum federal wage?

● (1440)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, it is one of the terms of all of the contracts for cleaning entered into that a scale of wages recommended to us by the Department of Labour will be paid.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGATION OF THEFT IN MONTREAL OFFICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. It might be regarded as supplementary to the previous question. There are reports of other troubles in the Montreal post office, including the theft of mails by supervisory personnel. Can the Postmaster General either confirm or deny those reports and what action is he taking to deal with this problem?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have always said that there are not going to be two different measures of justice in the post office. Five supervisors in question have been suspended. I felt there was sufficient evidence in the case of at least two to proceed with criminal charges and that has already taken place.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ACCEPTABILITY OF HALL REPORT ON PENSIONS FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. It is in connection with the fact that the report of the Hon. Emmett Hall is now ready, that is the conciliation report with respect to the dispute between railway workers and management. Has the minister any indication from either side how long it will take to determine whether the conclusions of the Hon. Emmett Hall are acceptable to the protagonists in this matter?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. No, there has been no reaction. I expect a reaction from the parties some time later this afternoon. I will be able to comment on it with more exactitude to the hon. member and others tomorrow.

Mr. Fraser: In view of the seriousness of this dispute to the economy of the country, can the minister advise whether there is any indication now that in the absence of acceptance by either side, both sides are prepared to continue negotiations on the basis of the conclusions reached by the Hon. Emmett Hall? Does the minister have up-to-date information in that regard?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I can only express the hope that the report of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall will form the basis of a settlement. I think the hon. member and the House will agree that he has been an exceedingly able labour negotiator and arbitrator in the past. In terms of credibility and fairness, he stands high with both parties. That is the basis for some optimism.

PENITENTIARIES

WIVES OF OFFICERS ACTING AS ESCORTS FOR FEMALE PRISONERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It relates to my earlier Standing Order 43 regarding the wife of the director of the British Columbia institution and the wife of the assistant director of the Drumheller institution and the fact they are acting as escorts of inmates going to Kingston penitentiary. Is the minister aware this has been going on and does he consider it a good policy for the penitentiary system?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of this particular incident. However, I am advised it is not an exceptional procedure with women inmates. Since these transfers do not take place that often, full time matrons cannot always be found to do this work and they find that other people can do it just as well.

Mr. Reynolds: Will the Solicitor General check into this to find out whether any training is being given to these wives, what their qualifications are and the number of trips they have taken in the past year?

Mr. Allmand: I will be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH APPEAL COMMISSION REVISES DECISIONS OF OFFICERS

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could the minister tell the House the criteria or circumstances that sometimes prompt the Immigration Appeal Board to review decisions previously made by Unemployment Insurance Commission officers?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would have to go into more detail than the question period will permit. However, I will be glad to give the hon. member full information on that issue and the procedures, in any exchange that we can arrange.

[Mr. Fraser.]

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—PLANS FOR USE OF LAND IN VIEW OF ABANDONMENT OF CONSTRUCTION PLANS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. I will put my question to the Acting Minister of Transport. With air travel out of Toronto and Canada having plateaued and as such travel now will come under the original Ministry of Transport forecasts, will the acting minister indicate what the government plans to do with the Pickering area lands expropriated by the government and which are now presumably not needed for a further airport in that location?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I could give a vague answer, but I know the hon. member likes to deal in specifics. Therefore, I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he would answer.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly bring this question to the attention of the minister.

AGRICULTURE

FORM OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW DAIRY POLICY—REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Does the Minister of Agriculture intend to make a statement on changes and revisions in the 1976-77 dairy policy in the House or will the contents of that statement be in the form of a press release, either from his office or the office of the Canadian Dairy Commission?

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the dairy policy will be made within the next two or three days by the minister in or outside the House. It rests with the minister to decide how to proceed.

[English]

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the delay further evidence of the minister's inability to convince his cabinet colleagues of the need to adequately support the Canadian dairy industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the policy to be announced in a few days.

[English]

FLOODS

DATE OF COMPLETION OF STUDY OF MEASURES TO PREVENT FLOODING IN MONTREAL AREA

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister report a completion date for the study, jointly undertaken by his predecessor and the Quebec provincial government minister in 1974, to investigate what action could be taken in respect of the high water levels in the back river of Montreal and the Lake of Two Mountains to reduce the damage from the flooding which has recurred again this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the undertaking then taken by the Minister of the Environment was carried out. Within a few weeks I should receive an interim report and in June we will get the official report on the study made on floodings of rivers in the vicinity of Montreal.

MANPOWER

POSSIBLE RENEWAL OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

The great majority of members acknowledge the value of the Local Initiatives Program and its favourable effects on reducing unemployment during the difficult periods of the year. The Richmond constituency benefitted from this program and greatly appreciates it.

In connection with the LIP, can the minister assure the House that it will be renewed for the year 1976-77 and if so can he say whether the budget earmarked for the LIP will be as substantial as last year's?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the decision announced in the House in, I believe, December which indicated that the budget for 1976-77 will be $100 million for a program that might be adapted in some ways, but it will be essentially the same as and have the objectives of the Local Initiatives Program.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Is the minister in a position to say on what criteria or general standards the government will base the distribution of the budget earmarked for the Local Initiatives Program among the various parts of Canada?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the formula for distribution of the funds has been a matter of public record for several years. Essentially, it has increasingly been directed to areas of high unemployment. That is the intention when we develop the formula for the winter of 1976-77.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CAMBODIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF AID

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister, through sources in Thailand or through the United Nations, received any further information on the situation in Cambodia about which there is considerable disquiet and several questions have been asked in the House in recent weeks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to get reliable information from Cambodia at the present time with respect to any violations of human rights that may exist. As I mentioned in reply to an earlier question, we are concerned about any violation of human rights which may take place. There is, as the hon. member may know, a sub-commission of the United Nations on discrimination and protection of minorities which is responsible for monitoring these situations, but that body takes up questions only when reports are made by individuals or groups who have direct and reliable knowledge as to the occurrence of such violations in the area.

Mr. Johnston: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Given the rejection of this country apparently by the government there and the abrupt change of head of state in Cambodia, and in view of the stories that have trickled out from Cambodia, is Canada considering withdrawing its recognition and aid to the Khmer Rouge regime as an indication of our concern?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that we do not provide any aid, humanitarian or otherwise, to that particular country.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ISSUANCE OF NEW PERMITS TO DRILL FOR OIL ON NATIVE LAND—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has been reported today that 68 new permits have been issued on native land in the Northwest Territories covering 12 million acres, an increase of over 375 per cent over last year's 18 permits. Would the minister confirm the report or otherwise; and further, would he advise the House why he did not—and I repeat, did not—consult with the Inuit Taparisat prior to the issue of those permits, as had apparently been promised in their presentation to cabinet on February 27 of this year?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the issuance of these permits but I will be happy, as the hon. member requests, to look into the matter and get a report.

TRADE

EFFECT OF REPEAL OF SECTION 272 OF RAILWAY ACT ON FLOUR AND GRAIN EXPORTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the minister studied the effect on Canada's flour and grain exports which repeal of section 272 of the Railway Act would have through passage of Bill C-87? If so, has the minister been able to come up with suggestions to overcome the harm that would occur to trade from eastern ports and to the flour milling industry?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have had a number of representations on the subject and I am doing exactly what the hon. member suggests, namely seeing what the impact will be and also having discussions with the Minister of Transport and his officials on the issue.

Mr. McCleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister act quickly and announce that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Transport will not be allowed to cut the throats of the ports of Montreal, Halifax and Saint John and of the flour milling industry?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POISONING IN GRASSY NARROWS AND WHITE DOG RESERVES—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT—POSSIBILITY OF LEGAL ACTION AGAINST COMPANY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister report to the House the status of unemployment in those native communities where mercury poisoning has taken place; and specifically, what initiatives is the department taking to increase employment in light of this disastrous mercury poisoning which has so devastatingly taken away jobs in native communities?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of this unemployment was created prior to the mercury poisoning and as a result of the relocation of these communities. The situation now is that we have been working with the chiefs of the Grassy Narrows and White Dog reserves in an effort to tie together some manpower training funds from my colleague's department and funds from the welfare department. We are optimistic that by working with the chiefs and councils we will be able to make a significant impact on the current unemployment situation.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister report to the House whether the jurisdictional question with the provinces has been resolved in regard to mercury poisoning in native communities; and specifically what obligations are being entered into by the companies that caused the mercury poisoning in respect of compensation to the native peoples?

Mr. Buchanan: In reply to the first question, Mr. Speaker, basically we are endeavouring to work directly with the native peoples. We have a co-ordinator for our department who is endeavouring to work with them and assist them in the creation of jobs. So far as the legal obligations of the company are concerned, I am afraid the situation is much more difficult. We have offered to assist the band in taking the company to court. However, there does not seem to be a desire on their part to pursue that course.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DIVERSION—POSSIBILITY OF STRUCTURAL CHANGES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question either to the Minister of the Environment or the Secretary of State for External Affairs; I am not sure into which category my question will fall. Since it is in connection with the Garrison diversion project in the state of Minnesota, perhaps it might be addressed to the Minister of the Environment. Have there been discussions between Canadian and United States officials on possible changes, structural or otherwise, to the actual physical building of the Garrison diversion project? If so, can the minister report to the House what these changes are?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have met the United States ambassador and I will eventually meet the person responsible for environment in Washington to discuss all these problems.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question. Might I ask the Minister of the Environment whether, following his discussions with his counterpart in the United States, he would agree to make a statement in the House to inform the Canadian people, especially people in Manitoba, exactly what the government is intent on doing so far as that project is concerned?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether a statement in the House is the best procedure, but I have no objection to making public any agreement that we reach together.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGATION OF TAX SECURITY AT TORONTO AIRPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It relates to reports describing security in immigration at Toronto International Airport as shoddy and inadequate, similar to the report that the joint committee made on immigration security and that it should be beefed up. What steps are being taken to examine the allegations that have been made about the Toronto International Airport, and what corrective measures have already been put into place by the minister prior to the pre-Olympic influx?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I read the allegations in the article, and in regard to the reference to immigration, partly because it covered many facets, I think I would have to say that some of the information was apparently based on a report of some former staff or people who were understandably a bit disgruntled because they had no future there. Most of the information is really quite inaccurate.

One cannot claim any perfect screen because of the number of visitors that cross our border, and the hon. member is fully aware of that; but I am satisfied that we do have a good system there. The situation has been thoroughly checked out by my department, and while it cannot possibly be failsafe, under the circumstances I am satisfied it is reasonably good. We are constantly looking at ways of improving it.

ADEQUACY OF TRAINING AND NUMBERS OF PERSONNEL DOING SECURITY WORKS AT AIRPORTS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question, eminating from the same report, to the Solicitor General. Is he satisfied that RCMP personnel at the Toronto and other international airports, who have had only very limited training, are sufficiently trained and sufficiently numerous to handle the increasing numbers of passengers we can expect during the Olympic? Is security satisfactory to his way of thinking?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that they are properly trained but I would have to look into the question of whether we have sufficient numbers. I have not been briefed on that recently but I will inquire. You are talking about Toronto?

Mr. Epp: All international airports.

Mr. Allmand: All international airports; I will check on that.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YEWCHUK—POSITION OF MEDICAL DOCTORS WHO ARE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT SITTING ON HEALTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A few days ago the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) raised a question of privilege in respect of which several members made contributions. It has been indicated that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) would like to reply.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on April 1 in this House, as reported at page 12358 of Hansard, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) demanded that I apologize for what he described as an attempt:

> —to impute motives to certain Conservative members of parliament by implying that they had a particular pecuniary self-interest to protect, thereby attempting to undermine their credibility as members of parliament and prejudice their right to speak freely in accordance with their conscience before the standing committee.

Those were the words and interpretation of the hon. member for Athabasca, Mr. Speaker. They were not my words.

He demanded an apology in respect of two matters that do not relate to anything I said or did. His first was based on his own misinterpretation of what I said, and the second in respect of a CTV program in which I was neither involved nor did I inspire, by Eric Malling, a reporter I did not know until just yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I met him because the hon. member raised this point. I regret that I missed the exchange which occurred here last Thursday, Mr. Speaker. But even more, I regret that the important business of the nation was once more interrupted by the opposition for what, if all the facts had been told, is a picayune matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Nobody believes you.

Mrs. Holt: Why are you making so much noise? Are you scared?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I regret that the debate here was blown out of all proportion by an incomplete and, what I consider to be, a misleading report surrounding comments with which I introduced my questioning of the Canadian Medical Association in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, on March 25.

Incidentally the statute of limitations must enter this as it has taken the hon. member a long time to find out he was hurt. However, I feel an answer is expected of me and I might say, Mr. Speaker, that if my ego were delicate, and if I put my ego above the affairs and problems of Canada, I would stand here and demand three apologies, one for the suggestion by the hon. members who sat opposite me at the committee table that because we had no doctors on the government side of the table we were less competent to serve our constituents. It was that remark that caused me to reply in the way the hon. member complained of here. He started it!

An hon. Member: So there!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I could ask for an apology for the attack on me while I was absent from this House, implying I was—

An hon. Member: No one is going to attack you, Simma.

Mrs. Holt: You are afraid and you are cowards, too. You accused me of being a coward, implying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. Holt: The hon. member implied—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Learn how to behave.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The purpose of the intervention by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is to verify what may have been left in doubt about some of the aspects of the question of privilege, as I understand it. I have some doubt as to whether there is a question of privilege up to now, but I am getting a bit worried that though there may not be one now, we may be getting into one soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I notice in the transcript that they gave everybody on their own side a chance to speak against me, but they cannot face my words and my reply now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: My second ground for an apology would be that this passage implied I was afraid to be here to face the hon. member. An hon. member is quoted as having said:

She knew it was coming up and that is why she is not here.

My goodness, I fear no man!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: But the reverse isn't true.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: I fear no man, certainly none of those on the opposite side, however much I might admire a few—but very few.

My third ground for apology could be that I resent very much your being told, Mr. Speaker, or any other member, that I implied conflict of interest when a member's professional background is used to aid him or her in the huge, onerous, and very responsible job we have been assigned in this House.

Certainly I do not demand an apology for any one of those. And I do not expect that you could rule that an apology from me is warranted in view of what actually was said and the remark from hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party that inspired my second remark of which the hon. member complained, that the government members of the committee were not doctors and therefore were not qualified to participate in the committee. The hon. member who complained so bitterly to you, or one who sat beside him, did not bother to tell you that it was this interjection that inspired a retort that obviously he did not expect and did not like, and which caused him to stand here and demand that the entire House stop its business so he and the doctors on the Progressive Conservative side of the House could receive an apology.

An hon. Member: At $219 a minute.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: You know the quotation, Mr. Speaker, so I will not repeat it, but he forgot to tell you that their interjection was: "Where are your doctors on the government side of the House?" They said: "Where are your doctors", to which I responded, and I think quite properly, that it would be better that people who receive service and pay for service start asking a few questions, and that we on the government side in committee were well qualified to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: It was also inaccurate to claim, as was reported in Hansard, that I had the last word. While I frequently do get the last word, and I rather like it, I did not in this case.

Referring to the statement that I suggested a conflict of interest when a member uses his or her expertise to advantage here, that is very wrong and damaging to all of us. On the contrary, I feel it is most important that this House be represented by all professions, industrial, commercial, and working segments of society to achieve a true House of the common people, and that the expertise of each person from a cross-section of the entire Canadian constituency be well used in the House. In this way the people can be best represented.

The special knowledge and value of each person in this House are of inestimable value to Canada. I never suggested there was conflict of interest in the use of the expertise each of us—

An hon. Member: Give her two cents and let her finish.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: You are being chicken, you know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, they are being chicken. I never suggested there was conflict of interest in the use of the expertise each of us has gained in our businesses or professional life. It was the hon. member for Athabasca's own projection and conception; it was never mine. In fact the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), one of the doctors on the opposite side of the committee, was praised very highly by me for his great contribution, based on his medical experience and his years of experience here. He understood the spirit of Bill C-68, which others apparently did not. They, the others on the opposite side, supported the CMA brief very strongly when the CMA officials cried "poor", and pretended to be the martyr of government cutback,—the slapped child of a father's frustration—not deserving the slap, but being nearest when dad's anger explodes at the dinner table.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I pointed out—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On the previous occasion I interrupted the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) in the midst of an exposé of all the virtues which ought to be possessed by those who want to serve the public in this House. All of it is a very valuable exposition of the attributes which each of us may offer to the constituents at large here, but again I say that while that reasoning is very valid and very important in fact the question at issue is a narrow question of privilege. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has been most helpful in intervening to explain the nature of her remarks, but I would want, as I did in respect of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent, to call her to attention simply to get back to the basic point of procedure or privilege which is involved, and perhaps conclude her remarks.

Mrs. Holt: I simply want to say, Mr. Speaker, that at no time during this hearing—and I think this is a matter for your consideration and ruling on this point of privilege and request for an apology—did the member rise on privilege at committee and ask the chairman of the committee for an apology. It was just cross-talk over the table. It took the hon. member a whole week to find out his tender feelings were hurt and come before you, Mr. Speaker, to ask for an apology. I think it is improper and, in the language of the school ground—which I believe those opposite best understand since they often behave as though they are in the school ground—I would suggest that a member who is thin skinned should not use spitballs, because he could get them right back.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I would just like simply to object to the hon. member's suggestion that the job of a government backbencher is huge and complex.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members will understand that I wish to give this matter some further consideration. There are a number of very interesting and somewhat conflicting precedents, but I think one thing comes through again, which is the obvious difficulty of attempting to rule from here in any way on the proceedings that have taken place in the standing committees.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is one which will not require a ruling from Your Honour. Since the first Monday following the Christmas recess a number of questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) have been dealt with in this House in respect of the inadequacy of search and rescue procedures in Canada. Each round of questioning would always follow some tragedy at sea, either on the west coast or on the east coast. This has become a serious topic of this session.

Today the Minister of Transport issued a very important statement outside the House. The statement was delivered to my office at 11 a.m. today. However, the minister did not show the House the common decency of coming to the House, standing in his place, and being accountable to this House for what he said outside the House. That, I submit, is contempt, and is a complete contradiction of our parliamentary system of responsible government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is a very short point of order. At the beginning of these proceedings, the House adopted a motion concerning the Order of Canada and some Canadians will receive this order tonight. I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that among the personalities who will receive this order will be the Hon. W. A. C. Bennett, who was premier of British Columbia for 20 years. It is therefore a well deserved honour for this great Canadian and I wanted to bring this to the attention of the House.

LOBBY REGISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO REGULATE LOBBYISTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-432, entituled "An Act to register lobbyists".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the registration of lobbyists, and a declaration by them stating in whose interest they are working. It imposes a fine and disqualification from lobbying for those convicted of evading these provisions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

EMPLOYMENT OF HANDICAPPED IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 3,772—Mrs. Appolloni:

1. How many people designated as handicapped are employed in the Public Service?

2. In which departments are they employed and how many are there in each?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. It is not possible to determine the exact number of persons designated as handicapped who are employed in the federal Public Service. Identification of handicaps is voluntary and therefore no records are maintained. However, we can say that in February 1975, 420 handicapped people who have so identified themselves were employed as civil servants in the National Capital Region. In September 1975, Hon. Robert Andras, Minister of Manpower and Immigration announced a joint study with the Public Service Commission to promote the hiring of handicapped in the federal Public Service. In four regions, Montreal, Vancouver, Toronto and the National Capital, demonstration projects have been established. The procedure is: handicapped persons searching for employment register at the Canada Manpower Centre or the Public Service Commission; four departments in each region are participating in this study by listing jobs with the regional counsellors assigned to the study; each time a vacancy has to be filled in one of the four employer departments, the registration files are inspected in order to refer as many handicapped as possible. The candidates must be ready for employment. Thus his or her experiences will help to identify artificial barriers to employment at the end of the study. This participation is requested from the individual but no investigation of the handicap is involved and any discussions are voluntary and entirely confidential. Such discussions will aid the counsellor in finding a job which suits the candidate and will avoid the frustration which would arise if the candidate was referred to an unsuitable job.

2. The following Departments have given the number of employees designates as handicapped in accordance with the terms of the Public Service Commission Staffing Manual—Chapter VI. They have also included those employees who have parking privileges because of disabilities. Other Departments, not listed, have no information available since it is not contained in their departmental personnel records (see Part 1). Communications, 4; Consumer and Corporate Affairs, 33; Energy, Mines and Resources, 52; National Energy Board, 2; Environment, 10; External Affairs, 17; Canadian International Development Agency, 7; Industry, Trade and Commerce, 3; Justice, 1; Labour Canada, 48; Manpower and Immigration, 38; Revenue Canada, 507; Post Office, Headquarters, Ottawa, 4; Public Works, 97; Public Archives, 1; National Library, 1; National Film Board, 1; Public Service Commission, 8; Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 11; Canadian Penitentiary Service, 11; Transport Canada, 8; Veterans Affairs, 18.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude my comments of last Wednesday in connection with the gun control aspects of this particular bill by reiterating the main features as I see them, and as they have been enunciated in the bill.

First, the bill basically will involve the addition of a licensing system for all persons who now possess or will possess firearms in the future.

Second, there will be a stronger definition of prohibited and restricted weapons.

Third, there will be strengthened penalties for related activities such as importing, possessing, and handling.

Fourth, there will be a strengthening of the permit provisions for businesses which deal in weapons.

Fifth, there will be higher maximum sentences where offensive weapons are involved.

Sixth, the provisions relating to police seizure will be extended in order to enable our security forces to seize without warrant where it is in the interest of safety.

Seventh, there are broad avenues of appeal to any person who feels discriminated against in the course of carrying out this legislation.

Eighth, the measures will be phased in over a three year period, particularly referring to the licensing provisions.

I would like to move on next to that aspect of Bill C-83 which deals with crime detection and electronic surveillance, otherwise referred to as the wiretapping provisions. At present there is a restricted list of offences to which this particular provision can be applied, but the courts will now be empowered under Bill C-83 to grant authorization to interrupt communications for all indictable offences. The problem at the present time is that the list is really too restrictive to permit appropriate surveillance at times when the public interest would be better served by permitting the courts to grant permits in such cases.

I think there is perhaps a legitimate concern being expressed in connection with the apparent elimination of some safeguards of the rights of individuals who come under this bill in its present form, and this aspect, I suggest, is bound to receive considerable discussion in committee. I am referring to the provision which states that evidence derived directly or indirectly will be admissible evidence when the lead has come from an illegal wiretap. The illegal wiretap itself will still be inadmissible under Bill C-83. However, at present anything that is derived directly or indirectly from illegal wiretaps is also inadmissible.

I think there is also some concern over the aspect of the requirement to notify persons under surveillance. I find the provisions whereby this would be repealed to be somewhat difficult to accept, and I am hopeful that there will be a great deal of discussion of this matter when the bill goes to committee.

The next aspect of the bill that I would like to talk about is that relating to dangerous offenders. At present there are two existing categories of offenders known as habitual criminals and dangerous sexual offenders. These two categories will be replaced by one category known as dangerous offenders. The classification of dangerous offenders will have to be made before sentence is passed, whereas at present I understand that these other two categories can actually be named any time after three months following sentence. There are also broad avenues of appeal still open to anybody who is labelled in this way.

One concern with this dangerous offender clause, and another item that I hope will receive considerable discussion in committee, is the anomaly that may be introduced under the indeterminate sentences rather than using a sentence of a fixed number of years, and this anomaly arises in that under the indeterminate sentence provision parole review will be carried out after three years, and each two years after that. One could end up with an indeterminate sentence as a dangerous offender and be subject to earlier parole provisions than in the case of a fixed sentence of say, 15 years, whereas at present it is my understanding that parole can only be considered after five years. I believe that a Senate committee has already discussed minimum sentences of ten years for dangerous offenders, and I hope that might be looked at again a little more carefully during the committee stage.

The next aspect of the bill that I would like to discuss relates to special crime inquiries. This is mainly intended to deal with the growth in organized crime that we are recognizing in Canadian society. The normal police investigation powers are often not sufficient in this area. A recent example has been Quebec's special inquiry into organized crime which has been shown to be an effective alternative method of investigation. When Bill C-83 was introduced, the legal status of Quebec's crime probe was being challenged. The fact that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that crime probes come within provincial jurisdiction may necessitate some review of these sanctions in Bill C-83. These questions will have to be considered carefully in committee. I think that the important point is that there is an endeavour on the part of the government through Bill C-83 to move into the area of organized crime and to give it special attention.

A concern has been expressed to me which I will mention because I think it is perhaps somewhat farfetched, nevertheless it could lead to some misunderstanding. It relates to the attempt within the bill to define organized crime. It has been suggested that at present it is defined, I believe, as planned and organized by a number of persons acting in concert. There is some suggestion that this could lead to the ridiculous situation where a group of teenagers could be involved in a minor crime, such as robbing hub caps or other incidental items, and this would be deemed to be organized crime. Obviously this is not the intention, but I hope that in committee there might be some endeavour to find a better definition of organized crime, or perhaps leave the term as it is defined at present.

The next point that I would like to speak about in connection with the bill relates to the parole provisions. Perhaps the most important aspect here is the matter of earned remissions. There will be no more statutory remissions, meaning in effect no more automatic decreases in the period of a sentence. Early release will have to be earned by an inmate under the provisions of Bill C-83.

I think that attention should be drawn to the reorganization and make up of the parole board, which will be increased to 26 full time people from the present nine full time members and ten ad hoc members.

The other aspect which I think is of interest to people in various communities is the determination to include regional parole groups and the fact that indeed the regional people will be involved, in the case of a life sentence, on the actual parole board, with full voting rights. In other words, the community will always be represented in these major cases, and I think this is most important.

Reasons will also have to be given for the decisions of the parole board, and it will be made somewhat easier for inmates to appear at hearings. If parole is broken under the provisions of Bill C-83, there will no longer be a need to go before a magistrate in order to get the inmate back into prison, and the maximum penalties for escape or attempted escape will be increased from five years to ten years.

In finalizing my comments on the bill I should like to say that it is important to note that there are a number of administrative provisions which are also intended to be implemented which will assist in making our penal system more effective. I will enumerate them in summary form. First, there will be a clearing house of information established on police programs which should help in prevention, identification, and related matters. Second, there will be developed better training programs in community relations and preventive policing. Third, there will be a development and dissemination of model programs. Fourth, crime prevention through environmental designs, studies, etc. Will be undertaken, and sixth and last, there will be victimization surveys, which are studies to determine the incidence of crime, the effect on victims, etc.

All in all, these administrative changes and the entire legislation under Bill C-83 are really aimed at giving greater protection to society while maintaining a fair criminal justice system.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-83, the government's so-called peace and security legislation. I do so because of the intense concern created by this bill throughout my constituency and throughout Canada. On June 10 of this year I will celebrate 19 years of service in the Canadian House of Commons, and during this period of time, to the best of my recollection, I cannot recall any previous bill which generated so much correspondence and almost violent reaction from the people I am elected to serve.

We on this side of the House have carefully examined this legislation, and we along with our constituents, have come to the conclusion that it is bad legislation. It is legislation which has been hastily drawn up, improperly drafted, and thrown into the legislative hopper as a divisionary tactic in order to take people's minds off the real and threatening problems of the day, namely, the state of the economy brought about by the mismanagement of the government. It is for this reason that our justice critic, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), who made an outstanding speech on this bill, moved the following motion:

> Bill C-83 . . . be not now read a second time but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of considering a more proper legislative division thereof.

This motion was not moved without considerable thought being given to its substance by the hon. member and by all members of this party. I support the motion, and in view of the importance of the subject matter, I urge the cabinet—and in fact I urge the supporters of the government—to give serious consideration to this proposal.

Quite frankly, I did not think it would be necessary for me to speak on this bill. I say this because of the hundreds of letters I received from my constituents opposing the measure, letters which were endorsed and forwarded to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). Upon checking with my colleagues I found that they too have received hundreds, and in some cases, thousands of letters, and in checking with friends across the way who are supporters of the government I found that they too have received hundreds of letters in opposition to this bill.

In light of this strong opposition any normal government would have altered course, changed direction and in fact would have withdrawn the bill in order to amend and improve its wording. But I submit that we are not dealing with a normal government; in fact, we are dealing with a very abnormal one. We are dealing with a government which says one thing and does another. We are dealing with a government which made a mockery of our prices and incomes policy during the 1974 election campaign and which later turned around and introduced a monster to the Canadian working man and businessman.

We are dealing with a government which claims the working man cannot receive any more than 8 per cent of an increase in salary under its Anti-Inflation Board regulations, while it increases its own spending this year by something like 18 per cent. The rules laid down by the Anti-Inflation Board apparently apply to everyone but the government.

We are dealing with a government which condones, for example, aggression in Africa by Cuban communist troops, while we indirectly support the Castro regime by direct grants under CIDA, outright gifts of money, as well as loans over something like 30 years at 3 per cent. Who would not like a deal like that? But it is not available to everyone.

We are dealing with a government which has made a mockery of justice in Canada by finding it acceptable for ministers of the Crown to telephone judges in an effort to arrange suitable decisions and to make sure, as the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) said in the House, that they understand the facts and that they do their duty.

The crime is not only misconduct, but even more damaging is the fact that the government, on the surface at least, implies that it has done no wrong. In Canada we have a double standard of justice, one for the rich and privileged, and one for all the rest of us. No state can long survive under this kind of hypocrisy.

As I stated earlier, hundreds of letters opposing Bill C-83 have been received in my office. Many letters are different, but through each one runs a similar and familiar thread. The people I represent can well remember—as I do—living under the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, living under the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, as well as under the Right Hon. Lester Pearson. It would be unfair to say to this House that they loved these men, but I submit they did not hate them. I have a feeling they were universally respected by most of my constituents. However, this is something I cannot say about the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). As a result of his four letter words inside and outside this House, his address over the New Year with regard to the need for changing our society, his economic policies and wasteful bureaucracy, and his gun control legislation, I submit that the thread which runs through my mail about the Prime Minister is one of distrust and fear.

They ask point blank: why does this man want to seize my gun collection, and when is he planning to declare that the entire nation is faced with an armed insurrection and that the state must step in with its armed forces to take control? These are only a few of the fears which are expressed to me, but they are, nonetheless, genuine and sincere, and they are questions which I cannot answer. They are not only reflected in the correspondence I receive, but they are also reflected in the headlines of the newspapers of our nation. I have in my hand the Chronicle-Herald of March 25, and the headline reads: "Gun Law Could Lead to Police State Action." The story reads in part as follows:

> "Police state" confiscation of all privately owned firearms "could happen here" under the peace and security package of legislation proposed by the federal government, Murray Covert, a director of the Kings County Wildlife Association, said at a meeting of the association.

I will not read into the record all which is stated in this release. It is damning enough of the government. However, there is one paragraph which concerns me greatly. Mr. Covert also said:

> "No country in the world that has compulsory gun registration for more than 5 years has not followed with gun confiscation."

Let us look carefully at Bill C-83. It contains 73 pages, 39 of which deal with one matter, namely, gun control. There are five distinct changes in the law in this bill, but only one brings in a special new law on gun control. In other words, 39 pages out of 73 deal with the new law on gun control, which may well explain the fear of my constituents over the attitude of the Prime Minister and the government.

I said earlier that basically this is bad legislation because the minister, when introducing 29 pages of new law, deliberately mixed it up with other amendments. In Nova Scotia we would say to him that he is deliberately and intentionally fogging the issue. In my opinion we should have a separate debate on gun control and another entirely different debate on the patchwork of amendments to the Criminal Code. This would give an opportunity to every hon. member of this House to express his views according to the dictates of his heart and his conscience.

Even the title is misleading when it states that this is an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violence and other crimes. The minister knows, and surely supporters of the government must know and realize that this is fiction, not really fact.

The record of the government when it comes to controlling crime is as faulty as its record in the economic field. When the Liberal government came into power in 1962 there were something like 217 reported murders. In 1963 it was up to 315. By 1971 the number of murders increased to 426. In 1972 there were 479 murders, and in 1974 there were something like 545 reported murders. In spite of this damaging and, I submit, frightening record, the newspapers of this country carry the propaganda put out by the government that violent crime is on the decrease. What hypocrisy and what nonsense!

Kidnapping, violence, rape, assault, murder and hijacking have occurred day after day until the government had to take some action, even at the expense of its credibility. This bill was the visible result, but I say to the minister that it will do nothing to help solve the causes of crime any more than the Anti-Inflation Board is helping to solve the problems of inflation.

Violent crimes are creating a climate of fear in our growing cities. Faced with economic problems, an expensive taxation policy and spending programs which have eroded the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar, many people, young and old, are looking with fear to the future. In some cases, not knowing where to turn and feeling like a dog chasing its tail, they turn to the great deceiver, alcohol or, worse, to the excessive use of drugs. These actions may turn them on, to use a current phrase, but it also turns them off such things as the production line, the full enjoyment of life, and the sanity line. It is while in a state of temporary instability and insanity that crimes of passion and violence are committed, and because the government created the economic pressures leading up to this state, it must share a heavy responsibility for our present high crime rate. I realize there is a need for proper laws and for proper law enforcement, but crime breeds in our overcrowded cities, in our urban slums and wherever there are injustice and excessive poverty.

The government has made a mockery of its own claims to establish a just society. It has built up a burden of debt with its mishandling of the Canadian economy which has made it difficult, if not impossible, for young and old alike to enjoy a reasonable, normal, happy way of life.

In order to make a major assault on crime, it is necessary to attack the despair and the denial of human opportunity on which crime breeds. We must deal with the underlying causes of crime—poverty, drug abuse, alcoholism, lack of opportunities, unemployment, to name a few of the factors which lead to a higher crime rate.

We live in a land of bountiful resources; we have more wheat than we can eat and more fish than we can catch. In order to tap those resources and provide new opportunities for our people we must rearrange present government programs and spending priorities. We must give hope where now there is only despair. We must make sure that the law is respected, and this cannot be done by creating injustice for the poor while protecting the rich and privileged.

The law will be obeyed only when it is respected, but I fear that Bill C-83 as it is presently written will not be acceptable to the majority of Canadians. I say this because of the many anomalies contained in it. For example, the government has never taken the trouble in all its studies on gun control to determine the cost of administering this legislation, nor do we know the number of bureaucrats required to license all the guns in Canada or to issue permits for restricted weapons as well as the certificates required to obtain ammunition.

All this will be costly and will require yet another army of civil servants. Yet this is the government which claims it is exercising restraint on the one hand, while it establishes an open ended, high cost program on the other. We should at least be given an estimate now of the number of people the program will require, as well as its cost to the Canadian taxpayer, before we are asked to vote on this legislation. I say this as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee: the blind approval of too many pigs in a poke has led to the present financial chaos in Canada and somewhere there must be an accounting, a levelling off, a common sense approach to government or we face economic collapse.

As I said earlier, this is bad legislation. There are so many provisions in Bill C-83 which are improper or poorly drafted that it is impossible to cite all of them in one speech. For example, look at proposed Section 87(2) on page 5 and Section 106.2(5) on page 24. These provisions seem to require that every owner of a restricted weapon must have his registration altered every time he moves his home or place of business, otherwise he commits an offence and is subject to a penalty of up to five years' imprisonment. Surely this is an overly severe threat to a man who may simply forget to have his registration altered when he moves.

Clause 88(1), clause 106.1 and clause 45 of the bill when taken together provide for the licensing of owners of rifles and shotguns, establishing penalties if such persons do not obtain such a licence. This is a feature of the bill to which I must raise strong objections. It will require some two million Canadian citizens who own rifles or shotguns to apply for a licence to continue that ownership and in so doing to fill out an application form—not yet described—and to get two guarantors of as yet unstated status. It will also require that they subject themselves to the discretion of a local firearms registrar, who in turn will be subject to guidelines to be laid down by order in council at some future date. For all this the gun owner must pay a fee in an amount not yet stated.

I believe the benefits of this great bureaucratic operation will be so insignificant that they will not begin to justify the effort. Active criminals will certainly not apply for a licence and, anticipating the requirements of the regulations yet to be published, I ask: where will the line be drawn in approving or rejecting an application in the face of a record of alcoholism, criminality, or mental illness? Consider all the variations in degree that will have to be taken into account. Because of its complexities alone the operation will tend to become either autocratic or else unfair or meaningless.

As for the proposition that killings with long guns would be reduced by this licensing system, it should be remembered that the majority of such killings are committed by persons who would have no trouble getting a licence because before the event they were considered normal citizens. Others likely to be involved in such killings and who are an identifiable threat could be taken care of by different provisions of the criminal law. As for the man who is a threat because he is partially insane or is intermittently unstable and violent, action could be taken to seize all his firearms under section 105, which wisely would be strengthened by this new bill.

I also believe that the qualifications of hunters and marksmen should be left to the provinces where they would be linked to the administration of the game laws and officially recognized gun clubs. Some provinces already have such a program in operation. Others are moving in that direction. I submit this system would not require any great new bureaucratic machine. Qualification would be based on competence and on knowledge of all gun laws and, with its adoption, a card certifying membership in an approved marksmen's club, a hunters' safety course pass certificate, or a hunting licence could be established as authorization for the sale and purchase of a firearm or ammunition.

I belong to a gun club in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, and I am certain the members of our club would be happy to undertake this additional responsibility. Some of the provinces already have such a program in operation and others are moving in that direction. Such a system would not necessitate any big, new bureaucratic machine. The qualification would be based on competence, and at the end of the instruction period a certificate could be issued which, on presentation, would authorize the purchase of firearms or ammunition. This would be a logical course to pursue as well as an economical one, something which seems beyond the comprehension of the government.

Clause 99(2) brings into question the delicate matter of a gun owner's responsibility for safe handling and storage. What is meant by the words "careless storage", and how will the courts interpret this proposed section? It seems to me that gun owners may well be exposed to harsh penalties under this unless it is applied with great care.

Clause 100 prescribes the rules governing the manufacturing, repairing, reporting of losses, advertising, etc. of firearms and restricted weapons by dealers and gunsmiths. I submit that it is impossible to judge the relevance or value of the different features of this clause without having the regulations and the directions, to be issued by the commissioner, which apply thereto. The maximum penalties faced by violators is listed at five years, which seems too severe when considering the persons likely to be involved.

While listing my concerns over this bill I cannot help but wonder why some thought was not given to authorizing a court to impose an order of prohibition on any person charged with or convicted of any violent crime while such a person is out on bail or under suspended sentence. Such an amendment would have been directed at dangerous or habitual criminals who often return to violent crime immediately after they are placed on bail or suspended sentence.

In conclusion I cannot help questioning the manner in which the government drafted, submitted, and now proposes to ram this legislation through parliament. I say this as a main feature of the bill would impose a licensing requirement on some two million Canadians without first providing for meaningful consultation with interested groups. By closing off debate on the bill the government has in effect silenced the voices of many democratically elected representatives of the people in such a way that many law-abiding Canadians will be given no real opportunity for understanding this legislation, or for responding. In the final analysis, few resent the necessity of obtaining a licence to own and carry firearms, just as most do not resent the necessity of buying a licence to drive a car. Basically this is another form of tax on your way of life, and another restriction of freedom.

We already have good gun laws on the books. The present laws, which I submit are adequate for Canada, should be implemented. Further, the bill misleads in that it claims to provide "better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent... crime." It would be pleasant if this were true. Unfortunately the bank robber and killer will still have access to guns, legally or illegally, and the hoped for protection to be provided by this bill will be merely an illusion.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-83 is the government's immediate response to the people's current concern over increased crime and violence. It is many things, but it is not everything, and it is important that we all know that. It is a sincere and courageous attempt by our federal government to tighten up the law and order system and to help Canadian society to cope better with crime and violence. It involves legislation on gun controls, bail, parole, sentencing, release from prison, wiretapping, the management of dangerous offenders and, most important of all, the improved prevention of crime. It is essential in its own right, aside from any other considerations, but it is not a sop to ease the way for abolition of capital punishment.

Bill C-83 does not include capital punishment, because that is the subject of another related bill, Bill C-84, to be debated in the near future. There will be a separate debate and vote on capital punishment, to satisfy Canadian concern that it has been handled fairly, clearly, thoroughly, and responsibly. It is an unusual and highly controversial aspect of our justice system, whichever way it is resolved. Both bills C-84 and C-83 must be resolved on their own merits. I look forward personally to participating in debate on these bills.

Bill C-83 also does not involve certain other areas of crime or current concern to Canadians. There are other federal programs to deal with organized crime, drug offences, and criminal use of firearms. Some crimes like traffic violations and gambling are beyond federal jurisdiction and are the direct responsibility of provincial and other levels of government. Bill C-83 is a large and complex package of amendments and will require a major re-educational process, not only for the public but for legislators and officials themselves. We will not be served well by superficial, slipshod, biased or otherwise irresponsible reporting on the subject. There are many components therefore to be covered in depth, and not enough time in one speech to do so. Thus I, like many others in the House, will choose to concentrate on one of the areas of greatest interest and importance, gun controls.

The bail system has already been tightened up in recent months and will be tightened further, while attempting to safeguard the rights of the innocent citizen, especially the poor and submissive. Parole procedures will be tightened, to protect the public and to make sure that people are not free to cause further problems when they should still be confined. Although there is an 80 per cent success rate on parole, and an even greater 99 per cent success rate on temporary passes, sensational cases are reported in the media, and the public is concerned. The Parole Board and correctional staffs will be strengthened and, under the new act, those convicted will have to earn time off.

Wiretapping, or electronic surveillance, is regarded as necessary by our police forces to protect us from the evils of organized crime and will be strengthened; but along with these concessions the public must at the same time be safeguarded from any possibility of becoming the victims of these science fiction techniques.

The bill will seek to make it more difficult for organized crime to "launder" money acquired through illegal activities. It will protect the public from habitual, violent, sexual or otherwise dangerous offenders, even those who would inflict severe psychological danger rather than just physical harm on others, while protecting the rights of the accused so that the law cannot be turned against the innocent. It will change the procedure in rape trials, to offer more protection to the victim. However important detection and correction may be, crime prevention is still paramount in the realities of our present society, even though the ideal is a crime-free world. Prevention policy will include better information exchanges, crisis training, and new police programs.

The government also proposes more research on the social environment of communities and organizations which lead to crime and, last but not least, more consideration for the victims of crime. This is a very comprehensive package of justice reforms, if not a total reform of criminal law.

Let me say a word on gun controls. Running through all of these government efforts to improve crime control is the obvious theme of balancing effectiveness with protection of the rights and freedoms of individual citizens. Gun control legislation represents a particularly interesting challenge. Probably no other area of public concern these days enjoys such a strong measure of public support. Yet there is a small but very active and vocal minority who claim to use firearms for legitimate purposes such as hunting, target shooting, and collecting, and complain that new gun controls would constitute unfair and unreasonable restrictions on their activities and individual rights. It has not been lost on the Canadian people that such sentiments are also strongly prevalent on the other side of the border, where the right to have and use guns is apparently firmly imbedded in the American constitution.

National and other public polls in Canada have consistently indicated that over 80 per cent of the respondents favoured tighter gun controls. My own personal poll of Halton riding returned a figure of 84 per cent; although, as with the remainder of the questionnaire, only 10 per cent of the constituents bothered to answer.

The Ottawa Citizen in its lead editorial on March 30, 1976, stated that gun controls belong in the new peace and security package. The Globe and Mail of Toronto, not always a supporter of federal government policy, made several pointed comments in its March 1, 1976, lead editorial, "Reducing the Gun Menace", which I shall now read. I quote:

> Guns are for killing. Let's get that straight and eliminate any talk about people being entitled to use a gun unless shown to be untrustworthy. That puts the emphasis in the wrong place. A person who wants to use a gun—just like a person who wants to drive a car—ought to establish first that he is trustworthy. He ought to have a licence.
> That's the approach adopted by federal Justice Minister Ron Basford in his new gun legislation and he is to be applauded for it.
>
> Mr. Basford is faced with two problems: the use of guns by criminals and the use of guns by non-criminals who, through carelessness in use or storage, contribute to the injury of others.
>
> He has dealt with the criminal use of guns basically by increasing penalties. Licensing plays no part in this area. In all but two cases, he would at least double the maximum sentences that could be imposed. Summary conviction (petty) offences for which the penalty usually is set at a maximum of six months in jail, a $500 fine or both, would carry an alternative penalty under indictable procedures (used for more serious charges) of up to two years in jail. Where the maximum sentence currently is two years in jail, Mr. Basford proposes five. And where it is five years, he proposes ten.
>
> For the use of an offensive weapon—a gun, a knife, karate sticks—in the course of a crime, Mr. Basford would have a special penalty: a minimum sentence to be served in jail ranging from one to 14 years and which would have to be served consecutively to any other sentence.
>
> In stiffening penalties directed at criminals, Mr. Basford will have wide and justified support.

● (1600)

> However, his licensing provisions will stir controversy among sportsmen and gun enthusiasts who seem to take it as a personal affront that they will be asked to pass a test and obtain a licence for the use of long guns. If they were to pause for a moment and realize that, as with car licences, the procedure is designed to offer minimum protection against the few who are careless, they would realize how slight their support is likely to be.
>
> Everyone using a firearm of any sort—a pistol, a rifle, a shotgun—would have to be licensed. Everyone owning a restricted weapon—basically guns such as handguns that can be concealed—would have to obtain an ownership registration. And everyone who wanted to carry a handgun with him would need a special permit.
>
> Here is an area for real concern. Mr. Basford has not narrowed enough the reasons for which a handgun can be owned and carried about. He leaves intact the provisions that permit owning handguns as part of a lawful profession—meaning that security guards could still walk through our streets like cowboys—and he would leave a broad discretion in the Criminal Code as to who could own a handgun "to protect life" (although, to his credit, he would remove the right to own a handgun "to protect property").
> There would be a broad discretion to refuse registration for a handgun or permission to carry it around, and there would be power to pass regulations governing registration and permits.
> Nevertheless, it should be clearly written into the law that ownership and carrying of handguns will not be permitted unless it is clearly established that the police are unable to provide necessary protection. That goes for security guards and that goes for private indidivuals. It should just about eliminate the need for private ownership of handguns for protection.

That just about says it all, and the Globe and Mail to its credit leaves no doubt where it stands, just about where most of us Canadians stand, for increased public safety from firearms.

In February, 1976, the National Firearms Safety Association came out publicly, urging Canadians to support what it calls the government's positive and responsible actions in moves toward gun control. It said that it was pleased with the firearms provisions of the federal peace and security bill, that Canadians would have to buy licences after proving they were fit to have guns and ammunition, that anyone owning or selling rifles and shotguns could be held responsible if carelessness led to their use in crime. It and the Canadian Wildlife Federation have taken a firm stand in favour of a competency test to ensure a person knows how to use a firearm.

The Ontario Attorney General said in an interview that the federal legislation follows in principle what the province was prepared to introduce in the coming session. He added that gun control would upset groups such as hunters, but that we cannot let any special group dictate against the wishes of the public in general.

Mr. Jack Pickett, past-president of the Liberal party in Alberta, recently wrote to assure his support for the peace and security package including the gun control, bail, and abolition of capital punishment provisions, in spite of the fact that he had previously and publicly supported capital punishment. He had in fact presented a motion to that effect at the 1975 Liberal convention. I believe that the government is coming to grips with crime in our society, he stated in a wire to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), and is tightening up the bail laws. As for gun controls, he continued, surely the ownership of firearms must carry certain responsibilities. He further noted that a federal Conservative MP recently found an 81.5 per cent response in favour of tighter gun controls, and only 16.4 per cent against, in a poll he had taken.

Yet a Globe and Mail reporter, Jonathan Manthrope, in late March, 1976, was able to report gun controls a hotter issue than hanging, with about 360 letters per week arriving, most of them against the legislation, compared to only 200 a week on capital punishment, and few on other aspects of the bill such as parole and sentencing.

Paradoxically, he said, organizations characterized as the gun lobby and against all controls have said the bill is not tough enough in many areas, that it will do nothing to stop the negligent or criminal use of firearms. They are apparently perturbed that many of the gun control provisions are ill-defined, that the bill will give too much arbitrary power to local firearm registrars, and that there will not be a standard system across the country. Special concern has been expressed over the provision that makes a gun owner liable to criminal negligence if his firearm is left in an insecure place and taken and misused by someone else. They complain that the bill does not define what is meant by secure, that different judges might hand down different decisions.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is why it is so urgent for parliament to approve this bill in principle by putting an end to second reading and sending it to committee where it can receive a full public hearing and debate. Surely in its present size it presents enough detail, and further amendments and improvements will be made at the next stage of its passage through parliament.

Also there are a number of misconceptions about the bill. The first is that it requires registration of all firearms—but not so, only the person will require to be licensed by the local firearms registrar. The second is that the decision of the registrar will be final—not so, there will be an appeal system in the courts.

The government has clearly opted, says Orland French of the Ottawa Citizen, for controls on people, not guns, to stop the spread of firearms. It has frankly rejected gun registration in favour of stronger controls on licensing of gun users, owners, dealers, and manufacturers, to screen out potential misusers of guns, and restrict the general availability of firearms. At the same time the government is sincerely trying to avoid harrassing sportsmen, and to meet with the approval of hunting groups and rifle clubs. Is that not fair?

Applicants for restricted weapons such as handguns will be required to justify the need for such a weapon before a certificate is granted. However, the bill's provisions place the emphasis squarely on the criminal element where it belongs—higher maximum sentences from a mandatory minimum sentence of one year up to 14 years for the use of a gun while committing an indictable offence, running consecutively to any other sentence.

Every possessor of firearms will need a licence, good for five years, issued only if the licensing officer is satisfied there is nothing in the applicant's background to make him unfit to possess a weapon. Is that too much to ask?

Local registrars and licensing officers will be located in convenient places throughout the country, and their decisions will be subject to appeal in the courts. Is that not democratic? In general I think that the provisions of this bill are fairly reasonable and deserve to go to committee.

It seems there are still some people in this country who complain. Mr. William Jones, president of Firearms and Responsible Ownership, stated that the new gun control legislation is a Madison Avenue con job. It is perhaps appropriate that he chose a cynical American term, considering the prevalent situation in the U.S.A. regarding guns and crime. Such name-calling has been used before by critics toward responsible government programs—our anti-inflation program for example—and we all know how successful that plan is already, even at this early stage.

To his credit Mr. Jones has tried to take the middle ground with our government, has tried to keep the extremists of both types out. Together we have done that, but there is a place for flexibility in a program, for avoiding fixed details that can be better developed as we gain experience with a new program.

In many instances the critics have not bothered to make themselves familiar with the bill and are complaining of some problems which do not exist, suggesting things which are already included. On the other hand our serious problems are not just those which have happened but also those which could happen, for example with regard to fully automatic weapons.

Last year the cries were more shrill, more absolute—no gun controls at all! Fortunately they are fewer this year, more reasonable and responsible, more conciliatory. Discussion is possible with more gun-owners, and when the bill is explained they are prepared to keep working with us on the new measures, or at least not to be so hostile and antagonistic. However, there are still a few extremists around, and goodness knows if they will ever change. One of my constituents announced publicly that there was no relation between guns and crime; that people should have the right to defend themselves, their families and their property with firearms and not have to rely on the police; that our government is simply trying to turn Canada into a communist totalitarian dictatorship with these attempts at law reform; that the bill is an extension of high taxation even though that higher taxation has been used mainly to help needy people; that liberty and freedom are in danger of giving way to slavery; that capital punishment is the magic answer to our problems.

I do not understand this type of raving, and I doubt if most Canadians do, even most gun enthusiasts. These paranoid pronouncements sound like a harkening back to the days of the American wild west, or at least the worst of modern American society. They stand guilty of their own accusations, a lust to exert their own form of power and intimidation over the rest of society, and I personally stand ready as a non-violent, non-weapon wielding citizen to fight them to the end.

In the name of humanity and civilization, Mr. Speaker, let us get this peace and security bill into committee where it belongs, right away, and let the Canadian people as a whole decide how they wish to put in order their own serious public affairs, hopefully with the responsible support of any minority interest involved.

● (1610)

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in this debate. It is unfortunate that the government has seen fit drastically to limit discussion of this important measure. I am delighted to hear that the previous speaker, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), believes that there should be a full examination of the bill in committee, and I hope that the government will relent to a degree and allow this to take place.

My concern with the legislation at the outset has to do with the very title of the bill, which I think is some kind of unsophisticated attempt to mask the issues before us in this legislation and in the bill to follow. I do not know to whom we should give credit for manufacturing this new term "peace and security", or what particular benefit there is to the government, or to anybody else for that matter, in making use of that term. I know that the sort of law and order syndrome, which has been getting an increasing amount of credibility from a number of quarters, seems to be attracted by this kind of terminology, and perhaps it softens or diverts the actual intent of the legislation before us.

When President Nixon was in power he liked to resort to using such terms as "peace and security" and "peace and tranquility". His successor in office, President Ford, has been addicted to the same phrases. If my hon. friends in the Liberal party have succumbed to the same kind of psychology, then that is most unfortunate. To me this kind of catch phrase is at best meaningless jargon. I assume that by "peace and security" what the government really means is the criminal justice system, or crime and punishment, or an attempt to deal with the continuum that relates to people who commit offences against society and the system we use for dealing with such people. It is a bit of a fad these days to adopt this sort of approach to things that are somewhat unpleasant or difficult to face.

I note that those who deal with the subject of death do not refer any more to a funeral parlour but to a slumber room. Presumably there is something much more attractive about a concept that is fictitious or made up. The dearly beloved has not really died; he or she is only fast asleep! Presumably for the government there is something more attractive about talking about peace and security rather than about crime and punishment and social protection.

I am making this point, Mr. Speaker, because I believe it is symptomatic of the basic problem with this legislation. I believe that by publishing all this material and these two legislative proposals the government is engaging in a kind of legislative sleight-of-hand. It is working a kind of illusion, somewhat in the manner of the traditional magician, only the government pretends to be taking serious action to deal with situations that it has already concluded do in fact exist.

Having listened to the words of the minister who opened this debate it seems to me that there is a very large element of pandering, if you like, to a number of myths about crime, its evidence, and its control in our society. I am going to comment on that later in my remarks, but at the outset let me just say that one of the real problems with the legislation before us today is that the very theme itself that the government has adopted in this legislation is open to great question.

In his opening remarks on this bill on March 8 the minister had this to say, presumably with the full endorsement of the government. I am reading from page 11578 of Hansard, the second column:

> —I see three paramount responsibilities which must guide me in formulating, recommending and implementing criminal justice policies. First, I must remain ever-conscious of a number of fundamental values recognized in our legal system upon which our society, as a civilized one, rests and must continue to rest. These bear repeating from time to time. They are: the dignity and worth of the human person; the right of an individual to the enjoyment of life, liberty, security and property; the full protection of the law; the rule of law and due process of law; the independence of the judiciary; the avoidance of cruel and unusual punishment; the protection of the rights of an accused or convicted person; the moral values of our society; the peace and security of the community.

It is only that final part of the sentence that is really grappled with in this legislation, and then only obliquely. We would do ourselves very grave harm if we suggested in the context of the legislative proposals that are before us that we will satisfy the framework that the minister himself set out in opening the debate on this bill.

In basic form the minister suggested there were two things that were the intent of this proposal; first was the safety and security of the law abiding; secondly, the legal rights and dignity of those charged with offences. The unfortunate part of it is, having read the legislation and listened to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) presenting the bill, that I do not think he has effectively grappled with either of the two stated intents which he himself said were the sum and substance of the bill.

As I indicated a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, I think one of the basic problems with the legislation is that it is founded upon a false premise. The minister recognizes throughout his speech—and it is certainly implied in the legislation and accompanying press releases—that our criminal justice system is not working satisfactorily. I do not think I am overstating what he said or what other members of his party have said in this debate.

Having said that, in broad terms his solution is more of what he has already indicated is not working. It may sound like a rather vast over-simplification or generalization of the position adopted by the government on this bill, and may I also say adopted in the bill that will follow it having to do with capital punishment; but I think the government in some ways is its own worst enemy in trying to grapple with crime and punishment in our modern society.

I think the government has adopted a kind of Alice in Wonderland approach in this bill. Let me illustrate one aspect that struck me very forcefully as I prepared myself to take part in this debate. I have in front of me a document prepared by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in March, 1975, entitled "The Prevention and Control of Violent Crime in Canada: Some Comments on Violent Crime, Capital Punishment and other Related Issues". On page 2, in the second paragraph, the Solicitor General said this:

> Let us look at the facts. Existing data indicates that there has been no disproportionate increase in the number of violent crimes.

● (1620)

So he won't think I am taking it out of context I will go on and read the next sentence:

> The proportion of violent offences to all Criminal Code offences has remained relatively constant at around 10 per cent per annum over the period of 1966-73, as the attached Table 1 shows.

The Solicitor General told us very clearly in this first report which was published a year ago that there had been no disproportionate increase in violent crime over almost the previous decade. However, when the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General brought forth their so-called peace and security package we find in the blue booklet that accompanied it, in the introduction, and let me quote two sentences from it:

> Rising crime rates, including rates of violent crime, are bringing home to Canadians that changes in the criminal law and in the administration of criminal justice are needed if the best possible protection is to be afforded to the public.

A little further on in the second paragraph, talking about various measures the government is introducing, it states:

> They are designed to come to grips with the increasing incidence of crime in Canadian society and to meet the need the public feels for a greater measure of protection.

How does the public or any individual square the seemingly contradictory position adopted on the one hand by the Solicitor General last year in the document he released on violent crime and this year by the joint document issued by the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice? This is only one small indication of the kind of uncertainty, indeed confusion that exists in respect of the government as to what in fact it is facing. If it is confused in understanding the problem as profound, what is even more disturbing is its solution, because it seems to me in looking at this legislation with regard to offenders the solution is primarily more, or longer, or simply general indeterminate sentencing.

Surely if anything has been studied to death in this country since the Archambault Report in the last 30's, or the Fauteaux Report in the late 50's, it is sentencing per se, and it has been indicated that sentencing, particularly given the nature of the institutions with which we have to work in this country, is at a dead end.

There is no more sorry record of government administration in dealing with prisoners than the federal penitentiary system that operates in this country. So the solution that is looked upon as the great salvation for peace and security in dealing with the criminal offender in our society is in fact this dead end street, and there is, if you want to put it this way, a kind of intellectual bankruptcy in the criminal justice system when it comes to dealing with offenders.

Secondly, the solution for detecting crimes, which is also what the government wants to deal with, and which is a matter of some concern to the general public, is a greater invasion of individual privacy. I know the government has talked about the kind of safeguards that exist with respect to the code and the protection of the rules for judges' applications, and one thing and another, but I do not think it takes very much analysis to realize that the government is trying to introduce into this parliament what it would not produce in the last parliament because parliament would not accept that extent of invasion of privacy. If the government thinks it has won its case in the one report published by the Solicitor General, a report which is lacking for the most part in any direct information in respect of this particular question, it is very sorely mistaken.

I wonder, therefore, why we have had such a great deal of huffing and puffing by the government in bringing forth this kind of legislative proposal. Seriously, I would ask the Minister of Justice, if he were here, or the Solicitor General, who is here, if they can tell us before this debate concludes on second reading where in any country, in any experience in any society, the action of invasion of privacy or more extended sentencing in federal institutions is the solution to violent or increasing criminal rates in our society? Certainly they have not indicated this in any documentation or speeches that have been produced to date.

I find this kind of a custody-conscious bill a reflection of the most limited kind of thinking. In fact, I have too much respect for both the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General to believe that those particular Liberal gentlemen would, of their own persuasion, have arrived at this kind of paucity of thought in respect of the matters we are faced with in this bill.

I do not want to get into a lot of details on this bill because we will do that in committee, but the suggestion that the answer in dealing with those who escape with increasing frequency from federal institutions is to totally close off their remission time and, even more important, to double the sentence from five to ten years, seems to me to be totally hopeless and unworkable. I would like to know from those who work with these offenders or inmates in our federal institutions how they will look upon this kind of proposal as being workable in their own situation. Again, one can only assume that these ministers have indeed been extremely poorly advised.

An hon. Member: That's not right.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hope the minister has time to study the bill, because that is the way I read it. If that is not the case I would be delighted to have that clarified at the committee. Perhaps the hon. minister would agree with me that there is in this bill an automatic doubling from five to ten years.

Mr. Allmand: It is possible, but that is the maximum.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That is the maximum, but I wonder why it is put in there. I do not think you change the laws just for the fun of doing it. I hope you do not.

Mr. Allmand: There is no automatic loss of remission.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That is one thing that can certainly be clarified in committee, and I am very glad to hear that. I am disturbed by the import. I would ask the minister seriously, and I refer to what I said earlier, why there is this sleight of hand creating these illusions? Why say it is not automatic but is just raising the limit; for what reason? I think the sleight of hand the minister is engaged in is very dangerous and I am going to tell him a little later why I think so.

I have been impressed, and I hope the ministers have been as well, by the information coming forward from the Law Reform Commission. I do not like to use this term because it is not quite fair in describing the Law Reform Commission, but it seems to me that the government has created a kind of monster. The government makes a move in one direction to take what I consider a reactionary and non-productive posture in respect of our criminal justice system, while the Law Reform Commission moves in another direction and suggests that we look seriously at what we have been doing with our criminal justice system in the last 25 to 30 years.

The Law Reform Commission tells us in its recent report that we have one of the most punishment-oriented systems in the western world. Surely the Solicitor General cannot be happy with that situation.

Mr. Allmand: The Law Reform Commission approved of the program a few weeks ago.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not sure which program the minister is referring to.

Mr. Allmand: The Chairman was asked about it at the justice committee a few weeks ago and he said he approved of this program.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will read the testimony later, but at this time I can only judge by the report the Commission has put forward.

The government seems to be taking a punitive approach, increasing sentences of offenders, as the proper solution, whereas the Law Reform Commission tells us that the only countries which have been having success and improvement in reforming the criminal justice system have been those going in exactly the opposite direction. I will say a word or two about that in a second.

It is my belief that the basis of the problem here is that the legislative proposal is founded on false premises. I think I have some understanding why this is, and I am sorry the Minister of Justice is not here because I do not like to be challenging some of the things he has said in his speech without giving him some opportunity to respond.

The operative word the minister uses in introducing this legislation is an interesting one. It is not one I expected to hear from the mouth of the Minister of Justice. I might have expected to hear it from somebody in my profession, which is the clergy, because we like to use this word "concern". It is a good sort of theological word which implies some sort of moral suasion or commitment.

The Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the administration of justice in this country, talks about getting at this problem which has been a matter of public concern, and I am really using the words he used in his speech, "of public concern." I am concerned about this word "concern", because this is not a precise term. It is rather a reflection of a feeling, an anxiety or a fear.

It had been my hope that the minister, in introducing this legislation, would have brought forward a bill that responded to factual situations and not to some kind of ill-defined concern, anxiety or fear that individual people in small numbers or in large numbers may have. We know that in the volatile times in which we live anxieties can be generated very quickly, sometimes founded on legitimate issues but at other times falsely perceived and falsely understood. I do not think it is good enough for the Minister of Justice or any other person to say that this kind of peace and security measure in large part responds to "concerns."

● (1630)

I was very much disturbed while reading the document entitled "The Highlights of the Peace and Security Program". In certain instances it talks about dealing with the kind of concerns that people have. I cannot find the part here which I wish to quote. In the introductory part it talks about public concerns. It talks about the impression that certain violent crimes have over-all on the appreciation of society of how the criminal justice system works. I do wish to quote, however, from a recent article which I would commend to the ministers.

Two gentlemen, Waller and Chan, in an article entitled "Prison Use; A Canadian and International Comparison", compared trends in the use of prisons in various countries from 1910 to 1970. There is a market fluctuation, and they state:

> We should point out that these dates appear to refute the hypothesis that the use of imprisonment remains constant over time.

Tying this in with the Law Reform Commission's stand about the misuse of the criminal law, it has been noted historically that countries in times of social unease tend to pass laws which encroach more and more on the liberty of the individual. That is, the arm of the law reaches farther into the background of actions leading to an actual crime.

There are some elements in this particular bill which, to me, very gravely jeopardize traditional civil rights in this country. For one thing there are one or two instances at least, and there may be more after some study, where this bill seems to anticipate guilt. I point to the request by the government for increased invasion of privacy through electronic eavesdropping, but more particularly through this whole business of being able—and I am dealing only with one aspect of the gun control aspect because this matter has been covered fully by a number of other speakers—of being able to seize without warrant. I refer to this particular proposed section 103(1) which mentions that a peace officer may seize, without warrant or without reasonable grounds, a firearm.

Even in the case of the removal of the serial number from a gun the individual would be placed in the position of having to prove he did not alter, deface or remove the serial number on a restricted weapon. This seems to turn around completely the traditonal rule of an individual being innocent before proven guilty. I ask the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General to be more specific about the concerns that motivated the introduction of Bill C-83. I ask this because unless we have a clear picture of exactly what we are attempting to deal with by this legislation I think parliament and the general public are placed in an impossible position of trying to devise appropriate legislation. I ask this because it seems to me there are at least five major questions that have not been dealt with by this bill. I wish to mention them quickly.

First of all a primary preoccupation of this bill seems to be with the question of violence. I have already indicated, by one quotation at least, that the government itself is not sure whether violence is on the increase or is remaining about the same. Regardless of whether or not it is increasing we are not told in any substantial terms what are the causes of this violence. Where is it occurring with greater frequency? What are we really dealing with when we attempt in this very limited bill to grapple with the subject of violence in our society? Quite frankly, I think it is not only superficial but a non-productive facing of the issue with regard to this particular legislation.

I think we must—and this should be the job of the Solicitor General or of the Minister of Justice—come to terms with the greater and greater acceptability of violence often in our society. There is no doubt that in our time in many instances violence has become an acceptable tool of conflict resolution. This message certainly is repeated ad nauseam. It is exposed dramatically in the mass media. It is very much the message we have in the dealings nations have with each other, or very often in the confrontation which exists between large corporations and institutions in our society.

I wonder if we are not being a little ludicrous when we make out that violence is not acceptable in one fairly limited sphere and yet give it very great prominence and acceptability in a number of others. I do not think we really understand yet what we mean by dealing with violence in our society.

Second, because of the direction to establish a crime commission and because of the request for the greater freedom with regard to wiretapping, there is the attempt on the part of the government to deal with what it calls serious and organized crime. Again to me that, at the outset, seems to be a kind of a limited view of the automatic acceptance that everybody knows what we and the government are talking about in respect of organized crime.

What is organized or large-scale crime in our society today? It is not some kind of a general activity that is carried on by people who are not part and parcel of various elements of our society. Organized crime today, which is a large multibillion dollar enterprise, a trans-nation activity, has links with many aspects of our economy and society.

The very fact of the growth of the bureaucracies and institutions ensures that crime becomes much more institutionalized and organized. I wonder whether we have thought of the implications for our own situation in respect of the recent revelations which have occurred in the United States in which it has been discovered that a major agency of the United States government, the Central Intelligence Agency, was in fact employing members of the Mafia to execute and carry on some of its espionage practices and undercover work because they were much better equipped for this sort of thing. What does this mean to us today—the fact that there can be an actual link-up between an agency or a public body such as the CIA and the Mafia?

When we talk about organized crime I think the minister will have to tell us a good deal more about the oppressive or sweeping powers that are being requested without any clear understanding of how they will affect the individual in society and society as a whole.

Third, I really do not think we have properly defined or attempted to define what is crime, or what today is the actual definition of crime. I think it is appropriate and kind of ironic that at the very time we are discussing this bill the Law Reform Commission should have introduced one of its recent reports called "Our Criminal Law", in which it sets out the need for a new definition of what in fact are criminal acts. It calls for a criminal code which clearly defines its aim of protecting, maintaining, and reinforcing the few basic rights which are recognized by all. It recommends in fact that the code be uncluttered with many offences which could be classified as regulatory offences, with appropriate lesser penalties. The commission sees this as an effective way to make better and more socially educational use of the courts and to lessen the loads in our over used prisons.

In the conclusions of the Report of the Law Reform Commission on our criminal law are listed four criteria for the offences which should be considered under criminal law and regulatory sanctions. I will not quote these because they are available to members. I believe that we must come to grips with the true nature of criminal offences in the kind of pluralistic society in which we live today.

Fourth, there has not been recognition of the problems that exist within our judicial process, the true nature of the relationship of the police-court system to the average citizen. Surely we have to grapple with this effectively and try to produce solutions to protect the rights of individuals and to ensure that they are not further damaged in these legislative proposals.

Fifth and finally, because it is a subject that has interested me for many years, I do not see here any recognition of the fact that our prison system has failed utterly to be either a source of security and protection for society generally or a protection of the legitimate rights of the individuals who are from time to time incarcerated.

In many ways—and this has not been admitted by the government—certain aspects of our criminal justice system are a disgrace. In fact the government has reacted to myths; it has tried, by its own understanding of public opinion, which has been in some cases badly informed, to deal only with the effects of violent crime in our society. It has provided a kind of band-aid solution. I think there has been a total failure to grapple with the basic causes and not come up with workable suggestions and solutions in this Chamber. Incredibly, instead we have legislation before us which, in my opinion. largely reinforces in a number of instances false concerns and anxieties. May I say that it will make it much more difficult to solve these problems in the future and ultimately more dangerous and more insecure for the public at large.

I believe that the government has the responsibility to give leadership. We are going through a system of social change. We have to think clearly and freshly about how we will clarify criminal actions and deal with offenders in our society, but we are certainly not going to do it with this bill.

I think the government has responded with a rather naive document offering the illusion or the veneer of a solution, with only short-term benefits to itself but a very real long-term cost to our country in human and social terms.

I hope very sincerely that when this debate is concluded on second reading and the bill goes to committee a serious attempt will be made by all members to present the government with a much better package out of committee than has been sent to it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I agree with a good deal of what the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) has said, but I think I come to a different conclusion from him. I think there are some good things in the bill and I think it should be given second reading. Then, I think, it should be amended. I do not think it is helpful to throw out the whole thing.

Three of my colleagues, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), have spoken on second reading of this bill. I agree with what they have said and I want to add only a few points.

First of all, I want to deal with the form of the bill. This bill is a hodge podge of different provisions. In fact, it is about six different bills all rolled into one. It contains 72 pages. I wonder why those who draft our legislation seem completely incapable of ever being concise or precise. These lengthy and elaborate provisions which appear in all the legislation that comes before us are not a source of clarity but a source of confusion, and from the point of view of form I think this bill is an example of what I would call a monstrosity of verbiage.

My general view of the bill can best be described in the same way as the curate described the egg provided for him at the vicar's breakfast table. He was asked what he thought of it and he said "sir, it is good in parts." I think that this is a fair description of this bill. We have made it clear that, because it has some good parts which are necessary, we think it should be supported on second reading, and we will do our best to have it amended and indeed some parts of it deleted.

I agree with the hon. member for Egmont—I will say it quite briefly—that the title of "peace and security" is a very pretentious title for this bill. It may make some contribution to peace and security, but it is perfectly obvious that alone it will be totally inadequate for that purpose. There is no easy way to achieve peace and security. It involves striking at the causes of criminal activity and it involves striking at the causes of violence. Indeed, it means an awful lot more than just making the penalties more severe. I suppose there is a case for severity sometimes in the field of criminal law, but it is an absolute delusion, and one much too widely shared, that somehow or other you are reducing crime by making sentences more severe as a general rule. It does not work that way.

I think that the hon. member for New Westminster was absolutely right when he said that a real effort to tackle the problems of narcotics—which are a direct cause of a large amount of criminal offences in this country—is called for in order to have peace and security. I think we need a much greater effort to achieve social justice, particularly as it applies to our native population who have been deprived in our society of their own way of life, and who have sometimes tended to lose human dignity and have become involved in petty crimes involving jail sentences, perhaps because they cannot afford to pay the fines that might be imposed. One of the greatest things which this House could do for peace and security would be to insist on justice in respect of aboriginal claims to land and an early settlement of these claims before the Indian land is handed over for development in a way which destroys our native society. If we did that sort of thing we would have a lot more peace and security.

In order to obtain peace and security we need a thorough review and revision of our criminal law. It is timely that the Law Reform Commission—and the hon. member for Egmont has referred to this already—recently issued a report on criminal law which called for no less than the reshaping of criminal law. Acceptance of the philosophy of that report in words and action will do more to provide peace and security than the present legislation.

One of the most effective ways to deter the commission of criminal acts is to have effective means of detection and enforcement of the law. Deterrents are useless unless people have a fairly good understanding of the fact that they are likely to be applied to their cases if they are caught.

There has been no real revision of our Criminal Code for many years. About ten years ago there was a revision but it was superficial in nature; it did not go to the roots of the problem.

● (1650)

According to the Law Reform Commission report, the removal from the code of offences not considered wrongful enough to warrant intervention of the criminal law, acts whose wrongness is controversial, and acts which deal merely with property matters deserve special consideration. A test as to what should be a real crime is said to be that which does serious harm to other people or seriously contravenes our values so as to be harmful to society. I am convinced that if we could cut down the number of crimes and enforce the law adequately, we would be making a real contribution to this question. I am afraid we are not really doing that by this piece of legislation.

The report goes on to say that if all those questions are answered affirmatively, we should then ask should the act be prohibited as a criminal offence within the Criminal Code? As the hon. member for Egmont said, the report goes on to suggest that many offences should be dealt with by regulations, can be perfectly satisfactorily dealt with that way and need not be made part of the criminal law or involve criminal records at all. If the criminal law were so amended, the burden on the police and the courts could subsequently be reduced, and efficient enforcement would be advanced.

I now want to deal with some of the terms of the bill. Probably the most important of these is the gun control legislation. Like many other hon. members of the House I have received a good deal of mail on this subject, particularly from those who belong to gun clubs and similar organizations, and I may say most of it came in the same form. All the letters are obviously form letters which have been sent. I do not know whether other hon. members have had the same experience.

Mr. Korchinski: No.

Mr. Brewin: It is sometimes suggested that to require a person to obtain a licence to possess a weapon is an infringement of civil liberties. I certainly do not see it as such. I have taken a good deal of interest in the question of civil liberties during my career, both before and after I was elected to this place, but I have never believed it wrong to say to a person that if he is going to use a dangerous thing, he should show that he is capable of using it, and that he should be licensed to do so. We do that with regard to cars. A car is a dangerous thing. We licence them, and everyone accepts that. Why, in the name of fortune, is not a gun a dangerous thing? We know very well that it is a dangerous thing.

The document produced by the government called "Highlights of the Peace and Security Program" points out that, of the number of murders committed, the number of murders committed with firearms increased from 178 in 1970 to 272 in 1974. It is no sacrifice of our civil liberties to try tc prevent this toll as a result of unwarranted and dangerous use of guns. Guns are the most common murder weapons and claim almost half of all murder victims. Therefore I see no reason for anyone to be so self-centred and so selfish as to object to having to get a licence and to show that he has been trained to use a gun and is competent to use it. I think this should be in the code, and I hope it will be put into the code.

As I understand it, subject to regulation, licences have to be obtained for a five year period. A new licence need not be obtained every year. If a licence is refused by the registrar, there is a right of appeal. I hope the committee will try to make sure that the appeal process is quick and inexpensive because I do not think people should be put to a great deal of expense in dealing with these matters.

There is a special problem for native people and others whose livelihood depends on the use of guns. This should be discussed with the native groups, with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and with others who are concerned. I do not think such people whose livelihood is very meagre should have to pay fees, but I do believe that fees should be set out in the code. I do not have a gun; I do not anticipate having a gun; but if I did I would like to know what I have to pay by way of an act of parliament rather than having some regulation raising the gun permit fee whenever somebody felt disposed to do so. We should take the responsibility of setting out the amount of the fee, and it would help to satisfy people who are interested in this gun legislation that it is reasonable.

There is provision for two guarantors. I state here a purely personal opinion, but I am extremely doubtful about the value of having two guarantors. I do not care exactly who they are. They are asked only to say that they know of nothing which would render a person unfit to have a licence. I do not know how that is to be enforced or what sanction there is. I suspect this will turn out to be a vain provision and just a nuisance, but perhaps the committee will look into this to find some good reason for this provision.

I was alarmed at first by the proposal that a police officer without a warrant should have the power to go and search for, seize, and take away a gun from someone when it is felt that there is a danger, and there is not time to obtain the otherwise required warrant. However, I have reconsidered my view on that because I believe there are circumstances which can exist whereby life is at stake. There may be a domestic squabble in which someone might be under the influence. Two neighbours may get into one of those bitter fights about boundaries between properties. When these situations exist and when someone is threatening to use a gun, I do not think there is time to go and obtain legal forms. In those circumstances I think police officers would be justified in seizing guns.

I hope there will be expeditious means for an owner to get his gun back if he can satisfy a court that there is no danger involved in his having the weapon. The question of search will have to be examined by the committee, but in the circumstances I think the safety and sanctity of human life stand above any possible interference with a person's civil liberties in that respect.

There are many other items with regard to the gun control provisions which will require careful scrutiny. Those who are interested in this field should make their representations to the committee which will, no doubt, weigh carefully what they say and report to parliament any changes which may be required. However, taking it on balance, I do not think we should seek to defeat this bill because I believe some measure of gun control is overdue and required at the present time.

There is another part of this legislation which I repudiate entirely, and that is that part which deals with electronic surveillance, as it is called, or as it is known to simpler people, wiretapping. Just a year or so ago there was legislation on this subject. We discussed it thoroughly, and the justice committee discussed it thoroughly. We brought in legislation, which was rejected at first by the Senate, but then the Senate finally accepted it. I do not know why we have to change that; and the changes are in the wrong direction.

What is wiretapping? Wiretapping is a particularly offensive invasion of private rights. Its value is extremely dubious. I have a quotation here from Ramsey Clark, a former U.S. attorney general. In testimony to the justice and legal affairs committee of the U.S. Congress in 1973 he said, "Wiretapping was not used between 1966 and 1969, yet indictments against members of organized crime tripled."

He concluded that wiretapping is a wasteful and inefficient means of investigation and is not, moreover, effective against organized crime. He went on to say, "Wiretapping destroys the professionalism of investigators. Electronic surveillance encourages, not investigation, but just sitting and waiting for something to happen."

● (1700)

I can understand that the police like to have these gadgets. We all have a weakness for gadgets in this part of the world and I do not blame the police for wanting to have wiretapping available to them. Indeed we have conceded a limited right to conduct such operations after proper authorization. What I do not like in the least is the suggestion that we take out of the legislation the clause which says that if evidence has been obtained illegally it cannot be used in court.

I cannot understand the purpose of making something illegal and then allowing it to be used as part of a legal process. Nor can I understand the objection to notice after the event. I believe notice has to be given in 60 days and that it is possible to obtain an extension for another 90 days. This makes 180 days, and if by that time an investigation has not been completed, it ought to have been; there is no need to keep an investigation going on forever. If somebody is wiretapping me I want to know about it, and I want to be able to fight it because it is a serious invasion of privacy.

We are living in a world where there are too many invasions of privacy. What we should be doing here is trying to extend the right of privacy, not curtail it. In one corner we have the police, and in the other we find the people who believe in fundamental rights and liberties. While I personally respect the police I think they have gone much too far in their idea that they can tell us precisely what we should do in this area as members of parliament. We have our own responsibility, and I hope we discharge it in such a way as not to extend the practice of bugging or wiretapping or electronic surveillance in general.

I wish to deal now with the section of the bill which has to do with special criminal inquiries. Some are dubious as to the value of such inquiries, but I think they might serve a useful purpose if there is a fairly prevalent crime which is infecting some area of society and in regard to which the facts ought to be brought out without the necessity of charges being laid. There are, however, grave dangers involved in such a procedure.

I myself had an opportunity to be counsel before the commission on crime in the province of Ontario. The hearings were well attended by the press. There was a most extraordinary collection of witnesses, mostly people with criminal backgrounds, backgrounds of organized crime. They talked a lingo which was hard to understand. But one thing was not hard to understand; they thought nothing of making the most slanderous statements in the witness box about people who were not there, people who did not have a chance to speak for themselves. And the press would rush to print those statements because they had been made in the course of a commission of inquiry and presumably were privileged.

I say the people who conduct these inquiries should be given the power to tell the press or anyone else. "You can listen to this but you must not publish anything which is defamatory to individuals without at least their having an opportunity to answer any charges which might be made." This would be one way of avoiding trial by use of headlines, something we do not need in this country. I hope an amendment will be made to this clause in an effort to ensure that safeguards are established against such a possibility.

I conclude as I began by saying that some of this legislation is useful and some of it is deplorable, but in order to get the useful part we should at least send it to the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are now studying and whose title refers to "peace and security" will, I think, bring something altogether different from peace and security, unless it means peace and security for the criminals and not peace and security for the silent majority of all honest Canadians.

When the minister introduced the bill, he opened the written remarks accompanying it by saying that he wanted to protect the rights and dignity of those accused of infractions. This unfortunately means, Mr. Speaker, that from now on we will have to show a lot of concern and comprehension for the accused. Bill C-83 will probably have dire consequences for the majority of honest Canadians and it is very reassuring for the minority who lives apart from them. This bill has been introduced as an omnibus bill in order to make us swallow totally inacceptable things along with others which could be palatable.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal particularly with two aspects of this bill. First, I think that the registration of firearms will automatically lead to the confiscation of these arms as was the case in all countries which have voted a similar legislation. This would be a downright violation of the rights of the honest people, forbidding them to indulge in certain activities during their leisure time such as marksmanship competitions and hunting. But what is more important is that the citizens would be left in a state of total insecurity and could not protect themselves from the outlaws, the criminals and all the crooks of the country. Mr. Speaker, when firearms are confiscated, only outlaws keep theirs.

In time of war or political upheaval, anywhere in the world, the registration of weapons has always ended in confiscation, leaving the people at large unarmed and helpless. The unarmed citizen easily becomes a victim of anarchy, tyranny and totalitarianism. History has provided us with a good many examples.

In Cuba, Batista proceeded also with the registration of weapons in order, said he, to prevent Castro from having them for his guerrilla warfare. Only the loyal Cubans at the time did register their weapons, while Castro's revolutionaries never cared to register theirs, as any other revolutionaries are doing in the world. Today, Castro is in possession of all the weapons, because he confiscated them all after Batista had them registered. The Cuban people are at the present time defenseless and at the mercy of Castro's dictatorship.

Then, it is easy to say for the leftist and communistic propaganda, to say that Cubans are peaceful people. People who are unarmed and defenseless are at the mercy of any tyranny: there is no choice but to be peaceful. We only need to remember what happened in Hungary a few years ago. Hitler once said: The biggest mistake we could make would be to allow citizens of various origins to carry arms, for history is there to show that all conquerors who allowed their native subjects to be armed have prepared their own defeat.

In 1938, Hitler had turned Germany into a totalitarian state and had confiscated all firearms. Only the members of the Nazi Party could own firearms. France, Norway, the Netherlands and Denmark were countries where firearms had to be registered before World War II. As the Nazi armies penetrated further into Europe, they confiscated the weapons registration records in the invaded countries, took over the weapons and thus reduced the possibility of resistance accordingly.

If the opposition disarms, that is all well and good. If it refuses to do so, then we ourselves must do it, as Joseph Stalin said in 1927. For a long time now, th communist strategy throughout the world has been to clamor for disarmament for the sake of a pseudo-détente policy, while they, the communists, accelerate the arming of their troops, for it is quite easy to take over the control of a disarmed nation.

In Europe, the Czechoslovaks laid down their arms while Rumania, Estonia, Lithuania, Poland, Hungary and several other countries were readily disarmed, firearms being registered and easily confiscated without alarming anyone. In China, the registration of weapons has resulted in the disarmament of the Chinese people, which preceded the reign of terror. Chinese people have been tortured and executed, and today, after having been "broken" in the blood of millions of Chinese, they have come to be respectful of their great leader Mao who, in his spirit of democratic competition, has never called a general election because all citizens must adore him.

Northern Ireland is another tragic illustration of a situation resulting from the registration of the weapons which were confiscated by the government. The Presbyterian Journal of February 9, 1972, quoting an Irish newspaper, wrote this: "The government has withdrawn all licensed guns in the province and the police has called on all the owners of weapons and ordered them to surrender their guns." With all their weapons registered and confiscated the population is helpless against the attacks of the IRA. Tyrants never could nor dared invade a country whose population was armed.

In 1939-40, a country with only 4 million people among whom were crack shots who had been trained through a long dedication to sports had foreseen the communist takeover. That country was Finland which managed to stand up to and humiliate the powerful army of Russia with its 170 million people.

In 1940, while the German armies were on the other side of the channel, England begged for Canadian and U.S. weaponry to equip its homeguard, as arm control by the British government had left the British utterly disarmed and unable to protect their families, homes and homeland. It is then that the Canadians and Americans, who were very concerned and had weapons available, offered them to the British who needed them desperately. Switzerland is another country which has placed its security and future into the hands of honest and well armed citizens. That country has not as yet been invaded nor brought into subjection.

Here in Canada, they want to put the destiny of Canadians between the hands of a dishonest and armed minority, against the interest of the honest and disarmed majority. The two nations with the highest percentage of gun owners in the world are Israel and Switzerland and yet they have the lowest homicide rates in the world.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that the argument that guns should be taken away from people to avoid accidents is perfectly stupid and unjustified. How many people know that 5 per cent of the Russian population are real communists? How can 5 per cent of the population control the other 95 per cent? Simple: the 5 per cent control all the arms, leaving the rest slaves and unarmed.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, will allow the civil servants who will be hired to implement this legislation to perpetrate legally the worst abuses of power, while being protected by the law derived from this bill. Therefore, I wish to draw Your Honour's attention to clause 105(z) page 17 of the bill; which states:

> Where, with respect to any person, a peace officer is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that it is not desirable in the interests of the safety of that person, or of other persons, that that person should have in his possession, custody or control any firearm . . . the peace officer may without warrant search for and seize any firearm or other offensive weapon or any ammunition or explosive substance in the possession, custody or control of that person.

This clause, Mr. Speaker, gives any peace officer the powers to do anything to anybody. It gives a discretionary power to the police and will enable any peace officer to discriminate against anybody. This clause states: Where a peace officer is satisfied, which means he may seize without warrant. The word "satisfied" enables any officer to be justified in taking—deliberately or otherwise—any kind of reprehensible and discriminatory action under the mantle of legality. When the peace officer has reasonable grounds for believing, says the bill; it means that a police officer may always argue that he has grounds for taking legal steps, even the most reprehensible ones, deliberate or not.

Mr. Speaker, how can anyone not think for a moment of a Mr. Desrochers, a provincial Liberal organizer in Quebec, just before a provincial election, when his party might run the risk of being defeated by the opposition, whether it be the Parti Québécois or otherwise? He might easily react to such a threat, with his usual keen mind by a well organized strategy, using Liberal policemen in the Quebec Police Force or in various other police corps to ensure that two days before the poll, federal or provincial, police officers seize firearms without warrant almost simultaneously. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, without warrant they proceed to seize various firearms belonging to Pequists, Crediters or opponents most in the public eye in their localities, after the police itself has set the stage, a sort of repetition of the American Watergate, in order that before the election throughout Quebec they can recreate in some other way a climate of fears and panic as was the case in the last provincial election and making believe that Pequists or opponents were prepared to enter into an armed rebellion on election day.

● (1720)

Similar schemes could easily be devised by Liberals or others for the purpose of destroying opponents by resorting to every possible form of power abuse sanctioned under this bill. When one knows how the American CIA proceeds, Mr. Speaker, one can suppose that such initiatives could also take place here in Canada.

And then we hear from former officer Robert Samson that the RCMP could have organized thefts to seize some papers! This bill will allow all abuses of authority that used to be made illegally and blamed on thieves even though they had been done by members of the RCMP, as Robert Samson indicated recently.

From now on, all abuses of authority will be allowed. We have only to recall that not even six years ago, after the FLQ troubles, certain people did not hesitate to recommend that the federal government use weapons when the weak and delicate Bourassa government was supposed to be overthrown, as some people wanted us to believe. Mr. Speaker, by registering weapons, it will be easy to invoke a so-called political crisis, whether it is organized, anticipated or unforeseen, so as to confiscate weapons throughout Quebec or any other province and prevent Quebecers from defending themselves against eventual abuses of authority and force them to remain under the rule of the federal government, which could be itself at the bottom of all these abuses of authority. We have unfortunately seen this happen in many countries.

We therefore prefer to endanger the innocent and honest majority because we are afraid to attack the criminals, who are for the most part very well organized, and whom we want to re-habilitate, according to the Attorney General, but until they are rehabilitated, if this can be done, honest people are at their mercy. Apparently we want to fight crime because of this increase in the crime rate, but this legislation will pith the criminals against unarmed people since throughout the world, the registration of weapons has always led to their being confiscated. We may say that this is demagogy, Mr. Speaker, but the registration of weapons has always led to their being confiscated.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Why do we have such a legislation while Quebec has already better gun control than any other area of Canada? We should imitate Quebec instead of making it suffer the consequences of a legislation issued from the fact that it is too easy to obtain and handle weapons in other provinces. Why make Quebec pay for the errors made in other provinces where it was much too easy to get arms? Quebec should be imitated in this regard because until now everything there has been going fine when it comes to that since in Quebec there is an extremely severe control over gun licensing. Even Granby Chief of Police Joseph Couture, a man of considerable experience and integrity, has had to wait for over four weeks to get his permit to carry a gun, for a very extensive investigation was carried out before he could get it. Even he could not elude the severe control we have in Quebec.

That is an example, Mr. Speaker, among so many others I could quote and which proves that in Quebec this matter is not taken lightly when dealers and sellers of various arms are subject to rules and an extremely strict control. Rod and gun clubs are not controlled or administered by stupid or irresponsible people because in those clubs members are taught the art of using and handling arms before a permit is recommended for a member. Why want to impose a legislation that does not meet at all the desires of all responsible and knowledgeable people who want to use arms every day in a responsible way?

Mr. Speaker, this bill is an insult to responsible people, particularly those in Quebec who until now have behaved like responsible people about such dangerous arms because we do not have only those things to deplore across Quebec, as some seem to want to suggest in this House. The only argument that is made up is that accidents must be prevented. That argument is the cover concealing other purposes that will not or cannot be told. I am not afraid to see arms in the hands of those in charge of all rod and gun clubs; I am not afraid to see arms in the hands of responsible individuals who are subject like all policemen or rod and gun club members to a very strict control administered by people responsible to members or municipal authorities or subject to a control like the one we have in Quebec.

I am really afraid to see the majority of honest people defenceless in front of a minority of irresponsible criminals. If a professional, architect, doctor, lawyer, notary or father of a family of 15 children or any individual owning property sees his property endangered by any criminal or by an individual who prefers to live off the work of others rather than his own and who decided himself to share the assets of that damned capitalism by attaking any of those assets, how it is possible for honest and law-abiding owners to protect themselves from notorious or potential criminals? They have arms and are the first to disobey the law on the registration of weapons because irresponsible people and criminals do not care about the law, the property of others and they will also not care about the legislation being now considered on the registration of arms. How will honest people be able to protect themselves, how will the millions of individuals who live far from police services be able to protect themselves against criminals who will have easy and unprotected preys at their mercy?

I would want to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, on statements made by experienced authorities on the subject and not technocrats or civil servants who will eventually have to deal with this legislation, who acquired the experience in sociology inspired by marxist papers in favour of greater freedom for criminals. And I would like here to quote, for example, from remarks by—

[English]

—Chief Inspector Colin Greenwood of the West Yorkshire Constabulary, England. He said:

> Fifty years of gun control have been useless in stemming the tide of gun related crime. Since 1963 the rate of armed crime in England has risen a staggering 400 per cent. . . .
>
> Guns were always available to any criminal who chose to use them. Firearms controls do not appear to have stopped this class of criminal from obtaining a gun when he thought he could use one . . .
>
> The odds against him being caught may be something like seven or ten to one in his favour. When the death penalty is applied, he is not prepared to accept seven or ten to one odds on a chance of being hanged. Capital punishment and violent crime seem to be tied together in some form. . . .
> No matter how one approaches the figures, one is forced to the rather startling conclusion that the use of firearms in crime was very much less than when there were no controls of any sort and when anyone, convicted criminal or lunatic, could buy any type of firearms without restriction.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe in submissions from experienced individuals but not from people who spent years in schools and do not have the knowledge of our policemen responsible for protecting mostly honest Canadians. And as representative of a constituency of this extensive country I think that our first responsibility is to protect the great majority of honest people who make up our Canadian society. It is not with a greater liberalization that we will control criminals, obtain more respect for our country and our property because the country would be left at the mercy of extremists and revolutionists as elsewhere in the world.

This occurred elsewhere, Mr. Speaker, when firearms were registered. In all the countries of the world were firearms were registered, 25 years afterwards, they were seized and the honest people were left at the mercy of idiots, lunatics and criminals.

[English]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to be able to address myself to Bill C-83. My intention primarily in the debate today is to talk specifically about the gun control aspects of this legislation. I do not intend to deal with equally significant and important aspects of the bill at this time which touch upon crime inquiries, detection and electronic surveillance, dangerous offenders, habitual criminals, and strengthening measures to ensure adequate custody and safer techniques for the release of inmates, and other broad questions of crime prevention.

● (1730)

The gun control aspect of this bill has provoked an enormous amount of controversy in society and I feel that at this stage of the debate, in view of the limitation of time, I would prefer to deal specifically with this particular aspect of the legislation.

The first point I want to make is more a semantic one, a matter of window dressing. Bill C-83 on its front page calls the legislation "An Act to provide for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime". It seems to me that that description of the contents of the bill is very offensive to those who are law-abiding citizens and who are about to be controlled in terms of their use of firearms. It would seem to me much better to refer to the bill along the following lines: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code through (1), provisions for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, and (2), provisions to control the use of firearms in Canada." That at least would not carry with it the implication that the control of firearms was directly related to the perpetrators of violent and other crime in Canada. I think this has created a rather unhealthy approach to the matter on the part of those who feel legitimately aggrieved by some of the provisions in Bill C-83.

The next point I would make has to do with the use of time allocation, in other words, House rule 75C, to limit second reading debate. As all members know, we have had some days now on second reading, but this allocation of time, limiting further debate to four days, is something I basically support providing it is the mechanism that will bring the matter before the committee where the public and those who have real need for input will be given a longer period of time to make their views known.

In the debate which took place on the use of Standing Order 75C, opposition members drew the attention of the House to the fact that there were no guarantees given that there would be adequate time in Committee. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), whose speech I listened to in the debate, indicated that this was one of the motivating forces behind the allocation of time. I certainly hope that the House, and particularly the committee at committee stage, will give adequate time to allow the citizens of this country and groups concerned with the various aspects of the bill opportunity to make a meaningful input, and that the committee itself will very carefully consider the representations that have been made and will be made.

I think all hon. members know—certainly I do as a result of my experience in the House since 1968—that whenever parliament tries to amend the Criminal Code it evokes a great deal of controversy. The gun control aspects of this bill have generated a great deal of debate with the public and an enormous amount of heat and, I think, emotion. The members of the committee in particular must listen very carefully to the views expressed by Canadians on this important subject. They must not reject criticism of the bill simply because it is expressed with emotion and passion. They must listen to all arguments and address themselves to the legitimate points that are being expressed in many instances. In this way both committee and the House will be able to make amendments and improve the legislation that is before us.

To illustrate the kind of views that exist in the community, I have received a great deal of correspondence and had a number of meetings with my constituents on this subject. I want to quote briefly from one group that wrote to me representing the Cannington Gun Club just outside my riding, in Cannington, Ontario. It is a rather lengthy letter so I shall just quote a couple of excerpts from it:

Persons such as convicted perpetrators of violent crimes, the committed insane persons, proven drug addicts, and such persons who threaten peace and property of the majority should be forbidden to own firearms. However, these persons must be specifically listed in the legislation.

I think that illustrates the point that gun clubs, sporting groups and so on, are not so violently opposed to gun controls of all kinds that they do not recognize the legitimate concern of society when such firearms are put in the hands of those who clearly will not be using them responsibly, people whom we might suspect will use them in a fit of passion or emotion. These groups have raised a number of legitimate objections to the bill. I am not going to go through them in the context of the correspondence, but may I simply say that those who have raised objections to certain aspects of the bill are not all kooks. They have many legitimate concerns and we have to listen to those concerns.

There is, of course, a great deal of confusion and misunderstanding as to the nature of the gun control aspects of the legislation. Let me briefly outline my understanding of the primary thrust of this aspect of the bill. First, Bill C-83, in my view, will have little if any impact on criminals using guns. But this is not the primary thrust of the bill at all. It is quite evident that those who have firearms illegally are not going to rush out and try to register them; they will probably continue to possess guns and will have to be dealt with in the traditional way and, I hope, a stepped up means of surveillance will take guns out of their hands.

As I say, in my view this bill is not primarily directed toward that aspect of the matter; the bill is directed at law-abiding citizens, basically to ensure three things. The first is the licensing of gun users so that those who have histories of violence, who perhaps are drug users or have been convicted of criminal offences in which firearms have been involved, or those who are mentally incapable of adequately looking after firearms, will not be allowed to have such weapons. I think that is fair enough and I do not think anyone in society would really object to that at all.

Secondly, this law provides for a requirement by those who do posses firearms to ensure adequate storage in the handling of those firearms, so they will not fall into the hands of people who should not have them, or so they do not fall into the hands of those who in a highly emotional state would use them without thinking. If they were locked up this would give people an opportunity for second thought, so that they might perhaps not commit a crime of violence. These are people with no history of violence at all.

About a year or a year and a half ago in my own riding a number of murders, of a common law wife and, I think, three children were committed by one person who got into alcohol, went out and grabbed a gun. If the gun had been adequately stored and the ammunition locked away, there would have been time for second sober thought and this murder might not have been committed. The recent crimes in schools in Toronto and in Ottawa might to some extent have been averted if firearms had not been so quickly and readily available in homes. I think it important that we address ourselves to this question. Those who improperly or inappropriately store firearms will have the obligation upon them in law not to do so in the future. I think this will help avoid some of the crimes of violence that do occur on the spur of the moment.

The third thrust is to prohibit the possession of certain types of weapons. Basically I have no objection to such thrusts. I primarily support them and I think that all reasonable people would do so as well. However, there are some legitimate concerns being expressed by Canadian people as to how this should best be done. I will now address myself to those concerns which need to be carefully considered, and amendments may be required at the committee stage to overcome the inherent difficulties in the presently proposed legislation.

There is the basic concern that this measure provides too much arbitrary power in the hands of the Governor in Council, and is subject to possible abuse in the administration of the law by either licensing officials or law enforcement officers. I think that concern is legitimate. It is not only legitimate in connection with this bill but in connection with all bills that parliaments pass.

On another bill of a similar nature, Bill C-58, I spoke very strongly, as I have in respect of other matters, about the delegation of powers through regulation and so on rather than having them specifically spelled out within a bill dealt with by parliament. Many people in Canada feel that same concern, and I should like to see this bill tidied up to some extent to remove, wherever possible, that arbitrariness which may exist through the Governor in Council or through enforcement agencies, spelling this out a little better and more carefully than this bill does. I think that is a legitimate concern and a matter the committee must address itself to in order to rectify this problem. Obviously we should attempt wherever possible to contain within the law sufficient safeguards to ensure that these concerns are in fact unwarranted.

Concern has also been expressed about the availability of licensing after the law is passed. We must ensure that the rights of our citizens are protected, and that the presumption is that a person should have the right to own a gun unless there is a specific and demonstrable reason why he should be prohibited from doing so. If there is a demonstrable reason, I think all reasonable people would agree.

Many people have guns for various reasons, collecting, legitimate sporting activities, and so on. They feel they run the risk of having their rights denied by an arbitrary enforcement of this law. We have to look at that side of the question and satisfy ourselves that the concerns they have expressed are either unwarranted or, if warranted, that corrective action is taken.

There is also a concern expressed about the bureaucratic institution of records in respect of ammunition sales. Every bureaucratic aspect of this bill should be looked at very carefully. The licensing procedures, I am sure, can be achieved in a simple way without the involvement of an enormous bureaucracy. However, knowing the tendency of government and the tendencies of civil servants who are very much inclined from time to time to feather bed and to provide new and better jobs for themselves, this may well create a kind of bureaucratic nightmare about which many of our citizens are expressing a legitimate concern. At the committee stage we should look at this question and at this basic tendency of government to move in that direction so as to ensure under the law that this will not happen and that the people in our society will not be forced into that bureaucratic jungle which may be totally unnecessary.

The next point is with regard to the need for proper and adequate storage of guns. People have expressed the concern that they could be found criminally responsible even if they have adopted reasonable precaution in the storage of their guns. I do not think this concern, as I read the law, is a legitimate one, but I respect those who express that view, and I am quite prepared to listen further to these arguments. I think the committee should do the same thing to ensure that in fact we are not creating a condition whereby innocent people are to be made criminals because of something they did not do.

I am not in any way making a plea that we should amend the law in such a way that there is no responsibility for the safekeeping and storage of weapons and ammunition, because that is important. I do believe, however, that we have to approach this question with reason, to ensure that innocent people are not made the victims of our intentions in this regard.

Concern is also expressed in respect of storage in relation to the distinction between urban and rural environments. It seems to me quite clear that in an isolated case, for instance, of a trapper in the north where there is not a house within 50 miles, it would be unreasonable not to allow that trapper living alone within his home to keep his rifle in the house without locking it up. I see nothing wrong with that. The same situation does not prevail if you live in Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver, or some other area that has some urbanization. The committee ought to look at this question and the distinction that exists in reality between the storage of guns in an urban setting, in a semi-urban setting, and in a remote or rural setting.

We may be able to make an adjustment by amendment to this law that would take into account these realities of a big nation such as Canada so we do not impose totally unnecessary controls on people. We want controls where they are needed, but surely it is in nobody's interest to impose artificial controls when everybody would agree that such is evidently not required.

Concern is also expressed about the arbitrary power extended to enforcement officers in connection with storage procedures to take the weapons out of people's homes. I agree that our enforcement agencies should have the right, if they have reasonable ground to believe that a crime may be committed or that a person is unstable at a given moment in time, to go in and remove a weapon that might be used in a criminal activity, whether it be suicide, the murdering of children or wives, or whatever.

The real problem is how do we know that this legitimate need under the law will not be arbitrarily exercised by enforcement agencies against individuals whom they may not happen to like or want to harass in one way or another? I do not know how to settle that problem, but it is a problem. It is a concern felt by a society that has a great deal of distrust of law-enforcement agencies and of governments themselves.

It is on the basis of that distrust that people are moving now to question whether anybody will do anything right if we give them powers under the law. I respect that concern and feel the committee should look at this question to find out if there is any more satisfactory way to guarantee that that kind of power will not be exercised in an arbitrary way.

Perhaps one thing the committee ought to think about in this connection is that when enforcement officers arbitrarily use this power when it is not warranted, and when there is not reasonable ground, there ought to be some method by which the aggrieved persons can take action against the agency involved. That is one thought that may be useful.

Gun collectors have also expressed a concern. Perhaps here we need an amendment so that it is possible for gun collectors to have a special gun collector's licence allowing them to own and perhaps use prohibited weapons under adequate and proper control. It seems to me there is very little useful purpose to be served by this prohibition in respect of persons who may have $10,000, or even $100,000 worth of guns in their homes. We have all kinds of collectors; some collect antique cars, some guns, and some stamps. There is nothing inherently illegal or improper about doing that. I think we should consider those who have been engaged in this legitimate activity prior to exactment of this law so that perhaps they might be licensed in a special way. They have no record of misuse. They have been responsible for a number of years. I think there might be a special clause, perhaps a grandfather clause or what you will, that would address itself to those who really are law-abiding citizens in this country and who do not feel they are doing anything to affect adversely the rights of any other citizen.

● (1750)

The committee must ensure that no law-abiding citizens should have their possessions confiscated without compensation. I think this is a quite legitimate concern. It is one thing to confiscate something someone has and possesses illegally, but it is another thing to make the possession of something illegal that was not previously illegal, in respect of weapons or whatever the goods are, and confiscate them from a person without compensation. Surely there are basic rights in respect of property.

We as a parliament must address ourselves to the recognition of those rights. Let us not arbitrarily confiscate property, which people had a right to have, without compensation. Surely it is not expecting too much from a parliament which proposes a law and would pass that law in the broad public interest, to turn around and, after taking things from people in the public interest, have the public foot the bill for that confiscation.

Another point is that the committee must also carefully look at those provisions relating to the use of guns by those under 18 years of age to make sure that parents and others who want to train their children in the art or sport of hunting, skeet shooting, or whatever, would be entitled to do that without too much bureaucratic entanglement. The question also has been raised respecting two guarantors on a gun licence application. Who are those persons? Will it be possible to get a gun licence in the future?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And the liability too.

Mr. Cafik: As the hon. member mentions, there is also the liability involved. Does the liability revolve upon the guarantor? This is a question we must deal with in the law and not in the regulations so that the people concerned about this will be able to know what we are dealing with in parliament and will have an opportunity to express themselves against or in favour of the law we are proposing.

The last point I want to make is in respect of the old question of how deeply government should become involved in our personal lives. I think this is an old question and one which gives us all difficulty.

I am inclined to believe that the government should make as few laws as possible and should always have a clear and demonstrable reason for imposing itself on the social system through law. When abuses occur there is a public interest at stake, but clearly we must accept our responsibility when we deal with the question of passing laws and regulations. In respect of gun control, I believe this is an area to which we must address ourselves and where we must intervene to some extent, but I would hope that our intervention would be to the minimum so that we would maximize the guarantees and minimize the bureaucracy and disruption that such regulations and laws will impose on society.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And they should be related to the prevention of crime.

Mr. Cafik: Clearly no one likes government involvement, but the government does have a responsibility in this area to ensure that those who are mentally disturbed and incapable of adequately using firearms, those who have been guilty of violent offences in the past and also those who have been guilty of criminal offences including the use of firearms, should not be allowed a licence. That is understandable. Clearly we must also ensure that firearms are properly and adequately stored and that there is some responsibility on the owner for doing so.

In pursuing these legitimate objectives let us not become lost in this whole bureaucratic entanglement. Let us carefully, as a committee, look at this whole question. Let us look at some of the points I have raised, and at some I have not raised because of the limitation of time. We must genuinely address ourselves to these concerns. I think the most damaging thing that could happen to us as members of parliament and to the committee would be to approach Bill C-83 at the committee stage with a presumption that all those who oppose this legislation are inherently wrong. That would be a denial of their right to involve themselves in this area. I think all of us, even those who oppose this, would agree that we have a right to move in this direction. We want to ensure that what we do is productive and not counter-productive.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this committee will have a very important responsibility. It must have the time to deliberate carefully. It must listen to representations from all sides. It must presume good will on the part of those who appear before the committee. By doing that and by listening as well as speaking, I think we will end up with very good progressive gun control legislation of which we can be proud, and by which those who have rights and who want to be respected as citizens of Canada will not feel aggrieved. In this way we will not create additional alienation within our society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) will be recognized when the debate resumes. It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED REORGANIZATION OF SEARCH AND RESCUE ORGANIZATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the serious loss of men and ships on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in recent years, and in view of the admission of the Minister of National Defence that on the Pacific coast Canada does not have an air-rescue capability after dark, and the statement of the Minister of Transport yesterday that "It has become evident that... the marine search and rescue organization is no longer entirely adequate", I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That the House urges the Prime Minister to order a restructuring of the search and rescue organization under a single agency responsible to one minister, and that immediate steps be taken to procure adequate facilities and equipment for air and marine search and rescue operations on a 24-hour a day basis.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be put if there is unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST COMPANY STOP CONTRACTING OUT FINANCE WORK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43 having to do with a matter that is urgent and pressing. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House directs the Minister of Transport to direct Air Canada to stop contracting out finance work in Winnipeg, Vancouver, Toronto and Ottawa in preparation for a lockout of Air Canada employees at the finance branch in Winnipeg and that the Minister of Labour personally intervene in the three-year labour dispute.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT NEW DAIRY POLICY PROVIDE FOR MILK PRICE SUPPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Since the dairy policy for the year 1976-77 has not yet been announced, industrial milk producers are greatly worried, and it is therefore urgent that the government reassure producers concerning the income levels they may expect for the current year. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House recommend to cabinet to make available to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the funds necessary to allow the Canadian Dairy Commission to maintain milk prices at a level permitting an increase in income equal to that in other sectors of the economy.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED TAKING OF UNDESERVED CREDIT FOR PRICE REDUCTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have this written out today. Given that the recent decline in the rate of inflation in the consumer price index has been caused by declines in the prices of imported goods and of farm prices over which the Anti-Inflation Board has no jurisdiction and that the flexibility of retail prices in reaction to these wholesale farm prices is the same now as it was before the institution of the program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

Northern Affairs

That this House congratulate the public relations officers of the Anti-Inflation Board for the adroit manner in which they have inappropriately taken credit for the board for contributing to these price reductions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

REQUEST THAT ACT BE REPEALED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move an important and urgent motion.

Given the continuing difficulties that arise between the Electoral Boundaries Commissions for the provinces and members of parliament, since also the experience of implementing the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act appears to be inefficient, and since above all the principle of this act is directly contrary to the interests of Quebecers and French Canadians in view of our ever decreasing percentage of representation in this Parliament, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House recommend to the government the repeal of the present act and the preparation of another more adequate and more appropriate.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED DELAY IN GRANTING PERMITS TO DRILL IN BEAUFORT SEA PENDING COMMITTEE STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and ask for unanimous consent to a most reasoned motion. In view of the fact the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development made an announcement recently that the decision to grant or withhold a permit for off-shore drilling in the Beaufort Sea will be delayed for a short period, and in view of the expenditure of approximately $150 million by Dome Petroleum in anticipation of a final permit due to the premature announcement of approval in principle by the government in March, 1974, and in view of the preliminary environmental studies, both private and public, which indicate a potential environmental disaster from such activities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

First, that no decision be taken to grant drill permits until the matter has been specifically referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for study and report to the House, and second, that all correspondence between Dome and the government and all legal opinions regarding the government's financial liability for moneys already spent by Dome be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY ON DRINKING WATER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since our drinking water is an ocean of industrial waste and may be harmful to the health of all Canadians and since, on account of that fact, there are many cases of poisoning each year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs initiate an immediate inquiry on the problem of the quality of water which is definitely very poor in Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec, and report to the House on the steps to take to solve this problem which is endangering the health of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House; is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion may not be put.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—ROLE OF OFFICIALS OF DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT IN GRANTING LEASE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the so called Sky Shops affair and related matters. Can the minister indicate briefly to the House what role members of his senior staff played in this matter, whether these roles were carried out with his knowledge and authorization, and what action he has taken to ensure that the RCMP have access to all relevant information with regard to these activities, if any?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I presume the hon. member is referring to my responsibilities during my tenure as minister of transport, because of course there is no relationship in terms of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. My answer to the latter part of his question is that I was asked by the RCMP whether I would object if they looked at the files which are on file, I think with Public Archives. I gave them full access to them. Beyond that I have no official knowledge. I have, however, been informed informally that there was an exchange of correspondence between the executive assistant of the Minister of the Environment and my executive assistant. But what disposition was made of that beyond that point, I have no personal knowledge at present.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—ROLE OF OFFICIALS OF DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT IN GRANTING LEASE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of the Environment whether he can clarify the role his staff played with regard to the Sky Shops affair, and whether unauthorized acts and signatures were arranged without his knowledge? Can he say anything to parliament at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Within whatever limitations might be placed on that question in the question period I do not know whether any minister could ever describe, in the terms asked, the role played by him or his staff in terms of an affair. It seems to me rather expansive. I think the hon. member will have to be more specific.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF THE ROLE OF OFFICIALS IN GRANTING LEASE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can ask a question of the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman indicate that he has been fully briefed on the role of the offices of these two former ministers of DREE and Transport in this matter, and can he assure this House unequivocally that there have been no improprieties in executive or administrative functions relating to the Sky Shops matters arising out of the actions of these two ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not asked to be fully briefed. I understand that the mounted police are conducting an investigation and that they have submitted a report to the attorney general of the province of Quebec. That is the extent of my knowledge.

Mr. MacKay: If I understand the right hon. gentleman correctly, he is telling the House that he has not been fully briefed and has no knowledge of any of the affairs which have been obliquely referred to by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and he knows nothing of any improprieties in administrative functions which have taken place in those two offices, the office of the former minister of DREE and the former minister of transport.

Mr. Trudeau: No, that is a misunderstanding. What I am saying is that I have no knowledge of the file which has been given by the mounted police to the Quebec attorney general as a basis for any legal action. I do not know what material was given and whether there were or were not recommendations. Of course, I have talked about this matter to the Minister of the Environment and other ministers.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON FILE TURNED OVER TO QUEBEC

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will apprise himself of the circumstances relating to this matter. This is indeed a very serious situation.

I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister advise the House whether he has been in touch with the attorney general for the province of Quebec or the chief prosecutor there to ascertain what progress is being made or what decision has been made with respect to the file turned over to the province's justice department involving Sky Shops and other investigations?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, no, I have not, because the RCMP is properly reporting to the provincial authorities in this matter. As far as I am aware there are no so-called federal offences involved, and therefore the RCMP would not report to me on the matter.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—SUGGESTION SOLICITOR GENERAL ENSURE NO DELAY IN ACTING ON FILE TURNED OVER TO QUEBEC

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Since the Solicitor General has indicated that the file with respect to the Sky Shops investigation has been completed, and since, apparently, it has been in the possession of the department of justice for the province of Quebec for some time, will the minister assure the House that he will monitor the situation so that there will be no appearance of political expediency in any delays which may take place in dealing with this matter?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot admit that this file has been in the hands of the provincial government for some time. It is my understanding that it was only transmitted to the provincial government in the last week or two. I do not know the exact time, but it was recent. On the other hand, and in answer to the second question, I think it might be improper for me to approach the provincial attorney general and put any kind of pressure on him either to take proceedings or not to take proceedings. That is his responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PLANS FOR CARRYING OUT PRIMARY DEFENCE ROLE IN VIEW OF EXPENDITURE ON THE ORION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday the minister acknowledged that the government will proceed to spend $1 billion on 18 aircraft on the absurd assumption that such aircraft will help head off a protracted land war in Europe. I should like to ask the minister how the government plans now—having committed all that money for the next few years in that direction—to meet its primary defence position as stated in the white paper on defence, namely, the protection of Canadian sovereignty, and most specifically I am thinking of the commitment to protect Canadian shorelines for Canadian fishermen in the years ahead.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I replied to the hon. member that the aircraft we are purchasing will in fact help us protect Canadian sovereignty. Beyond that we do have other funds available to carry out the other programs, for instance, to keep the tracker aircraft, which are our coastal surveillance aircraft, flying. We have the funds, despite the large expenditure for the long range patrol aircraft.

● (1420)

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister suggesting that the kind of complex, expensive equipment that will be put in the Orions if the government goes ahead with its decision is the kind that is appropriate for the surveillance of our coastal waters that will be required if the government proceeds, for example, with the 200 mile fishing limit, as it indicated it would? Is the minister saying that we have to spend $1 billion on 18 aircraft to fulfil that kind of role?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am definitely not saying that. The primary role of a long range patrol aircraft is an anti-submarine role, but it also has capabilities that will assist in the surveillance of our coasts and of the north.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—POSSIBILITY OF GREATER EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES BY PURCHASE OF DASH-7R

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the minister would acknowledge that the Orion aircraft will not have anything to do at all with the protection of sovereignty; the minister knows that. With reference to an answer that the minister gave yesterday about the long range employment possibilities to Canada that would accrue from the Orion decision, may I ask him the following question. Would he not admit that by purchasing the appropriate number of Dash-7R aircraft, whose air frames are produced in Canada and whose engines are also produced in Canada, and by re-equipping the appropriate number of Argus aircraft, the minister would not only get more aircraft that would fulfil the job with which he is concerned, but would produce more Canadian jobs at considerably less expense to Canadian taxpayers?

[Mr. Allmand.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, those options have been examined carefully, not only with regard to military capability but also with regard to industrial benefits. As I have stated, the industrial benefits to Canada are greater with the Lockheed purchase than they would be with the purchase of the Dash-7 or the refitting of the Argus. Further, the Dash-7 is not a long range patrol aircraft. It has not got the range to do the job, and it would take at least seven or eight Dash-7's to do the work that two Orions could perform.

INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER MINISTER STUDIED TESTIMONY OF JUSTICE LAMER AT INQUIRY BEFORE APPOINTMENT AS LAW REFORM COMMISSION CHAIRMAN

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice.

Without revealing the content of the testimony of Mr. Justice Antonio Lamer at the inquiry on organized crime, can the Minister of Justice tell the House today, as a follow-up to my questions of March 24 and 31, whether he took personal knowledge of the said testimony before giving Mr. Justice Lamer such an important responsibility as the one of presiding over the Law Reform Commission?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. I understand that matter was examined by the deputy at the time of the original question.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATING FRIENDS OF JUSTICE LAMER BEFORE APPOINTMENT AS LAW REFORM COMMISSION CHAIRMAN

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would rather ask a supplementary of the Solicitor General since it seems to me I will never get anything out of the Minister of Justice. The Solicitor General was there a moment ago. I would appreciate it if he could go back to his seat.

Did the minister ask the RCMP to make an investigation on Mr. Justice Antonio Lamer as is usually done before making an important appointment, and is the minister aware of the deep friendship that existed between Mr. Justice Lamer and tavern keeper Jean-Jacques Côté who publicly testified before the commission on organized crime and against whom criminal action has been taken?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with those allegations but no investigation was made, to my knowledge, by the RCMP.

AIRPORTS

SKY SHOPS AT MIRABEL—REASON SKY SHOPS GIVEN POINTS FOR ADVERTISING WHILE OTHER TENDERERS RECEIVED NO POINTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which is supplementary to that posed by the hon. member for Central Nova. It relates to the recent developments concerning the awarding of government contracts and arises particularly from the summary of tendering procedures for the Mirabel duty free shop which the minister outlined in this House some time ago. Can the minister explain why in his department's attempt to justify the awarding of the duty free concession to Sky Shops, not one of the eight bidders other than Sky Shops were given any points in the evaluation criteria for advertising, while Sky Shops received the maximum, a total of five points in this category? How can the minister reconcile this evaluation in the face of the charges now outstanding relating to false and misleading advertising against Sky Shops?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the fact that that matter is before the courts, it is unfortunate to try to link the question of the advertising contained in the bid and the advertising referred to in the last part of the question. The actual analysis of bids is an extremely complex matter. It could be better dealt with this afternoon when the estimates of the Department of Transport are before the committee, rather than trying to deal with it this way in the House without the material before us.

Mr. Mazankowski: In as much as this is the only evaluation criteria, which is specifically advertising, out of a total of 13 other specific items where every single tenderer received some points, Sky Shops drew the maximum number of five while other bidders did not receive any points for advertising, does the minister not consider this somewhat strange? Does he not consider that there is just a wee bit of suspicion with regard to the evaluation of this total contract? Will the minister now come clean and tell the House why Sky Shops did get the contract?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the examination and the question of the bids was in the hands of an evaluation committee. The minister has come clean by putting the evaluation summary and process before the House in answer to earlier questions. It is there. If certain of the bidders did not put in any information at all about a certain program or proposal as part of their bid, they may not get any points for that. However, that is a matter that really depends on looking back at the bidding process at the time. The material is all available to the hon. member. He should not accuse anyone of not coming clean.

SKY SHOPS AT MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ADVERTISING PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's answer, is he prepared to table this super-duper advertising program which Sky Shops produced to the Ministry of Transport in as much as 99 per cent of the purchases in the duty free concession shops are impulse buying and there is not a heck of a lot of advertising that has to be done? Will the minister table that super-duper contract?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be glad to look at that. Members who have been watching what has been tabled probably are not able to keep up with all the material. They know that I am co-operative and I will see what I can do about this.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF LIMITING SPENDING INCREASE TO TEN PER CENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In working out his budget which he will be presenting in May, is the minister planning to limit the increase in government spending during the next fiscal year to the range of 10½ per cent which was achieved by the Ontario government in its budget which was presented just two days ago and by so doing save the Canadian taxpayers around $2 billion in the next fiscal year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, any changes in the budgetary system, either with regard to revenue or expenditure, are most intelligently left until the budget statement itself.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Knowing the Prime Minister's desire to see the universe unfold as it should, would he care to comment on Dr. Gallup's indication of how the universe is going to unfold during the next two years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to think this one over.

Oral Questions

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY INTO CONDITIONS IN INSTITUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It has to do with the sit-down in Prince Albert Penitentiary. The cause of the sit-down is, of course, still very serious. The prison as a whole has been in a state of deep frustration in recent days. There has been no criticism of the director or assistant director of the penitentiary or, indeed, of the custodial staff. The reason for the sit-down is the fact that an overwhelming percentage of those in the prison are young people, natives or Métis and there are no effective programs for them. Would he, in order to guard against any repetition of what has taken place, have an independent inquiry made, presided over, say, by the Chief Justice of Saskatchewan, to the end that those in penitentiaries will come to the conclusion, and properly so, that any injustices which they claim exist will be removed thereby assuring a degree of peace in the penitentiary which will not be followed again by what has happened in the last ten days—two suicides among the inmates.

● (1430)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was advised just before the question period began that the sit-down strike at Prince Albert Penitentiary had been settled and that everybody is back in their places without any violence or trouble. The reason given for the sit-down strike was the inadequacy of medical services in the penitentiary. This is being investigated. With respect to the matters mentioned by the right hon. member, the high proportion of native people in our penitentiaries, we recognise this problem. Last year we held a federal-provincial conference on this subject at which five or six major native organizations were represented. We have established follow-up procedures and progress is being made. But it remains a serious problem as pointed out by the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question I placed before the minister was this: in order to remove the deep resentment which has apparently developed regarding alleged wrongs, possibly unjustified, will he not, to secure peace in that institution, permit an independent investigation by a judge such as I have suggested?

Mr. Allmand: I do not think that is necessary at the present time. As I say, we have been in touch with the native groups. We have established a committee to deal with this problem. The committee is made up of a leader of the native groups, the Métis and the Indians; we are making progress in dealing with this problem and I do not think a commission of the kind suggested is necessary now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You would not say that if you knew the conditions there.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MR. FERGUSON'S LETTER OF RESIGNATION FROM MARKETING COUNCIL—REFUSAL OF ONTARIO MINISTER TO SIGN CEMA AGREEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of press reports that Ralph Ferguson resigned as Vice-Chairman of the National Farm Products Marketing Council because he was dissatisfied with the application of the CEMA quota system limiting production in Ontario, and that he tendered his resignation in a letter to the minister outlining his disagreement with the CEMA system, I ask the minister whether he will table Mr. Ferguson's letter for the information of the House and the public? In addition, will he inform us whether it is correct that the Ontario minister of agriculture has refused to sign the 1976 quota allocation agreement with that agency and, if that is the case, what plans he has, in consequence, for that egg marketing agency?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Ferguson did submit his resignation and I have accepted it. As I said to an hon. member from the other side of the House who asked me last week, he submitted his resignation last year and I asked him to stay on one year longer; he wanted to return to his farm. He did make several suggestions in the letter that a certain province was not living up to the agreement.

Some hon. Members: Table the letter!

Mr. Whelan: I do not have to table the letter because it was a confidential letter written to me by a member of the Council.

Mr. Hees: You have to table it because you have referred to it.

Mr. Whelan: I do not have to table it until I obtain the concurrence of the person who wrote the letter and follow the correct procedure. He made accusations in the letter about the allocation of the quota. These accusations have been made known to the Council and it is up to the Council to investigate and try to work the matter out. As far as the minister of agriculture in the Province of Ontario is concerned, if they do not want CEMA I do not force CEMA on anyone. If they don't want it and don't want to live up to the agreements, they are the ones who will destroy CEMA, not me.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order. The minister has referred to the contents of a letter which he now refuses to table.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Without going into detail with respect to the precedents, the minister is, of course, obliged to table a document if he has referred to it in the course of debate and advances an argument accordingly; if he initiates a reference to a document he ought to be obliged to table it. However, this certainly has never been held to apply to a situation in which a minister has simply been asked a question about a document and given an answer.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR DELAY OF DECISION ON APPLICATION OF OIL COMPANIES FOR A PRICE INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It arises from the application to the Anti-Inflation Board by such poverty-stricken oil companies as Imperial Oil and Gulf Oil for permission to increase their product prices. The Board has said it may make a decision this week. In view of the fact that the increase, if granted, would be in addition to any increase in the wellhead price expected in July, and since these companies control production, refining and distribution outlets, for which reason their various operations should be treated as those of a single corporate entity, may I ask the minister if he will request the Anti-Inflation Board to postpone any decision with respect to the application for a price increase until the wellhead price has been set either by federal-provincial agreement or unilaterally by the federal government under the provisions of the Petroleum Administration Act?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was advised before coming into the House that the Board had made a decision on this particular application. I am seeking further information as to the details. The point made by the hon. member, one which I have already taken elsewhere, is that until a decision is taken in the negotiations with regard to the basic price of crude oil, any increase should be postponed. I will advocate that such a course of action be followed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the Consumer Price Index covering fuels and utilities has risen more sharply than the index respecting any other item—17.5 per cent during the past 12 months—and in view of the fact that the wellhead price increase in July, which is expected to be in the neighbourhood of $1.50 per barrel, will add $50 to the cost of home heating for the average family and $35 to the cost of operating one car, I should like to ask the minister whether he does not think the time has come to stop these predators who, under the excuse of the energy shortage, are gouging Canadian consumers while at the same time enjoying the highest profit margins in their history?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member has expressed an interesting point of view, and one which I will reflect upon.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF GUIDELINES TO TREAT ALL OPERATIONS OF OIL COMPANIES AS SINGLE ENTITY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since the oil companies control most of the oil production, the pipelines, the refineries and the distribution outlets, may I ask the minister if he is prepared to amend the guidelines of the Anti-Inflation Board so that the operation of the oil companies may be treated as a single corporate entity rather than allowing them to increase the prices of their products before any announcement has been made or agreement reached with respect to the wellhead price? The minister says that the decision has already been made. I would ask the minister whether he is prepared to amend the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines so that this sort of thing cannot continue in the future?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, parliament has, for example, entrusted the surveillance of the tariffs on pipelines to the National Energy Board and the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that their jurisdiction be annulled and placed under the single board is perhaps one which might be reflected upon. Given the relatively slow pace of the anti-inflation legislation in the House up to this point, I am not certain that this could be achieved quickly.

HEALTH

ASSURANCE OF VACCINE FOR SWINE FLU—REASON FOR PREFERENCE FOR IMPORTING VACCINE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the reported further outbreak of swine 'flu in Virginia and its probable spread and consequences, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether there has been any firm commitment from manufacturers that we will have the required amount of vaccine for the immunization of Canadian people, not only for the qualified categories, but for all those qualifying on doctor's certificates?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are going on with various foreign sources at the present time. It would be premature to make an announcement in that respect.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister when he can make this statement and whether he has been in touch with the laboratory in Montreal, which can produce up to 300,000 doses, or with the Connaught Laboratory in Toronto, which could set up the machinery very quickly, and speed is of the essence?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, we have been constantly in touch with the two laboratories concerned and with other sources.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated a preference for importing vaccine rather than producing it in this country. I wonder whether he can give us briefly the reason for that? Is it because the imported vaccine is less costly, or is there some other reason?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons; first of all, costs; second, the capacity to produce the vaccines by the time when we will need them; and third, the safety itself of the vaccines which could be in jeopardy if production in some cases were to be started from scratch.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the minister seems to be saying that Canada cannot produce good vaccine.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the minister give us the figures, in so far as the foreign vaccine is less costly?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Obviously, if the hon. member was unable to understand the first part of my reply, I doubt that he could understand the second.

SUGGESTED DISCUSSION OF SHARED-COST PROGRAMS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Referring to the last federal-provincial conference of finance ministers, and bearing in mind the proposals made for fiscal arrangements that could be of interest to all provinces, and considering that future proposals dealing with cost-sharing programs could quickly do away with those advantages, would the minister, under those circumstances, be willing to accept the proposal of his Quebec counterpart who would like those discussions to include, in the future a package proposal, more specifically fiscal arrangements and cost-sharing proposals so that the provinces might know exactly what the federal government has in mind?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of discussing the policy concerning equalization and cost-sharing programs. However, I must point out that the provincial premiers did suggest dividing the two subjects and having a discussion on cost-sharing programs with the premiers and another on different issues such as fiscal arrangements with the ministers of finance. I am quite prepared to begin a joint discussion on these matters.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH KOREA—POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF SOLID FUEL ROCKET MOTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to the proposed sale of a CANDU reactor and nuclear assistance to South Korea. Will the minister inform the House whether the government was aware that an application had been made by the government of South Korea, with a subsequent sale to that government by the Lockheed Corporation of its equipment for the manufacture of solid fuel for rocket motors, and whether there has been any discussion with the government about that sale?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that solid propellant virtually has only two purposes, either for use in defensive or offensive missiles or rockets for boosting satellites into space, and since there is little likelihood of a space program in South Korea, has the minister checked with the State Department in respect of this sale, and in particular has he knowledge of the protest this week of 119 Congressmen and Senators regarding the growing deterioration in respect of human rights and oppression of the Park régime? Does he feel that the agreements that have in fact been signed with Canada will stand up over time, protecting us from a situation developing similar to that in India?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is a very large question. I thought the hon. member's interest in the subject was dominated by the question of Lockheed. His supplementary question indicates he has other interests, including the danger of nuclear proliferation. I do recall that the particular transaction in respect of rockets was discussed at an earlier stage. At that time we had concluded that there was no particular danger arising either from the possibility of the sale or its integration with any military system in the Republic of Korea. I would be glad to refresh my memory on that particular transaction. The hon. member will recall that the Republic of Korea has dropped its intention, earlier expressed, to acquire a fuel reprocessing plant, in which absence it will not be possible for the Republic of Korea to create a fuel cycle or enter into any type of weapons or explosives program.

ALLEGATION SOUTH KOREA WILL PAY FOR REACTOR WITH TEXTILES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce confirm or deny a statement contained in a report commissioned by the United States Energy Resources Development Agency to the effect that a significant part of the payment to be made by the South Korean government for the CANDU reactor it is purchasing will be in the form of textiles?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question, and I believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did as well. I have not seen that particular document the hon. member refers to, but I would be gald to look at it. To the best of my knowledge there is no commitment or arrangement as to any special consideration for South Korea in terms of textile imports.

EFFECT ON SALARIES ACT OF FAILURE TO APPOINT MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that there has been no appointment to the post of Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, how does the President of the Privy Council propose to resolve problems arising from the provisions of the Salaries Act?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the question is based on a false assumption.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if there is to be an announcement almost immediately, which is quite possible, it would be very nice if it were made in the House. Given that, contrary to the provisions of Section 25 of the Government Reorganization Act of 1970, there are now more parliamentary secretaries than full ministers listed under Section 4 of the Salaries Act, at least in so far as we know at this moment, can the President of the Privy Council tell us which parliamentary secretary is or was not receiving a salary during the hiatus since the resignation of the hon. member for Papineau, and who will have to pay the money back?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not catch all the words of the question, but I think the hon. gentleman might note that there will be an announcement this afternoon regarding a new minister of consumer affairs.

CUBA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT COVERING AIRCRAFT AND TRAINING OF PILOTS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and relates to the agreement with Cuba last week by Air Canada covering DC-8 aircraft and the training of Cuban pilots, which the Prime Minister said on March 31 had been modified by the government. Will he now table the terms of that agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada comes under the Minister of Transport and I do not believe it is customary for him to table contracts with any Crown corporation, but with his usual tolerance and openmindedness I am sure he will look into this question.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will he undertake to inform the House of the terms of the agreement regarding the number of aircraft and the training of pilots?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was not listening to the first part of the question, but, if it referred to the arrangement between Air Canada and Cuba, I will certainly determine whether there is any problem in that regard as far as Air Canada is concerned. I will certainly try to get that information for the hon. member.

FINANCE

REASON PROJECTIONS FOR INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT ARE NOT COMPARABLE WITH THOSE OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Bearing in mind that this administration when it suits its purpose likes to blame international forces, especially those in the United States, for its economic failures, can the minister explain to the House why his projections of inflation in 1976 are now one half as much again as those revealed by the Treasury Department of the United States and why Canadian forecasts of unemployment are one per cent higher than the United States and yet Canadian real growth is expected to be almost 2 per cent lower than in the United States.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I remind the hon. gentleman that the United States went through about a 6 per cent recession in the past 18 months. If he is advocating that kind of economic future for Canada, I would have to disagree with him.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also for the Minister of Finance. Bearing in mind his comments about a 6 per cent recession in the United States, would the minister indicate if he is aware that Canada's inflation level gap between here and the United States is now 5 points and is growing. This five-point gap in respect of inflation is the highest gap in recorded history between the United States and this country. Could he explain, over and above what he has indicated, why the Americans appear to be containing inflation without controls better than we are with controls.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the hon. gentleman that if he would prefer a 10 per cent rate of unemployment, which the Americans have had during the recession, that of course has a certain affect on inflation.

VIEW OF MINISTER ON WHETHER FOOD PRICES WILL CONTINUE TO DECLINE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my further supplementary question is to the Minister of Agriculture. With the background of today's inflation figures where food prices are lower but other prices continue to soar and having noted the minister's contention that food is cheap in Canada, would the minister indicate whether he believes that recent food price declines will set the pattern for 1976 or does he expect food prices to rise substantially in the latter part of this year.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, to make a forecast that would be even greater than that of the former Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board would entail having a knowledge greater than that of God.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PLANNING FOR IMPROVED SURVEILLANCE, SEARCH AND RESCUE IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO 200 MILES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the minister's responsibility for co-ordinating the efforts of surveillance, search and rescue and in view of the extension of Canada's limits in respect of the 200 mile economic zone which will mean a massive undertaking in order to provide surveillance and search and rescue, would the minister indicate what planning is taking place on an inter-departmental basis for this eventuality and what hardware is being considered as well as any other efforts the departmental committee is taking.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Well, Mr. Speaker, to some extent this is hypothetical because we do not yet have a 200-mile limit. However, we very definitely are making plans to adequately cover that limit of 200 miles if it is established, and we will increase the amount of equipment for that purpose.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that at a meeting of the Committee on Fisheries the other day the officials indicated that planning was taking place with regard to the eventuality of the 200-mile limit, would the minister make a statement on motions or ask the House Leader to refer to the committee the whole aspect of the need for capable search and rescue surveillance in Canada so that the matter could be dealt with seriously and so that the planning can take place for the future.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I can reaffirm that the planning is taking place. I will be pleased to announce it as definite and final decisions are taken.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

FISHERIES

BRIGITTE BARDOT'S PROTEST AGAINST SEAL HUNT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of State (Fisheries).

In drafting future regulations on seal hunting, does the minister intend to let himself be impressed by the lucubrations of a former movie star seeking to regain lost popularity? Everybody, you included, has recognized that I am referring to Brigitte Bardot.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is my responsibility to determine what has been lost and what could be regained. On the other hand, I believe I must say that those who protest against this sort of quite legitimate activity on the part of our Canadian fishermen, if they want to be consistent with themselves, should refrain from eating meat, wearing clothes and shoes, and so on.

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES TO EXTEND FOOD INSPECTION SYSTEM

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could the minister tell the House whether, following the crime commission investigation on the matter of tainted meat which took place last fall, new steps have been taken to expand the inspection service under the Food and Drugs Act and, if so, could he tell the House what are those steps the government has seen fit to take to protect the health of Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but could the hon. member repeat his question, for I did not hear it?

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would like to know whether, following the investigation of the Commission of Inquiry on Organized Crime, new steps have been taken respecting inspection under the Food and Drugs Act, whether new inspectors have been appointed to protect the health of Canadians so that the situation of last fall does not recur.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I think I have already tabled in the House, several months ago, the answer to that question. It will be found in the House of Commons Hansard.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday we learned that not only did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development act in bad faith toward the Inuit Tapirisat by not consulting with them about exploration on land now the subject of land claims negotiations, but also that the minister responsible was not even aware that his department had taken action. Today we learned that an official of the Canadian Wildlife Service has not prosecuted companies under environment protection regulations for fear of damaging the political sensibilities of his minister. Please, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister to take some action to ensure that his ministers and senior civil servants operate according to his government's policy and especially make sure that these two ministers smarten up.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TRANSFER OF HOSPITAL AT SAINTE-ANNE-DE-BELLEVUE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House if the negotiations are still under way between his departmental officials and those responsible for the Quebec government with respect to the transfer of an hospital under Quebec jurisdiction in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue? If so, because of the representations made against that transfer by the Quebec branch of the Canadian Legion, does the minister think negotiations will be successful anyway?

[English]

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, negotiations are being carried out between our department and the department responsible in the province of Quebec. They are progressing very well. So far as the termination date is concerned it is quite difficult to tell you that because negotiations are such that sometimes they take considerable time and sometimes when one makes an announcement previous to decisions being made it does not work out too well.

● (1500)

With regard to the Legion and their input into this, they have sent resolutions to my department concerning the transfer of hospitals in Quebec, but my answer to you, Sir, is that we have a policy in the government for transferring hospitals and the reason we have the policy is that we see that in the long run it is more beneficial to veterans, because if we leave the situation as it is presently, in a few years from now we would have nothing but geriatric and nursing case patients and it would be quite impossible to hold people with proper training to look after these patients.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF TASK FORCE ON PROBLEMS OF BUSINESSMEN IN NORTH OBTAINING CONTRACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A short time ago the minister indicated that his department has taken steps to implement some ten of the 42 recommendations and subrecommendations of the task force which was formed to study the problems encountered by businessmen in the north in obtaining government contracts. Can the minister advise the House whether he has taken steps to implement the remainder of the recommendations. I am wondering in particular if he has implemented the recommendation with regard to the bid bond differential.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting in Yellowknife on April 26 to discuss the outstanding recommendations on which we have not been able to reach agreement. I think there are approximately eight to which we said no and several of the recommendations as mentioned by the hon. member were accepted. On the balance we are going to have further discussions on April 26, and amongst these is the one dealing with the bid bond differential.

PERMITS FOR PIPELINES—SUGGESTED REQUIREMENT THAT STAGING AREAS BE CLOSE TO LARGER COMMUNITIES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Bearing in mind the minister's interest in the economy of the north, has he plans when considering applications for a land use permit for a pipeline, that it will be a requirement before a permit is granted that the staging areas will be either in, or in close proximity to, some of the larger communities in order that the northerners will benefit?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The representations on this have been made by the mayor of Hay River. There is a proper procedure under which NTCL makes application for permit, and that proper procedure is being followed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YEWCHUK—POSITION OF MEDICAL DOCTORS WHO ARE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT SITTING ON HEALTH COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Outstanding before the House is an alleged question of privilege by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) to which a number of hon. members have contributed. I thought I might indicate to the House that unless this is inconvenient to members, I propose to bring down a ruling tomorrow.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask the government House leader his intentions with respect to business of the House until the Easter adjournment which he has announced, bearing in mind that we really have only one full parliamentary day left. Would the minister consider bringing forward Bill C-81 dealing with members' salaries and allowances so that we could deal with this matter, unless, of course, it would upset the carefully laid plot in the Liberal caucus with respect to that bill which suddenly came awry.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might put before the House the government's plans for the rest of the session until the Easter adjournment. On the question of Bill C-81, I would like to have an opportunity to talk to the House leaders before the end of the week and on other measures that are still outstanding.

The debate on second reading of Bill C-83 will be continued until Monday, when the allotted time comes to an end. On Tuesday and Wednesday it is our intention to deal with Bill C-20 and Bill S-31 and, of course, the motion to adjourn. There has been some discussion among the House leaders that if there is necessity for a recorded vote following the completion of second reading of Bill C-83, it would take place at 4.30 p.m. on Tuesday. I hope that can be made an order of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council in respect of a possible vote on second reading of Bill C-83. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Peters: It seems to me that when we have a closure motion, the government should not really expect any kind of consideration from hon. members with regard to the varying of the time of the order which already has written into it the time allowed for the consideration of the bill. If we as members are being asked for such consideration, then I suggest the House leader should no longer put forward closure motions which in any case would probably not have been necessary.

Mr. Speaker: For the sake of the regularity of proceedings, I take it the House has already pronounced itself on the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council, and the hon. member for Timiskaming was speaking on a separate and general point of order.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a brief point of order. I ask for clarification. I asked a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and received an answer with which I was well satisfied. I then attempted to ask the same type of question of the Minister of the Environment. I varied the wording slightly because I wanted to make it clear that as a result of a couple of short conversations with both these hon. gentlemen, I was aware of the fact that they had no knowledge of some of the matters referred to by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister of the Environment seemed to want to respond to my question and I wonder if he might now be given an opportunity to indicate whether he wishes to put something on the record.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I have ruled on the general nature of the question. I invited the hon. member to rephrase his question to make it more specific because, as I recall, the hon. member had put a question asking the minister to describe to the House the involvement of himself or his staff or officials in the Sky Shops affair. That was the language of the question, I believe. It seems to me that it might very well call for a very short answer on the part of the minister; but if the answer is in the positive, it might be far too general in nature to be included, and I cannot wait for the answer to find out whether it would be suitable under the regulations. That is why I did not rule the question out, but I asked the hon. member to be more specific.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. The question is so important that I think members who are questioning ministers should understand the rules. I was rather interested in your refusal, sir, to allow the question of the hon. member for Central Nova. It seemed to me quite appropriate for a member to ask a minister to answer a question with respect to the operations of his department or his staff regarding almost any matter, whether or not under his jurisdiction. I wonder if Your Honour is, in fact, saying that we cannot ask questions of ministers with respect to the acts of members of their departments which may be regarding matters not under the minister's jurisdiction, and whether the minister is not responsible for the acts of his departmental officials and staff. I would be interested to have Your Honour's guidance with respect to whether or not we can ask questions of ministers in that general area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That consideration was not involved in the difficulty with that question. Although both questions, the one to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the one to the Minister of the Environment concerned the responsibilities of the ministers on which they no longer report to parliament, that was not part of the difficulty. The difficulty was simply that the question was too general in nature.

The difficulty which the hon. member raises may be another separate one, but until we face this specific incident I do not think I should generalize.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)—IDENTIFICATION OF MEMBERS OPPOSING STANDING ORDER 43 MOTIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

My question of privilege is based on one of our Standing Orders. I wish to draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that since the Standing Orders of the House have been changed, the motions moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43 must be moved as soon as the House opens, or between two o'clock and 2:15.

Since this procedure has been introduced, I have noticed that motions moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43 are much more serious and concern much more than before matters which require the immediate attention of the House.

However, government members still have the habit of voting systematically against any motion made under Standing Order 43 by the opposition without identifying themselves, which is not always in the best interest of the population. What is more disillusioning, Mr. Speaker, for the reader of Hansard, is that he cannot know which member objected to the motion, and that does not do justice to the hon. member who did so.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to an important part of our Standing Orders, Standing Order 28, which reads as follows:

28. Every member desiring to speak is to rise in his place, uncovered—

—this is a bit obsolete because no one wears a hat these days—

—and address himself to Mr. Speaker.

However, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of democracy itself and out of respect for our institution, I respectfully submit that any hon. member who wishes to speak in this House and whose intervention aims at justifying a ruling of the Speaker must comply with Standing Order 28 and ask for permission to speak, even if it is only to object to the moving of a motion by simply saying no.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today I moved a motion on a very important and urgent matter, as it had to do with thousands of industrial milk producers. Unanimous consent was refused by an hon. member, but from reading Hansard tomorrow nobody will know who he was, and yet he did take the floor.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford:

That members of this House be required to comply with Standing Order 28, even when opposing or seconding a motion moved under Standing Order 43.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) certainly brought up very interesting and important points with regard to the interpretation of our Standing Orders and procedures. It is not a question of privilege but a mere matter of procedure. It might be well to explain, first of all, that it is not a matter of getting the floor, pursuant to Standing Order 28, but merely of presenting a motion, without expressing agreement with it. That is an entirely different matter, because there is no question of discussion it. A motion was put merely before the House, under Standing Order 43, which requires unanimous consent of the House. If there is not unanimous consent, a single dissident vote suffices to to prove it. Interpretation of Standing Order 28 therefore constitutes not a question of privilege but a matter of procedure. That problem could perhaps be looked into by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the course of the question period I asked a question of the government House leader with respect to the problem which seems to have arisen out of the fact that if the Salaries Act is to be observed, there is in fact one parliamentary secretary who has been paid—at least, it would appear that way—and therefore sits as a member of this House improperly drawing upon the revenues and resources of the Crown as a result of the resignation of the hon. member for Papineau. I am not sure of the date with respect to that.

Mr. Nielsen: Tuesday, March 16, 1976.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I understand now that it was Tuesday, March 16. The President of the Privy Council, in his answer to the question, indicated that there is likely to be the appointment of a minister later in the day. I ask your Honour, at your leisure, to look at section 25(2) of the Parliamentary Secretaries Act under the Government Organization Act, 1970, dealing with parliamentary secretaries. It provides:

There shall not be at any one time more parliamentary secretaries than the number of ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided in section 4 of the Salaries Act.

If my figures are correct—and it is subject to correction—there are 27 parliamentary secretaries and 26 ministers to whom this would apply.

Mr. Blais: One minister has two portfolios.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The question then arises: What happens beyond this day if there is a minister who holds two portfolios, as indeed I suspect one additional minister of the Crown might, at perhaps around four o'clock or thereabouts, or whenever these ceremonies take place and wherever they take place?

An hon. Member: Don't you know?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My time will come, I hope. In any event, there may well be one minister holding two portfolios. I ask the Chair to look into that as a possible solution to the problem. However, I respectfully point out that the way section 25 reads, it would appear that the number of portfolios a particular minister holds does not matter, but what is important is the number of ministers. I have not addressed myself very much to that secondary point, but I think there is a real point to be investigated. I am sure the government House leader would want it investigated because if a minister is sworn in today either as an acting minister or a minister holding two portfolios, in my respectful submission since March 16 there would have been paid out of the revenues of Canada a parliamentary secretary's indemnity to one too many parliamentary secretaries.

I am not sure who it would be or how it would be figured out, but I think the point is there and I am sure the government House leader joins me in wanting to have this matter cleared up.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, first I should like to express my gratitude to the hon. member for drawing this matter to our attention so early. In the event he might be right—and

I am not granting him any rectitude in this regard—he probably will have saved some hon. member on this side some difficulty. I simply point out that with reference to the parliamentary secretary who has carried the responsibilities of consumer and corporate affairs, Your Honour and hon. members opposite will recognize that his responsibilities have increased substantially, and there ought to be no attempt on the part of the opposition to try to subtract any salary from that person.

I point out, as well, that perhaps the hon. member opposite has not recognized that the Prime Minister is also part of the cabinet and is a minister. In addition, quite apart from any announcement that might be made today, tomorrow or in the future, we have at the present time one minister with two portfolios, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of State for Science and Technology, and he has two parliamentary secretaries working on his behalf.

● (1520)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that this matter ought to be looked into and that there should be a report back to the House about it. However, with respect, I disagree with my hon. friend's suggestion that Your Honour should be called upon to rule on this. This is a point of law and it is the same sort of thing we had a few days ago. If the point is reached when Your Honour has to decide what pay to give members of the House, you will be busier than ever. It seems to me that it is for the government to look into the matter, or for the Auditor General, or for the courts, but not for Your Honour.

Mr. Speaker: I would, perhaps with unseemly haste, agree at least in a preliminary way with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I was, throughout these remarks, asking myself what responsibility I have. There is perhaps an administrative matter involved on the part of the House for which I do have some responsibility, but, again, I suspect that the responsibility lies elsewhere. However, the matter has been referred to and it will certainly be examined to see whether there are any responsibilities so far as the Chair, on a point of order, is concerned. Perhaps I shall have something more to say about it at a later time.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford on a point of order.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, the hon. member for Bellechasse raised a question of privilege which you considered as being a procedural matter and I would perhaps be ready to agree. But just the same it is disappointing on this side of the House and I would humbly ask you to consider the matter so that we on this side of the House may refrain from moving motions under Standing Order 43. On the other hand, it cannot be expected that members of this side will object. I remember quite well that on many occasions I saw persons in the galleries saying yes or no and I do not see how those words can be ascribed to members when they come from the galleries but are considered as part of our proceedings. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to study this question so that the individual or the member of the House who wishes to oppose a motion moved under Standing Order 43 may identify himself and we may know for sure what he has said, a "no" generally, when he opposed a motion under Standing Order 43, that he has really said those words while participating in the debates of the House and that they have not been said by someone in the galleries.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important matter because words from people we cannot identify because they are not members of this House on extremely important questions often raised by motions moved under Standing Order 43 could make this House look rather ridiculous.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question put by the House leader of the official opposition to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) who is at the same time the government House leader.

Considering that Bill C-84, which has not yet been presented to the House and is still at the first reading stage, seems to be the cause of considerable delays in the House because of very lengthy discussions, could the President of the Privy Council tell the House if there will be special meetings of the House leaders concerning Bill C-84 so that we can reach agreement without having to refer to Standing Order 75A, 75B or 75C? If that is not possible, when will these meetings be held? Could we delay the study of Bill C-84 until next fall so we may celebrate the Saint-Jean-Baptiste, the holiday of French Canadians, as well as Confederation Day so that this House might be adjourned during those two weeks?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, this is one of the bills that I should like to discuss with the House leaders. I am trying to arrange a meeting for tomorrow and I hope my hon. friend will be present at that time. There is fairly long agenda before us to the end of June, and I share his wish that we should dispose of this business before then. He said that he hoped we would not use Standing Order 75A, B or C on Bill C-84. I certainly had not contemplated anything of that kind. I had hoped, however, that there would be a disposition on the part of the House leaders and the House generally to find some way in which we can debate Bill C-84, have an expression of all points of view and come to a decision within a reasonable time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on this question, perhaps one point we might agree on is to reduce the length of speeches.

CONSUMER PRODUCT WARRANTIES ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR STANDARDIZATION OF WARRANTIES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-433, to amend the Combines Investigation Act, to provide for the standardization of warranties, and to define the minimum provisions thereof.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the Combines Investigation Act to provide for the standardization of warranties and to define the minimum provisions thereof. All too often, the consumer purchases an automobile, refrigerator or any one of hundreds of products covered by warranty, only to have the product break down. When the consumer reads the warranty's fine print, he discovers that the document is so filled with exceptions and qualifications that the warranty is almost useless. This bill will correct these anomalies.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: 4,575, 4,985 and 5,130.

[Text]

FISHING DRAGGERS

Question No. 4,575—Mr. MacKay:

What branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is responsible for reviewing and granting subsidies to companies which own fishing draggers?

Measures Against Crime

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): in so far as Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: The Transportation Industries Branch gives subsidies to shipbuilders, including some who build draggers, but does not grant subsidies to companies which own fishing draggers.

LEGISLATION AMENDING THE NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

Question No. 4,985—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has legislation amending the National Transportation Act been drafted and, if so, when will it be presented to the House?

2. Is it intended that the Minister's Strategic Planning Officers' recommendations and findings, if any, will be (a) converted into amendments in the framework of the legislation (b) included in the proposed legislation?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Legislation amending the National Transportation Act is currently being drafted and it will be introduced in the House during the next session.

2. (a) Yes; (b) yes.

COST OF SX CATEGORY

Question No. 5,130—Mr. Orlikow:

What is the cost to the government in (a) salary (b) office rental (c) supplies (d) telephones (e) support services for each employee in the SX category?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety, would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every department, which would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, how many times have we heard the saying, "Don't choose a book by its cover". The truth of the matter is that frequently when the content is weak, the publisher tries to enhance the appeal by putting on an attractive cover. Such is the case with this peace and security legislation which we are debating today, and its companion piece dealing with capital punishment. Never, since I have been a member, have I seen legislation introduced in such a beautiful jacket—beautifully stylized and in three colours. When we open up this beautiful jacket, we find that all the material is nicely tucked into two separate pockets in the folder. Inside these two nicely designed pockets we find two bills and three sets of explanatory notes, one entitled "Press Release", one entitled "Highlights of the Peace and Security Legislation" and the last entitled, "Explanatory Notes". If we read all these supporting documents to the legislation, we find in fact that they merely paraphrase each other and sometimes the paragraphs are actually identical. I can only come to the conclusion that the government is trying to impress and "snow" the media, legislators and the public.

Throughout the government's con game they keep saying that they are going to stiffen or lengthen the penalties for certain violent crimes in order to give peace and security to Canadians. This Mr. Speaker, is all so much window-dressing because, in fact, the government has in its so-called peace and security legislation weakened, rather than strengthened, the areas dealing with dangerous offenders or habitual criminals in that they have watered out the habitual criminal and dangerous sexual offender sections in favour or their new section on dangerous offenders. They have, in fact, lessened the severity of the law for many in exchange for a very moderate strengthening of the law for a few, those few who could still have come under the severe restrictions of the law which the government is repealing.

At the same time, the government talks about life sentences as an indication of its determination to be severe with murderers, and that it is interested in protecting the peace and security of Canada. The government does not say that in its new, so-called strengthened legislation a murderer, under certain circumstances, could still get out, completely paroled, in seven years from the date of conviction.

In having to package these two bills in such a beautiful jacket with the three pieces of explanatory notes, the government is trying to dupe Canadians. All parliament needed was the bills. We did not need the expensive jacket and we did not need the three sets of explanatory notes. Surely, this is not government restraint, because the jacket alone would probably cost $1 for each one, and I do not know how many thousands the government has given out. I guess when the government is concerned that the content is so weak, they really believe that if you put on an attractive, appealing cover you can sell the story inside. The government appears to have gone out to sell this legislation, because not only have they used the above physical means, but they have also introduced the time-worn idea of a catch-phrase, just like in an election where you use nice pamphlets and a neat slogan. The catch-phrase here is "peace and security". Now, who in their right mind could ever disagree with that?

"Peace" is a word with a meaning so elusive that man has been chasing it like the Holy Grail, but has never found it. Everybody in Canada wants peace. I dare say everybody in the world wants peace. So, naturally, we agree with that part of the slogan. Peace! A nice idea; I would like to have it. The second word is "security". Again, everybody in Canada would like to have security. I believe everybody in the world would like to have security. Therefore, we agree that security is nice. Put the two together, "peace and security", and we have the best of all possible worlds. We all want peace. We all want security. Let's buy the package.

Then on the cover the government puts "Protection Against Violent Crime". Now, nobody in their right mind is in favour of crime. Even more so, everyone abhors violent crime. This legislation is now, according to the printing on the front cover, going to give us protection against violent crime. It certainly is slick. We cannot disagree with the words used. But do these words really tell us what the legislation is all about? No. The government calls for protection against violent crime, but how do we protect against violent crime with this legislation? To protect us against violent crime we must wipe out the root causes—slums and lack of education—and we should encourage rehabilitation, reorientation. This will help protect us: the giving out of longer sentences, which only comes after the fact of a violent crime, not taking guns after the fact of a violent crime. Perhaps that phrase "protection against violent crime" is a little misleading.

Similarly, the government flogs the idea that, as a major portion of this legislation, they are advocating gun control. With the increase in violent crime, the increase in murder, the increase in the use of weapons in crime, especially guns, most people are presently in favour of gun control. I am in favour of gun control. I believe that everybody in this House is probably in favour of gun control. However, when we start to define what gun control is, we find that not everybody is in agreement.

Today we are dealing with the first bill in this sweet little package, Bill C-83. This deals with: gun control, prison breaks, wiretapping, dangerous offenders, crime inquiries, and parole and sentencing. I object to government's introducing omnibus bills in a package such as this. As a legislator, I may be anxious to support one or more portions of the six in this package and, at the same time, wish to vote against one or more portions. By introducing all of these in one package, it is impossible for the individual member of parliament to cast a vote on each of the serious proposals in this legislation. By putting them in a package or omnibus bill, the government wants an "all or nothing" situation.

In my view, the good which I might like to support might be lost with the bad. It's like the old phrase of throwing out the baby with the bath water. Or, if the bill passes, we are going to incorporate what I believe may be bad law into the statute books along with what might be good law. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I support the motion of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) which would be to try to sever the lengthy gun control section of some 38 pages of the 73-page bill away from the rest of the bill. I am sure most of the serious legislators in this chamber would prefer to have had shorter bills—one bill for each of the topics encompassed by this omnibus bill. If that had been done, I am sure the non-controversial sections would have been passed and would now be law; while we could give a more in-depth consideration to those areas where people are concerned that the law is not as well drafted as one might hope.

● (1540)

I would now like to deal with some of the substantive aspects of Bill C-83. The first major proposal is that of gun control. I believe the vast majority of Canadians are in favour of gun control, but when one reads this legislation one is entitled to have serious reservations. I believe in gun control which is clear, defined and definable, I am not happy with the legislative proposals I find in this bill.

I believe the criminal law should be spelled out clearly in the Criminal Code, I believe that any person who wants to know what the criminal law of this country is should be able to go and look in the Criminal Code and read it. I do not believe, as this legislation proposes, that the criminal law should be changed by delegating powers to the governor in council, the commissioner of the RCMP, the attorney-general of the ten provinces, or the minister of justice.

If we follow the route of delegation of powers through the passing of regulations as proposed by the legislation before us, it will be impossible for persons to know what the Criminal Code really is, because they will have to buy not only the Criminal Code but also a book of regulations, which might be another 50 or 60 pages in length and which will always be in a state of change and flux as the governor in council, the commissioner of the RCMP, the attorneys-general of the various provinces, or the minister of justice may amend, alter, repeal or add new regulations, all at various times.

The greatest concern I have with the proposal of gun control as put forth in this legislation is that it is not set out clearly in black and white in the Criminal Code. I believe that criminal law, being a penal law, must be interpreted strictly, as the courts have done in the past, and that for it to be strictly interpreted it is only fair that the citizens of the country should have an easy opportunity of finding out what that law is. I believe we can only do that by having it set out in one place, that is, in the Criminal Code of Canada. If the government insists on going by the regulatory route and the delegating of powers, I believe the criminal law will become unreadable, that people will tend to ignore it and that it will become a nightmare to enforce.

Bad law, unmanageable law, is probably worse than having no law at all, because if people ignore the law it brings the entire system of law enforcement and administration of justice into disrepute. I believe the gun control section of this proposed legislation is bad law because of the granting of regulatory powers and the delegating of powers. I plead with the government to encompass all the proposed gun control legislation in the Criminal Code. If a form is to be used, I would suggest that the section dealing with the form should indicate that a certificate must be filled out as per form A in appendix 1 and we should put a sample form A in appendix 1 at the back of the code.

I would hope that if, because of some oversight or some housekeeping measure that needs to be taken from time to time, need arises to correct or to make for better implementation of the law, a short bill could be introduced asking to alter the form in appendix 1 or to alter the various sections. I would hope that in the sections dealing with the type of person who could grant a certificate or be the registrar of firearms, or could be the guarantor of an applicant, appropriate lists could be set out in the Criminal Code. If this is not found to be sufficient after some experimentation, then one or more of those on the lists could be deleted, or one or more added by a fast amendment to the Criminal Code passed in the normal way through the House of Commons and the Senate. I believe the criminal law is too important to be delegated to others and that amendments and changes should be made only by parliament itself.

In the present proposed legislation on gun control, there are some 27 clauses or subclauses which give regulatory power to the governor in council, the commissioner of the RCMP, the attorneys-general, or the minister of justice, and in one case the proposed legislation provides for the balkanization of our Criminal Code by allowing the attorneys-general of the various provinces to pass amendments. We could have ten different regulations passed by the ten different provinces, all providing penalties under the Criminal Code, so that a person would not know what the Criminal Code actually is as he moves from one province to another. In a more substantive manner, I am concerned that certain regulations which this legislation proposes could, in effect, be made by the governor in council without obtaining the authorization of parliament and could change the very intent of the law.

In this bill, parliament is asked to classify certain weapons as prohibited weapons, and certain other weapons, such as hand-guns, as restricted weapons. Then, parliament is asked to allow the governor in council to change hand-guns from restricted weapons to prohibited weapons by order in council. I do not believe parliament is really intending to prohibit hand-guns at this time. If parliament wants to wipe out hand-guns—and there are advocates of that course—then let us do so now, in parliament, by voting that way. If, on the other hand, as I believe, parliament is not prohibiting hand-guns now then the governor in council should not be allowed to prohibit them later. If it is deemed that hand-guns should be prohibited, the legislation should be brought forth in parliament so that parliament itself can decide that point.

Mr. Speaker, I have spent some time explaining my abhorrence of the fact that the government wants to introduce massive amounts of delegation of powers to regulatory bodies into the criminal code. It strikes me that the government will make this part of the proposed legislation unwieldy, difficult to understand and will be inviting the public at large to ignore the law. The public at large to which I am referring, is the law-abiding public who would be using firearms for legal purposes. By passing legislation such as proposed, we would be placing a roadblock in the path of their carrying on legitimate, legal activities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on some of the penal aspects of the proposed gun control legislation as they would affect persons who are obviously not carrying firearms for legal and legitimate purposes. Since the revision of the Criminal Code in 1955 which reduced it from well over 1,000 sections to some 600 sections, we have heard that there should be no minimum sentences in penal law but that it should be left to the discretion of the judge to pass sentence based on the circumstances of the case. In section 98(1) we find the government introduces a minimum one-year sentence if a person is convicted of using an offensive weapon to assist in the commission of a criminal act or to escape from a criminal act. This legislation breaks that principle. I believe it is proper for the government to propose minimum sentences in the area of gun control when a person is using firearms for blatantly illegal purposes. Frankly, I believe the one-year minimum sentence under section 98(1) should be longer. But to put real teeth into the matter, I feel that a person should be brought to trial on this section at or before he or she is brought to trial on the substantive offence he or she committed.

I say that the prosecution, under section 98(1) should be brought at the same time, or before, so that we can avoid plea-bargaining in what is obviously a serious situation by present standards. If the prosecution were forced to proceed with section 98(1) before, or at the same time as the substantive offence, It would avoid the accused pleading guilty to the substantive offence and getting an agreement from the Crown to drop or withdraw the charge of using an offensive weapon while committing that offence. This procedure, Mr. Speaker, could easily be introduced into the Criminal Code, and I would recommend that the government consider it.

As a former Crown attorney, and knowing what plea-bargaining is all about, I can assure you that in the crowded courts of today the accused and his lawyer will refuse any consideration of pleading guilty and will threaten to go into a lengthy trial in order to force the Crown to drop one or more charges. Knowing the log-jams before the courts today, I think everyone will agree that it is an enticing proposition for Crown counsel to accept a plea to the substantive charge in order to drop what has heretofore been thought of as the lesser charge; for example, the possession of a firearm while commiting the substantive offence.

I would now like to deal with sentences for other offences in the gun control sections. In order to try to impress everybody on how serious the government is about dealing with gun control sentences, the government has proposed that the maximum sentence be moved up to 5 years in jail, when previously it was 2 years, and has proposed to increase to 10 years in jail the maximum sentence for all those offences where previously it was 5 years. On the other hand, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the old maximums of 2 years and 5 years were rarely ordered by any judge, and that increasing the maximum and failing to put on a minimum is really just a bit of window-dressing, because the new maximums of 5 years and 10 years will never be ordered by a judge. In each of the sections where the government proposes increasing the maximum sentence for these weapons-related offences, I would suggest that a maximum of six months should be included, if in fact the government is really interested in putting teeth into the law respecting gun control.

Further, Mr. Speaker, one aspect of gun control, or lack or gun control, which for many years has horrified society in the North American environment is the prospect of guns being purchased by mail order. Certain sections of the present legislation allow firearms to be ordered by the mail order method, including the ordering by mail or restricted guns or hand-guns. I suggest that the government would enhance the feeling of security of most Canadians, and would not unduly be infringing upon the rights of those who wish to use firearms for legitimate purposes, if the mail ordering of guns was eliminated. Believe the majority of our people would be quite willing to wipe out the so-called mail order sales of these potentially dangerous weapons. If a person is so keen on a certain type of gun, then I suggest that person can travel if necessary to a centre where he can purchase that gun, or he can arrange for his nearest gun shop or hardware store to order it, so that he can purchase it over the counter, going through all the necessary precautions as is the usual case in firearm purchases.

Again, Mr. Speaker, if the government is really serious in controlling the misuse of firearms, etc., it will change the discretionary order a judge can make prohibiting the carrying or possession of firearms or ammunition under section 102(1) to a compulsory order of prohibition, to force people to abide by the law for fear of losing their rights. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the same section, 102(1), of this bill, should include allowing a judge to pass an order of prohibition respecting any person convicted of a violent crime even though the crime may not be related to firearms or ammunition. A person so misguided and capable of using violence without the assistance of a firearm is surely just as capable of using a firearm in the carrying out of his or her intention, with the prospects of even more violent consequences to follow.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I have a few more comments dealing with the section on guarantors. I do not like it. It indicates that a person who wants to have a licence to possess guns would have to have two guarantors who had known the applicant for at least two years, and these guarantors would be on a list of persons to be set forth in the future by regulation. I suggest that those persons should be listed in this section now, and if amendments need to be made later, that can be arranged. I also believe that provisions should be made for statutory declarations, much like we have for a person in order to get a passport, in the case where a person has just moved into an area and would not have known two people for the required two-year period who could act as guarantors.

Mr. Allmand: That is provided for.

Mr. Dick: I have not seen it, and I have read through this section three times. Perhaps this is to come in the form of regulation.

Mr. Allmand: It is in the law.

Mr. Dick: In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should say that the present section 101(B), covering the use of another person's firearm under the direct supervision of the owner, should be incorporated into the present legislation. Thus, persons who may be carrying out target practise with pistols could exchange hand-guns for target practise shots. Perhaps it could also be developed so that a father could supervise his son in the training and use of firearms. In essence, Mr. Speaker, the legislation dealing with gun control, as proposed, puts an onerous burden of control, restriction and regulation on the legitimate and lawful user of firearms by means of regulation, licences, permits, certificates, etc., but does not in any way come to grips by means of deterrence or punishment with those who would unlawfully use firearms in contravention of the rules set forth in the legislation.

● (1600)

I do not like the delegation of power to the governor in council, the commissioner of the RCMP, the attorneys-general of the provinces, the minister of justice, or local registrars to set out the regulations and conditions for the giving of various permits, licences, certificates, registration forms, and so on. Similarly, I do not like the fact that the forms are not set out precisely in this legislation, rather, there is a declaration that they will be announced. I strongly believe that the forms should be in an appendix attached to the Criminal Code so that people will have certainty in the knowledge of what these forms will require. Last, I do not like the fact that conditions will be announced which can be changed in the future without the knowledge of the person who is a legitimate user of guns. I suggest that the necessary conditions should be set out in this legislation and that perhaps only in exceptional, proven cases could a further condition be imposed by a local registrar.

Mr. Speaker, there are more aspects to this bill than just gun control. I would like now to deal with some of those other topics. Section 5 of this bill deals with prisoners trying to escape, or persons who would assist a prisoner to escape. It increases the maximum sentence from five years to ten years. Again, Mr. Speaker, if the government were really interested in security and in giving people a sense of security, I suggest that it would be a step in the right direction if there were a minimum sentence of, say, two years in order to try to deter prisoners from breaking jail or to deter persons from assisting a prisoner to break jail.

The increase from five years to ten years, as the maximum sentence under this section is, is in itself a bit of a laugh. I do not believe that in recent years any person has been given the maximum sentence of the present five-year term. If this is so—and I would look forward to the Solicitor General's comments on this—it seems obvious that it is unlikely that increasing the maximum to ten years will result in any great number of long-term sentences being handed out, as the perpetrators of these proposals intimate. I will be asking the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) in committee the number of charges laid under this section in each of the past five years, along with the sentences given to each person duly convicted.

Included in this omnibus bill are sections dealing with what is commonly called wiretapping. In this bill the government attempts to go back to the original bill which it presented in 1973, and to repeal or wipe out the amendments proposed and made law that year. Some people will say that these amendments will give the police too wide powers and that by suggesting these amendments the government is undermining the civil liberties of the individual. The amending of section 178.16 to allow as evidence at a trial the direct or indirect evidence gained by a wiretap, even though the wiretap is illegal, will assist in strengthening the efforts of the law enforcement agencies and will thus enhance the security of law-abiding persons.

However, I believe that this alone might open the door for law enforcement agencies to go ahead and use illegal wiretaps on a rather frequent basis, rather than go through the administrative procedure of getting proper authorization. For this reason, I believe the widening of this power to introduce evidence from illegal or improper wiretaps should be counterbalanced with a clause to the effect that in any case where the wiretap is proven or shown to have been made without due authorization, the presiding judge should be required to order the person responsible for the illegal or improper wiretap to be charged under the appropriate section of the Criminal Code.

The fact is that by bringing in this rule of evidence and making it statutory, the government is making the rule of evidence as it applies to wiretapping conform to the rule of evidence dealing with statements improperly or illegally obtained. The essence of the matter is that the improper or illegal statement or wiretap is only available if it is shown that the evidence it divulges is true. I, quite frankly, am happy that our rules of evidence in this country in these matters are substantially different from those applicable in the United States, where I believe the legislatures and the courts have gone overboard in giving the criminal rights, to the detriment of the law-abiding citizen.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed in principle to the extension of the wiretapping powers to give the appropriate law-enforcing agencies their chance at intercepting, proving and hence stopping crime. But I do believe that in giving these broader powers we should also set up some countervailing powers such as I have indicated. Similarly, in order to keep strong these counterbalancing powers, I would be, in principle, against the repeal of section 178.23 which sets out that notice is to be given to each person subjected to a wiretap.

However, I would, in order to assist the police in ongoing investigations of a lengthy nature, support an amendment to existing section 178.23(1B) which would indicate that a judge has a further discretionary power to adjourn the giving of notice, sine die if necessary, in exceptional cases based on strong evidence that the giving of notice as contemplated by the section would not be in the interests of justice, or probably would only serve as notification to criminals that their on going criminal activity was being monitored. The only further proviso I would add to adjourning sine die the giving of notice would be that all notices must be given when a person becomes charged with any of the offences under surveillance during the period of the wiretap. So, Mr. Speaker, I would not mind supporting the wiretapping amendments contemplated giving enlarged powers to law enforcement officers if this were balanced by reasonable caution in order to protect the civil liberties of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to address myself to the new section of the Criminal Code proposed by this bill which is to deal with so-callled dangerous offenders. The dangerous offenders part of the Criminal Code will wipe out the existing preventive detention, habitual criminal and dangerous sexual offender sections, and in my view will water down and severely weaken the present law. The government has advertised that it intends to strengthen the legislation to provide for peace and security and to provide for protection against violent crime. This may be so, although I doubt it. But at the same time, sections of the Criminal Code will be wiped out which would better protect society if enforced than the sections which are to be introduced.

To begin with, the definition indicates that the new offences which can be prosecuted under the dangerous offenders part being introduced will be offences for which a person must be liable to imprisonment for five years or more. Thus, we see that the new standard is an offence of ten years' imprisonment, whereas the present standard is one of five years' imprisonment. Thus, on the face of it, it does not appear that the government is making prison sentences more severe for these so-called dangerous criminals, although it has announed that it is doing this as part of a great package on peace and security.

At the same time, the new proposals allow for the imprisonment of persons convicted of certain sex-related crimes, but are significantly weaker in this regard than the present law, in that one of the sex crimes covered by the present law which is applicable to dangerous sex offenders is dropped and applications for preventive detention for an indefinite period for attempts to commit certain sex offences are dropped. The present law covers the sex offences enumerated and any attempts to commit those offences. The new law proposed covers only sexual offences if they are committed, but does not cover the possibility of making application respecting persons who attempt to commit those effences but fail. Obviously, the present law is much stronger than the proposed law in this regard. Under the new proposed dangerous offenders section, it appears that the criminal is only a dangerous offender if he is successful in raping his victim, whereas if he is caught in the act and does not have time to complete it, or is unsuccessful in completing the rape and therefore has only attempted it, he becomes a non-dangerous offender. This is a ridiculous situation.

● (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is ther unanimous consent?

Mr. Dick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I do not wish to continue.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-83, the crime prevention bill presented by my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). As Solicitor General, my prime goal and that of all the agencies working within the Ministry of the Solicitor General is to protect the public against crime, and especially violent crime. For this reason I support these measures, which were worked out in close co-operation between the Department of Justice and the Ministry of the Solicitor General, because all the measures included in the bill have been designed to further the goal of better protection for the public.

Furthermore, many of the specific items proposed in this bill will be implemented or administered by the Ministry of the Solicitor General. I refer especially to the amendments to the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to the regulative and administrative changes which will flow from those amendments, but also, of course, to the administrative duties which will devolve upon the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in carrying out the new firearms proposals and the new provisions regarding electronic surveillance.

Before dealing with three areas of special administrative concern to my department, I would like very briefly to sketch in some of the background against which the peace and security package was designed. As the Minister of Justice said in his speech moving second reading of Bill C-83, the concern of the federal government is to prevent and control crime, and especially violent and organized crime, here in Canada. The fundamental principle which must be kept in mind in assessing these measures is that the whole apparatus of criminal justice exists, first and foremost, to protect society against the effects of crime.

As I said before, while crime in Canada is not out of control, it is apparent that it is much easier to maintain control than it is to regain such control once lost. For this reason, the government is now offering to parliament the peace and security program, a series of measures to amend the criminal law and to improve the administration of criminal justice. These measures were proposed after lengthy consultations among federal officials and also with provincial governments whose responsibility for the administration of justice necessitates working in close co-operation with them.

I would now like to turn to the measures concerning firearms, corrections and electronic surveillance which bear specifically on my responsibilities as Solicitor General, and in the course of those remarks I would like to answer some of the concerns raised by hon. members in the initial stages of this debate. Some of the debate on the gun control measures appears to have missed the over-all intent of this new policy by misinterpreting some of the details.

Firearms have been, and continue to be, the instruments involved in frightening and tragic incidents in this country, such as occurred recently in Dresden and Calgary, not to mention the events in Vancouver, Brampton and Ottawa which are still so much in our minds. Many Canadians have expressed fear and concern that they might become victims of the senseless misuse of a firearm. People should not have to live with such concerns if we can do something about it, and I am convinced that we can. To reduce this concern we must reduce firearms incidents. To reduce firearms incidents we must reduce firearms availability—especially to those who can be identified as unfit, irresponsible, or dangerous.

Those who suggest that the answer to the firearms misuse problem in Canada lies in stiffer penalties against criminals alone have too restricted a view of the problem. Such penalties can help somewhat, of course, and to that extent new offences and higher maximum penalties have been provided for in the measures here proposed as outlined by my colleague, the Minister of Justice, at the opening of the debate. Yet it cannot be stated too often that few firearms murders are acts perpetrated by what we might call hardened or professional "criminals". Firearms murder is most often a domestic or acquaintance event carried out in passionate circumstances by a person without heed for consequences with an all-too-available firearm.

Mr. Dick: That is manslaughter.

Mr. Allmand: It is murder. Two-thirds of our murders are committed in that way.

We must also keep very much in mind the fact that firearms were the instruments in around one-third of our more than 3,000 suicides in 1974, and caused death in more than 100 accidents in that year. The same circumstances apply all too often in cases of firearms robbery. In many cases, if a gun was not easily available, the act of robbery would not have occurred. The stolen, or borrowed, or easily purchased gun supplies the false courage and the clouding of reason that leads to a senseless act.

Some have suggested that we prohibit all firearms. We reject such a suggestion. Such a suggestion denies the legitimacy of firearms ownership and use for target shooting, hunting for sport or for food, or antique collecting, and these are uses which the government recognizes as perfectly legitimate. Furthermore, it is the government's belief that these uses of firearms need not be prohibited in order to reduce firearms incidents and public concern. Most current users should accept the appropriateness of the measures proposed, since by curbing firearms misuse they enhance legitimate use. It is difficult to understand why a current, responsible firearms owner would object to demonstrating his fitness for ownership or to ensuring that his guns and ammunition were securely stored and responsibly used. By this process he can also feel more secure that fewer guns are in hands of the irresponsible or criminally careless. Many sportsmen have indicated that they can live with, and benefit from, measures designed to screen out possession and use of firearms by those not fit to use them.

No one would be so naive as to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that any package of gun control measures will completely eliminate gun misuse. The roots of violent behaviour go deep and the gun as a tool of criminal activity will not disappear—not with ten million guns in Canada, or one for every two Canadians. In such cases, society's denunciation of such an act will be expressed in mandatory and stiffer sentences, if the proposed amendments in this bill are approved. Yet this is certainly not the whole solution. Where we must concentrate our attention is on the prevention of tragic incidents. Firearms ownership and use represents a collection of circumstances, and we must use a package of measures to have an impact at every stage. For each step, we must ask: What are the possible benefits of measures here, and what are the offsetting costs?" When the benefits exceed the costs, a proposed option should be adopted.

I referred earlier to the many circumstances surrounding firearms possession and I am anxious that the measures we have proposed be seen as, and be considered as, a package designed to have an impact on all of those circumstances. We are trying, first and foremost, to reduce availability through tough import controls, new prohibitions, a voluntary recall program, and a needs test for the possession of restricted weapons, second, for those who continue to possess firearms, we wish to ensure they have nothing in their backgrounds that might render them unfit to do so. Further, we intend to offer an education program in responsible and secure gun storage and use, and we propose to augment that by applying criminal sanctions against careless misuse. Third, in dangerous situations that might still arise, we have proposed broader powers to the police and finally we suggest making greater powers available to the courts to deal with offenders. Each of these items in isolation can reduce the problem of firearms violence in Canada, but their real strength lies in their interlocking nature.

With respect to the most complex part of the package—the licensing system—let me try to differentiate it from a registration system and say why we rejected extending registration to long guns. Registration pertains to things—guns in this case—not people. It records the description, serial number and ownership of each item or weapon. For extremely lethal and easily hidden weapons such as handguns—which in Canada are restricted and of which there are relatively few—it is a workable and relatively effective system that screens owners and weapons alike and inhibits casual purchase. However, for the ten million long guns in Canada I believe that a registration scheme would be unworkable and impractical in comparison with its potential benefits. Instead, I believe that we can accomplish most of the same ends by a different means—licensing users. With licensing we focus on the person rather than the object, and we endeavor to ensure that he is not unfit to possess a lethal instrument such as a gun.

The government is pleased to see that some provinces wish to go even further in using the provisions of section 106(8) of the act, which encourage provinces to ensure that the licensed possessor is "safety trained" by means of programs they are now operating or could establish. Once licensed, a person could possess as many guns as he needed or wanted to have. Thus, with this bill's approach we are faced with the task of screening some two million to three million owners rather than having to register some ten million weapons.

Obviously, a licensing system as proposed here is a complex undertaking. Yet it has been designed so as to provide maximum flexibility in introduction and administration at the lowest possible cost. Aside from record-keeping, the system will be highly decentralized, with a number of licensing officers throughout Canada. These officers would process applications and approve licence issuance if justified. They would be supported and aided by local registrars, and each province would have a chief local registrar at the provincial level. Local registrars would normally be police officers as well, but licensing officers who will perform most of the administrative tasks would not necessarily be. Retired police officers or armed forces personnel may be excellent for this function.

Thus, individuals applying for a licence would deal with someone from their district or region of the province who may well know the applicant and be able to easily confirm his fitness to hold a gun licence. The police would carry out necessary record checks, while officials would handle administration. The requirement on the applicant to obtain a declaration signed by two guarantors who must affirm the fitness of the applicant as a responsible person is an important part of this system. The idea is analogous to that of the passport system, but the list of potential guarantors could be widened to take account of the special needs and concerns involved; that is, it could include wildlife officers, officials from shooting or hunting clubs, Indian band organizations, and so on. The government wishes to involve sportsmen and take account of localized needs as much as possible in the administration of this program.

In the event of a licence refusal or revocation or for refusal or revocation of a restricted weapon, an appeal would be available in a court of law, and reasons for the refusal or revocation would be provided in writing to the appellant. Such appeals currently exist for firearms' registration certificates, but are rarely used, suggesting that original decisions are seen to be fair and appropriate. We would expect this pattern to continue here.

The exact costs of licensing and dealer regulation are still being worked out in conjunction with the provinces. The point I wish to emphasize here is that the cost to society of firearms possession and its attendant control will be borne principally by the gun owner. We think nothing of paying a fee for the privilege of driving a car—or owning it for that matter—or for numerous other privileges that may impose a cost on society. We aim at ensuring that drivers are fit to handle such potentially dangerous machines as autos by prohibiting driving without a license, which a potential driver must pay to obtain. So it should be with an instrument of potential danger such as a gun. Screening potential misusers is not without cost, but we believe that serious and responsible gun owners should be willing to pay for such a process.

Hon. members surely cannot support the current system, under which a person who has just been released from a prison or a mental hospital can walk into a sporting goods store, or a hardware of department store, and buy a high-powered rifle or shotgun, with no questions asked. Nor do I think hon. members believe it is reasonable that the same system—or lack of it—applies to young persons buying their first gun or individuals who, in the emotional wake of a personal crisis, rush to a store to purchase a firearm with which they believe they can resolve their problems.

One subsidiary, but not inconsequential, benefit of a licensing system is that it, hopefully, will cause many people to rethink the entire subject of firearms possession. Many guns are kept today because they were acquired some time ago, used briefly for shooting or hunting and then simply put away in a closet, such as occurred in the recent Dresden incident. As such, they represent danger through theft or use in a violent incident. This casual owner may decide he would rather turn in such a weapon rather than go through the process of obtaining a licence and the mecessary devices to keep his gun secure in his home. The active gun user will not be inhibited, since the process is straightforward, and security may well already be a fait accompli.

I feel I should remind the House that the total firearms package is not represented by the bill before it alone. Let me stress again the importance to the package of such measures as the voluntary recall of weapons, the education program, tighter import checks, and an on-going consultation with the provinces. Many of them have already promised additional measures that will augment and strengthen the controls proposed here. In fact, many have such measures in place already. I was recently reminded that Newfoundland has some of the strictest firearms controls in Canada and one of the lowest incidences fo firearms violence as well.

I would like to take this opportunity to comment on criticisms made against these proposals by former RCMP commissioner L. H. Nicholson, now with the Canadian Wildlife Federation, as reported in the press. On the subject of the alleged ignoring of the views of the Canadian Wildlife Federation, I can say that the government gave careful consideration to the brief and, in fact, adopted many of its recommendations. The rejection of a registration system, provision of an amnesty program, prohibition of sawed-off rifles and shotguns, and improvement of seizure provisions under sections 103 and 105 of the Criminal Code were all recommended by the Federation. The suggestion to strengthen provincial safety training standards was also accepted and, in fact, formed the basis for the proposed licensing system.

It was felt, however, that it was not enough to require only competency in gun handling or storage. The government concluded, after considering the views of the Canadian Wildlife Federation, FARO the Shooting Federation of Canada, the Canadian Sporting Arms and Administration Association, and other groups, that before a person should be able to possess a firearm he should be able to show that he is not unfit to do so.

On the complaint that the bill was kept secret before tabling, I can only reply that of course it was. If it had been released to outside interest groups before presentation in this House, the government would justifiably be subject to severe criticism. This is not to say that there was no prior consultation of the general subject matter. However, as I mentioned just now, in fact Mr. Nicholson himself was invited to address, and did address, the first national conference of local firearms registrars held in Ottawa last June. He attended the conference for two days. I listened to many of the remarks that he made and they did have some impact on the legislation.

In addressing the House, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) drew attention to the definition of "ammunition". He suggested a person finding a spent shell might be guilty of an offense for possessing unlicensed ammunition. I am sure the hon. member recognized that the concept of mens rea, along with discretion on the part of the police, Crown attorneys and the judiciary, must be taken into account in any discussion of this point. In fact, the government intends to amend this section in order to make the requirement of mens rea very clear, so that no one can be found guilty of an offence merely by finding a spent shell. Also, the definition in the bill is purposely complete because it is intended to require those people who possess the means for making ammunition and guns to be screened for fitness as much and as thoroughly as are the possessors of the completed item.

The hon. member for Calgary North also said that the gun control measures introduced by the government are, in effect, an ill-prepared and hurriedly worked out effort to distract attention from capital punishment. I would like to deny that statement in the strongest possible terms. I must remind the House that firearms control has been a long-standing concern of mine. On two occasions as a back-bencher I sought to give Canadians more control over firearms misuse. As Solicitor General, I assembled a working group to study the area and to report to me. It is their work that forms the basis for the measures proposed here. Further, as Solicitor General I called the first conference of firearms registrars and officials held in Canada to discuss the restricted weapons system and general control. It gives me considerable satisfaction to see before the House this package of measures to control firearms misuse within the context of the government's over-all concern with peace and security.

I could with some enthusiasm continue to point out the intention and strengths of the measures proposed here. But I am confident they will become abundantly clear as the bill is debated and reviewed by committee. Some people have criticized the government's proposed firearms control measures as the first step in the eventual confiscation of all firearms in Canada. Others have criticized the government for not offering stronger measures. The government, of course, is attempting neither to lay the groundwork for consideration of weapons, nor to appease those who oppose all gun controls. Instead, these proposals are designed to offer a workable, moderate, feasible approach to the serious problem presented by those who misuse firearms in Canada.

I believe the measures proposed in the bill we are now considering do offer a reasonable and reasoned approach, and I commend them to the House. If there are suggestions and ideas to improve that approach, then committee consideration of the bill is obviously the forum in which to present and study them. The Minister of Justice and I have made it clear that we welcome reasonable amendments in committee.

I would now like to turn to consideration of the proposals—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the minister would permit a question before leaving gun control. In the Yukon, and I believe also in the Northwest Territories, the police, who have responsibility for granting permits to trappers, prospectors and persons engaged in exploration work in the wilderness, have received instructions not to issue any more permits to anyone. I just want to confirm whether or not that is the case. If that instruction has gone out from Ottawa, in order to afford guns to people who require to use hand-guns in the field for protection from grizzly bears and the like, could the instruction be revoked so far as the two northern territories are concerned?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I understand the registrar for the Yukon has issued a directive not to give permits to prospectors who apply for a hand-gun permit. It seems that up until recently the registrar of the Yukon did grant permits for the use of hand-guns by prospectors for self-protection, whereas in the Northwest Territories they did not. I am led to believe that the two registrars got together and felt they should have one policy. I recently received a number of letters from prospectors in the north, and the question is under review at the present time.

Mr. Nielsen: The instruction came from Ottawa.

Mr. Allmand: It did not come from me. It has been brought to my attention, and it is under review. I cannot tell the hon. member what the outcome of the review will be, but I have had representations from prospectors in the Yukon. I said I would now like—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Scott: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I may. I am not in total support of Americans bringing guns into Canada, Mr. Speaker, but this does represent a large segment of the tourist industry and each province, especially the province of Ontario, earns millions of dollars from American hunters coming into Canada. What provisions have been made to allow Americans to bring guns into Canada for sporting reasons?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for temporary permits for sportsmen coming into Canada to hunt, just as hunters coming into Canada get temporary hunting licences in the different provinces. There are different rules in each province. I forget the actual section of the bill, but provision is made for a temporary firearms licence for these people. We can discuss this at greater length in committee, but that is provided for.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I should now like to discuss the proposals affecting the corrections system, namely, the proposals dealing with the custody and release of inmates. As the Minister of Justice said in his speech, the Ministry of the Solicitor General has already undertaken a series of administrative changes aimed at improving the screening process for release decisions. The peace and security program, too, includes a number of changes affecting the custody and release of inmates. These changes are being proposed after careful consideration of the Ouimet report, the Senate report under Senator Goldenberg and the Hugessen report, the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission and extensive consultation with the provinces.

A number of the legislative proposals are intended to improve the capacity of the penitentiary authorities to provide increased security within penitentiaries through better control of inmates. The maximum penalty for escape or attempted escape from a penitentiary has been increased from five years to ten years. This change is being introduced to further improve the penitentiary service record in so far as escapes are concerned. Since 1972, when we started an improved program of security in our penitentiaries—there were 187 escapes in that year—we have, through these improved measures, reduced the number of escapes to 115 in 1973, 50 in 1974 and 43 in 1975, a total reduction in that period of time of more than 75 per cent.

Another new measure related to the custody of inmates repeals statutory remission. Those sentenced to a penitentiary after the new legislation comes into force will no longer be automatically credited with one quarter of their sentence. Instead, they must earn all remission. An inmate will earn one day for every two days served during which he applies himself industriously. In other words, the inmate will be able to earn remission to a maximum of one-third of his sentence. The new amendments stipulate that earned remission is subject to forfeiture in the same way that statutory remission is at present. Once forfeited, however, it cannot be restored, nor can remission withheld at any given point be restored at a later date.

With the best possible conduct and industriousness, an inmate who is not granted parole can be released after approximately two-thirds of his sentence has been served. The fact that all remission will be earned, that none will be automatic, and that it will be subject to forfeiture for misconduct, will place a greater onus on the inmate to earn the earliest release date possible. This should promote better conditions within institutions, including greater participation in programs.

Under the proposed changes, the Commissioner of Penitentiaries will become the commissioner of corrections and the control and management of the national parole service will be transferred from the National Parole Board to the commissioner of corrections. Subject to the direction of the Solicitor General, the commissioner will become responsible for the preparation of cases for all types of release and the supervision of inmates on temporary absence, day parole, full parole and mandatory supervision. This will relieve the National Parole Board of its management responsibility for the parole service and, therefore, allow it to maintain its independence in its decision-making role. This action will also result in better co-ordination of programs and services between the Canadian penitentiary service and the National Parole Service. At the same time, the National Parole Service will obtain additional staff to increase supervision for inmates on temporary absence, day parole and mandatory supervision. The parole service will also be responsible for monitoring temporary release plans both for individual inmates and the program in general.

In addition to the above legislative proposals, the government intends to initiate the following administrative measures to provide a greater degree of security in penitentiaries. First, additional training in the techniques of security and in the behavioural sciences for correctional officers. Second, establishing emergency response teams or "crisis" units to react immediately to potential danger or actual trouble such as prison disturbances and hostage-taking incidents. Members of the unit will also be trained in negotiation techniques.

Third, extending the "team" concept of deployment of staff in maximum security institutions. This involves the grouping of staff in units of manageable size under permanently assigned supervisors. In addition to providing improved security, this team concept results in more effective programming through increased involvement of staff in the daily lives of prisoners, and also facilitates communication between staff members. At present, the team concept, in the form of the "living unit" program, has been employed almost exclusively in minimum and medium security facilities. The concept has proven to be of sufficient value to warrant its expansion into the maximum security area.

Fourth, an accelerated prison construction program which will involve phasing out some old, obsolete institutions and replacing them with smaller facilities of the type recommended by the Mohr committee, better suited to the rehabilitation and control of specific groups of inmates. We are currently completing construction of such an institution in Mission, B.C., and have received approval for sites in B.C., Alberta and New Brunswick. Fifth, we are also moving ahead with the construction of regional psychiatric centres in the Saskatoon, Kingston, and Halifax areas.

The government recognizes the need for, and is committed to, the gradual release of inmates through an effective parole system involving temporary absence, day parole, full parole and mandatory supervision. The hon. member for Calgary North intimated that the parole and temporary absence problems had led to a large number of failures. In reply I would like to stress the overwhelmingly successful record of parole and temporary absences and the important role these programs play in the rehabilitative process within the criminal justice system.

Hon. members should bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that fully 95 per cent of our inmates are sentenced to definite terms, which means that one day, inevitably, they must be released into society. Only a very small percentage are in prison on life sentence. If no efforts are made to smooth that return by a program of gradual, supervised release, then the chances of successful reintegration into the outside world are much smaller.

The temporary absence program has a success rate of over 99 per cent. The 15-year average success rate of parole is between 75 per cent and 80 per cent. I must, of course, agree that there have been failures in our system and that some of these failures have had tragic consequences. Because of such failures in the past, we have tightened up our selection precess and we are introducing further legislative, regulatory and administrative improvements at this time.

In this peace and security program, a number of further amendments to existing parole legislation and regulations are proposed in order to achieve greater control over the release of inmates who are prone to violence, while at the same time providing fairness and equity in decisions which affect the release of all inmates, including those on parole.

Many of the measures affect the organization and jurisdiction of the National Parole Board. The number of parole board members will be increased from 19 to 26. New members will be appointed for a period not exceeding ten years. These additional appointments will allow the board to assume further responsibilities, such as the authority to grant unescorted temporary absences and to conduct internal review hearings, and will allow for an improved selection process on the part of the board members by reducing the caseload on each member, which is extremely burdensome in Ontario, Quebec and the prairies.

Provision is also made for the addition of special community members of the Parole Board by the Solicitor General on recommendation of the chairman of the Parole Board for cases involving convicted murderers and dangerous offenders. These persons may include representatives of police forces, provincial governments, municipal or other local authorities, or members of the local professional, trade or community associations. The purpose of this provision is to allow greater community input into parole decision-making in cases of convicted murderers and dangerous offenders by bringing local knowledge and local concerns right into the parole decision-process itself. These members will have all the powers and responsibilities of a regular board member, including the right to vote. The votes of panel members will be in addition to the number of regular board members required to vote in such cases.

The National Parole Board will have legislative jurisdiction over all unescorted temporary absences from federal institutions, thus removing the authority to grant temporary absence without escort from the penitentiary service. This change is designed to avoid situations where different authorities come to different conclusions concerning the advisability of temporarily releasing an inmate, as has happened on a few occasions in the past. A number of significant regulatory changes will alter the Parole Board's rules governing the eligibility period of release of inmates. The National Parole Board will no longer be permitted to grant parole by exception where, in special circumstances, an inmate may be released before he has reached his parole eligibility date.

Offenders convicted of certain types of offences involving violence and who have, in addition, a history of violent crimes, will not become eligible to be considered for parole until they have served one-half of their term of imprisonment, or seven years, whichever is the lesser, instead of the normal one-third, or seven years. At the same time, the government is moving to safeguard the rights of those inmates and parolees who are affected by these measures. These will provide a fairer method of dealing with parole violators who are subject to parole suspension and revocation.

● (1650)

Furthermore, procedures guaranteeing certain elements of due process will be incorporated into Parole Board hearings. Although the Supreme Court of Canada has held that the National Parole Board is an administrative board and not subject to judicial review, the government feels a responsibility to provide those persons appearing before it with some procedural safeguards, and to make existing practices more visible.

Regulations will be proposed, following approval of the bill, which will provide that the board hold hearings for both ordinary parole and day parole, that reasons be given for parole decisions and that an internal review mechanism be established. In addition, the board will experiment with the concept of allowing inmates prior access to some of the information upon which board decisions are made, with the idea of allowing inmates a form of representation before the board, and with holding hearings after suspension of parole in order to make a decision regarding revocation. These regulations will provide visible procedural safeguards for those appearing before the board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but before he deals further with this subject I must inform him that his time has now expired and that he may not continue unless he has the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is sufficiently important for us to wish the minister to continue with his explanation. However, having regard to the fact that the government has imposed closure, I hope he will be as brief as possible.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: I appreciate the consent given by hon. members, and I will try to wind up quickly. I now wish to comment on the four proposed amendments to the protection of privacy legislation. The first point that must be stressed is that none of the proposed amendments extends any new authority to the police. The stringent controls and accountability procedures contained in the law currently will continue. For the benefit of those who have expressed doubts concerning these amendments, I shall summarize these controls and procedures once more. Although I refer to procedures followed by the RCMP, similar procedures are followed by the various police forces across Canada.

The investigating officer must satisfy a more senior officer in his department of the need for an authorization to intercept a private communication. If the senior officer agrees that a need exists, the investigating officer must then go to an agent of the Crown, usually a staff member of the Department of Justice. He must once again present his evidence and satisfy this agent of the Crown that there is a legal requirement for an authorization. If the agent is satisfied, he then makes application to a judge who has the appropriate jurisdiction and presents the judge with affidavits showing the necessity for employing electronic surveillance. If the judge is fully satisfied that the law has been complied with, then, and only then, will an authorization be issued permitting the interception of a private communication. In addition, the requirement for an annual report to parliament is part of the accountability procedure. Honourable members will recall that I tabled such a report in the House of Commons on February 13. This report provides a public record of all authorizations which were issued in 1975 to police officers investigating federal offences. My provincial counterparts are also obliged to make public a similar record of the details of authorizations issued under provincial authority.

When this new law was proclaimed in July, 1974, I assigned to members of the Ministry of the Solicitor General the task of maintaining a continuous liaison with all the provinces and of conducting a formal review of the law and its effectiveness after it had been implemented for one year. This review, which was completed in October, 1975, involved federal officials from the Ministry of Justice and the Department of the Solicitor General, members of the RCMP, provincial officials, members of provincial police forces and those at the municipal level. The results of this review were discussed last fall at a conference of attorneys general in Halifax, at which the proposed amendments now before this House were agreed to by all ten provinces.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the territories?

Mr. Allmand: And the territories. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to deal with some of the objections which have been raised by hon. member with respect to parts of the peace and security program, in particular the provisions respecting dangerous offenders. However, I do not wish to take advantage of the courtesy the House has shown, so I shall end my remarks at this point. I simply wish to confirm that the Minister of Justice and myself are already preparing amendments which have been suggested to us during the course of this debate. We have already agreed to incorporate certain amendments which appear to us to be reasonable, and we shall be pleased to hear further representations in the committee. We expect representatives of all the national associations involved in hunting, shooting, antique collecting, and so on, to appear before the committee, and I am sure that with the co-operation of all honourable members we can bring in legislation which will better protect the Canadian public and bring them the peace and security they deserve.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on Bill C-83 which I see as yet another piece of legislation which is taking away certain rights from native people across Canada and will be causing hardship to hunters, trappers and prospectors in the Northwest Territories.

I notice that the time available this afternoon for debating this subject is running out, so may I call it five o'clock and resume this evening?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Social Security; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Air Transport; the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Floods.

The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions. It is my understanding that there is agreement to proceed with motion No. 97, in the name of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Mr. Paproski: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to stand all the other motions which appear on the Order Paper ahead of motion No. 97?

Mr. Paproski: That is also agreed, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

CONTRACT BETWEEN LOCKHEED CORPORATION AND GOVERNMENT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the proposed contract between Lockheed Corporation of Burbank, California, and the Government of Canada for the purchase by Canada of eighteen long-range patrol aircraft, including the agreed formula as outlined at page 11617 of Hansard dated March 9, 1976.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise with a certain amount of hesitation, bearing in mind that the speech of the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) on the peace and security legislation had to be interrupted.

● (1700)

I suppose the story of the LRPA should be divided into three eras, and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has always been talking of new eras of defence financing. The story of Lockheed could almost be prehistoric, historic and modern. Perhaps you will forgive me if I start in with the historic period of the Lockheed program. The Lockheed story first came to the knowledge of the House of Commons on March 17, 1969 in reply to a question by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). The then minister of national defence, Mr. Cadieux, said they were going to replace the Argus. That is something over seven years ago.

The next five years in the history was a study of the problem. They looked at three or four aircraft companies, narrowed it down to three, and then dropped the British product, the Nimrod, two years ago. The government then announced, with a great deal of fanfare, that they were down to two companies, Boeing and Lockheed, and were then entering the final definition phase. There was to be a bill of $11 million for that final definition stage, to be split approximately 50-50 between the two companies. The two companies duly completed the final definition phase. The culmination date of that was August 1 of last year, at which time a contract was supposed to be signed. Then we started into the modern era of delay.

I would ask you to note that in the humble address I particularly ask that they not only provide the contract but include the agreed formula as outlined on page 11617 of Hansard. The part of Hansard on that page I want to draw to the attention of the House and the minister is where the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) said:

As for the terms of payment of this eventual contract with Lockheed, we are not required to make a downpayment. According to the agreed formula, we pay as the production goes on.

It would be very interesting for the House to be informed whether the Minister of Supply and Services had seen this agreed formula, because we find that the Minister of National Defence said at page 11402 of Hansard for March 2, when speaking about the government:

At the time it agreed to purchase the Lockheed, the government made agreements for full payment when the aircraft were delivered—

This is exactly the opposite of what the Minister of Supply and Services said. I would not wish to suggest that either one of those gentlemen was deliberately deceiving the House. I understand it would be unparliamentary to do so. I would not do so in any event, because I do not think the House trusts them enough to be deceived by them any longer. Let it be said that they have said diametrically opposite things. One says we are to pay for this aircraft according to an agreed formula as the production goes on, and the other says we are to make full payment when the aircraft are delivered. In other words, according to the Minister of National Defence, the government expected Lockheed to provide interim financing for three years. This would be a huge sum, I think well beyond Lockheed's capability even without its current difficulties.

Lockheed, on the other hand, told me that this would be quite contrary to normal financing arrangements for such contracts. Lockheed has said that the payment schedule was all set down in the final proposal to the government of last August, which the government accepted in principle when it announced its decision to buy the Lockheed plane. I must say that from my scant knowledge of the world of armaments and armament purchases, Lockheed seemed to be setting out a fairly reasonable position. It claimed that its final offer spelled out to the finest detail the dates and the amounts that were going to be owed by the government to Lockheed as the plane was produced. My understanding is that the first payment was due at the end of January, and was in the approximate amount of $1 million, and there were to be monthly payments from then on.

From these three pieces of evidence we can see that the Minister of Supply and Services and Lockheed are on the same side, but flatly contradicted by the Minister of National Defence when he stated we were going to pay for the planes in full when the order was completed. To enable the opposition and the Canadian people to determine the truth, we want these papers tabled. If there is an agreed formula which spelled out that monthly payments were due, how could the Minister of National Defence possibly make the statement he made at page 11402 of Hansard, where he said: "The government made arrangements for full payment when the aircraft were delivered"?

Having made this statement, the minister adopted an attitude of shifting the responsibility from himself to his negotiating team and, indeed, to individuals on that team. To me this is a lamentable practice. Ministers are responsible for everything that happens within their departments, and if the negotiating team was under the supervision of the Department of National Defence, then the Minister of National Defence should cheerfully accept total responsibility. If it was not operating to his satisfaction, then it was his duty to find out. If there were misunderstandings or deceptions going on, it was up to the minister to find those misunderstandings and deceptions and take corrective action. If he did not have the proper personnel on the team, then he should have changed the personnel. The minister should not try to shift the responsibility from himself to any of his subordinates.

It is the minister who said the government was going to pay for that plane when it was finally delivered, and he is flatly contradicted by another minister of the Crown. I might say, in passing, that the Minister of Supply and Services was rather neatly taken off the hook in respect of this whole mess by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said, as recorded at page 12436 of Hansard:

> —the arranging of the financing and the supervising of the execution of the contract are the responsibilities of the Minister of National Defence.

It seems to me he want one step further than he had to, to be sure the Minister of Supply and Services would not have the eight ball placed in front of him but would have it placed in front of the Minister of National Defence. This is an example of the inner politics of the cabinet which is far too devious for my simple mind to understand. However, it did become clear that, as far as the Prime Minister was concerned, if there was anything wrong with this contract we should blame the Minister of National Defence.

After a cabinet meeting on November 27, the minister announced the momentous news that Canada was going to replace the Argus with the Lockheed LRPA at a cost of $950 million. In fairness to the minister, he said at that time there would be additional interest costs, but he did not say how much. It turned out later to be $111 million. One should read closely the minister's earth-shaking announcement about the decision to re-equip the Canadian forces. I might say this was a very surprising decision. I could hardly believe that the government was going to spend $1 billion on 18 aircraft, knowing its disposition not to spend money in support of the forces. I hoped for the best. When reading the fine print of the announcement one found that there was to be no money actually spent by the government for some three years. It was going to go through an intricate system of switching funds from the operating budget to the capital budget, ending up with jam tomorrow, only three years down the road.

● (1710)

I would like to say, en passant, that the method by which that announcement was made left much to be desired. I imagine that people even as thick-skinned as some of our ministers must have thought how foolish we looked on the world stage at that time. I should like to quote a newspaper article in this regard. I refer to a column written by Duart Farquharson, headlined "Canada finally leaves NATO military purgatory". One would think, in view of what has happened around the world in the last two or three weeks, that we would hate to be faced with the way we advertised ourselves last December when the minister, having made his announcement, dashed off to Europe to reap the gratitude of NATO. The article reads:

> NATO welcomed Canada back into its military good graces Tuesday as defence minister James Richardson announced the Trudeau government's plans to beef up its contribution in Europe.
> The "unanimous appreciation" of the alliance members as described to reporters by Richardson was led off by Admiral of the Fleet Sir Peter Hill-Norton, chairman of NATO's military committee.
> NATO secretary-general Joseph Luns, who earlier this fall publicly criticized the equipment Canadian forces are using in Europe as grossly inadequate, offered his congratulations after the Canadian minister spoke.

The difficulty is that they did not understand Canadian ministers and that when a Canadian minister says he has made a decision to buy an aircraft one should never assume that is what he meant. One should assume that it had been discussed, will be discussed again and that perhaps an aircraft will be purchased, maybe someday but certainly not today or this year. It is strange to read that a minister of the Crown would go to Europe and announce the position in the way he did by indicating that the money was in hand and that the planes would be rolling. Now, of course, it is an entirely different story. After December a period of doubt came along.

I asked the Minister of Supply and Services some time in December if he would give me a copy of the contract which it was expected would be signed that day. He said he would give it to me, but I did not receive it. They had the quietest non-signing I have ever heard of on January 4 when the officials from Lockheed flew up here from Burbank to sign the contract. There was deathless silence. In the words of the Minister of Supply and Services, there were "technical difficulties".

He asked me if I would hold up the motion I had placed on the order paper and said that in a few days he would give me the contract because they were just going to straighten out these technical difficulties. He said after the signing I could have the contract and everybody would be happy. But nothing happened for two or three weeks, and I asked again. He said that the technical difficulties had to do with the long-term financing. With deference to the minister, I believe he may have meant interim financing because the kind of financing we have heard about is not long-term in the generally accepted sense. I thought the Minister of Supply and Services was quite honest in saying that the problem was in respect of financing while the Minister of National Defence said the problem really involved the bribery scandal concerning Lockheed around the world.

The contract was not signed on January 4 and the bribery scandal did not begin until three weeks after that. At that time it became obvious that there was something besides the bribery scandal that kept the parties from signing this agreement. The minister then said there was a financing problem, but that they were about to settle it and that they had the assurance from Lockheed that it could handle the financing. Eventually, a few days ago, a letter was tabled from Mr. Heppe, the executive vice-president of government programs for Lockheed. I believe this correspondence is available to any member and I believe, also, to any member of the public. The Minister of National Defence claimed that Lockheed would find the money. He liked to quote one sentence; speaking about a loan by Lockheed. The sentence reads as follows:

> We believe this approach has merit and after due consideration would receive a positive response.

What the minister refrained from saying at the time was that this involved a relatively small amount of $27 million which Lockheed thought it would have to provide because Canada could not provide it, for a very short period of eight months which ended this April, and the fee for that would be $800,000 which Canada would pay off in April. That letter was tabled, as was the response it occasioned. The letter which occasioned this response from Lockheed was signed by Mr. L. H. Stopforth, deputy project manager, also known as a very senior official in the Ministry of Supply and Services. We might recall that the Minister of Supply and Services did not know about the financial difficulty, and yet one of his immediate subordinates indicated that there was a financial difficulty.

This matter continued to become more and more complex. I could easily go on for hours on this subject. I think this story is now of great interest to the people of Canada. It is a story of utmost confusion. We would like to examine the matter in order to determine where the fault lies. The Minister of Supply and Services admitted in the House two or three days ago that if this contract is not signed, the cost to Canada will be at least $28 million even before the cost of the project team is considered. One billion dollars is a very serious matter and one which is really beyond the understanding of most people. If we had had public disclosure of these two letters from Lockheed about the small loan last summer, we would have told the government and there would have been no doubt in the minds of government members, if they were not smart enough to realize it themselves, that this in no way represented an offer to do the interim financing.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope the government, in the interest of good government and in the interest of getting a good contract, will see its way to tabling these documents so that everyone can operate from the known facts and perhaps clear away some of the confusion which exists at least on the government side insofar as this contract is concerned.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to support the motion of the hon. member for the production of papers pertaining to LRPAs, Lockheed, and so on although my willingness may be for reasons different from his. I cannot understand why a government of Canada, of whatever political stripe, would conduct any kind of negotiations with an outfit like Lockheed, with the kind of reputation it has and the practices in which it has been engaged over the years. That is the first question the government has failed to answer. If the government of Canada were to deal with an individual or a Canadian corporation which carried on the same kind of practices, it would not likely happen. My view is that this whole deal would be forgotten by the government of Canada.

Even if it were to cost the $28 million of which my good friend speaks, it seems to me that would be a lesser evil than to continue dealing with this kind of outfit, with the kind of practices and reputation that we now know they have and about which we have known for many months.

Let us speak about the aircraft itself. I find it interesting, in light of the questions and answers yesterday, and in fact I even agree with my leader—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is rare.

Mr. Benjamin: —who finds that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is preparing for the second world war. I thought maybe he was preparing for Custer's last stand. In the area of technology, in which I am not an expert, I understand that in Ottawa, at Bell's Corners, they have developed the next generation's communications and electronics technology for surveillance and detection, at which the U.S. defence department and others are looking with great interest with the likelihood that they will buy it. But the Minister of National Defence is going to purchase aircraft the surveillance and detection technology of which is already outdated. I find that passing strange.

If the U.S. defence department and other countries will be buying technology from Canada which is better and in advance of that which they have themselves, then I do not understand why the minister would want to continue dickering with Lockheed. That is another reason why the documents asked for in this motion should be presented to the House. The minister cannot make up his mind, but perhaps with the help of these documents we might help him make up his mind.

The minister made some effort yesterday to justify these negotiations on the basis of what the boys in NATO have been telling him about the Russians being ahead of us in certain areas of weaponry. With the 18 propeller-driven aircraft whose detection and surveillance capacity is already outdated, I do not understand how we can possibly make any contribution to NATO or catch up with what the Russians are doing, other than be laughed out of town not only by the Russians but by our colleagues in NATO. So why the minister would pursue that argument, and say that Canada might make an equivalent or up to date contribution to NATO with 18 propeller aircraft which are outdated, is beyond me.

If there is a legitimate point to be made about having an aircraft with up to date surveillance and detection capacity, not for military reasons but for a lot of other reasons about which members of the House and the country as a whole should be concerned, and if we have some technology and capacity ourselves, or if countries other than the U.S. have that technology and capacity, then surely that is where we should be looking.

I think we need a coastal capacity both on the surface and in the air far beyond anything we have at the moment. Believe it or not, it is possible that the defence budget with an NDP government would have would be higher than the one this government has. But it would be higher for a hell of a lot of different reasons. If we are going to exercise our sovereignty and provide a capacity to maintain that sovereignty, and if we are going to exercise surveillance in the areas of fisheries, pollution, and search and rescue to the 200-mile limit, then of course we will need aircraft and surface vessels.

The Minister of National Defence is trying to play in a champagne league with beer equipment. The minister is trying to buy some long-range patrol, propeller-driven aircraft—they might even be turbo-props—with a built in computer and electronic capacity which, speaking conservatively, so to speak, is five years out of date, and perhaps ten years out of date, in spite of the technical capacity which we already have for surveillance and with the capacity we already have for airframe construction in a couple of companies which the government of Canada has bought. I cannot stand private enterprise which goes public when they do not believe in it. They make a Crown corporation, not because there is something valuable in having such a company but to bail out some private enterprise friends who have gone belly up.

This leads me to another point. I must take issue with hon. friends to my right. We are very busy dealing with Lockheed. Normally, under the free enterprise system, if you want to sell something to a customer, be it the government, a corporation or an individual, you have to stand on your own feet, you must have your own production, your own finances and arrange your own loans and guarantees. In fact, you must be able to drag yourself up by your own bootstraps.

A national government is buying defence hardware—whether it is the government of Canada, the U.S. or any other country—but suddenly the private enterprise outfit which will sell you this stuff needs to have many things on paper ahead of time to help them out with their financing so they can make the product you are going to buy, and in the course of that you will have to add some extra millions of dollars to allow them to get the money to make the product which you are going to buy. Even if I were a raving capitalist and free enterpriser, I would say that if I have to go through that nonsense I would prefer to build the aircraft myself. That is another reason why I am happy to support the hon. member's motion for the production of papers.

Since when does the government of Canada and the taxpayers of this country have to contribute to the financing and funding of a corporation with the reputation and business ethics of a tomcat? If I were a raving free enterpriser and believer in the capitalist system, that would be the last company I would deal with, because they hardly add to the credibility and credence of so-called private enterprise practices and theory. That is another reason I do not understand why the government continues beyond six o'clock today to pursue any kind of bargaining or negotiating with Lockheed. They should tell them to go home, that they do not even want to talk to them any more. How can the Minister of National Defence allow himself to be sucked into buying an aircraft that is already at least five years out of date? I do not understand that, and I am not even an expert. I wonder what Canadian experts think of all this.

I suppose you could call all this a business in the worst sense of the word. If a corporation, intending to deal with the public in an open and honest manner, is prepared to compete—in the worst or best sense of the word, depending on how you look at it—it will have no hesitation in being totally open and honest with the government with which it is dealing, and in turn the government will have no hesitation in being totally open with the public and with the House of Commons.

● (1730)

In light of what has happened over the past number of years nobody can convince me that the people in the higher circles of the Government of Canada were not aware of the kind of people with whom they were dealing, whether it was Lockheed or numerous other corporations. They knew what Joe Citizen for years suspected, and that has been confirmed by the events which have occurred in the last 12 or 18 months.

We need to put an end to any dealings with Lockheed in the search for a long range patrol aircraft and coastguard capacity. We have not even scratched the surface, but I think this search is a legitimate move on behalf of the people of Canada. What we require will cost a lot of money. It cannot be done in just a few weeks, months or years, but requires much planning and investment. It will cost much, but it has to be worth while.

Acquiring aircraft for coastal work, including the 200 mile limit, the Arctic, search and rescue, fisheries, pollution, and displaying sovereignty, will require much more than 18 propellor driven aircraft with technology which is five years out of date, leaving aside the outfit with which the government is presently dealing. If this corporation is reputable, of international standing, of international capacity, of international reputation and so forth, it should not require or even ask for any kind of loan guarantees, financing, or influence from the Government of Canada. That corporation should be here on its own terms as a private enterprise competing with all the others. However, it is not here on that basis.

There would be nothing wrong with the Minister of National Defence getting up and admitting that he made a mistake in even talking with these people, and indicating an intention to cut off negotiations. He would receive the applause and approbation of every member of this House on all sides. I do not see any point in continuing negotiations with an organization which almost requires a blank cheque. It may or may not go belly up after it has been given a blank cheque; that will depend on what President Ford and some U.S. senators and congressmen decide. I see no point in our discussing giving that organization a blank cheque so that it can have the money to build something we are going to buy. If we are going to do it that way, let us build it ourselves, or if we are going to give money to somebody let us give it to a Canadian company or some country which needs help.

I do not not understand why the government has hesitated so long. It has run scared, and judging by the performance of the Minister of National Defence yesterday, if some nut ever does push the button and we are plunged into a nuclear holocaust, I just hope that the Minister of National Defence is not there calling the shots. He continues to practise what has been going on with our national defence capacity in NATO and NORAD, and he even extends it to what is more a civilian operation with long range patrol aircraft. He continues that mentality. In other words we are the new Belgium and the new Poland. We are caught in the middle; we are dead ducks.

To suggest that these long range patrol aircraft could somehow be useful in protecting convoys and detecting nuclear submarines, really, for a rank amateur in defence matters that exceeds even my credulity. From what I have been able to read and discuss with people who know something about convoy procedures in the event of a third world war and with people who have some experience with nuclear submarines, the missiles which they can fire and the detection of them, I submit what is proposed to be in these Lockheed long range patrol aircraft will be totally inadequate and worthless.

If a submarine were dumb enough to surface and stand still for a while, perhaps some Canadian long range patrol aircraft might accidentally find it, but even with 12 of them in operation 24 hours a day, and six of them on stand by—and with the number of miles of sea to cover—who is the minister trying to kid? As I said, he is trying to play in a champagne league with a beer operation.

This whole thing needs much more going into than is being done in the question period. It needs more than what the hon. member responsible for this motion is seeking, and I hope that the House will agree that these materials should be made available to parliament and to the public. I hope also in the course of arriving at that conclusion hon. members on all sides will take a pretty good hard look at other things we are doing through the Department of National Defence in areas we are involved in like NORAD and NATO, which do not really add to the effectiveness of those operations.

According to middle level and senior officers, if the nuclear button were pushed, those operations would not amount to anything. Perhaps after we adopt the motion, Canada and this government will look a little more seriously at the kind of role we can and should be playing in the areas of peacekeeping, fisheries surveillance, and pollution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Walter Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 97, dated March 31, 1976 and moved by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), was opposed by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) because it was felt inappropriate to table in this House papers relating to negotiations leading to a contract until that contract had been executed. I would have thought this reason to be straightforward and clear to my friend, the hon. member for Victoria. However, I was mistaken.

I find certain similarities between negotiations of a contract, such as the one we are concerned with for long range patrol aircraft, and the defence prepared by an attorney for a client. Does an attorney make his defence strategy known before the case opens? I always thought not. Yet the hon. member for Victoria is asking the Minister of Supply and Services to make public all the clauses of the proposed contract, including the payment formula, the very heart of the negotiations. Does this sound reasonable?

As if too little had already been said about the matter, I must reiterate what has been said in this House on the matter of guidelines for the production of papers, tabled on March 15, 1973, and printed as an appendix to Hansard of that date at page 2288. The same guidelines were also tabled by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) on December 19, 1974, and were referred to a standing joint committee of this House for consideration. Indeed the seventh report of that committee presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1975, was the subject of a motion debated in this House on an allotted day for consideration of the business of supply, on Thursday, February 12, 1976.

So important and of concern of so many is this matter of freedom of information that the committee asked to be authorized to examine the matter further during the balance of this session. It seems to me that having adopted the motion is proof enough of the seriousness of this important issue.

It has been said in this House by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that these guidelines were the government's own rules by which it determines whether or not it will make papers public. At least they are a starting point for a committee of this House to formulate some reasonable rules and, as suggested by my colleague, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), they are better than those of most other countries. This motion could well have been withdrawn, perhaps never moved, if we had an adopted set of guidelines such as those proposed. I suspect, as did the hon. member for Welland, who sat as a member of that committee, that the notice of motion for the production of papers was a ploy to obtain a debate.

I do not feel it is too much to ask the hon. member for Victoria to be just a little more patient. The Minister of Supply and Services had earlier agreed to provide the hon. member for Victoria with a copy of the contract with the company when it had been executed. On February 2, 1976, in reply to a question by the hon. member, as reported in Hansard of that date at page 10524, the Minister said:

> The contract has not been signed, Mr. Speaker.

He then told the hon. member that some technical difficulties had emerged which caused some delay.

Just a short while later on February 12, and again on February 13, in reply to questions from the same member, Hansard reports at page 10868 that the minister said:

> These technical problems relate strictly to long term financing—
>
> Mr. Speaker, the contract we intend to sign with Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has been subject to a long study by an interdepartmental committee, under the direction of the Department of National Defence, and for which the government paid a considerable amount of money to have the program finalized. This contract has finally been negotiated through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to establish what would be the best economic repercussions for Canada.
>
> We thought we had all the possible advantages to meet our needs and our economic objectives. This is why we are considering the possibility of signing the contract with Lockheed Aircraft once the arrangements concerning the long term financing are completed.

As reported at page 10919 of Hansard, the Minister of Supply and Services said this:

> Mr. Speaker, we are now studying the problem of long term financing. The Minister of National Defence is taking a very close look at it and I would not like, for the time being, to disclose anything which might harm the negotiations. This is why I am requesting the hon. member to be patient. I think that within a few days the Minister of National Defence and I will be able to say exactly what has been the fate of this contract.

The minister was trying to tell the hon. member that until the negotiations were completed and the contract signed, there was no document to produce. Surely what has been said is clear. I fail to understand why the hon. member would move that a copy of the proposed contract be tabled. The government is not trying to withhold information; it is merely trying not to impede or jeopardize the negotiations which are still being carried out.

If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, a few more quotations from Hansard will assist in establishing the chronology of events. On March 9, as reported at page 11617, the Minister of Supply and Services said:

> Mr. Speaker, from the contract negotiated but not yet signed with Lockheed Aircraft Corporation Ltd., will flow a major economic boost for Canada and we obviously keep this advantage in mind.
>
> As for the terms of payment of this eventual contract with Lockheed, we are not required to make a down payment. According to the agreed formula, we pay as the production goes on. As for the risk of dealing with Lockheed, some officials met with representatives of the American government to assess what would be their own position toward Lockheed, given the prevailing circumstances surrounding this corporation.
> The American government accounts for two thirds of Lockheed's over-all orders, which means that Lockheed considers the United States government as a major player. The fact that the United States chose to deal with Lockheed reassures Canada to a certain extent.

Up to that point in time no contract had been signed, but the hon. member will agree that the minister was keeping the House informed of the development in negotiations, almost day by day. The most recent significant development was transmitted to the House on April 1 when, in reply to a question from the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), the minister is quoted in Hansard at page 12350 as saying:

> Mr. Speaker, it is true that Lockheed Aircraft Corporation Ltd. did some work before the contract signature. It is also true that Lockheed gave us a first delay until March 31 without any change in prices and in the economic advantages for Canada. This is in fact a provision of the letter of agreement we signed to the effect that we are going to pay Lockheed for work done between January 5 and April 30, with a view to preserving the price we negotiated last December, preserving the production schedule which is advantageous for Canada, and preserving the economic impact which is evident for the country since we sign a $614 million contract with Lockheed and we are going to have economic repercussions of about $580 million in Canada.
> In consideration of all these advantages, we agreed with Lockheed to pay a maximum of $16 million in case we put an end to our negotiations between now and April 30. This being said, we do intend to sign the contract if possible, because these are the best conditions we can get for Canada to fulfil its role in NATO.

From these open answers in this House it can hardly be said that the government is withholding information. On the contrary, I feel strongly that exemption No. 10 of the guidelines was carefully weighed before being proposed, and likely with the precise object of avoiding any impediment to the orderly unfolding of negotiations. This is why the government chose to oppose the motion presented by the hon. member.

Guidelines are criticized and rightly so; results would not be achieved otherwise. I am looking forward to the final report and recommendations from the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which will bring in definite rules by which the public and parliamentarians will have access to more information. In line with the policy of openness that the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) is hoping will be adopted, I am confident the recommendations will not breach the confidentiality of such deliberations as are presently going on in relation to this contract. I shall now conclude, Mr. Speaker, and give some other hon. member a chance to contribute.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr Speaker, the parliamentary secretary seems to miss the point on this issue. I must say I find it rather strange that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is not in the House to argue his own case since we are talking about a $1 billion contract. It has been subject to six weeks of questioning in the House of Commons, and the matter has been brought up in committee, but we still do not have the answers. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he take this information back to his minister.

This would have been an excellent contract for the national defence committee to have studied. Buying aircraft like these is in the national interest and is a defence matter; it has nothing to do with partisan politics. What is so disturbing is this loose contract and verbal assurances. It is unbelievable when you read the background of this company. When it received backing in the United States, a 48 to 48 tie had to be broken in the Senate before it could receive any financial aid from the United States government. That would not indicate it had very strong support in the United States. As far back as 1971 it was stated, and I quote:

● (1750)

The legislation would permit the government to guarantee up to $250 million in bank loans to any corporation whose failure would "seriously and adversely" affect the national economy or that of any region.

That is referring to Lockheed.

—Administration spokesmen made clear their expectation that the entire $250-million would be used to shore up Lockheed . . .

Mechanically, guarantees of the loans to Lockheed will have to be authorized first by a three-man board that is created under the legislation. The members of the board are the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

As far back as 1971 you can see the financial straits this company was in, and this certainly should have alerted the minister and the government when dealing with it. They should not be talking about verbal assurances, as was the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) on a number of occasions. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) said that he does not believe in verbal assurances of contracts.

In an article in the December 9, 1972, New York Times there are further comments about Lockheed by the General Accounting Office, the U.S. congressional watchdog agency. I quote:

Firm orders for 110 of the large planes "will probably generate about $393 million in cash through 1975—an amount sufficient to repay the government-guaranteed loan", the agency said. However, it added: "Lockheed could suffer substantial losses if it does not receive additional Tristar orders."

You can see the difficulties it was in at that time.

At the last meeting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on March 23 the matter was pursued further. With regard to questions about the Lockheed purchase the Minister of National Defence stated, and I quote:

The problem was that the particular company that we were dealing with had an understanding with their banks and with the United States government that they would not borrow further. But they did not reveal that to us.

The Canadian government certainly did not go into any detail whatsoever in drafting this contract with Lockheed. One member of the committee then asked:

Was the government aware of that limitation?

The minister replied:

No, we were not, and that was the prime cause of the misunderstanding.

The Minister of National Defence was premature in making the announcement about this purchase in November, 1975. There was no firm contract. If he had waited until there was a firm contract and all negotiations were completed, we would not be committed to this $60 million.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

In all probability we would not be in the mess we are in today. Further at that committee meeting our defence critic, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), stated:

Well, the fact that Lockheed were not able to borrow further was common knowledge in the United States—

I just revealed this fact going back to 1971.

—and I am a little puzzled about this remark that it was not known by an organization who were planning to spend $1 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money on this company.

The minister replied:

I can only repeat, Mr. Chairman, that our officials were advised by Lockheed that they could provide the financing.

There was no official documentation. It is unbelievable that the minister would get involved in a contract like this on verbal assurances.

At the committee meeting of December 1, 1975, we questioned the minister about this contract. He had stated that a large part of the work would be done in Canada. I was most interested in where and who in Canada was going to get this work. I put this question to the minister:

Mr. Minister, I would like to get more information on the manufacturer of parts for the Lockheed Orions in Canada. You stated that there could be a maximum of $560 million spent in Canada in the manufacture of parts, and that you had a firm commitment that $283 million would be spent in Canada. Apparently a General Allen of National Defence was chairing a committee to firm this up. Could you inform the committee as to what provinces, or what firms, will be getting this spare-part manufacturing business?

The minister replied:

I can give you the over-all figures even more precisely than I did the other day.

The minister had given me some information in the House a couple of days earlier.

I mentioned in the House a figure of $283 million that was confirmed, and the $285 million figure. I understand that both of those figures are ones the Lockheed firm are prepared to carry out in Canada for a total of $568 million. The reason for their separation is that the $285 million of work has not been identified as to its exact location, but it still is work that can be done and will be done by the Lockheed company in Canada.

I was interested in what work would be going to Winnipeg. The minister informed me that work would be going to Standard Aero and Bristol. He said, and I quote:

I do not have dates, but the program is starting now and it certainly will be during the life of the contract. Even Standard Aero will not have to wait, even though it is repair and overhaul, until they are starting to repair engines from our own aircraft. They will start to get work now,—

That is what he stated on December 1, 1975. The parliamentary secretary told us today that they are still negotiating a firm contract, but the minister stated in committee that they will get work in Winnipeg "now". What did he mean by "now"? May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, the first point I would like to make in connection with Bill C-83 concerns the way it was presented to the House. The bill covers some six separate areas and I feel that issues as varied as gun control, wire tapping, and parole reform should be presented to the House separately because each of these issues is of great interest to many people. I am sure many of my colleagues will agree with me that parts of the bill are acceptable and that parts of it should be thrown out entirely. However, the government has put us in the position of having to accept all or nothing. But I suppose that is in keeping with its usual methods of consultation, Mr. Speaker.

At this stage of the bill I intend to confine my remarks to the section dealing with gun control. This problem, Mr. Speaker, is a difficult one. The difficulty arises because of the great variety of uses for guns. After all, they are just one of man's many tools. In my own riding, guns are used for legitimate recreational activities such as hunting and target-shooting. Some of my constituents collect guns for their value as antiques, and as personal mementos. And there is no doubt that some guns are used for illegal purposes, just as there is no doubt that a great many people in my constituency use guns to put food on the table.

What I am getting at is that devising a set of controls which will apply equally to people who live in highrise buildings in Toronto and to those who hunt and trap for a living in the High Arctic, is not easy. My main fear is that by attempting this big job the government has placed too much emphasis on conditions in the big cities at the expense of people who use guns as a tool by which to live.

Perhaps I can illustrate my point by the use of a few examples. The bill now contains provision for a police officer to enter a house without a warrant and seize any firearms. I realize that this could happen only under certain conditions, but it could happen. In a lot of cases that is a valuable provision. As several hon. members opposite have said, most violent crimes involving guns occur between people who know each other, often members of the same family. If a police officer feels tempers are running high, and removes the temptation of a gun, many deaths could be prevented.

In a city having your gun removed is not a serious matter. Under the provisions of the legislation before us it could be reclaimed in due time. City people who legitimately own guns rarely use them more than several times a year, and then only for recreational purposes. But this is not the case in other parts of the country. For hunters and trappers there are certain critical times of the year. Ducks and geese fly over only during a short period of time. The same is true of migrating caribou herds. During these critical periods hunters will usually take food to last for several months. What would be the result if their guns were taken away during one of these critical periods? They and their dependants would face hunger, and the government would likely incur increased welfare costs.

Another factor should be taken into consideration. In a city the police are always handy and the courts are in operation all the time. It is fairly easy to fulfil whatever requirements the courts may stipulate to have a gun returned. This is not the case in areas where hunting is the major occupation. There are many villages in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and other places for that matter, where there is no permanent police station. Such places are served by travelling police officers, game officers, and circuit courts. Under these circumstances a hunter may lose the use of his gun for many months unless this bill is amended.

Another problem arises in the provision for a licence to own a shotgun or a rifle. Because of the expense and lack of demand people with the authority to issue licences will not be easily accessible to hunters, trappers, fishermen, propectors and so on. Hunters live in areas away from large centres of population, and they must travel great distances at great expense into remote territory at certain times of the year. It will be difficult for many hunters to go and get the required licence. As well, hunting communities are small. There may not be a priest, or a lawyer, or other person usually used as a guarantor handy to sign on application, let alone there being two there at the same time.

Many people will also have problems with these provisions in respect of licences because of the cost. This program evidently is supposed to pay for itself. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said in his remarks a few days ago that the estimate of the cost of processing a licence could run as high as $30. Hunting families, fishermen, and others who use guns to take part of their food do not usually have large cash incomes. If there is a large number of hunters in a family, of course this will be a major obstacle.

Then there is the age restriction. In the city it is a good idea to restrict access to guns to people over the age of 18. I agree with that. In cases where families participate in some recreational aspect of shooting the bill makes adequate provision for allowing licences to people over the age of 14. However, the provision for permits for hunters at age 14 will cause problems. This will cause problems among native families not only in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon but, I am sure, also in many of the northern parts of the provinces across this country.

As I have said on a couple of occasions before, guns are tools. In the hunting or trapping family they are part of everyday life, and no matter how safely they are stored they are always accessible to children. Because of this children must be taught to use guns safely and effectively at a very early age. It has been my experience that children are usually given their first gun at around 12, 13 or 14 years of age. They are trained in the use of guns very carefully by their parents who know how to use them, and safety is the number one point that is always stressed.

Other clauses in this bill attempt to regulate or control the circulation of guns by making it an offence to loan or sell a gun to someone who does not have a licence. That makes sense in the city. There are too few legitimate reasons for guns to be used that it is of only minor inconvenience to make sure that the required documents are on hand, and this can be done very easily in the city.

However, I should like to mention here that there is a long-standing tradition among hunters, trappers, and prospectors that a person will loan his tools; his guns, his traps, his sleeping bag, his dog team, his motorized toboggan, or whatever, to a person who is without these means of survival. By making it an offence to do this with one of the most necessary tools the government is destroying a tradition and adding hardship to people who may be in need of a gun to make a living during critical times of the year. That is the time of the migration of the cariboo, of migratory birds, and so on. These are problems that do not arise in the city.

The government should be aware that by trying to solve problems in one part of the country it is actually creating problems in other parts. I have mentioned in this House before that in cities, especially in Ottawa, we all know as members of parliament that we have to contend with red tape. Much of the time we have great difficulty in cutting across the red tape. In the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon we have another problem because there is a high ratio of civil servants to the general population. We have learned there that we not only have to cut tape traditionally like it is done here, but most of the time we have to cut the tape lengthwise instead of crosswise, and that is not easy.

There are other parts of the bill I feel are either too strict, not strict enough, or too vague. For example, the bill contains provision for a licence to be issued on the word of two guarantors. Why is there no mention of the applicant himself or herself proving that he or she is able to handle firearms safely, and why are there no provisions for public education about the dangers of firearms?

I have one other suggestion. As I understand it, much of this gun control legislation is aimed at preventing the "I didn't know it was loaded" type of accident. Would it not be possible to do the same thing and to replace much of this bill by requiring or making it mandatory that all guns have a trigger lock, keeping the guns locked up, and not easily accessible particularly to children? Such a lock, if kept in place at all times when a gun was not in use, would sharply reduce the number of accidental shootings and would provide a little time to think for the person who picks up a gun in the heat of an argument.

In addition I would like to see the hunters, trappers, prospectors and fishermen in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon exempt from the licensing aspects of this bill. They should keep their firearms under lock and key at all times to prevent accidents.

Having regard to handguns, it is very important to people who work in my part of the Territories, and I am thinking of prospectors, pilots, hunters, trappers and so on who go out into the bush, that they be allowed to carry handguns not only for protection but as part of their survival gear. These people are not always in a position to carry a heavy rifle. There are times when they have to go out with a number of packs carrying their food, survival gear, and that kind of thing, and if you add a heavy rifle on top of their burden it becomes too much. That person is not going to endanger the life of any human being out there in the bush. By having a handgun this would be a convenience, and this is one other part of the bill that I think should be looked at carefully. I would like very much to have this aspect of the bill considered on behalf of the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

As I mentioned earlier before calling it five o'clock, I consider this bill to be another erosion of the rights of the native people of this country. It is an erosion of their aboriginal rights to hunt, trap, fish and so on. This is another area in which we are taking away the rights of these people without very much consultation. That is all I wish to say, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, much of what I have to say parallels that which has been said by my neighbour, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). However, there are a few areas he has not covered and a few examples he has not cited. I am sure we are on all fours on the manner in which we view this legislation.

What the hon. member has said, and what I had intended to say, in respect of the rights of the native peoples in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon brings up a question in my mind as to whether—and I am very happy to see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) in the House because this has perhaps not occurred to him—the provisions of this bill in so far they affect the native peoples of this country are constitutional. They have been granted by treaty in many significant instances the absolute right to hunt and fish on all unoccupied Crown lands. The Treaty of Paris guaranteed, in the case where no individual treaties exist, the absolute right to hunt and fish on all unoccupied Crown lands. This bill purports to interfere with that right which has been given to them by Her Majesty in the Treaty of Paris, and by the Government of Canada in certain specific treaties across this country.

This used to be a very serious constitutional question which in all probability the government did not even look at in drafting this bill, but I do not find that unusual with regard to this government particularly in view of the answers given by the minister to questions asked by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories in respect of the granting of permits. Had it consulted in depth the native organizations in this country in respect of all provisions of this bill, no doubt forceful views in respect of the absolute hunting rights of these people would have been expressed. I hear the minister say that that was done. I do not know whether he means that the question of constitutional rights arose during those discussions. If it did not, it certainly should have and should have been considered. That points out not just the question of the lack of consultation with the native organizations but with the two northern territories generally.

I had to remind the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) about that this afternoon when he was speaking on some of the discussions and relationships with the provinces, and about the conferences which were held between the attorneys general of the provinces and himself in respect of this legislation. No such consultations occurred in so far as the people of the north were concerned. There were no consultations with the elected councils of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories in respect of how they regarded this legislation.

Had such consultations taken place then the points my neighbour from the Northwest Territories made and which I will be making would have found their way into this bill. I cannot understand the government being so harsh and unfair in respect of the needs of the people in the High Arctic islands and the remote regions of the mainland of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory that it would ask these people to abide by the provisions that are being written into the law by this bill. These people depend for their very livelihood on the firearm. Without it they do not eat. They have no industrial or commercial pursuits.

I think particularly in my riding of the people of Old Crow whose very lives revolve around hunting, trapping, and fishing all year around. That requires the unrestricted, the absolute right to use a firearm. When you take that right away from them or interfere with it, then so far as they are concerned what you are doing, as my friend put it, is taking the grub right off their table. That situation probably exists in many parts of the northern portions of the provinces, but in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon Territory it is very acute.

The situation in respect of the people of Old Crow I think can best be exemplified by an example. The hon. member for the Northwest Territories used an example. Let me use one. There is a small village in the Yukon called Champagne. An Indian person was walking along in the woods not far from Champagne, which at that time was a small village of 20 or 30 souls. While he was walking through a wooded portion of the valley all of a sudden he found himself face to face with a grizzly bear. His rifle was slung on his back. He did not have time to get the rifle off his back and cope with that grizzly bear. Had he had a hand gun he might have been able to cope with the situation. He did not.

The grizzly bear without a second thought attacked him. With one cuff the native person was on the ground. All he could think of doing, because he could not reach around to get his rifle from his back, was to play possum, to play dead, which he did. He lay on his stomach.

The bear took another swipe at him, and ripped the back of his scalp down over the front of his head. The grizzly bear pawed and sniffed around him.

All this time the Indian did not utter a sound. He played absolutely dead.

The grizzly bear used his mouth to pick him up by the back of the neck. He gave him one or two more slaps, and dropped him again.

There was not a sound or movement. That man lived, despite the serious mauling he received. That is the type of situation the people who walk in the wilderness are apt to meet every day of their lives.

It is common practice, indeed essential for survival in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, to have the right to carry the 44 magnum, which is the common gun used in the bush, rather than a heavy rifle. People carry this firearm in addition to the pack and other gear most carry in the bush.

People engaged in exploration and heavy work carry all sorts of equipment, such as transits and the like, which burden them down. The common weapon for everyone is the 44 magnum. Now, after the right to carry this kind of a weapon has existed for so many years, almost a century from my reading of history, we find there is a restriction—the Solicitor General appears to be ignorant of this fact—which has issued from Ottawa, which has the effect of telling the RCMP that there will be no permits issued for anyone for the carrying of handguns.

Big game guides, outfitters, prospectors, trappers, and others whose livelihood is in the wilderness have been told they will not under any circumstances be issued the permit they have been accustomed to receiving year after year after year for carrying a handgun in the bush. It is unfortunate that the Solicitor General is not in his seat. He said that he has received representations from the prospectors in the Yukon in connection with this matter. However, it is not only the representations by the prospectors that are important. I am sure he has received representations from others. Just as important are the representations from big game guides, outfitters, and those engaged in exploration work in the field. They must have that permit in order to function.

We are now on the verge of spring after a long winter and I urge the Solicitor General, who I hope will read by words tomorrow since he is not here, to revoke immediately this instruction which has been given and which has the effect of denying the people of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon the right to carry handguns in these circumstances.

Let me use the Solicitor General's example in this matter of handguns and firearms generally. He spoke of the need for safety; he spoke of the millions of guns owned in Canada and of the two million or three million individuals who own firearms. He used that, plus the safety argument, plus the accident argument, plus the criminal argument, to say that there are far too many guns lying around loose in the country and therefore we have to impose regulations. My argument against that is simply that, of the millions of owners of firearms in this country, 99 per cent are law abiding citizens and their guns will not be used for unlawful means. Yet for the crimes of a few, for the illegal acts of a few, all of us are to be penalized.

I might use the same argument when speaking of the overwhelming—I think that was his word—success of the parole system. The minister says that hundreds and thousands of paroles are granted under the existing system and only a very small percentage fail, again to use his own words. So in effect what he is arguing is that because of the great number of successful paroles that are granted, the few isolated incidents of crimes by parolees should not be the reason for putting the whole parole policy in the wastebasket. But that argument can be very effectively turned around and applied to the gun situation. I say that the number of illegal uses to which firearms are put by relatively few individuals in Canada should not be the reason for imposing these onerous provisions on the majority of law abiding citizens who own guns.

I should like to draw an incident to the attention of the minister when speaking of the right to use guns in Canada. Notwithstanding the passage of this bill—and I have no doubt it will pass with the majority on the opposite side—there will still be what I consider to be a very undesirable situation. I am not familiar with how it affects the rest of Canada, although I have heard one or two speeches from this side of the House drawing attention to the non-Canadians travelling in the country bringing guns into Canada.

I draw the minister's attention to the policy which exists as it relates to those travelling along the Alaska highway. There is a large number of U.S. citizens travelling along that highway, both to and from the state of Alaska, and a large part of that group is military. The practice of the government when such vehicles enter Canada is for the customs officials to ask for the disclosure of the possession of any weapons.

A very large percentage of there travellers carry handguns and those handguns are normally carried in car glove compartments. So what is the practice? The customs official takes the handgun, without any obligation to unload it, places it in a little plastic bag which he ties at the neck, and gives it back to the traveller who replaces it in his glove compartment. He is permitted to carry that handgun in the plastic bag in the glove compartment of his car as he travels from one end of the Alaska highway to the other. There is not even a seal on it. The bag is tied with a little red ribbon. For heaven's sake, it is a plastic bag. There is no trick to getting a handgun out of a plastic bag.

Here we are in the Parliament of Canada saying in effect that there should be no ownership of handguns by Canadian citizens without a doggone good excuse to have one, yet we are permitting thousands upon thousands of non-Canadians to carry handguns in Canada. This is absolutely ludicrous. It is a situation which commends itself for immediate investigation and rectification by the government.

Then we come to the question of emergency gear when travelling in sparsely populated areas. Again this is something with which I have some experience. While it would be discomforting to me to have to fly in isolated areas without a hangun, I can live with it. However, I would sooner carry a handgun, which I have been doing now for some 24 years in the Yukon on every flight that I have ever gone on in my own aircraft. But now that will not be permitted. Now I am bound to carry a rifle, if I could get a licence to carry it, but there is no way I can get a permit any longer to carry a handgun as part of the survival gear in the aircraft.

Mr. O'Connell: Sure you can.

Mr. Nielsen: No, I cannot. I have checked with those who will be asked to carry the responsibility of administering this law. I was told that I will have to get along with a rifle from now on. I do not see why I should have to live with that, but I will live with it and I will carry a rifle if, as I said, I can get a licence to do so, and I do not think it will be all that difficult.

An hon. Member: Get a guarantor.

Mr. Nielsen: That is a whole new aspect to the bill. Who is to guarantee? I always encourage trips by members of parliament to the north. The more MPs who go across the 60th parallel up to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon the better I like it, because only then will they understand the circumstances. The hon. member who intervened in a good natured way raised the question of guarantors. Who in God's white earth up there will find a guarantor for an Inuit on King Christian Island? Where are we going to find a guarantor on Baffin Island, other than in Alert or some other place?

If a family from Old Crow, for instance, is out trapping on Crow Flats, as they do for months and months, where is the Eskimo going to get his guarantor or even the paper to sign which would let him have a rifle? This is impractical. I can see this kind of regulation—as my neighbour, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories said—applied in Toronto and in Montreal. My God, I see the need for it in Montreal. I can see the need for it in Vancouver or Hamilton.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Or in the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, the Liberal caucus, but by George, Sir, I cannot see the need for it in the 1,500,000 square miles above the 60th parallel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Forty per cent of Canada is populated by a total of 75,000 people, and the government is going to administer this law all over that area for the same purpose as it would in Hamilton or Toronto. Sir, this is completely impractical. I hope that the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice, whoever is responsible for drafting the amendments, will make an absolute exception of the native peoples in the two northern territories whose very livelihood depends on owning and using a firearm. I hope that an exception will be made before the bill gets to committee.

The Solicitor General spoke this afternoon of the government incorporating amendments into the bill as a result of suggestions made from this side. I hope not only the native question in the two northern territories will be made an exception, but also that an additional exception will be made, so far as handguns are concerned, for big game guides, outfitters, prospectors, and others who are required by virtue of their jobs to exist in the northern wilderness. I suggest that the provisions with respect to licensing are simply impractical as far as the native peoples are concerned, and an exception should be made in that regard as well.

● (2040)

I hope that when this kind of legislation is planned in the future there will be some consultation with the people of the north through their elected representatives who sit on the respective territorial councils. The day is long gone when this kind of legislation can be prepared without that kind of consultation, notwithstanding what the Solicitor General says, both in this House and in the pamphlet he distributed to hon. members and others entitled "Questions and Answers Regarding Proposed Gun Control Legislation".

In that pamphlet the question is asked: was the hunting community consulted before this bill was drafted? The answer given is: it was. I say it was not. Certainly it was not in the Yukon, and it was not in the Northwest Territories. The answer goes on to say the following:

> Wide consultations preceded the drafting of the proposed legislation and many briefs from organizations of responsible gun-users and other interested bodies were received.
> Prominent among those who submitted briefs were the Canadian Wildlife Federation . . .

In almost the same mail in which I received that interesting pamphlet from the minister I received a critique from the Canadian Wildlife Federation dated March of 1976 analyzing Bill C-83, and on page 10 of that critique the committee of the Canadian Wildlife Federation says the following:

> Finally, the committee questions the manner in which the government prepared this draft legislation, draft legislation that has been in preparation for well over a year. Despite the fact that one of its main features would impose a licensing requirement on some two million Canadians, there has been no meaningful consultation with interested groups, and the over-all approach the government intended was a matter of mystery until the bill was tabled. The CWF offered to explain its position and to help in the collection of relevant information, but its offer was not even acknowledged.

There we have the Canadian Wildlife Federation denying the words of the minister in the House today, and denying the printed pamphlet, produced at government expense, saying that the government had consulted with the Canadian Wildlife Federation. Obviously they are at odds. Perhaps the government feels that tabling and exposing the bill is consultation, but that is not my idea of consultation, and it obviously is not that of the Canadian Wildlife Federation.

I do not think my mail has been unique, and I do not think the mail of any hon. members of this House, whether they be Liberal, NDP, Social Credit or Conservative, has been unique. I have received more letters and more complaints from my constituents on the gun control feature of this bill than on any other single subject. It has exceeded the correspondence I have received on such matters as abortion, capital punishment, and the like. In all my time here I have never had such an inundation of objections to a piece of legislation as the objections I have received with respect to this bill. That fact surely has been conveyed by the Liberal caucus to the cabinet, and every speech which has been made from this side which I have heard or read has conveyed the same thing. Surely that must carry some kind of message to the government that the legislation is lacking, that it is improper, and that there is a great need to amend it.

My voice here and the voice of my neighbour from the Northwest Territories are two small voices in this Chamber when it comes to legislation of this kind. There are only two members here for that 40 per cent of Canada, so perhaps we do not carry much weight, but there are 75,000 to 80,000 Canadian souls living in the north whose livelihood for the most part depends on the right to the free use of firearms.

I urge upon the government now, in the absence of the consultation there should have been, to heed my words and those of my neighbour from the Northwest Territories, and to incorporate the amendments we have both suggested into this bill. Otherwise it is going to work extreme hardship and, perhaps not inconceivably tragedy on certain families and individuals in the two northern territories.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the second reading debate on Bill C-83, many members have departed from the discussion on the principle of the bill to take out some excerpts, isolate them from their context, interpret them subjectively and as a result draw false and erroneous conclusions, losing sight of the true spirit of the legislation. I therefore feel I must take part in this debate to reiterate and analyze briefly Bill C-83 as a whole and its various general provisions.

Although I want to stress the intent of the bill, this does not mean that I think that some of its provisions may not be amended at the later stages of its study, so as to perfect it and make it more consistent with reality. In fact, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) already suggested that some amendments could be made to that effect. Rising crime rates, including rates of violent crime, are bringing home to Canadians that changes in the criminal law and in the administration of criminal justice are needed if the best possible protection is to be afforded to the public. The whole apparatus of criminal justice exists first and foremost to protect society against the effects of crime. Crime in Canada is not out of control, but it is much easier to maintain control than to regain it. It is for this reason that the Government is now putting forward the Peace and Security Program, a series of measures to amend the criminal law and improve the administration of criminal justice. These measures are designed to come to grips with the increasing incidence of crime in Canadian society and to meet the need the public feels for a greater measure of protection.

Public concerns focus upon the increase in violent crime; the difficulty encountered by the law officers in contending with the "untouchables" of organized crime; repeated crimes committed by accused persons released on bail; a few spectacular crimes committed by persons released mandatorily from federal institutions, by parolees and by offenders on temporary absence from prison; disturbances and hostage-taking in penitentiaries; repeated crimes by offenders who seem to be chronically violent; and finally, the tragic and spectacular crimes involving the use of firearms.

● (2050)

Protection against violent acts will precisely be provided in this bill through the following means: first, the provision of increased resources in crime prevention; second, a stricter program of gun control, including increased penalties for those using firearms while making a criminal offence, special provisions to ensure control over dangerous offenders, a real concerted attack against organized crime, by making police investigations easier through wiretap and by establishing a provincial commission of inquiry into criminal activities.

On that matter, incidentally, changes might probably be made to this legislation, in view of the recent decision by the Supreme Court of Canada declaring the Quebec Commission of Inquiry into Organized Crime as constitutional, and finally, the imposing of more efficient selection procedures for freeing violent criminals out in society and the exercise of a better surveillance of these offenders after their release.

We know that the program will also include plans to improve the training of policemen and prison personnel; speed up the building of smaller prisons which will eventually replace the fortress-like present institutions; improve the police special training programs to help law enforcement personnel cope with critical situations; assist police forces by introducing new policies and preventive measures; evaluate the effects of violent crime on its victims; get a better knowledge of the public response to the administration of justice and criminal law.

The House has already passed the bill, now before the Senate, which aims at amending the Criminal Code by, among other things, tightening the conditions for release under bail and correcting the abuses inherent in this system; making more difficult for the organized crime boss to bleach the money he has acquired through criminal activities; and changing rape trial procedure to ensure better protection for the victim.

At the present time the government is considering views expressed by the Law Reform Commission of Canada on some aspects of criminal law and its enforcement, and national consultation is going on to pass new legislation with respect to young offenders. The "Order and Security Program" therefore should be looked upon as a step in an ongoing process, not as the ultimate goal of the government with respect to the protection of society against violent crime.

It is appropriate to bear in mind that criminal justice is essentially a control mechanism and that it is not in itself responsible for the incidence or prevention of criminality in our society. Criminal justice concurs in limiting the incidence of criminality through the awe arising from the penalty it imposes on criminals and in preventing criminality through police action. What maintains order in society is the set of values of society and the efforts made to keep up in every citizen the conviction that he is responsible for his actions and his environment.

With regard to gun control, it is striking to realize that the public is increasingly concerned about the rise in gun-related crimes and incidents. Statistics show that murders committed with guns increased from 178 in 1970 to 272 in 1974. Indeed, guns are used in close to half of the murder cases. Moreover, each year guns are involved in more than one third of the 2,500 suicides and in more than 100 accidental deaths.

The present legislation controlling possession of handguns is among the best in the world. On the other hand, the owners of some 10 million long-barrel guns such as hunting rifles and shotguns are subjected to few restrictions on their use and handling. The government shares the public concern with respect to the role of guns in crimes, suicides and accidents. Therefore the Criminal Code has to be amended and other measures have to be proposed to control the general avaibility of guns, to promote increased public responsibility in relation to firearms, and to increase the penalties for the use of guns during the commission of offences.

However, the new legislation does not forbid either legitimate ownership or use of firearms for hunting and target-shooting. In the case of sanctions, the new provisions of this legislation provide for higher maximum sentences when used as offensive weapons. In addition, whenever an individual uses an offensive weapon in committing an indictable offense, he will be liable to a mandatory minimum penalty at least one year and up to 14 years, to run consecutively to any other.

With regard to arms seizure, the police is not now permitted to do so without warrant, except if a crime has already been committed or is being committed. In addition, the law allows the obtention of a warrant if there are good grounds to believe that possession of such weapons jeopardizes someone's interest and security. This provision will be extended to authorize a policeman to seize a weapon without warrant if he reasonably believes that an individual's security is endangered, and if there is no other way out. Thus, a policeman can seize a weapon when a threatening situation arises, for instance, in the case of domestic quarrels which contribute to one third of murders in Canada.

With respect to firearms availibility, we know that a great many of the 10 million guns in Canada are held by people who no longer have any use for them. The government must start a vast information and amnesty campaign to recover these useless weapons. The purpose of this campaign is to inform the Canadian people of the responsibilities underlying the possession of firearms and to encourage them to give over voluntarily these weapons at the nearest police station if they do not want to keep them. As far as prohibited or restricted firearms are concerned, the Criminal Code now requires the registration of firearms such as handguns and so on, and it allows the possession of such weapons only at home or at the place of business.

Under the new provisions of Bill C-83, the registration procedure for restricted firearms will become much stricter. The applicants will have to prove that they need these weapons even before a certificate is delivered. The only admissible reasons are the protection of life, legal position, authorized target practice and the collecting of such weapons in good faith. Some weapons are already prohibited. The legislation will extend this prohibition to cover weapons which were restricted before such as automatic weapons, weapons with sawed-off barrels and second-hand weapons which are not very expensive and not very accurate, called "Saturday Night Specials". As far as the permit is concerned in Canada, the registration of all weapons seems neither possible nor really effective.

This legislation does not provide for the registration of long-barrelled guns but for the issuance of licences. This government believes it is more important to ensure that those who possess firearms or ammunition or those who want to acquire them are fit to do so. Therefore, anyone who owns a firearm or ammunition will require a license. Once more, it is not necessary to register them. This license will be valid for five years and will be issued only if the licensing officer is satisfied that the applicant's background warrants such issuance.

Further, the applicant must submit the statements of two guarantors who have known him for at least two years and who certify that to the best of their knowledge, the applicant is not unfit to get such a license. The fees collected from licensees will cover the cost of this system. People who are under 18 years of age who wish to use a firearm must apply for a special permit that will be issued subject to very strict conditions. This permit will be issued only for target practice, in hunting or in target practice training. Applications for a permit made by people who are under 18 must be signed by two guarantors, one being a parent or a close relative of the applicant. Special provision is made in the legislation to enable people under 18 to possess firearms for the purpose of hunting game for food or family support if, in given areas, hunting and trapping are part of the way of life. In such cases, the issuance of the permit will be free of charge in order not to increase the financial burden on these people. A permit is required for all firearms and ammunition dealers, wholesalers and retailers, importers and manufacturers. All these people must maintain records of all their transactions concerning arms and ammunition. These records will be regularly checked, and the legislation will also provide for other means to improve present import controls.

Also as regard firearms, in particular the legal responsibility, we must not simply scrutinize the case of those who possess fire arms and ammunition. We must also ensure that permit-holders are not minusing firearms. Careless handling and storage can lead to a maximum five-year jail term. As far as administration is concerned, it should be noted that control measures described in the bill require a flexible administration system. A large number of local registrars and licensing officers will be located throughout Canada, so that every Canadian may apply easily. In most cases, there is ample provision for appeals where a citizen feels his permit has been unfairly denied or cancelled.

When the government looked for ways of better protecting the public against violent crimes, they realized at once action was needed in respect of firearms. Availability is a natural incentive to crime. Moreover, firearms play an increasing role in various kinds of murders committed in Canada. Strict measures were needed to deter criminals from using guns. Prompt action was needed to ensure responsible possession and use of firearms.

There were some suggestions that carrying firearms was a right and attacks made on the government for attempting to regulate another area of the average Canadian's life. But these censors must recognize that firearms are too often an instrument of crime and a cause for accident. Failure to regulate their use would leave free hand to criminals and expose the public to the worst tragedies. Opponents of the program have nothing better to propose to prevent firearms abuse.

For that reason, the government had to propose the various measures contained in Bill C-83. It should be stressed that the right to own a firearm is not abolished. Those practising hunting or target shooting, young people desiring to join the militia or a gun club, all have the right to own a fire arm. Simply, they must obtain a permit. This will prevent firearms from falling into the hands of some potentially dangerous persons. The disadvantages of control are very little compared with the lives thus saved.

As for the dangerous delinquents, we know that for some ten years there has been a quite substantial increase in violent crimes in Canada. The new legislation is aimed at restraining the progress of criminality including rape and other sexual offences. It considers the creation of a group of dangerous delinquents liable to indefinite sentences, that is life sentences which could be periodically reviewed by the National Parole Board.

The bill wishes to abolish the present provisions of the Criminal Code concerning recidivism and dangerous sexual offences. It provides new provisions empowering the courts to impose an indefinite sentence in the case of all dangerous delinquents including sexual offenders. The present provisions of the code do not extend to all groups of dangerous sexual offences.

Once the offender is convicted, the court is asked to impose an indefinite sentence which will require the approval of the provincial Attorney General to be implemented. The indefinite sentence therefore replaces all other sentences provided by the law for crimes committed by dangerous offenders. The court can impose such a sentence if the offender has been convicted of an offence for which he can be sentenced to imprisonment for 10 years or more, and which include violence or an attempt at violence or a behaviour dangerous or potentially dangerous for the life of another person or a likelihood of inflicting severe psychological damage to another person.

Before a request for an indefinite sentence can be made however, the approval of the provincial Attorney General must be obtained. When making such a request, the court must be convinced that the offender constitutes a threat to the life, security or welfare of the public according to evidence or a repetitive behaviour pattern showing that the offender cannot control his actions and could cause injuries in the future, or a pattern of persistent aggressive behaviour, showing a substantial degree of indifference on the part of the offender as to the consequences of his behaviour, or a pattern of excessively brutal behaviour.

An indefinite sentence can be imposed if the offender has been convicted of rape, attempted rape, sexual intercourse or attempted sexual intercourse with a female under 16, indecent assault on female or male, or gross indecency, or if the offender has shown that he cannot repress his sexual impulses and will probably cause injury, pain or other evil to other persons through failure in the future to control his sexual impulses.

The proposed legislation provides for a certain number of safeguards for the offender, including the right to call as a witness any psychiatrist, psychologist or criminologist and the right to appeal the decision of the court. On the other hand, the Parole Board should review the case of a dangerous offender, first of all, at the latest three months after the verdict and then every two years, in order to determine whether the offender should be released in the community on condition and in such a case, under what conditions.

A periodical review appears necessary because the punishment does not include either the termination date, nor a fixed date of eligibility for parole, as is the case for all other offenders. The Parole Board will not release a dangerous offender unless two members of the regional community are admitted to the proceedings related to this subject.

Bill C-83 also includes measures relating to crime detection and electronic listening device. Six main amendments are involved in this bill. Courts may allow interception of communications with regard to all criminal offences instead of the limited number of crimes specified in the existing law. Further, any offence, criminal or not. may warrant an authorization, when such a offence seems to be part of an organized crime. Evidence derived directly or indirectly from an unlawful interception may be admitted by the court. This restores the common law rule in part but the unauthorized intercepted communication itself remains inadmissible and the act of interception punishable as a criminal offence. Court authorization for electronic surveillance will be extended from thirty to sixty days, experience having shown that the average interception is likely to last approximately sixty days. Evidence of an offence other than one for which the authorization was obtained will be made admissible in prosecuting that other offence.

Reporting by the media of an intercepted communication that has been revealed in open court will not constitute an offence. These changes are of course designed to increase the effectiveness of the police: still, the new powers should not be abused in order not to encroach upon the individual, right to princacy. Rigourous sanctions must apply, criminal and civil, in all cases of violation of these rights in line with the protection of the individual's rights to privacy granted by Parliament in 1974.

As to the provisions of Bill C-85 dealing with special crime inquiries the proposed amendements add to the traditionnal means by enabling the provincial authorities to create special commissions of inquiry when it is deemed neccessary to obtain knowledge about crime or criminal organizations, which is not likely to be acquired through the normal investigatory procedures. Those measures will no doubt be discussed in committee with respect to special crime inquiries, considering the recent judgment by the Supreme Court of Canada declaring constitutional the Quebec Commission of Inquiry into Organized Crime.

With respect to the custody and release of inmates, the bill includes amendements aimed at ensuring a better control of inamates in penitentiaries and bringing about amendements with respect to their paroling by way of full paroles, day paroles or temporary absences. Certain procedural safeguards will be introduced into parole hearings so the decision making of the Board will meet the expectations of criminal justice.

Those safeguards will call for the help of the applicant, the communication to him of additional information and the giving of the grounds in the event of the decision refusing him parole. These will be defined in regulations and will be phased in over a period of several years. Finally, Bill C-83 includes provisions dealing with crime prevention, police prevention, victimization, concerning studies every 18 months over the next five years to assess more accurately the incidence and effects of crime on victims. and with the defensible space, or accelarating work on the development of better knowledge on target hardening and environmental design. Also, there will be strategies to increase the crime resistant qualify of communities.

Those are briefly all the measures contained in Bill C-83 the principle and intention of which I approuve while awaiting its consideration in committee where witnesses will be heard and where in all likeliness amendments can be introduced to improve certain aspects, particularly those dealing with special inquiries on organized crime.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just resumed his seat recognized the danger of the criminal to the law-abiding citizens of Canada but he did not recognize the greatest danger facing them today, that is, the government which sits opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: This bill merely reconfirms the fact that the government is incompetent to govern and too willing and determined to dictate. Bill C-83 would establish another bureaucracy which could not be fairly administered across this country but would be costly, inconvenient, a burden to policemen, judges and courts, and would place unwarranted restrictions upon experienced users and owners of guns who have not broken any law, as well as on all adult Canadians.

Aside from the inconsistencies in this legislation, which I intend to enlarge upon later, it has created a justifiable fear in the minds of Canadians. They are concerned because in this bill they see another of their freedons removed. Criminals and those bent on crime will not let gun licensing or registration forestall them in their efforts to maim, murder, steal, kidnap, escape custody, threaten guards and other law officers, or commit any other illegal act. This bill will not prevent or deter crimes caused by passion, anger, revenge, or by any planned or sudden desire to get even.

Owners of rifles or shotguns would be compelled to apply for a licence to continue ownership by completing an application form, not described, which could infringe on any human right the government chose, Two guarantors would be required to qualify an applicant for such a licence—their status is not stated. The guarantors would be subject to the discretion of a local firearms registrar, who in turn would be governed by guidelines to be laid down by order-in-council at some future date; the owner must pay a fee, not stipulated. If the fee levied on such applicants does not pay the entire cost of the bureaucracy, all taxpayers will be called upon to make up the difference. It has been estimated that the implementation of Bill C-83 would require 500 additional policemen, 50 in the province of Alberta, plus necessary administrative staff. That is another example of how the government exercises restraint.

What is meant by "safe storage?" On whose interpretation of "safe storage" will the record of a citizen depend? There could be any number of definitions applied to what is or is not "safe." Locks can be broken on firearm cupboards or cases, doors can be forced, weapons held by licensed persons can be taken at gunpoint by those brandishing illegal or unlicensed firearms. When a home without firearms, or with firearms "safely" stored, due to the persuasion or enforcement of this legislation, is robbed, and its inhabitants are beaten, murdered, threatened or kidnapped, it is a little bit late to start defining whether or not their weapons of defence were safely stored or whether or not they should have beem granted a licence. The government will have rendered them helpless and defenceless. Too often innocent bystanders are victims of criminals, a fact apparently acceptable to this government.

What is meant by "need" of a firearm? Depending on conditions, area, situations, and countless other factors, who can really say whether or not a firearm is needed? This must be clarified because even collectors and dealers possess guns and other firearms as a "need" in their business or hobby.

What constitutes suspicion in the minds of policemen that a firearm might be used to commit a crime? How will police control firearms which have not been registered or licensed—do they have to search every household in Canada? Anyone who holds a grudge, who covets another's right to own a firearm, or for some other reason, could inform a policeman, or even a licence officer, that a neighbour or an enemy had acted in a suspicious manner,—and that person's home could be searched, without a warrant, and his licensed weapon seized without any legitimate reason whatsoever. Why harass law-abiding Canadians in a so-called aim at controlling the use of firearms?

What is the ruling for Canadians who work outside this country or who are employed away from their homes and perhaps only return there once or twice a year, or less often? Their firearms are in their homes. Is another member of an owner's family permitted to purchase a licence or register a gun in his absence? If the owner must take these steps in person, how long does he have to comply with these regulations? My constituents have submitted too numerous doubts and complaints to mention in the time allowed here.

How can any member of this House be so naive and disinterested in his electors to accept this bill in its present form? To add to the sham embodied in this bill, some government members have given a very weak excuse to get it into committee where necessary changes can and will be made when various organizations present their views. I refer to the offer of the Alberta Fish and Game Association to help in the preparation of this legislation. That offer was refused. My hon. friend from the Yukon has already brought this aspect to the minister's attention. Perhaps some Canadians can be fooled by that statement, but fortunately I know a little too much about the way standing committees operate under this government. We all know here that, on more than one occasion, when government back-benchers did not agree with a bill being studied in committee, they were removed from that committee. This is democracy Liberal style.

Perhaps it would not be unreasonable, either to remind everyone in this House that government members outnumber opposition members on every standing committee. That could be an understandable policy since the government has a majority, but the deplorable fact is that those Liberal MPs either will not or are not permitted to accept or approve suggestions of opposition members, regardless of their merit or what positive effect they would have on the majority of the general public. To say that my faith in the procedures followed in committees has deteriorated considerably each year in the short period I have been here is nothing but the truth. Most members are on committees because of their desire to work to improve legislation. I am well aware of their disillusionment.

It is not hard to figure out why the government enforced closure on Bill C-83 to get it into committee where those who oppose any part of it will not be given an opportunity to express their opinions. The government should know the people do not want this type of legislation; the government does not want to listen to elected representatives ouline their constituents' opinions or perhaps offer positive changes; no, the government only knows how to abuse the privilege of power; to silence those trying to do their duty; to shove legislation into committee; to pretend it is concerned about the many clubs, associations, and individuals who oppose some of the gun control clauses of Bill C-83 by extolling the virtues of committee amendments. That is the thinking of the cabinet, of the Minister of Justice, (Mr. Basford) and indeed of most of the Liberal backbenchers.

The government can exercise punishment when dealing with Canadians, most of whom are good citizens, but the same government backs off and cringes because it is inhuman to punish criminals, the law-breakers, those who feel this country owes them everything even though they give it nothing, and if they cannot obtain what they want without exerting themselves, they tote a firearm to be sure they do. Oh no, it would never do to hand out stiff sentences to that type of person—this government prefers to hinder and hamper, harass and frustrate a large portion of the population!

The bill sponsored by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) makes sense and conforms to the wishes of the people who have made their views known to me, and they are not all within my constituency either. Place the law where it can and will deter crime, and make that law a law which can fulfill its purpose.

I say that Bill C-83 would remove some of the security legitimate citizens of this country still have in today's so-called "Just Society." In the last eight years our society has deteriorated morally, physically, mentally to a degree, as a direct result of the permissive and ineffective legislation shoved through by the government. Government policies have encouraged immorality, indecency, obscenity; and its over-financed Crown corporation, the CBC, emphasizes those policies by producing and importing examples of vulgarity, indecency, anything which is sacrilegious, stressing the illegal use of drugs, of alcohol, and violence, particularly the use of firearms.

When members of this House protest about these shows on behalf of their constituents they receive the stock answer, in a bored and disinterested voice, that the government cannot interfere in the operations of a Crown corporation, or that it is not the corporation's policy to reveal certain facts. Why not be honest and admit to this House and to the people of Canada that the government is neither interested in nor concerned about this nation and its people, or the direction in which Canada is being pushed—on a journey always downgrade?

I cannot understand how the conscientious MPs on the government side of this House, some of whom I know to be men or women of principle and decency, can go along with this type of bill. Have they explained its ramifications and curtailments, its inconvenience and vagueness, to their constituents? Do they listen to and act upon the requests or demands of their electors? Surely there is one cabinet member who knows inside himself that he does not agree with this dictatorial legislation. To be fair, members of the cabinet are expected to support all government bills, but does their exalted position render them immune to reactions of those who put them into parliament in the first place? They could not be ministers of the Crown had they not first been given the confidence and trust of their constituents, the people who pay their salaries and benefits.

The Minister of Justice is following the same pattern of previous legislation by lumping several positive and acceptable measures into Bill C-83 with controversial, unacceptable, and ineffective rules and regulations on gun control. Apparently this is another attempt on the part of the government to convince Canadians that those of us who oppose some of the clauses on gun control are not in favour of those dealing with crime. Mr. Speaker, my constituents are not lead down the garden path so easily; they learned from experience with earlier legislation foisted on them by this government.

I would urge every member of this House to explain to those whom they represent just what this bill will demand. No individual should misunderstand a measure dealt with in this House simply because his MP camouflaged the negative aspects and emphasized the positive and acceptable ones. The government has confused people more than enough with its red tape and bureaucracies.

Before this bill reaches the committee stage—where we all work hard and do our best to protect people—the gun control clauses should be removed and presented separately, and hopefully strengthened in the right areas.

Why make it more difficult for young persons to be taught how to handle and use a firearm safely? Careless handling of these weapons causes many tragedies. Young people today have enough problems without taking away one of their useful pleasures. Can we expect young Canadians, or anyone for that matter, to improve their way of life when those who break the laws are not appropriately punished? The Minister of Justice and his cabinet colleagues have forgotten the word "punishment" and how it should be applied to law offenders—they prefer to curtail the rights of those who obey the laws.

Recently it has been reported that the Minister of Justice believes some offences under the Criminal Code are outdated, are Victorian, and should be removed—another move to protect criminals and indecent citizens. What that will do is encourage more crimes because there will be even less legal control of delinquents. Just because several years have passed since certain acts were included in the Criminal Code does not mean that society has to lower its standards. That is the obvious aim of the government—to make everything which is indecent and inhuman, behaviour even below the level of animals, legal in our Canada, to remove some necessary offences from the Criminal Code, but initiate new ones to curtail legitimate activities of decent people. What do Canadian voters as a whole think of that?

This parliament should tighten up and enforce the laws we now have, and implement effective legislation aimed at those who need to be controlled under our legal system. Did government members come to the House of Commons to fight for the wrongs of the minority of Canadians, or to fight for the rights of the majority who live within the law? Think about that question—my constituents do.

On the positive side no doubt most Canadians who abide by the laws of our land want penalties for the illegal use of firearms. Weapons such as knives, clubs, tools, and countless other objects can never be registered, licensed or placed under control. Bill C-83 will not curb murderers because anyone intent on killing will use any weapon available.

If the sentence for a crime committed with a firearm were scaled according to the offence; sale of firearms were restricted, one of the sensible clauses of this Bill; and if offenders were punished as they ought to be, the Minister of Justice would have received support in the House of Commons and from the Canadian public. Think how much more logical and reasonable, how much less expensive, how easier to administer Bill C-83 would be if it were directed toward the law-breakers? Mr. Speaker, is this too much to expect; is this too easy for this heavy-handed government to accept?

The government prefers to involve the entire adult population of this country through cumbersome, ineffective, vague, unacceptable, and unnecessary measures, some of which are already in force under provincial legislation. This bill duplicates the laws now on the provincial statutes. Why double up on the licence requirement and the cost? The legislation should not have been formulated at all until negotiated agreements had been entered into with every provincial government and territory.

Rather than face up to its responsibilities by introducing policies and legislation which would adequately bolster our flagging economy and help those on or below the poverty line, the government goes out of its way to create situations which drive a certain segment of our population into crime. Bills with the frightening impact of Bill C-83 perhaps do upset people to the degree that they forget about this country's economic mess temporarily, but let us never forget that Canadians are intelligent and have long memories, perhaps into the year 1978 or 1979.

[Mr. Towers.]

People who want to earn an honest living for themselves and to provide for their families do not turn to crime, even though they hand back too much of their earnings to a spendthrift government. Why does anyone rob another? It is usually to obtain money or a thing of value to sell. Why are so many able-bodied Canadians today unwilling to accept the jobs offered? One cannot blame those who do not believe they should work for their living because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said those who do not want to work need not do so. How true that is under the programs of his government. To encourage laziness and destroy incentive fosters crime. When criminals are not punished, and I mean punished, when in prison, they look to prisons for their livelihood, and why not? They are not compelled to work there either.

Instead of spending the time of this House on legislation to restrict our people's freedoms, the government should be bringing in legislation to provide work, to see that those who are able do work before they receive benefits, and to deal with law-breakers as criminals instead of coddling them as if they were privileged.

To get to the root of crime and criminals one must consider the moral standards of a country, how our fellowman is treated, and what has turned a good citizen into a law-breaker. Rehabilitation of prisoners is important and necessary, but more important are the maintenance and rehabilitation of people before they are lead or driven along that downward road. Many offences are committed because of frustration, permissiveness, domination, insecurity, malnutrition, improper conditions, with no future goal.

● (2130)

First offenders are entitled to careful treatment, humane discipline, and an opportunity eventually to return to mingle with their friends, neighbours and families, to work to better themselves. Very often ex-inmates return to lives of crime simply because they know they will be afforded every comfort in prison, and little punishment for another offence. One never hears of an escapee or a former prisoner failing to commit a crime for want of a weapon.

This bill would place restrictions on millions in a lame attempt to trap the minority who are bent on breaking the law. Punishment is meted out to legitimate citizens to protect delinquents, who do not earn their keep, so law-abiding Canadians pay once more.

Many of my constituents have expressed doubts and asked countless questions about Bill C-83. Does the government not realize how difficult it will be to administer this vague and inadequate legislation? Did no one, not even within cabinet, stop long enough to think what the cost would be and how policemen would be hampered, while citizens are harassed, by these measures? Our police are faced with too many risks to their lives now, as well as with escapees who do not honour life. Why should they when their own is not at stake? Already-over-burdened officers of the law will be loaded down with innumerable additional investigations and doubts under this bill.

People are wondering what the next federal infringement on their basic rights and fundamental freedoms will be. My people want to know why the ideas and recommendations of one person or of a small group are accepted and legislated by the government while the suggestions, opinions, and pleas of millions of taxpayers are ignored. Even cabinet ministers were elected to parliament to listen to their constituents and to heed the majority of Canadians on important issues like this. In their comfortable pews, in which they are untouchable and unreachable inside or outside this Chamber, have they forgotten completely why they are here? I want to remind them that they are here to serve Canada and her people, not to turn our country into a dictatorship just to satisfy their or their colleagues' whims. Parliament's duty and role should be to legislate for the betterment of Canada and Canadians and uphold democracy. This government, Mr. Speaker, has become too accustomed to shoving measures through this House and committees.

The Minister of Justice and his colleagues could still redeem some of the respect they have lost and improve the image they have marred. They could do this by supporting the amendment by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and regain a degree of the faith of the people of this country. They could do so by one simple procedure—divide Bill C-83 by placing the gun control provisions in a separate bill. Human nature admires anyone who admits he is wrong; everyone is entitled to some mistakes and misjudgments. Mr. Speaker, it takes a big man to admit his failures, and I would hope that the government is big enough in the right way to reconsider Bill C-83 and our requests.

If the government refuses to go along with the reasonable proposal to divide Bill C-83, all the excuses, camouflages, coverups, yes even telephones calls, or personal representations, will not and cannot turn it into a responsible and dependable government.

The government has a lot of answers to give. Why did the cabinet not accept the offer of fish and game associations to assist in drafting suitable gun legislation? Has the government already started to hire personnel to administer this program? Is the reported estimate of 900 employees going to be required to implement these laws? These are only a few of the questions not answered; there will be many more if this bill is passed in its present form.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-83, the peace and security package of legislation which the government has brought before the House. I believe legislation to control crime is being demanded by our Canadian people all across this country.

This bill deals with many aspects of our criminal justice system. We know of course these measures are not a total answer to the problem of crime. The crime rate has increased by about 31 per cent between 1970 and 1974. These measures are but the tools with which the police forces and our courts can deal with crime more effectively. The total problem relates to many aspects of our society including our family life, the media, the attitudes of our society, housing, our education programs, unemployment and our whole value system. Although the steps we take in this legislation are important and necessary, surely they do not represent the total answer because that is a much wider question.

It is interesting to note that in this session of parliament we have already passed Bill C-71 to tighten up the bail laws and provide for better security of people in our communities in respect of dangerous persons. A person charged with serious offences or charged a second time on a serious offence while on bail will have to show why he should be granted bail.

The peace and security legislation before us now makes a new provision related to dangerous offenders which will replace the present law related to habitual criminals and dangerous sex offenders. The penalty provided under the section relating to dangerous offenders will be indeterminate and will apply to persons involved in crimes of personal violence or sex related crimes such as rape, indecent assault, and gross indecency, crimes which carry a penalty of 10 years or more. Safeguards are provided for this very severe penalty by the necessity of an application to the provincial attorney general of the province involved for this offence.

Another safeguard for the accused will be that after the first three years of the sentence the National Parole Board would review the sentence at least every two years to make sure that a person is not put away indefinitely under unreasonable circumstances. Likewise, the community to which the person under an indeterminate sentence would be paroled would be protected because the parole board would have two members added to it from the area to which the offender might return.

The legislation before us increases the powers of the police to deal with organized crime by giving more power to wiretap phone-calls for longer periods and the removal of the necessity to notify people that their phones have been tapped. I understand the complaints which have been made by the police in this type of case during the last few years. If the police were not completely sure they would get enough evidence to secure a conviction in the one series of wiretaps they would not do it because they would have to notify the criminal within 90 days, and therefore he would know he was being investigated.

I believe the public's right to privacy will be adequately protected by the necessity for an application to a court for the permission to wiretap. That is of course provided for by this legislation and under the existing legislation. It seems to me that this provision after its application for a few years should be reviewed by the government to make sure it is not being abused.

These are a few of the provisions of this bill. There are many others such as those relating to crime commissions and parole and the Parole Board. However, part of this legislation has been the gun control section of the bill. Even last year before we had this peace and security legislation before us and Senator Cameron's bill relating to gun control was before the other place, I received many letters and inquiries from constituents concerning gun control.

I believe that the public consciousness with regard to the whole question of gun control has been heightened by two tragic incidents which occurred in high schools in Ottawa and in Brampton this past year. The hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) spoke the other night in the House and described in a very vivid way those tragic incidents which occurred in Brampton in his constituency. These were dramatic and tragic events which were reported on front pages from coast to coast, but they are not isolated ones.

In 1974 some 1,500 people died in Canada from gun shot wounds. That is a 30 per cent increase since 1970. Firearms were used in half of Canada's 543 murders in 1974, and in at least one third of the 15,000 robberies which occur each year. A recent public opinion poll showed that over 80 per cent of Canadians favour registration of firearms. However, in spite of this large percentage favouring some form of gun control, a large number of people are very concerned that this legislation will not be totally effective. I have received a large number of letters, petitions, and inquiries from fishing and hunting associations and gun clubs in my constituency.

There seem to be several misunderstandings of the legislation which I think are worth mentioning. For example, some people believe that all guns will be banned. They will not. Some believe that all guns will be confiscated. They will not. Others believe that all guns will be registered. They will not. Some people believe that a person would be responsible for a crime committed with a gun that was stolen from him even though he took reasonable care in storing it. He will not, of course.

Having mentioned some of the areas in which I believe there is misunderstanding of the legislation, I should like to mention some of the provisions of the gun control legislation. Especially dangerous weapons, such as machine guns, will continue to be prohibited. Other guns, such as sawed off shotguns and cheap handguns like the "Saturday Nite Special" will be prohibited as well. The government, by order in council, may add to this list of prohibited weapons, but it cannot add guns of a sporting or hunting nature. That would have to be done by parliament. Handguns will continue to be licensed, as they are now, as restricted weapons, but they will be licensed on a needs basis, and the need for these guns will be for protection of life, for use in a legitimate business, for target practice, or as collectors' items.

Long guns will not be licensed, but gun owners will. People 18 years of age and over will be licensed for a five year period under the proposals of the bill. Special licensing of younger people between the ages of 14 and 18 will be required for hunting, for target practice, of for training in the use of firearms, provided that the parents or guardians are in agreement. There is also a special provision for younger than 18-year-old hunters who live in areas in Canada where hunting is a necessity for food.

Owners of guns will be required to take reasonable care in storage of guns. Too many tragic accidents occur every year as a result of careless use and storage.

Police will be given authority to seize a weapon if they consider that the gun constitutes an imminent danger to the safety of a person. For instance, if a police officer is called to a domestic squabble and there is a gun involved, this provision could be used, and it would be more practical than the present law which requires a police officer to have a warrant.

Possession of guns used in the commission of an indictable crime will constitute an offence, carrying a penalty of from one to 14 years. This could have a significant deterrent effect on the hardened criminal. The argument is often made that a professional criminal can always steal a gun so what is the value of the licence? That may be true, but at present a person who is released from prison can go to a store and purchase a gun without any inhibitions whatsoever, and then go out and commit a crime. It seems to me that this provision would have a deterrent effect.

When we look at the number of murders committed in the United States as compared to Canada we see that in the United States some 75 per cent of murders committed with a gun are committed with a handgun, whereas in Canada, where possession of handguns has been restricted for many years, only 25 per cent are committed with handguns. So it seems to me that this is some indication that this provision would have some deterrent effect even on the professional criminal.

Likewise it seems to me that in the impulse crime where a person has a fight with his next door neighbour, flies into a rage and rushes down to a store to buy a gun and then commit a crime, such a licensing provision would require time, provide a cooling off period, and would have a deterrent effect.

Likewise a person who has a problem with alcohol or drugs or who is mentally unstable, or a person who has suicidal tendencies, could be screened out by a licensing procedure and be deterred from an incident involving a gun.

Similarly it seems to me that the provisions in this bill would be quite beneficial in the case of careless handling and storage of guns and other weapons. We often hear of children having guns and either hurting themselves or injuring others. This legislation draws attention to the careless storage and handling of guns and not taking proper precautions to preserve the safety of others. The present Criminal Code provides for the use of guns, but this bill adds the provision with regard to storage and with regard to taking proper precautions against injury to others.

There are a number of areas which members of the committee, when they start the study of this legislation, should look at in detail. Perhaps they can strengthen the legislation and make it more practical. One of these areas is the careless storage and handling of guns. A great deal of concern has been expressed about this. I should like to see the committee do a detailed study on this. Certainly proper and reasonable care of guns and storage of guns in a bush camp in northern Ontario will be different from proper storage and handling of guns in downtown Toronto. I hope that the committee will review that provision to make sure that it is practical and workable.

It seems to me that proposed section 106.8(1)(g)(ii) relating to agreements with the provinces could be studied in detail in the committee. This provides for agreements with the provinces under the regulations for the licensing, and implementation of this act. It seems to me that there should be maximum co-ordination with the provinces in that regard.

● (2150)

Many provinces already have hunting licences which require a competency test. Although I am not aware of the details in every province, some provinces may have a fitness test as well, so it seems to me that this provision is very important because in many northern areas where a great deal of hunting is done practically all the gun owners are either hunters or sportsmen. By co-ordinating with the provinces we would be cutting down on bureaucracy, red tape, and duplication of efforts, and likely reducing the cost of the administration of this proposed legislation.

Likewise it seems to me that the committee will want to consider the possibility when phasing in this kind of legislation how it could be co-ordinated with the present hunting licence provisions, especially in northern and remote areas of our country where nearly all guns are used for hunting purposes and where the number of crimes related to gun incidents is minimal.

The third matter at which I should like to see the committee take a close look is the purchase of ammunition in northern and remote areas. We should think of the situation which would occur in northern Ontario and in many areas of the west where the housewife would have to drive 40 or 50 miles to town to buy provisions for her family, and she would not be able to pick up a box of .22 shells which her husband would need to kill vermin or groundhogs. It seems to me that we must look closer at that provision to make sure it is practical and workable, and that we are not just writing a bill which is suitable for downtown Montréal, Toronto or Vancouver.

Those are some of the main matters on which I should like to see the committee go into more detail as it studies this legislation. When this legislation is before the committee, the committee will want to have representatives of fish and game groups and of hunting clubs come before it to outline the practical difficulties in implementing a program like this. We are all aware that difficulties will occur and that no draftsman can ever prepare a bill which is completely perfect, and surely we want to have the deliberations and suggestions which have been made in this House reflected in the work of the standing committee.

Having said all that, I believe we should move on to see this legislation dealt with by the committee. I hope the committee can review it and make improvements, where it is possible, so that we can have a workable and practical piece of legislation which at the same time will improve public safety in Canada.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, when the debate resumes tomorrow I should like to share some of my philosophical thoughts on this subject with hon. members. In the few moments remaining tonight I should like to start—and it will be finished tomorrow—an adventurous phantasy into what would happen if this bill becomes law. I set it in the Halifax area, the front line trench in two world wars, and I think about an occasion—after Royal Assent might be given to the bill in its present form—in which a task force from the enemy lands in Halifax. These people are armed with one of the deadliest weapons which can be used by one part of mankind against another. What is that deadly weapon? It is the Criminal Code of Canada as revised by Bill C-83.

Measures Against Crime

The first armed Canadian meets the foreign invader. He tells him to stand and surrender. The foreign invader replies, "My good man, you cannot carry a loaded rifle." The Canadian soldier, who was not born yesterday, says, "By George, I can," and he points to clause 89 of the present Bill C-83 as set forth at page 7, which reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, (a) a member of the Canadian Forces or of the armed forces of a state other than Canada that are lawfully present in Canada . . . is not guilty of an offence under this Act by reason only that he has in his possession a weapon for the purpose of his duties or employment.

"So there," says our Canadian soldier," I do have a right to carry this rifle." "Not so" says the invader, "have you checked clause 88 of the legislation?" Section 88 says:

> Every one who, not being the holder of a licence under which he may lawfully have in his possession firearms or ammunition, knowingly has in his possession any firearm or ammunition . . .

"That," says the foreign invader, "is where you are caught, my Canadian friend." Indeed the Canadian soldier is caught. Under the bill he is certainly entitled to carry his rifle, but under the bill he is not entitled to carry any ammunition in it." And for that offence," says the foreign invader, "there will be two years to be served in one of Her Majesty's prisons."

That is only the first of at least four horrendous episodes which could happen to our brave Canadian soldier fighting on the beaches of Halifax against a foreign invader armed with a revised Criminal Code of Canada, and I will tell the rest of that story when the debate resumes tomorrow.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I will just be a moment. I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader if he would be kind enough to consult with his colleagues in the other place to see if they can rectify what I can only assume was a bad error in the drafting and passing of Bill C-92, an act to provide for compensation for former prisoners of war, in that it omits any mention of prisoners of war from World War I. There are still quite a number of these people around. They could be as young as 74 or 73. Surely it must be an omission or error that they were not included in Bill C-92, and I ask the parliamentary secretary to consult with his friends in the other place to see if this can still be rectified.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I will even talk to a couple of the hon. members' friends as well.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. McCleave.]

SOCIAL SECURITY—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO PUBLIC AND PRIVATE PENSION SCHEMES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, April 2, as reported in Hansard at page 12407, I put the following question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde):

> In view of the studies which have been made by the Canadian Council on Social Development with regard to public sector pensions and in view of the call which came recently from the Canada Pension Conference for an inquiry into what is happening in the private sector with regard to pensions, will the minister consider undertaking a thorough review or establishing a public inquiry into pension policy, both public and private, so that we can be sure that things will go well down the road?

If I may paraphrase the minister's reply, it was to the effect that high level studies are being conducted in his department and in the Department of Finance, and that therefore at that moment the minister did not feel that he needed to give me an affirmative answer to my question, but I am happy to say that he left the door open.

My question is obviously one that looks to the future, but it could be a future that is closer than we realize. Before I expand on my question let me just say in a sentence or two that I am sure the minister still knows I am deeply concerned about some immediate improvements that I believe ought to be made in pension policy. In particular, I think that now is the time for an increase in the basic amount of old age security. I also think, even though this is still the session in which the bill was passed providing for spouses' allowances, that the time has come when widows and spinsters, and widowers and bachelors, should be permitted to qualify for the benefit that is now available to spouses between 60 and 65 who have older partners drawing old age security. Discrimination against persons of single status should be ended. The minister knows that, but I do not want him to forget it.

Nevertheless I think it important that we consider the implications of my question of last Friday. The study that I had in mind by the Canadian Council on Social Development is the one entitled: "How Much Choice? Retirement Policies in Canada", published in November, 1975, which was followed up recently by a statement on retirement policies issued by the Canadian Council on Social Development itself.

This study looks very closely at public pension policy and goes into the question of whether in the future we should continue to have only a portion of our pension policy in the public sector, leaving a large element in the private sector, or whether there should be an increasing involvement of the public sector in pension policy.

The Canadian Pension Conference to which I also referred has gone into this matter and expressed some concern, almost alarm, about the future of private pension plans, and this raises the whole question fo whether there should not be an expansion of what is being done in the public sector.

May I digress for a moment to say that studies and papers are being written and produced in the United States with regard to the situation down there which are even more alarming than the statements made in this country.

And rightly so, Mr. Speaker, because I think that our public sector pension plans in Canada are much more soundly based. We started early on a universal scheme which is nation-wide, and I think we are in a better position for the future.

Then we hear other voices, such as some of the provinces that like to be able to borrow money out of the Canada Pension Plan fund at a low rate of interest, making statements about the fact that not very far down the road the rates that Canadians will have to pay under the Canada Pension Plan will have to be increased not just to protect their pension position but to provide low borrowing rates for the provinces.

Then we hear voices of other groups that just do not like universal pensions, universal family allowances, groups that are still saying that these things should be done away with and that payments should be made only in cases of need.

I submit that all of these matters call for the kinds of studies that are taking place in the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Finance, but time creeps up on us very fast and we could be in trouble. Some of these plans could fail to achieve all the things that we hoped they would achieve. Instead of waiting until there is a crisis, I think an over-all study by a public inquiry or a commission is something that the minister and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), should establish, and would bring credit upon themselves for doing so.

The minister knows that I think we have to move more in the direction of the, Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan providing almost entirely for the retirement years of our people. I think the Canada Pension Plan has to be enlarged. It has to take over a good deal of what the private sector is now doing. However, that is part of what should be studied, so I leave it at that.

I confess that I have included in what I have said tonight some of my own ideas as to what ought to be done now. I think my proposals should be implemented. However, the main burden of my making these remarks tonight and the reason I am particularly glad the minister is here, and I appreciate his staying for the late show, is that I seriously think that the idea of an over-all study of pension policy is overdue. I hope that tonight the minister will open the door even a little wider to such a study.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my answer on April 2, the issue of a review of public and private pension policy is currently under study by the government.

Officials from my department, along with officials of the Department of Finance and the department of insurance, are currently preparing a situation report on pension policy for cabinet. This report will review all available information on current pension policy and programs. The review by the officials will take into account such issues as those raised in studies prepared by the Canadian Council on Social Development and others. On receipt of that report my colleagues and I will consider what steps should be taken to assist in the future development of policies dealing with retirement issues.

No decision has been taken one way or another with regard to implementing a more ambitious study, either within government or public inquiry or review. I am not ruling out such possibilities, but such a decision would only be made following an examination of the report prepared by our officials.

The hon. member stressed tonight some urgency on the issue. I submit to him that before embarking on a broad ranging royal commission type of study which we might not need, there would be some merit in assessing whether we can arrive at conclusions much faster and by a less elaborate way. I need only refer the hon. member to the experience with the Carter Commission. From the time the commission started until the legislation was finally implemented, a span of almost ten years had elapsed. Also, the final project was much different from what came out of the commission. The hon. member has been in the House much longer than I. He knows as well as I do that royal commissions are not exactly the panacea given this type of situation or problem.

The desire is to put into effect improvements in the area of pensions in Canada. Several have resulted from the social security review. I have no doubt that there are still several important issues to be dealt with and I hope this can be done rather speedily.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT—THREATENED STRIKE OF SAFETY OPERATIONS GROUP—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSURE CONTINUED OPERATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak on the air safety inspector walkout. I find it strange that neither the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) nor his parliamentary secretary are here. I can only assume that there is some secretary here who has nothing to do with this subject at all.

I will have to put on the record two questions to the Minister of Transport. First, in view of the fact that Transport Canada's involvement and authority in air carrier inspection arose out of recommendations contained in Justice Gibson's report of January 29, 1971, into the DC-8 crash of July 5, 1970, at Toronto, why, contrary to these recommendations, has Transport Canada surrendered this authority to the very airline that was subject of this inquiry in the first place, Air Canada?

Second, if at the time this authority was surrendered to Air Canada the minister was unaware that this policy of having Transport Canada Civil Aviation inspectors supervise airline inspection arose out of recommendations contained in Justice Gibson's report, can he assure this House that the authority granted Air Canada on April 2, 1976, will be revoked?

A message from Transport Canada dated April 2, 1976, stated that they were proposing the appointment of chief flying instructors as air carrier designated examiners. It further stated it has been decided to institute a trial program for a period of up to 12 months. This is definitely a move to replace safety inspectors who are on strike. These Air Canada appointments are an obvious attempt at strike breaking by the Liberal government, especially by the Minister of Transport and by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) who are placing strike-breaking before air safety. A similar notice has been sent to CP Airlines granting some of their pilots the right to become inspectors for a 12-month period.

● (2210)

I should like to quote from the autumn, 1973, issue of the magazine "Pilot". We find there a statement by Mr. Walter McLeish on the role of the Air Canada inspector. Mr. McLeish is the Director General of Civil Aviation, Ministry of Transport. In his statement he said:

It should be obvious that in the public interest and in order to verify the minister's certification, inspections of every operating certificate holder must be conducted on a continuing and orderly basis to ensure that the holder continues to be "adequately equipped and able to conduct a safe operation".

He went on to say:

After the Air Canada's DC-8 accident in Toronto in July, 1970, and as a direct result of specific recommendations made in Judge Gibson's report, authority was received to expand air carrier inspection activities . . .

Further on Mr. McLeish said:

To assess the effectiveness and standard of the initial training program he (the air carrier inspector) will observe parts of the program and then conduct the initial type proficiency checks or the upgrading checks . . . he will conduct the proficiency checks on the designated company check pilots.

Who is going to check the check pilots when their licences run out if the safety inspectors are on strike? This question must be answered in the interest of the safety of the travelling public and of air crews.

In Mr. Justice Gibson's report dated July 5, 1970, the following statement appears:

Most check pilots are reluctant to report a competent line pilot in such a manner as to incriminate him and, I suspect, some check pilots were in favour of the above so-called malpractice in that it reduced the number of bad landings.

This is a retrogressive move going back to all inspections being made by check pilots.

Further on appears this statement:

As the evidence indicated that some Air Canada check pilots did not insist that certain Air Canada pilots adhere strictly to the operating procedures described in Air Canada's DC-8 operating manual (it is recommended) that Air Canada take whatever steps are necessary to make certain that all its check pilots require that all pilots adhere strictly to the operating procedures laid down for this type of aircraft as prescribed in the said manual.

This practice must be stopped and the Minister of Transport must become personnally involved in this labour dispute in the best interests of air safety.

I go on now to quote from the rules and regulations of the Ministry of Transport with regard to air safety inspection, reading from section 8 which has to do with indoctrination and training. There we find the following:

a) Indoctrination and training for all examiners will normally be supervised by an MOT inspector holding corresponding licence and rates appropriate to the particular examiner designation.

b) Responsible inspectors will instruct, observe, test and evaluate to the extent necessary to ensure prospective examiners possess:

(1) Satisfactory knowledge of their responsibilities with respect to the authority granted to them by the MOT.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

(2) Sufficient knowledge, ability and skill required to conduct a particular test.

You can see that this has all been placed aside with the appointing of those Air Canada check pilots while the safety instructors are out on strike.

The document continues:

(3) Satisfactory knowledge of MOT's evaluation, grading standards, formats and reports associated with the particular examiner function.

(c) In determining the above, inspectors will observe the prospective examiner's conduct, evaluate grade and critique at least one complete pilot proficiency check appropriate to the licence involved. If prospective examiners do not satisfy all requirements they will not be approved.

(d) Responsible inspectors will impress upon prospective examiners they will be representing and responsible to the MOT. Prospective examiners must understand that many company pilots, economics—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) I should like to respond to the hon. gentleman's question. The hon. member's statement that 11 Air Canada pilots have expired licences may be quite correct. However, I am informed that this is a fluid situation which may vary from day to day due to the fact there is only one official in most regions available to process licensing documentation. Certain limited measures to relieve the licensing situation, without prejudice to safety, have been introduced. However, the period during which they may continue to be implemented diminishes with each passing day and the situation will deteriorate progressively, and eventually operations may have to be curtailed unless the strike is settled.

In view of the foregoing, therefore, it is the minister's intention to keep himself informed as to the general situation and await developments while continuing to ensure, through all means at his disposal, the provision of safe air transportation for the flying public.

FLOODS—DATE OF COMPLETION OF STUDY OF MEASURES TO PREVENT FLOODING IN MONTREAL AREA

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue in greater depth tonight a question I asked yesterday of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) involving a study of flooding, with particular reference to those riverside areas of the constituency of Vaudreuil that suffered such extensive damage in the floods of 1974 and again this year, 1976.

I note from the records that in the Montreal area damage costs in 1971 exceeded $2 million, whilst protection costs were some $290,000. In 1972 damage costs exceeded $6 million, whilst protection costs were some $260,000.

In a general news release dated October 3, 1974, it was stated that "Environment Canada minister Jeanne Sauvé and the Minister of Natural Resources for Quebec Gilles Massé . . . announced the beginning of an intensive two-year study of methods to alleviate flooding in the Montreal area. The joint study was to involve the federal Department of Public Works and Transport, Quebec's Environmental Protection Service and Hydro-Quebec."

The study was to concentrate mainly on the area around Lake St. Louis, the St. Lawrence downstream to Vercheres, Lake of Two Mountains, and the two rivers, des Prairies and des Milles Iles.

Montreal and its heavily developed suburbs, situated at the confluence of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence, are particularly vulnerable to flood damage. Flooding occurs whenever the combined discharge of the two rivers exceeds the natural capacity of channels around the Island of Montreal. The flood hazard is compounded when the water level in the Great Lakes and Ottawa drainage basins is abnormally high, as it has been in recent years.

Several alternatives to be examined by the study board are changes in regulation of the Ottawa River, structural changes in the channels around Montreal, and a program of dyking and land-zoning for flood prone areas.

The following day, October 4, 1974, in a news release, Environment Canada Minister Jeanne Sauvé invited a new federal approach to reduce the mounting toll of damages caused by floods. She said, "Canada has to reduce the toll of personal suffering and financial loss due to floods."

Experience has shown that a flood damage reduction policy based on structural work alone may not be effective. Alternatives to be considered include land use adjustments such as acquisition and zoning, flood warning and forecasting, flood routing through property easements, flood-proofing of structures, up-stream storage, stream straightening, flood by-passing, and dykes.

● (2220)

A resolution passed by the town of Pierrefonds on October 21, 1974, reads in part:

[Translation]

WHEREAS the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, Minister of Environment, and the hon. Gilles Massé have recently issued a joint press release authorizing a new study of the means to control floodings in the Montreal area;

WHEREAS the committee is not required to submit its report before 1976;

It is resolved that our elected representatives be asked to raise questions in the House of Commons and in the National Assembly to determine what procedures will be taken to restrict floodings during that study and to compensate for the hardships and damages endured by our citizens during that time.

[English]

To the question I asked in December, 1974, which reads:

[Translation]

To this date, what is the total estimated amount of the claims for compensation under the Federal Aid Program for last spring's flood in the Province of Quebec?

[English]

—the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Chrétien) answered:

[Translation]

. . . the province has provided no official estimate of the expenditures it expects to make for this purpose.

[English]

To the second part of the question, which was:

[Translation]

Are discussions with the provincial government under way or being arranged to provide for an equivalent amount of money to prevent further floods?

And the answer was:

No discussions have been held with the provincial government to provide any money to prevent further flooding, nor are any such discussions scheduled.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, my three questions are: First, the question posed by the town of Pierrefonds which reads:

[Translation]

What procedures will be taken to restrict floodings during that study and to compensate for the hardships and damages endured by our citizens during that time.

[English]

Second, has the study been as exhaustive as it was stated it would be in 1974, including consideration of acquisition as well as stream straightening?

Third, will federal funds contributed in 1974 and 1976 be cumulative for purposes of ascertaining the extent of the federal contribution to preventive works recommended by the report?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for his persistence in this matter. I am sure he should rightfully accept some of the credit when this thing is eventually worked out.

Finding the best way of reducing human suffering and damages due to floods in the Montreal area is a very complex matter, as the hon. member stated. The floods are due to one or a combination of three main factors, high flows from Lake Ontario down the St. Lawrence River, high flows in the Ottawa River, and floods from local rivers. To complicate matters further, water levels may be seriously affected by ice jams along the various waterways. It is not then surprising that it has taken several years for the Canada-Quebec technical committee started in May, 1974, to produce a report which will advise us on the most effective and cheapest ways of solving the problem.

In the provisional report, which I have here, which the minister received yesterday and which I received today, the technical people report on studies to change the way the power dams in the Ottawa system are operated to provide a greater measure of flood control without sacrificing hydro-electric power. They report on possibilities of storing more water upstream on the Ottawa for flood control.

They are examining the costs and possibilities of dyking or dredging or removing buildings from the flood plain in the immediate Montreal area. As you can imagine, the weighing of the costs and benefits of these various alternative means of reducing damages is not a simple job. We want the solution to be effective and to cost the least money possible for the taxpayers of Canada and Quebec. The minister hopes to meet with the Hon. J. Cournoyer, the responsible minister in Quebec, in the near future to review the provisional report and to see what immediate steps might be taken.

The final technical report and recommendations are, however, not due until June 30, and it may be difficult to make sound judgments on the best lasting solutions to the problem until all the facts are reported.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF EQUIVALENT OF SPOUSE'S OLD AGE PENSION TO WIDOWS, WIDOWERS, SPINSTERS AND BACHELORS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to present a motion dealing with a matter of great urgency to many Canadians. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare be urged to introduce at this session the necessary legislation to provide for the equivalent of the spouse's allowance, as provided in the Old Age Security Act, to be paid as well to widows, spinsters, widowers and bachelors between the ages of 60 and 65, either on the basis of need or on the basis of their being out of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A motion under Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BILINGUALISM

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF LANGUAGE COMMISSIONER'S RECOMMENDATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of pressing and urgent necessity.

In view of the poor results obtained by the implementation of the government policy on bilingualism and since the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Keith Spicer, himself advocates a new direction of the program to teach a second language to public servants, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House entrust a special parliamentary committee with the care of studying, analyzing and if necessary, implementing, the recommendations of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ENCOURAGE MARITIME TRANSPORTATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an important and urgent matter.

Considering that from 1959 to 1973 the government's expenses for maritime transportation and construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway reached only $859 million, while during the same period railway companies received $2.6 billion in subsidies; that Canada ranks among the most important importing and exporting countries in the world and that the Canadian maritime transportation industry is now headed for disaster, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the House direct the government to take the necessary steps to encourage the building and operation of maritime transport in Canada in order to help ship owners to be present again on the international maritime scene.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF ROLE OF MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS IN GRANTING CONCESSIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether he has taken any steps since yesterday to brief himself more fully on the role of any ministers or their staffs with regard to concessions to Sky Shops and whether he can inform the House if he has discovered any errors of omission or commission by ministers or their staffs in their staff relations or otherwise.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I made clear yesterday was that I have not been briefed by the police on this matter. I presume they would have told me if any minister had been under any suspicion, but there was no information conveyed to me by them on that. I said yesterday that I had talked to ministers and asked about their involvement. I am satisfied that neither the present Minister of the Environment nor the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce knew of any wrongdoing in their departments or on the part of their staff in the Sky Shops matter.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ALLEGATION ADMINISTRATION TAINTED BY PARTISAN POLITICS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I certainly thank the Prime Minister for that answer, but I should like to put a further question to him. In view of increasing evidence that porkbarrel politics has been interfering with the administration of the country's affairs at the highest staff levels in the offices of the Minister of Transport and DREE, and in view of previous denials by the Solicitor General that Liberal Party fund raising had anything to do with the investigations, which, of course, has been contradicted by the warrant obtained by the RCMP, does the Prime Minister not concede that he owes the country an explanation as to how his administration has been tainted by partisan politics, to the detriment of the management of the country's affairs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): From one who talks of partisan politics that seems to me to be a fine statement of partisan politics in which there are unsubstantiated allegations. If the hon. member has any allegations, I will make sure the police look into them, and I will look into them myself. I told the House—and I expect the hon. member to take my word—that I discussed this matter with both ministers and that they knew of no unethical, illegal or improper activities within their offices regarding the Sky Shops affair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ROLE OF MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT IN APPOINTMENT OF CARMEL CARRIÈRE TO IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, naturally I respect the word of the Prime Minister on this matter. I should like to ask a final supplementary of the Minister of the Environment on the question of the appointment of Carmel Carrière to the Immigration Appeal Board. Could the minister indicate whether he played any role at the relevant time with respect to this appointment and whether the appointment will be renewed, or will it be as it was in the case of the Hamilton Harbour Commission? Will there be changes made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, I have the greatest difficulty understanding how that relates to the minister's responsibility for the environment. Could the hon. member make that clear?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I think it has a relationship in the sense that this lady was the executive assistant to the minister at some relevant times here and is now on the Immigration Appeal Board, so I am wondering about the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: At some relevant times is the point which might be clarified by the hon. member. I thought we ought to be clear on what relevant time, what ministry and what minister. We have to understand how the question relates to the minister's current responsibilities because it is to the current minister that the question is put. I do not think we have to use the whole question period to try to sort this out, but if the hon. member has a question for the appropriate minister at the time the decision to make the appointment was made, perhaps the hon. member would like to reflect on how he might be more accurate.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY PRIME MINISTER OF ROLE OF MINISTERS OR OFFICIALS IN GRANTING CONCESSIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, with all deference I think the Prime Minister begs the question here, and having regard to our experiences in the judges' affair in which some time elapsed before he was able to apprise himself and make himself fully aware of the circumstances with respect to that incident, I now ask the Prime Minister whether he will undertake at this time to make the fullest and most thorough investigation on the basis of ministerial responsibility and report before Easter with respect to his knowledge or his investigation of whether the ministers or staff members of the ministers' offices were free from any impropriety whatsoever, so that we can be satisfied before we break for Easter.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the preamble to the question the hon. member talked about a lapse of time. I remind him that as soon as the Minister of Justice heard from the judges of any possible impropriety, he launched an investigation by the judges themselves into the matter.

As far as my own conduct is concerned, I always took the position that I would wait for the report of the Chief Justice before investigating into the courts, and I still maintain that was the proper conduct. Indeed, that applied also to the conduct of my ministers. On the question itself, I have launched an investigation, to use the words of the hon. member. I discussed this matter at some length with both ministers. I am satisfied, as I told the House a moment ago, about their conduct. In so far as the police having suspicions about other people is concerned, not in my cabinet and not in this House, the matter has been turned over to the attorney general of the province, and he will take whatever measures he feels are proper. In so far as the responsibilities of the minister are concerned, I have discussed that with them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in view of the references made yesterday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would give us an assurance before Easter. I think it would be proper for the Prime Minister to make an investigation as soon as possible. Therefore, perhaps he will assure us that in order to make sure he is fully apprised of the facts he will communicate with the attorney general or, indeed, the RCMP to see what information there might be that would assist him in coming to a conclusion as to whether there has been any impropriety on the part of senior staff members in ministers' offices and report to us, as I say, before Easter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this invitation from the opposition because normally I would not ask the police to make a report to me on their investigations. If I did I am sure the opposition would claim I should not be interfering with the police by asking them what they are doing there.

Mr. Clark: You did in the case of the Hamilton harbour.

Mr. Trudeau: I did not in any case. Mr. Speaker, I will, following this series of comments, undertake to talk to the police as early as possible, Monday if they are prepared to see me, to ask them to confirm what I already have from the ministers, namely, that the police have no reason to believe the ministers are involved in wrongdoing. I hope the House will not ask me also to conduct an investigation into other people who are being considered for charges by the courts of justice.

In so far as the ministers are concerned, I repeat the fact that the police have not alerted me to any wrongdoing, giving me a prima facie case to believe that the police have no suspicion and no cause to believe the ministers are involved. It has been a long standing practice that when police are investigating ministers they let the Prime Minister know. In this case they have not found it necessary to tell me they had any suspicion of wrongdoing in the matter. I will satisfy the member and ask the police to give me a much more complete report than they usually do.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FAILURE OF MINISTER TO BE AWARE OF ISSUANCE OF EXPLORATORY PERMITS—PROMISE OF CONSULTATION WITH INUIT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I would direct my question to the Prime Minister. On Wednesday of this week in answer to a question by the member for Northwest Territories the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated he was unaware of the issuance of 68 exploratory permits in the Northwest Territories. Would the Prime Minister advise whether he has inquired as to why his minister is unaware, in respect of such an important matter, of what is going on in his department? In addition, could the Prime Minister advise the House whether the cabinet in the commitment to the Inuit Tapirisat people on February 27 indicated that no further permits would be issued in the Northwest Territories without consultation?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, these permits are issued in the regular course of action by the department, and it is necessary that a land use permit be given before any further exploration is to take place. If this occurs, there is a 42 day period required for consultation, so the consultation factor did not come into play in this particular action.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION OF POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS IN PROSECUTIONS UNDER REGULATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, that only answers one part of the question. The other part asked whether there was any commitment at all given. Let me direct my supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. In evidence before the Berger inquiry by Mr. Douglas Stephen, regional director of Canadian Wildlife Services, he said, and I hope I quote him correctly, that he has not prosecuted some companies under the environmental protection regulations because of the political impact such prosecutions might have. He said to the judge he would put wings and a halo to his minister. I think he was referring to this particular minister. Can the minister advise the House if he has had any discussions with that particular official and whether that evidence indicates government policy in the north?

● (1120)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I read part of his testimony before the Berger Commission. This is the first time I have heard about that. I have enough halos. I do not need anyone to give me more. I have never asked anyone in the department to look at the political aspect of those problems.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Banish the thought.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am happy that the right hon. member for Prince Albert has confirmed what I am saying. I would like to see this man to ask him exactly what he meant when he made this statement.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY PRIOR TO ISSUANCE OF PERMITS TO DRILL IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): The Beaufort Sea permits for drilling are still being delayed. I understand that the delay will be short. In view of the fact the preliminary studies on the Beaufort Sea indicate a potential for environmental disaster in the event of a blowout, will the minister refer that question to the committee on the environment or the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that some study can be done by parliamentarians in consultation with environmentalists prior to the permit being issued? Why is there no activity in the House of Commons with regard to an inquiry prior to the issuance of the drilling permits?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there has been a very long inquiry. One condition when the temporary permit was issued was that there be an inquiry on the environmental aspect of the problem. We received the report. Everything is now before cabinet. There has been a short discussion on this, even before the standing committee. The permit, of course, will not be issued before the cabinet decision. I cannot reveal that because the decision has not yet been made.

OLYMPIC GAMES

INQUIRY WHETHER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INVITED THE QUEEN TO OPEN GAMES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In a telegram the private secretary of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II is said to have sent to a member of the Quebec National Assembly, it would be clearly indicated that, in compliance with the express wish of the Canadian authorities, Her Majesty has accepted to inaugurate the Olympic Games. As the Prime Minister stated categorically before 1,500 delegates of his party that COJO alone was responsible for that invitation, would he be willing, in order to protect his integrity, to state quite clearly what the truth of the matter is?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the telegram mentioned by the hon. member, but I thank him for the question as it will give me the opportunity of throwing a little light on the facts.

May I point out to the hon. member that he is slightly in error when he says that I claimed that COJO alone was responsible for the invitation. What I told the delegates, and willingly repeat in this House, is that—and to my mind it is important that this be known—under international rules COJO in fact invited the Queen of Canada to inaugurate the games. It did so through normal channels, that is by asking the federal government to convey the invitation, inasmuch as it is standard practice, whenever a province, a regiment or any other Canadian groups wants to invite a member of the royal family, for the federal government to transmit the invitation.

What I do want to stress is that the invitation came from COJO according to international rules; I transmitted it after having discussed the matter with the Quebec premier, who told me he had spoken to Mayor Drapeau about it. Only after those consultations did Premier Bourassa and myself agree to encourage COJO to go ahead, and I did convey the invitation.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS TO IMPROVE CONDITIONS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who has joint responsibility with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on the tariff role with regard to the textile industry in Canada. Yesterday the Senate committee studying the textile industry in Canada tabled its first report. Among other things, it criticizes the federal government for its unwillingness to implement the textile policy in accordance with the aims of that policy and, in fact, to promote almost an open door policy. My question to the Minister of Finance is the following: Will the government act immediately on the preliminary recommendations of the committee in order to alleviate the chaotic conditions affecting Canada's textile industry and, more particularly, to assure some reasonable percentage of the Canadian market to the domestic industry and labour force? Also, and this is very important, will the government immediately establish a time limit for the relevant minister to act on the recommendations of the Textile and Clothing Board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague and I do have this question under consideration. We hope to be able to make a very early statement on it.

Mr. Grafftey: In view of the mass lay-offs in the textile industry affecting breadwinners who have very little mobility, can the minister assure the House that we will see immediate action to implement these recommendations and bring hope to both labour and industry in this regard?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I have said, we intend to make a careful analyses of this and issue an early statement. But if by "immediately" he means now, while I am on my feet, the answer is, no.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

PROPOSAL THAT CASUALTY AND GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANIES BE BROUGHT UNDER BOARD CONTROL

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance—the Prime Minister probably gave him notice of it since I asked the question of the Prime Minister last week while the minister was away at the Dominion-Provincial Conference. Has the Minister of Finance considered the recommendation of the Anti-Inflation Board that the casualty and general insurance companies which collectively lost over $400 million last year and would therefore seem to be outside the jurisdiction of the Anti-Inflation Board should in any event be brought under the board's control?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): It is true the picture as a whole indicates a loss position but individual companies have been in a profit-making position. The government has considered the recommendation of the Anti-Inflation Board and I anticipate an order in council on this question next week.

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY INTO CONDITIONS IN INSTITUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In connection with the matter I raised yesterday with the Solicitor General, I should now like to direct a further question to him. Yesterday he said the inmates in Prince Albert penitentiary who had been on the sit-down had gone back to their cells and that all was reasonably well and being investigated by, I think, three civil servants. I would point out that at the very time he was saying this, or almost the same time, while the sit-down was ending, a dig-in was continuing and they had dug a tunnel to within 25 feet of safety. In other words, the situation was serious and illustrates the need for an independent examination of what is taking place. Will the minister not give consideration, particularly in view of the representation of the Métis Society of Saskatchewan that things are serious because of the failure of the department to appoint a judge to look into this matter so that there will be no cover up by civil servants?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): It is true that during the sit-down strike a number of inmates, not all of them, were involved in digging a tunnel in an attempt to escape. I might say that although they had dug about 60 feet, they were far from freedom.

An hon. Member: Twenty-five feet away.

Mr. Allmand: They were 25 feet from the wall but what they did not know was that the wall extends into the ground some ten feet; they would have had a difficult time getting past it through a tunnel or in any other way. It was a lot of work for nothing. As mentioned by the right hon. member we have set up an internal inquiry to look into this matter. I will await that report. If the report is not satisfactory and we do not get enough information I will consider other means of dealing with the matter.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED CONFISCATION OF EARNINGS OF DRUG TRAFFICKERS—POSSIBLE IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF LEDAIN COMMISSION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In asking it I also want to make a positive suggestion. I have noted in the news media that there have been cases where people who have been trafficking in hard drugs have been assessed by the income tax officials. If the department is able to assess the amount of money that these hard drug traffickers are making, would the minister consider whether there is any legislation available that would enable him to confiscate all of this money? This is the one of the most demoralizing criminal rackets today and is one of the great causes of and contributors to crime.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I found the same story that the hon. member refers to rather interesting, to say the least. I have been examining it in light of the amendments that we made in Bill C-71 in regard to the provisions relating to the proceeds of crime; and I have also been examining it to see whether those provisions could apply to such cases.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is there any policy existing that will change any laws relating to drug trafficking or which will implement any of the recommendations of the LeDain Commission, which report cost several million dollars and seems to be gathering dust?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not legislation will be introduced, I think the hon. member appreciates that this will be announced in due course in the usual way.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURES TO ELIMINATE RADIOACTIVE DANGERS AT ELLIOT LAKE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that uranium mines come under federal jurisdiction, what steps are being taken to ensure that authority from the Atomic Energy Control Board is granted automatically to the occupational safety and health department of the Department of Labour to make on the spot inspections to ensure that radioactive dangers at the uranium mines at Elliot Lake are eliminated?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that there is very close co-ordination between the Department of Labour, the deparment responsible for the atomic energy commission and the commission itself. I might add that we have arranged with various provincial governments, including the province of Ontario, that they will assume their responsibility and co-operate with us in terms of occupational health standards. I think the matter the hon. member refers to has been brought to my attention previously, and I indicated to the United Steel Workers and to other unions the arrangement we have entered into concerning the responsibilities of the provinces.

DATE OF LAST INSPECTION OF URANIUM MINES—AVAILABILITY OF REPORTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When is the last time that safety inspectors of the Department of Labour visited the mines at Elliot Lake, Ontario, and Uranium City, Wollaston Lake and Cluff Lake in Saskatchewan? If such a visit has been completed, are the reports of these investigations available to the public?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will get that information for the hon. member. I must advise him that I will have to check with the provinces in this connection. I will also inquire as to their diligence in conducting these inspections.

AGRICULTURE

MEASURES TO CONTROL BLUE TONGUE DISEASE—POSSIBLE COMPENSATION FOR CATTLE DESTROYED

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister been advised of the very serious outbreak of the disease blue tongue among cattle in the south Okanagan valley of British Columbia?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are a month behind.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): It is not a Tory disease. Also, what is the department's policy in dealing with the problem? If it is to dispose of the herds, will there be adequate compensation paid to the owners?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the department's policy is to eradicate the source of the disease, and the herds infected by the disease, as quickly as possible and to pay proper compensation. This disease has been researched. It comes from imported animals from the United States that had the disease in the first place.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSED RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I address my question to the Minister of Labour. Due to labour problems at the finance branch of Air Canada in Winnipeg, hundreds of thousands of dollars in revenue are being lost, and as the CALEA contract expired last August would the minister take immediate steps to have Air Canada return to the negotiating table?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that this has been a very difficult dispute. The commissioner has made a report, and as the hon. member knows there have been endeavours made to have the parties get together, without success. As to renewed efforts on the department's part to see whether the dispute can be resolved, yes, we are making those efforts now.

AIR CANADA

FAILURE OF COMPANY TO PAY BILL AS RESULT OF DISPUTE WITH FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Air Canada is not able to pay its bills on time due to the problems at the finance branch in Winnipeg. As the gas board in London, England has threatened to cut off the gas supply to the Air Canada flight kitchen at Heathrow Airport because the gas bill has not been paid, as Air Canada also owes a 2,700 pounds electricity bill and Seagrams and other companies have served notice that all further purchases must be on a cash on delivery basis, and as two other companies are in serious financial difficulties due to Air Canada's negligence, would the Prime Minister look into the matter immediately and stop this idiotic nonsense which has existed at the finance branch in Winnipeg for the last three years? Canada's image abroad is being seriously damaged by this bill paying negligence.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House will understand that I am not familiar with the details of Air Canada's gas bill at Heathrow airport but I will take note of the question. I understand that the Minister of Labour is meeting with Air Canada officials on Monday, and he will, of course, discuss this and many other matters.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF FOREIGN BORROWINGS—POSSIBLE REQUEST THAT MUNICIPALITIES AND PROVINCES REDUCE FOREIGN BORROWING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of large Canadian foreign borrowings last year amounting to $4.7 billion and to almost $3 billion in the first three months this year, would the minister indicate what he anticipates will be the total foreign borrowing by Canadians in the coming year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of anticipation that I think it is probably not useful for me to make in this House. I shall be glad, of course, to discuss the general question during the budget debate.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of this extensive borrowing and the heavy debt charges that are now accruing of approximately $400 million a year for future years, would the minister indicate whether he has contacted municipalities and provinces with a view to having them tone down their aggressive borrowing in foreign markets?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker. While we have encouraged provincial governments in the past to seek to place their securities in the Canadian market, for the moment at least that restraint has been lifted from them.

AGRICULTURE

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW DAIRY POLICY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The minister previously indicated that by April 1 he would announce a dairy policy. When April 1 rolled around, all he said was "April fool, it will be on the following Thursday". Thursday has now come and gone. I wonder whether we can milk him for some sort of policy now since he seems to be dry. When is he due now?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all the bellowing over there is not going to bring about a milk program for this year any faster. I notice that no one has suggested that I put any more money into the program; they are all sitting quietly. I am amazed that there have not been more questions about this, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ASSISTANCE TO NOVA SCOTIA WITH THE COST OF PRODUCING ELECTRICITY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the report that was given to the legislature of Nova Scotia by the finance minister of that province following the finance ministers' conference held last week, which so far as he was concerned was not in the least encouraging from the point of view of federal assistance in the production of energy, may I ask the minister whether he has any words of encouragement to give the people of Nova Scotia to the effect that the federal government will assist in a tangible way so their electric power will not be cut off and people will not lose their homes through inability to pay light and power bills, as is happening at the present time?

● (1140)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I understand the very serious problem facing some of these people. I do not think the question of whether their power is cut off is for the federal government, but I can say that the federal government is looking at the case that has been put by Nova Scotia. However, I think the clear answer is that I cannot hold out very much hope. Our resources are limited.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DATE OF COMPLETION OF COST-SHARING AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES FOR ALASKA HIGHWAY—AVAILABILITY OF COPY FOR YUKON LEGISLATURE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the agreement been signed between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with regard to the cost-sharing program for the highway from Haines in the state of Alaska to Haines Junction in the Yukon and from Haines Junction at the U.S. border? If the agreement has not been signed, when does the minister expect it will be signed and that construction will commence?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the agreement has not been signed. Discussions currently are going on with the government of British Columbia with regard to the right-of-way and the environmental questions. A good deal of progress has been made and I believe these discussions will be completed shortly.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that reply. Is he aware that the Yukon legislative assembly has passed a resolution requesting a copy of the agreement when available, and can he inform the House when that agreement will be public and sent to the members of the assembly as requested.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that consultations have been held with the Yukon and that the contents of the proposed agreement have been made known to their officials. We have not completed the agreement. When it is completed I will consider making it available to the members of the council, but normally such government agreements are not made public. In this case I will consider whether we can make an exception.

Oral Questions

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR WITHHOLDING REPORT ON MERCURY POISONING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of the Environment. It relates to mercury poisoning, the Minamata disease, in parts of Northern Ontario and the report that was issued by the minister's department which was completed in 1972 and which mentioned the dangers of mercury poisoning in northern Ontario. The report was not released until 1975. I should like to ask the minister what was the reason for the three-year delay in telling the people of the dangers in the food they were eating and whether it is a continuing practice within the department to withhold from people information about things which seriously affect their health.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am inquiring about that. I understand there was a preliminary report in 1972 which was completed afterward and published only in 1975. I hope I can get more information, but this is the reason I was given this morning when I noted this delay. I think that has been mentioned before the standing committee of the House on Environment and Fisheries.

Mr. Malone: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the testimony given last night before the committee to the effect that there was total inaction in respect of the health of the people, and that basically the action has all been directed toward monitoring, would the minister give some indication concerning what kind of approaches are intended so that we do not fall into the position of always trying to assess the health problems but rather will in fact be directly trying to improve the health of the native peoples in northern communities.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is what the report is all about. So far as other Canadians are concerned, we have very strict standards as the hon. member knows. Nothing can be sold above a certain standard which I think is about 0.5 or something like that. As to the rest of the report so far as the Indians are concerned, I hope I will have the information asked for and can inform the hon. member early next week.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport I have a question for the Minister of Labour. It is further to the questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Is the minister aware that, rather than trying to meet its employees and reach an agreement, Air Canada is now taking steps to have the work normally done by its own employees in the finance department office in Winnipeg contracted out to CAE which in fact is hiring former Air Canada employees to do the work which should have been done and should be done now by Air Canada employees in the finance department? If he is aware of this will he take steps so that he and the Minister of Transport can try to get the management of Air Canada to sit down and negotiate seriously and amicably with its employees to reach an agreement.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker; it is my intention to have Air Canada sit down and negotiate an agreement with the employees. We are doing everything possible to promote that end. As to whether it would be helpful in achieving that end that I should comment on the observations of the hon. member preliminary to his question, I rather doubt.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware of and would he inquire about the rumours that are going around Winnipeg to the effect that the company is preparing to lock out its employees? Does the minister consider that kind of action would require some very strong action on the part of the minister and his colleague the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I certainly will note the hon. member's observation, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORTATION

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO REDUCE DEFICIT—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN TOLLS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I shall direct my question to the Minister of Finance, since the Minister of Transport is not here.

Considering that since 1959 the St. Lawrence Seaway has recorded nothing but deficits which now amount to $815 million, could the minister tell the House what he intends to do to correct the situation and enable the St. Lawrence Seaway to operate normally as a business?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Transport I would be glad to take notice of this question and ask the minister to reply next week.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

According to the president of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, Canadian taxpayers seem to be subsidizing the Americans to a certain extent if we consider that last year only $26 million were collected in tolls; since the operating cost goes on spiralling, would the minister be in a position to tell the House whether he intends to increase the toll rates?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that is an announcement that the Minister of Transport would want to make.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGATION UNITED STATES WORKERS DRAWING BENEFITS FROM CANADA WITHOUT BEING CHECKED—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. It relates to reports to the effect that some 2,000 American construction workers were involved with employment in and around the Sarnia area and after their employment terminated returned to the United States. Apparently unemployment insurance cheques are still being forwarded to them without inspectors having any way to check whether or not they have found jobs or are in receipt of the United States unemployment insurance. Is the parliamentary secretary aware of this very serious matter, and will he undertake to bring it to the attention of the minister in order that he can look into it and report back to the House as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Unemployment Insurance Act section 12, a reciprocal agreement was signed by Canada and the United States. Under this agreement, anybody having contributed to unemployment insurance may apply for benefits in the state where he worked, or in Canada if he ever worked here. Therefore an American having worked for more than eight weeks in Canada and returning to the United States when he is unemployed may apply and prove his entitlement to the benefits in Canada. However, the applicant must meet all conditions of eligibility as provided in the act and regulations.

● (1150)

[English]

Mr. Alexander: We are aware of that particular section. There is another section in the act which indicates that in the event of any duplication of unemployment insurance payments the Governor-in-Council, by way of regulation, can accept that particular employment. So my question still is whether the parliamentary secretary will bring this problem to the attention of the minister in order to see whether or not there is any duplication in payments, and if so, then they are wrong and the parliamentary secretary can recommend the implementation of the regulation just referred to by me.

[Translation]

Mr. Portelance: Mr. Speaker, the commission is aware of the hon. member's allegations and we shall bring them to the attention of the minister. An answer can be expected within a few days.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT NO POLITICAL CONSIDERATION WILL ENTER INTO LAYING OF CHARGES

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for New Westminster and it is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the statement made by the Canadian Wildlife Service Division at the Berger inquiry where it was admitted the agency took political implications into consideration before taking legal action and that the legal action which was taken was only of a token nature, can the minister assure the House that in future charges will be laid without fear or favour?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): I do not accept the statement that this was done in the past because of favour or political interference. It has never been that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is what the man said.

Mr. Brisco: Is the minister then saying that this is not the policy of his department or that it is not the policy of Mr. Stephens and that Mr. Stephens was in fact making a very grave error in his testimony before the commission?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The only thing I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not the policy of the department.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Marcel Prudhomme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question.

The Leader of the Opposition announced this morning the formation of a shadow cabinet. Would the Prime Minister do the Leader of the Opposition a favour by suggesting the creation of a physical fitness and amateur sports department to give the hon. member for Joliette the opportunity of serving as a full-time cabinet member?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of suggestion that I want to make sure will be considered in depth. I have the impression, on looking at seats today, that the shadow cabinet would be more appropriately termed a "ghost" cabinet.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is very cheap.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope it will not go unnoticed, even by the Prime Minister of the country, that the Leader of the Opposition and other members of our party are attending the funeral of the Hon. Grattan O'Leary who gave service to this country at least equal, if not surpassing, that of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Of course, the remark of the hon. member from the Opposition is not relevant to this. My reflection had nothing to do with the presence or absence of the people on the other side. It had to do with the quality of the leadership over there.

DRUMHELLER—ALLEGATION MAXIMUM SECURITY INMATES IN INSTITUTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. Statements have been made by guards at Drumheller institution that it is a medium security prison with maximum security inmates and minimum security standards. Since the Solicitor General has stated that there are people in maximum security who should be in medium security and vice versa, does he intend to wait until we have an Attica in Canada before he takes his own statements seriously?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not been advised by anyone that they thought maximum security inmates were at Drumheller, but since the hon. member has brought it to my attention I will check on the facts and see that we do not have maximum security inmates at Drumheller.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DIVERSION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CANADA WILL NOT SACRIFICE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it has to do with the Garrison diversion project. In view of the statement appearing in an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 21 in which it was stated that the federal government was prepared to make environmental sacrifices in order to preserve the level of U.S.-Canada relations, could the minister now assure the House that the position of Canada will not be to make any kind of sacrifices in the environmental sense with reference to the Garrison diversion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That is certainly not the intention of the government of Canada which has pressed continuously the obligations that have been undertaken by the U.S. under the appropriate international agreement. As the hon. member knows, the question of the Garrison diversion has been put before the International Joint Commission and presently the commission is undertaking an examination of what possible effects might occur as the result of the construction. Of course, the reference to the commission is broad enough to enable it to require an alteration in the structure if environmental damage were demonstrated.

Mr. Whiteway: That is the very point that is of some concern to Manitobans. In view of the fact that the IJC is taking one year to bring in its report and that there are virtually no alterations in the construction plans of the Garrison and the feeling is certainly prevalent in Manitoba that this is an irreversible project, would the minister assure the House that in view of the continuing construction, and therefore the guaranteed environmental damage which is inevitable, not pre-empting the findings of IJC, that whether or not the project is completed to any degree it will not prejudice the position of the federal government with regard to environmental damage caused by the Garrison diversion project?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in our view the mandate of the International Joint Commission is broad enough to permit it to recommend the discontinuance or the deletion of any part of the project, and for that reason of course the project is not irreversible in that sense.

ANGOLA—REPORTS THAT REPATRIATED SOLDIERS FACE DEATH—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the 4,000 black Angolan soldiers who fled with the South African forces on their withdrawal from Southern Angola and in view of reports that they must be repatriated within a month, has the minister any information as to the truth of reports that many or most would face certain death if they were to return to Marxist Angola?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not have information on this point at my fingertips. I will make inquiries and provide any useful information to the hon. member.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROTECTION OF EMBASSIES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the protection of our embassies abroad totally under the jurisdiction of the country in which they are located and, if so, if Canadians interfere with that jurisdiction are they only charged under the laws of the country or of that embassy?

● (1200)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member might specify a situation. He has really asked the minister for a general interpretation of the law of the country, and I wonder whether the minister wants to try to answer that.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sorry. I did not understand the question.

Mr. Schellenberger: It has to do with protection of our embassies in other countries. If our embassy—in this case the example is Lebanon—has been interfered with by a Canadian, is that Canadian charged only under the laws of the country in which our embassy is situated?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is my understanding. I am not attempting to give a legal opinion, but that is my understanding of the situation.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

DECISION TO GRANT INCREASE IN PRICE OF OIL—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance regarding the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board to grant the oil companies an increase of one cent per gallon, which will cost Canadian consumers about $60 million per year. In view of the fact that this increase will come into effect on Monday next, has the government decided to intervene and to rescind the decision of the Anti-Inflation Board regarding this increase in the price of gasoline and home heating fuel?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have now had an opportunity to examine the board's conclusions in this regard. We have noted that the board has concluded that the companies, in their application under the pre-notification procedure, indeed have additional costs involved. In that case there would be no scope under the Anti-Inflation Act for the cabinet to intervene, and of course, we will not be doing so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TODAY

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is the intention of the Prime Minister to table today some documents relating to the constitutional talks with the provinces, and to make a statement thereon. Ordinarily, this statement would be made on routine proceedings shortly after noon, but as the House has been reminded, today is the funeral of the late Senator Grattan O'Leary.

There is also another difficulty of which we are all aware, and that is that if the statement is made in the ordinary way today and there is some discussion thereon, it would reduce the time available for the completion of the debate on second reading of Bill C-83. Fortunately, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has very generously offered to give up his time on private members' hour at four o'clock today. Therefore, I ask if the House would be agreeable to reverting to routine proceedings at four o'clock in order to enable the Prime Minister both to table the documents and to make the statement.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate the agreement of the official opposition and also to express our thanks to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for the accommodation he has offered, not only to the official opposition but also to the government so that the Prime Minister could lunch with King Hussein.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the last time I gave up a private members' hour which had been assigned to me, the result was that we got through an important piece of legislation regarding prisoners of war. I dare to hope that my offer today to give up the private members' hour assigned to me will result in our getting control of our own constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion has been made that the House revert to routine proceedings at four o'clock this afternoon for the purpose of receiving a statement, in accordance with our usual recent practice with respect to the making of statements, by the Prime Minister. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE

MR. YEWCHUK—POSITION OF MEDICAL DOCTORS WHO ARE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT SITTING ON HEALTH COMMITTEE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I gave some indication yesterday of an intention to finalize today a question of privilege of some importance which was raised a few days ago by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). It was contributed to by several hon. members, very significantly by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), and in turn, because it involved certain allegations respecting remarks by the hon. member, by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt).

The question of privilege raises two very serious problems, the first having to do with the conduct of affairs in our standing committees. I want to make it clear that, while I have given several indications of my reluctance to alter the practice of the Chair of staying away from reviewing decisions of any sort of the standing committees except within the proper proceedings of the House, it is perfectly understood that questions of privilege, if they in fact exist, are not confined to incidents which take place in this chamber. Obviously, questions of privilege can arise from events which take place outside the chamber, and therefore, it follows, in the standing committees. There is no question about that.

If, in fact, a matter does give rise to a question of privilege within our precedents and practices, whether that takes place outside the chamber, perhaps in a standing committee, would in no way disqualify it. However, the situation which is before us, it seems to me, involves not only a disagreement on substance but perhaps also a disagreement on procedure. It may involve a question of order in the committee. I say that it "may". But, indeed, all these are questions which are within the competence of the standing committee to deal with, and in fact the standing committee dealt with it in one way or another. However that was resolved in the standing committee, it seems to me that it did involve questions of order, procedure or substance in the committee and ought not to be a part of the concern of the Chair.

I think the reasoning for that is obvious. When it was seen that there was serious disagreement about the interpretation which ought to have been put on words, events and the manner in which they took place and their intentions, the House has been very careful in the past to avoid the immense difficulties which would obviously arise if the House were to constitute itself into one standing committee for the purpose of investigating proceedings which have taken place in another standing committee. Therefore, I would reject—except under the clearly established and narrow definitions to which we have referred in the past—that privilege, and in this respect it must almost constitute an obstruction of the ability of a member to function. Therefore, in respect to the events which took place in the standing committee and the disagreements between hon. members there, I find that they might constitute a number of matters of great concern, but they do not qualify as a question of privilege. Therefore, I will not review the events which took place there.

However, there is another aspect to this question, and that is the comments of a journalist who was described in the development of the question of privilege by the hon. member for Athabasca as an employee of the CTV network, Mr. Eric Malling. It has been suggested that he used the following language in editorializing on the performance of certain members of the official opposition in that committee:

> The Conservative representation on the committee consisted of four doctors and a more shameless defence of the witness I have never seen. The way these doctors stick together you would think they had a sponge in a stiff—the entire lot of them.

I will perhaps reserve until later any comments I would want to make about the quality of that language or the quality of the reporting. The concern I have now is not so much with that as it is with the very difficult and very real problem which has been revealed by this question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Athabasca: that is, the balance which must be maintained between the right of individul members, or the membership of this House collectively, to punish contempt of this House or its members and to punish libels against its members or aspersions on their conduct and, on the other hand, the right of a journalist, or indeed of a citizen, to make public comment, to make criticism and in fact to express opinion which, obviously, is not subject to questions of truth but to the standards of opinion as to the performance of elected members.

There have been very few incidents in which journalists have been censured in this way in the history of the House of Commons, for the obvious reason that—and I think quite appropriately—it has always been decided, in situations of that sort, that where there was a doubt between the two rights which were enjoyed, that doubt ought always to be resolved in favour of the public, not only to criticize us but in fact to make comments about their political attitudes toward us.

● (1210)

There does seem to be a suggestion from time to time that privilege extends to us, as members of this House, a sort of special protection above and beyond that enjoyed by the ordinary citizen in this regard. I think it ought to be very clearly stated that this, in fact, is not the case. There is no historical support for that notion, nor do I see any reason why that should be the situation.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The protection in respect of public comment, made either by a citizen or a journalist, that is enjoyed by every private citizen is, and ought to be, more than adequate for the protection of members of this House in that regard. Rather than attempt to describe it in my own language, I find the comments of great interest and relevance in the report recently tabled of the select committee on parliamentary privilege in the United Kingdom. I will quote from pages 15 and 16 of that report; I think members will find it illuminating. Bearing in mind this is not an authoritative document by that parliament, but is really the result of a very serious and thorough study of the question of prilivege—and I will in a moment be making reference to the study we are about to launch here at the instance of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)—I will quote from paragraph 43. I think the language is interesting:

> The proposal made in paragraph 42 is fully consistent with the principle which your committee believe to be right, that the House should be slow and reluctant to use its penal powers to stifle criticism or even abuse, whether of the machinery of the House, of a member or of a identifiable group of members, however strongly the criticism may be expressed and however unjustifiable it may appear. Your committee regard such criticism as the life blood of democracy. In their view the sensible politician expects and even welcomes criticism of this nature. Nonetheless, a point may be reached at which conduct ceases to be merely intemperate criticism and abuse and becomes or is liable to become an improper obstruction of the functions of parliament. For such cases, however rare, the penal powers must be preserved and the House must be prepared to exercise them.

The second quotation is from the following page, part way down paragraph 46, as follows:

> In your committee's opinion it would be an indefensible abuse of power if a member could evade such a defence by invoking the penal jurisdiction of the House. The citizen has prima facie a right to make fair comment upon such activity of a member as is a matter of public interest; his right is even stronger to speak and publish the truth of a member's conduct. These rights should not in the normal way be defeated by the use of the penal jurisdiction of the House. The exceptions to this general principle are likely to be rare. But if the rights of a citizen, though enforceable in the courts of law, are so exercised as to be likely improperly to obstruct the member in the performance of his parliamentary duty, it must be within the power of the House to restrain him.

I adopt that reasoning, and I think I can simply state that however reprehensible and insulting the language used by the columnist or journalist referred to by the hon. member, and however unnecessary it may seem to be in order to report the proceedings of this House to stoop to that kind of language and comment, I cannot find in it a transgression of the rights, collectively or individually, to such an extent that the privilege procedures ought to be invoked by this House in order to censure the journalist.

Therefore, being in some doubt about that, I would resolve the doubt in favour of the public's right to criticize us and find, again, that no question of privilege exists. This is not to say there are not legitimate concerns raised by the hon. member for Athabasca. Often this is typical of the case in which the precedents and practices vis-à-vis a privilege as we know it, and which is confined, after all, to the very narrow term, while they do not fit the situation in which the House finds itself they nevertheless seem to be the only way out for a member to attempt to retaliate for this kind of language used in public.

Therefore, I say that the hon. member for Athabasca has, as other members have in the past, raised a question of very legitimate and serious concern. It arises, I might also say in passing, whenever members of the House get into the unfortunate habit or practice of departing from the subject matter of debate at the moment and get into personal references of any sort about members. It occasionally happens in the heat of debate, and we all experience that. I think we all learn the lesson that when this happens, the reason it has been traditionally ruled a disorder—when it does occur—is for the simple reason that it is never really truly relevant to the subject matter under debate. If hon. members can bring themselves to refrain from the practice of departing from the subject matter of debate and getting on to either the qualifications, personal or otherwise, of members or their own personal record or performance, certainly a good deal of this difficult could be avoided.

However, I do say to the hon. member for Athabasca, to the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) and others who participated in this discussion, that it did raise problems that are not isolated and are very serious.

I think I have made my feelings clear about some of the aspects of the problems that are before us. I do want to assure hon. members that in launching into the work, largely, as I say, at the initiation of the hon. member for Peace River, on the study here in this parliament—over which I will preside—of the rights and immunities of members of the House of Commons, not only will the work of the select committee in the United Kingdom form a very important working paper for us, but this experience will certainly be given very careful consideration in the deliberations and work of that committee, in the hope that we can expose some clear guidelines for the protection of hon. members in situations of this sort and a clearer understanding of privilege as it relates to these kinds of situations.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,148 and 4,967.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

GOVERNMENT GRANTS TO FOREX INC.

Question No. 3,148—Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve):

1. In (a) 1969 (b) 1970 (c) 1971 (d) 1972 (e) 1973 (f) 1974 (g) 1975, what amount was granted by the government to the group known as FOREX Inc.?

2. In (a) 1969 (b) 1970 (c) 1971 (d) 1972 (e) 1973 (f) 1974 (g) 1975, what amounts were granted by the government to sawmill companies operating in the Constituency of Villeneuve?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. In that the Employment Support Program has been disbanded the information is not readily available.

2. Records of grants to companies are not maintained on a Constituency basis. However, an estimated total of $200,000 has been granted to sawmill companies in the region by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce during the period 1969-1975.

1. The total amount granted by the government to FOREX, Inc., under the authority of the Regional Development Incentives Act, reads as follows: (a) In 1969: none. (b) In 1970: none. (c) In 1971: none. (d) In 1972: none. (e) In 1973: $409,268. (f) In 1974: $176,252. (g) To September 30, 1975: none.

2. The total amount granted by the Department to sawmill companies and connected firms in the Constituency of Villeneuve, reads as follows: (a) In 1969: none. (b) In 1970: $465,950. (c) In 1971: $1,060,875. (d) In 1972: $1,226,323. (e) In 1973: none. (f) In 1974: $84,867. (g) To September 30, 1975: $199,400.

FREIGHT ASSISTANCE IN ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 4,967—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,507, what were the amounts paid to each company listed in the answer to Parts 2 and 3?

2. Is the information available by company in the same manner as subsidies or assistance to the railways and, if not for what reason?

3. What is the government's estimate of payments for the year 1975?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1.

Payments under the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act

1974-75 Fiscal Year

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 4,147?

*AIR CARGO RATES AND CHARGES

Question No. 4,147—Mr. Lachance:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,514, for what reason and under what authority does Air Canada charge a minimal fee of $5 for clearance of mail sent by air freight?

2. Will the government consider asking Air Canada to cease such a pratice?

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as for the Canadian Transport Commission, the answer is as follows: 1. Airlines are required by the Canadian Transport Commission to publish in tariffs, charges made for services rendered by them. Air Canada and many other carriers provide certain services in connection with incoming shipments of air freight requiring customs clearance. There is a terminal service charge of $5 for the processing of "immediate type" customs clearance outside of normal customs business hours.

As for Transport Canada, the answer is as follows: 2. Tariffs of fees charged by air carriers are in effect only so long as they are deemed satisfactory by the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. The above fee has been filed in accordance with the Air Carrier Regulations and has been accepted by the Air Transport Committee. The government does not interfere with the rate-making process established by the Canadian Transport Commission.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, before lauching into a general discussion on the bill before us, I invited the House to join me in an adventurous fantasy last night. It appeared that shortly after the Criminal Code had been amended by Bill C-83, a gang of foreign invaders had landed on the beaches of the northwest arm of the beautiful constituency of Halifax-East Hants and were prepared to do battle with Canada. Canadian soldiers, equipped in the usual manner, arrived at the scene to find that the enemy was armed with nothing more dangerous, but certainly a very dangerous weapon indeed, than the revised Criminal Code of Canada.

● (1220)

The first encounter between the Canadian soldier and the foreign invader worsted the Canadian soldier. He found that under section 89 of the proposed amendments he was certainly entitled to carry a rifle. However, he found under section 88 that this did not give him the right to carry ammunition in it. Therefore, said the foreign invader—and the Canadian soldier had no way of answering back—the Canadian defender was liable to two years in penitentiary for committing an indictable offence.

The scene now switches to today. There are three more episodes before I point out how the war was won or lost. The Canadian soldier then found that pointing the firearm without lawful excuse, and his gun was loaded, would not give him a lawful excuse: under section 99 he was liable to five years by way of indictment. The odd thing is that if he had pointed an unloaded weapon at the foreign invader, that would have been quite lawful: he was entitled to carry an unloaded weapon, but not a loaded one. This would add five years to the two years he had already racked up.

The Canadian soldier, in a friendly argument with the foreign invader, pointed out that he, the Canadian soldier, came from the great riding of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce in Montreal. He thought his member had something to do with the government, and that indeed his member was the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). One would have thought the Solicitor General would know the law. The foreign invader pointed out, "Really, my dear fellow, back home we call him a necessity." On the way to the prison camp, the Canadian soldier and his foreign captor wandered through a former rifle range where they found some cartridges scattered about. The Canadian soldier was willing to continue on his way, but the foreign invader pointed out that he had committed another offence. There was ammunition obviously lost or abandoned, and under section 101 of the Criminal Code as proposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford)—

Every one commits an offence who, upon finding a prohibited weapon or restricted weapon or other firearm or ammunition that he has reasonable grounds to believe has been lost or abandoned, does not forthwith

(a) deliver it to a peace officer—

When he pointed out that they were only used cases from ammunition, the foreign invader was again able to up-end him by pointing to the definition section of Bill C-83 section, 82(1), which reads:

"ammunition" means ammunition for a firearm and includes any component, element or part—

Of course, the cartridge would be such a part. The foreign invader said, "For this, my good fellow, you are liable to another five years as being guilty of an indictable offence." The war has not taken place very long, but in the first half hour the poor Canadian soldier has racked up 12 years in one of Her Majesty's penitentiaries.

They continued on their way to the maritime command, passing through some of the most beautiful parts of Canada, namely, the streets of Halifax. The Canadian soldier, by then thoroughly nonplussed, entered into friendly conversation with his foreign captor. He suggested that maybe some of the large weapons used in a very brief war should some day go into the war museum on Citadel Hill. The soldier turned out to be a member of the board of governors of that great institution. The foreign invader pointed out that the museum on Citadel Hill was really a private institution. It was not part of the armed forces of the country; therefore, it could not contain within it prohibited weapons. As we all know, prohibited weapons are what they say they are in the definition section, 82(1). The prohibition is also set forth in 86(1) as follows:

Every one who has in his possession a prohibited weapon

(a) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years—

The poor soldier, by working as a member of the board of governors in a non-department of national defence-owned museum on Citadel Hill in Halifax, was guilty of another indictable offence if he should so much as take any automatic or prohibited weapon to that museum. That would add another five years. It is now 17 years that has been racked up against the poor Canadian soldier, and he has not even had the pleasure of firing a shot at his tormentor. He suggested they could perhaps go down to the Point Pleasant park commission. In the south-end of Halifax there are a number of weapons from foreign wars that are much admired by the citizenry when they go there. The foreign invader pointed out, "No, it is not a governmental commission" and that he would be liable to five years, or anybody at the commission if they took some of these prohibited weapons within their control.

They passed by the legislature in Halifax. Outside were some of the guns left over from the gun battle in which the Shannon overcame the Chesapeake. The foreign visitor pointed out it was perfectly legal for the government of Nova Scotia to have those guns there, although the Canadian soldier said that the war that goes on between Gerry Regan and John Buchanan, the premier and the leader of the opposition, sometimes gets more explosive than any other situation than you can imagine. But no, the Chesapeake and Shannon memorabilia may remain on the grounds of the provincial legislature because that is government and not some privately run organization. Finally, the Canadian soldier turns to his captor and says, "It really would have been simpler if I had shot you dead." The foreign captor says, "I will forget that I heard that remark, my good man. After all, on top of the 17 years you have already racked up, you could be put on a peace bond by one of the local magistrates." That, Mr. Speaker, is the fantasy.

Do not expect me to illustrate some of the rather improbable drafting that has gone into the measure we are dealing with today. However, I want to state that the story did have a happy ending. The Canadian soldiers did win the war against these foreign invaders who came armed with the Canadian Criminal Code as amended by Bill C-83. Some of our Canadian soldiers were bright enough to break into a museum which contained medieval crossbows. As we all know, medieval crossbows are one of the greatest weapons ever invented by man. They found that these medieval crossbows had not been placed on the prohibited weapon list as defined by section 82(1) of the act, nor had they been included as prohibited weapons by the regulations made by the governor in council pursuant to this act. Therefore, it was perfectly in order to use medieval crossbows. The enemy was routed, and Halifax-East Hants and the rest of Canada was kept for Canadians.

I will now deal with the philosophic approach to Bill C-83 and to the matter of what is popularly called gun control. I suppose anything that in itself that can be dangerous should have an element of control by the state. Certainly we think that control is necessary when we deal with drugs and alcohol. It would, therefore, seem to be a simple matter, if one asks oneself the question, "Should there be some control over weapons which could be dangerous?" to reply, "Yes, of course there must be". But what sort of approach should be taken? It is here that the bill bothers me. I read through it, come to clause 4 on page 37 and see that some draftsman—and I hope the Minister of Justice finds out who he is and strings him up by his thumbs, because I think this is a horrible example of drafting—has set down words permitting the governor in council by proclamation to declare what is called "a firearms amnesty period".

Mr. Speaker, I always thought that an amnesty was a retroactive pardon which was given for criminal behaviour so that the criminal act could somehow be forgotten. But this bill creates criminal actions and then has the colossal gall to say that the whole population, or perhaps one million Canadians, will be guilty of a crime but that an amnesty provision will be brought in to clean up the situation. Any government which permits a provision of that kind to be brought before us really has to do a lot of explaining to the Canadian people. To my mind, the use of the language to which I have referred is the most offensive thing that occurs in a large number of very offensive pages. This is why I support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and, indeed, had something to do with the strategy which inspired it.

The Minister of Justice will find life much simpler if he takes out clauses 3 and 4 and pages 1 to 38 of this measures, puts them aside, and goes on with the rest of the bill. It is true that what remains will need purification and clarification, but I have the impression the other parts of the legislation could be expeditiously handled. I suggest to the minister that he will find himself in a long, cool spring, a hot summer and a chilly fall if he believes the measure as presently drafted and submitted to us is one which is likely to be accepted by the House.

I know that members opposite also have their reservations. The parliamentary secretary who preceded me has reservations with regard to the measure. After listening the other day to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), I said to myself, "That is the speech I was going to make." After indulging in a little political persiflage, he dealt with all the issues which to my mind were germane to what we are considering. I hope the Minister of Justice has the political sense to recognize that the motion put forward by my hon. friend from Calgary North is one way out of a bad situation.

It may be that the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, by working very hard—it is a superb committee—will be able to straighten out the kinds and overcome the four or five howlers I have drawn attention to already, as well as a number of others of which I have made note. It may be the committee will find itself able to straighten out certain of the technical details. But it is improbably we shall be able to straighten out the philosophy which lies behind a bill which would suddenly, at one swoop, turn a million or so Canadians into criminals who are to be given amnesty.

Surely, if the government is setting its mind upon gun control, the first target should be the criminal element; it should use every legitimate device to grab their weapons, to throw the book at them. Going through this bill, I find only three or four clauses which deal with criminal use and related punishment—a quarter of a page in one place, with two clauses in it, and another quarter of a page later on. Instead of dealing with criminals, this legislation would create criminals, and in a democratic society, when you go out of your way to turn a large class of people into criminals, quasi-criminals or pseudo-criminals, either the society or the government is very sick indeed.

Let me give an illustration of what the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General talk about doing but are really not able to do. The Solicitor General has made the point that most murders, where a gun is used as a weapon, are committed by the victim's relatives or friends. Most of these murders are, in fact, within that category. I ask the hon. gentleman to look at clause 103(1) and ask himself, if murders really take place in people's homes, as many of them do, in tragic circumstances often associated with too much liquor on a Saturday night, whether clause 103(1) really bills the bill. A former commissioner of the RCMP, Mr. L. H. Nicholson, a man for whom I have great respect—I hope he will be appearing before the committee, giving us his advice—points out that sometimes the people in the neighbourhood are in the best position to head off trouble. They can hear a quarrel; they might know of a weapon which could lead to fatal consequences, and decide to alert the police.

Mr. Speaker, the sanctity of a person's home is one thing, but clause 103(1) does not permit the police to enter a home in such circumstances, so doubtless we shall continue to hear of Saturday night tragedies. If there were any ground for being peremptory and ignoring the old attitude that a person's home is his castle, it would surely be a situation where neighbours know that something bad is going on and something much worse might happen unless there is speedy intervention. I will ask the Solicitor General further questions about this aspect when the bill goes to committee.

Another aspect which concerns me—and perhaps this is a special interest of mine—is the use made of the power of regulation. I refer specifically to the powers set forth in clauses 82 and 106. Regulations and orders in council have been a special topic of mine for a number of years. Regulations can be very strange animals indeed, and they tend to reflect the philosophy of the minister in charge of the department concerned. Incidentally, the ministers I have in mind are not here; as a matter of fact, no ministers are here at the present time. Yes, I see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) is here. The law officers of the Crown are not here, though. Perhaps they are out advising one of their colleagues who is in trouble. In any event, the acceptability of a regulation depends to a large extent on whether or not the minister is an autocratic type. Later this session, when the House sees the report of one of the House committees in a month or so, it might ponder my words.

Another matter that bothers me is the question of guarantors. I think that does go too far. I was going to ask the Minister of Justice about this, and I hope someone on the other side will pass this along to him. We keep hearing disturbing reports behind the scenes to the effect that when the regulations are drafted there will be a requirement to list weapons on the backs of licences. This report is fairly current and I hope the hon. member from Lakeshore is giving me his attention: he is familiar with the regulatory process. I hope the minister can provide an answer if he does take further part in this debate, or at least that someone on the other side will give me an answer whether or not this will be done.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it will help much to be told what goes on in other countries in the matter of gun control. Switzerland has been mentioned, but Switzerland has a different tradition. New York City was referred to, and so was Ireland. They have tighter controls in Japan, yet the same homicide rate as Canada. All of this has been thrown into the melting pot in this debate. I do not know whether any of these matters are really germane to the situation in Canada. I do not think there is any Canadian city that quite approaches the situation in New York. They seem to be degenerating into a rat race and it seems to me that city is on its last legs. Although our Canadian cities have a crime rate, they are nowhere near that of New York City's. Neither have we got into the woeful state that they have in Ireland. We are too large and have too much interdependence with other countries to be a sort of Switzerland. We are not insular in the way Japan is.

The problems that we have to solve are surely "made in Canada" problems. We have to consider that we are mainly city folk—or are tending to be—with a fair element of country folk. It is not too long ago that our ancestors were scraping up a livelihood by running fur lines and the like, and they needed weapons to fend off bears and other marauders from the forest and to find food. To me, Mr. Speaker, our traditions are much different from the other countries cited in this debate. We must pay some regard to the traditions of the past from which we have come.

One of the obvious defects of this measure is that there has really been no consultation about it. The wildlife people and the trapshooting people have never been consulted about the bill. I have been told time and time again, and presume it must be so, that somewhere a group of people gathered together in Ottawa and put together the 37 or 38 pages of legislation that is under discussion today, using a very autocratic and arbitrary approach. They compounded the legislation with rules, regulations and all sorts of red tape and set out to catch crooks, turning too many other people into crooks in the process instead of concentrating on the crooks themselves.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, in committee, in a spirit of reasonableness we can separate these gun control provisions from the rest of the bill, send the bill back to the House and then get on with formulating some decent gun control legislation instead of the stuff with which we have been presented.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin); and I should like to wish him well on Monday.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your good wishes and for recognizing me at this time. At the outset I want to say I support the legislation in a general way in principle: but let me also say that I have some degree of sympathy for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and am tempted to vote for that amendment and may well do so.

I say that because I find myself in a position similar to the one I found myself in when we were debating the western grain stabilization bill. I or one of my colleagues moved a similar motion, that the subject matter of the bill be referred to committee for further study, but I supported the legislation in principle. I see nothing inconsistent with that action. However, I want to proceed to deal briefly with the major sections of the legislation and to express not only my feelings on the matter but to reflect to some extent the feelings of many of my colleagues and also the attorney general of my own province of Saskatchewan.

I feel that the split of first and second degree murder, on the present basis, is sensible and that the provision of a minimum of 25 years' imprisonment for first degree murder and at least ten years for second degree murder before being eligible for parole is an improvement and will be looked upon as such by the public. However, practical problems arise, of course. Twenty-five years looks like forever to most of us, and a prisoner may well feel that he is in a nothing to lose situation. We may be required to provide additional protection and incentives for prison guards.

The new parole provisions, including the three-judge panel, may decrease the eligible time for parole after 15 years, but this may diminish the deterrent aspect of such a sentence which, after all, was its main purpose. So long as there is a way of avoiding the maximum penalty, you run the risk of the deterrent factor being lost. However, I think the risk of losing some of the deterrent effect is minimal and I, for one, am prepared to give several years of trial to that particular provision.

The power to set up special provincial commissions of inquiry into organized crime is potentially a good provision but adds little to good police work. It can be a good thing when used as a public pacifier, but it really depends on the provinces and is not really a criticism of the legislation.

I want now to move to the crime detection and electronic surveillance amendments, some of which are generally welcome. I submit the major defect is the departure from the rest of our criminal law wherein an unauthorized interception is inadmissible though evidence arising from such interception will be received. I think this has the effect of encouraging unauthorized interceptions, something I suggest parliament should not do. Either it is all admissible or none should be. Lack of basic philosophy in this part of the legislation seems to me evident.

Another concern has to do with the elimination of notice to a person whose telephone has been tapped. This portion of the legislation has potential for abuse. I do not think anyone can question that. My colleagues and I know the attorney general of Saskatchewan came down on the side of the present system whereby notice should be given, to ensure accurate police work and to protect individual rights.

I am more than surprised—in fact, I am shocked—that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and his colleagues would even consider introducing such changes in the law relating to electronic surveillance. I would have thought they would have been the last persons to bring in such a change. The legislation we now have in this regard, I believe, is sufficient. It should be left as it is. There may be some minor improvements which could be made to some parts of it, but certainly this major power in respect of electronic surveillance and the unauthorized ones that can be allowed, I submit, cannot be countenanced by this or any other parliament. I hope the minister and his colleagues will have second thoughts and agree that this provision should be withdrawn. Too many decades have been spent in this and many other countries in the expansion and extension of the guaranteeing of civil liberties and the freedom of individual citizens for us to take this retrograde step in respect of this legislation.

In respect of dangerous offenders, the amendments remove some of the previous formality without getting rid of the former sanctions. I think this is a general improvement. If it should fail to achieve its objective of protecting the public against dangerous offenders, sexual and otherwise, the fault will be with the judicial system and not the law. Concerning where the fault may lie, it seems to me if faults of this kind should become evident through experience in the enforcement of this legislation, it will be incumbent on government and parliament in the future to bring in further legislation to correct any faults there may be in the judicial system.

On the matter of the custody and release of inmates, I think it is high time the absurdity in respect of the calculation of sentences should be removed. At the present time a sentence does not mean what it says, and very few lawyers in this country are capable of calculating a release date in a complicated situation. Earned remission is inevitable under present rehabilitation reasoning and may help in the control of inmates. I, for one, agree with the idea of earned remission. The conduct of the prisoner himself will decide what length of sentence he will serve. That onus in respect of individual responsibility on the part of the inmate is not only a good rehabilitative feature, but I feel it is one which will help in the control of inmates and their behaviour.

The increase in deterrent for escape is realistic, but the effort to provide a greater degree of security and safety in prisons will not be accomplished without the clear statement that a prisoner, by his very status, loses certain rights. Once again there is evident here lack of a clear philosophical base, which will continue to create uncertainties and strife within our jails.

I agree with the increase in the deterrent for escape and attempted escape. That penalty should be there and should be added to the sentence which remains to be served. I would hope that those who are far more expert than I, those involved in the law who have great experience and training in this regard, will take a further look at the legislation.

There has been a great deal of emotional hysteria around the country in respect of this legislation and different parts of it. I find this comes from both extremes, those who are for and those who are against portions or all of the legislation. Some of this emotional hysteria, I submit, has been generated by people who in many cases should know better. I have been appalled by some of the outrageous lengths to which some people have gone to criticize this legislation whether in respect of the control of firearms, the abolition of the death penalty or any other feature.

They have attempted to stir up emotional, unreasoned, inane and insensible hysteria around the country. I think that is very unfortunate. I would have expected more from many of those spokesmen. I am sad to say that even some members of parliament, perhaps unwittingly, have tried to attract more of that unreasoned hysteria and emotionalism, which has degenerated to sheer absurdity in some of the arguments put forward in opposition to portions or all of this legislation. That is no help to parliament or to the government in arriving at good, sensible, reasonable and enforcible amendments to our Criminal Code or additions to the Criminal Code. I would hope that the level of the arguments put forward against some of the measures in this legislation would reach a higher level in respect of some hon. members than has been the case so far.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock, so that I may complete my remarks later?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

● (1400)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, before turning to the main part of my speech regarding firearms control, I want to add a few more comments to those I made prior to one o'clock on the matter of electronic surveillance. You will recall that I said I was shocked that the government would want to wreck the civil liberties aspect of the law with regard to electronic surveillance.

I only want to add to those remarks that we must keep in the legislation the notification features. Anyone whose telephone has been tapped or who has been subject to electronic surveillance in any other way is entitled to be notified within 90 days after the fact that surveillance was carried out in that manner. Secondly, the provision requiring police to obtain a court order or a warrant from a member of the judiciary not only must be maintained, but I think all police forces should want that provision in the legislation, even if it means having to get a judge or a magistrate out of bed at two o'clock in the morning to obtain such authorization if it is that urgent. That would be the route to go.

In my opinion, there should always be a judge on call, similar to doctors. If he is needed by the police force in the carrying out of their duties in order to live up to some part of the law, there is no reason a judge cannot be available at all times to assist the police in that respect. So I hope the present provisions on electronic surveillance will be left as they are and not amended in such a manner as to erode civil liberties and the basic rights of the citizens of this country.

I was saying, also, prior to one o'clock that in my opinion there has been a great deal of nonsense, hysterical and idiotic argument put forward against some parts or all of this legislation by people who I believe should know better. In fact, many of them do know better, and I regret to say that some of them are members of this chamber.

● (1410)

I will support any firearms control legislation which is reasonable and enforceable. As one who has owned a rifle and a shotgun for well over 30 years, in addition to having them trained in the air force and in the army in the use of Sten guns, Bren guns, .50 calibre machine-guns, Lee-Enfield rifles, and so forth, I think I can speak with some knowledge and experience on the subject. I said I will support any firearms control legislation which is sensible, reasonable and enforceable. I feel that owners of what are called long guns—rifles or shotguns—or any firearms under this legislation in most cases feel individual responsibility for the care, handling, safe-keeping and use of those firearms; and so they should. It seems to me that any potential liability of the firearm's owner has always been there.

I feel that having to obtain a licence to own a firearm will increase the sense of individual responsibility which each firearm owner already has, or should have. I also feel that the liability part should be limited so that the licensed firearm owner who has taken reasonable care and precautions will not be subject to liability if someone else misuses his firearm.

I think that in some ways licensing owners of firearms will help reduce the accessibility and availability of firearms to those who are either unfit or unable to own or use one. I am thinking not only of the criminal element, but also of children who in too many tragic instances have been wounded or killed because of firearms which were not safely stored and for which reasonable precautions were not taken. Too many tragedies occur in this way every year. There was a tragedy in Regina just last year. A careless and irresponsible firearm owner left a loaded shotgun in a room in a house. Two children ended up playing with it, and one blew the other in half. If the licensing provision will increase the sense of responsibility each of us should have in any case, then it is a step in the right direction.

With regard to reasonable precautions and safeguards, the overwhelming majority of firearms owners already keep their weapons in a safe condition. They do not leave them loaded in their houses. In fact, many have their rifles stored, or a rifle hanging on the wall has the bolt removed: it is locked away in some other place and the ammunition is also kept separate. If anyone were to steal the firearm or start playing with it, it would not be capable of being fired. So if a licence to own a firearm requires reasonable safeguards, we will have made a good move toward reducing the horrifying number of deaths and woundings, whether deliberate or accidental, which occur every year in this country.

There has been much talk about two people being required to endorse or to recommend a person in a firearm's licence application. I agree with that provision. I have hunted with many people since I was 15 years of age and, quite frankly, there are probably half a dozen individuals who are friends of mine and with whom I have gone hunting once or twice but with whom I will never go again. In no way would I endorse their licence applications if they were to ask me, because they are not fit to own a firearm. I would treat that matter in the same as I would an oath, an affidavit, a passport application or on any document where one's name and signature signifies his word, his honesty and his desire to abide by the law. I, and I think most citizens, regard endorsation as a serious matter. I do not think many people would endorse lightly an application for a licence for a firearm.

There should be a large number of licence issuers. For example, officers of gun clubs, whether they be collectors, sports shooters, target shooters, antique gun collectors or whatever, should be licence issuers. They should be authorized to issue firearms' licences to all members of their own clubs. In the main, these are very responsible, well run organizations and their members know how to handle guns and how to keep them safely. They can be considered as suitable to issue licences to their own members to own firearms. I submit that this would help relieve some of the administrative load from local police departments and other officials, particularly in large cities. For example, in Regina I suspect that anywhere from 2,000 to 4,000 individuals belong to gun clubs. The licences could be issued by the officers of their own clubs, and I think they should be.

Yesterday the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) made some excellent points and in the main I agree with him. I suggest to this House and to the government that consideration should be given to exempting the licensing requirements for residents in the northern area of Canada, say north of the fifty-fifth or fifty-sixth parallel.

Mr. Ellis: The sixtieth parallel.

Mr. Benjamin: It needs to be somewhere south of the sixtieth parallel because some of the northern parts of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and Labrador should also be exempted from the licensing requirements except in what could be called urban centres, for example, centres with populations in excess of 5,000, such as Yellowknife and Whitehorse. In those places licensing should still be required, but the residents of the rest of the area should be exempt from the licensing provisions. Non-residents such as myself who might go there on a hunting trip should still be required to hold a licence to own firearms. The people in those northern regions know how to handle firearms and for the most part handle them properly. I suspect that the people of the north have a much better safety record than people in the settled parts and in the so-called urbanized parts of Canada. I would feel no hesitation in exempting that part of Canada from the licensing provisions. I support the idea that anyone who is to be given a licence to own firearms should be required to demonstrate fitness to own those firearms. Frankly, I think there should be tests on gun handling and gun safety. One should be able to show some competence in that regard.

Under the provisions of the migratory game birds legislation of the federal government, and provincial laws respecting upland birds and big game, there should be some kind of game identification, hunter safety and courtesy tests for those who wish a licence to own firearms or for those who wish to purchase a licence to hunt.

I will support firearms legislation that I consider reasonable, sensible and enforceable for another reason that I think is the most important of all. I am a little tired of those who run around spouting what I call the cowboy syndrome. They look and sound like some hick sheriff from Texas, and act like some seven-year old boy playing with a toy gun. Surely we must put an end to this nonsense of anyone with a prison record, a history of violence, of insanity or extreme emotional instability being able to walk in off the street and purchase a rifle or a shotgun. Every responsible gun owner I have talked to agrees that we must put an end to that kind of sloppy nonsense.

We must put an end to a situation in which a 12-year old or a 14-year old can purchase a firearm by mail order. There has been a history in this country of mail order houses selling some weapons that were in fact unsafe; for example, shot guns with twist barrels or old rifles with worn actions. With today's high-powered ammunition, these guns could blow up in your face. There has been little or no control over the quality of these mail order weapons.

Similarly, I feel there needs to be a greater measure of responsibility taken by manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and transporters of firearms and ammunition. Too often the criminal element obtains firearms by hijacking trucks between the factory and the wholesaler. Insufficient precautions and safeguards are taken in the transportation of weapons. Too often wholesalers and retailers are absolutely sloppy about the way they keep firearms. You can go into retail outlets and find guns hanging out in the open in the stores and an expert shoplifter could have a ball. A good burglar could do well by emptying the whole case of weapons and ammunition in an evening. There are insufficient precautions taken by wholesalers, retailers and transporters of firearms and ammunition.

I think it also should be a requirement to keep records similar to those kept by druggists. They keep very close records and are very meticulous in the handling of drugs which could be harmful or dangerous. No druggist or citizen objects to that. Surely it is nothing more than reasonable to expect that the sellers of weapons and ammunition should keep up to date records on these sales, including the names of the purchasers, the serial numbers, the quantities, the quality, the description, and so on. Surely that is nothing more than good sense. No reputable businessman that I know would complain about this. No operator of a reputable gun store or department store I have talked to objects to this. In fact, some of them keep that kind of record on their own now, and it is to their credit that they do. I think it should be a provision of the law that this kind of sensible safeguard should be required of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and transporters.

Much has been made about the licence fees. I think a reasonable fee of $5 or so for a licence could not be complained about seriously. The government should not attempt to recover the total costs of licensing from the licensee who wants to own a firearm. That would be putting an unfair financial burden on a small number of people who would be expected to pay the total cost of this measure which attempts to provide greater security for the public at large.

The federal government should not attempt to collect the full cost from the licence fee, neither should it foist the major part of this cost on the municipalities and provincial governments, since the purpose of this measure is to provide greater safety for the public as a whole. On that basis, surely the public as a whole should bear the major part of that cost through the national government.

If this government and this parliament want maximum co-operation and assistance from the police forces, the municipalities and the provincial governments, the Minister of Justice should be saying that the national treasury will reimburse those sections of society for administering and implementing this legislation. I think it would be unfair to ask the already over-burdened municipal budgets and, in many cases, provincial resources to carry this additional financial burden. I hope the government will do something about that when the bill is before the committee, because the great majority of the people would, in my opinion, support reasonable and enforceable firearms legislation.

There are some ridiculous aspects of this legislation that, hopefully, will be eliminated by the committee or by the House at report stage. We have heard some equally ridiculous statements about the harmful effect of the legislation, most of which have been dreamed up or imagined by those who want to incite unreasoning hysteria across the country. There have been a few in this chamber guilty of that, Mr. Speaker.

In closing, I want to say again that I have a great deal of sympathy for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North. I may well support that amendment and support the bill in principle on second reading. However, unless the government makes some significant improvement at the committee or report stage—and I hope accepts some sensible and reasonable proposals from members of the opposition and from its own backbenchers—I may find myself having to vote against the legislation on third reading. I may have to conduct myself in the same way I did in respect of the grain stabilization bill. I make no apologies whatsoever for the way I conducted myself in that respect.

It seems to me the government might well take seriously the idea of submitting the subject matter of this bill to the committee where most of the witness could be heard. When the committee then met later on to deal with the actual legislation, it would be in a position to deal with the whole subject much more efficiently and much more quickly. If the subject matter of this legislation were referred to a committee, a great deal more light could be generated by those who wish to submit briefs. We would than have something worth while, rather than the silly heat we have been getting.

I hope the government will seriously consider accepting a number of amendments. We could then proceed later in the summer on the actual legislation and do a lot more, with a lot more thought, than has been the case so far.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-83 that we are now discussing aims at protecting Canadian society against those who commit violent crimes and other types of crimes. It deals specifically with firearms, electronic surveillance, parole and reformatories.

Since many members have already spoken on the subject, I will deal with only two aspects of the bill which I find extremely important since they concern particularly civil rights, the possession of firearms and electronic surveillance.

Bill C-83 provides that any citizen who wants to own a firearm should obtain a licence. Consequently, the owners of the 10 million or so guns or shotguns that exist throughout the country will be asked to give them to the police if they do not need them. Furthermore, firearm dealers and suppliers will have to keep accurate registers of all weapon sales. Moreover, any weapon owner or dealer could be charged and convicted if a murder is committed with a gun which belongs to him because he does not keep all his weapons in a safe place. Mr. Speaker, obviously, pressure groups of all types are protesting against the government proposal requiring that every gun owner have a licence.

I sincerely believe that this bill will not reduce the crime rate since most crimes committed in Quebec of other parts of the country are committed with weapons such as revolvers and machine guns which are now extremely difficult to obtain because of the rigidity of the present legislation.

Will the legislation proposed by this government give the anticipated results? To tell the truth, I am concerned about this. Indeed, we only have to note that the legislation of the State of Massachusetts in the United States, which is the strictest law ever applied in that country as concerns gun control and provides for an automatic sentence of imprisonment for one year for anyone who transports a weapon without a permit, has brought about very little changes in Boston during the first six months after its implementation. According to the statistics of the Boston police, the number of armed crimes such as murders, thefts, rapes and assaults committed during the first six months after the implementation of this legislation is about equal to the number registered for the same period in the previous year, before this strict legislation was implemented.

One thing is certain, Mr. Speaker, even the extremely severe penalties imposed by the law in the State of Massachussetts do not seem to have the desired dissuasive effect. Consider that in the case of revolvers, Canada established controls before the last World War, that these same controls became more severe during the sixties, to the extent that possession became so difficult as to be practically impossible, and yet these controls did not succeed in curbing the use of firearms for criminal purposes.

I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that the government wants to establish at any price both strict and efficient controls on firearms. To do so, it must consider also some other appropriate sectors, for instance, the use of drugs which is steadily rising. In schools, CEGEPs and even in several universities, the use of drugs is widespread.

I am astonished to note that policemen seem to tolerate those kinds of things and to find them normal. The use of drugs is constantly increasing and requires huge sums of money. We know how much money drug users need to get them.

To that can be added the startling conditions arising from the parole system in Canada. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, too many criminals are paroled without taking into account the possibility that they can become a threat to society. Giving further thought to the matter, I note that as the result of the disintegration of discipline and morality in an increasingly permissive society, we have lost all objectivity and every concept of values.

We must admit that problems raised about firearms and their violent use are very complex and often ambiguous. In addition, the relation existing between firearms and violence tends to conceal other much important related facts. Indeed, one only has to realize that the majority of offensive weapon owners want to use their weapons in an appropriate way. Now, if one looks at the statistics, one realizes that most of the time it is law-abiding sportsmen, honest and model citizens who deplore the use of firearms for criminal purposes.

So would it not be preferable to solve the problem giving reasonable consideration to their needs? Furthermore, it should never be forgotten that violence results from causes a lot deeper than the simple proliferation of firearms. Indeed, the gun is not dangerous by itself, the car is not dangerous by itself, nor is the gas that must be used. It all depends on the individual using it. It must be admitted that if firearms do make it easier to express violence they certainly do not provoke it. Also, if one makes a retrospective of events one realizes that all social perturbations in fact have their origin in the current economic system. To illustrate that one only has to think about someone coming out of jail. To survive, he must find a job. But unfortunately he will be refused employment because he has a criminal record that follows him everywhere.

Yet, he is a human being with physical needs who has to eat and dress, like everyone else. If he does not find work to meet those needs, he has but one alternative: go back to the vice for which he was condemned in the first place.

Undeniably, the proposal whereby bureaucrats would be empowered to determine who can have a firearm and who cannot is an alarming example of the philosophy according to which all that is not mandatory must be forbidden. May I also add that, if this bill becomes law, we can expect anything. And especially this: firearms will be restricted to an elite, and also those weapons will be registered by serial number.

That way, it will be easy for a government that suffers from delusions of grandeur to confiscate all firearms under the pretext of emergency measures, apprehended insurrection, and thus ensure the docility of the population.

In my modest opinion, the registration of firearms surely does not prevent criminals from getting them and, moreover, it will not save the lives of citizens who could be killed by people who never showed a propensity to crime in the past. I sincerely believe that the government is making a big mistake by proposing the adoption of this bill, because its purpose is to impose unnecessary measures to law-abiding citizens. There is for that matter no evidence at all that firearms control can effectively reduce the rate of crime, except in totalitarian states.

In addition, this bill will only create a number of annoyances for sportsmen and honest citizens in general. The government would be better to prevent the selling of military surplus to the public, for I regard the fact of putting such arms on the market as criminal. I would like to add that the minimum age to buy firearms should be 18 or more.

In its present state, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-83 provides that a much greater number of justifications will be available to intercept private communications. An authorization of the courts would still be needed before intercepting communications and the period during which interceptions are authorized would be increased from 30 to 60 days. And it would no longer be necessary, after 90 days to notify a person whose communications have been intercepted. On top of allowing that more interceptions be conducted, Bill C-83 indicates that the police will even be allowed to use the private communication that has been intercepted as evidence in courts even if they have not been authorized by the judge.

Private communications are intercepted especially in the case of persons suspected of drug trafficking or gambling for these are areas in which the police is not always successful. But, even we can easily recognize that organized crime is now a real plague that we should fight with all possible means, do we really wish to allow the police to interfere in the private lives of honest people in such a generalized way in order to fight a war which they cannot win.

This measure seems inacceptable to me for it is unconceivable that in this free and democratic country, the research and the punishment of the guilty comes before the respect for the private lives of the honest citizens. For the moment, the law authorizes interception of private communications only in some very resricted cases and I hope that this will continue to be so.

Police officers are only human. They are not immune from error. We must therefore oppose any provision leaving too much discretion in such an area, because it is extremenly important not to infringe unnecessarily on the rights of a number of innocent people.

This does not mean wiretapping is not valuable. Any investigation technique, and especially undercover ones, may bring useful information. But I would not readily suggest it is the most precious police weapon, nor that the police cannot successfully conduct investigations without it. We must be realistic about it.

It must be added that intrusion has been made into the privacy of hundreds of thousands of individuals, with the aim of restricting freedom of speech and association, in the name of national security. Each year the government spends millions of dollars in that area, while neglecting more important services that could undoubtedly help eradicate factors leading to crime. And to what success, Mr. Speaker? A few drug peddlers, a handful of gamblers and bookeepers sentenced. Never are the major bosses arrested, for the simple reason that the big ones probably do not receive that many phone calls. Evidently, those not wishing to get caught do not use their telephones where they suspect they might be wiretapped. Frankly, there must be better ways of spending our few dollars.

Surely the aims of this legislation are commendable. But I cannot accept the fact that to fulfill them the government found nothing better than restricting the civil liberties of honest Canadian citizens. In my view, further research should be done on the relationship between guns and violent crime, and the ways and means of fighting violence. Such are the comments I leave on Bill C-83.

[English]

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-83 because it is so important to Canada and Canadians. As a lawyer and defence counsel I am concerned about the matters covered in the bill and the approach the minister is taking to handle them. I will not speak on all matters of interest to me at this time but will confine my remarks specifically to gun control, electronic surveillance, special crime inquiries, dangerous offenders, and custody and release. Time does not permit me to go into each in depth but only to make what I consider to be relevant points in order to have the best bill possible.

The first part of Bill C-83, dealing with gun controls, is an important part of the peace and security programme as a preventive approach to crime. We have all heard the criticisms of the proposed controls that have been levelled by hunters, sportsmen and other gun owners. These critics regard any form of gun control as an attempt to disarm them and deprive them of a means of protection and recreation. I think this is an unreasoned response to the measures that have been proposed by the government. There is a limited proposal to disarm: first, by providing for an absolute prohibition of weapons that have no legitimate uses in hunting or target shooting, and second, by restricting the possession of all firearms to people who can be relied upon to use them in a responsible manner and only for lawful purposes. A system of licensing firearm owners will not make it impossible for professional criminals to own and use guns, but the conscientious application of these controls will reduce the chances of dangerous weapons remaining in the hands of unreliable people.

A Statistics Canada study of firearms has revealed that 13 per cent of the homicides in 1974 were committed with hand-guns, which have been controlled for some fifty years. In the same year, approximately 30 per cent of the homicides were committed with long guns, which are not now subject to any means of control. The unrestricted availability of weapons obviously has a direct relationship to their use in criminal activities. It is important to bear in mind that, although "professional crime" is increasing in Canada, most homicides are still impetuous acts, committed in moments of extreme emotional stress. Controlled access to firearms could significantly reduce the number of these crimes. The "cooling-off" period built into the licensing system will forestall the train of events that so often ends in misfortune when there is uncontrolled access to weapons.

As the minister said in his remarks opening this debate, "gun ownership is not a right, but a privilege". People with previous convictions for firearm misuse, or with a history of mental instability, should not be granted this privilege. The onus must rest on the person seeking this privilege to show that he is capable of using firearms in a responsible way. To this end, I would like to see the licence application include an undertaking that the applicant be responsible for the whereabouts of his firearms. He should also be required to show, at the time of the application, that he has the means to store firearms in a safe place where a child or other unauthorized person cannot have easy access to them. I would suggest that administratively the licensing be carried out locally in a similar manner to that already in effect for hunting licence applications in provinces. I would also suggest that some control be exercised with regard to the purchase of ammunition and/or explosives and/or the ingredients required for ammunition, so that authorities would know where any large quantity of ammunition may be found, such as the location of gun clubs and other similar organizations.

In imposing gun controls it is important to recognize that for many people firearms serve a necessary and legitimate purpose. This is a factor that has been admirably recognized by this bill. Being required to prove, at five year intervals, the ability to use and own firearms and to exercise responsibly will not inhibit any person with lawful intentions. I think this is the minimum price that should be required for the privilege of using weapons that have the potential for so much harm.

I fully support the proposed increases in maximum sentences for firearm misuse and for the use of firearms in the commission of other crimes. It will provide a more effective deterrent to the gratuitous use of weapons in criminal activities. However, I do not support the minimum sentence requirement in section 98(1), the proposed section that everyone who uses an offensive weapon, etc., whether or not he causes or means to cause bodily harm to any person as a result thereof, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for not more than 14 years and not less than one year.

I would also suggest that the proposed section should be changed so that the individual could be charged under the section summarily or by indictment. The section refers only to proceeding by way of indictment, which seems rather harsh to me in all circumstances. In my view, the Crown attorney should be able to decide, on the facts available to him, whether to proceed summarily or by way of indictment. Minimum sentence do not provide any stronger deterrent to the commission of a crime, but they tie the hands of the judge responsible for sentencing. He alone is in the position to weigh the circumstances of the individual case and determine a suitable punishment. Appropriate sentencing is an integral part of the crime prevention process. For this reason, I think the sentencing judge should be limited only by maximum penalties.

I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to the question of electronic surveillance. In this section the amendments proposed in clauses 6 to 10 of the bill correct what I feel to be a serious error in the Protection of Privacy Act. The law enforcement authorities must be given sufficient freedom in their powers of investigation to uncover and prosecute the activities of organized criminals. The extension of the allowable period of surveillance is a belated recognition of the fact that crime prevention and detection is a lengthy and painstaking process. If the power to intercept communications is to be an effective one, then the time limit should be subject only to the requirement that the continued necessity of the surveillance be shown at prescribed intervals.

The removal of the exclusionary evidence rule corrects another error in the orignal act that needlessly hampers police investigation. Admitting evidence derived from an illegal interception should not be viewed as an open invitation to unauthorized electronic surveillance. I think that more confidence in the integrity of our law enforcement authorities is warranted. Under the amended section, however, a technical invalidity in the judicial authorization would not cripple the entire investigation. Similarly, removing the requirement to notify the person being investigated will allow the investigation to be persistently developed without prematurely alerting the suspect.

These amendments have already been the object of a great deal of criticism, notably by the Civil Liberties Federation. In the Globe and Mail of March 2, the federation is quoted as calling this bill "the most regressive action taken by the government since the imposition of the War Measures Act", and predicting that "Canadians will lose a significant part of their hard won freedoms, while peace and security will still remain an elusive objective". Certainly in its efforts to control crime and reverse the trend of increasing violence, the government must not disregard the civil liberties of the individual. I think it is possible to establish a healthy balance between safeguarding the individual's rights and giving the police enough power to do their job effectively.

Specifically in the matter of electronic surveillance, this balance can best be maintained by requiring stringent judicial examination of every application for authorized surveillance. The grounds for authorizing an interception are set out in clause 7. I think the standing committee should undertake a careful study of this section in or to consider a more precise definition of the grounds for authorization, without, however, limiting their scope.

It is my understanding that when wiretapping and electronic bugging legislation was passed in the United States in 1968 it was actively utilized. In the first year of operation I understand that for 3,500 arrests where "bugs" were used, some 40,000 people were heard in some 500,000 conversations. When you consider the magnitude of such statistics, the whole question of bugging appears to be potentially dangerous to personal privacy.

I think the onus must remain on the Crown to demonstrate why it is necessary in the public interest. Surely it is useful for detection and follow-up concerning organized crime. However, it should only be used where other policing methods and techniques are not considered adequate or efficient. It has been shown in the United States, so I am advised, that there was more success in detecting crime using other conventional methods than when bugging was used. It seems to me that for bugging devices to be used, it must be shown that they are not only useful but indispensable under the circumstances of the case. The burden of showing the necessity of electronic surveillance rests, quite properly, on the official applying for authorization. If this requirement is rigorously applied, the public will not become subservient to the police, as the Civil Liberties Federation has charged. Subjecting each application for surveillance to close scrutiny by a member of the judiciary will do far more to protect the individual's rights than any requirement that he be notified of the surveillance after the fact.

Another point of concern to me is that the proposed legislation is expanded to include all indictable offences. It includes not only serious crimes but also impaired driving, simple possession of marijuana and even theft of a newspaper. This does not seem to be consistent, to me, or according to the intent and spirit of the ligislation. Surely police authorities do not require electronic surveillance for all indictable offences. Another observation that could be made is that the notification requirement serves as a deterrent to needless bugging, in that the police should only bug where it is absolutely necessary.

The sections dealing with special crime inquiries to be established by the provinces provide a timely clarification of a constitutional issue. The effectiveness of these commissions of inquiry has already been demonstrated and a statutory definition of their powers is appropriate at this time. I have only a minor criticism of this part of the bill. If the commissions of inquiry established by the provinces are to exercise all the powers of a court, then I see no reason to withhold from them the power to cite for contempt. Requiring the citation to be brought by a judge of the superior court simply creates an unnecessary administrative step in the procedure. The commission is to be entrusted with the power to carry out a judicial inquiry, and with the protection of the legal rights of persons being investigated. I think it would be more consistent and expedient to allow the commission to issue contempt citations in connection with its other activities.

Unfortunately, my criticisms of the dangerous offender provisions of the bill are not so minor. It has been recognized for many years that the present sections dealing with preventive or indeterminate sentences have not been successful. The Ouimet report, in 1969, advocated an extensive revision of this part of the Criminal Code since it has been most frequently applied to essentially harmless people who have committed a series of minor property offences.

Similarly, studies of psychiatric services in penitentiaries, carried out by the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), have revealed that dangerous sexual offenders have frequently been wrongly classified. The abolition of this concept is certainly a step in the right direction, as is the serious personal injury offence restriction that is proposed in Bill C-83. However, the existing law allows for an indeterminate sentence to be given only when a person has been previously convicted of an indictable offence on at least three separate occasions and who has been persistently leading a criminal life.

● (1500)

Under the amendments proposed, the requirement for three previous convictions would be replaced by "patterns of behaviour" indicating that the offender is not likely to be subject to restraint. The person could therefore be liable, on his first offence, to prolonged detention perhaps exceeding the maximum term for the crime for which he has been convicted; and the prolonged detention would be ordered on the basis of past behaviour which has not necessarily involved the contravention of any law.

We are dealing here with a departure from the traditional ambit of the criminal law, which punishes or detains only on the basis of proven infringements of clearly defined rules. I think this departure is a potentially dangerous one, requiring scrupulous examination.

[Mr. Robinson.]

The classification of certain offenders on the basis of their potential for dangerous behaviour would be made on the strength of evidence of psychiatrists, criminologists or psychologists. This approach seems to presuppose that practitioners in these disciplines can assess an individual's potential for violent behaviour according to a set of technical and objective criteria. Unfortunately, the behavioural sciences have not reached this stage of accuracy. An error, on the side of "caution", in the original assessment of the offender's potential for violence can create a serious injustice; and the error could be repeated, and the injustice compounded, during the periodic reviews that have been provided for. There is also the possibility that a "dangerous offender" could be released within three years, and, regardless of the accuracy of the assessment of his potential for violence, would thereby serve a much shorter sentence than would have been imposed if he had not been deemed a dangerous offender.

C. S. Lewis, writing in "1953 Res Judicatae," warned of the dangers of the "humanitarian theory of punishment", which > removes sentences from the hands of jurists whom the public conscience is entitled to criticize and places them in the hands of technical experts whose special sciences do not even employ such categories as rights or injustice . . . the first result of the Humanitarian theory is, therefore, to substitute for a definite sentence (reflecting to some extent the community's moral judgment on the degree of ill-dessert involved) an indefinite sentence terminable only by the word of those experts . . .

My objections to the dangerous offender sections should not be construed as an objection to the preventive approach to crime, or to the protection of society from known criminals. But the same result can be achieved by the traditional sentencing methods, without incurring the risks of error and injustice.

The past behaviour of a convicted offender can certainly be used in the judge's determination of the appropriate sentence to be handed down. The repeal of statutory remission of sentence, proposed in this bill, would ensure that any person who demonstrated "unrestrained violent tendencies" would not be released before the sentence was actually served.

The last point I wish to raise has to do with custody and release. The proposed changes to the Parole Act and the laws governing the correctional institutions will provide a much needed improvement in the release of convicted offenders. The increase in the number of National Parole Board members will, as the minister has stated, permit a more thorough review of individual cases for parole. The inclusion of members of the community on the board reflects the legitimate interests of local concerns in the release of inmates. I would like to see this approach carried further in the amendments, and have some assurance that the parole decision will be based, at least in part, on the recommendations of people who are in daily contact with the prisoner, since it is these people who are in daily contact with the prisoner, and since it is these people who are in the best position to assess the individual's chances for a successful return to society.

I have spoken at some length on some of the areas of concern in this bill. There are many other aspects of the bill that should be further considered as well. I would hope that the bill could be moved quickly to the Standing Committee of Justice and Legal Affairs so that each issue raised could be considered in depth and so that Canadians who are interested will be able to take part in the deliberations. I would also hope that the minister has some amendments to make in view of the representations that he has received that he would make them known at the earliest possible time, and certainly as soon as the bill goes to committee.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, speaking today on Bill C-83, the peace and security bill, I should first of all like to say that there are many people in Canada who believe this bill relates to capital punishment. This is not their fault. Rather it is the fault of the government which has done a very poor job in explaining that we have two bills before us, one being the peace and security bill and the other bill being on capital punishment.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) spend much time and money advertising on television and radio in an attempt to convince the people of Canada to change their opinions on capital punishment rather than on properly explaining the issues. They have done much to confuse it. Bill C-83 on peace and security contains some 73 pages, half of which are on gun control. The remainder deals with wiretapping, special crime inquiries, custody and release of inmates, crime, and crime prevention measures. These are considered to be more of the housekeeping type of amendments to acts that have already been passed by the House of Commons.

There can be no doubt that this bill should be divided in two, that is, the gun control section split from the remainder of the bill and introduced as a separate bill. It is for this reason that our party proposed a motion asking that the bill not be read a second time, but that it be sent to committee to have the gun control section severed from the rest. I believe this action should certainly be taken and I only hope that our motion will be called before it is sent to the Standing Committee for Study following second reading.

As this comprehensive gun control bill is the first ever to be put before the people of Canada, there is great concern shown by the people over this bill, and they believe that we should have an opportunity to study it, by itself, in committee. There is no doubt that it needs a lot of clarification and much discussion in committee. It does very little to control the criminal elements. In its present form it could be the cause of many innocent people getting criminal records.

Hunters and sportsmen could probably live with such a bill if they could get a licence to own a gun. They are already licensed to hunt, and in many cases they believe that this same licence would be the one that would entitle them to own a gun. But this really is not the case as this bill clearly spells out.

What does legal responsibility in the act really mean? What is safe storage? Is safe storage a person's home, provided it is locked, or does the government really mean that guns have to be kept in a separate locked gun closet? A locked home is often broken into. People who break into a home can also very easily break into the gun closet. Does it mean carrying it in a locked car or locked truck? Surely if one is to transport guns or firearms either to or from the gun shooting clubs or for hunting, this must be done by car or truck. Criminals have no difficulty in breaking into locked cars or trucks.

Getting back to the legal responsibility, if a gun is stolen, how can it be proven whose gun it is? Certainly this legal responsibility can and will only apply to the very innocent. Section 105 (2), "seizure without warrant", alone would start a round of court cases involving people who are innocent of wrong-doing because peace officers would then be allowed to enter homes without search warrants and seize firearms which they feel are out of place. This is often the case when we pass a law such as this without really looking at and studying the ramifications.

The seizure of weapons by police, when the safety of a person is in danger, is probably not too bad or too hard to live with, providing the police do not use this sort of thing indiscriminately. I can think of many times when this should have happened, but because it couldn't the police were unable to perform their duties properly. I would also hope, if a section such as this were passed, it would not allow the police to show their muscle when it was not really necessary.

We already have laws about restricted and prohibited firearms. However, the registration of these is being tightened in this bill. The bill clearly says that the only way that you can have such a restricted firearm, is when there is need for protection of life, lawful occupation, target shooting, or bona fide collecting. This proposed section also needs some clarification so that people are assured that their rights will be protected.

● (1510)

The target shooters and the bona fide collectors are the ones about whom we are most concerned. In many cases the bona fide collector can prove that he has made the gun inoperative by removing the firing pin or other dangerous parts of the gun, and therefore he feels that he should not be discriminated against. As hunting has become more and more limited in the more populated areas in Canada today, target or trap shooting is a very popular form of diversion for the sportsmen. They are therefore able to use their guns in the same manner as they did when they were actually hunting, and this allows them to be participants in sports rather than just being spectators. The fact must be recognized that these people cannot and should not be restricted in this kind of relaxation which they enjoy.

Let us now deal with the section on licensing. This is the section about which, I believe, most people in Canada, certainly those who want to have guns for hunting, are most concerned. This provision says that anyone who wishes to possess guns or firearms must have a licence. To obtain this licence they must have two designated guarantors who are responsible people in the community.

Just who will designate these responsible people? The government in power will, of course. Will they be political appointees? Will they be paid employees? Certainly if they will be paid political employees there will be no problem in getting them. There are always people standing around looking for these types of positions. However, one must ask what their responsibilities will really be. Will they have any responsibilities apart from guaranteeing that someone should have a licence? If they do, then I do not think there will be many people willing to take on this kind of task.

At any rate in many of the small communities in Canada I do not really believe there will be too many people who will want to take on this kind of chore without having or accepting some other responsibility, and therefore I do not believe it will be very easy to convince people to accept the position of a guarantor for an applicant for a licence to obtain a gun. These guarantors will not be concerned so much about the multitude of people whom they guarantee for licences but rather about the few about whom they are not certain whether they should or should not have a gun.

What about the innocent-type looking person who comes to them for a licence and then later shows that he is not responsible enough to own a gun? How does one determine mental stability? Will someone who has had mental problems at some time or other, especially in his childhood, be forever considered mentally unstable? How do you know that a person has never had any medication for mental instability? In many cases parents have sought help for what they thought were their disturbed children. Are these children to be charged with mental instability for the rest of their lives? For the parents who did not seek help there really is no record, so they do not have to answer for these children. Persons who sought and received help could now have much better mental stability, but now they have a record which will follow them and therefore they might be discriminated against.

A great number of people are now concerned about the cost of the fee for the licence. Just how much bureaucracy will there be in order to licence all these people? This concern is real because under this legislation the cost of the licence will be relative to the operational costs of the bureaucracy. This is not very easy in these times of big governments and Parkinson's law. So this has become a very big issue. Has the government made any study to determine what the cost will be? How will it explain it to people if the cost is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50 per licence? I understand that the cost of a licence in New York is around $100.

What about people who are moving around Canada? They can get a licence for five years but they must be known for two years in the community in which they reside by the guarantors who have been designated. We all know that workers travel around in different parts of Canada. The recently released report of the Economic Council of Canada shows this very clearly. How can a person have his licence renewed if he is not known in the community?

Another group of people about whom we are concerned are the American hunters coming to Canada. How will they get a licence? This question is being asked by many guides across Canada who have set up a hunting business for American hunters. In general these are not small businesses but big businesses, and answers to these questions must be forthcoming. Will the treatment accorded hunters from abroad differ from that accorded to our own? This matter should be clarified.

[Mr. Whittaker.]

I should like to take this opportunity to read into the record parts of two excellent letters which I have received from my constituents. The first comes from Grand Forks, British Columbia. It reads:

I have been able to exercise my vote for well over 20 years and other than that do not become deeply involved in politics. Over the years, however, many policies, regulations, restrictions, etc. that the government has brought about have been, in my opinion, ridiculous—

However, the purpose of my letter is to express my views on the upcoming firearms regulations. I recently had the opportunity to thumb through the 30 some odd page proposal, some of which makes sense, some is tolerable. The majority, however, is once again, I feel, ridiculous.

I do not wish to pick at individual items as this would involve a 40 page summary, so will take a general approach.

I own some firearms, I thoroughly enjoy the outdoors in every respect and normally get a little hunting in each fall. However, I am not a gun collector nor a hand load buff.

I am familiar enough with firearms and laws to be certain that no one would purchase a gun, register it, try and obtain a carrying permit, then go and commit a crime. Anyone who is capable of bank robbery, murder or whatever, will have no reservation about stealing the gun. If offensive weapons are to be registered then one may list the following, knives of all kinds with blades over three inches, finger nail files, hammers, axes, clubs baseball bats, golf clubs, broken bottles, fists, wrenches, tire irons, etc., etc., etc. The above items are frequently used as a tool to create bodily harm or used in a threat.

The papers and newscasts are constantly reporting people killed in car accidents, plane crashes, drownings, house fires and the like. Everyone that is injured or killed certainly has not been shot—so why pick on guns? Alcohol and drugs cripple, mentally distort, and generate more crimes, so why not attack the source rather than pick on guns? Not long ago some teenage children in an institution held officials captive with broken glass, as a weapon. Just prior to that, inmates in a prison held guards captive at knife point. No guns were involved in these and numerous other cases—

It is our tax dollars that apprehend and convict these people then go on to support all their demands. This adds up to many thousands of dollars per prisoner per year, year after year, after year.

Not long ago a habitual drug user was apprehended with several thousand dollars worth of hard drugs in his possession, for the purpose of trafficking. The volume of drugs in his possession was enough to bend several people out of shape for the rest of their lives. Many weeks and a terrific amount of money, tax money, was spent to give this person a fair trial. I understand he was fined $350 and turned loose to pick up where he left off on the streets.

A great deal of time and money has been spent in the past in legislating laws and regulations. A good many of these are directed at gun control. This is good. I am certainly in favour of laws and regulations that will afford a safe society for my family and I to survive in, but let's take a long hard look at what we have and where the real problems are rather than point a finger at another surface object which generates more legislation, more laws, more tax dollars spent, restricts the "Joe Blow" type and if anything, gives the criminal more protection.

● (1520)

In review I am suggesting that . . . Adequate laws relating to firearms control have been made—so "enforce them" . . . Deal with the crime and criminals in the same fashion that they deal with society—"harshly".

Another letter comes from a lady in Penticton, B.C.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Perhaps the Chair should raise the point, since the hon. member has quoted quite extensively from a letter which was sent to him, that the usual practice in this House in the past under these circumstances has been that the writer of the communication should be identified.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I have the letter here, and I would be only too pleased to send it up and have it—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): These letters should be identified by hon. members when they are making their speeches.

Mr. Whittaker: The author of this letter is Mr. Ray Johnson of Grand Forks, British Columbia.

There is another letter from a lady in Penticton, and it reads as follows:

It was interesting to hear the result of your questionnaire, regarding capital punishment and gun control laws. I can understand your confusion . . .

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: I hear a lot of noise from people on the other side, and because I receive more mail from my constituents than these few which point out in uncertain terms the faults in this legislation, they are becoming very thin skinned. They do not want to hear them. They do not want to hear this type of thing because they are so thin skinned. They cannot take it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: The reason I quote from these letters is that they are so well written.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to clarify that I read my mail in my office. I get as much mail as the hon. member does, but I do not read it in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): That could very well be a point for debate, but I do not think it is a point of order. The hon. member was good enough to comply with a suggestion made by the Chair with regard to a point he was making in debate, and during most of the morning and afternoon all speakers have been listened to with extraordinary silence.

Mr. Whittaker: I am sorry that the whip of the official opposition is so thin skinned.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I am not the whip of the official opposition.

An hon. Member: You will be.

Mr. Whittaker: The hon. member will be before too long. He does not have as loud a voice as the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. I only heard the former minister of consumer and corporate affairs. I have great difficulty hearing the voice of the government whip.

Another letter comes from a lady in Penticton, B.C., and reads as follows:

It was interesting to hear the result of your questionnaire, regarding capital punishment and gun control laws. I can understand your confusion when many pro-capital punishment are against gun control measures. As you will note, the fish and game enthusiasts are feeling threatened on this issue and react as they usually do to anything that interferes with their "rights". Perhaps, the issue has been clouded by the knowledge that the judiciary have not made full use of their prerogative to pass appropriate sentences to those convicted of violent crimes.

Measures Against Crime

On reading through the Criminal Code of Canada, it is obvious that the maximum sentences available are probably adequate. In recent years it has become increasingly apparent, to those interested enough to follow the course of a trial to its outcome, that few indeed are judges that give anything but sentences that can only be called minimal (i.e. Steven Scott, convicted of manslaughter (plea bargain) originally charged with murder of Mrs. Mae Arpe, last fall in Penticton, sentenced in January, Kamloops Supreme Court, to five years. A brutal killing, tried in camera so that certain aspects would not be made public. Scott elected for trial by the judge—one small paragraph in Vancouver Sun and Penticton Herald, in which the judge is quoted as having told Scott that his actions were despicable and he hopes he gets psychiatric help (for his perversions)—along with a sentence for 5 years—(5 years means, 40 months maximum and 18 months—If Mr. Scott plays the game in the prison)—astonishing!

Perhaps the best example, or worst, is the sentence to the man in Saskatchewan, who killed four children last year—each murder conviction allowed a sentence of life imprisonment. The judge passed sentnece appropriately until he said "concurrent"—if he never intended this dangerous person to be free—whatever happened to the term "consecutive"?

I realize the judiciary operates independently from government and this is right and good. As it stands they answer to absolutely no one for their action within the court. From time to time we are told that sentencing reflects the will of the people in any given age—"the mores of the times"—I don't think so at this time in the 20th century.

It is, therefore, the responsibility of government to ensure protection for the public by making certain that minimum sentences are a fact in the Criminal Code too. All the messing around with increasing maximum sentences comes to naught if the judiciary does not make use of these changes.

In these days of plea bargaining, easy bail availability, elopements from mental hospital of persons held under "order-in-council", prison escapes and hostage taking, is it any wonder that the public has begun to question the courts? It seems that sentencing for white collar crimes, involving money, draw more punitive measures than do violent crimes now.

In closing, I must add that gun control measures must come no matter what the macho types amoung us feel. No matter that professional criminals will always have their sources, some measures are in order that some guns will be surrendered (to be destroyed) by those who do not want their responsibility—many will keep the guns they have under a more safe manner. Guns will only be sold under more stringent conditions. This has to be a benefit to the people.

An excerpt from another letter I received from one of my constituents says:

It is my firm belief that the eventual prohibition of all firearms is the aim of this government and when that comes, we will be living in a police state. An omnibus bill is not the way to pass legislation that will affect millions of people, but it is the only way an arrogant or irresponsible government can hope to get unpopular laws passed.

I have just quoted from only three of the many letters I have received from my constituents, but I think they aptly point out what concerns the people in my riding. Many people believe that this bill is designed to confuse and divide the people of Canada, and as we know this government for its great divide and conquer ways I think they are quite right in their concerns. Yes, this bill could be just a tip of the iceberg; it could lead to eventual prohibition of firearms. People who think this way just cannot be ignored. Some of them have seen this in the countries from which they emmigrated. Many are aware of the rights which have been taken away from the people over the years, and they see that this is just another one of these actions.

My involvement with guns has been of long duration—most of my life—and it has also been very complete. I doubt if there are very many members in this house who have used guns more than I have, starting back in the late twenties. I know guns; I know what they can do. I have seen them used with great discretion, and I have even seen them misused, mainly by people who are inexperienced and have not been trained in their use. But just tell me of anything which can be abused in Canada and which has not been abused, for instance, the automobile, alcohol, drugs, television, and the writer's pen. The easy targets will be those who are underprivileged and unfamiliar with the law.

● (1530)

An hon. Member: There is a lot of difference between the pen and the gun.

Mr. Whittaker: I notice that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) interjects that there is a lot of difference between the pen and the gun, but let me point out that there have been many pens loaded with poison.

Mrs. Holt: They don't blow off a head and they don't knock out hearts.

Mr. Whittaker: I think the hon. member should go and write another book like "Terror in the Name of God".

Mrs. Holt: Maybe you would learn something. Maybe I will write on guns and the dangers of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Let him go on reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. The hon. member has the floor and there should not be half a dozen other debates taking place on his time.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, the easy targets will be those who are underprivileged and unfamiliar with the law. I see the prospect of harassment levelled against innocent people; people who are caught in the web of this law on legal technicalities because of the difficulty they find in adjusting and altering their sports and cultural habits in line with the imposition of this law, which is based on sheer lunacy. This is a form of innocent guilt which is unjust, unnecessary, and inexpedient.

There are areas where steps could legitimately be taken with respect to the use of firearms; for example, the development and administration of an effective safety program, the development of high standards of proficiency amongst sportsmen and hunters. In these respects legitimate sportsmen's organizations throughout the country have never been recognized. Their recommendations have never been acknowledge. They have not been consulted or requested to provide input into the legislation we are considering.

Surely an effective safety program could be worked out jointly between the federal government and the provinces, in consultation with gun clubs, hunters' groups, and fish and game associations. If this legislation is to command the co-operation and support it will need in order to make it work, the minister and the government will have to go to these people and work with them. There are better ways of getting to the core of the criminal problem than using a sledge hammer on the innocent law-abiding citizens of this country. Surely, the hunters, target shooters, and gun collectors are not criminals.

If we dealt with our killers and criminals in a firm, harsh way, it would be the first positive step in stemming the tide of rising murder and violence. The law dealing with those who have threatened violence, or use violence in a criminal act, requires tightening up and firmer enforcement. To that extent I welcome the provisions of this bill.

The legitimate gun owner in this particular case should not be the scapegoat. This bill will do very little to deter the criminal. The section dealing with gun control was the government's response to the emotion and hysteria of an already overloaded and frustrated society. It has addressed itself to that element rather than engaging in a penetrating examination of the root causes of the chronic problem, that of violence in this country.

While there is a general disposition on the part of the public to demand some tightening up in the establishment of control and safety standards, in respect of this bill and to the extent it meets these objectives I must say categorically that I find this piece of legislation exceedingly harsh and very offensive. It seems to me that quite a public relations job is being done here.

The government has utilized a kid glove policy in dealing with the criminal element of this country and it now attempts to take it out on the legitimate gun owner. It has responded to the emotions of hysteria in relation to some dramatic episodes that have taken place in the last year or so. These episodes, involving the use of guns, may have involved the use of some other weapon, such as a bomb. My view is that if a person is bound to kill, or has an absolute desire to kill, he will kill in one way or another, whether it be with a gun, bomb, sledge hammer, knife, or the fist.

This is the core of the problem, and that is the problem to which this bill fails to address itself. I repeat that what is needed is stricter enforcement of existing laws and less coddling of criminals. Stricter gun laws will not cut crime, but proper enforcement of the existing laws will.

The Minister of Justice has now used closure to stop the debate on this bill. He said, in a radio broadcast the other day, that the reason for this was that he wanted to get the bill to committee because of all the mail he has had from across Canada. He now understands that the bill was poorly written, needs much discussion in committee, and has to have many amendments.

In my opinion the minister should be severely censored for bringing a bill to the House of Commons which he now realizes was very poorly written. He also realizes there is going to be a great wave of opinion across Canada against such a bill. He also does not like the speeches that are being made by the opposition against this bill, while knowing full well that his own members cannot stand up or do not stand up and say what their constituents are saying to them about the bill.

Surely this is a poor way to run a government when it has to pull this type of closure on the opposition so that they cannot continue to inform the people of Canada about this bill. Surely, this must be one time they must be informed, knowing that we have not had this form of gun control legislation brought before us in the history of Canada.

We have legislation concerning guns that will and should control the criminal if it is properly used. Now we see this government of ours bringing in this kind of legislation, wanting it to have as little discussion as possible, so that the people of Canada cannot understand what is really going on. The government wants to get it into committee, of course, because when it is being discussed in committee there is no record for the people of Canada to follow.

It appears to me that the government wants to get it into committee to try to take the heat off, and then maybe it can get some more of its high-pressured advertising going to try to convince the people of Canada that it is right. But I do not think it is going to be able to do so in this case. I believe the people have caught on to the tactics of this government.

At one time, even I was hoping that the government was going to be serious in its presentation of Bill C-83, the peace and security bill, that it would be getting tougher with law and order. But, just at that moment, we had the judges' affair. We found that cabinet ministers were calling judges about court cases. At that same moment we were able to know and understand that the government was not serious. If it had been serious, the Prime Minister would not have hesitated to call a public inquiry into the judges' affair. This would really have demonstrated to the people of Canada that there was some seriousness, but he did not, and so they in turn are not going to take him very seriously.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-83 and Bill C-84 are companion pieces of legislation. Their one basic purpose is an attempt to achieve a society with less violence. One reason I feel very strongly about Bill C-84, and I will just mention this before dealing with C-83, is that to achieve a society with less violence we cannot use violent means. It is for this reason I am an abolitionist. This is not for me a matter of conscience or morality; it is just a fact that you cannot have less violence by using conscious violent means. Bill C-83 is an attempt to reduce violence in our society.

For a few minutes I should like to discuss this general area of violence and the reason for the increase in the use of violence in our society. Let me refer to some statistics.

In 1970 the total number of offences against the Criminal Code committed in Canada was 1.1 million. In the four years from then to 1974 this grew to 1.45 million, or about one criminal offence for every 17 persons in Canada. Of course, that is an incorrect way of phrasing it because some people committed more than one offence. There was an increase in crime in that period of 31.8 per cent. In the same period, violent crimes such as rape, murder and armed robbery, increased by 23.5 per cent. As a percentage of the total amount of crime, violent crimes decreased from 9.2 per cent to 8.7 per cent. However, that does not mean we do not have a problem.

● (1540)

I wish to present another set of figures comparing crime in this country with that of the United States. In the period between 1970 and 1974 violent crime increased by 23.5 per cent in Canada and 24 per cent in the United States. The significant figure is that in 1974, there were 2.6 violent crimes for every 100,000 population in Canada as opposed to 9.7 violent crimes for every 100,000 population in the United States, about four times as much. I state those figures because they are significant when dealing with the whole area of violence which is basically what is dealt with in this bill.

There are many reasons why violent crime is on the increase. First and foremost is the general insecurity of our times. We live in a very unique time. I do not think there is any period in history that can compare with the present time. Things move very rapidly. We have inflation, resource shortages and a whole series of problems. People feel insecure. They live under severe pressure. Change occurs at a very rapid rate.

There is a basic element of conflict in the way we view life in our society. This conflict shows itself in many ways. One is in the whole area of violence. Another is in the increased use of drugs. If one were to analyse these statistics, 23 or 24 per cent over that period of time in Canada, and the same in the United States, one would see that drugs were very much an element in violent crime. However, I see drugs more as a result of the conflict of our times and the difficulties of the period we live in rather than they themselves being the basic problem, although they do present an additional set of problems. The basic problem is insecurity and the times in which we live.

There is another factor of which we must be cognizant, that is the accent in the media, television in particular, on violence. When we compare the figure of 9.7 per 100,000 in the United States as opposed to 2.6 in Canada for violent crimes, we can see that some of this violence flows over through the media, television in particular, into Canadian society from the United States. Young people watch thousands of shootings and killings on television during their formative years. That is another factor that has to be looked at; it is not dealt with in this bill, but it is something we have to think about.

I would like to deal with the educational system. I spent 20 years in it, 17 years as principal of a high school. I am very concerned about something that is happening in our schools which I believe it is contributing to a violent type of society.

I am sure hon. members recall the tragedy in Brampton last spring when one student shot two people and tried to kill a third. A similar incident occurred in an Ottawa high school last fall. We should not look at those two crimes as isolated incidents because there are other forms of violence which do not show up in the courts. For example, the suicide rate in our high schools is very high.

I do not like to oversimplify things, but there is something they are doing in our schools that I consider very dangerous. Our schools have grown large. We have taken the attitude that in a school with an enrolment of 1,800, we can offer more courses and this is good. We have computerized our school system. We have taken individual students and put them into a timetable straightjacket by means of a computer. This has been done very thoughtlessly.

We have set up what is known as a scattered timetable. In the first period a student may attend an English class with 30 other students. The next period may be mathematics and there may only be two students from the first group. The next could be a French period with no one from the first group. What we have done is take that student away from any possibility of being part of an established group. We have taken him or her away from interacting socially and learning how to adjust to a group.

When I, and I am sure most other members, went to school, we belonged to a home form class. We moved with that class. We were part of that group. The teachers knew the students in that home form class. In the Brampton incident, two teachers were looking for that student on the same day. I am sure both teachers did not know they both taught that particular student.

There is a real problem of identification in the schools because of the scattered timetable. I am perhaps spending more time on this than I should, but it is something I know about, and it concerns me because I think we are creating a very dangerous precedent in our society.

Young people do not learn how to become part of a peer group when they are scattered. When they leave school, and they leave early, partly because they did not become part of a group within the school, they do not know how to adjust within a society. They are in conflict with society. They have not learned the social intercourse which is necessary. We are creating an element in our social policy which will inevitably lead to more violence.

I now wish to deal briefly with the bill. While I have some difficulty with it, I cannot understand the strong opposition to the bill because there are elements of it that are very good. When discussing this bill, the opposition glosses over certain things. There are some basic purposes we have to look at.

This bill attempts to prevent criminals and psychopaths from getting hold of guns. That is not an easy proposition. The bill is perhaps most imperfect in this attempt, but it is attempting to do that.

I do not think that the matter of registering the owner of the gun in the way set out in the bill will be very effective. There are some real difficulties in this area. I do not like the idea of two guarantors. In the many years that I signed passports, all I did when signing was to say that I had known that person, usually a student, for two years. I did not have to say that I approved of that person or that I thought that person was good, bad or indifferent. I just had to say that for two years I had known the person whose name was on the passport.

● (1550)

I think as a guarantor I would not have objected when asked whether a person was or was not a good person, if I had to make some kind of valuation, moral or otherwise, of that person. So I think this is something we have to look at somewhat differently. Yes, I think we should licence the gun owner but in some other way, because, don't forget, the purpose is to prevent criminals and psychopaths from owning guns. But in some way we should be able to register an individual by merely having him apply for a licence and have the licence looked at in some way or other by the police or other authorities, to ensure that he isn't a known criminal or, even more important, that he is not a dangerous psychopath, a person who could use a gun for the purpose we are talking about, that is, for a violent purpose. I think this might be a better approach. That same registration card could then be used to buy ammunition, to buy another gun, and so on.

The second purpose of the legislation has to do with more care in the use of guns. One of the things which has been absent from this debate as far as the opposition is concerned is statistics of the deaths incurred from firearms. In the year 1974, the last year for which I have figures, some 1,500 people in this country dies as a result of the use of firearms. Only 269 were the result of homicides and, as I understand it, close to two thirds of those were homicides caused by people known to the person who committed the murder, So really we are dealing with the use of guns within families. Over a thousand of the deaths caused by the use of guns were by suicide. We are dealing with the use of guns by persons who are not basically criminals.

The person who commits suicide is not a criminal. The person who gets drunk and so on and gets into a fight and kills someone is basically not a criminal when he starts. This is the dangerous use of guns of about which we must be concerned. It represents more than four fifths of all the deaths by firearms. I do not know how we can escape those figures. To me they are extremely important. Whether the bill effectively deals with this aspect I am not certain. I think there may be other things we can do. But to say that we are restricting the law-abiding citizen and ignoring the criminal is to ignore the statistics completely.

I think there are some important things in this bill. For instance, it should be stressed that it is a criminal offence to leave a loaded gun in a home or to leave a gun on the seat of a car. I think that what has to be done in the bill is to specify these things, put them down and say what is a criminal offence in this respect. I hope amendments will be made in this direction.

Another point I should like to make is this: the bill is an attempt to penalize criminals. I think we have all accepted the fact that there is a portion in the bill which would make it automatic that when a gun is used in the commission of a crime the person who uses it should get a sentence in addition to the sentence going with the crime. I think one year is too light. I would make it two years to 14 years rather than one year to 14 years.

Another important feature of the bill is that it does allow the police to remove firearms when there is a very definite sense of danger, when there is danger that can come from the use of those firearms. I think the police must be able to remove those weaspons. When an individual has violent habits, when an individual is drinking, when, for instance in the case of a quarrel between husband and wife the wife feels she is going to be killed with a gun, it is important that the police be able to remove that gun.

I have one other point. I find it difficult to understand the person who says, "If a gun is not available some other weapon would be used." I know of one incident and, I know one individual involved rather well. A person drinking, cut up another person with a knife. The person who was cut up recovered. The person who did the crime was a Korean war veteran, a world war two veteran, an expert in the use of arms. He certainly would have killed that person in that act if a gun had been available. So I think it is important to realize that the gun is an important thing, more lethal then a knife, to be kept under control and I believe the bill does something in this direction.

I will support the measure in principle on second reading. I will insist, however, that there are some amendments which must be made which will strengthen the bill, as well as amendments which will also make it more reasonable, that will not condemn the legitimate hunters and members of gun clubs and people in similar groups who I believe are very, very careful about how they use guns. These are groups which will not permit members to misuse guns; they know that if guns are misused on a shoot somebody is going to be killed. They spend a lot of time and energy training people in gun safety. I hope that when the bill finally goes to committee the advice of the gun groups will be sought and seriously considered especially when we are discussing gun safety.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being four o'clock, pursuant to the order made earlier this day the House will now revert to Routine Proceedings, specifically, statements by ministers, for the purpose of hearing a statement by the Prime Minister.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON "PATRIATION" OF CONSTITUTION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank hon. members for allowing me to make a statement at this rather unusual hour. It had been agreed that I would table those papers today because of some events that concern all parties in the House. It was not possible for me to do so at noon, so I think I had to do it before the weekend.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table letters I sent recently to the premiers of the provinces which set forth the essentials of discussions that have been going on during the past year. They are discussions to see if we might find our way out of a constitutional impasse that has frustrated governments of all political persuasions, both federal and provincial, for nearly 50 years. That impasse is the problem of bringing to an end our unique and unenviable distinction as a country of having to go to the Parliament of another country if we want to amend some fundamental parts of our constitution.

[English]

I do not intend to go into this problem in any detail. The former leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), raised the matter in the Debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne on October 2, 1974. He said he did not think it was too much to ask that there be agreement "at least on an amendment formula, during the life of this parliament". I agreed with that view. I hope my agreement is shared by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). It seemed to be shared by virtually all hon. members judging from reactions at that time.

In April, 1975, I had a meeting with the premiers of the provinces to discuss the pricing of oil and gas and related issues. I used the occasion to test whether there might be hope of getting the kind of limited agreement to which the hon. member for Halifax had referred—agreement on an amendment formula on the basis of which we could bring complete control of our constitution into Canadian hands. The premiers agreed that it would be worth trying and I asked the Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations to visit each of them to explore the possibility further. The letters I am tabling report the results of those discussions.

I think there has been some misunderstanding about the way the government, or I personally, approach this matter. Clearly "patriation" or the achievement of a means of amending our constitution are not "urgent" in the sense that the control of inflation or decisions with regard to energy prices are urgent. Nor are they "priorities" in the same sense as many other priorities the government has established for the determination of new policies or programs. But there are "priorities" of a less tangible kind that are important when human societies are buffeted by the uncertainties and the attacks on confidence that we find in the world of today. Affirmations of national will and indications of collective determination to renew and strengthen faith in structures and in values that unite people are symbolic, but they are important.

Such a symbolic affirmation occurred, I think, when the Parliament of Canada adopted our national flag. Does anyone doubt it has strengthened our sense of being "Canadian" or of being united for important purposes? A similar symbolic affirmation could occur if we were seen to attest our faith in our form of government by ending a defect that has flawed it for decades. This is not, perhaps, the kind of thing that should claim a large part of the time of parliament when other things might press. But I, as Prime Minister, make no apology for saying that it is the kind of thing that we should try to do. We should not be seen constantly to be failing as a people in a matter that relates to the central structure of our national fabric. In short, it is well worth some attention from this parliament to conclude this long outstanding piece of national business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: It is for these reasons that I have raised the possibility that Parliament might seek to have "patriation" accomplished without provincial consent if that consent seems impossible to achieve. Clearly it would be a last resort and clearly it should not be on a basis that could affect the distribution of powers or the position of the provinces. It must not provide any means by which Parliament could act unilaterally in future in any area where it cannot do so today since that would erode the essence of our federal system. In my letters I explore three ways

Parliament might move for "patriation" without such consequences. I raise these not to recommend them, but rather to explore how we might bring to an end the apparently perpetual impasse. Neither the federal government nor Parliament should accept the proposition that they can do nothing whatever about a matter of such importance to us as a country.

Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table in both official languages letters that I sent on March 31, 1976 to the premiers of all provinces, together with a "Form for a Proclamation of the Governor General" which those letters covered.

Mr. Speaker, I am also tabling another letter dated April 19, 1975. It had been written following the meeting with the premiers I mentioned earlier. I did not ask all premiers permission to table the letter that I wrote to them. However, since the premier of the province of Quebec recently raised the possibility that I table it, I undertook to do so knowing no one would likely object.

Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I would also suggest that those letters be part of the debates.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of above documents, see appendix.]

[English]

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the House the appreciation of all members on this side of the House for the courtesy in agreeing to delay the tabling of this document and the remarks preceding the tabling until this hour, since some of us had to be absent earlier in order to be present at the funeral services for the late Senator Grattan O'Leary. I am pleased, as are my colleagues, that the letters have now been tabled and will be part of the public record. Certainly I approve of the Prime Minister's suggestion that they be appended to today's Hansard; I think that will be generally helpful.

I want to make it clear at the outset that I hope there is no need for the Prime Minister to ask whether I intend to be cooperative or constructive about achieving an amending formula and, indeed, about achieving patriation of the constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I hope we can achieve both of these goals—and they are not necessarily the same goals—within the life of this parliament. I should say that in the text of a speech which I gave last Friday in my native province, in the presence of the premier of that province—and I might say in passing that it was a speech in which I felt able to keep my shirt buttoned and my tie in place—I was able to make the following statement; namely, that I want to emphasize that our party, and myself as its national leader, are committed to the principle of patriation of the Canadian constitution. Surely it is an anachronism for any country to have to turn to the legislature of another nation in order to amend its most basic statute. We can all agree on that, as we can all support any genuine effort by the government to bring the BNA Act under the sole control of Canadians and of their legislatures.

That was the position I took then, Mr. Speaker, and I stand by it.

I was a little surprised by a tone that I thought was almost apologetic on the part of the Prime Minister in his statement this afternoon. There are, of course, other very important priorities that face this country, but there is no need to suggest that patriation of the constitution and agreeing to an amending formula are any less urgent than some of the other really urgent matters that face the country. It would be time very much well spent on behalf of the country and by our various governments to achieve these objectives. Certainly I agree that symbolic and substantive successes in building the national fabric are very much what we are all here for.

I think perhaps I can be forgiven also for expressing my pleasure and that of my colleagues that the Prime Minister chose to note that the question of proceeding with patriation of the Canadian constitution in the life of this parliament was first raised by my colleague and predecessor leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). I would remind the House that he made that suggestion in the course of pointing out the failure of the government to specify that as a goal in the Speech from the Throne. We are very pleased that the Prime Minister has taken up the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —and I want to assure the government that it has the good will of the House to try to make progress on this matter, and to try to make that progress during the life of this parliament. However, I think it is fair to say that this House needs some very real indication that the Prime Minister will take to heart an earlier part of the statement of the hon. member for Halifax, which the Prime Minister did not quote, in introducing the subject as reported at page 39 of Hansard for October 2, 1974. My predecessor, my colleague from Halifax, said:

● (1610)

If co-operative federalism was at best an imperfect process, its subsequent replacement by confrontation of federalism in this field will be tragic, if continued.

That is a position to which my colleagues and I also strongly adhere. While patriating the constitution would be a constructive, symbolic act, the way that is achieved is of even more symbolic and substantial importance. Patriating the constitution in a co-operative way would be clearly beneficial to our national life. However, achieving that goal in a divisive way which only heightened suspicion across this country would be tragic and unnecessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: There is an obligation on the part of the government to take very seriously the process of consultation with the provinces on this central question. I would simply express, in passing, a very deep hope and determination on our part in this House to avoid a situation where there might be any suggestion that the provinces are being set up for a subsequent unilateral action by the setting into place of a process of consultation that was not seriously pursued by the federal government and which would not allow for the kind of agreement we must have if we are to have both the symbol of federation and the reality of having at home in Canada an amending formula and constitution with which we can work.

There are two objectives before us: the symbolic act of patriation, and the substantive task of keeping our constitution contemporary by the on-going process of amendment. This latter task in a federal system can only work by co-operation and general consensus. Therefore it is desperately important that those who would be seen as nation builders pursue the symbolic goal of patriation in a way that expands and does not narrow the climate of trust and comradeship in the confederation.

The Prime Minister noted that the control of inflation and decisions on energy pricing are also urgent. Those problems, as well as constitutional matters, will not be resolved in a spirit of confrontation. We face some very difficult matters in dealing with patriation and the substance of an amending formula. All of us in this House will be interested in the process that will be carried on now that the correspondence is tabled. We firmly hope that progress can be made toward the goal of achieving patriation and the goal of achieving an amending formula as a result of agreement. That is a process in which the government and the provinces can count upon the full support of me and of my party on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made a statement and has tabled correspondence on the patriation of the Canadian constitution. This party welcomes this statement. For a long time we have believed that a new Canadian constitution was required, not only to exercise the independence of Canada but also because the old constitution, the British North America Act, is in many ways defective and obsolete.

The Prime Minister appears to have adopted the Victoria Charter formula. I am glad to say that we agree with that and believe it is much less rigid than the Fulton-Favreau formula so far as amendment is concerned. We believe it should be acceptable. We agree also that there should be permanent guarantees of language rights, English as well as French, and that such guarantees should be entrenched in the constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the House that the patriation of the constitution and the adoption of the amending formula is only a first step. We believe a new constitution is required. I remind the House and the Prime Minister in particular that the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons reported in 1972 after and not before the Victoria Conference, and made 105 definite recommendations. I hope they will be looked at because we believe many of these recommendations are particularly valuable. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), a very learned man in this field, was the co-chairman of that committee.

I wish to mention just one or two things as illustrations of the sort of recommendations made in very practical fields. It was suggested that it should be made clear that the federal and provincial powers should be concurrent to deal with air and water pollution. We also note the recommendation that Canada's international treaty making powers should be clarified and expanded.

We also urge—and I know the Prime Minister has been very much interested in this subject over the years—that at the appropriate time the new constitution should contain entrenched provisions for the maintenance of the fundamental rights and human freedoms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Indeed we think that would be far more effective than the Bill of Rights that we have which was passed by this parliament.

In general, Mr. Speaker, we would recommend the decentralization of government powers in areas touching cultural and social policy, and greater centralization on the other hand at the national level of powers that have important economic effects throughout Canada. I have said that many of the proposals contained in the report of the joint committee are highly practical. I must say that I, and I think many others in the House, deplore the tendency, which seems to be more common, to assert that constitutions do not matter.

In fact a workable distribution of power is essential to the humanity and development of Canada. The Prime Minister's statement seems to contemplate, as I read it, three different methods of seeking patriation. We should like to study these carefully.

We believe that whatever is decided on as the right course should not be too rigid. There is serious danger if the method Canada should adopt would be one of too great rigidity. We believe that the Prime Minister's statement perhaps over-emphasizes the necessity for unanimous consent. In fact this convention, or practice as I think the Prime Minister called it, was not followed at all until about the year 1940. After all there is a difference between a constitutional law, or rule, and part of it is that a mere convention or practice certainly should not be allowed to become too rigid.

We believe with the Prime Minister that the consent of all the provinces to an amending formula in respect of any changes in the distribution of power should indeed be sought. That has been the practice, and certainly should be the practice. However, we do not think that if total unanimity is not possible parliament should be paralyzed in seeking patriation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I also received the document and the letters written to the Quebec premier as well as the proclamation.

Mr. Speaker, there is perhaps a dissenting voice this afternoon in the House because I am completely flabbergasted by the proclamation which the Prime Minister has just read. I knew that the Prime Minister was a centralist, an emperor, but I did not know that he was such a dictator.

The gesture that he has just made is beyond any precedent in our history. When he read the letter he wrote to the Quebec premier, Mr. Robert Bourassa, in which he stated his intentions of patriating the constitution, I thought that he wanted to court him but at the end of his letter, he merely said that he would act just the same even if he did not get any reply. That, Mr. Speaker, is really a very bad start. In short, the Prime Minister does not refuse to discuss the matter with Mr. Bourassa, but he reserves the right to act as he sees fit. If that is not Russian-type dictatorship, it is no dictatorship at all, Mr. Speaker.

That reminds me of the last meeting between the Prime Minister of Canada and his opposite number from Quebec, Mr. Bourassa when, from the heights of his arrogance, he treated the Quebec premier like a child in kindergarten. But I want to forget what the Prime Minister said.

To my mind, not a single Quebecer will ever forget that insult. Today, the other provinces are being pushed around. There again, the Prime Minister considers the provincial premiers a bit like so many nonentities.

The Prime Minister seems to say this: I am Prime Minister of Canada; I proclaim this or that; whether you are for or against, I could not care less. And should you even deign reply within eight days, I shall consider your silence approval of my insults.

The Prime Minister is forgetting his Canadian history, or perhaps does he want to proclaim himself above all our history to create another Canada which will be far from "strong and free"! In fact, the provinces signed the constitution, through which they gave birth to the federal institution that would take over administration.

It is the provinces which, voluntarily, one after the other, joined Confederation. The best proof the provinces freely decided is that Newfoundland, the last one to join, waited until 1948. The same provinces are still absolutely free to remain within the confederative agreement. The day some province decides to withdraw, either because it finds its rights are infringed on, or because its people are sick of being siphoned off by a never-satisfied central government, that province will have absolute right, and I repeat absolute right, to withdraw and say: "Goodby centralists!"

For that reason, I maintain it is up to the provinces an the provinces alone, to decide on the constitution issue. Today, as he regularly does, the Prime Minister changes roles by substituting his will for that of the provinces. And we Quebecers—will be in for it once more. It is somehow too bad the same sad happening befells us while we have a French Canadian heading Canada.

Such tragic events happened under other French Canadians I do not dare name. I simply stamp out any memory of them. Many ask if we are against patriating the constitution. My answer is "No", to the extent it is patriated by the proper authorities and to the benefit of the provinces. Let them ensure that every province requested it, let them ensure the constitution will come back without any amendment. We support storing that paper in Parliament.

We, especially Quebecers, demand power of veto for our provincial government. We want it to demand not only constitutional guarantees in education, that is French language and culture, but also territorial and every other guarantee. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have no wish to run the risk of going through a second Labrador.

We lost Labrador because the decision was made between Newfoundland and the government of Canada, while under the same circumstances, between other provinces, boundaries were always determined by the two governments concerned. In the case of Labrador, Quebec had no voice. This is why I say we do not wish to go through another Labrador and risk losing more territory without even being consulted.

Reading the proclamation, we see the Prime Minister is basically interested in amending the constitution not in patriation itself. That is the true reason for his unilateral action. He wants the greatest powers to amend the constitution in order to give more of them to Ottawa and less to the provinces. He proposes three methods to amend the constitution, when he knows quite well that Quebec will accept only one, that is its right of veto on anything affecting the interior of Quebec and the unanimous consent of all provinces for anything that concerns Canada.

Why then beat around the bush and try to disguise his intentions. In paragraph (A) of the proclamation, the Prime Minister is again trying to minimize the impact by leading us to believe the British North America Act is not as rigid as the requirements of Quebec. We can read this formula on page 2 of the proclamation, and I shall spare you the reading of this formula.

He talks about a formula which implies the consent of the legislative assemblies of the provinces; but he forgets to say that in practice, and since the adoption of the British North America Act, the unanimous consent of the provinces has always been required. It is a confirmed right. And the Prime Minister tells us—

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): By all the successive governments. And the Prime Minister talks about consultation with the provinces, particularly with Quebec, in a letter to Mr. Bourassa.

Have we not repeated often enough, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a right to be consulted that Quebec needs, but a right of veto on all decisions affecting the province and the unanimous consent of all provinces on the other decisions affecting Canada. It is to that condition, and to that condition only, that we will accept the formula.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think that the one aspect of the statement made by the Prime Minister that causes slight concern here has to do with the reference to possible unilateral action by the federal government. I think that the statement here today seems to carry a slightly threatening tone. I wonder if the Prime Minister would indicate to the House whether he thinks that his reference to unilateral action as a last resort is necessary as an incentive to achieve agreement from the provinces. Would he also indicate to the House what kind of conditions, in his view, would have to apply before he resorted to what he calls in his statement the last resort of unilateral action?

● (1630)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should first make it clear that when the Leader of the Opposition talks about the federal government, I understand that he understands, as I do, that we are talking about an action of the federal parliament. Everywhere throughout the documents I talk, not about the government, but about a joint resolution of both houses of parliament. If this is understood, the reason why I talk in there of the possibility of unilateral action is that I am reporting to the premiers of the provinces on a discussion we had about a year ago in which we all agreed we should attempt to do this, as the Leader of the Opposition agrees, by unanimous action.

The question can be asked, and was asked, and it is to that question that I address myself: if there is not unanimity in agreeing to patriate, are we then prevented from acting as we have not acted for the last 49 years? My answer to that is that we are not prevented legally from acting. There is a belief by many people that we would not even be prevented politically. I believe that is the position which has been taken by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin).

We do not necessarily have to have unanimity. The position of the government is that we will seek agreement to the extent it is possible between all ten provinces, but that we will have to take our decisions in the next couple of years—since the Leader of the Opposition also talks about the life of this parliament—as to whether it cannot be done without the unanimous consent of all the provinces. The advantage of the formula which I spell out in my letters is that it permits patriation—or matriation, as has been suggested by one hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —to take place through action by the federal government, but in a way which diminishes in no way the rights of the provinces, in a way which increases in no way the rights of the federal government, and which even suggests that unanimity will indeed be the rule even on amendments until some other formula is agreed to, so in this sense we believe it is possible, legally, and we hope that it is possible politically to achieve this result. That will depend on the will of the provinces, and it will depend on the actions taken by this parliament.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think I now have clearly in mind the area in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would consider unilateral action by this parliament to be appropriate in the absence of unanimity, but I should just like to make absolutely certain that I understand him clearly. Of course in a sense it is hypothetical because it has not happened, but it is important to be absolutely clear about it because the question of the possibility of unilateral action has been raised.

As I understand it, the Prime Minister has in mind that this parliament might act unilaterally only to the extent of requesting the British parliament to forgo any future right to legislate with regard to our constitution. Is this the extent to which unilateral action is contemplated in the absence of unanimity, and is this precisely what the Prime Minister has in mind with regard to patriation in the absence of any unanimous agreement at this time on an amendment formula?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member for Halifax expressed it admirably. We are not seeking unilateral action in order to increase our powers, or to decrease the powers of the provinces either now or in the future, but unilateral action only to get the British parliament to cease and desist from its present legal powers under the Statute of Westminster to legislate for Canada. That is the simplest hypothesis, and this is the first of the three courses of action which I suggest to the provinces. This is the minimum action. It would result, of course, in a non amendment formula existing in the Canadian constitution or alternatively, as I suggested in the letter, a formula which would only be possible hereafter through unanimity. In other words, the unanimity would continue to be required in order to modify in any way the constitution. I suggest that unanimity is not required in order to get that constitution back to Canada. I just confirm the understanding of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I understand the distaste of the Prime Minister for the continuing right of Westminster to amend the constitution, and I am sure he will agree with me that simply removing that right constitutes patriation in a sense but does not really take us very far, and I am sure does not go as far as he would like to go, and certainly does not go as far as I would like to see achieved.

However, I should simply like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will give this whole question sufficient priority with a view to attempting to achieve an agreement and understanding on an amended formula. I would regard this as a great personal favour to me during my life in this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I can indicate that it was with that importance in mind—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —that I indicated in my letter to the premiers the second course which I described and which indeed does include a formula for amendment, a less rigid formula for amendment. It is with that in mind that I wrote our preference and expressed our preference for that course, if indeed we can convince the provinces that it is a desirable one, and I am honoured that the hon. member for Halifax considers that my action there was taken as a favour to him.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister about how this situation is to be followed up. I read the letters he wrote to the premiers, and I do not think they explicity call for any answers, although by implication the Prime Minister seemed to be seeking the views of the premiers on the matters discussed in his correspondence. Is it proposed to seek from the premiers some definite answer, or is it proposed to call a conference of some sort to see how far unanimity can go in these matters? To put it in a simple way, where do we go from here?

Mr. Trudeau: I made this suggestion in my letter to the premiers that if they wanted further discussion, or further elucidation of the various courses we were indicating, the Secretary for the Federal-Provincial Relations in the Privy Council Office, Mr. Gordon Robertson, would gladly meet the premiers or their officials, as indeed he has been meeting them over the past year, to explain further the contents of the present letter. I also indicated that, if the premiers so desired, at the meeting of first ministers which is planned for early May when we will be meeting to discuss the price of oil and gas, perhaps on that occasion, as was done last April, we might take a short time to seek out the opinions of the various premiers. Therefore, it is possible, and hopeful, that I will be receiving written communications before that, but I think it is to be expected that at that meeting we will take some little time in order to deal with this matter.

Mr. Brewin: If the premiers do respond to these letters and correspondence they have received from the Prime Minister, will this House be informed in due course, either by tabling or by way of a statement by the Prime Minister, so that we in parliament can be aware of the momentum with which this proposal is going forward?

● (1640)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is indeed in the realm of hypothesis. If there were to be quick agreement and consent by all concerned between now and the early part of May, and if other parties saw fit to adopt such resolutions quickly, certainly we on this side would be prepared to seek time between now and the end of June. I must indicate that this is only on the unlikely hypothesis that everybody is ready, willing, able and anxious to get it done that soon. As one of the premiers suggested last year, it would have been nice had we been able to do it at the time the Queen was in Canada. That did not indicate any kind of deadline on my part. I think this is something we can do just as easily during the next session as during this session, but I am completely in the hands of both houses of parliament and, of course, of those of the premiers as to the most appropriate time.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the right hon. Prime Minister has received and read the message addressed to all members of the Canadian Parliament by the Société Saint-Jean Baptiste of the province of Quebec. In this message, we can note the following, and I would like the Prime Minister to comment on this. I therefore quote from this message:

> First, the federal government and the provinces should agree to a review of the present constitution which would recognize Canadian bi-nationalism as one of the constituting elements of the country, clearly establish the respective jurisdictions of the federal and provincial governments, clarify their power to collect taxes and spend money, and create a constitutional court with all guarantees of objectivity.
> Second, once this review has been completed, an agreement should be made not only among the ten provinces, but also between the two constituting nations of the country about a process for eventual constitutional amendments.

The last paragraph seems to come close to the idea that the Prime Minister has just expressed.

> Finally, when both these conditions have been met, the British North America Act which constitutes our present constitution can be relinquished and the new constitution can be promulgated, which will patriate our constitution.

These are the wishes expressed in this message.

If the Prime Minister has read this message, could he make some comments on this subject if this is the procedure that he wants to follow?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. I take the liberty of saying to the hon. member for Bellechasse that this is not the view of the hon. member for Roberval, who is the spokesman for the Social Credit Party. He did not mention these matters at all on behalf of his party. Unless I am mistaken, he indicated two essential and fundamental conditions: the right of veto for Quebec and no action by the federal government to amend the constitution without the unanimous consent of the provinces. Those are the only two conditions he spelled out. The hon. member for Roberval nods his head in assent. I am very pleased to let him know that if he carefully reads the formula he will see that I propose these two conditions he rightly finds essential. They are in fact in the proposals I put forward. So I hope I can count on the support of the Social Credit Party for this gesture I want to make.

[English]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question on the most worth while statement he has just made. In view of what all sides here agree to be the fundamental importance of the matter, would the Prime Minister be willing to have parliament, on behalf of the people of Canada, take a further real part in the ongoing discussion he comtemplates with regard to bringing home our constitution and an appropriate amending formula for it, by having the documents he tabled today referred to a committee of parliament for consideration and public hearing, not necessarily immediately, but perhaps after the provincial premiers have made their initial replies, assuming of course, that they do not immediately agree with the government's proposal?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have no strong objection to this course, I would want to point out to the hon. member, however, that I think we would all be mistaken if we thought this problem could be solved by a committee of this House. I believe the studies of the constitution and, indeed, the attitude of spokesmen for various parties, indicates there is strong support for the general course of action being discussed here this afternoon. The next step is to see whether the provinces agree. If they do agree, I suggest that we should then, rather than now, refer it to a committee of the House for further consultation. If they do not agree, I think it might be a mistake but I will certainly consider the suggestion of the hon. member, to create a degree of expectation in the minds of the people of Canada that a committee of this House will in any way serve to get the province to change their minds.

I think the first step is to see whether the provinces agree. If they do agree I take it we will have no difficulty.

If they do not agree, then we should perhaps ask ourselves is parliament to be required to take the course I have suggested, and which I think has been very succinctly and accurately described by the hon. member for Halifax. This would be my preference. If the House wants to spend some time on this matter for other reasons, I have no objection. It would be a matter for the House leaders to see if this has sufficient priority at this time to take up the time of a committee.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, this is a question that is particularly vital to the small provinces, and certainly to my province which was the last to come into Confederation. I should like to ask whether the Prime Minister feels that in the absence of agreement, as a last resort, the Parliament of Canada by an address of both Houses has the right to bring back unilaterally the British North America Act, which is what we are talking about, and then, following that, whether the same parliament of Canada has the right to change the BNA Act?

Mr. Trudeau: No.

Mr. McGrath: If that does not follow, my question to the Prime Minister is this: What is the point in bringing back the constitution unilaterally in the absence of an agreement on an amending formula?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, without wanting to play on words I would say that the proposition as stated by the hon. member does not follow but in a sense it precedes. What I mean is that the Parliament of Canada now has the legal right, and in fact it has exercised that right historically, to act unilaterally in amending the constitution. It has done so in circumstances where provinces in effect have objected to the federal parliament addressing the Parliament of Westminster to change the BNA Act. This has in fact been done.

What I am proposing now is that patriation be followed by a situation where the federal government would not unilaterally have this power. It would only have this power to act, however, with the unanimity of the provinces in a preferred formula, with a certain right of veto to the provinces, but not an absolute right.

The hon. member then proceeds to ask what is the point? That is something which I am afraid I cannot make a satisfactory response to in order to satisfy the member. If he is satisfied with the situation in which for 110 years the constitution of this country has only been amendable by a foreign parliament, I cannot convince him that it is a matter of pride, perhaps, to seek the national purpose which will permit us to demonstrate that in such a basic matter we can act, in deed, and will not have to wait another 100 years.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the province of Newfoundland, which came into Confederation 27 years ago as a dominion under the Statute of Westminster, carried with it certain sovereign rights which are embodied in the BNA Act; for example, offshore mineral rights, and the Labrador boundary which is still not totally acceptable to certain elements in the province of Quebec. This is a matter of some concern to my province. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister, under the proposed formula which he is now presenting to the provinces, what protection would there be of the rights of individual provinces, apart from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which would enjoy veto rights?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it depends on what particular formula is acceptable to and agreed to by the provinces. If it is the Victoria formula to which all provinces agreed, there would be a right of veto to exercise in certain circumstances by a combination of provinces. If it is the first proposition, the most simple one, the one to which I believe the former leader of the opposition referred, there would be an absolute veto by all provinces on amending the constitution. There is where it cannot be amended now.

● (1650)

I must point out to the hon. member there are many areas where the Canadian constitution, and indeed the constitution of the provinces, can now be amended in Canada. This would not change. What would change is that in those fundamental aspects of our constitution which cannot now be amended in Canada, following this action they would be amendable in Canada, however, I repeat, with the guarantees to the provinces which I just discussed.

[Translation]

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, the letter which the right hon. Prime Minister has sent to the provincial premiers mentions in its first part that the constitutional guarantees which are included in the project and defined in paragraph 38, chapter 4, were requested on the express representations of the Quebec premier. The contents of this paragraph 38 is broad enough to include an extensive definition of the French language and culture. During the discussions which the secretary of the Privy Council had with the Quebec premier, was this concept defined so as to make room for immigration and communication issues?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, naturally the immigration and communication issues were discussed by the representatives of the Quebec and federal governments. The policy written in paragraph 38 does not concern those specific subjects. It is a much broader policy pertaining to the French language and culture as well as everything concerned with the French fact in Canada.

And again, it is a policy which has been adopted after consultation with Quebec. The other issues referred to by the hon. member concerns the division of powers, and as far as this is specifically concerned, we agreed last April that we had better not deal with the subject. It was better to deal with the amendment formula. The premier of Quebec did everything he could. There also had to be constitutional guarantees with regard to the French fact, the French language and culture in Canada, but once again, the April agreement was to the effect of leaving alone the division of powers. And I think the experience of the past 50 years shows that indeed it is better to dissociate the two operations: first to bring it home with or without an amendment formula, and then deal with the question of the division of powers among ourselves, Canadians, rather than thinking that can be achieved more easily because the constitution is still in England.

The Canadian Constitution

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, this is something of a lesson for me, learning about the constitution and its problems. I am hesitant to ask the Prime Minister a question, but I will do so and possibly display my ignorance on the subject.

Assuming the patriation of the constitution and assuming continued difficulties on unanimity for an amending formula, does the Prime Minister envisage that there could be certain individual matters on which there would be unanimity for an addition to, deletion from, or amendment of some sort of the British North America Act after patriation? An obvious example is that there may well be unanimity now on an amendment to the act on the entrenchment of language rights or the Bill of Rights. Does the Prime Minister envisage that being possible? Does he envisage canvassing both houses of parliament and the provinces to make some of those amendments, one at a time, to the legislation after patriation, while we are waiting for agreement on an amending formula?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is the course which has been followed by this country for the past 110 years. We have taken subjects one by one, and in some cases unilaterally, in some cases acted with unanimity, and in other cases acted as a result of an agreement between the federal government and one or two provinces when only one or two provinces were concerned. The hon. member is really suggesting that we continue "waiting for Godot." This may indeed be what we will have to do. This has been the course in the past 109 or 110 years. It is one which I, of course, would be foolish to reject. What we are attempting to do, however, is to be able to reach agreement on the basic technique, one which will permit us to pursue the course suggested by the hon. member, but without having to make the pilgrimage to Westminster each time we reach some kind of agreement.

Mr. Speaker: For the final question, I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is more of a point of order than a question of substance. Is it clear that the material to be appended to today's Hansard includes the letters which the Prime Minister wrote to the premiers, and the draft proclamation?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the substance of the letters that I tabled. If the House so wills, I think it would be advantageous to have the whole material appended to Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take it from that response it is safe to assume the House has given its unanimous consent to the suggestion of the Prime Minister that the material be tabled and that it be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All of it.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, all documents tabled by the Prime Minister.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. on Monday.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

APPENDIX

LETTERS FROM THE PRIME MINISTER TO THE PREMIERS OF THE PROVINCES CONCERNING "PATRIATION" OF THE BNA ACT WITH ATTACHMENTS

(Same letter sent to all other Premiers)
CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa K1A 0A2
April 19, 1975

The Honourable William G. Davis, Q.C.,
Premier of Ontario,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto, Ontario.

My dear Premier:

I was very pleased indeed at the reaction of yourself and our fellow First Ministers, during our dinner on April 9, to my proposal that we should proceed at an early date to the "patriation" of the British North America Act with the amending clause agreed on at Victoria. I am encouraged to believe that, after fifty years of effort, we may finally dispose of the last remnant of our one-time colonial status that is involved in our not being able to amend our own constitution in totality.

I am enclosing herewith a copy of Part IX of the Victoria Charter. As you know, there was no objection to it in 1971 by any government. It was regarded as the best solution that could be found to the difficult problem of making changes in future to those parts of our constitution that cannot now be amended under either Section 91(1) or Section 92(1) of the B.N.A. Act.

There are three Articles in Part IX—Articles 53, 54 and 55—which reproduce the substance of Sections 91(1) and 92(1). These were included at Victoria as a part of the "tidying up" of the constitution that would have been accomplished by the Charter which, of course, covered much more than simply the amending procedure. What I am proposing now, as I made clear, is that we should not, at this time, get into any questions of substance or form at all: we should simply "patriate" with an amending clause to cover those parts of the B.N.A. Act that are not now covered. This would mean that we would not now act on Articles 53, 54 and 55 since they involve amendment of Section 91 and 92 of the B.N.A. Act. We would move simply with regard to the other Articles of Part IX. We would leave for future action under the new amending procedure whatever changes of form or of substance we or future governments may want to accomplish in the Canadian constitution.

The procedure for "patriation" was discussed at the Working Session of the Constitutional Conference on February 8-9, 1971. It is outlined in pages 399 to 402 of the Secretary's Report on "The Constitutional Review, 1968-1971". As you will see, the procedure contemplates three main steps: approval by the legislatures of the provinces and by both Houses of Parliament; legislation by the British Parliament and, finally, the issue of a Proclamation by the Governor General. The legislation by the British Parliament would provide the legal validity for the Canadian proclamation and its provisions about the procedure of amendment. It would also provide that no future British law should have application to Canada and would make consequential repeal or amendment of British statutes affecting the Canadian constitution. The issuance of the proclamation by the Governor General would coincide with the effective date of the British legislation. Once all this had been done, we would have full and complete capacity to deal with our constitution in Canada and the British Parliament would no longer continue to have the powers it still legally has to deal with the law and constitution of Canada.

I was particularly taken with the suggestion at our dinner that it might be desirable to accomplish the "patriation" of the B.N.A. Act just before the Olympic Games in 1976. The Queen will be visiting Canada for the formal opening of the Games. It would be most appropriate if she could be here for some suitable ceremony in the National Capital, attended by all the First Ministers of Canada, to complete this historic process relating to our constitution. Another alternative would be to hold the ceremonies on July 1. To meet either of the suggested times, it would mean that the resolutions of the legislatures and the Joint Address of Parliament would all have to be passed at an early point in their respective sessions in 1976. The British Parliament would then have to legislate in its 1976 session, probably by May or June if that could be accomplished. This would leave time to plan the ceremony for the proclamation and whatever other formal arrangements seem appropriate. While all this would require prompt action, the substance of what is to be approved by the legislative bodies is brief and simple. I would hope that we could meet the schedule that would make the events of 1976 and the visit of the Queen especially historic.

I have asked Gordon Robertson to communicate with your office to arrange a convenient time to call on you on my behalf to discuss all aspects of what is proposed. He plans to have Frank Carter, the Deputy Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations, accompany him with the thought that they could use the occasion of the visit also to discuss with you, your Ministers or your officials any other questions pertaining to federal-provincial relations that you think could usefully be explored with them.

I was very glad to have had the occasion on April 9-10 to join with you and the other First Ministers in the discussion of the important problems that were before the Conference. It may well be, however, that the history books of the future will regard the discussion at our dinner on April 9 as a more memorable part of our meeting.

Sincerely,

P. E. Trudeau

PART IX

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

Art. 49 Amendments to the Constitution of Canada may from time to time be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the Legislative Assemblies of at least a majority of the Provinces that includes.

(1) every Province that at any time before the issue of such proclamation had, according to any previous general census, a population of at least twenty-five per cent of the population of Canada;
(2) at least two of the Atlantic Provinces;
(3) at least two of the Western Provinces that have, according to the then latest general census, combined populations of at least fifty per cent of the population of all the Western Provinces.

Art. 50 Amendments to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, of the Provinces may from time to time be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the Legislative Assembly of each Province to which an amendment applies.

Art. 51 An amendment may be made by proclamation under Article 49 or 50 without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if within ninety days of the passage of a resolution by the House of Commons authorizing its issue the Senate has not passed such a resolution and at any time after the expiration of the ninety days the House of Commons again passes the resolution, but any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the ninety days.

Art. 52 The following rules apply to the procedures for amendment described in Articles 49 and 50:

(1) either of these procedures may be initiated by the Senate or the House of Commons or the Legislative Assembly of a Province;
(2) a resolution made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

Art. 53 The Parliament of Canada may exclusively make laws from time to time amending the Constitution of Canada, in relation to the executive Government of Canada and the Senate and House of Commons.

Art. 54 In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to the amendment from time to time of the Constitution of the Province.

Art. 55 Notwithstanding Articles 53 and 54, the following matters may be amended only in accordance with the procedure in Article 49:

(1) the office of the Queen, of the Governor General and of the Lieutenat-Governor;
(2) the requirements of the Constitution of Canada respecting yearly sessions of the Parliament of Canada and the Legislatures;
(3) the maximum period fixed by the Constitution of Canada for the duration of the House of Commons and the Legislative Assemblies;
(4) the powers of the Senate;
(5) the number of members by which a Province is entitled to be represented in the Senate, and the residence qualifications of Senators;
(6) the right of a Province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators representing the Province;
(7) the principles of proportionate representation of the Provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada; and
(8) except as provided in Article 16, the requirements of this Charter respecting the use of the English or French language.

Art. 56 The procedure prescribed in Article 49 may not be used to make an amendment when there is another provision for making such amendment in the Constitution of Canada, but that procedure may nonetheless be used to amend any provision for amending the Constitution, including this Article, or in making a general consolidation and revision of the Constitution.

Art. 57 In this Part, "Atlantic Provinces" means the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, and "Western Provinces" means the Provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The Honourable Peter Lougheed,
Premier of Alberta,
Legislative Building,
Edmonton, Alberta.

My dear Premier:

I had been hoping to be in touch with you well before this to advise you about progress in the exercise we started last April, with our discussion at 7 Rideau Gate, for "patriation" of the B.N.A. Act. Since then, all of you, with the exception of Premier Bennett, have received Mr. Gordon Robertson who has discussed the project with you on my behalf. Those discussions took place between May and mid-July of 1975. Premier Barrett was unable to arrange a meeting prior to the election in British Columbia but Mr. Robertson will be meeting Premier Bennett in early April. Discussions with Quebec have taken a good deal of time and it was not until March 5th that I had the opportunity of reviewing the question with the Premier of Quebec. I thought it essential to know his attitude before proceeding to further action.

You will recall that we started with agreement in principle on the desirability of "patriating" the B.N.A. Act and, at the same time, establishing as law the amending procedure that had been agreed to in Victoria in 1971. We also agreed that we would not, in the present "patriation" exercise, consider substantive changes to the B.N.A. Act itself since any entry on that course would, as the discussions from 1968 to 1971 had shown, make early action impossible. Mr. Bourassa indicated, however, that it would be difficult for his government to agree to this, unless the action also included "constitutional guarantees" for the French language and culture. We agreed that our general acceptance of the plan, in principle, would be subject to more precise exploration and definition, and this was the purpose of the discussions Mr. Robertson had with you on my behalf. I should first report on what developed in the course of those discussions, although the Premiers Mr. Robertson saw later will be generally aware of the way in which our original proposal grew.

It quickly became apparent in Mr. Robertson's discussions that the action for "patriation" and establishment of the amending procedure would be more meaningful for, and more acceptable to, a number of provinces if certain other alterations in our constitutional situation could be established at the same time. Most of these alterations, with the exception of Mr. Bourassa's "constitutional guarantees", were among the things that had been included in the Victoria Charter. They included the provision for consultation with the provinces about appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and the special handling of cases arising from the civil law of Quebec. They included also the provision concerning the reduction of regional disparities. Certain of the western provinces wanted to have the amending procedure itself modified so that the requirement with regard to consent from the four western provinces would be the same as that for the four eastern provinces. This would mean deletion of the population provision respecting the western provinces that was inserted at Victoria.

The main problem was the definition of the "constitutional guarantees" to which Mr. Bourassa had referred at the outset. Mr. Robertson found that the Premiers he spoke to after the initial discussions with Mr. Bourassa in May had no objection in principle to "constitutional guarantees", although all made it clear that they would want to consider them in detail once they had been worked out with Quebec and reduced to writing.

I will not go into all the difficulties that are presented by the concept of "constitutional guarantees"; they are many and complex. Discussions with Mr. Bourassa's representatives finally led to a formulation that was included in a document sent to him in November, 1975. I am enclosing a copy of the full document herewith. I would draw your attention especially to Parts IV and VI. The formulation of the principal "constitutional guarantee" is Part IV (Article 38). It is buttressed by Part VI (Article 40) and also by the provisions concerning language in Part III.

As I have mentioned, the "constitutional guarantee" was a concept raised by Mr. Bourassa and stated by him to be essential. Articles 38 and 40 attempt to cover the points made by his representatives. Mr. Bourassa knows that my colleagues and I share some concern about the Articles, and he understands that it will fall to him to explain them to his fellow Premiers, in the light of the facts relating to the position of the French language and culture in Canada.

I should emphasize that the document, while it is styled a "Draft Proclamation", was put in this form simply to show with maximum clarity what the result would be if all the proposals, as they had emerged in the course of Mr. Robertson's consultations, were found acceptable by all governments. It should not be regarded as a specific proposal or draft to which anyone is committed at this stage, since there has not been agreement to the totality of it by anyone. It is rather in the nature of a report on the various ideas, including Mr. Bourassa's "constitutional guarantee", as they developed in the course of the informal discussions from April to November, 1975.

As I stated earlier, most of the "Draft Proclamation" consists of provisions of the Victoria Charter which various Premiers have asked to have included in any action we take. In some cases there are adjustments of the Victoria provisions in order to take into account altered circumstances since 1971 and to benefit by some hind-sight. The new parts of this "report" are the Parts IV and VI to which I have already referred. For ease of reference the main elements are:

(a) A Preamble. This is entirely new and is simply an idea of the way a total presentation might look.

(b) Part I is the amending formula contained in the Victoria Charter made applicable to those parts of the Constitution not now amendable in Canada. Thus Articles 49, 50, 51, 52, 56 and 57 of Part IX of the Victoria Charter are included, while Articles 53, 54 and 55, which were designed to replace Articles 91(1) and 92(1) of the British North America Act, are not. The amending formula has not been modified to take account of the views expressed by certain Western Premiers concerning the population qualification for agreement by the Western provinces. I suggest that this might be a matter that, in the first instance, the four Western Premiers might attempt to solve among themselves.

(c) Part II, which is Part IV of the Victoria Charter concerning the Supreme Court, with a final Article (included in another Part of the Victoria Charter) to protect the status of Judges already appointed.

(d) Part III, which is a modified version of Part II of the Victoria Charter concerning language rights. It would entrench the constitutional status of the English and French languages federally. It would not affect the provinces, but it would permit a province, under Article 35, to entrench its own provision if it so wished.

(e) Part IV, which is the "guarantee" designed to protect the French Language and culture against adverse action by the Parliament and Government of Canada.

(f) Part V, which is essentially Part VII of the Victoria Charter on Regional Disparities. The presentation has been slightly altered but there is no change in substance whatever.

(g) Part VI, whcih is a new Article designed to indicate the spirit in which Governments may enter into agreements. In two of the three areas specifically mentioned, major agreements with Quebec have been concluded over the past two years (family allowances and consultation on immigration).

Mr. Bourassa advised me in our conversation on March 5th that the things he considers to be necessary might well go beyond what we, in the federal government, have understood to be involved in the present exercise. In part they might relate to the distribution of powers. I advised him that the Government of Canada, for its part, feels that it can go no further as part of this exercise than the constitutional guarantees that are embodied in the document and that indeed even they might find difficulty of acceptance in their present form. To go further would involve entry upon the distribution of powers, with the consequences to which I have referred. We must, then, consider three alternatives that are open to us in these circumstances.

Let us begin with the simplest alternative. The Government of Canada remains firmly of the view that we should as a minimum, achieve patriation" of the B.N.A. Act. It is not prepared to contemplate the continuation of the anomalous situation in which the British Parliament retains the power to legislate with respect to essential parts of the constitution of Canada. Such "patriation" could be achieved by means of an Address of the two Houses of the Canadian Parliament to the Queen, requesting appropriate legislation by the British Parliament to end its capacity to legislate in any way with respect to Canada. Whereas unanimity of the federal government and the provinces would be desirable even for so limited a measure, we are satisfied that such action by the Parliament of Canada does not require the consent of the provinces and would be entirely proper since it would not affect in any way the distribution of powers. In other words, the termination of the British capacity to legislate for Canada would not in any way alter the position as between Parliament and the provincial legislatures whether in respect of jurisdictions flowing from Sections 91 and 92 or otherwise.

However, simple "patriation" would not equip us with an amending procedure for those parts of our constitution that do not come under either Section 91(1) or Section 92(1) of the B.N.A. Act. To meet this deficiency, one could provide in the Address to the Queen that amendment of those parts of the constitution not now amendable in Canada could be made on unanimous consent of Parliament and the legislature until a permanent formula is found and established. In theory this approach would introduce a rigidity which does not now exist, since at present it is the federal Parliament alone which goes to Westminster, and the degree of consultation of or consent by the provinces is a matter only of convention about which there can be differences of view. In practice, of course, the federal government has in the past sought the unanimous consent of the provinces before seeking amendments that have affected the distribution of powers.

A second and perhaps preferable alternative would be to include in the action a provision that could lead to the establishment of a permanent and more flexible amending procedure. That could be done by detailing such a procedure in our Joint Address and having it included in the British legislation as an enabling provision that would come into effect when and only when it had received the formal approval of the legislatures of all the provinces. The obvious amending procedure to set forth would be the one agreed to at Victoria in application to those parts of our constitution not now amendable in Canada. (Part I of the attached "Draft Proclamation"). This could be with of without modification respecting the four western provinces. (On this last point, the federal government would be quite prepared to accept the proposed modification and it is my understanding that the other provinces would equally agree if the western provinces can arrive at agreement.)

If we took the above step, we would achieve forthwith half of our objective of last April—"patriation"—and we would establish a process by which the other half—the amending procedure—would become effective as and when the provincial legislatures individually signify their agreement. Over a period of time, which I hope would not be long, we would establish the total capacity to amend our constitution under what is clearly the best and most acceptable procedure that has been worked out in nearly fifty years of effort, since the original federal-provincial conference on this subject in 1927. Until full agreement and implementation had been achieved, any constitutional changes that might be needed, and which did not come under Section 91(1) or Section 92(1) or which could not otherwise be effected in Canada could be made subject to unanimous consent. This would impose an interim rigidity for such very rare requirements for amendment, but, as I have said, the practice has, in any event, been to secure unanimous consent before making amendments that have affected the distribution of powers.

A third and more extensive possibility still, would be to include, in the "patriation" action, the entirety of the "Draft Proclamation" I am enclosing. In other words the British Parliament, in terminating its capacity to legislate for Canada, could provide that all of the substance of Parts I to VI would come into effect in Canada and would have full legal force when, and only when, the entirety of those Parts had been approved by the legislatures of all the provinces. At that point, we would have, not only "patriation" and the amending procedure, but also the other provisions that have developed out of the discussions thus far. Here again, of course, until all the Provinces had approved the entire Draft Proclamation, any constitutional change which did not come under Section 91(1) or Section 92(1) would be subject to unanimous consent.

As you can see, there are several possibilities as to the course of action now to take. So far as the federal government is concerned, our much preferred course would be to act in unison with all the provinces. "Patriation" is such a historic milestone that it would be ideal if all Premiers would associate themselves with it.

But if unanimity does not appear possible, the federal government will have to decide whether it will recommend to Parliament that a Joint Address be passed seeking "patriation" of the B.N.A. Act. A question for decision then will be what to add to that action. We are inclined to think that it should, at the minimum, be the amending procedure agreed to at Victoria by all the provinces, with or without modification respecting the western provinces, and subject to the condition about coming into force only when approved by the legislatures of all the provinces as explained above.

The implications of the different possibilities are complex, and you will undoubtedly want to consider them with care. To facilitate consideration, Mr. Robertson would be glad to come to see you, at a convenient time, for such discussions as you might wish to have. When opportunity offers at an early meeting, we might also discuss the matter together.

I would welcome your comments. Mr. Robertson will be in touch with your office to see if you would wish to have a meeting with him and, if so, what time would suit.

Prior to my meeting with Mr. Bourassa, I did not feel that I was in a position to place any documents before Parliament, but I now feel it proper to do so. I would like to table copies of this letter, as well as of the "Draft Proclamation" that is enclosed. If you have any objection, could you please advise me forthwith. If I do not hear to the contrary, I shall plan to table on April 9th. Should you wish to do the same in your legislature, I would of course, have no objection.

Sincerely,

P. E. TRUDEAU

CONFIDENTIAL

The Honourable W. R. Bennett,
Premier of British Columbia,
Parliament Buildings,
Victoria, British Columbia.

My dear Premier:

I very much enjoyed meeting you during my recent visit to British Columbia and having the opportunity of raising with you, among other things, the matter of the "patriation" of the British North America Act. You will recall that I mentioned that I had discussed such an exercice with the Premiers of the other provinces at 7 Rideau Gate last April. At my request, all the Premiers with the exception of Mr. Barrett held preliminary discussions with Mr. Gordon Robertson, the Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations, acting on my behalf. Further discussions with Quebec took a good deal of time and it was not until March 5th that I had the opportunity of reviewing the question with the Premier of Quebec. I thought it essential to know his attitude before proceeding to further action.

We started with agreement in principle on the desirability of "patriating" the B.N.A. Act and, at the same time, establishing as law the amending procedure that had been agreed to in Victoria in 1971. We also agreed that we would not, in the present "patriation" exercise, consider substantive changes to the B.N.A. Act itself since any entry on that course would, as the discussions from 1968 to 1971 had shown, make early action impossible. Mr. Bourassa indicated, however, that it would be difficult for his government to agree to this unless the action also included "constitutional guarantees" for the French language and culture. We agreed that our general acceptance of the plan, in principle, would be subject to more precise exploration and definition, and this was the purpose of the discussions Mr. Robertson had with the other Premiers on my behalf. I should like to inform you of what developed in the course of those discussions.

It quickly became apparent in Mr. Robertson's discussions that the action for "patriation" and establishment of the amending procedure would be more meaningful for, and more acceptable to, a number of provinces if certain other alterations in our constitutional situation could be established at the same time. Most of these alterations, with the exception of Mr. Bourassa's "constitutional guarantees", were among the things that had been included in the Victoria Charter. They included the provision for consultation with the provinces about appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada and the special handling of cases arising from the civil law of Quebec. They included also the provision concerning the reduction of regional disparities. Certain of the western provinces wanted to have the amending procedure itself modified so that the requirement with regard to consent from the four western provinces would be the same as that for the four eastern provinces. This would mean deletion of the population provision respecting the western provinces that was inserted at Victoria.

The main problem was the definition of the "constitutional guarantees" to which Mr. Bourassa had referred at the outset. Mr. Robertson found that the Premiers he spoke to after the initial discussions with Mr. Bourassa in May had no objection in principle to "constitutional guarantees", although all made it clear that they would want to consider them in detail once they had been worked out with Quebec and reduced to writing.

I will not go into all the difficulties that are presented by the concept of "constitutional guarantee"; they are many and complex. Discussions with Mr. Bourassa's representatives finally led to a formulation that was included in a document sent to him in November, 1975. I am enclosing a copy of the full document herewith. I would draw your attention especially to Parts IV and VI. The formulation of the principal "constitutional guarantee" is Part IV (Article 38). It is buttressed by Part VI (Article 40) and also by the provisions concerning language in Part III.

Mr. Bourassa knows that my colleagues and I share some concern about the fellow Premiers in the light of the facts relating to the position of the French language and culture in Canada.

I should emphasize that the document, while it is styled a "Draft Proclamation", was put in this form simply to show with maximum clarity what the result would be if all the proposals, as they had emerged in the course of Mr. Robertson's consultations, were found acceptable by all governments. The amending formula has not been modified to take account of the views expressed by certain Western Premiers concerning the population qualification for agreement by the Western provinces. I suggest that this might be a matter that, in the first instance, you and your three Western colleagues might attempt to solve amongst yourselves.

(c) Part II, which is Part IV of the Victoria Charter concerning the Supreme Court, with a final Article (included in another Part of the Victoria Charter) to protect the status of Judges already appointed.

(d) Part III, which is a modified version of Part II of the Victoria Charter concerning language rights. It would entrench the constitutional status of the English and French languages federally. It would not affect the provinces, but it would permit a province, under Article 35, to entrench its own provision if it so wished.

(e) Part IV, which is the "guarantee" designed to protect the French language and culture against adverse action by the Parliament and Government of Canada.

(f) Part V, which is essentially Part VII of the Victoria Charter on Regional Disparities. The presentation has been slightly altered but there is no change in substance whatever.

The Honourable Robert Bourassa
Premier of Quebec
Parliament Buildings
Quebec City, Quebec

My dear Premier,

As I told you on March 5th, I did not want to speak to the other Premiers about our discussions on the subject of "patriation" of the British North America Act before getting a clearer idea of your feelings. I have sent them a letter today of which you will find attached a copy in English and French.

All of the letters are identical, except for the one I sent to Mr. Bennett in which I took account of the fact that he had not attended our meeting in April 1975 and that Mr. Robertson has not yet had the opportunity of meeting with him. I trust you will find that the letters represent the facts accurately. Please let me know if you have any objection to my placing the attached letter to the Premiers and the draft proclamation before Parliament on April 9th. It is understood that I would have no objection to you doing the same thing in Quebec.

Sincerely,

(signed) P. E. Trudeau

DRAFT

CONFIDENTIAL

November 10th, 1975.

Form for a Proclamation of the Governor General

WHEREAS it is fitting that it should be possible to amend the Constitution of Canada in all respects by action of the appropriate instrumentalities of government in Canada acting separately or in concert as may best suit the matter in question;

AND WHEREAS it is desirable to make more specific provision respecting the constitutional status of the English and French languages in Canada and to ensure that changes in the Constitution, interpretation of its provisions or action by the Parliament or Government of Canada should not endanger the continuation and full development of the French language and the culture based thereon;

AND WHEREAS it is desirable that the Parliament and Government of Canada and the Legislatures and Governments of the Provinces act effectively to promote equality of opportunity and an acceptable level of public services among the different regions of Canada;

THEREFORE it is desirable to establish among other things:

(a) A method for the amendment in Canada of those parts of the Constitution of general interest and concern that cannot now be amended in Canada in which the consent will be required of the Legislatures of Provinces respresentative of both the official language groups of Canada as well as of the Legislatures of Provinces in all of the geographical regions of Canada;

(b) means by which Provinces can participate in the selection of persons to be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(c) principles to guide the Parliament of Canada in the exercise of powers allotted to it under the Constitution of Canada and to guide the Government of Canada in the exercise of powers conferred upon it by the Constitution of Canada and by laws enacted by the Parliament of Canada;

NOW THEREFORE We.....do proclaim as follows:

Part I

Amendments to the Constitution

Art. 1 Amendments to the Constitution of Canada may from time to time be made by Proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the Legislative Assemblies of at least a majority of the Provinces that includes:

(1) every Province that at any time before the issue of such Proclamation had, according to any previous general census, a population of at least twenty-five per cent of the population of Canada;

(2) at least two of the Atlantic Provinces;

(3) at least two of the Western Provinces that have, according to the then latest general census, combined populations of at least fifty per cent of the population of all the Western Provinces.

Art. 2 Amendments to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, of the Provinces may from time to time be made by Proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the Legislative Assembly of each Province to which an amendment applies.

Art. 3 An amendment may be made by Proclamation under Articles 1 or 2 without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the Proclamation if within ninety days of the passage of a resolution by the House of Commons authorizing its issue the Senate has not passed such a resolution and at any time after the expiration of the ninety days the House of Commons again passes the resolution, but any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the ninety days.

Art. 4 The following rules apply to the procedures for amendment described in Articles 1 and 2:

(1) either of these procedures may be initiated by the Senate or the House of Commons or the Legislative Assembly of a Province;

(2) a resolution made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a Proclamation authorized by it.

Art. 5 The procedures prescribed in Articles 1 and 2 may not be used to make an amendment when there is another provision for making such amendment in the Constitution of Canada, but the procedure in Article 1 may nonetheless be used to amend any provision for amending the Constitution, including this Article, or in making a general consolidation and revision of the Constitution.

Art. 6 In this Part "Atlantic Provinces" means the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, and "Western Provinces" means the Provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Art. 7 The enactments set out in the Schedule shall continue as law in Canada and as such shall, together with this Proclamation and any Proclamation subsequently issued under this Part, collectively be known as the Constitution of Canada, and amendments thereto shall henceforth be made only according to the authority contained therein.

Part II

Supreme Court of Canada

Art. 8 There shall be a general court of appeal for Canada to be known as the Supreme Court of Canada.

Art. 9 The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada, and eight other judges, who shall, subject to this Part, be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal of Canada.

Art. 10 Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the Bar of any Province, has, for a total period of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a barrister or advocate at the Bar of any Province.

Art. 11 At least three of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the Bar of the Province of Quebec, have, for a total period of at least ten years, been judges of any court of that Province or of a court established by the Parliament of Canada or barristers or advocates at that Bar.

Art. 12 Where a vacancy arises in the Supreme Court of Canada and the Attorney General of Canada is considering a person for appointment to fill the vacancy, he shall inform the Attorney General of the appropriate Province.

Art. 13 When an appointment is one falling within Article II or the Attorney General of Canada has determined that the appointment shall be made from among persons who have been admitted to the Bar of a specific Province, he shall make all reasonable efforts to reach agreement with the Attorney General of the appropriate Province, before a person is appointed to the Court.

Art. 14 No person shall be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada unless the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorney General of the appropriate Province agree to the appointment, or such person has been recommended for appointment to the Court by a nominating council described in Article 16, or has been selected by the Attorney General of Canada under Article 16.

Art. 15 Where after the lapse of ninety days from the day a vacancy arises in the Supreme Court of Canada, the Attorney General of Canada and the Attorney General of a Province have not reached agreement on a person to be appointed to fill the vacancy, the Attorney General of Canada may inform the Attorney General of the appropriate Province in writing that he proposes to convene a nominating council to recommend an appointment.

Art. 16 Within thirty days of the day when the Attorney General of Canada has written the Attorney General of the Province that he proposes to convene a nominating council, the Attorney General of the Province may inform the Attorney General of Canada in writing that he selects either of the following types of nominating councils:

(1) a nominating council consisting of the following members: the Attorney General of Canada or his nominee and the Attorneys General of the Provinces or their nominees;

(2) a nominating council consisting of the following members: the Attorney General of Canada or his nominee, the Attorney General of the appropriate Province or his nominee and a Chairman to be selected by the two Attorneys General, and if within six months from the expiration of the thirty days they cannot agree on a Chairman, then the Chief Justice of the appropriate Province, or if he is unable to act, the next senior Judge of his court, shall name a Chairman; and if the Attorney General of the Province fails to make a selection within the thirty days above referred to, the Attorney General of Canada may select the person to be appointed.

Art. 17 When a nominating council has been created, the Attorney General of Canada shall submit the names of not less than three qualified persons to it about whom he has sought the agreement of the Attorney General of the appropriate Province to the appointment, and the nominating council shall recommend therefrom a person for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada; a majority of the members of a council constitutes a quorum, and a recommendation of a majority of the members at a meeting constitutes a recommendation of the council.

Art. 18 For the purpose of Articles 12 to 17 "appropriate Province" means, in the case of a person being considered for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada in compliance with Article 11, the Province of Quebec, and in the case of any other person being so considered, the Province to the Bar of which such a person was admitted, and if a person was admitted to the Bar of more than one Province, the Province with the Bar of which the person has, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, the closest connection.

Art. 19 Articles 12 to 18 do not apply to the appointment of the Chief Justice of Canada when such appointment is made from among the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Art. 20 The judges of the Supreme Court of Canada hold office during good behaviour until attaining the age of seventy years, but are removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

Art. 21 The Supreme Court of Canada has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals on any constitutional question from any judgment of any court in Canada and from any decision on any constitutional question by any such court in determining any question referred to it, but except as regards appeals from the highest court of final resort in a Province, the Supreme Court of Canada may prescribe such exceptions and conditions to the exercise of such jurisdiction as may be authorized by the Parliament of Canada.

Art. 22 Subject to this Part, the Supreme Court of Canada shall have such further appellate jurisdiction as the Parliament of Canada may prescribe.

Art. 23 The Parliament of Canada may make laws conferring original jurisdiction on the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of such matters in relation of the laws of Canada as may be prescribed by the Parliament of Canada, and authorizing the reference of questions of law or fact to the court and requiring the court to hear and determine the questions.

Art. 24 Subject to this Part, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in all cases is final and conclusive.

Art. 25 Where a case before the Supreme Court of Canada involves questions of law relating to the civil law of the Province of Quebec, and involves no other question of law, it shall be heard by a panel of five judges, or with the consent of the parties, four judges, at least three of whom have the qualifications described in Article 11, and if for any reason three judges of the court who have such qualifications are not available, the court may name such ad hoc judges as may be necessary to hear the case from among the judges who have such qualifications serving on a superior court of record established by the law of Canada or of a superior court of appeal of the Province of Quebec.

Art. 26 Nothing in this Part shall be construed as restricting the power existing at the commencement of this Proclamation of a Provincial Legislature to provide for or limit appeals pursuant to its power to legislate in relation to the administration of justice in the Province.

Art. 27 The salaries, allowances and pension of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

Art. 28 Subject to this Part, the Parliament of Canada may make laws to provide for the organization and maintenance of the Supreme Court of Canada, including the establishment of a quorum for particular purposes.

Art. 29 The court existing on the day of the coming into force of this Proclamation under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada shall continue as the Supreme Court of Canada, and the judges thereof shall continue in office as though appointed under this Part except that they shall hold office during good behaviour until attaining the age of seventy-five years, and until otherwise provided pursuant to the provisions of this Part, all laws pertaining to the court in force on that day shall continue, subject to the provisions of this Proclamation.

Part III

Language Rights

Art. 30 English and French are the official languages of Canada, but no provision in this Part shall derogate from any right, privilege, or obligation existing under any other provision of the Constitution.

Art. 31 A person has the right to use English and French in the debates of the Parliament of Canada.

Art. 32 The statutes and the records and journals of the Parliament of Canada shall be printed and published in English and French; and both versions of such statutes are authoritative.

Art. 33 A person has the right to use English and French in giving evidence before, or in any pleading or process in the Supreme Court of Canada and any courts established by the Parliament of Canada, and to require that all documents and judgments issuing from such courts be in English or French.

Art. 34 An individual has the right to the use of the official language of his choice in communications between him and the head or central office of every department and agency of the Government of Canada.

Art. 35 A provincial Legislative Assembly may, by resolution, declare that provisions similar to those of any part of Articles 32, 33 and 34 shall apply to the Legislative Assembly, and to any of the provincial courts and offices of the provincial departments and agencies according to the terms of the resolution, and thereafter such parts apply to the Legislative Assembly, courts and offices specified according to the terms of the resolution; and any right conferred under this Article may be abrogated or diminished only in accordance with the procedure prescribed in Article 2.

Art. 36 A person has the right to the use of the official language of his choice in communications between him and every principal office of the departments and agencies of the Government of Canada that are located in an area where a substantial proportion of the population has the official language of his choice as its mother tongue, but the Parliament of Canada may define the limits of such areas and what constitutes a substantial proportion of the population for the purposes of this Article.

Art. 37 In addition to the rights provided by this Part, the Parliament of Canada may, within its legislative jurisdiction, provide for more extensive use of English and French.

Part IV

Protection of the French Language and Culture

Art. 38 The Parliament of Canada, in the exercise of powers allotted to it under the Constitution of Canada, and the Government of Canada, in the exercise of powers conferred upon it by the Constitution of Canada and by laws enacted by the Parliament of Canada, shall ge guided by, among other considerations for the welfare and advantage of the people of Canada, the knowledge that a fundamental purpose underlying the federation of Canada is to ensure the preservation and the full development of the French language and the culture based on it and neither the Parliament nor the Government of Canada, in the exercise of their respective powers, shall act in a manner that will adversely affect the preservation and development of the French language and the culture based on it.

Part V

Regional Disparities

Art. 39 Without altering the distribution of powers and without compelling the Parliament of Canada or the Legislatures of the Provinces to exercise their legislative powers, the Parliament of Canada and the Legislatures of the Provinces, together with the Government of Canada and the Governments of the Provinces, are committed to:

(a) the promotion of equality of opportunity and well-being for all individuals in Canada;

(b) the assurance, as nearly as possible, that essential public services of reasonable quality are available to all individuals in Canada; and

(c) the promotion of economic development to reduce disparities in the social and economic opportunities for all individuals in Canada wherever they may live.

Part VI

Federal-Provincial Agreements

Art. 40 (1) In order to ensure a greater harmony of action by governments, and especially in order to reduce the possibility of action that could adversely affect the preservation and development in Canada of the French language and the culture based on it, the Government of Canada and the Governments of the Provinces or of any one or more of the Provinces may, within the limits of the powers otherwise accorded to each of them respectively by law, enter into agreements with one another concerning the manner of exercise of such powers, particularly in the fields of immigration, communications and social policy.

(2) Nothing in this Article shall be held to limit or restrict any authority conferred either before or after the coming into force of this Proclamation upon the Government of Canada or the Government of a Province to enter into agreements within the limits of the powers otherwise accorded to it by law.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO AWARDING OF LEASE TO SKY SHOPS OF DORVAL AND MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of increasing evidence of improper interference with normal tendering procedures relating to leases and concessions, which cannot be fully explored within the narrow confines of a police investigation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the government appoint forthwith an independent judicial inquiry into the awarding of the lease extension for Sky Shops and the operations of its duty free concessions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO REDUCE INTEREST RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Considering that the Pepin Board has not seen fit to control interest rates, particularly debit and credit rates, considering that the gap now exceeds 4 per cent, which is the largest in recent years, and considering also that current interest rates are really very high, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to take every necessary step to bring back interest rates at the level they were when the economic development was quite satisfactory, that is a normal rate of 6 per cent, and to avoid that in future Canadians be forced to contract loans at current interest rates which is one of the first causes of inflation.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion.

Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR PROVISION FOR DEDUCTIBILITY OF PROPERTY TAXES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that municipal property and school taxes keep increasing and have become a burden which is likely to discourage access to property, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne):

That this House request the Minister of Finance to consider an amendment to the Income Tax Act providing for the deductibility of property taxes and that this be taken in account in the preparation of the next budget.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion may not be put.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MINISTER'S VIEW OF POSSIBILITY OF GENERAL STRIKE—EFFORTS TO PERSUADE LABOUR TO AWARD CONFRONTATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour, of which I have given notice. On Saturday Mr. Dennis McDermott, director of United Auto Workers, reversed the position he took in January and said that a general strike is a distinct possibility. However, he went on to warn against any rash action. In view of the fact that an illegal national strike might prove to be not only rash but in the long run work against labour's legitimate aspirations, can the minister tell the House, first, whether he or his officials now believe a national strike is a real possibility and, second, what steps if any the minister has taken to persuade the CLC to avoid this kind of confrontation, not just with the government but with the Canadian public?

● (1410)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to answer the last part of the hon. member's question first, what we are doing is having ongoing discussions with labour bilaterally and with the national organization itself as well as with the Canadian public generally and the rank and file generally. As to whether I should conjecture with regard to a general strike being a possibility, I do not believe that would be particularly helpful at this time. I am convinced that the majority of the rank and file of the labour movement in this country are still satisfied it is in their best interests to support the anti-inflation program on the basis that run-away inflation has never been helpful to the rank and file in this country.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that approximately 175,000 federal public servants are affiliated with the CLC can the minister advise whether these public servants are prepared to support a general strike and if so what steps the government is prepared to take to prevent an illegal walkout or to prosecute those who take part in an illegal walkout?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe a significant element in the labour leadership in this country believe in obeying the law and I trust they will keep to that position.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO MEET LABOUR OFFICIALS TO TRY TO PREVENT GENERAL STRIKE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the primary concern of both labour and all members of parliament ought to be the public interest, would the minister support the establishment of an all party committee of members of parliament to meet with officials of the CLC in order to try to avoid the threatened general strike and to negotiate a basis for labour's return to the Canada Labour Relations Council and the Economic Council of Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, any technique would be helpful, but I wonder whether escalating the matter at this stage is a good thing in view of the fact that Mr. McDermott himself said it would be a rash action at this time.

[Mr. Fraser.]

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO HAVE LABOUR REPRESENTATIVES RETURN TO ECONOMIC AND LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCILS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that it is important something be done in respect of bringing back the tripartite agency, would the minister indicate what he is doing to clarify this or is he just sitting there in the hope that there will be a pleasant outcome?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think labour was fully aware there were significant gains to be made under the tripartite relationship, and if at the present time they do not wish to participate in this way, the opportunity is there for them to participate with management to carry on some of the programs and I believe that aspect is being explored.

HALL REPORT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON REACTION OF PARTIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the Hall report, which is in keeping with the questions we are asking, the minister on Wednesday, April 7, 1976 in response to a question put by the hon. member for Vancouver South indicated that he would be able to comment with more exactitude tomorrow on the length of time it would take to determine whether the conclusions of Mr. Justice E. Hall were acceptable. Now that the union committees have met has the minister received any indications from either side concerning the decision either side will take with regard to the report?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say that both sides are examining it very closely. There has been no rejection of this as yet. I might add that I asked Mr. Justice Hall, which is within my power under the code, to clarify one or two aspects which could lend themselves to an ambiguous interpretation. He is doing this now and I will be able to respond more specifically to the hon. member in a couple of days after I receive that clarification.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, apparently Mr. Justice Hall indicated that the unions had agreed to live within the spirit of the anti-inflation guidelines. Is this one of the matters of confusion which has been placed before Mr. Justice Hall, because apparently the union in question does not go along with that conclusion? Did the minister bring this to the attention of Mr. Justice Hall?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not one of the areas within the specific interpretation of some of the recommendations. If Mr. Justice Hall says that, my inclination would be to accept it because as we all know he has a high degree of credibility and accuracy in dealing with these matters.

ENERGY

NUCLEAR REACTORS—ALLEGED LICENSING NEGOTIATIONS WITH ITALY AND RUMANIA AND FOR SECOND UNITS IN ARGENTINA AND SOUTH KOREA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Globe and Mail of March 30 reports Mr. G. T. Leaist, manager of nuclear power marketing at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited as having said:

> We're in licensing negotiations with Italy and Rumania . . .
> There's the prospect of second units in Argentina and South Korea.

I ask the minister to confirm, first, if negotiations for licensing arrangements are under way with Italy and Rumania, and, if so, with which companies or government agencies are these negotiations being conducted; second, if negotiations for the sale of a second nuclear reactor to both Argentina and South Korea are under way?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with agencies and parties in Italy and Rumania. I do not have details as to what agencies these are, but will be pleased to provide the hon. member with that information. As to the second question, is AECL negotiating the sale of a second reactor to Argentina or Korea, I am unaware of such negotiations but am aware that both countries have expressed from time to time an interest in acquiring a second nuclear reactor.

NUCLEAR REACTORS—SAFEGUARDS UNDER LICENSING AGREEMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister fully realizes what activities are being carried on by AECL without his knowledge. May I direct a supplementary question either to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs? Recognizing the difficulty of imposing adequate safeguards in cases where Canada makes a direct sale of a nuclear reactor, I ask how the government proposes to meet the much more complicated difficulty of imposing safeguards in cases where we licence a firm in another country to produce the CANDU reactor? What types of safeguards will the government impose in cases where licensing arrangements are entered into between AECL and a foreign country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, our safeguards fully comprehend that eventuality.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister says that our safeguards fully comprehend that eventuality. How does the minister propose to cover the contingency alluded to? Since the companies or agencies in foreign countries which will produce CANDU reactors under licensing arrangements with AECL will be under the sovereign jurisdiction of another government, will the agreement be with the company and with the sovereign government of the country in which the manufacturer manufacturing under licence is located? I am sure the minister can give the House some information rather than telling us that safeguards are adequate, because safeguards for licensing have never been announced nor, so far as I know, even formulated.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I said our safeguards fully comprehend that eventuality. In other words, they provide for that kind of situation arising.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON NEW INTEREST RATES

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Considering that the Pepin board has not seen fit to control interest rates, particularly debit and credit rates, considering that the gap now exceeds 4 per cent, which is the highest in recent years, considering also that current interest rates are really very high, could the minister provide the House with more information on that?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we indicated in the past that in a free money market, it was impossible to control interest rates in Canada. Rather we emphasized controlling profits of institutions such as banks and credit unions whose profits originate from loans, rather than controlling the level of interest of loan interests.

AUTHORITY OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD TO REGULATE CREDIT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary.

Since banks are allowed to generate credit 10 or 12 times higher than their customers' deposits, could the minister tell the House whether or not the Pepin board is authorized to rule over credit in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have published guidelines for banks and other financial institutions which indicate the method of controlling their profits.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF ROLE OF MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS IN GRANTING CONCESSIONS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He will recall that last week he was going to be seeking a briefing from the RCMP. Has he now received that briefing and, as a result of it, can he assure the House that none of his ministers had any knowledge whatsoever of the activities of their personal ministerial staffs with regard to securing the extension of the Sky Shops lease, in direct contradiction with stated departmental policy in the Ministry of Transport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave that assurance last week about ministerial knowledge or lack of knowledge. I am seeing the Royal Canadian Mounted Police this afternoon to ask them to tell me what they feel they can tell me about any involvement of ministers. I gave the assurance last week that I knew there was none because the police would have told me earlier if there had been. However, I am having this meeting to reassure the opposition since they thought it was important for me to see the police. I would appreciate from the hon. member or other members opposite what else they would like me to ask the police about any other minister or any other member of this House. I use this occasion to ask about questions hon. members would like me to put.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DIRECTIVES CONCERNING PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES BY PERSONAL STAFFS OF MINISTERS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I was not necessarily asking about ministers, but about their personal staffs. Perhaps the Prime Minister could take that subject up with the RCMP when he sees them. However, that gives rise to my supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has ever issued any directives to his ministers with regard to the conduct while in office and performing official duties of their personal staffs? If he has given such directives, is he prepared to table them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have given conflict of interest guidelines regarding personal staff. They were, I believe, made public in the House a couple of years ago. All these directives have been carried out in the sense that those members of staff who have knowledge of confidential or secret matters and who are in a position to advise on policy follow the conflict of interest guidelines and set up blind trusts or frozen trusts and so on, just as other members of the civil service. These guidelines have been issued. In so far as more general guidelines apply, the ones that Mr. Pearson issued in 1964 apply to ministerial staff.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether he accepts the proposition that as a cardinal tenet of responsible government, ministers must ultimately answer for the conduct of their personal staff appointees who are not subject to any other form of accountability?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is, as the hon. member puts it, a cardinal principle. I think it has to be applied in the usual common sense way that a minister must be responsible for those he hires and keeps on his staff. However, this does not make him responsible in the same sense as a member of the staff involved in any wrongdoing. If in the course of any wrongdoing, it is discovered that it is a member of the staff, that member would either be chastised or fired, depending on the gravity of the offence.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ROLE OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE IN CONNECTION WITH GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Again, a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the now public admission in the matter of the extension of the Sky Shops lease that the then minister of DREE was allowed input into the question as Quebec leader, although this lease was not within his departmental jurisdiction, could the Prime Minister now tell the House whether the policy and practice of the government is that all contracts for the Province of Quebec, whatever their departmental origin, are currently vetted through the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as head of the Quebec Troika?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not sure what the hon. member is implying when he says there was input by the minister responsible for DREE. I think it has been quite clear from the minister that he was not involved in any way with the Sky Shops matter and therefore I think the hon. member, if he made that allegation, should be prepared to withdraw it or substantiate it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I made no allegation with respect to the involvement of the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I asked a simple question—whether with respect to the extension of the Sky Shops lease, the minister for DREE, as he then was, was allowed input into the matter and whether in terms of contracts of this nature or, indeed, of any nature in the Province of Quebec, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in his capacity as head of what I call the Quebec troika makes a similar input today.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not that simple. I shall be subject to correction, of course, on reading the blues, but I thought the hon. member said it is now generally recognized that the minister did have input. This is something different again, and I am telling him, if it is now recognized I want to know by whom and on what he bases that recognition; and if he does not have any basis he should withdraw it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I put a very simple question to the Prime Minister. Did the then minister for DREE make such input? I think the answer would either be yes, or no.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member still has not withdrawn and I shall wait for him to do so.

SPORTS

REASON FOR WITHHOLDING AID TO OLYMPIAD FOR PHYSICALLY DISABLED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare; it is one of which I have given him notice. Can he inform the House as to the reasons for withholding promised federal aid for the physically disabled Olympiad scheduled to be held in Etobicoke this summer, thereby jeopardizing the dreams and hopes of some 2,000 kids in wheelchairs from around the world?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the explanation is quite simple: there is no reason whatsoever to jeopardize the hopes of all those taking part in the physically disabled Olympiad, except for the South African team. The government's policy has been very clearly established for many years regarding the apartheid policy in South Africa, and the government's position has been to withhold its financial aid to sporting events involving South Africa, because of its apartheid policy. I personally wrote to the president of the Olympiad asking him to assure me that South Africa will not be represented, and if such is the case, there will be no problem. Funds will be made available for the Olympiad, and I am sure it will be very successful.

[English]

REASON FOR ALLEGED DOUBLE STANDARD IN DEALING WITH SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): A supplementary to the Prime Minister. With the minister's answer in mind and bearing in mind, also, the fact that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce maintains at least two trade offices in South Africa, which makes it quite clear that the government of Canada does, indeed, recognize that state, at least as a trading partner, would the Prime Minister explain the obvious double standard the government is once again following, especially as South Africa has taken all necessary steps to eliminate any racial discrimination which might have existed in the past?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He means in sports.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid the hon. member is not well informed about the policy of South Africa.

Mr. Jelinek: A final supplementary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Might I remind him that in past years the Canadian government did, in fact, fund Canadian teams for the purpose of competing against teams from South Africa. In view of this situation, can the minister explain the reason for the inconsistent attitude adopted by his department?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would appreciate the hon. member giving me a particular instance and I will investigate it. The only answer I can give the House is that if it has ever occurred it was against the policy of the government and was without my knowledge. As far as instances brought to my knowledge are concerned, the officials have followed the guidelines established by the government. The federal government is not subsidizing sports events in which South Africa participates.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CONTRACT WITH COMPUTING DEVICES FOR SAMSON PROJECT—DATE FOR DELIVERY OF TERMINALS—POSSIBLE RECONSIDERATION OF CONTRACT

Mr. Pau Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. On March 25, as reported at page 12136 of Hansard, I inquired whether or not the Samson program office associated with his department had at any time indicated to Computing Devices that they did not need the terminals until September 1976, to which the minister replied on April 8 in a handwritten letter "No". I should like to inquire of the Minister of Supply and Services whether or not he knew that on Friday, January 30, 1976 a meeting took place between Computing Devices and officials of his department at which the officials of his department indicated that they had a minimum requirement of 45 units of which they did not need delivery until September 1976 and that they could have been supplied. In view of that, would he now reconsider the contract with Computing Devices?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, I think the answer I gave the hon. member was no; the details might have differed somewhat, but the substance of the answer is no.

With respect to the latter part of the question, namely whether I shall revise my decision to cancel our contract with Computer Devices Ltd., my answer is also no. I do not intend to revise my decision since it was based, as I indicated to the House, on the fact that the delivery was to be delayed. Second, while we had called for tenders and agreed on a firm price, the company wanted to revise its price and increase it substantially. Third, the project submitted included major deficiencies; therefore the client department, the Department of National Defence, did not accept the product.

[English]

TERMINALS FOR SAMSON PROJECT—POSSIBLE CONTRACT WITH UNITED STATES COMPANY RATHER THAN CANADIAN

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Supply and Services whether or not he has made alternate arrangements for getting the material requested and whether this has been done through the Teletype Corporation of the United States. If so, does that not breach the very objectives of the program which wanted Canadian manufactured goods?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, indeed we are going to deal with the company which filed the second lowest tender; it is an American company, but I do not believe that Canadians necessarily expect us to deal with Canadian companies, at any cost and under any circumstances. We must act intelligently and first try to get the product we need.

[English]

Mr. Dick: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the opening paragraph of the form says that the primary objective of this procurement is to obtain maximum benefit to the Canadian economy consistent with the objectives of the program, and in view of the fact that purchase of equipment from a U.S. firm would not be of any benefit to the Canadian economy, can the minister tell me whether delivery will be made by this secondary manufacturer, or could he not get an alternative from a Canadian producer just as quickly?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there is no other fully Canadian supplier like the first one. It is indicated that we prefer to buy Canadian. It is fairly obvious that we would like to do so, but not at any cost. It is not to be expected that we will conclude agreements which will go against the interest of the customer department, that is getting the desired product of good quality.

As for the delivery date, I could not say when that will be but I will gladly look into it for the hon. member.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISION SERVICE FOR TESLIN, YUKON TERRITORY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Can the minister indicate when she hopes to clear up the controversy concerning CBC television service to the community of Teslin in the Yukon Territory?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that the controversy, if that is the way the hon. member chooses to put it, is over. An agreement has been reached between Telesat and the Yukon Territory on the question of a broadcasting station in Teslin. The problem has been solved to the satisfaction of all parties concerned, and this will allow the community to have six low-cost broadcasting stations of good quality and which allows for respect of the integrity of the system.

HIRING OF TEMPORARY EMPLOYEES THROUGH PRIVATE AGENCIES—POSSIBLE INCLUSION IN AUSTERITY PROGRAM

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. On April 1 I raised a question to the President of the Treasury Board concerning the government's policy of hiring temporary secretarial and clerical help through private employment agencies which take a percentage of the worker's pay. There seems to have been some confusion in the answer given by the minister in that he referred not to temporary employees hired through private employment agencies but to casuals. Specifically referring to temporary employees hired through private employment agencies, were these persons included in the government's austerity program which was to have limited growth in the civil service to 1.5 per cent this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I answered the other day that, under the guidelines, government casual employees must be included in the moneys already allocated to every department for the number of man-years that they are allowed. As fas as I am concerned, I will look whether there is a distinction between the words "casual" and "temporary", but I have not seen any as yet in Molière's French.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INTENTIONS OF GOVERNMENT CONCERNING COMMUNICATIONS PROBLEM BETWEEN MONTMAGNY AND ISLE-AUX-GRUES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Can the minister tell the House whether, since the Ottawa-Quebec agreements were signed, the Quebec Minister of Transport presented a special project for study which would cover the problem of Montmagny-Isle-aux-Grues communications and access roads to the Montmagny wharf?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know that proposals have been filed with my officials for discussion, but I am not in a position to give the hon. member specific details on those proposals. They are numerous and have been the subject of discussions for months, even before the agreement was signed last week. I could perhaps in a private interview give the hon. member additional information after I have looked into the matter.

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF ALUMINUM PLANT ON SOUTH SHORE OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the minister advise the House whether or not a survey is being conducted by his department's officials and representatives of the Quebec government in view of setting up an aluminum plant on the south shore?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. So far as I know, this project which has been mentioned in the media has not, up to now, been discussed by my department.

SUGGESTION THAT FLOODING OF SOURIS RIVER BE INCLUDED IN TERMS OF REFERENCE OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION'S CONSIDERATION OF GARRISON DAM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the extensive flooding of the Souris River on both sides of the border in recent days and the recommendation of the governor of the state of North Dakota regarding the terms of reference of the IJC investigation into the Garrison dam project, would the hon. gentleman when he meets with the U.S. ambassador tomorrow to discuss the Garrison dam project recommend to the ambassador the extension of the terms of reference to include flooding of the Souris River?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member was not here on Friday when I made a correction to Hansard to the effect that I was not meeting with the United States ambassador tomorrow but had met with him. I intend to meet with my American counterpart in the coming weeks, but I do not know exactly when. As fas as the Garrison diversion is concerned, this is in the hands of the IJC. I could very well look at the suggestion being made, but I know at this moment the problem is quite under control.

SOURIS RIVER AREA—POSSIBLE DECLARATION AS DISASTER AREA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any request from the government of Manitoba.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—KNOWLEDGE OF MR. JAMIESON OF ROLE OF MR. CHATWOOD IN CONNECTION WITH SKY SHOPS LEASE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answers by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to questions about correspondence of the staff of the Department of Transport as recorded in Hansard at page 12609, will he now inform the House whether he is aware of those actions, as related to Sky Shops, taken by Mr. Andrew Chatwood, and will he report to the House on his findings?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said on Thursday. I indicated then I had been advised and made aware informally of the existence of this correspondence, but I have not seen it, nor do I know anything more about it than I mentioned at that time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think it is probably incumbent upon the minister to apprise himself of the circumstances relating to his personal staff. Since the minister has informed us that he knew nothing of Mr. Chatwood's activities in this matter, can he inform the House whether he was even aware that a prolonged squabble had been going on for sometime regarding this particular lease extension and, if he was, what was his position vis-à-vis a non-tendered lease renewal for Sky Shops Export Limited?

Mr. Jamieson: In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I was aware of it. In any event, I question very much whether it would be appropriate for me at this point in time to go beyond the comment I made on Thursday. In terms of the substance of the question, so there will be no doubt that I am seeking to answer, at least to the limit the Chair would permit, I am not aware of any such squabble.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR RATIFICATION OF UNITED NATIONS CHARTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from a question I asked the hon. lady two or three weeks ago about arrangements for ratifying the United Nations Charter on Human rights. Have these procedures now been put in place with the provinces, or must we wait longer for the breakthrough to occur which we were promised on December 11?

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer ready on my mind. I have not heard that we have formally ratified the international instruments mentioned by the hon. member, but I hope as he does that it will be done at any moment; I shall inquire at my department.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY BANKS REDUCING NUMBER OF SMALL BUSINESS LOANS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Noting that tighter credit conditions are being felt by business as a result of higher interest rates and the Bank of Canada's efforts to control monetary expansion, will the minister undertake to ascertain whether the chartered banks are reducing lending activity under the Small Businesses Loans Act as a method of rationing funds to borrowers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact it is always the little guy, whether an individual or a small businessman, who is hit the hardest by more stringent credit conditions, and who is unable to protect himself by such actions as borrowing abroad, will the minister tell the House whether the Governor of the Bank of Canada is prepared to use moral suasion in order to ensure that banks do not cut off small business?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to discuss that with the governor.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EFFECT OF PROPOSED GUARANTEE OF SUPPLY TO MILK PROCESSING PLANTS ON DECISION ON CROCUS FOODS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion on our favourite subject, Crocus Foods. In view of the Manitoba government's recent decision not to go ahead with Crocus Foods, can the minister indicate whether the special provision that his department placed before the Manitoba government, namely, that the government should guarantee that the present milk processing plants would continue to receive the same milk supply at their present levels, was a condition the Manitoba government could not meet?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member whether the conditions contained in the offer led the government to decide against going ahead with the project. I would be rather inclined to think instead that the overall situation influenced its decision. I could not say that it was one specific reason or another. Of course, there is the general state of the market; there are surpluses at the present time; perhaps there are other reasons the hon. member is probably aware of as well as I am, if not more so, which forced the government into the decision it took.

[English]

ALLEGED ABANDONMENT OF CROCUS FOODS' PLANT—POSSIBILITY OF NEW APPLICATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in view of the decision by the Manitoba government, has the DREE offer to Crocus Foods now lapsed, and if a new project were to be undertaken by the Manitoba government would an entirely new application have to be made to the department?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, there are legal technicalities involved, and I think that I shall refrain from making any comments. Obviously, first we must wait for people directly informed or involved, that is to say the Manitoba Dairy Producers' Marketing Agency, who are supposed to communicate officially their decision to me. The information we have had to this date is that which was given by the Manitoba agriculture minister himself when he replied to a question in the legislative assembly of Manitoba about ten days ago. For my part, I have not received from the minister involved official confirmation that the project as such had been abandoned other than the information that he gave himself to the press and the legislative assembly. I must therefore wait to see what will happen next.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and in his absence, I would like to address it to his parliamentary secretary.

First, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend taking particular measures to protest against the arrest of two eminent professors of the United Nations University in Argentina, Dr. Emilio di Ipola and his wife, which arrest violated the International Bill of Rights and greatly disturbed French universities in Canada, especially in Quebec, where the two eminent professors have taught?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my colleague that the Department of External Affairs was informed of this matter by Canadians last Friday and that a note expressing our concern about an act apparently committed by terrorists against these people has been sent to the chargé d'affaires for Argentina in Ottawa.

HEALTH

PRODUCTION OF SWINE 'FLU VACCINE IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, since Canada had representation at the meeting of influenza experts, convened by the World Health Organization in Geneva last Thursday, concerning swine flu, and in view of the fact the experts at the meeting indicated that vaccine would be available in some countries only in small quantities and in some countries not at all, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicate whether as a result he may be reconsidering his decision not to produce very much vaccine in Canada, and at least on moral grounds will he reverse that decision to produce in order to increase the world supply of this product?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have almost become desperate

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF MEASURES OTHER THAN VACCINATION TO CONTROL SWINE 'FLU

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the same meeting declared that vaccination alone would not prevent the spread of this disease, and that other measures must be considered, would the minister indicate whether Canada has prepared any contingency plan for adopting existing health services in the potentially exceptional situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have a priority at the moment, and it is to make sure that enough vaccines are available to meet the needs of all Canadians in the months ahead. If other steps are required, they will be announced in due time.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY ON MOVEMENTS OF LIVE CATTLE AND BEEF—PROPOSAL TO EQUALIZE FREIGHT RATES ON LIVE CATTLE AND BEEF

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The latest annual report of the Canadian Transportation Commission states that the CTC carried out a study at the request of the Ministry of Transport task force, namely, and I quote: "the regional development implications of the freight rate structure for movements of live cattle as against movements of beef". I should like to ask the minister if he is prepared now to table this study so that we may all see what is in that particular CTC study, and if he could outline very briefly to the House some of the general recommendations that came out of the study.

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I will certainly look favourably upon the first request, and I think that at that point it would be better if the member took a look at the study rather than if I outlined it.

Mr. Murta: It was over a year ago, on January 28, 1975, that the minister said in the House of Commons that the freight rate equalization program would have the effect of reducing freight rates for dressed beef vis-à-vis live beef and that the government will in due course be putting forward the specific proposals they have for bringing about equity with regard to these matters. In view of the fact that there appears to be a study now tabled by the CTC, can the minister inform the House when he envisages introducing specific proposals to end this anomaly?

Mr. Lang: A number of measures are required, and one in particular would be required which calls for legislation. As was indicated in the House before, it is our hope to put that legislation before the House in the near future.

REQUEST FOR TARIFF PROTECTION FOR LOCAL PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Each year, just when the local crops are ready for the market, the same kind of products manage to come across the border at prices below the cost of local production. These local farmers are almost facing extinction. Would the minister not concentrate on this problem long enough to work with the Department of Finance to raise the tariffs during the harvest season long enough to protect the local farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these tariffs are generally agreed upon with the Canadian Horticultural Council which has always been the adviser to the government on the situation, in addition to what the members of parliament tell us. We have acted in the past when it was feasible to put on tariffs when the product is in production in Canada.

Mr. Friesen: I recognize the fact that the minister negotiates with the Canadian Horticultural Council but that has to do with levels, not the timing.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. He has received a letter from Royal City Foods Ltd., dated March 10, in which they say that products are coming in from the United States at prices reported to be lower than actual cost in the United States. They say that if protective action is not taken against distress selling of foreign products into our domestic markets, our industry will not survive. Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): The other day when I said I would be meeting with Air Canada officials I thought it would take place this morning. It will take place this afternoon. After I have had those meetings I will be in a better position to respond to the hon. member, perhaps tomorrow.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Under the present legislation maintenance costs as decreed by courts as a result of a family break up are tax deductible. However, if the court decreed a $100 maintenance cost and the husband pays $150, the $100 is tax deductible but the $50 is not. Would the minister agree that the government should be encouraged to support estranged families, even beyond court decrees rather than—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Paproski: Ask the minister in caucus.

Mr. Anderson: Would the minister agree that the government should encourage support for estranged families even beyond court decrees rather than penalizing them, and can the House expect a favourable response and attitude by the minister?

Since the first announcement of his intention many of these calves have become heifers capable of being bred. So far cattlemen know where the bull is—it is contained at this time. Since it will soon be time to turn the cattle loose on the pasture and turn the bull loose with them, would the minister do his part at this time and produce?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Having regard for statistical information which indicates that in the area of the tourist industry which has traditionally enjoyed a trade balance in our favour, we are now experiencing a trade deficit of about $700 million annually, can the minister inform the House whether his department is aware of this fact and if any programs, promotional or incentive, are being planned which would alleviate or reverse this situation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, quite a number. I undertook to make them available to the committee studying my estimates in detail. I will be glad to send them to the hon. member. They also involve encouraging Canadians to see more of their country because that helps the deficit, as well as encouraging more visitors to come here. EFFECT ON INTEREST RATES OF LARGE BORROWING BY GOVERNMENT—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF TOTAL BORROWINGS TO END OF 1978

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the government is considering borrowing $300 million from our chartered banks for the purchase of the Orion and the fact that there are other reports of further government intentions to borrow from the commercial lending sector, can the minister tell the House what effect such government borrowings will have on interest rates and the effect such sizeable borrowings from commercial banks will have on the credit available to the private sector?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): We anticipate no difficulties in that regard.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Does he have an estimate of the total borrowings that the government will be requesting of the commercial banks to the end of 1978, and can the Minister of Finance explain why an organization with a $42 billion cash flow has to even consider borrowing from the commercial sector?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to me that the government of Canada, like any other organization, should take the best means possible to finance its continuing operation and go for a variety of forms of credit.

It is a complicated question in that it concerns Mr. Eddie Haymour, the Canadian of Lebanese extraction who held a number of members of the staff of the Canadian embassy in Beirut hostage about six weeks ago. 1. Was HMCS Bonaventure sold and, if so (a) on what date, (b) to whom, (c) at what cost?

2. What are the names of (a) agents, (b) brokers, (c) lawyers who acted for the persons involved?

3. Was a contract to tow the Bonaventure to its ultimate destination let and, if so (a) to whom, (b) on what date, (c) in what amount?

4. (a) What was the route taken in delivering the Bonaventure to the purchaser, (b) what were the ports of call along such route?

5. (a) What is the name of the dockyard where the Bonaventure was broken up, (b) on what date did it arrive at the dockyard, (c) on what date was the scrapping completed?

6. (a) What was the date of the final refit of the Bonaventure, (b) what was the cost, (c) at what location was it refitted?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes; (a) August 17, 1970; (b) N.W. Kennedy Limited, Vancouver; (c) $851,700.

2. (a) Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and N.W. Kennedy Limited; (b) none; (c) none.

3. A condition of sale was that the preparation for departure and provision of any necessity required to move the vessel is the responsibility of the purchaser or his authorized agent.

4. (a) and (b) The purchaser was responsible for accepting delivery of the vessel at the HMCS Dockyard, Halifax.

5. (a) Kaohsiung Port; (b) March 15, 1971; (c) January 31, 1972.

6. (a) Work commenced on the 25 April 1966 and was completed 1 September 1967; (b) $10,290,090; (c) Davie Shipbuilding Ltd., Lauzon, P.Q.

HMCS "BONAVENTURE"

Question No. 4,952—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What is a description of the work done on the aircraft carrier HMCS Bonaventure in its final refit?

2. Was new equipment installed and, if so (a) what is a description of such equipment, (b) what are the names and addresses of the suppliers?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The description of the work done on the aircraft carrier HMCS Bonaventure was as described in the contract and in accordance with the specifications, drawings, material lists and documents pertaining to: (a) The maintenance and repair of the vessel, (b) The improvement of vessel systems, and (c) as amended during the life of the job. Generally it included: the repair, refit and maintenance of the vessel's hull, its machinery and equipment; changes to such systems and services as ventilation, heating, de-icing wiring, fuel and ballasting; updating the operational and fighting equipment; improvements in electronic equipment, e.g., the replacement of the existing medium range air warning radar, installation of a closed control and modulating radar set; replacement of outdated navigation and communication equipment; the standard of habitability was updated by re-arrangement of accommodations and improvements in domestic systems, laundry and sanitary facilities; improvements also included the re-arrangement of the Action Information Office; updating NBCD arrangements and modifications to existing air-conditioning, lighting and aircraft landing systems.

2. Yes. (a) As described in the Contract and in accordance with the specifications, drawings, material lists and documents referred to in 1. (a), (b) and (c) above. (b) The department does not have the manpower required to carry out the lengthy research necessary to determine the names and addresses of suppliers. In this regard it should be noted that more than ten years have elapsed since the commencement of the project and that equipment and material was provided by a number of sources, i.e., by the contractor, Davie Shipbuilding, through direct purchases (sub-contracts); and by the Government from Supply Depot stocks or through DSS purchases on behalf of DND.

PRIVATE RAILWAY CARS

Question No. 5,007—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What is the cost of maintaining the two train cars at the Ottawa Station for the use of the Governor General and the Prime Minister?

2. Do any other persons have use of the cars?

3. Are there any full-time employees whose exclusive duty it is to look after the two cars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1975, $56,850; April 1, 1975 to February 28, 1976, $56,100.

2. The two car set assigned to the Governor General can be used only by the Governor General or visiting royalty. The car designated for use by the Prime Minister can be used by other Cabinet Ministers, on request by External Affairs for visiting foreign delegations and for business purposes by the Canadian Transport Commission.

3. No. Stewards are assigned as required to any of the four rail cars under Transport Canada jurisdiction.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed, from Friday, April 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have not been here in recent days to follow the debate, but I have read Hansard most carefully. There are only two or three matters with which I should like to deal, because generally speaking the entire field has been canvassed and considered in part. That leads me to mention that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has done a particularly effective job in connection with this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has a fine record at the bar. Moreover, it is appropriate today for me to point out that this is his sixtieth birthday, so he has a long time to go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a matter as important as the variety of questions dealt with in this bill, it surprises me that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) are not present. However, that is not too surprising because it is just further evidence of the degree with which the members of this government treat the House of Commons with a contempt which I have not known in the years I have been here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), I should like to indicate that the Minister of Justice has been present for most of the debates in the House, and he certainly was here much more often than the hon. member who is now speaking. Such innuendoes are highly improper because, as most members know, both these ministers have participated fully in this particular debate.

[English]

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman indicated that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is not here today, but he spoke at some length in the House on this matter on Thursday. He has given this legislation great attention and has attended often in the House. Today he is attending to commitments, on behalf of the government, in Scarborough, Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Only parliamentary secretaries could possibly give such an absurd reason as that just given under the guise of a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This bill is either important, or it is not. The absence of the ministers would indicate that while they applied closure to force the end of the discussion, they really do not regard the opposition as capable of making suggestions which would make this legislation workable. Here we are, after 17 months of the present session of parliament, in the disgraceful situation of having this session continue since September 4, 1974. In other words, the government is trying to bring about legislation by exhaustion. Why does the government not bring in a Speech from the Throne and begin a new session?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: They are afraid.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not for me to ascribe lack of courage. It is simply a fact that the government does not know what to bring in, and therefore wants to delay starting a new session as long as possible.

This bill in its present form represents, to me, another step in misleading parliament as to the intentions of the government and in tightening the noose around the throat of freedom. The government brings in closure after interested parties have been denied the opportunity to present their views. The Canadian Wildlife Federation clearly set out its views in the representations it made in March. It said the following, which is particularly interesting:

● (1510)

Despite the fact that one of its main features would impose a licensing requirement on some two million Canadians, there has been no meaningful consultation with interested groups, and the over-all approach the government intended was a matter of mystery until the bill was tabled.

The CWF offered to explain its position. It offered to help in the collection of relevant information, but its offer was not even accepted. This is an organization which represents 200,000 Canadians. These people are sportsmen who believe in conservation and the preservation of our wildlife. They also believe in fairness and in justice under the law. It is of interest that this is the day of the week that was set aside, I believe in 1947, as Wildlife Week to honour, in particular, the memory of Jack Miner, that great conservationist who wrote the name of Canada all over the world by his contribution to the preservation of animal life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why is this session being continued? Is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) trying to establish a record to compete with the despicable record of the long parliament in the reign of Charles I? Is it because this government hates parliament? I underline that. I have sat here under several prime ministers who, while we disagreed on the facts in respect of many matters of legislation, agreed—until the present administration—that parliament is supreme.

I laughed when I read of the visitation in Cuba when the Prime Minister cuddled up to Castro. Having regard to the way in which parliament is being treated and controlled, I can only say that the Prime Minister of Canada would certainly be able to give some lessons to Castro, provided that gentleman ever set up a democratic government. We go on and on. Why is there the delay? It is simply because the government does not know what it is doing and does not have the legislation ready.

That brings me to the matter of the control of parliament. Today we had evidence of the endeavour to intimidate members of parliament. When members of the opposition ask a question which implies anything to which the government objects, the Prime Minister—as he did today—rises and says, "State a charge". The Prime Minister adds words to this effect, "Does the hon. member believe in what he has said, for unless he can establish it, his seat is in jeopardy." In other words, if one says anything critical of this government, then that is wrongdoing and in that case the member must resign.

Mr. Speaker, that is the greatest nonsense I have ever heard. It has no basis in the Parliament of Canada or in the Parliament of Great Britain, the mother of parliaments. It is merely an endeavour to intimidate by threat. If I say anything in the nature of a threat, I would be glad to be number one to come under the bat of the Prime Minister. Going on from there, the Prime Minister says that if anyone makes a statement in the nature of a charge, he must prove it. All I have to say about that is that naturally the matter would be submitted to a committee of the House with a majority of Liberal members. I would like to know what the result would be. I do not want to predict. Even with the integrity, knowledge and wisdom of Liberal members, I doubt whether they would vote exculpation, regardless of the evidence.
