The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that the doors are securely closed. The Inspector will then ascertain by examining due cards if all are entitled to remain, and report to the President.

The President then gives three raps of the gavel and the members will rise. He will then say: "Brothers and sisters, I now declare this meeting open, and remind you of the pledge you have taken, not to reveal to any employer or other person not a member, any of the business transacted at our meetings."

The President then gives one rap of the gavel and the members will be seated, and the regular business will proceed.

CLOSING CEREMONY

The President will give three raps of the gavel, and the members will rise in their places and he will say: "I now declare this meeting closed." Should any emergency arise calling for a special meeting, all members will be duly notified.

CEREMONY OF INITIATION

When the fourth order of business has been reached the President will privately direct the Guide to ascertain if there are candidates awaiting initiation. The Guide will, while the regular order of business is being transacted, proceed to the ante-room, and if he finds candidates in waiting, obtain their names and occupation. He will then return to the meeting, go to the President and announce to him that there are candidates to be initiated. When the fifth order of business has been reached the President will direct the Guide to announce the names and occupations of those who are waiting initiation, and if they are endorsed by the Recording Secretary as having been regularly proposed and elected, the President will instruct the Guide to proceed to the ante-room and prepare the candidate for initiation.

The Guide then goes to the ante-room and proceeds by asking the following questions:

Guide—Are you now or have you ever been a member of any union connected with the bookbinding trade?

Candidate—Yes, or no.

Guide—Are you willing to bind yourself with a pledge of honor to secrecy, obedience and mutual assistance that will not interfere with any religious convictions you may entertain or with your duty to your country?

Candidate—I am.

Guide—Do you fully and unqualifiedly approve of the preamble of this Brotherhood and will you assist brothers in distress and remain true to the obligations you will take on being admitted to membership?

Candidate—I will.

When the Guide announces to the Sergeant-at-Arms that he is ready to present the candidate that officer attracts the attention of the President and says:

Mr. President, the Guide announces that he is ready to present a candidate for initiation.

The President will then give three raps of the gavel and the members will rise in their places while the pledge is administered.

The Guide will now place the candidate in the center of the room facing the President and the candidate raising his right hand will repeat after the Guide the following pledge:

PLEDGE

I do truly promise—on my honor—that I will never reveal—to any employer—or other persons—any of the business—of this Brotherhood. That I will strictly obey all laws—and lawful summonses—that may come to me.

That I will—to the best of my ability—defend the interests—of all true members—of this Brotherhood—and assist all—who are unfortunate—or in distress.

And I do further promise—that I will consider—the pledge I have taken—binding upon me forever.

The Guide then presents the candidate to the President, who says: "Brother, in the name of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders we welcome you as a member of Local Union No. 173. As such, your duty is at all times to be honest and fair in all your deliberations, adopt the principle of justice and equity in dealing with your employers, and at all times do your utmost to better the condition of our craft through education, and so create and maintain respect and good will between the employer and employe in all controversies."

The President then gives one rap of the gavel and the members will resume their seats; then the Guide will conduct the new member to the Financial Secretary.

PREAMBLE

Experience having proved that the efforts of individuals without organization are generally ineffectual to maintain an adequate rate of compensation for labor, and experience also having shown that associated effort, when founded on justice and guided by reason, is of great benefit to workingmen, both as individuals and as a class. And in order to concentrate our efforts for the attainment of our rights, we deem it necessary that an organization of our craft be formed, which we believe will have a tendency to elevate our condition to the same level as skilled mechanics of other trades, and create and harmonize a friendly spirit between employer and employee. And we believe the adoption of a uniform scale of wages, regulating the apprenticeship system, the abolition of the unjust and inhuman contract system, are matters which require readjustment, so that every bookbinder may have an equal chance to receive the just fruits of their honest toil.
