CHAPTER IX.

Although Judge Camden was very proud of the offer he had received for Violet's hand, he might not have insisted upon its acceptance so strongly had he not been determined to thwart her marriage to Cecil Grant.

The Judge had a secret spite against Cecil's mother that induced him in rejecting the young man's suit for Violet.

Mrs. Grant was a handsome widow, the descendant of a very aristocratic race, but impoverished by the war between the States, and struggling under a load of debt and worry. The ancestral estates were almost hopelessly mortgaged, and her only son, Cecil, a newly fledged lawyer, was barely able to keep up the interest and maintain his mother in simple style from his earnings and the small revenue from the stock and lands.

Sudge Camden was a self made man, very rich, and with the arrogant pride peculiar to that class of people.
He fell in love with his neighbor, the poor, proud, but charming widow, and offered her his hand.

His proposal was politely, gently, but firmly rejected, and the old judge never forgave her for the slight.

He continued to cherish a secret anger against the lady, and his recent mood included her son, then a young colleague.

When Cecil came home and opened his modest law office in the village, he secretly did everything he could against the progress of the struggling young attorney, and delighted in all his misfortunes.

Now that Cecil had become a suitor for Violet's hand, the old judge saw in it an opportunity to wreck vengeance on the son's heart for all the pain his mother had inflicted on his, and he was not slow to avail himself of the occasion.

No pity for the young hearts thus cruelly severed moved him from his stern resolve to force Violet, by fair or foul means, into a speedy marriage with Harold Castello.

When Mrs. Grant learned of the old judge's refusal to sanction Cecil's engagement to Violet, she was very indignant, and desired her son to break off the affair at once.

"I cannot bear to have my son called a fortune-hunter," she cried, proudly, for some gossip had made her acquainted with the old judge's insinuations.

Cecil flushed deeply as he answered:
"No one can call me so, mother, for Violet is as poor as I am."

"Yes, but it is expected that she and her cousin Amber will divide their grandfather's fortune between them at his death."

"That is, if they marry to please him, of course; otherwise he will disinherit them. So sweet Violet's fate is already sealed, for she has promised to be my bride as soon as I am a little better off."

"Oh, my son, how can you dream of taking my Violet away from her luxurious home at Golden Willows to live in such an old rickety castle as this?" demanded Mrs. Grant, in sarcastic dismay.

"We love each other, mother dear, and Violet vows that she will not mind my poverty," he replied, gently.

"She is a child, and does not know anything about the stern realities of poverty and want. You had much better break off the engagement and leave Violet free for her rich sister, or when too late. And, to be frank, Cecil—I am not mercenary, but I have always hoped you would marry money, so as to pay off the mortgage and save your ancestral estates."

"You should have thought of that yourself, mother, when you refused Judge Camden's hand, her son replied, determinedly.

She flushed with surprise and exclaimed:
"You are guessing wildly, my dear Cecil."

"No, mother I am not. Do you think I do not understand that old man's persecution of me? It is only an ignoble spite against the woman who would not marry him."

"I believe you are right, dear," she acknowledged, sadly; "I know that a marriage with him would have given us both many advantages we do not now possess. Are you angry because I rejected him?"

"No, mother; no! How could that hard, pompous old man have taken my noble father's place in your heart?
Not for the world would I have had your sacrifice yourself thus. But do not let your dislike of him prejudice you against my gentle Violet."

Mrs. Grant gave him a fond, motherly smile, as she answered, kindly:
"Violet is a charming girl. I have loved her from childhood, but I cannot encourage your desire to marry her against her grandfather's consent. He is so vindictive that nothing but trouble and sorrow could come of defiance to his will."

She believed what she said, and had her son's best interest at heart in thus advising him, but he turned away, sighing because he had received no encouragement.

All the opposing fates seemed to be leagued against him and Violet.

It was cruel, for they loved so truly that Heaven must have made them for each other—he so dark, and strong, and handsome, Violet so fair, and slight, and lovely.

It was very foolish that an old man's malice over had come between such fond and loving hearts.

Cecil wandered wretchedly along the river bank, thinking of his darling, and planning all sorts of things for overthrowing the barriers that held them apart. He would have proposed an elopement, but he hesitated on account of his poverty. He would rather have waited until his prospects brightened so that he could give his fair bride something of the luxury to which she was accustomed at Golden Willows.

Here at Bonnycastle, his own home, the stately rooms were all out of repair, the fine oaken furniture was old and gloomy; the carpets worn and dingy; while outside the stone towers, in which his old English ancestor had gloried, were overgrown with ivy, in which only screeched dimly by night and nesting birds sang by day.

It was little better than a picturesque ruin, although people said that it had been the finest place in the county, and would be again, if the owner could only afford to repair it and restore the ruined lawns and gardens with their rank growth to order and beauty again.

That was a dream that poor Cecil had dreamed from boyhood, but it seemed farther away from realization than ever now, as he thought of Violet and the fate her grandfather menaced her with—the marriage to an unknown wealthy suitor.

Everything looked very dark and hopeless, but he could not entertain, for one moment, his mother's advice to give up Violet.

"She cannot dream how truly I love my darling, or she would know that the loss of her would wreck my life," he thought. "Since I first met Violet the whole world has grown brighter and more joyful. I have seemed to live more fully, to rest more sweetly.
I can never put her out of my heart, nor relinquish the hope of one day calling her mine," and he recalled some sweet, tender lines, somewhere read, that seemed to image his own feelings:

"Forget thee, dear!
God knows how in the silence of the night, Forgetful how tired I am, I think of thee till, like a scolding Sleep, drooping on my lid, puts thought to flight.

"Forget thee, dear!
God knows I have no longer any choice.
Love's seal is set upon me, nor can I With plied beating heart, again deny The mastery and magic of thy voice.

"Forget thee, dear!
God knows I would not if I could;
For sweeter far has been to me the pain
Of life unqualified than an all the vain And ill spent years I lived before we met.

"Forget thee, dear?
God knows if I were lying dead to day, To ashes turned in a forgotten grave, And to my dust he mercifully gave The power to speak one word, thy name I'd say."

The sound of light wheels startled him from his sorrowful reverie, and looking quickly up, he saw that he had wandered from the river-path to the open road, and in a natty little phaeton rolling along the smooth gravel sat Amber Laurence, superbly attired, and handing the ribbons with consummate skill.

Cecil tried to retreat to the shade of some trees by the road, but he was too late. The beauty had seen him, and she chirped to her little gray pony to stop.

Then she called, airily:
"If you hide from me, Mr Grant, you will miss the message I have for you from Violet."

These words brought him quickly to the side of the phaeton, where he bowed to her, stiffly, for it was their first meeting since the night he had saved Violet from the river, and his heart was hot with resentment over her treachery.

"You have a message for me from Violet?" he cried, eagerly. "Please tell it to me quickly, for my heart is almost broken with suspense over my poor, ill treated, suffering girl."

CHAPTER X.

She could have slain him for the tenderness of his words and tone, but she only smiled blandly.

"You received my note, Cecil?"

"Yes," and he frowned impatiently, for it was a weak attempt to deny what Violet had told him that night.

"But you never answered it," reproachfully.

"I did not think it necessary," he replied, coldly.

"You did not credit my denial?"

"Pray pardon me from discussing it with you," Cecil rejoined, in joy tones, and she flushed with wounded pride.

Royal makes the food pure, wholesome and delicious.

"Oh, how cruelly I am misunderstood!" she exclaimed. "Listen, Cecil. Only this morning Violet admitted to me that what she told you that night was only a vision of her delicious brain, and begged my pardon for the wrong she did me. She is deeply grieved over it, and said that as soon as she saw you she would vindicate my truthfulness to you."

Cecil turned a keen glance on the dark, sparkling face, and it looked so frank and earnest and truthful, that he did not know how to doubt her statement.

"Oh, please believe me," cried Amber, with sweet solicitude. "Indeed I am your true friend, Cecil, and Violet's, too—alas, the only friend you have, for every one at Golden Willows is against you, and if you do not trust me with your letters to her, I do not know how you are ever to communicate with her at all."

"Will you drive with me a little way, as my pony is restless and will not stop longer," she added, sweetly.
He assented, and they drove slowly along the road in the sweet September afternoon.

"I think you are sure to be soon? Surely it would do her good," he exclaimed.

"Yes, but grandpa will not permit it. He is afraid she will elope with you, Cecil, and he will not allow her to leave the house until she goes as the bride of the man he has chosen for her to marry in a week, Harold Castello, a rich young man of Chicago, who has seen Violet somewhere and become enamored of her beauty. Grandpa met him in Chicago, and he proposed for her hand."

"But, good heavens, Amber, this old man cannot force Violet to marry against her will!"

"He is trying to do so and using every means in his power to bend her to his will. Oh, I am so sorry for you and Violet!" cried Amber, with a sympathetic glance that touched his heart and made him repent his harshness of a while ago.

"Thank you," he said, heartily.

"Forgive me, Amber, if I have wronged you. I cannot afford to lose a single friend now. And will you indeed be so good as to carry letters for us, since it is impossible for us to meet my darling yet?"

"I will carry letters for you every day, and bring Violet's replies to you," declared Amber, with every appearance of sincerity.

"A thousand thanks," he cried, gratefully.

"I am glad to serve you," she answered, gently; then, with a low, tremulous sigh, "are we friends again, Cecil?"

"The best of friends," he replied, cordially, and pressed the hand she extended with a gentle warmth, without noticing how the rich color flew to her olive cheek and the light to her large hazel eyes. In fact he had almost forgotten, in his trouble over Violet, that Amber had once loved him, and been angry because his choice had fallen on her fair cousin.
He accepted frankly her profession of friendship.

It is reported that Capt. W. E. Roscoe, of No. 6 Company has been appointed Colonel of 68th Batt., Col. Chipman having been retired under the provision of the new act which provides for only five years service.

We congratulate Mr. Roscoe on his appointment and have no doubt but that he will prove a most efficient and dignified commander.

Next week's issue of the ACADIAN will contain an exceedingly interesting story which cannot fail to attract the attention of every reader. Several of Wolfville's most prominent business men are included in the cast of characters. Romance and fact will be delightfully intermingled.

Boys' 2-piece Suits, best value in town $1.25. GLASGOW HOUSE.

During the last few days very great improvements have been wrought in the appearance of Willow Bank Cemetery. The old graveyards have been cleared up and new ones made, and a number of the less ornamental natural trees have been removed. The intended improvements are not yet completed but already a great change for the better has been effected.

The street committee have begun the work referred to in a former issue of putting a large sewer down Wharf street to the creek to carry off the surface water. The pipe will be a foot in diameter and laid at such a descent as to assure its efficiency. Three catch-basins will be constructed to prevent the stoppage of the pipe by sand or other matter washing down from the high ground. This work is a most important one and if properly constructed should be of great benefit to Main street especially.

Work at the new mill is going steadily on. The boiler has been put up in a brick structure apart from the main building, and the smoke-stack was placed in position this week. This was quite an undertaking as it is heavy and unwieldy. The machinery is being arranged, and everything done in such a way that there will be no hitch when the mill is finally ready for operation. Getting such a mill ready for work is no small undertaking and Mr. Calhoun has had many difficulties to meet and overcome. We congratulate him on his success so far and hope he will soon have the mill ready at work, and will find the undertaking a most profitable one.

Local and Provincial.

The public schools close for the summer vacation this week. The teachers in the Wolfville schools have earned their vacation—and the ACADIAN hopes it may be an enjoyable one.

We would direct the attention of our readers to the summer announcement of the Yarmouth Steamship Co. which appears in another place in this issue. Beginning this week the steamers of this popular line make four trips per week between Yarmouth and Boston. The popular steamer Boston, which made such a successful record last winter, has recently been laid up for painting, etc., and is now in first-class order for the summer tourist business.

News has been received of the death of Alfred Patterson, son of the late Alex. Patterson, of Horton Landing. The deceased, who was 26 years of age, went to South Africa last October, for the benefit of his health. His brother Alphonse accompanied him, and the two proceeded to the mountain region, where his health seemed to improve. On the 24th of May he came down from the mountains with a friend and put up at the Masonic Hotel. He retired in his usual good health, but in the morning it was found that he had passed away. The remains were interred in the Methodist cemetery, Beaufort West. The sad news came in a letter from his brother Alphonse.

You need Rubbers to cross the Main street at present. Get them at the PEOPLE'S SHOE STORE.

The Methodist Camp Meeting opens at Berwick this year on August 5th and lasts seven days. Every arrangement has been made to make the meetings interesting and profitable. Among the present will be Dr. Louis Albert Banks of Cleveland, Ohio, a tried man, prominent as a preacher and evangelist in the regular ministry of the Methodist church. Dr. Banks will preach at least once each day. The usual arrangements have been made for reduced railway tickets and the accommodation of visitors to Berwick. The energetic secretary, Rev. J. M. Fisher, of Hantsport, will be glad to furnish all necessary information on application.

A BLACKSMITH'S STORY.

He became so Run Down that Work was Almost Impossible—His Whole Body Racked With Pain.

From the Bridgewater Enterprise. Mr Austin Faving is a well known blacksmith living at Baker settlement, a hamlet about ten miles from Bridge water, N. S. Mr Faving is well known in the locality in which he lives. He is another of the legions who have striven to health adds to the popularity of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr Faving related his story of illness and general health to a reporter of the Enterprise as follows: "During the last winter, owing I suppose to overwork and impure blood, I became very much reduced in flesh, and had severe pains in the muscles all over my body. I felt tired all the time, had no appetite, and often felt so low spirited that I wished myself in another world. Some of the time necessity compelled me to undertake a little work in my blacksmith shop, but I was not fit for it, and after doing the job would have to lie down; indeed I often felt like fainting. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after using a couple of boxes, I felt a decided relief. The pains began to abate, and I felt again as if life were not all dreariness. By the time I had used six boxes I was as well as ever, and able to do a hard day's work at the forge without fatigue, and those who know anything about a blacksmith's work, will know what this means. Those who are not well, will make no mistake in looking for health through the medium of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure by going to the root of the disease. They renew and build up the blood, and strengthen the nerves, thus driving disease from the system. Avoid imitations by insisting that every box you purchase is enclosed in a wrapper bearing the full trade mark, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

World's Best Governed City.

The leading and most commendable feature of the management of public affairs is the principle of the sinking fund, which is applied to every enterprise or business in which the municipality is interested. Whatever debits it has are on the sure and safe road to liquidation by the automatic operation of the sinking fund device. By this means the city of Glasgow will, inside of fifty years, furnish free water to its citizens; give them the best electric lights free; electric or water power at cost; allow them to ride on an electric road at the nominal fare of 2 cents for any distance, and furnish to all free the use of a magnificent public library.

The city affairs are managed by business men with the same prudence with which they would manage their own affairs; the question of party politics enters into no local election, and it seems to be the object of the municipality to administer the city's finances in an economical way, to improve the public health in its physical and moral parts, and to give brightness and the possibility of happiness to civil life. It seems in all these has been so marked as to command the admiration of the civilized world and to gain for itself the appellation of the best governed city on the face of the globe—American Magazine of Civics.

Monuments to Potatoes.

The potato is everybody's friend. So universally is this vegetable cultivated throughout the land that the potato may almost be said to divide with bread the honor of being the "staff of life." But indispensable as it has become as an article of food for all classes of people, nowhere is its virtue so blessed as in Germany. There these great statistics to erect a statue of this kind, which was—and is yet standing, though certainly of a unique kind. The upper part consists of a statue of Sir Francis Drake, the English Naval Commander, who is revered for having introduced the plant into Europe. This, as well as the pedestal, is draped with garlands of the potato vine with the full-grown "tubers" intact. On the pedestal are inscriptions to the following effect: "The first side sets forth that the above figure is that of Sir Francis; the second explains in words of higher praise what a blessing the potato has been to mankind; the third records that the statue is the gift of a certain Andrew Frederick, of Stralbourg; the fourth contains the names of the erectors. A statue similar to this is placed in the town of Mars."

Facts No Cyclist Should Forget.

That the first hill in two minutes may mean the last mile in two hours. That it is better to wear woolen under-clothing than to be measured for a coffin. That pedestrians are on the defensive when crossing the road, and no wheel man should hesitate to dismount for dislike of the noise trouble of dismounting. That a lighted lantern on a country road is for self defence as well as warning. That a dog is no respecter of persons on bicycles. Scoot, when you see him coming. That one foot of tire tape is worth ten volumes of hard thought. That it is impossible for two bicycles to pass on a six inch path as for approaching railroad trains to pass on the same track. That the man who said he never had a puncture, rode over a tack within the next minute. It's all work and no play for the man who punge the organ.

Church of England Synod On Prohibition.

(Reported by Halifax Herald) This Synod desires to place on record its deliberate opinion that intemperance is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, evil of the age, and its profound sense of the need of more aggressive work on the part of our church people to meet its needs. It is resolved that the members of the church of England synod in this country, its desolating effects in our homes, its awful results in the degradation and ruin of those who become its slaves, its waste of the national wealth, and its harvest of other evils.

And, whereas we believe it is the duty of this synod to aid, so far as it is able, all efforts towards lessening and abolishing these evils:

We, therefore, urge upon the members of the Church of England the necessity of doing all in their power to stem the tide of intemperance, by practicing self-denial for the good of others, by inculcating true temperance views in the training of the young, by promoting the passage of wise laws for the protection of the community against the ravages of intemperance, and by educating public sentiment in the direction of greater respect for the law and order. And we earnestly request the members of the church to make the whole subject a matter of constant prayer, and especially to look for Divine guidance in dealing with the great issue of prohibition now before the country, that every act and vote may have the effect of banishing the great evil of intemperance from our midst.

PURTY—This synod, recognizing that the law of purity is equally binding upon men and women, recommends that every effort in public and private to deal with the evils of impurity which are so common, not only in large centres of population, but also in the country parts, that every care should be taken to raise the standard of public opinion upon moral questions, especially in reference to the sanctity of the marriage tie, that parents be advised to warn their children of the awful dangers consequent upon impure thoughts and acts, of the dreadful results which follow secret sin, which defiles the heart and lays desolate the life.

That Mr Gladstone was a supporter of temperance reform, says the Westminster Gazette, everybody knows, but the following facts, which we believe have never before been published, show that he at times put his principles into practice and with considerable success. Many years ago two young men, about whom he had heard, became notorious for their drinking habits, and it occurred to Mr Gladstone that he would make an attempt to reclaim them. He accordingly invited them to see him at the castle, and there alone in the "Temple of Peace," he impressively addressed them to change their ways, and then knelt and fervently asked God to sustain and strengthen them in their resolve to abstain from that which had hitherto done them so much harm. The sequel cannot be better told than in the words of one of the men concerned, who says: "Never can I forget the scene, and as long as I live will be indelibly impressed upon my mind. The Grand Old Man was profoundly moved by the intensity of his solicitation. My companion is now a prominent Baptist minister, and neither of us from that day to this has touched a drop of intoxicating drink, nor are we likely to violate an undertaking so impressively ratified in Mr Gladstone's library.—Messenger and Visitor.

License Results.

The town of Peabody, Mass., in which prohibition had been in force, returned to license in May, 1897. During the following nine months the police officials recorded 908 arrests, 715 of which were for drunkenness. During the corresponding months of the preceding year the total number of arrests was 209, only 70 being for the offence of drunkenness.

Paine's Celery Compound

Is the world's great nerve medicine. This is the month when overworked men, women and girls in the home, workshop, store and office feel nervous, tired, dull, irritable, languid and weak. These conditions result from weak and astringent nerves. The nerves regulate the blood supply through the body. Upon the healthy action of the nerves, health and happiness depend. People who have their nerves out of repair in the hot weather are the most miserable of mortals. Paine's Celery Compound is the only true and safe specific for diseased nerves—it is the one medicine for the banishment of all hot weather ills and weakness. Physicians recommend it every day; it is the favorite life-giver with millions on this continent. Take no substitute from your dealer; "Paine's" is the kind that cures.
