Indigestion can be Cured
An Open Letter from a Prominent Clergyman.
C. GATES, SON & CO.,
"Middleton, N. B."
Dear Sirs,—Please pardon my delay in answering yours of weeks ago. Yes, I have no hesitation in recommending your Invigorating Syrup.
During the fall and winter of '96 and '97
I was greatly distressed with indigestion,
I tried several remedies, each of which gave me no relief. I was advised to try your Invigorating Syrup, which I readily did, and have felt general ever since to the one who gave me such good advice.
The very first dose helped me, and before half of the first bottle was used I was completely cured. I have not been troubled with the disease since. I have taken occasion to recommend your medicine publicly upon several occasions, and heartily do so now. You are at liberty to use this in any way you please.
Yours truly,
(Rev.) F. M. YORRO,

Handicap your Cough!
Don't wait a few days to see if it will "wear off"; it is much more likely to become dangerous and it will undoubtedly be much more difficult to cure. The longer you permit it to prey upon the delicate render yourself susceptible to other

RELIEF OF LADYSMITH.
General Dundonald's Forces Raise The Siege.
Story of Cronje's Surrender

Buller Fights His Way to Ladysmith—The Boer Prisoners

LADYSMITH, by telegraph to Colonel March 1.—A portion of the forces of Gen Buller, headed by Gen Dundonald's
cavalry, the full force of the Natal Carbineers and seven companies of infantry, among them some Dublin Fusiliers and Lancashire, retreated this city and raised the siege. They came via the road across Klip River and east of Oyster's Hill. Rumours yesterday morning brought information that Buller expected to relieve the garrison within 24 hours and the consequent relief was great. While made preparations to fall out and aid the advance of the British if it became necessary. Dundonald reports that when the Lancashire charged on Oyster's Hill on Tuesday they overtook Boers flying from the trenches and bayoneted them. Sixteen of the fleeing men were killed and 23 were enemy to the southwest were bare of Boers yesterday. Dundonald came just in time. Were in desperate straits for water to drink, and for lack of various kinds were making and having among the members of the brave garrison.

BULLER AT LADYSMITH.
London, March 1, 7:02 p. m.—The following is the text of Gen. Buller's despatch:
"NATIVES, March 1, 5:30 p. m.—I have just returned from Ladysmith.
Except a small guard north of Surprise
Hill, the whole of the enemy lately hauling the town have retired. In fact, hate, and south of the town the country
is quite clear of them.
The garrison were on half a pound of meat per man a day, and were supplying the meat rations by horses and mules.

PRINCE OF PRUSSIA

Return of the Happy-Go-
Lucky Prince to Berlin
The Favorite Brother of the Kaiser.
And the most Popular
Man in Germany.

Prince Henry of Prussia, whose return to Berlin from the Orient has caused a general social awakening in the German capital, is the favorite brother of the Emperor, and possibly the most popular man in Germany. He is first of all a soldier, and there was never a more happy-go-lucky, easy-going prince in all Prussia. It is said that he is the only man alive who dares be familiar with the Imperial Majesty of Germany.

Once, the story goes, Emperor William was taking a cruise in his yacht and fell a victim to sea-sickness, a complaint
to which his hardened younger brother is
a stranger. The King took to his room
and was there struggling with sea and
sickness when Prince Henry, thrusting his
head into the apartment, shouted: "Hello,
William! How do you like the sea?"

Now, the story goes, Emperor William was taking a cruise in his yacht and

to which his hardened younger brother is
a stranger. The King took to his room
and was there struggling with sea and
sickness when Prince Henry, thrusting his
head into the apartment, shouted: "Hello,
William! How do you like the sea?"

Some notion of the democratic tendencies of the prince may be obtained by noting the fact that he waives all precedence his royalty gives to him in the master of promotion. He could have been an admiral long ago had he expressed the desire to wear an admiral's hat. But he has generally declined promotion, determined to wait the order of the day.
In doing so he has been more than lower rank than he moved up beyond him. Many of these have been his interiors only in title, but in reality
they are his equals.

The prince is a grandson of Queen Victoria and cousin of the Duke of York.
His wife is the princess Irene of Hessia, who is also a granddaughter of England's Queen, and a favorite of hers as well as of the Emperor.

Henry William was born in 1859
and Henry in 1862. Between the Emperor and his brother is their sister, Princess Charlotte, born in 1860. She was married in 1878 to Prince Bernhard, eldest son of Duke George of Saxe-Weimars. Henry will inherit new life into the German court.

BRITISH WAR CENSOR
Former Governor General
Stanley Uses The Blue
Pencil

No less a personage than an earl has been appointed censor of British war news.
He is Lord Stanley of Preston, earl of Derby, and his position is a most important one. He is the blue pencilling of information from the front, suppressing everything of importance and twisting British defeat
to read so that they will appear like British victories, for that seems to be the English line of censorship.

Lord Stanley is the sixteenth of his family to hold the title. The family is descended from the Stanleys, who figure prominently in "Richard III,"
and whose defection from the crookback king was the next cause of the Wars of the Roses. He represented Lancashire constituencies continuously from July, 1885, to his elevation to the peerage in 1888.

Under various titles he was lord of the admiralty, financial secretary of war and financial secretary of the treasury. In 1889 he was raised to the peerage and in 1890 he was raised to the peerage under the title of Lord Stanley, and in 1898
was appointed governor-general of Canada. He succeeded in 1899 by Lord
Derby, but he declined it.

On the death of his brother in 1893 he succeeded to the title and to estates amounting to 60,000 acres, principally in Lancashire. When the Paris embassy fell vacant in 1896, it was offered to Lord
Derby, but he declined it.

He is the oldest
daughter of the fourth earl of Olandford.
The Stanleys were important gentry
during the reigns of the Plantagenets.
The present earl has been made a knight of the garter. His father was three times minister of England. On account of the peculiarly telling quality of his oratory
he was styled the "Baptist of debate."

Daylight scarcely had time to greet overdawned showed the Boers how utterly indefensible their position was. Neither the British artillery nor the other infantry division fired a shot, for the reason that the Boers had been so contracted that there was danger of hitting their own men. When the Boers hoisted the white flag, Col. Ewart of Gen. Colville's staff responded and entered the laager. He asked the occupants to pile their arms up and they quietly complied. Then Col.
Ewart sent Gen. Cronje's message of surrender to Lord Roberts.

The Boer prisoners have been trucking into the British camp all morning under cover, crossing the river at Langer's Ford. Of the prisoners taken, 3,502 are Dutchmen and 1,327 Free State men.
In the former number 49 Scandinavians are included, and in the latter 45 artillery-men and 300 spearmen. Among the Boer commanders who were taken prisoners were Commandants J. Martin, R. Well and Verster; Field Cornets J. Symms, S. H.
Van der, J. H. L. Boman, W. L. L. L. L. and Bordenhorst; Adjutant J. R. Maree
and J. A. Botha; War Commissioner Arnolds, and Acting Field Cornets P. V.
Dalliers and G. J. Duplessis.

At 2:40 o'clock this morning they were ordered to step forward silently toward the Boer trenches but the Canadians and Gordon's charged forward for two hundred yards, under cover of volleys from the Corwallis and Shropshire. The firing of the Corwallis and Shropshire enabled the Canadians to entrench themselves parallel to the Boer trenches. Before dawn there was a distance of only three hundred yards between the Canadian and Boer's and the former were in such a position that they could enfilade the trenches. The Boers made a brief but stubborn resistance in the semi-darkness.

GENERAL JOUBERT.

From the Tugela river to Dewdrop, where the body of the Boer was at the coming of General Buller, is a constant rise of land—land such as English soldiers never saw even in Affghanisthan. The total climb before the English to Ladysmith is over 4,000 feet, and the way is strewn with hostile guns. It is a steep ascent for the use of artillery in resisting attack, and of this fact the Boers appreciated to be aware. They themselves have calculated, accordingly. For the

MISS CADRICE.

BY ST. GEORGE RATHBONE

Author of "Doctor Jack," "Doctor Jack's Wife," "Captain Tom," "Miss Pauline of New York," Etc.

Continued.

John has glimpses of these things on his way to the hotel, and although his mind is hardly in a condition to take much notice of such matters, they nevertheless impress him to a certain degree.

Well, indeed, must be the man who cannot grasp the wonderful beauty of such a scene. At another time John would have been charmed.

He reaches the hotel and at once engages a room. Supper is ready, and he sits down to a meal one can hardly procure outside of Paris itself, and served in French style.

If any one were watching John, his nervousness would be perceptible.

From the table he seeks the office of the hotel.

"What can I do for monsieur?" asks the polite attendant, seeing him standing there expectantly.

"I desire to procure a guide."

"To-morrow?"

"Now—at once."

The clerk looks at him curiously. He cannot understand what such impetuous means.

He realizes that he is dealing with one who is different from the usual run of travellers.

"Monsieur does not, perhaps, know the danger involved in the night; for the Arabs do not often invade the old town after dark."

"Pardon me, my business is very important. I have taken them before me, and I have taken them before me, and I have taken them before me."

"A good idea. You will keep them in your safe," setting the action to the word.

"Now, monsieur will write his name."

"Done."

"Also the address."

"211, I don't quite understand."

"To which he would have them sent."

"In case we see monsieur no more."

"Ah! Now I catch on," with a smile, as he adds the words: "Chicago, Ill., U.S.A."

"Chicago. I have heard of it; quite a place," remarks the clerk.

"Rather," drily. "The electric, please."

Then the clerk beckons to a man who has been lounging not far from him.

John sweeps his eyes over him. He sees an Arab gypsy, a swarthy fellow of stalwart build, dressed in the attractive costume of his race. John reads human nature fairly well, and he believes he sees a man who can be depended upon.

"This, Monsieur is Mustapha Cadi. You can depend upon him always," and the clerk goes to his regular work.

The Arab makes the ordinary salutation, crossing his hands over his breast and bowing.

"The Arabs are very ceremonious never entering a room or being seated before a guest."

"You speak English?" asks John.

"Oh, yes," smiling, says the Arab.

"I want to engage you in my service for some days, Mustapha Cadi."

"I have just come with a party from the wine caves of Chateau de la Roche, and the cemetery on Boulevard."

"I am now free, and in Monsieur's service."

"Two days a day."

"I will make it four."

"Great is Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet. I shall not complain."

"Done it."

"I am very anxious to see some one whom I have reason to believe is in this city."

"Of course."

"You must take me to him to-night."

"I cannot say, it is for you to tell."

"Does this illustrious person live in any of old Al Jezira?"

"His name?"

"Ben Taleb."

Ben Taleb.

Harvard's sons gathered around the banquet table in the ball room of the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, Wednesday night and in song, speech and story renewed the ties of the college days, while wives, sisters and sweethearts looked down from the balconies and joined in the applause.

It was the 34th annual dinner of the Harvard Club of New York city, and there were probably 300 followers of the crimson about the tables. The scene was a flag of the club hung from the balcony in the rear of the room.

Every little while there is a short speech, now and then a song, and a light makes the residence of some Moorish doctor, who is a native of the passage-way would be totally dark, even on the brightest moonlight night.

They meet bearded, and turbaned Arabs, who walk majestically and proudly as Lucifer, even without a piastre in their purses; even women veiled in black, wearing anklets, and with their nails stained with henna.

The men salute and Mustapha replies, while the disguised young American merely bows his head, which he has hidden after the manner of one who mourns.

Thus they advance. Presently they turn sharply to the left, and enter a dark passage.

"We will wait here a few minutes."

"But why?" asks the impatient doctor.

"You saw the group descending, monsieur?"

"Yes."

"I recognized them as rival couriers. If they saw me, they would glance sharply at my companion. Perhaps for a moment they would stare at me, and then they would spread the news abroad. I am afraid we would have trouble. Better a little delay than that," and he draws a finger across John's throat to signify the terrible stroke of a vengeful yaghtan.

"I think you are right," replies John.

They hear the group go by, laughing and joking, and the passage is again clear.

"Again, forward, monsieur," whispers the faithful courier, and leaving their hiding-place they push on.

They are in the heart of the old town, and a most singular sensation comes over John, as he looks all around to see the white walls, the solemn fire, the most ancient and venerable things that never before greeted his ears.

It is as if he were in another world, the struggle of the humble clerk for an existence and the evening rum, of the married man for more money, the heart, the human engine, is wrought over for double the duty that Providence originally assigned it. Thus it is

Spring Weather Weakness

Try as you may, you cannot escape the weary, worn out, don't-care-to-work feeling that accompanies spring weather.

Brain is not as clear as it ought to be; there is languor and listlessness instead of energy and activity.

Burdock Blood Bitters is what people need this weather.

It sets the liver, bowels, and kidneys acting, whereby all poisons are eliminated from the system; cleans the tongue, improves the appetite, purifies and enriches the blood.

MISS MARY J. IRWIN, Holland, Man., writes:

"I have used Burdock Blood Bitters as a spring medicine for three years now and don't think there is its equal anywhere. When I feel drowsy and tired, and have no desire to eat, I get a bottle of B.B.B."

"I think it purifies the blood and builds up the constitution better than any other remedy."

CHAPTER XIII.

His manner gives the man from Chicago to understand that he has come to an end of his journey.

"What is it, Mustapha?" he whispers.

Monsieur did not notice. Two Arabs, one a muzzlin, or priest, just passed us. They brushed against you, and they disturbed the burrows; at any rate, their heads go together; they appear excited; they stop below; see, you can yourself notice; two more John comes out of the house, and they are a trouble, monsieur. Nay, do not draw a weapon; it comes not now, but later. I hear footsteps within, the bolt is withdrawn, the door opens."

What Mustapha says is true; the heavy door, still secured by a stout chain, opens half a foot, and by the dim light a Moorish lady is seen.

To him the guide addresses himself. Whatever he says in the Moorish tongue, it must be directed to the point, for immediately the door is opened wide enough to admit them, after which it is shut and the heavy bolt shoots into its socket.

John follows his conductor. For the time being, he loses sight of Mustapha, and must depend upon his own ability. Trust a young man from Chicago to be equal to any occasion, no matter how extraordinary.

In a moment he is ushered into a large room, which is decorated in the Oriental way that John has never seen equalled.

Rich colors blend, soft light falls on the many articles of a connoisseur's collection, and taken all in all, the scene is dazzling.

He gives it one glance.

Then his attention is riveted upon the figures before him. A couple of servants wait upon the owner of the house, Ben Taleb, the Moorish doctor. He is a venerable man, with white hair and a long snowy beard—his costume is simple black; but beside him sits his daughter, and she presents a spectacle John never saw equalled.

Silks of the loveliest hues, velvets that are beyond description, diamonds that flash and dazzle, strings of pearls that cause one's eyes to water. John sees the doctor's dreamy smile, and thinks, as he compares it with the most pronounced symptoms of heart disease are: Palpitation, shortness of breath, weak and irregular pulse, smothering sleep, swelling of the feet and ankles, tenderness and pain in the left side, chilly sensations, uneasiness if sleeping on the left side, fainting spells, hunger and exhaustion. Any one of these symptoms is enough to convince of the setting of heart disease—and any one of them, if neglected, may mean sudden death to the patient.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart not only gives almost instant relief, but it is the most stubborn case it will effect a rapid and permanent cure. It is an untried nostrum. It is a heart-specific, leaves no bad after-effects or depression. It acts directly on the nerve centers, induces nervous energy, dispels all weaknesses, and generally tones the system.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart is a powerful remedy. Thousands of cases where sure and sudden death seemed imminent, its wonderful curative powers have been demonstrated, and in most cases forms of heart disease relief has come inside of 30 minutes after the first dose has been taken. Some of the
