Not so her companion. He bent his head a little lower and whispered a word. It brought a warmer flush to the girl's cheek—at twenty-two blushes are swift in coming and goliushes are swift in coming and gol

"How are you, Mr. Leslie? I had hoped to meet you by the water, such a day as this."
"I had some thoughts of it," rejoined the vicar, "but I was busy. I had some—some task in hand, and," changing the subject, "I did not know you were with us, Mr. Langridge."
The younger man laughed carelessly.

he said. "The lawyers in London tell me—"

"The lawyers in London," she in terrupted, "won't pay things in Devonshire; and the delay is rather hard on you."

"It will all come right in time," he said quietly. "You know how my poor friend was involved. When Capt. Luttrell's affairs are finally adjusted Grace should own some two thousand pounds. Enough, I think, to settle my small bill."

Luttrell's affairs are finally adjusted Grace should own some two thousand pounds. Enough, I think, to settle my small bill."

Luttrell's and it was the voice of one answered:

"Come in, by all means. My sak is over, and I am quite at your service."

Then the vicar of Stanton Pompry returned to his desk.

It lay there still—that same bit of delicate laced and gilt-edged paper. His task was over. He had said so. Over, yet not completed. So he took it up with rejuctant hand, and once more hid it from sight, as the Lieutenant was at the doid.

"Will you, please, leave me now?"

Laws an unusual thing, but he did.

"Will you, please, leave me now?"

Laws some writing to finish."

When she was gone, the vicar of Stanton?

Stanton Pompry reoponed his desk.

The visitor did most of the talking, and his utterances were rapid and eager, in marked contrast with the sall subject, and do not let go of it until you have calmly, honestly, impartially studied, the question in all its bearings:

"Yes, I ran down two days since. I got leave, as my father wanted me on some legal business, which kept me from the water till now. It is a wonderfully early river of ours. Fellows in town will bardly believe in a dish of trout killed in the middle of February. But here they are, and I wish you had been with uswith me."

The vicar had swung open the casement to grasp the newcomer's hand. He was a handsome young fellow enough, but, despite his cheery voice and gay manner, there was some little impalpable restraint between them.

"You could well bear solitude if "You could well bear solitude if "You could well bear solitude if "I am sure."
