MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

DOMINION STEEL AND COAL CORPORATION—SUBSIDIES OR OTHER ASSISTANCE

Mr. GILLIS:

For a copy of all orders in council, agreements, arrangements, letters and other correspondence between the government or any of its officials and the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation regarding subsidies or other assistance to the steel industry at their plant, Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Mr. McILRAITH: Mr. Speaker, the motion calls for letters and other correspondence which are very voluminous; and in addition they disclose some matters as to the competitive position in industry. I have spoken to the sponsor of the motion about this, and I understand he is satisfied to have the words "letters and other correspondence" deleted from the motion. Subject to that, there is no objection to the motion passing.

Motion as amended agreed to.

JAPANESE NATIONALS

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North) moved:

For a copy of all petitions, letters and other correspondence received by the government during the past year, asking that the applications to go to Japan signed by persons of Japanese origin be reconsidered.

He said: I am informed that this would entail a great deal of work, and I am therefore quite willing to drop the motion in view of the fact that I can examine the originals.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to thank my hon. friend for what he has said. A large part of the correspondence asked for is wholly repetitious. The same application has been made in the same words in hundreds of letters. If my hon. friend will go to the Department of External Affairs or the Department of Labour the officials will be pleased to allow him access to the entire files to assist him in obtaining the information he may wish to have.

Motion dropped.

CIVIL SERVICE—RECLASSIFICATION

Mr. BLAIR:

For a statement showing, (a) the names of all civil servants who have been reclassified by the treasury board and/or the civil service commission in each year since December 16, 1940, stating in each case whether temporary or permanent employee; (b) the increase awarded to each, and the date of such awards.

Mr. MARTIN: This motion would entail a great deal of work; it would require the services of twenty stenographers working for five months to compile the facts. It would necessitate the examination of some 48,000 files. In view of these impressive facts perhaps the hon. gentleman would be willing to drop the motion.

Mr. BLAIR: Yes.

Motion dropped.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether this question should be addressed to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance: I think I handed a copy to the office of the Prime Minister. On Monday, November 12, the Minister of Finance gave the house a statement of the further legislation to be presented to parliament at this session. Is it still the intention of the government to proceed with the legislation then indicated? If so, I believe it would greatly facilitate the business of the house if all the remaining legislation could be introduced at an early day. I make the suggestion to the Prime Minister that this be done, in the belief that the house will then be in a better position, not only to consider these measures, but to facilitate their passage and at the same time avoid an unseemly rush of work as the end of the session approaches.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am obliged to my hon. friend for bringing up the question he has. The government is anxious, as I am sure all hon. members are, to get through the business of this session as early as possible before Christmas, and, also, to give adequate time to the discussion of the different measures. To further this end, the government has gone over the list of bills mentioned by the Minister of Finance. Some of these it will be possible to have postponed to another session. I might say that we had hoped to get through the bill respecting citizenship, nationality, naturalization and status of aliens, which is an important measure; but so long as it is understood that it will be one of the first measures to be proceeded with at the next session, I think it may be allowed to stand, if near the end of the session we should be pressed for time. The ratification of the extradition treaty is another matter which might be allowed to stand over until the early part of the next session. Approval of the Bretton Woods agreement will have to be proceeded with; also an amendment to the Export Credit Act, and an amendment to the Dominion-Provincial Taxation Agreement Act. It relates to the province of Alberta and, I understand, is not a contentious measure. The maple sugar industry bill has been introduced in the senate and will come from that house to this.

Mr. BRACKEN: We should be sending one like that to them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was thought the senate might get through the discussion of it to begin with.

These, in the main, are the bills of which mention has been made already. So far as proceeding with some other bills is concerned, much depends on the bill giving the governor in council powers in respect of the national emergency following the war. If that bill is passed, certain matters could be dealt with under its provisions which otherwise would have to be dealt with in separate bills to be introduced at this session. I might mention, for example, measures which the Minister of Veterans Affairs had it in mind to bring in at this session. The minister has on the order paper a bill to amend the War Service Grants Act, 1944; that bill will have to be proceeded with, but there are, I am informed, five other bills which the minister had thought of introducing. I understand it will be agreeable to those who are most interested if the matters contained in those measures are dealt with, so far as the next few months are concerned, by order in council under the emergency bill, with the understanding, of course, that bills will be brought in early next session to have them thereafter dealt with under statute. There is also a bill which relates to foreign exchange control: that is another measure which might be dealt with under the emergency powers should they be granted, and not gone on with in a separate measure at this session. Hon. members will find notice of practically all the other measures which will have to be taken up on the order paper of to-day.

This morning the coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference had a meeting in the course of which there was some consideration of matters which might be dealt with under the national emergency powers legislation. The government has thought it advisable, on account of the further consideration we wish to give to that subject, not to proceed with that measure this afternoon as was announced on Friday night but to allow it to stand as far as to-day's proceedings are concerned.

Mr. BRACKEN: The Prime Minister indicates that the emergency powers bill will not be dealt with this afternoon. Having regard to some question arising in the conference which is now in progress in this city, may I ask whether it is expected that we shall proceed with this bill at an early day, or will it be delayed until the pending conference is over?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot inform my hon. friend how long the co-ordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference will continue its sittings, but I can say that it is the desire of the government to proceed with the emergency powers bill at as early a day as possible. I hope it will not be delayed any great length of time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF EMPLOYEES OF WINNIPEG NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask two questions of the Minister of Labour; I have given him notice. Has the Department of Labour any information about the deadlock in the negotiations between publishers of the daily newspapers in Winnipeg and the union? Have the workers applied for unemployment benefits, and if so, will they be granted?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The hon. member gave my office notice of the questions, and I wish to thank him for having done so. The answer to the first question is as follows: The Department of Labour has been informed of developments in the strike of the employees of two Winnipeg newspapers, and Mr. Justice Major of the Manitoba supreme court was appointed industrial disputes inquiry commissioner in order to assist the parties to compose their difference. The commissioner was not able to bring about a settlement of the dispute, which involved negotiations for a new collective agreement covering wages, hours, and working conditions. The last word received from our Winnipeg office on Friday last was that the publishers had applied to the Manitoba wartime labour relations board for permission to prosecute the union for alleged violation of the wartime labour relations regulations P.C. 1003.

The answer to the second question of the hon. member is, that twenty-seven persons have claimed unemployment insurance benefits; none of the claims has been considered as yet. Employees who lose their employment through a labour dispute are not entitled to insurance benefit during the stoppage of work caused by the dispute, unless they can establish that they as individuals are not participating in, financing, or directly interested in the dispute nor do they belong to a grade or class of workers who are participating in, financing, or directly interested in the dispute.

STRIKE AT FORD MOTOR PLANT, WINDSOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. FRED ROSE (Cartier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the money spent by the Ford Motor Company for full-page advertisements throughout the country deductible from income tax?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): The question should properly be directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

FURNITURE

EXPORTS TO SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN REQUIREMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. F. KUHL (Jasper-Edson): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have been told that a very large proportion of the furniture which is manufactured in Canada is being exported to the Union of South Africa. In view of the tremendous unsatisfied demand for furniture in Canada on the part of war veterans and civilians alike, I should like to know what comments the minister is prepared to make on this situation.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member has not the right according to our rules to make a statement. If he has any question to put to the minister, it should be brief and to the point.

Mr. KUHL: I have just asked the question, Mr. Speaker: what comment the minister has to make.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member has given me no notice of his question. I shall look at it.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION

APPROVAL OF AGREEMENTS OF DECEMBER 7, 1944 AND FEBRUARY 10, 1945

The house resumed from Tuesday, November 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the interim agreement on international civil aviation signed by Canada on December 7, 1944, tabled on September 7, 1945, the convention on international civil aviation signed by Canada on December 7, 1944, tabled on September 7, 1945, and the international air services transit agreement signed by Canada on February 10, 1945, tabled on September 7, 1945; and that this house do approve the same.

Motion agreed to.

AERONAUTICS ACT

COMMERCIAL AIR OPERATIONS, HEARING OF APPLICATIONS, ETC.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction) moved the second reading of bill No. 19, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the minister make a statement with reference to the progress made to date by the air transport board, both in regard to organization and in regard to regulations promulgated under the terms of the amendment of a year ago?

Mr. HOWE: I have a statement which I intend to make but I suggest that it might be as well to allow the bill to move into committee and I could make the statement at that stage, when discussion could take place. It cannot take place very well on the second reading. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. FLEMING: It occurred to me that it might be useful to have the statement at this stage, since it might have a bearing on the attitude of the house towards the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOWE: The bill to amend the Aeronautics Act contains provisions chiefly of a formal character. Most of them are already familiar in other legislation on transportation. Hon. members will recall that part II of the Aeronautics Act, which is being amended by this bill, was enacted only last year. It was inevitable that experience would indicate some need for amendment. In a moment or two I intend to refer briefly to these amendments.

I would indicate briefly something of the action taken to carry out the authority granted by parliament in enacting part II of the Aeronautics Act. It will be recalled that amendments made effective on September 11, 1944, provided for the establishment of a board of three members to be known as the air transport board. This new board was set up and charged with the responsibility for licensing and regulating commercial air services and for advising in all matters relating to civil aviation. The organization of the board was not without its difficulties, owing to the conditions which existed during the closing months of the war. However, the board is now fully equipped to examine and determine the numerous specific and broad questions which arise daily in the new and rapidly developing field of air transport.

Experience since the board was appointed has fully confirmed the view of the government in March of last year that it is essential to have in this new field an organization specially assigned to its problems. The board has special divisions on economics, research, aeronautical engineering, licensing, on audits and on traffic tolls and tariffs to assist it in the discharge of its responsibilities.

Regulations and directives have been drafted and issued in consultation with interested departments and carriers. The air transport board has become and will continue to be a focal point for screening and advising on all matters relating to civil aviation. In the introduction of the air transport board into the field of civil aviation care has been taken to avoid duplication of administrative machinery. The board is a small body staffed only to carry out its regulatory functions and to analyse and advise on civil aviation problems with special responsibilities in respect of the economic aspects of commercial air services. Close cooperation and frequent consultation is necessary between the officers of the board and those of the Department of Transport, air services branch, who are responsible for technical standards, safety regulations and many other matters of a technical nature.

Since the Department of Transport has an extensive regional and field service in connection with its varied responsibilities, the air transport board has not found it necessary to retain its own regional or field offices, but relies for such assistance as it requires on its close cooperation with that department. Similarly many mutual problems have been studied together by the board and the department alone or together with other government departments or agencies. In this way it is assured that the decisions which must be made in respect of air services, airports and related services will be made after full and effective consideration.

The proposed amendments are chiefly of a formal nature and most of them are considered to be necessary in the light of the board's experience during the past year. They require little explanation, but I would like to say that I consider the new definition of "commercial air service" as particularly important because the act in its present form does not cover all forms of commercial air activities. It seems obvious that the board should have power to control all such activities to whatever extent may be necessary in the public interest, and the amendment is designed to provide for this.

Section 4 is intended for the purpose of authorizing the board to relax its regulations or orders in cases, for example, where the operations of the carrier are of a limited extent or subject to unusual conditions.

The only other provision to which I wish to refer is section 6. In this regard I would point out that the subject of free and reduced-rate transportation is now dealt with under the regulations. This subject is of such importance that it is proposed to include it in the act. I would have liked to be able to give a detailed report on the activities of the air transport board during the past year; however, as time is limited I wish to assure hon. members that a tremendous amount of spade work has been done. Whereas our railway transportation system has been built up over a long period of years, it is clear that at least the framework of the air transport system must be provided for in a matter of months. That the foundation of this system be soundly laid is of the utmost importance, and the air transport board has been and is working diligently toward this end. Hon. members will appreciate that the great handicap of stimulating bush flying or flying of a feeder line nature is the difficulty of obtaining suitable equipment. During the war years all the activity of aeroplane builders in Canada and in other countries was directed toward the building of aeroplanes for war. While aeroplanes of a war type are being made available for civilian work, none of them is suitable for commercial purposes. While they will do certain work, they are not of a type that can be considered money makers. Therefore the best the board can do at the moment is to accumulate information which will assist in building these feeder lines. To that end traffic studies have been made and the movement of population studied and tabulated in a form which can be readily available to those interested in undertaking a new operation.

Licences have been granted for a number of charter services. Those are a necessary adjunct to civil aviation at the present time, and charter services are being formed and centred on a number of our larger cities.

Mr. MacNICOL: What section would charter services come under?

Mr. HOWE: I cannot say. I think we shall come to it in the act. I may say there is no amendment relating to charter services, but when we get into committee I shall be glad to refer the hon. member to the chapter.

Hearings are being held in connection with new mail routes. Licences will issue in due course, but here again the board is reluctant, and has been reluctant, to issue licences covering mail routes to applicants who obviously cannot furnish the type of equipment which is likely to make the route profitable.

I shall be glad to answer any other questions that my hon. friend has to ask in committee.

Motion agreed to; bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Commercial air service.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to ask the minister a question which is based on the words "commercial air service". I have had quite a number of letters in the last few days from Yellowknife. Doubtless the minister has had similar letters.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: They were from gold mining companies in that country who are greatly worried about their inability to purchase bunker oil, which has placed them in a very dangerous position. Those who cannot obtain tractors to go many miles out to the sparsely wooded areas to get fuel find themselves in a difficult position. The minister knows that a number of tanks have been built at Yellowknife. Two companies that I know very well now have five tanks which are empty. I am wondering if under this bill the minister has sufficient powers—and I should like him to have all the powers required to do this—to arrange for some transport company to transport bunker oil in barrels by transport plane from Norman Wells to Yellowknife. On one occasion I myself flew over that country in a large transport plane which was capable of carrying twenty-eight passengers. Such a plane ought to be able to take care of a hundred barrels of fuel oil. A hundred barrels of fuel oil would contain 3,500 gallons, and would weigh approximately 35,000 pounds. There must be many transport planes available now that the war is over. If it could be arranged to use some of them to transport oil in 100-barrel lots from Norman Wells to those mining areas in Yellowknife, which are now doing the best they can to get into production, it would be good for the country. It would mean much business and employment and would save the companies from the danger of having their equipment frozen up, especially those who cannot get wood. Is it possible to obtain transport planes which could be sent into the country in an emergency to transport oil at the rate of a hundred barrels a flight? It would not take more than a matter of three or four hours to fly from Norman Wells to Yellowknife, so that even in the short days the plane would be able to make safely one trip a day. Could that be taken care of for the sake of opening up that country?

Mr. HOWE: The movement of bunker oil is hardly a matter for aeroplanes, because of the cost. The difficulty last season was that an unexpected demand developed during the latter part of the season. Water transportation was handicapped by low water and lack of craft. The result is that there was not as much bunker oil moved to Yellowknife as there should have been. However, next season the demand will be better understood. We shall be able to start at the beginning of the opening of navigation, and I think there will be no difficulty so far as the obtaining of sufficient oil is concerned.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. MacNICOL: It is this winter I am thinking of.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend is aware that a land airport has been built as Yellowknife which will be in use this winter. If need for transportation does develop, the nearest source of supply is Edmonton, and it will be possible to fly oil in from there to Yellowknife if it becomes necessary, although the cost of transportation is away out of proportion to the cost of fuel oil. Expensive items can stand air transportation, but fuel oil, being a cheap commodity, can hardly do so.

Mr. MacNICOL: The distance in each case is about the same. The distance from Edmonton to Yellowknife is approximately six hundred miles by air, and it is about the same distance the other way.

Mr. HOWE: About eight hundred the other way.

Mr. MacNICOL: From Edmonton to Yellowknife?

Mr. HOWE: No, from Norman Wells to Yellowknife.

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not think it was quite that far; but in any event the oil will be much cheaper at Norman Wells than at Edmonton. I do not think they would have bunker oil at Edmonton, but they have it at Norman Wells.

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. MacNICOL: I cannot help but feel that if there was an opportunity to send in bunker oil by plane at a subsidized rate of a hundred barrels per trip it would pretty soon overcome the difficulty. The minister knows that at Yellowknife they are up against a real difficulty. We cannot afford to have anything interfere with the expansion at Yellowknife. It is going to be one of the greatest gold mining areas in the world, if not the greatest.

Mr. HOWE: Every effort will be made by the Department of Transport or the air transport board to see that there is no interruption of operations at Yellowknife owing to lack of fuel oil.

Mr. STIRLING: There are in southern British Columbia at the present time a great many air-minded people who are concerned with the idea of service being given to those communities dotted along a little north of the boundary all the way between Lethbridge and Vancouver. Can the minister give us any information in regard to consideration having been given to assisting such developments? I believe at the present time three or four applications are before the board, and it may be that they are being considered even now. Could the minister develop that matter a little? The T.C.A. of course jumps from Lethbridge very nearly through to Vancouver, and service cannot be given in that way. It is true that railway service exists, but it is by no means speedy; and for at least a month or two in the middle of winter the highways are scarcely usable. Many people through the Kootenays, in the Okanagan and in these other settlements are looking forward to the day when there may be some air service supplementing T.C.A. Can the minister give the committee any idea of the cost per passenger mile, for instance, in such a pick-up service, whether it be in that mountainous area or in the flatter land of the prairies?

Mr. HOWE: As the hon. member for Yale has indicated, there are three applications before the board for a service between Vancouver and Lethbridge through the Crowsnest pass. The air transport board has set down a hearing in Vancouver for January 15, when the three applications will be considered. In the meantime they are studying the merits of the three routes for which application has been made. The applications are not identical; each specifies different stops, and it will be the purpose of the board to see that, whichever application is granted, the applicant will be required to give an adequate service to the citizens in that area.

This is considered an excellent aeroplane route. The rail transportation, as I think my hon. friend will agree, is not the best, and weather conditions are such that from time to time the highways are blocked. Another fortunate feature is that the area is well supplied with airports, so that a well-equipped and well-financed company should be able to give an excellent service and should find it a profitable operation.

I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend an indication of the rate. Local services of that type require a higher rate than the Trans-Canada service, on which the rate is about 5½ cents a mile. This rate will be somewhat higher, but I think it will be desirable for those operating the route to set a rate that will attract patronage, and it will be the duty of the air transport board to see that the rate is not excessive. Just what rate will be established is a matter between the operator and the air transport board.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister hazard a guess that it might be twice or three times as high?

Mr. HOWE: My guess is that it would not be as much as twice as high.

Mr. COCKERAM: Previously those of us who were interested in aeronautics appeared before the board of transport commissioners, but under the amendment to the Act passed in August, 1944, we set up an air transport board. What was the justification at that time for setting up the board?—Because certainly the board of transport commissioners carried out their duties in an efficient manner. I was surprised when the minister was not able to give us a report for the period during which the air transport board has been in operation. Perhaps the minister can enlarge on that, telling us who are the members of the board and why it is not possible to get a complete report on the activities of the board up to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. HOWE: There are three members of the board. First is Mr. R. A. C. Henry, formerly deputy minister of transport, formerly head of the bureau of economics of the Canadian National railways, a man with great experience in air transport work. The next member is Mr. J. P. R. Vachon, formerly of Trans-Canada Air Lines and Canadian Pacific Air Lines, an experienced pilot with long years of service in bush flying. The third member is Air Vice-Marshal Alan Ferrier, formerly in charge of air regulation in the Department of Transport, who had distinguished service in the Royal Canadian Air Force during the war, and who is thoroughly qualified to serve on a board of this kind. The reason for separating the work of this board from that of the board of transport commissioners was that it was felt that air transport would require stimulation. The work of the board of transport commissioners is regulatory, and that board is not equipped to deal with the stimulation of transport services. For example, the studies the air transport board has been making would not be in the line of the ordinary work of the board of transport commissioners. Furthermore the board of transport commissioners is bound by the act under which it operates. It is a judicial board, and the act was designed for regulating railways. Regulation of a somewhat different type is required for air service. The board has been in operation only a few months. It has existed only about a year, and that is why the annual report has not been brought down; but the statutory report will be brought down at the end of the fiscal year, as required by the act.

Mr. COCKERAM: Have these two boards the same powers?

Mr. HOWE: No. The powers of the air transport board are related to transportation by air, and are of a different nature from those granted the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. COCKERAM: They can fix rates?

Mr. HOWE: That is true.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there not another difference between the two boards? Does not the air transport board act under the jurisdiction of either the minister or the governor in council; and is not the railway board a semi-judicial board which makes its own decisions?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, that is right.

Mr. HANSELL: In the light of what the minister has said with respect to the report being brought down each year might I ask if the minister contemplates any parliamentary committee being set up, similar to the existing committee on railways and shipping. That is a very important committee which deals with the Canadian National railways, and in its discussions many important matters relating to railways and shipping generally are taken up. I recognize that this committee does not go into the work of the board of transport commissioners, and that this measure has to do with the air transport board. I think it would be an admirable thing if a parliamentary committee similar to the railway committee were set up for the purpose of annually reviewing the operations which might come under a bill such as this. Does the minister contemplate anything of the kind? Often we have bills of this kind passed, government bodies are set up, their reports are made annually and placed upon the table of the house, but we have no opportunity to make a detailed study of or pursue any investigation in respect to such reports. They are just placed on the table for anyone to read, and that is all. I am a great believer in parliamentary committees looking into the operation of government institutions and boards.

Mr. HOWE: The appropriate committee would be the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines; perhaps we could expand that to read, "railways, canals, airways and telegraph lines." The work of the committee on railways and shipping, government-owned, is of a different character. This board deals with publicly and privately owned institutions, but it would come within the field of the other standing committee. I should be glad to cooperate with my hon. friend and see that the report of the air transport board is referred to that committee for study.

Mr. COCKERAM: What remuneration is paid to the members of the board? What is the total number of the staff at this time? What is the total of the salaries and wages paid to the staff?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: The chairman of the board is paid $12,000 per annum, the same as the chairman of the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is Mr. Henry?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Henry. Each member is paid $8,000 per annum.

Mr. COCKERAM: Are they full-time jobs?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. I may say that up to the present time Mr. Henry has been able to devote only three days a week to this work, and he draws only half his salary, by arrangement. Until such time as he can sever his connection with his former occupation, which he has not been able to do, he divides his time and receives only half the statutory salary.

Mr. COCKERAM: What is the total number on the staff and the total wages paid?

Mr. HOWE: There are approximately forty-one on the staff, including members of the board. It will take a little time to add up their salaries, but I can give that later.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Quorum.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister says that the chairman receives $12,000 a year and the other two members $8,000. How are those salaries arrived at? How do they compare with salaries paid in big business? Big business must buy in the cheapest market and sell in the best market it can get, and the salaries of officials in large corporations rarely reach $12,000 per year, or at least they did not in my time. They may be up to that now; I do not know. It seems to me it is a good salary. I am not complaining, but I should like to know how it is arrived at and how it compares with salaries paid by corporations and other transport companies.

Mr. HOWE: It is the amount that is believed to be necessary to get a man with sufficient experience to make a contribution to the post. It is not much use putting a man with little experience in a position of great responsibility, because his background will not permit him to make a contribution to the post. My hon. friend asked for a comparison of these salaries with those paid in business. I may say the chairman of the board left a position paying a salary of $35,000 a year to accept this one with a salary of $12,000. Twenty years ago he was receiving $10,000 a year as deputy minister of railways and canals, and later on he received a much higher salary as chief of the bureau of economics of Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is a government concern; I was thinking of private business.

Mr. HOWE: He left the post of vice-president of Montreal Light, Heat and Power, where he was receiving a salary of $35,000 a year.

Mr. MacNICOL: At the same rate we ought to pay the Minister of Reconstruction a salary of $100,000 a year.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be grateful for that.

Mr. CASE: How many members are there?

Mr. HOWE: Three.

Mr. CASE: They are all paid?

Mr. HOWE: They are all paid.

Mr. CASE: This section provides that two shall form a quorum?

Mr. HOWE. That is right.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Jurisdiction.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Can the minister give the reasons for permitting the apportionment of such tremendous powers to any one member of this board as are indicated in this section? The new section 7B which is to be added reads:

> The board, or any member of the board, may order that any person resident or present in Canada may be examined upon oath before, or make production of books, papers, documents or articles to the board—

And so on. These are far-reaching and extensive powers, and I should like to know why it is deemed advisable to give such powers to any one member of the board, apparently without his being required to get the consent of the whole board before he takes action.

Mr. HOWE: These are really not extraordinary powers; they are the ordinary powers of a justice of the peace or a member of a court. A subpoena is to be issued by one member of the board rather than the full board as a matter of convenience. This is simply giving the board the ordinary rights of a court to require the attendance of witnesses and the obtaining of information.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is there anything similar to this in any other act or any other organization under the government?

Mr. HOWE: As a matter of fact it is in the wartime prices and trade board act and the Department of Munitions and Supply Act, with which I happen to be familiar, and in many other acts.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Permitting one member of the board to do that?

Mr. HOWE: I think so, yes.

Mr. FLEMING: The hon. member has directed attention to a section which contains some very arbitrary features. It is significant that the bodies referred to by the minister just now were set up by order in council; they are not bodies created by statute. What we are dealing with here is a body created by a statute of this parliament in 1944, and its powers are being extended by the bill now before us. One could search in vain through the Railway Act to find anything comparable to the powers conferred by this section on any member of the board. If hon. members will read this section they will find that the powers conferred on a member of the board are not confined to the mere issuance of subpoenas. A single member of the board has power not only to issue subpoenas but to examine under oath any person summoned before him. He has also power to direct such a person to submit to examination by an officer of the board. I submit that that is arbitrary. I do not think we ought to have legislation of this kind, conferring such broad powers upon a member of a board created by statute.

We have just approved section 2, which provides that the quorum shall be two members of the board. Why should not any proceedings under 7B (1) with reference to the examination of witnesses be taken on the action of not less than a quorum of the board? Let it not be said that this is only a trifling matter of procedure. It is a great deal more than that. It confers a power capable of arbitrary exercise. Look at the provisions of section 7B (1):

> The board, or any member of the board, may order that any person resident or present in Canada may be examined upon oath before, or make production of books, papers, documents or articles to the board, or any members of the board, or before or to any officer of the board, or before or to any other person named for the purpose by order of the board or such member, and may make such orders as seem proper for securing the attendance of such witness and his examination.

In other words the power is unlimited in any member of the board to direct any person, resident or present in Canada to appear before him, or such person as he may designate, and to produce books, papers, documents and articles on any subject. There is no justification for conferring powers so broad upon a board of this kind. It is not a large board, and there is no hardship in requiring the board to proceed in the normal way through a quorum. I think that this section ought to come out altogether, certainly those portions of it which confer on a single member of the board the wide powers to which I refer. Here you have a board of three. Suppose one member does not fall in line with the views of the majority; it lies within the power of that one member to issue subpoenas compelling persons to appear before him, or any person he may designate and to produce books, documents and articles on any subject, possibly at great expense. They may be secret documents. I do not think this parliament can entertain the thought of conferring powers so broad on any board created by statute.

Mr. HOWE: May I point out the nature of the inquiries that the board may conduct. These include many matters affecting applications for licences, rates or complaints. They may concern matters arising out of aeroplane crashes. A crash may occur in the Northwest Territories, and an officer is sent there to get the particulars. He must have the right to examine survivors of the accident, to examine the log of the ship, to examine persons in the vicinity who may have been witnesses to the crash, and to examine other circumstances associated with it. Usually a serious loss of life and property is involved in an aeroplane crash. I think my hon. friend would hardly wish to call a full meeting of the board before such an examination could be made. The more promptly it is made, the more likelihood there is of establishing the facts of the disaster. Crashes are not infrequent. I am sorry to say that hardly a month goes by without an aeroplane crash somewhere in the dominion, which must be investigated by putting witnesses under oath. It may be as far away as Greenland or in the Northwest Territories or any other remote part of Canada, and prompt action is the essence in determining the cause of the accident.

Mr. HAZEN: I think this section is highly objectionable and I agree with what the hon. member for Eglinton has said about it The explanatory note on section 3 says:

Similar provisions exist in the Railway Act respecting the board of transport commissioners.

If you turn to the Railway Act, section 62, you will find that the provisions there are not the same at all. This section of the bill is worded quite differently. Section 62 of the Railway Act says:

The board may order that any witness resident or present in Canada—

And so on. The power and the authority rests with the board under section 7A(1) of this bill as it does under the Railway Act, and it should be the board that has this power, not any member of the board. Certainly the explanatory note is misleading when it says that similar provisions exist in the Railway Act, for similar provisions do not exist in the Railway Act. Under the Railway Act the board may "order any witness resident or present in Canada to be examined upon oath before or make production of books," and so forth, to any member of the board. There is nothing objectionable in that. But as I say, section 7B(1) does not follow that provision. The power rests in the board, and the board should have the power in consequence to examine witnesses and order the production of documents. I submit that it is quite objectionable as it is worded. The words "or any member of the board" should be deleted from section 7B(1) and the wording of the Railway Act should be followed.

Mr. HOWE: I have no objection to that. It is a matter of convenience that one member should have the power to issue a subpoena, but it is not a matter of great importance, and I am quite willing to have the words in question deleted.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would not the difficulty be obviated by saying, any one member of the board acting upon the authority of the board? Then it would be obvious that the board was in concurrence with the action of that member.

Mr. HOWE: The deletion would have exactly that effect.

Mr. HAZEN: If I am in order, Mr. Chairman, I would move that the words "or any member of the board" in line 32 of section 7B(1) be deleted.

Mr. BLACKMORE: How would that make it read, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: As amended it would read:

7B. (1) The board may order that any person resident or present in Canada may be examined upon oath . . .

And so forth.

Mr. HAZEN: The section will be just the same as section 62 of the Railway Act: it will give this board the same powers that the board has under the Railway Act.

Mr. HANSELL: I do not quite agree with that. You will have to alter lines 35 and 36 —"or any member thereof"; and then you have in line 38 "or such member". You will have to take it out of that section wherever it occurs.

Mr. HAZEN: No, you do not.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is in the Railway Act as it is there.

Mr. HOWE: The board must issue the subpoena, but any member of the board may make the examination.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minutes of the board will read that it has been considered and that on their order such and such has been done.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. COCKERAM: The minister stated just now that the primary purpose of this clause was to cover accidents and the like. My opinion is that it should be specifically outlined what kinds of books, documents and evidence are to be covered by this section. I should like the minister, if he would, to enlarge on that.

Mr. HOWE: There is a consequential amendment of line 38. The words "or such member" in that line should be deleted. I will ask my colleague the Minister of Agriculture so to move.

Mr. GARDINER: I so move.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Gardiner moves:

That the words "or such member" in section 3, clause 7B (1), line 38, be deleted.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HOWE: Answering the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Cockeram): the board should be in a position to demand any paper or any document which is required by its subpoena, just as the board of transport commissioners have that power, and for the same reason.

Mr. COCKERAM: This section, then, covers more than investigations into accidents and such affairs? This covers everything—rates, and what have you?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. COCKERAM: The general competition and operation of the aeronautical business?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. STIRLING: It seems to me that it implies an enormously wide meaning unless this section is related to inquiries into crashes.

Mr. HOWE: They may inquire into other things. They can inquire into rates, or—

Mr. STIRLING: "Other things!" To make an almost ridiculous case of it: a passenger who travels for a certain firm is a casualty. Under this wording, all the books, documents and papers of that firm can be ordered by this board.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend would hardly think the board would order that.

Mr. STIRLING: Maybe not, but there is the power.

Mr. HOWE: Pertinent documents to the inquiry or any inquiry of the air transport board should be procurable.

Mr. MacNICOL: They would likely order what was necessary to establish their responsibility and as to what costs, if any, they have to pay to the injured person or company.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: In that case, I assume, they should be able to obtain the documents they require. I should not think they would ask for all the books.

Mr. STIRLING: That is perfectly true, but this says so.

Mr. HAZEN: Does section 7B(1) refer back to section 7A(1), which states:

The board shall have full jurisdiction to inquire into, hear and determine any application by or on behalf of any interested party—

Complaining, or requesting certain things. Then you go on to section 7B(1), which says that the board may order that witnesses be called and examined. Is 7B(1) restricted in its operation to the jurisdiction given the board under 7A(1) to inquire into complaints and requests?

Mr. HOWE: No; section 7B(1) refers to the whole scope of the board's activities.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause as amended carry? Carried. Clause 4, regulations.

Mr. HAZEN: We have been discussing, as I understand it, clause 7B, subclause 1.

The CHAIRMAN: I understood we were discussing the whole of clause 3, and 7B(1) is part of clause 3. Now 7B(1) was amended and carried, and then I asked if section 3 as amended was carried, and I understood that the committee carried the whole clause.

Mr. HAZEN: We seem to have got on to 7B(1) and discussed it before we gave any consideration to 7A(1) of section 3. In connection with 7A there is one matter I should like to bring to the attention of the committee, and that is subsection 2, which is on page 2 of the bill. The marginal note says "mandatory orders", and the section reads:

> The board may order and require any air carrier to do, forthwith . . . any act, matter or thing which such air carrier is or may be required to do under this part or any regulation, order or direction made thereunder by the board—

And so on. It seems to me, though I may be wrong about this, that before the board orders an air carrier to do or to refrain from doing a certain thing the air carrier should receive some notice from the board of its intention and have an opportunity to be heard by the board if it so desires. Just to hand out an order by the board to an air carrier that "you have to do this and you have to do that" without giving them the opportunity to be heard is not fair to the air carriers. They should, it seems to me, be given notice of the board's intention and have an opportunity to be heard before the order is put into effect.

Mr. HOWE: This clause is precisely the same as a similar section in the Railway Act. Obviously the procedure would be that the board might order a certain action taken and the air carrier would have the right to enter an appeal after the event but they could hardly delay the action pending the filing of the appeal and the hearing of the appeal. It is to get immediate action in case such action is taken.

Mr. HAZEN: Is there provision for an appeal, and if so in what section?

Mr. HOWE: Section 18 of the Aeronautics Act provides for an appeal:

> (1) An appeal shall lie from the board to the Supreme Court of Canada upon a question of jurisdiction or a question of law, or both, upon leave therefor being obtained from a judge of the said court upon application made within one month after the making of the order, decision, rule or regulation sought to be appealed from or within such further time as the judge under special circumstances shall allow, and upon notice to the parties and the board, and the cost of such application shall be in the discretion of the judge.

Mr. HAZEN: I should like to ask the minister's assistant if under that section an appeal can be taken on a question of fact.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, it says so.

Mr. FLEMING: A question of fact cannot now be appealed from the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. HOWE: No, but it can from the air transport board.

Mr. FLEMING: You can get a mixed question of law and fact before the court on appeal but not a question of fact.

Mr. HOWE: It is provided that appeals shall lie from the board to the Supreme Court of Canada upon a question of jurisdiction, or upon a question of law, or both.

Mr. FLEMING: But not a question of fact.

Mr. HOWE: No, not a question of fact, but a question of law.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think you could appeal on a question of fact. If you cannot appeal upon a question of fact and the board makes an order on a question of fact, the air carrier has no redress. He receives no notice of what your order is going to be; he has no opportunity of being heard by the board before the order is made, and first thing he knows he gets an order. He should have an opportunity to be heard before the order is made against him.

Mr. FLEMING: I thought the minister would make a statement on the point raised by my hon. friend, which is one of great importance. The board of transport commissioners is a highly respected body. It has been fair in all its dealing, and even those who at the outset may have had some misgivings about being brought under regulation by that board would not to-day have it otherwise. One of the reasons why that board has been so highly respected is that it has not at any time proceeded in an arbitrary manner, but with due notice to persons involved, and it has always been generous in its hearings. As a matter of fact there is provision for rehearings on application of parties to the board, and the board frequently directs rehearings where some party has complained about not having had ample notice.

When you come to the air transport board you are faced with a problem. I do not raise this point out of any selfish regard for the legal profession. The board of transport commissioners has always had not fewer than three members—I believe that is the rule—who have been members of the legal profession, so that it has always had among its personnel persons well acquainted with legal processes and who have been always anxious to see that those appearing before the board are given all the protection which the courts ordinarily afford to litigants. I do not reflect on the personnel of the present air transport board. They may be eminent men in their respective fields, but there is no one on the board at the present time who has had legal experience, or who has been accustomed to thinking in terms of the rights of parties or of giving due protection to them. That does give some point to the question raised by my hon. friend, who feels that there is no provision here guaranteeing to every person affected an opportunity to be heard. I was hopeful that we might have a full statement from the minister in regard to the way in which the board should proceed and the method by which it proposes to conduct its hearings.

Reference was made earlier by the minister to the fact that the board is something more than a judicial body. The board of transport commissioners is administrative as well as judicial, but in its hearings it has never lost sight of the rights of all parties in matters of procedure or otherwise. It is vitally important that the air transport board should regard itself not merely as an administrative board responsible to the minister—there is too much of that in the act now—but as a quasi-judicial body with definite legal functions, and under obligation to proceed, so far as possible, as the courts do in giving due consideration and protection to parties who may be affected by their order.

Mr. HAZEN: The board, it is provided, may order and require any air carrier to do certain things, or it may forbid the carrier to do certain things. Read subsection 2 further and examine the last two lines: "and shall, for the purposes of this section, have full jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters, whether of law or fact." The words are "hear and determine." It seems to me there is an implication there that the board should hear these matters before it makes its order. The board is given authority to hear, and I suggest that it must be the intention that the board is to hear the matter, hear the air carriers, before it makes its order. If I am right in that, would there be any objection to providing in the section that, before making any such order, the board must give the air carrier notice of its intention and afford it an opportunity to be heard, or words to that effect?

Mr. HOWE: I can hardly accept my hon. friend's suggestion. Orders are frequently required in emergent situations. For instance, a report is received that a certain plane is operating unlawfully and an order is given immediately to stop it. I think that the board can be counted on to use the power with discretion. Certainly the intention is to hold a hearing before the order, but in the air you are dealing with a new medium and emergency orders are required, without notice, on the understanding that a hearing will be afforded when opportunity offers.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 4—Regulations.

Mr. MacNICOL: Paragraph (cc) provides for "establishing classifications or groups of air carriers." We are entering into a new field of transportation. We are probably on the threshold of great expansion and a great increase in the size of planes, and I have been wondering what will be the effect of this paragraph and of paragraph (dd) on various airfields. Some airfields will not be equipped to receive 100-ton planes or, later on, 500-ton planes, with the result that a particular city or airfield will be discriminated against if an order is issued to prevent planes from landing there. The board seems to me to have power to discriminate against an airfield.

Mr. HOWE: I do not think the purpose of these two sections is as suggested by my hon. friend. It is to make provision for a class not formerly provided for, the charter services. I have consulted authority and I find that for once I am right. That is the purpose of the act. Previously charter services were not distinguished from regular air line services, and the purpose of this is to allow the board to make the distinction between those two types of services.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister explain what is meant by: "establishing classifications or groups of air carriers"? How does he propose to go about that in the bush operations?

Mr. HOWE: We propose to issue two classes of licences, one for the air line services and the other for charter services. A charter service is a service by a plane based on a particular airport to carry to another point within reasonable range of its base. The air lines service travels a scheduled route, and has to perform certain functions on the route. It is to make a separation between those two types of transportation.

Mr. COCKERAM: I want to carry that a little further, if I may. The minister is probably aware that at the present time a great many mining companies are thinking of purchasing and operating their own planes. What will be the effect of this paragraph on companies operating their own planes in connection with their own mines?

Mr. HOWE: The air transport board would not be required to license a plane owned by a mining company and operating solely in its own service. The board deals only with planes which are licensed to operate for hire and reward.

Mr. COCKERAM: They could carry anything they like?

Mr. HOWE: Carry anything they like.

Mr. MacNICOL: Take a company in the northwest that did have its own plane; if that company picks up an engineer at Edmonton and flies him to Yellowknife, what protection will the engineer have if the plane does not have a licence from the air transport board? What protection will the engineer or any other passenger have who could be picked up at Edmonton and taken by plane to Yellowknife or anywhere else?

Mr. HOWE: If the plane is owned by the company, and the engineer whom they pick up is an employee of the company, it would be up to the company to protect him. If they wish to pick up the engineer and charge him a fare for riding on the plane, then they must be licensed.

Mr. CASE: Has this bill any general application to private flying? Has the department yet given consideration to the method to be employed in licensing private individuals who wish to fly?

Mr. HOWE: Under part I of the Aeronautics Act the Department of Transport licenses planes as airworthy, and licenses pilots; but a private flyer does not require an air transport board licence and is not covered by part II of this act.

Mr. COCKERAM: What about flying clubs?

Mr. HOWE: If they operate as a club, a non-profit operation, no licence is required. If it is owned by individuals who are expecting to make a profit from the operation, the planes must be licensed.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Free and reduced rate transportation.

Mr. MacNICOL: This section has to do with rates. What authority will establish and regulate the rates, both freight and passenger, for air transportation?

Mr. HOWE: This particular paragraph has not to do with rates; it has to do with no rates. It is to prevent the issue of free transportation or transportation at reduced rates. The rates require the approval of the air transport board. The procedure is the same as with the board of transport commissioners. The carrier files the rates, and those rates are approved, disapproved or amended by the air transport board.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. MacNICOL: Can people, companies or organizations, appear before that board to question the rates?

Mr. HOWE: Yes; the rate can be appealed either by the carrier or by the public.

Mr. WRIGHT: With regard to the question of transportation, members of parliament from western Canada and from the maritimes find themselves in a very different position from that of members of parliament from Ontario and Quebec with respect to attending to business of their own. Under the charters of the two railways we have free transportation on the railways. It seems to me that there should be some provision made whereby members of parliament who are five hundred miles or more distant from Ottawa—

An hon. MEMBER: Why five hundred?

Mr. WRIGHT: We have to draw the limit somewhere—should receive one or two trips by air during each session to enable them to return to their constituencies. This is a matter which should be given consideration. Certainly the members from western Canada and from the maritimes are working under a great handicap with respect to attending to their own business.

Mr. HOWE: The difficulty, of course, is that the number of persons who travel by air as compared with the number who travel by rail is very small. I might remind my hon. friend that there are 245 members of this House of Commons, which is roughly twenty-four plane loads of passengers.

Mr. CASSELMAN: All willing to go.

Mr. HOWE: All willing and anxious to go. We own only twenty-two planes; therefore we could not carry all the members of parliament if they all wished to travel the same day. If we had any proportion of free transportation by air I am afraid the public would have something to say about it. As a matter of fact even the employees of the lines are not allowed to travel on the planes if a paying passenger requires a seat. The president of the air lines was here the other day. He was very anxious to get to Winnipeg in a hurry. He could not get a seat without displacing a passenger; therefore he got on the train and went to Winnipeg.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am not suggesting that it be opened wide; I am suggesting that members living over five hundred miles away from Ottawa should have a limited number of trips each session, say, one or two. I think they should be granted some consideration in this matter.

Mr. CASE: Like the hon. member who has just spoken, I have thought for some time that some provision should be made for members outside the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I do not think we should be selfish about this thing. They have a greater problem than we. I know it is good for me to get back to my constituency, and I know how much they must appreciate it. Is there anything in section 11(a) which could be construed as eliminating competition?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. CASE: The minister says "no," but the bill reads as though it would be entirely in the hands of this board to determine what rates should be fixed.

Mr. HOWE: That is true, yes. The board can determine rates, but the rates it determines will apply to all.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Exception.

Mr. HAZEN: Would the minister explain why this section has been inserted in the bill? Section 12 (3) of the original act provides:

> The board shall not issue any such licence unless it is satisfied that the proposed commercial air service is and will be required by the present and future public convenience and necessity.

So that the public convenience and necessity are the governing factors. This section gives the board power to issue licences when public convenience and necessity are not the governing factors. Why is this section put in; or, to put it the other way around, why is the section I have just quoted from the original act left in? Why not just give the board power to issue licences as and when it sees fit?

Mr. HOWE: In the case of charter services, for instance, it is difficult to prove convenience and necessity. Another reason is that a service based on a certain city may get pleasure riders, people who like to go riding in aeroplanes just for the sake of the ride, and in such cases it is difficult to prove convenience and necessity. The purpose of this section is to give the board some leeway in the event that convenience and necessity cannot be proved for a service which prima facie should be able to exist and make a living for the operator.

Mr. COCKERAM: Can the minister tell us something of how they propose to establish rates for these operations? Are these commissioners qualified to do that? How will they go about establishing equitable rates?

Mr. HOWE: The rates are established largely by experience. The board has its department of economics which studies the cost of operating the service; and it will be the duty of the board to see that the prospective profits are not abnormally large, while on the other hand it will not be the purpose of the board to drive down the rate so that the line cannot pay its operating expenses.

On section 8—Operating certificate necessary.

Mr. FLEMING: I do not want at this point to reopen the whole question which was debated last year when the amending act was under consideration in the house. At that time, as the committee will recall, strong exception was taken to the limiting powers which were left with the minister. In view of the fact that the amendments now proposed do not contemplate any relaxation of the minister's ultimate control over the field of commercial aeronautics, I should like to ask what use has been made up to the present of the right of appeal to the minister and, in the second place, of the minister's right to pass judgment on decisions of the air transport board.

Mr. HOWE: There has been no appeal to the minister since the act came into force.

Mr. FLEMING: The other question was, has the minister in any way varied or revoked any order or decision of the air transport board; or is it just a case of its not having had to do anything yet?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. FLEMING: There have been no such occasions?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. FLEMING: What is to be the minister's policy with reference to the exercise of the powers conferred upon him under the 1944 act? In the first place it will be recalled that the powers reserved to the minister under that legislation are not specifically conferred upon the Minister of Munitions and Supply or the Minister of Reconstruction, but are conferred on the Minister of Transport; but the power is reserved to the governor in council to appoint some other minister in lieu of the Minister of Transport, and I take it that the governor in council has exercised that power to appoint the present Minister of Reconstruction as the minister under the 1944 amendment. There is a further qualification, that in matters relating to national defence the minister for that purpose is the Minister of National Defence for Air. Would the minister make a statement to the committee in reference to the policy he proposes to follow in connection with the exercise of the powers conferred upon the minister by the 1944 act, either to vary, revoke or otherwise amend orders made by the air transport board, or on appeal from their orders?

Mr. HOWE: It is difficult to announce in advance of an appeal just what will be the decision of the minister. If the minister is asked to review the facts he will do so and make his finding. The appeal to the minister is provided because it is the duty of the minister to see that the board conducts its affairs in accordance with announced government policy. Several announcements of government policy in relation to the air have been made in this House of Commons, and it will be the duty of the minister to review the operations of the board to see whether that policy is being carried out.

Mr. FLEMING: I take it, then, that in the exercise of the powers conferred upon the minister by the 1944 amendment he proposes to see to it that the decisions ultimately made under part II of this act will be in line with government policy; and it is government policy, then, that will ultimately prevail under part II. Is that right?

Mr. HOWE: Government policy as announced in the house will guide the deliberations of the board, and it is the duty of the minister to see that this is so. Naturally parliament is supreme in fixing the policy to be pursued in the development of the air. As far as the judicial functions of the board are concerned, that is a matter for the board.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Suspension, cancellation or amendment.

Mr. MacNICOL: Under this section I have just been wondering what will be the effect on the C.P.R. service from Edmonton to Fort McMurray and from Edmonton to Aklavik. Being a surface transport company, they will not now be allowed to conduct that air service; so what will happen to it?

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. HOWE: This provision is to allow an application to be varied. If, for example, the original application specified that the plane moving from Montreal to Toronto might stop at Kingston, this would give the board power to vary the application and say that it should stop at Kingston and Oshawa. It is just to vary the application in minor points.

Mr. MacNICOL: My question had to do with the far north. Under the act, as I understand it, all surface transport companies are now wiped out as far as the conduct of air services is concerned, and I have just been wondering what is to be the effect on the C.P.R. services from Edmonton to Yellowknife and from Edmonton all the way down to Aklavik.

Mr. HOWE: Those licences are not wiped out; they are still valid, and they will be reviewed, as provided in section 14 of the act, one year after the act comes into effect. As far as I know it is not the intention to wipe out any licences.

Mr. MacNICOL: If the C.P.R. cannot operate, the licences will be wiped out, or they will have to be sold to someone else.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, someone else will operate them.

Mr. HAZEN: This section gives the board power, among other things, to suspend or cancel a licence. It seems to me it would be only fair and just, before any such action was taken, that the air carrier should be given notice of the intention of the board and should have an opportunity to be heard. There is nothing in the section that provides for that action to be taken. My suggestion is that the section might be amended to provide that before a licence is cancelled, the air carrier shall be notified and have an opportunity to be heard by the board. Is there any objection to that amendment being made?

Mr. HOWE: The insurance on an aircraft operated by a carrier may have expired, or the board might suddenly get word that the operating certificate of a carrier was cancelled because his aircraft was not in airworthy condition. It might be necessary to suspend a licence without notice, but obviously the board would not do anything that would prejudice the position of the carrier, unless for good reason.

Mr. HAZEN: Has that not been given? There should be a section in the bill to provide for the cancelling of operating certificates. The bill provides for the cancellation of licences but there is no provision for the cancelling of certificates.

Mr. LESAGE : I do not think any power to cancel a certificate has to be mentioned because the right to cancel a certificate is correlative in law to the right to grant it. There is nothing being added to this section; this amendment merely clarifies it. The right to issue a licence includes the right to cancel, suspend or amend it.

Mr. STIRLING: Is there any reason why the words "or any part thereof" could not be included in subsection 8?

Mr. HOWE: My legal adviser does not think they are necessary, but there would be no objection to having them in.

Mr. STIRLING: I think it would be a good thing to have them in.

Mr. HOWE: I will ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs to move that section 9 be amended by adding in line 29 thereof after the word "licence" the words "or any part thereof".

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move accordingly.

Mr. LESAGE: Those words are useless; it is putting in a lot of words for nothing.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is being diplomatic, though.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. COCKERAM: Why should the appeal be to the minister? If I were the minister I think I would always support my subordinates, and I believe that is what the minister would do in this case. I am wondering if the appeal should not be to some judicial body?

Mr. HOWE: There is an appeal to the supreme court on questions of law.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 10—Operating without a licence.

Mr. CASE: This section provides that every person who operates a commercial air service without a valid licence shall be liable upon summary conviction to a fine of five thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term of six months or to both such fine and such imprisonment. The fine seems to be arbitrary.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend will appreciate that the five thousand dollars is a maximum fine. We may be dealing with some rather substantial corporations, and questions may arise where a fine of one thousand dollars would be a minor penalty for a serious infraction.

Mr. HAZEN: If this is the maximum fine, why should the wording not follow that of section 5? Before the words "five thousand dollars" we should have the words "not exceeding". If five thousand dollars is to be the maximum fine, as the minister has said, then I would suggest that the words "not exceeding" be put in before the word "five", to follow section 5.

Mr. HOWE: He may receive a fine or imprisonment or both.

Mr. LESAGE: The college of physicians act in the province of Quebec provides for a fine of $200 or sixty days in gaol for a third offence, but that has been interpreted by our courts as not being a maximum but a fixed payment because it does not say "not exceeding". I think the words "not exceeding" should be in this section.

Mr. HOWE: I will ask my colleague to move that section 10 be amended by adding in line 38 thereof the words "not exceeding" before the words "five thousand".

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LESAGE: Is the same principle not involved in connection with the term of imprisonment?

Mr. HAZEN: I suggest that we follow the wording of section 5.

Mr. HOWE: I agree. I will ask my colleague to move that the section be amended by adding the words "not exceeding" before the words "six months" in line 39.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move accordingly.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then you will have to go back to section 5 and do the same thing.

Mr. STIRLING: We should follow the wording of section 5 which is, "not to exceed a fine of five thousand dollars or imprisonment for six months."

Mr. LESAGE: The words "not to exceed" cover the fine and imprisonment.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved that section 10 be amended by striking out the word "for" in line 39 and inserting the words "not to exceed" in lieu thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HAZEN: How will the section as amended read, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: It will read, starting at line 38:

Upon summary conviction to a fine not to exceed five thousand dollars or imprisonment for a term not to exceed six months or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 11—Powers subject to international agreement.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the significance of this statement "international agreement or convention relating to civil aviation to which Canada is a party"?

Mr. HOWE: It means that the board must be bound by any international agreement entered into by the government.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, are we not going to insert the words "not to exceed" in section 5 dealing with penalties so as to make it conform with the amended section 10?

Mr. HOWE: We have amended both sections to read "not to exceed $5,000 and not to exceed six months imprisonment."

Mr. STIRLING: There has been an amendment to this section in committee, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes. The clause was amended in the committee by adding after "fish" the words "and crustaceans".

On section 3—Seizure of fish and containers.

The CHAIRMAN: This section has been amended by the committee as follows: In lines 17 and 18 the words "reasonably suspects" have been struck out and the following words substituted "suspects on reasonable grounds"; and in subsection 2 the word "three" at the end of line 24 has been struck out and the word "two" inserted in its place.

Mr. STIRLING: The committee made no change in subsection 3, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: No.

Bill reported.

The SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. BRACKEN: Next sitting. There have been amendments, and I understand that that is the general practice.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, Mr. Speaker, amendments were made to the bill in committee which were not in possession of the members of this house, and therefore my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is quite right. The third reading should be at the next sitting of the house.

WAR SERVICE GRANTS

INCORPORATION OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL—RECOMMENDATIONS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of bill No. 176, to amend the War Service Grants Act, 1944.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on the resolution stage preceding this bill I said that I would make a few remarks on the second reading. I shall be very brief. This is a bill to amend the War Service Grants Act passed in 1944.

The bill has been recommended by the special select committee on veterans affairs, and a copy of it has been printed in No. 16 of the minutes of the committee for Friday, November 9. This is one of a series of bills dealing with the reestablishment of former members of the forces, all of which are being dealt with by the same procedure.

The others will be presented to the house as soon as they have been completely reviewed by the committee, and recommended by council.

It will be remembered that on October 4, this house in appointing the select committee authorized them to consider all legislation passed since the commencement of the war relating to pensions, treatment and reestablishment of former members of His Majesty's forces and of other persons who have otherwise engaged in pursuits closely related to war.

The committee was also instructed to prepare and bring in one or more bills to clarify, amend or supplement the above legislation.

The War Service Grants Act is the first of these acts reviewed by the committee, and the amending bill is the first of the committee's recommendations to the house. The recommendations of the committee have been accepted by the government and the bill is now in the form of a government measure.

The act was passed in 1944, and we have had a year's experience in administering it.

As is very often the case with new legislation affecting the rights and privileges of individuals, we have found by experience that the original measure was capable of improvement.

The act authorized the governor in council to make regulations, and two major orders in council were passed embodying regulations under the two parts of the act, one dealing with war service gratuity, the other dealing with reestablishment credit.

Under the emergency powers conferred upon the government by the War Measures Act several orders in council were passed which had the effect of amending the original act.

As soon as the select committee was set up, the act, the various amending orders in council, and the regulations, were placed before the committee for review, together with a draft bill prepared by the department's legal advisers. This draft bill embodied the various changes which had been made since the act was passed by parliament, but did not introduce any new principles other than those which were already in effect by order in council.

Departmental officers, representatives of veterans' organizations, and others were examined as witnesses.

The committee then gave a most searching and critical analysis to every clause and every sentence of the draft bill.

The amending bill which I am now bringing before the house, upon recommendation of the committee and with the approval of council, constitutes substantially a measure to incorporate in the act the various changes effected by orders in council as the result of administrative experience.

I should be doing very much less than justice to hon. members of the select committee if, however, I were not to inform the house that many important improvements have been effected as a result of the committee's deliberations.

The constant objective of the committee, fully concurred in by the government, was to tighten up the wording of the various sections so as to protect in every possible way the interests of the veterans. This will appear conspicuously in the amendments to the interpretation clause, clarifying and broadening definitions.

The most important new principle introduced since the act was dealt with on the floor of the house in 1944 is the establishment of a board of review to deal with cases where a gratuity is withheld on account of disciplinary action taken against a member of the forces during the time of his service.

The board is given the right to authorize payment of gratuity where its refusal would constitute an unjustified extension of the punishment already inflicted by the service.

While such a board of review had been set up by the Department of National Defence, the provisions in the bill are much broader and more specific than those adopted by regulation.

The proposals now placed before the house are, in fact, the recommendation of the select committee which has been accepted by the government and in which I am sure the house will heartily concur.

The other features of the bill, while important, are matters of detail which can better be discussed when the bill reaches the committee stage in the house.

I am going to ask my parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), who has been the able chairman of the able parliamentary committee on veterans affairs, to take active charge of the detailed clauses of the measure now before the house.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): I should like to say a few words with reference to the bill which is now coming before the house. Since the session opened we have listened to a good many remarks as to what we owe to the men who fought for us overseas, and I am sure we all feel very grateful indeed that the war is now over and that we are returning to the ways of peace.

Our first problem as a nation is, I am sure, to see that those who have made it possible for us to enjoy victory and to retain our much-loved and desired way of living are properly reinstated in the life of this country and that they take their proper places in every phase of our national activities. This should not be so difficult a matter for us in Canada as it is with most of the other nations. Some few nations, perhaps, like the United States, Australia and New Zealand, are in much the same position as Canada, but for the nations of Europe rehabilitation will be a much more difficult problem than it is for us in Canada. For our more favoured position our people should be grateful.

The minister has made his remarks this afternoon very brief. That is rather an exception in the case of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, but it is an exception we all appreciate. He spoke of the veterans affairs committee and his satisfaction at the work which has been done by the members. I might say, as a member of that committee, that we have been sitting for the past five or six weeks, meeting on an average about four days a week, from half-past ten in the morning until one o'clock in the afternoon. The veterans affairs committee, as the minister said the other evening, compares favourably with any other veterans' committees we have had in the past. I have had the honour and the pleasure of sitting on some of those committees, and I know that one idea actuated all their work, namely, to see to it that the very best legislation could be obtained for the veteran. I should say in this connection that the veterans have had the benefit of the work of the returned men's associations, and for the past twenty or twenty-five years we could not and would not have had in this country the good legislation which sometimes we think we have if it had not been for the efforts of the various soldier organizations. This country and the returned men of Canada owe a great debt to the Canadian Legion and other such organizations of returned men.

Gratuities are not something entirely new. I remember that when the minister spoke before the committee some time ago he gave great credit for the work which was done in this regard from 1916 until the present time, and I think he then mentioned that the gratuities after the war of 1914-18 were considered generous for that day. I might recall what was paid following the last war; for three years or more of service overseas, six months pay and allowance of rank; for two years or more overseas, five months pay and allowance of rank; for one year overseas, four months pay and allowance; for less than one year overseas, three months pay and allowance.

We have had the benefit of the experience and the legislation of the past, and I would point out, when we hear criticism, as we often do, of what was done after the war of 1914-18, that the men who legislated at that time had not the experience of former wars. It was practically a new field. I agree with the minister's statement on a former occasion, that the men at that time did a good job. As far as these war service grants are concerned, every section of the bill has been carefully considered by the committee; and I think it is one of the least contentious measures, if not the least contentious, that will come before the veterans affairs committee. I base that opinion on the fact that the legion and other war veterans' organizations which appeared before us had less criticism and offered less advice on this measure than on any of the others.

The minister has mentioned a section which was particularly difficult for the members of the committee, and that is the section dealing with gratuities and benefits to men of the services discharged for misconduct. Many of our sittings were taken up in discussing this difficult problem. The members of the committee were most anxious that no injustice should be done to members returning from overseas. We all had in mind that very often a good soldier, with two or three years' active service, because he has been overwrought or for some other reason has committed an offence which is regarded as a serious military infraction and is given a term of imprisonment or some other detention for misconduct. This was reacting against the soldier in the old act and it was felt that in the new one something should be done for such men.

There was quite a feeling in the committee that this section should be eliminated altogether and that all men who had served overseas, irrespective of whether there was a charge of misconduct against them or not, should be given the gratuity. However, the matter having been thoroughly discussed and considered from every point of view, it was felt that this could not be done. But the next best thing was done—I will not say the next best thing but probably the best thing—and that was the decision that a board of review should be set up to consider every case of misconduct. The members of the board of review sat with the committee in all their sittings and heard opinions of members, heard opinions of men in the armed services, army, navy and air force; and I am satisfied that this board of review, when it sets about its work, will see that no injustice is done to any deserving man who has been discharged from the service. I am satisfied that all deserving men will receive the gratuity which the country intended they should receive.

There is, however, one principle that does not seem to me to be altogether right. There are men to-day serving terms in the penitentiary. Some of these men were given a year or two or three years in the penitentiary for offences. When a man is punished by a court we can usually consider that the punishment he receives is the punishment to which he is entitled. Under our gratuity act a man can still, if the board of review so decides, have his gratuity taken away from him. The matter was brought up in the committee. It seems as though we were giving double punishment for one offence, which we might not regard as British justice. However, this point, like the others, was thoroughly discussed, and all members of the committee felt that no great injustice would be done with a board of review going over these cases individually and deciding each case on its merits.

Most of us who know the personnel of the board of review are satisfied that the type of men on the board is such that they will do justice to the returned men. It would not be fair or right for me to take up the time of the house in going into the bill section by section. That will be done by the committee. But looking back to 1944, when the purpose of the measure was set out, I find it was then stated that the purpose of the bill was to recognize the services of the members of His Majesty's forces who have been on active service and to assist them in their reestablishment. That is the purpose, to recognize the services of our forces and to assist them in their reestablishment.

I should like to point out ways in which I feel that this purpose of assisting the men in their reestablishment is being defeated. I have only to mention that in our opinion the two main things in reestablishment of returning men are, first, to provide the man with suitable and decent living quarters in this country and, second, to provide him with a job. This is not what we find in Canada to-day. Very much to our regret, many thousands of our men are returning to find that there are no homes to which they can take their families, and they are spending very much of their gratuity money in going from place to place looking for a proper home, for proper quarters for themselves and families.

Again, in the matter of looking for jobs it is common knowledge—our daily papers confirm it—that there are fewer jobs than there are men for them. Only this morning a report stated that there were 40,000 more men looking for jobs to-day than there were jobs for them. This means that a great many returned men have to use the gratuity which was supposed to be for their reestablishment to keep themselves while they are looking for jobs.

There is another matter which I think might be mentioned as defeating the purpose of reestablishing our returned men, or, at least, a number of them. I mean the cases of the men whose wives are still in England. I have received a great many letters, as I am sure many members have, from men returning whose wives are still in England and who find it impossible to be reestablished here until those wives with their families are brought back from the old country.

It has been the contention of the Minister of National Defence that our soldiers should be brought back first. In general, we can, perhaps, agree with that point of view. Still, if we had properly organized the return of our men to this country I think we could have brought back thousands of these wives at the same time. I had a letter from a man who said that he had been in the air force for four years. He had been married for four years and had seen his wife for only eleven days in that time. He was back in Canada now; it looked as though it would be months before his wife and child could be brought out to this country, and it was impossible for him to be re-established until they came. A ship might have been set aside to assist in bringing out the wives of these men.

I believe also there are thousands of men who have been returning to Canada who spent only a short time overseas. We talk about first in, first out, but we all know that is a principle which has not been followed. Many thousands of men have been returned here who had only a short service overseas. I believe the wives of men who had served for four or five years on the other side should have been given preference over those men who had such little service. I might go farther. I believe, knowing the chivalry of the soldiers of this country, had it been requested of them, there would have been no difficulty at all in obtaining some of the space they have taken for bringing these stranded wives to Canada.

We are satisfied that this bill is the expression of the opinion of the returned men of this house. It also expresses the opinion of the veterans who gave us advice. Over the last twenty-five years we have had what we have considered to be very fine veterans' acts. There is no question about that. On paper they look good; but we have also found that in the administration of those acts there were many shortcomings. If I can gather from what I have heard expressed in this committee, it is the intention that in the future there will be no more penny-pinching in the administration of veterans affairs. It is our idea that the returned man should always have the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. MacNICOL: He never gets it.

Mr. BROOKS: We should see that no injustices are perpetrated in the name of these rigid and hide-bound regulations which in the past have so often defeated the real spirit of veterans' legislation.

As I said, we shall discuss this bill section by section. Along with the minister I feel that there will be very little with which hon. members will find fault. If it is administered as it should be; if every effort is made to see that our men obtain housing in this country; if every effort is made to see that they receive proper employment, and if some of the other abuses which are perhaps outside the minister's department are attended to, then I am satisfied that this measure will be a very great help to our returned men.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I have no intention of making a speech at this time; I merely wish to say that as a member of the committee I agree with most of what the last speaker had to say. The committee worked in harmony. The decision that brought about this bill was unanimous. Nevertheless I wish to place this group on record by saying that while we approve the grants as set out in this bill, we desire to emphasize that it will not in any way replace useful employment, which is still our major responsibility. It is still our major responsibility to returning personnel to see that we do not get into the frame of mind of thinking that when we relieve their immediate circumstances on their coming out of the service by grants of this kind, the job is complete.

I should also like to say a word with respect to the discharged service personnel who are coming out with a misconduct discharge. The test of this particular bill will be its application. We approve the board of review set up to examine all discharges for misconduct and the board of review which is dealing directly with gratuity applications as to whether they will be granted or otherwise. Up to the present time the personnel of the boards are in every way, so far as we can determine, suitable and sympathetic; but we must bear in mind that the personnel of these boards are open to change from time to time. The present wording of the act puts wide administrative powers in the hands of these boards. I say that because I think the veterans affairs committee under the present minister, and a capable chairman, has an obligation. We shall be here for the next four or five years. We wish closely to follow the administration of this particular section of the bill to see that every last service man or woman affected by a misconduct discharge gets a proper examination and that the board makes what in our judgment is a decision in accordance with the interpretation or opinion of the members when this particular bill was drafted.

When the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) spoke about penny-pinching I took my mind back to the time when a gun was placed at the head of pensioners and civil servants in this country forcing them to give up either their job or their pension. I hope we never get back to that kind of administration. The members of this group are supporting the bill. We think the committee did a fair job in the time at its disposal. The subject-matter covered by this bill is a controversial one, and we could have been many months at it. In the time at its disposal the committee did a first-class job, and we shall watch the administration of the measure very carefully.

I just wish to leave one thought with the minister with reference to service personnel discharged with a misconduct discharge. I know this does not come within the purview of the department. The dependents of those particular people have had no pay and allowances for months and months. I discussed this matter with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Abbott). I hope I am going to get an answer some time. Christmas is coming on. The husband is incarcerated and there has been no allowance for months. Therefore it will not be a very bright Christmas for such people. I suggest that the minister might use his persuasive powers with National Defence to see if they cannot loosen up and do something.

Mr. Speaker, I just wish to place the members of this group on record as being cognizant of the implications of the bill and to say that we shall watch its administration very closely.

Mr. J. A. MARSHALL (Camrose): Representing as I do the Social Credit group, I wish to say on their behalf that we are thoroughly in accord with this bill What I might say at this time would be repetitious, because I heartilly agree with the sentiments expressed by the two previous speakers. In committee we raised objections to certain sections of the act, sections 4, 11 and 12. We shall be content to allow the bill to go through second reading in the hope that perhaps we may offer some constructive suggestions when the bill comes into committee. That is about all that I have to say at this time, Mr. Speaker

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Payment of gratuity in case of death of member of the forces.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Might I ask under which section "misconduct" will come?

Mr. TUCKER: Sections 10, 11 and 12 deal with "misconduct". We have not reached them yet.

Mr. WRIGHT: Section 2 (1) gives the definition of "misconduct".

Mr. MARSHALL: I should like to say a word on this section. It says, and I quote:

(1) If a member of the forces dies on service or after discharge but before he has been paid gratuity in full, payment of the gratuity or the unpaid balance thereof shall be made:

(a) to a person who was in receipt of or who, in the opinion of the dependents' allowance board, was eligible for dependents' allowance on behalf of the deceased member immediately prior to the member's death or discharge.

We dealt with this section in committee. At page 255 of the proceedings of that committee the hon. member for Acadia had this to say, and I should like to put it on Hansard because it sums up the whole matter from our point of view:

A man's life is the main thing. If a man goes through the war he gets a gratuity, and if a man is wounded he gets a gratuity up to the time of his discharge. I understand now that the department are considering giving a gratuity while undergoing hospitalization. If a man is killed overseas the gratuity should be paid up until the end of the war.

That is the point around which the discussion centred and we are still of that opinion. This gratuity should not be cut off as of the date of death but should be extended to the end of the war.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not want to start an argument at five minutes to six o'clock, but I should like to ask another question for the sake of clarification. A recommendation was brought in by a special subcommittee as to the meaning of "misconduct", and I wish to know when this recommendation will be brought before the house. As a member of that committee I am prepared to accept the various clauses, but I understand that the matter dealt with by the subcommittee is to be put in a separate recommendation to the house, concerning a different department of the government. However, I think we might have that recommendation explained.

Mr. TUCKER: The subcommittee to which the hon. member refers dealt with the difficulty a man might experience in finding employment after his discharge if it was stated on his discharge certificate that he had been discharged for misconduct. It was considered that this would be a great handicap. The subcommittee which studied the matter made a recommendation, but it is not a matter for our department since, of course, discharges come under the Department of National Defence. However, at the next meeting of our committee we plan to study the recommendation of the subcommittee and to hear representations in the matter from the Department of National Defence, in the hope of making some tangible and helpful recommendation to parliament with regard to this matter.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: As one member of that committee I cannot quite see eye-to-eye with the chairman of the committee. I do not see how one can recommend the adoption of a bill which, as I understand it, defines what "misconduct" means, without bringing before parliament the interpretation of "misconduct" as far as the act is concerned. I brought up this matter in the committee, and I intend to stay with it, but I wish to know what the recommendation of the committee was. Whatever it was, I am quite prepared to abide by the majority, but I want to know what the recommendation of the committee was with regard to the recommendation brought in by the subcommittee in reference to misconduct.

Mr. TUCKER: In the first place I think the hon. member is under a misapprehension as to the purpose of the subcommittee. The committee accepted the definition of "misconduct"—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Oh, no.

Mr. TUCKER: That is correct; the committee accepted the definition of "misconduct". The purpose of the sub-committee was to see if something could not be done, when the appeal board ruled that a service man should get his gratuity and reestablishment credit, to have a new discharge certificate issued or something of that sort, so that when he went to hunt for employment he would not have to show a certificate which indicated that he was discharged for misconduct. But "misconduct" as defined in the act was actually accepted by the committee on the understanding that this sub-committee would study this other related question. It did so and brought in a report; and, as I say, it is hoped to study that report at the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I want to take exception to that.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. QUELCH: Soldiers who are brought back wounded and who enter hospital come under the Department of Veterans Affairs, and I wish to know whether such men will be awarded gratuity up to March 31, 1946. I should like to quote from page 199 of the minutes of proceedings of the special committee, as follows:

> Mr. Woods: Mr. Chairman, I have under consideration at the present time an amendment to our recent regulations that would enable us to carry that man on in hospital up to the deadline of March 31, 1946, for gratuity. We have under consideration an amendment.

I understand that certain difficulties have arisen and I was wondering what the final decision might be.

Mr. TUCKER: The matter is under consideration and may actually have been passed. At any rate it is close to being dealt with.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Manner of payment of gratuity.

Mr. WRIGHT: It was agreed in the committee that the payment of gratuities and reestablishments grants should be based on the number of months served in the forces. There had to be twelve months service in Canada to become eligible under the Veterans Land Act for settlement on the land. We agreed to that in committee, but I have since been informed that there are certain men who were in the forces and who were sent by the authorities to serve in other establishments. For instance, there were men who were sent to serve in civilian air training schools. They might serve there for eight or nine months or a year and then be recalled into the air service. The time spent in the air training school does not count in the computation of points for discharge. These men find they have a small number of points for discharge and are being held in the air force, while other men, who continued in the force, are getting their discharges. It seems to me that these men have a reasonable kick in not being allowed points for discharge for their service in the air school, especially when they were sent there by the authorities. I wanted to bring this matter to the minister's attention so that it might receive consideration, because there are a number of men in this category.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Reestablishment credit.

Mr. QUELCH: As the committee knows, if a veteran elects to take the benefits under the Veterans Land Act he is debarred from receiving a reestablishment credit, but under this section provision is made for the veteran still getting a reestablishment credit, provided that he only comes under section 13 of the act. Where a veteran has come under section 13 of the Veterans Land Act and is under the impression that he would not be able to obtain a reestablishment credit, will he be notified by the Department of Veterans Affairs that he is eligible.

Mr. TUCKER: Yes, I think I can assure my hon. friend that that will be done.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Conditions of availability of reestablishment credit.

Section agreed to.

Sections 9 and 10 agreed to.

On section 11—Exceptions to entitlement.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think the question ought to be asked once more, whether or not the war gratuity was conceived of and introduced as a reward for services. Would the minister care to tell us whether that was the object?

Mr. MACKENZIE: With the consent of my hon. friend I would quote from memory what the Prime Minister said last year in this house when he referred to the war service grants as being an expression of the nation's gratitude for services rendered. In my mind there is a difference between a war service grant and a reestablishment credit. The latter is for a period of ten years and is bound up with the reestablishment of the ex-service men and the building up of the national economy, the two things really being synonymous. The first, the grant, is definitely an expression of gratitude for the services rendered.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is as I would interpret it, using just the ordinary common sense of a layman. Therefore I am quite astounded to find that any idea has been entertained by this house of denying to a soldier a gratuity for the days and weeks and months during which he served his country; simply because, perhaps after years of faithful service, he has erred and has been punished by court martial or otherwise. When the original act was passed and sections 11 and 12 were included, this house did violence to its own intelligence. Surely, if the gratuity is a reward for service, then every day and week and month a soldier serves he should receive his gratuity for that day and week and month. But as matters are now, it appears to me that the gratuity has been used as an additional means of punishing the soldier.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Of course it is. How else can one possibly interpret it? If a soldier after a long period of service commits an offence and is punished, and then is given not only the military punishment for his misdeed but the additional punishment of being deprived of the gratuity which he had earned through his many trying days and experiences, surely that is a miscarriage of justice of the most flagrant kind. I protest against the inclusion of these two clauses in the act, Mr. Chairman, and I believe that the committee should delete them and grant the gratuity as an expression of the nation's gratitude, as the minister has so well said, thus giving the soldier a reward for the service which he has rendered. But as this act stands to-day a man might have won the V.C.; he might have saved a thousand lives; he might have won the most important positions in the enemy's lines; yet because of some inadvertence he might lose all his past gratuity.

I am told that an understanding has been arrived at by the committee this year, in virtue of which a board or group of men have been set up with instructions to be very considerate and sympathetic toward the soldier when considering the possibility of depriving him of his gratuity. That is a step in the right direction. My contention is that the other course was a step in the wrong direction and never should have been taken. I am astounded that any member of the house ever entertained that idea with any degree of tolerance whatsoever.

Mr. SKEY: I should like to point out one thing in connection with what the hon. member for Lethbridge has said. It is the ordinary practice under military law that when a soldier commits a crime and receives detention for it, he loses that much time in his service record but he does not lose seniority beyond that. In peace time we recognize the principle which the hon. member has advocated, that he should not lose beyond the time during which his services are not available to the nation.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Reappointment or reenlistment—deferment of gratuity or credit.

Mr. TUCKER: When the committee was considering this section it was thought that there might be cases where the soldier reenlisted and where his gratuity or credit would be suspended until he came out of the forces and that in the meantime he might have undertaken obligations, relying upon his gratuity to fulfil them. It was therefore felt by the committee that the minister should have the right, on the soldier making application and making out a case, to grant him his entire gratuity and reestablishment credit even if he reenlisted. It was thought that subsection 4 of section 16 as enacted by this section 12 covered that, and I assured the committee that it did, but on thinking about it since I am not sure that it does, and to make amply sure that it does I would ask that the words "unless the minister otherwise directs" be inserted after the word "granted" in line 29 of page 11 of the bill, so that it will read "shall not be paid or granted unless the minister otherwise directs." That makes it very clear that if the man reenlists he can, if he makes out a case, have the minister order that he get his entire gratuity or reestablishment credit.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 13—Persons of Canadian domicile who served in other commonwealth forces.

Mr. SKEY: A graduate of the Royal Military College who happened to be in England in September, 1939, served with the British forces for four years and then came back to Canada and served with the Canadian forces for one year, and he has not received one cent of gratuity to this day. He has now been out of the forces for a year. Would the minister explain how the department deals with such a case?

Mr. TUCKER: There is no reason in the world why he should not get his gratuity under this section as amended. Formerly there were cases where discharges took place and the soldier did not sign the application for gratuity. It is signed now as a matter of form along with the other papers, but formerly in some cases the application for gratuity was not signed and the soldier wondered why he did not get his gratuity. It was because he had never applied for it. But now upon discharge that is one of the forms he signs as a matter of routine.

Mr. GILLIS: What machinery is there set up in Ottawa to look after the gratuity of Canadian nationals who served in the British forces? Only a few days ago I was in touch with the estates branch of the R.C.A.F. in Ottawa trying to get some information as to how a dependent mother of a flying officer killed with the R.A.F. might go about settling his estate. The R.C.A.F. advised me that they had nothing to do with the matter and suggested that I get in touch with the R.A.F. If we have accepted responsibility, as we have under this act, it seems to me that some administrative machinery should be set up in Ottawa which would handle such cases, because it is pretty difficult for an old lady in Vancouver or far away on the east coast to carry on the necessary legal untangling required to settle her son's estate with the British authorities overseas. Is there any such machinery in Ottawa, and, if not, is it intended to set up such machinery?

Mr. TUCKER: I think the suggestion of the hon. member is a very good one, because these people are used to dealing with the estates of Canadian servicemen and they might very well extend their activities to assist dependents of those Canadians who went into the R.A.F. It is a very good suggestion and I will bring it to the attention of the Department of National Defence under whose administration the handling of estates of deceased servicemen comes.

Mr. LENNARD: I know of a chap who is a member of the R.C.A.F. and went overseas, took special duties and was required to join the R.A.F., and who was killed while engaged on those special duties.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What year?

Mr. LENNARD: I could not say exactly; it was several years ago. He was killed while operating as a member of the R.A.F. His case, I presume, would also come under the suggestion just made.

[Mr. Skey.]

Mr. TUCKER: It will be a matter of bringing it to the attention of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. SKEY: Is there any coverage in the act for Canadian nationals who joined other allied forces; for instance, United States, Polish, French or Dutch forces? Are they eligible for gratuity?

Mr. TUCKER: That is now being actively considered, and it is hoped that something will be done about it shortly.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION TO MEET CERTAIN EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway company to issue securities not exceeding $8,800,000 in principal amount to provide the moneys necessary to meet capital expenditures made or capital indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1945; to authorize the governor in council to guarantee the principal, interest and sinking funds of securities issued by the company for the purpose aforesaid; to authorize the making of temporary loans to the said company secured by such securities and not exceeding $8,800,000 in principal amount to enable the said company to meet such expenditures and indebtedness; with authority to give financial aid and assistance to other companies of the said national system.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. MacNICOL: I think the acting minister had better give us some explanation of this measure.

Mr. MAYHEW: The bill which will be founded on this resolution is similar to those which have been passed on previous occasions. The general explanation of it is this. It is for the purpose of providing authority for the financing of the capital expenditures of the railway system and the retirement of miscellaneous maturing obligations, either by way of loan by the dominion or by the issue of securities of the company to the public on the guarantee of the dominion. The total amount to be provided for this purpose is limited to $8,800,000 divided as follows:

Additions and betterments, less retirements	$15,008,000
Acquisition of securities	1,015,000
Retirement of maturing obligations, including sinking fund, and equipment: principal payments	10,777,000
	$26,800,000
Less available from reserve for depreciation and debt discount amortization	18,000,000
	$ 8,800,000

The capital budget as set out above was approved by the standing committee on railways.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is all the explanation which is probably necessary at this time.

Mr. FRASER: Why cannot this money be taken out of the earnings of this year?

Mr. MAYHEW: It is all taken out of earnings but $8,800,000.

Mr. FRASER: Well, why could not that be taken out of earnings? This is the best year the railway has ever had.

Mr. HAZEN: I was a member of the committee to which the annual report of the Canadian National railways was referred. I had the opportunity of hearing the evidence which was given by Mr. R. C. Vaughan, president of the company, and other officials of the railway. There are one or two matters arising out of their evidence which I should like to bring to the attention of the committee, but since I did not know that this matter was coming on until some time this afternoon, I trust the committee will bear with me if I follow very closely the notes I have with me.

Mr. MAYHEW: The bill cannot be distributed until after it has been introduced; therefore hon. members have not the bill in front of them. So may I suggest that the hon. member should allow the second reading of this resolution to pass and make his statement in committee on the bill itself.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN: (Mr. Golding): What is before the committee now is the resolution. If this is passed, the bill will follow.

Mr. HAZEN: I am speaking to the resolution, Mr. Chairman, if I am in order. The report of the directors of the Canadian National Railways to the Minister of Transport, which was dated March 15, 1945, and which was submitted to the committee for examination stated on page 7 that the cash surplus for the year's operations was $23,062,924.35 as compared with $35,639,412.23 for the previous year; that is, there was a decrease of $12,612,000. This is a very large decrease. When it is considered that the operating revenues were over half a million dollars more than in the previous year it is an alarming decrease. The decrease was the result of the operating expenses of the railway being $38,072,000 more than in the previous year.

The report states:

> This increase in operating expenses was occasioned by higher wage rates in 1944 as compared with 1943, amounting to $23,348,000; higher prices of materials $7,102,000; and additional maintenance of track and equipment $5,893,000. The amounts referred to for wages and materials do not represent additional man-hours or additional quantities of material but result from higher unit prices paid by the railway for labour as the result of retroactive wage awards by regulatory authorities and the increased prices paid for fuel, ties, rail and other materials used in maintenance and operation.

The report goes on to say that the average price of fuel increased from $5.37 to $6.10 per ton, involving an added expenditure of $4,906,000. New rails averaged $57.33 per ton as compared with $55.26 per ton in the previous year. Treated ties averaged $1.65 compared with $1.42, and untreated ties, $1.04 compared with 88 cents. There was an increase of 2·5 per cent in the price of other railway materials. These figures show clearly that the "historical decision", as the Minister of Finance called it in his budget speech, at page 1035 of Hansard, made by the government in October, 1941, to consolidate wage controls, institute salary controls and impose comprehensive price ceilings, has not been lived up to so far as our railways are concerned.

In connection with this matter I wish to call the attention of the committee to the replies to one or two questions that were asked Mr. Vaughan, president of the Canadian National Railways, when he was before the railway committee, as reported on page 23 of the proceedings:

> Mr Reid: What about the cost of materials? I notice that fuel oil has gone up by at least 14 per cent, coal has gone up, new rails have advanced and the price of steel. Some of these articles were under the price ceilings. Evidently something has escaped the price ceiling.
> Mr. Vaughan: That is true. When some of the steel mills wanted an increase in the price of their products it was felt that the ordinary consumer of steel could not pay. Apparently in Ottawa they thought the railways were doing pretty well and they could afford to pay, so they selected some of the commodities the railways use and advanced the prices.
> Mr. Reid: And they went over the ceiling. Those steel prices were not under the ceiling, so they made the railways the goat.
> Mr. Vaughan: Those prices were ceiling prices. That ceiling price was raised by the wartime price control on some of these commodities that the railways use. That was true of other commodities such as ties and lumber. All those prices were increased very substantially.

Mr. Reid: Do you think the raise was allowed so the steel companies could get a little more from the railway companies on their steel?

Mr. Vaughan: Well, it was felt that the railways use certain steel commodities that no one else uses, such as track fastenings, steel rails and things of that kind, and apparently at that time, if the steel mills received an advance on the products that the railways used that would satisfy them for the time being.

The report of Mr. Vaughan to the minister contains the following words on which I should like to lay some emphasis:

The directors feel that more than passing attention should be directed to the higher cost of operation due to these increased unit prices for labour and material over which the management has no control.

Mr. Vaughan was asked, when he was before the committee, as reported at page 23, whether he thought the committee should direct their attention to this statement in the report and whether he had any suggestions to make as to how they could approach it. In his reply he said he did not think the committee could do much about it.

The report of the auditors of the railway, which was read to the committee, also refers to this matter, as will be found on page 2:

Looking forward to the post-war period, the impact of the accumulated war-time increases in wage rates and material prices on the operating results from prospective revenues of that time is a matter to which we commend the consideration of parliament.

The future operation of this company is a matter which, it seems to me, should be seriously studied by the Minister of Transport and the government. Now that the war is over, the revenue of the railway will be greatly reduced. There can be no question about that. Mr. Vaughan, in his statement to the committee on October 23, page 4, said:

I feel it is necessary, however, to sound a note of caution. It is probable that when the war emergency is over traffic will recede from war-time levels. To what extent it will recede we shall have to wait to find out.

We may have to wait to find out the exact amount, but I do not think the government should adopt a policy of wait and see. I am calling the matter to the attention of the committee and of the Minister of Transport and the government because I think the government should take steps now that the situation has been brought before them, to inquire into ways and means of preventing the road from becoming again a great drain on the taxpayers of Canada.

To use Mr. Vaughan's words, more than passing attention should be directed to this matter and it should have the careful consideration of the government now.

This brings me to another matter: I believe there should be closer cooperation between the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. From questions that were asked Mr. Vaughan I got the impression that there has not been as close cooperation as there might have been.

Part II of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Act, which was passed in 1933 and assented to on May 23 of that year, states that the two railways:

. . . are, for the purposes of effecting economies and providing for more remunerative operation, directed to attempt forthwith to agree and continuously to endeavour to agree, and they are authorized to agree, upon such cooperative measures, plans and arrangements as are fair and reasonable and best adapted (with due regard to equitable distribution of burden and advantages as between them) to effect such purposes.

They are further directed:

That whenever they shall so agree, they shall endeavour to provide, through negotiations with representatives of the employees affected . . . for a fair and reasonable apportionment as between the employees of National Railways and the Pacific Railways respectively of such employment as may be incident to the operation of such measure, plan or arrangement.

The act goes on to state that:

It shall be the duty of the companies, and they are hereby required, to meet by their proper officers forthwith and from time to time as they may agree, to discuss and to effect by agreement, if possible, the purposes set forth in this part of the act.

I think the Minister of Transport or the government should make some inquiries into what cooperation there has been between the two railways with a view to seeing that the intentions of this act are lived up to.

I said a moment ago that I got the impression that there was not as close cooperation between the railways as was intended when the act was passed. I got that impression despite the fact that in the course of his evidence Mr. Vaughan said:

The Canadian Pacific Railway officials and our officials are in touch with each other almost every day on some matters. We cooperate with them closely.

Mr. Vaughan went on to say:

After all, we are keen competitors. I do not suppose there is any place in the world where there is keener competition than between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think that can be avoided as long as the two railways are operating as they are.

Now, competition makes for efficiency, but it should be subject to proper controls; controls that provide on the one hand for proper hours of work and living standards and wages for employees, and on the other hand provide protection to the taxpayer from unnecessary expenditures and cutthroat competition which may result in large deficits.

Not only must competition be subject to controls, but competition must be fair. It seems to me there can be no fair competition between two companies if one of them is permitted to go ahead, or it if it should go ahead, with the idea or on the presumption that the government, that is the taxpayer, will pay any deficit it incurs, while the other is obliged to meet its obligations out of earnings, and in addition, pay large taxes.

Cooperation is as essential as competition in the interests of the taxpayers of this country.

There are two other factors that enter into the picture. One is the fact that Trans-Canada Air Lines, which the government has established as a great monopoly to control trans-Canada airways will have an adverse effect on Canadian National Railways earnings. Mr. Symington, president of Trans-Canada Air Lines, was asked what effect the air lines which it was proposed to establish to the British West Indies and South America would have on the earnings of Canadian National Steamships. He replied that he did not know if the matter had been considered. In reply to another question he said:

> There was no use blinding our eyes to the fact that they (that is the T.C.A. and other air routes) are going to interfere with the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National Steamships.

It is going to cut into the earnings of those two companies. The question of government-owned transportation systems cutting into each other's business should be studied by the government, for it is not in the interests of the taxpayers to have one government-owned transportation company cutting the throat of another government-owned transportation company. That should be avoided. As I have said, the Minister of Transport and the government should direct their attention to this question.

I would suggest that the government might give some consideration to amending part II of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Act, which provides for cooperation, so that it might include government and other air lines operating in or from Canada.

The other factor which should be given some consideration is competition between railways and auto trucks. I hold in my hand a report of a statement which was made by Mr. Hector L. Lapointe, Canadian National Railways economist, in an address which he made this month. This is what he says:

> Competition between railways and trucks has never been, and is not now, fair or equal, and annual losses in revenue to the railways have assumed alarming proportions.

This is a statement of a C.N.R. economist, a qualified official. He goes on to say:

> As a result, in the pre-war years, the situation was so grave that the financial stability of the railways was badly shaken. In fact, it was only through the very heavy war-time traffic that the railways were able to replenish their treasuries. To-day their position is sound, but will only remain so as measures are taken to place all forms of land transport on an equal basis and also to correct the business ways of the trucker which, under existing conditions, promote cutthroat tactics, wasteful competition and discrimination.

Mr. Lapointe went on to say that the first and most important steps toward a solution was a proper coordination of all methods of land transport. I would direct this statement of an official of the national railways to the attention of the Minister of Transport and to the government.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the only suggestions I wish to make at this time.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Before the resolution carries, I would first commend the hon. member for St. John-Albert for his thoughtful remarks with respect to this resolution. I should like to direct some special questions to the parliamentary assistant to the minister who has the responsibility for this resolution or to the Minister of Transport. This resolution provides for the capital expenditures required by the Canadian National Railways for the current year and, I presume, for the ensuing year. I should like to ask the hon. member who has the resolution in charge and the Minister of Transport what provision has been made for the construction of the Canso causeway or bridge and also for the realignment and improvement of the grades on the railways serving the eastern part of Nova Scotia. That subject has been discussed in the house on different occasions and has been supported by members from Nova Scotia, including the hon. member for Cape Breton South. It was before the re-establishment and reconstruction committee, who approved it. It was approved by the government of Nova Scotia, whose premier at the time, Hon. A. S. MacMillan, gave evidence before the committee I just mentioned. As I remember his evidence, he staked his reputation that the causeway, including the diversion of the railway, could be built for $4,500,000, though personally I believe those figures would have to be confirmed by accurate engineering surveys. I also understand that, following another visit to Ottawa, Mr. MacMillan quoted the Minister of Munitions and Supply, perhaps in his capacity as Minister of Reconstruction, to the effect that this causeway would be built. In any event such an announcement was made to the people of Nova Scotia, and it has been confirmed by Hon. A. L. Macdonald, the present premier and his candidates.

I believe this is a proper occasion to ask for a statement from the hon. member who has this resolution in charge, or from the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Reconstruction. This is an important matter to Nova Scotia, especially eastern Nova Scotia, and at this time, when we are dealing with what I presume is the only resolution to provide funds for capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways, I believe there should be a declaration of policy.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to join in the remarks just made by the hon. member for Cumberland. I did not intend to say anything on this matter until the bill was in committee, but since the hon. member has raised it now I wish to make a few observations. My only objection to the resolution is that the government are not asking for enough money, if they require $8,800,000 for their ordinary requirements. As I recall the details of the matter raised by the hon. member for Cumberland, the estimate of the Canadian National Railways in connection with their end of the work, double-tracking the main line from Sydney to Moncton and making a number of necessary changes, was for something around $6,500,000, according to a statement made by Mr. Fairweather when he appeared before the reconstruction committee. So that I should like to see the government increase the amount asked for in this resolution.

The reason I believe some statement should come from the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Reconstruction in this connection is that the matter of building the causeway across the strait of Canso, double-tracking the main line, improving the yards and so forth, has been given a great deal of consideration by members of this house. I remember attending meetings of the reconstruction committee for weeks, probing the possibilities of jobs in the post-war period. In connection with this particular project we heard the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, and we heard from Mr. Fairweather, chief economic adviser of the Canadian National Railways. After a great deal of consideration, that committee prepared a report which was tabled in the house and accepted. On two occasions the Minister of Munitions and Supply stated in this house that this was to be one of Nova Scotia's main post-war projects.

Mr. MacNICOL: And so it should be.

Mr. GILLIS: To appreciate how far-sighted that committee was in its estimate of the employment situation in that part of the country one need only look at the employment figures in Nova Scotia to-day. Then he will see that unless this project is gone ahead with there is practically nothing else to provide employment in that province. Every war industry that functioned there has been closed out. No new industries have been created, and from one end to the other that province is a straight unemployment camp. The sad thing about a matter of this kind is the loss of prestige on the part of public men generally. This government was definitely committed to that undertaking as a major post-war project; the Minister of Munitions and Supply stated they were definitely going ahead with it. The then premier of Nova Scotia also definitely went on record that this was one of the main considerations in the post-war period. The present premier of Nova Scotia, who was then minister for naval services, also was definitely committed to it. It is rather sad now to read the editorial comments in the newspapers in connection with matters of this kind. In the Ottawa Citizen of November 24 I found an editorial clipped from the Sydney Post-Record, which stated that Hon. Angus L. Macdonald was committed to this project: the present premier of Nova Scotia was committed to it; I was committed to it; the Minister of Reconstruction was committed to it, and then they wound up by saying that it looked as though it was only a balloon which was flown for political purposes. I hope that is not the case; but to-day, after the election is over, the Minister of Munitions and Supply begins to talk about the difficulties of getting these things done.

The resolution now before the house definitely links the Canadian National with this project because, according to their own estimate, if it is proceeded with they will spend $6,500,000 to carry out their part of the programme which was recommended in the report of the reconstruction and reestablishment committee, which report was tabled in this house without opposition. This leads me to believe that hon. members were unanimously in favour of it. Therefore I believe that the Minister of Finance should be prepared to come here and make a statement one way or the other, and say whether the Canadian National are going ahead with it, because this resolution definitely provides for next year's capital expenditures.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, it does not.

Mr. GILLIS: Then I have not read the resolution correctly.

Mr. MAYHEW: This only provides money for the current calendar year.

Mr. GILLIS: That is for 1945?

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes. In other words we have about a month to go.

Mr. GILLIS: And it is to guarantee principal and sinking funds, and so forth. Nevertheless the project I am talking about was recommended in 1943. Now 1944 has gone by, and this is 1945; we are providing for their 1945 capital expenditures, and still there is no mention of this undertaking. As far as I am concerned I want something definite on it. If they are going to build it, that is fine. If they are not going to build it, I want to know, and so do the people of Nova Scotia. The thing I want to find out is, can I believe the Minister of Munitions and Supply when he makes a statement in this house? Unless you are prepared to live up to the promises made both inside and outside this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GILLIS: I am listening.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I do not think the hon. member for Cape Breton South should question whether he can believe a member of the government, and I do not think he intended to do that.

Mr. GILLIS: No, I did not mean it in that way. What I did mean is that editorials in the daily newspapers across Canada are questioning the veracity of every member of this house in connection with this particular project. As the hon. member for Vancouver East says, I do not know whether I can believe myself. Before this bill carries, I should like a definite statement from the minister on behalf of the Canadian National Railways that they are going ahead with this project. We are depending on it to create employment in the province. If we are not going to get any employment from that direction we shall have to start thinking about something else. This project was played up all over the province as being one that would employ 7,000 men for three years. That would relieve the unemployment problem in Nova Scotia to a considerable extent, but if this project is not going to be carried out we shall have to replace it with something else. If the parliamentary assistant is not in a position to give an answer at this time, I suggest that before the bill carries some decision should be made.

Mr. DECHENE: In view of the fact that other hon. members have discussed the matter of new construction to be undertaken by the National Railways, may I ask if it is in order to discuss branch lines and new constructions under the resolution now before the house? If so, I also have something to say.

The CHAIRMAN: The resolution refers to expenditures for the calendar year, expiring on December 31, 1945. I do not think there could be much further work started this year, and therefore I would not think a general discussion on the building of branch lines would be in order.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is there any item in the estimates covered by this amount for plans and specifications for the Canso viaduct and the building of a railroad to Truro?

Mr. MAYHEW: Nothing I could find. I should like to have this moved from the resolution stage so that we may introduce the bill. The suggestions that have been made by hon. members will be noted.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I think we should have a statement from the Minister of Transport with regard to this matter which has been brought up before by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and myself.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I submit with deference that this resolution has nothing to do with the causeway of Canso, either directly or indirectly. I am not in position, nor do I intend to make a statement on government policy with respect to that important project. As hon. members will see, the resolution is to bring in a measure to authorize the Canadian National to issue securities not exceeding $8,800,000. The budget of the Canadian National Railways for the year 1945 was submitted to the railways and shipping committee and approved by the committee. In that committee there was set out in detail what the $8,800,000 was for. It included additions and betterments to the railways amounting to $15,000,000 and some odd; acquisition of securities, a little over $1,000,000; retirement of maturing capital obligations, including sinking fund and equipment principal payments. $10,777,000; less depreciation from reserves and discount amortization, $18,000,000, leaving $8,800,000 required for capital expenditure. The details of the additions and betterments were given to the committee. This is for expenditures already made or indebtedness incurred, and it could in no way be linked with the project at Canso. When the time comes, whether it be on my estimates or on the estimates of the Minister of Reconstruction, which I understand are not yet complete, a statement on that project will be made.

Mr. FRASER: Why is this not taken out of the present revenue for this year?

Mr. MAYHEW: They have already taken $26,800,000 out of revenue.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mayhew thereupon moved for leave to introduce bill No. 178, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain expenditures made and capital indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways system during the calendar year 1945, and to authorize the guarantee by His Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I have a question to ask the minister about future production and marketing, and perhaps it would shorten the proceedings if I put my question before the minister makes his statement.

I wish to touch on the production programme in this country as it pertains to marketing. It will be realized that, despite the great carryover of wheat that we had a few years ago, that problem no longer exists with us to-day. According to the chairman of the wheat board we shall very shortly have disposed of one billion bushels of wheat in the three years since 1943. While it is not safe to have a carryover of less than 60 million bushels of wheat, we shall be down to that figure before we start to harvest the 1946 crop. While that will be our position, our neighbours to the south, the United States, may be able to export some 300 million bushels this year. So that the entire picture of wheat carryover for exporting countries is vastly different from what it was a few years ago. While there is a great demand for wheat at this time, our governments, by legislative action, have kept down the price of wheat. The only grain product we have selling on the open market is rye. Some days ago rye sold for $2 a bushel on the open market in Winnipeg. In normal times rye sold for from ten to twenty per cent less per bushel than wheat, so that it will be realized what the price of wheat would be to-day if an open market existed for wheat. I am not saying that it should, because we must maintain the situation as it should be for the consumers of this country. But I cite the price of rye to show what the price of wheat would be if there were an open market for it to-day.

While there is a demand for our wheat at the present time, there is no guarantee at all as to the future requirements of our wheat. Even the officials of the Canadian wheat board who are making a constant study of this matter, claim that the future for our wheat is most uncertain as to both markets and price. We all realize that the same may be said of oats and barley, in which our carryover is considerably less than it was a few years ago, and that affects our production of live stock and meat in this country.

I have here a chart—and I should like to compliment the authors of it—of our weekly live stock and meat statistics. It appears in the Live Stock Market Review of November 15, 1945, and reviews the situation comprehensively. It shows that the slaughterings of hogs from January 1, 1945, to date have decreased in western Canada by 40·5 per cent, while in eastern Canada there has been a decrease of 24·7 per cent, or an average decrease for the whole country of 34·9 per cent as compared with the same period in 1944.

Cattle have shown a great increase in slaughterings, an increase for the same period for Western Canada of 41·1 per cent, and an increase for eastern Canada of 24·8 per cent, or an average increase for the whole country of 34·1 per cent. There has been a consistent increase in the numbers of our beef cattle in Canada year by year since 1939. In 1939 we had 4,693,500 head of beef cattle in Canada; in 1945, as of September 28, we had 6,760,400, or an approximate increase of forty-two per cent in beef cattle during the war period.

The number of hogs in Canada in 1939 was 4,363,800; in 1945, 6,025,600. We reached the peak in 1943, with 8,148,500 hogs, and that dropped this year, as I have said, to 6,025,600, which is quite a big decrease. The great decrease has taken place in western Canada, where the decrease has been far greater than in eastern Canada, but there has been a great decrease throughout the entire dominion. I am sure that the entire hog situation will have quite an effect on world marketings. I think the Department of Agriculture here have proof already of the manner in which our Danish friends are regaining the old country market for bacon.

I noticed that at a dairy convention held in the city of Winnipeg a few days ago the officials stated that whereas feed grains had increased by forty per cent in cost to the dairy producer, mik had increased in price by only 11·15 per cent, and farm wages had approximately doubled. The consequence was that a good many producers were going out of dairy production entirely. It has been pointed out in this house that the McDougall memorandum to the league of nations in 1940 showed that to equalize standards of living throughout the world, that is in order to ensure that mankind receive a greater amount of food and a higher standard of nutrition, an increase in production was required as follows; of cereals, an increase of 50 per cent; meat 90 per cent; milk and other dairy products, 125 per cent; vegetable oils, 125 per cent; fruit and vegetables, 300 per cent. It is evident that to attain national equality in nutrition and a sufficiency of food a great expansion and distribution programme must be initiated upon national and international lines.

Just yesterday the Ottawa Citizen carried an editorial on "Food-Planning for Plenty". It stated that the officials of the food and agriculture organization had been saying that the gamble must be taken out of the marketing of food and that the grain producers of Canada were greatly concerned over price fluctuations. The editorial had interesting facts for the Department of Agriculture here and for other agencies that are concerned with food production in other countries at this time.

Many of us are inclined to forget or perhaps do not appreciate how much scientific research has done for agriculture in this country. I was reading an article only the other day which covered agricultural developments in the past 130 years in this country. It pointed out the crude manner in which we started with our cereals in this country, and what, every three, four or five years, scientists had brought forth for us. I am sure we should appreciate what they have done. In recent years, especially, they have developed rust-resistant wheat; and it would be difficult to estimate, even in millions of dollars, what this has meant to the grain producers of this country. In certain years during the past we would not have produced, because of rust, any wheat of our old types. Along other lines scientists have rendered a great service to us. They have inspired the confidence of farmers by the development of better varieties of grain, forage crops, fruits and vegetables, better strains of live stock, valuable farm practice methods, and workable disease and pest controls. We should not soon forget the work those scientists have done for us. Many of our producers throughout the country fail to realize this. It is certainly my belief that the officials of our treasury board do not adequately realize what these men are doing for us, by expressing that appreciation adequately in a practical form. I have been able to obtain some figures as to what our scientists in the Department of Agriculture receive, in contrast with what is paid to men similarly employed in the United States and in Great Britain, and I should like to put on record two of these comparisons which to me are enlightening. In Canada, grade 4 scientists in agriculture receive from $3,300 to $3,600; in the United States, $4,730 to $5,698; in Great Britain, from $5,280 to $6,160. A grade 6 scientist receives in Canada $3,900 to $4,500; in the United States, $6,853 to $7,777; in Great Britain, $8,800 and up. That is quite a contrast. The figures are based on our currency, allowing $1.10 for the United States dollar and $4.40 for Great Britain's pound.

I know we are all concerned about the expenditure of public money, but I ask the committee to consider the significance of these contrasts. I have used this argument in the past, though without having the exact figures, because I believed that something should be done to keep our best types of scientists in the country and not have them going across the line in the numbers that they have gone during past years. It is something to which we must give due consideration, because these men are most important in assisting our producers to improve their standards of production, and they should be properly remunerated for so doing.

It is quite evident that with proper national planning and international arrangements the nation may have an economy of abundance with fair remuneration to all. I should like to have that point emphasized now, because many of our producers who have done such a magnificent job during the war years are to-day in great fear and doubt. They do not want to be caught by depression and lower prices as they were in the past, and many of them talk about quitting now, while prices are fair and they can probably get out with reasonable prices for their equipment and what stock they have. It is surprising how many people, especially in western Canada, are possessed with that viewpoint to-day. Therefore I think that if the minister would say now what the government's plans are and what has been done to assure the agricultural producers of Canada future markets and fair and reasonable price returns it would be of great assistance to those producers. Before we return to another session, the most efficient of these people will be laying plans for next year's production. I trust that whatever proposals are decided on will be upon some basis of parity, not forgetting that our producers of timber and our manufacturers of textiles and other articles are not to-day being held down in the matter of price as are the agricultural producers. Figures have been given on several occasions about the great percentage of our timber production which is going to the southern market, and at a much handsomer price than is paid in Canada. That in turn has increased our building costs as much, in many cases, as fifty per cent. Those are the figures of experts in our government departments. I trust that, whatever is done for agriculture, these facts will be kept in mind, and that farmers will be given a reasonable break to assure them remuneration which is fair in relation to that received in other vocations in this country to-day.

I repeat that it is most important that our producers, especially of grain and live stock, should be given some lead at this time as to what they may expect, at least for next year's production, and it will be beneficial if they could be given some idea as to what they may expect in this matter in the next few years.

If the minister can do that now, it will save a number of questions on several other items as we come to them, besides being beneficial to the producers of this country.

[Mr. J. A. Ross.]

Mr. WRIGHT: I am going to offer no excuse for taking up some of the time of the committee to discuss agriculture. Over two months and a half of this session have passed, and this is the first opportunity which the government has given to the house to discuss this matter. Agriculture is such an important phase of Canadian economic life that we might well have had an opportunity at an earlier stage to discuss some of its problems.

There are people who say that agriculture has not many problems to face at this time, that agriculturists are receiving reasonable prices for their products and that they are satisfied. However, I think we can easily prove that there is a great deal of misgiving among farmers with respect to the future. We need more agricultural production in Canada and throughout the world than at any time during the war. In Canada, Great Britain and the United States governments endeavoured during the war years to get an increase in agricultural production, and they used various means, including subsidies and advertising urging farmers to produce, to accomplish this purpose. Agricultural production is now needed to a greater extent than ever, if we are to believe the reports which are coming out of Europe, and the statements made by the Prime Minister the other day upon his return from Great Britain, when he told us that during this winter probably twenty million Europeans will be on starvation rations and hundreds of thousands will die of starvation during the next six months. So that production is essential at this time.

The agricultural industry of Canada did a very good job during the war. The increase was due, I believe, largely to three reasons: First, the desire of the farmers to do their share in the war, to see that production was sufficient to meet the needs during the war period. They did a good job, despite the fact that they were short of help and equipment. In respect of several agricultural products they doubled their production. This achievement was due largely to the individual farmer, to the man and woman on the farm who went out and milked a few extra cows, who kept a few extra hens, who took on these extra jobs feeling that that was their duty and their share in the war effort. The second reason for increased production of agricultural products was that nature was very good to us during the war years. In 1942 we had probably the largest agricultural production ever known in the dominion, thanks to a bountiful nature. We had plenty of rainfall. The third reason, in my opinion, was the stabilized prices which agriculture has received for its products during the war. In 1941, when agricultural prices were frozen, during the basic period from October 20 to November 15 of that year, agricultural prices were low. But as a result of representations made to this house by organized agriculture and owing to various other influences which were brought to bear on the government, agricultural prices were gradually brought to a level where they at least represented the approximate cost of production for agricultural commodities.

These very three reasons which contributed to the increased agricultural production are working in reverse to-day. There has been a let-down. The people engaged in agriculture feel that they do not need to do the extra work they did during the war. Many of the older people who were engaged in extra work at that time feel now, since the war is over, that they can take it easy, and so far the younger people who were engaged in the war have not returned to agriculture to take up the reins and increase production.

At this critical period the government should give some lead to agriculture in the matter of keeping up its production, but I fear they have failed to do so. At least they have not given an assurance of what the future of agriculture will be. Let us take the grain growers of Canada to-day, and of western Canada especially. We have been asked to accept a ceiling price of $1.55 a bushel for wheat and we have accepted it. But I wonder if the committee realizes what the acceptance of that price means to the grain growers of Canada. Let me point out what it means in dollars and cents this year. I will show the significance of that $1.55 a bushel on export wheat and the $1.25 on wheat that is being sold to the millers for flour used in Canada and wheat being sold to the feed industry in Canada for feed wheat consumed in this country.

We are exporting this year approximately 325 million bushels at $1.55 a bushel. Suppose we were to receive the export price on wheat which the importing countries are paying to the United States and which, when we figure it in Canadian exchange, comes to approximately $2.03 a bushel. In other words, we are accepting 48 cents a bushel less than the world market for 325 million bushels of wheat, or a total of $156 million less than the world market price.

Take wheat that is milled in Canada. We consume approximately 60 million bushels of wheat. The wheat board is selling this wheat to the millers at $1.25 a bushel. That is the return which the Canadian farmer receives for this wheat. If he were to receive the export price of $2.03, that is 78 cents a bushel more on 60 million bushels, he would receive $46,800,000 more on this year's crop. If we figure that there are 20 million bushels of wheat which will be consumed for feed purposes in this country, it means $15,600,000 more than he would receive for that wheat had he received the world price.

Then take barley. To-day it is selilng in the United States, or it was on November 20, the last figure I have, at $1.22 a bushel. In Canada the ceiling price is 64¾ cents plus 20 cent equalization payment, or 84¾ cents a bushel. On barley there is an approximate loss to the grain grower of about $28 million. On oats, which are selling in the United States, basis New York, c.i.f. No. 2, at 93 cents a bushel, there is a loss of $10 million to the grain grower here. In all, in western Canada to-day we are accepting this year $253 million less than the world price for our crop.

What are we getting in return for this? The government passed order in council 6112 which placed a floor price under wheat, or rather gave a guarantee. I will not use the words "floor price"; the minister objects to that term. The government guaranteed that wheat would not go below $1 a bushel before 1950. The minister states that to-day the floor price under wheat is $1.25 a bushel and he is perfectly right, but that floor price is only a floor price for this year and we have had nothing from either the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Trade and Commerce guaranteeing that $1.25 will be the floor under wheat for any further period.

I have here a report of a speech which the Minister of Agriculture delivered to the Cooperative Wheat Producers in western Canada and the statement is confusing. Probably he was misreported. I am afraid that some of our western papers have become so accustomed to misreporting what people in political life have to say that they even misreport some of their own followers. I quote:

> There is nothing to indicate at present that the price of wheat will drop below the present floor price of $1.25 during the next five years. Hon. J. G. Gardiner, federal Minister of Agriculture, said in an address delivered in Regina on Friday . . . On the other hand he pointed out that if within the five-year period it became necessary to reduce the price it could drop below the dollar floor price which the government has established for the five-year period ending in 1950.

Mr. GARDINER: They stated the next day that they had left a "not" out before "drop".

Mr. WRIGHT: I rather expected that was what had happened; nevertheless it did leave much confusion in the minds of many people when that statement came out. The minister should give the committee some assurance as to what floor prices under agricultural products will be. I agree with the hon. member for Souris that there are misgivings in the minds of many people engaged in agriculture as to what we did last year when we introduced an act to establish floor prices under agricultural products in the transitional period from war to peace. We provided $200 million in that act to be used as a stabilization fund. We appointed a board with the Hon. Mr. Taggart as chairman. He is also chairman of the meat board of Canada. I believe there were also two government officials. That board has been in existence for a year. Surely by now they must have something definite with respect to whether floor prices are to be established under agricultural products and at what levels.

I should like the minister to state whether present floor prices under oats and barley will be the floor prices which are to be established by this board. At the present time the floor price under oats is 45¾ cents and the ceiling 51½ cents, plus 10 cents equalization payment, which brings the price of oats to 61½ cents a bushel. If the present floor price is to remain it means that oats, for instance, can drop 25 per cent when in surplus production. In the case of barley, the present floor price is 60 cents and the ceiling 64¾, plus 20 cents equalization payment, making 84¾ cents. The difference between 84¾ and 60 cents of a floor is twenty-eight per cent of a drop which might take place in barley under the present system.

Take wheat. The same thing applies. Our present price for wheat is $1.55 on the export market and $1.25 for what is sold in Canada, with a floor—I am going to use the word 'floor" because that is what it amounts to—of $1 a bushel under wheat until 1950. This again represents a twenty-five per cent reduction from present wheat prices.

If we take butter the same thing applies. The present floor price under butter is from thirty to thirty-five cents a pound, depending on the season of the year and the region in which the price applies. There is also a subsidy of from ten to twelve cents, which means that the present price being received by the producer is from forty to forty-five cents, again depending on the region or the season. If the present floor price of thirty to thirty-five cents is to remain that again means a drop of approximately twenty-five per cent in the income which agriculture will receive.

It is time that the minister made some definite statement with regard to agriculture as to just where it is the intention of the government to fix these floor prices. Until that is done there will be a tremendous amount of speculation and a tremendous amount of dissatisfaction, and we are not going to keep up our agricultural production in these circumstances. Production in agricultural products is kept up when the farmer knows what he will receive for his products over a period of years. Every good farmer knows that you cannot plan just for one year or two years. You have to rotate your crops; you have to plan whether you intend to build up a dairy herd or a beef herd, whether you are going into pigs or poultry over a period of years, not for one year or from one year to another.

I said that I do not believe there is a better time than now for the government to lay down some long-term programme for agriculture in this country. Our chief market for agricultural products has always been Great Britain. In Great Britain the government have stated that it is their intention to take the purchase of food for Great Britain out of the speculative market. They have stated that it is their intention to enter into contracts with exporting nations for their food requirements. I am sure that they would be prepared to enter into longer term contracts for their food requirements than just from one year to another, provided that we are prepared to meet them in that respect. I believe that the government should take definite steps at this time to obtain some long-term contracts for our agricultural products.

Another matter which I think the government should take into consideration with respect to the export of our agricultural products is the making of them available in Great Britain under conditions which are at least similar to those under which other countries make their agricultural products available there. I have particular reference to cheese. It is my understanding that in Great Britain, New Zealand, which is our chief competitor in the cheese-market there, has cold storage establishments for cheese which makes New Zealand cheese available to the British market at all times, while we in Canada allow British buyers to come to this country and buy our cheese here. I believe that the government would be well advised to establish cold storage facilities in Great Britain for Canadian dairy products and see that they are available to the British buying public at all times, and that a suitable product is available there in good condition.

So far as food products are concerned, one of the chief requirements of the British people is continuity of supply. They will deal only with countries when they are assured of that continuity, and we in Canada should try in every way to meet their requirements in that respect.

I really think that at this time the minister should give us some indication as to where the government intends to establish floor prices under agricultural products. It is now a year since we passed the act. The board has been functioning for that year, obtaining information, and at this time they should surely be able to give us some indication. Here is what is happening. Just recently we were discussing the Veterans Land Act in a committee of this house. We found that, according to real estate agents who were before that committee, in Canada the price of agricultural land has increased approximately twenty-five per cent. That twenty-five per cent increase is due to the increase in the price of agricultural products. If we allow agricultural products to drop twenty-five per cent, it simply means that the equity which our returned men have in any land which they may purchase under the Veterans Land Act, which is being passed by this house, will be wiped out, and therefore I think the government should give some indication at this time of where they intend to set floor prices. Personally I think the present ceiling price on agricultural products should be the floor price. The figures which I gave showed the tremendous sacrifice which agriculture is making, not only toward maintaining price ceilings in Canada, but toward the making available of supplies to European countries at a reasonable price. Therefore, when we are asking the government to set the floor price at the present ceiling price, it is not out of the way at all.

Mr. FAIR: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Fort William has the floor.

Mr. McIVOR: It is too bad for one Irishman to get ahead of another, but I know he will forgive me at this time. I have two reasons for speaking to-night. The first is that I was brought up on a farm. I was taught the rotation of crops and to farm in the way which pays. You might call it the horse-and-buggy days, but it pays for the farm and it pays for the farmer.

Mr. CASE: Does it pay for the horse and buggy?

Mr. McIVOR: The other reason is that in the district of Thunder Bay, which takes in Port Arthur and Fort William, there have sprung up in our district in the last ten years some of the best farms in Ontario. The district farmer, Mr. Norman Harrison, will bear me out in this. They are farmers who farm the farm instead of farming the community. They have been taught that it pays to farm their farm, stay on their job and attend to their affairs.

Mr. CARDIFF: How many hours a day?

Mr. McIVOR: The reason for that is that the district farmer and the experimental substation which the present Minister of Agriculture saw fit to plant in that district—and it was needed years before—advise the people all over the country. The advice of the expert who runs that farm and of the district farmer is sought all over the country, and in the fall of the year they give splendid leadership at the agricultural fairs which are held in the different districts.

One thing stands out in this district, namely, the increase in the production of potatoes. They have a 500 bushel to the acre club. One man will take it one year in one district and another man will take it another year. This year one man took it in a district fifteen miles from Fort William. His prize-winning potatoes were the Irish cobblers. Another high-liner was a man with a non-Anglo-Saxon name. He grew the Chippawa. The next man took a prize with Green Mountains. It is not an unusual thing to see a beautiful farm of potatoes. It was a joy to any real Irishman who loves a potato crop to see those potatoes turned out in the fall. The best potatoes I have seen since I left the old sod were grown not with the help of barnyard manure or artificial fertilizer, but with the help of fish. These fish were known by a special name and even the Indians did not want to eat them, so that they were made into fertilizer for the potatoes, and I have never seen a finer crop. There was not a smell of fish on the potatoes; when you fried them you got—

An hon. MEMBER: Fish and chips.

Mr. McIVOR: —the very finest results, and they were the best potatoes I have seen in this country. Then we have something else that interests us and interests the farmers. We have a fall seed fair; and if you could go into the city hall in Fort William and see the samples of seed there you would say, long live the farmers of this district and the experts who lead them. The inspection of hogs, too, has prompted the farmers to take up this branch of farming. One man who has been in the business for only about six years now has over five hundred hogs. So that we just go back a bit and thank the minister for putting an experimental farm station in that district. If any hon. members have a good big district far away from a centre, go after the Minister of Agriculture. You will find him ready to step on it, and you will get something that will make your heart glad.

Mr FAIR: I am thankful the Irish are such a peaceful race; otherwise the hon. member for Fort William and I would probably be in a battle in the middle of the floor right now. I do not know what kind of country he comes from, but it seems that every once in a while the hon. member has to rise in his place and keep the name of Fort William before us; otherwise it would be entirely forgotten; and as somebody says, where is Fort William?

I did not take time to kiss the blarney stone before leaving old Ireland, and apparently the hon. member for Fort William did; consequently my remarks this evening will be very brief, because I believe as we go along and take up the various items we can discuss anything we wish to mention. However, there is one matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister and the government once more; that is, that the farmers of Canada should receive something closer to their proper share of the national income than has been the case in the past. I make this statement because I think we all realize that approximately one-third of the people of Canada live on farms, and that during the years from 1926 to 1940 one-third of the people received only 11·3 per cent of the national income, or approximately one-third of that to which they were entitled. Again, on many occasions I have pointed out that the farmers work many more hours than any other occupational group in this country, and take chances on climatic conditions. At the present time many of us have our crops under fifteen inches of snow and will not have an opportunity to reap them until spring. In addition to all this, we are up against the manipulation of markets and many other things. To-day we find that at least a large proportion of labour in Canada is on strike for better agreements, union security and increased wages, and we are also told in the columns of the press that labour is now aiming for a forty hour instead of a forty-eight hour week, with no decrease in pay. I believe some of our farm leaders in Canada are slipping, because a number of them are satisfied with the prices we are receiving. In my opinion those farm leaders should set their sights a little higher than is the case at the moment. I make that statement, because practically every other occupational group is taking steps to secure its fortunes in the future; and if we are to succeed on equal terms with the rest of the people of Canada it is up to us to do something for ourselves.

Many reasons might be given for the troubles that have been experienced by agriculture. It is often said that God must love the common people because he made so many of us, and I believe a very large percentage of those common people have been placed on the farms. One of our troubles is that in the past we have failed to organize. I well remember back in 1923 when we organized the wheat pool and had quite a hard time to get even fifty-one per cent of the farmers in our province organized. Then, in a very short time, as soon as the line companies offered a better trade for grain, even though they stole up to five bushels a load the farmers bootlegged their wheat from the pool to the line elevator companies. While that condition exists, it is not very easy for us to get along. So that unless we have something like equality of treatment for the farmers of Canada we cannot have a prosperous country. If one section of our people are slaves while the rest are masters, that is not a healthy condition.

One thing I should like, as I have pointed out previously, is to see the Prairie Farm Assistance Act amended to provide a general crop insurance scheme, even if there should be some extra cost to the farmers. That can be done, and I believe it should be done in order that the interests of the farmers may be protected. I also believe the income tax problem of the farmers should receive very favourable consideration. The Minister of Finance has stated that the question of farmers' income tax is being reviewed. When that review is completed I hope something worth while will be done in the interests of the farmers, because I believe we all remember that while the farmer was taking his losses during the depression years, there was no attempt by the Minister of Finance or the government of that day, nor has there been any attempt since, to see that the farmer was given any relief by way of reduction in interest charges or reasonable prices for the things he sold and the things he had to buy. During the war the farmers sacrificed millions of dollars in the prices they received for the products they sold, so that we think we should now be given a square deal.

I believe we shall be able to discuss the matter of hog and cattle prices later on, but in passing I suggest that an increase in prices of cattle and hogs would help make more food available for Europe, and also would do away with the bureaucratic rationing we have at the present time. As far as I am aware, the farmers are not complaining about rationing, but we feel that a proper policy for agriculture would do a great deal to relieve the necessity for the rationing which is imposed upon us at the present time.

I do not think I need say more just now. On behalf of the members of this group I have made my remarks brief, but we intend to discuss the various items as we go along.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I do not think I can be accused of unnecessarily detaining the house in previous debates, but I wish to bring a few items to the attention of the minister and hon. members under the heading of agriculture. The farmers of my constituency are particularly interested in three aspects of our agricultural policy: first, marketing arrangements, to assure stable and satisfactory marketing and farm income; second, disease control, to ensure satisfactory crops; and, third, intensive research in the field of marketing problems and disease control. At some future date I intend to deal at greater length with the question of marketing, but because of the urgest necessity of getting on with the business of the house I am going to be quite brief in dealing with that question to-night.

The farmers I have the honour to represent realize that at this time there are three aspects to the marketing question: the international, the national and the provincial.

As far as the international marketing situation is concerned, the newly born united nations food and agriculture organization, which by the way is the first of the allied organizations to be set up under the world peace programme, is a first and great step toward the solution of the marketing of agricultural surpluses. As at present constituted, it is a research fact-finding and policy-forming organization. Under its present constitution it has no authority to deal in commodities. No doubt at this stage, in order to get general agreement and support, this limitation was necessary, but I am certain that ultimately the food and agriculture organization must have some authority guaranteed to it by the participating governments if its real objectives are to be attained. I am confident of this development when the proposed world farmer federation is a reality and the tillers of the soil bring to bear their effective influence in support of the ideals and objectives of the food and agriculture organization. We can rejoice that the first steps have been taken in this direction.

I should like to deal briefly with the question of provincial marketing. In British Columbia we have had for some time a natural products marketing act that has been of great value to the fruit and vegetable producers of the province. This act was placed on the statute books of British Columbia at the request of the fruit growers of the Okanagan and Kootenay districts, and upon it has been based the orderly marketing of tree fruits and vegetables that prevails at the present time in the province. Occasionally one hears this type of legislation condemned on the score that it is coercive and not in keeping with British justice; that is, it savours of regimentation and robs the individual of his rights. If majority rule is coercive, then this legislation can be so classed, but any act which requires the agreement of seventy-five per cent of the producers, in my opinion, is democratic to the last degree. As a result of experience, the great majority of tree fruit and vegetable producers of British Columbia are behind this legislation. If agriculture is ever going to come into its own we must have unification of action by producers, first within the provinces and then throughout the dominion.

I have dealt with the embryo scheme for international marketing and the scheme we have in British Columbia which has made some progressive moves with regard to provincial marketing. I should like to say a few words now about the national marketing picture. The ill effects of the lack of national marketing legislation have been largely overcome during the period of the war by the War Measures Act. But when this act, or the one that replaces it, ceases to operate, we shall be faced with our pre-war difficulties unless we have national marketing legislation as the essential link between international and provincial arrangements.

Realizing this serious possibility of the future, the tree fruit growers of British Columbia were the first to give consideration to this question, and a draft copy of a proposed national products marketing act was passed by the Canadian federation of agriculture and, I understand, submitted to the dominion-provincial conference this year. This act was drawn up by representatives of British Columbia producers, men of experience in this direction, in an effort to present an act which would not be ultra vires and which would be complementary to various provincial acts in effect. I am not going to deal further with this matter at this time, but I urge hon. members to secure a copy of this proposed act and study it before the next session of parliament. This is an act which the Canadian federation of agriculture believes is a necessary link between provincial and international marketing arrangements.

I should like to make a few brief remarks with regard to disease control. The farmers of my constituency are known for being an exceptionally progressive group. They have always been particularly interested in the control of disease of farm crops and farm stock. At the present time the fruit growers are seriously concerned over the spread of what is generally known as little cherry disease. I think hon. members who represent ridings in which fruit growing is of considerable interest would be wise to listen to this. I am going to deal with it for a few minutes for the information of hon. members. Not only is it, on present indications, a threat to the orchardists of West Kootenay and British Columbia, it is a threat to all the fruit growing sections on the North American continent.

It was around 1936 or 1937 that we began to notice small cherries at a certain point in West Kootenay but we did not think of them as being diseased at the time. I might say that this small cherry is a cherry which ripens with the usual colour; it is much smaller in size than the normal cherry, but it lacks sugar content. The theory generally accepted was that the heavy freeze which we had in that district in 1935 had affected the trees but that there would be a recovery. When there was no sign of recovery in the following years the growers began to look for other causes and suspected a nutritional deficiency, but this theory was soon discounted after investigation by various representatives of the science service.

Further investigation revealed the fact that this disease had been present as far back as 1932, but apparently it was confined to one orchard. The disease appeared to remain static until about 1938 or 1939 and then an unfavourable market reaction, so far as the sale of cherries was concerned, caused further investigation. It was found that nearly all the orchards of the west arm of Kootenay lake were affected. Since that time we can say that the spread of the disease has been fairly rapid to other sections of the Kootenay district.

I am not sure of the year, but I think it was in 1940 that further investigations were carried on. The first hint of the virus nature of the disease was obtained in 1941 when Doctor Foster got what appeared to be a genuine transfer of little cherry by placing buds from affected trees in the Kootenay district on three healthy trees on Vancouver island. Unfortunately, since the disease had not been found on Vancouver island, the science service officials could not assume the responsibility of introducing it there. Therefore the material had to be destroyed before a full evaluation of its significance could be obtained.

However, following this lead, a conference of provincial and science service officials was held and a programme of further research outlined. Science department officials realize that this is a great threat to the fruit industry and say that it will require a team of entomologists and pathologists working together, which will mean a lot of slow, painstaking and costly work. I am informed that the problem in general is not one of appropriations, but of man-power; that the problem can be solved only by adequately trained investigators. I am informed also that there is a great shortage of trained personnel, which is one of the obstacles facing the government in developing a full-scale attack on this and similar disease problems.

Before concluding, I should like to deal briefly with the question of trained personnel. Why are we at this time short of trained personnel in Canada? Everyone recognizes the fact that we are short of trained personnel in the agriculture industry in Canada. I say it is because the dominion and provincial governments of this country have a scale of salaries too low to retain the services of many of our best men in this field. I wish to pay a tribute to the many men who do stay in the service of the dominion and provincial governments, at a financial loss to themselves, because of their devotion to this country.

In my opinion, considering comparative academic qualifications and the cost of obtaining them, agriculture graduates in most positions in the public service should be just as well paid as engineers and foresters, and, I should say, considerably higher than lawyers. Most agricultural positions in research now require at least a master's degree, with preference for a doctorate. As an illustration I should like to give the range of salaries paid to agriculture science workers in Canada and the United States. Assistant professors in the United States average $2,900 to $3,800, whereas the average Canadian salary is $2,500 to $3,200. Instructors in the United States average $2,000 to $3,800, and in Canada the average is $1,500 to $2,100.

The salary advantage in the United States universities is larger for the lower paid teaching positions, and this no doubt accounts for the large number of younger men being attracted to the United States from Canadian universities.

I wish to quote a few figures comparing salaries paid to agricultural graduates in provincial and dominion government employ with salaries paid by commercial firms. In a recent survey of agricultural graduates employed in industry, more than half the number of graduates replying to a questionnaire stated that they had been attracted from universities or government employment by greater advantages.

I will quote a few salaries paid by one commercial concern to college graduates without post-graduate degrees:

Feed department manager	$5,400-$6,000
Assistant manager	3,600- 4,000
Salesman	4,200- 4,800
Assistant salesman	3,300- 3,600

If hon. members will compare these salaries with the salaries paid by provincial and federal governments in this country to men with similar qualifications and experience, they will find there clear evidence to anyone who looks beneath the surface that the present situation and trends, unless speedily corrected, will eventually result in the loss of many of our best agricultural research workers to commercial work.

It is significant to note that right within the federal government services, higher salaries are obtainable in other departments than in the Department of Agriculture. A marked instance was an advertisement by the civil service commission early last spring. One for the Department of Trade and Commerce called for an economist, with university graduation only, with a salary range of $5,000 to $5,600; the other called for an economist, with graduate and post-graduate training, plus definite experience, for the Department of Agriculture, at a salary range of $2,880 to $3,120.

I wish to bring to the attention of the members of this committee one particular case, that of Mr. Platt who is employed at the Swift Current dominion experimental station, has, I am told, a wife and four children and is a graduate agriculturist. I am informed that Mr. Platt is the man behind the discovery of saw-fly resistant wheat, and for this great service that he is rendering to Canada he receives the princely total of $1,800 a year. I am also informed that he has been offered $5,000 a year by Kansas state university, but prefers to remain in Canada. I am further informed that if the work which this young man is taking part in with others is successful it will mean at least an additional $25,000,000 in the pockets of the western wheat producers annually.

I want to quote from a table I have here which further illustrates my point. I shall quote only a few figures and then ask the permission of the committee to place it on Hansard. This table has been gathered at considerable expense.

The CHAIRMAN: Do I understand that the hon. member has unanimous consent to place the table on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I thank hon. members for that privilege. First, however, I would quote a few figures from the table which gives the starting salaries for technical personnel in the following professions in Canada: mechanical engineering; electrical engineering; mining engineering; civil engineering; metallurgical engineering; chemistry, geology, mathematics and physics.

Mr. BRACKEN: Would the hon. member quote his authority?

Mr. HERRIDGE: This table was gathered from many sources and was compiled from information that I have received from graduate agriculturists in this country. I may say that I have been a member of what was the former Canadian Society of Technical Agriculturists since its formation, now known as the Agricultural Institute of Canada, and I know a large number of the members in Canada.

Mr. BRACKEN: Are these figures which the hon. member has assembled himself from other people.

Mr. HERRIDGE: With the assistance of other people.

The table shows the average salary received per month by the graduate in these various professions, with no experience, as compared with the average salary received by the trained agriculturist graduate. The trained agriculturist receives $137 a month on starting, whereas the average for the ten other groups is $160 a month on starting. After twenty years' experience the average salary of the trained agriculturist is $210 a month, as compared with the average salary in the other professions of $316 a month. I will now with the permission of the committee put the table on Hansard. The table is as follows:

I am sure that hon. members who realize the importance of the agricultural industry to this country and that we must retain the trained agriculturists we are training in Canada instead of losing them to the United States and other countries, will support me in my plea that something must be done to raise the salaries of our scientific workers. The farmers in my constituency, as I am sure, the farmers in Canada as a whole, realize that to retain the services of our trained agriculturists we must establish salary standards equal to those of the other professions. We shall not be able to do the research work required in the immediate future or carry out an effective disease control programme unless we recognize the value of the trained agriculturist by rewarding him accordingly.

This year the Canadian Society of Technical Agriculturists, now the Agricultural Institute of Canada, celebrated its silver anniversary. I think it would be most fitting if this government recognized the work done by that organization and the trained agriculturists of this country by an upward revision of salaries.

When one considers that even in the one problem of the little cherry disease the fruit producers of Canada are threatened with a loss of millions of dollars, a cheese-paring approach to the question of salaries for the trained agriculturists is unthinkable, and I urge the minister to remedy this long-standing injustice now, and by so doing, make certain that disease control programmes in this country will not be limited because of a lack of trained personnel.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, may I have a word on this? I will undertake not to burden Hansard with more than a paragraph or so. I live in the western section of the country myself, and I am getting perturbed lest people who live east of that very fruitful potato area of my friend the hon. member for Fort William, where potatoes that anyone can eat grow on fish—all you need to do, as I understand it, is to fry his potatoes and you have fish and chips in the same pan—should think all the farmers in western Canada are broke, because they are not, although one might think so from listening to the cries—and they are just cries—from certain areas. There is a place called the Palliser Triangle out there, a very fancy name for it—we used to know it as the great Canadian desert—an area which perhaps should never have been settled by agriculturists at all. There they have a good deal of difficulty, but that after all is not the great part of our country. One would think in listening to some who cry for our farmers that all the children's pants were made of flour sacks and that they lived on jack rabbits and gophers.

That is a lot of nonsense. There have been bad times in that section of Canada; there have been bad times in any country. My native province of Saskatchewan has been hit harder, I agree, than any of the other areas. But take the province from which I come; take that railroad from Edmonton to Claresholm, a distance of close to three hundred miles; and in an area of twenty miles on either side of it if any hon. member can find twenty farmers who are broke I will buy him the best hat in Ottawa; I admit he should not pay more than $2.50 for it because there are no good hats in Ottawa; their stores are all very much the same.

Our people have had their difficulties, and many difficulties, but we are not all broke and crying to eastern Canada to help us. People down here speak of Ontario as "the old milch cow", and say that we have been living on the old milch cow. We have been doing no such thing. We have kept up our end; we have bought the things they made; we have bought them by exchanging them for what we could raise. The best cow I ever knew only had four teats, and you chaps down here take care of those four pretty well; there is no doubt about that. But we have been carrying our end in our economy, and we will continue to do so.

I agree that a stabilized policy is what we need. The day has gone when someone could take a piece of land and become a farmer. As farming is now it is a specialized job: the specialists have succeeded and the others have gone. The same thing happens in any other industry one may care to mention.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Including law.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): While we do seek equality—I think that is all that most of us out there want, and of course we want it—we do not come begging. We have taken care of our end in the development of this Canada, and all we ask from you is a chance, not a cinch.

Mr. ARGUE: The matter I wish to deal with to-night is not under the civil estimates and that is why I am bringing it up. It has to do with special products.

Some time during July last the special products board of the Department of Agriculture agreed to purchase some 40,000 horses in Canada on behalf of the governments of Holland and France. The specifications were for mares and geldings ranging from 1,300 pounds up, in good health and sound, age from three to nine years, prices to range from $80 to $160. It is estimated that at the present time there are between 200,000 and 250,000 head of surplus horses in Saskatchewan and an equal number in Alberta. The farmers, because they have more horses than they can use on their farms, and because in large areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta there is this year a very poor crop, are looking forward to disposing of thousands of their horses.

Then into this buyers' market came the special products board, proposing to buy 40,000 head of horses. The farmers felt that they would have a chance of receiving something like $4 million in total of sorely needed money. Needless to say, the price which was offered by the special products board looked lucrative to the farmers. The farmers came to believe through press reports that the purchases would be made by the special products board direct from farm owners, and that there would be no place for speculators to buy from the farmers at fire-sale prices and to sell to the special products board, making a lot of money in that way.

According to sessional paper No. 214, tabled November 16, the special products board up to October 25 had purchased only 2,936 head of horses. Of this number 786 head were purchased at Montreal. I believe, if the facts of the purchase at Montreal were known, the horses bought there were not in the main owned by farmers but were bought from buyers who had previously purchased the horses in western Canada and who no doubt made a handsome profit by acting as middlemen.

Whether or not the government policy has met with satisfaction at all points, I do not know, but from detailed information I have, I wish to point out what occurred at the Lafleche sale on September 5, 1945. Certainly in this case the action of the buyers of the special products board was anything but satisfactory to farmer owners in that vicinity.

I have three specific complaints to make and have complete information to support them.

The first complaint is that the buyers of the special products board did not buy horses in conformity with the policy set out in the bills and the radio announcements advertising the sale. A news account in the Lafleche Press following the sale states:

> The much publicized trip of government horse buyers to LaFleche Friday, September 5, was made but not to the very great satisfaction of all concerned. The poster issued under the authority of the government regarding weights of horses which would be desirable was not adhered to in any way. According to reports, and even after publicity was given to the fact that horses under 1,450 pounds would not be acceptable the minimum weight on the date set proved to be 1,550 pounds.

In correspondence I received from M. C. Howe, Lafleche, he states:

> On the 4th day of September, a sale of horses was held at LaFleche at which certain government representatives were purchasing horses on behalf of the government for shipment to the Netherlands. Prior to the sale, the same was advertised by radio, newspapers, and public notices which stated that horses would be purchased with weights ranging from 1,375 pounds and upward. But, at the sale the buyers refused to purchase horses weighing less than 1,550 pounds.

The horse sale turned out to be a regular farce and was a great inconvenience and expense to the farmers in this locality. Some of these horses were broken and brought as far as thirty miles to this sale. In rough numbers there were approximately 300 horses brought to this sale and of this 300 only fifteen horses, as far as we know, were bought directly from the farmers by the government.

The news item in the Lafleche paper says on that point:

Out of some 300 horses brought to LaFleche only seventeen were purchased direct from the farmer.

We have here, in the first instance, the government buyers not adhering to the specifications that were advertised prior to the sale. I wish to say this, that if the specifications were changed immediately before the sale, then proper advertising should have been done to make the changed specifications known by the farmers. More than that, if time did not allow any changes in specifications to be advertised, then special products board buyers should have adhered to the specifications advertised prior to the sale and should have bought direct from the farmers all horses that conformed to these specifications.

Such was not the case. Here we have a spectacle of farmers spending their time and money to bring 300 head of horses to the Lafleche sale and, according to all reports, and in them I include the statement from the Minister of Agriculture, at most not more than 18 of the 300 horses were purchased from farmers. It can be said and no doubt will be said that almost none of the 300 horses brought to the sale conformed to specification, but I have more faith and confidence in the judgment of farmers than to believe that eighteen out of 300, or six per cent, were all that conformed to specification. All the horses brought to the sale that complied with specifications as advertised should have been bought from the farmers and, if these specifications had to be changed at the last minute, then the farmers who in good faith brought horses to the sale should have been properly reimbursed.

The second charge I wish to make is that at least half of the total number of thirty-six horses bought at Lafleche were purchased not from farmer owners but from Mr. Walter Stern, who, from information I have, is a Montreal resident. According to a return tabled in the House of Commons under my name, at the Lafleche sale eighteen horses were bought in various numbers from thirteen individuals who, as far as I know, are probably all residents of the Lafleche district and eighteen horses were bought from Mr. Walter Stern. The Lafleche article states that only seventeen head were purchased direct from farmers and the remainder of two carloads was purchased from a private buyer.

I have received a letter from a Lafleche resident to the effect that private buyers were at Lafleche ; that the two government men and private buyers had twenty-one head of their own horses in one of the pens of the stockyards; that they took two of these horses out of these pens on the day of the sale and placed them in the government pens with the government brand put on them with white paint, and that in the evening after the sale was over, after supper, some private buyers and government officers went to the stockyards and placed the government brand on the eighteen head which the private buyers still had in their yards.

Surely the practice of government buyers in buying at least eighteen or perhaps more of the thirty-six head of horses from a private buyer was against government policy. Certainly it was against government policy as it was known to the farmers. That practice was detrimental to the farmers to the extent that over 270 of 300 head of horses brought to the sale by farmers had to be taken home. The eighteen head that were purchased from a private buyer had no doubt previously been purchased from farmers in the Lafleche area, and the private buyer by selling them to the government buyers was able to make a lot of money in that deal.

On the third irregularity which was brought to my attention, the information I have states that a farmer from Melaval, which is a town a few miles from Lafleche, presented to the government buyers a dapple grey gelding, eight years old, weight 1,710 pounds, and the government buyers refused to purchase this gelding. The farmer then sold the horse to one of the private buyers for $60; on September 6, the day following the sale, the same horse was seen in the corral among the horses purchased by government buyers, and this animal had the government N-brand marked on it. This horse was included among the thirty-six animals, all of which had the government N-brand on them.

This evidence, to say the least, reflects badly on the practices of the buyers and the special products board at Lafleche, and, in turn, on the government. This horse had been turned down by the government buyers on the ground that it did not conform to the government specifications. The farmer then sold the horse to a private buyer for $60. I am sure, from the schedule of rates I have been given, that this horse was worth between $135 and $150. Somebody made a good deal of profit on the sale of that horse to the special products board, and it was not the farmer. On the evidence presented one cannot help deducing that there was an agreement between a private buyer and the government buyers for carrying on this racket, which resulted in the farmer receiving less than half of what this horse was worth.

One or all of the buyers I have mentioned made some easy money on this shady transaction. Surely the government buyers were instructed to buy horses only from farmer owners. If so, why did they not conform to their instructions? If they were not instructed to buy only from farmer owners, then the special products board was at fault and, in turn, the Department of Agriculture. Even if that policy was not followed; if the horse during the sale, when presented by the farmer, was not up to specification, then I am sure that when that horse in turn was bought from the private buyer it still could not have been up to specification. The feeling left among the farmers in the Lafleche area, in the words of one of its residents, was: "The sale was a farce as far as we farmers were concerned, and all our government men were doing all day was shooing us home with our horses, so that they were able to finish up their own particular racket."

I would ask the minister to have a full investigation of the whole of the dealings of the special products board; in particular, to have all the evidence surrounding the Lafleche sale gone over carefully, and that there be a complete statement, first, as to why the specifications as advertised prior to the sale were not adhered to, and secondly, as to why at least eighteen of the thirty-six horses purchased at the Lafleche sale were purchased from Mr. Walter Stern, a Montreal buyer, while at the same time farmers were turned home with over 270 head; why Mr. Fred J. Hickerty of Melaval had his horse turned down by government buyers and why that animal was subsequently purchased by government buyers from Mr. Walter Stern. To say the least, the sale at Lafleche caused a real stink among the farmers there, and not until they are given an adequate explanation will that stink be cleared away.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not expect to find it necessary to deal with this particular matter at this time, but I have no hesitation in doing so. The story with regard to the purchase of horses for the Netherlands and French governments is one which has been under consideration since early last winter. The French government approached the government of Canada in the early part of last winter and asked us to assist them in securing horses in Canada. When the officials of the department approached me with regard to the matter I suggested that we place the officials of the Department of Agriculture at the disposal of the French government and that they should place their own buyers in Canada to purchase these horses. The French government did not desire to have them purchased in that way; they said they preferred that we should purchase the horses. At that time I indicated to them that in all probability a difficulty would arise through the fact that they would probably want to inspect the horses at Montreal or somewhere else, and we made the condition that the horses were to be inspected by our inspectors after they were purchased by government buyers. We undertook, of course, to see that the horses delivered at Montreal were horses that met the specifications which were set down by the governments of the Netherlands and France.

In order to shorten up the story, I should like to say that in spite of the fact the negotiations started last winter, and because of changes in government, I presume, and the difficulties connected with setting up government in a country which has been overrun by armies, the French have not found it possible, even down to the present time, to sign the contract. We have not yet the contracts signed with France for the purchase of 35,000 horses which they desire to have from Canada eventually. However, the government of the Netherlands did sign their contracts for 5,000 horses some time ago. The total number of these horses was not to be delivered this year; they are to be delivered by October 1, 1946, not October 1945. When completed, the contracts call for delivery of these horses by October 1, 1946, so that a very short time has expired even in so far as the contract which has been signed is concerned. There have been purchased for the Netherlands about 1,800 of the 5,000 horses. There have been purchased for the French government somewhere between 600 and 700 horses, or at least that number has been shipped. Eighteen hundred horses have been shipped to the Netherlands and 600 and some odd to France. The reason for the small number in the French contract up to the moment is that the contract has not been signed, and the further fact that the Netherlands and French governments undertook to find the ships. All the ships which have been found up to date have been loaded. The 1,800 horses were loaded for the Netherlands and the 600 and some odd for the French government. The position at present is that we are negotiating with some others to try to obtain more ships in order to make it possible to ship more of these horses before spring or during next summer than we otherwise shall be able to ship.

The facts are that the horses required by the Netherlands—I am speaking now from memory and I may be a few pounds out, but I think I am correct—must weigh at least 1,450 pounds, not at Laflèche but at Montreal. Anyone who has ever shipped a horse from Laflèche to Montreal knows that any shipper must take a margin of at least seventy-five pounds, and probably he would be much safer to take a hundred pounds. Therefore, if the buyers were buying horses at 1,550 pounds in Laflèche, when they reach Montreal those horses would be in accordance with the specifications as set down. France was prepared to accept a limited number of horses at 1,350 pounds, a lighter weight, at Montreal. There was no specification made either by the French government or by the Canadian government that these horses were to be bought in any particular way or by any particular person. There is nothing anywhere in the arrangement which prevents the government from buying horses from any private dealer or from the farmer direct or in any other place they desire to buy them. The only specification is that we shall deliver the horses up to standard at the boat, and, as surmised, the different governments have hired inspectors and placed them at the boat to see that the horses are up to standard. Some of the horses which have been brought down from western Canada have been turned down. We have not objected to their being turned down in spite of the original understanding which we had with the governments, because we would have turned them down even if they had not done so. As a matter of fact, most of them were turned down by Mr. McCallam of our own department rather than by any other inspector, because they did not reach specifications.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the minister the numbers turned down?

Mr. GARDINER: I can get them; I have not them before me at the moment.

Mr. SENN: Did they have to be sound in wind and limb?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and all the usual things that you get in buying a horse from a farmer—every horse dealer and every farmer knows pretty well what these things mean. They had to have more than that; they had to be of a certain type. They did not want the kind of horse which I like, which is the Clyde with long hair. They wanted the clean-legged horse. They preferred those to anything else. That was the situation. I am not going to accuse anyone of having any designs upon us, but I must say I was a little concerned about some things which did happen in western Canada.

I was in the west during the summer trying to get a little vacation, while at the same time looking after my own farm, when I picked up a Regina paper and saw in big headlines on the front page that the Saskatchewan government was proceeding to organize the province of Saskatchewan to purchase horses. You had to read the article very carefully to find that the dominion government had anything whatsoever to do with it. I went into Regina myself and interviewed some of the members of the government and the men who were representing my own department who were there discussing the matter. What was reported to me was that the special products board had sent a man from Ottawa to report to the three governments of western Canada, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, confidentially the fact that there were negotiations under way between the two goverments of which I have spoken and this government to purchase some 35,000 or 40,000 horses, and that in view of the fact that there was a drought district in western Canada extending through the southern part of Saskatchewan and the eastern part of Alberta, it would be the desire of the government to purchase as many of those horses this fall from that section of the country as possible in order to make it unnecessary for farmers to carry them through the winter on the limited feed which was there. Well, the government of Manitoba did not say anything about it. They treated the information as it was intended to be treated. The government of Alberta did likewise; but the government of Saskatchewan put it on the front page of the paper within ten hours after the information was given to them.

An hon. MEMBER: What was secret about it?

Mr. GARDINER: An hon. member over there asks, what was secret about it? I have always found it good practice in government, as in business, when you are given advance information and asked to cooperate in doing any particular job, during the period the contracts have not been completed, to act in accordance with the suggestions which are made.

I wish to say that I do not lay any blame upon the ministers of the government of Saskatchewan; because I had occasion to check the matter still further. I was in the district my hon. friend is speaking of on the day of the Assiniboia fair, in his own town. It was the day after I had checked in Regina and asked the officials to do nothing more about the organization of the shipment of horses until they were given further instructions. I was sitting in a booth in the little restaurant just across from the railway station in Assiniboia. One of the officials of the government was sitting in the next booth, and I heard him outline to a group of men the whole plan which no one, with the exception of a very few people, was supposed to know anything about. This was on Thursday. I took the trouble to step into the booth and tell him as well as the other men that the plan had been discontinued, and that further information in regard to the matter would be provided in due course. In spite of that, when I reached Regina on Saturday, after making a trip through the entire drought area, I found another article on the front page of the newspaper setting out the points at which the horses were to be assembled, and finally it was indicated that the federal government would send men there for the purpose, I think the word was, of checking the horses.

That item, however, was put out by the provincial government and it was then I checked the matter over with the minister, his deputy and some others. I was told that this preliminary work had been done not by us but by the government at Regina, in asking these men to assemble their horses at certain places; and I may say that suggestion was put forward in the discussions which took place between our men and the government officials. Those discussions had gone forward to the point where I suggested that probably we would have to go through with it on that basis in a certain part of the area, but that in my opinion this was not a suitable plan under which to buy horses. I added that immediately I returned to Ottawa I would discuss the matter fully with our own men. I discussed it with some of them and indicated that we would only carry out the plan in the limited area in connection with which it had been discussed, and that then we would set up some other plan unless this first suggestion was found to work better than I thought would be the case.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I must say it did work a little better than I thought it would. We had purchases made at the long list of points set out in the return brought down a few days ago in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Wood Mountain. After going over that statement, I think he will agree that there was only one point at which purchases were made from a private dealer; in that case I believe eighteen horses were purchased at Lafleche from Mr. Walter Stern. I do not know whether or not Mr. Stern is a Montreal man; as a matter of fact I had never heard of him until I heard of this horse deal, but my information was that he was a Moose Jaw man who bought horses for dealers in Montreal. I may be wrong in that; it is only information which was given me, but I do not think it makes much difference in any event. After all, men are free to do business anywhere in Canada, whether they live in Montreal, Toronto or anywhere else.

The real fact of the matter is that the Saskatchewan government printed the first statements that were to be put out. In checking those statements after the first printing, I corrected them in some slight particulars, and then the statements were printed in greater numbers by ourselves and distributed in the areas which already had been more or less canvassed. I submit to this committee, that the farmers must be presumed to have read the particulars, because otherwise they would not have done what my hon. friend says they did. They read the posters and, in accordance with the instructions, brought in horses of certain types and weights.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): If the minister would permit a question, I presume that also included horses under 1,300 pounds which were to be slaughtered for purposes of food, for shipment to Belgium?

Mr. GARDINER: No, not the horses we were purchasing; we were not purchasing any for slaughter. Those horses are purchased for slaughter at Swift Current, but we are not purchasing any of those; we are simply purchasing the horses which are sent overseas for work purposes. The suggestion is that some farmers, after having obtained all that information, sold for $60 horses which, according to the information, they might have sold for $80 or $90. Well, I suggest that if, after having read those posters, a man sold a horse to anybody for $60—

An hon. MEMBER: The government buyer turned them down.

Mr. GARDINER: Then that would indicate that the horse was worth only $60. If a farmer brought in a horse which he was prepared to sell to anybody for $60 I can only assume that the horse was not up to the standards we set, and for which we definitely stated the farmer would get $80 or $90 and up to $150.

The position is that some eighteen horses were bought from Mr. Stern, and from what has just been said I assume that another eighteen were bought from farmers in the surrounding district, making up two carloads out of something over three hundred head.

A statement was made by the hon. member which I am not sure is correct, but I have heard similar rumours previously; that is, that the men took the trouble to break these horses and bring them in. I submit it never was intended that any newly broken horse should be sold under that contract, no matter what its weight. These horses are being sent to the Netherlands to be used in the harness they have left in that country.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: That horse would not shrink 100 pounds.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the hon. member's opinion, and I may differ. It would depend upon the horse.

Mr. CARDIFF: Would the minister say that the horses sent to the Netherlands were broken horses?

Mr. GARDINER: They were. They have been inspected over on the other side, and the Netherlands government has reported to me that they have given every satisfaction. That is so because they are carefully selected, quiet, broken horses that already have done work on farms. They want that kind of horse because of the conditions existing in that country. Men have written to me saying that the German armies took away their harness and general equipment, and to-day many of these horses are working in harness made up of wire, rope and anything they can get. A horse that age, just taken off the range and broken the day before he was brought in to be sold to the dealer, would not be suitable even if he were the best horse that ever walked so far as conformation and everything else were concerned.

As a matter of fact, at the present time we are trying to persuade the governments of the Netherlands and France to accept horses from nine years up to twelve years of age. They wanted them from nine years down to four years of age. We felt that the older horses would suit their needs even better than horses from four up to seven years of age if they wanted to put them to work immediately they arrived over there and after they had been properly handled and kept here.

Mr. BURTON: That still does not explain the dapple gray.

Progress reported.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a message from His Excellency the Governor General, signed by his own hand, reading as follows:

I have received with great pleasure the address you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of parliament, and thank you for it sincerely.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Second report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).

CANADIAN FLAG—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. W. E. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce) presented the first report of the special committee on a distinctive national flag, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

STRIKE AT FORD MOTOR PLANT, WINDSOR

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to report that after conferences I have had with the representatives of the Ford Motor Company of Canada and the men's organization, along with Hon. Charles Daley, Minister of Labour for Ontario, a formula has been developed which we feel will be acceptable to both sides.

I think it is inadvisable for me to give any details until the parties have had an opportunity to discuss the matter with those concerned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after Wednesday, November 28, 1945, until the end of the session, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each sitting day and that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m. there shall also be an intermission every day from one to three o'clock.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, the government has been making an effort so to arrange the business of the house as to ensure our being able to prorogue at least a week before Christmas, and the thought of beginning morning sittings of the house is to ensure that end, and an even earlier prorogation if at all possible. I had this motion placed on the order paper on Monday so that hon. members might have time to see its implications. If hon. members are prepared to accept the motion, the government will be quite ready to go ahead on that basis. I should like it understood, however, that the government itself is not pressing the motion to begin morning sessions to-morrow, unless it is going to meet with the general approval of the house. Our intention would be, if we began morning sittings, to devote the mornings to supply so as not further to delay discussion on supply. Also I should make this clear. At present we are holding, as hon. members know, a meeting of the coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference, at which some members of the government—three or four—are expected to be present. As meetings of the coordinating committee take place at ten o'clock in the morning, some of the members of the government will not be in the house on the orders of the day, until after the committee has concluded its discussions, if we begin morning sittings. I mention these matters now that hon. members may express their views. I should be very happy to have the motion adopted as it is, or, if it is the desire of the house to delay a little longer, before beginning morning sittings, to alter the date in accordance with what may be suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Speaking for the party I have the honour to lead, I am glad to say that we are in perfect agreement with the motion moved by the Prime Minister.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): This is in line with the general discussion which took place the other day. I think it is essential that the estimates be given full consideration, and I believe this is the method of achieving that end. We therefore support the motion.

Mr. J. S. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): The Social Credit group will be perfectly prepared to cooperate with the government in this matter.

Motion agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Saturday, December 1, 1945, and every Saturday thereafter until the end of the present session, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock a.m. and the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Friday.

Motion agreed to.

FURNITURE

EXPORTS TO SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN REQUIREMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day were called yesterday the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Kuhl), asked a question concerning the exportation of furniture. His question was:

I have been told that a very large proportion of the furniture which is manufactured in Canada is being exported to the Union of South Africa. In view of the tremendous unsatisfied demand for furniture in Canada on the part of war veterans and civilians alike, I should like to know what comments the minister is prepared to make on this situation.

I wish to advise the hon. member that up to the end of October there had been no exportation of furniture, either metal or wood, to the Union of South Africa since 1942.

AERONAUTICS ACT

COMMERCIAL AIR OPERATIONS, HEARING OF APPLICATIONS, ETC.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction) moved the third reading of bill No. 19, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FISH INSPECTION ACT

DEFINITION OF FISH TO INCLUDE SHELL FISH—PROCESSING AND MARKETING—POWER OF SEIZURE AND CONFISCATION

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries) moved the third reading of bill No. 91, to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ALBERTA NATURAL RESOURCES

CONFIRMATION OF AGREEMENTS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND GOVERNMENT OF ALBERTA

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of bill No. 16, to amend the Alberta Natural Resources Act.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to settle differences which have arisen between the dominion and the province of Alberta on the ownership and control of three developed power sites on the Bow river lying within or adjacent to Stony Indian reserve. All three sites were developed and are now operating under authorizations issued by the dominion government. They were under exclusive dominion jurisdiction prior to the transfer of natural resources in 1930 to the province of Alberta. After the transfer had taken place, the dominion, relying on a series of opinions furnished by the Department of Justice, claimed that the major interest and the duty of administration remained with Canada as trustee for the Indians, and only those parts of the developments lying outside the Indian reserve had passed to provincial control.

The province claimed that while the Indians were entitled to receive their appropriate share of revenues arising from the developments of the power sites, the power sites themselves had passed to the province as part of the interest of the crown in the waters and water powers within the province under the North-West Irrigation Act of 1898 and the Dominion Water Power Act.

The agreement is a compromise of the claims of the dominion and of the province, having in view the rights of the Calgary Power Company who are licensees under the agreement. There are three sites affected by the agreement. One is called Horseshoe Falls, which lies wholly within the Stony Indian reserve, as well as the land flooded by the construction of the dam. Development began by the Calgary Power and Transmission Company in 1909. It was assigned to the Calgary Power Company Limited in 1910 and completed in 1913. The present installation is 19,500 horse-power.

The second site is called Kananaskis Falls, near the western boundary of the reserve below the junction of the Bow and Kananaskis rivers. The dam and other works lie almost wholly within the reserve, but the greater part of the flooded lands lies outside the reserve along the banks of the two rivers.

Developed by Calgary Power Company Limited in 1913. The developed head is 72 feet, of which 45 feet is inside the reserve and 27 feet outside. The present installation is 11,600 horse-power.

The other site affected is called the Ghost site, near the eastern boundary of the reserve below the junction of the Bow and Ghost rivers. The greater part of the dam and powerhouse lies outside the reserve. Rather more than half of the flooded land above the dam is in the reserve. The rest is land under provincial control except for one parcel of public land, lot 8 of the Morleyville settlement referred to below. The site was developed by the Calgary Power Company Limited in 1929, and the present installation is 37,400 horsepower.

Under the terms of the agreement, which have been agreed to by the province and the dominion, it is provided that the land and water-power at the two sites in which the Indian interest predominates, namely, the Horseshoe and the Kananaskis, are to remain in the dominion, while the Ghost site, where the provincial interest is substantial, shall be deemed to have passed to the province at the time of the transfer of the natural resources.

The Minister of Mines and Resources, called in the agreement the dominion minister, will issue all three licences which are to replace the existing authorizations, as those were originally intended to cover only the construction period, and the dominion will continue to administer the Horseshoe and Kananaskis developments, while the province will be responsible for the administration of the Ghost development as soon as the final licence is issued.

In all three the rental payable by the power company will be substantially increased.

As to the Horseshoe site, the interest of the crown in the waters and water-power of this site is to continue to be vested in the crown in the right of Canada. The dominion minister is to issue the licence provided for in the present water-power agreement, and in any renewals of the licence, but there is to be no change in the rental or other conditions of the renewed licence except by agreement between the dominion and the provincial ministers.

There is provision for fixation by arbitration in case these ministers fail to agree on a readjusted rental for a renewal period. There is also provision for a voluntary transfer of the licence to the province or an authority of the province. All payments now being made by the power company and all payments under the new licence are to be payable to Canada for the benefit of the Indians of Stony Band.

As to the Kananaskis site, the interest of the crown in all waters and water powers at this site, including those appurtenant to the present development which are outside the reserve, shall continue, as and from October 1, 1930, to be vested in the crown in the right of Canada. The dominion minister is to issue the licence provided for in the existing water-power agreement, except with respect to land outside the reserve. Provision for renewals is exactly the same as in the case of Horseshoe, and there is the same provision for a voluntary transfer of the licence to the crown or to a provincial authority.

The province will issue a lease to the power company for the flooded lands outside the reserve, and in the event of Canada taking over the power development when the licence expires or is terminated, the province will renew the lease to Canada or its nominee on terms to be mutually agreed upon or settled by a judge of the supreme court of Alberta. The rentals payable by the present licensee, the Calgary Power Company, are to be apportioned as follows: (a) All sums payable for the Indian interest in land and water power at this site under the existing arrangement with the Indians of $1,500 per annum will continue to be payable to Canada for the benefit of the Indians. (b) From the date of the transfer of the natural resources, which was on October 1, 1930, all sums payable under the existing water power agreement, which was a sum of $100 per annum, are to be divided between Canada and the province in proportion to the developed head within and without the reserve, namely 45/72 to Canada and 27/72 to the province. (c) The rental under the new water power licence will be divided in the same proportions, provided that Canada's share shall never be less than $1,500 per annum, the amount now paid to the Indians. If Canada takes over the development under the terms of the licence, the province is to continue to receive a rental equal to the amount payable to the province in the year preceding the taking over by Canada. (d) Rental under the provincial lease for land outside the reserve will be payable to the province. For the Ghost site the terms are as follows: the dominion minister is to issue the final licence provided for in the existing interim licence. The undertaking as described in the licence is to include besides the Ghost power development all the company's interconnected transmission and distribution systems in the province, and in proceedings for the regulation of rates and services, such undertaking is also to include the Horseshoe and the Kananaskis developments and all other power and storage developments in the province constituting at the time one interconnected power system of the licensee. For purposes of the regulations the dominion minister is to fix the actual cost of the Horseshoe, Kananaskis and Ghost power developments.

The licence is to have the same effect as if issued prior to October 1, 1930, and the land and water power rights covered by the licence shall be deemed to have passed to the province on that date. Consequently, as soon as the licence is issued, the province takes possession of the power site—I am speaking now of the Ghost site—and shall be responsible for its administration, in accordance with the terms of the licence.

The financial arrangements are as follows: (a) The water power rental payable under the interim and final licences from October 1, 1930 onwards is to be paid in equal shares to Canada and the province. (b) The land rental under the interim and final licences since October 1, 1930, is to be paid to the province. (c) When the licence expires or is terminated, the province will pay to Canada a rental equal to the average annual rental payable to Canada in the previous five years so long as the generating plant continues in operation. If the plant is closed down, the province will pay to Canada, so long as the dam contributes to storage or river control, the sum of $3,500, which is the amount now being paid by the Calgary Power company; and all payments to Canada are for the benefit of the Indians.

The three licences referred to in the agreement do not form a part of it but are to be prepared in advance and are to be in the form and terms of drafts initialled for identification by the dominion and provincial ministers. The draft licences have been prepared and have been approved by the province. The agreement will make the licences valid and effective according to their terms, but is not to be deemed to be a waiver of any other rights, interests or obligations of Canada or of the province.

The benefits to the Indians under this agreement are as follows: The issue of the water power licences is long overdue. As a matter of fact these matters have been under consideration for the past eight years. The department was prevented from taking effective action by the opposition of the province, and also by the reluctance of the Calgary Power Company to accept the proposals that were put forward from time to time. The company has been paying the stipulated rental for Horseshoe and Kananaskis, but has paid only the minimum rental due to the Indians for the Ghost development. The present draft licences, now accepted by the dominion, by the province and also by the Calgary Power Company, remedy this condition and provide a greatly increased revenue for the Indians, as shown in the following statement of the annual payments:

The Horseshoe development; present rental, the share of Canada for the Indians is $1,501; the provincial share is nil.

Mr. MacNICOL: Per annum?

Mr. GLEN: Yes. The new rental is $6,375, Canada's share for the Indians, retroactive to October 14, 1935. The provincial share of the rentals is nil.

The Kananaskis rentals, present rental, Canada's share is $1,562; the provincial share is $38. But the new rental provides for $2,750, Canada's share for the Indians, retroactive to October 14, 1936, and the provincial share will be $1,650, also retroactive to that date.

The Ghost rental: The present rental is $3,500, Canada's share for the Indians, and the provincial share is $4,000. The rental under the final licence will be approximately $8,000, Canada's share for the Indians, and $8,500 for the provincial share.

Owing to the retroactive nature of the arrangements large sums will be payable for the benefit of the Indians as soon as the licences become effective. The amounts up to January 1, 1945 are approximately as follows: For the Horseshoe, $49,768; Kananaskis, $16,119 ; the Ghost, $41,099, a total of $106,986, which will be paid to Canada for the Indians. And thereafter for a considerable number of years there will be an annual revenue for the Indians of approximately $17,125 in place of the present income of $6,600. This is part I of the bill.

There is also schedule II dealing with certain sites that were set aside for migratory wild fowl. For many years the policy of the dominion government has been directed toward the protection of migratory wild fowl as a valuable natural resource. This policy has been furthered by the setting aside of suitable areas as bird sanctuaries and breeding grounds and the establishment of public shooting grounds where the general public may have access to a reasonable and fair share of game birds. The practice of setting aside certain areas for bird sanctuaries in accordance with the Migratory Birds Convention Act was adopted in Alberta after careful investigation. In consultation and cooperation with the chief game officer of the province, seven separate areas suitable for bird sanctuary purposes were set aside on crown lands and water areas in the province of Alberta under the provisions of order in council P.C. 1334, dated June 15, 1920, and order in council P.C. 346, dated March 9, 1925. Of these the Buffalo lake bird sanctuary was cancelled by order in council P.C. 2039, dated December 7, 1926, this action being necessary owing to changed local conditions. The six remaining sanctuaries comprised an area of 208·73 square miles.

In 1925 it was recognized that areas offering shooting facilities to the general public were limited, and in the interests of sportsmanship and recreation it was decided that the time was opportune for taking steps to reserve suitable areas which would be freely available to the public. Officers of the crown made careful selections from available dominion lands, at the request and with the cooperation of the provincial authorities concerned. As a result, thirty-two separate areas, totalling in all an area of 363·4 square miles, were, under the provisions of section 76(e) of the Dominion Lands Act, 1908, reserved permanently as public shooting grounds in the province of Alberta by order in council P.C. 356 dated the 9th day of March, 1925.

Under the Alberta Natural Resources Transfer Act, 1930, these bird sanctuaries and public shooting grounds were transferred to the province along with other natural resources. Section 19 of the Alberta Natural Resources Agreement provided that the province would further continue and preserve as such the bird sanctuaries and public shooting grounds which had already been established and would set aside such additional bird sanctuaries and public shooting grounds as might thereafter be established by agreement between the dominion and Alberta governments.

Under the terms of the agreement, no provision was made whereby any bird sanctuaries or public shooting grounds established in Alberta could be subsequently cancelled. In the course of time it was observed that changes in precipitation and other natural conditions as well as changes in the population of surrounding areas in Alberta had reduced or nullified the value of some bird sanctuaries and public shooting grounds for the purposes for which they had been established. After inspections conducted jointly by our chief federal migratory bird officer for the prairie provinces and a representative of the Alberta provincial game department, it was revealed that in Alberta three of the bird sanctuaries and fourteen of the public shooting grounds had become unsuitable as such owing to the unavoidable changing of conditions. The proposed agreement provides that those reservations no longer suitable for the purpose for which they were established may be cancelled by agreement between the two responsible ministers concerned, with the approval of the governor in council and the lieutenant governor in council. It is also mutually agreed between provincial and federal authorities that in case of cancellation of any bird sanctuary, an area of value for the conservation of bird life will be set aside to replace it.

I have a schedule showing the bird sanctuaries and public shooting grounds which were transferred to the province of Alberta, including a list of those sanctuaries and shooting grounds which have become unsuitable as such. With the consent of the house I might put this list on Hansard.

These, I think, are the particulars concerning this agreement which, as I have said, has been the subject of discussion for years with the province and with the Calgary Power Company in an endeavour to settle the dispute between them. After these negotiations they arrived at conclusions which are embodied in the agreement. The province of Alberta is satisfied with the terms of the agreement. If the bill passes this house a similar bill, with the agreement attached, will be introduced at the next session of the provincial legislature in order that the agreement may be confirmed. As I have said, this is the end of a long course of negotiation between the dominion and the province. I believe the terms are very favourable, and the Calgary Power Company is also satisfied.

Mr. MacNICOL: Before the minister sits down will he tell us what horse-power it is possible to obtain from each of the three power plants?

Mr. GLEN: At the present time?

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes.

Mr. GLEN: At the Horseshoe falls, 19,500 horse-power; at the Kananaskis, 11,600 horse-power, and at the Ghost site, 37,400 horse-power.

Mr. FRASER: The minister said the government was satisfied and the province of Alberta was satisfied with the agreement. Could he tell us if the Indians are satisfied with it? I ask that question because, while they seem to receive quite a lot of money, it is perhaps not more than they deserve. I do not believe the minister told us how many square miles are being taken away from the Indians.

Mr. GLEN: Of course we are on second reading just now. Perhaps in committee we might discuss the matter further.

Mr. FRASER: That is satisfactory.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Can the minister tell us whether or not the Indians were consulted, and how many Indians there are on this Stony reserve who will be affected by the agreement? We should like to know also what the engineers have stated as the possible development of these falls. We are interested in finding out whether or not the rights of the Indians have been encroached upon, and whether the deals which have been made in their behalf have been equitable.

Mr. GLEN: May I suggest that the bill be given second reading, and when we are in committee these questions may be asked and answered? We are on second reading just now.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I quite agree; but we are discussing the principle, and in agreements of this kind the house should be given some assurance that the rights and privileges of the Indians have been protected. However, I am quite willing to wait until we go into committee to have these questions answered.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to direct the attention of the minister to two or three features in connection with this bill, which is to validate an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Alberta in regard to these natural resources. When the resources of Alberta were returned to that province in 1930 we hoped that since Alberta was so rich in coal and falling water through power and hydro-electric energy, the government would lay down some national policy for this country in regard to water power. As you know, we in central Canada are largely dependent upon American coal; yet during all the years between the two wars nothing was done to relieve that condition, although in 1923 I had a motion that was discussed for two days for a national fuel policy so that all coal should be developed under our flag.

In this case the Calgary Power Company developed the resources on the banks and bed of the Bow river. Back in 1930 we hoped that some definite national hydro policy would be laid down concerning water power, not only in connection with this particular province but for the whole country. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the water power available in Canada totals some 46,000,000 horse-power, of which only about 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 horse-power have been developed, and part of that development is only seasonal, during certain months of the year. In view of the difficulty we have had getting the splendid Alberta coal in central Canada I had hoped that in the long period since 1930, when the Alberta Natural Resources Act was passed, the government might have laid down a long range national hydro-electric policy in connection with the water powers of Canada.

As far as this particular agreement is concerned, the three sites named in section 1 were developed by the Calgary Power Company. Now under these agreements in the future two of them are to be developed and operated by the dominion, and the other at Ghost site is to be operated by the province. Has Alberta no provincial policy of its own, regarding the water power of that province? Is there any provincial control in these schedules over rates? Two sites are to be operated by the federal power and the other site by provincial power. Is there any federal control over those two sites, and over the company, in connection with the rates they may be allowed to charge? Then, in the second schedule is there any control by the province in respect of the rates, or has this province laid down a hydro-electric provincial law in that respect?

British Columbia was the last to enter this hydro-electric power-at-cost project, and now there is a power-at-cost policy of hydro-electric sites for the province of Alberta. We were in hopes that the government would lay down a national hydro policy in 1930, when the natural resources of Alberta were considered. I had hoped that in the fifteen years since that time the government of Canada would have written into these agreements some control over rates and some policy as to national hydro. I find, however, that there is no such provision.

The minister now in charge of the department is a most capable one, and I do urge that he consider a national power policy for the country so that we may preserve water-power facilities for the common good, and so that we may protect ourselves from the cold winters we have had in the last few years.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the house only long enough to find out if my understanding of what is taking place is the correct one. I have read the bill and the agreements, and I understand they merely put in statutory form the arrangement arrived at between the two governments and the Calgary Power Company. Is that correct?

Mr. GLEN: Correct.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I take it that all the moneys which come to the dominion are for the Stony Indians on the reserve. Is that correct? May I express the hope, since this matter is in the minister's department, that these moneys or such other moneys as the dominion government may have will at long last do justice to that band of Indians, who have worked very hard to get along on nothing more than a stone-heap. That is where they live to-day. I hope the government will consider the purchase of some arable land at the east end of that reserve for the benefit of these splendid men and women. When I describe them in that way I am not speaking too strongly. The house should know that not a Stony Indian has been convicted of any breach of criminal law in more than fifteen years. I wonder what other part of the country can make that claim.

It is my sincere hope that we shall look at this thing broadly. They are raising all the cattle there they can possibly raise; they could not feed another animal, because there is only one high meadow of about 400 acres. Half the band is now off the reserve simply because they cannot make a living on it.

This is not a matter of politics, because all hon. members have been interested in it. But we have been permitting a terrible injustice so far as that band of splendid people is concerned; and I feel sure that the minister will see that justice is done for the benefit of these worthy citizens.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. FRASER: How many square miles does this take away or flood out from the Indians? Are the Indians satisfied with the agreement?

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member has asked how many acres were taken from the Indians or were flooded out. The Horseshoe site is one of 1,000 acres, for which $10,000 was paid.

Mr. FRASER: Was that paid to the Indians?

Mr. GLEN: Many years ago. Then the Kananaskis is of course 95 acres, for which $10,000 was paid, and the Ghost is 1,232 acres, for which $20,337 was paid. These lands were surrendered years ago, and that money was paid to them.

Mr. FRASER: Are the Indians satisfied under the new agreement, and were they consulted?

Mr. GLEN: The Indians were satisfied. They surrendered the lands, and received a rental of $1,500 at that time. That was the agreement. As will be seen, we are at this time increasing the rentals to a point considerably over what was formerly received.

Mr. FRASER: Have they been consulted?

Mr. GLEN: I do know that they were consulted then, because they had surrendered the lands and had received payment. There would be no need for further consultation with them.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: This afternoon the minister outlined the development of water-power on the Indian reserve. Has he any engineers' figures to show the extent to which the power development can be increased?

Mr. GLEN: These sites are practically fully developed now.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I understand that this Indian reserve has very little arable land and is not possible of economic development. The moneys paid would have been paid in trust to the Indian Affairs branch?

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: And administered by the Indian Affairs branch, and the agency?

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How many Indians are affected? How will the money the Indians are to get be used? Will it be held in trust, or is it the intention to carry on some development to improve the economic condition of the Indians at that point?

Mr. GLEN: There are about 700 Indians.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does that include the families?

Mr. GLEN: That is the total population. The hon. member for Calgary West was referring to the Stony Indians. At this very moment an officer is out there looking into this whole matter affecting those Indians. He will endeavour to carry out the wishes the hon. member has expressed, with a view to purchasing some other lands so that these families may have proper attention and proper care from the Indian branch. This has been very much in their minds. We are hoping we shall obtain land which will be sufficient for the maintenance of these families.

In answer to the hon. member for Yorkton, I may say that the money now being received by the dominion government will be used for the benefit of the Stony Indians. That is part of the agreement. All that will be done with the money will be done for their entire benefit, maintenance and care.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is a pleasure for me to speak briefly on this matter, Mr. Chairman. I supported a bill when it was before this house in a previous parliament to turn over to the Calgary Power Company the waters of the upper portion of the Ghost river, which were diverted and turned into lake Minnewanka in Banff park to produce more power for making munitions; and I am going to support this one.

The Calgary Power Company deserve a lot of credit for their oversight in making use of the maximum amount of water from the resources of the Bow river to provide power for Alberta. What is needed more than anything else in some parts of Alberta, and particularly, in Saskatchewan, is cheap water power. I do not know just what the Calgary Power Company are charging for their horsepower, but I have no doubt that their rates have been checked and are reasonable. The fact that they are able to produce this much power at a reasonable rate will be a great inducement to industry to settle in that part of Alberta where industry is so sorely needed.

I believe that there is one other source of water power that the Calgary Power Company can acquire, and perhaps will acquire later on to increase its power at these various sites. It is in the valley west of Banff; I have forgotten the name at the moment; I did not know this bill was coming up to-day or I would have had these names on the tip of my tongue. But when the company does make application for that power I am going to support the application, because I believe it would induce more business to settle in southern Alberta, and the more business you have there, the more employment is created. One thing that the western provinces need more than anything else is cheap power, so that industries will be established there to supply work for a multitude of artisans in various trades.

The particular power in question is most fortunate in that there are three dams one after the other, using the same water, and that makes for the production of cheap power. I made a thorough survey of each one of these dams and the whole area round about, because I have always had a warm feeling for the Stony Indian tribe. This was the tribe, as the minister may know—perhaps he does not know but I do—among which the late and famous Reverend George McDougall, laboured as a minister. The stone marking his grave is not far from one of these dams in the neighbourhood of Morleyville. The reservoir is located quite close to Morleyville. It is an historic site.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The Ghost site.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is near that site that the church is located that was built by the Reverend Mr. McDougall in 1860 or a little later. He died not far away from the site of the Ghost reservoir. Just near there is the ancient crossroads of the Indians travelling from north to south and east to west. The old and historic church at Morleyville is nearby and that site was chosen so that the Indians could have a mission there. Later on I wish to associate myself with a programme to commemorate that historic site.

I have been wondering whether the $17,500 which the minister said was about the amount which the Indians will receive from these power sites is an adequate return. If it is, I am satisfied. There will be about 37,500 horsepower, the minister said, generated at these three power sites. The Calgary Power Company is up against considerable expense keeping these dams in order. One of them has quite a long bank which has been built to contain the waters, and it may be expensive to maintain. I should like to know whether the department is thoroughly satisfied with this annual fee of $17,500, because if the power company have to pay more they will have to add to the selling price of their power, and I am convinced that the power should be sold at the cheapest possible rate to encourage more and more industry to establish there, thus creating more and more employment. But if the department is satisfied, I have nothing more to say on that.

I want to add a word to what the hon. member for Calgary West has said about the Stony Indian reserve. I went over it carefully. It is a pitiful place on which to settle Indians. If this increased revenue for the Indians—the $17,500 is an annual return, is it not?—

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: If it will enable something to be done for this long-suffering tribe of Indians and give them an opportunity to thrive, that will be all to the good. Someone has said that the tribe has been reduced in numbers. The day I was there, half the tribe were away working in southern Alberta for the farmers, picking beets, I suppose, or tending cattle. These Indians deserve a great deal. They have a good school, the principal of which is the Reverend Mr. Staley, one of the finest men it has been my pleasure to meet. His heart and soul are in his work for the Indians. He told me that his Indian pupils were as well educated, up to the age to which Indian children are educated, as the children of any other school. But where do they go from here, he asked? That is the great point. As the hon. member for Calgary West has said, perhaps more land could be bought. I hope that this $17,500 will be used to assist the Stony Indians and that a great deal more departmental money will be used to give these Indians a chance that they never yet have had. An industrial school might be located there to train the Indians for the jobs that will be available when this cheaper power is developed in southern Alberta. My own experience in employing Indians is that you can get good results from them in certain lines of industrial activity. I have had them working in plants, and they are thrifty and industrious. I hope that this increased return will work to the benefit of the Indians on the land—and that must be done. I may say to the minister. If the minister has not been on the reservation, I suggest that he should visit it at the first opportunity. He will ask himself why any previous government placed any band of Indians on that reservation. It is almost impossible for them to keep body and soul together. In addition, to this, I hope more will be given them. Give them a chance to live.

When the minister goes there and has a chat with that wonderful man, Reverend Mr. Staley, I am sure he will agree that the Indian children should have some place to go after they are through with school. Today there is no place for them to go. Perhaps, as I said a moment ago, with an increase in money a small industrial school may be developed there, and the Indians given a chance to work in the plants which I, for one, hope will be established in and around Calgary to take advantage of this power supply. I have a keen recollection that we voted previously to allow the power company to divert water from the upper Ghost river and pass it through Minnewanka lake. Owing to the much higher head that the water had to fall there, they were able to develop a great deal more power. I trust that as a result of this bill the Indians themselves will benefit. The benefits to the white people are less important, but we too will reap advantages from more industries and cheaper power. I am more concerned in seeing to it that the Indians shall benefit to a much greater extent from this power than they have ever done before. We all know how the Indians of Oklahoma have been enriched; although a former United States government put them on what was a poor reservation, Almighty God placed oil underneath it, the oil was found, and to-day they are rolling in wealth. Let us hope that our Indians too will have a much better chance than they ever had before.

Mr. GLEN: I am sure I shall have an opportunity of visiting that area, because it is one of the many visits which the hon. member has promised that we will take together to see these lands. As far as the rentals were concerned, they were the subject of very keen scrutiny on the part of departmental officials. The Indians themselves already accepted $1,500 as a rental for each of these sites, and the amount has been increased very substantially since that time. I can assure the hon. member that all the money put in the hands of the government on behalf of the Indians, and especially the money which is for the Stony Indians, will be applied for their benefit. This has been in the minds of the officers of the department, and of the hon. member for Calgary West, who has interested himself in the Stony Indians. As I have already said, one of the departmental officers is there at this moment for the purpose of which the hon. member is speaking, namely that land be obtained for these Indians upon which they will have a reasonable hope of maintaining themselves in a proper manner. The moneys which we now receive from these rentals will be applied for the benefit of these Stony Indians. May I also point out that when the licence expires the rentals will be subject to revision.

Mr. MacNICOL: All of these?

Mr. GLEN: Yes. They will be subject to revision, and in the light of the circumstances which then exist I am quite sure that those in the department who are trustees for the Indians will see that whatever is due to them will be obtained for them.

Mr. CHURCH: There is one question I want to ask the minister before sections 2 and 3 of the agreement are confirmed and validated by this parliament. There will be tremendous developments in this great province, which is so rich in water power; and while I appreciate what the Calgary Power Company have done during the time that splendid company has been in existence, I would like to know if there is to be any control over power rates for commercial and domestic lighting before these agreements are validated and final licences granted. That should be declared before the final certificate of ratification of the two agreements and licence are granted. Surely the department must have some national hydro policy regarding the vast unexplored parts of this great province. Is there no agreement in these licences, either the interim one or the final one, or under the agreement set out in schedules I and II, for the control of rates by some public body, federal or provincial? I think that matter should be looked into.

While I appreciate what private companies have done for commercial and domestic electric lighting, and realize that in many cases their charges have not been out of the way, in some cases they have been, and we have seen the results in other provinces. British Columbia has recently come into the power-at-cost hydro picture. In Ontario such hydro-electric companies pay taxes on lands and buildings and personal property and are treated in the same way as privately-owned light companies. I think there should be in the agreement some protection for the consumer, because after all is said and done the consumer is paying the taxes for commercial and domestic lighting. As far as I can see, the two sections of the agreement which cover the subject fail to mention control of rates and there has been no declaration of a national hydro policy. I repeat, this being the final licence, what is the policy of the government on national power schemes for this great province?

Mr. GLEN: Presumably the hon. gentleman is speaking with regard to the revision of rates. That matter is provided for under the water power regulations for public utilities, and will be subject to the jurisdiction of the provincial board.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am extremely pleased to learn from the minister's statement that the income of the Indians from these water power developments will be so largely increased. I should like to join with the hon. member for Calgary West in urging that the money so received be used immediately to purchase the agricultural land so urgently needed by the Stony Indian band. I would point out that they have no land upon which they can grow a vegetable crop which they can be sure of harvesting. As a matter of fact they have harvested, I understand, only two crops of potatoes in the last twenty years, which gives some idea of their very serious plight as far as agricultural land is concerned. Do the moneys of which the minister speaks include payments to the Indians for the power line which runs across the reserve, and which, I understand, they were, at one time at least, to get a separate settlement for?

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that that was covered by the cash payments which were made to the Indians many years ago.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How long has that power site development been going on there?

Mr. GLEN: The beginning was in 1909. There were others in 1914 and 1929.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I see that some development has been going on there since. Why are the payments made retroactive to 1935 rather than, say, 1930?

Mr. GLEN: The matter was the subject of a good deal of contention with the power company at that time, and when the proposals were made for the licences to be issued and the new agreement to be completed it was felt that they had been pretty hard in fixing the amounts which should be paid, and the departmental officials were satisfied that they had made a good bargain as far as the Indians were concerned.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am not much of a judge of power rates. We do not worry about our rates in Alberta. The city of Calgary has a power plant of its own, operated with coal; it is not a stand-by plant. If you live where we do, and have coal all around you and underneath you, it will pretty well take care of the rates being charged by a power company. What I was anxious to say to the minister or to the staff who made this financial arrangement is that I think they are very greatly to be complimented upon having settled this matter in the very satisfactory way they have for the benefit of this Indian tribe.

Section agreed to.

[Mr. Glen.]

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—final licences.

Mr. HARKNESS: Paragraph (e) on page 7 of the bill states that as and from October 1, 1930 all sums payable for the use or occupation of land under the terms of the interim licence of January 17, 1929, shall belong to and be payable to the province. Did the Stony Indians get any benefit from that part of their lands covered by the water of the Ghost dam, apart from payments they have already received, or will this particular clause cut them out of payments in the future?

Mr. GLEN: This is an amount of $500 per annum that goes to the province for the use of the water bed in respect of the Ghost site only.

Section agreed to.

On schedule I.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Was there any consultation between the department and the Indian tribe on the reserve at the time the agreement was arrived at?

Mr. GLEN: Is the hon. member referring to this particular agreement?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes.

Mr. GLEN: At the time they surrendered the land there was consultation with them. This land was in the dominion for the benefit of the Indians, but no consultation was had with them with respect to this particular agreement.

DEPARTMENT OF RECONSTRUCTION

308. Departmental administration, including expenses incidental to organization, $1,500,000.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration, $136,035.

Mr. FAIR: I wish to thank the Minister of Agriculture for getting a bit closer to us in the chamber. We farmers hope that he will get a little closer—and I mean closer—in sympathy before these estimates are disposed of.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Before proceeding to a general discussion of the estimates, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the item with which we were dealing at adjournment last night, and I do so in order to complete the record on this subject. The question under discussion at that time was the purchasing of horses, and had I been listening more carefully at the beginning I would have directed the attention of the hon. member who was discussing the matter to what he himself suggested, namely, that it should properly have been taken up under the special items towards the end of my estimates rather than as a matter of general discussion. Had that course been followed I should have had the facts with me last night and I could have given a more intelligent answer to what was said. I did, however, give a general outline of the plans which have been made with regard to the purchase of horses, and the results of those plans, and some of the facts in connection with what has been done to date were brought out in the return which was put on the record the other day at the request of the member for Wood Mountain.

I desire to summarize the results of that return. It shows that from August 16 to August 25 we purchased horses at about a dozen points along the eastern side of Saskatchewan in order that we might gain some experience in the methods to be followed before embarking upon the purchase of horses in the drought area, which after all was the area we desired to get into and in which to make considerable purchases if possible before winter. On August 25 we began to purchase horses in the south at Weyburn. We followed through at twenty-odd different points from August 25 until September 8, purchasing at different points throughout the southern part of Saskatchewan and at two points in Alberta, namely Monitor and Consort. In other words, by September 8 we had just entered upon the purchase of horses in the drought area of Alberta and had covered a very considerable part of Saskatchewan.

So far as my own records show, we had only two complaints in writing regarding the activities of the purchasers. One of them came from LaFleche, and the other from Coronach, which is down in the same part of the province. The complaint with regard to LaFleche did not come direct from LaFleche to me but from the Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan, Mr. McIntosh. I have his letter before me and mine in reply. The letter which Mr. McIntosh wrote me contained most of the complaints which were given by the hon. member for Wood Mountain last night. I think they were largely taken from a newspaper which is published in LaFleche.

In view of some of the things which were said last night I think probably it would be advisable for me to place on record the letter which I wrote to Mr. McIntosh dealing with that particular matter, because it covers the points which were raised in a manner which will not only be an explanation but will probably give some information. Mr. McIntosh wired me on September 24 setting forth that there had been complaints in from LaFleche. I wired him stating that we had no complaints here and asked him for information. He then wrote me under date of October 24 giving me approximately the information contained in what was placed on Hansard by the hon. member for Wood Mountain last night; and on October 27 I wrote him as follows:

Hon. L. F. McIntosh,
Minister of Agriculture,
Regina, Sask.

Dear Mr. McIntosh:

I have yours of October 24. Your letter is the first intimation I have had as to what the alleged difficulties were at LaFleche. I shall, of course, have the matter looked into and receive a report from those who were conducting this purchase.

If the story as told by your correspondent is correct, it bears out the fears which I expressed to you and Mr. Auld during our interview at the beginning of the plan. You will recall that after your man had made some arrangements for the bringing together of horses in this manner as a result of consultation with some of our representatives, I expressed the view that the plan would not work to the satisfaction of anyone. Although we called off the first arrangement, there was some disagreement with me on this, with the result that we tried it out in a few places. I do not think that there was entire satisfaction anywhere.

Some of the difficulty was caused by the fact that we were not able to get a final signing of the French contract, and have not been able to get it signed even up to date. It was the French who desired to have the lighter horses—the Netherlands wanted heavier horses. Because this contract was not signed it was impossible for the lighter horses to be purchased.

I quite agree with those who complain that if it were at all possible to do so farmers should have been informed in advance of the change, but you will realize that to do this would have been most difficult. As a matter of fact, it is just a further indication that the plan which was evolved will not work satisfactorily.

About the same time that this sale was held information was received that boats could not be secured to ship more horses at present. For this reason the whole plan has been called off until next spring. I can assure you that whether all claims made with regard to the LaFleche experience are correct or not, we have had sufficient experience with the plan itself to know that it will not operate satisfactorily. We are, therefore, developing new plans with regard to any future activities in that direction.

About August 24 a press statement of the policy that we were following was put out, and I think I should read that to the committee in order that it may be on the record as well. It was as follows:

The Minister of Agriculture has completed arrangements with the governments of the Netherlands and France under which the Department of Agriculture agrees to purchase about 40,000 horses between now and October, 1946, to be shipped to those countries for use on farms and elsewhere.

The horses purchased must be clean-legged and well-broken and sound of limb and wind. They must weigh not less than 1,375 pounds for France and 1,450 pounds for the Netherlands. Those purchased immediately will be for the Netherlands.

The minister has announced that the area which is short of feed in Saskatchewan and Alberta will be combed carefully for every available suitable horse. To make this possible, a committee composed of George Spence, director of P.F.R.A., and Mr. O. Freer, who is in charge of community pastures, and Mr. J. J. Bowlen, a rancher of Calgary, Alberta, has been set up to organize these districts. They have called in the secretary-treasurers of the association of rural municipalities in Saskatchewan, and will call in the secretary-treasurers of the same organization in Alberta to assist in making a survey of the numbers of suitable horses available in each rural municipality. It is planned to ask each secretary-treasurer in the poor crop areas to assemble information as to the number and owners of suitable horses for sale in each poor crop municipality. The Prairie Farm Assistance inspectors when they visit these municipalities will assist in organizing the assembling of these horses in numbers, preferably at farms where they can be properly cared for and fed, to be examined by a purchasing party. The purchasing parties will be under the direction of Mr. Jack Byers of the agricultural department.

Farmers who have suitable horses to sell in the area west of the Soo line and south of the Saskatchewan river in Saskatchewan and throughout the poor crop areas on the east side of Alberta, should apply to the secretaries of their rural municipalities for circulars indicating the type of horse and the possible prices. Other poor crop areas will be covered as soon as possible. They should then notify the secretary as to the number of such horses he could supply at some convenient asesmbling place to be reviewed by a purchasing party. Each purchasing party will have on it a qualified veterinarian to examine the horses, and notice will be given to all those desiring to sell horses as to the time and place at which horses are to be assembled.

A survey has been made of certain areas east of Regina in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which shows that there are sections where quite a number of suitable horses can be secured.

These areas will be utilized to provide horses required on short notice to fill boatloads in the early stages of the plan and when the poor crop areas have been fully combed will, in common with other parts of Canada, be covered to obtain horses to fill the contracts. An effort is being made to get available horses out of the areas where feed is short before winter.

It is suggested that farmers who intend to bring horses to the assembling place should whenever possible visit one of the previous sales to acquaint themselves with the types required and thereby save themselves the experience of taking horses in which would not be acceptable.

Mr. BURTON: Was that statement issued to the press?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it was issued to the press and published I think in the Regina Leader-Post, and I do not know what other papers. It was given to the press and published generally.

Mr. BURTON: Was the Department of Agriculture at Regina acquainted with the matter?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; as a matter of fact I held a meeting with the secretary of the rural municipalities, Mr. Bryden, and with the representatives of the treasury in Regina, and the departmental officials. I have here a letter which was sent out by the department at Regina, indicating what the plan was. They took the trouble to send out a letter to all their own employees in different parts of the province, telling them what the plan was, stating that it would be announced from Ottawa, that the old plan which had been talked about earlier, and which I referred to last night, had been dropped, and that the new one would be announced; and it was announced as I have indicated here. They asked their own people to make a check on these notices that were put up with regard to purchases, and to assist in every possible way, and I wish to thank them for their efforts in that regard.

Mr. BURTON: But how does what the minister mentioned last evening, in regard to the plan having been prematurely advertised in the Regina newspaper, work in with the statement he has just made?

Mr. GARDINER: If my hon. friend wants that, I will give him the whole thing; I have it all here. The first article put out was on July 20, and read:

Province to Sell Horses in Europe

Agricultural representatives of the provincial agriculture department next week will begin a survey of an available supply of work horses which may be suitable for sale to the Netherlands government.

The Saskatchewan department is working in cooperation with the federal government in the sale of these horses.

The sale will be confined at this time to the "short crop" areas of Saskatchewan, agriculture minister L. F. McIntosh said Friday.

The Netherlands government, Mr. McIntosh said, wants a supply of the work horses this fall, and possibly a further supply next spring.

Further down it says:

Already an agent of the federal agriculture department has been through the west contacting provincial agriculture departments with regard to the horse purchases.

Mr. McIntosh emphasized that the purchases will be made from farm owners.

The method of purchasing will be conducted in the following manner, according to Mr. McIntosh:

Agricultural representatives will first make a survey of the "short crop" areas to find out the available supply of the animals required. It was expected that these "short crop" areas will be able to furnish sufficient horses for the number required this fall.

Once this has been done, farmers with animals for sale will be asked to bring them into designated urban centres where a dominion government buyer and a veterinarian will arrange purchasing. The animals will then be shipped east to seaboard to await shipment to the Netherlands, their sea voyage dependent upon the availabality of shipping.

Then it goes on to indicate the kind of animals required. That was the first announcement that went out, on July 20.

Mr. BURTON: Did the issuance of that statement interfere with the arrangements the minister's department was trying to make with the Netherlands government?

Mr. GARDINER: As a matter of fact I said last night that our department had not completed any arrangements at that time. As is suggested in this item, we have sent a man to inform the three provincial governments in the west as to a possible plan, and have that matter discussed with them. As I said last night, he discussed it with all three governments and the only one that put anything in the press about it was the government of Saskatchewan.

Mr. BURTON: But the publication of this statement did not interfere with the arrangements the minister was trying to make with the Netherlands

Mr. GARDINER: It was put out before we had any plan finally evolved at all. It was a possible plan which was discussed with the governments of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba; and the only government that published it was the government of Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact it had not been discussed with me at all up to that time. An official was sent out from Ottawa to discuss the matter first with these governments; then he was to come back and discuss it with me. It had not been discussed and there was not a plan at all at that time.

Mr. BURTON: What I am trying to find out is this: has the minister any reason to believe that the publication of this statement interfered with the agreements he was trying to conclude?

Mr. GARDINER: I did not suggest that last evening. What I said was that at that time we had not an agreement signed with anybody. The agreement was just something in the offing. Later on we did get an agreement with the Netherlands, but as yet we have not come to an agreement with France. I do not suggest that it interfered with the making of the agreements at all; I simply say it was announced in advance of our own plans having been completed and that they had to await signing of the agreement with the Netherlands. This made it more difficult for us to do anything else than congregate these horses in the towns and villages, as announced in this statement.

Mr. FAIR: Would the minister explain how he has been able to ship some 600 horses to France if he has not come to any agreement with that country?

Mr. GARDINER: We will come to that, but first let me finish this statement. I repeat, this article appeared in the press on July 20. As I said last evening, I interviewed the persons in Regina who were dealing with the matter, I think on Wednesday of the week of July 28. On July 28, in any case, which was Saturday, a further statement was put out headed, "Horse purchasing centres selected." This again was put out by the department at Regina, giving a list of places throughout the drought area at which horses would be congregated. One of these places is LaFleche, about which we were speaking last evening, together with quite a number of other places where we finally purchased horses. Then on July 30 this statement was put out:

Agriculture Minister Gardiner said Sunday night the federal government was preparing to buy horses for both the Netherlands and France, and that only well-broken weighty horses were wanted. As soon as plans were complete the agriculture department would announce them in full.

"The special products board is setting up an organization to purchase and assemble horses," the minister said. "It is the desire to take as many as possible from the drought area. It has been decided to purchase the first boatload as close as possible to the assembling pastures at St. Lazare and Rockham, Manitoba."

"The experience gained there will immediately be utilized to set up a plan which can be extended to every dry area where suitable horses can be obtained. The desire is to work out some plan which will not require farmers to move horses any considerable distance until they have been actually purchased."

I may say that this article was put out after I had some conversations with officials of the department at Regina. Then on July 31, which was Tuesday, the government of Saskatchewan put out this statement:

Cancellation of the plan to establish thirty-three points in western Saskatchewan as selection centres for the purchase of horses for Holland was announced Monday by agricultural minister L. F. McIntosh. Instead of having farmers take their horses for sale to selection points, it is understood government buyers will deal directly with farm owners on their farms.

The difficulty in explaining exactly what will satisfy the Netherlands government makes it desirable to contact farmers at home instead of having them take their horses to points previously announced, Mr. McIntosh said.

The announcement of the thirty-three selection points published in the Saturday and Monday editions of the Leader-Post has been withdrawn according to Mr. McIntosh. The minister expressed the hope that farmers who have horses which they think would be suitable for the small farms in Holland will await further announcement of buying plans.

That announcement was published after Mr. McIntosh and I had had breakfast together and discussed the whole matter. He issued this statement in order to indicate that the plans would be changed. Then, as is intimated in my announcement which appeared in the Leader-Post of the 30th, which was Monday, the suggestion was made that we should like to have these horses bought as near as possible to the farms. My desire in that matter was to have the secretary-treasurers of the municipalities ask the farmers to list their horses with them, and then for the secretary-treasurers to notify our man at Regina how many horses were available in that municipality. Then we would arrange to have the horses congregated at different farms, instead of having them brought into the villages, and would send our buyers to wherever there were groups of ten or a dozen horses brought together, where they would be purchased. The plan suggested first was that followed during the first great war in buying horses for the Saskatchewan government. But at the time of the first war we had livery barns all over the place, and it was comparatively easy to bring horses in and take care of them. The horses we were buying then were of a selected type, namely the cavalry horse, which we wanted to give to the government of Canada in order to assist in equipping our armed forces. So the task of purchasing horses then was comparatively simple, and an attempt was made to put that same plan into effect. I stated that this was an entirely different situation, and that we were asking farmers to bring in any spare horses that they had, which were up to specifications. As I said last night, this request was put on a bill, a copy of which I now hold in my hand, and which sets out the weights of the horses, and all the other specifications.

There would be many farmers who would just take a look at a horse and say: He weighs 1,400 pounds, or 1,300, as the case may be, and would bring him to town. They would not have the means of weighing a horse at home. The bill states:

Horses wanted. The Dominion Department of Agriculture wishes to buy work horses for Netherlands and French governments.

Mr. BURTON: When were those bills sent out?

Mr. GARDINER: About August 20, but previously there had been some bills printed by the province which, I believe, contained about the same information. With the exception of what appears at the bottom of this bill, I believe the others were the same. They were printed by the provincial government under the first suggested plan. I am not certain that any were distributed.

Mr. ARGUE: What is the lowest weight on that bill at which a horse would be bought?

Mr. GARDINER: I shall come to that. The first item on the bill gives the grades and prices for French contract under (a) three and four-year olds, with a minimum weight of 1,375 pounds, $80, and (b) five to eight-year olds, with a minimum weight of 1,400 pounds, $85. I am told in the department to-day—and I am not certain as to this, because I have not had an opportunity of checking it back—that it must have been a printer's error, putting 1,400 pounds on the bill, because the weight there was always 1,450 pounds. In any case, it is 1,400 on the bill.

Mr. SENN: Can the minister give the corresponding contract price from the French government at Quebec, Montreal, or some other shipping point?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not able to give that at the moment, but the information can be obtained.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Would it be officials of the federal Department of Agriculture or of a provincial department who actually chose the assembly point at which the horses would be purchased?

Mr. GARDINER: Let us not confuse the two plans. Under the first plan it was representatives of the provincial government who chose the points. They were all villages and towns. The thing I objected to was the congregating of these horses in villages and towns where there would be no facilities to feed them, and where feed would have to be brought in. I thought that as far as possible these horses should be brought together at some central farm, and the horses congregated in that fashion. This would not require taking them such great distances away from home. However the points eventually decided on under the second plan were chosen by our own officials, and they disagreed with me in that matter. Perhaps I should not say that our officials did, but rather that the secretary-treasurers did. We left it to the secretary-treasurers to make some suggestion in the matter, and in most cases they said they thought the best places to assemble horses were in the villages and towns.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Municipal secretary-treasurers.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and I took their advice. Our own men who were right out there on the ground were in agreement with the secretaries on the point. They thought they could make it work in the villages and towns, and that it would operate successfully.

As to grades and prices on the Netherlands contract, there is provision under paragraph (c) for plain horses, serviceably sound, well up to age limit, with plenty of weight, at a minimum weight of 1,450 pounds, $90.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I believe the minister said he had not yet signed the contract with the French government. Was that done before this bill was put out, or after?

Mr. GARDINER: I shall come to that. As I said a minute ago, if my hon. friend will let me, I should like to finish my story; otherwise no one will understand it.

The next item is for good horses, sound and well within the age limit, and weighty, with a minimum weight of 1,450 pounds. This is a higher type of horse at $100. Then there is another still higher type with a minimum weight of 1,450 pounds, at $110. The top price is for best drafters, sound, with weight and quality, with age in their favour, at a minimum weight of 1,600 pounds, and up, $150. Those are all the classifications of horses, but I understand that there was the possibility of an arrangement to pay as high as $160 for a specially good horse at a specially good weight.

Mr. ROWE: Are the prices the same in the other provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: Approximately the same, although they would be better farther east, due to freight and shipping charges.

Mr. ROWE: It was not on the same basis, was it?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, on the same basis as with the Netherlands government. The others are on the same terms. The Netherlands government has agreed to pay certain prices for certain types of horses. We have figured back from that price, to arrive at the price we can pay back at the original point.

But the question which was in our minds so far as the drought area was concerned was this. We thought we could go out and buy horses without any commission, and pay the full amount that was made available under the price established in the contract. We could pay a higher amount if the horses were assembled than if we sent a buyer to every farm. It was with a desire to give every possible dollar to the farmers that the horses were assembled in the first place. One of the reasons I had in mind for wanting the horses assembled on the farms—and in view of our experience I still think I was right—was that, in the first place, there is feed on the farms. The horses could be properly taken care of. In the summer months they could even be permitted to run in the pastures, and would not need to be stabled. In that way the buyers could go out and look at them and others, saving cost to the farmer.

The second reason was that these private buyers would not likely be there. We simply say that there is a type of horse that we must have, if we are going to turn them over to the French government and the Netherlands government, and that that type of horse has certain value. That type of horse must be in good condition, so that he can go to work immediately upon getting overseas. He must be well broken, and we must be able to establish the fact that he is well broken, before we buy him. Otherwise if he tries to climb the chute when we attempt to put him on the boat at Montreal they will not take him. So that we try to have all these things assured. I must say that in the contract next spring I will be insistent about carrying out that plan, so that the horses may be congregated as near as possible to the farmers. If a farmer has a dozen horses to sell, we will send a man out to see them. If a farmer has only one or two horses we will try to interest the secretary-treasurer of the municipality in having those small lots of horses congregated at some point so that a man could go to look at a dozen or twenty at one time. Those found unsuitable can be taken home.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): How can the farmer weigh them at home?

Mr. GARDINER: Many farmers have scales, and they could congregate at a farm when there is a sale.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What was the greatest number of horses purchased at one point? I believe there was quite a variation.

Mr. GARDINER: I have a list somewhere, but perhaps I had better finish the point I am discussing before I refer to it.

Someone has asked how we came to ship horses to France, when we have no contract. The contract is drawn up, and so far as we are concerned it has been agreed to. The French officials who were here think it will be acceptable. The contract is drawn up in terms which we think will be acceptable to all, but the French government has not yet signed it. To that extent it is different from the Netherlands contract.

Mr. BURTON: Have not the horses gone over?

Mr. GARDINER: I will tell the committee about that. The French government have sent ships here, and they have arranged to take so many horses to France. We have been asked to supply them immediately. We have supplied those horses. The number supplied up to date is between 600 and 700. Those horses have been sent over, and the arrangement is that they will apply on any contract signed for some 35,000 horses.

Mr. ROWE: Is there any truth in the rumour that the French government are endeavouring to make a similar contract with the United States? If they make a contract with that government for a similar number of horses, shall we have lost this contract?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that they have canvassed the position there but that the contract has not been completed.

Mr. ROWE: In other words, we are not yet sure that we are going to get a contract from the French government.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that the Belgians have a contract with the United States and that the Netherlanders are buying some horses there but not under contract similar to the one we have.

Mr. ROWE: We are not yet sure we are going to get the contract from the French government?

Mr. GARDINER: As sure as we can be. Even contracts with Britain drag on for months before finally being signed. In the meantime they are taking horses. I met the minister of agriculture of France at Quebec. The first thing he said to me—he was not able to speak English and I was not able to speak French, so that we spoke through an interpreter—was: I want to thank you for the very fine horses we have got from Canada up to date, and he went on to say that they wanted more and he made inquiries with regard to other live stock.

Mr. ROWE: They have received trial shipments from the United States as well. At the present time they have not decided from which country they will buy.

Mr. GARDINER: They will probably buy from both countries. I do not think they will say definitely that they will not buy any from the United States or from Canada. Eventually they will probably buy from both countries. The number they look for from us was 35,000.

Someone asked what the numbers were at the different points. At Watrous, Saskatchewan, sales were held on five days; two sales, one on the 16th, 17th and 18th, and the other on the 30th and 31st. There was some criticism in regard to the first sale that was held. The light horses were not purchased. So that we went back to Watrous on the 30th and 31st. In those two sales 400 horses were purchased at Watrous; at Strasbourg, 103; at Southey, 176; at Balcarres, 276. The only other two points at which the sales ran over 100 were Toronto, with 165, and Montreal, with 786. The horses that were taken from Montreal are largely taken to complete a boatload. They are shipping horses in carload lots from western Canada, and if a boat is in and ready to load we will take horses from Montreal to complete the cargo. We go to the dealers in Montreal, who are handling 20,000 head a year, and purchase through their barns in Montreal enough horses to fill the boat when more are needed.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What would those horses sell at in Montreal?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that they will average around $150.

Mr. CASE: Are you taking horses from any other province than Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: I have said that 786 were taken from Montreal, 165 from Toronto and 55 were purchased at Pickering.

Mr. CASE: The horses taken at Montreal were only to complete the cargo. Do you advertise in the other provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: No. In the statement that I read a moment ago we said that this fall, before freeze-up, we would take most of the horses from the drought area, and that immediately that was completed we would go into all parts of Canada, including other parts of western Canada, and buy greater numbers.

Mr. BROOKS: Would not the horses that were purchased in Montreal come originally from the western provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: Some of them would. Probably a great many originated in western Canada, and quite a number would originate right here in the Ottawa valley, and some in parts of Quebec.

Mr. BROOKS: Horses are scarce in eastern Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend is correct in saying that most of them would originate in the west. The only safeguard that we provided against horses being purchased at low prices by dealers and then shipped to places like Montreal was this: These bills were posted all over the place, and I suggest that there were not many farmers who would sell horses at less than those prices, once they had seen the bills. It might happen in a rare case if a farmer was short of feed that another farmer would buy his horse at a lower price because he had to carry it through the winter.

Mr. FERGUSON: Were any of these bills posted in Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: Not these bills.

Mr. FERGUSON: There was a slight glut of horses on the market in Ontario this year, and I am quite sure that our farmers would have been delighted to see bills posted up in Ontario similar to those posted up in the west. I have bought good horses myself in Ontario this year for $30. I am sure horses could have been obtained in Ontario.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and just as soon as this transaction had been completed and the horses taken out of the drought area, similar bills would have been put up in Ontario and elsewhere.

Mr. MENARY: At Lafleche when they bought that big gray horse that weighed 1,800 pounds for $60—

Mr. GARDINER: I was not there, but my hon. friend will find that these bills were posted up all over the area around about Lafleche and probably every farmer there saw one of these bills.

Mr. MENARY: If the bill was posted up, the man sold his horse too cheap. Who was it that made a profit of $100 to $120 on the gelding? You cannot make it here.

Mr. GARDINER: When we were handling 2,800 horses in the rather hurried way in which they had to be handled last fall, if there was only one gray horse that sold for $60 which was finally turned into our pens, we probably did not do too badly. I would hope there were not more. The suggestion was made last night that somebody offered the horse for sale, I presume right in Lafleche, because we did not have buyers anywhere else, and that one of our men said that he would not accept the horse. A veterinary goes with each one of our buying parties and examines all the horses before we buy them. I cannot conceive that a veterinary and an expert horse buyer, because that is what they were, would look over a horse at LaFleche that was offered for sale—and the place where it would be offered for sale would be very close to the stockyards—and then would not recognize the horse very soon afterwards when he saw it in the stockyards. It is always conceivable, of course, that somebody might make a mistake. But it is hard for me, knowing horse buyers and veterinaries, to believe that in that short space of time a man would not know a horse he had been looking at a short time before. If he did not, I would say he was not a suitable man to be buying horses.

Mr. CASE: I do not want to detain the committee; I know what the objective is, but I have some remarks to make.

Mr. GARDINER: Are they on this particular point?

Mr. CASE: No, they are not.

Mr. ARGUE: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GARDINER: Well, now, can I have this understood with the hon. member for Wood Mountain? He made his statement last night; I have made mine: could we leave the further discussion of this matter until we reach the "special" items?

Mr. ARGUE: I think it would expedite the business if we could complete the discussion now, and when we get to the particular item I need say nothing further.

Mr. GARDINER: I should have objected last night to the matter being discussed at all at this time. There is an item under the estimates where we can discuss it. That was suggested by the hon. member himself when he rose. As I said a moment ago, I was not listening as carefully as I should have been to what he started to say, and I let it go through. I think we should stay within the rules and discuss this matter on the proper item when we come to it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What item is that?

Mr. GARDINER: The "specials", at the bottom. The special war item appears in Hansard of September 28, and it will be discussed along with "specials" at the bottom. It can be found on page 552 of Hansard.

Mr. WRIGHT: I believe the understanding was that anything which came under the minister's war estimates could be discussed on the general item.

Mr. GARDINER: No; under "specials" or under the proper item within the civil estimates.

Mr. WRIGHT: Under the minister's civil estimates there are no items comparable with some of the items under the war measures vote, and therefore I think the proper place to discuss them would be under the first item.

Mr. GARDINER: If the hon. member will look up the discussion which took place between the hon. member for Haldimand and myself, I think he will find that this was the agreement, that as we go through the items in the civil estimates any item which is covered in the war estimates can properly be discussed under that; for example, anything having to do with dairy products can be discussed under a dairy item; anything having to do with other matters, bacon and so on, can be discussed under the proper marketing item, and that can go on right through the estimates. What I am suggesting is that, when we come down to "specials", all the special war items which are not covered by any one of the items in the civil estimates can be discussed then; and this is one of them.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was not the intention of the minister to make a statement at this time on our production requirements?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member to my hon. friend's left wants to make a general statement.

Mr. CASE: I can understand the desire of the hon. member for the Saskatchewan constituency of Wood Mountain to discuss the horse situation a little further. He gave some information which, I think, farmers in Ontario will appreciate, that one can sell horses out there for $60, $80, up to $130 and $150, as against about $30 here. I hope Saskatchewan will do well with their horses.

I could speak for a long time on agriculture. As you know, sir, I come from one of the rich agricultural communities of this province. In field crops and live stock we far exceed any other county in Ontario.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: What about Simcoe?

Mr. CASE: Well, we do not want to have a war on our hands; I will say that we are one of the most highly productive districts, and I hope all hon. members will be satisfied. I am a great peacemaker.

But what I am concerned about, and what I rose to address myself to, is the future of agriculture, with particular regard to the constant drift of young people from the farms. I believe that is something which should engage the attention of every hon. member. Unless we can do something to make farm life more attractive, this country is indeed in for a very difficult time. I have great hopes, of course, that the introduction of electricity in the rural areas will make farm life more attractive, and that modern machinery will play its part; but something must be done if we are to make it attractive to our young people to remain on the farms. In the county I have particularly in mind, the county of Grey, this drift to the larger urban centres has been going on, and the country is that much poorer.

I think we may still say that we are primarily an agricultural country, although we have made great strides industrially, and that we depend upon the prosperity of agriculture to maintain our living standards and our general prosperity. It therefore does seem to me that anything we can do to improve the lot of the farmer and increase the general prosperity of agriculture will react beneficially to the entire nation.

Yesterday, when the hon. member for Fort William was speaking about having been raised on a farm, I recalled that I myself had that experience, having been raised on a dairy farm, so that I can appreciate some of the things which the hon. member for Calgary West was speaking about. I know that farm life has been and even now is more or less a life of drudgery, and I am now trying to turn over in my mind this problem: when we have finally achieved industrial peace and arranged a forty or forty-four hour week for the industrial worker, who in the world is going to work on a farm, for there are very few farmers who can finish their work, particularly seasonal work, in any such limited number of hours?

These are the observations I have to make, and I want to set the example of being as brief as possible. In conclusion, however, I should like to make a reference to the statement of the hon. member for Calgary West that some people here speak of Ontario as being "the old milch cow." As an Ontarian, I assure hon. members from western Canada that that statement is not accepted literally here. As a matter of fact, a prominent farmer around St. Thomas, who at one time occupied the office of premier of Ontario, used that term, but I believe that in the main it was resented, because we in Ontario have a high appreciation of our great western domain. We can think back to the time when we enjoyed a measure of prosperity with western people, and we hope indeed that they will return to that era of prosperity which will mean so much to all of us in eastern Canada, and, as far as that is concerned, all Canada. Therefore I assure the hon. member for Calgary West that we do not consider that in any sense we have been under a disadvantage in respect of western Canada, that we have enjoyed many advantages from our association and will continue to do so. So long as they are prosperous we shall be prosperous.

Mr. PEARKES: During the war, assistance was given to the dairymen and the poultry farmers of Vancouver island by a subsidy on the feed grains which were shipped from the prairie provinces. If this is the right place to raise the question I should like to ask whether the minister proposes to continue those subsidies or to render other assistance to the dairymen and poultry farmers of Vancouver island?

Mr. GARDINER: I think the general answer to that would come under an answer to the statement which was asked for last night by the hon. member for Souris; and my hon. friend over here is on his feet.

Mr. ARGUE: This is the third time I have attempted to speak on the matter I brought up last night. In my concluding remarks I asked three questions which were quite specific and fairly simple.

Mr. GARDINER: I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that you rule that the discussion of the horse question be left until we come to the appropriate item. It has been discussed at some length now. If you rule otherwise, we shall of course go on with it, but I suggest that it be left for the time being.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The minister's suggestion is perfectly reasonable. I think the hon. member should leave the matter until the proper item is called.

Mr. ARGUE: I shall be prepared to discuss it at the right time.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Agriculture is so important that we should devote a little more time to general considerations before we go on to special items. I understand that at present about twenty-five per cent or a little better of the population of Canada are engaged in agriculture and that is the greatest number in any one industry in the dominion. Therefore the question of agriculture is perhaps the most important one before this committee. We have probably wasted some time in the past few weeks, but in any discussion of this important item there will be no waste of time.

In my opinion there are two questions to be considered, the immediate agriculture policy and the long-range policy. The immediate problem seems to be a matter of production. After listening to the Prime Minister's statement on his return from overseas, I am sure that all hon. members were more or less shocked into the realization that the situation there is far more grave from the point of view of food than any of us had imagined up to that time. We were taken aback to learn that hundreds of thousands of people are likely to starve to death in the European countries, and we also realize that it is up to Canada to a great extent to supply the food for the people of Europe since we are the granary of the world.

What is to be done to encourage greater production? From what has been going on in the last six months, or almost a year, we know that production in certain lines has been falling off instead of increasing. That is particularly so in the raising of hogs. It has been pointed out to the government many times during the present session that farmers are going out of hog production. The figures quoted yesterday show the extent to which that is true. When farmers begin to go out of the production of a certain line there must be a very good reason for it, because, whether in war time or in peace, the objective of every farmer is to produce to his fullest capacity. I believe that the reason farmers have been going out of hog production is that the price has not been satisfactory compared with prices of other products, and the government should encourage farmers by guaranteeing a price which would be sufficiently attractive to make the production of hogs pay.

May I call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a recommendation made by the Alberta farmers' union. He no doubt has a copy of the circular sent out some time ago, in which it is proposed that a guaranteed parity price of $21 per hundred on rail at the main western points be established. That would be one way of actively encouraging greater production of hogs. Another recommendation is to encourage western farmers to raise coarse grain by paying the existing bonus to farmers who feed grain of their own raising to domestic animals. We understand that up to this time the bonus paid has not worked out to the advantage of the farmer who feeds his own hogs with his own grain but more perhaps to the advantage of those who buy grain to feed hogs. I do not wish to refer to eastern farmers, because I desire to go on record as being of the opinion that the problems of farmers, whether east or west, are similar and that there should never be any reason for friction or antagonism.

Another recommendation that has been made, this time by the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, deals with the price of wheat. The attitude of this group is clear on the question of wheat, because we went into that very fully in the debate on the speech from the throne. However, I wish to put on Hansard a resolution that has been passed by the executive of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, which appears in a journal known as "U.F.C. Information", which all members have in their possession, because I believe that this resolution comes as close to the line we have taken as anything I have so far seen. It proves also that the representations that we in this group have been making have been put forward not on behalf of our party but on behalf of the people we represent. Here is the resolution:

Whereas Trade and Commerce Minister the Hon. J. A. MacKinnon, has announced the intention of the Canadian government to keep the selling price of Canadian wheat to importing buyers from soaring above $1.55 per bushel for the next five years, but has made no statement to guarantee that the sale price of wheat will not be allowed to drop below that price during the five-year period; and

Whereas we believe that in accordance with the present price of other goods, services and wage levels, $1.55 per bushel basis No. 1 northern at Canadian terminal elevator points constitutes a fair parity of price level for wheat:

Therefore we the executive of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan Section Limited, resolve the following wheat price policy:

1. That for the crop year 1945-1946 the initial guaranteed payment on wheat shall remain as at present, and that a subsequent payment be made to conform with $1.55 per bushel basis No. 1 northern at Canadian terminal elevator points.

2. That for the four crop years following the crop year 1945-1946 an initial payment equivalent to three-quarters of the basic $1.55 per bushel or other parity price be paid on delivery and subsequent payments be made at appropriate times to conform with $1.55 or other adjusted price to conform with parity.

3. That in the interest of national, provincial and agricultural social and economic stability a minimum basic selling price of $1.55 per bushel must be maintained during the five crop years commencing with the 1945-1946 crop year.

4. That legislation in line with this wheat price policy be enacted at the present session of parliament.

[Mr. Zaplitny.]

I do not know how much hope there is of that being done.

5. That in the event of failure of government agents to hold the selling price of wheat at $1.55 per bushel minimum, the executive of the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan Section Limited, will appeal to our members to take appropriate and effective action to protect their interests.

I will not hazard a guess as to what the appropriate action which is mentioned there would be, but I have placed that resolution on the record so that it will be clear that what we have been talking about in this group, so far as parity prices are concerned, is something which the farmers in the greatest wheat producing area of Canada have been discussing. So much for the immediate policy.

The long-range policy is also important and perhaps in the long run the most important. I was interested in listening to what the hon. member who preceded me said about the trend of young people away from the farms and into the cities. Being one of those who also grew up on a farm, and having spent the greater part of my life there, I realize that there are good and sufficient reasons why young people have not found it possible to stay on the farm. Perhaps the easiest way to illustrate the reason would be to place some figures on Hansard showing just what the agricultural situation has been for a number of years. I hold in my hand some figures—most of them come from the university of Saskatchewan—which show comparisons between the farm population of the different areas and the share of the national income the farmers received during those same years.

In 1921, the farm population was about 33 per cent; in 1928 it was about 28 per cent; in 1931 it remained around 28 per cent. By 1941 it had fallen to 25 per cent, which shows a downward trend all the way. Right beside those figures we can place the share of the national income received. I have not the figures for 1921. In 1926 the farmers of Canada received 26 per cent of the national income. In 1929 they received 22 per cent; in 1931 they received 13·9 per cent and in 1941, 18·2 per cent. The committee will notice that in every case the farmer did not receive a fair share of the national income, which is a pretty fair reason why there has been that trend of young people leaving the farms and going to industry. There are other reasons.

We go farther and see what the situation is in regard to the ownership of land. We find that in 1901, taking all the farms of Canada, about 87 per cent were fully owned. By 1941 there were only 75·1 per cent fully owned. The rest were either tenants or part-owned, or something of that nature. If we take it by provinces we find that in western Canada, where the greatest number of farmers live, in 1901 the percentage of farms fully owned in Manitoba was 88·9 per cent; by 1941 that had fallen to 66·1 per cent. In Alberta in 1901 the figure was 95·8 per cent fully owned; by 1941 that had fallen to 62·8 per cent. In Saskatchewan, which is perhaps an extreme case, 96·1 per cent were fully owned in 1901; by 1941 that had fallen to 53 per cent.

There is another reason why young people have been drifting from the farms to the city. They have seen that it is very difficult, in some years almost impossible, to feel secure on the land. But to go on with the figures, we find that even the total capital value of farm property has been decreasing over the years. According to these figures, taken from the dominion bureau of statistics, in 1931 the total capitalization with land, buildings, implements and live stock, was $5,247,753,468. By 1941, which is ten years later, where one would expect it to be much higher, it had fallen to $4,222,441,473.

There again the committee will see that farm values even in capitalization, instead of going up as one would expect them to, with new buildings being put up and land being improved, have actually gone down. I shall refer to one more set of figures which I believe may be the most important of all, because it is a reflection of farm conditions. It is a set of figures taken from the Curtis report on housing and community planning, 1943, which shows what conveniences there were in the matter of such things as electricity, telephones, baths and so forth. I shall just quote the figures for all Canada; I shall not take the time to give the figures for the provinces separately. Right across Canada there were 79·9 per cent farm homes in Canada which did not have any electricity to help the farmers with their work. Seventy-one per cent of them had no telephones and 92·6 per cent had not baths or showers. Hon. members would almost think that we go without washing for a long time in this agricultural country. Then 91·9 per cent had to do without flush toilets. When conditions are such as I have enumerated is it small wonder that young people leave the farm? The tragic part of this is that it is often the people with the most ambition and intelligence, the most go and grit, who refuse to live under such conditions. What we find is that some of the finest of the young people of Canada are leaving the land and going to the cities where they believe that they will be able to make greater use of their talents and abilities and fulfil their ambition more easily than on the land. The only way I know of that this trend can be reversed or arrested is by making conditions on the farm such that they will be attractive enough for the young people to stay there. That means the raising of the guaranteed price for farm products to a point which will make it pay to stay on the land; the provision of legislation to make the farmer more secure on the land, and a more progressive policy in the matter of research.

I have here some information on research which I think will be of interest to the committee. May I first of all quote from the first report of the interim commission on food and agriculture. One of the sections is headed, "Research" and reads as follows:

> One of the principal functions of the organization will be to promote research in the fields relating to its work as a means of meeting the needs and helping to solve the problems of the peoples of its member nations. Competence and persistence in the search for knowledge, and fairness and courage in promoting its application, will establish a solid basis for recommendations and action.

It will be noted by the committee that the food commission evidently felt that research was one of its key or principal functions, as it states in its first report. We also find that there is an awakening of interest in the matter of science on the farm chemurgy. I hold in my hand a pamphlet published by the North-West Line Elevators association, which gives some interesting facts about the possibilities of chemurgy in connection with farm products. We have been accustomed to thinking of farming as an industry which provides the food of the country. It has, of course, other possibilities, and if we take a progressive policy in the matter of research I think we shall find that it has far greater hope than we ever dreamed of. Here is a statement which appears in this pamphlet which I referred to a moment ago. I would not vouch for the accuracy of the statement because it is only an estimate. Here is what they say:

> Almost every day new uses are being found for farm products. The industrial chemist is the ally of the farmer. Men of science, looking into the future, see an industrial stomach which will consume more farm products than does the human stomach of to-day. The National Chemurgic Council estimates that an additional 50,000,000 acres may be planted to industrial crops on this continent alone within the next ten years.

As I say, that is only an estimate. We have no way of knowing how close we can come to that, but we are given to understand that the industrial stomach, as they call it, will in the future be able to consume even more than the human stomach in the matter of farm products. In order to illustrate some of the uses that have already been discovered for farm products in the matter of plastics and things of that kind, I refer the committee to a few pictures which appear in the same pamphlet. I am sure that hon. members either have this pamphlet or can get it very easily. On page 3 I find a picture of a group of young ladies, I believe numbering six. That is not what I want to draw attention to, however, but the fact that practically all the clothes these ladies are wearing in this picture have been made from products grown on the farm. Here is the caption to the picture.

Skim milk, bamboo and grass clothes the modern maiden. "Lanital" a new textile, half wool and half casein (a product of skim milk), along with bamboo and grass were used in making the clothes these girls are wearing. Nylon stockings, a product of coal, air and water, cover their limbs.

That is one illustration of how these products can be used. Then on page 9 I find a picture of twenty-three separate articles used in the construction of automobiles, all of which were made out of the soya bean, which has been used so much across the line. Farther along is a picture showing synthetic wool which has been made out of soya bean protein. So it goes, one page after another, illustrating what is being done already in the utilization of farm products for industrial purposes.

I believe the expenditures we have made each year so far in connection with research for agriculture have been pitifully small in comparison with the great returns that kind of research could bring to the farmers. We in Canada seem to be haunted by periods of shortage and surplus. At one time we are crying because we have too much of something, too much wheat or too much of something else. Then, before we know it, we are short of this and short of that. I believe that if we could use part of our farm production for industrial purposes it would serve as a sort of stabilizer for our surplus products, and in future might provide new industries for western Canada which would check the tendency of people to leave the land and drift to the cities of the east, which as I have pointed out already are congested and crowded at the present time.

Those are some of the thoughts I wish to leave with the minister and the committee. I do not want to go into any greater detail just now, and will leave anything else I have to say until we take up the individual items. I hope the minister will see his way clear to do one thing at least. That is, to increase the amount appropriated for research in order to give the young scientists of this country an opportunity to help the farmers.

Mr. WARREN: I am not particularly fond of making speeches, especially in the House of Commons, but something happened last evening which inspires me to do so. If I had been given an opportunity of making my speech last night, probably it would have been just as brief as the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West. I find, however, that owing to the delay I have lost some of the inspiration I had at that time.

I was sitting over there listening to the hon. member for Melfort, the hon. member for Battle River and the hon. member for Wood Mountain, and I thought of the many weary hours I had sat in this house listening to western members talk about conditions in their own part of the country. I cannot recall a western member ever telling us anything about happy homes, or contentment, or men who had got along and achieved comparative riches. We hear nothing of that at all; nothing but gloom comes from the lips of the members who represent our western provinces.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Come on out and see us; we will show you how happy we can be.

Mr. WARREN: Well, you know that sort of thing makes me sick, and I was pretty sick when the hon. member for Calgary West rose in his place. You get so tired of listening to people constantly grumbling, people who have nothing to be thankful for in this fair land of ours. When the hon. member for Calgary West rose and shot a ray of sunlight from Alberta down into this House of Commons, immediately my gloom was dispersed and I thought here at last was something to be happy about, one western member who had a good thing to say about his own country.

An hon. MEMBER: He is a lawyer, not a farmer.

Mr. WARREN: He was very cautious, and perhaps he understated the case when he went so far as to admit that we are not all broke. I have memories of bygone years, when my relatives and neighbours who had gone west finally found themselves sufficiently wealthy to return home for a visit during the winter months. A common comment from those people was, "I would not take your whole set-up here, farm and everything else, if you gave it to me as a present, if I had to live on it." Some went even farther than that and said, "I would not take your whole township as a present if I had to live in this country." I spoke to some of them about the cold, but the answer always was, "Oh, yes, it is cold, but you don't feel it." So that everything was beautiful and grand.

In 1913 I went west, as far as Edmonton, and the memory which lingers with me most vividly is that about every second man you met was expecting to become a millionaire overnight by dabbling in real estate. Of course that bubble burst; it did not pan out so well for those speculators. Then I made a trip west in 1938; I thought if I was going to get any good from this pass I might as well see the western coast, so I took two and a half weeks off. Of course in that time you cannot do very much more than get impressions, going from here to the west coast and back; but while on that trip I can remember going out to a farm in southern Manitoba and looking at a field that would thresh thirty, thirty-five or forty bushels to the acre. The farmer told me that was the twentieth crop of wheat in succession on that piece of land. What has any person to grumble about if he has land like that? I remember travelling west from Winnipeg and looking at the beautiful homes, the meadows, the stacks of hay, the cattle in the pastures, the shelters around the homes and barns. I thought, "Well, if there is a God's country anywhere, this must be it." When I was in Regina I remember going through the country and being simply amazed at the broad acres with wonderful crops of wheat waving in the wind. Travelling west out of Regina on the train I remember that a stranger sitting beside me said, "Isn't it monotonous"? I replied that it was fascinating, mile after mile of beautiful fields of grain. It was true that you might go many miles without seeing a home, and then you might see a little shack perched up on a high piece of land. My conclusion was that it belonged to some man who came out in the spring, used his mechanized machinery to put in a crop, went home until harvest time and then returned to take off the harvest, someone who probably worked for a couple of months a year and spent the rest of the time retired somewhere in town; a land miner—not a home builder.

An hon. MEMBER: On 25-cent wheat?

Mr. WARREN: Well, if you get enough wheat at 25 cents a bushel you still have a lot of money. I thought that last night the hon. member for Melfort found it pretty difficult to find anything under present conditions which would justify him to stop whining. He did whine when he endeavoured to have the Minister of Agriculture give him a five-year guarantee that conditions would not be any worse in the next five years. Well, the hon. member is pretty anxious to whine, when he must go so far into the future to find something to whine about.

In my travels I got along as far as Calgary, and I recall with pride the means of travel between Calgary and Edmonton. Those two points are served by two buses and two trains each day.

Mr. LOW: Three.

Mr. WARREN: Probably it is three now; it was two then. I thought of all the oil in the Turner valley and of the coal in almost any hill.

Anyway, I went out to see some relatives at Lacombe. I think of the young men who went out to the Peace River district, and of one in particular who has become a comparatively wealthy man within a few years. He would go into our granaries in the east, and would say, "When I go into one of your granaries and see your oats, it just looks like chaff to me." The fertility and productivity of western soil is remarkable.

In the area surrounding Lacombe they have everything within easy reach: timber, wood, plenty of water, oil and coal in abundance. Yet we hear this grumbling from members coming from Alberta. I have never yet heard one of them say a word in praise of his native province. When I saw that area I said: "Well, this is the garden of Canada, and probably the richest province in the dominion."

Mr. MANROSS: May I ask a question?

Mr. WARREN: Well, it is nearly six o'clock and I want to finish my speech.

Mr. MANROSS: When the hon. member referred to chaff, was he referring to his speech or to the granaries?

Mr. WARREN: Well, I can tell the hon. member that I am somewhat boiled up about this matter, and the effect this sort of thing is going to have on the young people from the western provinces.

Let me give an example. I happened to be on the train and to listen to some boys who were sitting across the aisle from me, and were engaged in conversation. Those boys were on their way home, for harvest leave. After listening to them for a while, I learned where they were from, and eventually got into conversation with them. I remember particularly one fine young man—

An hon. MEMBER: He must have been from the west.

Mr. WARREN: Yes, he was from Saskatchewan. He told me about coming home on harvest leave in the previous year. He said that he had arrived home late at night, got on the binder next morning and run that binder steadily for two weeks or it might have been for twenty-one days. One of his brothers was on another binder during the same time, and all the grain they cut belonged to one family, for the family alone were operating the farm. They had cattle and horses—they had everything. Well, if you got only ten cents a bushel for all that grain, you would still have a lot of money. But here is the part that got me—

Mr. JOHNSTON: Then you woke up.

Mr. WARREN: We began talking politics, and the name of Jimmie Gardiner was mentioned. Well, one might as well have mentioned the name of the greatest criminal in the world.

An hon. MEMBER: Were you looking for votes?

Mr. WARREN: No; I was trying to get the impression held by these young men. Jimmie Gardiner?—"Oh, he does not do anything for the farmers." Well, I thought of the millions of dollars spent in digging waterholes, in building fences for pastures, and all those other operations which have taken place in western Canada. I began wondering whether in the opinion of these boys there was anything right. They seemed to think everything was wrong.

What is the cause of that? Is it because we have had so many men going through the west trying to capitalize on discontent, and if there is none, trying to create it? Is that why these young people in western Canada are growing up in the belief that nothing is right and everything wrong?

Mr. QUELCH: It is because they have good common sense; that is why.

Mr. WARREN: Well, that remark would help them a lot. I said to these boys, "What is wrong with you fellows? Does every western man expect to get rich?"

Mr. QUELCH: On 10-cent wheat!

Mr. WARREN: He said, "We all expect to get rich." "Well," I said, "there you are. That is the difference between a western and an eastern farmer."

Mr. JOHNSTON: That is the exclusive right of the eastern farmer, eh?

Mr. WARREN: I said, "We eastern farmers have no expectation or hope of ever getting rich. We believe that if in a lifetime a man can manage to own a small farm, one which you would scarcely regard as a decent pasture, and can own a home and farm buildings, raise a family and give them something of a start in life, we have done a pretty good job for one lifetime." But these boys admitted that they wanted and expected to get rich.

Mr. JOHNSON: They had ambition.

Mr. WARREN: I am not so sure that that is ambition, because there are so many things which enter into riches. A person can be very poor, as far as possession of this world's goods is concerned, and yet indeed be very rich; on the other hand, one can have large sums of money and still be very very poor.

In the minute left before six o'clock I should like to quote from the address by General H. D. G. Crerar, delivered recently at Upper Canada college, as reported in the Ottawa Journal of to-day. These were his closing remarks:

> One further thought I would like to leave with you. You will get your true happiness in the life that lies ahead of you in accomplishing some worthy thing in which you are definitely interested. It doesn't matter, in my opinion, what that activity is, or whether it's a "white collar" or a "shirt-sleeve" job—providing only that it is useful, and not harmful, to others, as well as being interesting to yourself. Also, it is quite unimportant whether it brings a large financial return, or a modest one. The main satisfactions we get out of life are the mental and spiritual—not the financial. I am sure, also, that it is not the length of a man's life which is important but, instead what he accomplishes in the time at his disposal. It is that conviction which enables me to think quietly, aad with pride, of the 22,000 and more, officers and men of the First Canadian Army who now lie buried overseas. They died for the sake of humanity and a future, better civilization. There could be no greater contribution in any lifetime . . ."

THE BUDGET

DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, October 19, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. L. Ilsley (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this important debate has had a rather long adjournment and I feel that interest in it will suffer on that account, but I am very glad that we are to resume the debate and to have an opportunity to express our views with regard to some of the proposals made in the budget and the general proposals for the country.

This first peace-time budget reflects, I think with but few exceptions, the outstanding characteristics of the present administration. The budget I would say is cautious and in most respects non-committal. Unfortunately it fails to display those qualities of foresight and imagination so vital to the solution of our problems. It contained, too, at the beginning a very important tariff change, but public opinion since the introduction of the budget has been brought into play and I am glad to see that that proposal has been withdrawn. I hope that the new regulation regarding diesel parts and engines will, before long, meet a similar fate.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) committed the recovery of the country and the prosperity of its citizens into the hands of so-called private enterprise. The government, now that the war is over, foreshadows its own removal from the national economic scene; that is, its direct removal from the national social and economic scene. It entrusts Canada to the activities of groups and individuals whose motive has always been profit rather than public need. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell), who incidentally made such a witty speech on the budget, seems to have missed the whole point of what I have just said. He poked fun at those of us who believe that the motive of production must be the satisfying of human need, not the making of private profit. That, may I add, is the vital difference between a cooperative society and a corporation, a difference which the royal commission on the taxation of cooperatives in its report, which we shall discuss when we have had an opportunity of studying it more carefully, seems to fail to recognize.

No one objects to anyone who gives service to his fellows receiving a reward for the service that he renders. The trouble with the economic system which my hon. friend supports is that it often demands its rent, its interest and its profit for no service except that of owning the resources and machines by which society must live. Even the authority he quoted, or at best the one sentence he quoted from Professor Lindsay, confused the issue by comparing an assured salary with an uncertain profit, for profit is not what the individual receives from society as a reward for his services and to meet his legitimate living and other expenses in rendering that service, but what he demands merely as the toll which society must pay because he somehow is in possession of the resources and machines to which every man must have access in order to live. In our capitalist system the ownership of great corporations and financial institutions is usually divorced from the managerial function.

Mr. SINNOTT: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is reading his speech.

Mr. COLDWELL: No, Mr. Speaker, I am following rather extended notes. I am not reading my speech, as the hon. gentleman will find if he looks at what I am holding in my hand.

Mr. SINNOTT: The hon. member was reading.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think everybody in this house knows that I do not have to read my speech. I was going on to say that the managers themselves are responsible to self-perpetuating boards of directors, who in reality exercise very often no managerial functions. The interest of those directors is of course in the strengthening of the corporation and in the paying of dividends, the rendering of public service often being incidental to the two aims which I have mentioned. Thus Benjamin Disraeli's dictum that the possession of property should be synonymous with the performance of duty is almost entirely disregarded in our present society, and, if I may say so, the Christian ethic that ownership must be synonymous with stewardship is almost entirely absent from the society in which we live.

We are entering a crucial period of our national existence. Let us be realistic. Let us dispel from our minds the idea that since the world is no longer convulsed by a military struggle we shall merely revert, with no effort, to normal and peaceful living. I think everyone will agree that we are living in an age of unrest and transformation. We have left behind irrevocably, it seems to me, the world we knew only a few years ago. We are entering a new and complex age, an age full of hope and yet replete with great peril, because the world is in the throes of a revolutionary upheaval, a revolutionary upheaval the like of which mankind has never seen before. For us to maintain the status quo and to effect only minimum changes such as would satisfy powerful social and economic interests in our own land and elsewhere would cause bitterness and resultant social and economic chaos. Our task in this house, as in every democratic parliament everywhere in the world, is that of endeavouring to make fundamental changes in the interests of the common man as rapidly and with as little dislocation as possible; in other words, to plan for changes by consent rather than by revolutionary upheaval.

Both the budget and the spokesman for the official opposition show no disposition to undertake such a programme. This is an age of science and of technology. The vast scientific strides that we have made during the war culminating in the development of atomic energy show the need more that ever, we believe, for democratic control of the nation's resources both natural and financial. Unless proper supervision is exercised of the delicate and complex interrelationship between industry and the public and between industry and science, anarchy and chaos may well result. This we believe involves national economic and social planning under the leadership—not under the day-to-day direction but under the leadership—of the democratically elected representatives of the people. That belief is now widely shared throughout the British commonwealth of nations, as was indicated clearly the other afternoon when Prime Minister Attlee addressed both houses of parliament.

Inextricably linked with the manner in which we govern our country is the manner in which we govern our finances. Does our present financial structure exist as a means of serving the nation, the primary needs of the nation, or does it exist mainly to serve the interests of a privileged few?

Certain aspects of the budget fill my mind with doubts as to the ultimate goal of the nation's fiscal policy at the present time. Let us look at one proposal in the budget. The budget proposes a flat sixteen per cent decrease in the income tax. This measure has been greeted somewhat enthusiastically by certain elements in our country, but as far as the bulk of the population is concerned this amounts to practically no reduction at all. It does not give relief to the small income groups which predominate in our society, but it aids those who do not need it; that is, it aids them mainly. I refer to the high-income individuals and corporations. A worker, with a wife and one child, earning $1,500 a year, with a sixteen per cent decrease will save just $8.80 a year, or $2.20 for the remainder of this year. If I take a very moderate income of an executive or an employer, we will say one making or earning $6,000 a year, the tax relief in that case will amount to $263.52. In other words, the tax relief is going to those who do not need it as badly as some others in our society. Now taxation, to be just and equitable, must be based proportionately on earning power; it must leave all individuals a sufficient amount of money to provide themselves with food, clothing, shelter, and, I would add, those amenities of life to which this scientific age should entitle them; and it must not afford more relief to the wealthy than to the poor. It is not what you pay in taxes that counts, but what you have left after your taxes are paid. Then may I add this too, that a reduction in taxes will not benefit a man who loses his job.

In marked contrast to our government's policy is the policy recently announced by the Labour government of Great Britain. That government has raised the income tax exemption. Of course it was during the war lower than our exemption.

Mr. ILSLEY: And still is.

Mr. COLDWELL: And still is. But as a matter of fact the British exemptions as they now stand are higher than they were immediately prior to the war. They go down still too low; I admit that. But in this first budget they relieved two million taxpayers of income tax by raising the exemptions above the pre-war level. In addition to raising the tax exemption level they introduced tax reduction on a proportional basis. The lowest groups received the highest percentage reduction; the higher the income, the smaller the reduction; and, indeed, on very high incomes the surtax was actually increased. The result is that the British government has made, in the words of Mr. Dalton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, "a further advance toward greater equality." Our own government has unfortunately not adopted the same policy toward the citizens of our country.

I should now like to remind the house—because these figures have been put on the record a number of times during the last few years—of some figures regarding the earnings of wage and salary earners in this country. They are from the last available statistical report, the figures gathered in the 1941 census. According to these figures—of course they were samplings of incomes in groups—1·9 per cent only of our population earned over $3,000 a year; 83·9 per cent of our population earned less than $1,500 a year. I should like the house to bear this in mind. Almost eighty-four out of every 100 wage and salary earners in this country made less than $1,500 that year; and to maintain a family of five in health and self-respect, the cost of living bulletin issued by the welfare council of Toronto estimated that in the year 1942—a better year than 1941 as wages went—$1,757 60 would be necessary. Now let me add this, to be fair, that while not all of the eighty-four per cent are heads of families, it is certain that a fair proportion are, and hence a large section of Canadian workers are not living—or were not living then, and I believe it is still true—at a proper subsistence level. If farm income were broken down for the same year the picture, I believe, would be darker still.

In a country with almost unlimited potential wealth and natural resources, in Canada, our country, I submit that this is little short of a national disgrace. Our first consideration must be, I repeat, the well-being of our citizens. When a government offers little or no relief to the bulk of the struggling citizenry it is failing in its obligations. Just as income tax is based on a graduated return according to income, so the present decrease should have been graduated. I submit, therefore, that the government should have raised the income tax exemption level. Individuals who are married or who have dependents should be exempt, we believe, from all income tax if they earn less than $2,000 a year. The same exemption should be made applicable to single people earning, we will say, less than $1,000 annually.

The taxes paid at the present time by the higher income groups, in spite of their complaints, still leave a good margin for decent living. They are not in any immediate need of such consideration, and therefore should wait for reduction until those less fortunate have received substantial relief. The farmer, I have always thought, not particularly in this budget and at this time, has been unfairly penalized by our fiscal policy. I need not remind the house of the various difficulties which have beset the Canadian farmer over the past many years. His income has never been constant. It is highly uncertain, and perhaps that is emphasized to those of us who come from the prairie provinces, where farm income fluctuates gravely from year to year or from a period of years to a period of years. It fluctuates with extremes of weather and markets. I have always thought and I have often said that income tax for the farmer cannot be approached or computed on the same basis as for the city dweller. He cannot be asked in fairness to pay on the basis of a yearly tax return. Taxation for him should be based on an average of annual income received over a period, say of five years. In this manner he would be assessed by the government for an equitable tax based on his average earnings. The minister should not have delayed this measure of relief to the farmer until a future budget is introduced. May I express the hope that when a future budget is introduced we may get this averaging of the farmers income for taxation purposes.

From the low extreme of the earnings of farmer and worker I should like now to jump to another extreme. We have seen the inadequate budgetary treatment of low-income groups. What consideration do some of the giant concerns in our country, colossal in financial wealth and control over the lives of the Canadian people, receive from the government? May I add that these are the big fleas that afflict the distressed body politic especially in normal times and in days of near or actual peace-time depression. As the report on international cartels and monopolies, placed on the table of the house recently, indicates quite clearly, they reach into every home and take their toll from every person in this country, rich and poor alike. They take their toll when we buy matches; they take their toll when we buy electric light bulbs, radio tubes, aluminum pots and pans, aspirin, drugs, paints and a host of everyday necessities which they control.

Allow me to try to remove any misunderstanding from the minds of hon. members as to the extent to which big industrial concerns have suffered under the conditions which have existed during the last six years. Let us take as an example a company which has been in the forefront of the news recently because of its opposition to its employees in regard to unionization. I refer, of course, to the Ford Company of Canada. From 1939 to 1944 the assets of the Ford company increased from $68,698,491 to $95,964,268, an increase of over $27 million, or approximately forty per cent. And this, remember, was during the war years when so many hon. members affirmed the need for equality of sacrifice. It has added over $6 million in the same period to its earned surplus account, earned surpluses being profits held by the company after dividends have been paid; and the statutory rebate of twenty per cent on excess profits tax provided for in 1942 will mean, I am told, a refund of a further amount of $1,703,000 at some future day. Hon. members will agree that even with the taxation of war years the Ford company has managed to do somewhat better than survive.

I would suggest to the government that the enormous assets of such companies as Ford should be controlled. There is no reason why, instead of increasing at a seemingly uncontrolled rate, these assets should not be restricted to a stipulated proportion of their 1939 values for excess profits taxation purposes. May I add this. Surely this house must consider ways and means of dealing with powerful monopolies and cartels which are bleeding this country in common with many other countries in the world.

On the other hand, I am glad to commend the government for its proposals to encourage increased activity among the small business concerns. Many hon. members when they speak of freedom of enterprise mean in effect the freedom of the giant corporation to swallow up or crush the small business man. We should not lose sight of the important role of small businesses in our economy. Contrary to much public opinion, they are by no means an extinct species in our country. If unrestricted activities were allowed to monopolies and their like, this might very well be the case in a relatively few years. I should like to repeat what we have to say about it; the C.C.F. policy toward the question of private business and monopoly. Let me quote from our own policy:

> The socialization of large-scale enterprise, however, does not mean taking over every private business. Where private business shows no sign of becoming a monopoly, operates efficiently under decent working conditions, and does not operate to the detriment of the Canadian people, it will be given every opportunity to function, to earn a fair rate of return and to make its contribution to the nation's wealth.

Mr. REID: When was that produced?

Mr. COLDWELL: A few years ago. I cannot give the exact year, but is was several years ago. The C.C.F. is not like some political organizations. It does not remain static, clinging to a platform formulated at a national convention in 1919, and never having had one since. Of course such a policy would remain the same. But we hold a convention provincially every year and a national convention every two years, when the rank and file of our organization have an opportunity of making their views felt and heard in relation to our policy. Thus, Mr. Speaker, the relief given—

Mr. ROWE: Page Lewis.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to know what that remark means.

Mr. ROWE: Nobody knows better than you.

Mr. COLDWELL: Nobody knows better than I? Let me say this to my hon. friend. I am proud to have associated in the C.C.F. movement, as one of our officers, a man with the brilliant intellect and fine gifts of David Lewis; and may I add it ill befits some of the Tories in Canada to go across the country and try to raise racial and religious prejudice against David Lewis.

Mr. ROWE: We never tried that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was in North Grey.

Mr. ROWE: So was I.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know you were, and that is exactly why I made the pointed reference just now.

To continue, Mr. Speaker. Thus the relief given for the encouragement of small manufacturing and business is in complete accord with the policy of the party for which I speak. Similar consideration should be given those engaged in agriculture, fishing and related industries which perform an acceptable service to our people. During the war many small businesses suffered. That in the war-time economy was perhaps inevitable. In the war years heavy industries producing capital goods were required. Impetus was given to such products and industries as iron, steel, shipbuilding, armaments, aircraft and so on. Today the largest firms are having the largest lay-offs. Government failure, I should add, to plan adequately for reconversion to civilian consumer needs has already begun to reap its fearful harvest of unemployment and insecurity. Lack of government supervision has meant quite simply lack of needed work and production, which in the end will mean restricted consumption.

The speech of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario wound up with an amendment which has little relationship to his pleas. Indeed, I wondered when he read the amendment whether he himself had really drafted it; it seemed so unrelated to the speech which he made. For example, nowhere did he make effective or constructive proposals to ensure either full employment or full production. True he spoke of the necessity of both. He spoke with approval of Mr. Dalton's assurance that the socialist government of Britain had a five-year plan for economic and social progress, but he reminded the house with equal approval that in 1920 the Tory chancellor of the exchequer in Great Britain set a limit on desirable public expenditures, the absence of which we now know, began the sequence of events which led British industry and her people to the brink of disaster.

The amendment demands the elimination of extravagant government expenditure. The hon. member dealt ably and well with the disregard of economy in military expenditures, which is a by-product of war. But taken in conjunction with his approval of the British budget of 1920, and the record of his party in the past, the inadequacy of his reference to worth-while social and economic legislation and to such projects as family allowances, a national health programme and so on, seemed significant of the kind of thinking which lay behind the words of the amendment.

I commend very heartily and sincerely my hon. friend's complaint that no adequate relief has been granted to persons in the low-income brackets; but if we are to maintain full employment and adequate social services we cannot reduce levies on high incomes and wealthy corporations. The relief of the low-income groups releases that purchasing power which is essential for the achievement of social objectives. Thus our revenues must be obtained more, rather than less, from high-income groups and corporations. This, it seemed to me, my hon. friend failed to recognize or to mention. On the contrary, his speech did contain a plea for the wealthy and privileged groups of this country. Having said that, I want to say, if I have misjudged my hon. friend—

Some hon. MEMBERS: You have.

Mr. COLDWELL: — I shall give him an opportunity to set the matter right, because I am going to move an amendment; for although we of the C.C.F. could vote for the words of the amendment, we cannot vote for what we believe to be the substance of the speech which introduced it or what lies behind the words of the amendment. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis):

That the amendment be amended by adding to paragraph (a) these words:
"which require the use of our national credit in terms of public need to make possible a large-scale investment programme, the public reconversion of war industries for peace-time needs, the public development of new industries, of scientific research and of our natural resources."

And to paragraph (b) the words:
"and that no programme has been outlined for the expansion of essential expenditures necessary to provide complete social security and adequate purchasing power for our people;"

And to paragraph (c) the words:
"but, on the contrary, substantial and unjustifiable relief has been granted to large corporations and to individuals in the high income brackets."

So that the amendment would then read:

This house regrets:

(a) that no effective plan has been proposed to ensure full production and employment which require the use of our national credit in terms of public need to make possible a large-scale investment programme, the public reconversion of war industries for peace-time needs, the public development of new industries, of scientific research and of our natural resources;

(b) that no satisfactory policy has been advanced for the elimination of extravagant governmental expenditures and that no programme has been outlined for the expansion of essential expenditures necessary to provide complete social security and adequate purchasing power for our people;

(c) that no adequate provision has been made for the immediate relief of the people in the lower income brackets from excessive taxation but, on the contrary, substantial and unjustifiable relief has been granted to large corporations and to individuals in the high-income brackets.

In other words, we have taken the amendment and added words which imply policy to meet the objections made by the mover of the amendment. I am sorry to see the government place so little importance upon public works projects. With so much to be done in our country, with so many schools, community centres and hospitals, and roads to be built, with so much employment to be derived from such useful projects, I think it is unfortunate that so little emphasis is placed on such vital projects. It is not good enough to wait for a dominion-provincial agreement before going into such policies.

The wealth of this nation cannot be measured by the dry and lifeless statistics of a fiscal policy. In the final analysis it can be measured only by the amount of goods and services provided to its citizens, by the standard of living they enjoy, by their freedom from oppressive fears of want, war and illness.

In Canada, as elsewhere, we must increase our consumer goods. This can be done only if we are given the public investments necessary to develop our resources to provide essential services and facilities for distributing the purchasing power among the masses of the people, which is the result, incidentally, of a high level of employment. Key industries must produce, at minimum cost price, the equipment and materials the consumer industries need. But these basic industries, dominated by one or a few large corporations, have tended in the past to restrict output in order to maintain high prices. The cartel report placed before the house substantiates this fact. This has been the hallmark of monopoly practice all over the world. In this country, the production of such commodities as aluminum—and I may say something about aluminum later on when we are able to look into the report which was placed before the house—nickel, chemicals, and farm machinery is centred in the hands of a few major concerns. And, as I want to emphasize again, the truth of this statement can be found in the report tabled in the house a few days ago.

One result, among many of course, is that the small business cannot expand or flourish. To develop our natural resources properly, a public investment programme, plus certain phases of public enterprise, is the only lasting answer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, although there were some other matters with which I intended to deal to-night, I see that I am within two minutes or so of my time, and I do not believe in asking an extension of time when that is not in order. However, I wish to say one other word. I believe that the future prosperity of this country depends in a large degree on the encouragement of scientific investigation and development of our own resources. I want once more to make a plea for a matter which has been up in this house from time to time and which has been borne in upon me again over this last week-end, when I had an opportunity once again of meeting some young and middle-aged Canadians in the great country to the south who left our country because they could not find the opportunities to go on with the technical and scientific work for which they qualified in this country. We cannot expect a man who has spent years in training himself for a particular scientific work, and who obtains, we will say, his Ph.D. degree, to accept $2,100 a year. There was a time just before the war when some were ready to scoff at professors and men with Ph.D. degrees, but that time has passed. Largely they are the ones who gave us radar; they gave us the scientific developments and economic advice that helped us to win this war; they have given us the power to develop atomic energy. I want to say to the government that I was disappointed in reading the war appropriations bill and the normal estimates to see that there had been an actual reduction in the amount allotted for scientific research. To my mind, if you take the total amount allotted it is so relatively insignificant in our national budget that this house should look very carefully into the matter and do what it can to see to it that we retain and maintain in our employ those brilliant young scientists whom we are in danger of losing.

I want to make that plea, not in a partisan spirit but because I believe the future of this country depends so largely on the scientific development of our natural resources that all should make every endeavour to see to it that our young scientists are encouraged to remain in this country and do the job for Canada and for the Canadian people for which this country has so well equipped them.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): On a question of privilege. I should like to correct one misapprehension or one misstatement which I am sure the hon. member made unwittingly. I shall be very brief. The hon. member suggested that I had approved the British budget of 1920. I wish to read one sentence from my speech showing that, while I pointed to it as an objective that we might seek to attain, I said this:

Let me say again that I think that—

Referring to their action.

—was too sudden; I think in a financial sense it was too heroic, and I think it is quite arguable that by the sudden action taken in that way evil results flowed therefrom.

Mr. COLDWELL: But it was heroic.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis):

That the amendment be amended by adding to paragraph (a) the words, "which require the use of our national credit in terms of public need to make possible a large-scale investment programme, the public reconversion of war industries for peacetime needs, the public development of new industries, of scientific research and of our natural resources;" and to paragraph (b) the words, "and that no programme has been outlined for the expansion of essential expenditures necessary to provide complete social security and adequate purchasing power for our people;" and to paragraph (c) the words, "but, on the contrary, substantial and unjustifiable relief has been granted to large corporations and to individuals in the high income brackets."

So that the amendment would then read:

"This house regrets:

(a) that no effective plan has been proposed to ensure full production and employment which require the use of our national credit in terms of public need to make possible a large-scale investment programme, the public reconversion of war industries for peacetime needs, the public development of new industries, of scientific research and of our natural resources;

(b) that no satisfactory policy has been advanced for the elimination of extravagant governmental expenditures and that no programme has been outlined for the expansion of essential expenditures necessary to provide complete social security and adequate purchasing power for our people;

(c) that no adequate provision has been made for the immediate relief of the people in the lower income brackets from excessive taxation but, on the contrary, substantial and unjustifiable relief has been granted to large corporations and to individuals in the high income brackets."

Mr. MACKENZIE: I think the amendment as put by Your Honour is not exactly the amendment moved by the hon. member. As read by Your Honour the amendment includes part of the amendment which was moved previously by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell). The amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) would be the amendment which would result if it overcame the amendment moved by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. I do not think this house is entitled to vote upon the consequence of the amendment made by my hon. friend to the main motion.

Mr. COLDWELL: I presumed that the Speaker had received both the amendment and the amendment as amended. I am very sorry the error has occurred through my sending up the two documents, which I read separately.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is really no difference except that Mr. Speaker has placed before the house the resulting amendment which my hon. friend's amendment to the amendment would bring about.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in a good many respects this is a peculiar budget debate. My mind goes back to 1938 when a similar situation arose in the province of Alberta when I was presenting the budget in the legislature at Edmonton. I just got my budget before the house when I was called to Ottawa to deal with seed grain advances by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Dunning. For a period of ten days I had to leave my budget before the house to be shot full of holes in my absence. However, I note that in this case the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) guarded against any such thing and saw to it that the debate did not continue until he got back. I think that is a very good thing.

I should like to remind the minister that I am in good company. I recall that the newspapers of the day in their caricatures and cartoons on the front pages showed the minister of finance of Alberta as a mother who had just placed her baby on the doorstep of a big house, suggesting perhaps the parliament, and then was sneaking away and leaving the baby to its fate. Under the whole picture was the caption. "He has no mother instincts." I presume that there are two of us who have no mother instincts with respect to these babes, the budgets.

However that may be, it is my impression that it is the dream of every minister of finance to build a perfect budget, just as it seems to be the dream of every person with criminal instincts to plan and execute the perfect crime. I hasten to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not suggest any connection between the two, although many people consider the greatest criminal in the country is the Minister of Finance. "Kill Ilsley" seems to be a common slogan in many quarters of Canada. I sometimes think the minister does not make his burden any easier to bear by his inertia and his standardized attitude toward the matter of financial improvement and progress. However that may be, the minister has my sympathy and I want him to know and feel that.

No sooner is his dream of the perfect budget taking shape than along comes something or somebody to take the whole edge off it. Either a war starts or a tragedy occurs within the nation which necessitates the expenditure of large sums of extra money, or somebody gets an idea which starts a raid on the treasury from a dozen different quarters.

I can see the minister can appreciate that because of his experience. The urge to spend is very strong in the departments of government and so the dream of the minister is shot. In the end the minister is forced to bring into the house such financial proposals which do not in any way reflect his idea of a good budget. Here again I do not suggest that there is any connection between that very short budget and the one that he has brought in.

Let me make just a statement about the treatment now given to the Minister of Finance as a rule in this house. It seems to me that the treatment the minister receives as a rule does not help him very much. He does have suggestions made to him from time to time, but the criticism is usually pretty destructive. It must be quite cold comfort to a tired, overworked and harassed Minister of Finance to have some of hon. members rush in to help him hoist from the backs of the public and from his own back the old man of the sea—that is, the dead-weight of taxes that were spoken of by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell)—only to find that they have prepared for him a bed of Procrustes, on which he is supposed to rest when the burden is lifted from his back.

If our budget criticisms are to be of any value to the government it seems to me that they must be more than demands for reduced expenditures. Surely it is only reasonable that the minister might expect from financial experts scientific recommendations in keeping with the advanced time in which we live. The minister has a right to expect from his critics something more than blind and misguided loyalty to narrow, financial and economic notions that have been outmoded for many years.

It seems reasonable, too, that we on this side of the house, and in fact hon. members in all parts of the house, should expect from the minister the application to his problems of some of the progressive mental thought and practice much more in keeping with an age in which any but the mentally atrophied must know and realize and recognize that what is physically possible can be made financially possible.

While the minister was presenting his budget and I was following most carefully his admirable presentation of a fairly complicated set of financial proposals, now and again my mind slipped back to the many budgets and the many sleepless nights I spent in trying to build budgets, and particularly to build my perfect budget—because I had the same dream. The figures which I juggled in those days were puny when compared with the ones the minister juggles. But the principle underlying the two were certainly just the same.

Later, as I studied the document, and supporting schedules and budget papers, I was tempted to do just a little budgeting on my own—just to keep in practice you know, in case the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) decides to make the Minister of Finance the president of the international bank for reconstruction and development, and asks me to take his place to help the Prime Minister get this country on a twentieth century financial structure.

But seriously, Mr. Speaker, I was anxious, as a matter of fact to look beyond the present year, perhaps even beyond the next year, to a time when our war and our main rehabilitation expenditures will have been reduced to peace-time levels, and when we shall be once more on a purely peace-time economy. To do this I set up, using the government's own figures and proposals, what appears to me to be the minimum peace-time burden of fixed charges and variables in the budget which the people of Canada will have to meet out of their production during the years to come.

I should like to refer to a breakdown of the budget which grows in my mind. These are the fixed charges that I find in the present budget: family allowances of approximately $200 million. I do not mean of course to criticize these, because I find myself in substantial agreement with many of them. Then, interest on the debt, including service, which of course I do not agree with, including annual amortization and bond discount, premiums and commissions, $400 million. Then, subsidies to provinces, not including special compensation to provinces in lieu of income and corporation taxes, $14,500,000 in round figures. Then, old age pensions, $33,500,000; superannuation and retirement allowances, $3,100,000; unemployment insurance; that is, the federal government's contribution to the fund, and the cost of administration, $20 million; veterans affairs, for rehabilitation and treatment services, payments to and for dependents, including administration of the Veterans' Land Act, and statutory amounts, $74 million. This makes a total minimum for years to come of $745,100,000 of fixed charges.

This represents merely those charges which are fairly thoroughly fixed as to minimum, so long as the government continues to operate under the present system of debt and taxation, and so long as it continues to honour its present commitments. Every single item in that schedule is bound to grow, except perhaps the item of interest and debt service. And even that will continue to increase very rapidly unless the government takes some determined action along sounder lines than has ever before been followed in government financing in this country. I might have more to say about this at a later stage, if time permits.

Thus far I have set out only the fixed part of the financial picture for the immediate future. There has yet to be considered federal government financial commitments in case the proposals made to the provinces under the dominion-provincial conference are given effect to. The chief of these follows—and the figures I present are only the increases in the expenditures above those which I have already included in the fixed charge burden necessary to fulfil the commitments to the provinces.

The first of these is national old age pensions and assistance, including administration costs, of approximately $200 million; health insurance, in the early stages only, of $70 million; subsidies to provinces, an irreducible minimum—and I am using only a minimum—of $12 per capita of provincial population, based on the 1941 production figure of $8 billion, giving an amount of $124 million. Then comes the extension of unemployment insurance—and this is an estimate after studying the proposals before the dominion-provincial conference—amounting to $20 million. These would total $414 million. With this added to the burden of fixed charges already presented of $745,100,000, we have a grand total minimum of $1,159,100,000 for years to come in those two items.

We might also consider the variables in our peace-time budget. These consist of defence budget and ordinary government budget which would include provision for trade requirements. These two will doubtless run normally at about $800 million, unless of course we carve back drastically our expenditures for defence, and also tackle seriously the problem of reducing administration costs.

It is my opinion that there is much that can be done, particularly along the latter line. The position this group takes is this: Cut out all waste; carry on a businesslike administration; quickly find out the position where economy, efficiency and strength meet, and then stay on that ground.

I would remind the minister that some heavy bureaucracies have grown up in the past ten years in the administration of this country, and it will require determined action on the part of government to get rid of those bureaucracies. But might I suggest most earnestly right here that the government see to it that in cutting down these staffs to an efficient peace-time level the fathers and mothers who gave their all, who made such a noble sacrifice during the war, and who were temporary war workers, be the last to be dismissed.

Taking the complete picture of fixed charges and of a variable running normally to about $800 million a year, we can foresee these minimum normal requirements of approximately $2 billion a year to meet the programmes that have been outlined by the government.

This figure does not include any provision whatsoever for debt retirement, and it does not provide for repayment to the people of Canada of the refundable portion of the income and excess profits taxes amounting to $444,271,000. These two items will require considerable additional expenditure above the $2 billion minimum if we are ever to cut down our very heavy load of debt. I suggest that we must tackle this debt problem realistically and at the earliest possible time. We should start reducing our debt now and keep on reducing it until the people of the country are free from the burden of debt.

If we assume that the total national production of $10 billion is maintained, the government will have to tax from the people a straight 20 per cent of their incomes or they will have to continue deficit budgeting, in which case the debt will continue to rise year after year, and consequently a larger portion of the revenues will have to be devoted to paying interest. My advice to the government is that they get on a pay-as-you-go basis as quickly as possible and stay there. With flexibility gone from the budget, and with their bridges burned behind them, the government must soon realize that they are between the upper and the nether millstones. I also suggest that it will require some rather bold and determined action on their part to keep those millstones from grinding them and with them the country to dust. Twenty per cent of the national income is a very high tax rate indeed. I suggest that it is a double tithe. When you add to that burden the weight of provincial and municipal taxation the taxpayers of this country face a pretty gloomy future unless the government makes a new approach to public finance, and I suggest that there is such an approach.

I said a moment ago that the government had burned its bridges behind it. What I meant was that the government of the day had committed itself to a very large programme of social and other services, resulting in a burden of fixed charges in the budget of one and a quarter billion dollars, or twice the size of the whole of the largest pre-war budget. But having given its undertakings, of course the government must carry through or go down or lose face. It is not my purpose to criticize the programme at this stage. I merely want to emphasize and point out these facts in our Canadian economy. The government must find it essential to keep the national production high in Canada. That is the first and most fundamental requisite of a prosperous peace time. No programme such as has been mapped out could possibly be successful without keeping the national production high. There is evidence, to me at least, that the government realize this quite well, and I want to assure them that this group in the Social Credit movement in this house will do everything within our power to assist them in keeping the national production high. In fact, we of this group are demanding an expanding economy wherein full opportunity is provided for Canadians to enjoy a rising standard of living. It is within reason, I am sure, that this should be. Canadians have always been ready to make any sacrifices necessary to bring Canada through her emergencies and through her times of stress. Our people have made tremendous sacrifices during the past six years, and it is only simple justice, I submit, that Canadians should be allowed to enjoy to the full the security which the abundant resources of this country can provide.

In their efforts to ensure that production is kept up in Canada I feel certain that the government will face certain difficulties. I want briefly to warn the government respecting two or three of those difficulties and to pass on to it if I can some helpful suggestions in connection with them. I do not have any desire for destructive criticism but merely to make suggestions that might prove helpful. In the first place in the efforts of the government to maintain production, I am certain that imbalances are likely to appear and grow in our economy. I believe that ordinary observation to-day reveals a great deal of these aggravating conditions in Canada right now. I shall take time to refer briefly to only two.

Live stock production has dropped dangerously low on the prairies and especially in the Peace River area, and this on account of the fact that the relationship between grain prices and live stock returns has been allowed to become such as to discourage the production of live stock. The farmer will not slave from sunup to sundown or from long before sunup to long after sundown day in and day out throughout the whole year unless he foresees a reasonable chance that he will be paid for his work. He did not hesitate to do this in war when he felt that his sacrifices would contribute to victory over our enemy. Right here I want to say that in my opinion Canadian farmers did make a magnificent contribution to Canada's war effort. But now that the war is over, it should be kept in mind that there is no financial incentive whatever for the farmer to keep his nose to the grindstone throughout the year feeding and finishing live stock. He can make a good living from grain and can get enough meat for himself and family easily enough. He responded splendidly in war time to the appeal for increased meat production and other production. But now he is five years older and he is definitely tired. Most of our farmers were middle-aged men when war broke out and the younger ones either went or were taken into the army. The older men carried on during the war without adequate help and now they feel justified, since the conflict is over, in taking things a bit easier.

I suggest with all respect that the short-sighted policy of the government in guaranteeing a price on wheat for the next five years without arranging a comparable and similar policy for meat production has resulted in a very bad slump in live stock prices. Cattle are not selling well at rural auction sales throughout the west, and especially in the Peace River district, where there are practically no hogs whatever for sale. The older farmers will not go back into stock raising without material encouragement and certainly they will not induce the younger returning men to raise live stock. The government have been repeatedly warned of this situation, but thus far it seems that they have refused to see the facts. An individual whose judgment I respect wrote me from the Peace River country, and I should like to quote a paragraph or two from his letter by way of evidence of what I have said. He said:

> I personally, through filling out gas applications for several hundred farmers each year, on which applications a complete statement of live stock holdings was shown, could see what was coming up. Up until a year ago every farmer in this district listed from twenty-five to two hundred pigs. This last spring only one reported two hundred and the average was between one and five. If we had a quota to fill for Europe any sane man should see that rationing is not the answer. What we need is a policy to build up production again to adequate levels to meet our own needs and at the same time to meet the needs of starving Europe. This could easily be done. People up here have possibly not been heard in the rationing discussion, but I can tell you as a fact that they have no sympathy for it.

The people up in the same section of the country, I am told, are somewhat bitter about sugar rationing, believing that no effort has been made to increase production in Canada where refineries have operated up to only a little more than half their capacity. They believe that there is a combine racket in this field; my judgment tells me that there is something very peculiar about the situation, and I aim to get to the bottom of it when I have time.

What I wanted to emphasize was that as we set out to bring up our national production to the level required, if the Canadian people are to meet the demands of the various governments for taxes and services, we must take pains to establish by every means possible a balanced economy. One of the essentials in this effort must be a price structure that is based upon the parity principle and that will guarantee primary producers in every field their fair share of the national income and the national production. It goes without saying, too, that if we are to be successful in our efforts in this respect there must be some vision on the part of the government and also close and sympathetic cooperation amongst the Department of Finance and the Departments of Agriculture and Trade and Commerce.

I turn to a second problem that will have to be faced. In the second place, as the programme of full production gets under way, the government must be on its guard against the building up in Canada once more of huge unsaleable surpluses of goods. A careful study of economic experience of the past reveals, to me at any rate, that when unsaleable surpluses begin to show themselves in the country we are beginning to enter a depression period. What has been striking to me, sir, is this. A study of depressions shows that they recur at intervals largely in inverse proportion to the inability of the Canadian people to produce; that is to say, that the interval of years between major depressions grows shorter when our productive capacity increases, and roughly in the same proportion.

What does this mean? Let us take a glance at the facts of the history of the past fifteen years. I recall that when, on October 12, the minister presented his budget he indulged in some history. I propose to do a bit of the same thing.

In 1929 Canada ran into a period of business recession the like of which we had not had in our history before. Merchants at that time found themselves with full shelves and warehouses but with few customers able to buy the goods they had in abundance. Consequently merchants ordered no more goods from wholesalers; wholesalers, with full warehouses, cancelled orders from manufacturers; and manufacturers, unable to get orders, laid off men and therefore stopped paying wages to the men. This reduced still further the ability of people generally to buy the goods which retailers had for sale; and worse still, it started the vicious circle which ended up in a first-class unemployment problem. Bread lines, trade stagnation, and poverty in the midst of abundance became the order of that day, and to make matters worse, during the first fifteen months after 1930 more than $900 million in purchasing power was withdrawn from circulation in Canada and was cancelled out of existence.

Did this condition of depression come about because producers would not produce? No; that is not true. Common observation at that time revealed that production remained fairly high in almost every branch of productive effort, until the country was surfeited with goods of almost every description that we could produce. Was it, then, because distributors would not distribute the goods? I submit that the almost frantic race for markets which drove prices down far below economic levels indicates that distributors did their best to sell their goods. We all remember that, in their efforts to remove the goods which lined their shelves, distributors resorted to deferred payment plans which mortgaged years of the future earnings of those still fortunate enough in this country to have work, and therefore incomes.

It was about this time we began to hear the old Fabian cry, "the poor are poor because the rich are rich", and the idea carried with it was, of course, "soak the rich." Was that the explanation of the whole sordid condition which existed then? I maintain that that contention is stupid when it is subjected to careful scrutiny. If it were true that the poor were poor because the rich were rich, then I submit that a steeply-graded income tax that bore heavily upon the rich, with the proceeds distributed among the poor, would have solved the whole problem. That is exactly what was tried, notably in England. The poor for a while were a bit better off through the dole, but the process finally intensified the ills rather than cured them.

Social Crediters at that time said that the first sensible step to take in starting back toward prosperity would be for the government to lay down a financial policy under which purchasing power in considerable quantities could be put into the hands of the consumers of the country. If this had been done the goods on the shelves of merchants and other distributors throughout Canada would have begun to move out into the hands of consumers; retailers would have ordered from wholesalers; wholesalers would have placed orders with manufacturers who, to fill their orders, would have had to take on men to work in their factories. The salaries paid to those men would have stimulated business all the way along the line, and as a result Canada would have started along the road to recovery. Social Crediters advocated that policy in season and out of season. We pleaded with the minister of finance of that day, but he said that there was no money, and anyhow, he contended, such a procedure would cause a dangerous inflation. So that the situation was allowed to drift and to deteriorate until war broke out in 1939. The banks and other financial institutions in this country clung to the same hoary theory of inflation as was held by the then minister of finance. They stoutly claimed that there was no money to start the wheels turning to put men back to work. "Where is the money to come from?" was their frenzied cry. Social Crediters replied, "where all money comes from, the end of a fountain pen in the hands of those authorized by law to write the figures in the ledgers of the banks." Of course we were looked upon as crazy, but I have noticed that some other people have since caught a measure of the same kind of craziness.

The Minister of Finance, in reviewing on October 12 the principles which he laid down in his first war-time budget at the special session of 1939, said, as reported in Hansard, at page 1035:

> The second principle enunciated in September, 1939, was, that after an initial credit expansion, designed to facilitate a rapid increase in production, we should endeavour to limit our borrowings as closely as possible to the genuine savings of the country.

Now just a word about this principle; immediately upon the outbreak of war the government took the first important step toward making Canada ready for a strong war effort. As the Minister of Finance said, "they arranged an initial credit expansion to facilitate a rapid increase in production." In taking that step the government also initiated the process of making Canada once more a prosperous country, a thing she had not been since 1929. The government did not take long to make up its mind what had to be done in the emergency to enable us to fight a military war. I wonder why it did not occur to the government that a similar step might have proved just as effective in preparing Canada for a successful fight in the economic war that we had back in the thirties? No member of the cabinet would deny that a good fight against poverty is just as important as, and perhaps in some circumstances more important than, a strong military campaign. Anyhow, that first credit expansion was arranged. As a result of it, Canada quickly stepped up her production year by year, until by 1945 we were able to produce nearly three times the total value of what we produced in the last pre-war year. I do not know who finally convinced the Liberal government that the first step necessary in our programme of making ready for an effective war effort was to increase the amount of money in circulation in Canada. But I do know that for some years before the war we Social Crediters pleaded with the government to start things going by arranging an expansion of credits—to use, in fact, the social credit of this country. We were ridiculed, but our contentions, in some measure at least, have been vindicated by time and history. Just to emphasize how far we have gone down the road of "credit expansion", I wish to quote another short paragraph from the minister's speech of October 12. On page 998 of Hansard he is reported as having said:

> It is possible to make a rough estimate only of the "savings" held by Canadian individuals in certain liquid forms.

Such an estimate, which cannot be too wide of the mark, indicates that as of May 31, 1945, in currency, bank deposits, refundable taxes and dominion government securities, Canadian individuals held savings of more than nine and a half billions and that these savings had increased by more than six and a half billions since the end of 1938. Now, sir, where did this six and a half billions come from? That is the $64 dollar question.

Another way of looking at this picture is this. In 1939 the total amount of currency in all Canada was, roughly, $200 million, and the total amount of bank deposit money was $2,400 million, according to the reports of the Bank of Canada. By 1945 the total amount of currency in Canada had increased to $1,070 millions, and of bank deposit money, to over $4,500 million. The supply of money in these forms has increased by $3 billion during the time when consumer goods and services were becoming more and more scarce, and yet we have had no wild inflation. During the depression years, Mr. Dunning, then minister of finance, became quite hysterical in this house when it was suggested that $200 million of new currency be created to be put into circulation to provide jobs—get that, to provide jobs—for the unemployed and to try to check the disastrous course of deflation in this country. He said at that time, in his hysterical way, that it would be crude inflation.

But that is not all. In July, 1942, when it was suggested in this parliament that we make greater use of the Bank of Canada in conducting the war, the present Minister of Finance, as recorded at page 4271 of Hansard of 1942, stated:

> If we put into circulation a billion dollars of new money, it would blow the price ceiling to kingdom come before you could say "Jack Robinson."

Now even the Minister of Finance can be wrong. When he uttered those words in this parliament in July, 1942, the total amount of public bank deposits in Canadian chartered banks, together with the total value of all notes in circulation in Canada was $3,600 million. By 1945 the aggregate of these same forms of purchasing power was $5,570,000,000. I submit that nearly twice the billion dollars of new money spoken of by my hon. friend has been put into circulation in Canada, but I have not heard that the price ceiling has been blown to kingdom come, nor has the Minister of Finance said "Jack Robinson" so that anyone could hear him.

Mr. ILSLEY: My hon. friend is talking about two different things. The billion in question was Bank of Canada issue and not increase in bank deposits or the other kind of money he speaks of.

Mr. LOW: I took the trouble to look up that speech carefully, and I note that all through the debate which took place at that time suggestions were made alternatively or in various places about Bank of Canada notes and currency and credit.

Mr. ILSLEY: No. I remember precisely the proposal, how it was made, and when it was made. It was either one billion or $1,200 million of Bank of Canada money, borrowings from the Bank of Canada, or issue of Bank of Canada notes. That is different entirely from the two or three billion in bank deposits which the hon. member talks about.

Mr. LOW: The minister knows quite well, and I quoted exactly what he said, that he did not differentiate at all between Bank of Canada notes and the type of money which we had been advocating in this corner. He knows full well that it is necessary to make that distinction very clear.

Mr. ILSLEY: I did.

Mr. LOW: I am trying to make it clear now.

Mr. ILSLEY: I made it very clear at the time.

Mr. LOW: Very good. Let me make the matter perfectly clear. The type of credit expansion, the type of money that had always been recommended in the house by this group, was exactly the type of purchasing power and credit which had been used with increasing effect during this war, exactly the same, and that is what I am referring to. Now, sir, I ask you this question: Where did all that purchasing power come from? It was not in existence anywhere in the world in 1942. The government of Canada did not borrow it from abroad and did not create it all. I will tell hon. members where it came from. The Canadian chartered banks, who went to such pains in the hungry thirties to convince people that there was no money, did not differentiate between Bank of Canada notes and ordinary credit expansion. But they said that there was no money for humanitarian purposes during the months when we were suffering from unemployment and trade stagnation. During the months since 1942 the same banks have lent to various people in Canada, including the government, nearly $2 billion of what they said they did not have, and they are receiving interest on it all.

What is the answer? I submit that the banks created and lent into circulation $2 billion of new money. They made use of the social credit of the Canadian people. They did exactly what a Social Credit government would have them do under a proper economy, except that instead of the banks being allowed to lend it into circulation, thus creating a debt to the banks on which they could continue to collect interest, the banks would have issued money for the government interest-free and the government would have arranged for the banks a nominal service charge for services and bookkeeping.

Such a procedure would remove from the banks the power to bring on periods of deflation and their power to call in and cancel loans that had been made to the people. Many sound-money advocates entirely overlook deflation. That condition might be and often is far worse than inflation, and it has proved so in the past in Canada. Social credit money is exactly the same kind of money being used now. It is not "funny money", and I should like to emphasize that point for the benefit of hon. members who constantly shout that this is a funny money scheme. If it is, then the present situation in Canada, and the policy which has been followed since 1939, is certainly a funny money scheme. It is different from our present money—I am speaking, of course, of social credit money—but only in this respect, that it is issued into circulation without adding to the nation's debt. And remember that social crediters advocate issuing new money only when there are goods and services already in existence to be distributed by money; a dollar of purchasing power for a dollar's worth of goods and services available, no more and no less. I suggest that under such circumstances there could not possibly be any inflation.

Now let me suggest to the government that when unsaleable surpluses of goods begin to pile up on the shelves of the warehouses, as sooner or later they will because of the inherent weakness of the financial system, and when at the same time there are Canadians who need and want these goods for their own use, the government should arrange another credit expansion equal to the value of the goods to be removed, and see to it that this new money finds its way, debt-free, into the hands of consumers, starting first with old age pensioners, the blind, scholars who want to stay in school to finish their education but have not the means to do so, and the unfortunate of the country. I suggest that no Canadian should henceforth ever have to go hungry.

I have dealt, sir, with two of the problems which the government will doubtless encounter in its efforts to keep up the volume of production to a level which will be high enough to ensure a decent standard of living for the Canadian people to enable them to take care of the burden of taxation of their governments.

I have just one or two points to mention in conclusion, but before I sit down I should like to mention briefly a third. I shall cut it short. I refer to the problem of taxation. If we investigate carefully the conditions that existed among the Indians before the white man appeared, we shall find that the Indians were free, and they really had the spirit of freedom; there is no doubt about that. There was absence of chaos among them, and that absence of chaos was not because they did not have any government. They had a government, but the political authority that did exist in that government was devoid of the power of taxation. As we study the development of society since those very early days, we become aware of a power which gradually transformed a social government into the anti-social state. This power is the power of taxation. Many authorities, such as Jefferson of the United States and others, have warned the people that the power of taxation, placed in the hands of government, must in the end bring about a softening of the moral fibre of the people. How does that happen? The process of deterioration is quite simple. As more of the production resulting from the efforts of the individual is absorbed by the state through the ever-increasing tolls of taxation, the less the individual has for his own enjoyment, and therefore the more he has to work in order to maintain for himself circumstances that are decent in which to live.

The dignity of the individual disintegrates under the hammering of want and the fear of want. On the other hand, the power of the state increases in proportion to the wealth which it takes from the people through taxation. There is an interesting aspect to this which I should like to submit to hon. members. Since wealth is economic power, then taxation simply means transferring economic power from the individual to the state. As a result of heavy taxation, and in times of depression, the individual is often pressed into bargaining for some of what was his property by right of his own efforts in producing it. In most cases the bargaining is very much one-sided, and all too often the individual is harassed by fear and utter necessity, so that in his bargaining with the state he is forced to offer up, as the price of success, many of his rights for a simple hand-out from the government. These rights the individual has always looked upon as inalienable; but when a man is forced to seek a hand-out, whether in the form of unemployment insurance or the dole, he progressively loses his rights, and in the end he ceases to be free. This is one aspect of the taxation problem as we have experienced it down the years and since the time of the Indians. It seems to me that we should now begin to reverse the whole process so as to revitalize and rehabilitate the individuals and to make them free.

Under the debt-financing policies followed by this and practically all other governments in democratic countries the burden of taxation of necessity grows heavier and heavier decade after decade. I have already pointed out in this house that in 1923 the people of Canada paid to the federal government 3-7/10ths per cent of the whole national income in taxes. By 1944 the taxes to this government required 25-3/10ths per cent of the national income. To-day it requires close to 50 per cent of the total incomes of the people to meet their tax requisitions to the federal, provincial and municipal governments. It must be obvious that unless the national production is kept high, the people will not for very long be able to pay even the present high percentage of their income to the state. Yet, in their efforts to keep production up to a high level in Canada the tax structure as represented in the budget recently presented by the minister will certainly prove to be a deterrent.

I submit, sir, that the flood-gates of production cannot be opened wide to meet the needs of Canadians unless we undertake at once a general downward division of taxation. In times of peace men will not exert themselves very hard if fully half of the product of their labour is taken from them by a super-state.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I understand that the hon. member has already spoken for fifty minutes. If he has the unanimous consent of the house he may proceed but, if not, he must resume his seat.

Mr. LOW: I have just about a minute left, sir.

Some hon. MEMBERS: All right.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. MEMBERS: For one minute, yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may have two minutes.

Mr. LOW: Very good, sir. I would suggest, sir, that since hon. gentlemen of the other place have indicated some new-found energies and have advocated complete revision of the taxation structure, we should give them that responsibility and help them out by all that we can do.

I have just one other thing to say in conclusion. We have heard it said that the condition of things in which men have been in the habit of living is a necessary condition of things. I suggest that there are better ways of doing things than we have been used to doing them in the past. I suggest that it is possible for us to find those better ways if we keep our minds alert and if we are amenable to progressive suggestions. I offer these suggestions to the government, feeling my responsibility in making them, and knowing full well that if they are followed they can put Canada into a much better position.

Mr. G. E. LAPALME (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on the budget debate I cannot ignore a warning recently given by an hon. member to another hon. member who, like me, was a newcomer in this chamber. Apparently one should not be obliged to wonder later on, "Was I really like that in my first session?" So, upon entering this debate in order to express a few opinions, I am filled with certain apprehensions.

I am not an expert in financial matters, and I am not one of those who consider the budget as a most fascinating adventure. The budget of a nation is filled with so many facts that in order to discuss it in all fairness, one should know all the mysteries of national and even international finance. One should also be aware of all the needs unknown to the population at large, but known by those who are in constant touch with the pulse of the nation. I believe this is the right attitude to take in order to grasp the human element of a budget. Let us not forget that a budget is applied to human beings and not to robots. In so far as I am concerned, this is the angle in which I am interested.

If the statement handed down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) gives us a general picture, often without details as to the origin of particular needs of various parts of the country, it does not mean that in order to obtain a final result local questions had to be ignored, and that the country had to be considered as an indivisible entity. I would believe rather that particular attention was paid to the various needs created by the geographical position, local production and particularly the human condition, of the many classes which constitute the Canadian nation.

Representing one of these districts that has special needs which are sometimes common to the whole country, I believe it is my duty to speak in the name of the county where was born and where studied Sir Wilfrid Laurier. During the war an attempt was made to give mankind a superhuman stature; from the physical point of view the maximum had to be exceeded, and morally our minds had to be directed exclusively toward one goal. It was most extraordinary that we succeeded and that this success has lasted for six years. The torch race was kept up at the same speed unceasingly without the runner ever falling. Now the race is over, but how is the runner?

In order to form a true picture there is nothing like looking around. Near the town of Joliette in my riding the largest war factory in Canada, and even, as I am told, in the empire, was established. Where wealthy farmers lived thirteen thousand people came and through their work supported the armies of the united nations. From the St. Lawrence in the south to the Laurential forests in the north; that is, from the factories to the lumber camps, everything was directed toward the war effort.

Grappling with a thousand problems, agriculture was endeavouring to obtain manpower from the factories. Organized labour, constantly growing stronger in centres like Joliette close to Montreal, threatened to spread even to the smallest districts. And now? War factories are slowing down their production and forcing workers back to their original homes. Our veterans are coming back from overseas. Lumber camps are asking for workers whom sometimes they cannot find. Agriculture, with a greatly increased production, is also suffering from a lack of manpower. In the industrial field the smaller industries view with anxiety the excessive expansion of large manufacturing industries.

The enthusiasm shown during the last war loan reveals nevertheless that the Canadian people are confident in their lucky star and are ready to face the problems of the future. By no means are they exhausted by the hardships of war. Now all this must be directed toward a peace effort as sustained as was our war effort. It is in these circumstances that the population of my county were expecting the budget speech, and I believe they repeat the words which the financial critic of the opposition said in the house immediately after the budget. He said, "The minister has removed from the minds of the people of Canada a fear which many of them had." It is true the same critic said shortly afterwards, "Has the government really developed a peace-time mentality in the question of public finance?" This worry was rather peculiar since the hon. member seemed to ignore the significant words of the Minister of Finance.

The minister stated that war expenditures never decrease as quickly as war undertakings. That is true. When shells cease being fired on the battlefield the home front does not collapse suddenly. The nation's economy cannot revert overnight to its pre-war position. Therefore the budget speech, in the words of the opposition, has removed a fear which many people had.

I would not be truly representing a county which is the centre of tobacco growing in the province of Quebec if I did not direct attention to the following statement made by the Minister of Finance:

We foresee an increase in the revenue from excise taxes and duties on tobacco.

As far as I can remember, Joliette in the province of Quebec has always been the most important market for raw leaf tobacco for pipe use. Furthermore, in the last few years Joliette has become the only place in Quebec where Quebec cigarette tobacco is both produced and graded. It is quite normal, as was stated in the budget speech, to expect increased revenues from this source. However, I should like to make a few comments which may not be a warning but which will recall certain facts that are capable of leading to serious thinking.

An increase in production and sales of cigarettes and raw leaf tobacco in Ontario and Quebec will certainly bring about an increase in excise revenue. The Ontario marketing board in setting a price of 33¼ cents a pound for cigarette tobacco has had an effect upon the 4,500,000 pounds produced in the Joliette district. This increases prices to a higher level than during previous years. This is of interest, not only to the growers but to the department of revenue. As far as cigarette tobacco is concerned, if I had a cause to defend I would defend that of the growers because this trade is exclusively in the hands of the larger industries which are not to be pitied.

But the same situation does not exist with raw leaf tobacco for pipe use or even for cigars. In this field, both the farmer and the trading manufacturer, if not the cooperative as well, have a worthy cause. Formerly—and here I am recalling personal recollections, because for family and local reasons I have spent all my life among tobacco even though I am a lawyer actually—the trade in raw leaf tobacco in the Joliette district was divided among many trading manufacturers of various importance who each hired a certain number of workers who earned an honourable living out of this business. This was a small industry, humble but alive. Purchasing and selling were a very simple matter. I remember as distinctly as if it were yesterday seeing transactions between grower and dealer performed without any written document on the running board of a car or in a buggy.

Everyone knows what changes were brought about by the war of 1914-18. Taxation, like other things, became of full age. The raw leaf tobacco grown in Canada was affected, but only for a short time. Conditions became normal but afterward deteriorated in a sensational manner. At the present time the tax is twenty-eight cents a pound. I cannot tell if contraband is at the same rate as this tax, because here as elsewhere we have "free traders."

A certain difference in price has always existed between Quebec and Ontario tobaccos; prices for Quebec tobaccos have always been higher because of the varieties that are grown. What was bound to happen has happened. As far back as 1918-19 dealers in Kent and Essex counties began to build up an export business from Ontario to Quebec, which business persisted until it was stopped a few days ago by a federal order. Therefore in our district we are acquainted with the Ontario tobacco market, especially since we now grow cigarette tobacco on a large scale.

As was often asked, was the infiltration in retail trade of Ontario tobacco branded with a Quebec label a factor in creating the truly rotten situation which exists at present? I leave the answer to specialists. Nevertheless, in this matter, nothing can be compared with the tax which, according to fluctuations in prices, always amounts in normal times to at least twice the purchasing price; occasionally it is even four times this price.

Furthermore, the prices and trade board, for many months if not years during this war, set the sales price of dealers at a lower level than the price paid growers. While I was preparing these notes, dealers learned that a new order was upsetting the market for small tobaccos. I believe that it could have been possible to do justice to all without running the risk of ruining those who, after all, maintained this business during many years. When the last order setting prices of the present crop was passed, the dealers had bought all the small tobaccos at a higher price than that which they should have paid in order to sell this tobacco in accordance with the rates established in this order, which by that very fact had a retroactive effect.

Here we have an industry which formerly was prosperous, which supplied work in many small centres throughout the province and, all things considered, even handled a large volume of business. To-day, it is no more what it used to be. To-morrow, will it have completely vanished? It is said that trusts are threatening it; would this be true? Will cooperatives be successful in saving it? I hope so; nevertheless I ask the government to think the matter over twice before they allow this industry to die. It is worth the trouble of lightening the leaden cloak which is smothering it, and which is called taxation.

I know very well that first of all we must reduce taxes on the necessities of life, and that tobacco cannot be placed in that category. But what permits us to obtain these necessities? At any rate, as soon as circumstances permit, it is to be hoped that government officials will review this situation, and by doing so they would only be doing justice to this cause. I have just used a great word—"justice". Indeed it recalls the claims of all nations, and especially, with an ever more disquieting acuteness, the claims of labour. Moreover, all social classes are demanding it.

At this moment, I am reminded that, in the economic history of our times, if labour, and especially organized labour, were often ostracized by employers, it would be dangerous for the opposite reaction to occur nowadays. Revolutions always were reactions of this kind. Two factors usually determine the swing of the pendulum: the human factor and the economic factor; we are dealing with men, and men are prompted by needs.

These thoughts are going through my mind because I am aware that the budget shows the ever-increasing importance which the Department of Labour assumes in public expenditures. Labour is part of the social problem. I said, "part" of the social problem. It does not by itself constitute the whole social problem, though it takes much space in the picture we have of the world. The social problem affects everyone; labour is one of its most important elements. It is worthy of all our attention.

In a discussion of the budget, it is very difficult to restrict to figures this complex question. It is quite true that one can always mention with satisfaction the lowering of income tax with respect to the working classes, together with a thought for agriculture when one considers the tax exemption on machinery used for producing food.

But the labour problem takes on an altogether different meaning when it is connected to man himself man who is made of intelligence and flesh. It is the family question, the dwelling conditions, the conditions of his labour, his security, his health, his immediate and remote future.

Family allowances have become part of his social life. Why not his house; why not tomorrow the family salary? Talking of his house, undoubtedly one thinks of the labourer living in a large city. I am thinking especially of small towns like mine. The town of Joliette has a population of approximately 15,000 people. The surrounding population raises this figure to 18,000. What does the National Housing Act do for them? Nothing; we are ignored. It is all the more impossible to obtain help in a small village. Joliette had her glorious dead on the battlefront; a few hundred veterans of the three armed services are coming back. Will they be able to rely on Wartime Housing? I hope so, but I am doubtful. In the meantime, those who intend to build must rely on their own means only.

It has been said of the labourer: "Give him a fair salary and everything will be all right." A fair and reasonable salary is necessary, but the increase in salaries will reach its ceiling some day, and one cannot expect an indefinite progression toward astronomical figures. This state of uncertainty must cease.

What then, is more stable than a home and a house? In a travesty of what I was saying a while ago respecting salaries, one could say: "Give the labourer his own house, and everything will be quiet and stable." If I speak in this manner, it is because I consider the labourer as a man, and too many laws have disregarded man. Instinctively and out of necessity, is it not true that man will look for a shelter before he will even look for a living? Social peace will find therein one of its main props, because this problem, as a member stated in the house, is truly a social as well as an economic problem. As long as we are at the mercy of financial organizations in connection with cheap dwellings in smaller centres, I am sure of this: In their eyes, we will remain of no importance. Until to-day, they have done nothing for us.

During the last six years, the country has lent billions to the government; now in return, could the government not lend directly to the people? Is this impossible? Farm loans were carried into effect; direct loans for the purpose of erecting houses to be occupied by their owners could also be carried out. This is not in contradiction of my request for lowering taxes on tobacco—because I am advocating a loan, not a gift. A special organization could thus work toward improving the social standard, as directly and as effectively as family allowances.

I wish to request for the benefit of labour the help of the financial organization called the industrial development bank, and I make this request seriously. If this bank cannot be of any benefit to smaller industries in all our provinces, then local labour will be the loser. Until now, this bank has not yet revealed its existence in my county, which is one of the most thickly populated rural constituencies in the country.

It is quite true that all these social problems may assume more importance in the succeeding budgets after an agreement has been reached over federal-provincial matters, and we may entertain the hope of a complete agreement. I am quite in favour of provincial autonomy, but I am more strongly in favour of the welfare of the total Canadian population. To help labour, give it homes; grant it monthly allowances. Among other things, these are means which are capable of giving to the nation a robust health and a stable economy. As it was written recently: "Economy, instead of serving the golden gods, will serve mankind."

(Translation): Mr. Speaker, pre-war budgets can no longer be expected. We can no longer ignore the social needs which war has so bluntly revealed. We shall soon be confronted with the problem of finding employment for all. And then, going outside our own boundaries, we shall participate in the reorganization of a world with which we are bound up.

At the very moment when the nation's demands on the government are heaviest, the Minister of Finance will be asked to reduce the taxes. A heavy task is thus devolved upon this generation, and especially upon those who have to manage the national economy.

My preceding remarks were intended to be helpful and constructive. This budget comes during the transition period and it already gives us a welcome reminder of the restoration of peace. Let us hope that the next one will take us outside the realm of war so that we may attend still more earnestly to the solution of our social problems.

In concluding, I wish to bring to the attention of the government a matter which is of special concern to my constituency.

The plant at St. Paul l'Ermite to which I referred at the beginning of my remarks has cost about twenty million dollars, I believe. A short time before the end of the war, we were promised that it would be kept in operation even after the cessation of hostilities. Nevertheless, it is no longer in operation. Am I going too far in recalling those former promises?

(Text): Mr. Speaker, at this moment when victory is still in our memories—and may we never forget it!—when the country has just shown in a resounding way its faith in peace to the same extent that it has done in war, I believe that social questions have become the most important issues of the moment. Canada has already begun to lead the way in this field; in thus continuing, it may probably find what it needs above all—national unity.

[Mr. Lapalme.]

Mr. FRED ROSE (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, there is only one way in which we can judge the present budget: Do its proposals give the assurance that the government is taking its full employment policies seriously? This is the first peace-time budget since 1939 and was brought down at a time when the country is faced with the problems of reconversion from war to peace, lay-offs and the need to maintain consumer purchasing power. The people are looking to the budget for an indication of the plans of the government to maintain employment, to provide jobs for the workers and for the men and women who are returning from overseas. People want to see whether this budget provides for the social security measures that are necessary, and for large scale housing and for other measures that will make it possible to avoid an early post-war depression. It is against the background of this urgency that we should examine the budget before the house.

It is most appropriate to remind the house of some of the government's own statements of policy and of what it thinks is the actual job of a budget. In its white paper, "Employment and Income," issued last April, the government stated:

> Fiscal policy during the war has necessarily been based on economic as much as purely financial considerations. It is proposed to extend that practice into the post-war years and apply war experience to the problems of peace.

In the same white paper we further read:

> The government will be prepared in periods when unemployment threatens to incur the deficits and increases in the national debt resulting from its employment and income policy.

In the proposals of the federal government to the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction we find this statement:

> It is the responsibility of the government to pursue policies that create conditions in which the initiative, energy and resourcefulness of individual citizens can achieve rising standards of life. The modern governmental budget must be the balance wheel of the economy.

With this, Mr. Speaker, I fully agree. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) elaborated on this subject in introducing his budget to the house, when he said:

> The government has adopted as a major aim of government policy the maintenance of a high and stable level of income and employment. Accordingly it has become a major consideration in budget policy.

But when we look at the budget and its application we find none of the promises of the white paper fulfilled and none of the things contained in the proposals of the dominion government to the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction, nor do we find any substantiation of the statement made by the Minister of Finance to the house. This budget does not help to maintain full employment; it does not provide for it, and therefore we find that government practice is quite out of line with government theory.

How are those job to be provided? On the basis of this budget the jobs are to be provided by holding out to big business so-called incentives. If incentives are necessary, it is the Canadian people who need them because big business which talks so much of the need for incentives in order to give more employment has already had enough incentives given it to provide full employment for the people of Canada. For instance, the Bank of Canada statistical summary, analysing the account of 700 Canadian companies, points out that after taxes and depreciation the net income to the stockholders increased from $242 million in 1938 to $292 million in 1943. The increase in profits before taxes was of course much greater. Profits increased from $410 million in 1938 to $799 million in 1943. But there is much more to the picture than that. Accumulated surpluses and surplus reserves increased from $800 million in 1938 to $1,188 million in 1943; and at the same time these companies were able to reduce their funded debt from $1,015 million to $892 million.

Individuals as well as corporations have not done badly for themselves during the war years. In 1937-38, according to figures given by the Minister of Finance to the house on March 24, 1939, as reported in Hansard, there were 382 Canadians at that time receiving incomes of more than $50,000 a year. In 1944, according to the dominion bureau of statistics, there were 650 persons in the same income bracket, receiving a total income of $68 million, or better than $100,000 apiece. After taxes, they still had a trifle of $25 million left. That is not too bad for only 650 people. The minister in his budget now proposes to give these people $95 million more through the proposed reduction in the excess profits tax. My party, the Labour Progressive party, has stated in its programme that the excess profits tax after the war should continue as in war time and should be used for the community as a whole; that is, for a redistribution of income. The present budget does not provide for a redistribution of income, because if it gives anything it gives it to the rich. It makes some concessions to smaller business, and with this I fully agree. That is, small business with profits of less than $25,000 gets some concessions. That is good. But as regards the vast majority of Canadians the budget proposals do not assist in building up their purchasing power. There was quite a bit of pressure from big business for concessions, and concessions were granted. But the people of Canada—and I am thinking especially or organized labour—have been making certain demands. Through their trades unions the labour movement called for tax exemptions to be raised to $2,400 for married persons and $1,000 for single persons. Their voice was not heeded. Instead, the budget provides for a straight sixteen per cent reduction in personal income tax. This gives very little additional money to the majority of the people but provides a substantial roll to the higher income groups.

The figures I am about to cite are revealing in this respect. They were worked out on the basis of information from the dominion bureau of statistics. They show the following: a group with an income of over $25,000, and numbering about 2,900, will benefit by $15 million. That is, 2,900 people who have each an income of more than $25,000 will get, as a result of this sixteen per cent reduction, an aggregate of $15 million, or $5,000 apiece. Not bad. But what happens to the mass of taxpayers, those—and there are 1,675,000 of them —whose incomes are less than $2,000 each? The total tax reduction will give them $26,600,000, or $15.90 apiece. There is quite a difference there.

Here are a few more figures in this connection. Those with incomes under $1,000 number sixteen percent of the taxpayers, but they get less than three per cent of the total tax reduction. Those, however, with incomes of over $25,000, number only one-tenth of one per cent of the taxpayers; yet they get 13½ per cent of the total tax reduction. These figures reveal quite a contrast between the government's treatment of the wealthy taxpayer and of the man in the street. There are many more concessions in the budget to men of means. There is the repeal of the ten per cent war exchange tax on goods imported from outside the British empire. The eight per cent tax on machinery is repealed. But will these concessions be passed on to the consumer? No, they will not. This will only mean more profits and more accumulations for those who already have plenty.

I oppose the reduction in the excess profits tax, as well as the minister's proposals for the sixteen per cent reduction; that is, the straight sixteen per cent reduction in personal income tax. Because the budget fails to put money into the pockets of the people who need it, I cannot support this budget.

Further, the budget does not provide for the health and well-being of the Canadian people. While on that topic I wish to mention a manifesto which, no doubt in common with many other hon. members, I received the other day from the Canadian Legion. This document points out that Canada has still to achieve the ideals of peace, and one of those ideals, according to the legion manifesto, is decent homes for Canadians. I quote the following passage:

> Hundreds of thousands of houses will need to be built. Yet homes are more than houses, and Canadians have the challenging task of creating the kind of homes and family life that will make this nation strong, clean, united.

The budget before the house has not been worked out in that spirit. It provides neither for houses nor for the families who would live in those houses. Service men and service women are returning home only to find that there are no homes for them. They saved Canada, they helped to save the world, but they are unable to find decent homes in which to start life anew with their wives and children. It is estimated that 43 per cent of the returned men have no proper housing.

But the plight of returned men only reflects the plight of many other Canadians regarding houses, a situation which was aggravated by the war. In 1946 Canada will be short of 500,000 houses, excluding rural needs. The houses of 350,000 Canadians are sub-standard. Of a total of 2,635,753 houses in Canada, approximately 600,000 are obsolete. One-third of all Canadians live in bad and overcrowded houses because they cannot afford good housing; they can afford to pay only between $10 and $20 a month in rent, and even with the aid of family allowances they can pay no more without injuring the health of their families by cutting down on food. Lack of housing and bad housing take a terrific toll of the people.

Sociologists who have made a study of the effects of present conditions on the people have the following to say with respect to United States citizens:

> Of the slums and blighted districts comprising about 20 per cent of the metropolitan residential areas they account for 33 per cent of the population, 45 per cent of the major crimes, 55 per cent of child delinquency, 60 per cent of tuberculosis victims, and 45 per cent of city city service costs.

On a number of occasions I have mentioned in this house similar effects on the people in our own country and have pointed to conditions in Montreal. In 1941 it was estimated that the city of Montreal needed 50,000 dwellings. How many were built? In 1944 there were 2,618 units, and in 1945 there were 2,241 units. At this rate it will take twenty years to make up the backlog without allowing for increasing requirements in the years ahead. By the end of this year 5,000 homes will be needed by returning men. To add to the seriousness of the situation in Montreal, of the homes put up in 1944 and 1945, 90 per cent are rented at over $40 a month. This lets out 76 per cent of the population whose income does not permit them to rent houses at such high figures.

The other day the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie) said, in regard to housing, that every member—not just one but everyone of us—knows that the housing situation to-day is one of the most serious conditions in Canada. That is true and we all agree with that statement. But what are we going to do about this situation? It is not enough to agree that it is bad. We have legislation and present legislation has not provided houses. Nine out of every ten houses built at the present time are being built outside this legislation, and even those built under this legislation are not within the reach of the worker or of the veteran who is not sure about the future. It should be established once and for all that it is not profitable for the private builder to construct low-rental houses, and he definitely will not do it for love. This has been the experience in every country and also in Canada. In war time, when we needed tanks, guns, aeroplanes, munitions, the government cut the red tape and saw to it that these materials were produced. Huge munitions plants were built in a few months. There was a feeling of urgency. Well, there is similar urgency at the present time in the matter of housing, and the government must act in a manner different from that which has characterized it up to the present moment. The building of houses will also provide jobs.

How is the government going to deal with this housing problem? The Labour Progressive party proposes that $1 billion, raised through a loan, be used by the government to build 250,000 housing units in the period of five years. I would say that such a slogan as "Buy a bond to build a home for a Canadian" would receive the necessary response from all Canadians, and such houses should be assigned to the communities that need them and to the people requiring houses, on a basis of priority: No. 1, veterans; No. 2, slum dwellers; No. 3, people who require extra living space.

That is the way in which this will have to be done. I know there are constitutional problems, but the government must find ways and means of building these homes, constitutional problems notwithstanding. Britain has built 1,250,000 low-rent houses—how? The government lends construction capital to the municipal housing board and pays a rent subsidy. Private contractors build the houses.

That is the answer for Canada. That is also the answer to the problem of jobs. The construction industry estimates that $500 million a year on construction would provide 479,000 men with jobs. That is the answer.

There can be no piecemeal measures about this, because such measures will not solve the problem. The government must change its attitude toward the problem. I understand that to-day the British government has announced a housing programme which is altogether different from anything that has gone before. They realize that there is an emergency and are acting accordingly. We in Canada must act from a similar spirit. It is true that our houses were not bombed, but we have plenty of slums and we need houses. We raised $18 billions for war. Surely we can raise $1 billion for homes.

A few weeks ago we concluded the ninth victory loan. The slogan was "Sign your name to victory". I would say that the government will not be signing its name to victory unless it provides for homes and for the welfare of the Canadian people.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the house will feel impatient, but I do not suppose anyone is very anxious for a vote to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not think my hon. friends to my right are very anxious to get on with the business; at least they did not display any anxiety a short time ago. I hope that the house will bear with me. I have not taken up very much of its time this session, but there are a few things I would like to say; and as an hon. gentleman to my left has suggested, it might be well if we had a little better order and a little more free speech in the House of Commons.

If I were to criticize the present budget I should say—if I were a private enterpriser—that it was a very fine budget indeed. I regard it as a private enterprising budget and it was the government's duty to bring in such a budget. The government has a mandate from the Canadian people to implement a policy of private enterprise, and the opposition is always very ready to assist the government in carrying out private enterprise. That is the business of those who believe in private enterprise. I do not believe in what is called private enterprise to-day. I should say that what we understand to be private enterprise is monopoly capital enterprise, and that the very best type of private enterprise is completely surpassed by the present system of monopoly capital enterprise.

I have never regarded a budget—that is to say, a budget which is like ours, which is merely a provision for the expenditures of the government, and in which the only alteration from year to year is a variation in the incidence of taxation, a little more here or a little more there—as being a solution of the economic problems that confront Canada to-day. I want to indicate, even in the few moments at my disposal, what I regard as the sort of budget that we should have had in this country at this time.

Let me remind the house of something which I do not suppose any hon. members will forget, namely, that we have just come through a great war and won what we call a military victory for democracy. I wish to emphasize that if we are to continue that democratic victory into the field of economics and into the field of our social life, then there must be something done differently from anything that has ever been done in this parliament or in this nation. I ask the government, and I ask anyone else who believes in so-called private enterprise, what has private enterprise to-day that it did not have in 1932? If it has not something different, then who expects any different results from those which we had during the ten years which preceded the war just concluded? Therefore, I say that the very first principle of a budget should be, as far as I am concerned, to demand and provide for the unconditional surrender of monopoly capital.

I do not believe that it is possible for any government adhering to free private enterprise to have full production and reasonably equitable distribution, nor do I believe that such a government is capable of meeting the essential needs of the Canadian people. I do not believe that under that system any government can provide what has been commonly called social security. Now, with the view of really making a change in our economic system so as to see to it that we win democracy in the field of industry and commerce, and economics generally which our men assisted in winning on the field of battle, we must have a budget that would first of all make an estimate of the nation's need of goods, and our capacity to produce, and not only to estimate our capacity to tax what has been produced, not merely a method of extracting a portion of the income from individuals or corporations, but a budget which would envisage the whole national income, which would estimate the actual needs of the Canadian people and would take such steps as would make provision for the production of those things necessary for the meeting of the needs of the Canadian people. That is what I would call a national budget.

There are certain features of such a budget on which I wish to lay some emphasis. The first of those would be that this government and this parliament should give the lead to the Canadian people in what I call a collective purpose; that this nation in the years of peace which are before us should be held as firmly and as enthusiastically to a definite economic and social purpose for the people of Canada as we were held to a purpose of war during the six years of blood, sweat and tears.

Every one of us recognizes that this government held the Canadian people pretty well united to a common purpose of defending this nation; and it made a pretty good job of it in spite of all the criticism which has been and may still be levelled at it. They managed the direction of affairs in such a way that this nation stood with a common purpose. That purpose was to raise an army and to produce the necessary sinews of war. That purpose took the place of every other purpose; it filtered into every home, into every industry and into every business. It was that which held the people of Canada together in the greatest conflict of its history. If that purpose was necessary in war, and if it was beneficial in leading to great achievements on the part of the nation, then a purpose of peace must be just as necessary. But when we abandon, as it seems to be the purpose of the government to abandon, the economic conditions of this nation to the caprice of free private enterprise, then we have no collective purpose.

The collective purpose, which I suggest in passing, is one which will recognize that there is no need for any want in the Dominion of Canada; that not only is this a country of abundance, but this is an age of abundance; that we can produce. The war has shown that we can produce sufficient to meet all the needs of the Canadian people. I believe it is right to say that during the war years our maximum production approximated some $10 billion of national income. We expended from fifty to sixty per cent of that on war. We lived on from forty to fifty per cent of the remainder, and I imagine that the people of Canada never lived very much better than they did during the war period. If, then, we can maintain full production in Canada; if we can produce as great a volume of goods during peace as we did in war, then obviously there should be no hungry people in this country. There should be no people forced into idleness without income. I think that would be agreed to by everybody; but just to remove restrictions, and as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) said the other day, that the restrictions were to go down the drain—that is fine; I want to see restrictions go down the drain, but I want to see intelligent leadership go on to prosperity. Just to remove certain restrictions does not by any means give us any assurance that Canada will be a country of abundance and its people enjoying the full fruits which our nation and our people combined are capable of producing.

Therefore, in addition to the collective purpose, and in addition to the statement of what that purpose is or should be, I suggest next that this budget should have been a careful outlining of a planned economic endeavour on the part of the Canadian people, having regard to the collective purpose, such as I have suggested. I know there are people who do not believe that democracy can plan. There are some people who are more happy when they know they are going nowhere than they would be if they had an idea that they were going somewhere. Some hon. members even would rather aim at nothing and hit it than aim at the bull's-eye and probably make an outer or come near to hitting it. It is not different with a nation. I think a nation that has no purpose and aims at nothing, will hit it. We are doing that now. We have no distinctive collective purpose that will hold the endeavours of the Canadian people to the achievement of that purpose in time of peace.

But if the government will give that lead; if the government will pry itself loose from the old traditions of private enterprise and undertake to meet the economic needs of the Canadian people in keeping with the capacities to produce which modern technology makes possible, then there would be great possibilities for the future in the Dominion of Canada. But that would imply some planning, and if a democracy cannot plan, then that democracy is destined to inevitable failure. In an age such as the one in which we live, an age of science, to say that in all our economic life we have to entrust ourselves to the caprice of those who seek private objectives which in no circumstances necessarily have anything to do with the requirements of the general public would seem to be economic insanity.

I know the arguments of those who oppose planning our national economy. A great deal of drivel has been uttered about so-called bureaucracy. One would think, to hear some hon. members talking about bureaucracy, it was something that could exist only in government organizations, but I suggest that the worst type of bureaucracy that Canada knows to-day, or ever will know, is the type of bureaucracy that is built up under free private enterprise where those who control the economic destinies of this nation have no responsibility to anyone but their own balance sheet.

I am opposed to bureaucracy as such; I am opposed to regimentation as such. These are not necessarily implied in planning, but they are inevitable if you do not plan. As to the regimentation under the present system, I am sure I do not need to elaborate on that. However, for the sake of clarity in the viewpoint which I am trying to express, let me ask hon. members if they have never seen evidence of regimentation in our present system of economy. I venture to say that there is a great deal of it.

For example, have any hon. members ever seen an employer of labour advertise for twenty men and five hundred men turn up. Twenty men go to the wicket and get jobs, while 480 are sent away. Who did the regimenting there? Who said that twenty men should get jobs and that 480 men should hunt somewhere else? That was the regimentation of private enterprise. Have any of you ever looked into the eye of a soup-kitchen; if you have not, you are lucky. If you have, then you know that you did not go there because you liked the soup better than any other soup. You were there because you needed some kind of soup and it was the only kind you could get. That is the worst kind, the most inhuman kind, the most unintelligent kind of regimentation. That is the regimentation of empty stomachs and bare backs. That is pure regimentation exercised by free private enterprise.

Democratic planning would not involve either bureaucracy or this sort of regimentation. I say again, with emphasis, that unless this thing we call democracy can plan and can remove the evil features of present-day bureaucracy, unless it can escape from that type of regimentation which is inevitable under the present system; unless it can meet these problems, it cannot possibly continue to exist.

If democracy is to plan, then not only should the budget have made provision for the plans, it should have assured us that the plans were practicable and could be carried out. Any government that undertakes to carry out a budget of national production and distribution in the interests of the common people must of necessity have control of the means by which that budget is to be fulfilled. That leads me to an observation on public enterprise.

There are certain things in this country that should be privately owned and there are certain things which just as surely should be publicly owned. I suggest for the consideration of my hon. friends that everything in this nation which is essential to the life of all the people but which cannot be owned individually by all the people, must be owned by all the people together. No individual or corporation should be permitted to have a monopoly control of an agency of wealth production upon which the entire nation must depend for its life. That is not democracy. That is the very antithesis of democracy. We cannot get away by saying that we are a democracy merely because we have the right sometimes to mark a ballot. At times everything is done to see that we do not mark that ballot. But that is a small part, although, I admit, an important part, of democracy.

We should privately own that which each of us may own and use without depriving other people of the ownership and use of the same sort of things. The principle and philosophy of the movement which I represent stands for that kind of ownership. Public ownership in Canada of those essential things which lead to the supplying of the needs of life for the Canadian people would mean that those Canadian people as a whole would own more privately than they ever did in all their lives before. I want to make that distinction between so-called private ownership and public ownership.

The next point I wish to make clear is that provision should be made in our budget and in our planning for full production. The way to do that is to meet the needs of the people. If we can produce more than the people can consume, so much the better; because in that event we can reduce the hours of labour and extend a greater proportion of leisure to the common people. If, on the other hand, we have produced to the utmost extent and we still cannot produce all that we can consume, then, of course, the question is to produce to the utmost extent and raise our standard of living to the highest possible notch, comparable with our capacity to produce.

In order to carry out such a programme something must be done about distribution. The hon. member who spoke as leader of the Social Credit party said something about this question, and indicated that some people appear to think that under the present system we have poor people because we have rich people; and he suggested that some taxing of the rich would not solve the problem. I agree with him in that. I think everyone must agree with him on the same point. But the point which he did not make, and which he might very well have made, had he gone on along that line a little farther, was that it is not merely the profits which those who control industry make that bring the greatest disaster to human society. It is that they control, for private ends, means by which alone all the people can live; and thereby they have the right—and they exercise it, too—to curtail production whenever they want to, so as to maintain the rate of their own profits. That is the thing we have to guard against in our distribution.

We must devise a system of equitable distribution which will involve a system of higher wages paid to all the workers; which will involve higher pensions being paid to all pensionable people and all returning men, all old aged people, family allowances, widows' pensions, pensions to the blind, the maintenance of wage scales of those who are laid aside for some time through sickness and are unable to earn their wages, and a pension for those whom we might call the casualties of industry. In all these ways we should distribute each year in the form of income for all our people sufficient to buy all we produce beyond that which is necessary to turn back for the maintenance of efficiency in industry, and the extension of new capital equipment.

The democratic victory which we won on the battlefields is only the first step toward the fuller democracy we hope to achieve. I am making a plea to-night for a democratic victory over the greatest enemies of mankind at home. The greatest enemies of mankind in this nation and in other nations are poverty, disease, ignorance and war.

I do not see anything in this budget which seriously touches any of these major issues. There is no suggestion in it that any steps will be taken to abolish poverty in Canada. There is nothing in it to indicate that a determined effort will be made by this nation to overcome unnecessary disease. Neither is there any provision for equality in education. These are essential social equalities without which there cannot be a true democracy.

I think most hon. members will agree, as I have already hinted, that democracy means more, a great deal more, than voting on election day. I think most members can quote the definition of "democracy" which the great President Lincoln gave at Gettysburg. But I suggest to the house that when he gave that definition of "democracy" there was not a single monopoly within the boundaries of the entire United States of America. I imagine that if he were speaking again on democracy to-day—perhaps to this parliament—he might very probably say that democracy is not only government of the people, by the people and for the people, but that it is industry of the people, by the people and for the people; not industry for Shipshaw; not industry for International Nickel; not industry for the C.P.R. and the banks, but industry of the people, by the people and for the people.

That is democracy. My greatest criticism of the budget is that it does not even make a gesture toward that end. And further let me say that we are probably in very great danger of frittering away the greatest emotion that this nation has ever generated for democracy. Through six years of blood, sweat and tears, the objective of this people has been fixed upon democracy. Now we are looking for memorials. I have said something on this question before. I have no objection, no more than anyone else would have, to people who wish to have symbols. Symbols are always necessary when one has not the reality. If we have not the realities, and the people would rather have symbols than nothing, then by all means let them have the symbols.

But those of us who lost our sons in this war do not need to be reminded that we lost them. What we do need to be reminded of is that they died for something that was worth while. I have no objection to the beautification of Ottawa. I think we should beautify every city, as well as Ottawa. But I am suggesting to the Minister of Finance and the government that the people of Canada will be disappointed and in years to come those who have returned with their lives will be greatly disappointed unless we can make a memorial, through legislation in this house—a bill of rights as a memorial to democracy which will meet the democratic requirements of a democratic country. That will abolish—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. member that it is eleven o'clock.

An hon. MEMBER: Move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. IRVINE: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Finish; go ahead.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the house he may continue for a few minutes.

Mr. IRVINE: No. Mr. Speaker; I would much rather move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Good old time waster.

On motion of Mr. Irvine the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, November 28, 1945.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MACKENZIE KING

PROCEEDINGS OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE—DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege: I have just been presiding over a meeting of the coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference and have left its proceedings in order to make a statement to the house immediately in respect to a very misleading article which appears in the Ottawa morning Journal of to-day. The entire membership of the conference took strong exception to this article and desired that I should make a statement to the House of Commons on behalf of all who are present at the conference.

The article is entitled: "Cabinet clash complicates conference. No announcements made after second session." It reads:

When the coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference reached the end of another session last night with no public announcements from Prime Minister King, it was confirmed by some of those leaving the chamber that two paramount issues seemed to be complicating deliberations.

They were:

1. Reports confirmed by several provincial premiers of disagreement among Prime Minister King and two of his colleagues;

2. Determination, not unexpected, of the nine provincial premiers to make not the slightest retreat from their stand on provincial rights.

A little further on in the article it says:

On the point of disagreement among the dominion ministers, it was described by the provincial men as "a clash".

May I say that all provincial premiers and all members of the dominion government who were present at the conference are united in saying that they know nothing of a clash having taken place between myself and any of my colleagues. As a matter of fact there has been nothing of the kind. I make that statement emphatically. May I add that there has been nothing that I am aware of, and that I think any of the premiers on the coordinating committee are aware of, which has in any way complicated the proceedings that have been, I am happy to say, going forward so amicably and splendidly since the opening of the conference.

I am authorized to make this statement by the entire group that are to-day discussing these dominion-provincial questions, and discussing them, I think, in an exceptionally able and amicable manner.

Until the committee of the conference concludes its proceedings no statement will be given out. When a statement is given out it is one that will be approved by the entire conference. I hope, therefore, that so far as the public of Canada are concerned they will draw their inferences with respect to the proceedings of the conference from the official statement which may be issued by the conference itself when it has concluded its proceedings.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. HUGHES CLEAVER (Halton) presented the first report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, before this report is concurred in, I have just a few words to say as a suggestion for the work of the committee. At the time the gifts were made to the United Kingdom there were bonds and other assets held in London as a guarantee, to the extent of a formidable amount—$700,000,000, I think. Some obligations, stocks and bonds, were brought back to Canada, but those that were most profitable were kept over there. Our guarantee was that the British government would not let them out except to return to Canada. There were some railway bonds, Eno's Fruit Salts, et cetera, et cetera, and many other paying propositions, but the most profitable were kept there. At a certain moment, to my great surprise—

Mr. MACKENZIE: On a point of order—

Mr. POULIOT: I ask the minister if he will please sit down, because I am strictly in order.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this motion can be moved only with the unanimous consent of the house, because the report of the committee was received only a few minutes ago. If there is not unanimous consent I propose that consideration of the motion be left to the proper time.

Mr. POULIOT: Sir, the minister cannot say that, because the mover of the motion was the member for Halton. I do not see why I am interrupted. The interruption could have come after I got through. I had the floor, and the minister could rise only on a point of order to interrupt my speech—

Mr. MACKENZIE: The question is not debatable.

Mr. POULIOT: —and to ask that the discussion be postponed.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that the motion made by the member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) is withdrawn for the time being. There is therefore nothing before the house for debate.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member did not say he withdrew his motion, and therefore I am still in order and the minister has no right to interfere while I am speaking, because I am in order except on a point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I was speaking to a point of order. This motion cannot be put to the house except with unanimous consent. I understand that there are comments, and therefore the motion should be subject to the ordinary rules of procedure.

Mr. POULIOT: My contention is that the matter I was stating is more important than—

Mr. SPEAKER: There is nothing before the house and I would ask the hon. member for Temiscouata to resume his seat.

Motion stands.

MEAT RATIONING

REQUEST FOR COPIES OF COMMUNICATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question which I wish to direct to the Prime Minister. In his absence perhaps the acting leader of the government would bring it to his attention to be answered at an early opportunity. Will the Prime Minister, either to-day or at an early sitting, lay on the table of the house copies of any recent exchange of communications that he or the government may have had with the President or the government of the United States on the subject of rationing?

[Mrs. Strum.]

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I shall be pleased to direct the question to the attention of the Prime Minister at once, and possibly he may be able to answer it later this day.

[Later:]

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I have the permission of the house to make a statement with regard to a question asked this morning. I was not in the house this morning when the leader of the opposition asked about a letter I had sent to the President of the United States suggesting the desirability of consultation between our two governments before a final decision was made in the United States on the discontinuance of meat rationing. I was not aware of the considerations which compelled immediate action by the United States authorities, and had prepared a message to the President on the assumption that it might be possible to arrange for further discussion on this very complex and difficult problem.

As I explained in my statement to the house on Friday afternoon, there are fundamental differences between the problems of control confronting a country like the United States which normally exports some five per cent of its meat production and those in a country like Canada where thirty per cent to forty per cent of output finds its way into export markets. Both governments have made commitments to allied and liberated countries where the average level of food consumption is very much lower than on this continent. Both countries are determined to carry out these promises, though methods and arrangements by which they implement them will naturally differ.

Since my suggestion to the President was, in fact, received too late for consideration, and since the position of our own government was made clear to the house at the first opportunity, I do not think there is any purpose in my taking up at this stage with President Truman the question of our making public the actual texts of the messages exchanged.

STRIKE OF EMPLOYEES OF WINNIPEG NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): On Monday of this week, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart), I stated that the publishers of two Winnipeg newspapers had applied to the Manitoba wartime labour relations board for permission to prosecute a union for alleged violation of the wartime labour relations regulations, P.C. 1003. Although this information was conveyed to my department by our Winnipeg office on Friday of last week, I am now advised that no such application has been made to the Manitoba board.

SUPPLY

On the order:

House again in committee of supply (the message of His Excellency with estimates, referred)—The Minister of Finance.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, before the house goes into supply I rise to a point of order. I have no objection whatever to the house reverting to motions so that the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) may move his motion again.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Moved by Mr. Mackenzie, seconded by Mr. Bertrand (Laurier) that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of supply to consider a certain resolution. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise again to a question of order; when there is nothing else before the house there is a question of order—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry, but I put the question before the house and the house answered "Carried"; so I am leaving the chair.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Departmental administration, $136,035.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I thought the Minister was going to make a statement before this vote carried.

Mr. BRYCE: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on the first item, because as the committee knows from past experience, I am apt to get astray. Before I address my remarks to the Minister of Agriculture, as a westerner, I feel very much annoyed at the remarks made last night by the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Warren). He talked about wheat at twenty-five cents a bushel, then later he talked about ten cents a bushel. I did not think that an hon. member who claims to be a farmer would make a statement of that kind in the House of Commons. I am delighted that the hon. member is in his seat to hear what I have to say. It costs us money to produce wheat on the western prairies. The hon. member also spoke about those large farmers. Well, if he takes a look at me he will see what a small farmer from the western prairies looks like.

Mr. WARREN: I rise to a point of order. I do not want the hon. member to put words in my mouth. If he is intimating or insinuating that I was recommending those prices, I wish to correct him.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The hon. member said it would be all right; that is all.

Mr. BRYCE: Mr. Chairman, I was very good last night; I could hardly stay quiet any longer. It was a good thing the hon. member cut his speech down to fifteen minutes, because I do not care whether it is the members to the north of me or to the south of me, those who came from the western prairies were beginning to boil. I can assure my hon. friend that in the west we are not agitators, but we are there to fight for what is right. The Minister of Agriculture knows that. He is a westerner.

I was at a meeting not very long ago and one fellow had quite a grudge against the Minister of Agriculture. He went just a little bit too far. I said, "You know, Jimmie is not too bad a fellow." I said, "You could get worse; you could get a Liberal from Ontario." And we have a typical specimen of that over there. I hope my hon. friend will come to my section in his next visit to the prairies. I hope he will not stay on the train most of the time. I am not speaking politically; I am speaking as a western farmer. I leave it to my western friends here to tell me where the hon. member ever found a farm in western Canada that produced twenty crops of wheat at thirty bushels to the acre. Does my hon. friend not know that in some places we have to summer-fallow for two years to keep down the weeds?

Since I have come to this house I have never on any occasion raised any barrier between the east and the west, because the problems of the east and the problems of the west are entirely different. The Minister of Agriculture has perhaps done a good job in trying to satisfy everybody. The member for Renfrew North talked about the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Does he not know that we pay for that? We pay for it under the most vicious tax in the Dominion of Canada. We pay half a cent on every bushel of grain that is put in the elevators.

Mr. GARDINER: One per cent.

Mr. BRYCE: One per cent. It is the most vicious tax in the dominion to-day. We say all sorts of hard things about the Minister of Finance, but he always let us take our expenses out first. In this case you have to pay that tax on your gross bushels, the dockage included. Do not forget it.

The hon. member talked about the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and the conversation he had with a young man on the train. Does he not know that that act was made necessary by a mistake of the dominion government which allowed men to settle on land that should never have been settled? That is costing the dominion something like $2,000,000 a year. The hon. gentleman did not mention that, Mr. Chairman; and I want to be sure he listens to what I am about to say. The dominion government has spent $60,000,000 in the eastern provinces in two years, paying subsidies on feed and freight and so on. We do not grumble about that; if they are entitled to it and if it is for the good of the Canadian economy we are all for it. But we do not want to hear these petty grievances; we do not want to hear talk about men who left the east. I am one of those who left perhaps the finest country in the world, and I do not need to tell any of you where that was; but I would not give Canada for all Scotland to-day, because I have made my home and raised my family here, and I am going to stay. These young men and women who left Ontario to go west only did what was done by the people of the British isles, Iceland and the European countries, who have made Canada what she is to-day. They are building this country of ours. It may be true that our economy has allowed Ontario to prosper on the fruits of the labour of the western farmer, but that will not go on forever.

Then during the course of his remarks the hon. member said that the people were not thinking, or not thinking right. I believe their thinking is more nearly right to-day than ever before. I do not want to go on like this indefinitely, but I must say I am surprised to find that when the hon. member for Renfrew North is requested by his own constituents to bring a certain resolution before the House of Commons, it is left to me to do it for him. I am going to read a resolution passed by the live stock association of Eganville. Some time ago I proposed in the house a resolution concerning the establishment of a board of live stock commissioners. Right in my hon. friend's constituency we have people who want the very same thing, but he does not have the courage of his convictions to place their views before the house.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. That is hardly parliamentary. The hon. member should not make that statement.

Mr. BRYCE: I am only too pleased to withdraw it, Mr. Chairman, but you cannot keep me from thinking it.

Mr. WARREN: I have no objection, Mr. Chairman; let the hon. member go ahead.

Mr. BRYCE: Let me read the resolution passed by the Eganville live stock association:

The following resolution was passed at a meeting of the live stock association of Eganville held August 29, 1945.

A resolution was passed that all packers would only be permitted to buy on the open markets; that is the packing plants that are situated at open markets.

Also that there should be no other establishments opened up to handle the surplus stock (as a case, the William Davies Company).

That two graders should be appointed for each market.

That the present situation should be gone into thoroughly.

And relief given at once.

That the undersigned are hereby appointed to act on this committee and that a royal investigation be made to go into this matter in detail.

Signed

James S. Dempsey, M.L.A.
Max Berman (Chairman)
R. M. Warren, M.P.
Lloyd Leech
Gordon McCormick
Allan Donohue.

At a meeting of the farmers' livestock association which was held in the town hall in the village of Eganville on the fourteenth day of November, 1945, the following resolution was passed.

A resolution was passed to bring present resolution to House of Commons through our local member or opposition.

And I think I am in the opposition.

Mr. WARREN: If the hon. member will permit a question, in his experience has he never discovered that very often a member of parliament can get better results by working outside the House of Commons?

Mr. GARDINER: May I ask the hon. gentleman to read again the section of the resolution with regard to the Davies Company? I think he put in "'no" where it should not be.

Mr. BRYCE: I will read it again. My English is not very good, and I am apt to make a mistake, but I assure you it was not intentional.

Also that there should be other establishments opened up to handle the surplus stock (as a case, the William Davies Company).

That is right; I did make a mistake, and I stand corrected. Now let me read another letter, also from Eganville, dated October 30, 1945. This is not for the benefit of the minister but for the benefit of the hon. member for Renfrew North:

On October 25th, the Eganville livestock farmers' association committee—Chairman Max Berman and committee men Lloyd Leech, Oswald Donnahue, Allen Donnahue, and Gordon McCormick, delivered the resolution to the Honourable James G. Gardiner. We considered the resolution point by point and the minister refused to do anything for the farmer.

Later the chairman asked Mr. Gardiner if the ceiling price was set by the week or by the year and Mr. Gardiner replied "by the year." Then Mr. Berman asked why one farmer would get 11 cents per pound in June and another 8 cents per pound in August. The minister answered that the packers were paying 2 cents a pound over the ceiling and they were buying them cheaper in August to make up for paying too much in June and added "Can you blame them for doing that?" Mr. Berman replied that the packers paid the high price for about 1,000 head and received the lower price for about 10,000 head. Mr. Gardiner then said he wished he could be with the farmers and he could convince them, the chairman said he had invited Mr. Gardiner twice and he hadn't come.

We, the committee, invited Mr. Gardiner again and he said if he had time to do that he wouldn't be in that job.

Mr. Gardiner said we should go to the provincial minister of agriculture and Mr. Berman said "Who told us to raise the cattle?"

Mr. Berman asked if we could take it to any higher authority and Mr. Gardiner said "No." Mr. Berman said "Yes, we can take it to the commons," and then Mr. Gardiner said, "Yes, you could, through your member of parliament."

Mr. GARDINER: That report of the conversation is just as far out as the way my hon. friend read the resolution in the first place. It was just the opposite.

Mr. BRYCE: Oh, well, I am just reading the letter.

The packers' strike was mentioned and Mr. Gardiner said he was satisfied with the protest we sent to the union. The strike should not take place between now and December 15.

I will take just a couple of minutes longer, Mr. Chairman, to ask the minister a question. When he replies I should like him to tell us if anything has been done to protect our cattle market to the south. During the war I refrained from saying very much about it. From speaking to the minister and to other people I know in the government service, I know the position well. The Minister of Reconstruction said the other night that the government policy had been one of protecting export markets. I believe that statement was made in connection with lumber, when it was pointed out that we had sent overseas about forty or fifty per cent of our cut. I am wondering what protection there is, or what arrangements the minister through his department has made for the continuation of those 297,000 head of cattle to the United States in the four quarters, which were a boon to western farmers.

I have given a good deal of thought to the overseas market, and sometimes I wonder if we shall be able to hold it. We see the magnificent progress Denmark is making in retaining her bacon market. Realizing that we are so far away from the market, we must understand that we shall find it difficult to compete, even if we produce the same grades as they do. My belief is that our bacon is just as good as that of Denmark. The difficulty is that Denmark is prepared to take so much in exchange from Great Britain which we shall not be able to take.

A couple of years ago when Lord Delaware was in the city of Quebec he was asked about our retaining the British market, and his reply was, "Well, what will you take from us?" We have developed great numbers of mechanics. We do not want to buy engines or bicycles from Great Britain. But if we expect them to take our cattle and hogs we must be prepared to buy from them. The Argentine can produce cattle more economically and of just as good quality as we can. It costs the western farmer just as much to ship his beef from Calgary to Montreal as it costs the Argentine farmer to ship to Smithfield, Liverpool, or Glasgow. We are up against a difficult problem.

The Minister of Agriculture has been good enough to give me information concerning experiments carried out before the war, and problems with which the department was confronted. I do not know for certain, but it is my belief that our best grades should go as good feeders to Great Britain, live, to be put on pasture over there for perhaps six weeks and to be sold as home grown beef. Perhaps in that way we will obtain a more remunerative market than we would by selling dressed beef, because when it reaches the Smithfield market it will still be chilled beef and will not command the home price. I would ask the minister to comment on these points when he answers some other questions which have been asked.

I should like again to draw the minister's attention to the general trend in all government publications and experimental farms toward spreading the belief that the right and proper way to grade cattle is on the rail. That is the problem we shall be up against in the near future. I have always opposed rail grading of hogs, not because it is not the right way to grade hogs, but because it has been definitely in the hands of the packers. However this morning I do not wish to take up the time of the committee in expressing my views in detail. The rail grading of hogs is all right, but the difficulty is that it is so definitely in the hands of the packers. I can see, too, the thin end of the wedge in connection with the rail grading of beef. The arguments in favour of it are good, but I suggest that we shall be met with the same difficulty.

I have tried to have the government consider the formation of a board of live stock commissioners. There are many people in western Canada who do not hold my views; they do not want to socialize everything that I do. But I am offering the government a half-way measure to which everyone would be agreeable. The minister would have eighty per cent of the farmers behind him if he were to set up a board of live stock commissioners. If he does not give them that, then they are going to ask for the nationalization of the packing industry; there is nothing else for it. The farmer will not continue to take the trimming he has had to take in the past.

Speaking of cattle sold on the hoof, I say that what is twelve cents on Monday should be twelve cents on Tuesday. Maybe at the end of the week it is ten cents. There must be a solution of this, and I hope the minister has it. I assure him I believe that a board of live stock commissioners would solve the problem.

In the minister's concluding remarks he said that the establishment of a board would be illegal. I am sure, though, that a man with the minister's ability could make it legal, if he wanted to.

Mr. GARDINER: I said that somebody had said it was illegal. I did not say it was. I am not a constitutional authority on the law.

Mr. BRYCE: Oh, but I am pretty sure the minister does not speak without knowing his grounds. He would not leave himself open in that way. I plead with the Minister of Agriculture to consider my suggestion, because if he does not, the whole of western Canada will be asking for the nationalization of the packing industry. If it is not done, then we shall continue to take a trimming in the markets. Under present circumstances we leave a hog at the packer's gate and we never see it again; we just accept the cheque they send us. I see the hon. member for Renfrew North looking at me. He will understand I am not complaining because I am not making money, but rather because we have not the right system to make everyone happy.

Mr. MACKENZIE: With the consent of my colleague I should like to make one observation. I wonder if the committee would declare this battle of Bannockburn between the hon. member for Selkirk and the hon. member for Renfrew North a draw, so that we might proceed wtih the business of the committee.

Mr. QUELCH: I have one or two questions I should like to ask the minister. We have heard a good deal of discussion about the purchase of horses in western Canada. The minister pointed out that these horses had been purchased first from the drought areas, on account of a shortage of feed. He is well aware, of course, that in certain parts of the west we have suffered crop failures for three years. Apparently the hon. member for Renfrew North does not realize that situation. I must say I was not surprised to hear the type of speech he made last night, because it was typical of practically every speech he has made in the house since coming here. Each session he has driven the broken-down buggy around the house, and has suggested that the farmers of western Canada should be satisfied with the same kind of rig. Apparently the buggy of the hon. member for Brant broke down at the last election.

I was amazed when the hon. member for Renfrew North stated yesterday that he had seen some wonderful crops of wheat in western Canada, and that even if the farmers received only ten cents a bushel they would receive lots of money. Who would get that money? Certainly not the farmers.

Mr. WARREN: I said that even at ten cents a bushel for that amount of grain they would have a lot of money—not "lots of money."

Mr. QUELCH: I will accept the hon. member's explanation. If they received ten cents per bushel it would mean a lot of money, but who would have received that money? Certainly not the farmers. Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that a grain grower can produce wheat at ten cents per bushel and have one cent left over.

Mr. WARREN: I should like to correct the hon. member.

Mr. QUELCH: I think the hon. member should correct his speech.

Mr. WARREN: If the hon. member will read my speech he will see that in no single instance was I advocating any such prices. I was attempting to denounce the constant grumbling of western members of parliament that I have listened to for so many years.

Mr. QUELCH: I would point out that so long as we have members spreading false ideas regarding western Canada, such as the hon. member has spread, then there will be complaints in western Canada. Early in the fall the government advertised throughout western Canada advising the farmers to ship their cattle as early as possible because there would probably be a heavy run on the market in October and November. I think the government were well advised in doing that, especially in those areas where there was a shortage of feed. Unfortunately in many parts of the drought area a serious situation has developed because farmers miscalculated. As the minister knows, winter came on quite early; snow came in October, and farmers had to start feeding in that month whereas they ordinarily would not have to start feeding until the first of the month. As a result of this situation a serious shortage of feed has developed in those areas. The farmers are finding it difficult, as the government prophesied, to dispose of their cattle at this time.

I should like to ask the minister what their survey shows the situation to be in the drought areas of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I should like to know how great the shortage of feed will be, how much feed will have to be shipped into those areas, or on the other hand how much stock will have to be shipped out in order to avoid a heavy loss of cattle. I realize that this situation is dealt with jointly by the provincial and federal governments, but no doubt the minister has a clear picture of the whole situation.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Before this battle of Bannockburn is ended, I should like to say just a word or two with respect to the whole situation, arising partly from the unwise remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith). The other night that gentleman did Alberta and the west a greater disservice than any man coming from western Canada has ever done since I came to this house in 1935. He conveyed the idea that conditions in the west were far better than they actually are. The hon. member named the finest area in Alberta as an example of one in which men were not broke, but he chose to overlook entirely the area surrounding Medicine Hat, where drought conditions prevail so frequently, and he overlooked entirely the area the hon. member for Acadia represents and many other areas in Alberta where crop failures are almost common. If the hon. member had informed himself better concerning conditions in Alberta and the west generally before rushing into Hansard with a speech which would mislead men like the hon. member for Renfrew North, it would have been much better for everybody from the west.

Incidentally let me point out to the hon. member for Renfrew North—I think he had me in mind as one of the grumblers—that since I came here I have endeavoured to set forth the true conditions in the west.

There are three things which should be considered before attempting to form a correct estimate of conditions in the west. The first is the freight rate situation. If the hon. member has listened to what has been said by members from the west he will have heard that discussed many times. When the hon. member can explain why in the Dominion of Canada a condition obtains under which a man can put one hundred pounds of barbed wire on the train at Montreal and ship it to Vancouver for seventy-five cents, but when he takes that hundred pounds of wire off at Edmonton he has to pay $1.98, he will be doing something to explain the painful incidence of a situation such as this on the agricultural communities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. He will then be in a far better position to be fair in his judgment of the west. This adverse freight situation is one of the greatest grievances we have in the west, and no amount of comment, no amount of complaint, no amount of pleading which western members can bring to bear on the men in Ottawa, can cause the slightest deviation from the destructive policy which has obtained in this country for generations.

This is a situation which literally bleeds the farmers of the west to death. Not only do they suffer from the adverse freight rate on freight shipped out to the west; they suffer from an adverse freight rate on freight which they ship to the east. Evidence can be brought to show that through the freight rate structure the provinces of Ontario and Quebec have erected a tariff wall against the products of the secondary industries which are based on agricultural products and are located in western Canada. This is a condition which cries to high heaven, but do you think that all the members from the west pleading about this matter can even phase the men from Ontario and Quebec? Up to the present time it has been utterly impossible even to get ourselves heard at all. There is a situation which the hon. member for Renfrew North, being a public spirited man—I give him credit for that—should give close attention to; certainly before he makes any remark such as he made last night he should carefully weigh these things.

There is another serious matter. The tariff incidence is a scandal. The tariff has been arranged so that it protects the producers of Ontario and Quebec and militates against the producers in every other one of the seven provinces of Canada, both east and west.

Mr. LALONDE: You did not say anything about the maritimes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I said all the other provinces, east or west. The situation is just as serious for the maritimes as it is for the west. The maritimes are unable to have their voice heard in the slightest degree. Let me illustrate by giving some figures from memory, although I think my recollection is correct. In one of the thirties, I believe 1931, an investigation was carried on under the direction of the late Hon. Norman McLeod Rogers, who was minister of labour in the federal government from 1935 until he became minister of national defence and later lost his life. The discoveries of that investigation were to the effect that Alberta paid $19,000,000 per year in enhanced prices arising out of the tariff more than she obtained by way of protection. In the same year Saskatchewan paid $25,000,000 per year more in enhanced prices than she obtained by way of protection through the tariff. At the same time the producers of Ontario received protection to the extent of $51,000,000 a year more than they paid, and the producers of the province of Quebec received protection to the extent of $31,000,000 a year more than they paid. Now this is a situation which I am sure even the hon. member for Renfrew North will recognize as being iniquitous, a situation which should have been taken care of long ago. Has even the slightest attention been given to the matter by the people in charge of the government of Canada? Not the slightest bit; and, generally speaking, when members from the west rise and begin to talk they are accused of "whining" and all that sort of thing, just as the hon. member did last night; or, hon. members for Ontario and Quebec just get up and "hulk" out of the house, and leave the members from the west or the members from the east to talk. The time must come and come very soon when more attention shall be given to equity throughout this country than has been given to it up to the present time.

Another exxceedingly serious matter—it has been referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk—is the matter of the Palliser triangle. Many hon. members in the house at the present time are new here. For their sakes let me point out that in western Canada there is a vast area of country included in what is called the Palliser triangle. This whole area receives from year to year too little moisture to enable the producer there to produce on a basis which will guarantee anything like security of tenure on the land. This situation was pointed out by Palliser many years ago. He said in a report to the government of those days that it would be unwise to permit settlement to take place on any extensive scale within the Palliser triangle. Now, the Palliser triangle includes such areas as, for example, the Medicine Hat and Acadia districts and considerable parts of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Notwithstanding the advice which was given—and it was sound advice—the dominion government authorities permitted settlers to come in in vast numbers and settle over those areas without knowing what conditions they were running into. In those areas you will find, probably, that one year there will be sufficient rainfall, and you might think you had come to paradise itself. The next year you will perhaps find that the whole country is just a dust-bowl. Crop failures will go on as long as, say, three years, and then will come a good year, with crops such as the hon. member for Renfrew North saw, and people will say, "surely it must be little short of a paradise; they are rolling in wealth." But if the hon. member had stayed there three or four years, or had lived in these districts over a period of fifteen years, he would know a good deal more about conditions in the west.

Coming back to the question of settling this area, the dominion government allowed people to settle all over the region of the Palliser triangle; in fact, they encouraged them with examples of glowing propaganda, inviting them to come to Canada, and picturing the conditions in the good years, until people settled there by the tens of thousands. What happened? Very soon these people needed roads, schools, telephones and many other services. All of these cost money. Who had to bear the expense of building the roads, of establishing and maintaining the schools, or erecting the telephone lines? The provincial governments. The dominion government brought people in here and settled them on the land, thus building up an impossible problem for the provincial governments, and then backed gracefully out of the picture, and under the inspiration of such men as the hon. member for Renfrew North, whose lack of information regarding the whole situation is colossal, they began immediately to accuse the provinces of poor management; they wondered why they went into debt, and all that sort of thing.

That condition still exists. Not only was the settlement of the Palliser triangle a colossal blunder at the time; not only did it constitute an insupportable burden on the shoulders of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta particularly, but other settlement problems resulted from dominion policy. One of these arose out of the plan under which the dominion granted the Canadian Pacific Railway company and the Hudson's Bay company vast stretches of country selected by them wherever they chose to select it. It did not matter a particle whether communities were established alongside the areas selected by the Hudson's Bay company and the C.P.R. The whole settlement of the country was spread out over a wide area, rendering it necessary to build far more miles of railroad, to erect far more lines of telephones, to establish far more schools for the children in widely settled areas, and, more recently, far more costly health and dental services. All this has constituted a drain on the provincial authorities of which hon. members from Ontario and Quebec have not remotely dreamed. But these prairie provinces are expected to stand up under the strain, and they are condemned because they falter or stagger under this insupportable burden.

Now, when hon. members get up in the house and inform the hon. member for Renfrew North and other members form Ontario and Quebec, in the vain hope that probably some day attention will be paid to their problems and redress will be made, these members have to stand under the condemnation of sweeping remarks such as we had to endure here last night. That is a condition which I certainly hope will not be revealed in the house again. Then we have had the hon. member for Calgary West come down and in a short speech convey an absolutely false impression of the whole set-up. Not a word did the hon. member say about the freight rate structure, although he must know it exists. Not a word did he say about the adverse tariff, although he must know it exists. Not a word did he undertake to say about the Palliser triangle and all the evils which have resulted in the west from that situation. He simply left all the people throughout Canada open to the misinterpretation and misinformation which would naturally result from speeches such as the hon. member for Renfrew North gave.

I do not desire to occupy any more of the time of the committee just now, but I felt that I should have been remiss in my duty to western Canada, remiss in my duty to Ontario and Quebec, which do not desire that there shall be inequity in this country, and remiss in my duty to all other parts of Canada, if I omitted to rise and make clear to some extent the situation which obtains in Canada, as a result of which this condition of inequity has arisen as between the various provinces of this great dominion.

Mr. McKAY: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter this battle, which might be known as another battle of Bannockburn. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) acquitted himself, I think, very well, and does not need my assistance. But I have a few observations to make, and nobody in this chamber will accuse me of taking very much of the time of the house, because I have made but one speech since I arrived here. Being a new member, I thought probably I was well advised not to say too much at the beginning; I have learned a good deal since I arrived, and, having been a student all my life, I feel satisfied that some of what I have learned was good.

I want to refer particularly to a remark made by the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case) in his speech yesterday, when he said he deplored the drift of the young people from the farms. I heartily agree with what the hon. member for Grey North stated on that occasion. There is a very serious drift in this country from rural areas to urban centres, and it has been going on for decades. I am particularly concerned about the young folk, and I feel, with him, some apprehension that our whole economy is being gravely disturbed through the number of young people who are leaving farm life and are going into urban centres to seek a living. It is not a satisfactory state of affairs, and there must be some definite reason for it.

Away back in 1871, according to the Canada Year Book, 80·42 per cent of our people lived in rural areas and only 19·58 in urban centres. Forty years later, in 1911, 54·58 per cent lived in rural areas and 45·42 per cent in urban areas. In 1941, the last figures I have been able to obtain, we find that situation reversed, and now we have more people living in urban areas than in rural. In rural areas in 1941 there were 45·66 per cent and in urban areas 54·34. Everyone knows that since the war that drift has been definitely accelerated and it is not, as the hon. member suggested, due to the fact that labour conditions are better in the city than on the farms. That is not the whole reason. We know that power machinery on our farms is now lessening the hours of labour. I agree with all those who say that the hours of labour are still too long on the farm. But the fundamental reason, as I see it, is that farming is still on the whole unprofitable and unattractive. That is borne out by the fact that although we have 450,000 discharged from the armed services, the director of the Department of Veterans Affairs, who is in charge of the administration of the Veterans' Land Act, tells us that the greatest number of applications for farm land they can anticipate by the end of 1946 is 14,276, and by 1946 I suggest the bulk of our overseas personnel will be back home and discharged. That is much less than after the last war. Under the old soldier settlement act we settled 25,000 veterans, but we have not forgotten that of those 25,000 soldier settlers, owing largely to the vicissitudes of farm life, 13,000 abandoned their projects. They did not abandon those projects without some reason; they did so because life on the farm was neither profitable nor attractive. That is the main reason. Farming must be made profitable, and I would commend the minister for anything he has done to set floor prices under farm products, regardless of what they are, whether wheat, butter, or any other farm product. I suggest that while floor prices are all very well as far as they go, they do not go far enough, for the good reason that as long as farmers have to pay exorbitant prices for clothing, fuel or machinery, it stands to reason that floor prices will not solve their problems. Floor prices did not solve their problems in 1934, because, of course, they did not exist then under the Conservative administration. According to the report submitted by the Rowell commission, at page 175, the farmer in that year was receiving $18 a head for his cattle in Saskatchewan, 17 cents a pound for butter, 10½ cents a dozen for eggs, 61½ cents per bushel for wheat. I submit that $1 or $1.25 per bushel for wheat will be inadequate if the farmer still has to pay exorbitant prices as the result of tariffs or freight rates or monopoly control of most of the things he must buy.

Power farming to-day is most common east and west. The farmer owns a tractor, a truck, a combine and a plow. According to the cartel report submitted in this house recently we know that monopolies exist. We are not talking about something that is not wholly familiar to most of the people of Canada. And the excessive prices that the farmer pays for many of the goods he purchases to-day are not due to labour costs. I have in my hand a report which any member may get by writing to the United States federal trade commissioner. It was issued in Washington in 1945, so that it is up to date. According to this report a combine was marketed in the city of Minneapolis and sold for $638 retail. In the production of that combine, material costs amounted to $174.27; factory overhead, $93.07; manufacturer's discount, $57.96; manufacturer's margin, $85.77; dealer's discount for cash, $30.50; retail dealer's margin, $122; freight, $28 and labour, $46.43, or 7·3 per cent of the retail price. That figure is not foreign to many of us because in 1938 an inquiry was held here and many old members are familiar with some of the facts revealed on that occasion. An eight-foot binder marketed in Regina sold for $218, and the labour costs amounted to $22.63 or about 10½ per cent.

Now, farm life lags behind city life not only in physical comforts but also in social, health and entertainment facilities, and in order to provide many of those things a satisfactory income is necessary. It is necessary in order to keep these services functioning and to create new ones. Farming can be made more attractive by the electrification of rural areas, because farm life is most laborious, particularly for the farm wife. If she is free to use electric power, if she has washing machines, frigidaire, a heating system, her work can be made much easier. And not only that; life may be made more attractive for her and for the young people by the addition of lights, radio and all the things that can be provided by electrical power. The electrification inquiry commission of Manitoba made this statement in 1942:

> The electricfication of farm areas merits high priority as a post-war employment programme because it will be more nearly self-supporting than most other projects which might be considered.

According to the Canada year book 19·8 per cent of the farms in Canada are electrified. In the United States, a country similar to our own, 38·6 per cent of the farms are electrified. That is double the number in Canada. I submit that in the post-war period the government should establish parity prices for farm products so that farming may be and continue to be profitable, and secondly that farm life be made more attractive by the provision of electrification for rural areas throughout the dominion.

Mr. FERGUSON: As one who lived for a number of years in western Canada I remember the time when my father owned some sections of land in the Melfort area. From what I hear, my hon. friend has not studied the situation very well. The farmers are enjoying some prosperity out there. The days of slavery are over in the Dominion of Canada. A man lives where he wants to live. There is no compulsion on any person to move from the east to the west or vice versa. One does not have to move from Ontario and Quebec and live on the prairies. We live in this country where we want to live, because it is the part of the country we like. I resent the aspersions that have been cast by several members of this house on the mental attitude of the easterner toward the westerner. I want to correct that. There is no group of people who are more pleased to see the west prosper than the citizens of Ontario and Quebec. We all have taken trips, or we should have, to see this great country of ours, and when we go into the various parts of Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Manitoba we see progress. There is no group of people more delighted than we are when we see that, because it is our Canada as well as yours. None of us is correct in his assumptions of conditions existing in Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan or any other province in Canada. We can only be guided by the information we receive.

To hear some members from the east and from the west talk one would think that the United States was a land of milk and honey. I have had the unfortunate experience of travelling through Kansas, Missouri, and different parts of that country, and I have watched cattle standing on the hoof dying for want of proper food and water. I say to western members on all sides of the house that ninety per cent of the eastern people will do everything in their power to make the west prosperous. We do not want to hide behind unnecessary tariffs; we do not request that you people pay high freight rates. We are here as a group of men in parliament to see that those difficulties are ironed out for the benefit of this country. Unless all provinces prosper, no one province or three provinces can prosper. I do not think it is right that any hon. member should be too emphatic in his statements with regard to one province or one section of this country. We are searching for unity. We have the greatest country in the world. Let us pull together and stop this battle of Bannockburn.

Mr. KNIGHT: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. FERGUSON: Certainly.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is the hon. gentleman speaking for his party when he says he is ready to do away with discriminatory freight rates and bring in a reduction of tariff items?

Mr. FERGUSON: I have no right to speak for my party, but I will say this: I cannot understand my worthy leader not advocating that discriminatory freight rates be dispensed with if it would be for the benefit of Canada. I am sure he would be backed a hundred per cent in dispensing with discriminatory rates. I know I would back him.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I feel I am compelled to take a moment or so of the committee's time because of something that was said about me by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). I appreciate his kindness in nominating me as having made the most harmful speech to the west in the last ten years, because I know occasionally it is better to have a bad record than no record at all. But in this particular case I did not hold it long. He took it away from me within forty-eight hours, after I had it for twenty-four. I want to say this because I am sure he would not want the impression to go abroad that intentionally I am doing or saying anything harmful to the agriculturists in our country. He did say, for example, that I failed to mention the situation in the neighbourhood of the city of Medicine Hat. Well, if he will take the trouble to look at Hansard of the day before yesterday—I cannot recall the page at the moment—he will find that I said exactly what he did, that the Palliser triangle should not have been settled. If I did the west harm in saying that, then, of course, my hon. friend is in team harness with me and we are doing a very good heel-and-toe down that road.

He mentioned freight rates, and said that I had failed to mention them. I failed to do so because I did not think it was pertinent to this debate. That is the reason I did not do it; but I am going to tell him something about freight rates that probably he does not know.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You will if you listen, but if you keep shouting you cannot hear it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The hon. member's trouble is that he does not listen closely enough.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Let us not have conversations between members. All remarks must be directed to the Chair.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I beg your pardon.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Yes. I enjoy a tete-a-tete, but I should like to hear what the other fellow is saying. I did not hear it, therefore I shall go on. With respect to freight rates, there is no question that Alberta stands at the top of the heap. I have no doubt whatever that freight rates, and our whole structure, require a going over. I think the time has long since come when our whole freight structure should be based not on what the traffic will bear, but on the cost of doing the job. Hon. members know that they are rapidly coming to that in the United States. In the last couple of years the interstate commerce commission have issued new orders based on cost, which is not true of this country. I am going to let the hon. member know something more about freight rates. In Alberta we have a subvention paid to the railways for carrying Alberta coal. The hon. member for Calgary West got this subvention from the dominion government. Perhaps the hon. member did not know that some years ago the hon. member for Calgary West appeared before the board of railway commissioners on behalf of the province of Alberta. The meeting lasted a week and an effort was made by the member for Calgary West to convince the board that the cost of hauling coal from his own area in Lethbridge to North Bay and to the city of Toronto was less than $8. In that I failed, but I am anxious that the hon. member should know that while he has been doing all the talking about these things the member for Calgary West has some little accomplishment to his credit.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I just say a word with respect to that?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Swift Current.

[Mr. A. L. Smith.]

Mr. BENTLEY: Mr. Chairman, like one of the previous speakers of our group I have not taken up much of the time of the house, but I wish to speak for a few moments now because I know of no other item under which I may be able to bring to the attention of the committee a few of the things I am thinking about in connection with the matter under discussion. I am glad the last two speakers came out and made the statements which they did, that they believe in unity and that there were many things in the west which could be corrected. I cannot agree with hon. members who have suggested that there should have been no settlement in the Palliser triangle. There was a great deal of splendid land in that section. I will agree that there are some places in the Palliser triangle which should never have been settled. I agree that the responsibility rests on the dominion government of that time for allowing and encouraging settlement to take place there. I agree with the method that is being applied now, in all too minor a way, to correct some of these things through the dominion government in the operation of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. Some of these things are in the process of being corrected. I wish the house would vote the Minister of Agriculture three or four billion dollars so that he could do it all in one year, but I will not suggest that because it cannot be done. When we come to that item I am going to suggest that certainly more than two million dollars should be granted for that work.

I was a little bit concerned the other night when the hon. member for Fort William made the remarks he did about how hard the farmers in his constituency have to work. He did not need to tell us that. All farmers in all constituencies of Canada work hard, and their wives work hard. In this connection I hope the Minister of Finance will remember that the work done by a farm wife is a contribution to the productive power of this country. If the labourer is worthy of her hire, then she should have some compensation in the way of income instead of being classed as a housewife, with no occupation; regarded as more or less an appendage of her husband, while her husband is given a slight reduction in his income tax on that account.

Mr. McIVOR: I am glad to know there is not a lazy farmer in Canada.

Mr. BENTLEY: I should not like to say there are no lazy farmers in Canada. Judging by the empty seats in this chamber there may even be some lazy members of parliament, but I would say most farmers who have been on the land for a good many years cannot be very lazy or they would not have been able to stay on the land. If some of those going on farms to-day are lazy, they will not remain on the farms very long. I am talking about productive farms, which make it possible for the railways to earn revenue by hauling freight; which make it possible for the commercial life of this country to be carried on. I am not talking of people who squat on a piece of land and live there with a cow, a pig and a hen and call themselves farmers. Some other method will have to be adopted to take care of them. I am talking about the farmers who work, whether in my constituency or in that of the hon. member for Fort William. I am not bragging about them because they like to work, but they want a square deal in return.

I am very glad some things have been said in this discussion, because after listening to the hon. member for Fort William and the hon. member for Renfrew North I became rather concerned. When they were speaking, particularly the hon. member for Renfrew North, I began to wonder if that was the consensus of opinion of the citizens of Ontario and Quebec, and I thought if it was, there was only one thing for them to do. I would regret having them do it; but if the people in the east really felt that way, the only thing left would be for them to say to the poor relations in western Canada, "We are tired of you now. We are going to draw a line at the western border of eastern Canada and let you guys paddle your own canoe." We would not like to have that happen, because many of us have relatives and friends down here; our sentiments and emotions are tied up with the older provinces of Canada, and we passionately want to have unity in this dominion. But if it is going to be reduced to a purely economic question I can assure you we are quite capable of running our own show in western Canada if that is the way you feel about it. I hope not many hon. members or citizens of the east feel that way. Certainly we do not.

As proof of the fact that we are prepared to conduct our own affairs, the hon. member for Churchill and the hon. member for Saskatoon City pointed out in a previous discussion in this house that the three prairie provinces would like to control and operate the port of Churchill and the Hudson Bay railway on their own behalf. It is the people down east who do not want that to be done. The minute the dominion government says to the western provinces, "Set up your board of management and take it over," they will find us more than willing to accept that responsibility, because we know it can be operated. We are not impressed by the statement of the Minister of Munitions and Supply that the port of Churchill can operate only for about two months in the year; and when someone said, "Oh, oh," he replied that perhaps it could be operated for three months. We are quite convinced that it can operate for five or six months every year. We are able to read the history of mercantile navigation just as the minister can. Many of our people have visited Churchill, as the minister has, and we of the west are quite prepared to undertake the operation of that port just as soon as the government will give us the privilege of doing so. If they cannot find ways of getting ships into and out of that port with cargoes, we can.

I should like to remind the Minister of Trade and Commerce also that if this situation ever did occur, we would immediately establish contact with the big cooperative societies in the old country, who already have indicated to us that they want a great many of our products and are willing to bring us the things we want, which at present, because of the tariff arrangements of the dominion government, we cannot get through Montreal, Quebec, Saint John or Halifax. In this connection I should like to remind the government that some of our Saskatchewan people visited the old country last winter, less than a year ago. During a visit to our trade commissioner over there he was asked if he had made any effort to establish direct and close contact with the big English and Scottish cooperative wholesale societies, and his reply was, "No. I have been to their offices but I do not know very much about them." Give us the right to operate Churchill and we will learn all about them, because we will visit them and establish relations.

I suggest to hon. members that if they get tired, as I expect they do, of hearing the representations made by western members, they might just give some indication of wanting to meet us on these grounds, and we shall be tickled to death to shut up. We do not love coming down here bringing our grievances, Mr. Chairman, but I always understood parliament was a place where the people from the various sections of the country might lay their grievances before those whom we presume to be broadminded, public-spirited men from all over the dominion, and where some redress for these grievances may be obtained. We want these things.

I should like to remind the hon. member for Renfrew North that the long-time average for the prairie provinces in the matter of grain production, both inside and outside the Palliser triangle, is about fifteen bushels to the acre. We cannot live for four or five years, waiting for good crops, without eating and without wearing clothes. We have to make the good years carry us through the bad. So that average of about fifteen bushels to the acre is what we consider it is possible to sell from the wheat producing areas of our country. As I pointed out some time ago in the house, with an average of 20,000,000 acres under cultivation that means from 280,000,000 to 300,000,000 bushels of wheat to be sold every year. We do not know what the future is going to bring us; we cannot make any predictions. We cannot even get men in high positions to give us accurate predictions. I have newspaper accounts here of statements made by two very able men closely associated with the production and marketing of wheat; yet if they are correctly reported their statements are completely at variance. The Minister of Agriculture is reported to have stated to the annual general meeting of the Saskatchewan wheat pool delegates in the early part of this month that he did not believe it likely that the price of wheat would drop below $1.25 for the next five years.

Mr. GARDINER: No, that was not it. Read it. I did not say it was not likely; I said I did not know of anything at present that would bring about a decrease.

Mr. BENTLEY: The impression was left that the minister did not believe this would happen. I am not accusing him of anything in this connection; as we found out this morning when the Prime Minister made his statement, press reports are not always too reliable. Then I have a press report of a statement by Mr. McIvor, chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board, before the same body on another day. He said that after this year it was very difficult to predict what might happen; that there might be serious things in the wheat marketing situation. He is even reported to have gone so far as to say that before this year is out, highly competitive factors will enter the world wheat marketing situation. Again I wish to point out that I am not accusing either of these two gentlemen of doing anything reprehensible, even if press reports are true. I am trying to point out that nobody can foresee what the future will be in connection with the marketing of wheat. Therefore it becomes extremely important to us that governmental policy be such as to take care of any adverse conditions which may arise. Because of that we are again concerned with this matter of the wheat marketing policy for the next five years. Addressing the house some time ago the Minister of Agriculture made a most learned and comprehensive presentation; but I have failed to find one reply to a question I put to him before he made that address, when I asked what the authorized deliveries are likely to be.

In the first place, all the letters I get from Saskatchewan indicate to me that the great bulk of wheat farmers are anxious that the wheat board shall continue in operation. They have expressed that in the minutes and discussions of their meetings. They have done it through the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, to which many good farmers from Ontario belong. We do not find that attitude toward western Canada among many of those, a fact for which we are devoutly thankful. The people in the west are most anxious that the present wheat board payments should be $1.25 a bushel. We do not particularly want to have it called a floor price; we would rather have it called an initial payment, with the wheat board marketing all the wheat. Anyway we would like it to market all the grain at a fixed initial payment, based on the cost of production which the able gentlemen down here in Ottawa can estimate. If the market is such that it brings more, then when the cost of operations is deducted we should like to have the balance paid back on a per bushel basis. But we should also like to know how many bushels we can sell at $1.25. Since the announcement has been made that for the next five years the government will guarantee a price which will not go below a dollar a bushel, basis No. 1 Fort William, we believe we should have this information. As hon. members must know, in the days of the Conservative administration, the floor price was called a pegged price. Any name is good enough. But the fact is that the promise was made that the farmer would not be expected to make less than a dollar a bushel, basis No. 1 Northern Fort William, on the "authorized deliveries". These two words are of extreme importance to the western farmers. Are authorized deliveries to be computed on the full quota of fourteen or fifteen bushels to the acre for twenty million acres? Is it to be on a basis of 280 million or 300 million bushels, or on a basis of four or five bushels to the acre? There is a vast difference between a floor or pegged price for authorized deliveries, if those authorized deliveries are small. One might as well have no crop at all as to have an authorized delivery of two or three bushels per acre. These are questions which concern the people of western Canada who are connected with the cereal industry.

Mention has been made of the live stock industry. In case any hon. member thinks there is a division between those two branches of agriculture, let me point out, particularly to the provinces of eastern Canada, that the live stock people recently had a conference in Regina. And when I refer to live stock may I point out to hon. members who do not live in western Canada—and who apparently are none too familiar with it—that we have down in the Cypress hills and in other places along the border of Saskatchewan and Alberta, ranches of tremendous size. They produce live stock, and because of that they are classified as live stock producers. In the northern parts of those provinces, and also in Manitoba, we have small acreage farms—quarter-sections of 160 acres—on which one may find two or three cows and some calves. They too, are live stock producers. There are some who raise pigs, and on the two extreme scales. They are the present producers—although with the drop of about 1,500,000 in the hog population I am afraid many of them have almost passed out of the category of hog producers. All this is closely related to the fact that the old farmer and his wife in western Canada have had to go out to feed their pigs too late at night and too early in the morning, with no concession made for labour when they came to deal with the collector of income tax.

Then we come to the sheep producers. The bulk of producers are producing on a large scale; but again there are many people in the three prairie provinces who have small flocks of sheep. These may seem trite remarks, but it appears to me that some people from eastern Canada need to have a clearer understanding of our agricultural problems in the west. So when I said that the live stock producers held a conference I meant that at that conference were representatives of all these various live stock producing groups. The stockmen's association takes in the larger ranchers and the big stock producers. The organized cooperatives and agricultural societies probably represent those who raise smaller amounts of live stock on their farms. Generally speaking, however, all were represented.

The distances in Saskatchewan are great. People do not travel those long distances to spend their time in conferences without good reason, because they do not have the beautiful amenities for sleeping that we find in this chamber. Mostly they have to sit on hard benches. Sometimes they find those conferences as hard to understand as hon. members in this part of the chamber find the little conferences which take place nearly every day between the leader of the opposition and the Minister of Finance—little conferences the rest of us cannot hear, but concerning which we have some curiosity, and some day would like to be let in on.

As I have said, those people travel long distances to attend conferences. Let me remind the hon. member for Renfrew North that they do not do it for fun. They would much rather stay at home and decorate their Christmas trees, or do something else which would be useful to them. No; they go to those conferences because through them they hope some day to be able to evolve policies which will be impressive enough to convince the government of the country that the things they ask for will bring added value to their labours at home. They do not come for fun, or for a picnic; rather they come to attend to serious business, and it is for that purpose they travel long distances.

I could read their findings, but I shall not do so, because one hon. member from this side of the house has already dealt with part of them. Each hon. member who has spoken in this connection has been correct. Speaking generally, they want a board of live stock commissioners and, like the hon. member for Selkirk, I am convinced that when the Minister of Agriculture—whom we did finally elect in Saskatchewan—wants a board of live stock commissioners, we will have it. He will find a legal method to do it. I can tell the minister that the stock men out there do want it. All these groups want it. Let me assure the committee that all those people who attend the conferences do not vote for this group. One of the reasons is that in those western provinces they are most careful in their agricultural organizations to take no part in partisan politics, for the simple reason that they do not want any division among their members when they are dealing with economic conditions affecting their own business. So in those conferences of wheat pool delegates and in live stock conferences are found men with views ranging from the extreme left to the extreme right. When they ask for those things with which the minister is familiar, they do it because in their considered opinion it is important for their industry and their livelihood that such things be done.

I trust I have not taken too much time of the committee. I have spoken in the hope that I might at least convince someone who might not have been convinced before that in western Canada we do have a definite problem and some grievances. We do not want to harp on the subject. We like the place we live in. An hon. member on the extreme right said this morning that this is a free country. You do not want all of us to move down to Ontario, do you? Do you not want to have the C.P.R. hauling our wheat through eastern Canada, down through your Welland canal and your great lakes? Do you not want some of the other things that are done down there? Do you not want the people in the west to buy your binders, your tractors and so on? Of course you want it. And we want to stay there. We do not want to see a line drawn in the vicinity of Manitoba between the two parts of the country. We want to be with you; we want to be recognized as part of the Canadian family. But we want redress for these things which so many people feel are rank discriminations against our industry out there. We want the same protection that you get down here. If I have convinced some one a little bit, I am glad I took up your time; if I have not, I will have to do it again some time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to refer briefly to the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West. I gathered from what he said that he felt I had said something unfair, that I had hurt his feelings. I have no desire to be unfair to the hon. member for Calgary West or to any other hon. member. The hon. member for Calgary West certainly did convey an impression which he probably did not intend to convey, and this is quite clearly proved by the speech of the hon. member for Renfrew North. I would suggest to the hon. member for Calgary West that he do not assume that all other hon. members from Alberta who are not Conservatives do not know what they are talking about. I suggest to him that he deal a little less in insinuations. I suggest also that he inform himself a little bit more before he has quite so much to say.

Mr. BROOKS: Why not do it yourself?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I will do that.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, I shall be only a moment or two, but I shall not be here to participate any further in the agriculture estimates because I must go to Toronto to-day. I want to help the minister if I can. For many years I too have listened to speeches that have been interpreted as creating conflict between the east and the west. We do not want any conflict between the east and the west. We are dependent on one another; we cannot get along without one another. For my part I have been trying to redress the just complaints that the western people have made through these late years. They have been complaining because of conditions for which they were not responsible, conditions which we perhaps had not tried sufficiently to help them eliminate.

I am ready to support the minister in any programme he will bring in that will help the west. They are entitled to a programme which will relieve them from the menacing conditions under which they have had to operate. I have a keen recollection of going from Regina down through Weyburn to Estevan, and my heart would have broken, if it had not been strong, when I saw the frightful conditions of the farmers in that locality. They were up against calamity through no fault of their own. They put in their crops and they hoped for a return, but they did not get a return because the country was dried out. We gave them little assistance, and they came down here, and rightly so, to complain. I for one am finding no fault with the complaints they made.

The minister is too humble; he does not ask for enough. I will promise him that I will go right across the province of Ontario, to every town and city, and address boards of trade and chambers of commerce to ask for support for a programme that will bring the relief to the west that they are entitled to. Water should be brought to these dried-out areas. If the minister would suggest a programme to spend $5,000,000 for the building of a dam near Riverhurst to provide water required for all the land between the river and Regina—yes, and right down to Estevan—it would be a worth-while programme, a programme that the whole country should support.

There should be no conflict between the east and the west; there should be an endeavour on the part of the east to help the west get on its feet. A man cannot get on his feet in a dried-out area, but give his land water and he will get on his feet. He will be able to produce cattle, grain, and everything else with which he can buy the things he needs. That would help your own city, Mr. Chairman, because mention has been made of agricultural implements, and they are made in the city of Brantford. The farmers would be able to buy such implements, but they cannot when they must live on dried-out land. They must have water.

I am going to appeal to the minister to bring in a programme for $100,000,000. That is not much; it is only the price of one battleship, and who worried over the sinking of a battleship during the last war? Nobody worried over that. We built more. Bring in a programme to provide irrigation for the dried-out areas in Alberta and Saskatchewan so that these good farmers—they are good farmers—so that these brave farmers—they are brave farmers; if they had not been brave they would not have stayed there—may have a chance to live.

I want to compliment the minister upon the good work he has done, but he would have done much better if he had acted as I suggested and had not been so humble. He should have asked for what he requires. This land should be rehabilitated. The minister has done some fine work. Look at what has been done around Swift Current. This is evidence of what irrigation water will do. The farmers in that area are grateful. I do not want to take any more time, but I did want to say a word to encourage the minister to come out with a giant programme to give those western provinces a chance to live.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, it is just about two minutes to one o'clock and I understand we are to go on again at three. I did intend to make a statement this morning of the kind that was asked for by the hon. member for Souris, but I have been listening to speeches all morning which could more properly have been made on the different items. For example, the speech which has just been made with regard to irrigation is one which properly could have been made under prairie farm rehabilitation, for which we are going to vote money.

The programme my hon. friend has mentioned, that of $100,000,000, is the one I have been advocating, behind closed doors and everywhere else. I think if he reads my political speeches in the last campaign he will see that I advocated it every time I spoke.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was too busy getting elected myself.

Mr. GARDINER: Everything that has been mentioned in the debate so far, with the possible exception of the quota on the deliveries of wheat, was covered in the two speeches that I delivered on the address. There may be some justification for saying that we have not taken sufficient time with agriculture during this session, and for that reason I wanted this debate to go on as freely as possible and as far as possible. However, we have been up three times with our estimates and I hesitate to start to make a general statement which will take half an hour or forty minutes and just repeat what I said on the address. I think if hon. members will read what I said then they will find the answers to the questions they have been asking, or to practically all of them. They will not find the answer to the question about the quota on wheat deliveries, because that is not a matter with which I deal particularly; it is dealt with by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. But I am sure that in order to satisfy the curiosity of anyone who may wish to know, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will not object if I say that it was not a matter of my choice, nor was it the choice of this government, except in the last analysis, that any limitation was put on the delivery of wheat for 1945. The policy which was stated by myself as Minister of Agriculture was that we should control as far as we possibly could the farmers' acreage in wheat from year to year. But the farm organization with which my hon. friend has been working for many years—as a result of that experience he has been able to demonstrate this morning a wide knowledge of the wheat question—put up a policy which we were following until compelled to discontinue. I stated definitely, both in the house and outside the house and in the discussions that took place, that from my experience in western Canada I was sure that no maximum quota placed on wheat could be maintained by any government or by any body trading in wheat if we had a crop failure in half of the west. That is what we have this year; therefore the fourteen-bushel quota had to be taken off. In other words I do not believe in a ceiling quota on wheat at all.

Mr. BENTLEY: I want a floor, not a ceiling.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not believe in a ceiling quota. It is a ceiling quota when you say to a farmer, "You cannot deliver more than fourteen bushels to the acre." That is a ceiling, not a floor. I am not in favour of saying to any farmer in western Canada, after we have compelled him to accept ceiling prices throughout the war, that he is to be limited to any particular ceiling in delivering farm products after the war.

Mr. BENTLEY: Neither am I.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not want it on wheat any more than I want it on anything else. But I do not want to be misunderstood on that point. Let me say that I think one of the best policies that ever has been introduced into western Canada was the placing of quotas on deliveries of wheat by saying at the beginning of the season, "You can deliver only five bushels an acre off each farm." That permits the man twenty miles back from the railway to make his deliveries of wheat early in the season, and not have the elevators plugged full by the men who live within a mile or two miles of the elevators. Therefore, as far as the quota deliveries are concerned, I hope they will never be discontinued, but I hope also that at no time shall we say that we are going to stop the farmer at some particular point, definitely, in delivering his wheat year by year.

Mr. BENTLEY: So do I.

Mr. GARDINER: But that was the policy we were asked to follow—280,000,000 bushels to be delivered in a year or fourteen bushels to the acre of 20,000,000 acres.

Mr. BENTLEY: Not less.

Mr. GARDINER: No, not more. That was all they guaranteed to take, and it was insisted that there should be no departure from that maximum. That was the policy we were asked to follow by the Saskatchewan wheat pool, by resolution, and in committees and everywhere else.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does that apply to the deliverable quotas mentioned in the order in council?

Mr. GARDINER: No; I am trying to tell hon. members that so far as I am concerned in the government, it does not, and it never will. I hope there will not be very many coming from western Canada, who will be advocating a policy of that kind.

I sat here and listened to the discussion on the address. I let it go by because I hesitated at that time to say anything about what is being done in other countries. But we had an amendment to the address on the question of adopting practically the system which they have in the United States, of paying ninety per cent of parity. The system in the United States is based on the idea that no farmer who gets the benefits of that parity price will be able to deliver from more than a certain acreage or more than a certain quantity of his product. If any hon. member will take the trouble to go back and read the discussions on the floor prices he will find that fundamental in those discussions is the statement that we did not say to the farmer during war time, "You just produce a small amount" and then, "We are going to put a ceiling on it"; we said, "You produce all you can in order to feed the people of the world and then we will put a ceiling on it." And what I say is this: having said that during the war, when the war is over we ought to see that a floor is under it no matter how much you produce, and we ought to allow the farmer to deliver, at least for a period of time, at prices which will be such as to permit him to gain back any disadvantages he may have sustained because of the policy we followed during war time. That in a few words is my policy on this matter.

Mr. BENTLEY: Is that going to be the minister's policy in future?

Mr. GARDINER: I cannot say that it will always be the policy of the government of Canada.

Mr. BENTLEY: That is the important part.

Mr. GARDINER: You have sufficient confidence in me to say that if I decide that that is the proper agricultural policy for Canada, it will be carried out. So far there may have been some reason for saying that, but I am not at all sure that any policy I propose will always be carried out. But I am saying that the prices act under the legislation which passed this house in the session before the election did carry that idea in it, and it is on the statute books of this country, and if it is administered under myself as Minister of Agriculture in the Department of Agriculture as it is now, it will be carried out in accordance with those principles, which are the principles hon. members have been advocating from all sides of the house throughout this whole debate. They are laid down there; they are in the legislation. Any floor prices which are set have to be set after full consideration has been taken of the relationship between the price of the farmer's product and the thing he has to buy, both in war time and in the period following the war, which is in general terms a parity relationship. We do not all agree what parity really is, and rather than saying "parity" it was put in general language which means that very thing.

I would ask, if it meets the approval of the committee, that we be permitted to pass item 1, in order that we may discuss these matters item by item, and all these problems can be discussed as we go along.

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Administrative service—

2. Publicity and extension division, $105,229.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee passed item No. 1 this morning and is now about to consider item 2, publicity and extension division. May I point out that the general discussion took place under item 1, so that the discussion of the rest of the items must be relevant to the particular item under consideration.

Mr. WRIGHT: I see there is a small increase in the amount available this year. At present it is not necessary to advertise agricultural products very much because there seems to be a ready market for them, but that is not going to obtain always. It has not in the past. Visiting Great Britain last fall I found that Australia and New Zealand are carrying on a much more aggressive advertising and sales policy over there than our department has carried on in the past. If we are to retain our market there, once competition asserts itself again, we shall have to carry on a more extensive publicity and advertising campaign in Great Britain.

Mr. GARDINER: That comes under item 28.

Mr. WRIGHT: This has to do with publicity and extension.

Mr. GARDINER: It relates to the publications that we put out to inform people with regard to agriculture.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is what I am talking about.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member is discussing advertising, and that comes under 28.

Mr. WRIGHT: I will reserve my remarks, then, until we come to that item. Can the minister give us some details about these publications that are put out, and what has been done in this direction during the past year?

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps it would be well for me to put on the record in a few sentences exactly what the division covers. The division assumes the responsibility of serving the whole department in maintaining contacts between technical and administrative officers of the various services and the farmers of Canada. This is accomplished through such well-recognized media as printed publications, press releases, radio broadcasts, educational displays at fairs and at exhibitions, lending libraries and lantern slides. The division operates a duplicating service for the whole department, maintains a mailing list, and undertakes the distribution of all market reports, educational literature and administrative information issued. The work of the division is conducted under the heading of administrative and editorial exhibits, press and publicity, and lantern slides service.

Mr. SENN: This is rather a small vote, although I regard it as one of the most important in all the estimates for agriculture. The publicity and extension division serves as the connecting link between the farmers of Canada and the Department of Agriculture and its activities. There was a time in the history of Canadian agriculture when it was thought that anyone who was not very much good for anything else could become a successful farmer, but to-day agriculture is on an entirely different basis. It has become a more or less scientific occupation in which a man must be well trained if he hopes to succeed. As a matter of fact, farmers must have to-day a very wide knowledge covering a good many subjects if they wish to be successful. First of all they must know something about soil and soil composition, fertilizers and fertilizer values, grain and fodder crops, fruit and vegetable crops, growth and method of cultivation and so on. They must know something about the various insect pests that attack animals and plants. They must know something about plant diseases and how to combat them. They must know something about live stock and what constitutes a good animal in any particular breed that they are trying to raise, as well as the conformation and type of animal and the best way in which they can raise good quality animals and produce the best commodities. Not only that, the farmers must know something about marketing and marketing requirements; the type of product needed on the markets, the qualities demanded, and the different types of animals that have to be raised. They must know a year ahead what will be the future demands of these markets.

My point at the moment is that this publicity and extension division does not seem to be accomplishing all that it might do as a liaison between agriculture generally and the Department of Agriculture. There is not enough publicity. The farmers generally do not know enough about these publications and about what is being done to assist agriculture. Can the minister tell us how the general public is informed of these different bulletins that are put out from time to time? They ought to be of great value. They would convey to the farmers, if the farmers have the time and the opportunity to study them, what is being done in the department. There are a great many ways in which they could help the farmers to benefit by the findings of the department itself.

Mr. GARDINER: To answer both the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) and the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn), I might point out that this service has been carried on over a long period of years, ever since we have had a department, and it has naturally been growing from year to year. During the past year, sixty new and revised publications have been added to the number put out, and these include thirteen farmers' bulletins, one household bulletin, three technical bulletins, nine circulars, two acts, orders and regulations, fifteen special war-time production series, seventeen reports and miscellaneous publications. The number sent out was 1,229,182, merely on personal request. That will give an idea of the number of persons receiving these publications. It does not mean, of course, that this is the exact number of persons to whom publications were sent, because some persons might have three or four different requests, but it does show that there is close contact between the farmers throughout the country and those engaged in other businesses who are interested in farming and the department itself.

There are over 592,080 publications mailed in bulk for redistribution. They are sent out to secretaries of counties or municipalities in the west, or farm organizations. Any organization which is in close contact with the farmers and can make this distribution to people who do not personally send in for them, may get them. There are 1,218,894 copies of market reports mailed out on request. That would indicate that there is quite an interest in the marketing report. There are 9,025,863 copies of mimeographed, multigraphed and multilith press releases, news, market information, and so forth, sent out. Therefore it will be noted that there is a considerable distribution to the public of farm pamphlets and farm information.

Mr. SENN: The information the minister has just given emphasizes the point I was trying to make. Undoubtedly those pamphlets are of great value to agriculture if they are distributed, and if the public know just what they are. The minister has said that some sixty new publications were brought out last year. Frankly I must say—and I keep in close touch with this thing—that I do not know what those publications are. I may know a few of them. Some kind of advertising plan should be brought into effect which would let the farmers know what the publications are. I am pointing this out only because I think it is of real advantage to the farmers to have them. I think they can accomplish a great deal more if farm people generally have a better idea of what they are.

Mr. WRIGHT: I do not know what cooperation there is between the minister's department and the departments of agriculture in the provinces with regard to the distribution of this information, but I would say that through their county and district representatives the departments of agriculture in the provinces are probably closer to their people than is the dominion Department of Agriculture. If the publications were made available to those representatives, and they were urged to see to it that the publications were distributed, it might tend to get them into the hands of those who could use them to much greater advantage.

Mr. GARDINER: There is the utmost cooperation between the provincial departments and the federal department. First, there is a close check to make sure that provincial and federal publications do not overlap any more than is absolutely necessary; if the provinces get out a pamphlet on a certain subject we do not put out the same kind of pamphlet on the same subject. After that is done we see that the provinces are supplied with a reasonable number of whatever they find useful. We have a mailing list of all provinces which covers most of the secretary-treasurers of municipalities, farm organizations, and all people who would be naturally interested. Beyond that there are many people who attend a meeting, hear the publication referred to and write in for a copy of it. The long mailing list that I have here is a result of those communications.

The hon. member for Haldimand referred to something which I think I remember his having referred to five or six years ago. He will remember that on one occasion our mailing list was referred to, and it was pointed out that members of parliament who had passed away some years before were still getting the publications. As a result of the criticisms made at that time we had the list largely revised, and we are not depending so much upon lists of that kind now as we are upon personal inquiries coming in. From then on we keep them on the list.

Mr. SENN: I do think some better plan should be devised to acquaint the public with the publications which are brought out from time to time. Farmers are getting into difficulties at all times. They have their difficulties in regard to production. For instance, science comes under the Department of Agriculture. Scientists are finding out new things all the time, things that are of great interest to the farmers, things that would save the farmer money if he knew about them. I suggest that some real plan should be devised to acquaint agriculture generally throughout Canada with the pamphlets that are being issued.

Mr. STIRLING: Has the minister considered a short intimation of the publications or pamphlets being given to the weekly press of Canada? I do not remember the number of weekly newspapers there are in Canada, but I know in the riding of Yale, which is largely an agricultural riding, there are seven. If a short intimation was given to the weekly press of a new publication on such-and-such a subject it might bring it to the attention of the farmers who might not otherwise learn of it.

Mr. GARDINER: An announcement goes out every week to the weekly press. Anything new which turns up is in that.

With further reference to what the hon. member for Haldimand has said, most of the new developments which take place are announced over the radio. It is felt that the farmer gets the announcement more readily in that way, and more farmers get it. It is thought to be more helpful to put it out in that way. But even after it is put out over the radio it is put in publication form and sent weekly to the press.

Mr. HAZEN: How many publications are issued regularly, monthly or weekly? What are their names? I receive one in my box entitled as I recall it, "Live Stock Review". How many others are there, and what are they called?

Mr. GARDINER: I think I gave, before the hon. member came in, the total numbers of the publications put out.

Mr. HAZEN: Are there certain ones which are issued every week and every month?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. For example, there are 1,218,894 copies of market reports. They are mailed out on request. Those go out regularly. Then there are mimeographed copies. It would not be possible for me to give the list because it is a long one. Nine million of those go out, or have gone out during the last year. Then there are half a million publications mailed in bulk. I think those are the ones that the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. HAZEN: What are they called?

Mr. GARDINER: Those are publications on the production of dairy products, hogs, live stock generally, vegetables, fruits, and grains. The pamphlets that go out are all of that type.

Mr. SENN: Will the minister give a little more information as to how the facts are ascertained? For instance, I have heard drovers say that the reports which are published in regard to the prices on the live stock markets are not always correct. I suppose there is a regular way in which those prices are ascertained from day to day and from week to week, but I have heard drovers, and on one occasion farmers as well, say that they are not correct at all.

Mr. GARDINER: The plan followed is the one which has been followed for many years and which has, I think, proven very satisfactory. A report on the prices comes out daily; I have it on my desk every morning. I think that is the one which the drovers have in mind when they say, that it is not exactly the prices they get on their market. I am speaking from memory and I may be a little out on the number of markets, but I understand they take nine of the main markets right across Canada, beginning with Vancouver on the west, and they take the average of those prices and give you both the high point and the low point in the market. You also get the average of the sales for the day. One drover may bring live stock on the market and get the top price, or he may bring it on at the low point, so he will say the average price reported is not the price he obtained. But if he goes to a little more trouble and gets the list of actual sales such as is published in the Free Press—and no doubt in other papers as well, though I am more familiar with this one—he will see the prices at which the sales were made. Any drover or farmer can look up that list and see how many animals sold at such a price, but in a publication such as we put out it is impossible to give the price of every animal and every carload of animals. We just give the average price for the day or week over a considerable area.

4. Contributions to empire bureaux, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $47,397.

Mr. BLAIR: Will the minister give an explanation of this estimate? I notice in the details four headings are given: Farnham House laboratory, imperial agricultural bureaux, imperial bureaux of entomology and imperial bureaux of mycology. Will the minister give an account of the work done in these four laboratories, and tell us why these are listed as contributions?

Mr. LOCKHART: Perhaps while the minister is answering he will give a general review of what the vote covers.

Mr. GARDINER: I think a general statement in regard to the imperial agricultural bureaux might give the committee the information required. After considering the results which had been obtained through the successful operation of the imperial institute of entomology and the imperial mycological institute, the imperial agricultural research conference of 1927 recommended that eight bureaux be established to collect, collate and disseminate information on research in selected branches of agricultural science, and generally to assist research workers in the empire with information on their subjects and with introductions to other research workers. These proposals were accepted by empire governments and since 1928 the following bureaux have been organized, each to deal with a special subject and to be located at a recognized institute dealing with that branch of agriculture:

Bureau of soil science, located at Rothamsted experimental station.

Bureau of animal health, located at the veterinary research laboratory, Weybridge.

Bureau of animal nutrition, located at Rowett research institute, Aberdeen, Scotland.

Bureau of animal genetics, located at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland.

Bureau of plant genetics (crops other than herbage), located at the plant breeding institute, Cambridge.

Bureau of plant genetics (herbage crops), located at Aberystwyth, Wales.

Bureau of fruit production, located at East Malling research station.

Bureau of agricultural parasitology, located at the institute of agricultural parasitology Winches Farm Drive, St. Albans.

Those were the eight original bureaux which were organized. Since 1928 two other bureaux have been established: the bureau of dairy science, located at national institute for research in dairying, university of Reading, Shinfield; and the forestry bureau, located at Oxford. Then, operating under the executive council of the imperial agricultural bureaux are the mycological institute located at Kew, Surrey and the institute of Entomology, located at the British Museum (natural history), Cromwell Road, London. The Canadian contribution to the forestry bureau is provided in the estimates of the national research council.

Mr. BLAIR: Why are these listed as contributions, and how is the amount of money to be paid in determined?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount of money to be contributed each year was decided after the conferences which were held here in 1932. I think the Skelton commission dealt with the matter, and a decision was reached as to what should be the amount. Their report was:

We have discussed fully among ourselves how the above sum should be allocated as between the several parts of the empire. After considering the statistics of general trade exports from each part of the empire to other parts of the empire, the agricultural production of each part of the empire, and the benefits likely to be received, we recommend the adoption of the following scale . . .

	Units of Contribution
United Kingdom and the colonial empire	35
Canada	16
Australia	14
India	12
Union of South Africa	8
New Zealand	8
Irish Free State	4
Southern Rhodesia	2
Newfoundland	1

Those are the proportions in which the division is made.

Mr. BLAIR: What are the benefits Canada receives?

Mr. GARDINER: The advantages of the imperial agricultural bureaux to Canada may be summed up under the following two headings:

(a) Each bureau publishes one or more abstracting journals, a stated number of which are distributed free of charge to contributing countries; that is, all the information gathered by these bureaux is distributed in a publication that is issued. Additional copies are made available at a low cost. The free distribution in Canada has been allocated throughout the dominion to government and university libraries, where they are easily available to research workers. During each year there are published in these journals over 16,000 abstracts of articles by scientific workers in the British empire. The distribution of the findings of these workers through this system of publication represents a service which could not be secured elsewhere; that is the information secured in this general research work is distributed to everyone concerned.

(b) Special services.

5. Science service administration, $26,073.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Hon. members will recall that when the agriculture estimates were first brought down they followed hard on the heels of the national defence estimates. We went cheerfully along and approved estimates totalling $1,998,000,000, and then it was with some dismay that I noticed that our modest expenditures of the year before on agriculture, amounting to some $19,000,000, were proposed to be cut down to some $15,000,000. I was disappointed, because I have heard, I have read, and our fathers had declared unto us that agriculture was the backbone of the country.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. We are dealing now with specific items. The general discussion took place on the first item.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: I was just using that for purposes of comparison, and I wished to make the comparison as odious as possible. If it is a fact that agriculture is still the backbone of the country, then as a farmer and the representative of farmers I wish to pay a tribute to the scientists who have done so much for agriculture in this country. This matter has been broached two or three times already, but I should like to take a few minutes to bring the work of these men just a little more clearly to our attention, and to explain how, as a farmer, I view the advantages we obtain from their efforts.

When I first came out here I settled in the north country. My farm is on the same parallel, Mr. Chairman, as Prince Albert; and I found the atmosphere very frosty. To my regret I discovered that it was almost impossible to grow wheat because of this frost; and the first time I saw the scientists in action was when they assisted me to grow wheat in a district in which the growing season was not long enough. True, they did not affect the weather; but they got to work and introduced a new variety of wheat with a shorter growing season. Very quickly there were developed early varieties. Men connected with agriculture will recognize these names: Reward, Prelude, and Garnet. It became possible not only to grow wheat in that district, but to grow it 150 miles farther north. That area was opened up as a wheat growing district, and all this was entirely due to the work of the agricultural scientists, and in particular the plant breeders' section.

After a number of years we ran into difficulties with plant diseases. Hon. members will recall the terrible losses suffered in western Canada through the disease known as rust. There was a time when it appeared that the wheat-growing industry out there was finished, because those waving fields of wheat which were so aptly described last night, after attack by this disease became at the end of a few weeks entirely valueless. When an hon. member said that even at ten cents a bushel a farmer would still get a lot of money, he was not quite accurate, because in many instances those wheat fields were never cut. Because of the disease which had affected them it became necessary to burn the wheat in the fields.

There is an intensely interesting story behind the fight against rust. Plant pathologists got busy. They told us all about the disease—where it came from, how it worked, and what it did to the wheat plant. They described to us its life cycle, explained that it used the barberry bush as a host plant, and that until the disease had gone through that host plant it could not do any further damage. Obviously, then, the thing to do was to destroy all host plants, all barberry bushes. An attempt was made to do exactly that, but it was found impracticable. The result was that we returned to the scientists known as plant breeders. They told us that in the nurseries at the experimental farms and at universities varieties of wheat had been developed that were immune and resistant to rust, and they proceeded to hybridize or cross these resistant varieties with some of our well known wheats. It is a long story; it took a long time, but eventually we got the varieties which we are now using in western Canada, and which are no longer being affected by rust. But we cannot stop there, because it was discovered there were a large number of varieties of rust. Just how many have been discovered up to this time I do not know. My last information was that there were twenty-three. We have wheat which is resistant to all twenty-three varieties. In any day in any year another variety may be discovered. Since the rust diseases themselves can hybridize, we shall certainly have other varieties of rust which in their turn will attack our resistant plants, with great danger of our running into the same difficulty again, and with a loss of millions upon millions of dollars. So it becomes necessary to keep a staff of these men working constantly, men who will keep their eyes open and the nurseries occupied. Through their work we may be able to keep away from the diseases which attack our plants.

There are other diseases, such as smut and root rot. Within certain limits we have learned how to control smut, although one variety known as loose smut has not yet been controlled chemically. I understand there is a complicated hot water treatment through which grain may be passed, and which will destroy the loose smut, but this treatment is not very practicable. Certainly it cannot be carried out on farms, and the result is that we are waiting for some further development at the hands of our scientists, in the expectation that they will tell us how to control this loose smut, which incidentally is costing us many millions of dollars each year.

Root rot is coming into our fields in western areas, and each year is costing us large sums of money. There is no known absolute control, although scientists are still working on the subject. It is our hope that eventually they will find something to do away with root rot.

Turning for the moment from cereals, we know there are diseases of fruit, such as those mentioned a few days ago by one hon. member. In the aggregate these diseases cost a lot of money. We have diseases of vegetables, including potatoes. In fact, a disease of that kind may attack even the 500 bushels clubs of the hon. member for Fort William. He may find disease among his spuds, in which event he would not have 500 bushels, and probably not even five. I hope the disease will not come near him, but of course there is a possibility that it may. Again our scientists are at work trying to meet the disease. So it goes, all down the line, in live stock as well as in plant life.

One of the points I wished to make is one which has already been made, that our scientists are not receiving much encouragement to stay on their jobs. Their salaries are distressingly low—entirely too low. As a farmer and one who really appreciates what these men are doing and have done, I would plead that their rates of salary be made sufficient to induce them to stay in the country. May I read briefly on this point from the "Agricultural Institute Review" of September, 1945:

First, consider one individual who, in addition to two summers' work has served the division of botany continuously for ten years, after obtaining a Ph.D. degree. It was three years before this person obtained any classified position, and, even then, was classified as an agricultural assistant, grade II, at a salary of $1,800 a year.

Just $1,800 a year.

Three years later this was reclassified to an agricultural scientist, grade I, with a salary range of $1,800 to $2,160 a year, and there, four years later and at the end of ten years' service it still stands.

That is not very much money. Other cases are set out which I shall not detail. One to which I would refer, however, is described as follows:

One has been with this laboratory 17 years. During the summers of 1928, 1929 and 1930 he served at a salary rate of $1,320 per year. Then came the lean years and it was not until six years later he once again reached the $1,325 point, having served at as low a salary as $1,118 in the meantime. Not until 1938 did he reach $1,800, and since 1940 he has been at the maximum of his present class at $2,160. Think of that—after 17 years of service! Even when you add to this the $78.12 cost of living bonus which he receives—

—he is getting less than $200 more per year than is the greenhouse attendant at the same laboratory.

I should like also to read a short paragraph from the thirty-fifth annual report of the Civil Service Commission of Canada, as follows:

The commission regrets that action has not been taken to restore annual increases to those permanent employees who are in receipt of salaries in excess of $3,000 per annum. Many of these employees have been denied not only annual increases but also, for several years, the right of reclassification, while temporary employees in units which are recognized by the treasury board as "war units" have been accorded the right of reclassification at all salary levels. Such differentiation results in a dissatisfied service and affects efficiency, and it is the opinion of the commission that the restoration of annual increases to all permanent employees is in the interests of good administration and the efficiency of the service.

The next report for the year 1944 states:

There is a serious need for immediate adjustment in the compensation for the professional, scientific and technical services, and the commission, after a comprehensive study, is of opinion that action should be taken at once to improve the situation. Assurance of a reasonable salary attainable within a few years is necessary to retain those remaining in these services, and to attract new personnel for the planning and carrying out of the work of the post-war period. The loses that have been incurred in professional, scientific and technical ranks continue to result in expensive administration and the development of particularly critical situations in those fields where the service is in direct competition with the commercial and industrial employer.

In the last five or six years some sixty-one scientific men have left the civil service to take better jobs. I had their classifications and salaries in the service and an estimate of what they were receiving in the positions they took, but I seem to have mislaid it for the time being, so I will just summarize. When I had the opportunity of speaking before I made the statement that I believed after the war the only countries able to stay in business would be those able to produce most economically. The control of disease, particularly plant disease and those affecting cereals, the control of insect pests, the improvement of cultural methods and soil improvement, all cut down production costs. Those things are in the hands of our scientists. It is quite conceivable that this country might have to quit growing wheat for export if some other country got just a little ahead of us in scientific research and were able to produce better wheat and more of it. That is all scientific work. It is much to be hoped that when these things are discovered they will be discovered by the scientists in our own country. I ask the minister to give special consideration to the encouragement of the scientific men who at the present time are engaged in agricultural work.

Mr. GARDINER: I would point out that the hon. member stayed quite closely with your ruling, Mr. Chairman, at the beginning and end of what he said. There are some hon. members who may not be fully acquainted with the procedure. The procedure has been to discuss in a general way all that is under items from 5 to 11 under the first item which covers science service administration. Then we go on to deal with matters having to do with botany and plant pathology, for example, or with animal and poultry pathology under the items so-called. Much of what the hon. member said in the middle of his remarks would come under item 8. Perhaps we could have the general discussion with regard to all these matters on the first item of the group, and then take up the other items such as botany and plant pathology, animal and poultry pathology, and so on. The salaries paid and the treatment given to men who are doing this work is a proper matter to be dealt with under this item, and I should like to make a few remarks in that connection.

It is admitted, I think by all members of the government and everyone concerned that the civil service of Canada was not well paid in many of its branches prior to the war. During the period of the war there was no opportunity to make a change in the actual payments or in the basis of payment. Now that the war is over certain adjustments are being made.

One of the reasons why we were in a difficult position, particularly in agriculture, prior to the war was that our expenditures down to about 1930, owing largely to conditions which existed in the country during the immediate preceding period, had gone up to something in the neighbourhood of ten or eleven millions for ordinary expenditures. During the five years immediately following that they dropped back to about eight millions a year, which was the figure at the beginning of 1936 when I took over the department. Then I think they went up again to about eleven millions just prior to the war. During the war they dropped back again to a figure close to that at which they started.

Here are the exact figures. The appropriation for 1938 was $9,383,000; for 1939, $10,000,000 and for 1940, $13,000,000. We got up to $13,000,000 at that time, but the expenditures were actually $11,816,000. Then we dropped back in 1941, under war conditions, to about $8,600,000. We continued at that figure down to 1943, and then we went up a little in 1944. This year, according to the figures in the estimates, we are asking for a vote of $10,256,250.

I would call attention to the fact that the figure stated by the last speaker at the beginning of his remarks is hardly a fair indication of the difference between the vote this year and the vote last year. The vote last year for the same purposes was $10,569,000, so there is a difference of $313,000. The total figure down below includes specials, and if you will note above you will see that the reduction has almost entirely to do with the wheat acreage reduction. As is known, we were paying out enormous sums of money a few years ago to obtain wheat acreage reductions. The difference there is the difference between $600,000 and $4,265,000. Almost the entire drop is due to the fact that we are not now paying wheat acreage reductions, most of the final payments having been made last year. There is a sum of $600,000 provided to clean up the last payments in 1945. The proper comparison should be between $10,500,000 and $10,256,000. Although it may be a little out of order, in view of the figure given by the hon. member at the beginning of his remarks I thought I should like to give the proper comparison.

Something has been said about the payments for science services. I would remind hon. members that on April 1 of this year the treasury board made a decision to the effect that those for whom gross injustice had been created through the range of their salaries were to be given consideration on request of the various departments. The Department of Agriculture immediately took advantage of that suggestion, and we have had a very considerable change made in salaries for persons such as those who have been referred to. For example, the first person mentioned by the hon. member for North Battleford was, as he said, in the salary range $1,800 to $2,160, the last range which, I think, the hon. member quoted. He was on April 1 obtaining the maximum of that range, namely $2,160. Under the new salary range he is in the class from $2,820 to $3,180. In other words, he has an immediate increase of $660 per year and an ultimate increase of $1,020.

Mr. BENTLEY: That is effective now, is it?

Mr. GARDINER: It is effective so far as he is concerned from April 1. I could go down through the list. There is quite a list here, and all these men are dealt with in that proportion.

Mr. SENN: Does that take into account the cost of living bonus he was getting before? As I understand, he is not getting that today.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, there is no bonus in respect of salaries over $3,000. Of course immediately this man goes over $3,000 he will not have any bonus.

Mr. SENN: But is he going to get the bonus until that time?

Mr. GARDINER: This is net salary.

Mr. SENN: The $2,160 which he got before was not a net salary at that time; in addition he got the cost of living bonus.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, he got a cost of living bonus during part of the war period, from the time cost of living bonuses were put on, and they are still on. He will get the cost of living bonus until he is entitled to a salary of $3,000. Probably the bonus will not be on for very long; however, that is another matter.

Under the division of botany, which has been referred to, there have been thirty-six reclassifications, and there are another twenty-six to be made. I state this in order to indicate that what has been suggested is at present being done.

There is one matter to which I should like to refer for a few moments because of the general nature of the discussion which is going on in connection with these matters. There seems to be a tendency to make comparisons. Some of us in this house have university degrees, and we know what the value of a university degree is. Others have not university degrees; and I doubt very much if there are many hon. members who, having listened to the various hon. members address themselves to the house, can determine just which have university degrees and which have not. Again, people take university degrees for different reasons. Some take them in order to get a general education and be able to apply that education to any activity in life; others take them for the purpose of getting employment of a kind which does not require them to do manual labour. But I have been associated with government since 1914, and during the greater part of that time have had something to do with hiring civil servants, and I want to say that personally, and in spite of the fact that I have a university degree, I resent very much seeing, in advertisements which come out from time to time for certain appointments, the intimation that a man must have a university degree in order to apply. I am inclined to think that all too often that qualification is used to eliminate a lot of people from civil service employment, and it is a very simple way of eliminating numbers of people who have good experience and good qualifications. I am not one of those who believe that you can simply say that a man must have a university degree, or that he should be paid on a certain basis simply because he has a university degree. As a matter of fact many of those degrees do not have a very close association with what a man is doing.

For example, I was listening to a discussion of this question a day or two ago, and one of the arguments put forward was that a certain man was a plumber, another man had a university degree. I said then, and I am going to say now, that I did not know which of them put in the most time learning the job he is doing, and I am not prepared to say that the job of the plumber is not just as important as the jobs of some others. We would find great difficulty in carrying on some of the scientific researches that are spoken of if we did not have any plumbers, no matter how many research men we had. That may be true in many other directions. So I say that sometimes we may over-emphasize the matter of paying one particular group of people at a high rate because of certain academic qualifications they have. I believe that in a democratic country, or indeed in any country, the most important people are the people who work with their hands. They are the people who produce the food and the mineral wealth, and who turn out the manufactured products. They are the most essential. Take these men away from our operations, and it will not make very much difference how many scientists you have. Somebody has to get right down to doing the work. I think I would be safe in saying that at least seventy-five per cent—the proportion is probably low—of the people of this or any other country which has to be developed as Canada must be developed if we are to maintain the population we are capable of maintaining, must get right down to working with their hands. So I am in agreement with those who have been urging all the way through these estimates that the man who works with his hands—as farmers do—is entitled to just as good pay as anybody else. I am not particularly moved by the argument that a man is entitled to special consideration simply because he has qualifications which he got largely through the help of the state—for most of our institutions which make it possible for men to get that type of education are sustained from the tax rolls of the people of the country. Because he has had the opportunity of taking advantage of the facilities provided by those educational institutions he is where he is to-day. There are other men who are just as essential, and I think we must see to it that they get their proper return.

I admit all that has been said on behalf of the scientists. I think they are not paid as much as they should be paid. I want them to be paid more, and I am going to see to it that scientists in the Department of Agriculture are treated at least as well as those in any other department of government.

There is a question on the order paper—I am sorry the answer was not down before this discussion took place, because I am sure the hon. member who asked it wanted the answer for the purpose of using the information here—as to how many men in the Department of Agriculture have certain degrees. Well, it is not nearly so important to know that as to know how many of those men have—

An hon. MEMBER: Brains.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, I would not put it that way; I think the fact that they are working in the agriculture department indicates that. But I would say it is important to know if the man who has a degree is working in a job in which that degree is of any use to him. I can think of many jobs in the department where the possession of a degree does not necessarily give a man an advantage over one who has had five years' experience doing the work somewhere. On that basis I would say this. I hope that everyone in the department will be properly paid, but coming back to the first point I made, namely that our estimates were up to eleven millions and then went down to eight and then back to eleven and down to eight again, being now over ten millions, I venture to say that during the whole of that period we did not fire many because we had too many. If hon. members will look at the statistics they have been getting they will find that our staffs have been increasing year by year until they are higher to-day than at the time we were spending eleven millions or when we had an estimate of thirteen millions. We did not fire men when it was impossible for them to get jobs in other places; we kept them on. The fact that we had cut our estimates meant that we were paying as much in salaries but could not afford to give them as much money with which to do the job they were doing, and therefore we could not use their services to the same extent that we had been doing earlier.

Some credit has to be given to governments generally for acting somewhat differently from industry in many instances. We speak of high salaries in industry, or of high wages, but we all know what the first thing is that has been done in the past, though I hope it will not be the first thing to be done in the future, when times get tough. The first thing that has been done in the past under those circumstances has been to turn out on the street the fellow who is not needed and allow the state to look after him.

Something was said at the beginning of the discussion about men coming back to the farms. The fact is that farmers looked after their own unemployed during the depression period. They kept their sons and daughters at home. There was not all the work to be done that they could have done on the farm. They may have worked hard but they could have been done without as was shown during war time, and one of the reasons why four hundred thousand men and women will not go back to farms lies in a fact, which explains many of these things, that I learned while the discussion was on. There was in New Brunswick a family who had lived in that province four generations. First there were two people who came and settled on a one hundred acre farm, and now, four generations later, there are 610 people descended from those two. Those who argue that everyone who leaves the farm ought to go back should consider this fact. I should like to know how they would keep 610 people on that farm. That is the process that has been going on from one generation to another. We are living on family-sized farms. Only two people can live on that farm in the next generation, one of the sons of the farmer and one of his neighbour's daughters. They will raise their family and in the next generation only two can stay on the farm, and so on. As long as the country is divided into family-size farms it is not going to be possible to send all of each generation back to the farm, whether they have been at war or wherever they may have been. We have to keep that in mind.

We must remember that if we are going to make agriculture successful in the west, or in any other part of the country, we must make use of the scientists and others to find new uses for farm products, to convert them into the things that people need elsewhere; and more than anything else we must persuade the people of eastern Canada and the people of Britain that we want some of the eastern industry in the west. I do not know of any better place for the development of industry in Canada than around the foothills of the Rocky mountains and in the country north of Winnipeg where there is power. I do not know of anything better for the development of our water resources, which have been spoken of. So that we need these scientists, both in the department and outside, to help us to develop these things, and I am going to fight to get as high salaries as we can for them, taking into consideration the fact that every other minister is fighting in the same way in his own department.

Mr. FAIR: I was glad to hear the minister's statement. As I have said on several other occasions, I believe that he and his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce are putting up a brave fight for the farmers of Canada—not for the farmers of western Canada but for those of the country as a whole—and I hope they will be successful in pulling the wool from the eyes of their colleagues in the cabinet. We farmers must stick together. I have no degree, but I think that even without a degree a little common horse sense will take one pretty far, and without horse sense, even if you have a degree, you will not get very far.

It is realized now, as it has been for a long time, even though some people will not admit it, that the best potential market industry has in the west is the farming population. I have upstairs a letter which I intended to bring down, written to the Western Producer not long ago by a Saskatchewan farmer, showing all the items that have been manufactured in different parts of Canada, mainly in central Canada, and in use on the farms of the west. It goes to show that in practically everything the farmer uses, from the time that the alarm clock rings in the morning to wake him until he has finished separating the milk at night with the Renfrew or some other machine, he is using Ontario-made goods. The minister is on the right track, and I hope he will continue along that line and put up the fight he has made in the past.

I was glad to hear the remarks of the hon. member for North Battleford with regard to scientists. Scientists are needed in agriculture as much as if not more than in any other industry, for various reasons, many of which the hon. gentleman outlined. I might say that the hon. member was speaking what he honestly and truly believes, because his son is qualified to act as district agriculturist for the Alberta government in my constituency, and he is doing a good job too. I am satisfied that he was speaking his mind sincerely. There is one variety of wheat which he left out, however, when he was discussing cereals. It was developed not very far from Ottawa by Ontario people. One of the Manitoba members described that wheat to me some time ago. He said that it had grown normally and after fifty or sixty years had reached maturity. Those who were experimenting with it took it part of the time as a joke—to-day most of us regard it in the same light—and when it came to maturity these people found that there was nothing in it except chaff. The name of that wheat is Renfrew North.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I too welcomed the first part of the minister's statement regarding the classification of salaries of scientific personnel in his department. But I think it was most unfortunate that the minister proceeded to drive a wedge between those who work with their hands and those who are scientific workers in his department. He admitted what many people feared during the thirties when he took the point of view that because farm prices were at such very low levels the salaries of scientific workers in the Department of Agriculture should be kept down. If every department of government had carried that out, there would not be any grounds for complaint. But an examination of the Department of Justice or the Department of Finance or any other department would indicate that judges, for example, were not expected to be kept on an income that would correspond with the income that was going to farmers who were selling eggs at three or four cents a dozen and butter at ten cents a pound. This committee might expect the Minister of Agriculture to insist that personnel in his department should receive remuneration at least comparable with those in other departments of government, and I am sure that has not been the case.

To emphasize the point that I think should be made regarding the contribution which has been made to our life in Canada by the scientific workers, I shall mention two or three names that I picked out at random when the estimates were before the committee a year ago. I asked the minister then how long those particular employees had been with the government. The minister did not have the information, but said offhand, eight or ten years. Here is the name of W. C. Broadfoot. Doctor Broadfoot was one of my classmates at university. He was one of the best hockey players and an excellent rugby player. I think he might have gone into professional athletics and made a very good living, but he was interested in scientific problems. He went to the university of Minnesota, as I recall it, and secured a doctor's degree there. If I remember correctly he graduated in 1923, twenty-two years ago. So far as I know he has devoted his full time during those years to scientific problems. According to the public accounts he is now getting $2,880, which, in my opinion, is entirely inadequate when one considers the training he had before entering the department and the contribution he has made since.

Here is R. C. Russell in the same salary classification. Mr. Russell was one of my own instructors when I was at university. I think it is twenty-three or twenty-four years since he was doing post-graduate work; but he was an excellent instructor and taught the members of our class the history of rust. So far as I know he has been working for many years on problems associated with rust; and when hon. members consider what Thatcher wheat or any of the other rust-resistant wheats have meant in dollars and cents to the people of this country, to keep a university graduate with all the experience he has had on a salary of $2,880 compared with some of the salaries we pay to personnel in War Assets Corporation or Munitions and Supply or the wartime prices and trade board is demoralizing to say the least to the highly trained personnel who are doing this kind of work.

I think it would have been much better if the minister had left unsaid the last part of his speech, and had concluded by merely saying that so far as he was concerned university graduates in his department are going to have compensation according to their ability, commensurate with the compensation being paid to scientific workers in other parts of government. Could the minister indicate whether these two men I have mentioned in botany and plant pathology, W. C. Broadfoot and R. C. Russell, have been entitled to any increase in salary in the reclassification mentioned?

Mr. GARDINER: Both of the men who have been mentioned have not yet been classified, but they are in the next group to be classified. The men are being taken in groups through the department and a certain group dealt with at one time and a certain group at another, as is necessary in dealing with that kind of thing. These two men are under consideration at the present time and will have their salaries adjusted in line with what I stated in regard to the others.

Now, as to the driving of wedges, I do not know of any better wedge-driver with whom I have come in contact since I have been in public life than the member for Mackenzie. Instead of driving wedges I was simply saying that all our people have to be dealt with on the same level in accordance with the work they are doing. There is no wedge-driving in that. The wedge-driving would be if you got one group out of line with another; and I am suggesting that it is wedge-driving when you take a man who has a university degree and compare him with a man who is a competent plumber or something else, and say merely because the one man has a university degree and the other is a plumber that the man with the university degree should get more. That is the real wedge-driving that I have heard going on for some considerable time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I did not say anything about a plumber.

Mr. GARDINER: No, but you said I was driving wedges. I can tell you that you drove more wedges in the few minutes that you were on your feet than I did in the time I was speaking. The situation is that we need all classes of men in a department, and any wedges which my hon. friend attempts to drive by misstating what I said, by saying that back in some other period, we kept salaries down is contrary to the facts. We did not do any such thing. From the time we came into office in 1935 we raised the salaries.

Mr. NICHOLSON: And kept men temporary for years.

Mr. GARDINER: There have been men on the temporary staff here because of regulations which existed. A man is sometimes called a temporary for twenty years. The fact that he is a temporary does not mean that his pay is less; it means that he is not on the list of those who will get superannuated until he goes on to the permanent staff.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is keeping wages down.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a regulation which has been here for a long time. Only a certain percentage of those in each group are raised up to the—

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister had a very large percentage of the total personnel.

Mr. GARDINER: Not very many in our department.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There were a few years ago.

Mr. GARDINER: We have temporaries, of course, who are employed during the summer months at the experimental farms. They are temporaries because of the fact that they work only during part of the year, and their wages are regulated partly by what farmers are able to pay in those districts. Those men are doing farm work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister had temporaries in his own office.

Mr. GARDINER: In our department as there are temporaries in every department. Ours is not any different from any other.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister's is the worst.

Mr. GARDINER: Ours is not the worst. I should like my hon. friend to tell us when we raised the wages of judges. Simply to take two or three departments, name them, and say that one department does this and another department does that, does not help. The civil service commission controls the payments in all departments. Their chief job is to see that the payments for similar work in one department is exactly the same as it is in another. That is not my job at all; that is the job of the civil service commission. They take the men who are scientists in our department and men who are scientists in other departments; they classify them, and they see that men in one classification in my department are paid exactly the same as men in the same classification in another department. If they make a mistake on that, we ask them for a reclassification, and we keep battling away until we get ours on the same standard as they are in any other department. That is the plan followed. Simply to get up and say that in one department they are doing this and in another department they are doing that is only saying that the civil service commission, which was set up by this house, not by any department, is not doing its job as it was intended it should do it, and I am not prepared to say that that is the case. I am prepared to say that it has a big job to do, and that it may reclassify the employees of the agriculture department now and may not reclassify the employees of the other departments until later. As a matter of fact that is the case. I think I can say that the Department of Agriculture is farther along the way—I am assured that that is true—in the reclassification upwards of salaries than any other department of government as a result of the ruling made on April 1. No longer ago than the day before yesterday I sat in with the representatives of the civil service who are interested in this particular point and discussed with them everything that has been discussed here this afternoon. Most of the illustrations that have been given today were mentioned then, and time after time I was told that the Department of Agriculture was further advanced than any other department in this matter of reclassification. By that I do not mean anything detrimental to the other departments. The department which applies is selected and gone through with.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Agriculture was the worst, was it?

Mr. GARDINER: It is the best at the moment, and it was never the worst. It has been well toward the top all the way through. So when my hon. friend gets up and follows his old custom of mentioning some particular hardship somebody is suffering, and bases an argument on that, I am afraid he will have to pick on some other department than agriculture.

9. Agricultural chemistry, $125,965.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Would the minister give us some idea of what is involved in this item? Let us have a little detail on it, please.

Mr. GARDINER: The division of chemistry is responsible for the investigation of soils, fertilizers, animal nutrition, plant chemistry and foods. Chemical analyses are made for projects conducted by other divisions of the science and experimental farm services. Analyses are made in connection with the administration of the Meat and Canned Foods Act and the Maple Sugar Industry Act. The central laboratory is situated at Ottawa, and regional laboratories are maintained at the dominion experimental stations at Kentville, Nova Scotia, and Summerland, British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: What is the department doing in regard to peaches throughout this country? For the last two years we have had worms in our peaches which we never had before, to my knowledge, and if this goes on for another year I believe our whole peach crop will be ruined, because there will be no sale for it. This year people bought peaches for $1.25 a basket, peaches which looked perfectly good but when they got home they found they could not put any of them down for the winter.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course as my hon. friend knows the method of treating fruit trees is principally by spraying them several times a year. This has been a very difficult season to use spray effectively.

Mr. FRASER: Last year was not.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps that was not so much the case last year, but these diseases, whether they affect fruit or grain or anything else, start one year and then you find the condition worse each succeeding year, particularly, if weather conditions assist the pest. For example, I think in this house only the other day I heard someone discussing small cherries, and saying this disease had started back in 1932 but it was not until recently that people had begun to realize it might take their whole crop. The same thing happens in connection with peaches and other fruits. We have a station in the Niagara peninsula where we are studying these problems all the time and trying to deal with them. In spite of what we have been doing, however, we were unable to deal satisfactorily with many of the calamities that hit the fruit industry in Ontario and elsewhere this year. I have not been in the Niagara peninsula since that trouble developed, but I have been around Trenton and elsewhere and have gone into the orchards; and I am very much concerned about what the situation is going to be next year.

Mr. FRASER: Those would be apples, around Trenton.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, but the same weather conditions that affected the apple trees affected other fruits as well. The warm spell in the early season brought the trees along to a point at which it was dangerous to have them so early in the spring.

Mr. FRASER: That affected the apples this year, because the bees were not around at the time the blossoms were out.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Then they lost their leaves. They leafed again, and the second leaves were taken off by a fungus. Then the trees leafed a third time. Anyone driving along the roads of Ontario this fall could notice that the trees looked black. The leaves were very small; and on going through the orchards it could be seen that on about one-third of the trees the third leaves had died. The question at the moment is whether or not those trees are dead, and probably we will not know definitely until on towards spring. That has hit the fruit industry pretty well all through. I would not like to say that much of what has happened in Ontario this year in regard to peaches or anything else could have been avoided; I think the weather had a great deal to do with it. Perhaps people trying to market their product in spite of the fact it was of low grade did place upon the market peaches which would have been better withheld, for the sake of the long-range policy of selling peaches from Ontario orchards.

Mr. FRASER. The fruit farmers may have placed those peaches on the market without knowing they had worms in them, because there might be only a pin prick on a peach to indicate the worm inside, and a farmer could not go over every peach and find out if it had worms. As I said before, I have never seen peaches as bad as they have been in the last two years, and I think it must have been something entirely different from what the minister has said because it is getting worse each year. There is another subject on which I would like some information. How about the budworm? I understand the minister has handed that problem over to one of the other departments.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I believe we are keeping control of it.

Mr. FRASER: I thought some $300,000 or $400,000 had been given to another department to deal with this problem.

Mr. GARDINER: I think I said at an earlier stage that money was voted to the Department of Reconstruction, but it does not necessarily follow that the money will be spent by that department.

Mr. FRASER: You handle that?

Mr. GARDINER: We make application to them for the money when required, and we handle it; it is just a matter of getting the money from them.

The present spruce budworm outbreak extends from the eastern boundary of Manitoba to the St. Maurice valley in the province of Quebec. An area of approximately 260,000 square miles is involved. The same outbreak has spread also during the last year from Canada into the United States, where it covers some 12,000 square miles in the state of New York and a considerable area in the state of Vermont. To all appearances, this outbreak is more than likely to spread into the maritime provinces within the next four or five years. The areas of heaviest infestation in eastern Canada are in the vicinity of lake Nipigon, the Mississagi district, Algonquin Park and an area immediately north of this near lake Abitibi, lake Temiskaming and the Coulonge river watershed. Over some 25,000 square miles practically all the balsam and between 50 and 60 per cent of the white spruce has been completely destroyed. An additional area of 45,000 square miles is in immediate danger of total destruction. Approximately 180,000 square miles are now lightly infested.

Intensive studies of the outbreak are in progress in all the affected regions. New developments in connection with spread of the outbreak are being closely followed through the dominion forest insect survey. Studies in control methods have been undertaken by the dominion government and the provincial governments. Three distinct experiments in chemical control by the distribution of D.D.T. from aeroplanes were attempted in 1945. Preliminary tests of the effectiveness of various dosages were made in the early spring in Algonquin park on six 10-acre plots. More elaborate experiments of the same nature, covering an area of approximately 2,000 acres in the Kabonga region of the province of Quebec, have yielded considerable information with regard to the effectiveness of aeroplane spraying. The largest undertaking of this kind consisted in the spraying of some 100,000 acres in the Nipigon district.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What cooperation has taken place between the federal and the provincial departments? Where does the Department of Reconstruction enter the picture? This is a serious matter in several large areas, and great acreages of forests might be completely lost.

Mr. GARDINER: On September 14, 1945, a coordinating organization known as the forest insect control board was established by order in council under the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. It will be the duty of the board to take all possible steps, both separately and in cooperation with the provinces and forest industry, to control forest insect outbreaks, particularly the spruce budworm. I understand that the very best of cooperation is being established between the department here and the provincial departments in carrying this out.

Mr. FRASER: What effect has D.D.T. had on persons and birds in that district?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that there are no serious effects on either human beings or birds.

12. Experimental farms service administration, $63,205.

Mrs. STRUM: How many seasonal workers are employed at the experimental farm at Indian Head; for what period are they employed and at what hourly rate? How many hours a day do they work? Will the minister's answer also apply to the forestry farm? Is any transportation provided between the town of Indian Head and the experimental farm? Is any arrangement made for meals while at work on the farm?

Mr. GARDINER: I am afraid I cannot give the detail at the moment. Perhaps the item might be allowed to stand.

13. Central experimental farm, $728,935.

Mr. MOORE: Horticulture is becoming important in western Canada. Where is the expenditure being made in the development of this branch?

Mr. GARDINER: About $80,000 is being spent in the prairie provinces, most of it at Morden experimental farm.

Item agreed to.

12. Experimental farms service administration, $63,205.

Mr. GARDINER: To return to item 12; about 15 of the men at Indian Head are employed seasonally, for the summer months, and about twenty the year round. Then, in answer to the question as to the period in which they are employed, it would be correct to say that in most cases they are employed for about seven months. The hourly rate of pay is from thirty-two cents an hour plus bonus, to forty-four cents.

Mrs. STRUM: What does the bonus amount to?

Mr. GARDINER: About seven cents an hour. These persons are employed for about ten hours a day, and the information is about the same for the forestry farm. Replying to the question respecting transportation, I have no information about any transportation provided between Indian Head and the farm. As a matter of fact the farm is just across the road from the town.

Mrs. STRUM: The forestry farm is not.

Mr. GARDINER: It is farther out. There is no regular bus service supplied. I imagine one of the farm conveyances would be used to take them in under certain conditions. I believe most employees stay there for the greater part of the time.

Respecting meals, I understand a boarding house is provided on the forestry farm and on the other farm for those who are there continuously. However those who engage in temporary work bring their lunches with them, and have their other meals at home.

Mr. SENN: I believe this item deals with a most important branch of the Department of Agriculture, one which has been and is doing good work throughout Canada. I should, however, like to take a moment or two to make some suggestions respecting experimental farms.

Much has been done by different boards set up to increase production throughout Canada to meet contracts with Great Britain. We are sending large quantities of bacon, beef, cheese, eggs and seeds to the people of Great Britain and Europe, but I am afraid that not enough has been done to see that we retain those markets. The minister may not agree with me in this. I know he has a contract with Great Britain for certain lines of farm products, up to the end of 1946. However, even at this time other countries in Europe from which Great Britain received her supplies in other days are now entering the British market.

I would speak particularly for a moment or two upon our bacon market over there. All hon. members will agree that our shipments of bacon overseas during the war have brought great benefit to the Canadian people in general and our farmers in particular. There are two main things that must be looked after if we are not going to lose our market in England for bacon as we did after the last war. The first, of course, is maintenance of the quality of our bacon. Then we must keep up the continuity of supply. This has been mentioned so often that it is not necessary for me to elaborate on it. If we are to maintain our market we must see that those two things are carried into effect.

I doubt if the reputation of Canadian bacon has been increased very much during the past four or five years. We are sending over to England some sixteen different grades of bacon, and we have been doing this for some time. What we have sent has not always been of the best and it has not always gone over in continuous supply. Denmark was a large producer of bacon and sent considerable quantities to Great Britain in days gone by, and that country is again entering the market. In Denmark they have a system that is far in advance of ours in producing good quality bacon. There is a good deal of government supervision and control over the production of hogs and bacon, particularly bacon that is to go to England. The control over production is rigid; there is control over marketing and over quality; there is control as to what proportion of fat and lean there shall be; there is control over the size of the carcass and the shape of the sides are controlled. As I said before, I do not believe the reputation of our bacon in England has increased much during the war years.

Moreover, I do not believe the quality of our hogs has improved during the war years. Every select hog produced in this country receives a bonus of $4, and if I am correctly informed the production of select hogs has increased only from thirty-three to thirty-seven per cent during the war. That is not a very large increase considering the bonus which is paid. I believe hog producers should take a leaf out of the book of the dairy industry. In the dairy industry they use good sires and dams, and I believe this is done largely in the production of hogs. But in spite of all that has been done, we find that while there may be hogs of good conformation, there are other hogs with some malformation which makes it impossible for them to be brought to maturity. A hog may have a rupture or other malformation.

Then the dairy industry has what is known as a record of performance. An animal may be a good type and of good conformation, but it may not be a good producer. Something should be done to see that we produce hogs of good type and of good conformation which are also good producers. We see in the papers many advertisements about the use of feed. Some people say that you can produce a pound of pork with six pounds of grain; others say you need only five pounds, and some get as low as three and a half pounds. We should have hogs which are not only of good conformation and good type but which make rapid gains in growth. Producers throughout the country are doing a great deal to improve our hogs in every way, but they cannot do everything. They are not always wealthy men, and they cannot afford to weed out hogs which are not the best type or which may have some defect or malformation.

I believe the time has come when our experimental services should set up some kinds of stations to increase these particular qualities in our hogs. At the time of the Winnipeg convention there was inserted in the agricultural platform of the party to which I belong a clause reading as follows:

> To set up a swine study superstation with sufficient facilities and personnel for an exhaustive study of measures for the improvement of the Canadian bacon hog and of means to retain after the war our present quota of bacon exports.

That is something which should be done by the experimental farms branch. It will have to be done by some government agency because private interests cannot afford to do it. I make that proposition to the minister and to the government because I believe it is a sound one. I believe it would be of real assistance to the hog industry in the Dominion of Canada.

I should like to make another suggestion. This may not meet with the approval of the committee, but I think it is worth while. In Denmark they have breeding stations; the farmer does not raise his own little pigs; they are raised in breeding stations under strict government supervision and control. That may seem visionary at the present time and it may be that the farmers of Canada would prefer to breed their own little pigs, but I would point out that twenty-five years ago there were very few chick hatcheries in the Dominion of Canada. To-day there are very few chicks raised in any other way, because the people producing poultry and eggs buy their chicks from the chick hatcheries which are under inspection and supervision. I believe the time has come at least to make an experiment in that direction.

I believe little pigs could be raised to better advantage in breeding stations which would be under supervision and control and where the conditions would be better for the breeding and selection of pigs. It is said that from twenty-five to thirty per cent of our little pigs perish before they grow up, before they are of any great age. That sort of thing does not occur any more in the chick hatcheries. The mortality rate of small chicks in chick hatcheries is very small and I think the same results could be obtained if we had breeding stations for hogs. The small pigs would get better care and they would be less liable to disease; they would get a better diet and, if the stations were properly equipped and the personnel properly qualified, it would go a long way to producing a more uniform type of hog throughout the Dominion of Canada.

There is another reason which I think is just as important. At certain periods of the year we have large runs of hogs coming on to the market, so much so that it is almost impossible for the abattoirs to handle them. At other seasons of the year there are only small runs coming on to the market and the abattoirs cannot keep busy. If breeding stations were established throughout the country I believe it would tend to keep a uniform supply of hogs coming on to the market at all seasons of the year. I suggest that the packers themselves would be very well advised to experiment with this thing to see how it would work out, because after all the packers are just as much interested as the farmers are. We need the packers to process our animals; at the same time the packers need the farmers to raise the animals; and if the packers could, by means of an experimental breeding station, demonstrate that they could raise more and better hogs, and that they could distribute those hogs over the year, it would be a great advantage to the packers as well as to the farmers. I leave these suggestions with the minister because I believe they are worth considering.

13. Central experimental farm, $728,935.

Mr. CASE: In looking over the details of the expenditures, one item about which I should like to ask the minister is that of rents, $2,560. What are the rents related to in connection with the central experimental farm? Another question which the minister might answer at this time is this: since there must be some revenue from the central experimental farm, where is it shown, or is it shown at all?

Mr. GARDINER: Three hundred acres of the central experimental farm here are rented from the Caldwell estate. That is the land for which we are paying rent.

Mr. CASE: It comes to $2,560?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; that is the total amount.

Mr. CASE: Is that on a long-term lease? Would it not be better to buy the land rather than to continue to pay rent? It must be well improved land if 300 acres are worth that amount of rent.

Mr. GARDINER: We have had it rented for fifteen years. At the present time it is on an annual rental. I may say there has been discussion as to whether we would purchase it or whether we would go on renting it. While those discussions have been going on, the land is on a yearly rental.

Mr. CASE: The other question was about any revenue coming in from the farm; where is it accounted for, or is it accounted for?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount which we obtain by way of revenue is found in the auditor general's report. There is a revenue from the farm, but, as will be understood, it is not sufficient to pay the cost of running it.

Mrs. STRUM: I am sure we were all glad this afternoon to hear that the minister values the work of people who work with their hands, and his remark that the work of the scientist would be greatly hampered without that of the ordinary day labourer. In the light of the statement he gave us about farm wages I hope he will consider the revision upwards of these wages. There is a great disparity between these scales and the wages paid by the ordinary farmer. I myself live on a farm; we hired a boy this fall for $100 a month and gave him his board and room. These people work as casual labourers: they have to maintain a home, carry their lunch pail, and perhaps provide their own transportation—we are not sure of that—and they have to provide all that from these very small wages. I am sure the minister will agree that all these wages should be revised to bring them into line with the wages paid by farmers who are not supported by the resources of the treasury of this country.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): May I ask the hon. member, was it just during the harvest rush that she hired this boy for one month?

Mrs. STRUM: No. We paid as high as $7 a day for day labour during the harvest, and we pay $100 a month for people like this boy, who are working for seven months in the year.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What about the summer months?

Mrs. STRUM: If these men were hired by a farmer he would have to pay them, board them and give them housing. These people work for less than $4 a day, even including the cost of living bonus, and out of that they must support a family, maintain a home and provide their own meals. I am sure the minister does not want to see that condition continue.

Mr. GARDINER: I may say that when I came into the department the hourly pay at Indian Head was, I believe, twenty-eight cents; it now averages forty-two cents including the bonus, so that there has been some increase; and in the present supplementaries which are being considered, and which have not yet reached the house, we are asking for sufficient to make another increase in that payment. That will answer the question whether we think there should be some increase. We rather think there should be.

Mr. FRASER: How many hours a day do they work?

Mr. GARDINER: About ten.

Mr. WRIGHT: What specialized projects are being carried on at the experimental farm here in Ottawa, or is any specialized work being done?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not before me the list of projects that are being carried out. If that question were put on the order paper I could get a list of them and have them put on Hansard.

Mr. CASE: How many acres are there in the experimental farm?

Mr. GARDINER: The government-owned land is 869 acres, and we have this rented land which I spoke of a few moments ago. We have about 1,800 acres at South March, which is about twelve miles away from the chief farm; that is being operated—

Mr. CASE: Rented?

Mr. GARDINER: —in cooperation with the department of munitions.

Mr. FRASER: Is it owned by the government?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it is owned by the government.

Item agreed to.

14. Branch farms and stations and illustration stations, $1,531,740.

Mr. BENTLEY: A little while ago a question on the order paper was answered, that the dominion experimental services were interested in the airport at Swift Current. I am not saying that they wanted to buy it, but they were interested. Does that "interest" mean, if it is carried to its fruition, that that station will be added to the farm at Swift Current for this kind of work?

Mr. GARDINER: Is the hon. member speaking of the Wymark station?

Mr. BENTLEY: It does not specify Wymark or St. Aldwyn or Swift Current proper.

Mr. GARDINER: The Wymark station has been transferred and is being connected up with the experimental farm.

Mr. BENTLEY: Are you still interested in the air school?

Mr. GARDINER: No; I understand not.

Mr. McKAY: Will the minister indicate what plan is being followed in the way of rendering assistance to these experimental sub-stations and illustration stations which we have all through the country? I wish the minister would state by way of information what inducement is being held out to farmers to devote time and study and effort in the operation of these stations; how much supervision there is, if any, and what is the basis followed; what qualifications are required in the appointment or selection of farmers for the operation of these stations; if the costs of the operation of these units are in any way connected with the cost of the main stations; if they are, how they are deduced and in what way they are computed.

Mr. GARDINER: As regards the illustration stations, which we have around the country, we pay the farmer a rental of $5 an acre for the acreage which is under supervision. Then we allow him to sell the product. He operates under instructions and supervision, but he sells the product as though he were not and he receives $5 an acre rental in addition. That is constantly under supervision, and my experience is that men go from the department to these stations and have the farmers in from around the district, giving them instructions and telling them what the results of experiments are.

Mr. McKAY: Are they confined to the main experimental unit to which they are attached?

Mr. GARDINER: The supervisor is located at the nearest experimental farm and someone goes out under his direction and does the work. It covers pretty well all western Canada.

Mr. McKAY: I was anxious to know what method was followed in the appointments. I am not complaining; but what is the method that is followed in appointing farmers for that important work of experimental farming? Are there any special qualifications?

Mr. GARDINER: Several principles have to be considered in making the selection. The first, of course, is the soil condition. If a farm is selected in a particular soil area it is unnecessary to take another within the same soil area. It is necessary to have it located as nearly in the centre of any particular soil area as possible, and we have to consider whether the farmer himself will put up with it. Some farmers do not want to be bothered with it. Others take an interest in it. We try to find men who are interested in the work. There are many qualifications of that kind. Most of the men are known only to those engaged in that kind of work in the community. We naturally refer to men operating from Indian Head farm, for example, questions as to whether they think the land is suitable or the individual operating the farm under their direction.

Mr. HARKNESS: There is a decrease in the amount required for the central experimental farm and branch farms. This would suggest that a decrease in the amount of experimental work to be done is contemplated. If that is so, what is the reason for cutting down the amount of experimental work?

Mr. GARDINER: What is noted as a decrease there is explained by the fact that the estimate of last year included supplementaries. The expenditure provided for in these estimates does not include supplementaries. We hope to bring in a supplementary which will increase wages by six cents. I do not know whether we shall get six cents or some part of it, but if it is voted it will be added to these estimates. We do not think the estimates will be decreased after we have added the supplementaries.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the minister found it difficult to get suitable men to operate illustration stations at present rates of remuneration? These stations serve a very useful purpose in the different communities and I know of one in my own area which the man said he could not operate on the present basis. Does that obtain over a large area, or are these men mostly satisfied with present contracts?

Mr. GARDINER: We have very little difficulty in securing men who are prepared to take on the work. I do not know whether it is because they feel that they are sufficiently well paid for it or whether it is largely because of the kind of men we have and the kind we are looking for. We are looking for the man who is interested in the work himself, and some of these men would take it on whether they were paid or not, because of the advantage which they personally derive from it. Their neighbours also benefit from that work. We have had no great difficulty in securing men at the present rate. Occasionally a man comes and says, "I don't want to be bothered with it any longer", and I do not know whether it is a matter of wages. I do not know whether the man my hon. friend is thinking about is one of these. I know of a case in his community where a man did not want to take on the work because conditions in his family had changed. At one time he had sons and subsequently not so many, and he thought it better to give up the work.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wish to compliment these men on the illustration stations they are conducting. They are doing a good job in the community, and very often their success is due to the personal interest they take in that type of work rather than to any question of remuneration. They indirectly obtain much valuable information that serves them in good stead on their own farms. These men are serving a very useful purpose and the department is to be congratulated on this type of work, especially the educational features. Each year there is a field day at the station and the farmers from the district come in and observe what is being done. It is a good opportunity for the distribution of pamphlets and other literature. In that way the work of the experimental farms is carried right through to the man on the land who is doing the work.

Mr. MARSHALL: It is quite unfair to make a comparison between the estimates for 1944-45 and those for 1945-46. A true comparison would be between actual expenditures in the previous year with the estimates that are now before us. Unfortunately, we have not been furnished with a copy of the auditor general's report for last year, so that I would ask the minister to be good enough, on all other items that come before the committee, to give us the actual expenditure in connection with each item in order that we may compare the amount that is asked for this year with the amount that was actually spent last year. In connection with item 14, what amount was actually spent out of the $1,593,276 asked for last year?

Mr. GARDINER: The experimental farms branch has spent practically all the money that has been appropriated to it each year. The only reason the auditor general's report has not been distributed is that the printing is not yet completed. The amount unspent out of the total of $1,593,000 was between $30,000 and $40,000. I have not the exact figure.

Mr. MARSHALL: Would it be possible for the minister, in connection with all future votes, to give us the actual expenditure that was made up to the end of the fiscal year that ended March 31, 1945? I could not get a copy of the auditor general's report. A copy was filed with the Clerk here, but someone has it; I could not get my hands on it. Would the minister be good enough to give us those figures as he goes from one vote to the next in his department?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think there is a record on which I can lay my hands this afternoon. I understand that the votes are not made up in a way that it can be compiled easily. It can be compiled over a period of days and brought down if an order for return were asked for along that line, but I am doubtful that we can produce it here any nearer than what I gave a moment ago. The gentleman who is associated with the different divisions can give what it is within a few thousand dollars. For the benefit of hon. members may I indicate what really happens. We do our best to spend in an effective way the money that is voted. We start out at the beginning of the year with that idea in mind; when we get along to the point where we feel that we probably cannot spend it in the manner in which it was originally voted exactly as it was voted, so far as the regulations permit of it, we go to the treasury board for permission to transfer it from one thing to another, and in that way we spend very close to the amount which is voted in the department each year. The only exceptions were years such as I mentioned a few moments ago when we got into the war. At that time every effort was made to cut down expenditures all along the line. While we had $13,000,000 voted we spent only $11,000,000. That would happen only in a year of that kind. Ordinarily we spend very close to the amount that is voted, and we usually come along for supplementaries on a considerable number of items. I do not think there has been a year in the ten years since I have been here that I have not asked for supplementary votes to take care of what we need in the way I suggest.

Mr. MARSHALL: I quite understand that. I think the gentleman in front of the minister has the information and should be able to give us exactly the amount spent on this programme. I have the auditor general's report for 1944. If we could get the report for the year ended March 31, 1945, we might be able to get the information, but unfortunately that report is not yet available. It is now November and we should have had the report some months ago. Would it be possible for the minister to give us the total amount spent in each branch of his department? Take the production services branch, would it be possible for the minister to tell us at the appropriate time the amount that was actually spent in that branch out of the $3,661,684?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, I think that amount could be obtained, and before I am in the committee again with my estimates I may be able to get those amounts and bring them down.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Fruit growing has received a good deal of attention in Saskatchewan in the last few years. With the right kind of encouragement I think the province could be made self-supporting as far as small fruits are concerned. I refer particularly to apples, crab-apples, plums, apricots, and, of course, bush fruit. Would the minister be inclined to consider setting up an experimental station for the testing of fruit trees similar to the one operating at the present time at Morden in Manitoba, which is doing such good work? The station should preferably be in the northern part of Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: The experimental station at Morden, as I suggested a few moments ago, does a very considerable part of the work. We are also carrying on work at Indian Head, Swift Current and at Scott; and we did carry on work in cooperation with Seager Wheeler in Rosthern for a considerable time. I understand that work is still being carried on there. The hon. member for Melfort may know the location. I think there is an experimental station in his area where some experimental work is being done. I think we are doing work at Beaver lodge, which is farther north up towards the Alberta-British Columbia boundary. I quite agree with what has been said, that we should encourage the growing of small fruits, not only apples and plums, but berries of different kinds. Raspberries produce abundantly in the section of Saskatchewan from which I come and can be produced in many other places.

Mr. McMASTER: I was interested in knowing how many different branches of experimental farms there were, but I found the answer in a voluminous bluebook. Can the minister tell me why the province of Saskatchewan has eight different branches; British Columbia, six, and the rest of the provinces all together about the same number. I can understand British Columbia's interest because the minister from British Columbia has so far carried most of the estimates; but I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture, who is an old Ontario boy, would explain why Saskatchewan has so many branches.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I want to thank my hon. friend for his kind remarks.

Mr. GARDINER: The answer as between Saskatchewan and British Columbia is, of course, very easily given. Probably I had better not say this because I may have a long discussion, but I shall take a chance on it. The agricultural areas of British Columbia are limited because of the nature of the province. It is a mountainous province, and the number of stations required there is not as great as in a province like Saskatchewan where the only industry carried on to any extent is farming.

An hon. MEMBER: And politics.

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend back here says "politics". Well, even farming is more important there than politics.

[Mr. Townley-Smith.]

An hon. MEMBER: You do not get your bread and butter in that way.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Some of them get it.

Mr. GARDINER: Some of the stations we have in Saskatchewan are there largely because of what has been brought out in some of the discussions we have had during the last few days. There has been quite a difference of opinion as to whether or not it is a good place to live in. Personally I prefer to live there to anywhere else in Canada. But one of the reasons why I am interested in living there is that it is a little difficult to make a living, and I rather enjoy a good fight, even against climate.

The experimental stations which we have throughout Saskatchewan are there for the purpose of teaching people how to live in an area which some people think we should not have opened up at all. Personally, I should like to say this with regard to that. We had quite a discussion to-day about the Palliser triangle. There are a million people living there. It is all very well to say that they should never have been taken there, but the city of Regina, the city of Saskatoon and the city of Calgary are within that area, and all the farming areas that are located tributary to it are in that area.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Not Calgary.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member had better examine his maps. I have had to draw a line around that area for the purposes of the Prairie Farms Rehabilitation Act. The reason there is P.F.R.A. work out there is that it is in the Palliser triangle. If you draw a line from Morden in Manitoba, straight west to Lloydminster; then another line straight from Lloydminster to the foothills west of Calgary, and then go to the boundary line you have the Palliser triangle inside of that to the south. There are a million people living there, and with all due respect to those who think they should not have been put there I should like to know just where you could put a million people if you took them out of that area. I should like to know where else you could plump them down and have them do any better than they are doing at present if you took them out of that area.

Some people have said they have moved back from the west, and others have said they have moved west. That is because of what we like and do not like in the way of climate and in the way of making our living. Out there we have illustration stations largely because of what was said by one hon. member a few minutes ago, that there was a time when they could not grow wheat in the district in which he lives; but they grow wheat there now because of the activities of some of these people who have been carrying on experiments. In the district in which I live it is not many years ago that they could not grow wheat, though I live just north of the Qu'Appelle valley. They had to grow oats and raise live stock; but to-day they grow wheat almost exclusively. Those conditions were changed not because the weather changed or because the soil changed, but because somebody carried on experiments and discovered wheat that could be produced in a short season. Not only did they carry on experiments; some breeding was done which made it possible to get wheat which could be used in those areas. The tests are made in regard to that breeding by taking the wheat from the experimental farm to the illustration stations and trying it under those soil conditions. If it will produce in a certain length of time, or if it is free of rust attacks during certain seasons, then we continue to grow that type of wheat there. That is the real reason why the stations are located at different points all over western Canada, not only in Saskatchewan but throughout Manitoba and Alberta. More of them are in Saskatchewan than in any other province because, as some hon. members opposite have been trying to demonstrate for some days, we think we have more problems than the other provinces.

Mr. STOKES: Before this item passes, I should like to come back to Ontario for a little while. Would the minister tell us something about the number of illustration stations in Ontario? I am thinking particularly of a newly projected station just west of the town of Trenton, along lake Ontario. I should like to know what kind of work it is going to do, what the staff will be, and so on.

Mr. GARDINER: It is really a small experimental farm that has been established at Trenton. The staff will not be large; that is the permanent staff, but we will send men there from the central experimental farm here to do a considerable portion of the work. A skeleton staff will be there all the time operating that farm.

Mr. STOKES: What is the nature of the work to be carried out there? Is it to be purely in connection with the apple growing industry, or is it to render a general service?

Mr. GARDINER: The work is experimenting in the best methods of building and maintaining orchards, treating apple and other fruit trees with spray, and the best methods of producing vegetables in that district. I was at that farm within the last three months, and was pleased to see the development that has taken place.

Mr. STOKES: We are grateful to see some move made in regard to growing apples.

Mr. BARRETT: While we are on this item I should like to put in a word for the dominion experimental substation at Delhi. Mr. Stinson, who is in charge there, is doing a very good job in experimental work in connection with tobacco. I know during the war he was handicapped by lack of help; now he would like to make some extensions to his plant, so that I just want to draw this matter to the attention of the department in the hope that he will be given every consideration.

Mr. GARDINER: I am pleased to have that statement with regard to the Delhi farm. I understand that the two men who were employed there as assistants before the war and who have been overseas are returning to the farm, so that we hope it will operate with greater efficiency in future than has been possible during the war.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the minister state whether any experimental or research work along forestry lines is being carried on under the experimental farms branch?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; we have the forestry nursery stations at Indian Head and Saskatoon, with which I am sure the leader of the opposition is quite familiar. These stations supply forestry plants for all four provinces.

Mr. BRACKEN: Formerly they were under another department, were they not?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that at one time they were under the Department of the Interior, but that was before my time.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am asking this question because, as I remember the remarks of the Minister of Reconstruction the other day on another matter, he indicated that certain research work along forestry lines was being undertaken by that department. This may not be a matter I should discuss now; I am not particularly anxious to do so, but I want to know when it might be discussed. I am wondering, though, since forestry work is already being done in one or two other places, why research work in forestry should be placed under still another department. I do not ask that much time be taken on the point now, but perhaps the minister could say a word about it.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that the work really is to be done under the Department of Mines and Resources, which is the continuation of the old interior department. That work is in connection with natural forests. The work we are doing at the two forestry farms is reproducing trees which will grow well in different localities, and distributing those trees, particularly to farmers. That work is done by the Department of Agriculture, while the other work, related to the natural forests, is carried on by the Department of Mines and Resources. They will get their money for the special work that is to be done during the reconstruction period from the reconstruction vote. We will supply men who will cooperate with them in some of the work, but really the work will be carried on by the Department of Mines and Resources.

Mr. BRACKEN: Those whom you might call research men, then, would be in the Department of Mines and Resources rather than in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. GARDINER: We do the work in connection with breeding plants; we do the research work in connection with diseases of plants and in connection with attacks made by insects upon plants, through our entomological branch. All that work is done by our research men, but they work in cooperation with the others.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: A short time ago the hon. member for Swift Current raised a question I should like to pursue a little; that is, the possibility of using airports that have been declared surplus for experimental stations. As the minister probably knows, at Dauphin we have two very fine airports. It is possible that one may be used for commercial purposes, but at least one will be declared surplus. Has the department taken into consideration the possibility of using these airports that have been declared surplus for experimental stations, or anything of that sort? I might point out that both the Dauphin airports are built on some of the finest land in Manitoba; they have fine buildings, water supply, electricity, and are close to town. Either one would make a fine experimental station. We have tried to get the Manitoba government interested in starting an agricultural college at one of these airports, but they have decided against it, so that I hope the dominion department will be able to make some use of these facilities.

Mr. BRACKEN: If I may revert to the answer given by the minister a few minutes ago with respect to research in forestry, I was not aware that his department was doing as much in the way of research along forestry lines as apparently is being done. Could the minister give the committee a general idea as to why any research is being carried out by the Department of Reconstruction, when the Department of Agriculture apparently has men who can do it?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not like to be too specific in the matter, but I do not think it is the intention of the Department of Reconstruction actually to do any of this work. The principle, as I understand it, is this, that during the war we have been voting considerable sums of money for war purposes. If I wanted any of that money to develop something having to do with the war—possibly the greater production of hogs needed for food—I would have to go to the Minister of Finance who had charge of the fund and ask for a part of that money, through treasury board, to carry on the work. But that work was not carried out by the department which had control of the funds. They examined into the necessity for it, and if they thought it was necessary for the performance of part of the war effort the money would be turned over to the department in question carrying on the activity.

My understanding is that the Department of Reconstruction is going to take similar procedure in respect of a very considerable sum of money which may be voted by the house. Parliament will vote a sum of money. Then, for example, I would say that some irrigation work must be carried on in connection with research. This would be something outside and beyond anything provided by the civil estimates to my department. If I can convince them that the work I have suggested is important enough to make a sum of money available, we would then bring in a supplementary estimate which would propose to spend that money in the Department of Agriculture.

I think it would be also true to say that the Department of Mines and Resources would have to go to the Department of Reconstruction. The Department of Reconstruction would have the final say as to whether that money is to be used in a certain way, rather than by the Department of Agriculture, or somewhere else. But once the money is supplied for the work, our officials and those of the Department of Mines and Resources will carry it out.

For example, in connection with a dam required to promote irrigation, I understand that even after we have persuaded the Department of Reconstruction that we need the money and that the project is a good one, it may say, "But you have not the proper engineering skill in your department to do this work." We would then say, "Whom do you recommend as engineer?" Or we might say, "If you have engineers elsewhere who you believe can do this work, who are they?" In this way we would cooperate in getting the work done. The work will be carried out by whatever department or branch has been accustomed to carrying it out in the past. In this instance it would be Mines and Resources, and Agriculture.

Mr. BRACKEN: I can understand how engineering work might be handled in that way. But with a branch of forestry in the Department of Mines and Resources, and with an experimental farms branch in the Department of Agriculture, in which there are experimental and research men, I cannot understand why another department—a new one—should be undertaking work which already is being done in one or two other departments? At the moment I am not criticizing; I am only seeking to understand why such duplication is necessary.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: May I have an answer to the question I asked a minute ago?

Mr. GARDINER: Up to this time no consideration has been given to using the airport at Dauphin. I do not know whether any consideration will be given to it or not.

Item agreed to.

15. Production service administration, $35,445

Mr. ROSS (Souris): In the war appropriation estimates for the Department of Agriculture, as they are shown at page 552 of Hansard, there is a vote for subsidies amounting to $27,111,749 to producers of food products. May I ask about that item at this point?

Mr. GARDINER: Subsidies are paid to bring about greater production, and to that extent the item could be discussed now.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Would the minister give the committee a breakdown? What amount has been spent under this item on different agricultural products?

Mr. BRACKEN: Perhaps I might be permitted to interject a brief observation at this point. I notice that, as we are reaching another branch of the work of the department, the minister is changing advisers. I should like to associate myself with those who have complimented the minister and his department upon the type of work which has been done across Canada in the last thirty or forty or fifty years by the experimental farms branch. Anyone who is familiar with that service particularly in recent years, must realize that it has been a wonderful investment, one which has returned to this country manyfold the expenditures made in connection with it. I commend the whole service from top to bottom, and in this respect would include the minister as well.

Mr. SENN: I believe it is understood that certain subsidies are given to increase production and others are given to offset the price ceiling. Would the minister make a full statement regarding marketing as well as production?

Mr. BRACKEN: May I add a word in support of the hon. member for Haldimand. Could we have a general statement which would give the full picture of subsidies administered by the minister's department? When we reach other departments we can get similar statements from them.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a lengthy list, but I could begin to give it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I believe the hon. member for Haldimand was referirng to the fact that large items are spent by the Minister of Agriculture and other large items by the Minister of Finance. Is this true?

Mr. GARDINER: Some subsidies known as consumer subsidies are paid to cut down the cost of living. Then other subsidies are paid for the purpose of getting greater production, and consist in increased payments to producers. I believe that information can be supplied from the figures I have before me. All are listed together in the information given me, but I believe when going through them they could be separated.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is there any prepared document giving that information?

Mr. GARDINER: The document I have gives it pretty well.

Mr. BRACKEN: Have we had that document?

Mr. GARDINER: I doubt if you have, but it can be had. I have here the details of estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1945-46, the one we are now in. For the agricultural food board the sum of $21,334 is given for administration. That is the amount already granted. The additional amount required is $40,695, making a total requirement for 1945-46 of $62,029. That is for administration.

Then follow subsidies on food products. The subsidy on milk for butter, fluid milk and cheese concentrates for 1944 was $4,500,000, and for this year, $4,500,000. The subsidy on milk for 1945: amount already granted $22,000,000; amount required, $23,000,000; total, $45,000,000. Subsidy to producers of fruits for jam and canned raspberries: 1945, $200,000 already granted, $400,000 still required, or $600,000 in all. Subsidies to producers of fruits for jam and canned raspberries, 1944, $83,333; and for this year it is $83,333. Subsidy to producers of tomatoes, corn, peas and beans: $200,000 already granted; $2,550,000 required, or a total in all of $2,750,000. Subsidy to producers of tomatoes, corn, peas and beans, 1944, $22,916,000. Subsidy to producers of white and yellow eyed beans: $100,000 already granted; $1,100,000 additional amount required, making a total of $1,200,000. Subsidy on milk used in the manufacture of lactose, $5,500. The total amount already granted, which includes some grants prior to this year, is $27,111,749. The total amount required to March 31, 1946, is $27,050,000. Total amount required—it says here for 1945-46 but I think that is the total down to the end of 1945-46, according to what I have been reading—is $54,161,749.

Mr. BRACKEN: Would the Minister of Agriculture have this information put in form and then place it on Hansard to-morrow the way it is given, because it is a little difficult to follow?

Mr. GARDINER: I could have a table made up and bring it in when we start the estimates again and ask to have it placed on Hansard. I take it that what is wanted is a total of subsidies paid right through the war period.

Mr. BRACKEN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the hon. member like that divided into producer subsidies and consumer subsidies?

Mr. BRACKEN: All subsidies administered by the minister's department.

Mr. GARDINER: That would be only producer subsidies.

Mr. BRACKEN: When we come to other departments we can get the subsidies paid by them and then have the whole picture.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I should like to know if the annual dominion-provincial production conference which was organized some years ago and which is representative of dominion and provincial departments of agriculture and farm organizations is to meet to make an all-out effort to cooperate in the production of food. I think it is essential that this conference should meet and that the techniques and cooperation which are provided be continued in the post-war period.

Mr. GARDINER: The conference is to be held on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. This will be the first meeting after the war, and it is our intention to continue to hold them as long as we can secure the cooperation of the provinces and the farm organizations. Therefore I think they will continue right on through the years. We believe they are helpful and serve a good purpose.

I would call the attention of the leader of the opposition to the fact that a return is to brought down in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for York East (Mr. McGregor) on October 7. The hon. member asked what amount had been paid in subsidies by the government from September 1, 1939, to September 15, 1945, and on what products were subsidies paid during that period and how much on each. This return I think could properly be put on Hansard, although it might be well to bring it up to date. It deals not only with the subsidies we have been dealing with but also with freight subsidies which work into the production of farm products. All kinds of subsidies are given and my hon. friend could very easily take out those that he has in mind.

Mr. BRACKEN: That seems a good suggestion. If there is any item omitted in that return, perhaps the minister would see that it too is included on Hansard.

Mr. GARDINER: I think the part of the return which I have is an answer to those matters which concern agriculture, and it covers other subsidies which we have not discussed to-day.

Mr. WRIGHT: I hold in my hand the proposals of the government of Canada to the dominion-provincial conference, and on page 9 I find the following:

> To eliminate war-time subsidies related to the stabilization policy when inflationary pressures begin to ease.

What, if any, agricultural products would come under that clause? There must be some subsidies being paid by the Department of Agriculture which would come under that classification.

Mr. GARDINER: There will come a time, I do not know just how soon or how late, when we will transfer from the policy we have been following during the war to the policy provided under the legislation to establish floor prices which we passed at the last regular session. Under that the Department of Agriculture is provided with $200,000,000 to be used as a circulating fund to do during the transitional period following the war what we were doing under the War Measures Act during the war, that is, to carry on in principle the same kind of thing. When the time comes to discontinue the payment of subsidies under the war measure, then the board that has to do with the other measure will come into operation. Whatever conditions will have to be met, I anticipate, if it is necessary to use that fund, we will use it. The plan under which it will work is one of two ways. Either we will say to the people who are new in the business, whether co-operatives or persons in private business, "Go ahead and market the products," and if it is marketed at a price which is as high as or higher than we consider a reasonable floor, it will not be necessary to use any of the $200,000,000 by way of assistance. But if it is necessary to market the product at a lower return than that, then we will say to these parties, "Go ahead and market the product at whatever you can get for it and you will be paid the difference between what you get and the floor price. In other words, you can proceed to pay the farmer the floor price and any difference between that and what you actually get for it will be refunded out of this fund." That is a subsidy, but it will not continue under the plan which has been followed during war time; it will be continued under the floor prices measure. Does that answer the question?

Mr. WRIGHT: It does not answer as to the specific products which will come under it.

Mr. GARDINER: I should have said that the $200,000,000 is provided for all products excepting grain.

Mr. WRIGHT: Does that include barley, oats, flax or rye, or just wheat?

Mr. GARDINER: No; it leaves all the grain to the wheat board. The board which is set up for handling farm products under what we have come to call the floor prices measure has $200,000,000 for everything but grain. At the time the bill was discussed the government announced as a policy that similar provision of funds will be made to the wheat board when the time comes that that provision is required; a similar provision will be made to supply funds to the wheat board to do the same thing in relation to grain. In other words, the $200,000,000 is to operate outside of grain. It can be understood that we have had experiences in the past when it would have required perhaps the whole $200,000,000 to handle grain. That was not considered a sufficient sum to take grain in, and it was provided at the time as part of the government's policy that if it became necessary, in order to maintain the proper floor level of grain, sufficient funds with which to do it would be made available to the wheat board.

Mr. WRIGHT: Can we take it from the minister's remarks that it will be the policy of the government to see that, either under present subsidies or the floor price legislation, the prices of agricultural products are maintained at present levels as long as production costs remain at their levels as of the present time?

Mr. GARDINER: I would not want to say definitely that on every single farm product that would necessarily carry through, but I would say that that is the general principle underlying the policy. There may be some products—I am not prepared to say at the moment—to which we gave special consideration during war time because we required production for a special purpose during the war and may not require it for the same purpose during peace time, for instance, some of the oils which we required and of which we promoted the production because they could not be obtained at that time from the East Indies; it may not be advisable, all things considered, to try to persuade farmers to produce such products during peace time.

Mr. WRIGHT: In that connection, if that is the policy of the government I cannot understand what has taken place with respect to the production of bacon in this country. The minister through the policies he has instituted has certainly caused the production of bacon to decrease greatly. He gave his policy in the house not very long ago, when he stated that as far as the production of bacon in western Canada was concerned, and I quote his words as reported in Hansard of September 24, at page 408:

> This simply means that a farmer in the west must make a decision, and must have an argument with himself as to whether it pays best to feed barley or to sell it, and that is exactly the position in which we wanted him.

It seems to me that the production of hogs and bacon is an important part of our economy. It is something in which there is and has been a profit. It is an article which is needed. Yet the minister, through various types of legislation and the control of the price of grain, has reduced the profit on the production of that product, especially in western Canada, to a point where it is uneconomic at the present time. I have come from what I believe is the largest hog-producing district in Saskatchewan. More hogs have been raised in the Carrot river valley than anywhere else in Saskatchewan and, probably, in the three western provinces, but a serious situation exists there at the present time. From observation I am sure there has been a reduction of production there of at least forty per cent; as yet the trend has not been stopped, and I am just wondering what steps, if any, the minister is taking to arrest that decline or to get people back to the production in western Canada of this important product. I believe, given natural conditions, there is no other place in the world where pork can be produced cheaper than in western Canada. We grow the grain, and the hogs are raised on the farms where the grain is grown, so that the only freight which has to be paid is the freight on the finished product. But the policy which the government has adopted, of making it practically uneconomic to produce hogs there, is certainly creating a situation which I think should be remedied.

Mr. GARDINER: I wish to take just a moment or two, since it is six o'clock. The present position is that there is a reduction of fifteen per cent in the production of meat in Canada this year as compared with last year.

Mr. WRIGHT: I was referring to hogs.

Mr. GARDINER: Grain is needed for one purpose just as much as for the other. If you are going to finish beef you finish it largely with grain.

Mr. WRIGHT: May I just point out to the minister—

Mr. GARDINER: I ask the hon. member to wait a moment if he wants a reply; if not, I will sit down. The real reduction in meat in Canada is fifteen per cent, and it is to a large extent the same farmers who feed hogs who also feed cattle. Some farmers feed hogs and do not feed cattle; some feed cattle and do not feed hogs; but, generally speaking, the hogs and cattle are both fed on the family-sized farms across Canada; they are not fed on the bigger ranches. About ten per cent only of the beef is fed there; the great proportion is fed on the small farms. The general situation is that you cannot have at this time more hogs in Canada than you have now. My hon. friends keep getting up and saying that the government has some policy which has resulted in there being fewer hogs. The government has not anything of the kind, and the government policy with regard to it has had very little to do with the matter, either when we had a big increase or a considerable drop. I can remember when the opposition, sitting where they are now although there were not so many of them, used to tell us that we were taking credit for what providence had done. I said at that time that I would much rather be with providence than against it. While we do not take all the credit for increasing the production, may I point out that if our hon. friends thought increased production should follow the good weather of 1942, they should, in accordance with that same idea, agree that when the production of grain is not so great, we cannot have as high a production of live stock. Let me put on the record the figures for the carryover of oats at the end of the year. From 1935 to 1939 the average carryover was 35,000,000 bushels at the end of the crop year. The average from 1940 to 1944 was 85,000,000 bushels. Even after we had fed greater numbers of live stock we still had a carryover of 85,000,000 bushels. For the year 1944-45, ended July last, the carryover was 98,000,000 bushels, after we had fed more live stock and exported grain. For 1945-46 we estimate that it will be 46,000,000 bushels, and for 1946-47 it is estimated that it will be 25,000,000 bushels. Our production of live stock goes up and down with the production of grain, and the production of grain goes up and down with the weather, as everyone knows who has been on a farm; particularly is that so where grain growing is the main activity.

With regard to barley, the situation is much the same. The carryover at the end of the year, for the period from 1935 to 1939, was 9,000,000 bushels; from 1940 to 1944 it was 33,000,000 bushels; for 1944-45 it was 29,000,000 bushels; and for 1945-46 it is estimated at 15,000,000 bushels. It is estimated that we may have an increase in barley because of the increased acreage in 1946-47.

The policy of the government has been to study these figures, to encourage the production of feed grain and to estimate what is going to happen on the basis of grain production. When hon. members in the early part of the war were getting up continually and saying that next year we would have a decrease in production we kept continually saying, "No; we are not." The only reason we had for that statement was that our statisticians were able to assure us that there was such a condition prevailing on the land across Canada that we would have an increased production of feed grain, and as we had an increased production of feed grain the farmers would feed more live stock. In order to make sure that we would have enough we paid $4 an acre to take land out of wheat and put it into feed grain and summer fallow for the purpose of increasing grain production. That was our policy and we got wheat acreage down from 28,000,000 acres to 17,000,000 acres and summer fallow acreage up by 6,000,000 acres, while oats and barley acreage was up. In 1942 we produced twice as much feed grain as in any other year.

I am quite prepared to agree with hon. members who point out that at that time the weather had a lot to do with the matter, but the weather has had a lot to do with cutting down production since. Hon. members have been telling us for three years that we have had a drought on the boundary line between Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. BURTON: You did not raise hogs there.

Mr. GARDINER: We raised hogs there in 1942-43. My hon. friend was sitting in the legislature when the money was voted to take hogs into that part of the country, and a great part of our increased production came from that dried-out area as well as from other areas where there was an increase. With the drought of 1943 some of these men went out of hogs. With the drought of 1944 more went out of hogs, and with the drought of this year still more have gone out of hogs. Live stock is still there, with the result that one member asked me this afternoon how we would provide feed for the live stock in view of the fact that with the early coming of winter live stock cannot be fed in that section of the country at present.

The problem has always been one, first, for the provincial governments, and when they have not enough grain in their own province to move into dried-out areas within their own boundary lines they have come to us and asked us to provide grain out of some other province. We have cooperated with the governments in the freezing of grain in those areas, and it is the freezing of grain in those areas to complete the feeding of hogs that has made it possible for the farmers to produce the numbers coming from there now. The method of freezing grain there was simply to tell the farmers to sell that grain for feeding hogs instead of selling it to make beer. We said, "You will get the same price for grain to feed hogs as you would have got for grain for brewing purposes." Because we did that we are getting higher production than otherwise. I wish to repeat that much of the reduction is due to the fact that we have not had very favourable weather in the last two or three years. Our grain production is down.

Mr. BURTON: The minister will recall that on different occasions in this house I pointed out that from a sow that went over the butcher's block you would not raise a litter of pigs.

Mr. GARDINER: That is quite true; no sow that goes over the butcher's block will raise a litter of pigs. But my hon. friend knows, as I know, that a contented sow feeds much more easily than one which is not contented, and there are many sows that go over the block which were not intended to raise litters of pigs. One cannot take statistics with regard to sows that go over the block and base conclusions upon it. The basis of feeding all live stock is grain, and the policy which the government intends to lay before the provinces next Monday is the policy of the war years of producing more feed grain in order that we may get more hogs and cattle. Without more feed grain we cannot finish even the hogs and cattle we now have.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

THE BUDGET

DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, November 27, consideration of the motion of Hon. J. L. Ilsley (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario), and on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coldwell.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, when eleven o'clock came last night I was just about to sum up what I had been trying to say in the budget debate. I had advanced certain principles which I thought should be embodied in a national budget that would be adequate to meet the economic conditions of our time. In my concluding remarks I wish to advance the idea that the time has come when the Canadian people will have to make a great decision, and that decision will be the matter of deciding the framework within which we intend to develop democracy.

Last night I tried to show that it is not possible to develop a true democracy within the framework of capitalism or so-called free enterprise. The profit motive itself is entirely undemocratic. The relationships which the conflicts in the industrial field produce between the employer and the employee are undemocratic. The relationship which exists to-day between the great monopolies and the farming industry is undemocratic. The profit motive is undemocratic because it cannot be universalized. You can universalize the ballot to every person of a certain age; that is democratic. You cannot universalize profit because it is not possible for everyone to make profit. It is only possible for a privileged few to make profits, and they must be made at the expense of the great majority of the people. Therefore the relationships which the present system leaves amongst people is entirely democratic.

These are some of the things to which we must give a great deal more attention than we have hitherto been accustomed to do. I suggest that the great democratic ideal which this country held throughout the years of war should be the objective in time of peace. It is true that in the war years our democratic ideals were more or less negative. We were in a struggle to retain that measure of democracy which we had achieved, and that itself was worth fighting for, but it was negative. The time has come for us to make a positive effort to build a true and real democracy in this country. With regard to the budget in that respect I would suggest to the minister that the budget should be prepared for at least a five-year period instead of from year to year, thus giving the government an opportunity to carry out its own policy. As I understand it, this policy is to entrust the affairs of the nation to private enterprise, and when private enterprise breaks down, as everybody believes it will break down, then the government is going to enter into fairly extensive public expenditures to take up the slack which will result from failures of private enterprise. If that is to be done, and if we are to be protected from the swings from booms to slumps, then a five-year period would be the better basis of a budget, and would leave the government a better opportunity to protect itself and to protect the country from the failures of private enterprise.

I wish to make just one more observation in relation to War Assets Corporation and the surplus goods in their hands. In particular, I desire to make a remark about the surplus goods which could be used for educational purposes. Such goods have already been paid for by the Canadian people. I deplore the idea of passing these goods into the hands of the manufacturers, and then having them sell them again to the Canadian public. All goods which can be used in public institutions, such as our educational institutions, should be given to these schools and colleges absolutely free. The same idea applies to medical institutions, hospitals, and so forth, and also to materials which were used in dramatics. They could be distributed also to communities to be used in the interests of art and for the recreation of the general public.

Then we have a great demand from farmers and communities for equipment which is now being declared surplus. For instance, the people of Dawson Creek want to purchase a road-grader from the R.C.A.F. I have not been able to have that done for them. The government refuses to consider their application; the chances are that the road-graders there will be sent in to the control of War Assets Corporation, shipped out of the country, and sold for a song to the big interests, and these people will never have a chance to purchase it at all. This may not have much to do with the budget, but I suggest to the government that they give consideration to what I have said in that regard.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything on the budget, and even now I rise merely to make a few comments in order to clarify the stand of this group on the two amendments which are before the house.

As the house is well aware, only two amendments may be moved on the budget. Therefore we in this group find ourselves at this time in the position of being unable to move an amendment. Consequently we have to take a definite stand on the amendments that are now before the house. First of all, I wish to refer to the amendment moved by the C.C.F. I should like to refer to page 2565 of Hansard and quote what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) had to say with reference to the amendment moved by the Conservative party. I quote as follows:

> . . . I am going to move an amendment; for although we of the C.C.F. could vote for the words of the amendment, we cannot vote for what we believe to be the substance of the speech which introduced it or what lies behind the words of the amendment.

No doubt the leader of the C.C.F. party was perfectly justified in taking that attitude; but since he has done so in reference to the Conservative amendment, I am sure he will not object to the members of this group applying the same sort of reasoning to his own amendment. If we take the C.C.F. amendment and apply to it that kind of reasoning, I want to ask the house just exactly what we have. I am satisfied that if you asked every

hon. member to say exactly what the C.C.F. amendment means, under that sort of reasoning, probably you would get as many different answers as there are members. I would not hesitate to say that this amendment not only denotes but connotes complete socialization of industry in progressive stages. I should like to read the first part of the amendment; that is the only part to which I intend to refer. It is found on page 2566 of Hansard:

That the amendment be amended by adding to paragraph (a) the words, "which require the use of our national credit in terms of public need . . ."

I should like to pause there for a moment, because it is interesting to note these words. We in this group have often used that expression in reference to certain national affairs; and invariably in the past when we used that phrase the C.C.F., when moving an amendment, have moved to strike out those words and substitute in their place "nationalization of the chartered banks." So that it is quite interesting at this time to note that they no longer advocate nationalization of the chartered banks but rather advocate the use of the national credit.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, we do advocate the nationalization of the banks as a means of using the national credit.

Mr. QUELCH: In the past they have not been satisfied to leave it at that but found it necessary to put in their amendments the words "nationalization of the chartered banks." In this case they have not found it necessary to do so.

Mr. COLDWELL: You cannot move the same thing twice in one session.

Mr. QUELCH: That has not been moved this session.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, it has.

Mr. QUELCH: I now proceed with the amendment:

". . . to make possible a large-scale investment programme, the public reconversion of war industries for peace-time needs, the public development of new industries, of scientific research and of our natural resources."

You will note, Mr. Speaker, in the amendment the word "public"; "the public reconversion of war industries for peace-time needs, the public development of new industries, of scientific research and of our natural resources," so that I think everyone will agree that this amendment at least must mean that war industries changed over to the production of peace-time goods will be nationalized or socialized or publicly owned or however you like to put it, and also that this will apply to all new industries, scientific research and natural resources. That is the conclusion to which one would come on merely reading the amendment; but if we apply to it the reasoning of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and read between the lines, then I say we get a totally different interpretation. I think the best place to go for an interpretation of what it really means is to the annual convention of the party held in Montreal last fall. I hold in my hand a quotation from the Montreal Gazette dated November 30, 1944. There in a reference to consideration of what was apparently an election manifesto, and I quote:

The original section submitted to the convention and which drew opposition from delegates Harold Winch, C.C.F. house leader in the British Columbia legislature, and convention chairman Colin Cameron, of Courtenay, B.C., urged:

"The socialization and democratic control, under either public or cooperative ownership, of key industries which are monopolistic in operation, in order to free the Canadian economy from the domination and restrictive practices of monopoly control and to make possible national planning for maximum production."

Mr. Lewis said he did not take second place to Mr. Winch and Mr. Cameron in advocating ultimate complete socialism, but that "at the present time I am concerned with winning an election."

"We are now a strong political force in Canada," he said, "and we are on the eve of winning power. We must think in responsible terms as if we were in power."

A motion by Mr. K. Han, a C.C.F. candidate in West York, to have the section replaced by a section of the Regina manifesto was defeated by an overwhelming majority of the delegates after he stated that Mr. Lewis wanted "power at any cost," and that the present motion had been drafted for the sake of political expediency.

Mr. COLDWELL: I rise to a question of privilege. As the leader of the C.C.F., I wish to say that this report was denied as inaccurate. No such thing was said by Mr. Lewis at that convention.

Mr. QUELCH: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is very strange but these days practically every time a report is quoted in the press the C.C.F. deny it.

Mr. GILLIS: Why go to the Tory press for your authority?

Mr. QUELCH: I have in my room a similar quotation from a newspaper which certainly does not belong to the Tory press.

Mr. GILLIS: We will give you some official documents if you wish information.

Mr. QUELCH: I will give you another quotation instead, then; but before leaving that one I wish to say that personally I do not for a moment doubt that it is correct. They may want to put a different interpretation on what has been said, but I think the meat of the thing is there, that they did not think it wise to advocate at this time complete socialization; they wanted to soft-pedal things just before the election. I can honestly say that to-day I do not know what the C.C.F. stands for.

An hon. MEMBER: Who does?

Mr. QUELCH: Let me give an example. A few years ago in my constituency quite a movement was on foot to try to get co-operation between the C.C.F. and other progressive forces. I suggested that the C.C.F. stood only for the socialization of monopolistic institutions.

The SPEAKER: Order. I should like to remind hon. gentlemen that when an hon. member has the floor no interruption may take place without his consent.

Mr. QUELCH: Since there was quite a bit of noise in the chamber perhaps I had better repeat what I just said. I was saying that in my constituency a few years ago there was a good deal of interest in regard to the possibilities of cooperation between progressive groups. Speaking at a meeting, I stated that as far as the C.C.F. were concerned they only believed in the socialization of monopolistic institutions. A C.C.F. supporter in the back of the hall got up and demanded that I withdraw that statement. He said it was an absolute misinterpretation of the C.C.F. stand, that they stood for absolute socialization of all industry. You find that attitude in many places, especially in the west, even if that is not the attitude in the east. But where there is smoke there is fire, and I suppose there must be some reason for this dispatch from the Montreal convention. I should not think the press entirely imagined it; there must have been some reason for making a statement of that kind.

However, Mr. Speaker, let us go to western Canada. I should like to go to Calgary instead of Montreal because I think Calgary is a more progressive city; and perhaps the C.C.F. will be more satisfied with this quotation. It is dated November 11, 1943, and appeared in the Calgary Herald, referring to a speech made there by Mr. Winch. I am not going to quote the whole speech; I wish to quote only that part relative as to whether or not the C.C.F. stands for full socialism, or pink socialism or red socialism or whatever it may be. So that I am going to quote only that part; I am not going to quote the rest of it; I am sure the C.C.F. would take great exception to it:

> Mr. Winch declared that if and when his party assumes power at Ottawa it will institute socialism immediately.

That seems pretty definite and I do not think it has ever been denied. So again I say that if we use the reasoning toward the C.C.F. amendment as suggested by the leader of the C.C.F. party in connection with the Progressive Conservative amendment, then we are bound to come to the conclusion that this amendment means the socialization of all industry in Canada—maybe not to-morrow, maybe gradually and in stages, so much this year and so much next year. But I think most hon. members will agree the last general election showed clearly that the people of Canada were turning thumbs down on socialism at this time. If there is any doubt about that so far as some parts of Canada are concerned, certainly there can be no doubt as far as Alberta is concerned. The people of that province have turned thumbs down doubly in so far as the C.C.F. programme is concerned, first at the provincial election and then at the federal one.

I should like to say a few words about the amendment offered by the Progressive Conservative party, and I shall do as was suggested by the leader of the C.C.F., namely, follow the same line of reasoning as they followed. But before leaving the C.C.F. amendment, I might add that in view of the fact that it definitely does stand for the complete socialization of industry, this group will be voting against it.

So far as the Progressive Conservative amendment is concerned, I would turn to page 1302 of Hansard and read the amendment as it appears on that page:

> The house regrets:
> (a) That no effective plan has been proposed to ensure full production and employment;
> (b) That no satisfactory policy has been advanced for the elimination of extravagant governmental expenditures.

Just exactly what is the stand of the Progressive Conservative party, so far as governmental expenditures are concerned? If we would turn to page 1296 of Hansard we would get a pretty good idea where they stand in this regard. This is what we find:

> So far as expenditure is concerned we must make up our minds, based on the best estimate we can make of the national income, how much of this income can be safely taken by the state; and having made up our minds on this, we must then make a heroic effort to keep our expenditure within that amount.

That is to say, we must first of all decide upon the amount of money we can obtain from the people by taxation, and then curtail our expenditures down to the amount of money we obtain. In other words, it is a proposal that we return to the pre-war financial policy of the Liberal government, and attempt to balance the budget. It is the same old policy of belt-tightening that we had in the thirties.

This group has always taken a definite stand against that kind of policy, and therefore we will find it necessary to vote against the Progressive Conservative amendment.

Since the government apparently proposes to continue its policy in regard to debt finance we will also be voting against the main motion. So that we will be voting against all three—the two amendments and the main motion before the house.

If we had been in a position to move an amendment, all we would have found it necessary to do would be to strike out the word "public" from the two places in which it occurs in the amendment offered by the C.C.F. party. I refer to the word "public" where it appears before the words "reconversion" and "development". But the C.C.F. party inserted that word for a definite reason, namely, so that we might possibly be embarrassed in voting against the remainder of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COLDWELL: We put it there because we believe in it.

Mr. GILLIS: That is our policy.

Mr. QUELCH: The group to which I belong believes in a pay-as-you-go policy. That is the stand we have taken consistently ever since we came here in 1935. Our stand has always been that to the extent that taxation fails to meet government expenditures, national money should be utilized. In this way the people of Canada may be given the highest standard of living of which the country is capable, without increasing our public debt.

During the war it will be remembered that no financial restrictions were allowed to impede our war effort. Unfortunately, however, already there are signs which show that our standard of living in the future is to be governed by certain artificial monetary limitations. That is why we are opposing the main motion before the house.

Mr. W. ROSS THATCHER (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it is now almost three months since I first entered this chamber as member for the federal constituency of Moose Jaw. The current budget materially affects the well-being of my constituents and the people of Saskatchewan generally. Therefore, before it is passed I should like to make a few observations.

Speaking in parliament last September 20 the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. McGarry) made a plea with which I am entirely in accord. Addressing the government he said:

> Do not forget that you cannot have absolute peace in Canada while there is one section which is discriminated against.

I would suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) has apparently overlooked that admonition in the preparation of his budget. Once again, it seems to me, my province is a forgotten unit. In the past, one federal government after another has overlooked the vital needs of Saskatchewan. The present administration, unless it alters some of its major policies, will perpetuate serious economic injustices.

To-day, despite what the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Warren) said last evening, there is a high degree of resentment in western Canada over the fact that westerners have not yet been given economic equality with the people of central Canada. They are in fact being discriminated against in an economic way. If their grievances are not rectified, then sooner or later I believe the harmony of confederation may be disrupted.

The economic problems of the maritime provinces are similar to those we have on the prairies. I listened with interest some weeks ago to the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure) voice some of those grievances. Perhaps if all hon. members from the west and all from the maritimes, regardless of party affiliation, could get together for a few days we might be able to persuade the the administration that we are serious when we say that there is something wrong in our respective sections, and that we would like something to be done about those wrongs.

The first grievance in Saskatchewan for forty years has been the Canadian tariff structure. In times of depression and prosperity alike, the dead-weight of the tariff has borne more heavily upon my province, the one least able to bear it, than on any other province in Canada. Citizens of Saskatchewan, indeed citizens of Canada generally are indignant when they compare the prices of many articles in the United States with the prices of the same articles in Canada.

For years the government have been committed to a policy of freer trade. They have taken numerous steps in that direction. Yet the hard fact remains that the people of Western Canada are still paying exorbitant prices for hundreds of articles which they obtain from the United States.

In order to illustrate that point, with the permission of the house I should like to table a record of the tariff on ten articles as taken from the customs tariff and amendments of January 20, 1944. May I do that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. THATCHER: The table is as follows:

		General	U.S. Trade Agreement
555	Clothing, wearing apparel et cetera made from wool or similar animal fibres..	40	32½
568	Knitted garments, knitted underwear, knitted goods	45	35
611a	Boots, shoes, slippers	40	30
438a	Automobiles and trucks....	27½	17½
618b	Rubber tires — all kinds vehicles	35	25
415b	Washing machines	35	25
445d	Radios	30	..
415a	Electric refrigerators	40	25
431b	Tools, such as wrenches, screw drivers, chisels, vises,hammers, et cetera .	35	27½
427c	Machinery for dairying purposes	35	15

I happen to be in the hardware business. On August 24 of this year, my company purchased some wrenches for farm use from a firm in Chicago, Illinois. The original cost in Chicago of those wrenches was $60.75. In order to bring that merchandise into Moose Jaw the following charges had to be paid: duty, war exchange tax, sales tax, brokerage charges, and the difference on Canadian money. Those charges totalled $40.06, or 66·5 per cent of the original cost. Hon. members can see how adversely our cost of living is affected by the tariff.

We resent the tariff because it is purely and simply a form of taxation imposed by certain interests, for the most part in central Canada, on the rest of the people. It gives those interests the power to tax others to such a degree that, in many cases, of every dollar spent by a maritimer or a westerner, twenty-five cents is a direct tribute to the industrialist of central Canada.

For years our people have been compelled to purchase their necessities for the most part in a high-cost protected market. They have had no alternative. The tariff has virtually bonused the industry of central Canada.

Westerners compare such bonusing with the treatment which agriculture, their chief industry, has received. During the world depression when prices of farm products dropped to unbelievably low levels, our farmers for the most part were forced to accept those competitive world prices. With the outbreak of war, when food became scarcer prices began to go up. It looked as though at long last they might reach a reasonable level. However, before they were allowed to reach that level, in most cases they were frozen by the administration. In other words, the western farmer for almost all his products has been and still is denied competitive world prices. When world markets were low for the most part he was given no aid. Yet now, when world markets are high, he is actually prevented by government policy from taking advantage of those high prices.

In order to save time I should like to place another table on Hansard. This is a release by the Department of Agriculture covering competitive prices at St. Paul, Minnesota, and Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would direct the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the privilege of placing material on the record is granted by the unanimous consent of the house and usually to members of the government. This practice has never been recommended in this house in the past. Of course, if the hon. gentleman has the unanimous consent of the house I will grant the privilege, but if he has not I cannot.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. THATCHER: This table shows the comparative prices as of September 1, 1945, as compiled by the Department of Agriculture market information service. It shows live stock prices, low and high, for St. Paul and Winnipeg. The table is as follows:

	St. Paul Low	St. Paul High	Winnipeg Low	Winnipeg High
Steers, choice	$16 50	$17 50	$12 00	$12 00
Good, steers	14 25	16 50	10 50	11 25
Heifers, choice	15 50	17 00	11 00	11 50
Good, heifers	13 25	15 50	9 50	10 50
Cows, good	10 75	13 25	7 50	8 25

I think that will be sufficient to establish what I am trying to point out. This report shows that United States live stock prices are as much as forty-five per cent higher than similar Canadian prices. Western farmers are indignant over the government's continued refusal to allow them to take advantage of this higher market.

It is the same story with wheat. Hon. members will remember what happened on the floor of this house not very many weeks ago. The government suddenly announced one afternoon that the export price of wheat, No. 1 northern, basis Fort William, would have a ceiling of $1.55 from that time forward. The world price of wheat is approximately $2 and there is every indication that it may go higher, which means that every time a farmer in western Canada sells a bushel of wheat he is penalized approximately forty-five cents in hard cash.

We in Saskatchewan resent this policy. We feel that the government is playing Santa Claus with our money without our consent. If the national interest; if the interest of Canada as a whole, demands that wheat be sold to the people of Europe at forty-five cents less than world market prices, then the people of Canada as a whole should finance that difference and not the farmers of the west who can least afford to, and who have had no say in the making of the gift. The crux of the issue is this: While the industry of central Canada has been highly protected for years, virtually bonused by the tariff, the chief industry in my province, agriculture, not only has received no protection, but has actually been penalized by government action. We can neither buy our necessities in the United States markets, where we can purchase them cheaper, nor can we sell our agricultural products in the United States, where we could obtain much more. I suggest that that is scarcely economic justice; rather it seems to me to be economic discrimination.

I strongly criticize the current budget for its treatment of the tariff question. It has failed completely to alleviate the present hardships caused by the tariff. Indeed originally, it actually attempted to increase them. Higher tariffs were put on several items. The fact that public pressure later caused the government to withdraw those increases does not alter its original intention. The government did not withdraw the tariff on diesel engines. I understand that that tariff was put on by order in council, without any discussion by the tariff board, and certainly without any discussion in this house. In view of the professed trade policy of the government, westerners find it hard to understand its actions.

In countless public utterances, both in and out of parliament, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and numerous of his cabinet ministers have declared their intention of working toward freer trade and lower tariffs. Permit me to quote some of their statements. Our Prime Minister is reported in Maclean's magazine of February 1, 1945, as having stated:

> The Liberal party stands for the removal of barriers to trade, and is opposed to the principle of protection, which is really a levy on consumers in Canada as well as on all export industries for the benefit of protected industries . . .
> What the government favours is the progressive removal, in association with other nations, of tariff and other restrictive devices for protecting particular industries.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Claxton) is reported as having said at a foreign trade convention in New York on October 26, 1943:

> I find myself more and more attached to the approach of a ceiling on tariffs, no ceiling on trade, a ceiling on all trade restrictions.

The Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe), in a white paper of the government on reconstruction, tabled in this house last April, stated, among other things:

> Nor is the contraction of Canadian imports any part of the government's employment policy.

In short the government has been committed by numerous statements of cabinet ministers to the rejection of a high tariff policy. Yet in the current budget there is no attempt to translate these lofty words into concrete facts. The same government which has been preaching free trade for many years; the same government which only three years ago signed a document with the United States subscribing to the policy of lowering tariff barriers, now, in its first budget, actually attempted to raise the tariff in several instances.

The protective tariff has developed in central Canada a large industrial empire, but I would suggest that in doing so it has often proved harmful to the other provinces.

For many years protectionists have used the argument that the tariff was needed to protect "baby industries" while they are making a beginning. We feel that it is about time the "baby industries" grew up and stood on their feet to meet outside competition.

In years past speakers from all major parties, representing the western constituencies, have spoken in favour of lower tariffs—and I include in that category the Prime Minister and the ministers of agriculture. The people in the outlying parts of the country cannot and will not continue to bonus eastern industry at such heavy cost. Tariff reduction is a matter of national urgency. Let the government take action while there is yet time.

Perhaps the second major grievance of my province is the inequitable railway rate structure. In 1937, according to a submission of the Saskatchewan government to the Sirois commission, local railway rates in the west ranged from forty-six to seventy per cent higher than in central Canada. They have not materially altered since that time. From the beginning of settlement this high cost of transport has hindered the development of the prairies, and if it is not soon lowered it will plague the post-war planners. Permit me to illustrate this point with some figures.

The freight rate for 100 pounds of lumber moving from Megantic, Quebec, to Ingersoll, Ontario, a distance of 596 miles, is 24 cents; yet the freight rate on 100 pounds of lumber moving from Golden, British Columbia, to my own city of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, also a distance of 596 miles, is 40½ cents. In like manner the freight rate on 100 pounds of canned goods from Hamilton, Ontario, to a point in New Brunswick 800 miles away is 61½ cents; yet the freight rate from Fort William to Moose Jaw, a distance of 818 miles, on 100 pounds of canned goods is $1.04. The average rate on butter per 100 pounds in carloads from stations in Ontario and Quebec to Montreal is about 60 cents; yet butter from Moose Jaw, to reach the Toronto and Montreal market in carloads, must pay $2.05 per 100 pounds. These differences are not isolated cases. Hundreds more could be easily quoted. They are typical of the freight situation as it exists to-day in Canada.

Besides such inequalities in the general rate structure, there are certain special discriminations which have long caused heart-burnings in the western provinces. One of these is the "water-compelled" rates from eastern Canada to points on the British Columbia coast, caused by the competition of ships going through the Panama canal.

These "water-compelled" rates often mean that it costs more to ship goods from eastern Canada to many points on the prairies than it does to ship them from the east to points on the Pacific coast. As was pointed out this morning by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), the cost of sending 100 pounds of barbed wire from Montreal to Calgary is $1.98; yet the cost of sending 100 pounds of barbed wire from Montreal to Vancouver is only 95 cents, even though the latter is a thousand mile longer trip.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It should be 75 cents.

Mr. THATCHER: I believe it was changed some weeks ago, and it is now 95 cents. Similarly, the cost of sending 100 pounds of paint from Montreal to Calgary is $1.98; yet the cost of sending 100 pounds of paint from Montreal to Vancouver is only $1.50. The prairie provinces are obliged to pay higher freight charges in order that the railways may give British Columbia coastal points rates competitive with water transport. I am not saying that the rates to British Columbia are too low; we think they are the right ones; but we also think points on the prairies should have the advantage of the same rates.

The government should take action to prevent the railroads from charging higher rates to intermediate inland points than they charge to coastal points. Such a ruling, I might say, has existed in the United States since 1914, and the result is reflected in a much more equitable distribution of industry throughout the western states.

Confederation originally, I believe, was meant to be an association of provinces equal in every respect. Confederation in fact has given the provinces political equality, but I do not believe that so far it has given us economic equality, and I suggest that the railway rate structure of this country is a glaring example of that failure. We in Saskatchewan are forced to pay higher freight rates than other parts of the country. Our standard of living is adversely affected in proportion to the difference. In addition, the higher freight rates are one of the chief reasons for Saskatchewan's lack of industrial growth. New industries are handicapped from the beginning, in meeting eastern competition, by the excessive rates. The Canadian railway rate structure makes extremely difficult industrial development except in one section of the country, a strip of territory lying between Montreal and Windsor. If confederation is to mean true economic equality for Saskatchewan, freight rates in the west must come down to the level of those in central Canada. Piecemeal adjustments will not suffice.

The people of Saskatchewan will also be disappointed that the administration has not seen fit to embark on any major irrigation projects at the present time. Year after year, great quantites of good water go to Hudson bay, from the prairies. Just a few million dollars spent putting it on our rich lands would pay dividends many times over.

The three factors which I have briefly touched upon—high tariffs, high freight rates, and lack of irrigation—have all contributed to make Saskatchewan a province almost without industries.

In 1942, a war year, in the whole province only 9,800 persons were engaged in manufacturing. Compare this with the number of persons employed in manufacturing industries in some of the other provinces.

Ontario	540,000
Quebec	400,000
British Columbia	90,000
Manitoba	37,000

In 1939, only 1·81 per cent of all Canadian industrial production took place in my province. Our whole economy has been tied to the production of wheat, and the income of the province is subject to the vagaries of weather, and to the violent fluctuations of world prices.

Saskatchewan will probably always remain primarily agricultural, and yet the establishment and development of secondary industries would go a long way toward stabilizing our economy. The major problem facing this country to-day is the provision of jobs for hundreds of thousands of returning servicemen. Saskatchewan wants to play her part in providing some of these jobs; yet in order to do so she must have a large growth of her industrial capacity.

The Saskatchewan government has realized that fact and has taken some steps to remedy the situation. It has built a woollen mill in Moose Jaw, a shoe factory in Regina, and a brick plant at Estevan, as well as several fish filleting plants. But these industries, while they are certainly a step in the right direction, are only a start. If Saskatchewan is to have any substantial industrial growth, the basic factors which work against that development must be removed.

No one in this house can blame the people of the west for seeking relief from these twin burdens of the tariff and high freight rates. This is not a western problem alone; it is a Canadian problem. History has always shown, I believe, that when the west is prosperous the rest of Canada is prosperous. If this government by its policies sentences the prairies to remain tied to a strictly wheat economy, I suggest that all the people of this nation face another economic tragedy.

I appeal to the federal government: first, to establish parity between the Canadian and the United States dollar; second, to take action to bring freight rates prevailing in the western provinces down to the level of Ontario rates; third, to begin large scale irrigation programmes in western Canada as part of post-war rehabilitation plans; fourth, to bring about drastic tariff reforms.

To-day, as never before, every nation appears to be standing at the cross-roads. Trade rivalries are already chilling the friendships that existed between allied nations during the war. The world to-day is crying for leadership, and as one of the world's foremost trading nations Canada, I suggest, is well equipped to give that leadership. Tariff changes cannot be brought about if each nation waits for the other to make the first move. I believe that the federal government should immediately, or as soon as possible, make proposals to the United States and to all the nations of the British commonwealth to slash drastically trade barriers between their respective countries. If such proposals were successful other nations could later be included. Canada should give leadership in promoting freer trade. If these steps are taken by the administration I am sure that at long last the west will receive economic justice, and, moreover that the people of Canada will emerge a more united nation. I am sure also that if such steps are taken this country will be a better place in which to live.

Mr. JOSEPH IRENEE HAMEL (St. Maurice-Laflèche) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the budget debate, I should like to make a few remarks upon some problems which, to my mind, are important. I shall cover three points: 1. The present taxation system. 2. Unemployment. 3. The army.

1. As regards the present taxation system, may I say that the Income Tax Act, as it now stands, provides that an employer must deduct at the source 95 per cent of the income tax payable by his employee. The tax is calculated not on the income for the whole year, but on what was earned during a given pay period, that is one week, two weeks or one month, according to the method of payment followed by the employer.

In my humble opinion such a system entails two very serious points of discrimination:

(a) While in theory the employer retains but 95 per cent of the tax payable by his employee, it is found in practice that by the end of the year he has retained much more than what the employee actually owed. It is easy to understand how this can happen.

An employee may earn $40 for one week, while drawing only $20 the following week, and losing a full week's salary afterwards. It might be argued that a readjustment is made at the end of the year. I say that statistics show that no such readjustment takes place.

During 1943-44 the government had to refund in 930,471 cases taxes that had wrongly been deducted at the source. In 1944-45 they had to make 1,041,264 refunds. The income tax is already so high and weighs heavily enough on the men in the lower salary brackets that no one should go as far as deducting more than they have to pay. When a legislation harms but a small number of people, it can be said that it is a necessary evil and that it is in the public interest, but when the harm is done to more than one million people, it behooves the government to rectify such a system. It should be noted that the huge number of 1,041,264 includes but the refunds which have actually been made by the income tax collector, but the number of justified applications submitted by ratepayers perhaps reaches two million, although no official figures are available.

Without vouching for its accuracy, I venture to suggest this figure which is based on the many complaints I have received from taxpayers in my constituency of Saint-Maurice-Laflèche.

(b) The second unfair feature of the present system concerns all taxpayers since it entails heavy and useless expense on the part of the treasury. The figures speak for themselves. Last year, the government refunded over one million dollars. This means that the income tax collector received over one million letters, that a corresponding number of files were brought out and checked, that over one million cheques were printed and as many envelopes addressed or at least sealed.

Supposing that one man spends half an hour on each case, this means that the government must occupy 300 employees at refunding amounts collected in excess. By taking $1,800 as the average annual salary of such an employee, I find that these refunds cost the treasury anywhere from $500,000 to $600,000 a year. These figures, Mr. Speaker, are no indication of the trouble or expense to which the taxpayer has been put nor of the various calls he may have had to make, nor do they give any idea of the hardship inflicted on small wage earners by this unfair deduction which is refunded only two or three years later.

Mr. Speaker, among the various ways of improving on this situation, I shall insist on the following:

1. Forsake the method of deduction at the source, as far as the small wage earner is concerned.

2. Allow him at the beginning of the year to draw up an estimate of his earnings and to authorize his employer to deduct the amount he thinks will be expected of him, letting him make any required adjustment at the end of the year.

3. Collect only 50 per cent instead of deducting 95 per cent at the source.

To my mind these three somewhat radical methods would greatly help in removing the rank injustice actually inflicted on small wage earners.

Now I should like to say a word in regard to unemployment which threatens our country and more particularly my own constituency. Two war plants have closed down, one at La Tuque, almost a year ago, and the other at Shawinigan. The workers of Shawinigan, Grand'Mère and La Tuque are greatly affected by this shut-down. If those plants cannot be used by large industries, I suggest that they be turned over to the municipal corporations which, in cooperation with the chambers of commerce, will find some means of using them in the interests of small industries. Action along those lines has already been taken at Granby and in the wonderful town of Grand'-Mère and the results were conclusive.

However, as unemployment is a basic economic problem among other problems which are perhaps just as fundamental, I do not propose to discuss it further to-night.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in regard to demobilization and deserters.

[Mr. Hamel.]

The war in Europe has ended over six months ago and the war with Japan almost four months ago, and a large number of young men are still held in military camps where they are wasting their time. Eight out of ten service men whom I have met have stated that they do absolutely nothing useful in the army.

A large number have requested their discharge but they were told that they did not have enough points. I suggest that this policy be dropped and that the request of all those young men who apply for their discharge be granted immediately. I say, Mr. Speaker, all those who request their discharge, for I would not advocate a policy which would throw into the streets hundreds of thousands of men who to-morrow might swell the ranks of the unemployed.

But when a soldier wishes to be demobilized and take his chances on life and the future, we have no right to deprive him of that opportunity. I would also add that the present reestablishment policy is unfair to the returned man who has complied with the legislation of his country. In my humble opinion, the problem of reestablishment is the same for all, no matter where they may have served. With the exception of those who have been wounded or have laid down their lives, and for whom I would be satisfied with asking for more generous allowances, the sane and fair basis for computing the reestablishment grants should be mainly the length of service. The financial losses of our soldiers are not determined by the place where they have served but by the length of their stay in the army. Whether I have mounted guard on the water front at Vancouver or on the shores of England, after four years of absence, I would naturally have lost my pre-war business; the loss of salary due to my leaving a job would be the same no matter what theatre of war I may have been sent to. The financial losses being similar, the reestablishment grants should be identical.

I now conclude, Mr. Speaker. In the course of the present session the case of the deserters has been mentioned time and again. Answers to various questions seem to indicate that the greatest number of them are to be found in the province of Quebec. This fact is no surprise to me, on the contrary, I wonder why there have not been more of them. Mr. Speaker, if the ordinary criminal is entitled to claim for his defence justifying excuses and extenuating circumstances, I hope that the same right will not be denied these young people who, in most cases, are merely the victims of mistakes made by certain public men and, I might say, more especially by the party in power. I shall not undertake to remind the house of the various political movements launched in Quebec from 1919 to the present time. I shall be content to point out that from 1919 to 1939 the Liberal party have shown a tremendous zeal in promoting, in our province, a current of thought opposed to militarism and participation. Even in 1938, the French-Canadian members of the Liberal cabinet promised the electors of Lotbinière and another Montreal constituency, St. Henri, I believe, that our country would abstain completely from any participation in a foreign war. And I say without fear of contradiction, that the advantage secured by the Liberal party over their Conservative opponents, in Quebec, is almost solely due to this stand against participation. I must also state that at that time, the military policy of the C.C.F. party was the same.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) stated:

> In the event of war, Canada's maximum contribution would be supplying of foodstuffs and material and under no circumstances would conscription be instituted to provide an expeditionary force overseas.

Even in the 1940 election, after Canada had declared war, it was claimed that participation would be kept on a voluntary basis.

I wish to quote a statement made by the leader of the Conservative party, who at that time was the Hon. Mr. Manion. I take this quotation from the March 5, 1940 issue of Le Devoir. Here is what the Hon. Mr. Manion had to say during that election campaign, on article 3 of his platform:

> To my mind, conscription has failed in the last war because it resulted in the mobilization of 10,000 men only out of a total of over half a million and it caused disunion in this country.
> For the above-mentioned reason, that is because conscription is not necessary in this war and because it is the duty of a public man to maintain our national unity, as I have stated on other occasions, I am entirely opposed to conscription. I made that clear on March 30 last, that is a year ago, in the House of Commons, and in the press, even before Mr. Mackenzie King and Mr. Lapointe had made their statements against conscription.
> I have publicly expressed that view in this election campaign long before my arrival in the province of Quebec . . .

And now let us hear what the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe said at that time. I want it clearly understood, Mr. Speaker, that all political parties did their utmost to foster in the province of Quebec an antiparticipation and anticonscription spirit and that the army deserters have been sadly deluded, as I will establish in a moment. On March 25, the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe spoke as follows:

> Canada has voluntarily entered this war as a sovereign nation and will voluntarily continue the struggle . . .
> The formidable battle which the liberal party has always waged against a compulsory system of enrolment has brought about a change of heart among the Conservatives in parliament and elsewhere in the country.
> It is up to the people to decide whether they will place their trust in these last-minute converts . . .

The Right Hon. Mr. Lapointe was claiming that he had turned the Conservatives against conscription.

> . . . or in those who have always advocated the same policy and opposed a compulsory system of enrolment.
> I solemnly declared in the House of Commons that not only would I refuse to be a member of a government that might enact conscription, but that I would oppose any government that tried to pass such a piece of legislation. I am still of the same mind and have expressed a similar opinion all over Canada.

Mr. Speaker, those words uttered by the various political leaders were spread by all the speakers of the various political parties, and they were quoted by the newspapers in all provinces. Eventually conscription was imposed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do not hesitate to say in view of those facts that those young men who have been reluctant to report and even those who have deserted were the victims of a mistake. There might be differences of opinion as to whether the mistake occurred at the time it was promised that conscription would not be resorted to or when this promise was broken. But I believe that it will be recognized that a mistake has been made. And due to this mistake, some young men are now serving sentences of several months' detention and their wives and children are suffering hardships. The provincial or municipal authorities may be compelled to provide for a large number of those families in distress.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty to ask the government to grant, as soon as possible, an amnesty to all deserters to enable them to make a fresh start.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Income War Tax Act, and to provide

1. That for 1945 and subsequent taxation years the capital element in contractual annuities be exempt from tax.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I congratulate the minister and the government on the fact that at last they have seen the wisdom and the equity of separating the capital element from the income element in annuity payments. I should like also to tender my thanks to the commission that sat on taxation of annuities and family corporations. Mr. William C. Ives, retired Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Alberta; Doctor D. A. MacGibbon of Winnipeg, and Mr. M. W. Mackenzie, formerly of Montreal and now Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, constituted that commission, and I believe they did an excellent job on the question of annuities and family corporations.

[Mr. Healey.]

The situation is one that should have been taken up years ago. The injustice under it cried for relief for many years, but the minister and the Department of National Revenue felt that they were so burdened with work that they could not find a satisfactory solution and at last they arrived at the happy thought of appointing a royal commission on the subject. All I have to say is that a royal commission could as easily have been appointed many years previously and much less injustice would have been done many of our citizens.

Under the same caption comes resolution 2 which I will not discuss just now, but will the minister clarify the situation in regard to government annuities? At the present time government annuities taken out before a certain date are free from income tax on both capital and the income element.

Some years ago the government prevented holders of contracts that called for less than the maximum amount of $1,200 a year from increasing the amount to $1,200, which was their understanding of their right prior to that time. I believe that now, if the holder of a contract that calls for $1,200 at some future date wishes, not to enlarge his contract—because he already has a maximum—but to mature the contract at an earlier date, and he was given the understanding by the government agent—whether of the Department of Labour or of the Department of Finance is not of great concern—he could mature the contract at an earlier date and have it tax free. I see nothing in the report of the Ives commission or in the bare bones of the resolution which would throw any light on that matter and I would ask the minister to clarify it if he can.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): That is a technical question for me to answer without a little notice. I shall just have to read the question and try to answer it later. I do not know that I need to say anything more about it now. I think that it is the best way to deal with it.

Mr. JACKMAN: All I can say is that the Department of National Revenue in its arbitrary manner, which perhaps it cannot help unless it gets greater clarification of the law which this house passes, rules one way at one time, and subsequently on the same set of circumstances rules another way. Nobody knows where he stands on this matter, and before the budget resolutions are through I hope that the minister, with the assistance of his experts and his colleague, will be able to give a ruling to the people who are interested in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall resolution 1 carry?

Mr. JACKMAN: No; stand.

Mr. ILSLEY: Has the hon. gentleman's question anything at all to do with the resolution? Is it not a separate matter entirely on which he wants information?

Mr. JACKMAN: No, most definitely not. If the minister would read the resolution he would see that it states:

That for 1945 and subsequent taxation years the capital element in contractual annuities be exempt from tax.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: What I wish to know is whether or not those government annuities, which are cognate to this resolution—they are contractual annuities—will be free of tax as to both elements of capital and income. I refer to those taken out before a certain date, as the government advertised.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that resolution 1 carries, and that the minister will make a further statement on the resolution at a later sitting of the committee.

Mr. CASE: Before resolution 1 carries I should like to know by what formula they determine the capital element in contractual annuities which will be exempt from taxation. If there is no change at all, how is the capital element determined? What index is used to determine the capital element in a contractual annuity?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is, of course, a difficult question. This is what hon. gentlemen were advocating for years. I do not know that they realized the difficulties of separating capital from interest. I can assure the committee that I have learned quite a lot about the question in the last few months. The definition of the capital element in an annuity will be dealt with when we are on the bill. I can deal with the way in which the capital element is defined as distinct from the interest element in the annuity when the bill is before the house.

Now, with regard to the question asked by the hon. member for Rosedale, he asked whether annuities which have been advertised as being exempt are to be wholly exempt. Is that the question? The exemption of annuities is covered by law and that law has not changed.

Mr. JACKMAN: Surely the minister is not suggesting that dominion government annuities which are entirely tax free up to $1,200 are to be taxed as to interest element?

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not say that. I want to get the hon. gentleman's question clear. Is it that annuities which have been advertised as entirely free from income tax are to be free? Is that not the question? Whether they are free of income tax as to both capital and interest depends upon the exemption in the law, which has not changed at all and is not being changed by this.

Mr. JACKMAN: This whole matter of dominion government annuities is one, which, I may say, I was quite shocked about when the minister virtually broke the word of the dominion government in regard to them. The matter needs clarification at the present time. The annuities are sold by the Department of Labour, and certain representations were always made in connection with them. One was that if you took out an annuity for no matter how small the amount you could always enlarge it up to $1,200, which was the maximum, to look after your old age. The government realized that some of those contracts were improvident, particularly when taxes became very high, and they said that even though it may have been represented to you that you could enlarge it, you could not enlarge it for any more than you actually stipulated for at the time. That was the first breaking of the government's word.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that correct?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is entirely incorrect.

Mr. JACKMAN: The Department of Labour did not do so, but the Department of Finance did, and you must look upon the action not only of Labour but of Finance before you find out where you are going to stand, because if the Department of Labour sells them with that understanding, namely, that the income from those annuities will be free of tax and then the law is changed by the Department of Finance, then, of course, you have two departments of the same organization working at cross-purposes, and if one will not assume the responsibility for the other we have certainly come to a very sorry state of affairs.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. gentleman says that I have broken the word of the Dominion of Canada. I deny that.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister admitted it before.

Mr. ILSLEY: I deny it most emphatically, and with a very great deal of resentment. The condition with regard to annuities was this. They were free of taxes up until June, 1940. There was no undertaking that they would always be tax free. On the other hand, what we did say was this: we recognized that if a person had parted with his money and paid for an annuity thinking that it would be tax free—

Mr. JACKMAN: Why did he think so?

Mr. FRASER: A government agency said so.

Mr. ILSLEY: Just wait until I finish. We recognized that if he parted with his money and paid for an annuity we should say that the annuity which he bought with the money he had parted with up to that time should be tax free; that we carried through. But there are all kinds of people all over the country who paid a dollar and bought an annuity, which gave them the option to increase it up to $1,200, and they just sat back waiting until a more convenient time would come, or it would be more opportune for them to put some more money into that annuity and get it. Now there was no promise whatever by the government on the statute books, none whatever—

Mr. JACKMAN: Not on the statute books.

Mr. ILSLEY: Just let the hon. gentleman contain himself in peace until I finish. There was no promise on the statute books to say that the annuity that they bought with money which they advanced later, after annuities became taxable, would be tax free. The hon. gentleman seems to think that some salesman of the Department of Labour may have gone out and said—

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not think; I know.

Mr. ILSLEY: —"you put up five dollars and get an option on an annuity; annuities are tax free at the present time, and so if you will put your $5 in, then in five or ten years' time you can put some more money in and you will get an annuity that is tax free." If the tax law changes in the meantime that is not breaking the word of anybody; that is not breaking the word of the dominion government.

Mr. JACKMAN: I was trained in business. In business it is considered breaking one's word if one does not live up to one's contract. All the minister has said shows how improvident the contract was. On the other hand the government did allow people to pay in $5 or $50 and obtain a piece of paper. The understanding given, not by a casual salesman but as a regular policy, I suppose in thousands of cases across the country, was that you could take out an annuity for as little as you liked and always enlarge it up to $1,200, the maximum amount allowed, whenever you could afford to do so. That was not merely always understood; that is what they were told. It is true it is not in the statute, nor is it on this piece of paper you get evidencing your contract; but it was most definitely understood by the Department of Labour and proclaimed by their agents, who, I say, are agents of the government. The government cannot deny what one department does and at the same time take advantage of it on the other hand. There is no doubt that many people who felt they had a right have had that right taken away from them. I forgive the government, if you like, for having committed that moral breach of contract, which people certainly consider it to have been. What I am asking is, where do people stand to-day with this change that is to be made in the tax law? In the report of the Ives commission the page or two dealing with government annuities does not cover the point specifically, as to whether the government will continue to live up to its contract, as I put it. Surely there is a contract between the government and the holders of these annuities taken out before a certain date, that such annuities will be tax free. I am asking whether or not the government intends to live up to the well understood provisions of the government annuity legislation.

Mr. ILSLEY: I always understood that was covered by the law, and it is for the hon. gentleman to interpret the law as much as it is for me to give him an interpretation here.

Mr. JACKMAN: What section of the act is that?

Mr. ILSLEY: Just a moment. The hon. gentleman has been very free to-night in hurling accusations against the government of having broken its word, and I am not going to let him slip off on this other tack without talking to him just a little bit more. I have never heard in this house such a slim case for such a serious accusation as the hon. member has made to-night. He started by saying that we gave a promise that if persons bought annuity contracts they could enlarge or increase them, and that then we refused to go through with it.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is right.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is not correct; there is not a shadow of foundation for that statement.

Mr. JACKMAN: That the agents of the government approached people and sold them government annuities telling them that at any time in the future they could enlarge them to $1,200 and, receive all the benefits they received under their $10 contract.

Mr. ILSLEY: Now my hon. friend is adding words. What he said before was that we went back upon our promise to permit persons to increase their contracts.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is enlarging it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, he did not.

Mr. ILSLEY: I will leave it to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, for it was at that point he made an interjection.

Mr. COLDWELL: I interjected the question, was that correct?

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar was shocked; he asked if that was correct, and I said that there was absolutely no truth in it. The hon. member for Rosedale did not mean to say it, but he said it. What he did mean was that some agent said, "If you buy these annuities, they are tax free and you need not pay for them in full. You can pay as little as $5 or $1, if you like, and years from now you can put in some more money and that also will be tax free." In the meantime we changed the law, so that these annuities will be taxable; but where is the equity? The man has not parted with a cent. He has not denied himself the opportunity of making an alternative investment by putting his money into this annuity. Under the law as it stood at that time he could increase his annuity holding, and it would be tax free; that was his right, if he cared to exercise it. He leaves that; he does not exercise that option, because that is all it was, until after the law has been changed. Then the annuity he takes out after the change in the law is taxable. So that he has no equity at all, and under such conditions I am most surprised that the hon. member should talk about the government of Canada breaking its word.

Mr. JACKMAN: Not only that, but I think if I go back three or four years, before this became a heated issue, I could find where the minister admitted it; certainly I have always carried that impression in my mind, and I will see if I cannot check it. I do not say for a moment that the individual has been greatly prejudiced.

Mr. ILSLEY: I should say not.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is, not as far as anything he had himself is concerned; but he thought he had this right because the agent told him he had. Let me tell the committee exactly what happened. An agent came to an individual and said, "You can take out a government annuity, which is tax free. Put in $100, if you like." The man said, "Well, I will take one out for $100, until I am ready to enlarge it." He might just as easily have said, "I will take one for $1,200, the maximum, and here is my $100 for this year." It all depended on whether the man stipulated $1,200 or whether he said $100, thinking he always had the right to enlarge it. Subsequently the government takes away the option to enlarge it on the same favourable terms. There is no doubt that many people who have these contracts have felt the effect of this change, as I have explained it to the minister. All I can say to him again is that while he may not like the strength of my assertion that I consider it to have been a breach of contract, no business organization that valued its name would allow its agents to make statements over a period of years, on the strength of which people purchased these annuity contracts, and then change the terms of the option.

Mr. ILSLEY: No business company has the right to impose taxation. Their agents do not go around promising that their employer will never impose any taxation, or never change the taxation laws; and I am doubtful whether any agents of ours ever did that.

Mr. FERGUSON: Certainly in connection with annuities sold by the government over a period of years the sellers of the annuities have definitely left the impression with their clients, the people of Canada, that if they participated to a degree in an annuity, the maximum they could purchase would be $1,200. There is no doubt about that. If the minister has had any discussions on annuities over the last few years, that must have been one of the salient features brought to his attention at that time. People believed it was a sort of savings account which definitely was not taxable. That was a great feature of the annuity, and that impression was left in the minds of the people.

The hon. member for Rosedale is simply saying this. When the heads of substantial corporations are confronted with a similar situation, where there is the shadow of a doubt in favour of the customer, they first convince themselves of the facts of the case. That is common practice among the larger corporations on the north American continent and in other parts of the world. Then, when those facts have been substantiated and it is shown that their representatives have created an impression that has been acted upon by those purchasing a commodity, they do everything in their power to keep their good name and live up to the understanding. If the government find it necessary to pass a new law, I do not think they are in any different position from that of a private corporation. They cannot say, "We must forget all the implications that were left when these gratuities were sold, because there is a new law which governs everything and implications do not amount to anything; good will on behalf of the government does not amount to anything. We are entirely different from any other corporation that wants to stay in business." If that is the attitude of this government the result will be the same; they will last just as long as any corporation lasts that does not live up to the word of its representatives.

Mr. McMASTER: I should like to ask the minister if there is any particular significance in the word "contractual." After all, an annuity is an annuity. Is a contractual annuity something different? I believe that in the old income tax act there were certain annuities in connection with which some differentiation was made for taxation purposes.

Mr. ILSLEY: There are other than contractual annuities. The annuities dealt with in the next resolution, annuities received under the provisions of a will or trust, are different.

Mr. McMASTER: I do not think that is a real annuity.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, it is.

Mr. McMASTER: Is there any annuity that is exempted from this, and that is not covered by contractual? If so, what are they?

Mr. ILSLEY: Any annual payment is an annuity. In my own mind the two classes of annuities—and I think these are the only two classes of any importance—are the annuities one buys, or contractual annuities, and annuities payable under a will or a trust document. You do not buy them. They are not contractual annuities. There may be other forms of annuities besides those, but I cannot think of them.

Mr. CASE: Before we pass this resolution I consider it important that we should discuss pretty well the capital element in annuities.

[Mr. Ferguson.]

I look upon annuities as one of the greatest sources of economic security a government can provide for its citizens. Any advantages they enjoy indeed react finally to the benefit of the nation, inasmuch as those people are not likely to become charges upon the public or the taxpayers.

I recognize, of course, that there are many forms of annuities, and I recognize, too, what the minister has said that it may be difficult to arrive at. But in determining its course in connection with this resolution the government must have had the advantage of studying the report of certain officers and authorities, and also the benefit of having seen the report of the royal commission.

There are annuities for certain definite and specific terms of years—ten, fifteen or twenty years. There are annuities which provide for specific periods, and for life. There are annuities which provide for life only.

I have listened to discussion with respect to what the hon. member for Rosedale has had to say. That is to say, I have had something to do with men who might make promises, or lead customers to believe certain things in good faith at the time. In the main, if this commission's report results in annuities being put on a sound actuarial basis, it will be a great advantage to the nation; because annuities have been sold in the past which were not really actuarily sound, and many wealthy people have gained advantage from buying them. By doing so, they have escaped a certain element of taxation. But unless the contract itself states specifically that they are exempt from taxation, I do not think, myself, that the government should be charged with a breach of contract.

I know that if one were to purchase with $5 or $10 an option to purchase or to increase the annuity to $1,200 a year, particularly at the rates at which they were one time sold, he would have a terrific advantage. But now that we have arrived at this stage there should be some clause written into an annuities contract so that a purchaser of an annuity will have that degree of security, and know exactly where he is at.

I can understand where someone might plan to retire, and consider that $100 a month would be sufficient to meet his retirement requirements. Then at a later date, because the law might change, and that annuity becomes subject to taxation at a greater rate, of course the amount he has provided for his advanced years might be inadequate. Therefore, rather than be too critical of what has taken place in the past—and we might possibly be somewhat critical—I am more inclined to approach this problem from what it provides now. I think the minister should be able to tell us what factor to use in determining the capital element in contractual annuities, because, after all, annuities are more or less amortized. There is an element of interest, and one must know on what basis the interest is computed so as to return the capital sum, in relation to the number of years the annuitant is expected to live. This should not be a difficult task, whether there is a sliding scale of guaranteed annuities for a certain specific term of years, or a sliding scale to provide for a life annuity, or annuities that guarantee a capital return, and so on.

Therefore I feel that whatever we do now should be done with the thought that we will restore a measure of confidence to those people who might anticipate purchasing annuities. I believe that the more people who buy annuities, the better it will be for this country. As I have already said, they will never be charges on the national, in any sense of the word, but will have laid by out of their best earning years sufficient funds properly amortized to provide for the remainder of their lives. That is what I think should be clarified now—what we propose to do in the future. That is to say, shall we write into an annuity a particular amount that is subject to taxation, or otherwise, so that the purchaser of an annuity henceforth will know exactly what he has in his possession, and what its capital value will be.

Mr. COLDWELL: To a degree I find myself in sympathy with the remarks made by the hon. member for Grey North. I think government annuities could be covered on a different basis from some other savings effected and investments made. I believe it is an inducement to a young man or a young woman to begin saving early in life to take care of old age, and it is very often the means of relieving a community of a liability which that community would have to assume.

If we take the figures advanced by life insurance companies we find that a very large percentage of our people who reach the age of sixty-five years are dependent upon relatives, friends, or charity, and I think government annuities should be widely advertised and should have behind them the best possible salesmanship. The government should offer every inducement to young people to begin annuities early in life. That, I believe, is what the hon. member for Grey North had in mind.

So far as the annuity in question is concerned, I know that last year my own daughter bought a government annuity. She was informed when she bought this annuity which was payable in later years at $50 a month, that if she felt at some time she could increase it to $1,200 a year, such would be permitted under the contract she was signing. That, I understand, is the situation.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: That was why I offered my interjection when the hon. member for Rosedale was speaking: "Is that correct?" I had a hand in getting my daughter started on this particular annuity.

Mr. JACKMAN: You can increase it.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, right up to $100.

Mr. JACKMAN: You can increase it on the same terms as you have taken the original contract. What I am complaining about is that you cannot increase the old contract, because of the change in the income tax law. The old portion of the contract originally bought is tax free, while the new portion is not tax free. If the minister will look at section 5 of the Income War Tax Act, and particularly paragraph (k), he will see evidence of the great trouble the government went to cancel all those contractual rights in this connection.

Mr. COLDWELL: I understand that quite well. But let us look at the two cases. You have one young person who buys an annuity, and who decides to put in, we will say $10 a month for a number of years regularly. But it seems to me that the hon. member for Rosedale is arguing from an entirely different point of view. Someone at some period decides, "Well, I can put in $5 now, and get a favourable contract payable at 50, at the end of the number of years hence I can then put in a lump sum on the basis of the contract I made ten or twelve years ago."

Mr. JACKMAN: That is right.

Mr. COLDWELL: Let us take, for example, an insurance policy. I know, from experience, when I bought an insurance policy and contracted to pay a given amount each year for a number of years that I have had the experience in trying to buy a similar policy—and not because of age, but because of a variation in the policy itself a few years later—of finding a very different sort of policy presented to me. I think that was overlooked in the remarks of my hon. friend.

I do not want to enter into any argument between the hon. member for Rosedale and the minister; that is their argument and I am not going to inject myself into it because I sometimes find that a person who does that finds himself in difficulty. The more favourable the conditions for the purchase of annuities are made, the more encouragement that is given to people, particularly young people, to take an annuity early in life, the better it will be for our society. Second, the money paid for government annuities becomes available to the dominion. Although different in the contractual sense, it is in the same category as an investment in victory bonds. There may be two entirely different contracts but ultimately they have the same effect: the government gets the use of a certain sum of money. When that is spread over a long period of time it seems to me it is a valuable thing.

If the persons who buy these annuities realize that they are helping themselves, that they are assisting the country and that they have behind those annuities something which no corporation can possibly give them, that is, all the assets of the Dominion of Canada and the guarantee of this nation that at a certain period of time the annuity will bring them in a certain benefit, they will probably buy more annuities. I should like to see the government go into this a little more strongly. I know it was years before I knew anything about government annuities. I only wish I had known about them twenty-five or thirty years ago. If I had I would not have sunk my money in insurance; I would have bought an annuity which would have given me a better and safer return than any insurance policy could give. I should like to see the government give every inducement, including exemptions where payments are made over a period of years and with certain regularity.

Mr. JACKMAN: I should like to try to bring this matter to a head. First, may I say to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that his daughter's annuity, which would have been wholly taxable under the old law when she began to benefit will, when the present section goes through, be taxable only as to the income element in it and not as to the capital element. She is going to have a better annuity than she had prior to the passing of this amendment. When he can check on it I should like the minister to tell us the effect of this change in the income tax act on the government annuities outstanding at the present time. The only tax-free feature they have is contained in the income tax act and you must read your contract and the income tax act to know where you stand. As he says, no one can forecast what the income tax law will be. I suggest that the Department of Labour should not sell them on that basis, unless the Department of Finance is willing to adhere to the representations of the Department of Labour.

In connection with annuities taken out since the deadline date of June 25, 1940, what is the situation in regard to the capital element and the income element as far as income taxation is concerned? What concerns me chiefly are annuities taken out before the 1940 deadline. They are supposed to be, and always have been tax free under the income tax act, both as to the income element and as to the capital element. Does that remain so?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: Then, as to annuities taken out before 1940 which have not been fully paid for but which have in them the maximum amount of $1,200, could such an annuity be matured immediately and what is the situation in regard to annuity payments under them? Will they be taxable, taxable in part or entirely tax free?

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not wish to be misunderstood. I think these should be tax free up to $1,200, as the hon. member suggests.

Mr. McMASTER: If the capital element is not taxed nobody need worry about taxation, because the capital element is the greater part of the annuity. You do not need to worry about income tax on the income element of an annuity.

Mr. CASE: It would be the larger element in the early years, but in later years the income element becomes quite a feature.

Mr. McMASTER: I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. I had occasion to congratulate his colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton South, about building a house, and now I want to congratulate the hon. member upon his foresight. I have listened to some of the resolutions introduced by his party to pay at forty or fifty years old age pensions amounting to $60 a month, but he cannot be very optimistic or he would not be interested in annuities.

Mr. COLDWELL: I contend that there should be no means test for an old age pension, and I think young people should be encouraged to build up a further addition which would be free of taxes.

Mr. McMASTER: I am congratulating the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, because I think both he and the hon. member for Cape Breton South have expressed their real feelings. I think they really believe in individual incentive and they are not altogether optimistic about their other ideas.

Mr. COLDWELL: We want to restore individual incentive.

Mr. FRASER: The minister did not answer the question asked by the hon. member for Rosedale about annuities taken out before June, 1940. Are they exempt from taxation at the present time?

Mr. ILSLEY: They continue to be exempt.

Mr. FRASER: Up to $1,200, or is there any limit?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. FRASER: They continue to be exempt?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. COCKERAM: Some of these are being paid on an anuual basis and payments will continue to be made for years to come. Would such annuities be free of income tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: If the contract was entered into before June, 1940, the annuity is free of income tax.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is how simple it seems to the individual.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is, an annuity that was purchased then.

Mr. COCKERAM: I do not mean an annuity that has been purchased outright; I mean one which is being paid for on the instalment plan over a period of years and where the benefits will not accrue to the purchaser for possibly ten, fifteen or twenty years. When such an annuity is paid up, will the money they receive be free from income tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: The point is all covered by section 5 (k) of the Income War Tax Act, and hon. gentlemen should read that. What is exempt from income tax is the income arising from any annuity contract entered into prior to the 25th day of June, 1940, to the extent provided by section 3 of chapter 24 of the statutes of 1930 and section 6 of chapter 43 of the statutes of 1932. That is the limitation of amount of annuity, $1,200, I believe; provided that such exemption shall not extend to that portion of the income which exceeds the amount of the annuity actually specified in the contract before the 25th day of June, 1940, where such excess amount arises by reason of any option or contractual right to enlarge the annuity income by the payment of additional sums or premiums unless such additional sums or premiums have actually been paid before the said date.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is what I was getting at, that these payments will be paid over a period of years, and I wish to know whether or not at the completion of the contract these annuities will be free of income tax. The official should know that, but I do not think it is clear in the resolution.

Mr. JACKMAN: I think they are.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is perfectly clear from this. What makes me nervous is that I cannot follow the questions which are being asked. If I say "yes" or "no", here I am on record and it is quoted against me later if I have misapprehended a question. But just take that section 5 (k)—.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is going to stand; it is not going to be changed?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes, that is not being changed.

Mr. JACKMAN: What I want to know, under this new section, is this. The hon. member for York South simply raised the question, if he had a contract before 1940 and continues to pay his annual instalments, will the annuity payments under the contract be free of tax when he starts getting them, say in 1955 or 1960? The question I put carries the point oue step farther. The individual who holds such a contract, paying on the instalment plan, thinks he has a contractual right, not to enlarge it, because he already has $1,200, but to mature the revenue. The department has ruled one way and then the other; a certain group of people have acted on those rulings, and they are in a hiatus and do not know where they stand. That cannot be denied. I have run across several such cases in my own business. I wish to know if a person, having purchased prior to 1940 and made his payments year by year, and now being in a position to pay up the contract in its entirety so that he gets the $1,200 maturing immediately, will have that $1,200 free of tax under the provisions of section 5 (k), or is he to be subject to unknown departmental rulings which waver from day to day?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know.

Mr. JACKMAN: Surely that is a reasonable question. I wish to know what the section means. This whole question of annuities has been a troublesome one, and when you get a section of this kind, and you cannot get anything definite from the law of the land what are subject to departmental rulings, you do not know where you stand. I wish to know what the minister actually believes this section 5(k) to mean. It talks about your not being able to enlarge. If you mature the contract you have the right to pay up; there is no doubt about that. If you mature it immediately, what is to be the effect of the contract with regard to income tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: Has the hon. gentleman any particular case or cases in mind; because he has referred to income tax rulings?

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not wish to be personal but I have many cases in mind.

Mr. ILSLEY: If the hon. gentleman will state one case I will get a ruling on it from the Department of National Revenue. But I cannot give a ruling on these hypotheses.

Mr. JACKMAN: The law should be clear or we should change it, so that we shall know these things.

Mr. ILSLEY: I wish to point out that we are not talking on the point here at all. The resolution is talking about freeing the capital element in taxable annuities from income tax, and the hon. gentleman is trying to get from me a ruling with regard to annuities which are not subject to income tax.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is just it; I should like to know if they are not subject to income tax. There is no question about it; you pay your money and get your annuity, but they are subject in part to income tax under a ruling of the deputy commissioner of taxation.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. gentleman had better give me the case and the parties involved and I will take it up with the deputy minister and get his ruling. That is the way to get at this thing, not in abstract or general terms from me on the floor of the house.

Mr. JACKMAN: I object to the minister making that statement. This section 1 talks about the capital element in contractual annuities being exempt from tax. It is a "bare-bones" resolution. How do we know what it will be when the bill comes down? Is section 5(k) to be amended? I wish to know how the contractual annuities as set forth there, which include dominion government annuities, are to be dealt with.

The CHAIRMAN: Does resolution 1 carry?

Mr. JACKMAN: No; stand.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried?

Mr. JACKMAN: Stand.

Mr. COLDWELL: Could the hon. member for Rosedale, without mentioning names—he does not want to be personal—put a hypothetical case and let the item stand until we get the ruling on that hypothetical case? I think the point he makes, as I understand it, is one in which all hon. members may be interested, and it would be well to give it to the house rather than to an individual member of the house, because the question may arise, particularly after this discussion, and many hon. members may have to answer it. I think it would be well if the hon. member would give a hypothetical case, leaving out the names, have the item stand, and let the minister have his colleague of the Department of National Revenue bring down a statement on it. Apparently we shall argue all evening unless something of that sort is done.

Resolution stands.

2. That for 1945 and subsequent taxation years annual or periodic payments received under the provisions of a will or trust be considered taxable income to the extent only that they are paid or deemed to be paid out of the income of the estate or trust.

Mr. COCKERAM: I should like to ask the minister a question which, I think, comes back to the other section; it is this. A great many people have life insurance, and in order to protect their families they give them annuities from those policies. I would take it that under this section they would not get the benefit of calling that an annuity, but I should like to know.

Mr. ILSLEY: These will be contractual annuities. An annuity bought under an insurance contract is a contractual annuity and therefore only the interest element in it is taxable.

Mr. COCKERAM: I do not think it is very clear in this section.

Mr. CASE: Even if it is arranged by the assured, the minister is saying now that that is a contractual annuity, if he makes provision with the insurance company to pay the proceeds of his insurance to beneficiaries for a period of years?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. CASE: Can he make that provision in his will?

Mr. COCKERAM: Not under this.

Mr. ILSLEY: Can he dispose of his insurance moneys by his will—is that the question?

Mr. CASE: And enjoy the benefits of the taxation provision?

Mr. ILSLEY: It does not make any difference. It is either a contractual annuity or it is not. If it is a contractual annuity it is covered by resolution 1, and if it is an annuity under a will or a trust it is covered by resolution 2. The treatment may be different to some extent, but at least the transaction is covered by one or other of the two resolutions.

Mr. CASE: In other words, the department make no differentiation. In Ontario, for purposes of the succession duty, a person may provide, so long as he arranges matters with the insurance company, during his lifetime incomes for his beneficiaries up to $200 a month which are free from succession duty. That part of his estate is set aside to provide for these annuities and is exempt entirely from taxation, but it must be done during the person's lifetime.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member is referring to succession duties; we are dealing with income tax.

Mr. CASE: I am using that as an illustration. There is a difference and that is why I introduced the will element. The department here says that it is a contractual obligation or contractual annuity if it is provided for in his will, and yet that does not become effective during his lifetime, whereas if he made provision before it would.

Mr. HAZEN: If he provides in his will to make these payments to his wife or daughter as the case may be, the policy must be payable to his estate. It is payable to his estate and by will he directs disposal in such and such a way.

Mr. ILSLEY: I should say that in that case, if the lump sum is payable to the estate of the insured, he disposes of that by will in such a way as to give an annuity to his wife and that is certainly an annuity that comes into existence under a will.

Resolution agreed to.

3. That the income of all approved superannuation or pension funds or plans in 1946 and subsequent taxation years be exempt from tax in the hands of the trustees.

Mr. McMASTER: May I direct the minister's attention to a section in the income tax Act which is unfair and which could be remedied in this resolution. No base is allowed in computing income where the income of an estate is kept in hand for a certain number of years. Suppose an estate earns only $500. That is kept in the estate for eight or ten years and the child comes of age, and in that case there is a tax of thirty-nine per cent; that is, thirty per cent graduated and nine per cent normal, which makes it worse. Instead of seven per cent it is nine per cent. It is unfair that thirty-nine per cent should be taken of an estate where the income is only $500 or $600. It is hardly worth while investing the money; it might as well be left in the bank because there is such a large amount taken out.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. gentleman is making representations with regard to section 11 of the Income War Tax Act which relates to taxation of income from estates and trusts, and he is submitting that there should be an exemption of $660 or something like that.

Mr. McMASTER: Is it section 11?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not of the resolution, but section 11 of the Income War Tax Act relating to income accumulating in trust.

Mr. McMASTER: That is it, yes, subsection 2.

Mr. ILSLEY: The point the hon. gentleman makes is that there should be an exemption as if it were an individual who was being taxed.

Mr. McMASTER: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is not the idea an exemption to provide some minimum source of income for an individual?

Mr. McMASTER: That is possibly the case. They cannot take everything in taxes, I suppose, but the fact is that it is necessarily only a small estate that will be affected. The larger estates will not feel it in the same way. Suppose it is a small estate with an income of $300. That $300 will pay a tax of thirty-nine per cent and that does not seem fair.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is merely taxing the income of a trust. It is accumulating in trust for the benefit of unascertained persons or persons with contingent interests, and there is no good case for exemption.

Mr. McMASTER: The department, I believe, has ruled that anyone is an unascertained person if you cannot be sure who will get it. If you say that a certain person will receive it at the age of twenty-one, if you cannot be sure that that person will get it he is unascertained.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND—INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

CROWN CORPORATIONS

QUESTION AS TO CONTROL BY CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION OR TREASURY BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question that I had wished to direct to the Minister of Finance. In his absence probably the Minster of Veterans Affairs would take note of it, and it might be answered later in the day. A few days ago, I think on Tuesday last, it was revealed that one crown corporation was entirely free of control by the civil service commission or the treasury board in the employment and appointment of its officials. May I ask the minister if this situation applies as well to other crown corporations or agencies, and if so, what ones?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I shall be glad to direct the question to the attention of my colleague and it will be answered at eight o'clock this evening.

[Later:]

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): I understand that a question was asked, either to-day or yesterday, and an intimation was given that I might answer it later to-day. By consent of the house I shall give the answer now. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) said:

> A few days ago, I think on Tuesday last, it was revealed that one crown corporation was entirely free of control by the civil service commission or the treasury board in the employment and appointment of its officials. May I ask the minister if this situation applies as well to other crown corporations or agencies, and if so, what ones?

The rule is fairly general, if not entirely so, that appointments of employees of what are called crown corporations are not made by the civil service commission nor is their remuneration fixed by the treasury board. An example would be the Canadian National Railways and another would be the Bank of Canada. However, I have here a list, which I believe is complete, of the crown corporations and agencies to which this rule applies. They are:

Allied War Supplies Corporation.
Bank of Canada.
Canadian Arsenals Limited.
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.
Canadian National Railways.
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships.
Canadian Wheat Board.
Canadian Wool Board Limited.
Canadian Prices Stabilization Corporation Limited.
Custodian of Enemy Property.
Eldorado Mining and Refining.
Export Credits Insurance Corporation.
Federal Aircraft Limited.
Federal District Commission.
Fisheries Research Board of Canada.
National Battlefields Commission.
National Harbours Board.
National Railways Munitions Limited.
Park Steamship Company Limited.
Polymer Corporation Limited.
Research Enterprises Limited.
Small Arms Limited.
Turbo Research Limited.
Veterans Housing Project (Ottawa) Limited.
Veterans Housing Project (Toronto) Limited.
Wartime Food Corporation Limited.
Wartime Housing Limited.
Wartime Shipbuilding Limited.
War Supplies Limited.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO VACANCIES ON COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Are the positions of two of the commissioners on the unemployment insurance commission vacant? How long have they been vacant, and how does the commission carry on or function with only one commissioner?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I think I can answer that question, but my hon. friend did not give me notice of it. As he has indicated, there are at the moment two vacancies on the unemployment insurance commission. The matter of filling those vacancies is under advisement. Let me go a step further. As hon. members of this house know, we had the tremendous job of mobilizing man-power during the war years. To carry that out, the direction was given to the Minister of Labour, and I can assure this house that that big organization will function just as efficiently as it did during the war years. Make no mistake about that, commissioners or no commissioners.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask the minister a supplementary question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has the treasury board at any time refused to pay the salary of Mr. Tallon, the employees' representative on the board?

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend will have to ask the treasury board that question; I cannot answer for it.

Mr. COLDWELL: How is the commission functioning? Is the minister doing the work of the commission now, if the commission is not in existence?

Mr. MITCHELL: That, Mr. Speaker, is not altogether correct; I am cooperating with the commission.

Mr. GILLIS: There is no commission.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, there is.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does the minister not know whether the treasury board has refused to pay Mr. Tallon? Surely he can answer that question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to say this to my hon. friend: I have a big enough job of my own without running the treasury board.

Mr. COLDWELL: This is a question on the orders of the day, and it should be answered. May I just ask this supplementary question? Will the Minister of Veterans Affairs take note of the question I asked with reference to the treasury board, and have the question answered later to-day?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I shall be glad to take notice of my hon. friend's question, and an answer will probably be given to-morrow.

SS. "QUEEN ELIZABETH"

INQUIRY AS TO THE FUTURE DOCKINGS—INTERVIEW GIVEN BY MAJOR-GENERAL YOUNG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Having already brought the matter to the attention of more than one of the members of the government, including the Acting Minister of National Defence, I wish to direct an inquiry to the government in respect to the reported interview given by Major-General Hugh Young concerning future dockings of the troopship Queen Elizabeth at New York instead of at Halifax.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ISNOR: As the Acting Minister of National Defence is familiar with the statement of Major-General Young as published in the Ottawa Citizen, and with reference to the ridiculous contention that Halifax is not a safe place at which to dock the Queen Elizabeth in winter time—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman. His observations are completely out of order.

Mr. ISNOR: Mr. Speaker, I am just going to—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt. An hon. member's question should be urgent, brief and to the point; and he should not quote from a newspaper. I would ask the hon. gentleman to resume his seat and put his question on the order paper.

Mr. ISNOR: May I ask the question in this way. Will the Acting Minister of National Defence be good enough to make a statement in reference to the matter to which I referred?

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Minister of National Defence for Air): The hon. member gave me notice of this question. I understand that the Minister of National Defence, who has been away, is returning to Ottawa to-day, and I shall ask him to make a statement.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE AT BROWN'S BAKERY, TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to know from the Minister of Labour if he will take any action in view of the scarcity of bread caused by the strike at Brown's Bakery, which is on Eastern Avenue, Toronto, in my constituency. Perhaps he will see if he can bring the parties together.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I shall be glad to take note of my hon. friend's question and request.

Mr. CHURCH: The minister might also take some appropriate action. If he does, I will call him Humphrey the Peacemaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION TO MEET CERTAIN EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 178, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures made and capital indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways System during the calendar year 1945, and to authorize the guarantee by His Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railways Company.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Surely we shall have a statement from the minister.

Mr. MAYHEW: I made a brief statement on this matter when it was in the resolution stage. I do not know whether hon. members wish me to repeat it or not. Any information they want can be given on second reading or when we are in committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Mayhew moves that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the said bill.

Mr. IRVINE: What are we adopting? We do not know what it is about.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. IRVINE: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister tell us what the net revenue was last year?

Mr. MAYHEW: The cash surplus was $23,026,924.35.

Mr. FRASER: That is the net?

Mr. MAYHEW: That is the net cash surplus of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is for the year ended March 31?

Mr. MAYHEW: That is for the calendar year 1944.

Mr. CHURCH: Part of the bill relates to betterments of the system. What percentage of those betterments are related to the lines within Canada and how much of this expenditure, amounting to $15,000,000, is to be made in the United States on American affiliations? Although repairs are very badly needed in Canada, it would seem that a great deal of work is to be done on subsidiaries in the United States, where, of course, they have betterments which we in this country have not got at all.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The expenditures on betterments for lines in the United States out of the $15,000,000 referred to by my hon. friend are as follows: Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company, $1,529,246; Central Vermont Railway, Incorporated, $203,045. The rest of the money is for betterments in Canada.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Power to issue securities for capital expenditures.

Mr. COCKERAM: I understood that during the war years both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. have been allowed to place certain sums of money aside for betterments and for reestablishment of their systems. How much money is standing in the Canadian National treasury for that purpose? We are being asked here, as I understand, for an additional $15,000,000.

Mr. MAYHEW: The development maintenance fund in the Canadian National Railways is $34,000,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: And an additional $15,000,000 is required on top of that?

Mr. MAYHEW: No; one is capital and the other is maintenance. I think there is a little confusion in the minds of some people. The net cash surpluses of the railway automatically go into the sinking fund of the railway, so that we actually are only giving them back a portion of what they have already paid to the government. What they have done is done out of depreciation. This amount does not increase the capital indebtedness of the Canadian National Railways. As a matter of fact there will still be a reduction of $1,977,000; their net debt will be less by that amount.

Mr. COCKERAM: Have the surpluses which have been built up over the period of the war years been used for retiring funded indebtedness or the indebtedness standing on the books of the company?

Mr. MAYHEW: That has been used to pay off loans which they received from the government.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask the minister a question under this section. I am not in favour of the present system of financing this particular road and its subsidiaries and other affiliations, aided by many bills passed during this war, and even during this session. In view of the vast earnings which this system is making on land, on the sea and in the air, would it not be possible to pay out of income some of these expenditures which are charged up to capital? In the ordinary public ownership ventures, such as the cheap power furnished in Ontario, many of the improvements are charged to income, and come directly from it. If this railway is to operate at cost, and if it is to run on a commercial basis, well and good. But I can tell the house that these two principles are not being carried out at the present time. Why are many of these expenditures for improvements not paid for out of income? Why is it all charged up to capital with heavy refunding charges? I find it difficult to read the auditor's report, and I cannot get this information from the various pamphlets and booklets that are given an ordinary member of parliament. I cannot find any connection between the owership of this railway, which is a public venture, and the principles I have mentioned. If it is going to be a public ownership venture, then let it be a real public ownership venture, with the operational costs of the road placed on a commercial basis and the road run from the commercial aspect.

When we look at the cheap light and power in Ontario, a venture which has been a great success, we see the way they meet many betterments and some capital expenditures out of income. What is done in connection with this railway makes but a sorry comparison, loaded up as it is with all sorts of ventures which should never have been entered into. I refer to subsidiaries in the United States, and other capital outlays that never should have been made. Then there is the steamship line running to Port Dalhousie, and many other subsidiary ventures. They are all mixed up together. This system of expenditures and finance bears heavily upon the taxpayers, but they will have to pay for it. We are all wrong in such financing, and it seems to me the system of financing should be overhauled from top to bottom, and in the years to come we should have some way of meeting many of these expenditures out of income instead of charging them up to capital and having them refunded from year to year. I would ask for an explanation from the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. MAYHEW: I think I have already made an explanation. Probably the hon. member did not hear it, or I may not have understood his question. At any rate the amount provided by parliament to meet capital expenditures shall not be diverted to cover deficits in operation, unless with express authority from parliament. We are coming to parliament now for that authority.

Mr. CHURCH: You did not give any answer whatever.

Mr. McLURE: I see the Minister of Transport in his seat, and I should like to direct some observations to him. When this matter was first introduced the hon. members for Cape Breton South and Cumberland spoke in connection with it. On that occasion I forgot to mention this matter, and now that so much money is being voted I should like to find out whether part of it will be used to pay for the new steamer to be used in the ferry service between Borden and Tormentine. At the present time the service between those points could scarcely be called a service at all so far as the farmers are concerned. If the money is voted will it facilitate this matter, or have the effect of the steamer being made available any sooner?

Mr. CHEVRIER: None of this money has anything to do with the new steamer now being constructed for the Prince Edward Island car ferry. That will be voted under another estimate for the Department of Transport which I hope will be reached some time to-day or perhaps to-morrow. I shall be glad to discuss it then.

Mr. McLURE: I would ask the minister to prepare a statement to be presented when we reach that matter and to indicate definitely when we may expect to have the steamer.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Could we have a detailed statement from the parliamentary assistant of the items which make up this appropriation of $15,008,000 for additions and betterments? There has been considerable complaint from the maritime provinces, especially in respect of local railway service, about the antiquated rolling stock operated on those lines and also to some extent on the main line of the Canadian National Railways. There is a very general feeling that the maritime provinces are getting the dregs of obsolete rolling stock from other parts of Canada.

Will the Minister of Transport indicate to the committee in what form the appropriation will be made for the building of the causeway or bridge over the strait of Canso? The people in eastern Canada take it for granted that this public work will be undertaken in the coming season. It was approved by the former premier of Nova Scotia, the Honourable A. S. MacMillan. He quoted the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) as having approved it. The present premier of Nova Scotia has given his approval, and has given the people of that province to understand he will proceed with the work. Similar approval was given by all the candidates in the eastern part of Nova Scotia who took part in the two recent elections. I should like to learn from the parliamentary assistant whether a special vote will be offered in his estimates, and if not, whether one will be placed in the estimates of the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Reconstruction, or the Minister of Public Works. I repeat that we take it for granted that such appropriation will be made so as to meet the requirements of the people in that part of Canada, and also to fulfil the undertaking given to the people of Nova Scotia.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This question was discussed the other evening by the hon. member, when we were at the resolution stage. I said at that time, and I repeat now, that when the estimates for the Department of Transport are up for discussion either the Minister of Reconstruction or myself will be in a position to make a statement concerning the project at Canso. It is my understanding that the funds for the construction of that project, if approved, will be voted by the Department of Reconstruction and that the work will be done by the Department of Transport. I do not wish to say anything further about the project at this time, because it is not a matter which would properly come under any discussions flowing from this bill. When my estimates are before the committee a statement will be made.

Mr. HAZEN: The parliamentary assistant said a few minutes ago that the cash surplus for last year was $23,600,000. I call the matter to his attention, because I think he has made a mistake. The figure is $23,027,000, and should be corrected.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does the hon. member say it should be $27,000,000?

Mr. HAZEN: No, $23,027,000.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is what was read out.

Mr. HAZEN: I understood the parliamentary assistant to say $23,600,000.

Mr. MAYHEW: The figure is $23,026,924.35.

Mr. HAZEN: That is not what Mr. Vaughan's annual report says. It gives the figure as $23,027,000. Is that correct.

Mr. MAYHEW: Well, the difference is only a few dollars.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Would the parliamentary assistant give the details of the appropriation of $15,800,000 asked for additions and betterments?

Mr. MAYHEW: It would take a rather voluminous report to answer that question in detail, but if the hon. member will turn to page 175 of the report of the committee on railways and shipping he will get a fairly good idea. I can give him the amounts by regions, which are:

Atlantic region	$ 1,331,350
Central region	6,009,624
Western region	2,963,779
Grand Trunk Pacific	1,529,246
Montreal terminal construction	100,000
Prince Edward car ferry terminal	10,000
Subsidiary companies	281,097
Additions, betterments and equipment	2,600,854
	$15,028,995

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): What is the $10,000 being voted for in connection with the Prince Edward Island ferry terminal? As I understand it, this is a capital expenditure, and I should like to know why we are being asked to approve a capital expenditure for a sum as small as $10,000. Could we have also the particulars of the larger items which go to make up the one million odd in connection with the Atlantic region?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This is working capital provided for the railway to the end of the calendar year. There will be an item in the transport estimates covering the operations of the car ferry and its deficit.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I cannot understand why we should be asked to provide moneys at this time as working capital for the operation of the Prince Edward Island ferry.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I cannot give the hon. gentleman any further details now, but if he wants them I shall be glad to give them to him when my estimates are before the committee.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Would any of this have to do with grade separations in the city of Toronto? There is some work in connection with level crossings that is very badly needed, and I understand some of it has been approved.

Mr. CHEVRIER: None of this would have to do with grade separation.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is it proposed to go on with that work? I understand some of it has been approved.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I shall be glad to reply to my hon. friend on my estimates.

Mr. KIDD: Is there any amount provided for a new station at Kingston?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No.

Mr. KIDD: When the local suburban train was taken off, as well as the early morning train to Toronto, there was a definite understanding that a new station would be built at Kingston. That promise has not yet been fulfilled. I want to urge as strongly as I can that something be done, now that the war is over and you are looking for means of providing employment. I have just been talking to Kingston by telephone and there is a snowstorm on now. At the noon hour there will be four trains pulling in, two from Montreal, two from Toronto and Chicago to Montreal. Any passengers from the rear coaches will be dumped off in the rain and snow. I repeat that there is an obligation on the minister's department to build this new station as soon as possible.

Mr. CHEVRIER: None of these expenditures is for a new station anywhere. They cover capital expenditures already made and those that will be made until the end of this calendar year. I know the condition at Kingston fairly well, because I have been there many times. I know it is as the hon. member has described it, and I shall be glad to bring the representations he has made to the attention of the board of directors of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. HARKNESS: At the end of 1944 there was a net surplus over reserves and capital expenditures of $23,000,000. The fact that we are being asked to provide the sum set forth here would seem to indicate that it is expected there will be a deficit. If not, why is it necessary to vote this money rather than have it taken out of the earnings of the railway?

Mr. MAYHEW: I think I have answered that question twice already. The Canadian National does not operate as a business concern operates. A business concern would take this money out of its earnings, but when Canadian National Railways has a profit it immediately goes back into consolidated revenue. Then when they want to get money to go ahead with betterments they must come before this house.

Mr. FRASER: Does the Canadian National pay any income tax to the government?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It pays more than income tax; it pays everything it receives.

Mr. MAYHEW: It pays back everything it makes.

Mr. BRACKEN: Section 5 of the bill which deals with power to aid other companies reads:

> The National company may aid and assist, in any manner, any other or others of the said companies and railways—

According to section 2 these powers would apply to any company or railway comprised in the Canadian National Railways. Could the minister give us a list of the companies and railways included in the Canadian National Railways system?

Mr. MAYHEW: I would refer the leader of the opposition to the annual report of the Canadian National Railways, which shows ninety odd subsidiaries. These could be placed on Hansard, but they can be found in the report which I presume is on the hon. member's desk.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. BRACKEN: I would not ask that it be put on Hansard.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

247. Departmental administration, $196,195.

Mr. FRASER: Throughout the country the government has certain properties on which it intends or at one time did intend to erect a public building. Lately I have heard that War Assets Corporation is selling some of these lands. Is that true?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): No. At certain times when we have lands that we do not foresee any use for we have them declared surplus and transferred to War Assets, but speaking from memory I cannot recall one specific case. Before War Assets Corporation was set up, when we had surplus lands, we dealt directly with people and asked for tenders for these lands, but there have been very few cases in the last few years. I cannot at the moment recall a specific instance.

Mr. FRASER: I do not think War Assets Corporation should have the selling of any of the lands of the government, because if they sell them as they have sold other things, God help the people of Canada.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My hon. friend will admit that that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. FRASER: It is not only my opinion but that of a great number of people across the country. I know that people have written in to me asking about certain lands.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If my hon. friend will give me a case I will get all the information I can about it.

Mr. FRASER: I will do that, because I do hope that War Assets is not selling these government lands. I do hope that any such lands that are sold will be sold by tender and not by War Assets.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister make a statement regarding his plans for the future? Has he a five-year or a four-year plan? What amount of construction can be expected under the department in the immediate post-war years?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The present estimates were drawn up in December, 1944, and January, 1945. It will be recalled that at the last session of the last parliament we had the same estimates brought back before us. At that time we were right in the war, although of course preparing for the post-war period. These estimates do not deal with any post-war projects. They are the regular estimates of the department for the maintenance and repair of the public works we have, and even then not to the full extent required. Hon. members will recall that during the war years the estimates of the department were kept down to the lowest level. In the next fiscal year we shall have to attend to the repairing of nearly every building we have in Canada, because they have been neglected to a certain extent, and my recommendation to the government is for increased amounts in the next estimates so that government property all over the country can be maintained in a good state of repair. Many requests have come from every part of Canada for new buildings, wharves, breakwaters, and all kinds of public works coming under this department. We have our architects and engineers making surveys all over the country, and we have been receiving requests from all over the country. I could not mention any specific cases now; I can only say that they are under consideration and that at the next session I hope to have an increased amount of money to spend on public works throughout the country.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is the staff of the department back to pre-war levels, or is it being increased? I imagine that on paper at least a good deal of work is being done in preparation for the next few years, and it seems to me that a fairly large staff would be necessary even now to do this preliminary work.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The number on the staff is perhaps a little lower than it was before the war, or at about the same level, but we are trying to get the services of a good many engineers and architects on a temporary basis. We are having a little trouble in getting qualified technical men because they are not so much interested now in becoming civil servants because of the openings in private enterprise. But we are taking on engineers and architects every month, or trying to get them, to help the regular staff prepare the plans for next year.

Mr. BURTON: I can understand the position of the minister in connection with these estimates. The greater part of the money to be voted has already been spent and all that remains is to finish up the year's business. I would ask him to enlarge a little upon the statement he has just made. Throughout the country from coast to coast the government's public buildings have been perhaps not neglected but allowed to take second place in the plans of the ministry. It would help us to get the full picture if the minister would go on to tell us, though not in detail, of the plans he has for next year and subsequent years. These estimates really deal with something that is past; we are interested also in the future.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I believe requests are coming in from nearly every riding in the country for further repairs to buildings or for the erection of new public buildings. I cannot give details with regard to this town or that city in which it is requested that a building be put up. Most of our buildings are for post office and customs and for other departments. We have to get requests from those department, because they are the ones who must justify the putting up of buildings. The intention is to come back to pre-war conditions in public works and make the necessary expenditures so that our public works shall be in as good condition to serve the public as they were before the war.

Mr. FERGUSON: Will the minister give the number of employees who have been taken on in his department since June 11, 1945, and the names of those employees?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is a large order. We have in the department a little over 5,000 employees who are permanent, temporary or seasonal. In the fall we take on a good many firemen for the different buildings, and these would have come on since June 11. I am trying to see what the hon. member is looking for. There has not been any large increase in public buildings since the elections; I did not have the money to pay for them. I am limited by my estimates. Personally I should like to see more employees in the department, but I have not the funds. If the hon. member will read these estimates through he will see that they compare with the war years. There is only a difference of some $276 thousand as compared with 1944-45. There may be some extra employees, but I cannot give them from memory.

Mr. FERGUSON: I would ask the minister to prepare a statement showing the number of employees taken on since June 11 in his department, and giving the names of those employees. That is not a large order. In the minister's own words, he has not expanded a great deal. The order is therefore not a large one for any well-run department and I would like to get that information.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We will get these names and the dates of appointments. Most of these appointments are made to replace employees retiring or dying—

Mr. FERGUSON: That is all I want, sir.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): —and the civil service makes the appointments, except for temporary works or in the case of prevailing-rate employees. I will have the information prepared.

Mr. FERGUSON: Thank you.

Mr. FAIR: Does the department intend to provide better buildings for civil service staff after the war is over? I have in mind some of the old wrecks of buildings that are being used by different departments. Is it the intention to use some of the temporary buildings, which seem to be much better than some of those at present occupied? Or is it the intention to sell the old buildings? One of the buildings I have in mind particularly is the old horse-stable on Green island which houses the bureau of statistics. These people are dealing mainly with figures all the time, and it is important that they should have proper accommodation. Judging from the outside of the building, I do not think there is any ventilation system. It should have been done away with years ago. The same may be said of many other buildings that are being used by government departments. A few days ago I heard that provision is being made to clear down that old horse-stable and put up another building to house the staff there.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): On Green island we have part of the film board staff and the statistical branch of trade and commerce. We are actually preparing plans for the erection of a new film board building. As to the site, we are waiting for a report from Mr. Greber, who is planning the national capital, and the moment we have a site that will fit into the plan for a special kind of film board building we shall be ready to put up that building and clear out the buildings on Green island.

Mr. MARSHALL: I would ask the minister the same type of question I asked the Minister of Agriculture yesterday. I do not think it is fair to compare the estimate of the previous year with the estimate this year. I would ask him to give, on each vote as the votes appear on page 33, the actual amount that was spent during the particular year. Referring to item 247, which we are now considering, the minister asked for $191,595 in 1944-45; I should like to know how much he actually spent in that fiscal year. Will the minister from time to time, as he comes to the various items and without having to be asked for the information, give the amount actually spent in connection with each vote? Take number 247.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): On vote 247 the estimate in 1944-45 was $191,595; the actual expenditures were $185,989.50. The actual estimate for 1945-46 is $196,195, an increase of $4,600 over the preceding year. This increase comprises: statutory increases $1,065; cost of living bonus, $1,300; travelling expenses, $1,500; miscellaneous adjustments, $735; making the difference of $4,600.

Mr. MARSHALL: The picture as it presents itself now is entirely different from that shown in the estimates. Of the $191,000, $185,000 is the amount actually spent. We are now asking for $196,000 and instead of an increase of $4,000 roughly the increase is $11,000. I should like to get the same picture in connection with each of these estimates from beginning to end.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will have that done.

Mr. MARSHALL: Am I not correct in that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is right. The estimate sometimes is not all expended during the year. It will be found that we have revotes of amounts voted in the preceding year. There is a difference of about eight or nine thousand dollars between the amount voted in 1944-45 and the amount expended. That can be easily accounted for by saying that somebody in the personnel retired and was not immediately replaced. The salary during that lapsed period would not be paid. Or certain works may have been undertaken and were not completed; therefore the amount was not paid. I believe there is a justification for every case of the kind we have in the estimates.

Mr. MARSHALL: I am not quarrelling with that at all. I realize that there is justification for anything that is not spent or an amount that may be overspent. But it is totally unfair to compare an estimate of one year with an estimate of the next year, because of the fact that an estimate may be inflated to a very large degree. In this case it is inflated to the extent of $11,000.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I wish to direct the attention of the minister to the situation as it exists on some of the lakes in Kootenay West.

The minister will realize that for some years there has been a restricted programme of expenditures in that district. I am not criticizing that so far as the past is concerned, but I do wish to bring to his attention the fact that on the lakes many people are in isolated places without roads and are dependent upon water transportation. I urge upon the minister that in the future he give these people every consideration by providing wharf facilities where it is possible or convenient so to do.

Then there is the question of dredging. In recent years the dredging programme has been restricted until now navigation is difficult between the upper and lower Arrow lakes. Steamers going through there at low water almost touch bottom; in fact they have to be very careful when coming into the low water area. Navigation into the northern end of the lake, where the Columbia enters the Arrow lake, is extremely difficult. I would ask that the minister have the whole matter investigated and these conditions corrected.

May I now say a word with reference to the question of the removal of snags. Years ago the department periodically removed snags from the low water areas and close to the docking points so that navigation was reasonably safe at night. I would ask the minister to have the question of the removal of snags on the upper and lower Arrow lakes investigated. There is one other matter, the question of erosion, which has been a constant problem to the Department of Public Works. I refer particularly to the channel between the two lakes. Because the work has not been done in recent years, erosion has taken place in certain areas, I would ask the minister to give that consideration.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand the position up there in Kootenay. We have the snagboat, and we have this dredge, the Samson. The hon. member will find these items mentioned in the estimates. We do a great deal along that line. The intention of the department is to undertake this work in the next year and complete the work which has not been completed in the past.

The hon. member made one request for British Columbia which I received from all parts of the country. I cannot give any other answer than to say that during the war years, and because of the war effort, we did not receive, and we did not ask parliament for, larger votes.

Mr. CASE: I should like to pursue a little further the general administration as it affects the staff, and inquire as to the general policy. I understood the minister to say when he replied to the hon. member for Simcoe North, that those who were taken on in his department were largely replacements. Is the policy of the department one of promotions? Does the department advertise open competitions? Perhaps I may give a specific instance. I understand that one of the senior officials of his department has about reached the retirement age. How would his position be filled? Would it be by competition or promotion?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When there is a vacancy in my department, as in other departments, we send in a request to the civil service commission. They advertise. If it is a senior position, it goes by promotion. It is advertised in the department; a board examines the qualifications, service, seniority, and so forth, and we take on the man who is appointed by the civil service commission.

Mr. GILLIS: I think the minister knows—if he does not, his departmental officials do—that for some years I have discussed with his department the matter of repairs to the wharf at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and a breakwater at Port Morien. The reason I have pursued these two problems year after year is that in the Morien case it directly affects the livelihood of a village of about twelve or fifteen hundred people. It is the only industry on that coast. I was assured by both Public Works and Reconstruction that the breakwater at Morien was a post-war project and would be proceeded with in the post-war period. I notice that the estimates make no mention of it, and certainly there is no item in Reconstruction that anticipates anything being done as far as the breakwater there is concerned.

Glace Bay harbour is a very important one, because the sword-fishing industry is largely concentrated there. For the last six or eight months I have wired and written both Fisheries and Public Works with regard to the condition of that harbour. Vote 283, which deals with that matter, makes no mention of that harbour or of any appropriation in regard to it. Neither is there any mention of it in the war estimates or civil estimates of Reconstruction. I think that the least the people affected in both these communities could expect is a definite answer that something is going to be done. We should like to know if anything is anticipated. These people have a right to know so that they can make their arrangements accordingly. I was convinced last year that the matter was left in abeyance pending the termination of the war, but that in the immediate post-war period the Glace Bay harbour and Morien breakwater would be major projects for that area, and that things were going to be done. I cannot find any item anywhere which indicates that the government intends to do anything with respect to these two points. The story is well known to Public Works; I am not going to elaborate it, but I should like to know from the minister whether he has anything in mind.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When I first spoke to the committee I explained that those estimates were prepared in December 1944 and January 1945. We were then right in the midst of the war. The war concluded in May and August, but we still have those same estimates before the house, and as an hon. member remarked, we have spent most of this money, because five-twelfths were voted at one time and one-sixth or two-twelfths at another time. These are estimates which are prepared as I am preparing actual estimates which will be presented at the ensuing session. We prepare them in November, December and January. Now, I would not want to undertake at this time, a discussion of those two projects, Glace Bay harbour and the Port Morien breakwater, but we are having reports prepared by our engineers. I do not think that the hon. member would ask me on these estimates for a definite statement as to the intentions of the department in respect of the new estimates which will come up in February or March of next year, but he may be sure that we are studying and considering those post-war projects. They are post-war projects; do not ask me on these present estimates, which were prepared before the end of the war, for any post-war works. I do not think I could give an answer which would satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. GILLIS: I appreciate the minister's difficulty. If he carries on the same system year after year he is going to be in the same position in 1949. It is not the fault of the people affected that the estimates are handled in that way. You are running on to the end of 1945 with these estimates, and as far as these communities are concerned they can anticipate nothing by the end of 1945. Remember, you have two industries tied up there, with the means of livelihood for the communities. While you prepared those estimates last August, do not forget that the members of this house were sitting at home for three or four months when they could have been here doing business and dealing with these estimates. It is not our fault that we were away. The condition at these two points is serious. I could mention a dozen more cases, but I do not think there is the same urgency in respect of them as there is in these two particular matters, where action is badly needed and should be taken now. The Minister of Reconstruction, who is handling post-war projects, has prepared his reconstruction estimates, and there is not an item in them dealing with these matters. Evidently they are forgotten, so far as those who can sit down and write the necessary appropriattions into the estimates are concerned.

We leave here in December. My message to these two sections of the country where there is an urgent problem is, "Nothing is to be done for 1945." We shall come back here next summer, and, you say, the money available under these estimates is all spent. You will start preparing the next estimates in December or January, and by the time they pass through the house all the money will—again—be spent and there still will not be any appropriation.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is not the way at all.

Mr. GILLIS: That is exactly the way you put it just now. As I said before, I am not concerned about money for projects such as new buildings; I realize that one can get around to those things any time. But where the means of livelihood is directly affected the situation is different. Your department should not have to begin now to study the Glace Bay harbour or the Port Morien breakwater, because you have been dealing with it for the last ten years, throwing a few planks around.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Then you have not been convincing in the past.

Mr. GILLIS: I was not here except during the war, and you always have the alibi, "There is a war on."

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, I must protest against a procedure which is growing up, and regarding which my own colleagues are as reprehensible as anybody else, of hon. members speaking across the floor to each other. Every question should be addressed to the committee through the Chair.

Mr. GILLIS: That is quite true, but I cannot very well blame the present chairman of this committee for the inactivity of the Department of Transport; and while I realize it may not be exactly in order, it is natural, I think, to talk to the person concerned.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does the hon. gentleman mean the Department of Transport?

The CHAIRMAN: The Minister of Veterans Affairs is correct. The procedure, as we all know, is to address all questions to the chairman, and all remarks which are delivered by any member of the committee should be addressed to the chairman. I agree with what the Minister of Veterans Affairs has said, that sometimes his own colleagues are just as guilty in this respect as are other members of the committee.

Mr. GILLIS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I realize that, so I am going to talk direct to you now, and through you to the minister. Mr. Chairman, what I was endeavouring to do was to point out to the minister that despite the fact that for the past six years certain definite commitments have been made verbally to people in the community I represent in this House of Commons, with regard to certain improvements to harbour and breakwater facilities which directly affect the means of livelihood of a large number of people, I am rather disappointed, in looking over the public works department estimates, that, regardless of all these promises that in the post-war period these necessary improvements would be undertaken, there is no item in the estimates providing the money to bring about the necessary improvements. Secondly, in checking over the reconstruction estimates for the immediate post-war period, as these were supposed to be post-war projects, I still find not an item there to provide the necessary funds. I should like to find out through you, Mr. Chairman, if the people of the communities affected can expect any relief in the immediate future in the very urgent matter of improving their means of livelihood, as regards repairs to the harbour in Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and the breakwater at Port Morien. I should like to be able to go home and tell the people of these two communities that the alibi offered by the government through the war years, namely that they were fighting a war, concentrating upon that, and spending all their money on it, was legitimate, but now that the war is over the promises made are going to be kept; that while the minister, maybe through an oversight on the part of his officials, had failed to include in the estimates any reference to these projects, he at least would take the matter up with the Department of Reconstruction, because Public Works is the department which will do that work, although Reconstruction may have to provide the funds. I should like at least an assurance from someone that as soon as they can get around to it the promises made during the war period with respect to these two particular projects will be carried out.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I would not impute any motives to an hon. member speaking in the committee. The hon. member who has just taken his seat is speaking of post-war public works, and I have explained that these estimates do not contain any post-war items. We just admit that. These estimates were prepared for March 31, 1945, to March 31, 1946. We were here presenting these estimates last spring while the war was on, and five-twelfths of the amount was voted at that time. Now we are just completing the fiscal year. This does not comprise the post-war projects or works which we have, or which the hon. member has, in mind.

Mr. GILLIS: But fisheries won't wait for estimates.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The policy we followed of not proceeding in war time with extended public works projects was admitted by everybody, even by the hon. member. My estimates would not have passed this house if there had been an increase in them during the war. Everybody understood that we were in the war and were putting everything into it and that the ordinary public services had to wait until after the war.

As to the suggestion that a promise was made, if the hon. member will look up the estimates for the fiscal years 1943-44 and 1944-45 he will find there was no promise by the Minister of Public Works. The estimates went through in about twenty minutes each time; I did not even have to discuss them; they were unanimously agreed to, I believe, because the policy was the right one. My difficulty to-day is that I am getting into that period which is post-war, yet I am dealing with the ordinary civil estimates. If the hon. member has been patient so long on behalf of Glace Bay and Port Morien, he may be patient a little longer. He has been waiting, he says, ten years for those works, and I have been here only three, so I can take only three-tenths of the blame.

Mr. GILLIS: The problem is becoming worse every year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I could ask perhaps fifty members in the house to stand up, and they would make the same speech the hon. member has made.

Mr. McIVOR: I am going to make one now.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I may have to make a speech that way, and I do not contradict what the hon. member has said. I may not agree with everything he has said, but I really do not think this is the right time to discuss post-war projects. I would not be prepared to discuss them in detail, because I have not the details here. I am ready to discuss every item of ordinary estimates, and I think it is only fair to my officials to confine the discussion to those items. To assume that my officials were negligent would not, I suggest, be a fair assumption.

Mr. GILLIS: I did not say that. I said there was an oversight.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Well, there was no oversight on the part of the officials of the Department of Public Works. They knew their position and they followed the policy handed down to them not only by the government but by parliament of that time.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister has stated that these estimates do not include post-war estimates, and has made the suggestion that post-war projects should be considered when the items for another department are before the committee.

Mr. GILLIS: The Department of Reconstruction is in here too, but there is practically no vote.

The CHAIRMAN: The Department of Reconstruction will come up later, but it is not now before the committee. I would remind hon. members that we now have before us the estimates for the Department of Public Works, and that those estimates do not include any post-war projects. Therefore I suggest that what is not intended by the estimates should not be discussed. However, I am in the hands of the committee.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Surely we have the right to know now what the plans are with respect to public works being used as an adjunct to the general improvement of conditions, and the assurance that there will be jobs during the transition period through which we are now passing. When this matter was discussed last year the minister pointed out, and quite properly, that we were in the midst of war. When reference was made to the white paper issued by the government, dealing with the question of employment after the war, the answer given at that time, and accepted by the opposition, was that then was not the time or the occasion to discuss post-war employment as applied to public works. I do not raise any objection to your ruling, sir, but I think it is only fair and proper to point out that now that the war is over—officially or otherwise—we should have from the government, through the Minister of Public Works, a statement outlining generally the plans of his department. When the Minister of Reconstruction is before us, and a matter of public works is raised, we receive the answer that the matter is one for the Minister of Public Works. When we now approach the Minister of Public Works to ascertain what he is going to do with reference to this matter, the implication we must draw from his remarks is that it should come under some other department.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No; I wish to correct the hon. member—not under another department. It will be under this department, when the next estimates are prepared. These are not new estimates; they were prepared during the war and are a continuation of the estimates, seven-twelfths of which were voted in April last, for the fiscal year from April, 1945, to the end of March, 1946.

The hon. member is asking for a simple statement as to post-war projects. I cannot say: Yes, we are going to build a post office in such and such a place or a breakwater in some other place. I would have to cover the whole Dominion of Canada. What I may say in my statement is that it is the intention of the government to keep in good repair—better than during the war years—all the public works in Canada, and to undertake post-war works which will be prepared in my department, but submitted to the Department of Reconstruction, according to the conditions in the part of the country in which those projects will be executed. The remainder will be prepared in the Department of Public Works with the staff at our disposal. The Department of Reconstruction will draw up surveys of their own and will try to give us direction as to what works should be proceeded with at a specified time. I believe that is about all I can say.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I cannot accept the minister's explanation at all. Men are coming back from overseas; others are being discharged from industry. They are taking new jobs. One of the means whereby jobs will be assured, according to the plans of the government as outlined in white papers, and according to other documents issued with such abandon by some departments, will be in the initiation of public works and they must be commenced not after March, 1946, but now. Certainly plans must have been made by this time. Surely the Department of Public Works is in a position to place before the committee something of its plans.

I direct my attention to my own province of Saskatchewan, which is going to have a good deal of unemployment—let there be no mistake about that. Those who left Saskatchewan during the war are beginning to come back. They will not all be absorbed on the farms. Already there is unemployment in some of the cities. One of the means of meeting the problem is a public works programme, not without regard to cost or to utility, a programme to operate in cooperation with private and government enterprise, so as to assure jobs rather than a return to the dole. When I look at the estimates I find that the total amount to be expended in Saskatchewan is the sum of $40,000. If I am not right in that, I am sure the minister will correct me.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is the amount under the architects branch.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What else is there? I find items for dredging in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. There is not much dredging in Saskatchewan—certainly not of the kind covered by the Department of Public Works. Then there is an expenditure for telegraph and telephone, but that is merely the upkeep of existing utilities, it is not in the nature of a public work designed to assure employment.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What about harbours and rivers, as shown at page 38 of the estimates?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is the item upon which I intend to make some observations. If the Department of Public Works intends to operate in conjunction with the Department of Reconstruction and the Department of Labour in an effort to secure jobs for the unemployed, to develop public works that will be self-paying and of benefit to the areas in which they are established, this is one expenditure that very well might be made in the province of Saskatchewan.

Almost in the exact centre of Saskatchewan is Long lake or Last Mountain lake, the greatest natural reservoir that we have in the province. It is a fine fishing lake; last year there was exported from the catch from this lake between five and six hundred thousand pounds of fish; it is also a summer resort lake. But it is receding year by year. Whereas in 1904 it was one of the navigable lakes in the province, to-day it has diminished to such an extent that if something is not done, in twenty or twenty-five years this great reservoir will be dried up.

Between 1898 and 1904 the wheat being transported from central Saskatchewan into southern Saskatchewan and then on to the markets of Winnipeg passed over this lake on barges. The prairie farm rehabilitation scheme is engaged in the digging of dugouts and the maintenance of necessary reservoirs for water, but upon the Department of Public Works primarily rests the responsibility for the preservation of Saskatchewan's greatest natural reservoir. Looking over a return that was brought down I find that the Qu'Appelle river, which adjoins this lake and must necessarily be the means whereby it is preserved, passed into the hands of the dominion in 1898 because its waters had not been disposed of prior thereto. In 1938 the Department of Public Works purchased the dam facilities that were constructed at Craven on the northern rim of the Qu'Appelle river.

Unless something is done to raise the level of this lake—the best fishing lake in central Saskatchewan, a lake which comprises the greatest bird sanctuary in the province,—its very existence will be in danger. This lake is the most valuable water reservoir along the Qu'Appelle valley and something should be done to provide for tapping the reserve waters of the south Saskatchewan river in June and July of each year and diverting those waters down the Qu'Appelle into Long lake, thus raising the level of the lake.

There may be fifty members, as the minister has said, who are looking for post offices or other buildings, but I doubt if there is any place in the dominion where expenditure of money would give greater dividends in enjoyment, the preservation of an agricultural area and the conservation of bird life than the utilization of the waters of the Saskatchewan by diversion through the Qu'Appelle valley. By doing this, not only will the lake be preserved but irrigation areas will be opened up along the river valley and jobs will be provided.

This is one of the few areas in Saskatchewan where irrigation has been used. A number of soldiers of the first war have already established themselves in small farm projects made possible by such irrigation work as has been done. I understand that the total project would cost some $2,000,000. I realize that that is a large amount, but its expenditure would provide jobs for the unemployed of our province; it would provide work over a considerable period of time—it will take some two years to complete the job—for farmers during their spare time. It would assure the preservation of this lake which is so necessary to the future of our province and the continuance of agriculture in the adjacent areas.

I ask the minister if this is not just the type of work that the post-war plans of the government actually comprehend. Is it not just the kind of public project that is being done in the United States? I look at the Washington Congressional reports containing the plans of the United States government for the building of public works that will be self-liquidating and pay dividends in happiness and enjoyment, and at the same time provide employment, and then I compare those plans with the plans of this government in November, 1945. If members are to carry out their responsibilities, now is the time to place before the minister projects within the competence of his department which will provide jobs for our unemployed. If we deal with all the subjects we have been dealing with in this parliament and do not assure jobs, we are building for the most terrible crash that has ever taken place in this country. We are building for the separation of province and province, for disunion and for the setting of class against class.

I do not want to see the government building public works that cannot be justified, merely going through the form of entering upon some construction or initiating some work for no other reason than to provide jobs. The Department of Public Works should assure jobs by public works properly planned to the end that as far as possible they will be self-liquidating. Those jobs should use raw materials and labour to as large an extent as possible during the transition period through which we are passing and which may continue for some two years. The government should step in wherever necessary and construct public works which will assure employment.

I think it is the duty of the minister, and I say this with the greatest deference, to place before this house and the country at this time the plans of his department. Surveys have been made. Everybody is making surveys. But parliament cannot find out what is in those surveys. I say to the minister through you, Mr. Chairman: Take parliament into your confidence and place before us generally your plans—not just generalities, not something ephemeral, not something that we cannot put our teeth into. Let us know your plans for each province or generally for each area, and let us in a spirit of cooperation try to work together with you to the end that we place before you proposals that we believe to be necessary in the national or provincial interest. On our part we shall do our best to assist the department in facing this problem, which I say without reserve has not been faced yet. We have white papers and papers of every other colour, but when we ask the government what it is going to do, each minister says: Go to the other minister, because that particular matter comes under him. The Minister of Public Works, I understand, is on the committee that deals with these matters. Let him tell us now what is being done and what the plans are, so that when we go back to our constituencies we can say: Well, there is a minister who was able to place his plans concretely before parliament. The minister laughs. But if he has not those plans, we are in for a very serious condition of affairs. If he has them, surely we have the right to know now what they are.

The CHAIRMAN: I hope that members of the committee did not misunderstand the remarks I made prior to the speech of the hon. member for Lake Centre. What the committee discusses on the item "departmental administration" is for the committee itself to decide. It has, however, been agreed that under the first item a general discussion is in order, and my suggestion was that each member would not propose some specific public work required in his constituency because the minister in his remarks stated that there was no provision in these estimates for specific public works in the different constituencies. It was not my suggestion that there should not be a general discussion on the question of public works and what public works were best for the community, but I do think that hon. members should not at this time discuss specific public works in their own community, for the reason that the minister has not included them in these estimates and such appropriations could not be passed now. As I say, I am in the hands of the committee; I am not attempting to dictate to the committee what shall or shall not be discussed. But the minister did state that estimates for specific projects were not included and that they should not be discussed at this time.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I feel inclined to agree with very many of the things which the hon. member for Lake Centre has said, and his dissertation on public works in Saskatchewan was most interesting. I believe there is something in what he said about that project for Long lake and the Qu'Appelle river. I have to repeat that there is nothing in these estimates for these works, but they are kept in mind. I am not telling the hon. member that some other minister is responsible. I have never said that since I have been sitting in this house. I take responsibility for everything that goes on in my department. But if hon. members followed my speech I am sure they will not find reason in it to justify the gloomy picture that the hon. member drew of conditions in the near future.

Everything in this country does not depend on public works. If you look at the amount of my estimates you will find that they amount to $16 million. The hon. member is now proposing that we go into a two million dollar project, so I think it will be realized that the welfare of our country is not solely dependent on public works. They are a part of our national economy, and can be of help. But if anyone has in mind that the ills of our country can be cured by putting up public buildings or even self-liquidating projects such as the hon. member has mentioned, I must say that my experience has been that it is not done that way. I have seen moneys voted by parliament in the last fifteen years for public works to cure unemployment; far be it from me to say that those projects were wrong at that time, but the results were not very good. This whole question has to be studied, keeping in mind labour conditions, the work of the Department of Reconstruction and private enterprise. We must try to do our share, of course, and personally I am convinced that we shall have to study projects in every province.

The hon. member started out in light vein and said that Saskatchewan was getting $40,000 for public works. I point out that maintenance and repairs of public works there come under the architects' branch; that is, the estimates for harbours, breakwaters, and so forth, and I am quite willing to consider any requests for such work. But surely there are very few harbours and rivers and ports in Saskatchewan. There are not many places there where we can build breakwaters, although there may be a few; but in that respect you cannot compare Saskatchewan with Nova Scotia.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was not suggesting that. I said that they were navigable rivers under your authority.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am not ready to go over the Navigable Waters Protection Act with the hon. member without having it here and making a study of it, but if my recollection of the act is correct the only jurisdiction this department has over navigable rivers is to remove any impediment to navigation. That is the main jurisdiction we have. I understand that many of these matters are contained in the brief which the dominion government submitted to the provinces, and I hope that some understanding will be arrived at with the provinces.

Once more may I say that these estimates are war-time estimates, prepared when we were right in the war and presented to the house in April last and voted to a large extent, and what I am trying to do to-day is to get authority to take care of the remaining four or five months of this fiscal year. I do not say that this is all the public works that we will have; there may be supplementary estimates. I am pleased that this discussion on public works has taken place, because we have been the unknown department for so long and now we are getting prominence in the House of Commons.

Mr. BRACKEN: Don't let that lake out there go dry.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Is the minister aware of the fact that in my district there are eight towns and villages, every one of which requires a public building?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have requests for public works in every constituency in Canada. I do not know whether they are all justified. I agree with the hon. member for Lake Centre that we should not erect buildings just for the sake of building them. They must have some utility, and the cost must also be considered.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I do not want to press unnecessarily the request I made before recess, but I still feel that the minister owes the committee an explanation in regard to the general plan to meet unemployment. He said this morning that he was not one of those who would have criticized a plan for public works at the time, but an experience of fifteen years in the house has taught him that public works are no cure for unemployment. At least that is the interpretation I placed on his words. I do not disagree with him in that regard, but public works are a necessary adjunct to any scheme to tide over the employment situation during difficult days.

I did not have the white paper on employment and income before me this morning. I find that it contains the plans of the government in this regard, set forth as generally though not particularized. On page 15 of the report presented in April, 1945, after setting out the various plans that the government has in mind for the encouragement of private investment after the war and the extension of consumer demand and the development of an expanding economy, it says:

Accordingly as an appropriate policy for this period the dominion proposes to press ahead with the planning of its own deferred works and invites provinces and municipalities to do the same. In addition, the dominion government will give consideration to methods of stimulating provincial and municipal governments to carry out necessary surveys and draw the plans for useful public projects in defined categories to be executed when they are needed, to stabilize employment, probably some time after the Japanese war is ended. Further, the dominion government proposes to press ahead as rapidly as possible with surveys, aerial and other mapping and explorations on the results of which a new and forward-looking agreed programme for the development and conservation of natural resources must be built.

I call attention to those words "forward-looking agreed programme." They indicate that even in April last the government had a "forward-looking programme" agreed upon. The document goes on:

Then the dominion will undertake its own deferred projects in those localities in which the decline of war contracts or other circumstances have made available labour, which can be employed on such projects and for which the locality gives promise of permanent employment. The government will invite provincial and municipal governments to cooperate in following similar programmes.

When I brought the Last Mountain lake project to the attention of the minister I did so because it is recognized that if the undertaking in Saskatchewan is developed it will mean that a very considerable area will be available for irrigation. It will mean that this lake will be preserved for its fishing economy and as a bird sanctuary and also as a necessary reservoir for moisture. It is a project that will be worth while. I did not put it before the minister as the only project there might be in Saskatchewan, but as one which should be in accord with what the government intends to do with a view to assuring employment. The minister is fully conversant with the general plan for assuring jobs; that plan was known to the government in April last, and the reason I am making these remarks is that we have heard so much about two jobs growing where one grew before. That is the statement of one of the ministers, translated into simple every-day language. I should like to hear of one of these post-war projects that will assure the growing of one job where none grew before, because Saskatchewan people are coming back from the coast and from overseas and already there is a lag in employment in that province.

From time to time the member for Davenport has brought other projects to the attention of the government, and this type of project combines in itself the very elements mentioned in the white paper as the proper ones to be considered when the government is deciding upon a project for the prevention of surplus unemployment.

The minister does not need to go into details. I do not ask what amount of construction he will do in each province, because he cannot answer that. But what are the projects which the government will enter into so that it may, by these projects, cooperate with enterprise and assure the relief of any prospective unemployment? He says that my view of things in the next months or years is not the proper one, that I picture a doleful situation in employment. Well, all I know is that in the evidence given before the United States congress, one of the outstanding economic leaders there said that unless something is done in the setting up immediately of public works in that country, there will be, I believe he said, four million unemployed within the next year. In this country we generally follow similar economic trends. If we are faced with a like problem, if it is found that private industry cannot secure jobs or assure jobs, then what are the government's plans for public works?

So long as all controls remain on private industry, so long as a price ceiling is maintained—and I am not arguing against it—in the face of higher cost of production which the manufacturer or the industrialist must meet, private industry cannot develop or expand, because of the fear that there will be no compensation for the extra effort. Further, in the transitional period—and I am supported by the evidence given before the various committees of the United States congress—public works have a definite place. In the United States, if I understand the position correctly, several billion dollars of public works are about to be undertaken in order to assure that during this period of transition from war activities to peace industry the slack in employment will be taken up by public investment.

Mr. PROBE: May I ask the hon. member for Lake Centre this question: Is he now arguing on behalf of public enterprise, or public enterprise during the transition period, or more assistance to private enterprise? I cannot quite follow him.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for Lake Centre might like to answer the question, but I must remind the hon. member for Regina City that we are now discussing public works. I think the question would be out of order at this time.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to say a few words at this point. Does the minister want to answer?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It will take me only a few minutes. I am pleased that on so many points I agree with the hon. member for Lake Centre. He seems to approve the white paper and the principles laid down in it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes; it was copied from the British and United States investigations.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That puts us on the same floor, and we can discuss this matter of planning. Public works has jurisdiction in two or three spheres. The general plan is that we are to expand our works in every one of these fields—buildings, breakwaters and so on. We are going to try to come to some agreement with the provinces in the development of natural resources. I have not before me the proposals to the provinces, but we shall be interested in every work which can help private enterprise to continue on its same level, or on a reasonable level. Where I agree for the most part with the hon. member for Lake Centre is that he admits public works are not a cure for unemployment, they may be a help. In an economy where the national revenue is some nine billion dollars and we have a public works programme of fifty millions or a hundred millions, it would be only a drop in the bucket to boost the standard of living or give purchasing power to the population. Hon. members do not want me to go into details.

This morning the hon. member for Cape Breton South spoke of Glace Bay. I am coming back to that. During the lunch hour I found that in the 1946-47 estimates there is an item prepared for that, but that is a post-war project which has been considered. It is ready. But do not ask me to bring in those estimates which were prepared last January, and which are continuing estimates of war-time administration, post-war projects. I do not think that would be fair, and what I am now saying applies equally to all of Canada. We could discuss that for a day or two, but generally I would not be able to give much more information than I am giving right now, I shall certainly, however, answer any question hon. members wish to ask when any estimate is before the committee.

Mr. GILLIS: I know that the committee wants to get along and finish up the estimates, but I am not going to apologize for one minute at this time for joining with the hon. member for Lake Centre in the arguments he has made. I think perhaps the hon. member for Lake Centre has occupied the time of committee to-day to a greater advantage than he has at any other time since I came into the house. I have in mind, Mr. Chairman, the fact that I sat on the reconstruction committee for some two and a half years. The object of that committee was to find post-war employment. We called in representatives of industry and finance from one end of Canada to the other, and the provincial governments were called in to place before the committee the public works projects they had in mind in their respective provinces, so that the government might start immediately to plan for the post-war period. It was emphasized in that committee time and time again that in the transition from war to peace the greatest medium for taking the first shock of returning service personnel and war workers being laid off would be the public works projects that might immediately be put into operation in each province in order to create employment during the period of the re-tooling of industrial machines for other means of production.

During the two years that I sat on that committee I did not think I was wasting my time. I heard the provincial premiers laying out immediate post-war plans and indicating what they were prepared to do. As there was at that time an interdepartmental committee handling the problem for the federal government, I thought that each department of government that had to do with public works projects would have its plans ready. The fact of the matter is that the minister comes before the committee—I am not blaming him; I am criticizing government policy, or lack of government policy—and tells us that they have no programme ready.

We went to considerable expense in bringing people from one end of the country to the other to have those plans prepared. The excuse cannot be given that the government did not know and that they are still probing the problem. The problem was set out pretty well to that reconstruction committee. Evidently it never got beyond the committee stage.

The minister says there is no possible chance of solving the whole problem with public works projects. I will admit that; but I also want to bring to the minister's attention the fact that there is no other programme in the maritime provinces. There is no war industry there, and very few were created during the war—only about one per cent. Those that were created there folded up in the past several months. Industries that were in Nova Scotia for years were syphoned off immediately upon the cessation of hostilities, and a serious unemployment situation has developed in that province. That applies to the maritime provinces generally. It is worse than it was in 1939. If the only department of government that has some money to spend to create employment in the province says that nothing is to be done until the 1946-47 estimates are brought down, that is a simple and plain statement that so far as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are concerned there are no plans whatsoever for employment, and we are going back exactly to where we were in 1939.

I have talked to the Minister of Reconstruction about reconverting war industries there. He has no plans. I say to the Minister of Public Works that in the field of public works there are many projects that could be got ready immediately. I mentioned two this morning. I picked them out because of their urgency, and also because I was led to believe that in the 1945-46 estimates there would be an appropriation for the purpose of doing something about the two specific matters I mentioned this morning. But from the broad general picture, as I see it now, the only hope we have in the maritime provinces is to get some public works projects started until such time as private enterprise, which has the machine of production in its hand at the present time, is prepared to make up its mind whether it is worth while investing money in the creation of industry in those provinces. We have no other hope, and we have not that hope now until 1946-47. In the meantime the two projects which I spoke about this morning are left untouched. Seven hundred boats go in and out of Glace Bay harbour during the fishing season. You could not get into it last year, and if it is left until next year the chances are you will not be able to do anything about it. The same situation applies to the breakwater at Port Morien. The upkeep of the community depends upon it. I could give the minister a long list but I did not want to do that this morning. The hon. member for Lake Centre has insisted this afternoon that something should be done. If the minister is not prepared to tell us what the department has in mind in each province, can we not have it by way of supplementary estimates? I appreciate the fact that the present estimates were drafted months ago and that the money has been spent. That is quite all right. I am prepared to let these estimates go through without any further discussion if the minister will say: I am going to consult the Minister of Reconstruction and also that interdepartmental committee which is supposed to be handling the recommendations of the reconstruction committee; I am going to find out what they are prepared to do in the way of getting urgent public works projects started across Canada as laid down by the various provincial ministers to that reconstruction committee, and, having selected half a dozen projects in each province, which means the creation of employment, I am ready to come in later this session with supplementary estimates and make a start on this rehabilitation of the country of which we have talked for five years. If the minister will do that, I do not wish to discuss this any further. I know he cannot do anything on the set-up he has before him now, but I insist that it is the obligation not only of the minister but of the whole government to tell us definitely, as a matter of public policy, what they are prepared to do in the immediate future with respect to getting these urgent public works projects started, in order to create employment in the transition period.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. HANSELL: I have been listening for the last hour or two to this debate in respect to post-war public works, and, so far as I can see, we are mixed up a little bit on this matter; I am, anyway. I think we are asking the wrong minister these questions. About a year ago a reconstruction committee was set up. It went into a fairly extensive investigation as to post-war reconstruction and, partly as a result of its activities, a department of reconstruction was set up or is now in process of being set up. I never visualized the present Department of Public Works as being the department responsible for post-war reconstruction, although I agree that the minister should have something in mind as to what his department is going to do next year or the year after.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat says that the minister should tell the committee now, for it is his responsibility to do this and do that and do the other in order to find employment. Now, when did it ever become the business or responsibility of the Department of Public Works to find employment for people? That is a question which I think we should continually put before hon. members of this house and the people of Canada. We do not build post offices because we want to give men work; we build post offices because we have no post offices. We do not build wharves for the purpose of creating employment; we build wharves because we need wharves. I say that the purpose of the government is not to find employment, but so to legislate that the people of this country shall have economic security at the very highest level that our productive capacity is able to provide. That is the purpose of government.

I can quite understand the minister saying it is no use to ask him what he is going to do next year or the following year, because I know how the department is handled; at least he can correct me if I am mistaken. Departmental officials gather around some table and get their heads together and say: What are we going to do next year? Well, the member for so and so wants a post office; he is a Liberal, we will put up a post office for him. And the member for so and so wants a post office; well, what party does he belong to? So eventually he winds up the work for the year, and that is his programme: so many post offices, so many wharves, so many other public works. Then he goes to the treasury board—and that is the nigger in the woodpile. He goes to them cap in hand, makes a humble obeisance to them, and says: Gentlemen, I want so much money this year to run my department. The members of the board take out their pencils and do a little figuring. Regarding themselves as the custodians of the people's money they scale the figures down, and the poor minister is left to get along with whatever the treasury board care to say he is to have. I should like to ask the minister a question along this line, and he can answer it later. I am afraid he will have to be very careful how he answers it, because it has to do with the relationship between his department and the treasury board, and of course he will have to be very polite to the treasury board or they will scale him down a little more next year. I should like to ask him if my diagnosis of his procedure is correct.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is all wrong.

Mr. HANSELL: I should like to ask him if a happy relationship exists between himself and the treasury board. I should like him to answer that, because when we are discussing grants of money for public works under this department we are just talking peanuts. I want to know whether the treasury board is not penny wise and pound foolish. Look at the measures on the order paper. Here is one, standing in the name of the Minister of Finance, which calls for an appropriation of $700,000,000. That is a lot of money. Another order requires an appropriation in the neighbourhood of $750,000,000. That, also, is a lot of money. It is to provide other countries with funds wherewith to buy what we have to sell. I can never figure that one out, but I may not discuss that subject on this measure. It seems to me that when you ask for a few billions you are apt to get it, but if you ask for enough to put up a post office here or something else there, the board can figure in those terms, because they are at just about the level where they are able to do a little figuring.

Of course we in this corner of the house look at things rather differently. I am glad we do, because, you know, money is worth nothing at all unless it is spent. Our Social Credit philosophy is one of spending, and that one has when he spends. I am willing to vote any appropriation for which the minister may ask. The only thing I ask when voting money is that he shall spend it without wasting it. That is all I am concerned about. And when treasury board or some other responsible persons find they are spending so much that they have to tax so much more, then I just hope that they will tax so much, and the people will holler and shout so loudly Canada will wake up to the fact that the present policy of government financing is strangling them. Those of us in this group can shout our heads off about government finance, but the government will move only when the people begin to learn that they are being strangled by this system of taxation and debt.

I should like to ask another question of somewhat lesser importance. What is the process followed in respect to the management of public buildings? It does not matter which one the minister may have in mind. Let us say a public building is on some corner or some back street. Is there a superintendent who looks after the building? If the minister replies that there is, then I am perfectly certain that the superintendents of some of our public buildings do not look after them very well. I have passed government buildings and have said to myself; Well, if that is a picture of government ownership, I want none of it. If private industry kept its buildings as some of our public buildings are kept, it would not be in business very long. It is about time the Minister of Veterans Affairs saw to it that the windows in the Daly building were cleaned. One of these days he will not be able to see out.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And the hon. member will not be able to see in.

Mr. HANSELL: Maybe they do not want anyone to look in.

Mr. FRASER: There is no light in that department at all.

Mr. HANSELL: Sometimes I have wondered if buildings like that have janitors.

I have a further point. When the minister brings in estimates in which he includes amounts for repairs to certain buildings, what happens when buildings have to have repairs after the estimate has been passed? In private business, if a stairway breaks down the management will realize that in order to do business a new staircase must be put in and they will go ahead and do it. What is the process when that happens in a public building? Do they have to wait for a year until treasury board discovers that they need some new stairs?

Mr. FRASER: They just step things up a little.

Mr. HANSELL: Do the superintendents of these buildings have a sort of contingent fund to do this, that and the other thing? Looking at some of the signs in these public buildings one is inclined to say: What boy in grade II printed that? I suppose the minister has no money to send out to have a little sign painted, so he has to ask some school boy to write signs in pen and ink. Words may be spelled wrong, the S's turned the wrong way, and all that kind of thing. Perhaps the minister would answer one or two of these questions.

The building in which we are housed is a very fine one, and spotlessly clean—except, of course, when I go into some of the member's rooms; that is a little different. But the hallways are spotlessly clean, and we like to bring visitors here so that they may see the building. I am quite certain, however that if someone from another country visited some of the offices in the east block—the Department of External Affairs, for instance—he would think the whole government was on the bread-line.

Mr. FRASER: He would think they were in the morgue.

Mr. HANSELL: I think a good fire over in the east block would be a good thing for this country. It would clean the inside out and put a new inside in. That is the way I look at some of these things. I guess I have said enough.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Chairman, the discussion on my estimates started out on a high plane. Questions were asked about the general plan for public works all through the country; it was suggested we should try to find ways to relieve unemployment wherever it showed up, and I followed that discussion with keen interest. The only thought that came to my mind when hon. members were speaking about planning was this: Do they realize that planning for public works means that we have to make out a list of specific projects extending from one ocean to the other? Now, I could probably give the committee some information as to projects for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and going on out to Vancouver—

Mr. REID: And New Westminster.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, and New Westminster. I could probably give information about projects for buildings, works and harbours, along the St. Lawrence and on the two coasts. That would be a general plan. But I can assure hon. members that every day we are studying and preparing those plans. The only question is as to the time at which a discussion of such plans should properly take place. I shall not repeat what I said before, that these estimates were voted in part in the month of April, and I am now asking that a vote be passed to conclude the requirements for the fiscal year.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South has asked if we are to have supplementary estimates. Certainly we shall have a certain amount. But the timing of works is of great importance. If the department were asked to carry out some project in January or February along the coast of Nova Scotia, I do not think we could do it. We have to time our works properly. We start as early as possible in the spring and continue as late as possible in the fall. But the hon. member wants us to begin right away.

Mr. GILLIS: We have been waiting for ten years.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, no.

Mr. GILLIS: It is time to get started.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Do not speak about the past ten years. In my department are officials who have had experience in these matters, and who know the right time to go ahead with them. There are certain times in the year when some works cannot be carried out, and I hope the hon. member will not insist that we begin next week on certain works in some parts of Canada. We have plans. The ordinary estimates will come up, and we shall have supplementary estimates at the end of this session. Then there will be estimates probably in February, during the next session. We shall have works in the different provinces. I cannot give stated amounts, because those amounts might be over or below what I have in mind.

This discussion was followed by the speech of the hon. member for Macleod, who has a sense of humour well known in the house. He has told us of the way in which he believes the Department of Public Works votes money, and he says that if Mr. So-and-so is a Liberal member, he has a great chance to have public works in his riding. But if the hon. member will look up the estimates he will find that there is more money spent in constituencies represented by members of the opposition than in those represented by members on the government side of the house.

Mr. McIVOR: I agree with that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My officials are not Liberals or members of the opposition; they are civil servants. I do not think they have any political affiliations. They are loyal to their minister, and they try to do their best for the people with the amount of money they have at their disposal.

Mr. HANSELL: I withdraw.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I thank you on behalf of my officials.

Mr. IRVINE: You are describing Alberta's method.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will describe the set-up. Canada is divided into twelve districts. In each district there is a resident architect and a resident engineer. These men have their own staffs. They have full knowledge of the different public works in their district, their state of repair, the cost of maintenance, and so on. They make reports to headquarters in Ottawa. They advance every reason they can to get appropriations to repair, build or maintain public works. That is the ordinary procedure. As a general rule, members go to the resident engineer or the resident architect to present their plans. They then come to us and we decide. We generally follow the advice given by the architect or engineer. If you know of one engineer or one architect from Halifax to Vancouver who is derelict in his duty, I should like to have his name. They are doing a wonderful job. They are considering every request that is made. They are technical men who act as my advisers.

We do not spend much money. I am thinking of what was spent during the war. I can remember standing up in the house and asking for $100,000,000 for public works in Canada, but who was ready to support the Minister of Public Works on that occasion? Not one single member. We pared down our expenses to the bone, if you will pardon the expression, because requests for the war effort were so urgent and compulsory that we tried to forget our own lives here in Canada in order to try to save what we were fighting for. That was the position of my department, and we continued in that way until the end of the war.

Under this new policy I am going to do my utmost to see that needed public works are constructed, not fancy public works that are not needed. I think that is the duty of the officials and of the minister. We are the custodians of the money. You may laugh at the treasury board, but I want to tell you that I have sat on that board. You ask if that board studies the expenditure of the people's money. Yes, they do, from one dollar up. Previously I did not know the procedure that was followed, but now I know it is the best guarantee you can have that the people's money will be properly spent. They do not spend money unless there is justification for the expenditure.

That does not always fit in with what we have in mind as to public works. We think that public works should be built when they help a community to expand its activities, when they help a private enterprise to expand its activities. I have in mind right now the construction of a wharf that was started at Westview on the British Columbia coast. Why did we do that during war time? We did it because an industry at Powell River was willing to spend between $13,000,000 and $14,000,000. We thought we should be ready to spend from $200,000 to $300,000 to help put up the wharf, to do some dredging, and so on.

Mr. SINCLAIR: When are you going to complete the harbour there?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That may be coming, but I am not making any promises. I just want to tell hon. members what we have in mind, and we are going to follow that up to the limit. I should like to continue this discussion for days. I hope that after hearing this, hon. members will not be so ready to ridicule men who have been working for the government for years and doing the best they can under the circumstances.

Mr. GILLIS: The Minister of Reconstruction made it clear that his department would only be a coordinating department and would carry on no public works. Does the minister anticipate putting through post-war projects that would come under his department without reference to Reconstruction?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I could not do it.

Mr. GILLIS: Then no one is going to do it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is not the way it is done. The Department of Reconstruction was set up to coordinate governmental activities in the post-war period. If I understand the act, their staff is not to undertake the execution of public works; they are working on the reconversion of war industries into peace-time industries. Public works generally and the ordinary programme of maintenance have nothing to do with the Department of Reconstruction. Any projects started with a view to creating employment or any assistance given to the construction of provincial works would come under the Department of Reconstruction so far as the timing is concerned. Plans and specifications for post-war projects are prepared and then sent to the Department of Reconstruction for advice as to timing. It might be wise to start a project in Toronto, either this winter or in the spring, because of the unemployment situation, whereas in other places there might be a shortage of man-power and it might be better to wait. They will be our advisers. If my understanding is correct, the plans for public works will be carried on by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FERGUSON: We representatives of the people have come here in the belief that we would get information from our associates in Ottawa, particularly from the ministers. Parliament has been in session since September 6, 1945, and the people of Canada want to know what is going to happen, not only in the years to come but in the days and weeks to come. They want some notice from the cabinet ministers as to what they may expect in the immediate future. Conditions in Canada to-day are not such that time can be wasted, particularly when you consider the money that is to be spent by the minister's department on post-war projects.

Apparently the minister has not seen fit to give the people of Canada any idea of what they may expect from his department. In 1944 the minister acknowledged receipt of a letter urging improvements in Collingwood harbour. These improvements were necessary in order to reduce by $1.40 per ton the cost of coal to the consumer in the Collingwood vicinity. The minister's department is not working very closely with the Minister of Reconstruction, because the Minister of Reconstruction informed this house the other day that he believed there was sufficient work to keep the shipyards at Collingwood and other yards throughout Canada busy for about eighteen months. The Collingwood shipyards were asking that improvements be made to the harbour because it is not in fit condition to permit an extensive shipbuilding programme. The minister's two engineers last year drew this extensive plan for the harbour of Collingwood, and I have copies of a great deal of correspondence—this is only one-tenth of it—between the minister and his engineers. I was warned by the defeated Liberal candidate in my riding not to mention this matter in the house; but on the 6th day of June, 1945—and it will be remembered that the federal election was on June 11—after that gentleman had been in power for eleven years, without ever mentioning to me up to that time improvements in our harbour, he did say, and it was well published in the newspapers, that approximately $4 million was to be spent on Collingwood harbour—a small item of $4 million! The hon. member for Lake Centre asked for only $2 million, but the defeated Liberal candidate promised on June 6, 1945 that the dominion government would probably spend $4 million on that one trivial item in the town of Collingwood.

After the election I was told not to mention this matter or nothing would be spent. The matter would still have to be left in the hands of the defeated Liberal candidate, as this government was still in power. My answer to that was this. I am the representative of the people of Simcoe county, and if they need public works and I can prove it, I defy any government to withhold those public works from those people. I do not need anybody to intercede, and if anyone does, we will let the people of Canada decide whether everybody is to be treated alike by the government. I have confidence enough in the people of this country to believe that when public works are necessary for the general benefit of the people of Canada, wherever they may be required, the people will see to it that those works are carried out by this government. Until I find out differently, that is my opinion, and if I do find out differently, the people of Canada will know about it.

I cannot understand why the minister up to this late date has given no intimation regarding the expenditures that are to be made on public works when this particular work has been urged upon him repeatedly by our town and our board of trade, especially in view of the fact that the Liberal candidate in my constituency declared before the election that $4 million would be spent on this work. The people of Canada want to know, and they have a right to know, what is to be done. In my opinion it was not good judgment for the minister to get up here and say we cannot discuss anything but past expenditures.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I never said such a thing.

Mr. FERGUSON: Pardon me if I am wrong, but I understood the minister to intimate that we should stick to the appropriations he is asking the committee to pass. The people of Canada want to know what the minister's plans are for the future, and they are entitled to know. But the minister asks us to approve past expenditure without giving us any intimation as to what is to be done in the future. I think he owes it to the people of Canada to give them some idea as to what the department is going to do for the general benefit of Canada.

Mr. HAZEN: The Minister of Public Works referred this afternoon to New Brunswick. I should like to take this opportunity to bring to his attention certain works that are necessary for the improvement of the facilities at the port of Saint John, New Brunswick. The port of Saint John is one of two ports facing on the Atlantic that remain open throughout the year. It plays an important part in the export business of Canada. The minister a few minutes ago said that he proposed to spend money on public works where it is necessary to help communities, but I would point out to him that these expenditures are asked for not merely to help the community but to be of benefit to the dominion as a whole.

The port of Saint John has modern up-to-date facilities for handling freight. It has some of the best longshoremen in the world. But it requires further facilities. This matter has already been brought to the attention of the minister by the mayor and council of the city of Saint John and also by the Saint John board of trade. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee or the minister's time this afternoon by reading from that report, but there are two or three recommendations in it to which I would refer briefly.

One is in connection with passenger facilities at that port. We have, as I say, modern freight facilities, but we have no modern passenger facilities. Those facilities were destroyed by fire some years ago and have not been rebuilt. Customs and immigration sheds should be provided. The board of trade of the city of Saint John understood that plans for these sheds and buildings had been made some time ago, but they recently discovered that no plans had yet been made. I suggest to the minister that steps be taken to have the plans prepared immediately and the work undertaken as soon as possible.

I wish to refer also to a wharf on the east side of the harbour, known as the McLeod Pettingill wharf. Plans were made prior to the war to rebuild this wharf but owing to the war coming on this construction was held up. I hope if it comes within his jurisdiction that the minister will give attention to the rebuilding of that wharf now that the war is over.

Then there is a wharf at the head of the harbour known as the Long wharf. Recommendations have been made that it be reconstructed and I would ask that steps be taken to have that done at the earliest possible date. There are other facilities to which I could refer but these are the three most important; the others are contained in the statements that have been forwarded to the government by the board of trade and by the mayor and city council of the city of Saint John.

There is one other matter. It has not to do with the port of Saint John; it has to do with some of the fishing villages along the shore of the bay of Fundy in the county of Saint John. No repairs have been made since prior to the war to the wharves and breakwaters in some of these villages. The result has been that they have fallen into disrepair and in consequence the commercial fishermen who live in these villages and use these wharves and breakwaters are placed at a very serious disadvantage. I ask the minister to look into these needed repairs, particularly to the wharf or breakwater at a village called Chance Harbour. This matter, I believe, has already been brought to the attention of the minister. Recently I received a letter from one of the fishermen in that community advising me that, the breakwater being so far gone, they had found it necessary this autumn or early winter to make a temporary breakwater to protect their fishing boats. The wharf at Lorneville is also badly in need of rebuilding.

Since these matters were brought to the minister's attention I would point out that there has been a very bad storm in the bay of Fundy so that these wharves and breakwaters, which were in a bad state of repair, have now been damaged to a greater extent with the result that work is urgently needed on them at the earliest possible moment.

In addition to the wharves and breakwaters I have mentioned, work is needed in Dipper Harbour in St. John county. There is urgent need for dredging in that locality. There is a considerable lobster fishing business in that harbour. The lobsters are brought in by boat and truck to Dipper Harbour and when they get there they are put in what the fishermen call cars, which are large crates that float in the water inside the breakwater. What has happened is this. The harbour has started to fill up, and at low tide, instead of these large crates that contain the lobsters floating, they rest on the bottom of the harbour, the top of the crate being exposed, with the result that some of the lobsters are killed. That of course is a great loss to the men engaged in this form of fishing. I hope the minister will give attention at the earliest possible moment to remedying that condition.

Mr. SHAW: I have looked through the estimates in an attempt to find some vote under which one may discuss rentals for government offices, but I have not been able to find one.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member might look at 245 and 249.

Mr. SHAW: My discussion may go to the point where I may challenge certain policies with respect to rentals and advocate government ownership of those buildings, and I want to be sure that I shall not be deprived of an opportunity.

Mr. ISNOR: I support the representations made by the member for St. John-Albert with regard to the eastern ports. He has made an exceptionally good case for the port of Saint John. I have already placed on record my views with regard to Halifax, and I will not take up further time in that connection. I concur in what the hon. gentleman has said about the fishermen. I do not look upon this as an expenditure, but rather as an investment on the part of the country. When I suggest that the Public Works department should favourably consider the requests made for needed breakwaters and wharves in the fishing districts of the maritimes, I am urging what is really an investment, because, unless the fishermen have these breakwaters, they are unable to do their work properly and to bring home the catch that adds to the wealth of the country.

The member for Calgary West the other evening drew, so to speak, a triangle of labour, capital and the public. In this matter I would point out that we have again a triangular situation involving production, export trade, public works and finance. These elements enter into the picture. Unless you have production you cannot have new markets and it is necessary, if we are to have production, to give the fishermen needed protection in the form of breakwaters so that they can go out and fish and bring back their product, adequately protected against the hazards which they have to face. May I say to the Minister of Public Works that when requests come from the maritime provinces they are for needed works. We do not make requests otherwise, and I would ask him to give them his favourable consideration. They should not be looked upon as unnecessary expenditures but rather as investments for the good of the country as a whole, and especially, of course, for our part of the dominion.

Mr. McLURE: As this seems to be rather a maritime field day, and as other provinces down east have spoken, I do not care to see Prince Edward Island left out in the cold. In going through the estimates before the house I was looking for a revote of a considerable amount for Charlottetown harbour improvements. This is not something new that is being brought to the attention of the minister, because Charlottetown harbour improvements have been promised for many years. A start was made on them in 1913 and nothing else was done until 1941 when a vote went through this house for $250,000 to begin improvements there.

At one time we had a royal commission—it was appointed in 1926 under the chairmanship of Sir Andrew Rae Duncan—to look into harbour improvements and other matters connected with the maritime provinces. I will mention only the part of the inquiry that related to Charlottetown. The Duncan commission was appointed by a Liberal government. It brought in a recommendation, No. 18, urging the absolute necessity, from the point of view of Prince Edward Island transportation, for certain harbour improvements. This had been neglected, but in 1941, as I have said, a vote went through this house of $250,000 which was supposedly to be used as a start on harbour improvements in the port of Charlottetown. Material was brought to Charlottetown—lumber, steel and machinery—and harbour improvements began. All of a sudden the construction company received the command to halt, and did it so quickly that some of the piles that were half driven were left there, I suppose, to show where work might start again at some future day. Then, as if by magic, all the materials disappeared. After tracing it we found that it had landed in one of the upper provinces of Canada to be used in war construction. We had no objection to their getting a wharf up there, but we do take objection to our part not being carried out.

What I want to say to the minister is that if this revote to take care of harbour improvements in Charlottetown is in the supplementary estimates—and I hope it is, because it has been definitely promised to us that it would be in the estimates of this year, if not in the estimates now tabled, then in the supplementary estimates—I shall feel much happier.

I wish to say a little more with reference to improvements to the Charlottetown harbour. Another thing we have been promised for the last forty years is a ferry service. Engineers have gone over it time and again. In 1913 a start was made to build a marine railway slip—it is sometimes called a dry dock, but we have called it a marine railway slip. In 1913 the Borden government purchased a site for it and did some work on it, but when the war broke out in 1914 the whole thing was dropped. In later years we have been agitating for it, and it was promised by both parties in the last election that this would be a real project in the harbour improvement of our port on the island. What would that mean to us? To begin with it is part of the agreement under which we entered confederation. We were promised that we should have proper communication with the mainland. One thing essential to our transportation is to have a place in our province where we can repair our own ships instead of having to send them up to the St. Lawrence. One of our finest ships was lost on the way up there for improvements. If she could have been repaired and overhauled on the island we would not have lost the S.S. Charlottetown.

When properly built this marine railway slip will employ at least three hundred men annually just to repair our own ships. These figures are taken from the blue-book which gives the expenditures that have been made annually on the repair of our ships over a period of years. Besides, there are all the local boats which could be repaired as well as the boats that we might get from outside points if we had a proper harbour. I bring this to the attention of the Minister of Public Works so that even if he has not his post-war programme all ready he must see that this one is in it. When we come to some other items in the estimates we shall couple with it one of the things that has been definitely promised by both political parties. Of course they always make promises before an election, but we are going to hold them to it this time. Besides this marine slip we are going to ask for the building of a new bridge across the North river which will be known as the Brighton bridge. This bridge will give us a definite road and highway over the shortest route from Charlottetown to Borden. This is a matter that I shall take up with the Minister of Reconstruction or the Minister of Transport.

With reference to the harbour improvements, I believe I am right when I say that a vote in the neighbourhood of a quarter of a million dollars was put through the house in 1940 for this purpose. I know that materials were bought and construction companies employed to do the work. We were promised that it was only a beginning, and that the harbour would be definitely improved to carry out the recommendations of the Andrew Rae Duncan commission of 1926. Can the minister tell me whether it is in the estimates?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sorry, but I shall have to disappoint my hon. friend to a certain extent. That item will not be in the supplementary estimates of this year; but I am told that it is in the ordinary estimates for next year. I did not quite follow the hon. member with regard to Charlottetown harbour. I believe that money was voted in 1940.

Mr. McLURE: Yes.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): A contract was awarded, and then public works had their holiday during the war time. The contract was cancelled and the materials which were purchased were sent to Saint John and Sydney, I believe, to help works which we had there and which had become necessary on account of the war. But we have never lost sight of the improvement of Charlottetown harbour. I am glad to see that both parties on the island agree on this.

Mr. McLURE: The work was really started.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It will be continued next year.

Mr. McLURE: The minister can give us an assurance now that it will start next spring?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am speaking for the department. I have an estimate ready to be brought down for the improvements in Charlottetown harbour next season.

Mr. McLURE: With regard to the vote for the improvements in this harbour, why should we lose out on it? Why do we have to wait? The money was voted. Why should the minister not be able to say to us that this work will go ahead next spring?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Time has lapsed. We could not use that money after the end of the fiscal year. We have to have a new vote for the next season.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I should like to say a few words about the condition which we face in Skeena. It is somewhat similar to that of hon. members from the east coast. The fishermen there lack facilities. I know the Department of Public Works have plans, and I think that they work in cooperation with the Department of Fisheries. Would the Department of Public Works tell us just what steps they intend to take to do some of this work up at Squadaree, Langara, Massett and so forth, so that the fishermen may know what to expect in the forthcoming season?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Actually we have an item for New Massett. It reads as follows: "Wharf reconstruction, revote, $47,700." It will be found at page 38 of the estimates.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: That is for tying up boats in the coastal trade; it has nothing to do with the fishing industry.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am told it works both ways. When we come to that item I shall have a note, if the hon. member wishes any information.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister ably described how jealously the Department of Public Works guards public money, and how the whole of Canada is divided into twelve sections with an architect and engineer's office in each. Can he explain to the committee exactly how his department will coordinate with the Department of Reconstruction and Supply? In the bill setting up the department, the old Munitions and Supply Act was changed in order that the Minister of Reconstruction might be empowered to enter into construction contracts, and it then went on to define the various projects. When the bill was before the house the Minister of Reconstruction said he was not in the construction business, but neither is the Minister of Public Works. I presume that both departments will let contracts. It would seem to me, from the description the minister gave a few minutes ago, that his department is in so good a position, with its engineers and architects experienced in the erection of public buildings—or "projects", as the Minister of Reconstruction calls them—that many of these projects which will be undertaken in the future could perhaps better be carried out in the Department of Public Works than through setting up a new department of reconstruction which, in turn, will require to have its architects and engineers in various parts of Canada if it is to do an efficient job, thus duplicating services which we already have, at considerable cost to the taxpayer.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not think that the Department of Reconstruction will have a staff which could be compared to the staff of the Department of Public Works. They may have a certain number of architects or engineers as their advisers. But Public Works has the set-up to study public works projects, prepare plans and specifications, ask for tenders, and, if the work is to be done at a comparatively small cost, call for local tenders. I do not believe the Department of Reconstruction will have the same set-up as that of public works. Our projects of building and other public works will be continued through our own organization.

Mr. JACKMAN: I am not quarrelling with the work of the Department of Public Works, but here under reconstruction and supply we have set up a department which is empowered to enter into contracts for buildings, aerodromes, airports, dockyards, roads, defence fortifications, et cetera, and enterprises for industry or reconstruction.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): May I interrupt the hon. gentleman? Nearly every project or work he has mentioned would not come under public works. There may be some that would, but the works he mentions do not. The building of aerodromes never came under my department. We have no jurisdiction in that field.

Mr. JACKMAN: No, but this is a new department which is being set up, although in a small sense it is a carry-over of the old munitions and supply department. If our construction is to take place under this new department, contracts will be called for, and obviously the department must have its engineers and architects to see whether those contracts are properly designed to meet the needs and to be economical in their operation. Inasmuch as the minister's department has been engaged in public works over the years, why cannot his department more efficiently and more economically carry on these proposed new construction enterprises, particularly as the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply said that he hoped his department would liquidate itself within four or five years and he would find himself without a job? If temporary works of the kind are to be undertaken in order to create employment, why cannot that temporary job be put under Public Works rather than in a new department, at great cost to the public?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): As I understand it, they have started to use our organization. That is so to the extent that we know about these works. Any extra work I would not know about, but I know they will use our architects and engineers in their projects; they have been doing so in the preliminary steps.

Mr. JACKMAN: If I may caution the minister, Mr. Chairman, I think he will find that, perhaps because of the personality who will be in charge of reconstruction and supply, gradually the power and the responsibility will gravitate to the new man and be taken away from the old. I do not know any reason why, if the Department of Public Works is efficiently administered by a capable minister to-day, that department should not do the building. I may cite, as an illustration of what I have in mind, the Department of Transport, which also was under one of the ministers and had under its jurisdiction the Trans-Canada Air Lines. But T.C.A. was retained by the present Minister of Munitions and Supply when he gave up the Department of Transport and was continued by him under munitions and supply, for reasons which he gave at the time—that there was a big job in the construction of aerodromes, et cetera; and while he is no longer constructing aerodromes he still maintains that organization. I suggest to the Minister of Public Works that he had better be on his guard or he will find the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply trenching on his preserves and taking his engineers and architects, or he will find that the Department of Public Works becoming a mere shell and the Department of Reconstruction and Supply doing the main work. The situation should perhaps be the reverse. The minister has already a good operating department capable of doing this work,—which, again, as the Minister of Reconstruction has said, will be temporary work under his department. That would obviate the necessity of a duplication of architects, engineers and the rest, and the work could be more efficiently and economically carried on.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I do not want to be persistent in this, but I think we have the right to ask the minister to give us some statement in regard to the plans of his department for the providing of employment by public works as ancillary to private enterprise, particularly during the period of transition. My information is that a committee of the cabinet has had before it in the last few months a general plan, that a survey has been made of the dominion, city by city, setting out what the prospective unemployment will be during the transition period. It would be improper for me to say that I have seen such a plan, but I know that one exists and that there has been worked out by the experts a division as between private enterprise and public projects in the solution of the prospective unemployment problem.

So far as we are concerned we know there are plans—plans, plans and plans—but when you ask the ministers where the jobs are going to be, there is not a job in sight. There are promises of jobs, but never a concrete example of the type of work which is to be undertaken. I ask the minister whether he has not been consulted by, say, the Minister of Reconstruction or by the Minister of Labour, and given some indication as to how many jobs his department through the construction of public works will be asked to provide. How many is private enterprise going to provide? What is the surplus which may not reasonably be expected to be provided with jobs? What kinds of the public works does the government intend to undertake—not two years from now but immediately; for, in the words of the white paper, these public works have been planned and are described as part of a forward-looking and agreed programme. They have been decided upon, but try as we will, it seems impossible to extract this information. I do not know why. There should not be anything secret about it. There is no need of hiding it away; it does not have to be put under lock and key. If there are plans, let us know what they are; what distribution of moneys is to be made; what provinces in general are to receive it; whether it is to be used in the development of water powers, irrigation projects or the erection of public buildings. These are things which the minister must have information about. The file, as I remember it, is a very large one. It represents the activities of a large number of experts over a long period of time. It is in the possession of the government, and the minister must have a copy. We do not ask him to go into any unnecessary detail; but can he not answer this one question: What is expected to be the degree of unemployment within one year? That has been anticipated. Statistics have been prepared estimating it. I believe with reasonable certitude that the number can be given in advance.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Would the hon. member give me his estimate? That would be helpful to the country.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, now, after all, mine is guess work. This is the product of the work of the experts in the ivory tower. They have been working at this and have made either plans and estimates. Surely it is not for me to do so. How can I contemplate whether there will be unemployment, and how much?

But the government has the record. It knows how many men will be reabsorbed in manufacturing, and what manufucturing concerns and industries are going to expand. It knows the anticipated number who will be unemployed, even though physically employable. Those are the people for whom public works projects are designed so as to assist in tiding over the transitional period.

I have studied this report on employment and income. I have studied reports from the United States, the national planning board scheme and the British scheme. They all, with one accord, set forth their plans in generalities. The United States planning board has gone somewhat farther than that and has actually indicated the numbers that will be absorbed generally through improvement in export trade, by increase in private investment, by expansion in consumption demand, and by public investment in other various ways, whereby improvement may be secured and maintained.

I am not asking this in any critical sense or to embarrass the minister. But he is the minister in charge of the department which will be charged with a tremendous responsibility. The report indicates that public works will not solve unemployment. But public works properly applied and divided throughout the country as a whole can operate as a cushion during the period of transition, and can take up the lag when men are being transferred from war-time to peace-time industry, and when there is a lagging behind in peace-time industry.

I do not think I am unfair when I press this matter. We have not been able to secure this information. I am not asking anything unreasonable when I direct the minister's attention to the certainty that what he anticipates will actually occur. But we are asking him to place the committee in a position where it may know that the government has more than plans. If all the government has is some plans in white papers, and in the minds of some experts, and if there is nothing in the mind of the practical minister to translate such plans into action, then I say they are worthless. They are just plans, and not jobs.

What the people of Canada want is not plans, but the assurance of jobs based upon those plans. I am not going to press the matter further. If the minister says he does not know, then the answer is perfectly clear. He is the Minister of the Department of Public Works. If he does not know, then all I can say is that we must accept his answer, and it simply means that the public works plans are contained in white papers, but that as yet they have not yet been translated into actualities or into plans which will culminate in the development of public expenditures.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was considerably impressed by the statement of the hon. member for Lake Centre in the forenoon session. I believe he had some good proposals. I doubt very much, however, if most of the discussion we have had on this point is really in order. I believe we shall have to accept the statement of the Minister of Public Works to the effect that these estimates were prepared prior to the beginning of the year and during a time when the country was at war. He has said that they were prepared to meet a condition which prevailed when we were at war. I am not, however, absolving him altogether from the obligation to bring in supplementary estimates to deal with certain projects which were delayed during those years and which, now that the war is over, might be discussed appropriately. But I feel convinced that we are not dealing with the larger programme in the proper place.

We have set up a Department of Reconstruction. The white paper was issued by that department, and we should hold the Minister of Reconstruction responsible for the programme to be carried on in the period of transition. When that department is before us, and before parliament prorogues we should insist upon having some concrete proposals to meet a situation of unemployment we are now convinced, and I think even the Minister of Reconstruction is convinced, we shall have in this country before spring. But I do not believe that this matter can be discussed properly at a time when we have before us the routine estimates for the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I cannot let the hon. member for Lake Centre build up a case based upon guesswork—those were the words he used—for the future. He has envisaged our country as one in which there will be a great deal of unemployment from one end to the other. When I asked him to give his own estimate of unemployment for the next six months or a year he replied that that would be only guesswork. But on that guesswork he builds up a case in which he seeks to prove that the Department of Public Works should have one of those programmes or plans in which we would explain how we would take care of unemployment in the country.

If one follows my way of reasoning, then all the arguments he has made up to now have not been based upon facts. He turns to the minister and asks, "Does the minister know anything about this? If he does not know let him say so, and I shall sit down." Then, later on he will tell the minister, "You do not know what is going on, or what will take place." In French we have the expression: "La manière la plus habile de prendre son homme;" or, translated: "That is the way you can hang anybody." One will make up a case, and will then say, "It is up to you, if you do not know."

But I will tell the hon. member one thing I do know, as Minister of Public Works. I know what my powers are, and I know what the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works is. If the hon. member will turn to section 9 of the Public Works Act he will see that this department has power over certain dams, hydraulic works, the construction and repair of harbours—not including harbours coming under the national harbours board—piers and works for improving the navigation of any water, and the vessels, dredges, scows, tools, implements and machinery for the improvement of navigation.

If we take that as the power, then our plans are prepared for the next year to increase our activities to quite an extent. We will increase those activities where they will prove useful for the community in the improvement of business in each section and in order to relieve unemployment if it exists. That is the plan we have in public works, which is only a small part of the reconstruction plan or programme to try to maintain employment in the country and create as high a standard of living as possible.

If you read section 9 you will see exactly what powers and jurisdiction we have in public works. We are going to exercise all those powers and develop the works that are under our control. I have estimates amounting to about $16,000,000 in a budget of four billions and a half, and I do not think hon. members should expect me to be able to give them all the information they want. I am ready to tell my story, and the other parts can be told by the other ministers. As a member of the government I can tell the hon. member for Lake Centre that we in our department are prepared to go ahead according to our jurisdiction and power; but we do not intend to spend money uselessly.

Mr. LOCKHART: I gather that no expenditures are to be made for new works, but that expenditures will be made simply for the maintenance of works and so on. Would the minister explain the machinery? Suppose a small post office or a building for public services is desired in a community. Would that request go through the Post Office Department and then come to public works with their recommendation?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I may receive a request from the Postmaster General that because of the revenue of an office the construction of a post office would be justified. Then I would have the resident architect make a report on the situation. If it were favourable, we would proceed with our plans and specifications. The same would apply to customs and excise.

Mr. LOCKHART: The original request would go to the appropriate department?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Absolutely. Public works does not go out and just put up buildings; we do not go around trying to impose buildings on communities. The building must be needed and justified by the revenue of the office. In many places the income from the office does not justify a capital expenditure.

Mr. ISNOR: There are two questions I should like to ask. First, does the minister's department initiate expenditures on public projects such as breakwaters?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. ISNOR: That being so, I wish to make a few remarks but I shall be as brief as possible. I was told I was out of order this morning when I introduced a matter in reference to the port of Halifax having to do with the transfer of the Queen Elizabeth from the port of Halifax to the port of New York. I feel I am justified in bringing up this matter under this item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The question was asked on the orders of the day and I understand that the Minister of National Defence is to make a statement, perhaps to-day.

Mr. ISNOR: I do not wish to hold up these estimates but I want to place the case of Halifax before the government in such a way that it will recognize our claim. It is not Halifax alone that is affected; this concerns our whole nation. We certainly do not want the Queen Elizabeth or any other ships carrying troops from England to a United States port when we have fine ports on the Atlantic coast, such as Halifax, Saint John and others. I think it is due to our men who went overseas to fight for the good name of Canada and in the interests of freedom throughout the world to have them brought back to Canadian ports when they are being returned. With all due respect to what the minister has to say, I think he should look into this matter from the point of view of his department.

I think the late Sir Samuel Cunard, the founder of the Cunard line, would turn in his grave if he read the statement which appeared in last evening's papers to the effect that Halifax was not a safe port for the Queen Elizabeth or any other ship. I have photographs here showing hundreds of ships that assembled in the port of Halifax during the war. I have here one showing the Queen

Elizabeth sailing into the harbour of Halifax under her own steam in what would appear to be the safest possible manner. I have one showing the Queen Elizabeth at the pier in Halifax and it would appear to any one that she was as safe there as a bug in a rug.

There is misunderstanding somewhere. This is of importance not only to Halifax but to the whole dominion, and an investigation should be carried on as soon as possible. This is an opportune time to bring up this matter. If a breakwater is required, or if the present outer breakwater needs to be extended or increased in height, then it is up to the Department of Public Works to investigate and make the extensions, if needed. I asked the minister if these things were initiated by his department and he said they were. That is why I am now bringing this matter to his attention.

I do not wish to prolong this discussion because I believe I have accomplished my purpose in bringing this matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. I am glad to see the Minister of Transport in his seat because the national harbours board is under his jurisdiction. I hope that action will be taken so that in the future we shall have no such statements as appeared in the papers last evening.

Item agreed to.

Chief architect's branch—
248. Branch administration, $223,725.

The CHAIRMAN: I would remind hon. members that we are now on specific items and that the discussion must be relevant to the item before the committee.

Item agreed to.

Chief architect's branch—
249. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, et cetera, $2,900,117.

Mr. SHAW: During the war the Department of Public Works found it necessary to rent space in certain premises at Red Deer, Alberta. The Department of Veterans Affairs have in one building quarters for which a rental of $3,216 a year is paid. I am not quarreling with the amount of rent paid, nor am I quarreling with the person to whom the rent is paid. The wartime prices and trade board also have quarters rented at $300 a year, and the unemployment insurance commission have offices there for which they pay a rental of $2,280 a year. I am not quarreling with the amounts at all, but they make a grand total of $6,156 which is being paid in rent at Red Deer by this government every year. That covers the Department of Veterans Affairs, the unemployment insurance commission and the wartime prices and trade board. Over a period of ten years it will mean that the department will pay out in rent in that city $61,560, provided that the same premises are held and that all these branches of the government continue to function, which I assume they will do. Certainly the Department of Veterans Affairs, the unemployment insurance commission, and for some time at least the wartime prices and trade board, will continue to operate offices there. During the war we recognized that it would be improper for us to urge the Department of Public Works or the government to construct a public building at Red Deer rather than to pay those rents, but now that the war is over, the people of Red Deer and many organizations in the city, including the board of trade, would consider it very poor business for the government to continue paying that amount of rent a year. Let me repeat, it will amount to more than $61,000 in the next ten years. We consider that in a progressive city like Red Deer we should have a public building. We believe that one could be built for less than the amount of money which the government will be paying out in rents there during the next ten years. I would urge that the minister and his department give serious consideration to this suggestion. It will be good business.

Let me add, more particularly since the Postmaster General is here, that the people of Red Deer do not want to see the post office or the customs put in that new building if it is constructed. I say that for this reason, that the post office building at Red Deer has deteriorated badly. It is an old building and most inadequate. The previous Postmaster General recognized this three years ago when he found it necessary to ask for money to make certain renovations in the present post office. That building at Red Deer cannot possibly serve the needs of the people of that city in spite of the very best efforts of the staff in the post office and in the customs office. They simply cannot give a satisfactory service to the people of the city in their present quarters. We do not want the post office in a new public building because experience has shown—and the Postmaster General will bear me out in this—that when branches of government departments are located in a building along with the post office and customs, eventually the post office is jammed right down into one corner. Calgary would be a wonderful example of that.

Let me repeat. We consider that it is good business to give early consideration to a public building for Red Deer. Second, we believe that the Minister of Public Works should look with approval upon any recommendation which may come from the Postmaster General for a post office at Red Deer. I shall solicit the support of the Minister of Veterans Affairs in this matter for this reason: His department has a substantial number of small holdings near Red Deer, and there is not sufficient part-time employment there to enable the veterans to pay for these holdings. So that this project of a public building and a post office would work in the interests of the Minister of Veterans Affairs by providing work for these men. I am not asking the Minister of Public Works to answer me at the moment, but I do wish that he would take note of what I have said and have his engineer report on the matter, if he has not already done so, because we believe that our claim is wholly and completely legitimate.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I should like to speak on a subject that is of importance and interest to every member of the house. We in this group have repeatedly brought to the attention of the government the survey that was made by the welfare council of Toronto, which found that the minimum wage on which one could keep an average family of five living decently and adequately was $1,757.60. Let us consider the salaries that are paid to men who are working in the government buildings at Ottawa. There is one foreman at $1,320; twelve foremen, part time, at $600; cleaners and helpers, nineteen at $1,140 and three at $1,020; twenty-eight part-time cleaners at $500. Many of them are married men with families, and most of them are ex-service men because I see a great number of them wearing buttons. How can they live and bring up a family on $1,200 a year? We complain about industry not paying decent wages, but the fact is that industry is taking a lead from the parliament of Canada. We in this house owe a debt of gratitude to the cleaners, foremen and janitors for their kindness and courtesy to us members, for they make life very much easier for all of us. I know cleaners who go to work in the early morning hours and work not just eight but sometimes ten hours, and occasionally twelve hours a day, with no extra pay. The only bonus they get is the cost of living bonus, which in all probability will be cancelled when P.C. 1003 goes. The only hope for these men is, I think, organization. I should like to see them in a trade union, and that is one of the questions I wish to ask the minister. Would these cleaners, foremen and janitors be allowed to enter a union? And is the minister prepared to see that they are given decent rates of pay over and above what they are now getting?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No one more than I should like to see these cleaners, helpers and elevator men receive higher compensation, but my personal opinion is that I have nothing to do with fixing the salaries of these classes of workers, who come under the civil service commission. They are all classified, and any member who has attended the meetings of civil service committees knows how complicated are these classifications and salary rates. I would be most favourable to increasing everybody's purchasing power and raising his or her standard of living. I am really in sympathy with these workers, but I do not think I am the one who can raise the salaries of these civil servants. That is one more thing that does not come under my purview, although I sympathize with every one of these workers. I happen to live in a town of labouring people, many of whom are my friends. I have listened attentively and sympathetically to what the hon. member has said, but I do not think he is making his request in the right place, although I would favour any such move.

His second question was as to these workers joining a union?

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): These workers have the right to join unions?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have no objection unless the government changes its policy, and I have always understood that it favoured unions among the labouring classes. If the hon. member lives in Ottawa for any length of time he will see that they have unions, not exactly in the sense of labour unions, but there are four or five different civil service associations. I cannot give the names.

Mr. COLDWELL: They are more or less social organizations.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, but they interview government authorities and the civil service commission with regard to better conditions, wages and so on. I am not an expert in these matters, but in the public works department where there are labouring men there is an association of prevailing rates people who come regularly to see me and chat over their wants, and in the department there is a constant study of conditions of work, increases in wages and so on. I often recommend increases to the labour department where there is a body that sanctions rates of wages, and when a report comes back with their approval I put it before the treasury board. In the last year there have been, I will not say increases, but readjustments in pay, because we are still living under a condition of stabilized prices and wages which perhaps would hinder large increases in any class.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister has put his finger on the spot when he refers to the treasury board. Probably the treasury board has more to do with this than the minister or the commission.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Before the hon. member came in I spoke of the treasury board.

Mr. COLDWELL: The question I am about to ask may have been put before; I do not know. One cannot be here all the time these long days. I understand, however, that the department has a list of desirable public works graded under letters A, B, C, D, and so on—projects that may be undertaken in the post-war period for the relief of unemployment.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That matter has been brought up before.

Mr. COLDWELL: I prefaced my remarks by saying that perhaps it had been discussed before. If so, I will not go into it again. As I say, one cannot be here all the time to listen to what goes on.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Is it possible for the minister to make representations to see that these workers get better wages and that their hours are reasonable in this building? Ten hours a day is too much.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The employees in the buildings, except the elevator operators who are under the supervision of public works, do not come under the department.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): They are the ones I am talking about, and also the cleaners.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The cleaners in this building do not come under my department. They are under the Speaker.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then we shall have to raise this question in connection with the House of Commons staff. It should be brought up.

Mr. FRASER: This morning when I shut my window in the Chateau Laurier I was surprised to see, although I should not have been surprised, seeing that I brought the matter up last year, that the window-sill, instead of being white as it was last night, was absolutely black. The soot comes from the Daly building across the street. I understand that there is an oil furnace there. There must be one because I see a 1,000-gallon oil truck practically every other morning unloading at that building. I do not believe the oil-burner in that building functions as it should because no oil-burner that I have ever seen—and I have seen a great number of them—throws out clouds of smoke worse than any train in the country. How the Chateau Laurier management has stood this so long I do not know.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Stood what?

Mr. FRASER: The soot and dirt from the Daly building oil-burner. If that oil-burner were checked by outside engineers from the manufacturers they would tell you that it could not throw out all that dirt as it is doing at the present time.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have an engineer and fireman in the building. It is an old building and the installation is quite aged. I admit we are having trouble with it, but during the war years I have not seen my way clear to having a new installation, and I do not know whether in the future plans for the capital that building will be taken into consideration. It is more of an eyesore than anything else.

Mr. FRASER: Could there not be installed a soot arrester on the stack? They have them on other buildings.

Another thing I noticed this morning—and I thought it was a waste of time and money—was the snow truck going down the street, probably miles away, to dump snow.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is under the federal district commission.

Mr. FRASER: As the hon. member for Macleod mentioned, the elevator in the west block quits at five or five-thirty o'clock in the afternoon. The other evening I was there about a quarter to six and I saw a cripple going down three flights of stairs. There should be another man there to relieve the elevator operator so that the hours can be extended, because while people are working in the building the elevators should be running. If a fire ever occurred there, there would have to be an elevator running.

Mr. MACKENZIE: For the past year I have been pressing to have a new veterans building in the city of Ottawa. It is about our first necessity. I agree with much of what the hon. member has said, and I think it is one of the first obligations on the administration to make plans for the construction of a real veterans administration building in Ottawa similar to the one in Washington.

Mr. FRASER: For the last five years we have been hearing every year of someone breaking or spraining an ankle going down the walk on the east side toward the hotel.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): All these lands are under the federal district.

Mr. FRASER: All right; we will bring the matter up at the proper time.

Mr. COLDWELL: With regard to housing, cannot something be done so that before we come back next summer and have to sit in this chamber in the heat, the place will be aired? In the second place, can we not have lights that are decent and that will not ruin our eyes?

An hon. MEMBER: And loudspeakers.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, and loudspeakers too, so that we can hear what everyone says.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Every request will be taken into consideration.

Mr. BLAIR: I intended to bring up the question of lighting. Has the minister made any arrangements for improved lighting in the chamber? In the rows at the back here, if you hold up a pencil you will get six or eight shadows from it, and many members have had to go and see about their eyes and get glasses. For a new member to bring this matter up, when the lights have been used for such a long time, may sound peculiar, but this system is antiquated and something should be done about it.

Mr. MARSHALL: Has the government given any consideration to the question of converting a large number of the temporary buildings into permanent buildings so that they will accommodate a great number of departments which are using rented buildings? I think the Department of Public Works have rented somewhere in the neighbourhood of 105 to 110 different buildings throughout the city on which they paid in the year 1943-44 in excess of three quarters of a million dollars rent. I asked the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services what was contemplated with respect to the building on Elgin street. If I recall correctly, he said that it was being turned over to War Assets Corporation. I think that building could be made more permanent and could be used for a large number of different departments. Has the government any policy with respect to this matter?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Up to September there was such a lack of space in the city of Ottawa that instead of giving, say 125 square feet per employee it was brought down to seventy-five feet. We thought at one time after August 15, or September 1 that we would see the defence departments decrease the numbers of their employees. That has taken place to a certain extent, but they were replaced by new departments such as the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Health and Welfare, which are expanding departments, and we find to-day that we have not too much space for our offices.

As to the future policy of the government with respect to the temporary buildings, I understand that they were built and would be useful for a certain number of years. They will be replaced, as time goes on in this scheme of a national capital, with other permanent public buildings. Did I understand that they were declared as surplus to the department?

Mr. MARSHALL: It was my understanding that the navy had practically abandoned the building and would turn it over.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sure that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Health and Welfare will be glad the moment they abandon it. They are crowded in. Some of the employees were in halls for a while; they could hardly do their work. I am now trying to get them a little more space. As regards hygienic conditions, when you have people working in that limited space of seventy-five feet, there is far less comfort than if they had 125 feet. I do not see that we can dispense with those temporary buildings in the near future.

Chief architect's branch—

250. Maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, et cetera, $4,054,216.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Why this large increase of $271,000? One would naturally think there would be a very large reduction because the war is over. It seems to me that some economy ought to be shown. Why has this increase taken place?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The increase of $271,458 is made up as follows: (1) an increase of $195,605 in salaries caused by an increase of 170 in the number of the staff; (2) an increase of $45,800 in the allotment for materials and supply caused by an increase in the price of coal; (3) an increase of $39,725 in the cost of living bonus owing to the increase in the number of the staff. These three increases total $281,136, which with other adjustments reduces the amount to $271,458.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What I had in mind was the question of the amount of space which is being used by the various departments. As I say, the war is over and one would think the departments would be cutting down.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My hon. friend knows that this is for the maintenance of buildings outside Ottawa. Unemployment insurance, selective service, veterans affairs and the wartime prices and trade board—I am trying to name a few of the departments—have expanded their activities outside Ottawa. They have offices in nearly every town in the country. We have to provide them with rental and the staff to maintain those places. In the last year the increase in new employees amounted to 170.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What did the minister say the increase was due to?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This increase is brought about by the increase in the number of employees we need for the maintenance of our outside offices.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I can understand that, but the minister said that the increase was—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Some of these people work in Toronto.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister said it was caused by the increase in the national selective service. I would not think national selective service would be as large now as it was during the war. It seems to me some reduction should be taking place there.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall withdraw selective service and put in veterans affairs instead.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The wartime prices and trade board and many of those other departments should be cutting down their staffs.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Yes, I think so. Of course veterans affairs has increased.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I tell my hon. friend that the greatest problem we have encountered in veterans affairs across Canada is lack of space. Instead of cutting down we shall increase substantially in the next eighteen months. We have been having stenographers and secretaries working in corridors for the last six months. That condition should not prevail among individuals who are looking after the men coming back from the war.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am not criticizing veterans affairs, but it seems to me that there are other departments which should be cutting down at the present time, and the veterans affairs department should be moving into the space left vacant by some of those departments. The Department of Munitions and Supply are closing down, and the wartime prices and trade board will be cutting down in a short while.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I was glad to hear the Minister of Veterans Affairs talking about the maintenance of the health of the workers involved in the various departments. I can recognize that during the war years those departments, because of the war, did not want to spend any more money than they could avoid, but when it comes down to the health of the people involved and it gets serious then something should be done. There is a telegraph office in Hazelton. I am not speaking of Hazelton because Hazelton wants a new building, but the employees in that building are suffering. They have colds continually; snow blows under the doors and through the cracks around the windows; flies enter in the summer. The employees freeze when they are a few feet away from the stove and when they are right near the stove they roast; they have to keep it red hot. Nothing has been done. They have one little piece of bakelite for the top of a desk and that is all they have had in the last two or three years. They are very proud of it; they pat it every time they pass it. I should like to know if the minister plans, and when he plans, to put a new building there for those employees who have worked very hard for the war effort?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This must be a rented building we have in Hazelton. I could not give an answer offhand as to whether or not we contemplate putting up a new building there. I do not know whether we own that building.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: It may be a rented building; I am not certain.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall look into the matter and try to give my hon. friend a satisfactory answer.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: I should like to ask the minister a question concerning a post office building which was started in St. Walburg, Saskatchewan, just before the war. The basement part of the building was finished, and the job was apparently left at that stage. How much was spent on it? What is the intention with regard to this unfinished building? When may we expect to get it completed?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that this was one of the contracts which were let at the outset of the war and then cancelled. We have contracts like that throughout the country. At the outset of the war people turned their minds to the war and said, "We are not going on putting up these buildings." I am informed that this building will be provided for in the estimates of next year. I would not commit myself, since I have not reviewed this particular case, but I have asked my officials and they say that it is under consideration for the estimates of February or March.

Mr. MOORE: I wish to have some information about the post office at Flin Flon, Manitoba. Flin Flon is a new city in northern Canada. A post office was built there in, I believe, 1930, when the population was about 1,500; to-day it is in the neighbourhood of 10,000, but they have the same post office building, in which approximately five times as much work must be done as was done when it was built. I should like to know whether the people of Flin Flon can expect that in the near future the department will go ahead with the construction of a new post office there.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will look at the file and see what can be done.

Item agreed to.

Chief architect's branch—

255. Ontario—Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $170,000.

London public building—repointing masonry, painting and repairs (revote $15,000), $25,000.

Ottawa—hydrogenation laboratory for the Department of Mines and Resources (revote), $250,000.

Ottawa—Central Experimental Farm—Water tank and pump house, etc. (revote, $22,000), $35,000; total, $480,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is a request by the hon. member for Davenport to have this stand over, if my colleague would be kind enough to agree.

Mr. BRACKEN: I think he wants to help the minister rather than hinder him.

Item stands.

Chief architect's branch—

257. Dominion public buildings, Saskatchewan—improvements and repairs, $40,000.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Where is it the intention to spend the $40,000 which is in this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is an annual amount. It is required for improvements and repairs in connection with dominion public buildings in Saskatchewan. The appropriation asked for this service in 1945-46 is the same as was provided for in 1944-45. It is not known in advance what repairs will be required. These buildings have to be maintained in as good condition as possible. This is a general vote, and when we have requests from our architect for repairing some buildings the repairs are made under this vote.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What was spent last year under this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): $36,954.04.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: At what places was it spent?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall have a statement sent to my hon. friend.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Thank you very much.

Item agreed to.

Chief architect's branch—

258. Dominion public buildings, Alberta—improvements and repairs, $30,000; Edmonton—postal terminal (revote), $150,000; total, $180,000.

Mr. MARSHALL: I asked the minister some hours ago if he would give us the amount that was actually spent. I do not wish to hold up these estimates, but I would ask him either to send me a statement showing the amount actually spent last year in connection with each one of these votes, or have it placed on Hansard later on.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will get the information and ask the officers of the department to send the hon. member a copy. If I understand correctly, he wants a comparison between the estimate we vote and the actual amount expended during the fiscal year?

Mr. MARSHALL: During the last fiscal year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member understands that these are estimates; they are not actual expenditures.

Mr. MARSHALL: I understand that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We know the expenditures at the end of the fiscal year. I shall have a list sent to my hon. friend.

Mr. MARSHALL: All the information I require is the amount which was actually spent during the last fiscal year in connection with each one of these items.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall have that sent to the hon. member.

Mr. BRACKEN: Are we to understand that the minister will give us a total setting out actual expenditures for the last fiscal year which will replace the estimates, as he calls them, in here?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In these estimates we have the estimates which were voted in the last fiscal year and the estimates to be voted for the present fiscal year. I understand that some hon. members want a list of expenditures actually made in the last fiscal year. We shall have a list prepared, and when I come back with my estimates in respect of item 255 I shall have it put on Hansard.

Mr. MARSHALL: May I ask the minister, for the sake of eliciting information, how much was actually spent in connection with vote 258 for Alberta during last year? Of the $180,000 shown in the estimates how much was spent?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The actual amount was $19,476.56.

Mr. MARSHALL: Any member of the committee can see that the amount asked for, $180,000, in no way compares with the amount which was actually spent.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sorry, we are not on the same item. The estimate was $30,000 under dominion public buildings.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There are two amounts in item 258.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member refers to the Edmonton postal terminal?

Mr. MARSHALL: Yes.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That will be put up, I understand, by Canadian National Railways, and it is going forward. The only expenditure this year on that work was $9,137.50, but we had to enter into an agreement with Canadian National Railways, who are building this, and from now until the end of March, we believe, the expenditure will go up to $140,000 or $150,000. We have a contract with the C.N.R., and from now to the end of the year we shall probably spend the total amount of the vote.

Mr. MARSHALL: Out of $30,000 the department has spent $19,000; and out of the $150,000, a matter of only five or six or nine thousand dollars has been spent?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have spent $9,137.50 on the preparation of plans.

Mr. MARSHALL: So that actually out of the $180,000 voted last year the department spent a matter of only $25,000?

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Right.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the minister explain the procedure in connection with these items where it is marked "revote"?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We voted in the past fiscal year an amount of, say $50,000; $25,000 was expended in that fiscal year, but the contract is still going on, and we shall need the next $25,000, so that we ask for a revote of that money for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BRACKEN: Does that apply to what are called capital expenditures?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): These are for current expenditures. At the end of the fiscal year the vote dies out and we have to revote it at the next session to carry on the work.

Mr. BRACKEN: This practice applies to what one would ordinarily call capital expenditures: is that right?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is right.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister mentioned a moment ago that $25,000 of that estimate was spent in the province of Alberta. Where was it spent?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Does the hon. member want me to send him a list?

Mr. JOHNSTON: How was the $9,000 spent?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The $9,137.50 was paid to the Canadian National Railways for the preparation of plans and specifications. We are undertaking the construction of a postal terminal at Edmonton. The building will be put up by the Canadian National Railways, because I understand that the two buildings are right together. We have an agreement with them whereby they will do the work and we shall have the building. Up to this time we have paid about $9,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON: There will be no further work done until—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is only the start of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Where was the other $16,000 spent?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall prepare a list showing the expenditures above $25.

Item agreed to.

Chief architect's branch—

263. Generally—Flags for dominion buidings, $8,000.

Mr. FRASER: Will the flags be union jacks?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Some are union jacks and others are red ensigns. I am not partial in the matter of the flag.

Mr. FRASER: So long as we know it is one or the other, we are satisfied.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
269. Dredging—Maritime provinces, $402,765.

Mr. McLURE: Is there anything in this item for the ferry from Wood Island to Cariboo? Considerable dredging is needed there. During the past season they had to delay their trips, and to cut out the evening trips entirely because of a lack of dredging. The captain of the ship did not wish to take the ferry through the narrow passage when it was not properly dredged. Will dredging be done in the spring?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is provision for work there to the extent of 26,000 square yards.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
271. Dredging—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $169,160.

Mr. BRYCE: I should like to speak to the minister about dredging in lake Winnipeg and to make suggestions to him as they have been made to me by my constituents. There has been very little dredging in lake Winnipeg during the war years, with the result that it is now in bad condition. I would draw attention particularly to George's island. Perhaps the minister has never been on lake Winnipeg, but I am sure the officers in his department have. They know how quickly a storm will come up in that area, and how one may have to run for shelter. For instance, it is impossible to get in to George's island in the event of a storm. In the interests of safety it will be necessary next summer to have some dredging done.

The same condition applies to Sandy island, where the anchorage is shallow. There is also Little George's island. I was on the lake some time ago, during the summer, and we had to run for shelter when a storm came up. We found at that time that the anchorage was very shallow.

Would the minister be good enough to give me a copy of the cost of living bonus and other paylist items, so far as Manitoba is concerned? I am not in a hurry for it. The minister can send it to me at his convenience.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall ask my officials to do that.

Mr. BURTON: How much of this is being spent in Saskatchewan, and at what points?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not that break-down with me, but I shall ask my officials to get it by provinces. It is entered for the three provinces, and I do not think it has been broken down. The item is to look after the dredging for the three provinces, and to pay the staffs of the dredges. In salaries and wages we pay $19,410, a cost of living bonus and other paylist items of $5,000, a maintenance and operation charge of $37,750, and we have built a new plant for $105,000.

Mr. MARSHALL: Where is that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The new plant is to replace the Red River dredge on lake Winnipeg. This will be of interest to the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. BURTON: The minister can give me the information later.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall ask my officials to send it to the hon. member.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Could we have it for the three provinces?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. HAZEN: How many dredges does the department own? Do any other government departments own and control dredges?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I would not know what the other departments have. I believe we own all the dredges which are operating for the government. We have some on the Atlantic coast, some in the interior and others on the west coast, and all are numbered.

The information I have shows that we have the dredge Red River, and dredges numbered 202 and 205; also the dredge Winnipegosis, and the tugs Baldur, Armenon, Peguis and Parkdale. Then we have coal barges M4, M5, M6 and M7; and hopper mud scows numbered 214, 215, 216, 217, 218 and 219. Those are the craft we own.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
Maintenance and operation of graving docks, locks and dams, etc.
277. Locks and dams, $97,550.

Mr. BRYCE: I should like to say something about the St. Andrews lock. I see in the details that it will cost less money this year than it did last. I know they have been working short-handed on that lock, and in my view that should not be required any longer. This is one government service in which the men are working twelve hours a day, and I do not think any man should be asked to work as long as that when he is in the government service. If anyone is to set an example, surely it should be a government department, especially if we are going to tell other people to reduce hours of work. We could set a good example here by establishing an eight-hour day on the lock.

Will the minister look into this matter and see if arrangements cannot be made whereby the number who were employed before the war can be employed again? Is there a possibility of establishing an eight-hour day with services like that? I should like the same break-down in connection with this item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The break-down is:

Permanent staff	$ 7,069
Maintenanace and repairs and operation	27,445
Materials and supplies	2,825
	$37,339

Mr. BRYCE: The item covering cost of living bonus and other paylist items is down about $1,000 as compared with last year. Is that owing to a smaller number of people being employed?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The cost of living bonus is not determined by my department. I cannot give all the details because I did not know this matter was coming up. Civil servants are entitled to a bonus varying from eleven per cent to eighteen per cent, representing the difference in the cost of living from 1939 to 1941 or 1942.

Mr. BRYCE: There is that difference in the one item as compared with last year. If you are working short-handed, I would ask that the staff be brought up to strength.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—
281. New Westminster bridge, $36,025.

Mr. MacINNIS: I notice that this item is down somewhat from last year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This amount is required for the maintenance and operation of the old railway bridge over the Fraser river which was taken over from the province of British Columbia under the terms of order in council dated October 4, 1939, effective December 1, 1939. The tolls collected for the passage of trains more than offset all annual costs. Under the terms of the agreement the surplus in ten years is to revert to the province of British Columbia. The hon. member will recall that when the new bridge was taken over the province said they would tear this one down, but later on they transferred the old bridge to the federal government. I am trying to recall certain of the terms of the agreement. I think that after ten years the government would decide either to put in a lift span or to have it torn down. We have four more years to go under the agreement. As I say, the revenue from tolls exceeds the cost of maintenance.

Mr. MacINNIS: You cannot very well tear it down, can you, unless you build another bridge, because the Canadian National and the Canadian Northern both go over that bridge?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We were not considering taking it down; probably something else will be done at the end of ten years.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—
282. Generally, $70,890.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I would imagine that the federal government will have considerable road building equipment around Whitehorse which has been used on the Alaska highway. Just south of Whitehorse is the Atlin district which is accessible only by means of aeroplane. This isolation could be overcome if a forty-mile section of road were built. There is no other machinery in there except that under the control of the dominion government. I just wanted to bring this matter to the minister's attention.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have no machinery in there.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Who built the Alaska highway?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The United States government.

Summerside—repairs to railway wharf (revote $3,000), $20,000—$84,600.

Mr. McLURE: I notice that there is a decrease in this item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The item of $20,600 in connection with Summerside is to cover repairs to the railway wharf rendered necessary by the decay of the timbers. Attention is directed to the necessity of this work by the chief engineer.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Are we continuing that this year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Tenders were called for. All we are asking for is a revote of $3,000.

Item agreed to.

287. Cobourg — breakwater reconstruction, $65,000.
Rondeau—replacement of harbour protection (revote), $15,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—Fair maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $210,000—$290,000.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): We all realize that the minister has a big job on his hands in connection with harbours and rivers. During the war his staff has been more or less disrupted, but I wish to say that I appreciate the courtesy that has been shown to me any time I have had any business with the Department of Public Works. Bruce county has a long shoreline and we are more or less interested in public works. I am rising to refer to a sad accident that occurred at Southampton when a little boy, three years of age, was killed by a falling boulder. I have in my hand a letter dated November 20, from which I should like to quote as follows:

I know this old dock at Southampton. It is the centre dock and between a fish dock and a new concrete dock. This old dock is the property of the government and is in a very serious state of disrepair. I walked along it a few weeks ago and am surprised that more accidents do not happen. It is dangerous to human life and no one ought to be allowed on it. The government should prevent people from using it or should pull it down. As it is, children and others walk on it and play on it and use it daily and it is a shame.

I would ask the minister to have this matter inquired into and see if this wharf cannot be made safer.

288. Hnausa—wharf reconstruction, $25,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—For maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $40,000—$65,000.

Mr. BRYCE: Will the minister be able to do anything about the breakwater at Gimli? He was good enough to do some temporary repairs last year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We did do some work.

Mr. BRYCE: Will the minister give me an assurance that this breakwater will be looked into because it is in bad shape?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Two years ago the hon. member asked for some temporary repairs and I believe that some work was done.

Mr. BRYCE: You spent $300, but that just backed the water up a little more.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I will do my best.

Mr. BRACKEN: I need a little more enlightenment. At the bottom of item 287 appears this statement, "appropriations not required for 1945-46." In the column for that year there is no figure, but for 1944-45, there is $2,500. I should like an explanation from the minister of what all this means.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Appropriations not required for 1945-46 are appropriations which were included in the estimates of the previous year, 1944-45, for which no provision is made in these estimates because the works were completed, and consequently no appropriations are required in 1945-46. This feature is inserted by the Department of Finance in order to show a comparison of the totals of the appropriations for each province for the years 1945-46 and 1944-45.

Mr. BRACKEN: Does the minister understand what all that means?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that the amount was not all expended and recognition is taken of that fact by inserting this note in the estimates, to show that there was an overestimate. Suppose we have estimated $100,000 for a particular work and the work is done for $75,000. That would leave a surplus of $25,000 and the Department of Finance puts this in to show the exact amount that was spent.

Mr. BRACKEN: You have underexpended in most of these items and you do not show this statement in other places.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories.
289. Fort Norman—wharf, $7,600.
Waterways, wharf, $10,000.
Yellowknife—improvements to navigation (revote $5,450), $7,200.
Harbours and rivers generally—For maintenance services, no new works to be undertaken, $25,000—$49,800.

Mr. BURTON: I notice that the minister has removed the appendix to the east of us, but then he went to work and substituted another one to the northwest of us. I am afraid that Saskatchewan is getting a very small part of these appropriations. I would remind the minister that in the northern part of Saskatchewan we have waters that are worthy of development. The hon. member for Lake Centre was speaking earlier to-day of a lake in southern Saskatchewan, but we have in northern Saskatchewan waters, which, if developed, would prove an asset to the whole country. I would urge the minister and his officials to give consideration to their development when preparing the estimates for another year.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers, British Columbia and Yukon.
290. New Massett—wharf reconstruction (revote $47,700), $62,000.
Port Alberni assembly wharf—construction of shed (revote), $20,000.
Stewart—wharf repairs (revote), $32,000.
Westview—harbour improvements (revote $95,000), $231,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—For maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $216,000—$561,000.

Mr. GREEN: This item has to do with British Columbia and the Yukon, and I understand that an arrangement was made that any item contained in the war appropriation could be discussed when the civil estimates were under consideration. I would ask the minister to tell the committee the present position with regard to the plans for removing Ripple rock in Seymour narrows on the west coast. There is a war vote of $287,697.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Certain expenditures were incurred in 1943 prior to the instalment of operations by a different method of removing the rock. It is a long story and my hon. friend knows all about it. At the beginning of the war the war committee of the cabinet was asked by the United States admiralty to try to remove that rock so that ships could pass through the narrows without any danger. That was in 1941. We had a vote in the war appropriation and we undertook that work. We tried one method of blasting out the rock and then dredging so that we would have a depth of twenty-nine to thirty-one feet. After a year and a half of trying we had to build a scow and some special equipment to do the work. We tried to anchor the scow down and started the work, but with very little success; in fact, we did not succeed at all, and at one moment we decided to discontinue the operations. Later on we were told that by trying the cable method of stabilizing that scow we could do some drilling and blast out the rock. We tried that method. We did not have the money in the war appropriation but it was allotted by the treasury board to the department and I am now asking that it be confirmed. We kept on drilling until the end of October of this year. We drilled a little over 100 holes at a depth of from five to six feet and we blasted seventy per cent of those holes at that level. We are now up against the difficulty of trying to find a way to dredge this blasted stuff away.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is that parliamentary language?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When we get this done we are still convinced that we shall be able to drill down at another six feet lower and then blast at that level and dredge the stuff away. Three weeks ago my deputy spent some time out on the coast to acquaint himself personally with the circumstances. He is preparing a report which I have not yet to hand, on whether we should continue with this work. Everybody agrees that it would be a fine thing to see that rock out of the way, but it is one terrible job to get it done. This is one experiment we are making; I do not know whether we shall succeed. But the hon. member can rely on my good will. I have done the best I could.

Mr. GREEN: I hope that there is no intention of giving up the attempt to remove the rock. It is a menace to navigation.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There have been many attempts at giving up, but I have not given up yet.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—
Telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance.
293. Land and cable telegraph lines—lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels for cable work, $161,000.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I see that this vote for telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance, applies to Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and the next item applies to the maritime provinces. Why are Manitoba and Ontario not included?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In outlying districts on the coast we have our own lines and our own staff. They are in remote districts where no company will undertake to supply a service. We have no such lines in Ontario or Quebec.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

The CHAIRMAN: Last night the committee passed resolutions 2 and 3. Resolution 1 stood. Is it the desire of the committee to proceed with 1 or 4?

Mr. ILSLEY: No. 4, please.

That all payments of superannuation or pension to former employees or their dependents in 1946 or subsequent taxation years be taxable income, provided that, where a former employee has not in the past been entitled to a deduction from income in respect of his contribution to an approved fund or plan, only a proportionate part shall be taxable.

Mr. JACKMAN: Will the minister explain what is meant by the word "proportionate"?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): I will read the explanation of resolutions 3 and 4; resolution 3 is passed but the statement I have covers both. Resolutions 3 and 4 should be considered together since they both are closely related to the revision in tax treatment proposed for certain pension plans, and each is incomplete without the other. At the present time there are in the income tax law two alternative provisions governing taxation of approved pension funds and plans. Under one alternative, contributions made into the plan by employees are allowed up to a limit as deduction from income in the year of contribution and the pension received by the employee after his retirement is taxed as income. Under the other alternative no deduction from income is allowed the employee in the year of his contribution, but the whole of his pension received after his retirement is free from income tax. The first alternative is of more general application than the second and applies automatically in the case of any pension plan that has been approved by the Minister of National Revenue. The second alternative applies in the case of a pension fund or plan administered by a separate trust or corporation established for that purpose which has elected, under the right given by section 5 (1) (h) of the Income War Tax Act, to have the income from its investments exempt from income tax. It is the fact of election under 5 (1) (h) that carries with it the right to a tax-free pension on retirement. Such an election was only of significance in the case of a plan where there was a separate fund holding investments which earned an annual income. The majority of pension plans now in force in Canada are written on a group basis with the government annuities branch or with insurance companies, in which case there is no distinguishable separate fund on which income is earned.

The effect of resolutions 3 and 4 will be to place all pension plans henceforth on a uniform basis. Resolution 3 will do away with the necessity for any plan to elect to have the income from those investments free of tax, since the income of all funds will henceforth be exempt.

Resolution 4 will place all pensioners on an equal basis also by providing that contributions to the funds will be allowed as a deduction from income in the year of contribution, and the pension will be taxable as income of the pensioner in the year of receipt. It will provide, however, that to the extent that a pensioner had accumulated a right to a tax-free pension because of an election by the fund under section 5 (1) (h), that right will be protected to the pensioner and his dependents in future years.

I cannot answer my hon. friend's question at the present time. The formula for apportionment, for fixing the proportionate part will be contained in the bill, and the officials have to discuss it with me before final approval is given to it. There has been a great deal of discussion as to the principle upon which that apportionment should take place and I have to consider two different principles and select the one which I think is most appropriate.

Mr. FRASER: Would that be the life expectancy?

Mr. ILSLEY: No; that has nothing to do with life expectancy.

Mr. FRASER: It would to a certain extent.

Mr. ILSLEY: No. The situation covered by this is illustrated by the pensions which will be received by the employees of a corporation.

Mr. FRASER: For the rest of their lives.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. The pension will be a retirement annuity, of course, but employees of certain companies are paying income tax on their entire pay without any deduction of what they put into the pension, in the expectation, which they are justified in having under the law, as I said yesterday, that when they receive their pension it will be entirely free of income tax. Now, then, this changes the law so that the pensions of all will be taxable; but with regard to those who have been paying taxes on their entire income it is obvious that the entire amount of their pension cannot be taxed because otherwise they would be subject to double taxation; therefore a proportionate amount can be taxed. But the principles upon which that proportion will be fixed are not stated in the resolution; they will be stated in the bill, and I cannot state them at the present time because two or three different plans of apportionment are being considered and I have not yet given my approval to one or the other of them.

Mr. FRASER: The minister does not know when the bill will be ready?

Mr. ILSLEY: I think we shall be ready with the bill when we get through the resolutions. It depends on how soon we shall get through those resolutions. I have not had time this week—

Mr. FRASER: The minister will explain that when we come to the bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall explain that when we get to the bill, and if I may be permitted to refer to another resolution I should like to explain the formula for determination of the capital element in an annuity when I get to the bill. It is drafted; I was looking at it last night, but it is as long, involved and complicated as anything one ever saw, and it may be changed.

Mr. FRASER: Would the ordinary layman understand it?

Mr. ILSLEY: I doubt it; at any rate the members of the committee will not be able to understand it unless they have it before them—

Mr. FRASER: That is what I meant.

Mr. ILSLEY: —in a bill. That is the reason why the best way to treat this legislation is to—

Mr. FRASER: Let it go through and get the bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, let the resolutions go through; have as much discussion as the committee wants to give them and then distribute the bill and not go on with the bill immediately, but have two or three days to look at it, because it will have some fairly complicated sections in it.

Mr. JACKMAN: I assume that the minister might read resolution 5 in connection with resolutions 3 and 4 which were read. They are really all part of the whole, are they not?

Mr. ILSLEY: They are part of the same general class of cases.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. JACKMAN: I wonder if I have it right when I read it in this way, that on these approved pensions or annuity plans the interest or income on the fund will not be taxable.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. JACKMAN: Second, that payments out of the fund will be taxable except in cases where certain funds have already accrued and payments in have not been allowed as tax deductions?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. JACKMAN: Third, in resolution 5 which we are about to come to, the amounts which the employee and the employer may put in each year amount to $900 each as against $300 in the existing section.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. JACKMAN: Last year, as I recall it, we made it possible for corporations to contribute up to $300 a year for back years, did we not? Will that be $900 for back years too as a maximum for each year?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct, yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I go on with resolution 5 as they are all embodied together? It seems to me that in this provision which, on the whole, I would consider generous and more than helpful toward providing for one's old age through contributions both by the individual and by the employer, there is a discrimination against employees in very small companies or against individuals who do not belong to a company which sees fit to set up an employee fund of this kind. They have no means of providing under the same generous terms as have individuals of a large company or an approved plan, and there have been a good many complaints—I am sure some of them have reached the ears of the minister—that the individual who works for a company which has not a plan, and who would like to provide for his old age, cannot take $900 from his income and have it tax free and put it into a fund from which he will eventually derive an annuity which will be taxable. Therefore, if I am right in my assumption, and these people are right in their complaint about discrimination against them because the opportunity is not open to them, I would suggest that the government might consider under the annuity department some method whereby the individual who is not an employee of a large company could contribute under the same right and privileges as the individual is given when he comes under an approved plan. I make that suggestion because undoubtedly at the present time there would seem to be a rather harsh discrimination.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know of any way whereby that could be met.

Mr. JACKMAN: In place of the company or the great number of companies having a plan whereby the individual contributes under it, could not the government, under the annuities department, set up a plan whereby individuals could pay into it and receive the same treatment that those employees of individual companies receive? As it is, when a man has $900 taken from his wages and paid into a plan on which he pays no tax it is a great advantage to him over a man who cannot contribute to such a plan. It is obvious under these plans which are approved, does the minister not think? The employer can also contribute $900. Then, under the generous provisions of last year's budget they can contribute $900 each year for a number of previous years.

Mr. ILSLEY: If the employee of that small company were to purchase an annuity, under this legislation that annuity would be largely free from tax; that is, the capital element is free.

Mr. BENTLEY: Would the minister mind talking to us also? The hon. member for Rosedale is not the only one interested.

Mr. ILSLEY: I thought he was the one principally interested, but if there is general interest in this matter I will certainly try to speak louder. The employee of the small company which does not set up a pension plan may buy a government annuity, and he will be taxed on a very small part of that annuity. I do not know whether that entirely eliminates the discrimination, but he has paid a tax before he began to get his money back. It is true he has not been able to deduct the purchase price of his annuity from his income, as the employee of a company with a pension plan can do, but the employee of a company which has a pension plan pays a tax on every bit of his pension when he begins to receive it. In the case of the purchaser of an annuity—and that is the only provision I know of for the employee of a small company which has not a pension plan—under these provisions he is largely free from tax on his annuity, what may be called his pension.

Mr. BENTLEY: And these three resolutions will equalize those two kinds of people who purchase annuities?

Mr. ILSLEY: As far as that is possible. If the hon. gentleman has not read the report of the Ives commission I would recommend that he do so, because it is an able and interesting document which makes a valiant attempt to eliminate discrimination as between those receiving annuities, pension payments and so on. They are not taxed in the same way. The pension is all taxed; everyone's pension is completely taxed. In the case of a contractual annuity, it is largely untaxed. In the case of a person who buys an annuity, that purchase price comes out of taxed income; he pays taxes on it, so to speak, before he buys the annuity. In the case of the employee of the company, he deducts his contribution from his income for tax purposes. One gets the benefit at one end; the other gets it at the other end; but as far as it can be done, in the opinion of this commission the situation is rendered devoid of inequity.

Mr. FAIR: I should like a little information about something I have not heard mentioned so far in this discussion. Take the case of a farmer who has worked until he is sixty years of age. Then he sells his farm, live stock and equipment, pays off the debts he has accumulated during his years of endeavour, and invests the balance in an annuity. Where does he get off? What tax will he have to pay if he receives an annuity of, say $100 a month?

Mr. JACKMAN: Not very much.

Mr. ILSLEY: As the hon. member for Rosedale suggests, the answer is, not very much. He will pay income tax on the interest element, not on the capital element. As I was saying a while ago, if you ask me to state the formula for determining the capital element I can do so only in a very simple case. Take a man, say at the age of sixty-five who bought an annuity for a lump sum. In that case I could pretty well tell what the capital element is; it is the purchase price of the annuity. If he has a life expectation of ten years my understanding of the formula—and I have to go over this before I bring in the bill so that I can speak with greater certainty—is that the purchase price will be spread over the ten years, and it will be considered that one-tenth of that purchase price each year will be capital, that the balance will be interest, and he will be taxed on that interest.

Mr. FAIR: Then tell me if I have it straight. If a farmer pays $15,000 in a lump sum—this is just by way of illustration—in full payment of an annuity amounting to, say $100 a month, what will be the tax each year?

Mr. ILSLEY: In the first place you will have to determine his expectation of life.

Mr. FAIR: Well, suppose he is sixty-five years of age and expects to live another ten years.

Mr. ILSLEY: Then he has paid entirely too much for his annuity, has he not?

Mr. FAIR: I knew the minister was pretty greedy in collecting money, and I wanted to set it high enough that there would not be any argument.

Mr. ILSLEY: If you had such an impossible situation as that the man would not be getting any interest at all. He has paid $15,000 for the annuity and in theory he is going to live for ten years. That means that in order to get back his capital, without any interest at all, he should get back $1,500 a year, but under this hypothesis he is getting only $1,200, so that I would say he was an improvident farmer.

Mr. FAIR: Then, say a farmer aged fifty-five pays $17,000 for his annuity and expects to live twenty years. Perhaps that would be a better basis. What would be his annual tax payments?

Mr. ILSLEY: What I say is subject to correction, because this formula is not finally settled, but it will appear in the bill. My expectation—not of life but of how that would be dealt with—is that he would get back $850 a year in capital. He paid $17,000 for the annuity, and he has an expectation of life of twenty years. That is $850 a year for twenty years, making a total of $17,000. So to the extent that his annuity in any year exceeded $850, that excess would be taxed, because that would be interest, not capital.

Mr. FAIR: Then, if he did not have any other income than his annuity, he would not pay any income tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know what the interest element worked out to. It was less than the exemption for a single man, was it? If so, he would not pay any tax.

Mr. BENTLEY: If the interest element did not work out to more than the exemption for a single man he would not pay any tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not if that was his only income?

Mr. McMASTER: The minister is taking the average over the year, and making the interest the same.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is the intention. That applies each year as long as he lives, no matter whether his real life corresponds with his life expectancy or not. But I must say I put the most simple case, one of great simplicity to the committee. That is not the kind of annuity which is sold in most cases. There are all kinds, they are bought in all kinds of ways.

Mr. McMASTER: What about a guaranteed life arrangement?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, please do not ask me about that. All I can do, as I say, is to put the bill before the house and let the hon. members study it.

Mr. CASE: Is not the real force of the argument in favour of having annuities tax free, simply because, as the minister said, in the ordinary course of events a man pays income tax on the funds he eventually pays in.

Mr. ILSLEY: Correct.

Mr. CASE: Therefore we can properly contend that there is a duplication of taxation. For that reason I say that the government should give consideration to making annuities tax free within certain limits—$750 a year, $1,000 a year, or $1,200 a year. What I was thinking about is the prospective purchaser of an annuity knowing definitely at the time he makes the purchase what it will yield, and that it would not be subject to a change in law. It should be a contractual obligation on the part of the government.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think any government can possibly do that. An attempt to bind future parliaments in respect of taxation is something that cannot or should not be done. We changed the taxation in 1940, but we were entering the greatest war in history, and one did not know when a national emergency might arise which would necessitate severe taxation.

Mr. CASE: I think, in fairness, that principle would have to be accepted. You could not bind a future government.

Mr. ILSLEY: Correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: I made a suggestion to the minister in regard to the government's setting up some scheme whereby people could buy an annuity, pay into it, and receive $900 deduction from their tax, as they do when they are employees of large corporations. The minister gave a reason why the present amendment worked in favour of the man who bought an outside annuity, inasmuch as when he receives payment only the income part will be taxable, and not the capital part also.

But I point out that I think the reason he advances as to why there is a tendency to equalization in those two disparities is a specious one, because the wage-earner, though being allowed to deduct his $900 a year now, has a real saving because he has income tax to pay. But when he receives the annuity he will likely be receiving so little money—and the suggestion is that the employee will be receiving about half of his annual wage—when he retires and receives the annuity income he will not be in any income tax bracket at all, even though the provision is that he will be taxed on the full amount.

I think the minister will agree that in the great majority of cases the ordinary individual will not be in any tax bracket at all. For this reason I think the answer the minister gave when he tried to dispel the disparity in respect of the man who contributes under the plan is a specious one. I believe the government would be following its present acceptance of the principle of letting a person provide for old age if it were now to bring down a further addition to the legislation respecting the change made last year in allowing contributions under the plan to be larger and also retroactive. This would be good, socially, and would be acceptable to all parties in the house.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is just a question how far the government ought to go. It is a good idea to encourage people to do something for themselves. I think pension funds and plans are extended—and properly so—to industry. Let us give them our blessing and help them to expand.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is just a suggestion.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have not given it any study. It is a suggestion which can be given consideration.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall resolutions 1, 4, 5 and 6 carry?

Mr. JACKMAN: Was it not resolutions 2, 3, 4 and 5?

The CHAIRMAN: I understood the minister to say that he would have to bring down the bill before he could discuss resolution 1 effectively.

Mr. ILSLEY: There were two points in connection with resolution 7. The first was as to how to define capital, and I said that that had better stand. I have gone some distance already, and that is about as far as it would be profitable to go. A second question was asked last night by the hon. member for Rosedale. The answer is a technical one. Does the hon. member want it on the record?

Mr. JACKMAN: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: The first question asked was this:

If a person purchased an annuity before the 25th June, 1940, whereby he would receive an annuity commencing at age sixty-five, having regard to the amount paid prior to the said date, can he, after the 25th June, 1940, pay a larger sum than originally contracted for and thereby receive a larger annuity at the commencement date and have the larger annuity exempt from tax?

The answer is: Under the amendment of 1940 the increased annuity, or enlargement of the annuity originally contracted for, would become subject to tax.

The second question is: If the holder of the annuity purchased it prior to the 25th June, 1940, and then subsequently to that date advanced the date of maturity and paid the required amount, as demanded by the annuities branch, would the annuity received at the advanced date be subject to tax in whole or in part?

The answer to the second question is: The ruling of the Department of National Revenue is to preserve to the annuitant all rights that he had in respect of his pre-25th June, 1940 contract so far as it could be matured earlier without the payment of any additional sum, so that if the date of maturity were advanced and because an additional sum was paid the same amount of annual annuity would be paid as and from the earlier date, then the difference between the preserved pre-25th June, 1940 rights and the amount that he would receive as an annual annuity, arising out of the additional payment, would be subject to tax.

To state it in figures for clarity—if the pre-25th June, 1940 contract entitled him to $1,200 per annum commencing when he was sixty-five years of age, and payment were accelerated by five years, and he was to receive thereby, without payment of further moneys, $900 per annum from age sixty, that annuity would be free of tax; but if, after June 25, 1940, he paid an additional sum of money which entitled him to $1,200 per annum from age sixty, then the difference between $900 and $1,200 would be annual taxable income to him for the rest of his life.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister has answered my observations. But this in my opinion is a distinct breach of contract. Section 5 (k) was the section in question, and I doubt very much whether under the present legislation the exchequer court would uphold the ruling of the commissioner of taxation.

If the minister wishes to know it, I shall not let this matter go by easily, because I think that in 1940 the minister permitted a breach of good faith on the part of the dominion government when annuitants were not allowed to enlarge a contract under the right which had been most specifically promised to them by agents of the government. It was so stated in the literature of the Department of Labour issued in connection with the sale of these government annuities. The minister quarreled with my statement last night that there had been a breach of contract on the part of the dominion government; but in 1940, when the debate on the budget was up, I mentioned this cancellation of the option right. An option right is just as valuable as any other intangible right. I said at that time, as reported at page 1480 of Hansard of that year:

I am not holding a brief for any person who pays in a nominal sum in order to obtain a larger annuity later on—

It may have been an improvident contract on the part of the government, but if a person makes an improvident contract he has to live up to it under the law unless he happens to be a sovereign body, such as the government. I continued:

—but the fact is that government agents did tell these people that if they took out small contracts they had the right to increase them up to a maximum of $1,200.

There was never any question about that. I have checked and rechecked. Other hon. members will bear me out when I say that the right was given to the holders of these contracts, even though it might be for a nominal amount. At that time the minister said:

I admit that has been taken away.

He was admitting taking something away from a person.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not admit it now, whether I admitted it then or not. I apparently misunderstood the hon. gentleman at that time because the right to increase was never taken away.

Mr. JACKMAN: The right to increase under the same favourable terms as those given. What was the use of increasing the contract if you had not the same terms? Of course you could increase it to $1,200 if you wanted to, but not under the original terms that you were promised. You were told that you could enlarge the contract under the same terms, and that right was taken away. Section 5 (k), which deals definitely with that, says:

Provided that such exemption shall not extend to that portion of the income which exceeds the amount of the annuity actually specified in the contract before the twenty-fifth day of June, 1940, where such excess amount arises by reason of any option or contractual right to enlarge the annuity income by the payment of additional sums or premiums, unless such additional sums or premiums have actually been paid before the said date.

Mr. ILSLEY: Parliament did not say in that section that they were taking away any option or contractual right, nor did they take away any option or contractual right. Moreover, they left untaxed all annuities that were bought or contracted to be bought before June 25, 1940.

Mr. JACKMAN: You have given me another ruling which takes away a further right. Take a contract for $1,200 which was entered into before 1940. So much was paid in and the payments were kept up. It was to be a tax-free contract for $1,200, and now you say to the committee to-night—there is the amount designated as an enlargement to bring the entire contract to maturity—that it will be taxable. If the minister has ever taken the trouble to look at the application form for a government annuity he will find that they were sold somewhat on this basis; I am referring to the period prior to 1940. The agent would visit you and state, "You can take out a contract for any amount not exceeding $1,200; if you take it out for a smaller amount you may enlarge that contract at any time." It was definitely stated in the annuity contract that the income derived from the contract is exempt from dominion government income tax. That is what was stated in the contract signed by the Minister of Labour.

The agent would approach you and would tell you, "If you will put down some money on one of these contracts you will be able to pay it off at any time you please under any plan you like." There were certain restrictions as to the guaranteed type of annuity. But in 1940 the tax-free option was taken away. I do not raise that point particularly, because I realize that if a man took a contract after that date and paid out so much money, while it was a breach of a contract, we could not do very much about it.

But when you come and say to the person who has an annuity for the full $1,200 and wishes to make it immediate under the terms of the contract which has a Dominion of Canada seal on it, that that will be an entirely different contract, you are committing a breach. In the old days it made very little difference to the minister whether it was tax-free or taxable, because even a single person had an exemption of $1,200. If he had a tax-free annuity, that would probably absorb the complete amount. But when taxes rose, then the Minister of Finance looked into these matters, and he thrust aside all rights of individuals who held these contracts and said that they would not be able to get what they were told in writing they would get. Now they must abide by his decision even though it greatly changes the nature of the original contract.

Mr. ILSLEY: My case is just this: Every annuity that any one bought or agreed to buy before June 25, 1940, is free of income tax. That is my simple case. But annuities upon which a person got an option but which he did not care to take up, were taxed as from June 25, 1940. The taxing of them was no breach of contract or breach of faith on the part of this government. On the contrary, had we left the law so that option holders could exercise their options and have their annuities free of income tax while new purchasers would have to pay income tax on their annuities, we would have been committing unjustifiable discrimination.

Mr. JACKMAN: There is no use in labouring the matter at too great length. I do not know whether the minister thoroughly understands me or not. If he were a holder of one of these contracts, as many citizens are, I think he would put an entirely different interpretation on it. I have given him the case of people who have taken out these contracts for $1,200 before 1940.

Mr. ILSLEY: At what age?

Mr. JACKMAN: Any age you like; sixty years if you wish.

Mr. ILSLEY: Sixty-five years was the case I took.

Mr. JACKMAN: This was simply a savings deposit with the government with the right to take out a Dominion of Canada annuity. The very application stated that the applicant would be granted an annuity of a certain amount or such other annuity as his payments might purchase. There was nothing very definite in the contract. It made little difference whether you took out a $100 or a $1,200 contract. That is what the agent would tell you because you had the right to enlarge it if you wished. As I said before, even a person who took out the $1,200 maximum annuity in 1940 is now, by a ruling which I think is not valid in law, told that his contract is changed. It is not an enlargement of the contract; he stipulated for the full amount of $1,200 and now he wants to pay that up. Some people will have paid a fair amount by means of annual instalments and now they might wish to pay up the balance on their contracts. But the government now comes in with a new ruling as to income tax. I can only say that if the government continues to advertise itself in this way as a breaker of contracts, I am very sorry for the future of the finances of this country.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask one question which applies only to the last answer given by the minister? Perhaps I did not understand him correctly, but I thought he made some moral distinction between the breach of a contract in the nature of an option and the breach of a contract which had finished its stipulations and covered the whole territory. Did I understand the minister correctly?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You see no moral difference?

Mr. ILSLEY: I certainly see a moral difference.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Let us assume that I have agreed to buy a piece of property from you for $10,000 and I have paid you $100 because that would be all I would have at the moment. I then obtain an option for one year. You can see no difference in some third party, in this case the government, coming in and making a stipulation with respect to that, even though I had paid you the whole $10,000 in cash? That is the legal view which I think is simple. So where is the distinction between the government breaching a contract by way of taxation and breaching a contract which had not been completed? I cannot find the difference.

Mr. ILSLEY: You cannot deal with these matters in the abstract. You are running from annuities to real estate and you are not specifying the kind of change that the government makes in the situation, so that I cannot argue from one to the other. But take the case of annuities that I put. I have said it a dozen times. It seems to me that there is a great difference between the government going in and taxing an annuity which a man has agreed to buy, has either paid for or agreed to take and pay for, and an annuity which he has never agreed to take at all. The government has agreed to enlarge his annuity later if he wishes to pay the money for it. But the government has never agreed not to tax the additional annuity that he takes later. The government has not agreed to refrain from taxing that. The man is out nothing. He has not paid any money; he is not denied the opportunity of investing his money elsewhere, and surely it is limiting the powers of parliament unduly to say that if you change your system from non-taxation of annuities to taxation of annuities you can only tax annuities which are purchased after the date of the change and not annuities which were bought on option and taken out before the date was changed. I think there is a great difference.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I endeavour to make myself plainer. We will leave out real estate. Say that I have a contract of insurance, which comes perhaps a little closer to annuities than anything else. Suppose I have taken out a contract of insurance with a company or with the government, for they are all in the same position, and under that contract of insurance I also have the option, as many insurance contracts have, permitting me in a given length of time to accept certain advantages which are open to me by the contract of insurance. If the insurance company came along to me and said, "We are not going to honour that option except on new terms that we impose", what is the difference between that and the government adding conditions to the exercise of my option? With respect, I do not see the difference. I would be very glad to be shown it, but at present I cannot see it. Perhaps it is my fault; I do not know.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think there is any implied term at all binding the government or parliament that taxation would not be imposed after a certain date.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is the minister suggesting that there is a difference between a contract with the government and a contract with an insurance company?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If there is, it is time that we quit selling annuities.

Mr. ILSLEY: No. I consider that the government carried out its contract completely.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): With respect, I know the minister thinks so; but I was trying to find the parallel, if there may be one, and I think there is. The minister has not explained my difficulty. That may be my fault.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know whether it is worth while to carry this on, but will my hon. friend point out to me in what respect the government broke its contract? The government agreed by these contracts that the person who bought the annuity would have the option of enlarging his annuity.

Mr. JACKMAN: Under what terms?

Mr. ILSLEY: Under what terms? The terms had nothing to do with taxation. Read the contract through. I will take all this back if any of my hon. friends can bring me in, not something they heard that somebody said, but a contract and show where we have broken a single clause of that contract. That is the difference between the case put by me and the other two cases put by the hon. member for Calgary West. He was putting a case where the insurance company were breaking their contract. They agreed to give the purchaser certain privileges which later they denied him. They broke their contract. But show me where the government has broken its contract.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Am I wrong in saying that an option between two parties involves one of the parties doing certain things on certain terms? I always understood that.

Mr. ILSLEY: Certainly. That is your insurance company case.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If my simple understanding of this is wrong I should like to know. The government signed a document and gave me the right to do certain things within a certain time.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is a contract.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think we shall go that far together.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then when I find that you as the grantor of the option have, by way of taxation, disturbed those terms—

Mr. ILSLEY: What terms?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The terms upon which I might increase my position, the option part of it, if you wish. Am I quite wrong in assuming that to be the fact?

Mr. ILSLEY: The act does not prevent anybody from enlarging his annuity. That was the only contractual term that is applicable.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think we should get this untangled because it is very important. Is it not a fact that when I put $100 into a government annuity at a certain date it is estimated that that $100 by maturity will have earned a certain annuity, and every multiple of $100 that I put in is a separate deposit which earns a separate part of an annuity which may total $1,200, let us say, at the end of a given time? In other words, I am not making a deposit which is in the nature of an option to do something at some future date. But I can put in another $100, or $50, or $500, or $1,000 when I have it, and from the date on which I deposit these further sums that money will give me at the age of sixty, we will say, an annuity of $500, $600, $1,000, $1,200, as the case may be. In other words, is this not in reality a separate deposit, with the deposits being made not regularly, perhaps rather irregularly, so that at a certain time a certain annual sum will be available to me as earnings from that deposit? Are these not separate transactions? That is the point that was running through my mind when the argument was taking place, namely, that I am not buying an option but making a deposit which will guarantee me a certain return called an annuity, and my aggregate deposits may earn me, let us say, $1,200 when I have reached the age of sixty or sixty-five, as the case may be.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is the ordinary case of purchasing an annuity. The purchase price is not paid all at once. In most cases it is paid by instalments. But that is not the case I am talking about. I am talking about the purchaser who perhaps paid the government one dollar in 1930.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, but the minister has not got my point. If I put in one dollar in 1930 that dollar in 1960 will have earned me very little.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. COLDWELL: Perhaps I do not put anything more in until 1940 and then I put in $10,000. That $10,000 will earn me something up to the time of maturity. But as I see it, the dollar I put in did not entitle me to a return of any particular sum other than on the dollar I put in 1930.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. COLDWELL: If in the meantime I make a deposit under different conditions, then I have to abide by the conditions imposed at the time I make the deposit. That is the point. Is that not the argument?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: I can understand that, but I cannot understand the argument put forward by the hon. member for Rosedale, that you are buying an option, because it is a different thing from real estate, which was used as an analogy. I buy an option on real estate for one year and if I do not take it up at the end of the year I lose the deposit; but in this case I preserve my deposit and get an annuity on the deposit, and no more, until I make another deposit on which I earn something.

Mr. KNIGHT: Do I understand that one has the privilege of increasing the annuity according to contract, but increases it subject to the taxation conditions imposed at the time the increase is made?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. KNIGHT: That is perfectly reasonable and it seems to me to make good sense, but I cannot understand the argument advanced from the Conservative benches. It does not make sense.

Mr. JACKMAN: If I can still throw some light on this matter I will try to do so, because what the minister has said does not budge me one iota from my position which I believe to be fundamentally right. If anyone in business attempted to do what the minister suggests can be done I would not negotiate with him at all because it would not be worth while. We cannot live in such a world. Let me read to the committee from one of these application forms for the purchase of a deferred annuity. This is one I found on my desk this morning. I do not think there is any marked change from those used some years ago. I quote:

I desire to purchase under plan . . .

One or 2.

. . . and agree to pay the authorized monthly, quarterly, half-yearly, yearly or single premium . . .

Of so many dollars.

. . . reserving, however, the right to complete the purchase under the contract by the payment of sums of varying amounts . . .

Put in what you like, when you like.

. . . or by such other method as may be authorized and approved by the government—

I presume that if the government wish to have regularity in the payments they can specify it.

—and with the understanding that such an annuity will in any event be granted to the annuitant as the total purchase money with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum, compounded yearly, will purchase at the rates in effect at the date of this application, the annuity not to exceed $1,200.

May I suggest to the minister that if he insists on the provision which he now proposes, he amend section 5 (k) and declare that not only can those annuities prior to 1940 not be enlarged but that they can not be matured tax free earlier than stated in the contract, because I have no confidence, speaking from the little legal background that I have, in the ruling of the deputy minister.

Mr. ILSLEY: Maturing it earlier than originally intended is enlarging the annuity.

Mr. JACKMAN: Enlarging it means making the amount larger, though it is a legal question. I suggest, however, that the minister had better make it plain so as to save the taxpayers legal expenses.

Mr. ILSLEY: If I get an annuity of $1,200 beginning at fifty-five years of age, it is an enlargement of an annuity of $1,200 beginning at sixty-five years.

Resolutions 1 and 4 agreed to.

5. That the limitations on deductions for contributions in 1946 or subsequent taxation years by an employer or an employee to a superannuation or pension fund or plan be increased to $900, and that the percentage limitation in respect of the employer's contribution be removed.

Resolution agreed to.

6. That the exemptions and deductions for 1946 and subsequent taxation years in respect of a superannuation or pension fund or plan be conditional upon the continuing approval of the fund or plan by the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was wondering whether this was the resolution under which one might speak of business superannuation and pension funds. It provides exemptions and deductions for 1946 and subsequent taxation years conditional upon the continuing approval of the fund or plan by the Minister of National Revenue. I should think this would be the relevant resolution.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Occasionally we make bad friends in this world and sometimes they come back to thank us, but I wish to speak about bank pension funds. I want to know first whether or not the minister has some approval or disapproval of pension funds set up in banks. I gather he would have under this particular resolution.

Mr. ILSLEY: They must be approved like other pension funds.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I should think so. Therefore what I have to say about bank pension funds is appropriate here. When we get our new allowance through I shall not need to borrow from banks, but at the moment I do owe some of them. There was a report in the newspapers, either yesterday or to-day, with reference to salaries paid in banks. In my view—and I am supposed to be one of the fifty big shots who nominated our leader—salaries paid by Canadian banks are completely disgraceful. I go farther than that and point out that the answer to that is said to be that persons employed in banks have security in old age. That is the answer which is given.

In the first place, in no banks that I know of is there any pension fund applicable to women, although we know that Canadian banks have been largely operated by women since the last war. I can speak with authority with regard to only one bank, the name of which I will not mention, and my experience goes back seven or eight years. The pension fund in that bank is something which I do not think the minister, busy as he is, if he had an opportunity of looking into it, would approve. They say that these small salaries are small because the banks look after their employees in later life. Living in the place where the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) comes from, and which the member for Rosetown-Biggar knows, a bank clerk in the nineteen hundreds was the only fellow with a pair of white pants and a tennis racquet, and that was the only reason we knew he was a bank clerk. He was getting $9 a week. What happened is this. They have maintained that position. I quite confess that being a bank clerk does not mean nearly as much socially as it did when Regina was a town of 2,537 people and there was no decrease by deaths; in other words, the births just kept the thing even for a long time. But the last bank pension scheme I had occasion to look at some years ago had this provision: The employee paid in a certain amount of money; the bank added a certain amount of money which is usual in pension schemes; but if that employee were discharged he received from the bank one-half of the amount of money he himself had paid in, without interest. I know it startles people, but it is there. I know that the thing is usual. I speak of one bank which I know. They have another provision which is that persons receiving pensions from banks do so in the sole, entire and uncontrolled discretion of a certain board. In other words, granted that I am a manager and I have reached the age of sixty-five, I retire. They can take that pension away from me. I have signed a contract that that may happen; everybody does when he works for this bank, and it is one of the biggest in Canada. I hope I am not out of order—

Mr. MacINNIS: Based on regimentation, I suppose.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not know what my hon. friend means by that. I shall tell him what I think of regimentation if he wants to take time out.

Mr. MacINNIS: I thought that was it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Let me go back to what I was speaking about a moment ago. I see here that the minister is given discretion; I am glad he has it. I am not opposing the idea for a moment. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway company; it is entirely different. The man who pays into that fund is entitled to have the money of right; not only what he has paid in but a proportion of what the company has paid in. I am simply speaking of Canadian banks, and it does seem to me that the department, the minister, or the Minister of National Revenue, or someone, should look into those contracts, because the things I speak of were true up to six years ago. I am sure of that and I have never heard of its being changed from that date. I inquired of other banks; they did not show me their little book, but I was given to understand that they are pretty much on the same basis.

Mr. NICHOLSON: In support of what the hon. member for Calgary West has said, may I say that within the last week a similar case was brought to my attention where a bank accountant with over eighteen years' service in the bank left because the economic return did not enable him to support his family. His complaint is the same as that mentioned by the hon. member. He has contributed all those years, and although he left with a very good record he is denied the right to get back the amount of money he has paid in. In this particular bank that regulation still prevails.

Resolution agreed to.

7. That a payment on or after October 13, 1945, to an employee in respect of loss of office be deemed to be income of such employee over a period of five years.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask the minister just how he hits on the period of five years in connection with these payments which a person receives as compensation for loss of a job? May I read from the Ives report:

There does not appear to be any particular reasoning behind the choice of five years over which the payment may be spread; rather it appears to be an arbitrary decision which recognizes the inequity which would result if the total payment was considered as income in one year.

May I suggest to the minister that when he is answering, consideration might be given to enlarging this period perhaps to seven or to ten years or on a life expectancy basis.

Mr. ILSLEY: It seems to me we discussed this matter of life expectancy one other year, and there are certain objections to it which do not occur to me now. The period of five years was selected as a reasonable length of time, and the Ives commission did not take any exception to it at all; I think they endorsed it. The hon. gentleman is suggesting that it should be longer than five years; that is all.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I illustrate a hypothetical case? Suppose a man loses his position through the merging of a company, or for other reasons, and the firm is quite willing that he should receive a lump sum as compensation for the loss of his job. That man is more likely than not to be pretty well up in years. It may be that he will find difficulty in obtaining suitable employment, particularly if he is an executive officer. It may be very difficult to get a job of a similar nature with another company, and this lump sum is supposed to look after him as best it can for a considerable period, perhaps for the rest of his life. That is why I suggest that a longer period than five years is more equitable. The shorter the period, the higher the burden of taxation, because the more income will come in for taxation purposes in each year. If it were spread over ten years the revenue department will get less but the man will receive greater equity. I think the ideal way is to give the man a life expectancy. It may be ten years; it may be twenty-five years, in which case the purpose for which the lump sum was given to him by his former employer is carried out, since it is given to him because he has lost his job and may not easily find another means of livelihood.

Mr. McMASTER: Suppose the man died in the first year; what would happen?

Mr. ILSLEY: He would collect only on the one year; that is all.

Mr. COCKERAM: What has been the practice in cases like that? Are there departmental rulings?

Mr. ILSLEY: Formerly the practice was to tax it all in one year, because it was regarded as income and is income except for this provision.

Mr. COCKERAM: There have been specific cases which the department has handled. Have people come to the minister, and has he or his officials made the necessary arrangements? What has been the practice in the past?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is the Department of National Revenue; I do not know, I am sure.

Mr. COCKERAM: Some people who have been let out of war industries are in that position.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know; I do not remember any cases. At any rate it was regarded as a hardship to tax it all in one year. Therefore, in one of the budgets when the taxes got high we changed it so that he would only have to pay income tax of one-fifth the first year and one-fifth the second year, and so on for a period of five years. I think it has met with reasonable acceptance.

Mr. McMASTER: Was there not a case before the exchequer court a few years ago in which the sum of $100,000 was paid to one of the heads of a department? I forget the result, but my recollection is that it was decided it was not taxable. I do not know whether I agreed with that decision or not.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know what the case is.

Mr. McMASTER: I could look it up and let the minister know.

Mr. ILSLEY: There was the Judge Fullerton case, in which it was held to be capital and not income, and not taxable at all.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Has this not happened before, that payment for the loss of a job has been regarded by the Department of National Revenue as capital, but the company which paid it was not allowed to charge off that amount against profits? Either the company had to pay tax or the recipient had to pay; in the case I know of the company has paid the income tax on the total amount, and the person who received it did not pay any taxation, because it was regarded as a capital sum.

Mr. ILSLEY: The effect of this resolution is to place lump-sum payments made for loss of office on the same basis for purposes of taxation as lump-sum payments in general made to an employee at the time of his retirement from employment. The courts have interpreted the present law as excluding from the ambit of taxation so-called payment for loss of office, while other lump-sum payments on retirement from office are subject to tax. The royal commission asserted in its report that the distinction made was somewhat artificial, and that if the present interpretation were allowed to stand, by the simple expedient of entering into an agreement with an employee worded in a certain way, all lump-sum payments on retirement could be given the guise of payments for loss of office and thus escape taxation.

The resolution proposes, therefore, that such payments for loss of office be made subject to taxation by a definitive amendment to the law, and that where paid in a lump sum they be taxed in the same manner as other similar lump-sum payments are now taxed; that is, over a period of five years. Apparently what I said a few minutes ago in reply to some question was incorrect; that is, that these would be income, but I was thinking about lump-sum payments made in consideration of past services. They would be income, I believe, and I think we spread those over five years under an income tax amendment made a few years ago. This is a proposal to do the same with these payments, for the reasons stated.

Mr. JACKMAN: I can only say to the minister that I think there is a good deal of equity in my suggestion. If the man is big enough and important enough the company will see that funds are placed with a trust company so that his income will be paid to him for ten or twenty years or more. If he is a small man, a salesman or something like that who will receive only a few thousand dollars, he will be taxed at a very high rate, because that amount would be spread over five years while he may have to live on it for twenty years. I think the minister should either increase the number of years over which the income is spread or adopt the principle of life expectancy, so that substantial justice would be done.

Mr. ILSLEY: As a rule these are not large sums. The small man the hon. gentleman is talking about gets a small sum; when it is divided by five it does not amount to a great deal, so that it does not worry him at all in the matter of taxation.

Mr. JACKMAN: But the rates are pretty high on small incomes.

Resolution agreed to.

8. That, in lieu of the taxes otherwise payable by shareholders of a private closely-held company in respect of earned surplus accumulated by the company from the beginning of its 1917 fiscal period to the end of its 1939 fiscal period, the company be allowed to elect to pay a tax equal to the aggregate of the taxes calculated in respect of the allocable portion of each shareholder determined in accordance with the following table:—

On the first $25,000, or any portion thereof, 15 per cent,

$8,250 on an allocable portion of $50,000 and 21 per cent on the amount by which the portion exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $100,000,

$18,750 on an allocable portion of $100,000 and 24 per cent on the amount by which the portion exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $200,000,

$42,750 on an allocable portion of $200,000 and 27 per cent on the amount by which the portion exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $300,000,

$69,750 on an allocable portion of $300,000 and 30 per cent on the amount by which the portion exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $400,000,

$99,750 on an allocable portion of $400,000 and 33 per cent on the amount by which the portion exceeds $400,000.

Mr. JACKMAN: Would the minister explain this resolution?

Mr. ILSLEY: It will be recalled that the second part of the reference to the royal commission on the taxation of annuities and family corporations was to consider the problem encountered by closely-held companies on the death of a principal shareholder, the main part of whose estate was composed of his holdings in the company. In order to provide funds for the payment of succession duties on the estate of such a shareholder it is normally necessary to declare a dividend from the earned surplus of the company; and under existing arrangements this dividend is subject to taxation in full at the present high rates of personal income tax, which reach a level of sixty, seventy, eighty or a higher percentage in many cases, and encroach so heavily on the dividend that little is left for payment of the succession duties, for which purpose the dividend has been declared.

The recommendation of the royal commission to meet this problem was that in respect of earned surplus accumulated between 1917 and 1939 a schedule of rates should be applied approximating the rates that would have been imposed had the surplus been withdrawn in those years. This schedule of rates is embodied in resolution 8. It is proposed to give any closely-held company coming within the definition which will be set forth in the amendment to the law the right to pay a tax on an amount of its present earned surplus equal to its 1939 earned surplus in accordance with the rates set forth in this schedule and in this manner discharge on behalf of its shareholders the income tax liability on such earned surplus. Resolution 9 sets forth the time limit within which such companies must elect to pay the prescribed tax, and the manner in which such tax may be paid.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister has said that the type of company which will be allowed to take advantage of this new provision will be defined. I consider it important that the public know exactly what that type will be. I will not ask the minister for the precise legal wording, but a number of people have inquired already whether or not their companies would be eligible under this provision, and the minister should at least give the committee some idea as to whether it is to be a strictly private company within the terms of the dominion Companies Act or whether it is to apply to companies where we know hardship exists, where a man had a charter taken out under the Companies Act and built up a company in a small community, into which company he ploughed back his earnings. I believe there are to be some limitations on the number of shareholders, and so on, but the minister should give the committee some idea of what is in his mind so that members of the committee may perhaps put forth what ideas they have in their minds.

Mr. ILSLEY: My intention is to propose a definition of a private company which will be something like this:

"Private company" means a company the number of whose shareholders has not at any time since the 29th day of April, 1941, been more than fifty, not including persons who are in the employment of the company, or who having been formerly in the employment of the company were while in that employment and have continued after the termination of that employment to be shareholders of the company, two or more persons holding one or more shares jointly being considered as a single shareholder for the purposes of this paragraph.

That is a fairly comprehensive definition; it is not limited to private companies as defined by the Companies Act, because it would not do to confine it to that.

Mr. JACKMAN: It would be a fairly broad definition.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, it is.

Mr. McMASTER: I notice that companies themselves are allowed to take advantage of it, if they get any benefit from it. There is nothing that allows the income tax branch to force the making of these payments.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. McMASTER: Is there any reason why the exact amount of income tax could not be computed from the annual statements of these companies?

Mr. ILSLEY: It would be impossible. The annual statements of the companies would not be of any help. The figure we try to arrive at is the amount of tax which would have been payable by the individual shareholders, had the earnings of the company been distributed from year to year, instead of accumulative. That would depend upon so many factors. It would depend upon their total incomes, and upon the rates for the various years; and it would be impossible to do it, especially when some of these surpluses have been accumulated for forty or fifty years. To go away back would be an impossible task.

Mr. McMASTER: I do not think it would apply to any surplus which accumulated before 1917, when the Income War Tax Act was brought in.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, but I referred to surpluses which have accumulated for forty or fifty years.

Mr. McMASTER: It would not be taxable.

Mr. ILSLEY: The question is to determine what part of it has accumulated since 1917, and what part before 1917. If there has been a depletion and restoration, what rules would one apply?

Mr. JACKMAN: What is to be the treatment of the surplus which accumulated before 1917? Why do you have a deadline there? I realize that was the date of the introduction of the income tax legislation, but why does the minister place a deadline at 1917? How will you distribute your pre-1917 surplus?

Mr. ILSLEY: We propose to leave the treatment of the pre-1917 surplus exactly where it is at the present time.

Mr. JACKMAN: How is that?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know whether I can go through it all or not, but it goes something like this: If it is paid out in dividends, the dividends are wholly taxable. If the company is wound up and there is distribution of earned surplus, the part accumulated prior to 1917 is free of income tax. That is only the beginning of the story; there are some other qualifications as well.

Mr. JACKMAN: There was no deadline date given in some previous year to get that surplus out? A company prior to 1917 has a surplus, and it may pay it out in the form of dividends, and have those dividends tax free?

Mr. ILSLEY: Pre-1917?

Mr. JACKMAN: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: If it pays that out in the form of dividends, the dividends are taxable.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is what this legislation is aimed at—to get rid of taxation.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: Not all taxation.

Mr. JACKMAN: No, not all taxation; but if companies are to be given the right to distribute post-1917 income under certain terms which give substantial justice, they can distribute this surplus in the form of dividends—or how is it to be distributed?

Mr. ILSLEY: On winding up, it is free—the pre-1917 surplus on winding up each year of taxation. They always have been free. If they are paid out in dividends they are taxable, and always have been. We were dealing with the problem covering the period between 1917 and 1939.

Mr. JACKMAN: Apparently there is one provision already on winding up that allows that money to be distributed tax free, because there was no income tax in those days. What are you going to do with distribution which is made of the post-1917 surplus under this legislation? What are you going to call it? Will it be called a dividend?

Mr. ILSLEY: It will be a dividend.

Mr. JACKMAN: If there is any equity in allowing a post-1917 surplus to be distributed as dividends, and have it taxable under this special resolution, why do you not at least include the pre-1917 surplus? It has more equity attached to it, because there was no income tax whatsoever at that time.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall have to get an answer to that question. We did consider it but I have forgotten the circumstances. The whole thing from 1917 to 1939 has to come out. Part of it cannot come out, but it seems to me what we considered was whether there should be an option to take it all out, and we decided just to cover the period of the income tax.

Mr. JACKMAN: Under this legislation must it be all earned surplus?

Mr. ILSLEY: I was wrong in that answer; I am sorry.

Mr. McMASTER: I should like to know whether profits which have been accumulated during the past years under the act as it stood last year and the year before, were declared non-taxable as profits.

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not catch the question.

Mr. McMASTER: The point I make is that it is not necessary to declare a dividend and pay money over to be taxable. I am asking this: Were they not actually taxable last year? Should not the amount of profits made last year have been taxable, and income tax paid on it?

Mr. ILSLEY: The corporation income tax was paid on it.

Mr. McMASTER: But no other.

Mr. ILSLEY: The individual income tax was not paid on it, because the individual never got it.

Mr. COCKERAM: Has the minister estimated the amount of taxation he will get under this resolution?

Mr. ILSLEY: No estimate has been made, and I do not think one is possible.

Mr. JACKMAN: I suggest that this resolution should stand until the minister finds a reason for not including the pre-1917 income.

Mr. ILSLEY: Very well, let it stand. Or, would it be agreeable to pass the resolution, if I undertake to give consideration to the point before the bill is introduced? Would that be satisfactory?

Mr. JACKMAN: I presume that is all right. I had an example here that I thought I would put to the minister. It was given to me as an actual case. Earned profits between 1917 and 1939 amounted to $38,000. The company took off a capital loss of $8,000, which it was allowed to do, and showed an earned surplus of $30,000. Then it realized a capital profit of $5,000 in a subsequent period, and it had an earned surplus on January, 1917, of $5,000. Apparently I shall have to leave that in abeyance. Does the section apply to the $38,000 less the $8,000 for capital losses, which would make it $30,000, or does it apply to the $40,000, which is made up of the $5,000 earned surplus in 1917 and the amount of the earned surplus accrued during 1917 to 1939, plus the capital profit realized of $5,000? Perhaps the minister would let me have the answer when he gives the other information.

Resolution agreed to.

9. That the provision contemplated by resolution 8 be applicable only if the company elect on or before December 31, 1947, and that the tax be payable in four annual instalments, the first one being due on December 31, 1947, with interest at 4 per centum per annum on each instalment from December 31, 1946, until due and thereafter until paid at 7 per centum per annum.

Resolution agreed to.

10. That for 1944 and subsequent taxation years the provision for deductions of unusual medical expenses be extended in the event of the death of the taxpayer either in the taxation year or subsequently to include expenses incurred and paid either by him or by his estate in a 12-month period commencing in the taxation year.

Mr. JACKMAN: I think the minister should be congratulated on having included this resolution because it has been needed for a long time.

Mr. HARKNESS: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to those people who suffer from diabetes. I have received representations from many of them. Probably everyone knows that the majority of such people are dependent for their lives upon the continual use of insulin. I should think that if there is any such thing as an unusual medical expense it would be the expense incurred by these people; yet I understand that the departmental officials will not so consider it for income tax purposes. I should like to ask the minister if that is still the situation and, if so, if he will give consideration to including this under the heading of unusual medical expenses. The amount of money these people must spend annually for insulin runs up to a considerable sum in most cases.

Mr. ILSLEY: You cannot break the rule for one particular drug, or perhaps I should say one particular pharmaceutical product. A long list of drugs would have to be compiled as being eligible as medical expenses when bought from druggists rather than through a doctor. We have never felt that we could do that. This matter has been up in other sessions. Last year it was argued that we ought to do something and we reduced the five per cent to four per cent. That did not help the druggists very much, but it helped the person who was incurring the expense. That was brought in as a sort of alternative to a compilation of a long list of pharmaceutical preparations and drugs.

Mr. HARKNESS: I do not think the minister can argue that insulin should be considered as being in the same class as other drugs. It is certainly a very special case. The lives of a large number of people depend upon taking this drug regularly, if you want to call it a drug. The minister's argument is simply one of difficulty of administration. Because it is going to be a bit difficult to differentiate between this preparation and drugs generally, because it may make a little more work for some people in the department, he says it cannot be done. I do not think that is a good enough excuse. There are probably more people dependent upon the use of insulin than upon any other preparation of that kind. Relief from taxation for the cost of purchasing insulin is long overdue and administrative difficulties should not be allowed to stand in the way.

Mr. JACKMAN: I think the hon. member for Calgary East has made out a good case. This is simply another example of difficulty of administration being allowed to interfere with the redress of an injustice. No doubt many of these people spend a considerable amount of their income upon insulin in order to keep alive. There may be some other drugs or remedies which are just as essential as insulin, but here is a case where relief should be given. Simply because it may create a little more difficulty in administration should not be taken as a reason for permitting injustice or hardship to be imposed upon a certain class of people. Let us make this an exception if necessary. Practically every year since I first came here I have heard the minister complain that he could not do this or that because of administrative difficulties, and yet eventually he was forced to see the injustice of the case and he did the right thing, but only after pressure on the part of the opposition. Hon. members who are members of the medical profession will probably know how much it costs a person who is suffering from diabetes to purchase insulin. The terms of this resolution state that people who have to spend extra amounts on medical supplies are to get relief. Let us apply this to insulin and exclude the others for the time being. Perhaps in another year some other case will be shown to have as much merit as this one. In the meantime let us do what justice we can.

Mr. McCANN: The contention of hon. members that the cost of insulin should be allowed as a deduction is not opposed on the ground of administrative difficulties. There would be no more administrative difficulty in the case of one drug than in the case of another, but why one particular drug rather than another should be picked out I cannot understand. I could give many examples of drugs which people must purchase in order to remain alive. For instance, people suffering from pernicious anaemia must take liver extract continuously. Then there are certain classes of people to which this would be almost an encouragement to continue the use of drugs. I refer to drug addicts, and there are very many of them. I cannot see that the hon. gentlemen who appear to know so much about the medical profession have made out a case for insulin over and above any other drug used in the treatment of disease.

Mr. HARKNESS: I rather object to the minister's remark that I pretend to know anything about the medical profession. I do not so pretend. But I do know that large numbers of people require insulin. I understand also that there is no other drug upon which so many people are dependent for their lives. I certainly think this is something that should be put in a class by itself, and not as it is represented here, just one drug among many.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Would the Minister of National Revenue indicate whether a patient would secure the insulin from a medical practitioner or from a laboratory the same as liver extract is obtained? It is not obtained from the drug store.

Mr. McCANN: I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. It is procurable and purchasable at any drug store after the physician has indicated that it is to be used by the patient. One prescription in that regard is being filled continuously when the needs of the patient are known, so that it is not just purchased over the counter as one would purchase aspirin, quinine or drugs of that type. The patient who uses insulin gets a prescription for it from a qualified physician and that prescription is honoured by being refilled until it is countermanded by the physician who has indicated that its use is no longer necessary. In some of the provinces insulin has been distributed entirely free of charge, but that I understand has been discontinued. Certain people who are indigent and cannot pay for it are able to get it on the recommendation of the clerk of the municipality and a physician. In such cases it is distributed free by the province.

An hon. MEMBER: In some provinces only?

Mr. McCANN: Yes.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister clarify the term "unusual medical expenses"? Does it include hospitalization? "Medical expenses", if strictly applied might be limited to medical doctors' fees and would not necessarily include hospital or clinical treatment or even dental treatment.

Mr. ILSLEY: The definition of "unusual medical expenses" is found in section 5(1)(n) of the Income War Tax Act. It is a long definition. Would the hon. gentleman like me to read it?

Mr. McKAY: I am not so much concerned about that as I am about getting an outline so that we shall know just what it includes.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is:

(n) that portion of medical expenses in excess of four per centum of the income of the taxpayer incurred and paid within the taxation period or incurred and paid within a twelve-month period ending in the taxation period and not included in the calculation of a deduction for medical expenses under this act for a previous taxation period, if payment is made to a medical practitioner, dentist or nurse qualified to practise under the laws of the place where the expenses are incurred or a public or licensed private hospital in respect of a birth in the family of, illness of or operation upon the taxpayer or his spouse or any dependent in respect of whom he may make a deduction from his normal tax under rule five of section one of paragraph A of the first schedule to this act.

That is just the beginning of it.

Mr. McKAY: I cannot see any reason why insulin does not come under that. If insulin is given by medical order, it would definitely come under that definition.

Mr. ILSLEY: If it is included in a doctor's bill and the doctor gets paid for it, it does come within it; but that is not always the case.

Mr. JACKMAN: The Minister of National Revenue directed some remarks to me which were taken by my hon. friend as directed to him. The minister said that presumably I know something about medicine. I know nothing of it. But now that we have a member of the medical profession as head of the Department of National Revenue I hope that we shall get justice in this matter. The minister let the cat out of the bag when he said that some provinces distribute insulin free to these suffering people because of the expense incurred in purchasing it. Surely the purchase of insulin, if it amounts to something considerable each year—and the minister will know much better about that than I do—so that it becomes a financial burden on these people, properly comes under this section; and all the other drugs he mentioned, about which I know nothing and he knows a great deal, would perhaps be able to be put under the section another year. Let us do what justice we can to-night, not next year. Let us get something done here in this legislation by including the payment for insulin as one of the legitimate medical expenses allowed under the act.

Resolution agreed to.

11. That the requirement to deduct 7 per cent tax at source on payment of interest, dividends or royalties be discontinued after December 31, 1945.

Mr. FRASER: Is it contemplated that this seven per cent tax, the normal tax, will be eliminated altogether by this legislation?

Mr. ILSLEY: No. This resolution does not change the weight of taxation or the liability to taxation at all. It is merely an administrative change.

Resolution agreed to.

12. That for 1946 and subsequent taxation years the exemption of the service pay and allowances of members of the Canadian naval, military and air forces while on active service in Canada or anywhere in the western hemisphere whose duties are of such a character as are required normally to be performed afloat or in aircraft be rescinded.

Mr. COCKERAM: Would the minister explain this?

Mr. ILSLEY: This resolution withdraws in respect of 1946 and later years the complete exemption from income tax granted service personnel in the western hemisphere whose duties are normally performed in aircraft or afloat. Complete exemption was granted such personnel because of the risk to life involved in large scale training programmes, particularly to aircraft instructors, and also because of the risk to life from enemy action, particularly in the coastal regions.

The end of hostilities has brought the cessation of both enemy action and of the training programmes, and it is not justifiable that personnel whose duties continue to be performed in aircraft or afloat should be more favourably treated than other service personnel in the western hemisphere. Such personnel will, of course, be eligible for the tax concessions now granted all service personnel in the western hemisphere.

Mr. COCKERAM: What are those concessions?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is a complicated matter, but the way it is usually described is a $1,600 exemption for single persons and $2,100 for married. That is a very loose and general way of stating it, and the concessions do not apply as you get into the ranks of the higher paid officers receiving above a certain level of pay. They are taxed just as civilians are in Canada. But the lower paid ranks, lieutenants, captains, and so on, up to a certain rank, are taxed more lightly than civilians.

Mrs. STRUM: Would the minister explain the inclusion of the words, "in the western hemisphere"?

Mr. ILSLEY: Outside the western hemisphere service personnel were free of taxation and still are.

Resolution agreed to.

13. That for 1946 and subsequent taxation years the exemption of one-third of the remuneration paid to the civilian officers or employees of the Royal Air Force transport command whose duties are of such a character as are required normally to be performed in aircraft be rescinded.

Mr. ILSLEY: The present law grants exemption from tax in respect of one-third of the remuneration of civilian officers and employees of the air force transport command in recognition of the great risk from enemy action encountered by such men in performing their duties over the Atlantic during the period of hostilities. With the end of the war the risk from enemy action has ceased, and it is proposed therefore that the exemption granted in recognition of this risk shall be withdrawn as from the end of the present year.

Mr. COCKERAM: How long did they have that exemption—right through the war?

Mr. ILSLEY: It was introduced in 1943.

Mr. GREEN: Does the minister not think it would be fair to maintain it as long as the transport command is in operation?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not without discrimination against Trans-Canada employees flying over the ocean, and others. I do not think you can treat people differently under identical conditions.

Mr. GREEN: Are the transport command men flying under the same conditions as the Trans-Canada Air Lines men? Do the Trans-Canada men fly on regular schedules and routes, whereas the others do not?

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not think there was any difference in risk now between the two.

Mr. QUELCH: These men do not benefit under the rehabilitation programmes provided for the armed services and I think this advantage should be continued. As regards the Trans-Canada men. do they not come under some form of pension? Is there not some pension for Trans-Canada pilots?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know of any pension to employees of Trans-Canada. They may have a pension fund or scheme. Is the hon. gentleman talking about a disability pension?

Mr. QUELCH: Yes, disability pension or loss of life.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know about that.

Mr. QUELCH: These particular men do not participate in the benefits provided for members of the armed forces and if they are killed, unless they have taken out special civilian life insurance, their dependents are not cared for. I think we should continue to give them this concession.

Mr. ILSLEY: If the other group have higher pension rights you will find that this group has higher pay. As a matter of fact, their pay is very high.

Mr. COCKERAM: The men who have been in the transport command have, in my opinion, been discriminated against. It is true they got high pay for doing an extremely hazardous job, but they have none of the benefits that people in less hazardous occupations have enjoyed. There was discrimination in income tax from the start of the war. If there is one group of people to whom consideration should be given it is this group of men. Some were killed on service and their wives to-day are penniless. That is a situation which does not reflect credit either on Canada or on the minister.

Resolution agreed to.

14. That the exemption of limited dividend housing corporations be broadened to include institutional housing corporations and institutional holding companies as defined by the National Housing Act, 1944.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister explain?

Mr. ILSLEY: This resolution extends the exemption granted last year in respect to the income of limited dividend housing corporations to institutional housing corporations and institutional holding companies as defined by the National Housing Act, 1944. By order in council passed some time last summer the list of limited dividend housing corporations was extended, or at least provision was made for setting up institutional housing corporations and institutional holding companies under the National Housing Act, and there is the same reason for freeing them from income tax or excess profits tax as there is in the case of limited dividend housing corporations.

Resolution agreed to.

15. That a special tax be imposed equal to 100 per cent of the profits made by persons who between January 31, 1945, and August 7, 1945, purchased bonds or debentures of or guaranteed by the province of Alberta which were outstanding on January 31, 1945, and were included in the debt reorganization proposal of the provincial government, dated July 16, 1945, such profits to be the difference between the purchase price and the selling price of the bonds or debentures, if sold by such purchasers, or the difference between the purchase price and the total value of rights accruing to the purchasers on implementation of the provincial government conversion plan, as the case may be.

Mr. ILSLEY: In connection with plans worked out last spring for repayment of Alberta bonds, the government undertook to recommend a tax of 100 per cent of profits made through the purchase of such bonds in order to forestall speculative gains on the part of those who might trade in them. The tax will apply to any profits made on Alberta bonds purchased between January 31, 1945, and August 7, 1945, by which latter date the full terms of offer of the Alberta government had been made known, and time had been given for full publicity.

Mr. JACKMAN: On what day did the minister make the announcement that profits between January 31, 1945, and August 7, 1945, would be taxable at the rate of 100 per cent? Was it not retroactive from the time he made the statement?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. It was made after January 31; I do not know the exact date.

Mr. JACKMAN: I have no particular disagreement with this resolution, except that I could not allow it to pass without commenting upon the importation into our whole tax system of a principle to which we have not given cognizance before either here or in Great Britain, namely, the taxation of capital profits. There were, however, in this case certain extenuating circumstances. The minister did not make his statement until after the deadline date of January 31, and that is an infringement, if you like, of the rights of certain people. There was no secret about the matter. Everyone knew the refunding was under negotiation, but the minister in a wave of righteousness, if I may so describe it, made this exceptional ruling. It would be interesting to see how it will be possible to enforce this particular provision, which is a most unusual one. I do not disagree with it, but in the circumstances it was hardly necessary. As I say, it does import into the taxation system something to which I do not think the minister wishes to give general recognition.

Resolution agreed to.

16. That the right of a corporation whose principal business is the production, refining, or marketing of petroleum or petroleum products to deduct 40 per centum of the exploration costs and drilling costs of oil wells which prove to be unproductive be extended to wells spudded in before the thirty-first day of December, 1946.

Mr. McKAY: How is the productivity of wells determined? I have seen accounts of wells that had been capped, and no one knew whether they had been producing oil or not. They were in the exploratory stage at one time and were then capped. Is that a means of getting by the payment of income tax, or is there a method of checking to see whether they are productive?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Would the minister take resolutions 16 to 20 inclusive, which cover the oil well situation, and let us know what differences there are in the present legislation and what is contemplated under this resolution? With respect, Mr. Chairman, I think, if that were done, we would really know what we are talking about, and it would cover the question which the hon. member over here had in his mind.

Mr. ILSLEY: There is no change as far as the oil industry is concerned. I think all these resolutions deal with oil and natural gas; it is just an extension of the present legislation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): We are dealing with resolution 20.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right; it is just an extension of the present legislation for a further period.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): This resolution is of interest to those of us who live in Alberta, and it has prospective interest, I am sure, to my hon. friends from Saskatchewan. I am asking the minister to give further consideration to one aspect of the picture. May I also say that I came down to see him in a private capacity some years ago. By that I mean that I was acting for a number of people and my trip was 100 per cent unsuccessful. I appreciated his position and he explained it to me quite clearly. However, in our business we occasionally get paid whether we succeed or not. I enjoyed the trip to Ottawa because I had lunch with him at his desk. I know he drinks milk at noon. That is all I came to know. The point I am trying to make is this: Lest members in this honourable body think this is a small show —I have not my file with me—I wish to give one figure. Turner Valley is on the decline. That was our oil field. To-day it is producing 800,000 barrels a month, and that is not milk; that is a good deal of oil and it is on the downgrade. They have received some assistance in what are known as deep-test wells

The present programme, which includes that in the province from which my hon. friend comes, is greatly extended and is covering the prairie region. It is true that wells drilled there cost much less than wells drilled in Turner valley where the wells go down to 10,000 and 12,000 feet. If you drill an oil well there for $200,000 or $250,000 you are doing very well. Out on the prairie they can drill them for $30,000. I think that is to a depth of 3,000 feet, and probably that will include some production machinery. In other words, the cost increases as the depth increases. To those deep-test wells the minister has given consideration and I am not asking that it be altered in any way.

We have heard discussions in this house to the effect that coal is a national industry. I am sure that hon. members from Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba consider precious metals a national industry. The point I make is this, that the search for oil is just as much, and in fact more, of a national industry to us than any of those others. Why? With 800,000 barrels a month at the present time we have never produced enough oil in Canada even to supply the Winnipeg market. We have at all times had to import oil to take care of the demand there. The reason is, of course, that the horse-and-buggy days in farming are gone—not gone, but nearly gone, I hope. I am glad the hon. member for Lethbridge is not in his seat at the moment, or he would accuse me again of doing harm to some other western industry. What I have in mind is this: The world operates on oil; there is no doubt about that. I am asking that the minister have some regard to these explorations which are going on, other than deep-test wells, in the prairie areas. Turner valley is in the foothills, the sub-mountainous area, if one might use that expression.

What has happened is this. In western Canada to-day we have a search and an exploration going on which is new in the whole history of this country. Every United States company of any account or size is in there. They have seismograph and geophysical parties there. I am not sure that I know what these words mean; they are big words and I like to use them. They are spending a tremendous amount of money on these parties. The reason they are doing so—and I got this from the president of one of the largest companies whom I saw only a few months ago—is that in the United States they have a ninety per cent exemption of income tax on explorations. Therefore, do not let us think in western Canada that they are attracted out there because they like us, or anything of that kind. They have a wonderful exemption over there.

Let no one think I am making a percentage comparison between Canada and the United States, because so many other elements enter into that calculation. While we have forty per cent exemption here and they have ninety per cent there, the figures do not mean just that. Somebody said that figures never lie, but there is always the converse of that proposition which I am sure it would be unparliamentary to mention. I am not suggesting that this is the comparison, but I am frankly admitting and saying that the tremendous exploration programme we have at the present time comes from that.

I am asking the minister that with respect to this prairie development, which is an entirely different show, we have some write-off. The minister says that there is no change; I am accepting his word for that. Aside from the ordinary drawback of forty per cent and twenty-six and two-thirds per cent and whatever it is on the shallow wells, there is no special exemption for prairie wells as there is for deep-test wells. I merely ask that they be given further consideration, because we cannot get our coal down to the east on account of the freight rate of $8; but we can build pipelines and carry oil. That barrier will never exist between eastern and western Canada if we can develop oil in real quantity. You can build pipelines a lot cheaper than you can build railways, and once you have them built they do not cost as much to operate as railways do. I am merely asking the minister—and I see his most excellent adviser in front of him, who, I think, is Doctor Eaton, who has always been sympathetic to this thing—to have just a bit of regard, a good deal of regard, for that prairie element which permits the newcomer and smaller companies to try hard to get some oil. Remember that oil was never discovered in North America by the big companies. History shows that it was discovered by the little wild-catter, and that is the chap I am thinking of at the present time.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): The big companies buy the small companies once they have discovered oil.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member is quite right. I have had a little experience in that regard. I made $2.50 myself by selling out to the Imperial Oil. They do absorb them, but remember from little things great things have grown. We have two or three companies out there now, the Anglo-Canadian, the Home, and so on, some of them just localized in Alberta, which have really amounted to something.

The hon. gentleman to my left, the hon. member for North York, is sitting here all atremble waiting to talk about mining. We are asking from the minister and those able people who advise him, nothing more than to be put on a level with mining. Down here some years ago—and I was here—exemptions were granted to new enterprises until so many years after they had mills in operation. Their business is the same as ours. If you put a hole in a beer barrel and let the beer run out, it will be all gone. Oil and gold are in exactly the same position; they are not renewable products. It is not like electricity, for instance, which comes from water power, or anything like that. Say I drill a well which costs me $200,000. I strike oil and I take out my $200,000, which I put into another hole. I have not made any money; I am just where I started, except that I have paid income tax on the product of the first well. In other words, my over-all position has not given me a profit.

I do not want the minister to think I am going so far as to suggest that we should be allowed to do that sort of thing indefinitely, because then no one would pay taxes. We would be merely building up reserves. Suddenly we would become a big outfit and perhaps would be rich before you found us out, though I know you are pretty good on a hot scent. My thought is that you might help us in regard to those people who are wildcatting, because it is nothing else in the prairie area. I know you have read in the newspapers that So-and-so has brought in a good well. Probably it kept going for four or five days and then salt water came in. There are so many difficulties and intrusions, with this, that and the other thing happening, that this is an extremely hazardous business. So, to conclude, before you bring down this legislation, would you please give some consideration to the problem we have on the prairies in connection with the oil business?

Mr. McKAY: I think the minister passed over my question rather lightly. I asked whether or not there was any way for the Department of Finance, through its supervisors, to determine the productivity of these wells. I had intended to follow that up; and while the hon. member for Calgary West has ably presented the case for the development of oil, I wish to deal with the matter from another angle. I consider that the search for oil is important because oil is a natural resource and should be developed; and I feel disposed to say that the United States system of a ninety per cent deduction for exploratory costs is the right one.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. McKAY: Do not misunderstand me. On the other hand the Department of Finance could well get that money back by establishing a substantial royalty on the production of the oil that is found. My leading question this evening was, how does the Department of Finance determine whether or not these wells do produce? How do we know that these wells all through western Canada are or are not in production? I have seen a great many wells that have been drilled and capped. No one seems to know whether or not they ever struck oil. No doubt somebody knows, but certainly the general public does not know. Why are these oil companies holding back? It is obvious to me there is a reason. Is it because the deduction allowed is not sufficient? Is it because of the threat of a royalty? There must be some reason. I suggest that we give a cut-back of ninety per cent, let these oil companies go to work and explore, and then put a royalty on the production; and we will get the oil.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The dominion has no royalty; that is a matter for the provinces.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know that I understand the United States system, but I think they simply allow these exploration costs as deductible expense for tax purposes. If they have a ninety per cent excess profits tax and are in that category, then the amount they save in tax is ninety per cent of their exploration expense. It sounds better than it really is, because when taxes come down in the United States, as they will on January 1, 1946—

Mr. JACKMAN: Yes, they are down substantially.

Mr. ILSLEY: They are down substantially, I believe to forty per cent. So that from January 1 they will get a forty per cent advantage instead of a ninety per cent advantage; they will get forty per cent of their exploration expenses off their tax bill instead of ninety per cent, which is the same as our provision under resolution 16.

Mr. McKAY: I did not understand that was considered an excess profits tax. I thought that was a deduction from exploratory cost.

Mr. ILSLEY: It was the exploratory cost. The amount of the exploratory cost was deducted from their profits for tax purposes. If they were paying ninety per cent of those profits in taxes, then they were able to deduct from their tax bill which they paid to the United States government ninety per cent of the exploration expense, but only by reason of the fact that they had a ninety per cent tax. When they have a forty per cent tax that ninety becomes forty.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister continue and tell me how they check on the productivity of these wells?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Perhaps I might ask the minister a question which will help my hon. friend.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall have to come back to that question later.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I say the statement of the minister with respect to taxation in the United States and Canada is entirely accurate. That is why I said that when we spoke of forty per cent and they spoke of ninety per cent, they were not comparable figures. With respect to the other question the hon. gentleman asked, for a long time I have heard exactly what he has been saying, and I am one of those who thought that was the situation. We heard of a big corporation who had gone into a place, drilled their wild-cat wells, made a discovery and then capped it because they did not want the oil to come on the market. Then, having capped their well and said it was a failure, they bought up all the ground around and had an oil field. I heard that story so often I almost believed it, but I made a number of investigations—

Mr. McKAY: You do not believe it now?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): As far as I can find out there is not a word of truth in it anywhere.

Mr. McKAY: Of course I will take your word for it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You need not do that, because the answer is comparatively simple. When you have oil in a country such as ours, where you have a price that is profitable and where you cannot even begin to supply the present market, it is beyond reason that anyone should cap an oil well. I think my hon. friend is more interested in the gas sections, because in Saskatchewan they have not even obtained gas yet, except a little around Unity and a few places like that. Let me put it in this way: they do not supply anyone with it yet, because they have a bottle-neck they have not been able to overcome.

There is no doubt that the ninety per cent figure is quite right. I have gone into this matter with tax experts, some of them with companies right in the city of Calgary; and as far as the ninety per cent is concerned, if you figure what it is taken from and take our forty per cent and twenty per cent we are in a better position than they are. I am sorry to support the government, but that is the simple fact.

Mr. ILSLEY: In regard to the matter of unproductivity or non-productivity, the test is abandonment. The section of the act is section 8 (6), and the unproductive wells, forty per cent of which may be deducted from the tax, are wells which are abandoned within six months after completion of drilling. I do not think there would be any fraudulent advantage there.

[Mr. A. L. Smith.]

An hon. MEMBER: Does the minister suggest that capping a well is abandoning it?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Would the minister answer the question as to whether he would give consideration to this little prairie place of ours? Then, perhaps I might be of some assistance in connection with the abandonment of wells. I do not know what happens in the benighted province of Saskatchewan, where they do not know much about this business, but let me say that in Alberta we have an oil and gas commission, which is a provincial government show. However, the well must produce this log—and for those people who do not know what a log is, I will say it is the history as one goes down to the bottom of the well. It is not the same thing as hangs out from the tail end of a ship. No well can be abandoned without examination by experts who are engineers on that board. Further, no one can drill a well without having put up sufficient money in cash to pay for the abandonment, in the event of the company itself not abandoning the well, or not doing the work of abandonment. That means going out and shutting off the water, and so on. With great respect, let me say that the minister would have no difficulty in finding out whether a well has been properly abandoned, if he will remember that once wells are abandoned they are through, because the pipe is pulled in and there is nothing more except what used to be a hole in the ground.

Mr. ILSLEY: On the question raised by the hon. member for Calgary West with regard to the extension of this very generous tax privilege to companies which drill deep test wells—I mean the extension to a different type of well—I suppose I should not say that I will not give consideration to it. However, representations have been made, and I am somewhat reluctant to extend a privilege of that kind. In effect, the dominion government is paying half the cost of drilling those wells, and if they turn out to be good wells, the company, and not the government, owns them.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): But the dominion government gets the money back, do not worry about that.

Mr. ILSLEY: It can be defended in times when the need for oil is great, but it cannot be defended forever, and I do not know whether an extension of the privilege could be defended at all. The reason for such a distinction between deep-test wells and other wells is, as I understand it, that the risk is very much greater—perhaps I should not say the risk; the expense is very much greater. You have to get an investor to put in a lot more money. Therefore there is some reason for saying, "We want oil. This is going to be a very expensive proposition. You will have to put up half the money—and that money will be a lot. Therefore we will put up the other half." But with a very much less expensive operation I do not think there is the same justification for the dominion government's putting up half the money. That is what it amounts to, stripped of its camouflage—and perhaps I should not use that word; I shall say, stripped of its other aspects.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister has enunciated a principle. A deep-test well is nothing more than a wild-cat. That is what it is. It is an effort to develop a new body of oil. Your first deep-test is going into the producing horizon, and going down to—well, I cannot remember those fancy names, but I believe it is called the Devonian, or something like that.

In other words, the principle is this—and it is a sound one—that the government has been prepared to assist those persons who are trying to develop new areas or new fields, whether they lie side by side or one above the other. That is what the expression "deep-test" means. That being the principle, I am utterly unable to understand the minister's position. Let us say that a deep-test will cost $300,000—and that is not unusual. I know the Imperial Oil company spent over a million dollars in one hole and they got nothing. So that when you get into this business you can very easily get rid of money, almost with the same facility that members of the House of Commons get rid of it when they are spending somebody else's money. The principle is the same.

It seems to me that the contribution should be made on the same basis, the whole purpose being to find new fields. Why make a distinction then, between an expensive process here, and an inexpensive one over there? I ask the minister to give that a little bit of consideration, because, remember, if we get a new oil field, the money the government has exempted from taxation—and you never had it, you know—will be returned to you at least a thousand times; and if they could have counted up farther than that when the Bible was written I would have used that expression, too.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know whether I am expected to reply. I may say that I am not enthusiastic about this legislation—and perhaps I am being too frank. I would be more enthusiastic if it had been more successful. I am willing to admit that private investors have put up a lot of money. I admit, too, that they have lost a lot of money. We, too, have put up and have lost a lot. As the hon. member says, we do not have it; but we certainly would have had it, had it not been for this provision.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You would have killed it, if you had not done that.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, because the taxpayers to whom we gave these tax credits would otherwise have paid us a tax. They were all perfectly good.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Not all of them; most of them would have been broke.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How many wells in which the government undertook to pay half the cost turned out to be successful?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think one has been successful. There have been twelve or fourteen altogether.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Can the minister tell us what it has cost the government?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, I can find that out. I knew it about a month ago.

Mr. COCKERAM: And the total number of feet drilled in those holes?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know that.

Mr. COCKERAM: It would just be a matter of multiplication.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall get that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I could do it now.

Mr. HARKNESS: As the representative of the constituency in which Turner valley is situated, I should like to express the appreciation of the oil men to the minister for extending this fifty per cent drawback in the case of deep-test wells. I know that a considerable number of the companies which have been engaged in drilling operations in the Turner valley are now hoping to undertake exploratory oil operations in the plains area. One of the things which will restrict their operations or in some cases probably prevent them is the fact that they will not get the fifty per cent drawback in regard to wells they may drill in the plains area. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary West, Turner valley has now passed its peak and will be a declining source of oil from now on. As far as oil production in Canada is concerned, it is absolutely essential that new fields be discovered. Therefore the necessity for exploratory work is greater now than it has been in the past. I should merely like to support what the hon. member for Calgary West has said, and I think the government would be making an extraordinarily good investment by extending this concession to wells drilled anywhere, whether they are deep or shallow wells. There is no doubt that if an oil field even approaching Turner valley in importance is discovered, the government will receive back a great deal more than they would have failed to collect because of this concession.

Resolution agreed to.

17. That the right of a corporation, association, syndicate or exploration partnership, formed for the purpose of exploring and drilling for oil, to deduct 26⅔ per centum of exploration and drilling expenses be extended to expenses incurred in 1946.

Resolution agreed to.

18. That the right of a corporation, association, syndicate or exploration partnership, formed for the purpose of exploring and drilling for natural gas, to deduct 30 per centum of exploration and drilling expenses be extended to expenses incurred in 1946.

Mr. SENN: I should like to say a word about the production of natural gas in certain areas of Ontario. It happens that there is a natural gas field in the district from which I come. The production of natural gas is an important industry in that particular part of the province. Natural gas has primarily two uses. First, it is used to heat and light houses and, second, it is used by certain industries where heat is needed or for processing of one kind or another. A great many people have gas stoves and other types of equipment in their homes, and these cannot be converted to the use of any other type of fuel. Millions of dollars have been expended in equipping those homes, and it is essential that these people continue to get natural gas in the days to come. The development of the field and the maintenance of the supply is contingent upon drilling operations. These are shallow wells; they are not like the wells we have been talking about in Turner valley. The people who are interested in the production of gas cannot understand why a forty per cent deduction is made in the case of oil wells and only twenty-five per cent deduction in the case of gas wells. The need for drilling has become greater as time has gone on, but it has actually dropped off to a certain extent. These companies do not want to spend all their revenue in the drilling of wells and they are anxious indeed that some further provision should be made. Why is it not possible at this time to allow a deduction of forty per cent for the drilling of natural gas wells as well as for oil wells? This is a most important industry in the section from which I come. Cities like Hamilton, Brantford, St. Catharines, Welland and so on use gas in large amounts for heating purposes in homes and for processing of different kinds of new material. Why is it not possible at this time to increase the deduction to forty per cent just the same as for oil wells?

[Mr. Harkness.]

Mr. ILSLEY: Because the depletion rate is twenty-five per cent in the case of natural gas; twenty-five per cent of forty is ten, and ten taken from forty leaves thirty. That is probably Greek the way I have stated it, but that is what is done. If the hon. gentleman wants me to do it, I shall get a statement to show just why that is done. It is in the form of a tax credit, but the tax credit is arranged on the basis of the expenditure being a deduction from income for income tax purposes. If you said that the expenditure was deductible from income for income tax and excess profits tax purposes, that would be one way of stating it, but you can state it in another way, in the form of tax credits. These tax credits are worked out in such a way as to be the equivalent of the rule or formula I have just enunciated.

Mr. SENN: I wish the minister would look over the matter once more and see if some adjustment cannot be made.

Mr. ILSLEY: No adjustment should be made because the two classes of company are being treated exactly the same. The expenditure is allowed as a deduction from income for taxation purposes on the assumption that none of the companies is in the excess profits tax class. If you have a company which is subject to the forty per cent corporation tax and you were to allow the expenditures as a deduction from income for income tax and excess profits tax purposes you would get exactly the result that you would get by applying this formula. The reason they vary is that there are varying depletion rates.

Mr. ADAMSON: I should like to revert to resolutions 17 and 19 which are germane to the point I wish to raise. Resolution 17 reads:

That the right of a corporation, association, syndicate or exploration partnership, formed for the purpose of exploring and drilling for oil, to deduct 26⅔ per centum of exploration and drilling expenses be extended to expenses incurred in 1946.

I understand that those provisions will apply to producing oil companies whose main business is the production and marketing of oil. I suggest that the 26⅔ per cent allowed for exploration is an extremely meagre amount to be allowed. I am dealing now with oil and not with mining, about which I hope to speak to-morrow. Not only is it the hope of practically everyone in Canada; it is the hope of the major oil companies that perhaps we may discover an oil field of reasonable magnitude in western Canada. There is some possibility that there will be a Dome found, drilled or discovered. There has been no evidence that there is as yet a major oilfield in Canada. I hate to dash the hopes of this house and this committee, but that is the truth. Several of the major oilfields—Standard, Shell and several others—have been doing a great deal of drilling in the hope that there will be in the anticlinal synclinal formation an oilfield discovery. It is not my particular branch of development, but I happen to know a little about it. I know that as yet nothing has been discovered. There is a small field in the Turner valley, but there has been no real major development, and if there is to be a major development it will take probably hundreds of millions of dollars to develop the field, if there is a field there at all.

An oil well, unlike a mine in some respects, is a yes or no proposition. If you drill a deep well through the Devonian formation and through the palaezoic limestone series it will probably cost half a million to a million dollars. You have to dig it deep, and your casing alone and the steel for it will be a major item. Once you get into the oil-bearing strata you may hit brine or you may hit nothing at all, and then the whole thing is a complete and total loss. I suggest that to limit the deduction for expenses to 26⅔ per cent for this type of exploration is a scandalously low percentage for a production company. If we are going to develop an oilfield, which we may develop, and it is one of the things which we need the most, one of the things in which our Canadian economy is the weakest, it cannot be developed when a deduction of only 26⅔ per cent is allowed of the expenditure of drilling the wells irrespective of whether or not they are spudded in. It is a niggardly concession on the part of the government.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member has said that it was scandalously meagre, niggardly, and so on, when we are permitting a write-off of 26⅔ per cent from capital expenditures against profits. Can he make a capital investment and write off that much out of his profits?

Mr. ADAMSON: I suggest that the minister look at the United States law, where 100 per cent is allowed for exploration purposes.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, where there is a 100 per cent tax. They are allowed that as a deduction from their profits for tax purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON: I realize the difference between ours and the United States system, but I think we should allow every dollar that is expended for exploration purposes irrespective of the percentage that it may be of profits or anything else, in the hope that some day we may discover an oilfield of major proportions in Canada, of sufficient proportions to compare with either the Oklahoma or the Texas field. But unless we are prepared to allow every dollar spent in drilling as a deduction from taxation we are not going to encourage the development of the oil industry in Canada. I suggest to the Minister of Finance in all seriousness that its development is going to take a lot more money than is perhaps in the minds of many of us at the present time. It is not a cheap thing to do. It takes millions of dollars to bring in an oilfield. One well does not make an oilfield, any more than one swallow makes a summer. Unless we are prepared to spend and to encourage people to spend major sums of money we are not going to develop; we are not even going to find out whether we have a major oil Dome which some of the oil companies think we have in western Canada. I suggest that we let this resolution stand, Mr. Chairman, until to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN: Resolution 17 was carried some time ago, and the hon. member for York West was referring to resolution 17 by unanimous consent.

Mr. SENN: I should like to know what the minister has to say about natural gas.

Mr. ADAMSON: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that resolutions 17, 18 and 19 stand.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN: The record shows that resolution 17 is carried, but I take it that the committee is agreeable to its being reconsidered.

Mr. ILSLEY: Just for the sake of the record, Mr. Chairman, let us agree that resolution 17 may be discussed on resolution 19, or something like that. That carries the same percentage.

The CHAIRMAN: Then resolution 17 may be discussed on resolution 19, and resolution 18 is not carried.

Resolutions 18 and 19 stand.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Second report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.— Mr. Breithaupt.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE AT FORD MOTOR PLANT, WINDSOR

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in announcing on November 27 that a new formula had been agreed upon which I hoped would have the effect of settling the strike of the employees of the Ford Motor Company at Windsor I refrained from giving the details. I now wish to place on the record copy of the letter which was addressed to both parties and signed jointly by Hon. Charles Daley, Minister of Labour for Ontario, and myself.

The letter read as follows:

Ottawa, November 27, 1945

Mr. D. B. Greig,
Treasurer,
The Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited,
Windsor, Ontario.

Mr. George Burt,
Regional Director, U.A.W-C.I.O,
Windsor, Ontario.

Gentlemen:

The strike of employees at the Windsor plants of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, has reached a stage where the welfare of a large number of citizens is in danger and all reconversion plans are being seriously retarded. The strike is now going into its seventy-sixth day and many and earnest attempts have been made to bring about a settlement.

The company has agreed to arbitration of all issues in dispute and we are aware that the arbitration principle is not repugnant to the union.

After very careful and exhaustive investigation we have concluded that the strike can be disposed of by the dominion government appointing an umpire and an arbitrator and through the compliance by the parties of the terms stated herein.

We call upon both parties in the interest of the many Canadian citizens concerned to settle this strike by putting this plan into effect at once.

The Minister of Labour shall appoint an "umpire of labour relations", to whom shall be referred by either of the parties, during the period pending the execution of a collective bargaining agreement, any alleged breach of the conditions of this plan or any injustice alleged by an employee with respect to conditions of his employment and the decision of such "umpire" shall be final and binding upon both parties.

[The Chairman.]

2. The Minister of Labour shall appoint an "arbitrator" from among the judges of the supreme court of Canada to whom may be referred by the parties any points remaining in dispute between them following a period of collective bargaining negotiations (not to exceed ten days or such longer period as the parties may mutually agree to) concerning a new collective agreement, and his decision upon the points in dispute with respect thereto and with respect to the wording in any particular of the agreement to be negotiated shall be final and binding save that all matters over which the regional war labour board for Ontario or the national war labour board has jurisdiction shall not be decided by said "arbitrator".

3. The company shall reopen its plants and recall the employees back to work as rapidly as practicable and without discrimination and in accordance with seniority principles. The union shall declare the strike at an end.

4. Upon compliance with this direction, collective bargaining is to be resumed forthwith, and such points, if any, upon which the parties cannot agree shall be referred to the "arbitrator" to be dealt with as indicated herein. In order to expedite negotiations and in order that the arbitrator may be familiar with the details of the matters at issue between the parties, he shall be present at collective bargaining meetings.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) Humphrey Mitchell,
Minister of Labour,
Dominion Government.

(Sgd.) Charles Daley,
Minister of Labour,
Ontario Government.

I was informed by the Ford Motor Company yesterday that the executive of that company found the proposals acceptable. The letter I received, dated November 28 and signed by Mr. D. B. Greig, treasurer of the Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited, reads as follows:

Windsor, November 28, 1945.

The Honourable Humphrey Mitchell,
Minister of Labour, Dominion Government,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Minister:

This letter will acknowledge receipt of the communication dated the 27th instant issued jointly by the Honourable Charles Daley, Minister of Labour, Ontario government, and yourself.

The company is prepared to carry out its part of the plan outlined in the abovementioned communication.

Yours very truly,

Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited,
(Sgd.) D. B. Greig,
Treasurer.

I have no official word from the union in respect to the meeting of the workers held yesterday, nor have I any details other than those I am sure hon. members of the house have noted in the newspapers this morning.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN VANCOUVER—SHORTAGE OF SKILLED MEN IN INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. C. I. MERRITT (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour, of which I have given notice. In view of the Department of Labour statement of November 24 showing the 8,000 excess of job seekers over jobs in Vancouver to be partly due to lack of skilled key men in certain industries, will the minister state in particular, (a) what steps his department is taking to overcome the shortage of skilled men in these industries, and (b) give a general statement on the mounting unemployment situation in Vancouver and the means available to him alone or in conjunction with his colleagues whereby the situation can be eased?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is out of order. His question should be brief and to the point. In asking a question an hon. member is not supposed to give information to the house. He is asking for information from the minister.

Mr. MERRITT: On a point of order, I have asked my question, of which I have given the minister notice. Certainly this is an urgent matter, and he should give an answer to it.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I did not receive notice of the question until late this morning. I take the responsbility for it; I did not get to my office in the parliament buildings until eleven o'clock. If my hon. friend wishes, I could answer it verbally, but I think a question of that nature might better be put on the order paper. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is the position I must take.

Mr. MERRITT: Will the minister take this as a notice of question, and answer it tomorrow?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

SS. "QUEEN ELIZABETH"

STATEMENT AS TO FUTURE DOCKINGS

On the order for motions:

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): Yesterday when I was unavoidably absent the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) asked if I would make a statement about the report that the Queen Elizabeth would no longer call at Halifax but would call at New York instead, and I am very glad to do so now.

This question first arose about three weeks ago, when the quartermaster general informed me he had been advised that the captain of the Queen Elizabeth was in doubt as to whether he would be prepared to bring the ship to Halifax during the winter months. She is an exceptional type of ship because of her great size, and apparently he feared that in a southeasterly gale, which I understand is rare in Halifax, there might be some danger if she were moored alongside the only pier available. I asked him to take up the matter with the captain and with the British shipping authorities, to endeavour to see if that view could not be changed. He did so. Further discussions have been had with the British ministry of war transport, but unfortunately the captain and the owners of the ship adhere to the view that they would not be willing to bring the Queen Elizabeth into Halifax during the winter months, for the reasons I have mentioned.

I may say that the opinions of our own officials of the ministry of transport do not entirely coincide with the views of the captain and owners of the ship; but, as the house knows, in matters of this kind the captain is master of the ship and is responsible for her safety, and in case of difference of opinion his view must prevail. So the Canadian government has not been able to do otherwise than accept that decision, and for the winter months the ship will call at New York and not at Halifax.

Mr. ISNOR: Then will the minister consider bringing Canadian troops home in ships other than the Queen Elizabeth?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The statement made by the minister is not debatable. If the hon. member wishes to ask a further question he should place it upon the order paper.

Mr. BROOKS: Is it not a fact that the port of Halifax has been used by the Queen Elizabeth all during the war years without any complaint?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, it has been used, but I believe not in winter time. The captain takes the view that a certain type of gale, a southeasterly gale, would involve some risk to his ship if it were moored alongside the only pier available for her. The officials of the Department of Transport do not agree with that view, but, as I said a moment ago, this is a British ship, the captain is a British captain, and she is chartered to the British ministry of war transport. Therefore in the final analysis their decision must govern.

Mr. LOCKHART: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have refused the hon. member for Halifax permission to ask a question because the statement made by the minister is not debatable. It is the privilege of the hon. member to ask a question on the orders of the day or to place his question on the order paper.

Mr. LOCKHART: I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence a question arising out of his statement in connection with the troopship Queen Elizabeth. A rumour has reached me this morning that this change would affect the transportation of Canadian troops. I could not believe that that would be so, and I would ask the minister to assure the house that the same proportions of Canadian troops will continue to come home.

Mr. ABBOTT: There will be no change whatsoever in that regard. We shall have to handle them out of New York instead of Halifax, but they will be handled by Canadian personnel and on Canadian rolling stock. There will be no change in the number of troops brought back.

Mr. ISNOR: I wish to ask the Minister of National Defence whether there has been a change of master of the Queen Elizabeth during the past month.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid I do not know.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

STATEMENT OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE AT CONCLUSION OF MEETINGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, the coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference began a series of meetings on Monday morning of this week, and concluded the series last evening. The coordinating committee is composed of the premiers of the several provinces and the Prime Minister of the dominion. At the meetings, the premiers of the several provinces were accompanied by one or more of their ministers or advisers, while the dominion government was also represented by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Minister of Justice, and at certain of the meetings by other members of the government.

At these several meetings questions related to the dominion proposals and proposals that have been submitted by some of the provinces were very fully discussed, together with questions arising out of those proposals as well as questions quite apart from anything specifically set forth in the proposals but dealing with matters relating to other aspects of dominion-provincial relations. The conference proceedings throughout, may I say, were characterized by the utmost harmony. As I said to the press at the end of the first meeting, the meeting itself was interesting and profitable. As the proceedings continued from day to day, I think I added the word "most" before the words "interesting" and "profitable." I would say I could not imagine a better series of meetings than those of the coordinating committee.

At the conclusion of the meeting a statement which was agreed to by all present was approved by the committee. It would, I think, be advisable to have this statement placed on Hansard as part of the records of parliament. The statement is as follows:

The coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference (1945) has completed a four day session in which there was a detailed and frank exchange of the views of all participating governments. While a number of issues were raised, the discussions were cooperative and constructive. It has been decided to establish immediately a dominion-provincial economic committee, the members of which will examine and report to their respective governments upon the economic factors affecting dominion and provincial proposals and relations. The economic committee will proceed forthwith and will hold its first formal meeting on Tuesday, December 4. The dominion and each of the provincial governments will have three members. The chairman of the economic committee will be the senior dominion member. The secretary of the coordinating committee, Mr. Alex Skelton, will also be secretary of the economic committee. The coordinating committee will meet again on January 28 to continue its deliberations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

VACANCIES ON COMMISSION—EMPLOYEES' REPRESENTATIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question which the acting leader of the house promised to bring to the attention of certain members of the treasury board who are also members of the ministry. Has he done that?

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): I believe I have the answer the hon. member wishes. The minister, who has been detained on account of urgent government business, handed me this answer before I came to the house.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked yesterday morning whether treasury board has at any time refused to pay the salary of Mr. R. J. Tallon, the employees' representative on the unemployment insurance commission. Mr. Tallon was appointed by the governor in council for a term of five years. This term of office expired on September 25, 1945. This matter is now under consideration.

Mr. MacINNIS: In view of the answer given by the parliamentary assistant, and the answer given yesterday to my question by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell), it is apparent that there is no unemployment insurance commission now, according to the act. How is the act administered?

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the answer?

Mr. MITCHELL: I have nothing to add to what I said very clearly yesterday.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

349. Departmental administration, $434,101.

Mr. DECHENE: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the privilege of the floor for a short time in order to bring to the attention of this committee of the House of Commons a matter which is of great importance to a large number of people in the northern part of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. This, may I assure the committee, is not simply a matter of local interest, nor has it anything to do with any political party or political agitation. In order to bring out this matter in detail I shall have to speak longer than I should have liked to at this stage, but I hope that hon. members will bear in mind the fact that during this session I have been very sparing with their time and have at no time delayed the proceedings of the house. This is not a new matter, and it does not constitute a new programme. In order that I may be strictly in order I would instruct the Clerk to withdraw from the order paper resolution No. 8 standing in my name.

At times during the last few years I have placed the details of this programme on the record. During the years of prosperity in western Canada, the period from 1926 to 1929, plans were entered into by the two large railroad companies whereby transportation facilities would be provided for the northern parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan and eventually into British Columbia. This would have provided another outlet to the western ocean. In order to save time I shall not go into the full details of these undertakings, nor shall I recite all the possibilities of the country to be served and the advisability of the Canadian National and the government, working in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific, putting through this undertaking. I know that in the past, hon. members have heard reference made to railway lines in western Canada which parallel one another. Reference has been made to railway construction which involved the expenditure of public money but which has not proved to be a paying proposition for the taxpayers of this country. The lines I am going to speak about would not parallel any other lines. They would serve one of the finest and most productive sections of this country, as well as other large areas of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Because of the undertakings that were entered into at that time, not hundreds but thousands of new settlers poured into the northern parts of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. They went in there because they believed that contracts had been entered into for the construction of the lines mentioned in the resolution I placed on the order paper and to which I have already referred. If at this late stage in the session I seem to be delaying the proceedings at all, let me repeat that I do so because I realize that it is my duty toward these people as well as to Canada as a whole. This programme would help to increase the production and the prosperity of that great country. Besides farming, lumbering, fishing and mining, there are many other possibilities of development which would be brought about by the provision of transportation to the far north.

One of these lines would extend from Prince Albert to the north country to join at Lac La Biche with the North Alberta railway running to Fort McMurray. This line would run through the treasure-trove of our north country. It would join farther west at a point on the Slave river, or perhaps north of Slave lake—I do not know just where—with the other branches of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific into the Peace River country.

In 1927 and 1928 and 1929 an important part of this programme was started. I am sorry if I have to burden hon. members by mentioning places which may seem strange and foreign to them. However, I assure them that this is not a local matter; it is something that is of vast importance to thousands of people and to hundreds of square miles of country. At a point named Ashmont the line coming in from Edmonton branches off in a north easterly direction. The construction of this line to the St. Paul district, where I live, would carry it down to what is known as the Cold lake country. It could then continue through Saskatchewan and down to St. Walburg.

An agreement was made at that time between the two railway companies—I know this is history—that the C.P.R. would construct a line from Prince Albert to and through Meadow Lake down to a point south of the Beaver river on the Canadian National, and then from that point on to Beaver Crossing they would have running rights over the Canadian National for a distance of fifty-five miles. Then both railways were to build north of the Beaver river in a northerly direction through the country I have just mentioned to the Lac La Biche region, Athabaska and the Peace River district.

I am sorry the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) has just left the chamber. Yesterday, and many times previously, I have heard him plead for more public works in order to provide employment. He has suggested a programme of public works in order to carry us through the period of transition when our factories are transferring from war work to peace time activities. If he is afraid of unemployment I can show him a spectacle which I believe will prevent him from ever again referring to a matter of this kind in the future. I would direct his attention to the record of the party to which he belongs from 1930 to 1935.

[Mr. Dechene.]

Except on rare occasions, and more recently only by way of banter, I have never advanced partisan points of view in this house. I am getting too old for that kind of thing. The needs of our country and the needs of our young people are too great and too important. These things are too great for us to meddle with them or to lose time in discussing partisan matters. A contract had been given for the construction of this line. I should like the Minister of Transport to pay close attention to what I am saying. As I say, this line was to go from Edmonton to my part of the country, Bonnyville and district of St. Walburg in Saskatchewan, and then down through North Battleford and then into Saskatoon. But the work was abandoned. I can tell hon. members that no greater tragedy ever occurred. My hon. friend (Mr. Diefenbaker) sometimes becomes very eloquent when he speaks in this house. I do not blame him for trying to show up the failures of this government. However, from 1930 to 1935 I happened to be a member of the legislature of Alberta. I represented the part of the country which was to be served by that railroad. The Beaver river is not a large stream, but it extends a long way. It is the first river north of Edmonton and Prince Albert and takes its source south of Lac La Biche, which forms part of the northern watershed rather than the Atlantic watershed. The waters of the Beaver river flow into Hudson bay. The construction of a trestle bridge over the Beaver river beyond Bonnyville was started over fourteen years ago, and it was the finest piece of work I have ever seen. The engineer in charge told me that this was only the second time that this method of trestle building had been tried in Canada, and it was used because it gave a stronger, more efficient trestle. It was a very fine piece of work and cost a lot of money. Three cement piers were constructed over the water to enable the trestle to cross the river. A bridge across the river at that point would have saved the farmers a long journey around, as much as fifty or sixty miles, in marketing their produce. All that remained to be done to complete the bridge in 1932 was the construction of a relatively short span of steel, but under the regime of the Conservative government this work was actually stopped. The trestle stands there to-day, unused, useless, extending out thousands of feet, still holding out a hand of despair as tragic as the hon. member for Lake Centre holds out to this house when he talks of the failings of this government. The farmers of that north country have to travel all the way around the hills on the north side and then across on the other side to market their produce. It is a lamentable situation, an example of the sort of thing that we shall never see again in this country, all caused through a lack of understanding of the needs of the people. I will say something that might sound a little mean. Let us hope that it was the last act of the last Tory government that we shall ever see in this country.

So the trestle stands there to-day uncompleted. Not only was the work stopped at a time when thousands of men were idle and living in despair, walking the streets and lanes and highways and by-ways of western Canada as elsewhere in this country, but the contractor was paid some thousands of dollars to withdraw from the contract he had signed with the Canadian National Railways. The Canadian National Railways or the government of this country actually paid him to cancel the contract and stop the work. To-day you have this situation in the ridings of my hon. friends, from The Battlefords and North Battleford. Some fifty or sixty miles of first-class graded roadbed, built at a cost of from $13,000 to $15,000 a mile, have absolutely gone to ruin. Some of it is used by the local farmers as roadways; other parts have been washed right out. A large sum of money has been lost, and the settlers in that country are hauling their produce from fifty to sixty miles to market. This is one of the works that we are asking the Canadian National Railways to resume at the earliest possible moment.

I have seen with my own eyes the settlers who are now in that country drive in there from the so-called dust bowl in southern Saskatchewan, some of which unfortunately we have also in Alberta. They left that dust bowl, not because they did not have the courage to stick it out, but because nature went back on them. Year after year they saw the drought ruining their farms and blowing them into dust. After watching that ruin go on year after year they finally had to leave that drought area in which they had settled, abandon the farms they had developed and the homes they had built, and drive hundreds of miles to more suitable land elsewhere. I can yet see the wagons of those settlers, the old broken-down rigs, containing a few household effects, travelling along mile after mile up to that north country where land was still available—not the best, some of it, it is true, but where at least it rained once in a while. As this is probably the last time that I shall have the opportunity to address the house during the present session I should like to mention how the women struck me as they travelled with their men to their new homes in the north. The man of the family looked broken-hearted. He had seen his life work ruined through no fault of his own, but because the sun of southern Saskatchewan insisted on shining the year round. But the woman still sat straight in the old wagon drawn by horses so lean and weak that it could travel only a few miles a day. The woman had the vision before her of a new home in northern Saskatchewan or northern Alberta and was ready to start all over again. It is up to us to see that they are given that chance after making such a tremendous sacrifice. They had a hard time. Don't I know it! They have opened up that bush country only with the greatest of difficulty, and now they are producing surprising crops, but still have to haul their produce a long distance.

The other day when the hon. member for Cariboo, speaking in the debate on the address, asked for a western outlet for the people of that country, I had a good mind to stand up and say that his programme, which was quite just, formed a part of our own. The construction of this work in the northern parts of the western provinces from Prince Albert in the province of Saskatchewan to the Cold Lake region in the province of Alberta, and in the area north of the Beaver river to Lac La Biche, would provide a new great artery of transportation in the western provinces. It is in one of the most productive areas in western Canada, where, entirely apart from agriculture, every possible resource is available. It would guarantee a western outlet and be of much assistance in developing this great new country of which I have so often spoken.

When I was a member of the legislature of Alberta in 1932 we saw with the greatest of alarm that the federal government of that day and the Canadian National Railways had lost their vision of the past and had decided not to help in curing unemployment but rather to make it worse by stopping all public works. Accordingly I moved, seconded by Mr. Falconer, the following resolution:

> That this assembly regrets the decision of the dominion government not to proceed with the construction of the extension of the Bonnyville-St. Walburg and the Heinsburg-Frenchmen's Butte gaps of the Canadian National Railway lines from Edmonton to St. Walburg and Edmonton to Turtleford
> That under existing conditions the farmers of all that great district north and east of Edmonton have no direct access to eastern markets and are compelled to pay a back-haul on all the products shipped out and on merchandise imported into that district;
> That a large number of settlers induced to settle in the districts to be served by the proposed lines will find themselves in a precarious position, and a large percentage of them, in need of relief;

That we respectfully urge the dominion government to reconsider the matter and to proceed with the construction of the said lines during the coming season.

The journals go on:

The motion being proposed, Mr. Speaker declared the motion carried unanimously.

But, Mr. Chairman, nothing was done. In 1935, when it was evident that the worst of the depression was over and that it was time this country woke up to the fact that we were not done in this young country, I again moved a resolution in the Alberta legislature along the same lines, which will be found at page 137 of the journals of the assembly of 1935. It was the same motion except that I recited this, referring to the motion of 1932:

Whereas the dominion government and the Canadian National Railways did not deem it expedient to accede to the wishes of this assembly and nothing whatsoever was done to relieve the situation,
And whereas the situation complained of in the year 1932 has since been greatly aggravated by the large influx of settlers in the territory tributary to the proposed railway extensions—

I recite that to show that we have been active all along; we have not desisted from these requests. Also let me point out that there was no politics in this, no difference between Liberal, Conservative, C.C.F. or Social Credit; it was a question of railway communication in that great country to the northeast of Edmonton and the northwest of Prince Albert. I repeat, to drive it home, that there are immense possibilities in that area. No railway executive can tell us that this will not be a paying line. I happen to know. When I went to the committee in Edmonton, to the house, and later to the C.N.R., with petitions for the construction of that line, we produced figures which showed that the portion of the road from Edmonton northerly to Bonnyville, coming down on the Beaver river and through the town of St. Paul to Heinsburg, contained some of the best paying branch lines on the C.N.R. In 1944 Alberta led the whole dominion, even the province of Ontario, in the production of bacon hogs for export, and our district stood second in the whole province of Alberta.

I shall only briefly refer to the other part of this programme. I know that this is one of the most difficult of the proposed enterprises, but I cannot help feeling that the Canadian National Railway will repair the errors of the past by constructing a line from St. Walburg into Cold Lake, and, with the Canadian Pacific Railway, will carry on the great programme for the opening up of a part of the western provinces where there is rain, where there are immense fisheries, where there is timber, an area which is at the head of the great waters of the north on a direct connecting link with the vast hinterland of the northwest territories clean up to Great Bear lake and Aklavik. As to this other one, I am told by some people—whether or not they are well informed—that it is not reported upon favourably by the engineers of the Canadian National Railways. I refer to the gap between that place in Alberta called Heinsburg and Frenchman's Butte, in Saskatchewan. There again, in 1931, or 1932, with the kind of government and the sort of policy which obtained in those days, this whole thing was stopped. The surveys were all made, but they would not push through the necessary thirty-nine miles, which was all that was needed.

I want to remind hon. members that there is not one straight railway line in the western provinces north of the Saskatchewan river between Manitoba and the eastern market and the province of Alberta and the western market. If you look at the map you will see half a dozen lines stretching out from Edmonton, like the legs of a spider, in every direction. If you want to visit Athabaska and campaign there you have to go 150 miles away and back to Edmonton, then 100 miles out and back to Edmonton, then 150 miles out and back to Edmonton, then 150 miles in another direction and back to Edmonton. There is no connecting link, there is no through line in one of the finest productive countries in western Canada. If we were asking for a branch line to serve the people along this forty miles of gap I might hesitate, because I would be told that there is not sufficient production in that particular area to warrant an expenditure of roughly $1,800,000. But that is not the situation. Surely the directorate and the engineers of the railway know that our farmers, right from the end of that line to twenty miles from Edmonton, are handicapped every day in the year on every hog shipped, every beef exported, every bushel of grain they carry out; that they are paying tribute to someone for the back haul from Winnipeg to Edmonton and 200 miles into that country, where thirty-nine or forty miles of construction would greatly reduce costs, and the local production together with passenger traffic would take care of the additional expenditure. I wish the minister to take note of this; there is not a word of criticism in it. I am the voice, as I know other hon. members are whose ridings have been served by these lines will be the voice, of their people, in asking for something reasonable and fair, and saying that construction should never have been stopped, no matter what conditions obtained in this country in 1931 and 1932.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Did it go on after 1935?

Mr. DECHENE: My hon. friend has spoken to us for seventeen hours, I think, during this session. I have sat here patiently listening to him viewing with alarm, shaking his finger in apprehension, and causing me sometimes to shift uneasily in my place because of the descriptions he gave of the terrible things this government was doing. They were hiding behind orders in council, there were government employees sneaking around the back yards, and so on. I have not said anything. I took it all in. Sometimes I felt pretty badly and there were many things I could have asked him. But I held myself down. I hope he will do the same thing. I am not asking too much, am I?

After this little interlude I will resume what I was saying. For some months we have been asking for a better service on that line from Edmonton into our country, and we have got it now. Of course we knew of the shortage of materials and men; and when the war was over, a few weeks ago the Canadian National Railways—I will pay them this compliment—took note of the situation, and now we have a daily service on this line, both to the town of St. Paul and to Bonnyville, where I live. But in the meantime truck transportation was resumed in that country. I say this to the minister and to the Canadian National railways; if you do not build this thirty-nine or forty miles of gap the Canadian National is going to lose from 50 to 60 per cent of all the business in that country as soon as a first-class highway is built between Frenchman's Butte and St. Paul. The trucks are willing and ready to operate in there. When I pressed some two years ago for a better service on the twenty-five mile line beyond Bonnyville to that monument to Tory efficiency on the Beaver river, an official told me, "No traffic originates in that country." They had one train a week, and he told me the number of passengers and the amount of freight which was carried by that single train. But as farmers know, when your hogs are ready for market they have to go to the market; you cannot wait a week, or you will lose possibly one or two grades, or two or three dollars a head; you have got to market them at once. Therefore the farmers cattle and grain are moving by truck down to railhead at Bonnyville. I said, "If you did not operate the line at all you would get no traffic, would you?" He said, "No, of course not." I venture to say that if that railway were built at a cost of $1,800,000 which is the last estimate I saw some years ago—it may cost a little more now—it would prove to be a paying proposition from the day it was finished. because the through traffic would increase by leaps and bounds.

Right now, Mr. Chairman, I am told that some farmers near the town of St. Paul at times have to take their hogs across the Saskatchewan river and go twenty miles away or so in order to market on the C.P.R. line south of the river, and that costs them an additional amount of money. We are losing business because of that little gap. and we should construct a line to bridge it. I apologize to the members of the committee for holding up the business. I know that we are anxious to come to the end of the session and to attend to our own business, those who still have some. But this is important. I hold in my hand petitions signed by hundreds and possibly thousands of people all over that country. I am sure that the minister has received those as well, as have the members for The Battlefords and North Battleford. These people are all seeking for consideration toward closing the two gaps. I now leave the matter with the committee.

May I make one more remark. I had hoped to have time to speak of the necessity of railway development in order to ensure the development of the great far north. When you travel from St. Walburg and get to the vicinity of Cold lake you are only about sixty miles away from the Precambrian shield. There is a large lake north of Cold lake called the Primrose, which produces a lot of fish. Then there are lakes called the Buffalo lakes, which are just a few miles beyond. The waters of those lakes flow into Hudson bay. Precambrian belt comes right down to within a hundred miles of my own town, and from beyond there to the boundary of the Yukon there exists wealth in such proportions that if we could and would develop it as quickly as possible, and if we used the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific jointly owned railway to McMurray to interest them in the development of the tar sands, if we could use the courage and initiative of our young men coming back from the battlefields, men who have shown tremendous courage and initiative, to tackle that north country, many of our difficulties would be over. Do not worry about them; they are willing to go there. It is another challenge, another battle for them to win. It is the battle of peace, the battle of advancement.

I have been greatly interested in listening to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) speak about that north country. I remember one time when I was a boy, over forty years ago, going down the Athabaska river. When we came back we did not come in a plane as the hon. gentleman does; we had to pull our boat up and down the river with and against the current. Therefore I know that country. As a young man in western Canada I was convinced of its possibilities.

We have our young airmen who fearlessly ascended into the sky against the enemy. They and the men of our navy and army are coming back by the hundreds from the battle of Europe and the battle of every other continent. They are waiting to go up there. Let us have courage, then; let us build this means of communication and give them a chance. Because if we do so—this may look like a foolish statement, but it is not—we shall find that there is enough wealth dormant in that country at the backdoor of Edmonton to which the riding of Athabaska is the gateway, mineral and every other conceivable resource, to enable the Minister of Finance to close his books ten years from now and cease worrying about where we are to get the money.

Mr. HANSELL: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if I may. The point of order concerns the entire house and I was going to raise it before the hon. member for Athabaska began his speech. I did not do so because I wanted him to go ahead with his speech. I congratulate him upon it. It has been forceful and virile. When he started he asked for permission to withdraw a motion that was already on the order paper in his name. I have no objection to the withdrawal of it, but I believe that has been done on three occasions. Standing order 53 reads:

A member who has made a motion may withdraw the same by leave of the house, such leave being granted without any negative voice.

Then paragraph 2 of citation 454 reads:

A resolution having been moved is in possession of the house, and it is for the house to decide whether it will permit the whole or any part of it to be withdrawn.

Mr. LALONDE: The house decided that it would be withdrawn.

Mr. HANSELL: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: When was the resolution moved?

Mr. LALONDE: The Speaker read it.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

[Mr. Dechene.]

Mr. HANSELL: I have no objection to the withdrawal of the motion, and I have not objected; but the house was not asked to decide on the two previous occasions, and this is the third time.

Mr. LALONDE: On a point of order—

Mr. JOHNSTON: The hon. member for Macleod is speaking to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no point of order on a point of order.

Mr. HANSELL: I am not through with my point of order. What I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, is that if the hon. member desires his motion to be withdrawn, unanimous consent be given. That is all I ask. I think that is only right, because when a motion appears on the order paper it is my motion as well as everybody else's.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I thank the hon. member for Macleod for bringing this matter to the attention of the committee. I should, however, point out that the resolution has not been moved, and neither the house nor the committee is seized of it. The paragraph in citation 454 which the hon. member for Macleod read is as follows:

A resolution having been moved is in possession of the house—

This resolution has not been moved; therefore it is not in possession of the house and the hon. member can withdraw it at any time without the consent of the house.

Mr. BOUCHER: I do not wish to delay the committee unduly, but I think that we as members of the committee owe it to the personnel and employees of our various railway systems to express our appreciation of the diligent and patriotic services they have given our country, the commonwealth and the particular cause we have fought for in the past five years. The transportation and railway systems of Canada were really the nerve centre of our war effort in the transporting of men and materials from place to place. If we reflect we shall realize that we have passed through a very critical period without any serious labour disturbances among our railway employees, without any difficulty having arisen in our country in regard to our railway systems beyond those which war may have brought about. The railway employees have worked under difficult conditions and have given excellent transportation service with inferior rolling stock and impaired or deteriorating roadbeds. They have undertaken their task under our policy of stabilized wage control, and they have done a noble deed for our country.

I believe the hon. member for Lanark will join with me in saying that in his county, as well as in mine, we have a great number of railway employees, to whom we all personally owe a very great debt of appreciation and thanks. I believe that under the estimates of the transport department it is only proper that as a member of this house I should go on record as expressing our appreciation for the good work they have done.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister not make a statement?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will make statements as we go along.

Mr. CAMPBELL: First I wish to commend the hon. member for Athabaska for the eloquent plea he made in behalf of the people of his part of the country, and I wish to support him in that plea. I do not think anyone in this house fully realizes the hardships people undergo when they have to haul their products long distances to town. I left the city of Montreal when I was fourteen or fifteen years old and for the first year I was sixty-five miles from a town, so I realize the difficulties and hardships people have to endure in hauling goods such long distances. I think the railways have a duty to perform. A few days ago I heard someone on this side of the house say that what we were afraid of in future was that the Canadian National would have huge deficits as it had in the past. I should like to say something about one reason for those deficits. I have seen trainload after trainload of grain, actual wealth produced on the prairies, going east; and I have seen those same trains coming back empty. That is not a good condition, when we have loaded trains going one way and empty trains going the other way. We want two-way traffic. In order to have it we must see that we produce wealth in this country, and then we will not need to worry about our railways having deficits.

Here we have an instance, as the hon. member for Athabaska says, of a railway built from both ends and then a gap left of thirty-eight miles. It seems to me when a railway begins a project like that, the railway should be compelled to close the gap. It is the duty of a railway to complete any project it starts. In that same district there is another situation I should like to mention, and this applies pretty well all through the west. The Canadian National built its main line, and then this government or its predecessors allowed the Canadian Pacific to come in and run branch lines all through, taking away the traffic the Canadian National should have. That is something for which previous governments must answer.

I had intended to speak at some length on the completion of this gap, but the hon. member for Athabaska has dealt with the situation so well that I need not take very much time. I want to say, however, that these people feel they have been discriminated against. They believe they have a right to have that railway completed. If they had good roads up there it would not be so bad, but they do not have good roads. They cannot do much of this long-distance hauling by truck, and therefore they are in desperate need of this railway line. The hon. member for Athabaska stated that if this gap was not completed, highways would have to be built so that trucks could carry the freight. But I do not think that should be necessary. That road should be completed during the coming summer. It is only a matter of thirty-eight miles, so it will not cost a great deal of money. The cost of a battleship or two, as someone said a few days ago, would not make very much difference one way or the other, but these people feel they have been discriminated against and that now the war is over the government should get busy and see that this gap is completed.

Mr. FAIR: I want to endorse the impassioned plea made by the hon. member for Athabaska, and to assure him and the committee that he need not apologize for taking time to present his case. The language he has used in describing the hardships of these people in the north country is not new to me, because for the greater part of the time I have been in the west, more than thirty years, I also had to do without the services of a railway, and I do not think he has put the case nearly as strongly as it deserves to be put. If the few words I am about to say will strengthen the plea he has made, I do not think there is any need for me to apologize for taking up the time of the committee for a few minutes. It is only in the interests of Canada and of the Canadian National that the project mentioned by the hon. member should be completed in the very near future. It is the desire of the government to create jobs, and this is a good way in which jobs can be created, while at the same time it will be in the interests of the Canadian people as a whole.

Perhaps at the same time I should put in a word for the completion of another line, the Unwin-westerly line, which just prior to the depression was completed by the Canadian Pacific as far as my shipping point, and there it remains to-day. As in the case of the lines going from Edmonton in different directions, when the traffic comes to Paradise Valley it has to go back again and start afresh at Lloydminster. I should like to see that company extend its line from Paradise Valley also.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The question which has been raised by the last three hon. members is very broad, in that it has to do with the relocation or the construction of lines all across this country. The one naturally involves the other, because the Department of Transport and the Canadian National Railways have been receiving representations from various communities across the country in connection with branch lines which should be extended or proceeded with. That brings me to a point raised by the hon. member for The Battlefords, namely that the railways should not worry in future about having deficits. That is one thing which I believe must be taken into serious consideration when we decide upon the construction of branch lines. I believe it was the hon. member for Saint John-Albert who the other evening pointed to the fact—and rightly so—that the operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways had gone up considerably in the last year, and he went into some detail in discussing what those expenses were. He said the Canadian National should be extremely cautious in the next few years to make sure that the over-all surplus it has at present is continued. I make that statement not desiring in any way to criticize what has been said to-day, but to point out to the committee that this is a matter which certainly must be taken into consideration when discussing new or abandoned lines of railway.

In reference to the gaps which have been mentioned, namely that between Heinsburg, Alberta, and Frenchman's Butte, Saskatchewan, on the one hand and between Beaver River, Alberta, and St. Walburg, Saskatchewan, on the other, I can say that many representations have been made to the Canadian National Railways and to me urging the completion of these gaps. I have received and read a large number of petitions. Many of them have been brought to me by the hon. member for Athabaska, and I know he has taken a keen interest in these two projects, as have other hon. members. My own view is that the gap between Beaver River and St. Walburg is one which deserves serious consideration. So far as the other one is concerned, I can make no statement on it. It is not a fact that it has been reported upon unfavourably by the Canadian National Railways. All I can say in this connection is that it goes through a certain number of Indian reserves where little traffic is anticipated. I should make this additional statement, that the Canadian National Railways have set up a committee to consider and to review those two lines. They are making surveys, and those surveys are not yet completed. I understand it will be some time before they are completed, and until they have been, I can make no final statement.

Mr. FRASER: Earlier this morning I had occasion to go to the Canadian National Railways ticket office here in Ottawa. I was dumfounded to see pieces of paint hanging from the ceiling—not one, but a dozen of them, and all of a large size. While I was in there particles of paint or dirt were dropping from the ceiling. Surely the railway company should not allow that condition to continue. I may say that I looked at the ceiling only once, because I was afraid of getting an eyeful. The workers in the office are working overtime, and I do not think it is fair to them to have this condition continuing year after year. They should not have to work in such dirty surroundings.

Is it the intention of the department to have the Trent canal finished some time in the near future? Plans have been prepared, I understand, for two locks, and I believe everything is in shape in the minister's office so that the work can proceed. The locks on the Severn river end of the canal should be completed as soon as possible. Now that the war is over the Trent canal will be used by American tourists. Their pleasure boats will come in there; and as the tourist business is one of the greatest we have, we should give it all possible encouragement. If locks were in place rather than the marine railway which now exists, the business on that canal would increase a hundredfold. Small boats numbering two or three thousand passed through the Severn end of the canal in July and August of each year before the war. I hope the minister will see that that section of the canal is completed. During the war years very few motor boats or boats of any other kind, have passed through the canal, owing to the lack of gasoline and also the fact that in many cases the operators of those craft have been away fighting for their country. A condition has developed which, I believe, would not have arisen had those boats been running. In certain lakes weeds have grown up to such an extent that motor boats, even outboard motors, cannot get through. In this respect Rice lake is very bad so far as the landings are concerned. I have my cottage on Stoney lake and, while the condition does not affect me at all, I do know that down at Clark's bay, at the end of concession two, there is a landing which is used by more than a hundred cottages. During the last few years the water out from the landing has grown up so badly with weeds that outboard motors and other small craft have found it difficult to get in during the summer months. I went to the minister's department about the matter and was told that they would not clean out the weeds. I suggest that they should be cleaned out, because it is in the interests of Canada to get all the American money we can get. I hope the minister will look into these matters and see what can be done.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member has raised three points. He spoke first about the condition of the ceiling in the city ticket office of the Canadian National Railways. I do not know what the position is with respect to that building, whether it is leased or not. If it is a leased building, it would not be the obligation of the railways to do that work. I shall bring the matter to the attention of my officials.

Mr. FRASER: Even if it is leased I hope the minister will see that it is cleaned up.

Mr. CHEVRIER: With reference to the Trent canal, I notice that in the estimates, under the heading of canal improvements, there is an item of $48,000 for the Trent canal.

Mr. FRASER: That is for maintenance, is it not?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, it is to provide for work at Buckhorn and Fenelon Falls, to restore concrete and canal structures, and to rebuild and repair piers and sills. But so far as the two new locks are concerned, I shall have to ask the superintendent of canals for a statement. I shall be glad to pass along to the hon. member any information I get.

I shall bring to the attention of my officials the matter of cleaning the weeds out so that small motor craft can get through.

Mr. ROSE: As some hon. members have spoken about railway lines, perhaps I might be permitted to say a few words about the merchant marine. I hold in my hand a pamphlet issued by the Minister of Transport in 1945, and in it the minister says:

> No body of men has contributed more to the prosecution of the war effort than those gallant seamen who man the ships of the allied merchant navies, and to which Canada's contribution in ships and men has grown from small beginnings to now play a substantial role.

Farther on he says:

> Great strides have been taken to build up the man-power for a powerful Canadian merchant marine.

That is all very well, but will these men be used to build up a powerful merchant marine? Will they have jobs? Will they have a merchant marine to man? Is Canada to have a merchant marine? I submit the time has arrived for a clear statement of policy from the government regarding this matter.

A few weeks ago the Canadian seamen's union issued a statement to the press in which it pointed out that in its campaign for a Canadian merchant marine of three hundred ships it has received support from the city and town councils of Quebec City, Montreal, Verdun, Chatham, Ontario; Strathroy, Ontario; Preston, Ontario; Winnipeg and Transcona, Manitoba; Lethbridge, Alberta, Prince Rupert, and Kamloops. A government controlled merchant navy is favoured by city and town councils throughout the country and other organizations who believe that Canada's prosperity is linked up with a merchant marine. This same press statement quotes the Minister of Transport as having said:

> I think we are going to have a permanent merchant marine. I don't know if we shall have three hundred ships, but I think we shall have something along that line.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will tell the hon. gentleman right now that I made no such statement.

Mr. ROSE: That is quoted from the press of August 30, but whether or not the minister made that statement to the press is of no importance to us. We here in the House of Commons believe that we should have a statement regarding government policy.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Chairman, I did not have an opportunity to speak when the question of continuation of the railway line from Prince Albert through Meadow Lake and on to Lac La Biche was under discussion. I come from the city of Prince Albert, and I want to say that that plan has the support of all the boards of trade in northern and central Saskatchewan. The work should be completed. There are reasons why it was stopped in 1933, but I am not going to enter into any controversy in that regard with the hon. member for Athabaska. Between 1935 and 1939 nothing was done. If the Hudson Bay railway is to be made the instrument it should be in the development of western Canada and Canada in general, this line should be completed, not only for the benefit of the pioneers who settled in those areas believing they would be served by this railway, but also in the interests of better transportation facilities for Saskatchewan and Alberta.

I rose, however, to bring up a matter under the heading of departmental administration, namely, the salaries paid to employees of the Department of Transport. Recently, because of the interest taken by the hon. member for Lanark in this matter, information was brought down to the house which showed that of the 130,000 odd employees in the civil service, both permanent and temporary, some 6,000 received what are known as war duties supplements. The other day the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., endeavoured to explain the circumstances under which these supplements were granted. He told us that they had not been granted to all employees of the government who had given themselves so devotedly to the service of this country during the period of the war. The explanation given by the hon. member did not satisfy me, and I think I can speak for many other hon. members and say that it did not satisfy them. It was not a sufficient explanation as to why certain individuals had been picked out while others equally deserving had not been given a war duties supplement.

I should like to get from the minister this information: How many permanent and temporary employees in his department received war duties supplements? My information is that in certain cases a simple expedient was followed in order to raise salaries which had been frozen, that of reclassifying or seconding employees to other departments or to other types of work within the same department. How many were seconded and how many reclassifications were made in his department? I should like to have a statement as to the basis upon which the decisions were made as to who should be entitled thereto.

In his explanation the other day, the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., stated that in making these grants there was no question of departure on the part of the government from its stabilization policy with respect to wages. Once it had been decided that war duties supplements were to be made to those who gave unusual and unstinting service to the war effort, they should have been given much more generously than they were. As the matter now stands, anyone who received supplement bonus is placed in a preferred position, while those who did not receive it, but who gave equally good service, feel resentment because they believe they have been discriminated against.

I am not criticizing this policy if it is fairly and properly applied. There are many men and women in Canada whose wages were frozen at low levels during the war. Why should not the government allow private industry to reward with a Christmas bonus employees who have given extraordinarily good service? Up to the present time no bonus over $25 is allowed unless it had been given prior to 1941. To permit this to be done would not break down the stabilization plan. It would be in keeping with the stand taken by the government itself in the granting of war duties supplements and would be welcomed by employers and employees alike across this dominion, employees who throughout the period of the war have given of their best and utmost but who have been denied any increases or reward other than the cost of living bonus and Christmas bonuses in the limited scope that I have mentioned.

Only the other day the Financial Post indicated that some new wage policy was to be declared for 1946. A similar declaration has been made in the United States. But whether there is to be a new wage policy or not, I suggest to the minister that he indicate to the Department of Finance that to permit the giving of this extra reward would be just and proper. It would enable private industry to reward employees who have done exceptional work during the war period.

I should like to refer to the manner in which expense accounts have been increasing in the last few years. While salaries have not been going up, expense accounts have been climbing. On looking over the record of the minister's department I find that the trend is not as definite as it is in some other departments. But when in another department I find living and travelling expenses of $5,507, $7,852, $5,938, and so on, I wonder whether a policy is being followed of allowing expanding expense accounts in place of increases in salaries or other allowances. When I look over the record of some of the medium salaried men, running from $2,600, I find expense accounts from $2,658 up to $4,817. These expense accounts are increasing year by year without any commensurate increase in responsibilities. Is the government condoning large expense accounts as an indirect means of increasing salaries? I should like the minister to deal with that point.

I am not arguing that salaries should not be fair and reasonable. The time has come for a complete revision of the salary schedules. Mention has been made during the last few days of the loss of outstanding men to this dominion, and all of us know that that is true. Only recently I was reading an article by one of the press men, Mr. Hardy, and had occasion to appreciate for the first time just how low some of the salaries of the technical men are. For instance, a man with a bachelor's degree in science and four years' experience is receiving $1,080. Another man with a Manitoba degree, a master of science, from Cornwall, with three years' experience, is receiving $1,620; and so it goes, the salaries utterly out of keeping with the responsibilities of the position. Within the last few weeks several outstanding Canadians, three in particular, have left Canada. They were in the government service as scientific men and were receiving respectively salaries of $4,200, $3,900 and $4,200. Immediately they left the government service their salaries were jumped to $14,000, $15,000 and $8,000. This issue of salaries and reasonable compensation for unusual ability calls for a complete reclassification and a reconsideration of the whole problem of salaries. In addition to making that general plea I am asking particularly about the situation respecting the war duties supplement, and if the minister would be kind enough to make a general statement in this regard it would be appreciated.

Mr. QUELCH: I should like to say a few words on the branch line from Scapa to Loverna about which I am sure the minister has received petitions. The laying of steel was completed around 1930 and a skeleton line has been maintained from Scapa to Spondin. Occasionally a freight train is backed into Spondin to take out wheat and bring in coal. But, from Spondin to Hemaruka, the line has not been ballasted. In the early days the steel was laid and a few trains ran in winter, but now the line is in a bad state of repair and no trains are run. From Hemaruka east the line is in repair, and the train goes in there from Loverna once a week. The farmers are under a great handicap. They cannot ship their live stock west to Calgary; it has to go east to Saskatoon, a much longer distance. I agree with my hon. friend that it should not be a question whether it would pay to run trains over that line. The line was built in the first instance and the area settled, and the farmers were given to understand that a railroad service would be given. A few trains are running, but there is no real railway service at all. This matter was brought to the attention of the Minister of Reconstruction and the president of the Canadian National Railways, and I wish to quote a line from the president's reply. He said:

> The territory which would be served does not appear to be very promising unless irrigation were resorted to.

As the minister knows, there has been a lot of discussion of the Red Deer diversion scheme in the whole of that area. During the last election it was most emphatically promised that the Red Deer diversion scheme would be carried out in the very near future. As a matter of fact many Liberals became so enthusiastic and optimistic that they stated that the scheme had already been started and that men were at work on the dam. Unfortunately it was merely a survey party; no work has been started on it. I should like the minister to give the assurance that if the irrigation scheme is carried out, that line will be completed, because with proper irrigation there would be no question at all of there being enough business to support the line. It would be possible to bring another thirty thousand people into that area, which would make all the difference to the traffic carried on that line.

I concur in what the hon. member for Battle River has said regarding the line that ends at Bodo, which is within Alberta. The grade was built from Bodo to Bulwark but the line has never been completed. In that area there is a good deal of business. There is a great deal of live stock raised in that whole area and I do not think the railways could make the same complaint about not having sufficient business to warrant completing the line. If that line was completed I think it could be run at a profit without any difficulty.

Mr. GAUTHIER (Portneuf) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I hope I shall not transgress the standing orders in making a few remarks on the merchant marine estimates. First, I wish to thank the Minister of Transport for his unflagging interest in the settlement of the thorny question that concerns the men who were shipwrecked when the Nereus and the Proteus were lost in 1942. Fifteen young sailors from two communities in my constituency of Portneuf were reported as missing after that disaster. I hope the minister will continue to investigate, as he has done since the beginning, and that he will do everything in his power to settle those cases to the satisfaction of the stricken parents.

I do not wish to discuss at any length the Canadian merchant service. The time is not appropriate and I do not want to prolong the debate. However, may I say to the minister that, if a Canadian merchant service is ever established, it will be able to secure the best sailors and the best pilots in the world without any exception. Speaking especially on behalf of the St. Lawrence river pilots, I urge the minister to give sympathetic consideration to their requests, which in nine cases out of ten are quite reasonable. Let the minister keep in mind that the St. Lawrence River Pilots Association, whose members are on duty between Montreal and Quebec, is a body which, ever since its inception, has never joined in any strike. Ever since pilots have been operating on the St. Lawrence river, there has been one strike in the history of the country. And it lasted but one day. In the most critical times, when Canada needed the services of all her citizens, when frequently strikes were breaking out in other sections of the country, the St. Lawrence river pilots, operating from Montreal to Quebec City, have remained at their post. Sometimes there arose problems which were rather difficult to settle, but always, through the intervention of the Dominion ministers, a satisfactory solution was arrived at. I wish to thank the various ministers who at one time or another have headed the Marine or Transport Department.

I also deem it my duty to pay tribute to the St. Lawrence river pilots for their good work and the public-spiritedness they have shown throughout the history of our country. Therefore, I again urge the hon. minister to consider their requests favourably, even if they relate to pilotage dues. They have the right to bring up the matter of pilotage dues, because the dues charged by the St. Lawrence river pilots are the lowest in the world. They carry out their work on a river where navigation is very difficult, especially in the section between Quebec City and Montreal, where the channel is quite hazardous even it it has been improved by the department. Further, the distance they cover is the longest. Frequently pilots on duty between Quebec City and Montreal remain at their post for twenty, twenty-two and sometimes twenty-four hours, with little or no sleep, facing fog or storms without ever sitting down. Some say this is normal because they are sailors to the core. Ours are the best sailors in the world, and from the moment a young Canadian, whether he is of French or English descent, has gone to sea, he faces storms and gales with a smile on his lips. If ever one has deserved to be called an "old salt" it is the Canadian sailor.

I, therefore, ask the hon. minister to always consider favourably the requests of the Canadian pilots and sailors, and I wish to thank him once more for the interest he has shown to the grief-stricken families of the fifteen sailors from my constituency who have perished at sea during the war.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member for Cartier asked if Canada would have a merchant marine in the post-war period, and requested a statement of government policy. I wish the hon. gentleman were in his seat now. Unfortunately I am not able to tell him what the government policy is with reference to the merchant navy. I can tell him this, however, that for the last twelve months and longer the matter has been under consideration, an interdepartmental committee has been set up to report to the government on the subject matter, but until such time as the united maritime agreement has come to an end I doubt whether there would be anything to be gained by making a public pronouncement on this important subject. Shipping is still pooled, and will be for some months to come. I believe the pooling agreement ends early in March. Again, the matter is one which affects not only the Department of Transport but several other departments. Hon. members listened, I am sure, to the statement which the Minister of Reconstruction made on this whole subject; I believe he covered it very well, and I am prepared to leave it at that for the moment.

The hon. member for Lake Centre raised several questions, some particularly with reference to the salaries of officials of the Department of Transport and other departments. Of course I can speak only for my own department. I am informed that, with reference to war duties supplements, the procedure is for the department to recommend to the civil service commission that one or more employees should under the circumstances be entitled to a war duties supplement; the civil service commission make an investigation and decide whether the recommendation made by the Department of Transport is warranted and whether the supplement should be awarded. It then goes to treasury board, and treasury board must finally approve. I am informed that so far as the Department of Transport is concerned every recommendation for a war duties supplement which it was possible to make, was made, and I further understand that the majority of those going forward have been awarded. The hon. gentleman asked for a statement of them. I have not such a statement here, but I shall be prepared to give it to him later.

With reference to travelling expenses, the hon. gentleman read from a pamphlet or a memorandum of some kind, and I do not know whether he was referring to the travelling expenses of the Department of Transport—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No, I specifically said that, that these were much lower.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I thank the hon. gentleman for that, because I think the travelling expenses of the Department of Transport have gone down rather than gone up; in fact they have gone down substantially this year from the amount last year.

Speaking generally, so far as salaries go—and the same statement was made by the Minister of Reconstruction when, I think, he was asked a similar question—these salaries for technical and professional men are under review.

(Translation): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Portneuf had the kindness, a few moments ago, to compliment the Minister of Transport for his interest in the pilots and the merchant marine, and to thank him for the work he has done in connection with the sailors from the Nereus and the Proteus, two ships which were lost at sea during the war years. I can tell the hon. member that I shall note his remarks and that my officials will do everything in their power to obtain further details concerning the fate of the sailors from these two ships. I also wish to assure him that the pilots in whom he is so much interested will always have our sympathetic consideration.

Mr. HODGSON: I want to say a word to the minister—it will take only a minute—following up what the hon. member for Peterborough West has said. All along the Trent waterways system has grown up a great tourist industry. There is plenty of room for further development. I thank the minister for the new gates which are going on at Fenelon Falls lock. A repair job there was very necessary. While his men are working up there, I might point out that some mud has accumulated in years gone by from a saw mill at the mouth of the canal where it goes into Cameron lake. If that mud were taken off by a sucker, we would have a wonderful sand beach and it would be a splendid place for tourists. There is also a repair job to be done on the dock at Coboconk and other places along the canal system where it empties into Balsam lake. Quantities of rock and mud have piled up on the sides of the canal, and if it could be levelled down, the place could be made a beauty spot. There is in fact a considerable amount of beautification which could be done along this waterways system with the help of the department. I should be glad to go into these matters in detail in the minister's office at any time, or to take it up through the departmental engineer at Peterborough, Mr. Ryan. I might say here that Mr. Ryan has given me the very best of cooperation in any business I have had with him since he became the official located at that particular point. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that any information that I can give the minister in detail I shall be glad to give him.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can tell the hon. gentleman that my officers will cooperate with him at any time and give him the information he requires.

Mr. HODGSON: Thank you.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

18. That the right of a corporation, association, syndicate or exploration partnership, formed for the purpose of exploring and drilling for natural gas, to deduct 30 per centum of exploration and drilling expenses be extended to expenses incurred in 1946.

Mr. SENN: Shortly before the house rose last evening I made an appeal to the minister to increase the percentage of the reduction from income tax on gas wells for exploration and drilling purposes. The minister was emphatic in his reply, but I found some difficulty in following his arguments and his explanations. He said he was probably stating it in the Greek way, but Greek is a language of which I have no knowledge. He said that because a certain amount was allowed for depletion of gas wells, amounting to some twenty-five per cent of the income, thirty per cent was a sufficient reduction for exploration and drilling purposes. I say definitely to the minister that in the circumstances neither is sufficiently high. I pointed out to him last night as clearly as I could the importance of the natural gas industry to certain sections of Ontario, particularly the Niagara area, in which I happen to live. The greater proportion of the people in that area depend on coal gas for fuel. Everybody knows that to-day coal is in very short supply, and that it is even more necessary than ever to have sufficient gas produced to allow the people who have already installed gas fixtures to continue to use gas. As I pointed out last night, it is impossible to change over gas equipment to the burning of other kinds of fuel.

In the riding which I have the honour to represent, Haldimand, there are some 1,800 gas wells in operation. In the past number of years since the natural gas industry has flourished there, some three or four times that number have gone out of existence; they have been abandoned. Some of them have been dry wells. I venture to say that at least three times as many as are in existence to-day have been abandoned because their usefulness has gone. At the present time drilling is going on in that area, because, as I have already pointed out, it is necessary to keep up the supply. I think I am safe in saying that at least ten per cent of the wells drilled turn out to be dry and of no value whatever. That is a strong argument in support of my request for an increase in the reduction of thirty per cent.

The amount for exploration and drilling should be increased to at least forty or perhaps fifty per cent.

It is clear that there is no use in a company spending all their profits in the driling of new wells to keep up the supply. After all, the average life of a gas well is not very long. I am on safe grounds, I think, in asking the minister to increase that percentage of reduction.

Later I shall have something to say about the depletion allowance, which is twenty-five per cent, I think. I believe that they are entitled to a certain increase in the depletion percentage as well. Mining and oil wells are getting a larger depletion rate than that. However, in the meantime I should like to appeal once more to the minister to enlarge that thirty per cent reduction for exploration and drilling to at least forty per cent, if not fifty per cent.

Mr. ILSLEY: The point raised last night was that thirty per cent was given to one class of company, forty per cent to another and twenty-six and two thirds to another. The question asked was, why is the tax credit for natural gas companies only thirty per cent on exploration expenditures, while that for certain oil companies is forty per cent. The hon. member for Haldimand suggested that the tax credit for natural gas companies should be higher. I shall explain how these various tax credits were derived and why they are not the same for all kinds of companies.

I should explain first of all that exploration and drilling expenses are capital expenses laid out on new ventures, and ordinarily are not properly chargeable against profits from existing producing wells. If as a result of exploration expenses new wells are found, the cost of finding them is properly chargeable against the new production. If, however, the exploration and drilling prove unsuccessful, the cost of this unsuccessful capital venture could not in the past be charged against profits from existing producing properties. In war time, in order to encourage the search for much-needed oil, gas and minerals, the government decided to allow these capital costs of exploration as a deduction against profits in computing taxable income. Now, in order to prevent undue benefits being secured by any company which might be in the 100 per cent tax bracket, the write off privilege was given in the form of a tax credit, the tax credit being equal to the tax saving which would be secured by a company taking a write-off under a forty per cent tax rate. Thus the appropriate tax credit in the case of oil companies which paid tax on total earnings and received no depletion is forty per cent; that is, on every $100 of exploration expenditure charged against taxable income the tax saving or tax reduction is $40. In the case of natural gas companies there is a depletion rate of 25 per cent. Thus only 75 per cent of earnings are subject to tax. A forty per cent—

Mr. SENN: Is that correct—only twenty-five per cent of the expenses for depletion? Is it not twenty-five per cent for drilling and exploration?

Mr. ILSLEY: No. What was the question? The statement I am making here is correct; that is, that altogether apart from new ventures the depletion rate allowed is 25 per cent. That is to say, the company pays income tax on only 75 per cent of its earnings.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is 25 per cent per year, is it?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. It varies with different kinds of companies, of course; and I will come to that. It is the same for gas companies, 25 per cent.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is what you are referring to?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. A 40 per cent tax rate applied to 75 per cent of earnings gives an effective rate of tax of 30 per cent on total earnings. Thus in those circumstances a deduction of $100 of exploration expenditure from profits results in a tax saving or tax reduction of $30. The appropriate tax credit for natural gas companies accordingly is 30 per cent. Similarly the tax credit for oil companies receiving a depletion allowance of one-third of profits is 26⅔ per cent; that is, a 40 per cent tax rate applied to two-thirds of profits gives an effective tax rate of 26⅔ per cent on total earnings. In those circumstances a write-off of $100 of capital expenditure against profits gives a tax saving or reduction of $26⅔.

It is clear from the foregoing that all companies are receiving tax credits based on the same principle applied equally to all, and I am afraid I could not recommend altering the principle for any particular class of producer.

Mr. SENN: That is just the point I was going to raise, that I believe these producers are more or less in a class by themselves. The need in that locality is very great; the gas produced is used in many homes and in processing in different industries. During the war years the use of gas for processing in various industries increased very greatly, so now the demand for this purpose is cutting to a greater extent than it should into the supply available for domestic heating. I am very much afraid that with the shortage of coal and of all kinds of fuel, unless something is done to increase exploration and drilling for gas we in that area are going to find ourselves very short indeed of natural gas for heating our houses. I still think the minister, without doing harm to any other industries, might increase this amount by at least ten per cent.

Resolution agreed to.

19. That a corporation whose chief business is that of mining or exploring for minerals be allowed to deduct 26⅔ per centum of prospecting, exploration and development expense incurred in 1946 in searching for minerals.

Mr. COCKERAM: I should like to say a few words with respect to the business of prospecting. For a number of years I believe the minister has received deputations and briefs not only from the Ontario prospectors' association but from the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, Ontario Mining Association and the mining industry as a whole, with regard to the question of prospecting and the future of mining development in this country. For some time I have felt that the departmental officials have not understood the question of prospecting and its effect on the future prosperity of this country. The history of prospecting started with Sudbury; then to Porcupine, Kirkland Lake and many other centres. To-day prospectors are going farther and farther afield. In the old days prospecting was carried on close to the railroads. To-day prospectors must travel greater distances, with the result that the expense of prospecting is very much greater. Later in this debate I propose to introduce some statistics to show how the mining industry, instead of going ahead as we all hoped it would, is being retarded through excessive taxation. I do not think any industry can do more for this Canada in the days to come than the mining industry. It was mining that carried our economy through the depression days of the thirties, and it was that industry which in the early part of this war, when the government was looking for foreign exchange, the minister appealed to produce more gold with which to establish credits to make purchases in the United States, with the result that it was not necessary for Canada to go on a lend-lease basis with the United States at that time.

The minister has been interviewed in the past by many delegations, and I should like to read the paragraph dealing with prospecting from the report of the Ontario royal commission on mining of 1944. In this connection I would suggest to the minister that he might be able to supply members of this house with copies of this report, as well as with copies of a brief on the taxation of the Canadian mining industry as presented by the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, together with copies of any other briefs that have been prepared by the prospectors' association with regard to the whole field of prospecting. This is what the Ontario royal commission had to say in regard to the decline of prospecting in Canada:

> The commissioners are convinced that if mining in Ontario—

This would apply also to Canada as a whole.

> —is to continue on a worthwhile scale prospecting for new mineral resources must be stimulated to a far greater extent than is now possible under existing conditions in respect of tax levies and governmental restrictions.
> The following excerpts are taken from a brief prepared for submission to the dominion Minister of Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance, by the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy and made available to this commission.
> "Prospecting for new mineral deposits in Canada has all but ceased and, if the mining industry is to continue on any worthwhile basis, this unfortunate situation must be corrected immediately. Emphasizing the necessity for quick action is the fact that under war-time demands for maximum metal production, coupled with a labour shortage, development work at producing mines has been necessarily and drastically curtailed, and ore reserves are being dissipated at an accelerated pace.
> "The incentive for continued prospecting, with its inherent physical and financial risks, lies in the prize which rewards success, i.e., a valuable deposit of mineral. No mineral prospect can justify the risks attendant upon development unless the attainable prize, in the form of commensurate profit, is available to one who succeeds. This prize has been so reduced in value by progressive increases in taxation that it no longer holds sufficient attraction for those who would venture. Private enterprise in the exploration and development of mineral deposits laid the foundations for the production success attained by the Canadian mining industry. The decline in prospecting activity is clearly illustrated in the accompanying briefs.
> "In the province of Ontario, the decline in prospecting activity began in 1929, with the downward trend obscured somewhat during the period 1933-1936 following the increase in the price of gold. In the province of Quebec, experience has been similar. It was plainly evident long before the emergency of the present war."

In that connection I would suggest to the minister that if we are to go ahead and find new mineral deposits in this country, greater consideration than he now proposes should be given those mining companies who are prepared to expend their money on prospecting and development in the Dominion of Canada. I have been in the prospecting business for a great many years and I know that to-day our mineral fields are getting farther apart.

I suppose one of the greatest mineral areas in Canada to-day is that being opened up in the Yellowknife area in the Northwest Territories. It is a very expensive procedure to go up there to prospect and open up the mines. A great many companies have put their money into this new area and, having ventured so much capital, I suggest they should have full relief to the extent that they have spent their money.

In northern Manitoba we have the Snow Lake area, which mining people hope will be another great gold producing area for Canada. I would ask the minister to realize that whereas his department has taken millions of dollars out of the mines in remote areas, no department has never put any money back into those areas by way of tax concessions or other services. I might refer to the area of Red Lake in Ontario; the Pickle Crow area, the Central Patricia area, the Berens River and other areas from which the dominion government have taken out millions of dollars in taxation. But to my knowledge, with the possible exception of a few hundred or maybe a few thousand dollars, they have never put anything back into those areas for the benefit of the residents. The business of mining should not be a one-way street so far as the federal government is concerned. The mining industry is glad to bring in new mines which are for the general good of the country, but we believe there must be equity in taxation. We say that if we go into remote areas of Canada and endeavour to develop the industry, the government should take into consideration the fact that in spite of all the money it takes out of mines in remote areas it does not spend any money in the development of the mines in these remote areas, and for that reason there should be a complete review of the whole system of mine taxation.

I cannot understand why at this time the minister should have a resolution stating that there would be a 26⅔ per cent reduction for mines which are prepared to spend their money prospecting. No one of us knows what the future activities of Canada will be, but we do know that in the mining industry there is stability. We who are interested in that industry know that the industry is producing something which can be exported to other countries and which will give Canada credit in foreign lands. We believe ours is an industry useful to Canada as a whole. The government should reopen the whole question of mining taxation, not with the idea that we expect different treatment from other people, but recognizing that our conditions are entirely different, especially in view of the fact that only about 10 per cent of our known mineral area, the Precambrian shield, has so far been intensively prospected. We shall have to go farther afield. Areas adjacent to the railway lines have been pretty intensively prospected. If the country is to have an industry which can be relied upon in good times and in bad, the minister will have to take into consideration all the problems affecting that industry. Statistics show that 11 per cent of the people of Canada are dependent upon the mining industry for their livelihood.

I would appeal to the minister to reconsider this whole matter. If a mining company spends $100,000 going up to the Yellowknife area to open a property, or going to Reindeer lake or Berens river or some other remote area, then why in heaven's name should they not be given the right to write off the total amount so expended?

Mr. ILSLEY: The answer is that they are.

Mr. COCKERAM: Then why this section?

Mr. ILSLEY: The section merely carries that out. A write-off of 100 per cent of cost is the equivalent of a tax credit of 26⅔ per cent of the cost.

Mr. COCKERAM: I cannot see that.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, I gave an explanation to the hon. member for Haldimand only a minute ago. There is a depletion rate of thirty-three and one-third per cent. The tax rate is forty per cent. Assuming that they are paying forty per cent—and this is on the assumption that forty per cent is the combined income and corporation tax rate paid by the company—then this resolution is the equivalent of that for which the hon. member is asking, because forty per cent of sixty-six and two-thirds per cent is twenty-six and two-thirds per cent.

Mr. COCKERAM: Well then, I congratulate the minister.

Mr. ILSLEY: Thank you.

Mr. ADAMSON: I have listened with some attention to the explanation given by the minister to the hon. member for Haldimand. However, his interpretation is not the one I have seen placed upon the resolution—that it will mean a deduction of one hundred per cent for purposes of exploration. In other words, if a producing company takes on another property and spends $100,000 in 1946 on exploration, and if it decides at the end of 1946, or before the end of that year, that the property is not worth while, then all the money the mining company has spent in failing to develop that prospect—and let us not forget that most of them will fail; there can be no rosy ideas about that—will be allowed as an expense, and deductible from the income tax.

Mr. ILSLEY: How much does the hon. member think they should have off their tax bill? Tell me that. Is it not $26,666.66?

Mr. ADAMSON: They get a reduction of $26,000.

Mr. ILSLEY: Correct. That is equivalent to $100,000 off their income, for tax purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON: That was the question I wished to ask.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not know how hon. members can be expected to know exactly how some of these complicated calculations will work out, and what the real incidence of taxation will be, unless we can have some help from the minister or his department. Session after session I have pleaded for a committee—not a committee of the whole house, but one on taxation and fiscal matters —before which we could call witnesses and through which we could receive expert advice. If we had such a committee we could learn about these matters. We do not all have to know about them, but those of us who are keenly interested would like to have a clear understanding, so that we may know what the minister is talking about. I hope the drafted resolutions will come down in good time in the bill so that hon. members on this side may have an opportunity to study them and give them the consideration which they will require.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister give a brief outline of the position with respect to taxation of gold mines at the present time? Part XIII of the act made provision for metalliferous mines. I believe there was a time when gold mines were given three years free of tax.

Mr. ILSLEY: Correct.

Mr. GREEN: There was also some provision made for depreciation allowance and pre-development cost. Can the minister give us a brief summary of that picture?

Mr. ILSLEY: It would take a long time to make a statement such as that. Gold mines are entitled to one-third depletion; they pay income tax on only two-thirds of their profits. Throughout the war they have had a special formula for increasing their standard profits as their volume of production went up. This was a special concession to only two classes of companies, gold mining and oil producing. There was an exemption some years ago which was repealed at the time we decided we did not want people to produce gold, that we wanted them to produce strategic minerals.

Mr. GREEN: What year was that?

Mr. COCKERAM: 1936.

Mr. ILSLEY: It ran three years and expired in 1943, I believe. It is being continued this year by a later resolution.

Mr. GREEN: Where does that come in?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is in the excess profits resolutions. They have this advantage or benefit that we have been talking about, which is a new thing. We passed this two or three years ago, authorizing them to write off their prospecting, exploration and development expenses out of profits. It is not put in those words; it is put in the form of a tax credit, but it amounts to the same thing—that is, allowing capital expenditures to be written off out of profits. There are not very many people in this country who can do that, but they can. It is not only gold mining companies, but companies whose chief business is that of mining or exploring for minerals. I think those are the most important tax concessions or advantages that mining companies have. Resolutions, Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20, are just extensions of present provisions in the act. The only change in the wording of the resolutions is a change in the date of expiration.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any significance in the fact that resolution No. 19 refers only to corporations; it does not apply to an individual or partnership?

Mr. ILSLEY: We have never had any claims from individuals or sole proprietors, as we call them, or partnerships, for this concession. This is done by corporations. It is the mining companies that enjoy this concession. I do not know why the question has never come up, but it never has so far as I know.

Mr. GREEN: In other sections of the act the word "taxpayer" is used, and that would include an individual or partnership. I suggest that that word should be used rather than "corporation".

Mr. ILSLEY: The rate perhaps would have to be different if that were the case, because this provision proceeds on the assumption that the company is earning forty per cent. If it is in what we call the hundred per cent class, that is, paying forty per cent on seven-sixths of its standard profits and one hundred per cent on the balance of its profits, it would not get any additional concession by virtue of the fact that it is paying more than forty per cent. That is the basis upon which this resolution starts. This resolution is to put them in exactly the same position as if they got a write-off of expenditures out of their profits which would give them a tax credit of 26⅔ per cent. I do not think the question of whether individuals should have it has ever arisen. I do not think any individuals go into mining.

Mr. GREEN: Sometimes.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is always a company.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is how they all start.

Mr. STIRLING: A syndicate would hardly be a corporation.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think they are taxed as corporations; I am not sure.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister give some consideration to that before the amending bill is brought down?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: As I understand it, this resolution is designed to assist mining. At the present time there is a great deal of concern over the situation with regard to silver. The main objection seems to be that the price in Canada is being held down whereas silver sold in the United States is bringing a much higher price. The minister may not wish to say anything about it at this particular time, but I think an announcement of government policy with regard to the domestic price would be welcome to the mining industry.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot make a statement on that on these resolutions. It is a matter which has been given much consideration, but an advance statement would appear to me to be hardly wise.

Mr. ADAMSON: I want to get this matter clarified, because it is very important. On other occasions rulings have been given by the minister's department which were different from what we in the house thought should be given. Let us assume that a mining company has profits of $100,000 which it spends on exploration work which fails. If it did not spend that money on exploration and paid it to its shareholders instead, it would be taxed $40,000 less 33 per cent of the $40,000. In other words, it would be taxed on that, $26,800.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: $26,666.

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes. Because of the exploration work that they have done you would allow the total amount of that $26,666 as a further deduction.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is a tax credit.

Mr. ADAMSON: That is right. It is a tax credit; it is not a deduction for income.

Mr. ILSLEY: Right.

Mr. ADAMSON: So that the $100,000 expended on exploration will be completely tax-free?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. ADAMSON: That is the question I wanted answered.

Mr. JACKMAN: Provided that there are profits against which to write it off.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I know that the oil item is passed, Mr. Chariman, but suppose I have a mine. We very often have no profit to write it off against. Is there a distinction made between mines and oil?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not understand the hon. member's statement that we must pay even if we have no profits. We must pay for the work we have ordered done; we must make our capital investment. Is that what the hon. gentleman means? Or does he mean we must pay the government?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is more for information that I am asking the question. Suppose I have a mine in which I invest $200,000; then the mine becomes exhausted. I have now got my capital back, $200,000, and I go abroad and get another mine. I would rather talk about oil if the chairman would not look at me so severely.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): It would be perfectly in order, because we are still dealing with resolutions 17 and 19.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then I put my $200,000 in an oil well. It turns out to be a dry hole. I have lost all my capital. I have no profit. Yet I must pay a certain amount on the $200,000 which I got back out of my first venture. In other words I would be paying taxation on something which never was a profit. I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. ILSLEY: You got a profit on the first venture and paid your tax on your profits. Then you went into another venture and lost your money. There is nothing we can do about that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): With great respect, I do not think that is what happened.

Mr. BLACKMORE: You still believe in Santa Claus.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Unlike General Chisholm, I do. What I have in mind is this, and the point I think is worth considering. I spent my $200,000 in the first oil well, and the minute the oil comes from the well I begin paying the tax. I am sure I am right about that. Then I drill for another well with my $200,000. It is a dry hole and I lose all my capital. I never had a profit, and yet I have paid a tax which cannot be on anything else but captial, since I never had a profit.

Mr. ILSLEY: Why did not the hon. gentleman have a profit? He had a profit out of his first venture.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No, I just got my capital back.

Mr. ILSLEY: Our system is not that an investor must get his capital back before he begins to make a profit.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I believe that is sound, and I am not complaining about that. I know that the government need the money, and I am not complaining because they go out and get it where it is. But it is a hazardous business to drill for oil. Once a man has got his money back and he is engaged in continuous operations, tax all you like. But one well is not much by way of a capital investment. I was merely seeking information, and I am grateful for the minister's answer.

Mr. CASE: I assume that the purpose of resolution 19 is to encourage the search for minerals, gold and so forth, and yet I am constantly wondering just how valuable gold is to Canadians. I recognize that it represents one of our richest natural resources, but even though you make it attractive for people to dig for the yellow metal, at the present time at least we are treating gold solely as a commodity. We are exporting it to the United States, still treating it as a commodity. When the late President of the United States changed the price of gold to $35 an ounce it did not seem to result in the increase in commodity prices that was expected at that time. I am going to ask the minister a question which I hope he will answer and not misunderstand me. Why do we not use our richest natural resource, gold, as a monetary base, store the gold in our own vaults, and use it to expand our own currency and still remain on sound money?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is a big question, and I would have to prepare something on it before I could answer it. It is a question of what is the basis of what our monetary system should be, and it opens up the question, why do we not return to the gold standard. I do not think it is germane to the resolution. I do not think it would be a very good thing for us to return to the gold standard in the sense in which that term was used before the first world war at any rate, because it was pretty rigid. Countries generally have left the old-fashioned gold standard. But I do not want to argue the gold standard on this resolution. I am afraid of provoking a discussion if I do.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What is that?

Mr. ILSLEY: I said I was afraid of provoking a discussion. I did not say of whom I was thinking.

Mr. CASE: I think it has a direct relationship to the resolution because it offers an inducement to capital to risk its money to discover more and more gold. By international convention a country is considered to be on the gold standard if it has a twenty-five per cent gold backing for its currency. I believe that gold should be used for the benefit of the people.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I do not think this discussion is relevant to the resolution.

Mr. CASE: I submit that it is relevant, Mr. Chairman, because the resolution offers an inducement to the gold-mining industry.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I will read the resolution:

That a corporation whose chief business is that of mining or exploring for minerals be allowed to deduct 26⅔ per centum of prospecting, exploration and development expenses incurred in 1946 in searching for minerals.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I must observe to the hon. member for Grey North that if it were established in the public mind in Canada that every dollar of gold mined could be used as backing for four dollars of Bank of Canada bills, and that every one of those dollars would be a good dollar, not a rubber dollar or a "funny money" dollar or a dollar of any other such kind as our foolish monetary experts have accused Social Crediters of supporting—if that could be shown, the value of the gold mining industry to Canada—if gold is the backing of money, if gold is the thing which gives money value—would surely be established in a way which would completely justify a good many concessions in the matter of taxation.

Mr. ADAMSON: I am sorry to go after this question like a terrier after a rat, but I can assure the minister that I am thankful for it.

Mr. JACKMAN: The terrier or the rat?

Mr. ADAMSON: If I had the rat, the terrier would have a lot of fun. This applies only to the expenditures from one fiscal year to another, or apparently from one calendar year to the other. At the end of the calendar year, in other words at December 31, 1946, this clause ceases to be effective, and I may say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister that I hope this clause will perpetuate itself, and I think that some assurance that that will be done would tremendously help the industry.

If at the end of the calendar year the pre-development money—shall we say $100,000—is spent but the prospect is still under development, and during the next year, 1947, another $100,000 is spent, and in that year an ore body is discovered on this property—and this is quite the sort of thing which happens; things look good and they say, "We will bet another $50,000 and, we will bet $100,000, we would like to explore this end of the property", or "we would like to explore this break", or a number of things, and in 1947 they find an ore body which justifies a mill, and they have a mine, what happens? They have received a tax credit for the calendar year 1946 of $26,000. In 1947 they discover a commercial ore body which they proceed to develop; they incorporate a company. They have had in 1946, $100,000 worth of pre-development expenses, in 1947 they have had another $100,000 pre-development expenses. What happens? Are they given their pre-development expenses in 1947 and the 1946 period is a dead period, is finished as far as taxation goes, or are they liable for refunding of the tax concession they got because they found an ore body? I think that should be clarified, because the matter of pre-development expenses is a very important one, particularly with the young mines. I propose to have something to say on it in connection with section 6 of the Excess Profits Tax Act. I do not suppose the minister can answer that at the present time.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, I cannot answer it, but I should not think it would be right to allow it to be written off again.

Mr. ADAMSON: No, I quite agree with the minister; I would not think it would be right. But this is the sort of contingency which your department is going to have to meet, and I think it should be clarified now. I agree that they should not be allowed to write it off; that is perfectly satisfactory; but if they have written it off and in 1946 they have got the tax credit of $26,000, if they start again in 1947 they use the 1947 figures as pre-development expenses?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is what I should think, yes.

Mr. ADAMSON: That would seem to be fair, yes.

Mr. GLADSTONE: I suggest to the hon. member for Calgary West that if he is completing the two holes in one year he would not have to pay any tax; that is, on the first he would have made his $200,000 and on the second he would have lost it. This leads to the question of the equity, even in connection with industrial companies, of taxing them on the profits of the good years but with no allowance for the lean years. One wonders whether or not our system should be revised in accordance with what, I believe, they have in England, where taxes are on the basis of an average of three years' profits.

Mr. ILSLEY: Great Britain is not on a basis of averaging. We go very far towards averaging by our provision that losses may be written backward and forward. Those provisions were put in the budget of 1944.

Resolution agreed to.

20. That the right of corporations, associations, syndicates or exploration partnerships whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum or exploration or drilling for petroleum to deduct 50 per centum of expenditures made directly or indirectly in connection with deep test oil wells which prove to be unproductive, be extended to wells spudded in before the thirty-first day of December, 1946.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Yorkton asked me a question last night which should properly have been asked under this resolution. He asked for the number of wells proved; the number is 20; the number of wells completed is 11. Footage drill with completed wells is 78,979. Estimated footage for uncompleted wells, 75,200. Number of successful wells, nil. Cost to treasury in tax credits on the wells completed, $1,050,000.

Mr. CASE: What is a "deep-test" oil well? That is where the exemption comes in.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot give an accurate definition. Officials in the Department of Mines and Resources could do that. But it is something like this: it is a well which is sunk on a new location through a new structure; and that is the meaning of the word "test". It is a deep-test oil well, and therefore an expensive one.

Mr. COCKERAM: Is it the test or the well that is deep?

Mr. ILSLEY: We do not give this tax credit except in cases where the spudding in of the well, as they call it, takes place, and after recommendation of the Minister of Mines and Resources and after it is approved by the governor in council. They look into the question whether it is a suitable project for the somewhat abnormal tax treatment.

Mr. ADAMSON: What happens, as I understand it, is that in a new area they wish to find out some important geological information. They ask a private company to drill a very deep well in order to test the geological formation at depth. It might not be, and probably would not be, in the ordinary commercial policy of the company to drill a well in this location. I understand that is one of the reasons behind it, and that is why the rather more favourable treatment is given in this case than to an ordinary commercial operation in what might be considered a proven field.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is substantially correct; I think that is entirely correct.

Mr. ADAMSON: The geological branch of the Department of Mines and Resources recommends and suggests where the deep-test wells should be put down. The companies then either proceed or do not proceed, according to their own geological information. I wanted to bring that out, because when the estimates of the Minister of Mines and Resources are up I shall have something to say about doing exploratory diamond drilling as a part of the geological survey of Canada. That is the principle that is being established here.

Mr. HACKETT: Could the minister give us in a few sentences, in the language of the ordinary mortal, the distinction between a deep-test well and one that has been recently spudded in? It does not convey a very clear idea to me.

Mr. ILSLEY: The distinction is not between the deep-test well and one recently spudded in; the distinction is between a deep-test oil well and one which is a much shallower well, and where it is not necessary to get a knowledge of the stratum and structure of the subsoil. There may be indications that if you go away down you will be able to find that there is a lot of oil in the locality. It is a risky thing for a private company to undertake that heavy capital expenditure unassisted; therefore if they were not assisted they probably would not do it. The same conditions do not apply to the much smaller expenditures where it is not intended to drill as deep, and so the distinction is drawn between deep-test wells and others. The drilling of a shallow well might cost, say, $50,000 while the drilling of a deep-test well might cost as much as $500,000. Therefore we adopted this policy, which has been fruitful in experience and in nothing else to date, of allowing those large tax credits, in effect paying fifty per cent of the cost of drilling deep-test oil wells. Does that answer the question?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes, thank you.

Mr. SENN: May I be allowed to ask one question on this item in regard to natural gas? I know it is not strictly in accordance with the rules. I do not depart very often from the rules, and do not ask for any concessions, but I did want to ask one question, which I missed when resolution 18 was under discussion. Subsection 8 of section 8 of the Income War Tax Act provides for thirty per cent of exploration and drilling expenses as an exemption on taxation. From a brief which I have here of the Natural Gas and Petroleum Association of Canada I understand that recently the deputy minister of taxation made a ruling or statement in regard to that subsection which did not altogether clarify the situation; and if his statement was correct, it would hardly satisfy this association.

Mr. ILSLEY: What did he say?

Mr. SENN: I cannot tell the minister exactly what the statement was, but I should like to know if such a statement had been made, and what the interpretation of the section is.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot trace the statement unless I know what it was and where it was made.

Mr. SENN: The minister does not know at all?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know, no.

Resolution agreed to.

21. (a) That in respect of persons other than corporations the tax for 1945 be reduced by 4 per cent of the aggregate of the normal tax, the graduated tax and the investment surtax;

(b) That in respect of persons other than corporations the tax for 1946 be reduced by 16 per cent of the aggregate of the normal tax, the graduated tax and the investment surtax.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I should like to raise a question or two on this resolution. When other departments of government have been before the committee it has been stated that we are receiving this year $255 million on our grain crops alone less than we would receive in the open markets of the world if there were no controls. I know this is not directly relevant to the resolution under discussion, but it is a lead to what I have to say. We have wheat participating certificates which pay us in 1946 for our 1943 production. That is three years later, and we are not allowed any interest even though the wheat producer may have to borrow money on which to operate. On the other hand, when he pays his income tax he is always charged interest on overdue payments. I cite that as an example. Added to this, we are taking 40 to 50 per cent less for our live stock, and we have the greatest production and the greatest sale in the history of this nation. We are selling this live stock at from 40 to 50 per cent less than the world market price. The point I am coming to is the matter of a breeding herd being allowed as capital. I know this question has been raised in other sessions. Suppose a man is going out on a mixed farm or a grain farm; he buys land and equipment, and it is allowed as capital. But take a man who has a ranch where there is no other income than that which is derived from the live stock. He purchases a herd of breeding cows. If he is forced to sell that herd, even through no fault of his own, in one year, the entire herd must be shown as income. I submit that is a most unfair ruling. I know the breeders of this country have interviewed the government on past occasions. They have asked that the breeding stock be all shown as capital, which was disallowed. Finally, they asked that they be allowed at least 75 per cent of their breeding cattle as capital.

I came back from the west not very many days ago. I met a rancher who had sold out in southern Alberta. He received some sixty odd thousand dollars for his herd. Those were the only assets that man had. He, his wife and family, had spent all their life accumulating this herd. He thought he was going to settle down in town and enjoy his old age. I do not know that I need to go into any further details to explain to the committee the headache which that man had when he interviewed the income tax officials. I think that is an impossible situation. Because of these controls the producers of this country have been forced to take a real licking during the war years, and certainly I believe they are entitled to more consideration in the matter of income tax, especially in connection with the older people, many of whom wish to retire. After having made a great effort during the war years; after having accumulated a fair herd of good stock, now when they come to sell they are not allowed to keep enough of the proceeds to provide for their old age.

In raising that point I should like to mention also the other question of the farmer and his wife as compared with the man and his wife who work in the city. The farmer and his wife are allowed an exemption of only $1,200, or whatever it is, while the man and his wife working in the city are allowed an exemption of something like $1,800. That has been a most vexing problem throughout the rural parts of Canada, and if the minister has not brought about some adjustment already I hope he will be able to do so soon.

These are the two particular points I should like to bring to his attention now, and I should be glad to have him explain them as to date.

Mr. ILSLEY: The farmer who is paying income tax on a cash basis as distinguished from an inventory basis is taxed on the proceeds of the sale of his stock, which is regarded as gross income, just as any expenditures he makes for stock are regarded as expenses. If the man about whom the hon. gentleman talks had been buying cattle during the last few years every purchase he made would have been regarded as an expense which he could deduct from his income for tax purposes. Then when he comes to sell his cattle what he gets is regarded as income for tax purposes. There is a way of setting up the books on a different basis, an inventory basis, as I understand it; and I believe the Department of National Revenue have gone just as far as they could in allowing retroactive adjustments over five years, or something like that. I thought the situation had been reasonably met by administrative rulings, but without departing from all fundamental principles I do not think you could regard as capital the cattle as they are bought and sold.

Mr. HACKETT: What happens where herds have been developed through natural increase, where there has been no purchase? When they are sold, are the proceeds treated as taxable income?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes, just as the expenses of feeding them and securing that natural increase are regarded as deductible expenses. The difference is what the farmer makes out of raising cattle; that is his profit.

Mr. HACKETT: The minister suggested that there might be some means of spreading the profit, as in the case just mentioned by the hon. member for Souris, over a number of years. If a herd has been developed over a period of, let us say twenty years, and it is necessary to allocate the proceeds to each of the past twenty years, surely the interest on the amounts that have been owing since the beginning of the period would run to such a figure that in the result there would be very little relief for the taxpayer.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Could the minister explain this in some detail? As he will realize, now that the war is over, many people who worked hard to produce for the war effort are getting on in years and wish to sell out and retire. With the experience some of their neighbours have had, they are rather fearful about it. To be asked to submit the proceeds of their sales to the department for a ruling is hardly satisfactory. There must be some basis on which this is worked out, and I should like the minister to explain that in some detail. Take an arbitrary figure of $10,000 or $20,000 and spread it over the maximum number of years to show how it would work out. That would give useful information to many people. That figure may be too high, but take some figure and give us an example. Could the minister do that?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not immediately, but I can do so later on. That comes under the Department of National Revenue, and I will get a statement from them.

Mr. FULTON: Following up this question, I should like to point out to the minister that it is difficult to accept his general statement that breeding cattle cannot be regarded as capital, because if you analyse the position I think it is fair to say that a farmer needs a certain proportion of his herd to carry on his business, just as much as any other business man needs capital assets before he can earn an income. In the case of those who confine their agriculture almost entirely to the breeding and sale of beef cattle it is not only their land and buildings that form part of their equipment but also a certain percentage of their herds, because if they did not have that herd in the first place they would not have any annual increase which they could sell and from which they derive their income. Therefore, if you analyse it and compare it with any other business you will see that a portion of the herd must be kept from year to year in order to have any crop at all to sell, and surely it is fair to say that this portion of the herd should be regarded as working capital. One might say it is all the female animals in the herd, though perhaps that is setting it too high. The figure suggested by the hon. member for Souris is seventy-five per cent. In any event we are not concerned here with such details, nor should we demand that these matters be worked out at this moment. I know, however, that the Department of Agriculture has submitted a brief or a recommendation on this subject to the Department of National Revenue. Apparently as yet the details have not been worked out between the two departments, but in view of that recommendation I earnestly hope the minister will give this matter his serious consideration and see if some fair basis cannot be worked out by the time next year's budget is brought down.

The minister mentioned that some relief is given at the moment by averaging up profits and losses over the years. I was in communication with the Department of National Revenue yesterday, and this can be done in two ways. One is by going on what is called the cash basis. A man pays perhaps $10,000 for the purchase of a herd of cattle and he is allowed to deduct that amount from his income. That is the basis of his herd. The proceeds from anything he sells from then on are regarded as income, on which he pays a tax, even though he might sell the whole herd again. The other way is to go on the inventory basis: to establish the value of the herd as at a specific time, and then from year to year declare either an increase or a decrease in that value and pay the tax on the increase whether or not you sell. That goes part way toward meeting what we suggest, because to some extent it recognizes that a certain proportion of the herd is working capital, and you pay income tax on the increase over that from year to year. But in order to do that a farmer has to go back to 1935 and very few farmers in the west, particularly those who went through the depression years, have their records back that far. They have to establish their herd back to the basis of 1935, and that is almost impossible. But it is a beginning; and in recognizing that principle I suggest to the minister he is recognizing actually the principle that a certain proportion of the farmer's herd of cattle, namely his breeding stock, is capital and not income.

I should like to say a word about the seriousness of this matter. On Tuesdey in this chamber one hon. member made some remarks, which I do not believe were intended in any sense to be derogatory, about farmers who are always complaining. This, perhaps, is not so important at the present time, because to-day farmers are relatively prosperous. I am in no sense denying that. They are now in the income tax group, and they are paying taxes. Everyone is pleased about that. But may I remind hon. members who would sometimes believe that farmers complain too much, that those farmers do not get workmen's compensation. A farmer will go through bad times and good times; but in the bad times he will not go on strike.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FULTON: He will continue to produce, and even though times may be bad he will not get compensation or unemployment relief. I would ask hon. members to bear that in mind when to-day, in good times, we ask for some relief on their behalf from income tax.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. I believe I shall have to read the resolution again. It states:

(a) That in respect of persons other than corporations the tax for 1945 be reduced by 4 per cent of the aggregate of the normal tax, the graduated tax and the investments surtax.

Mr. FULTON: My intention was to emphasize that what I have said is serious, and it is a situation which is felt keenly by a large section of our population. I do not think I need emphasize it further.

Might I close by saying that this condition affects a large number of the primary producers of this country. Now that they are being taxed, they do not ask for more than they feel is due them, but they do ask to be put on a fair tax basis which will allow them, when times are good, to expect no more or to be under no greater obligation than when times are bad. In this way they will be able to even up the situation between good times and bad.

Mr. WRIGHT: May I direct the attention of the committee to the class of farmers who, I believe, are most adversely affected by this resolution. I do not believe the commercial breeders or the large ranchers are most adversely affected. My impression is that there is a regulation permitting them to keep their books on a different basis, and to take care of themselves in that way. But there is a group of farmers who are not able to take advantage of those regulations. I refer to those average farmers who build their herds, not through purchasing but through breeding on their own farms over a number of years. Perhaps in those years they have never had great increases in their herds which would place them in the income tax group. Over a period of twenty years they may have accumulated considerable stock. One of those farmers may want to retire, and to sell his stock. There are dozens of farmers in Canada in that position to-day. Many of them carried on during the war longer than they should have. Now they want to retire, and they find that if they dispose of their stock, a considerable portion of the return will be taken by the income tax people, even though the accumulation of that stock has been spread over a number of years, and in those years it has not been taxable. I think this is unfair, especially in those cases where a man would not normally have paid a tax during the years in which he was accumulating his stock.

However, now when he sells he finds that he has to pay perhaps twenty-five per cent, thirty per cent or forty per cent of the sale value. I suggest that the minister should introduce a regulation whereby perhaps seventy-five per cent of those sales would not be taxable. The present situation is certainly not fair, and is causing a great deal of discontent and dissatisfaction, particularly among the average farmers who have accumulated their herds throughout the years. I hope the minister, through his department, will give some thought to this group of people.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Much of what I had intended to say has already been said by the hon. member for Melfort, and the hon. member who preceded him. I wish only to endorse what they have said.

However, there is another class of primary producers concerning whom I should like to say a few words. I refer to the fishermen who produce fish from our fresh water lakes in Manitoba, and the other provinces. They have heavy capital expenditures. I have known some of them to provide 200 or 300 fishing nets and, after placing them in the water, to have them frozen in the ice. Then, with warm weather coming along, probably about this time of the year, the ice will break up and their nets will be swept away. I do not know whether there is anything in this resolution which would give them relief in respect of their loss of capital equipment—because nets are undoubtedly in that class. In the past they have suffered heavy losses by having to provide new nets. When their catches are good, however, they still have to pay income tax.

I wish also to refer to the tax relief of sixteen per cent of the aggregate of the normal tax, the graduated tax and the investment surtax. In this connection I believe there are two things which are not right. It is our belief that the income tax exemption level should have been raised. This would have been a more effective way of giving relief to those in the lower income brackets who need it most. Under the present arrangement they will obtain less benefit.

Second, we believe that the income tax relief should be graduated so as to give those in the lower brackets greater relief from the tax than is given those in the higher brackets. I shall not say more at this time. I do not expect that what I have said will have any great effect, but it was my wish to register this protest.

Mr. FULTON: Would the minister indicate how he feels in this matter?

Mr. ILSLEY: On this question of live stock, we undertook to get a statement from the Department of National Revenue as to the way in which they are treating the matter. I shall read that statement when it is received. I am told that it will not be available at eight o'clock, so that it will be offered when the bill is before us, or at a later stage in the discussion on the resolutions. I shall not have it to-day.

Mr. CHARLTON: On the surface, the process of spreading income in respect of live stock sales sounds very well. However, the question I would ask is this: What happens to previous income? For instance, a man is making $2,000 a year on a farm. Then he will have a sale which nets him $10,000. Would that $2,000 a year be added to his income for each of the previous years, and would he pay income tax on the extra $2,000?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, of course.

Mr. CHARLTON: It would not be of very much advantage to him, then.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is what is being asked for, that he should not have years of loss or very low income, and then in the next year have a very high income on which he pays all the income tax on a high rate. That is the complaint.

Mr. McMASTER: I come from a city, but I am wondering what the difference is, in principle, between a farmer who sells out his whole stock and assets, and a man in the city who sells his hardware business, or any other business. I never heard of a man in the city who was made to pay an income tax when he sold his business.

Mr. ILSLEY: If the hon. member is talking about selling a building, that would be different from selling stock in trade.

Mr. McMASTER: I mean stock in trade.

Mr. ILSLEY: Almost every business man is on an inventory basis. At the end of the year if the value has gone up, that is a profit and he is taxed. If it goes up some more the next year, there is more profit. If it goes down, there is a loss. But he has paid as he has gone along and when he sells out the whole thing he has not much profit in that year upon which to pay income tax.

Mr. McMASTER: He may have left in some of his profits in order to build up his business. That is what many farmers do over a period of years. By thrifty living a man may make a small profit and from year to year he builds up capital from earnings from year to year which is non-taxable.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is the hon. gentleman talking about a merchant or a farmer?

Mr. McMASTER: I am talking about a farmer. After he has allowed that non-taxable profit to remain on his farm—this may be in the form of cattle or implements or other items—he may build up a considerable value over a period of years.

Mr. ILSLEY: Most farmers are in the business of buying and selling cattle.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. ILSLEY: They are certainly in the business of selling them.

Mr. LENNARD: Breeding and selling, not buying and selling.

Mr. ILSLEY: It does not make any difference in principle. If he is breeding cattle, he has the expense of raising them. The price he gets for the cattle is not clear profit; there would be a lot to set off against it. If he elects to conduct his business on a cash basis, then every animal he buys, all the feed he buys and all the costs of looking after them can be set off against his income for taxation purposes. What he receives for an animal or animals when sold must be regarded as income for taxation purposes. If he wishes to go on a different basis, on an inventory basis like the merchant, he can do that as well. If he does that he can spread his profits more evenly than if he keeps on a cash basis.

Mr. McMASTER: I think the minister has missed my point. The profits in any year may be so small that the farmer would not be taxable, and would not put in an income tax return. As I understand it, the income tax authorities would investigate to find out whether the man should be taxed in any one year, and they would take the accumulation of his life's efforts over a great many years and then tell him what part he must pay income tax on, and what part he should have put in a return or consulted the income tax authorities. They would consider taxing the income for that year and having regard to the fact that for the remainder he had never been taxable, that his farm equipment and stock had been built up from non-taxable profits.

Mr. ILSLEY: I stated in the budget speech that I intended to introduce some system of averaging. It is going to be a hard job because you will have to draw a distinction between classes in the community. You cannot average everybody. If we are to avoid charges of discrimination we shall have to go very slowly in this. It may be that we can take the primary producers, the farmers and the fishermen, put them on one side of the fence and then put everybody else on the other side. But then we are going to have continual claims from those who consider they are on the wrong side of the fence. That is something we shall have to face.

They have a system in Australia—I do not know just how it works—whereby they give primary producers a little different treatment. There is a better case for primary producers than there is for anybody else because of the dangers of loss on account of weather and market conditions. In the past, market conditions have not been at all steady, or at least not as steady as they have been in most other businesses. But it is only a matter of degree. There are a lot of businessmen who have had their years of losses and their years of low profits and perhaps years of high profits without any averaging. During the war with the high taxes we have gone part way in allowing losses to be written off against profits of the previous year or against profits of the three following years, and that applies to farmers as well as to everybody else. But that system is objected to on the ground that there may never be a year of loss; there may be years of just small profits, as in the case of these cattle producers. These men will go on without selling very much. They will continue to buy but will not be in the income tax category. Then suddenly the time will come when they want to sell a lot and then they must pay income tax that year. They are put into the higher brackets by that transaction. I understand that the Australian system is to keep them in an average bracket or something like that. I am determined that we are going to do something like that if we can work it out.

Mr. FAIR: I am very grateful to hear the minister make the statement he has to-day and the one he made on the budget. As he has suggested, consideration will have to be given to this whole problem, not only the problem of taxation but the complete picture. We must have a proper policy for agriculture as a whole, because it cannot go on in the future on the basis it has been forced to operate on in the past.

If you look back over the depression years you will see the losses that have been suffered by our farmers when they had to work year in and year out and hardly made their expenses. We are supposed to have been making profits since the war broke out, but I think it will be found that most of those supposed profits have been used to pay debts that were contracted during or before the depression years. I should like to see a period of five years taken as a basis for fixing profits in the case of farmers.

I wish to suggest raising the exemption for both single and married people. I would urge also a reduction in the income tax. I think the minister realizes that in the period after the war the people must have purchasing power if our industries are to be kept busy and be able to take care of our unemployment problem.

Mr. LENNARD: Dealing with the unfairness of the present method of taxing the sale of cattle, I should like to cite one instance. I have in mind a man who lives near my home. For the past twenty or twenty-five years he has been a successful farmer. He bought farms for four or five of his children and he owns several himself. If he sold any of those farms the proceeds would not be taxable. If, instead of buying land, he had put his profits into the purchase of stock and then sold those cattle, the proceeds would be taxable. There are many farmers in my district who are under a great handicap. They are getting on in years and during their lifetime they have built up a considerable herd. If they sell their herds most of the profits would go to the income tax department.

Mr. ILSLEY: If he puts his money into cattle instead of into farms he would have reduced his income tax that year to a marked extent because it would have been treated as an expense.

I think I ought to say in reference to working out some system of averaging for farmers and fishermen that it will be a complicated arrangement, and members of the house who object to complexity and espouse simplicity will be disappointed. It will not be possible to get in and out either; there will be a great temptation to want to average sometimes and not at others. There will have to be an element of rigidity about it, as well as an element of complexity. All this is entirely unavoidable.

Mr. FRASER: I believe that wage deductions would come under this resolution.

Mr. ILSLEY: This is a resolution affecting tax liability, not the method of collecting the tax, but I have no objection to my hon. friend discussing what he has in mind.

Mr. FRASER: I was wondering whether it would not be wise to deduct 100 per cent of the tax on wages at the source instead of only ninety-five per cent as at present, and then not make it compulsory for the wage-earner to fill out an income tax return covering that year's income. Could that not be done? It is quite a chore to many people to have to make out the form. I know that many labour organizations have asked that 100 per cent of the tax on wages be deducted at the source.

Mr. ILSLEY: I would be willing to give consideration to a system of that kind. I was under the impression, although I am told by the officials that I am wrong, that they have enacted something of that kind in the United States. I do not know whether that is so or not. A system of that kind would be convenient but it would not be just.

Mr. FRASER: I think the minister has in mind the suggestion made by a senate committee in the United States that that system be adopted. But I do not think it has as yet been put into force.

Another matter I should like to discuss is one that I have mentioned more than once before, and that is in regard to the portion of the 1942 tax which has not been paid. I will read the item:

> The deferred tax portion (if any) item 5, in respect of investment income in excess of $3,000, becomes due on, and is thereby deferred until the date of the taxpayer's death, with interest from that date at 8 per cent per annum until paid, unless the taxpayer elected to pay and paid on or before 30th April, 1944, at a 2 per cent per annum life expectancy discount.

I would suggest in regard to these taxes that have not been paid on 1942 income that they be allowed to be paid at any date at the same rate that prevailed before, two per cent per annum life expectancy discount, but that when the taxpayer dies his estate should be allowed at least six months. In the United States I believe they allow fifteen months. Six months at least should be allowed, and then after that date charge interest, although I think eight per cent is too high.

Mr. ILSLEY: It runs from the exact date of death, does it?

Mr. FRASER: Yes, interest at eight per cent per annum has to be paid from the date of death. The minister knows that the estate cannot pay it on that day and many estates cannot pay it for many, many months because there are succession duties and this, that, and the other thing to look after. Personally I owe a little myself. I do not know what my estate would do. It might have a hard time getting any money.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think the suggestion is well worthy of consideration. I did not realize that the penalty rate started so promptly.

Mr. FRASER: I brought this matter up when we were discussing the income tax last year and the Minister of National Revenue, now the Minister for Air, I believe said that I was wrong. I hunted up my tax bills and I know I am right.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not agree with the first part of my hon. friend's suggestion that the taxpayers have an option to pay at any time before their death because they pay on a discount basis, the discount being on their life expectancy. The only thing to do in cases of that kind is to fix a date beyond which they can take their option. We may have fixed the date too early, but I do not think so. It was stated in the house that they have a year and a half to two years to exercise this option, and a lot of them did. I do not think I would extend that date. They can pay any time if they want to.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, they can pay any time, but not with advantage.

Mr. ILSLEY: Not on a discount basis, no.

Mr. FRASER: The reason I bring this matter to the minister's attention is that, as he knows, we have had good times and there is the chance that many of those who owe money to the government might in another five or ten years not have a nickel when they die, so that when they die the government would not get a cent. The minister knows that. There is a chance that some of these taxpayers will be absolutely flat broke when they die and the government will be out just that much. That is why I suggest that this be extended for at least a further period. I have made a few suggestions and I hope the minister will look into them. I hope he will look into deducting 100 per cent of the income tax at the source from wages and then forget about the return which the wage-earner is supposed to make in the following year.

Mr. CASE: I just want one question in my own mind clarified because it is a question that we are often asked in connection with the tax on farming. I understand from what the minister said that if the farmer proceeds on the inventory basis from year to year he pays his income tax on his increase in inventory as though it were income. But if he has a farm sale, will the farm sale be subject to tax? Will he be in the same classification then as the hardware merchant if he is paying on the inventory basis?

Mr. ILSLEY: If he has paid on the increment each year in the value of his herd he does not have to pay on the total value of the herd when it is sold.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): When we were talking about the treatment of married couples for taxation purposes, I have in mind the case of the farmer and his wife who work on the farm. There was the distinction that the farmer and his wife were allowed an exemption of only $1,200, whereas the couple working in the city were granted an exemption of $1,800. I was wondering whether the minister has found any way of dealing with that situation.

Mr. ILSLEY: I know exactly what I intend to do about it. I do not know whether it is policy to state it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Can we be hopeful?

Mr. ILSLEY: The concession we made in 1942 was essentially a concession to war workers, to get married women to work in war factories. When a single taxpayer's exemption was put down to $660 the penalty upon a married couple in a city, each of whom worked in a factory, was very great when the married woman earned more than $660, because she then put her husband from the married status into the single status; in many cases he had to pay several hundred dollars more a year in taxes, and they started to leave the factories in very substantial numbers. We just had to change it, as a war necessity.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): So that we can guess what the minister is going to do now.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is wrong in principle—there is no doubt about that—and it will have to be changed. When a man is in receipt of a higher exemption because his wife is dependent upon him although in fact his wife is not dependent upon him, he should, of course, lose that exemption. We could not do that in time of war so that we passed the law we did. We have gone over this argument here time after time. But that is the way in which I expect to be meeting the situation, before too long; I do not know whether it will be in 1946 or not, but it was all gone into at the time we prepared the budget. I do not agree with the reasoning behind the hon. member's argument. I believe that if we were to grant what is asked for, that is if we were to allow farmers to pay their wives $660 a year because they work on the farm, it would not be a month before we would be driven into allowing everybody to do the same thing, and we would just be increasing the married man's exemption to that extent all along the line. I do not think we can do that.

Mr. CASE: Not only that, but a lot of wives would demand it. The minister had better leave it alone.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think that can possibly be done, and I think the other will have to be done.

Mr. GLADSTONE: I have been trying to find a place to ask about single and married status for income tax purposes depending on circumstances of residence. I might give as an example the case of an unmarried lady, a schoolteacher. She and her sister live in her own home. She supports the invalid sister and accordingly, I believe, receives marriage status. Circumstances in connection with her qualification may cause her to lose her position in that city and compel her to go to another town and board there. She still owns her home in the city and maintains her invalid sister in that home. According to a ruling of the income tax department she is therefore placed in the status of a single person. This seems to be a hardship. I have taken up the case with income tax officials, and they so admit, but apparently they have no discretion in the matter. They promised that the case would be brought to the attention of the department. I think it is a matter of principle and justice: it may be difficult from an administrative point of view; nevertheless in justice she should be granted the married status.

Mr. ILSLEY: That cannot be done under the law as it stands now, and I must say I do not see any way in which we could change the law so that it could be done, because there is a big difference between the obligations assumed by a person who has a self-contained domestic establishment and by one who has not. All I can do is give consideration to the hon. gentleman's representations. I do not anticipate that any change in the law can be made this session.

Mr. WRIGHT: The question I wish to ask is perhaps more directly concerned with the Ministry of National Revenue than the Ministry of Finance. I understand that there is some regulation whereby part of the farmer's income, say the portion received from the poultry flock where the wife is taking care of the poultry, may not be included in his tax return as income. I am wondering just where the department draw the line with respect to that. On one farm is a poultry flock of a hundred head, where the income is not very large; on another farm a thousand hens may be kept and the income may be quite large. I should like the Minister of National Revenue to indicate where they draw the line with respect to the amount which may be taken from the farmer's income with respect to special lines such as poultry-keeping or, say, bee-keeping, or maybe where they milk only two or three cows, on a grain farm, and where the cream cheque goes to the woman and is not included in the income of the farmer himself.

Mr. McCANN: It has been the custom of the department to allow the income from a small partial occupation on a farm such as the hon. member has indicated to go as income to the wife. But it will all depend on what that proportion is to the whole operations of the farm. For instance, if they start out in that way and finally develop into an entirely poultry-raising farm, that becomes the chief occupation of the husband.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the department established certain percentages? I want to get at where the line is drawn.

Mr. McCANN: No, it is not laid down as a certain percentage. It depends in the individual case entirely upon the weight—we may call it—or proportion which that bears to the total income of that particular farm.

Mr. WRIGHT: I think there should be some definite percentage or weight to go by; otherwise it will be entirely subject to the discretion of some departmental official who may be fair in all cases, or may not.

Mr. McCANN: What does the hon. member suggest?

Mr. WRIGHT: I think the percentage should be fixed.

Mr. McCANN: What does the hon. member suggest as a percentage?

Mr. WRIGHT: I am not going to make a suggestion. The Minister of National Revenue knows the circumstances much better than I do and knows the intention of the government with respect to this provision. I do not know whether it is the intention of the government to place the farmer's wife in the same position, say, as the woman who is working in industry whom the Minister of Finance has just described. I think there was some suggestion that that is what the department were doing when they made this regulation, and I want to get the thing clarified so that people will know just what they can and cannot do under this provision, because I know there is a tremendous variation in what has been done under it.

Mr. McCANN: No better system has been found of doing it than to weigh each individual case and do what we consider to be fair. As I have said, if it becomes the chief line on that particular farm then it goes in as income for the owner who is in most cases the man.

Mr. HLYNKA: What consideration is being given to men who came to Canada in the late thirties, settled here and took out their naturalization certificate, and who have families in the old land? I have had several of those cases brought to my attention, and in each case the individual was taxed as a single man. Could not some consideration be given to these people, particularly at the present time when they have to send money and assistance to members of their families in Europe?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Brandon): The point raised by the hon. member has caused a good deal of anxiety among certain residents of Canada who are in the exact position which he has mentioned. They have been supporting their families in Europe at such times as they could send remittances there, and when they could not do so they made other provision for those families. They do feel keenly that no allowance has been given them in the matter of income taxes. I know one instance very well, and I feel that the man is labouring under a disadvantage which probably cannot be helped under the existing legislation. However, it is still unfair and places him in an embarrassing position.

Mr. McCANN: That is not a great problem to handle, because any married man who for income tax purposes claims married status and can prove to the satisfaction of the department that he is a married man is taxed at the rate for a married man. If those people of foreign birth, who have, as they claim, a wife in some other country, will produce a certificate to that effect, supported by an affidavit, it is usually accepted; or if they will go to the consul of the country from which they came and obtain a certificate from him to the effect that So-and-so is a married man, that is accepted and he is taxed accordingly; or he is given the allowance which he should be given as a married person.

Mr. HLYNKA: In that connection I have many of those cases and in not one instance was any exemption allowed. The income tax inspector would usually refuse and say to him: "Well, you have no proof that you have been helping your family, and during the past five years while the war was on you could not be helping your family." That is final. He has no place to go. He cannot appeal from the income tax inspector's decision in that instance. Would it not be advisable for the minister to send out a circular or inform the various divisions or income tax branches that they should allow such exemption, provided, of course, that these men can prove that they are married, have families and are helping them from time to time. I think that would simplify matters greatly, and, of course, it deserves serious consideration.

Mr. HACKETT: Has any thought been given to extending deductions or exemptions to second generations? A great many young people went away to war and married. They returned. They are handicapped in earning a livelihood because they are unprepared at the present time for their life's work. They are going to school; they are undergoing training and they have lusty broods of children. The parent of the soldier is supporting those grandchildren who are dependent upon him to the same extent as his own children were twenty or twenty-five years ago. It seems to me that there is a big category of dependents who are overlooked by the statute in its present form.

Mr. McCANN: That is already provided for in the act and in the regulations. If it is indicated and proven that a grandchild is dependent upon a man's parent for its support, the grandparent gets exemption in that regard in his income tax return.

Mr. HACKETT: The proof of matters of this kind must, of course, be submitted to the department. But I think it is generally accepted that so long as the parent is alive the grandchild is not a charge upon the grandparent, although most frequently and inevitably for some years the grandchild is and will, in fact be such a charge.

Mr. FAIR: The question of double taxation has been brought to my attention by—

Mr. HACKETT: Would the hon. gentleman let me get an answer to my question, please?

Mr. McCANN: I think this section covers the question of the hon. member. It reads as follows:

> A taxpayer may deduct from the normal tax otherwise payable by him in any year under this section 28 for each person who was during that year wholly dependent upon that taxpayer and was . . . his grandchild.

Then there are a lot of others included. It goes on:

> . . . except such dependent person by reason of whom such person is taxable under rule 1 of this section who being a taxpayer employs a full-time housekeeper or servant in a self-contained domestic establishment where he supports a child by reason of whom he is taxable under rule 1 of the section, he may not notwithstanding the exception contained in this rule make the deduction permitted under this rule for all the dependents described by him.

Mr. BROOKS: I do not think that covers it. It says, "wholly dependent", and the soldier who has dependents and is going to college at present gets a certain allowance from the government for each child. The child could not be considered as wholly dependent. The phrase "wholly dependent" would shut him out of the income tax deduction.

Mr. McCANN: The child is probably not dependent upon the grandparent at all, if the child's own father has sufficient income to keep him.

Mr. FAIR: The question of double taxation of income has been brought to my attention on a few occasions. By that I mean that a person working in the United States pays income tax on the earnings he made there for part of the year. He then comes back to Canada and earns some more money. He pays tax here; but in addition to paying tax on his earnings in Canada he is also compelled to pay tax on the amount earned in the United States. Is that correct? Why should that Canadian who has already paid tax on his United States earnings be compelled to pay income tax on the whole amount in Canada?

Mr. ILSLEY: He pays a tax on the entire income because he is resident in Canada for part of the year, but he gets credit for that part of the tax which is payable in the United States.

Mr. FAIR: I did not understand it in that way. Two parties who brought this matter to my attention claimed they had to pay the full tax without getting any credit. If that is the case I think the department should see to it that the credit is given.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. STIRLING: There is a point in connection with the forms to be used for the payment of income tax which I wanted to take up with the minister. Since income tax has become heavier in recent years, more and more individuals and business people have had recourse to the assistance of accountants. One such accountant in Vernon, British Columbia, puts a point to me which he thinks has not been mentioned so far, in these words:

Reference to company form T-2 discloses that a company receives a clear six months to file their form from the close of their business year, and as far as I am aware are always able to use the last form printed.

Now, how about the unincorporated individual. He neither knows what the form T-1 general is going to be like nor when it will be printed . . .

In my humble opinion, proprietors and partnerships should be treated equally and should have six months to file their form T-1 general from the time they are available to the public and in no case less than six months from January 1 unless they are available by December 1. An increasing number of taxpayers are requesting services from accountants which they are unable to give and the disparity in time is very unfair.

This particular accountant has previously raised matters in connection with the forms that have to be used, and I remember that last year there was a delay in the printing of the forms. His grievance is that in many instances the accountant is unable to give service to his client because he has not time to do all the work necessary after the printed form becomes available.

Mr. McCANN: At present the regulations provide that all individuals are given a period of four months from the end of the calendar year. The return must be made by the end of April. With companies the period given is six months. I submit that by far the greater number of individuals do not need and do not use expert people like accountants to make out their returns, and that four months is ample time in which to do so. I do not think giving another couple of months, to the end of June, would either have the forms filled in any better or see any greater number of returns made within the time limit. There are always people who are dilatory in making returns; if you gave them eight or nine months the returns would not come in until the tenth month. That is about the experience of the department in reference to income tax returns. When you establish a deadline of April 30, the people who want to have their returns in by that time will do so. So that I do not believe an extension would be of any great advantage to the individual, and I am sure it would slow up the work of the department in making the assessments.

Mr. STIRLING: May I draw the minister's attention to the fact that this complaint partly arises from the fact that the form T-1 general has by no means always been available as early as the end of the fiscal year. If my memory serves me aright, in 1944 the T-1 general form was not available in this part of Canada until a very short time before the date it had to be presented.

Mr. McCANN: I will admit some of that is true, but there are many difficulties in getting out the forms. For instance, the forms for 1945 cannot be put in shape until these resolutions and the bill based upon them actually become law. Then we have the matter of printing difficulties. During the war years particularly, not only the printing bureau but other printing establishments throughout the country whose services we use have been so busy and so short of help that it has been an absolutely physical impossibility to get out the forms as quickly as we would have wished. However, the representations the hon. gentleman has made will be taken into account and we will see if we cannot have the forms out in plenty of time for individuals and companies to make their returns within the time limit.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister will agree, I think, that no leeway is given the unfortunate taxpayer who, for the reasons the minister has mentioned, was not able to get hold of a form in time.

Mr. McCANN: I will just state this, that the records show that although there are four months in which to make the returns, the great bulk of them are made in the month of April and most of them in the last week, so that lack of forms has not held them up.

Mr. HACKETT: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the provision which he was kind enough to read, and with which I am not unfamiliar, does not cover the situation I was drawing to his attention. A young man in this position receives a certain amount monthly, which is increased slightly if he is married and to which is added $10 or $12 a month for each child; but that is available to him only during the period of the year he is attending a college or university. It is enough to disqualify the grandparent entirely for any relief under the income tax act, and makes it impossible for the child and grandchild to survive unless they are helped by the grandparents during that portion of the year which is not devoted to study. Of course on the other hand everyone realizes that the assistance given by the government is totally inadequate for the maintenance of those people even during the period they are attending college or university.

Mr. CAMPBELL: There is another group of people I should like to bring to the attention of the minister, although I do not know whether or not he can help them. I refer to settlers who moved from the dried-out areas into the semi-bush country and who just had their first crops about the time they began to get good prices. When they first moved in they put up temporary shacks. I know that last year quite a few wanted to build themselves decent houses, but because they had quite good crops which were worth a good deal of money the income tax was very heavy, and they were precluded from building their homes. I was wondering if there was any way of giving these people a little help.

Mr. ILSLEY: It would be quite inconsistent with all income tax principles to permit capital expenditure for houses to be regarded as deduction from income for taxation purposes. What I am about to say may not be entirely relevant, but if they were settlers who had suffered losses in the place from which they moved, such losses may now be set off against profits in other years. That is, the loss in any particular year may be carried back against the profits of the previous year, or against the profits of the three following years. This system has been in force for only a year or two; nevertheless, in cases where there are actual losses there is some mitigation of the rigours of the income tax in years of high profits and high gains. I cannot see any hope of making any change in the law which will allow persons to build houses for themselves out of their profits, and of that being allowed as a deduction for income tax purposes.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This particular group will have to start all over again. They lost practically everything they had.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Has the minister given consideration to the greater decentralization of income tax administration? In British Columbia the administration is centred in Vancouver, and the great majority of the people have no contact with it. I have heard it suggested on many occasions that if the administration were decentralized it would do a great deal to speed up the service of the department, and in this way the department would be able to give more satisfactory service and advice to the majority of the people.

Mr. McCANN: The matter of district reorganization has been under review for the past year. A year ago a committee was set up to study the whole problem with respect to the matter. Ten days or two weeks ago I tabled in the house—and a copy was tabled in the other place—the report of that commission. Although this report has not yet been accepted by the government, there is an outline of a plan for greater district organization from one end of the country to the other. This is done with a view to giving better service to the public. Then, it will give assistance to some of the offices in the larger centres by the setting up of subdivisions to assist offices which are already overworked.

I am not prepared to make a statement as to the exact location of these new offices until such time as this report has the endorsation of the government. I can only say that the matter is well in hand, and that it is the purpose and the aim of the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue to give the public better service, both by opening up new districts, and by adding to the staff as many competent people as we can get and are needed.

Mr. FRASER: Every year I have referred to these district offices. I hope that an office will be put in Peterborough. Last year one man was sent up there, and was placed in the back of the customs house. Very few people knew he was there.

In many instances the final receipts for income tax payments are not sent out for two or three years. Taxes may be due, but the taxpayer may believe he has made a full payment. Then the government will come along and tell him that he should have paid a tax on this or on that. In my view this condition is not fair to the taxpayer, particularly when he must wait two or three years for his bill, and have included on that bill interest for that length of time. We have noticed that this has happened in the Belleville district, which serves Peterborough. I must say, however, that that district is served much better since the addition of more staff. I do not think the taxpayer should be charged interest until he gets his bill. It would be proper to make the charge from the time he receives it until the bill is paid. What does the minister think about this?

Mr. ROBINSON (Simcoe East): What is the present position of those persons who have maintained in their homes British refugee children during the war, and who are still maintaining them? Has the department given any consideration to extending income tax deductions to those people? They have been put to a great deal of expense and are worthy of great credit.

Mr. ILSLEY: Perhaps the hon. member is familiar with the history of the situation respecting British children. A distinction was drawn between children from the United Kingdom who came under a government-sponsored scheme, and those who did not. With regard to the former class some deduction for income tax purposes was allowed the Canadian taxpaper who took these children who were moved under an arrangement made between the governments. However, no such deduction was allowed in other cases.

The relevant amendment in 1944 was as follows:

In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, words referring to a child of a taxpayer include

(b) a person who is under 18 years of age and wholly dependent on the taxpayer for support and of whom the taxpayer has in law or in fact the custody and control.

That was the first time parliament accepted the principle that a deduction could be allowed in respect of a child who was not a child of the taxpayer, either in fact or by adoption. But since that time a taxpayer may get a deduction in respect of any child who is wholly dependent or, as the section says, any child under eighteen years of age who is wholly dependent on the taxpayer for support, and of whom the taxpayer has in law or in fact the custody and control.

I would suppose that some of the British children who are here are not wholly dependent upon the Canadian taxpayer for support. In that event, if they are only partly dependent, there would not be a deduction. But for those who are wholly dependent the deduction is now allowed.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Brandon): What is the status for tax purposes of children from the United Kingdom maintained in Canada?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know whether there is any special advantage there or not. The provision with regard to government-sponsored transfers of children was never repealed, so far as I recollect. So that the taxpayer who has custody of one of those children has two sections under which he might come. Whether one section is more advantageous than the other, I do not know.

Mr. FRASER: I should like the minister to tell us what he thinks about my suggestion that the interest should not start until the taxpayer receives his account from the department.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not agree with it. Here you have one taxpayer who correctly computes his tax liability and pays his money. You have another taxpayer who incorrectly computes his tax liability and keeps part of the money which it is eventually decided should have gone to the crown. The suggestion is that he keep it interest free, and I do not see the equity in that.

Mr. FRASER: I doubt very much whether the minister could probably make out an income tax form and be absolutely correct according to the decisions of the offices across the country. Every one of them has a different idea as to the rulings. The matter must come to Ottawa when any one objects or is not sure; it goes through the office here and eventually gets back to the district office. Perhaps a year or two or three years may elapse. There may be a dispute over an amount that should be payable. I know of one case where there was a difference of $700. The taxpayer thought he was entitled to it, and it was two years before it was decided that he was not entitled to it. I understand that the district office said he was entitled to it but the head office said he was not. When there is any doubt about the matter I do not think the taxpayer should pay interest.

Mr. WRIGHT: A few moments ago the minister said that it was against the principles of the income tax that deductions should be allowed for the building of homes.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. WRIGHT: When the minister considers the matter of taxation before his next budget I think he should give some consideration to changing that principle. I would suggest that it be done this year, because there is a scarcity of material and it might bring about an increase in the price ceiling, but in another year serious consideration might be given to permitting deductions from income tax for what is spent on the building of a home. We need homes in Canada and we need better homes. It is very difficult for people, especially those in the lower income groups, to acquire a home under our present income tax structure. I am not suggesting that deductions be allowed where a home costing $10,000 or $20,000 or $50,000 is built, but I think serious consideration should be given to allowing some exceptions in the case of the moderate home costing from $5,000 to $7,000. There is a tremendous need for homes of that type; there is a tremendous need for housing on our farms, in our industrial areas and in our towns and villages practically all over Canada.

Mr. McMASTER: I should like to bring up a matter which perhaps should have been brought up earlier. It has to do with ministers; not ministers of the crown but ministers of the gospel. I believe it has been decided by the income tax authorities that no allowance for an automobile can be made to ministers. Take a minister out west or in some parts of Ontario; he may have several charges and it is imperative that he have an automobile. Some fair allowance should be made on an annual basis without its being necessary for these men to keep the receipts they get every time they buy gas or oil. There should also be a reasonable depreciation allowance. An automobile is absolutely necessary in their work and some fair allowance should be granted.

Mr. JACKMAN: This question has come up in previous sessions. I am not going to press it now, but I want to let the minister know that at some time or another we want some action. There should be not only an allowance not only for automobiles which are needed by ministers to visit their flocks, but be some exemption in regard to the cost of the automobile. This brings to my mind the old question of clergymen of the Protestant religion who are paid so much money as against priests of the Roman Catholic church who do not receive salaries or stipends. Some take the vow of poverty and do not have a fixed income. At any rate they are not assessable and I think that point will be granted. Whether a man has a family or whether he is a celibate he has to have a roof over his head. If we are to have equality between the two religions in this country, some consideration should be given to ministers of the Protestant persuasion who must provide themselves with a manse or a lodging of some description. If the church sees fit to give the minister a manse, the rental value must be computed and added to his income and he pays on the total amount.

I am only asking that equality prevail as between the two religions. I think all members of this house believe that we must have equality, no matter what faith one belongs to. I will leave it with the minister at the present time. This is a matter which comes up periodically, although I have not had any letters on it this particular session. But it has come up in previous years, and those of us who belong to the Protestant persuasion believe that equality of treatment should be given to our ministers.

I should like to ask the minister under what section of the income tax act is the wife of a farmer able to carry on a poultry division of her own and not have her income bulked in with the general income of the farm? Is that done under a section of the income tax act?

Mr. McCANN: There is no particular form for that type of return; it just gets down to a matter of practice and regulation where the law does not see the last nickel or the last drop and takes into consideration the peculiar circumstances of the woman on the farm. I just want to make one observation with reference to the remarks the hon. member made about the taxation of clergymen. As far as income tax returns are concerned, clergymen of all denominations in Canada are dealt with on exactly the same basis.

Mr. JACKMAN: If the minister had enough experience in his department—

Mr. McCANN: I have had plenty of experience. I do not propose to let the hon. member for Rosedale broadcast any such statement to the people of Canada as he has done. I know his purpose.

Mr. JACKMAN: You know my purpose? Apparently the minister is imputing motives, although I do not know just why. If he is imputing motives, I ask him to withdraw.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is nothing to withdraw.

Mr. JACKMAN: He said, "I know his purpose." What is my purpose?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Something trivial I would say.

Mr. JACKMAN: I am asking for equality in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no implication.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister said that he thought he knew my purpose. I happened to be handling a matter, a religious matter, that requires a certain amount of delicacy. The minister has made an imputation—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. All that the hon. member needs to do is to state that he has no purpose and the minister must accept his statement.

Mr. JACKMAN: I will tell the minister what my purpose is. My purpose is to obtain equality. I understand—I may be wrong in this, and I am not suggesting that there is anything wrong with the departmental administration—that there is by reason of circumstances that cannot be changed an inequality in the treatment of housing accommodation which the Protestant clergy have as against that of the Roman Catholic clergy. I do not, from what I know, believe that the Roman Catholic clergy receive stipends in the same way that the Protestant clergy do. Many Roman Catholic clergymen take vows of poverty and therefore cannot have any incomes; yet they must live and have a roof over their heads. There is a disparity there and I ask that consideration be given to it.

As to the other matter, the minister will find that what I have said after looking into this matter for a long time is a fair statement. I was not trying to raise a difficult issue with him. I think that my statement was quite justified; that the case I put was a reasonable one and that I did not need to be put in my place as the minister tried to do.

I have also asked what particular form the farmer uses in order that his wife may have a separate account for the poultry division of the farm or whatever it may be. The minister says that there is no separate account. I am not suggesting for one moment that the farmer's wife is not entitled to some return for her services, but in my riding, particularly in one section where there are thousands of small shops, there are many wives who work in the shop during the day in addition to doing all their housework and getting meals for the family, and also work late at night in the shop, particularly at this season of the year. If there is a section of the income tax which allows justice to be done to the farmer's wife who helps her husband I want the same justice to be done to the wives of the men who live in my riding and who help to swell the total of the storekeepers' earnings, and I ask under what section is this done with respect to the farmer's wife, or is there some rule or regulation that the ordinary taxpayer does not know about? Let us know what the law of the land is, so that we can tell where we stand. If there is such a section of the act I should like to know about it, and I would feel it incumbent upon me to advise those wives who do work in the store with their husbands that they are entitled to the same treatment as the farmer's wife. I do not want to make it so difficult that it cannot be administered, but I think we must have a certain amount of justice in this matter.

Mrs. STRUM: I am sorry that I have not heard all this discussion. I should like to ask the minister if a wife who teaches school submits a separate income tax statement from her husband's?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mrs. STRUM: And does he get an exemption for her as his wife?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mrs. STRUM: And she gets another exemption as teacher?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mrs. STRUM: Which means that if you teach school you get an edge of $600 on the woman who helps her husband on the farm or in the store.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know that it is correct to say that you get an edge of that much, but undoubtedly the taxation system is just as the hon. member has described it.

Mrs. STRUM: I would ask the minister to give consideration to the question that the hon. member for Rosedale has just raised, because there is no doubt that the wife on the farm has always had an economic value. I know. You start in the morning and wash the separator. It is not possible for your husband to milk the cows, for instance, or to attend to the family garden, or to the whole business of raising chickens, which provides a valuable addition to the nation's food supply. All this depends upon whether the wife is willing to undertake that work. It is in the interest of the production of cream and butter and cheese and chickens that we should give recognition to the wife and allow an additional exemption for the work she does in assisting her farmer husband, and by the same token an exemption should also be allowed for the woman who helps her husband in the store or post office.

Mr. ILSLEY: This was fully discussed before the hon. member came in this afternoon and I do not think it is necessary to repeat what I said then. I see no possibility of making a special exemption. It would amount to fixing in the law an allowance by the husband to his wife for the work she does that contributes to his income, and it would be utterly impossible to draw the line anywhere, as far as I could see, because nearly all wives do work which contributes to the earning of the income by the husband. I do not think we can do anything like that.

The argument of equity which was raised by the hon. member for Souris, and which he has raised in previous years, was that the wife who leaves the home and goes out and earns money, perhaps making it necessary for someone else to work in the home, is permitted to submit a separate income tax return and nevertheless the husband does not lose his status as a married person. But as I explained to the hon. member this afternoon the reason why this was done in 1942 was that we had to meet an acute and emergent situation as far as workers in war factories were concerned. One can tell what the value of the services of the wife is in that case; it is what she gets in cash. In the other case I do not think it would be possible for the law to go to every farm and into every home and store and assess the value of the wife's services to the husband as far as the earning of his income is concerned. We may as well face this fact, that if we make a special concession for one case, we must do it for all.

Mr. JACKMAN: There is one other point I wish to raise. We have done everything on our side of the house to curtail this debate in order to get on with the business of the house, because we realize that this is in a sense a temporary budget, eleven months of the year having gone by and that we shall soon be meeting here again. I wish to ask the minister whether the main provision of the budget, whereby a reduction at the rate of sixteen per cent will be put into effect for the last quarter of this year, representing four per cent for that period, may from the point of view of the department preclude any further tax relief for 1946, if we pass the resolution now?

Mr. ILSLEY: It does not make it impossible.

Mr. JACKMAN: No. I know that legally one parliament, or one session of parliament, cannot bind another. We do as we want to here. But in the minister's view is this provision of 16 per cent relief from taxation to be the final measure of relief for 1946?

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot make predictions about what will be done in the next budget. I should not be pressed to do that.

Mr. SINNOTT: I see, according to to-day's paper, that the butter ration may be reduced next year. The little discussion which has taken place here reflects back to the farm wife. I venture to say that a very large proportion of the public do not know how much the farmer's wife contributes to the butter production of this country, and in my opinion some way must be found to encourage butter production. Although we have over 100,000 more cattle in Canada than previously, the trend is to lower production, in butter, as well as in hogs, and there is only one reason for it. When taxation takes away beyond a certain amount of a person's income the taxpayer begins to think that he will not produce any more because the proceeds are going to be taxed away from him. The only way I can see to relieve this condition is to raise the amount of exemption to, say $5,000, and then we shall have a freer flow of goods. But we cannot continue to tax the ability of people to produce without having a great curtailment of production all the way down the line.

Mrs. STRUM: I wish to thank the minister for the detailed explanation he gave of his law. Sometimes I think we tend to regard our own laws as we regard the law of gravity beyond our control; I do not think that is a legitimate basis on which to argue, because here you have a situation where you are asking someone to undertake production, and am I to understand that we have never made concessions to anybody for the production of certain articles? We have made all kinds of grants in the matter of income tax exemptions, through accelerated depreciation and a number of other devices, in order to get certain jobs done and certain articles produced. Is it suggested that in order to give consideration to the economic contribution which the wife makes on her farm that she and her neighbour change places and they pay each others wives for the work? Not only have farm women produced all kinds of food during the war, but they have helped to build up an industry. It is not a matter of whether a man on a farm can afford a wife; a man on a farm cannot afford to be without a wife. She is the most useful general-purpose labour-saving device there is on the farm.

Mr. JAQUES: Where does the husband come in?

Mrs. STRUM: On the basis of the consideration we give to other groups and other industries in order to get certain articles produced, I think it is only just, as an hon. member has suggested, that we raise the exemption, recognizing the need to produce more food and to encourage women to do the thing that they are equipped to do, namely to assist their husbands in producing. I suggest that we review our own law and the basis for it if this is the way it stands at the moment.

Mr. BURTON: I wish to support the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in her argument. I think she gave a very good argument, and I would support it further because I know what it is to try to farm without a wife on the farm.

Mr. PROBE: I should like to ask the minister one brief question before six o'clock, and that is with respect to the exemptions to which professional persons are entitled. Is it true that certain professions are given exemptions from income tax to permit them to pursue post-graduate courses or for the purchase of equipment such as medical kit or books needed in their profession? I have in mind teachers, professors, and so on. I should like an answer covering these two cases, the case of persons pursuing post-graduate work, and who may be said to be maintaining the capital equipment with which the professional man operates; and in the second case, expendable equipment, such as the books of the teacher or the medical kit of the doctor.

Mr. ILSLEY: No; the expense of post-graduate work is not allowed. With regard to books and instruments, I do not know. If the outgo is small it is regarded, I think, as an operating expense of carrying on the business rather than a capital expenditure.

Mr. PROBE: The department would rule that this is an expense of doing the business of the profession, but that the study portion—the sabbatical year study and so on—is not considered an expense?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right. In the case of equipment, instruments and books, they would not be allowed in large sums because that would be a capital expenditure; but there is a small running expenditure which is allowed as an expense.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. SINNOTT: I should like to thank the hon. member for Qu'Appelle for her kind remarks.

Progress reported.

DOMINION PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

STATEMENT ON WAR LABOUR REGULATIONS

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I with the consent of the house, be permitted to make a brief statement.

During the afternoon session of the coordinating committee of the dominion-provincial conference yesterday, I made a statement to the committee on behalf of the government, which I now desire to repeat to the house. As far as we can now see into the future, it will be necessary to continue for a considerable period certain regulations arising from the war. This period may be a year; it may be less or more than a year.

The war measures relating to collective bargaining and wage control, as part of the price control machinery, are integrated matters. It is government policy to continue these war labour measures until at some future date they can be discontinued without the risk of contributing to inflation. Whatever the date, sufficient notice of the proposed discontinuance of federal administration of measures relating to collective bargaining and wage control will be given to provincial governments to enable them to take in these fields whatever administrative action they may deem necessary. It was indicated by the representatives of the provinces that they desired to continue to cooperate in the policy as they have during the war.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

22. To provide for an appropriate additional tax dependent on the income of the taxpayer in cases where family allowance payments are received in order to adjust the benefits in respect of dependent children.

Mr. FLEMING: I think this resolution is in a class by itself, because it frankly proposes an increase in a tax. As the proposal stands I think it requires considerable clarification if the committee is to understand it, and I would ask the minister to be good enough to give us an explanation. On reference to the statement the minister made on October 12, as reported at page 1006 of Hansard, as closely as I can follow his remarks on that occasion there is some indication that the amendment proposed is to give effect to the changes in family allowances made by order in council last spring at the time the remainder of the 1944 income tax became payable. However, if one follows the remarks of the minister as they are found at the conclusion of the long paragraph in the second column on page 1007 it is apparent that the new scale of adjustments to be proposed is for 1946, and not for 1945 at all.

In the face of this situation, would the minister be good enough to make a statement to clarify what is proposed here? It seems to me that most people understood that when they received family allowances it was not to cost them something in terms of taxation. But the statement of the minister on October 12 indicates that there is to be a considerable recapture of the amount of the allowances. Would the minister be good enough to clarify this proposal?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. This resolution will give effect to the principle approved by the house when the Family Allowances Act was passed, that double benefits should not be given by way of family allowance and income tax credits for the same child. The schedule of rates designed to eliminate this duplication as far as possible has been in use for purposes of tax deductions since the payment of allowances commenced in July, 1945.

The amendment to the law will authorize the payment of final liability under these rates for 1945, and will authorize tables of rates appropriate for use in 1946. The scale for 1946 will be slightly different from that of 1945, because we have tried so far as possible to give effect to the reduction in income tax which will obtain in 1946.

[Mr. Maybank.]

This is a most difficult matter, of course, because it was clearly understood at the time the family allowances bill was introduced by the Prime Minister that persons who are getting a deduction from their income tax in respect of children would not get an additional or duplicate benefit through receipt of family allowances.

But there are so many different tax values for children, depending upon the income, the number of children above sixteen years of age, and the number of dependents other than children, that it is impossible to make a scientific elimination of duplications. So that after putting an enormous amount of work on the problem of elimination of duplication last spring, we finally decided that the only way we could do it would be to pay family allowances to everybody who applied for them and who had children under sixteen years of age, and then to make an approximate elimination of the duplication.

The way we did it then was to provide that anyone with an income over $3,000 would be obliged, in effect, to pay back family allowances. In other words, it would be of no benefit whatsoever for persons who were in receipt of incomes over $3,000 to apply for family allowances, because the duplication there would be complete. We decided that for those who had incomes of up to $1,200 there would be no attempt to make any recapture at all, and that between $1,200 and $3,000 there would be a graded recapture. Perhaps "recapture" is not the best word in the world to use, but it is an attempt to eliminate the duplication. It is not a tax on family allowances. Rather, it is an adjustment by this method of the income tax credits, in consideration of the fact that the taxpayer has received family allowances, and it was understood that he was not to get both. It was also understood that he would get the larger of the two in all cases. Approximately speaking, the table we put into effect for the period from July 1, 1945, on, which will be confirmed exactly as it is in the legislation we shall propose for the year 1945, does this.

Mrs. STRUM: Mr. Chairman, I feel slighted. I am the only person eligible to collect, and the minister is not even looking this way.

Mr. ILSLEY: The table for 1946 will be slightly more generous, in view of the fact that the income tax is reduced. Therefore it may be argued that the tax value per child will be reduced for the year 1946. So that the two tables will be placed before the house for its approval. It will not be exact. In many cases we will not eliminate duplication. The taxpayer will get some benefit. In most cases he will get more than the larger of the two benefits, but in some cases he may get slightly less. However, it is a pretty close approximation.

Mr. FRASER: Could the table be put on Hansard, so that we may have it when the bill is before us?

Mr. ILSLEY: It will be with the bill. After the bill gets first reading an opportunity will be given hon. members to study it. This is not the only thing they will want to study, because the bill will be fairly complicated, and there will have to be a few days given hon. members for the purpose of studying it.

Mr. MacNICOL: I hope I am not too late to discuss a matter which possibly should have been discussed earlier. However, I was not in the house this afternoon, having arrived only this evening. Since this is the last resolution under the Income War Tax Act, I should like to place before the minister the case of a Toronto gentleman—and I know the minister is familiar with it. This is a man who had been in the United States for some years, and had worked to a point where he was receiving a very good income. Later, however, he decided to return to Canada, and made his return when the year was half over. He received, first, his United States income, and then came back to Canada and earned income here.

He was taxed in Canada on the income which he made in the United States, and on which he had already paid United States income tax, and then of course he was taxed on the income he made here in Canada. Is the minister familiar with the case?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have forgotten the name.

Mr. ILSLEY: The name does not make any difference. I am not familiar with the case, but that is the practice which is followed. The gentleman would be taxed on his entire income, but he would be entitled to a credit against his Canadian tax of the United States tax that he had to pay.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to know that. I shall send him the Hansard for to-day, because the information and figures he sent me showed that he had to pay in Canada on the whole of his income, and also a second time on the part he got in the United States. He paid two income taxes.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: In the net result he does not pay two income taxes. He is liable for a Canadian tax because he was resident in Canada part of the year. He may also be liable for a United States tax.

Mr. MacNICOL: He paid that.

Mr. ILSLEY: If he paid it, then he is entitled to a credit against the Canadian tax of the amount of the United States tax, provided that the United States is not higher, and I do not think it would be.

Mr. McMASTER: Is it not a waste of time to send out cheques to men whose salaries are more than $2,400? In the case of a man with a salary from $2,400 to $2,600, under the present system of deductions he will have to repay seventy per cent of the money he receives.

Mr. ILSLEY: Correct.

Mr. McMASTER: In the case of a salary between $2,600 and $2,800 it will be eighty per cent, and from $2,800 to $3,000 it will be ninety per cent.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. McMASTER: If a man is employed and his employer is deducting the tax, he is all right, but where a man is not employed it seems to me that there is a good chance of this money not being recovered. Actually you are only lending the man some money because you are going to get practically all of it back. I noticed with some consternation that the cost in postage alone for sending these cheques out for the nine months of the current fiscal year was $500,000, and I suppose there are other expenses. I suppose as far as the government is concerned it is simply taking it out of the one pocket and putting it into the other; I suppose the Post Office Department would benefit from that $500,000, or it might be only a bookkeeping entry, but there is a certain amount of work involved on the part of the postmen and those sending out the cheques. It is not particularly beneficial to the recipient to give him money which he will have to pay back when he might be less able to pay it. As he gets it he is likely to spend it, being human. There are few people who are able to save money. It seems to me that in the case of those in the higher income brackets, where the greater part of the money will be recovered, it is unwise to send out the cheques.

Mr. ILSLEY: This is an administrative problem. The Department of National Health and Welfare are of the opinion that they cannot possibly make deductions from the regular family allowance monthly payments, depending on the income of the recipient. They do not know what the income is or what it will turn out to be at the end of the year. The only way it can be adjusted is to have it done by the taxing department. As the hon. gentleman has quite properly pointed out, we may lose some of the money. There will be some from whom an amount will not be recovered, but I do not think the loss will be very great, particularly as most people in the country are paying their income taxes currently, either by having them deducted from their pay cheques or by paying in instalments as they go along. An overwhelming majority of the taxpayers in the country are paying their taxes in that way. The officials all say that this is by far the cheapest and simplest administrative method of eliminating duplication. They say that we should have one simple rule in the Department of National Health and Welfare; that is, to pay family allowances in full to everybody who applies for them and who can qualify. They advise that that be done irrespective of what the income is and then have adjustments made in the taxation.

Mr. HACKETT: Does the act provide any means whereby the allowance may be stopped before a child has passed out of the age limit or died?

Mr. ILSLEY: My recollection is that it provides for the payment to the proper person, to the mother as it is administered, in respect of all children under sixteen years. There is a section, perhaps unnecessary, included to make it clear beyond peradventure that nothing in the act shall prevent an adjustment in tax deduction in respect of the children so as to eliminate duplication.

Mr. HACKETT: If a man is earning more than $3,000 a year, could he inform the department and stop the payment of the allowance to his children?

Mr. ILSLEY: He can withdraw his application for children's allowances; he may refrain from applying.

Mr. HACKET: I know he can refrain from applying, but once the flow has started, is there any way to stop it before the child dies or reaches the age of sixteen?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think we have infringed on personal liberty to such an extent that we can compel a man to take money that he refuses to take. He has a statutory right to the money which he can waive.

Mr. HACKETT: I thought the right was vested in the child with the money being administered by the parents.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not vested in the child. The person entitled to the money is the mother, not the child.

Mr. BOUCHER: I think the minister could give more publicity to that point, because there are many people who do not realize that if their income is over $3,000 they gain nothing by applying for family allowances. As I understand the matter, a person with an income of $2,500 does not gain anything, and I think there would be fewer applications and a great deal of duplication, effort and cost would be avoided if greater publicity were given to this matter.

Mr. ILSLEY: We published it in every newspaper in Canada, by way of advertisements and in the news columns, and we advertised it over the radio. We did everything we possibly could to inform the people of Canada last May or June.

Mr. BOUCHER: Does the minister mean to say that he has publicized the fact that those with incomes of $3,000 or more would not gain by it?

Mr. ILSLEY: We certainly did.

Mr. CASE: Many of these family allowance cheques are made payable to the mother. Some three or four years ago I had some correspondence with the minister by which I tried to promote the thought that either the wife or the husband should be recognized as the head of the household. I can remember when the income tax exemption was $2,000 for a married man and $1,000 for a single man. Now the exemption is reduced to $660, which puts both the husband and the wife into the single category. Even at this late day I think the government should give consideration to this problem, because there is a tendency to attempt to lower the income of the wife below $660 in order that the husband may again enjoy the benefit of a married man's income tax exemption. This leads to a certain amount of fraud. Trust agreements are entered into whereby certain assets belonging to the wife are turned over to the husband in order to reduce her income below $660. They should be given the right to decide between themselves who is to be the head of the family. We know that in some houses the wife is the head of the household, but whoever is the head should be entitled to the exemption. I suppose that as a general rule it would be the ordinary breadwinner of the home, the husband, but he should have the exemption that a married man would enjoy. Then the wife could be taxed as a single person. What happens now is that these allowances are paid to the mother.

How are you going to account for that? A woman may have two or three children, but the amount paid to her in the form of family allowances will not be enough to make her income taxable and the government will lose, even though the husband may be earning a taxable income. I should like the minister to explain how they propose to offset the cheques that are payable to the mother, who, we will assume, has no earned income. Therefore she will receive the family allowance while her husband has an income that will be taxed. What becomes of the income in a case of that kind?

Mr. ILSLEY: The family allowance is not taxable. It is exempt from taxation by statute. The husband is taxed on his income, and in the higher income categories he is taxed more than he otherwise would be by virtue of the fact that the wife gets the family allowance income. That is proper, because the receipt of the family allowance reduces the dependency of the child on the father, and therefore he should not have the same tax deduction with respect to that child that he otherwise would have. That is what is meant by the elimination of duplication of benefits.

Mr. CASE: If the cheque goes to the home, do I understand that the husband when making his return has to state whether or not the family allowance was received on account of the child?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. McMASTER: I would like the minister to believe that I am helping him because the minister of health goes around spreading happiness by issuing these cheques and then another minister spreads gloom by taking the money back.

Mr. ILSLEY: I hardly agree.

Mr. McMASTER: That is why I want the minister to understand that I am working hard for him. I think it is possible on the part of the government to avoid this trouble as they have a formula whereby they can prevent the sending out of the cheques, because a statement has been sent out to employers showing how much they must deduct from the wages of their workmen. The same statement could be used by the Department of Health in reducing the amount of the cheque. It is simple enough when you go at it in the right way. The employer gets it back, but unfortunately the Minister of Health does not know and does not want to know and does not want to hold it back. I should like to prevent the sending of the cheque and then the enforced recovery, and I suggest that the Minister of Finance take the matter up with the Minister of Health and make a more equitable distribution of the joys and sorrows of office.

Resolution agreed to.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX ACT, 1940

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940, and to provide:

1. That individuals and partnerships be exempt from the 15 per cent tax on total profits of 1946.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In his budget address the Minister of Finance said that he would make no statement on the taxation of cooperatives until after the commission's report had been tabled. Since the report has now been tabled, would the minister state whether the government has reached a decision as to the taxation of cooperatives this year?

Mr. ILSLEY: The government has not yet made a decision. It will be impossible to do it in this budget, and whether we do it by separate legislation or not I doubt whether we shall be able to do it this session.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: You will not be using the emergency powers act to do it?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is not likely to be done this session?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not likely to be. It may be; there is no decision by the government. If there is a decision to do something it will have to be made very soon. But present probabilities are that that question will not be tackled this session.

Resolution agreed to.

2. That the tax on excess profits of individuals and partnerships in 1946 be reduced from 100 per cent of the excess profits to 60 per cent of that portion of the excess profits which are in excess of 117·647 per cent of the standard profits, and that the provision for refund of a portion of the tax be repealed.

Mr. FLEMING: A statement might be made here by the Minister of Finance by way of correction of an impression that has gone abroad as a result of some emphasis that was put in the budget speech and in press comments on the proposed reduction in the excess profits tax. The thought that went abroad was that there was to be in place of the 100 per cent less twenty per cent excess profits tax a straight sixty per cent. But actually what is proposed is sixty per cent, plus a formula based on a breaking point. I suggest that to the average taxpayer "breaking point" is represented by the present scale of taxation, but for the purposes of this resolution the breaking point has to do with these figures with reference to standard profits; namely, in the case of individuals and partnerships 117·647 per cent of the standard profits; in the case of corporations and joint stock companies which have filed consolidated returns, 117·241 per cent of the standard profits; and in the case of other corporations and joint stock companies 116·667 per cent of the standard profits. When you come to apply this formula to the calculation of the excess profits tax that will be payable, the minister will agree that you do not get a uniform excess profits tax of sixty per cent based on the present rate. I have some calculations before me which show that it would result as follows:

If the reduction were calculated on the present tax structure and the sixty per cent tax were applied without the introduction of this new formula with the breaking point, there would be a lower tax than the resolution proposes on companies having profits between 116·66 per cent and 155·55 per cent of standard profits. Similarly, where there are excess profits of 155·55 per cent of standard profits, the present proposals would work out the same as sixty per cent on the old basis without the new formula. Similarly, corporations with excess profits of more than 155·55 per cent of standard profits will actually pay less than the sixty per cent would amount to apart from the application of the formula. In view of the impression that has gone abroad that the new proposals call for a straight sixty per cent excess profits tax calculated on the old basis, it is desirable that the minister make a statement clarifying the position because that is not the way it is going to work out. There will be variations depending upon the application of the formula to the amount of excess profits.

Mr. ILSLEY: Under the present law sole proprietors and partnerships are required to pay an excess profits tax equal to the greater of either fifteen per cent of total profits or 100 per cent of excess profits. The practical effect of this provision is that when total profits are less than 117·647 per cent of standard profits the fifteen per cent rate on total profits applies, but when total profits exceed 117·647 per cent of standard profits the 100 per cent rate on excess profits applies, since this gives a tax greater than fifteen per cent of total profits above this point.

It is proposed by these two resolutions that the fifteen per cent rate be repealed and that a rate of sixty per cent be levied on profits in excess of 117·647 per cent of standard profits in place of the present rate of 100 per cent. It will be recalled that twenty per cent of the 100 per cent rate now payable on profits in excess of 117·647 per cent of standard is refundable to the taxpayer after the war. In reducing the rate to sixty per cent the requirement of paying this refundable portion has been dropped and, in addition, another twenty per cent of the 100 per cent rate has been removed, leaving a net rate of sixty per cent.

In consequence of this change no sole proprietor or partnership will pay any excess profits tax on 1946 income if such income falls below 117·647 per cent of its standard profits, and will pay a rate of sixty per cent of its profits in excess of 117·647 per cent of its standard profits if its total profits come above this point.

Is that the explanation the hon. gentleman desires?

Mr. FLEMING: My point goes beyond that. It is the effect of the application of this formula in regard to the breaking point on corporations. Take the various classes, those whose excess profits happen to be on the breaking point, those below, and those above, because it does not work out at a uniform basis of sixty per cent on the present tax basis. I am speaking now of the impression which has gone abroad about the effect of the proposed reductions. It is not simply a reduction to sixty per cent based on the present calculation; there has been introduced a new formula with a breaking point which has to be taken into account. That is my point.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think that nearly all business men, certainly all chartered accountants in the country, and a great many lawyers, understand this breaking point. The provisions regarding excess profits tax—I am speaking now about excess profits tax on corporations, because that is the case which ordinarily occurs—

Mr. FLEMING: That is what I was speaking of, too.

Mr. ILSLEY: After you go all through the complicated provisions of the excess profits tax the method of computation is fairly simple. A company is taxed forty per cent on its profits up to 116 2/3 per cent of its standard profits and it is taxed 100 per cent on its profits in excess of 116-2/3 of its standard profits. That is the breaking point. That leaves a company seventy per cent of its standard profits; because forty per cent of 116 2/3 per cent is 46 2/3, which, subtracted from 116 2/3, leaves 70. So that the formulae and alternatives and options and cross-references and so forth all come to this: you just tell me what the profits of a company are in terms of its standard profits; that is, if you tell me that the profits of this company were 150 per cent of its standard profits, I can reckon the income and excess profits tax for you in ten minutes.

An hon. MEMBER: Liberally speaking!

Mr. ILSLEY: I take forty per cent of 116 2/3 of its standard profits and set that down there, and then 100 per cent of the difference between 116 2/3 and 150 per cent. It is that 100 per cent which has been reduced to sixty per cent by this budget; there is a variation for companies submitting consolidated returns, and there is a variation for partnerships and sole proprietors; but the breaking point in the case of partnerships and sole proprietors is 116·666, and 117·647 is the breaking point for companies submitting consolidated returns—not 116·666 but 117·241. But the principle is clear that what was 100, the 100 per cent above the breaking point, has been reduced to sixty. When I say "100," it is fair to say "80" of course, because twenty per cent of the 100 per cent is returnable.

Mr. CASE: I think I should say at the outset that the government is to be commended for having made an effort to provide something which should lend considerable incentive to our recovery in the post-war period. I personally would have been very glad if the time had arrived when we could do away with the excess profits tax, because I believe that private enterprise, given the green light, will play a greater part in the solution of our post-war problems than we can ever hope to do by direction in this chamber. The minister has said that many lawyers understand the breaking point. I am informed that there is no excess profits tax on lawyers, so that they probably would be the first to recognize the breaking point since it does not involve any of their profits—if they could be determined. I hear someone nearby say that they have no profits.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is all profit.

Mr. CASE: The lawyers whom it is my privilege—I use that word so that I shall be understood—to know, look to be fairly well fed. Therefore I think they are doing fairly well in seeking to intrepret the statutes and the laws which this government has put upon the statute books. The only thing which keeps lawyers in business is trying to interpret the law. I read from this section that there will be a tax of 60 per cent on that portion of the excess profits which are in excess of 117·647 per cent of the standard profits, and that the provision for refund of a portion of the tax is repealed. My question is, will there be no longer any refund to corporations, even though they are subject to a certain portion of the tax as explained by the minister; if they go above this amount they are subject to the 100 per cent tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. CASE: That is, if they go above a certain amount?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right; they are subject to 60 per cent of the excess above the breaking point, with no refund.

Mr. CASE: There will be no refund?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. FERGUSON: I think the barristers and solicitors of Canada are remiss in not tendering a hearty vote of thanks to the Minister of Finance for the stupendous continuous income he has been providing for them. The public cannot understand the income tax law. The lawyers cannot either, but they are privileged to charge for interpreting it, and I think the lawyers should have tendered the minister and his department a hearty vote of thanks.

An hon. MEMBER: Let us give it to them now.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Up to March 31 of this year the government had collected $184,500,000 of refundable excess profits tax. That is to be given back to the corporations in the next two or three years. I should like to know if any policy has been formulated as to what the corporations will be allowed to do with this refund tax. Will they be allowed to use it for dividends or for capital purposes?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is their money; they can do as they like with it.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): They can use it for dividends?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, for any purpose they wish. That was clearly understood from the beginning. That question was faced and settled in 1941 or 1942. The question was, whether this would be tied up and restrictions placed upon its use or whether it would be regarded as the money of the taxpayer, and I decided that the proper policy was to regard it as the money of the taxpayer. It must be borne in mind that when you have a 100 per cent tax, even if it is refundable, you have put into operation forces which make for extravagance, for inefficiency, for lack of effort, and so on, and you must be careful not to go too far, otherwise you will hurt your national efficiency considerably. I felt that the point to stop was where we did stop. That is, we take the 20 per cent and keep it, we have not paid any interest on it, and have retained it for quite a long time. When the time comes for them to get it back, it is theirs.

Resolution agreed to.

3. That for 1946 the following rates of tax apply to corporations:
(a) Twenty-two per cent of the profits of corporations and joint stock companies before deduction therefrom of any tax paid thereon under the Income War Tax Act;
(b) In the case of corporations and joint stock companies which have filed consolidated returns, 20 per cent of the profits which are in excess of 117·241 per cent of the standard profits of such consolidated companies;
(c) In the case of other corporations and joint stock companies 20 per cent of the profits which are in excess of 116·66 per cent of the standard profits.
and that the provision for refund of a portion of the tax be repealed.

Resolution agreed to.

4. That on the profits of 1946 and subsequent years the minimum standard profits of taxpayers be increased from $5,000 to $15,000, and that where a taxpayer's standard profits are on January 1, 1946, in excess of $5,000 but less than $25,000 they be increased by one-half the difference between their present amount and $25,000.

Resolution agreed to.

5. That the special rate of tax applicable to businesses commencing after June 24, 1944, not apply to cases where in the opinion of the minister there has been no bona fide commencement of a new or substantially different business.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain this resolution?

Mr. ILSLEY: To provide greater certainty for new businesses in their first year of operation, the Excess Profits Tax Act was amended in 1944 to limit the tax payable under that act on income of the first year to the minimum rate of twenty-two per cent, because of the danger that existing businesses might take on the guise of a new business by simply reorganizing and acquiring a new legal identity without any real change in either the ownership or the type of business conducted. It is proposed that the Minister of National Revenue must be satisfied that the business is either an entirely new business or a substantially different business before allowing a claim to be taxed under the minimum rate on these grounds.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest to the minister that that is a drastic provision and one which should be given further consideration.

Take the case of a man who is carrying on business in his own name without being incorporated. In good faith he forms a company, and has been carrying on for the last eighteen months as an incorporated company. I believe in many, many cases that was done without the slightest sign of bad faith; that the men who did it were advised by responsible advisers, and even by income tax officers, that they were eligible for this lower tax. They have conducted their business for eighteen months on that understanding, and now they are faced with the possibility of an amendment under which other officials of the department can step in and say this was not a change made in good faith; that it was made to cut down the rate of taxation, and that therefore they are liable for the heavier tax. That would be done after these men have made their plans in perfectly good faith. I should like to put that before the minister. I know of cases of that kind, and I do not think it is wise for the government to step in now and say that they must show that the change was not made in bad faith.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have not looked the matter up, but I think all the explanations of the changes that were made were on this basis, that when people want to go into new businesses they have no experience of earnings and it is impossible to get a standard profit fixed; they do not know what their rate of taxation is to be, or they do not know what their standard profit is because they are starting something new. That was the reason for the change in the law; it was not that some person might change the form of his business. Take, for example, a business that was paying heavily under the excess profits tax; it was incorporated and called a new business. The tax was pulled down to forty per cent. That was not the intention or the real meaning of the law, and it was never put forward on those grounds; it was put forward to meet a particular situation. I do not think they ought to be allowed to get away with it.

Mr. GREEN: An officer of the Department of National Revenue has interpreted the provision that was passed last year as meaning in some cases that if a person incorporated his business, changed his business in the normal way to meet business growth, he would be entitled to the benefit of that section. It would not be so bad if the provision applied to those where bad faith could be shown, that they made the alteration to benefit by the tax, but that is not the way it is worded. It makes every person who has benefited by the provision show that there has been good faith; in other words, it puts everybody under suspicion who has made a change of that kind

I think very serious damage will be done, particularly to younger men who in the normal course have built up a business and reached the stage where they had to incorporate; and have done so believing that they were entitled to the benefits of this act. In the long run the government would benefit from that change to a corporation because the company will be liable to tax on its profits and shareholders to tax on their dividends. I know there are cases where there has not been the slightest bit of bad faith where they will be absolutely crippled by this new provision.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall give consideration to the hon. gentleman's representations before the bill is prepared; but in saying that I do not know whether I shall do what he has requested, because I must say that when we bring in a bill to meet a specific need and everybody understands it, I do not like to see people, just because they are clever and the law will permit it, reduce their taxes as a result of that. Perhaps this retroactive legislation is not good on general principles, but I have sponsored some of it once in a while in order to prevent people from getting away with too much. I do not know whether that is the case here or not, but perhaps there has been some taking advantage of what is the letter of the law without any regard for the spirit of it.

Mr. GREEN: This is retroactive legislation not for a period of six months but for a period of eighteen months. I think the minister will agree with me that the great majority of Canadian business men are not dishonest; they want to pay their just debts. This excess profits taxation and income taxation are now so complicated that the ordinary business man has to depend on his accountant, his auditor or the income tax officers themselves for advice. I know of cases where they received advice on that basis, are entirely innocent, and now are caught by this amendment.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for Vancouver South mentioned corporations under this resolution. Does this resolution apply equally to partnerships and sole ownerships?

Mr. ILSLEY: Is the hon. gentleman asking if it applies to a partnership which converts itself into a company?

Mr. ISNOR: A simple partnership, not incorporated, or to come down to a more simple case, a sole ownership.

Mr. ILSLEY: It must be a new business.

Mr. ISNOR: Yes, it would be.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, it applies not only to corporations but to any person—and "person" would include a corporation—who has commenced business after the 26th day of June, 1944, or carries on a substantially different business to which subsection 4 of section 5 of the act is applicable, and uses therein physical assets substantially different from those he used in the business previously carried on.

Mr. ISNOR: Take a sole ownership business. During the course of the last four, five or six years a certain amount has been set up as a reserve as a result of the twenty per cent refundable portion. A bank or lending institution, knowing that at some time or another this amount will be refunded to the owner of this business, lends the owner perhaps $30,000 or $40,000 with which he puts up a new building as an addition to his present business. Will he come under this special provision?

Mr. ILSLEY: If he carries on a substantially different business.

Mr. ISNOR: What is meant by "substantially different"?

Mr. ILSLEY: If he carries on a substantially different business to which subsection 4 of section 5 of this act is applicable, and uses therein physical assets substantially different from those he used in the business he previously carried on, then his standard profits are limited. It is a forty per cent rate he pays if it is a corporation, and fifteen per cent if it is an individual or sole proprietorship. There is no difficulty about that provision in regard to carrying on a substantially different business and using therein physical assets. That is not a difficult thing to determine; there is no trouble about it. The difficulty is in regard to the first part of it, a taxpayer who has commenced business after the 26th day of June, 1944.

Mr. ISNOR: That is a new business?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. ISNOR: Then let me place before the minister what might be a definite case. Take a boot and shoe man on Bank street here in Ottawa. He has accumulated a fairly large reserve. Just around the corner a shoe repair establishment has made considerable progress, and he feels that he would like to enter into the business of repairing shoes and manufacturing special types of shoes. He uses his reserve. Does he come under section 5, since he is using part of the capital of his business; or will it be considered a new establishment?

Mr. ILSLEY: I hesitate to give a ruling on a set of facts. A ruling on the exact facts of the case would have to be obtained from the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. ISNOR: That is what you want those in retail business to do; you want them to reinvest their money with a view to providing greater employment. I think it is definitely understood and agreed that during the last four or five years the retail business man has been kept down to a certain limit as far as profits are concerned. He has not been permitted to make more than a certain standard profit. His 100 per cent excess has been taken away from him, notwithstanding the fact that his bills receivable have grown, his stocks have grown, and he has not had the necessary capital to work with. He has accumulated a certain amount which is refundable, and he wishes to invest that money in an establishment such as I have mentioned. The funds have been earned by his established business. Will you charge him under this new section 5?

Mr. ILSLEY: If the new investment and the acquisition of different assets are of sufficient importance and extent, so that a reasonable man would say he is embarking upon a substantially different business, then he would be entitled to the advantages of this section.

Mr. ISNOR: Take the case I mentioned, which is closely identified with the established business.

Mr. ILSLEY: With the same old business?

Mr. ISNOR: Yes, the retail shoe store; and the owner would wish to open a shop to repair shoes and perhaps manufacture special types of shoes. Or take the case of the owner of a clothing store who might want to open a tailoring and repair establishment, since they tell me those are quite profitable these days.

Mr. ILSLEY: In the national revenue department I understand they have a committee which has precedents and some principles upon which they work, but I do not see how I can rule on that. I do not see how I can go any farther than I have gone. There are the principles.

Mr. CASE: Hire a lawyer.

Mr. ISNOR: We should not have to hire lawyers. I do not wish to pursue this further, but I would point out that if you expect business men to reinvest funds in new business which will give added employment, then I believe that within the very near future you should settle that question and say yes or no; or give them the green light and say they may carry on and they will be taxed no more than the regular business is taxed.

Mr. ILSLEY: Any person interested in such a venture can get a yes or no from the Department of National Revenue on submitting all the facts to them, but I cannot go any farther than to state the principles that apply.

Mr. CASE: I was pleased to hear the minister say in reply to the hon. member for Vancouver South that he would give some further consideration to this resolution. He did say that he hesitated to change that which was already written, and I can understand that because I believe there were some repercussions from certain proposed changes in the tariff schedules which were introduced in the budget speech. Yesterday we heard the Minister of Public Works say that his figures and estimates were prepared before the war was ended, and that they did not include post-war plans. I should like the minister to say whether the figures in these various resolutions have been revised since the conclusion of the war. For instance, I cannot imagine resolution 5 being included in the budget if the war were still in progress. This is a partial post-war budget; is that right? The minister is the man who takes all the abuse for the government, and I believe he has done a very fine job. The other ministers say they have not made any post-war plans, but apparently the Minister of Finance has been alive to the situation and has made certain definite proposals to encourage post-war business. So that he recognizes, whether or not the other ministers do, that the war is over and this is partly a post-war budget.

Mr. GREEN: Would it not be fair to make this provision apply from the date of the budget? There was legislation passed last year, and under that legislation people had certain rights. As I said before, I believe that in some cases they were actually told by the department that they could do this or could do that. Why should their rights not be based entirely upon the legislation of last year? Why should it be necessary now to bring in a provision which not only will cover the future, but contains a punitive quality, and gives the minister power to go back eighteen months and assess taxes against somebody who has been acting on the basis of last year's legislation? What objection would there be to making this provision apply from the date of the budget on, rather than carrying it back to last year?

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, you just permit situations like this to go unremedied. Men are in partnership and perhaps are paying excess profits taxes, because they are making very high war profits. They come along and read the budget. They read the Excess Profits Tax Act as amended in 1944, and they find out that if they commence business, or if anyone commences business after June 26, 1944, he can obtain a decided advantage, because he does not have to pay any excess profits tax, in the ordinarily accepted sense of the term. He is limited to the regular profits, forty per cent.

So they say, "That is fine. I will incorporate myself, and automatically in the eyes of the law I can be commencing business. In the eyes of the law I shall not have been in business before, because the company was not born. It was not in existence. The life of the company will date from this date." So that in this way he obtains a big tax advantage.

Then, perhaps two partners who are in the same class, as far as excess profits taxes are concerned, will take in an employee, or some other person, with the result that we have a new partnership and the commencement of a new business. Even though the physical assets are the same, even though there is no difference in the type of business, and even though the customers are the same and the operations are the same, and although they should have known or in fact did know, from explanations given, that that was never intended to apply to such a case at all, they form the new company. This was intended for people who were really starting something new, who were commencing a new business, from the ground up. And because you do not have any experience, you have to have a statutory fixation of standard profits. That is the reason this was put in.

It is just a question how far we should go in avoiding retroactive legislation. It looks very much to me like taking advantage of legislation by persons who know that the whole spirit and intent of the legislation was different.

It will be said, "Oh, well, that is your fault. If you bungled your phraseology, if your lawyers were not good enough, and if there was a hole there that people rushed through, you have to let them go through." That is what will be said. But what inequity is there in saying that they must have really commenced a new business on June 26?

Mr. GREEN: The inequity is this, that while there may have been a few people who took advantage of that situation, and rushed through the hole, I suggest to the minister that for everyone who did so there were fifty who were advised that this was the proper thing to do, who went ahead and laid their plans and made their expenditures on that basis. And they were strictly within their legal rights in doing so. Now the crown comes along and upsets all those legal rights. It goes back eighteen months and says, "We are going to take more tax."

I will point out to the minister the amendment which was put through last year, as it appears in chapter 38 of the statutes:

> Provided further that where a person, other than a controlled company described by section fifteen A of this act, in the opinion of the minister
> (i) has commenced business after the twenty-sixth day of June, nineteen hundred and forty-four or
> (ii) carries on a substantially different business to which subsection four of section five of this act is applicable and uses therein physical assets substantially different from those he used in the business he previously carried on.

There the power is entirely "in the opinion of the minister." Somebody in the Department of National Revenue headquarters in Ottawa has made the decision for the minister; somebody decides what the opinion of the minister is in each of these cases. These people have been told that they come under this section.

Now the crown wishes to have new legislation passed which means that the minister's officials will be allowed to change their minds again, and go back to collect the difference in the tax. I suggest that this is entirely out of line with the whole principle of British justice.

Mr. JACKMAN: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: It is contrary to British justice, to say nothing of the disastrous effect it may have on business, and just at a time when we are trying to encourage business to go ahead and open up, so that they can hire more people. Here we are, with unemployment becoming a terrible scourge again in my own city of Vancouver. Something drastic must be done or there will be thousands of Canadians unemployed. This government is depending upon private business to furnish most of the employment—and I think quite rightly so. But when you bring in a punitive measure such as this resolution, which is intended to have a retroactive effect, you undermine the confidence of businessmen in the government. I suggest to the minister that further consideration should be given to this resolution before such a drastic step is taken.

Mr. ILSLEY: If the resolution carries we can back away from it in the act. That is, it is not a case where you are going beyond anything. I think the resolution ought to be allowed to pass, and I will give consideration in the act. That is, if the act is more lenient, it does not violate any constitutional principle; if it is more harsh, it would.

We could go on arguing about this for some time. Of course if these firms had taken on more men and had done a substantially different business there would be no trouble about it at all. But if by just putting on a new shell they seek to get a tax advantage, I do not know that we are under any obligation to help them out.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think that would apply to the majority of cases. But even if that were so, even if they took advantage of a statute which was poorly drawn last year, there is no reason why the crown should come here to-night and try to go back eighteen months to change that statute. It is purely punitive, and I repeat that such procedure is entirely out of line with the principles of British justice.

Mr. ILSLEY: But it does eliminate discrimination between these and other companies. Here is a company which has not been as smart; they have not consulted as good a lawyer, and have not found out about this thing. This company goes on in the same way, and pays its heavy excess profits tax. Surely there is some equity as between that company and another of the kind I described before.

I am willing to consider any safeguard to see that real cases of new businesses get full benefit of the section. But I think it is quite all right retroactively to take that benefit away from people who simply took advantage of the section, who did not commence any new business at all, who did not change their business at all, but who just changed the form of their business for the sake of getting rid of taxation, at a time when other people who did not have the advantage of that type of legal advice and who did not do it kept on paying their higher taxes.

Mr. GREEN: The minister is talking about equities.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has no right to interpret legislation once it has been passed; when legislation has been passed, it should be interpreted by the courts. No minister of the crown has the right to come back next year and in order to correct legislation of the year before bring in a new provision that enables him to go back and take money away from people. This house laid down the law last year and under that law people did certain things which they were entitled to do. If the law was wrong, that was not their fault. The minister has no right to come along now and, in effect, pass a law in November, 1945, to have effect in June, 1944, which alters completely the law that was passed in June, 1944. I think the minister as a very able lawyer will realize the strength of that argument. I suggest to him that this new provision be made applicable from the date of the budget.

Mr. ILSLEY: I will give consideration to that. I do not want any one to think I am trying to interpret the law.

Mr. GREEN: That is what it amounts to.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have no more authority than any other citizen of this country to put an authoritative interpretation on any statute. The courts are the only authority having the right to do that. I have no authority whatever to change a law and I am not proposing to change this law.

Mr. GREEN: You are, in effect.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am placing it before parliament; parliament is the only authority that can change this law.

Mr. FERGUSON: One minute ago you said only the courts could do it.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is no use arguing—

Mr. FERGUSON: It is no use arguing when you have no argument.

Mr. ILSLEY: I said that the courts were the only ones that could place an authoritative interpretation on a statute, and I said that parliament is the only body that can change the law. I do not know what the hon. member for Vancouver South is intimating when he says that I am claiming to have the right to interpret a statute or to change the law.

Mr. GREEN: The minister did not put that quite correctly. In effect that is what he is doing.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am not.

Mr. GREEN: This house passed a law last year and people have acted under that law. They have not been held to be without the law. Actually their position is stronger because it is based on the opinion of the minister under the section that was passed last year. Now the minister says this evening, "Oh, well, this did not turn out the way we thought it was going to; there are equities this way and equities that way, and it is only justice that if this man gets caught, this other man should not be allowed a lower tax because the other man did not know anything about it; therefore we are going to start all over again; we are going to remedy this whole thing; we are going to go back to last June with a new law by passing at the present session a law that enables us to review all these cases." I say in effect that puts the minister in the position of interpreting the law rather than leaving it to the courts. I consider it unsound legislation, because it offends against the principle that once a person's rights are determined and he has acted on those rights, there shall be no going back; there shall be no changing the law to upset his position. I would ask the minister to review this carefully and give consideration to the suggestion I have made this evening.

Mr. ILSLEY: I certainly will do that. If my hon. friend has in mind any specific cases I should like to examine those bona fide cases he is talking about and see what they look like. I do not know whether they are good or bad. If they are good, we have no right to touch them. If they are bad, I think we have. However, I will give consideration to the matter.

Mr. GREEN: That simply proves that the minister is interpreting the law. He wants to see these cases and, if he decides that they are good, then he will do something about them.

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot do anything about them.

Mr. GREEN: That should not be the minister's position at all; he should stand or fall on the law that was passed last year. If the law needs to be amended, let us amend it now by all means but do not make the new law retroactive. Let us start out from now with the new law.

Mr. JACKMAN: This section 5 is just another example of what we find shot all through the present Income War Tax Act and the Excess Profits Tax Act—more discretion to the minister. I do not think we could have a clearer case than what is set out in the minister's own words. Every businessman must bring his tax problem to Ottawa in order to have it decided. This parliament is not passing laws which are capable of decisions so that a business man knows where he stands. No matter how perfect the minister seeks to be in his legislation, I do not think he is ever going to get every person who seeks, by means of a smart lawyer or otherwise, to slip through the net occasionally. If he tightens his taxation net so that not even a sardine can get through the meshes, he will so hamstring business and create uncertainty that businessmen will not be able to go ahead and provide the goods and services to create employment that they must do if we are to have continued prosperity in this country.

Let us look at this resolution. First of all, it offends against the sound principle of British justice and sound taxation policy in that it is retroactive. It is true there may be a few cases, but the minister has not told the committee how flagrant the violations have been. Perhaps there are half a dozen cases, but I have no means of knowing or guessing what the element of tax evasion is or how extensive it may be. He might at least tell the committee that there have been scores of cases or hundreds of cases whereby the treasury is going to be out hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars. Let us have some conception of what this is about. Does the minister happen to know of five or six cases across the whole of Canada during the past year and a half where clever lawyers have been able to get around this section and do the treasury out of a few thousand dollars?

In order to collect those few thousand dollars he wants to tighten this section and make it retroactive. He is going to cause uncertainty so that businessmen will not know where they stand. A businessman may have thought he was doing a nice job in building up a new business and creating employment, and now he finds he has another five or ten thousand dollars of taxation to pay which he did not know about. He has to provide for that, and therefore he cannot open up the addition to his business he was planning on opening, or carry out other plans he had in mind. He just cannot do that with this uncertain taxation measure hanging over him. As I say, the retroactive feature is the first offence.

The second dereliction in the resolution is to be found in the phrase "in the opinion of the minister." I do not know how many times that phrase is to be found in the Income War Tax Act and the Excess Profits Tax Act, but it has been estimated that the number is from fifty to 150 times or more. You must come to Ottawa and more often than not make a deal with the tax department because there is no absolute ruling on the subject. They look at your case through their own glasses and no one else can decide for the businessman. No one in Vancouver, for example, can give a decision, much less the businessman himself. Is it any wonder that in the other place they have set up a committee to look into the working and the application of these tax laws? There is no greater or more crying need for the good of the business community of this country than a sound revision of the whole income tax law and its administration. People do not know where they stand. I had a case in connection with annuities which I shall certainly refer to later because I have further evidence. No one knows where he stands to-day. We must have some certainty. We cannot go on and create new industry and create jobs unless businessmen know where they stand. I would appeal to the minister not to try to make these laws quite so perfect but to try to realize that business and the creation of jobs constitute the main thing in this country to-day and not to make our tax laws so tight that the shrewdest Al. Capone could not find his way through them, for the businessman is fundamentally honest and is willing to pay taxes, but he must have certainty if he is to go ahead.

This resolution applies particularly to new business. If we need anything in this country it is to have new businesses and new industries created. The present economic outlook, to my humble way of thinking, is fraught with just as many uncertainties and just as much hope, hope based on a sounder foundation I trust, than was the expectation in 1929 when we thought we were in a new era and companies were capitalized not on the basis of 1929 earnings but on the basis of what they would be in 1932. We have just come through a great period of progress and industrial expansion in this country in which the national income has doubled and trebled. We have passed laws in this house such as the family allowance, in favour of which we were unanimous to a man, involving an outlay of $250,000,000 a year as compared with a pre-war annual budget of $500,000,000. Where are we to get the money? We are expecting to have a volume of business similar to that pertaining to the war years. That is the hope, and we can put every ounce of strength we have into the realization of that hope because, if we do not do so, the country—I can use very strong words—certainly has a very sorry outlook. We must have a great national income to get the revenue required to carry all the new social measures and to service the debt which we have to-day. We are bound to do so if we possibly can, and we shall have to resort to unusual measures in our endeavour.

This government has a mandate from the people of this country, as was so well put by the hon. member for Cariboo the other night when he said that this government had a mandate from the people to carry on under the banner of private enterprise. If we are to give private enterprise it's head we must give businessmen some certainty where they stand in the matter of taxation. New business must also be created in order that we may develop our export markets, and that leads me to the whole matter of excess profits taxes.

In the present budget the minister has reduced the effective rate from eighty to sixty per cent. What do we find is being done by our cousins across the line? There, with a much stronger economy than we have, one that is based on domestic business to a far greater extent than Canada's can ever be because we are to a large extent an export country, they have made their excess profits tax nothing at all—no rate—they have abandoned the whole thing as of next January. We in this country must face competition with industries in the United States, particularly in the export field, and while this reduction from an eighty per cent effective rate to sixty per cent is undoubtedly a help, and, I trust, a straw in the wind, I hope that the Minister of Finance will undertake at the earliest opportunity to make further reductions and do away with the excess profits tax which he himself has said leads to the stifling of business, gross carelessness and lack of efficient management.

Furthermore, may I say in connection with the effect of this taxation on new business, if we in this country are ever going to meet the challenge which this government has firmly saddled upon it to keep our people in jobs and prosperity, we must have more business. Where it is all going to come from, I do not know. But I know that all check-reins and stifling measures must be taken off our people if we are to begin to have a national income corresponding in any degree with that which we have had in the last three or four years. If we are to attract capital to this country from outside, and we need it badly, not the actual dollars but venturesome money, because there are very few wealthy Canadians among us who can take the chances necessary for the development of our natural resources or the setting up of new businesses, because so many fall by the wayside that very few can really afford to put up any substantial amounts for they must be careful and look after their old age—if we are to attract capital to this country we must have some certainty about our taxation laws.

Furthermore, in regard to this excess profits tax and the results that we now have under immediate discussion, if a company is to extend its business the most likely place where it will find its capital is out of its tax-paid earnings which it ploughs back into the industry. If the rate of taxation is so high that there is nothing left, if it is sixty per cent as now on any company with earnings above the 1936-1939 level, it is not going to be able to find earnings with which to expand and create more employment. Therefore I would suggest that this resolution be either dropped entirely or taken back for redrafting, particularly two features, namely, the retroactive feature and the discretionary power given to the minister, which is something we are trying to get away from. Surely we in this house can take adequate time to frame taxation provisions which will become the law of the land and will not necessitate for their interpretation, as my colleague said a little while ago, everybody flying down or coming down to Ottawa on the trains, and making Ottawa the centre of all their activities because they do not know where they stand until they get a ruling from the minister. Surely there should be some person in this country other than the minister who can interpret the taxation laws under which business must operate, and under which new businesses coming in must find their roots.

Mr. McCANN: Did the hon. member ever hear of the courts?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister has not apparently.

Mr. JACKMAN: I wish I had heard that ten times as often as I have heard it here. People must come here to Otttawa to see the Minister of National Revenue and his department to find out where they stand under the taxation laws of this country, and if an appeal is taken from a ruling the appeal once again goes back to the minister and his assistants. We do not expect the minister to know all about the peculiar workings of every business in Canada. He must of necessity rely a great deal on his full-time veteran assistants, so that there is virtually no appeal from a ruling on taxation as there is in Great Britain and in the United States. The tax law is made by one set of officials, and the only appeal is to the same set of officials. There is no certainty about the law. It is in the discretion of the minister. Surely we should from this date forward never again pass any section of an income tax or excess profits tax law which cannot be interpreted and the rights under it determined by any of the divisional staffs throughout Canada, without having to go to one man and leave it to his discretion as to whether or not one is within or without the terms of the statute.

Mr. HACKETT: I should like to give such approval as I may to the argument made by the hon. member for Vancouver South. He might have added to his reasons the importance of maintaining the good reputation of the department.

If a taxpayer has taken a position which was tenable under the statute, it behooves the department to see that the taxpayer's position is maintained. I suggest to the minister that nothing will tend more to shatter the confidence of business in his department and its administration than a changing departmental position and a going back on what the taxpayer thought was the department's plighted word. Questions have to be determined by somebody. Somebody's discretion must settle disputes between people, be they between taxpayers and tax gatherers, or be they in an unhappy ménage. But I am not certain that it is wise to leave an unbounded discretion to an administrative officer. I will attempt to point out what I mean, by reading resolution 5. Incidentally there appears to be a word or two left out of it. I do not know whether in the minister's text the word "shall" or "does" is left out before the words "not apply". I would be glad of that information.

Mr. ILSLEY: If I may answer that, the general scheme of the phraseology does not seem to call for a verb there. For instance, in resolution 3 the resolution is "That for 1946 the following rates of tax apply to corporations"; and this is, "That the special rate . . . not apply."

Mr. HACKETT: It reads:

> 5. That the special rate of tax applicable to businesses commencing after June 24, 1944, not apply to cases where in the opinion of the minister there has been no bona fide commencement of a new or substantially different business.

Mr. FRASER: This is "bureaucrese" in English.

Mr. HACKETT: Is the text complete?

Mr. ILSLEY: I think it would be better to have "do" in there, or "shall". But apparently the scheme is—

Mr. HACKETT: What I wanted to come to is this. The minister has this resolution before him; it gives him wide powers of discretion; in a given case he will determine whether or not there has been a "bona fide commencement of a new or substantially new business." What are the elements of novelty and where are they located? Are they restricted to the enterprise itself, or may an old enterprise become a new business if new people become engaged in it? That is one question I should like to have answered.

Mr. ILSLEY: There are two kinds of situations envisaged by the resolution One is the case of the person who has commenced business after the 24th day of June, 1944, and the other is that of the person who carries on a substantially different business to which subsection 4 of section 5 of this act is applicable, and uses therein physical assets substantially different from those he used in the business he previously carried on. It is difficult, of course, to say when it is "substantially different business", and I suppose that after these situations are worked with for a while they can be decided. If the changes are small it would not be a substantially different business, but if the changes are great it is a substantially different business. It is a hard section to apply, I will admit.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes, but what I am trying to find out is whether the novelty resides only in the business or whether a new owner may bring about a new business.

Mr. ILSLEY: What does the hon. gentleman mean? Does he mean a company instead of a partnership?

Mr. HACKETT: Yes, or take this example: a man is advanced in years; he finds a purchaser for his business; the purchaser is a young man, who has not quite enough money to pay the full purchase price; he incorporates a company which becomes the owner of the business. He sells some of the securities which he has received, with the proceeds he pays the price. He manages the company that owns the business. Is that a new business? The owner is entirely new.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. gentleman is talking about the words of the resolution, but I am thinking all the time about the words of the act. In the case where there has been a new owner, that is a commencement of a business. I have read a few times the provisions of the act:

> Provided further that where a person, other than a controlled company described by section fifteen A of this act, in the opinion of the minister,
> (i) has commenced business after the twenty-sixth day of June, nineteen hundred and forty-four, . . .

In the case of a new owner that person would be commencing business.

Mr. HACKETT: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: After that date.

Mr. HACKETT: Then, if I have correctly understood the minister, that would be a new business.

Mr. ILSLEY: I would think that, under the law as it stands, if a person goes into business for the first time he certainly is commencing business.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. HACKETT: There is no doubt about that, but is he commencing a new business within the discretion of the minister, who will be the final arbiter in this matter?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is the problem.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think he is commencing a new business.

Mr. HACKETT: Well, "a new business" or "substantially different business".

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, this is what I have in mind. Some years ago there was a case with which the gentlemen administering the income tax are familiar. It was the Pioneer Laundry case; it had to do with depreciation. A company went into bankruptcy; a new company acquired the assets and sought in the ordinary course of business to depreciate, if my memory serves me well, the assets which it had acquired. The court denied that right. Ultimately the privy council held that the company which owned the assets was entitled to depreciation. It held that the discretion of the minister in that case was a judicial discretion and had to be exercised according to judicial principles. I believe that the income tax act was subsequently amended in such a way that depreciation was denied to a company if its shareholders, in the opinion of the minister, had been owners to a substantial degree, possibly to the extent of a majority, of the shares of the company which had owned the business previously. I have felt that the amendment incorporates a dangerous principle into the law, because it leaves the imposition of a tax subject to the whim of the taxing agent. It seems to me that this resolution 5 is an attempt to incorporate into this power to tax the same, as I consider it, pernicious principle that has been incorporated into the sections dealing with depreciation.

I fear that it will get the department into difficulty because it enables the minister to exercise a power which conflicts with the whole scheme of our legislation and jurisprudence. It is going to make a corporation subject to tax or free from tax because of the incident of shareholding in that corporation. It will mean that to-day the corporation is taxable because A and B own shares; to-morrow it will not be taxable because A and B have sold their shares to C and D. That is a hazardous anad unsound principle on which to rest a tax law. For that reason I ask the minister to reconsider this resolution. It makes it possible to overtake somebody who may have escaped taxation last year, but the minister is not only jeopardizing the respect which I think everybody has for the department, but incorporating into the legislation a dangerous principle.

Mr. ILSLEY: I can take one of two courses. Serious objections have been taken to this resolution. If the committee will let it go through I will promise to consider both of those principles. If they prefer to have it stand I shall let it stand. However, I should like to get at the bill; I should like to decide on some of the sections, and have the bill printed and distributed.

Mr. HACKETT: I am quite willing to accept the suggestion of the minister that he will do what he can to meet the objections which he admits are serious. I again say, do not let the minister undermine the good repute of his own department by going back on legislation which was passed a year or two ago.

Mr. GILLIS: There are a couple of things I should like to get clear in my own mind. I realize that this is quite a technical legal argument; I make no pretence of knowing too much about the law; the only thing I know about it is that any time you find it necessary to have lawyers you pay plenty for them. If you do not have the money you do not get any action.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sorry; that is not true.

Mr. GILLIS: It is true. That is based on forty years' experience—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not care what it is based on; it is not true.

Mr. GILLIS: —on the wrong side of the tracks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sorry; it is not true.

Mr. GILLIS: I do not blame those who make a living at it for protesting so loudly.

Mr. HACKETT: You come to me and I shall give you some cheap law. It may be worth just what it will cost you.

Mr. GILLIS: It will be dear at any price.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Now you are getting nasty.

Mr. GILLIS: This is a very nice-looking little resolution. There is so much protest from my right that it makes me suspicious that the minister is right.

Mr. GREEN: Now he knows he is wrong.

Mr. GILLIS: I should like to ask my hon. friends this question: What constitutes new business in Canada to-day? Perhaps seventy-five per cent of the industrial set-up of this country, on the arguments I have listened to, can be classified as new business. The Canada Car and Foundry company have been in war production; they are reconverting their plant to peace-time production; it is a new business.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. GILLIS: Oh, yes. According to the arguments I have listened to, every war plant in this country which is transforming its plant from the war machine to its ordinary business of peace-time production can be classified as starting a new business.

Mr. BOUCHER: Ask the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What about making boxes in Saskatchewan without lumber?

Mr. GILLIS: The same thing, new business under new management, the same old business operating for forty years though. I am a little sceptical on that point. With regard to throwing the responsibility back into the hands of lawyers again, who interpret the law, that is their job, and it is fine, but I should like to ask anyone in this committee this question: Who is better qualified to interpret what the income tax laws or the excess profits tax laws mean than the people who write them?

Mr. COCKERAM: If they knew what it was it would be all right.

Mr. GILLIS: Absolutely: On the other hand, if I am living in Vancouver or in Nova Scotia and I have a dispute with the income tax department I can wend my way over to a lawyer's office, pay him $100 and get some advice, and six months later I will get a decision which he gets from the income tax department. That is where he gets it. On the other hand, if I want to sit down and write the deputy minister of taxation, to whom I often write, any time I write to him I get a fair and reasonable explanation of any tax problem that may be bothering anyone and it costs me nothing but a four-cent stamp.

An hon. MEMBER: Sometimes a month later.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is a new industry.

Mr. GILLIS: That is the decision the lawyer would get. And, mind you, a great many of them write asking me to get in touch with the finance department to obtain decisions in certain matters, and I do so. You know lawyers are smart, for themselves. I should like to ask the hon. member for Rosedale, is he prepared to recommend to the Minister of Labour when he comes back to the house that we immediately remove the wage controls?

Mr. COCKERAM: Yes.

Mr. GILLIS: That we lift the ceiling? Is he prepared to recommend to the Minister of Finance that we remove price controls and abandon the Donald Gordon set-up?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, is this relevant to this discussion? I will give the hon. gentleman my answers to those questions, if he wants them.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not asking the hon. member. I am speaking to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. JACKMAN: I have been asked a question—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I have a ruling on my point of order?

Mr. GILLIS: They just can't take it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member should not be interrupted without his permission.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I rose to a point of order.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I would point out to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that in discussing this resolution his argument must be relevant to it.

Mr. GILLIS: That is what I was trying to do.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Without success.

Mr. GILLIS: We have been sitting here since some time yesterday while hon. gentlemen to my right have had possession of the floor. I listened to the discussion of private enterprise, the right to jobs, the danger of this legislation—

Mr. JACKMAN: Hear, hear.

Mr. GILLIS: —and all that kind of stuff. If this is relevant, certainly I think the remarks I have been making are relevant. As to private enterprise, there is no such animal in this country any more. They only think there is. The Minister of Munitions and Supply is handing over big plants to private individuals who are taking them; and now they want exemption from taxation because they are new businesses, but they still come to the Minister of Munitions and Supply and say, "We want contracts from you. We want you to underwrite the profits, and we want the Minister of Finance to see that we are not taxed any more." I will take a plant over to-morrow on that basis. You are not going to create any jobs by quibbling with this kind of taxation. My advice to the Minister of Finance is to stick to his guns and analyze this matter very carefully, because I think he is on the right track.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I shall confine my remarks to only one point; and may I just tell my hon. friend from the coal mining area of Cape Breton how much I appreciated what he said about my profession. At least he proved himself one of those persons who have not benefited by the advice that has been given; and I am sure the branch down there of the union to which I belong will prosecute him for engaging in the practice of law without being a registered person.

I should like to address myself to one point in connection with resolution 5. My point is this. All legislatures, all parliaments are opposed to retroactive legislation, broadly speaking, and it is only used to correct an obvious and notorious situation. Some English judge whose name I do not recall, although I know he was of the same nationality as the hon. member for Cape Breton South, once made a very wise statement which has never been challenged. He said it was better that ten guilty men should go free than that one innocent man should be convicted. That statement has never been disputed by anyone in the courts of our country or by any of our thinking people.

Obviously resolution 5 means this. The minister at least implied—I was going to say "said"—that certain smart people who engaged smart lawyers—apparently I do not belong to that class because I was not so engaged—avoided the intent of the legislation of 1944. I am quite sure the gentleman who sits in front of the minister discovered that, and hence we are now met with new legislation. I am in favour of the idea; I am in favour of that broad principle, but I still have enough confidence in the efficacy and soundness of the rule of law to say that even if a few morally dishonest people did escape, it ill becomes this parliament at this time to say to all other persons, "You, too, will be examined. You, too, will be punished."

There is not much difference between criminal legislation and punitive legislation. The municipal councils, the provincial legislatures in our country have power to establish certain penalties for infractions of by-laws and provincial enactments. The distinction is not very great between a person guilty of a breach of the criminal code and a person guilty of a breach of a provincial statute, say a liquor act, if you like, since I know something about those, largely on the side of the prosecution. Punitive statutes and criminal statutes have come very close together. This cannot be interpreted otherwise than as a punitive statute or we would not have it here. There can be no other reason for it except to say, "You smarty-pants beat us in our intention. You lived up to the law but you beat us in our intention. Now we are going back, and we are going to catch you." There can be no other reason for the retroactive feature in this legislation. So that I say to the minister, for whose ability I have great respect—in fact I think he might have advised the hon. member for Cape Breton South at some time or another, for the hon. gentleman certainly got excellent training somewhere—that we should not leave the broad principle. This country, this civilization is founded on law. We live by law, not by an incident of the moment, not by a happy thought we get; and law will always have difficulties in it. It must be of general application. Up there someone will gain a little; down here someone will lose a little, but inasmuch as the law is of general application, let it continue to speak as of the day of its enactment which, in this case, with great respect I submit was the date of the presentation of the budget. I do not want people to escape, but if they have done so we have a long time to go with those people and we may catch up to them in some other way. But let law speak as from its date of enactment.

Resolution agreed to.

6. That the exemption of the profits of corporations derived from the operation of any base metal or strategic mineral mines be extended to the profits of corporations derived from the operation of gold mines and industrial mineral mines, and that such exemption be extended to the profits of such mines which come into production after January 1, 1946.

Mr. BRADETTE: I wish to be very brief, though I am sure the committee will bear with me for a few moments while I say a few words in connection with this resolution. First of all, speaking for my section of the country, where there is the greatest amount of gold produced, since it includes the whole of the Porcupine section and adjoins the Kirkland Lake district and the Rouyn section of Quebec, I wish to pay tribute to the Minister of Finance who, during the war years, in spite of his heavy responsibilities and tremendous amount of work, found it possible to come at least four times to victory loan rallies in my own constituency.

Prior to the dominion-provincial conference of last summer I found it possible, after research and study, to send to the Department of Finance, through the minister of that department, a brief dealing with certain regulations and grievances pertaining to gold mining in general. I am stating here that that brief was well received by himself and his department. It was thoroughly scrutinized. I will go farther and say that I believe it was also discussed by the dominion-provincial conference. I have been told by people who are authorities on gold mining matters that my brief had received full attention, and, based on some features of it, some beneficial changes were made.

However, I want the committee to realize to some extent what gold mining is. Let us go back a few years prior to the war and realize what it has meant to our national economy. I am not here this evening to discuss the gold standard, the yardstick of our monetary system, or anything of that kind. I am just speaking about an industry which I know something about, and which has been such a wonderful medium of stabilization and solid economy, as far as Canada is concerned.

It is no secret and it is known to everyone that in a time of war the gold mining industry is bound to be one of the war victims. The primary reason is, of course, the manpower shortage. The second reason is that it is absolutely impossible to replace the heavy machinery which is needed for the management and exploitation of a gold mine.

As every hon. member knows, we have not in Canada—at least, not in my section, or in the province of Quebec—a single ounce of production as far as placer gold is concerned. All ours is extracted from solid rock formation. We go farther than that, as far as the war activity is concerned. We were right behind the government, and a large number of rock miners from my own section, from Kirkland Lake, and from the section around Noranda were taken from those sections of Canada and sent, for instance, to Sudbury, which is another base metals section. Our section gladly accepted that circumstance, and the sacrifices that were entailed in such a move.

We believe that gold mining, and mining in general will have a great task to accomplish, as far as the post-war period of rehabilitation is concerned. That is why at the present time I wish to state briefly what I believe is the voice not only of the mine owners and mine operators of Canada, particularly those in gold mining, but also the voice of the prospectors, the muckers, the miners working in the bowels of the earth so fruitfully by the tens of thousands throughout Canada.

So far as the mining industry is concerned, the only change provided in this year's budget is the one set forth in resolution No. 6 of the

Excess Profits Tax Act amendment, which states:

That the exemption of the profits of corporations derived from the operation of any base metal or strategic mineral mines be extended to the profits of corporations derived from the operation of gold mines and industrial mineral mines, and that such exemption be extended to the profits of such mines which come into production after January 1, 1946.

This states that exemption under the Excess Profits Tax Act, under certain restrictions, is to be given for a limited period of time. We have already explained to the minister that when the Department of National Revenue apply their ruling this proposal is advantageous only to the high-grade producers. I believe I made that clear in the brief I presented to the Department of Finance. I believe, too, that they have listened to that argument. I have no doubt; in fact I think no one has a doubt that so far as the Department of Finance is concerned in this matter, it has applied the provisions to the gold mining industry, generally speaking. But when it comes to be applied to the Department of National Revenue, the so-called benefits the producers are supposed to get from the legislation is lost.

To low-grade or medium grade gold mines this exemption is absolutely useless. I say this sincerely. Perhaps I should address that statement to the Minister of National Revenue, who possesses good practical knowledge of mining, but I do not wish to repeat myself, and I do not wish to get to my feet again before the session is over, as I realize and understand the mood of the committee at this time of the session.

It looks as though the government is proffering something to the ordinary new producer which is worthless and is not costing the government anything. I say that deliberately, and I wish to make my point clear. Our gold mining industry showed prior to the war, and particularly during the war, that it was willing and ready to pay all the taxes that the government thought fit to impose upon it. It did that in the past, and it is doing so at the present time. No doubt it will continue to do so in the future.

But I repeat that there are certain features in connection with depletion allowance which to some extent are absolutely nullified by the Department of National Revenue. So far as my information goes, the future of mining in our north country is largely dependent upon the willingness of our taxing authorities to provide a fair depletion allowance which will permit an investor, when he makes good, to get his original capital back without us being taxed.

Everyone realizes that mining is highly speculative, and gold mining particularly. I believe that only one man out of ten makes any profit out of the business, and that is a fair average. I know whereof I speak. I know, too, that many hon. members have in the past invested in some new ventures in gold mining, or even base metals,, and I will leave it to them just how great a return they have received after making, in some instances, a heavy investment.

This provision gives discretionary powers to the Minister of National Revenue, and requires no change in the legislation.

That is all I wish to state at the present time. I am appreciative that hon. members have listened to me. I wish also to make a further statement respecting the Minister of Finance, regardless of what I may have said during the debate on the speech from the throne. Every hon. member on this and on the opposition side of the house knows the fine and gigantic job the Minister of Finance has done in his department during war time. Everyone who has seen him function must realize that the job was a difficult one, but his accomplishments have been admired and appreciated by all those that know of them. It was far from easy. No doubt great credit must be given to him personally for the wonderful things which we have done in our Canadian scheme of financing, and which are the cause of the great confidence that his actions have inspired.

The workers, the muckers and those in an administrative capacity in my section of the country realize that the Minister of Finance is absolutely open-minded when we bring to his attention something that is logical. Again I thank the minister and the premiers of the different provinces who attended the dominion-provincial conference for having found it possible to discuss this matter. This is one place in which the Department of Finance could give a lead. It can ask what was done in the big mining convention when the ministers of mines of the nine different provinces of the Canadian federation spoke along the same lines as I speak to-night, and also with unanimity.

They realized, and every citizen must realize what will be accomplished by mining. In my own section of Ontario, Quebec and in northern Manitoba and other parts of northern Canada one can see some of the greatest developments, not only in connection with gold mining but in connection with the mining of all kinds of minerals that the world has ever seen.

One has only to look at the map of Canada and know of the regions involved to see that within a few short years many more new mines will be opened and developed fruitfully in those parts of the country. This will be a very great factor in our development. It will be a wonderful factor in the life of every Canadian because, as was stated just a few days ago in the committee on external affairs, time after time one person who is employed in mining will give employment to twelve other persons. This has been said by witnesses who knew mining in general. I know the government, and particularly the Minister of Finance are heart and soul behind our means of employment. He has seen for himself, personally, some of our mines. He has seen new sections of the population, such as are found at Timmins, Schumacher, South Porcupine, Kirkland Lake and many other new fine centres in northern Ontario and Quebec. He knows that section, in the same way as it was known by Mr. Crerar, who formerly was Minister of Mines and Resources. I know, too, that in the rehabilitation period gold mining in particular, and mining in general will perform a great national duty, and we hope that all possible attention may be given to the survival and extension of this industry. It will prove such a wonderful cure for employment that problems and grivances should be fully understood, and dealt with in a practical way by the federal government.

Mr. ADAMSON: I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Cochrane on what he has just said. I can agree with him on everything with the exception of his sanguine thought that the Minister of Finance really appreciates what the mining industry has done, is doing and is capable of doing for the economy of this country. Resolution 6 brings gold mines under the same agreement as the base metal, or what were known during the war as the strategic metal mines, and gives a three-year income tax exemption to new gold mines. I should like to refer for a moment to the original Excess Profits Tax Act and quote a submission which was given to me with regard to section 6, which is as follows:

> The exemption as proposed by item 6 of the excess profits tax resolutions will be for the period that the excess profits tax remains in force.
> The only tax administered by this division which will be payable will be the income tax which at present is 18 per cent of net profits.
> Under the procedure adopted in administering the original section 7 (g) of the Excess Profits Tax Act, no set period was allowed for "tuning up" but you will note that the exemption commences from the time that the property commences production of ore in reasonable commercial quantities. A "tuning up" period of six months was allowed for the purposes of section 89 of the Income War Tax Act in respect of base and precious metal mines but in view of the inclusion of industrial mineral mines under the present proposed legislation, it is not felt that a definite period can be set at this time.
> The "tuning up" provision is purely an administrative ruling designed to allow time for the property to come into commercial production.

A reasonable enough submission in itself, but I wish to go one step farther. While the announced intention of the act was to provide encouragement or assistance to all mines entering production in the period concerned, the subsequent regulations—these are the words I wish to bring out to the Minister of Finance—issued under the authority of the minister, as provided for in section 4 of the Income War Tax Act, which reads:

> The minister may make any regulations deemed necessary for carrying this section into effect.

These have the effect of denying those benefits to any mine, except such as would have been successful in any event. These regulations made it obligatory for all new mines coming under the provisions to charge up to production expenses a maximum of fifteen per cent depreciation per annum on their total plant expenses and additionally to charge off annually during the same period a minimum of fifteen per cent of the total pre-development expenditures made in preparing the mine for production. This is what I brought to the attention of the minister this afternoon when I said I was going to discuss this part of the act.

A low-grade mine may find itself in the position of having to spend as much or even more money in developing its ore body prior to production than it will spend on its whole treatment plant. It is not uncommon to find that when the treatment plant, which may be depreciated at fifteen per cent per annum, costs half a million dollars, a similar sum has been expended on pre-development and must be written off at the same rate. The write-offs that are required to be made in such a case, whether the mine has a profit or not, amount to fifteen per cent of $1 million per annum, or $150,000 a year, giving a total of $450,000 in three years. In other words, before any benefits accrue from the release from taxation, such a mine must first make sufficient operating profits to meet these enforced write-offs, a situation that exists only in the larger higher grade mines.

If insufficient profits—this is the case of a loss—to take care of these write-offs are made in the period, then the mine finds itself forced to set up a loss which cannot be applied to reduced future profits. If, therefore, it is really the intention of the government to provide by this means some real assistance and encouragement to new mines to go into production, the present limitation by regulation of depreciation and pre-development write-offs should be entirely removed. If that action is not taken, the effect of the act itself is simply to give to the mines that already have and take from those that need help.

I can name half a dozen mines which are in that condition; I can name most of the sixty mines that we speak of so glibly as being mines which may come into production. They are all low-grade producers. Their ore is running from $4 to $5 to possibly $6 a ton and their costs will be $4, $5 or nearly $6 a ton. They must estimate their profits, not in dollars a ton but in cents a ton of ore milled. They will be large tonnage propositions, and this applies peculiarly to the new mines in the belt from Rouyn through the Cadillacs to the Malartics right through the new mines in Pershing township. As I say, their profits will be measured in cents a ton. The capital cost of bringing those mines into production will be not hundreds of thousands but millions of dollars. They will all have to spend from $600,000 to $700,000 for a mill and possibly $1,000,000 or even more for pre-development expenses. They will come under this section and under the ruling that I have received and be granted a three-year exemption from income tax. But during those three years they will have to make allowance for write-offs for pre-development expenses and write-offs for the mill. I suggest that those will be at the rate of fifteen per cent per annum. When these mines have passed through their three years of exemption they will not be coming in as a new mine, as was the intention of the act, but they will be coming in as a mine that has already written off very nearly fifty per cent of its pre-development costs and the costs of its production plant, its mill; in other words, fifty per cent of the capital expenditure involved in bringing the mine into production will at the end of three years, as the act is now submitted, have been written off. I suggest that that is not the intention of the act.

Pre-development costs are very great in these mines. It is amazing how the malartics with their heavy overburden were discovered at all. We hope and pray that there will be a parallel belt discovered running from the Porcupine area due east. That is just a supposition; we do not know. But if these mines are developed, the pre-development costs of bringing them in, getting through the overburden and doing the necessary stripping to find out whether geological conditions warrant further expenditure on the sinking of a shaft or further diamond drilling will run into millions of dollars. At the end of three years they will probably be low-grade mines. The great bonanzas, with $20 and $30 ore, exist only in the imagination of people, not in actual life. The profitable development of Canada's mineral resources will be in mines that produce thousands of tons of $5 and $6 ore, not the spectacular mine that produces $20 or $30 ore and shows free gold. Our mineral development will be made in the low-value ore bodies, and I suggest that, as I read the act, these enforced write-offs vitiate the benefits—and I appreciate that the Minister of Finance is trying to give benefits to the gold mines and to all mines—that are sought to be given.

I suggest that this resolution be amended so that the write-offs will not apply until the end of the three-year tuning-up period. As most of us know, for the first few months in the operation of a gold mill, the mill itself absorbs the gold and the profits are negligible. The chinks in the rod mill, the agitator and the rest of the circuit absorb the gold and the gold sticks to the walls. The very fact that so many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of gold are lost in the operations of the mint—and the mint is a more efficiently run operation than any gold mill can be—is an example of what I mean. The very fact that that happens shows that the tuning-up period is necessary. But after the end of three years they could begin to apply their write-offs and allow everything that has been spent up to the end of the three year period as a write-off.

I know that this may come as a heresy to the Minister of Finance, but it is nevertheless a fact that the metal mines for the first years of their production do not in most cases make any appreciable profit. Yet under the act they are forced, whether they have profits or not, to apply the write-offs.

I have figures here showing when every mine in Ontario came into production, when it was incorporated, when it paid its first dividend. I shall not put them on the record, but believe me, Mr. Chairman, that the only return which the gold mines particularly in Ontario make to their shareholders is in dividends. Their shareholders are anxious to get dividends and there can be no question of withholding dividends. Several of these mines started production and did not pay dividends for ten or fifteen or twenty years. I have a list showing thirty-nine mines in Ontario with a total production of $21,859,000 which paid no dividends and made no return whatsoever to their shareholders.

The Minister of Finance, because we talk about mining, thinks we are asking for too much; I can see that he does. But that is not so, and he will not think so once he realizes, despite the propaganda to the contrary, the hazardous and speculative nature of bringing into production a producing mine. Some of us have tried it and failed, have grub-staked and gone into syndicates and lost everything that we put in. I would again plead with him that the write-offs should not apply until the end of the three-year tuning-up period.

We are entering a very difficult period in international finance. There is a movement on foot to exclude Canadian products from the sterling block area. I suggest to the minister that we shall find that we have more use for our gold and our base metals—remember that in Canada gold and base metals are frequently found in association with each other—and that in the economy of the world we shall need gold more in the next few years than we have ever needed it previously in our time. I am making this plea to the minister to consider waiting till the three-year period is over—and I have the information here before me—before he deprives our mines of write-offs and deductions for pre-development expenses.

Mr. COCKERAM: I congratulate the hon. member for Cochrane, who represents a good mining constituency, upon his support of the industry to-night, as I believe that the mining industry in this country is much misunderstood. The general opinion is that anybody connected with mining becomes a millionaire overnight. The mining industry has a definite place in the economic life of this country, and in support of that assertion I should like to read a statement which was made by the former minister of mines, Hon. J. A. Crerar, in April, 1936. He said:

> I must emphasize this factor of capital. Few laymen are aware of the vast sums of money required to develop mines. The great deposits of the Flin Flon, in Manitoba, required an expenditure of $30 million before there was any return on this large investment. The mine at Noranda in Quebec required $25 million to enable it to produce the refined metals in the large quantity it now does.

I ask the committee to bear this in mind:

> The average gold mine takes from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000 to develop and equip to the state of production. Much money must be risked in the early stages of development, for there is no certainty of success. Courageous capital is thus an essential to new mining enterprise.

I would point out to the minister that in a brief which he received from the Mining Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, I think last year, the following statistics were given: that, of Canada's 1942 metal production value, 56 per cent was derived from mineral areas discovered prior to 1910, 28 per cent was derived from mineral areas discovered between 1910 and 1920, 11 per cent was derived from mineral areas discovered between 1920 and 1930, and only 5 per cent was derived from mineral areas discovered subsequent to 1930.

I gave some figures this afternoon regarding the industry; and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I wish to stay fairly close to my notes, because I have a lot of statistics to give. I would point out that, according to the Royal Ontario Mining commission's report, the establishment of new communities directly due to mining was as follows:

> The Ontario metal mining industry has been responsible for the establishment of new, prosperous communities, non-existent a few years ago, which, according to the 1941 dominion census, had a combined population of 138,110. Of this total it is estimated that at least 125,000, or 90 per cent, are directly dependent upon metal mining.

I was surprised to find, in reading the budget resolution, that the Minister of Finance gave very little consideration to the metal mining industry of this country. It is estimated, and it appears in the brief of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, that for every one person actually engaged in the mining industry in this dominion, twelve other Canadians depend upon the prosperity of that industry for their livelihood. In 1941, the annual report on mineral production issued by the dominion bureau of statistics shows that 113,227 persons were employed in the Canadian mining industry. Taking an average of twelve people employed directly or supported indirectly by the mining industry, we arrive at the figure of 1,358,724 Canadians who owe their livelihood or their living to the success of the mining industry. This figure represents approximately eleven per cent of the population of the dominion. South Africa is still the leading gold-producing country of the world, but I can see where Canada, with a little encouragement from the Department of Finance—and after all it is only his department that can encourage the industry—can be put in the position of leading the world in gold production. If we reach that position we shall be creating new wealth, and new wealth in connection with mining means jobs for very many people in this country.

Gold mines in this country produce new wealth and create markets for foodstuffs, labour, lumber, electricity, transportation and services of all kinds, and I would remind the minister that gold mines pay very heavy taxes to the dominion treasury. I would also remind the minister and his officials, however, that gold mines cannot reproduce themselves. Once a level in a mine is mined out it is gone for good. Neither the minister nor anyone else can put gold back in the ground. The life of the average Canadian gold mine is only about eight years. We are very fortunate in that, for many miles across our country we have the pre-Cambrian shield which statistics show has been prospected only to about ten per cent.

I would again ask the minister to show consideration for this industry, which means so much not only to Ontario but to every province in the dominion. I could go to many hon. members representing industrial centres, including centres in British Columbia, and ask them to investigate from the industrialists in their communities and find out what the gold mining industry has meant to their districts.

Over the last few years Canada benefited from an increase in the price of gold. What does that increase in the price of gold mean in terms of employment in this country? The average life of a gold mine in Canada is 8·12 years. The increase in the price of gold which took place some years ago meant an additional one year of life to those mines. The ore which, prior to the increase in the price of gold, was just rock became productive and thus the mining industry was able to produce it, and give employment and pay taxes.

In this connection I should like to give some figures.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. COCKERAM: You fellows over there, wait a minute; you do not know anything about this. Let me take Ontario figures for illustration purposes. Every year of extra life added to a gold mine by the rise in the price of gold resulted in these figures. Hon. members on my left are not interested in employment, or anything like that, but this is what the increase in the price of gold meant: one more full year's work for 21,000 men in this country drawing a payroll of $42,000,000. From this point, mainly employment, as well as purchases of supplies, the creation of new dollars for Canada, and the continuance of steady jobs for Canadians, the life length of every individual gold mine is of prime importance. Anybody who knows anything about the mining industry realizes that for the last twenty years jobs have been steady and well paid in the gold mining industry, and for that reason we have had very little unrest in our gold mining area.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What about Kirkland Lake?

Mr. COCKERAM: That was fomented by people like yourself. During the years 1931 to 1941 Ontario gold mines increased production by $11,000,000; but total costs increased by $15,000,000. In that connection I have some figures that I should like to place on the record with the unanimous consent of the committee. I should like to do that so that the committee might have some idea of the costs of operating a gold mine. These figures are dealt with under the following headings: price of gold, tons milled, gold recovery, operating costs per ounce, total taxes per ounce, operating costs per ton, total taxes paid per ton and the recovery per ton of seven of the leading producers in the province of Ontario from the year 1930 to 1943.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member the consent of the committee?

Mr. ILSLEY: Who compiled the figures?

Mr. COCKERAM: The Ontario mining association which, I think the minister will agree, is a reputable association.

Mr. ILSLEY: All right.

Mr. COCKERAM: The table is as follows:

Canada has been fortunate over the past fifteen years, in that the price of gold has shown a substantial increase; and I wish to show what that increase has meant to this country. In terms of new jobs, new payrolls, new wealth and the actual amount of gold mined, this is what happens with a rise in gold prices. Between 1930 and 1939 the price received by Canadian mines for their gold rose as a result of currency exchange fluctuations from $20.67 per ounce, to $36.14 per ounce. Compiled from the records of seven Ontario mines which were in steady production during the period from 1930 to 1939 the price of gold went up seventy-four per cent. The tons of ore milled went up fifty-two per cent; the ounces of gold recovered went up thirteen per cent; the proportion of recovery in ounces of gold per ton milled went down twenty-six per cent, and the total number of our employed increased by 161 per cent. That meant, Mr. Chairman, that because of the increase in the price of gold the mining industry were able to treat many more tons of lower grade ore than they were able to treat in the years gone by. This lower grade ore gave much employment directly and indirectly in this country. I wish to tell the committee what this increase in the price of gold meant. With the higher price of gold the mining industry produced thirteen per cent more ounces of gold from fifty-two per cent more tons of ore, and the seven mines that are referred to in the statement mined and milled 1,489,052 more tons of ore than they did in 1930. Because of the increase in the price of gold the mining industry was able to treat many more tons of ore, and the lumbering, transportation, electricity and every other kind of industries throughout Canada benefited.

Those of us who are connected with the mining industry believe that we have a very sound case, and we ask the minister to go back to the point where the industry was many years ago when it was allowed a fifty per cent depletion allowance, and the shareholders received a similar allowance when the dividends came into their hands. If we are to develop our gold mining industry the minister must realize that the people who put their money into the industry take great risks. If it is a gold mining company it is using the shareholder's money to develop further prospecting. I would again ask the minister to consider this whole question of mining taxation. If I can be of any assistance to the officials of the department I shall be only too glad to do anything I can. I believe that the future of this country in good times and in bad depends on the success of that industry which has done so much to carry us through depression years and war years.

Resolution stands.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

ATOMIC ENERGY

TABLING OF JOINT STATEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM AND CANADA

On the order of motions:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I desire to lay on the table copies in English and French of the declaration on atomic energy made by the President of the United States of America, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the Prime Minister of Canada at Washington November 15, 1945. Hon. members will recall that the Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent) placed the declaration on Hansard the day on which it was made, November 15. These are printed copies of the declaration by itself.

SILVER

DOMESTIC AND EXPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I believe some statement has been made by the wartime prices and trade board concerning a change in the price of silver in Canada. Would the minister make a statement on the subject?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Arrangements have been completed with the major silver refiners whereby approximately fifty per cent of the silver which will be refined by them in 1946 will be reserved for domestic consumers and sold in Canada at Canadian silver prices. This silver will be distributed in accordance with normal usage. At the same time arrangements have been made by which small silver producers in the Cobalt area whose silver is refined in Canada will receive the export price for their production. The small producers in British Columbia whose silver is refined at Trail, British Columbia, will be treated in the same manner. The mint has agreed to pay gold producers shipping bullion to the mint the export price for one-half of the by-product silver recovered and the domestic price for the other half.

Mr. GREEN: Does that mean the domestic price of silver is still to remain under the ceiling?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

EMPLOYMENT

DEMOBILIZATION OF TROOPS IN VANCOUVER AND VICTORIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): I desire to direct an urgent question to the Minister of National Defence. Since he is not here perhaps the Minister of Labour will bring it to his attention or give me the answer. My question is: will the minister cease demobilizing troops in Vancouver and Victoria other than those who resided in British Columbia before enlistment?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would suggest that the hon. member place his question on the order paper.

Mr. GREEN: It is very urgent.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Speaker, I have not come to the urgency of the situation. At the moment it is a matter of great urgency.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would point out to the hon. member that when I say a question is not urgent I do not mean that the situation itself may not be urgent. The point is, if the question is put in the house will the immediate answer of the minister relieve the situation? In most cases, even if the question is put in the house, for some reason or other the minister is not ready to give an answer and it does not help anyone. If the question is placed upon the order paper the minister can look at it and give an answer which will be useful to hon. members. That is why I suggest that such questions be placed on the order paper.

Mr. STIRLING: In view of the urgency of this matter in the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia would it not be possible to allow the hon. member to complete his question?

Mr. SPEAKER: I want to be generous to hon. members as far as questions on the orders of the day are concerned, and I have tried to be; but under the rules of the house most of the questions should be placed on the order paper, and I believe the question of the hon. member for Nanaimo is one that should be dealt with in that way.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN VANCOUVER—SHORTAGE OF SKILLED MEN IN INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt), gave notice of a question. I said at that time that while I could make a reply, perhaps it would be better to make a statement to-day. I shall now do so.

In answer to the first part of the question of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, namely, as to what steps are being taken by the Department of Labour to overcome the shortage of skilled men in certain industries, I would advise that under the Canadian vocational training plan extensive vocational training has been undertaken both in classes as well as "on the job," and in addition the provinces, including the province of British Columbia, are assisted in extending apprenticeship plans.

Until quite recently it has been very difficult to interest men in training plans because work at good rates, without any particular training, was easy to obtain. The situation, however, has since changed and candidates are now coming forward and vocational training classes are being organized as rapidly as possible. Already there are 12,641 in training in Canada and 1,081 in British Columbia.

In regard to the second part of the question, which relates specifically to the employment situation in Vancouver, I should point out that the employment situation throughout Canada naturally has changed since V-J day, and now for the first time for several years there is a deficiency in the number of jobs available as compared with the number of unplaced applicants. The total is approximately 40,000.

Since V-J day, of course, there has been a very large cut-back in war manufacturing. On V-J day there were approximately 450,000 men and women engaged in war work, the majority of whom have since been laid off. In addition, since V-J day approximately 240,000 men and women have been released from the armed forces. When these figures of lay-offs and discharges are considered, it is clear that the absorption of man-power in civilian production and services has been very satisfactory.

Vancouver is one of the points in Canada where there are grounds for concern. The number of unplaced applicants as at November 29 was 14,680. The explanation is that Vancouver had a great deal of war work, principally shipbuilding, aircraft work and work along the coast on defence projects by the governments of Canada and the United States, and consequently there has been a correspondingly heavy reduction in employment. Up to a few days ago there has been a big demand for men in the lumber camps, but the heavy snowfall has slowed up this activity. It was noticeable that when men were being sought for lumber camps there were few willing to take this work, or indeed any work outside Vancouver.

There are still jobs available in mines and in other occupations outside Vancouver. The job opportunities are being advertised and men are assisted to move if they are without means to pay for their own transportation. Employers are being advised of particulars of the occupations of the men and women who are applying for jobs.

It is true that in Vancouver the shock of the change-over from war activity to production for civilian use has been somewhat greater than in some other parts of Canada. However, the view is held that the peak has probably been reached, that an improvement can be expected very soon, and that work will be available for all, if not in Vancouver city certainly at other points.

I would like to place on the record a set of figures which has just been issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showing that the reduction in employment on October 1, 1945, as compared with September 1, 1945, despite the very great reduction in war work, was in nine leading industries only 2·2 per cent. This gives some idea, Mr. Speaker, of the resiliency and the powers of absorption of the Canadian industrial, commercial and agricultural structure.

In conclusion let me say that the government is concerned in regard to the situation in Vancouver and in several other cities in Canada, especially those which have had considerable war work. The present season is of course not favourable to commencement of new projects. The shortage of materials in many lines is creating difficulties, but no effort will be spared and I am satisfied that early spring will see a great improvement in the employment situation.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I should like to say to the Minister of Labour that my information, received not later than this morning, is that there is a great surplus of men seeking employment in the lumber woods—far more than the operating lumber companies can employ, and that the unemployment situation there is being aggravated by the discharge of many men from the army who do not belong in British Columbia and who did not enlist from that province. They should be sent to where they enlisted or where they belong, rather than be permitted to aggravate the situation in British Columbia.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INCREASE OF CAPITAL—CREATION OF CORPORATION TO OPERATE SERVICES UNDER CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to bill No. 21, to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1937.

He said: The government agrees to these amendments, and the motion is now that the house concur. The amendments are entirely consistent with the existing practice. The first amendment provides that orders in council made under the act shall be tabled in the House of Commons. The second amendment is practically a quotation from The Canadian National Railways Act, of 1932, which requires an annual report from the company. The third amendment requires that the reports of the board of directors and the auditor respectively be tabled in parliament.

Mr. STIRLING: I understand these are beneficial amendments.

Mr. HOWE: At least they are not harmful.

Mr. STIRLING: May I draw attention of the house to the fact that we have had no warning of these amendments, and only at this moment have heard their contents. They may be quite beneficial but I think we ought to know more about them and should have an opportunity to consider them.

Mr. HOWE: Very well; allow it to stand.

Motion stands.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

72. Departmental administration, $163,760.

Mr. REID: Mr. Chairman, there is one matter I should like to draw to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries. I do not expect he will be able to give a definite answer at the moment, but I would ask him to give some thought to it between now and the next session. I refer to the offshore fisheries of British Columbia. As is well known, we spend millions of dollars hatching, rearing and protecting the great salmon fisheries of British Columbia. These fish head out to sea in their first or second year, and after they pass the three-mile limit they are at the mercy of the fishermen of any country. The United States has taken note of the calamity that might occur if foreign nations come close—I mean within ten or fifteen miles—of the shores of the United States in order to fish. After some investigation they passed a bill this year to take care of offshore fishing beyond the three-mile limit.

It may be remembered that prior to the outbreak of the war, Japan sent mother ships down along the Alaska and British Columbia coasts. These ships returned home with great quantities of canned salmon. The war interfered with their activities, but under international law we had no control of any ships beyond the three-mile limit. The United States became greatly alarmed at what had taken place in Alaska bay. The Japanese had many ships in that bay, and strange to say when they were accused of this there was an official denial by the government of Japan. The fishermen there knew what was going on, and they went to the expense of hiring an aeroplane which took photographs of the Japanese actually fishing in Alaska bay.

Very few nations have gone to the trouble of rehabilitating or preserving or regulating their fisheries. Most nations, including Japan, have only one thought in their minds, to secure all the fish possible and market them. Here is what the United States have done, and I quote from a dispatch dated September 28:

> President Truman announced to-day the United States government has decided to regulate and control fisheries on the high seas contiguous to the United States. The new policy will safeguard the valuable Alaska salmon fishery, he said.
> The order provided for establishment, under recommendation of the interior and state departments, of fishery conservation zones, in areas of the high seas contiguous to the United States coast.
> Until the present the only high seas fisheries in which the United States has participated in regulating are those for whales, Pacific halibut and fur seals.
> "In areas where fisheries have been or hereafter shall be developed and maintained by nationals of the United States alone," the White House said, "explicitly bounded zones will be set up in which the United States may regulate and control all fishing activities."
> In areas where the nationals of other countries may be involved, the announcement continued, zones will be established by agreements and joint regulations made effective.
> This new policy, the White House asserted will enable the United States "to protect effectively, for instance, its most valuable fishery, that for the Alaska salmon."
> "Uncontrolled fishery activities of this and other countries," the statement said, "have constituted an ever-increasing menace to the salmon fishery."

My suggestion is that the minister give this matter serious thought. When the salmon which are hatched and reared at great expense by our government head out through Juan de Fuca strait, they feed for the next two or three years probably fifteen to twenty miles out. There is nothing to prevent the fishermen of any country from coming in there and destroying or taking the entire catch.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. The waters of Hecate strait between the Queen Charlotte islands and the mainland of British Columbia should be declared Canadian waters. This strait is eighty or more miles wide, but it lies between the Queen Charlotte islands, which is Canadian territory, and the mainland. Considerable fishing is done in these waters, and at present under international law they are open to United States, Japan or any other nation. I know that if these waters had been contiguous to the United States they would long before this have been declared United States waters.

Mr. MacNICOL: I agree with the hon. member. Why have they not been declared to be Canadian waters? Our territory should extend to three miles beyond the Queen Charlotte islands.

Mr. REID: I do not know. I understand that some years ago the Canadian government attempted to declare the waters of Hecate strait as Canadian waters for the purposes of control. Apparently in those days we were a little afraid to take a bold stand, and the matter was dropped. However, it is my opinion that if we had then declared these waters to be Canadian waters, no country would seriously dispute our stand.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member is right.

Mr. REID: The matter is serious. When we consider the future I think we must realize that now is the time for us to declare to other countries that these waters are Canadian. We should also be ready to cooperate with the United States government, who have declared that the waters contiguous to Alaska will be open to fishing only to United States fishermen. I wanted to bring these matters to the attention of the minister so that he may consider them between sessions. I urge that Canada cooperate with the United States and that we follow their example.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Chairman, there are a few matters I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries, and there are one or two questions I should like to ask. Before I do so, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate him upon being appointed to the position he now holds in the government of Canada. I think the Prime Minister made a wise choice in selecting him for that office. It is a matter of satisfaction, I believe, not only to the members from New Brunswick who sit on the government side but also to the members from that province who sit on the opposition side, that the hon. member for York-Sunbury was appointed to this responsible position.

I call it a responsible position, but I notice that not long ago a Toronto newspaper, commenting on the appointment, said that the fisheries post was not one, to say the least, that involved great responsibilities. I do not agree with that statement. I believe the minister has great responsibilities. It is his responsibility and duty to assist in conserving, developing and improving the fishing resources and fishing industry of this country in order that an improvement may be made in the living conditions of tens of thousands of men who are primary producers and who make their living from the harvest of the sea. I think that is a great responsibility.

When the estimates of the Minister of Public Works were before the committee a few days ago I pointed out to him the necessity of certain repairs being made to wharves at fishing villages along the shores of the bay of Fundy. I have already written to the Minister of Fisheries about repairs that are necessary and I do not think I should take up the time of the committee now by going into details. As the minister knows, repairs are necessary at Chance harbour, at Lorneville, and at other harbours along the shore. They are urgently needed by the fishermen of these different communities. In addition to these repairs it is essential that dredging be done at Dipper harbour in New Brunswick.

There is another matter I wish to refer to and in connection with which I want to make a suggestion to the minister. I suggest that he take steps to have established lobster hatcheries along the shores of New Brunswick. I will go further and say, in the maritime provinces. I understand that at one time a good many years ago lobster hatcheries were established in the maritimes and later they were abandoned. I would ask the minister not to be discouraged by the fact that these lobster hatcheries were done away with at that time; for if he will look into the matter he will find that in the state of Maine, which adjoins New Brunswick, lobster hatcheries that were established some time ago have proved a great success. Not only have they benefited fishermen in the state of Maine and along the New England shores, but they have also benefited the fishermen on the Island of Grand Manan, which is part of New Brunswick.

The lobster industry is an important one, and it could be made much more important than it is to-day. To illustrate the size of the business, I may say that at St. Andrew's in Charlotte county there is being shipped this year by one firm lobsters to the value of $3,500,000. It is big business, and it could be made larger. It therefore deserves encouragement.

There is a member of this house who knows a great deal more about this matter than I do, and that is the member for Charlotte, New Brunswick (Mr. Stuart). For a good many years he has been intimately connected with the fish business in more ways than one, and I am sure he will back me up in urging the minister to establish lobster hatcheries in the maritime provinces in the interests of our fishermen and in order to add to the wealth of the dominion.

There are one or two items under the war appropriation estimates, if I may so describe them, on page 553 of Hansard, about which I should like to ask the minister a question. I do not expect him to answer now, but I think we should have some information on these subjects before he gets through with his estimates. One of the items I have in mind is a sum of $1,200,000 to provide for payment of subsidies in connection with the purchase of Canadian canned salmon. I should like to have a statement from the minister about the amount of subsidies paid, to whom paid, the quantity of salmon represented, and where that salmon was disposed of. Another item about which I should like to have some information is the one that is worded "operation of experimental long line fishing vessel, $50,000". Will the minister tell us what that experiment was, where it was held, what the results were, and so on?

I asked the Minister of Fisheries when the Fisheries Act was up about fishery inspectors and fishery guardians, and at that time I referred to a case at Shediac, New Brunswick. A fishery inspector had resigned his position in order to take up a job with the provincial government. The position was not advertised by the civil service commission, but a man whose name it is not necessary to mention was given the job. I understand from what the minister said that he knew about that case and that the job was only a temporary one. I understood that ultimately the position would be advertised. What I should like to know is this. How long are these positions to be kept open in this way or filled temporarily before they are advertised by the civil service commission. It seems to me that if a man gives up a position of this kind the proper course is to advertise it right away or very soon after it is relinquished. In this particular case an application was made for the job by a man who had served four years overseas and had been wounded in the fighting in France. He was told, if I have the facts correctly, that the position would be ultimately advertised, but in the meantime somebody else was given the job, a man who had never served overseas. What I fear is that the man who had no service overseas will get the preference, when these examinations are held, if he is kept there long enough; that the examiners will say that his qualifications are so much higher, that he knows so much more about the work than the man who returned from overseas, that it will not be an overseas man that gets the job. If our men who served overseas are to have the preference, as I think they should have, that situation is not right. I have here a clipping with reference to a meeting of the Legion, held in the city of Montreal, in which there is reported a resolution passed at that meeting. The clipping is from the Montreal Star. The resolution urged that all temporary employees of the dominion civil service be placed in examinations in competition with veterans and that a representative of the provincial command of the Canadian Legion should be on the examining board. That resolution was passed without dissent at a meeting of R.M.R. branch No. 14 of the Legion, held at Westmount Armoury.

I am interested in this particular case because I want to see a returned man, a man who served overseas, get the appointment. I believe a returned man is entitled to it and should get it in preference to one who did not go overseas. I do not ask the minister to make a statement now, but I would ask him to look into the matter and see that the position is advertised and that, so far as it lies in his power, he see to it that a man who served overseas gets the appointment.

Mr. BROOKS: I wish to take only a few minutes of the time of the committee. I must confess I am not very well versed in the subject of fisheries; my constituency is an inland constituency. When I was the sole New Brunswick representative of my party from 1935 to 1940 I did make some study of the fishing situation, though possibly I succeeded only in showing how little I knew about it. But I was very much interested in the subject.

I want to take this opportunity of adding my congratulations to those of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, on the minister's appointment. I feel that these felicitations come with very good grace from the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, because it is entirely due to him that the minister has his position to-day. The fact is that he defeated the candidate who was supposed to be the minister from the province of New Brunswick. When the present minister was appointed there were people unkind enough to say that it was "Hobson's choice". Let me say immediately that that is not at all my opinion. I feel that the minister compares favourably with men from that province who have held the position on previous occasions, and I am sure he compares favourably with many of the other present members of the cabinet. I might add, though, Mr. Chairman, that that compliment can be taken for whatever it is worth.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert said that the minister in charge of fisheries had great responsibility. There is no question about that. I would also point out that he is not only the Minister of Fisheries, but also the minister representing the province of New Brunswick. We have had good reason to complain over the past years of the lack of attention which the government and ministerial representatives from our province have given to our affairs. I sincerely hope, and I wish to impress this upon the present occupant, that we shall receive better treatment in the future, and that his attention will be directed not only to his department but to everything which pertains to the benefit of the province of New Brunswick. I assure him that if he does so he will have every assistance which can be given by hon. members on this side of the house.

The matter upon which I wish to speak for a few moments is that of markets for our fisheries. During the war years Canadian fisheries have been prosperous; we have been able to sell our produce in good markets, and have received good prices. For many years before the war this was not so. Fisheries, in the maritime provinces at least, languished for lack of markets, and I hope one of the chief concerns of the minister and the government will be to provide markets for our fish. The war made it impossible for many other countries, including Norway, Great Britain, Newfoundland to a great extent, and Iceland, to carry on their normal fishing industries. This was not altogether true in our case, although we lost a good many men to the army who otherwise, probably, would have been carrying on this occupation.

In connection with the problem of providing markets, I wish to ask the minister a question, to which he can reply when he answers other questions which have been and will be asked. Is an investigation being made in his department of the possibility of transporting fresh fish from the maritimes to the larger centres in Quebec and Ontario? I believe that this could be done profitably by plane, and that, with the general use of the aeroplane to-day as a method of transport, the matter of transporting fresh fish should be given very careful consideration. As we all know, it is almost impossible to obtain fresh fish in cities like Ottawa, Montreal, and Toronto. What goes as fish up here is something at which we in the maritimes would be inclined to turn up our noses in scorn. The people of these provinces do not know what the taste of fresh fish is like, and I am satisfied that if an effort were made to increase the fresh fish market in the central part of Canada, it would be of great benefit to the industry.

There is also the matter of the South American and West Indian markets. Our maritime people lost those for a number of years, but there is a great possibility of opening up in South America particularly a market for cured fish which would be of great benefit to the fisheries of our part of Canada.

The hon. member for Saint John-Albert spoke about preference for returned men, in the fisheries department particularly; but it applies to all departments. I know that the committee on veterans affairs which is sitting at the present time is very anxious that this preference shall be honoured. I think that in the past the principle has been fairly well observed by the government, but there have been exceptions, and we have felt that the act has been got around in many cases. I had occasion to write to the minister the other day about a young man who was applying for an appointment with his department. He is not an overseas man in the sense in which we use the term, but he was a member of the merchant marine and also volunteered for active service but due to low category only served in Canada. We all know that the merchant marine played an important part in winning the war; they were engaged in a most hazardous occupation. Many men who served in the armed forces did not suffer the hardships and privations endured by the men of the merchant marine, nor did they encounter any more dangers. I hope therefore that the men of the merchant marine will be considered when civil service appointments are being made.

Mr. ISNOR: I believe I can say that all hon. members from the maritimes are agreed in asking that the minister give every consideration to the question of fisheries. At the outset I should like to associate myself with the congratulations which have already been extended to the minister by the hon. members from Saint John-Albert and Royal upon his appointment as Minister of Fisheries. He has already shown by his interest, his energy and his cooperation with the various sections of Canada that he is alive to the possibilities in his department. It is no minor department, but represents real wealth to our country. The maritimes is perhaps the largest fishing unit in the dominion—with all due respect to the hon. member for New Westminster, who takes such a deep interest in the fisheries. I would remind the house that the fisheries mean something like $38,000,000 to our section of the country, and to Nova Scotia itself a wealth of $23,662,000.

I wish to concur in and support the representations made by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert in his suggestion to the minister that he cooperate in the closest possible manner with the Department of Public Works. Like the hon. member I too made representations to the Minister of Public Works that he give favourable consideration to the requests from the maritimes for breakwaters, particularly in the fishing villages along our coast. Unless they have that protection, and unless there is close cooperation between the two departments, the fishing industry, particularly the inshore fishery, cannot be carried on to the advantage of the industry and of the country. Both ministers must be familiar with the hazards experienced by the inshore fishermen. They leave their homes as early as four or five o'clock in the morning, go to the fishing grounds, and do not return until towards evening. Unfortunately considerable publicity has been given recently by the radio and the press to gales that are sometimes experienced in Nova Scotia. These gales cause damage all along our coast, and it is to offset such damage that I have urged again and again that the Minister of Public Works cooperate with the Minister of Fisheries with a view to providing the necessary breakwaters. As an illustration of the problems with which the fishermen are faced, let me point out that many of them operate out of small coves containing from eight to ten fishing boats. Through the months when storms are experienced the openings through which the fishermen pass to and from the fishing grounds are closed by obstructions piled up by the storms. I am anxious to see that these passages are kept open by the provision of proper breakwaters.

I wish to support the arguments which have been made in support of the development of our export trade, and particularly the marketing of maritime fish in central Canada. Years ago we established a market in central Canada—Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto—and it was a Halifax man, by the way, who was largely responsible for the inauguration of that market. I am anxious to see it maintained, and I am wondering whether the officials of the department have cooperated with or made representations to the Department of Transport in the matter of providing modern facilities for the carrying of fresh fish from the maritimes to these central markets which I know wish to have our fish. As the hon. member for Royal has said, in Ottawa we repeatedly ask for fish and cannot get it, and the same is true of Montreal and Toronto but to an even greater extent. It would increase the consumption of fish and be of direct benefit to the maritimes if the Minister of Fisheries would give this matter further thought, and encourage the marketing of our fish from the maritimes.

The minister is no doubt familiar with the merger of a large number of fishery concerns which recently took place in the maritimes. I think it will be a good thing from the point of view of our export trade, which takes care of something like seventy per cent of our total catch. This large merger no doubt will have the most modern equipment for processing, freezing, and so on; but I am concerned about the future of our inshore fishing. We have in Halifax the largest number of inshore fishermen in any county in Nova Scotia, and that may sound surprising when you think of Halifax rather as a port and an industrial section of Nova Scotia. But the fact remains that we have 750 inshore fishermen's boats, employing 963 men. As I say, I am concerned about these inshore fishermen, and I am going to suggest that the minister endeavour to give them every possible encouragement in the establishment of small processing plants. If there is one department that has efficient and sympathetic officials, from the deputy minister down, it is the Department of Fisheries. I have gone to them time and again with problems and have always had a very attentive hearing, and I have found them ready to lend assistance whenever possible. I am suggesting to them through the minister that further encouragement be given to the inshore fishermen; that inspectors and their assistants visit these fishing villages along the shore, offering advice as to how the fishermen can better process their catch. If this is done I feel sure it will add largely to the output.

Just recently I put before the Minister of Public Works a problem affecting twelve fishermen who formerly operated from a certain village. A processing plant was established a little further along the shore, and through lack of a breakwater these fishermen were obliged to travel many more miles to the new processing plant, with the result that there has been a gradual dying out of the fishing industry in that section. I feel that there is an opportunity for doing business in both places, and if we had cooperation these eight or ten fishermen would be able to carry their catch to a plant in their immediate vicinity instead of having to waste time in carrying it to a plant at a greater distance.

It is a matter of satisfaction, Mr. Chairman, to have the two ministers sitting in front of me, because I can address one or the other from time to time, and therefore I hope we shall have closer cooperation between the two departments than we have had in the past.

I am glad that the hon. member for Royal mentioned the West Indies trade agreement, which I understand is now under review by the Department of Trade and Commerce. It is quite likely that the Minister of Fisheries will make sure that his officials sit in on those deliberations so as to bring about the best possible results for the fishing industry in this country.

I could speak on the lobster catch. Sometimes this is termed a luxury trade, but it means real money to us in Nova Scotia, particularly to the fishermen in the constituency of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare. No doubt he will deal with that question to a greater extent than I would care to do at this time.

I am going to leave just two thoughts with the Minister of Fisheries. I would ask him, as I have said, to give every possible assistance, financial and by way of advice, to those who are prepared to construct small processing and freezing plants. I would also ask him to give every possible encouragement and advice to the fisherman who is anxious to build the type of boat which will permit him to go further to sea, but who is not financially able to do so. I believe the larger type of boat is more economical to operate, but unfortunately the Nova Scotia fishermen are not always in a position to finance the building of such boats. So I would ask the minister and his officials to give these men every consideration with a view to encouraging and helping them in every possible way

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that you wish to get these and other estimates through as quickly as possible, so I shall not add anything further at this time. From my knowledge of the minister I am sure he is sympathetically inclined toward this industry and will do everything possible to encourage it, both in the maritimes and throughout the dominion.

Mr. BAKER: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. I am not a lawyer; I do not believe in repetition, and I have not taken up much of the time of this house. I had a very pretty little speech prepared, but much of what I intended to say has been said already, so I will content myself with saying that I concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Royal, the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the senior member for Halifax. I will not put those remarks on Hansard again; and I hope other hon. members will take the hint and do likewise.

I come from a province where the actual landed value of fish in 1944 was $14,851,376, which total was exceeded only by the province of British Columbia.

Mr. REID: The value of the fish caught in British Columbia was equal to that of the three maritime provinces put together.

Mr. BAKER: I am going to offer what I consider a few practical suggestions. Fishermen are men of few words; often they are a bit bashful and unable to express themselves well, and for this reason it is hard for them to get organized. They are becoming better organized now, and I look to the future with great expectations. But certain things are needed. I spend a great deal of time on salt water myself, so I am going to be practical and not merely present a thesis. One thing we do need is more protection for the fishermen. We all consider that the men in the armed services require every bit of protection they can get, and we know that their wives and children worry about them. Fishermen, particularly in the part of the world in which I live, the junction of the bay of Fundy and the north Atlantic ocean, also require protection, and their wives and children have the same anxieties that the wives and children of servicemen have had for the past few years, except that they have to put up with these worries all their lives. I want to suggest that when you think of farmers you should always think of fishermen as well. I have the greatest sympathy for the farmers. I have listened to hon. members from the prairies, and have really enjoyed what they had to say. I have every sympathy for their problems; but in drawing up legislation for the farmer we should at the same time have regard for the fishermen; and for the benefit of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle I would say that I believe the wives of fishermen should be regarded in the same light as the wives of farmers. When it comes to the matter of benefits I believe fishermen should always be considered when farmers are mentioned.

To get down to something practical, we need some sort of coast service, guard service, though I realize the minister cannot look after this all by himself. In the United States they have a coast guard service which issues weather reports, picks up stray boats, and does anything that can be done. Their ships are equipped with ship to shore telephones, and we need something like that in Canada. I would offer what I would term a constructive criticism and suggest that the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Fisheries and possibly the mounted police get together in order to establish some such coast guard patrol. I am sure the minister is sympathetic toward the idea of having protection for the fishermen, and I know this question will be given every consideration. The minister knows all about it, but I am placing these remarks on Hansard so the other departments will see them and cooperate with him.

Then we are very badly in need of rope,—and here I am not speaking only of my own constituency, as I hope hon. members will notice and again follow my example. In southwest Nova Scotia, which also takes in the constituency of the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, they are very much in need of rope. Anything that can be done by this or any other department to secure more rope for the lobster fishermen this winter will be appreciated.

The question of future markets has been dealt with already. The only suggestion I should like to add is that we must develop our Canadian market more than we have in the past. We need to spend considerable sums on research and advertising. The fisheries department has some excellent research men, and I hope no one will ever object to the moneys that are being spent for research in connection with fisheries; and these remarks do not concern my own province only but apply to British Columbia as well. I can assure you that I will back them up in any way possible, because our problems are so similar.

Last but not least I should like to say a word about lobster hatcheries. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert referred to lobster hatcheries for New Brunswick. If we are to have these hatcheries I hope we shall have them for New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and any other area in which lobster fishing is carried on.

In conclusion I want to say how delighted I am with the type of man we have as the new Minister of Fisheries. As he has said, he is Frank by name and frank by nature. That is just the way the fishermen are, and that is the kind of man they will appreciate and understand, so I feel sure they will cooperate with him.

Mr. McLURE: I want to make a few remarks on this important question of fisheries, but first I should like to join in the congratulations that have been extended the new minister. However, since the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare made some kind remarks, and since the minister has hardly stopped smiling following those remarks, I had better not elaborate on the congratulations which are being heaped upon him, except to say that I am proud he is a maritimer. I should like him to understand that if in the course of my remarks I have anything to say of a critical nature with regard to the Department of Fisheries, he must not take that criticism personally, because he has been in the department only a very short time. This morning we had a warning, or perhaps it could be called a threat, extended in a nice way by the Prime Minister, who said that if we were not good boys this morning and this afternoon, and if we did not do a fair share of work in school we would be kept in after eight o'clock to-night, so I suppose I had better make my remarks as short as I can.

The fisheries are one of the great industries of Canada; it is up to us to take particular notice of it and see what improvements can be made for the benefit of the men who are engaged in it. For after all, the fishermen of the maritime provinces and of Canada generally are doing more to keep down what some people cry about—inflation—than any other class of men. By their production they have been the best safeguard for keeping away that terrible thing known as inflation.

It is my intention to speak about certain things which have happened in the last few years in connection with the fishing industry, and what I shall say will refer more specifically to my own province. One may say the fishing industry in Prince Edward Island is a feast in one year and a famine the next, largely due to regulations, transportation facilities, and lack of proper supervision by the fishing authorities. But worst of all in the past four years, and particularly in the last year, those engaged in the fisheries have been under control boards. As I said in an earlier debate, while some of those boards might be permissible in wartime, they should now be cast to the four winds of oblivion, so that we might get down to something practical in the processing and transportation of fish from the maritime provinces.

I would call the minister's attention to the last directive issued in the maritime provinces. I suppose it was put out as a result of an order in council. The one in question is dated October 1, 1945—and I mention the date to show that these directives are not put out in time to serve those engaged in the industry. They do not know what is going to happen from one day to the next. The order in question was issued from Halifax by Mr. McInerney, allocation officer for Atlantic canned fish. I take it for granted, of course, that he did not authorize its publication, but that it was put out by the administrator of fish products at Ottawa. When the complaint was made, Mr. McInerney told the fishermen, the packers and the canners that he was not responsible for the directive and did not know anything about it. This directive for 1945-46 for canned fish packs was directed to canners, assemblers, packers and exporters. It told them what they could do, and how and when they should do it. It was really a straight dictatorship in respect of all fish products, and I believe it was made by the administrator of fish products here in Ottawa, whoever he was.

I do not wish to dwell at length on this matter, because its application has passed for this season, but I draw the matter to the attention of the minister so that this condition can be rectified in the future.

Another thing this authoritative body did was to stipulate how quantities should be allocated. For instance, the Canadian Red Cross were allowed only a certain small proportion, to consist only of sardines. A definite quantity of sardines was made available to the British Ministry of Food. At the same time no definite amount of lobster pate or tamale was specified, but it was left to be supplied "as required". A buyer of these goods might buy them and pay a certain price for them; but when he came to sell them he would find that he had some new problem to deal with, namely that of finding out how he could market them at a price on which a ceiling had been set after he had made his purchase. In most cases he would have to take a loss.

When one looks at the instructions issued with reference to lobsters he sees that we did not have an opportunity of selling all our lobster in the United States market, where the highest prices were offered. A certain quantity, according to the directive, were supposed to be for relief feeding. We know this was absolute foolishness, and the dealers suffered a great loss when seventy-five per cent of their pack which could have been marketed easily in the United States had to be sent in other directions.

Another disturbing factor in the directive is the one pertaining to exports, where it is stated that at the discretion of the Department of Trade and Commerce a limited quantity of ground fish, chicken haddies, mackerel and lobster may be exported to Latin America, but that with reference to mackerel and lobster, permits would be granted on a first-come-first-served basis. In my opinion this is a crude fashion in which to allocate under export quotas, and it is certain to end in controversy when any attempt is made to find out who was first or who was not first. It leaves a condition under which those having the greatest pull with the controller of their goods will receive the favours, and will be given the first export permits. There has been considerable controversy between the department and various shippers on this subject.

The allocation board which operates under the administration is supposed to be represented in the maritime provinces by two members from each province. The two from Prince Edward Island who served on the board were packers, and I am informed that not in one single instance were they asked for advice. They were supposed to give advice concerning the province to which they were allocated. Again it boils down to the fact that the rules and regulations as laid down might best be done away with by eliminating the bureaucrats from the controls. These boards of control are burdened with red tape to such an extent that they are clogging the wheels of progress in the fishing industry.

May I emphasize this point to the minister who is now in charge of this great fishing industry: Do not permit the fishing trade or industry to be dominated by any administrator—no matter who he may be or where he is—who either does not know fishing conditions, especially in Prince Edward Island, or desires to make it a non-profitable business both to the packers and to the fishermen. There is no doubt that thousands of dollars have been lost to the fishermen through the actions of these administrators and boards of control.

I should like to mention another matter in connection with lobster fishing. It would appear that this fish products controller or administrator knows very little about the fishing industry in our province, or perhaps even in the maritimes. For instance, in one report with reference to Prince Edward Island it is stated that the lobster industry is only a home packing proposition. If some of the fishermen down there ever get their hands on the man who said that about their lobster canning plant, I am sure he will be canned in more ways than one.

Mr. BRIDGES: To what report is the hon. member referring?

Mr. McLURE: It was one issued by the department.

Mr. BRIDGES: By the Department of Fisheries?

Mr. McLURE: Oh, no. I am glad the minister asked that. It was issued by one of these boards of control or agencies that are not under the minister's control. I thank the minister for bringing that to my attention, because I did not intend to saddle that on him. I should like to give one example of their lack of knowledge. There are two lobster seasons in Prince Edward Island, one in the spring and one in the fall, on different sides of the island. This control board or fisheries product controller at the beginning of the season of 1941 placed a ceiling on the lobster pack of $28 per case. Then just as the spring pack had been marketed, they came along in the fall and raised the ceiling price $10 per case. Those who had fished in the spring were faced with a loss of $10 per case. What did they do in 1943? Up until September, 1943, there was no price ceiling on chicken haddies, herring and mackerel processed in Prince Edward Island. These packs were yielding the packers from $9.50 to $10 per case. On September 3, 1943, when two-thirds of the pack was up, they put on a ceiling price of $10.50 per case for chicken haddie and a ceiling price of only $8.80 per case for mackerel, which has just as good food value. This resulted in a loss of thousands of dollars to the fishermen of Prince Edward Island, because they were fishing mackerel at that time

I want to remind the minister again that I am not holding these things against him, because he was not directing the affairs of the Department of Fisheries at that time. This fish products board must have some special favourites, because we find that price ceilings were placed on special articles at certain times. In 1943, through the efforts of the Department of Trade and Commerce, some dealers in Prince Edward Island were able to sell several carloads of herring to the West Indies. When those dealers applied for an export permit it was turned down by the administrator, regardless of the fact that a dominion government department had negotiated the sale for the fishermen and packers. This showed that the administrator of fish products could override the trade and the Department of Trade and Commerce; he appeared to have full dictatorial powers. I am sure that this is the sort of thing the minister will see does not occur in the future in Prince Edward Island or anywhere else.

It has been most annoying to the fishermen that the Department of Fisheries have not cooperated with the packers and the fishermen in an effort to educate them to put out a better article for the market. For the last three or four years the matter of production has been left mostly to these boards of control, and probably they did not give the Department of Fisheries an opportunity to take action.

The industry in our province is growing. It provides a livelihood for quite a number of people. It may be a matter of some interest to this committee to know that the fish canning industry of our province produced $543,000 worth in 1939, which represented fourteen per cent of the total canned fish production of the maritime provinces and Quebec. In 1943 the production of the fish canning industry of Prince Edward Island had a value of $2,074,000, or twenty-five per cent of the total production of the maritimes and Quebec for that year. This great increase in the production of canned fish was due largely to the fact that the people were patriotic; when the government asked them to do their bit in the way of supplying food for military and relief purposes, they did so. I have not the figures for 1944, but I think they showed a still greater increase.

I know that the minister will give proper supervision to the work of his department, which will result in the fishing industry, not only of Prince Edward Island and the maritimes but of Canada generally, growing still greater.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Chairman, I should not like the Minister of Fisheries to think that the only source of congraulations to him is to be found on the Atlantic seaboard. I should like to join with previous speakers who have offered their congratulations, and I should like to congratulate him on two scores particularly: first of all, on having overcome that initial handicap of hailing from New Brunswick, and second, on being a returned man of this war, who has achieved cabinet position.

I am sure that in the industry which his department supervises there will be opportunities for a limited number of returned veterans to find gainful employment. I believe that in British Columbia some 70,000 people derive their livelihood either directly from or indirectly from the fishing industry. But that fishing industry is surrounded by uncertainties and by risks and dangers for those who are catching the fish at sea. The uncertainties are governed partly by the course of nature, which if left to itself would ensure a continuation of the supply, but when nature is tampered with by human beings its full cycle of production is upset, and it is inevitable that with the development on the coasts and at sea in other industries, the course of nature is interfered with. Therefore I welcome the items which are included in his estimates for the conservation of fish and research into the methods by which fish can be conserved. I would almost wish that more funds could be made available for that purpose.

Other activities are apt to interfere with this fishing industry, and I am pleased to see that quite recently improvements have been made at Hell's Gate which will enable the fish to work their way up the Fraser river. But there are other streams where fish work up to the spawning ground, and I suggest to the minister that research work be carried out with a view to seeing what streams on Vancouver island should have dams built in them in order to conserve the water. The logging industry has removed much of the undergrowth on the slopes, thus making a quick run-off in the spring; many of the streams become dry later on in the year, thus preventing the salmon from working up those streams to their proper spawning grounds.

The fishermen on the Pacific coast have now, I think, better floating equipment than they ever had before. But in some cases a great deal of capital is required to enable men to start with the right type of floating equipment for the catching of fish. During the war years it has not been possible to spend much money on the improvement of the berthing facilities in the small harbours which abound on the Pacific coast, and therefore this new equipment the men have is running risks of being destroyed by winter storms. While I know that the development of fishermen's wharves does not come directly under the responsibility of the minister, I do hope that he will use his influence with the Minister of Public Works in order to ensure that safe harbourage is provided for the fishing fleet.

I referred to the risks which the men run while they are at sea; and likewise during the war it has not been possible to maintain all the aids to navigation which are necessary. The Pacific coast is strewn with small islands and rocks. Many of these are a distinct hazard to the fishing fleets. I hope that a more active development scheme for marking those rocks and islands will be provided; and if it is possible to initiate some investigation which would provide a cheap form of radar set which could be used in the larger fishing boats, that would help to remove some of the hazards which are met with by the fishermen.

There are one or two suggestions which I would like to offer the minister in connection with the employment of returned men in this fishing industry. I mentioned at the beginning that the industry supported only a limited number of men. At the present time we have a serious unemployment situation in British Columbia, and any work which could be started in the way of improving the harbour facilities would be appreciated at this time. Also, in order to give those men who came from British Columbia full opportunity of entering into the fishing industry, I suggest very seriously that steps be taken to stop the demobilization of men in Vancouver and British Columbia who have not lived in that area before they enlisted or whose families are not there at the present time.

There are various new branches of industry opening up. One, which seems perhaps foolish to mention by name but it is likely to develop into an important industry, is that of the utilization of seaweed and the development of certain types of seaweed which are now being used for medicinal purposes. Important medicines can be obtained from seaweeds, and at the same time the banks of seaweed provide safe cover for the young fish. I feel that it may be necessary in the not too far distant future to have some form of control regarding the cutting away of the seaweed banks in order that the young fish may seek the cover of that shelter.

I would suggest also to the minister that investigations be carried out as to the possibility of reestablishing the whaling industry on the Pacific coast. Years ago a whaling fleet used to sail from Victoria harbour; but the whalers have, in the main, been commandeered for other purposes during this war, and there is a shortage of whalers to leave our coasts for the whaling grounds in the Antarctic. At the present time I believe there are negotiations under way regarding the limitation of the kill of whales. I picked up a copy of "Time", one of the October issues, in which attention is drawn to the fact that there are agencies suggesting that the restriction on the number of blue whales to be killed be removed. At the present time there is a restriction of the kill to some 16,000 per year. Quite recently the killing season was considerably extended; and I should like to know if the minister has any information as to the international agreement regarding limitation of the number of whales which are to be killed annually. I do hope that he will give consideration to stimulating in some way the whaling industry, which might possibly be revived again in our British Columbia ports.

Mr. REID: It was not my intention to deal extensively with the fishing industry at this time, but from remarks which have been made this morning, emanating principally from hon. members from the maritime provinces, I feel sure that anyone sitting in the gallery and coming from the prairie provinces would draw the inference, after listening to the discussion this morning, that the maritime provinces were greater in fishing than any other province in Canada. Earlier in the session the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg made the statement that his province was one of the greatest fishing provinces in Canada. I feel that, even at this late date, it is just as well that the record be kept straight. If wheat was being discussed, naturally the members from Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba would be taking a great part in the debate. So far this morning most of the speeches have come from hon. members from the maritimes, and I want to congratulate them, because when this subject comes up they immediately band together, as is their right, and so place their representations before the government.

May I say that I think I was one of the first members of the House of Commons to visit personally the new Minister of Fisheries and congratulate him. If I may add a personal note, perhaps congratulations from members from British Columbia should be taken with better grace than from hon. members from the maritimes, who believe there should always be a minister of fisheries from the maritimes; and while we in British Columbia produce over fifty per cent of the entire fish supply, we, generally speaking, are the first to congratulate the minister of fisheries when appointed from the east.

Let me first briefly tell the members from the maritimes how the fishing industry of Canada stands in the point of value. I have here a return which was brought down this year, when I asked what was the total value of the fishery products, including fresh and salt water fish products, during each of the years 1934 to 1944. I quite realize you can pick perhaps one year which would be good on the Atlantic and poor on the Pacific or good on the Pacific and poor on the Atlantic. So I have looked over the past number of years, and roughly this is what I find. The total marketed value for the past ten years has been approximately $550 million for all the fisheries, including inland fisheries, products from the lakes, the Pacific fisheries and the Atlantic. Therefore the average for the ten years is $55 million. Of that amount, British Columbia produced an average of $26,500,000. The average for the three maritime provinces—Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is $22 million. One could devote considerable time to this matter to show the great position in fisheries which British Columbia occupies. As I have said, it might appear, to an outsider at least, that British Columbia hardly exists in the matter of fisheries. The same thing happened with the shipbuilding in the maritimes, years ago. They were in days past the great shipbuilding provinces. But we in British Columbia started to build ships. Now we are doing a larger job building ships than any other province or place in Canada. I can say that without fear of contradiction, because I was a member of the war expenditures committee and have the figures under my hand.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. REID: Digressing for a moment, may I say I am reminded, when I look across at the hon. member for Nanaimo, how much pleased we in British Columbia are to see that a new honour has been conferred on his deskmate, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. I just noticed that he had received another distinguished honour.

Mr. MacNICOL: We did not hear the title.

Mr. REID: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has received a new honour, in addition to his having been granted the V.C. The announcement has just appeared in the press, and I am taking the first opportunity to congratulate him.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the honour?

Mr. REID: Mentioned in Dispatches.

Now regarding the subject I was dealing with, the maritime provinces as compared with British Columbia, I have the feeling that they are somewhat against British Columbia, perhaps a little jealous. The only variety of fish in the maritimes in which the product is greater than that of British Columbia is cod. Lobsters they produce to the extent of about $10 million. But in the herring industry British Columbia is producing more in respect of both quality and value. Of halibut we produce great quantities. Of salmon, the amount produced from maritime waters is infinitesimal compared with the great quantities of salmon obtained off the Pacific coast shores.

May I also refer to the timely statement made by the hon. member for Nanaimo when he urged the minister to give consideration to the establishment of more returned men in the fisheries. But we on the Pacific coast are faced with this problem: there is only a certain quantity of fish, and the more men who go into the industry the less there is for each fisherman. It is one of the problems which particularly affects the runs of fish to the Fraser river, that the more men go into that industry, the less will be the returns to each individual fisherman; and likewise with those who are fishing off Vancouver island and in the other waters of British Columbia. The catch is going down year by year, many of these varieties reproducing in the United States waters, over which we have no control.

But I wanted particularly to keep the record straight for those hon. members from the maritimes, that British Columbia takes first place in fisheries. Over a period of years she has produced more than fifty per cent of the total fisheries of Canada.

Mr. BAKER: On a point of order, I remarked that Nova Scotia was second only to British Columbia in 1944. Possibly the hon. member, the president of the fisheries committee, for whom I have a great admiration, did not hear me.

Mr. REID: I do not think I singled out any hon. member at all; I dealt with all members, and I am very sorry if the hon. member thought I was dealing particularly with him. But I did hear speeches this year to the effect that Nova Scotia was the greatest fishing province in Canada, and I, from British Columbia, with the record of the facts before me, do not intend to sit quietly by, even if we are kept here longer.

Mr. BROOKS: The hon. member has injected the only discordant note into the debate since it started.

Mr. REID: If facts are discordant, I am sorry. Perhaps the facts are not pleasant to some. The record however should be kept straight, and facts are facts.

Mr. BROOKS: We know that.

Mr. REID: I am doing just the same as the other members, and yet you are finding fault with me because I uphold my province. If you are going to find fault with me because I uphold British Columbia, call it a discordant note. I read in the paper that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been given to the fishermen in the maritimes, while British Columbia has got not one red cent. If you wanted a discordant note I could easily raise it. But I do not want to do so.

Mr. KNIGHT: I do not know whether it is the eating of so much fish that promotes local patriotism, but hon. gentlemen from the east and from the west have told us about the virtues of the waters in their respective parts of the country. I come from the centre of Saskatchewan where we are currently supposed not to have any fishing industry. But that is not quite correct. In the northern part of our province there are lakes that are well stocked with white fish, pickerel and lake trout, but unfortunately, except for a few persons who like to spend a little time fishing with rod and line up there, that fishing has not had any particular significance. Quoting from the public accounts, part II, I find that in 1944 the dominion government spent the magnificent total of $13.08 on general account in connection with the fisheries of Saskatchewan. In the previous year, I may say, the government, by order in council P.C. 4812, passed in June of that year, authorized the establishment of a committee to make inquiries concerning the difficulties attending the production, processing and marketing of fish in the prairie provinces, and to make recommendations for the improvement of the situation as it then existed. I trust that when I have finished with this short address the minister will tell us what has happened as a result of that investigation. I should like to know what has come of it. What has the dominion government done?

I am particularly interested in any industry from the point of view of the degree to which that industry brings prosperity and happiness to the lives of the people who are engaged in it. A new impetus has been given the fishing industry in northern Saskatchewan. The old method of laissez-faire has not worked satisfactorily. We know that if there is too much laissez-faire with fish, particularly when the weather is warm, the results will not be desirable. At any rate, the old method of laissez-faire was not conducive to a good living on the part of Indians and other people engaged in that trade.

Transportation in that part of the country, as hon. members know, is tremendously difficult because there is no way of getting into it except by sled. They go by tractor train in the winter time, but transportation at all times is exceedingly difficult. The method of fishing followed is for the men to go in during the winter and throw the fish in heaps at the edge of the lake, exposed to the open weather, including sun—because there is an occasional thaw even in that part of the country—and then the product is taken out if and when a tractor train comes along.

These were the conditions up to a short time ago, and needless to say the financial returns were not great, because these people sold their product in the first stage of production. There was no processing in the primary stage and, as I have said, they could carry on only at one time of the year.

The picture of these people's lives—and that is the aspect of it in which I am interested—has changed. The Saskatchewan government has seen to that. It is building three modern filleting plants from lumber cut in their own woods and processed in local mills, with the result that a year-round industry is being established. That is the point I wish particularly to emphasize. These people are being provided with proper facilities, ice storage and so on, and that will bring at least a better standard of living to them. It will make for their happiness, and that is what I am concerned with. They can now cease to live the gypsy life which has been their habit in the past. They can settle down and bring up their children in schools that are being built with their own lumber. Several schools have been built and others are in process of construction. These children can now go to school, where before they had never seen the inside of a schoolhouse, even a log schoolhouse.

One of my colleagues has just handed me the figures giving the value of commercial fishing in Saskatchewan for a period of years, and before I must conclude, due to the fact that it is almost one o'clock, I should like to draw these figures to the attention of the committee. I presume the minister is acquainted with them. In 1937 the value of the industry was $527,000 in round figures; in 1939, $478,000; in 1941, $414,000; and in 1942, $585,000—this out of a dominion total, in 1942, of $75,000,000.

This industry, so far as Saskatchewan is concerned, might be called an infant industry, but it is growing up, and that is more than I can say for some "infant industries" in this country. The little change that I have mentioned has brought about an improvement in the lives of these poor people in the form of financial results, and it has been a revolution in the life of that northern part of the province. I commend it to the attention of the dominion ministry.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCESS PROFITS TAX ACT, 1940

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Golding in the chair.

6. That the exemption of the profits of corporations derived from the operation of any base metal or strategic mineral mines be extended to the profits of corporations derived from the operation of gold mines and industrial mineral mines, and that such exemption be extended to the profits of such mines which come into production after January 1, 1946.

Mr. GREEN: When the committee rose last evening we were discussing the question of gold mines. Would the minister tell the committee for what period of years this provision is to apply? Is it for a three-year period or only for a one-year period?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): It applies for the period of the excess profits tax. It may be extended, of course, but this resolution does not provide for any particular period.

Mr. GREEN: It does not apply for a period of three years?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. GREEN: Am I to understand that it will be in effect as long as there is an excess profits tax act?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, unless it is taken away by some subsequent parliament; but this is what it provides, and there will be no excess profits tax from January 1 on in connection with these new mines.

Mr. GREEN: And is a tuning-up period to be allowed? There was some discussion about that last evening, but the minister made no statement as to whether or not provision would be made for a tuning-up period.

Mr. ILSLEY: There will be, in proper cases. I am saying that without much technical knowledge, but when a similar provision was in force previously a tuning-up period was allowed. Of course at that time it applied first to gold mines and later to base metal mines, and tuning-up periods were allowed. When you move into industrial minerals you may not need any tuning-up period; the nature of the operation may be such that it would not be required. The purpose of a tuning-up period is to determine when the mine actually comes into production, and it will be for the Department of National Revenue to determine when that takes place.

Mr. GREEN: Does not the minister think gold mines and base metal mines should be dealt with in a different way from the production of industrial material?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not as far as exemption from tax is concerned.

Mr. GREEN: But I mean in working out the details of the application of the tax.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, I should think so; that is, I should think you would have such a range of minerals covered by this exemption now that conditions would vary tremendously as to the time required to get the mine into production.

Mr. GREEN: That will be kept in mind in working out the application of the new provision?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes; I can assure my hon. friend of that.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister be good enough to make a statement as to why this particular resolution is being introduced? I do not think the minister has made a statement of that kind so far.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is to encourage the opening of mines.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Gold mines?

Mr. ILSLEY: No, mines generally; not all mines, but the kind of mines the rapid development of which is possible and desirable now. There would be gold mines, base metal mines and industrial mineral mines. I do not think strategic mineral mines now would be of much importance, comparatively speaking, at least as compared with the period of the war.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not want to go into the argument behind the opening up of base metals, but I wonder whether at this stage it is wise to have a government policy under which quite a large amount of our man-power and our tight materials will be made available for the gold mining industry. If we have customers throughout the world who are anxious to get large quantities of gold, that might be a very good reason; but in view of the fact that we managed so well during the war without worrying very much about the production of gold, I wonder why, just at this particular time, the administration has found it necessary to extend this consideration, particularly to the operation of gold mines.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, it increases the wealth and income of the nation. It would have been desirable to do that during the war if we could have afforded the man-power, but we could not; the man-power was much more necessary in other activities, but I do not think that is the case now.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Even at this stage I doubt the wisdom of using man-power and materials in this particular field.

Mr. BENIDICKSON: I thought you people said there was unemployment.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There is, but we need houses desperately; we need hospitals and so many other things much more than we need gold, and I do not see any very good reason for extending this privilege to the operation of gold mines.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to support this resolution. I do not know of anything that will provide as much employment for men of a particular type, many of whom have been unemployed for some time, as gold mining. I doubt if there is a large factory, such as Canada Foundry in Toronto or John Bertram in Dundas, anywhere in Ontario that is not now engaged in the production of some equipment required in connection with the reopening of the gold mines, resulting from just such legislation as this. So I say all power to the minister, and I hope he will continue to do his best to open as many mines as possible. They will produce brand new wealth and provide a vast amount of employment in other branches of industry. I am not thinking of houses at the moment, though of course the miners will require houses too. I am thinking about the type of men engaged in mining. They are not the men who build houses; they are miners, and many of them have been unemployed during the war. I support the minister's programme of getting on with the opening of mines, or anything that can be done to encourage mining. This is brand new money, which goes into circulation, and gives jobs not only to those engaged in the mines but to hundreds of factories in Ontario. I have been through many of those factories myself. It gives jobs to those who supply food to the miners. This applies particularly to the southern part of Ontario, because in the northern part, farm products are not produced extensively. In and around Kirkland Lake and Timmins, where the Precambrian shield crosses northern Ontario, they are large consumers but not large producers, of farm products, and so that in opening up mines, not only do you give employment to miners and those who work with them, and not only do you give employment to large numbers of men in Ontario and Quebec where equipment is manufactured for mining companies, but you also give employment to those producing farm products—and at good prices, because they pay good prices up there for everything they use in connection with their mining efforts.

Mr. REID: As one who in past years in the house has taken an interest in the mining of silver may I ask the minister if silver mining is included in this resolution. I ask that because silver is sometimes a by-product of gold mining. Members of the House of Commons, and people generally throughout Canada, have come to look upon silver as a coinage pertaining to the dark ages. It will come as a surprise to many people, therefore, to learn that seventy-five per cent of the world's population still look upon silver as their real money. As a matter of fact in countries where governments take office one day and are expelled from office two hours later, the paper currency issued has no more value than kindling paper. For that reason the people of those countries look to metals, and since the dawn of the ages they have accepted silver as a medium of exchange. People in China or India will sell their gold to purchase silver. Even on the continent of Europe at the present time I understand there are certain countries in which the form of currency is a fine leaf of silver or gold. They cut off a little corner and use it instead of paper currency.

In British Columbia, and I suppose in other provinces as well, we have large areas that have been lying idle. In those areas are ghost towns which used to employ thousands of people in the mining of silver. If we ever want to raise our standard of living in countries where the standard is so low that one hesitates even to speak about it, we should give some thought to the use of silver, and have those countries use some of the silver produced here.

May I repeat my question: Does this resolution include silver?

Mr. ILSLEY: The intention was to include silver, but after reading the resolution I doubt whether it does. It was to cover precious metal mines, base metal mines and industrial minerals. It would seem, however, from the wording that the only precious metal included is gold. I can see no reason why it should not include silver as well.

Mr. COCKERAM: For the information of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) let me say that many thousands of young men who recently returned from overseas are at present finding their way back to employment in the mining industry. We find that we are getting a very fine type of man.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Chairman, in considering the question of giving encouragement to any kind of production, I should think the purpose would be, first, to determine the need for that particular kind of production. I do not believe it is good policy to say that because any particular kind of mining is going to give employment in the mines and on the farms, this government should encourage it. Digging holes in the ground where there is no gold would give employment; and if the persons were paid it would create some amount of purchasing power, and in that respect would be just as effective as digging a gold mine. I am not questioning the policy of the Minister of Finance in this connection, because very likely he has had advice that I have not had. However, as I see things at the present time, the world stands in need of an enormous amount of goods of various kinds—goods that can be used by individual men and women who require houses, clothing, food, and so forth.

During the war we were producing war materials, and that production provided purchasing power and employment. But surely no one would suggest that we should continue producing war materials just because it gives employment. The same is true of gold. If there is a demand for gold in the world to-day, and if there is some human function or requirement it can meet, we should encourage its production. But as I see it now, there seems to be no great use for gold. The use it had at one time as a standard for currency was discussed the other night by the minister, when he said it was no longer possible to go back to the gold standard. Surely we should get away from this hit or miss policy of doing something because it gives work to industry in Toronto or somewhere else. We should consider the permanent improvement of the standard of living of the masses of our people in this and in other countries. I do not know; there may be ever so much need for gold—

Mr. REID: And silver.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes.

Mr. REID: They need it in other countries to raise the standard of living. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MacINNIS. As I understand it, what they need is more food, and they do not eat silver.

Mr. REID: We will give it to them.

Mr. IRVINE: They need a silver spoon to take it.

Mr. REID: We will give it to them, free.

Mr. MacINNIS: We could give it to them free, but it would not have any value. That is not the kind of thing we give free. I am glad we are able to give some things free, but there would be no use in handing out silver in that way, because the people are not in dire need of it—even if it were served up with a silver spoon such as the hon. member for Cariboo would use to eat his porridge.

As I said, we should try to have a more rational basis for the things we do, something more rational than the mere fact that someone wants to put someone else to work producing gold from a hole in the ground so as to put it in another hole somewhere else.

Mr. ILSLEY: I agree with one point the hon. member has made, and that is that the mere spending of government money to furnish employment is not necessarily desirable. That is, raking leaves, digging holes, and the like, at the expense of the government is an undesirable form of activity for the government to subsidize. But I believe the government is justified in encouraging the production of valuable things, as distinguished from useful things. If we should concentrate on the production of useful things, it would be a useful form of concentration. I am quite prepared to say that we have not reached the point where humanity or the world at large can disregard the importance of producing valuable things—that is, things which we can exchange for useful things. The production of gold is one way in which we can secure the goods and materials which will improve the standard of living of our people. There being persons who will buy gold, whether or not it is useful in the sense in which the hon. member uses the word, the fact is that gold is valuable. It is the production of something valuable which can be converted into goods.

Mr. COCKERAM: There is a market for it.

Mr. ILSLEY: There is a market for it. In the ideal world perhaps we would not concentrate on producing things of value, but at the present time we have to if we are to keep our nation running.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: As I understand it, this assistance is being given to gold mines so that they may carry on development work. But there are many other industries that need aid. It is not so long ago that the price of gold was raised to $35 an ounce; and then these gold mines have the further advantage of the discount on Canadian money. Now we are to give them further help. Why not give help to industries, such as the fishing industry on our coasts, which really require it?

Mr. GREEN: Last night the hon. member for York West dealt with the provision concerning depreciation of plant and depletion allowance, and so far the minister has said nothing in reply to those suggestions. I believe one suggestion was that for a period of three years, or so long as this exemption applies, new mines should not be obliged to provide for depreciation of plant or depletion of ore. Could the minister tell us the attitude of the government toward those suggestions?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is not a matter to be provided for by legislation; it is a matter within the discretion of the Minister of National Revenue, like all other depreciation and depletion allowances. The practice in the past, the legitimate practice, has been to compel the company to charge depreciation when the depreciation is taking place and to take into its accounts its pre-development expenses during the period after it goes into production and while it is in operation, even though that may be in the tax-free period. It would be an extension of that practice and under certain circumstances it would be a decided additional advantage to companies to say that during the period when they are tax free they should be permitted to accumulate their depreciation charges or pre-development charges and not begin to take them in until they move into the taxable period.

As the hon. member for York West was talking last night I was turning over in my mind the advantages to a company of postponement, and it seems to me that there are two. If the write-off of depreciation and pre-development expenses is postponed until the end of the tax-free period, then the write-off will have longer to run. That is one advantage. If they are obliged to write off the pre-development expenses and depreciation in the tax-free period, they may find themselves in years of loss and be depriving themselves of part of the privilege, which they otherwise would have, of write-off in subsequent years. That is the other advantage. But it certainly would sound natural and reasonable to me to say that they should be obliged to begin their write-offs when they begin to produce. That is when the depreciation is actually taking place, and that is the period over which pre-development expenses naturally would be spread, the period beginning with production.

All I can say about the suggestions—the hon. member for York West did not press me for an answer—is that I could not give any undertaking about them at all. That is something that would have to be brought to the attention of the Department of National Revenue, which would give it consideration.

This is not something to be provided for by legislation. I could not give any encouragement to the expectation that it might be done, nor would I deny the possibility that something might be done.

Mr. GREEN: Is there anything to the belief that the department has been forcing write-offs at too high a percentage, that is, more than the actual depreciation; that it has been compelling companies to write off a much larger amount than would be written off in the normal course of business? I understand there is a belief that that is what the department has been doing—in effect giving an exemption from tax with one hand while cutting down on the exemption with the other.

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not take it the hon. member for York West was suggesting that the rate was too high. I do not know whether it is too high. I think, generally speaking, fifteen per cent is the normal rate of depreciation in the mining industry, and I do not think the mining industry would argue that it is too high. They might wish it was not so high in the tax-free period, but they would want it as high as that in the taxable period.

Mr. IRVINE: Perhaps the question I am about to ask should come under some other resolution, but I cannot find one that seems more appropriate. I am given to understand that a special effort is being made to collect arrears of income tax from farmers.

Mr. McCANN: I think the hon. gentleman is quite right. If there is money owing to the crown, no matter by whom, an attempt is made to collect it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): This resolution deals with excess profits.

Mr. IRVINE: I appreciate that. As the Minister of National Revenue was with the Minister of Finance I thought he might discuss it. If it is better to leave it until some other time, I shall have to do so.

Resolution agreed to.

DOMINION SUCCESSION DUTY ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to amend the Dominion Succession Duty Act, and to provide:

1. That no duty shall be leviable on the value of any pension or portion thereof which is receivable as taxable income within the meaning of the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. BROOKS: Would the minister explain this resolution?

Mr. ILSLEY: This is to implement a recommendation of the Ives commission. At the present time a widow of a civil servant—I am taking this simply by way of illustration—who is entitled to a pension on the death of her husband under the superannuation act must pay succession duties on the commuted value of her pension, and then she pays an income tax on each annual pension payment. It was considered that in certain circumstances that was harsh, and the Ives commission made the recommendation that if income tax was payable on amounts paid under any pension scheme such as the superannuation act, the widow should not be obliged to pay succession duties as well. I refer to this only as a typical case; it is not confined, of course, to civil servants or to the superannuation scheme, but applies also to others.

Mr. BROOKS: Soldiers' pensions are exempt?

Mr. ILSLEY: Soldiers' disability pensions are exempt from income tax, but I do not know of any exemption from succession duty of the commuted value of a disability pension. I think it is never large enough for that.

Mr. COCKERAM: Would they come under this?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not under this, because this applies only to pensions which are taxable income within the meaning of the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. PROBE: Suppose a man buys six months prior to his death an annuity for a fairly large sum, say $100,000. If he had willed that $100,000 to his family it would be subject to succession duty. By virtue of this proposed resolution will the $100,000 which was used to purchase an annuity under these circumstances be free from succession duty?

Mr. ILSLEY: This resolution does not cover a case of the kind, which, as the hon. gentleman has described it, is covered by our proposed legislation regarding the purchase of annuities. The taxation will be on the interest element alone.

Mr. PROBE: Is that capital of $100,000 which is used to purchase an annuity a short time before the purchaser's death free from succession duty?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know. One would have to look at the act and see whether it is a succession or not.

Mr. PROBE: That is the point.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is a difficult question to answer. A man buys an annuity, we will say. He does not know that he is going to die in six months' time. Suppose he lives fifteen years and the annuity has a guaranteed life of twenty years.

Mr. PROBE: I am referring to an annuity certain for fifteen or twenty years, payable to the estate or to the widow.

Mr. ILSLEY: That would come under our proposed annuity legislation, not under this resolution. There is no doubt that he pays income tax only on the interest element in the annuity. If the annuity runs from the date of his death, and it was for fifteen years, I am confident there would not be any succession because it is not a succession at all. The point I am doubtful about, and I would have to get some information on this before answering, is whether if he dies within three years that is not a succession. Ordinarily if a husband makes a transfer to his wife or to anybody else within three years before he dies, it is regarded as passing to her on his death. That is covered by the provisions of the succession duty act. I imagine it would apply to this kind of transaction, but I am not sure.

Mr. PROBE: I want to know if this is a means of avoiding the succession duty act. A man on his death-bed could buy an annuity for fifteen or twenty years certain, using the whole or a large portion of his estate to do so. If under the terms of this resolution he could by that means evade the succession duty act, I should like to know it. Will the minister please give that information to the committee?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, and I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for bringing up that point. If a man can do it, I want to know it too. I will give consideration to the matter before the bill comes in. But this resolution does not cover a case of the kind, because that is not the kind of pension we are talking about. It is the purchase of an annuity.

Mr. PROBE: That is the point I want cleared up, because if a man could do that, then technically one could buy an annuity with his estate. I am not going to do it with mine, because mine is not a big one, but the Minister of Finance might.

Mr. MacNICOL: You are a young man yet. You have lots of time.

Mr. HAZEN: Is the pension that the widow of a member of our armed forces receives regarded as taxable income?

Mr. ILSLEY: A disability pension?

Mr. HAZEN: The husband has been killed overseas and his widow receives a pension. Is that regarded as taxable income?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. HAZEN: How does this work out as the law now stands in the case of a widow of a man killed overseas?

Mr. ILSLEY: With regard to succession duty?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes. What does she get, or what does she pay?

Mr. ILSLEY: The wording is pretty bad, but I think that the intention of section 7(1)(k) is to make the commuted value of such a pension free from succession duty. These are the exemptions and allowances from succession duties. The following exemptions are allowed and no duty is leviable in respect of them:

(k) in respect of pensions granted or payable under the provisions of the Pension Act, or other payments in the nature of pensions which are being administered on the thirty-first day of July, 1942, by the Canadian Pension Commission as directed by the governor in council under section six of the Pension Act;

That is the provision with regard to the succession duties which might, but for that, be leviable on the commuted value of a disability pension which a widow gets as the result of the death of her husband as a consequence of the war. The hon. gentleman may have in mind the succession duty leviable on the estate of a man who lost his life in the war. Did he have that in mind too?

Mr. HAZEN: Really, just the words "taxable income" struck me as I read the section, and I wanted to get it cleared up. As I understand the minister now, there would be no succession duty leviable on this pension, or there would not be any tax levied on the income the widow receives in the form of a pension?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is no tax on a disability pension.

Mr. HAZEN: There is no tax on the pension itself?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. HAZEN: And, as I understand the minister, there would be no succession duty tax on that which the widow would be obliged to pay because of that pension?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. BROOKS: The minister mentioned the matter of estates of men who were killed in the war or died as a result of wounds received in the war. I should like to know what the situation is as to succession duties on those estates. In this connection the Canadian Legion passed a resolution at one of their meetings held in 1944 which reads as follows:

Be it resolved that we strongly urge the federal government to so amend the Dominion Succession Duty Act as to provide remission of succession duties for deceased members of the armed forces who died on active service or within one year of discharge.

The general opinion seems to be that the provinces are more generous in respect of these succession duty charges than the federal government is. As a matter of fact I received a letter the other day with reference to succession duties on the estate of a young man who was killed overseas and left his estate to his mother. I quote:

Estates of unmarried men who were killed in the forces, where the estate is over $5,000, are payable to the mother of the deceased. The province of Ontario, generally speaking, give consent so that the assets may be dealt with. As far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned if the estate is over $5,000 and if payable, as I have said above, to the mother there is no special consideration.

It went on to say:

In my opinion there should be. If a boy gives his life for his country and has a little over $5,000 which is left for the benefit of the mother, I do not think the nation should tax this sum. My opinion is that up to $10,000 should be tax free under the conditions I have mentioned.

I should like to ask the minister what the present situation is with reference to succession duty on estates of this kind.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is very clearly set out, I may tell the hon. member, in section 7, subsection 3 of the Dominion Succession Duty Act. This section reads as follows:

(3) (a) Where the deceased dies from wounds inflicted, accident occurring, or disease contracted while Canada is or was at war, and while on service with Canadian or any other of His Majesty's naval, military or air forces or with allied or associated naval, military or air forces, and where the Canadian pension commission finds that the circumstances are such that the widow or children of the deceased are entitled, or would, if such service had been with the Canadian naval, military or air forces, have been entitled to receive a pension under the Pension Act in respect of such death, or where the Canadian pension commission finds that the deceased died from wounds inflicted, accident occurring, or disease contracted, as a result of enemy action within twelve months before death;

(i) the exemptions allowed in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of subsection one of this section shall be increased by fifty per centum; and

(ii) the amount of the duty payable in respect of a succession by any successor coming with class A or class B in the first schedule to this act shall be reduced to such sum as would, if accumulated at compound interest at the rate of three per centum per annum from the date of death with half-yearly rests, at the expiration of the period of the normal expectation of life of a person of the age of the deceased at the time of death (calculated in accordance with mortality tables approved by the minister), amount to the duty otherwise payable.

(b) The Canadian pension commission shall on the request of the commissioner investigate the circumstances and report its findings in respect of any case arising under paragraph (a) of this subsection.

[Mr. Brooks.]

I would refer the hon. gentleman to a very considerable debate on this section, which the hon. member for Vancouver South will remember, and which took place in the summer of 1941 when we passed the Dominion Succession Duty Act.

Mr. BROOKS: Have there been any amendments since then?

Mr. ILSLEY: There have been no amendments. It does not grant complete exemption, but it grants a very considerable exemption.

Mr. COCKERAM: I believe that in the budget debate last year the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough asked the minister to give consideration to the soldiers' insurance which men coming back from overseas are taking out to-day, and he asked that it should be excluded from any computation of succession duties. If I remember the discussion at that time, the minister seemed very favourably disposed to the suggestion and said he would look into it further. I cannot tell the minister what date it was; he may have some recollection of it.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have no recollection of it; I am sorry. It may have been my parliamentary assistant.

Mr. COCKERAM: No, I am pretty sure it was the minister. Will the minister give some consideration to that?—because this insurance is in an entirely different class from other insurance. Under the act the insured or the beneficiary can receive only $1,000, and the rest payable in the form of annual instalments spread over a period of years. Under the succession duty act, the whole thing would be amortized and computed under the tables which the minister used, and if the woman who was the beneficiary was a young woman the estate might be very large. If they take out the maximum insurance it is $10,000. By the time they pay duty there might be very little left.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not understand how anything could depend upon the age of the widow.

Mr. COCKERAM: Yes; it is payable on an annuity basis, and $9,000 will bring a pretty fair annuity. Under the government's system of assessing annuities or succession duties they would assess a pretty high value on a $10,000 policy.

Mr. ILSLEY: I will look into the question. I am sorry, but I do not seem to remember anything about it at all.

Mr. COCKERAM: It was brought up in the last budget debate.

Mr. ILSLEY: My officials do not remember about it either.

Mr. COCKERAM: I saw it the other day.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not want to give any impression that I am favourable or unfavourable to the suggestion, but I will look into the matter. It is new.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any reciprocal agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom concerning succession duties?

Mr. ILSLEY: No, there is not.

Mr. GREEN: Have there been submissions made that such an agreement should be negotiated?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, many; and the matter is under consideration at the present time.

Mr. MacNICOL: When an estate pays a succession duty on funds or property held in the United States does it also have to pay on the same amount in Canada?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not on real estate held in the United States.

Mr. MacNICOL: On bonds?

Mr. ILSLEY: On other property. He pays on whatever property he has in the world if he is domiciled in Canada. That is my recollection.

Mr. MacNICOL: If he has $50,000 worth of bonds in the United States and he pays succession duty in the United States and has to pay on the same amount in Ontario and in Canada, he might as well sell out.

Mr. ILSLEY: He is taxed here on the whole estate, but if he is taxed in the United States on property there, there is a convention by which he is given credit.

Mr. MacNICOL: On bonds?

Mr. ILSLEY: Bonds, yes. There is a convention between Canada and the United States providing for a credit.

Mr. MacNICOL: A credit in respect of what he pays in the United States.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is substantially right. The convention went through this house.

Mr. HAZEN: Last year.

Mr. ILSLEY: In 1944.

Mr. HAZEN: But did it go through congress?

Mr. ILSLEY: It was later ratified in the United States.

Mr. GREEN: What are the difficulties in negotiating a convention of that type with the United Kingdom?

Mr. ILSLEY: I think I can say that discussions will go on. My information is that the difficulties are numerous, but what they are I do not know. However, the situation is not hopeless by any means.

Mr. GREEN: Perhaps the minister could find out.

Mr. ILSLEY: It would take a long time. The complications of interrelated tax systems are terrific. I am informed that there are very numerous difficulties, but discussions will undoubtedly take place. It is not at all hopeless that a convention will be arrived at. There is a widespread demand for it in Canada.

Mr. GREEN: It is only fair that there should be a convention. Does not the minister agree with that statement?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Resolution agreed to.

2. Where the minister is satisfied that succession duty has become payable upon or with respect to the succession to any property and that subsequently within five years succession duty has again become payable upon or with respect to the succession to the same property or any part thereof, on the death of the person to whom the property passed on the first death, the amount of succession duty payable on the second death with respect to the succession to such property shall be reduced as follows:

(a) where the second death occurs within one year of the first death, by fifty per centum;

(b) where the second death occurs within two years of the first death, by forty per centum;

(c) where the second death occurs within three years of the first death, by thirty per centum;

(d) where the second death occurs within four years of the first death, by twenty per centum;

(e) where the second death occurs within five years of the first death, by ten per centum.

Mr. HAZEN: How do the rates under this resolution compare with the rates in the United Kingdom and the United States? Are these equally or more generous?

Mr. ILSLEY: I could give that information on the bill. I have not the rates here for either the United Kingdom or the United States.

Mr. HAZEN: In his budget speech the minister said he had made an examination.

Mr. ILSLEY: I certainly did, of both countries, but I have not the rates here. In the United Kingdom the only quick successions that are partly relieved from tax are quick successions of real estate and established businesses. There is a limitation.

Mr. HAZEN: Five years?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, and the period in the United States is also five years. I do not know what the rates are.

Mr. HAZEN: This legislation will mean a reduction in the revenue the dominion receives.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. HAZEN: Why is it being made?

Mr. ILSLEY: Because it is so oppressive. If a man dies and leaves a substantial estate and his wife dies within six months and leaves the estate over again and the son who inherits it dies in another six months and leaves it, it gets very tiresome.

Mr. MacNICOL: More than tiresome; the estate shrinks.

Mr. HAZEN: I agree that it is oppressive. It is not fair. Why then is this not made retroactive? Last night when we were discussing resolution No. 5 the minister said, I understood, that it was made retroactive in its operations because certain people had taken advantage of the law, although they were within the law, to get ahead of the government. If that is to be made a principle of our legislation, it should work both ways. If the government is going to make legislation retroactive in order to get after people who, it thinks, have got the best of the government, although they have kept within the law, then it should make its legislation retroactive when the provisions of the law work a hardship or are oppressive upon people. I do not think you can have it both ways. The government cannot say that certain people have got ahead of the administration, although they were within the law, and therefore the provision will be made retroactive against them, while on the other hand, where a provision has worked a hardship on people, it will not be made retroactive. There is no principle there, and there must be a principle in these matters. The government should not have it all its own way.

Mr. ILSLEY: Am I to understand that if I accept the suggestion made last night, and do not make the other change retroactive, the hon. gentleman does not press this?

Mr. HAZEN: I do press it, though I do not expect to get anywhere with it, because in my opinion this is not fair. The minister says this has been oppressive and unjust and therefore he is going to change it, but he will not remedy the injustice. This act was passed in 1940—

Mr. ILSLEY: 1941.

[Mr. Hazen.]

Mr. HAZEN: Well, 1941, and these people have been forced to pay, and they have not been reimbursed. The minister admits that it is oppressive and unjust. I repeat, there should be some principle about it.

Mr. ILSLEY: My argument last night was that the intention of the legislation had been frustrated. The intention of our legislation in this regard has always been clear. The trouble with making everything retroactive is that if amendments were made in 1960 it might be suggested that we should go back to 1941. We have to stop making retroactive amendments to our succession duty act. We have made two or three running back to 1941. We talked the matter over this year and decided that we could not carry this on for ever. When we change the Income Tax Act we do not go back a year or two or three years, although we are pressed to, because it would mean reopening so many assessments that it would be administratively very difficult. The law changes from time to time. This is an alleviation. I do not know of any quick successions or any oppressive or unjust cases since 1941. There may be some, but we had not any in mind in considering this.

Mr. JAENICKE: I agree with the principle of this resolution, and I agree with the case as outlined by the minister, where the property remains within the family. But suppose some of the subsequent beneficiaries are entire strangers? I see no oppression or hardship if they should be taxed again. I suggest that perhaps the provision contained in this section should be confined to class (a) and (b) beneficiaries as set forth in the succession duty act.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think there is a great deal of merit in the hon. gentleman's suggestion, and it will be taken into account when the legislation is prepared.

Mr. MacNICOL: In the case of estates now before the succession duty administrators and not settled, are they permitted to benefit by this legislation?

Mr. ILSLEY: The intention is that it will apply to deaths after enactment of the measure.

Resolution agreed to.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

1. That the consumption or sales tax shall not apply to machinery and apparatus and complete parts thereof which, in the opinion of the Minister of National Revenue, are to be used directly in the process of manufacture or production of goods; provided that this exemption shall not apply to office equipment or motor vehicles.

Mr. MacNICOL: This is a step in the right direction, but I should like to ask the minister whether this will apply when a firm buys used machinery, or whether the machinery must be new.

Mr. ILSLEY: Second-hand machinery is not subject to sales tax in any case.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then this would have nothing at all to do with second-hand machinery?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why is office equipment exempted from the benefits of this provision? Anyone opening a plant or starting a new business requires office equipment; it is most important if one is to conduct a business with any kind of success. I can understand the exclusion of motor vehicles, but why office equipment?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is so hard to tie up office equipment to the production of goods. This sales tax is taken off machinery and apparatus to be used directly in the process of the manufacture or production of goods. The office end of it is not the production end. That part of the activities is administrative or commercial rather than industrial, and it is not intended to free office furniture generally, certainly not for any other commercial activities. We would not regard the office equipment used by a factory as industrial equipment; therefore we take it out.

Mr. MacNICOL: You exempt motor vehicles. Would horse-drawn trucks be exempt also?

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, wagons used in the distribution of the product would not be exempt. They would not be regarded as used strictly in the process of manufacture or production. Team wagons on a farm are exempt now, as a matter of fact.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the government any means of ascertaining whether the goods are actually reduced in price to the consumer when the sales tax is taken off? I remember when the sales tax was taken off lumber, for instance, and certain building materials; in some cases that reduction was not passed on to the consumer but was retained by the manufacturer in order to give him a larger margin of profit. Has the government any means of seeing to it that the benefit of the reduction in these cases is passed on to the consumers?

Mr. ILSLEY: No. In this case it would not be consumers in the ordinary sense of the term; it would be users of the machinery or apparatus. The national revenue department has no way in the world of seeing that the benefit is passed on, and needless to say the finance department has no way of seeing that it is passed on either. The only agency is the wartime prices and trade board, and that board is reluctant to go beyond its mandate, which is to keep prices down to what they were in the fall of 1941.

Mr. MacNICOL: Competition would keep the prices down.

Mr. ILSLEY: The matter will be fought out, all right, between the manufacturer or producer and the buyer. I do not know whether conditions in this seller's market are such that the buyer will be able to get the benefit of bargaining methods, but the time will come when he will be able to get that benefit. In a great many cases he will get it now, I should say; prices will just come down as a matter of course.

Mr. WRIGHT: In some cases prices do come down, where there is a competitive factor in the market, but in some other cases, where the article is made by only one firm in Canada and there is no competition at all, I think the manufacturers have absorbed any reduction. I do not say that is so in all cases, or even in many cases, but some manufacturers have said they had held down their costs during the war, they were working at a loss, and now they had a chance to recoup themselves to some extent, so these benefits were not being passed on to the users or consumers of the material. I think the wartime prices and trade board might very well investigate in certain cases to see that these benefits are passed on to the people who are supposed to get them.

Mr. CHARLTON: Does this include all electrical appliances used on the farm for production purposes, such as electric motors for milking machines?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes; if they are used for production purposes on the farm they are free from sales tax. Most of them are free now, but the rest of them will be.

Mr. CHARLTON: And what about a farm truck used exclusively for trucking farm produce?

Mr. ILSLEY: No, not a farm truck. It is just a motor vehicle, and it is simply impossible to go into the realm of motor vehicles. They can be used on and off the farm, for purposes of production, distribution and transportation.

Mr. BOUCHER: What about a tractor?

Mr. ILSLEY: They are exempt now.

Mr. BOUCHER: In connection with passing on charges to purchasers, is it not a fact that when selling materials the vendors must quote prices plus the taxation element? In this way are not those charges passed on to the purchaser? The custom of the trade is to do it, but I am not sure whether it is compulsory.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not compulsory.

Mr. BRYCE: Does this new regulation allow small gasoline engines in without tax? The minister will recall that I spoke to him about this last year.

Mr. ILSLEY: This has nothing to do with customs duties. It relates to the sales tax.

Mr. BRYCE: The tax was left on them last year.

Mr. ILSLEY: If they are used for production purposes they are free from sales tax, under this proposal.

Mr. BRYCE: The minister and I could not see eye-to-eye on this question last year. I pointed out to him that these gasoline engines were used in milking machines. Did the minister take the matter up with the machinery companies? He said he could not agree to that because they are not agricultural implements. The minister will remember the incident.

Mr. ILSLEY: I remember it very well, but not just as the hon. member states it. I hesitate to resuscitate the argument because it was long drawn out. The hon. member was submitting that gasoline engines if used on farms should be free from customs duties. As they did not come within the agricultural implement items, they were not free. I did not say that they were not used for production purposes or for purposes of agriculture, but I said they were not covered by the items and that it would be very difficult to make a new item which would cover gasoline engines when used on farms. I pointed out how easy it would be to have them imported and entered for use on farms, and then to put them to some other use. At any rate the question was whether I should make a change in the tariff, or recommend a change at that time. I said I would not open the question of tariffs for gasoline engines, because it was too far reaching. There would have to be hearings and investigations before anything of that kind could be done.

Mr. BRYCE: I hope the minister will take this matter into consideration, because the fact is that they are used for production purposes. We use them extensively on our farms in western Canada, particularly the smaller engines up to two horse-power, for pumping water and to operate milking machines. There are half a dozen uses to which they can be put.

Resolution agreed to.

2. That the retail purchase tax shall not apply to goods valued at not more than $100 included in baggage accompanying residents returning from abroad after an absence of not less than 48 hours such as is presently allowed in the case of other excise taxes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I wish to support this resolution. What is the amount of revenue we have received under this provision in the past, and have the United States imposed similar taxation on citizens of that country who have made purchases in Canada in the past two or three years.

Mr. ILSLEY: It has not produced much revenue. The item permitting the importation of $100 worth of goods, free, by returning Canadian residents who are returning from a trip to the United States is not a revenue producing item. It is a revenue sacrificing item.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Why was it proposed in the first place?

Mr. ILSLEY: I understand the hon. member is talking about the item which gives returning Canadian residents the privilege of bringing in goods up to a value of $100?

Mr. NICHOLSON: One has to pay sales tax on what he buys when he crosses the border.

Mr. ILSLEY: Sales tax did not have to be paid on it, but the taxes that have been collectible upon those importations have been the war exchange taxes amounting to ten per cent of the retail purchase price—which is pretty heavy. In respect of jewelry it is twenty-five per cent. This proposal is to free those goods from the retail purchase tax. I do not know how much revenue was collected, but it would not be very much. I have not heard of people bringing back goods from the United States in these small lots recently to any great extent. The prices on a great many commodities are higher in the United States than they are in Canada, and there has not been any considerable importation.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The Canadian understood that he could buy up to $100 worth without having to pay duty. Then when he crossed the border he was obliged to pay a few dollars—it was not a large amount, but it was enough to be irritating when in the middle of the night he would have to pay even a fairly small amount. I am wondering how much revenue it brought in. Did the United States impose a similar tax on their citizens during the same time?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think they did; I have never heard of it. However we collected the war exchange tax.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The minister does not know how much.

Mr. ILSLEY: No. It would be insignificant, in the total revenue picture.

Mr. MacNICOL: Has any record been kept, or is it possible to keep a record, of the total value of goods brought in by Canadians returning from trips to the United States, and the amount of goods taken out by tourists leaving Canada for the United States?

Mr. ILSLEY: I am informed no record is kept.

Resolution agreed to.

3. That the ten per cent war exchange tax be rescinded.

Resolution agreed to.

4. That the excise tax of twenty-five per centum imposed on fur and furs be reduced to ten per centum, and that on a date to be determined by the Minister of National Revenue the existing exemption from sales tax of fur garment manufacturers as small manufacturers be withdrawn.

Mr. BROOKS: I notice in this resolution there is a reduction from 25 per cent to 10 per cent on all furs and fur goods. Does this mean that certain people who have been exempted from tax will now have imposed upon them a small sales tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. BROOKS: Fur dressers and small tailors will now have a tax imposed upon them, where previously they were exempt.

Mr. ILSLEY: Not the tailor.

Mr. BROOKS: I am referring to the man who deals in fur garments.

Mr. ILSLEY: Correct.

Mr. BROOKS: Then it is simply taking the tax off one class of manufacturers and putting it on the smaller man?

Mr. ILSLEY: No; it will be borne by the same person, the consumer. The picture, a complicated and difficult one, is something like this: Some years ago before the 25 per cent fur tax was imposed we had a tax of 12 per cent on the value of the furs as sold by dressers and dyers, which included the charge for dressing and dyeing.

Mr. BROOKS: That applied to the dressed furs, not to the raw furs.

Mr. ILSLEY: That was the situation some years ago. I shall have to give this background in order to explain the resolution. As I say, we had that tax of 12 per cent. When the furs were made into a fur coat and the fur coat was sold by the manufacturer, it was free of sales tax; the 8 per cent did not apply on fur coats. The 12 per cent tax at the point of dressing and dyeing was estimated to be the equivalent of the 8 per cent sales tax on the value of the coat. The value of the coat would be greater, and in order to realize the same amount of money, the percentage would be less. Perhaps that should have been 13 or 14 per cent, but it was 12 per cent. With regard to furs used for trimming fur coats the situation was different. Those coats were free of the 12 per cent tax, but the value of the fur-trimmed cloth coat was taxed at 8 per cent. That situation went on and there were strong protests year after year from the manufacturers of cloth coats. Then we imposed this tax of 25 per cent on furs and removed the 12 per cent tax. The result was that a fur coat was taxed in this way: there was a 25 per cent tax on the value of the furs, and no sales tax on the value of the coat. Fur-trimmed coats were taxed in this way: there was a 25 per cent tax on the value of the furs going into the fur-trimmed coat, and 8 per cent on the fur-trimmed coat. There were still strong protests from the manufacturers of fur-trimmed cloth coats. What we have done here is to reduce the 25 per cent to 10 per cent for all those furs and place a tax of 8 per cent on all coats. This eliminates the alleged discrimination against the manufacturers of cloth coats. The total tax on furs is reduced considerably in the case of furs used in the trimming of cloth coats, because instead of 25 and 8 per cent, it is now 10 and 8 per cent. The tax on furs used in fur coats is not reduced so much; it is almost the same as it was before.

Mr. BROOKS: It is reduced from 25 to 10 per cent?

Mr. ILSLEY: The 8 per cent goes on there, but the 8 per cent is equivalent to 12 or 14 per cent on the furs. If there is still 12 or 14 per cent on the furs and you have another 10 per cent, you are up to between 20 and 25 per cent on the furs used in fur coats. On the furs used on fur-trimmed coats there has been a substantial reduction.

Mr. NICHOLSON: A day or two after the budget was brought down the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar inquired about a report in one of the Ottawa papers which indicated that there had been a leak of information and that the operators had secured some advance details. Will the minister give a statement if the facts are available?

Mr. ILSLEY: I have sent out for some notes I thought I had here. As a matter of fact, there was no leak. The matter was investigated and the people who were reported to have said that there was a leak stated that they did not have any information. They had been surmising that there might be some change in the tax on furs. I shall get a little more detailed information on it.

Mr. McLURE: I listened to the explanation given by the minister and it seems to me to be about as clear as mud. It looked like an increase in the taxation on raw furs, whereas we understood when the budget was brought down that there was going to be a reduction.

Mr. ILSLEY: There is no increase.

Mr. McLURE: It is reduced to 10 per cent, no matter where the furs go, and it all comes back to the producer.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not agree with that at all.

Mr. McLURE: I think practical experience would make you agree with it. At the present time there is a sales tax, and that added to the 10 per cent would total 18 per cent. The tax of 12½ per cent that was originally on furs was a processing tax. Then the 25 per cent tax was put on with no sales tax. Now the tax has been reduced to 10 per cent on the raw furs. This is still a processing tax. But the furs may be manufactured and put into a garment which would have to sell for at least four times the cost of the raw materials, that is the retail price. The 8 per cent tax, I understand, is on the retail value.

Mr. ILSLEY: The 8 per cent is reckoned on the manufacturer's or wholesale price.

Mr. McLURE: Is that collected from the manufacturer?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. McLURE: In that case it means that the producer, who ultimately pays it, would have a tax of 25 or 26 per cent. So the scripture has been fulfilled in that case, and the man is worse off at the last than he was at the first.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: There is some reduction on furs that go into fur coats, and there is a big reduction on furs that go into fur-trimmed coats.

Mr. McLURE: That is if the ceiling price were removed. It cannot happen the way it is now.

Mr. CASE: The minister says that there is an apparent reduction which would be passed on to the consumer. There has been quite a substantial increase in the price of furs. I am thinking of an Alaska seal coat which sold at retail last year for around $1,000 and which now costs over $1,200. Was it intended that this saving should be passed on to the purchaser, and if so, how can the department make sure that it is passed on?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is just about impossible to take any action to see whether it is passed on to the consumer or the producer. Perhaps I should not say this, but I would rather see it passed back to the producer because I think he needs it more than the consumer.

Mr. CASE: But the intention was that the saving would be passed on to the consumer. You wanted no increase in price for the benefit of the manufacturer and to the disadvantage of the consumer?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is a big saving in fur-trimmed goods, but it is just about impossible to say upon whom and in what proportion a tax like this falls. The producers claim, as the hon. member for Queens claimed, that the producer pays it all. That is disputed and denied by others who think that the consumer pays it or that others absorb part of it. It is hard to answer that question; I have tried several times, but the fact remains that when you lighten a tax—and the tax on fur-trimmed goods has been lightened substantially—eventually, if not under present conditions, somebody will get the benefit of it. Just who it will be will depend upon the interplay of market conditions.

With regard to fur goods—not fur-trimmed—the reduction is slight, but that reduction is subject to the same observations. One cannot say that the producer pays the tax, and on the other hand one cannot say with assurance that the consumer pays it.

Mr. CASE: I recognize the difficulty; I think we all do because the factor of quality enters in, and it is difficult to determine today under the price-ceiling policy whether the same quality is being sold at the same price as before. I inquired only to ascertain whether it was the policy of the government to maintain a reasonable price level and pass the saving on at least to someone, and not to increase profits.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Mackenzie asked me about a rumoured leak of advance information about the change in this fur tax. In the Ottawa Evening Journal of October 20, 1945, appeared this item:

"The manufacturing fur trade had a feeling, but no definite information, that there might be some changes made in the new budget in the application of the sales tax, due to dissatisfaction among other sections of the fur industry where the twenty-five per cent tax was applied on the value of the raw pelt," Henry H. Wilson, president of the Ottawa Fur Standards Association, told the Journal last night.

Then, further on:

It was to be noted that the tax of ten per cent on the raw fur, but with an additional eight per cent sales tax on the finished product, would not lower the cost of the furs on the retail market.

The Ottawa Fur Standards Association stated that they had no "tip-off," but felt "there might be some changes made in the application of the tax."

The government's decision with regard to this fur tax was not made until the Thursday before the Friday on which the budget was presented. My recollection is that I took the matter to council on Wednesday and that no decision was reached; I took it back again on Thursday, when a decision was arrived at between one and two o'clock, and the budget was brought down on Friday. Nobody knew what we were going to do about this tax until then. I did not tell anybody and I am sure that the officials did not tell anybody; they never do. We have had very important budgetary discussions over the past few years, sometimes covering a period of as much as six weeks; at some meetings there have been as many as fifteen officials present, and the nature of the matter discussed has been of extreme importance at times; important in this way, that if anyone knew what we intended to do, affecting the price of shares, for example, it would be of value in a business way to many people. Yet never since I have been minister has there been any allegation of a leak from the officials. This rumour or story arose, I think, from the fact that the newspaper headline was as follows: "Furriers knew of cut in excise tax on all furs". Then follows a story, beginning: .

The grapevine of Canada's capital was working well for the Ottawa furriers.

Then there is a story that they knew what was going to happen. Well, I did not know myself until Thursday noon, and none of my colleagues knew and none of the officials knew. We were considering alternative ways of dealing with the matter, and I am satisfied myself that no one told anybody anything. Of course these people in the fur industry are thinking and speculating about these things all the time and there is a certain type of person who likes to pretend that he has information. It makes him look like a—

Mr. BOUCHER: A big shot.

Mr. ILSLEY: A big shot, yes, and somebody might have boasted or said that he knew what was going to be done. But he did not.

Mr. NICHOLSON: That is quite satisfactory.

Resolution agreed to.

5. That the net premium tax on insurance companies be reduced by a credit for premium tax paid in any other country.

Resolution agreed to.

6. That enactments founded on these resolutions come into force on the thirteenth day of October, 1945.

Mr. HANSELL: May I ask on this resolution, or would the minister tell me on what item I may ask, with respect to whether or not the government has set up any machinery at all to discover who may be trying to defeat the income tax laws?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Who is it?

Mr. HANSELL: That is the important question. As a chap once said to me: If you do not beat the system, the system will beat you, and there is a good deal of truth in that. I am not advocating that anyone try to do it. But I read an article some time ago that in the United States the government gives rewards to people who furnish information leading to the collection of taxes that have not been paid. It does not always follow that the person or the firm or corporation is crooked; it may be that misunderstandings have occurred or mistakes have been made; certain things may have been done very innocently. But I recall reading that in the United States they had been able to collect by this method millions upon millions of dollars which otherwise would never have been collected, and that they gave rewards to people who supplied information which led to the collection of these taxes. One of these rewards was as much as $60,000; I think it was paid to an accountant who made a discovery which led to the collection of about a million dollars.

The fact of the matter is, of course, that in a way the whole system of taxation is a system of confiscation. To my mind there is no doubt about that. Of course the people of the country tolerate it because they believe it takes money to run the country and this is the method used to get the money for that purpose. Some of us may believe that that is so; some of us may not. But as the situation is, any person, firm or corporation that does not pay his or its taxes is not bearing his or its fair share of the load which is required to run the country.

I do not want it to appear that I think we have a nation of crooks, neither do I want it to appear that we should bring about a nation full of informers; but it has been mentioned to me on occasions, "There is Mr. So-and-so; that man has never paid a dollar of taxation; yet we know for a fact—" this or that. I just wondered what method the government has of searching out such cases; I am not going to say, searching out crooks, or persons that have deliberately avoided payment. Perhaps the minister can tell us something about that.

Mr. McCANN: All the information we require in that regard is the name and address of the individual, and the matter will be followed up quickly and expeditiously.

Mr. HANSELL: What about rewards?

Mr. McCANN: Under the act any person, whether taxable or not, may be asked to make a return of his income.

Mr. HANSELL: The department does not give any reward?

Mr. McCANN: No reward, except that you are doing your duty to the state in reporting it.

Mr. HANSELL: I do not know whether that is altogether so or not. I suppose a man should do so, but the fact is that people do not like to do these things. Take, however, chartered accountants, for instance, men who are dealing with these matters all the time; they may discover certain discrepancies here or there which will lead to the collection of taxes which have been lost sight of, but they may not want to inform about it; they may not like to give information. I know they should. But evidently in the United States they have regarded the offer of rewards as an appropriate thing to do.

Resolution agreed to.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. STIRLING: May I ask the minister what he proposes to do with the customs tariff? I believe there was a statement outside this house with regard to it, but surely he is going to make a statement inside.

Mr. ILSLEY: I made a statement on that in this house, that I was withdrawing all proposed changes in the customs tariff, and I am not moving that resolution.

Mr. HANSELL: Just so that we shall get this thing clear, does the Minister of National Revenue answer my question? Does he want the country to know now that it is the duty of the citizens of this country to give the names and addresses of those people or firms that they believe are evading payment of taxes?

Mr. McCANN: I think I can answer in the affirmative to that, that the department and the government, although they do not want the ordinary individual to be a "spotter" —as they are called—on anybody else, believe that it is in the interests of every individual who is paying income tax, and in the interests of the state, that those who are taxable should be called upon to make a return. I may tell the hon. member that I do not think there are many who are missed, or very many evasions, because the country is divided into regions, and the regional officers through the inspectors, who go to different communities, usually catch up with anybody in a community who has not put in a return. For instance, an inspector from the district of Ottawa will go to one of the Ottawa valley towns. He knows everybody there who is paying, and as he goes through that town, if it strikes him that the proprietor of a certain place of business, or certain individuals who are interlocked in the business activities of the community, have not made a return, he will very soon catch up with them. The number of people who should make returns and do not make them is almost a negligible quantity. But I repeat that if a citizen knows of people who are not paying their due amounts of taxes, I regard it as the duty of that citizen to acquaint the Department of National Revenue with the fact, and I assure you that those people will get the opportunity and the demand to make an income tax return, whether or not they are taxable.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue a question I asked a little while ago, with respect to the attempt which is being made to collect arrears of income tax from farmers. I am not objecting to the collecting of arrears of taxes from anybody, but I wish to bring to the minister's attention a certain situation which the organized farmers have presented to me with the request that I bring it to his notice. It is represented that for several years after the thirties the farmers had to put up with worn-out machinery and depletion of their capital equipment, and then after the war broke out they had great difficulty, when they began to get in better condition, in buying the machinery they wanted, and naturally so, because there was a real shortage. The result is that now, or as soon as they have an opportunity, they will make up the capital investment which they should have been making during those years, and meanwhile taxes will be placed on all that income which in reality ought to be capital. They are urging that a reprieve of five years from this form of taxation is needed to give the farmers an opportunity to recover their economic position. I should like to know what the minister's view is of that representation.

Mr. McCANN: Perhaps I am not in a position to make the hon. member an answer which he would care to accept at this particular time. I will say that the representations he has made will be taken into consideration. But I can readily see many of the difficulties. If one class in the community asked for a remission of taxes for five years it would open up an avenue leading to all types of difficulties. I appreciate the difficulties the farmers have had; in this house in the last day or so the whole question of returns to farmers and fishermen has been discussed and the suggestion has been made that their returns might be placed on what one would call an average basis over a few years. That, together with the representations made by hon. gentlemen, will be taken into consideration with a view to dealing with all classes of the community in a spirit of justice and equity.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On that point I would ask the minister whether the same system of revenue collecting is followed in all parts of Canada. I believe there is an office in each province. I am a little at sea about the last question raised. The officials in the province from which I come have done an efficient job of collection from the farmers in the past three years.

An hon. MEMBER: That goes for Saskatchewan.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am speaking of those I know. The officials in my province have done a great deal to cooperate and have gone to every municipal office and obtained the record of the people. They have called them in and made collections for the past two or three years and I do not see how anyone could be missed. I was wondering if the same system is followed throughout Canada.

Mr. McCANN: The system is absolutely uniform, the purpose being to treat all alike.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

POST OFFICE

231. Departmental administration, $811,425.

Mr. MacNICOL: A few years ago in the city of Toronto, in my own end of the city and I suppose in other parts as well, we had two deliveries of mail a day. Now we have only one. When are we to return to normal? If I posted a letter in Toronto on Friday night to myself I would not get it until Monday morning, but I would get it on Saturday afternoon if we had a normal delivery.

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): This matter is under consideration. We still have over 1,100 employees with the forces and we need 390 more men to reestablish two deliveries a day.

Mr. MacNICOL: In Toronto alone?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): In all Canada. That does not seem very much for all Canada, but it does not take twice as many men as we have now to reestablish two deliveries a day, because the run is shorter when there are two deliveries. We expect to be able to have two deliveries shortly. Some time next spring there will be two.

Mr. MacNICOL: The postal employees, in my opinion, are as hard worked as any servants of the government. Certainly there are no employees who work harder than these men. They have long hours, and the mailmen carry heavy loads in all sorts of weather. I have observed them on my own street in Toronto and, whatever the reason is, their work seems to play them out more quickly than others. Too many of them have to retire because of hard work and long hours. I think they are poorly paid—I am speaking of the men who deliver the mails. Their job is a most important one, because the letters they deliver are sometimes priceless to those who receive them; yet you rarely hear of any misdeliveries or any mail troubles in this country. I for one am proud of the men in the postal service of Canada.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It is well organized.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not know what the minister means by being well organized. If he is speaking of the staff, yes. I was not thinking of organization from the labour point of view because these men do not cause any trouble. They keep right on with their work. They never threaten to quit or to go on strike. I do not know what we would do if we did have such a strike. I hope the time is coming when the government will consider increasing the remuneration paid to postal employees and will also provide better working conditions. Some post offices furnish satisfactory conditions but many do not. In many the men are sorting down in the basement of some store or building in which they work. The government should make every effort to see that their working conditions are the best. Do they get two or three weeks' holiday in the summer?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Three weeks.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is fair. Do they get paid during that time?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is as it should be. With improved conditions, if they receive greater remuneration I have nothing more to say.

Mr. NICHOLSON: This is the first time the minister has appeared before the committee in his new capacity as Postmaster General, and I take this opportunity of expressing the hope that he will be happy in his new responsibilities. The members of this group are very much interested in his administration. We frequently refer to it as one impressive demonstration of what can be done under—

Mr. CASE: Public monopoly.

Mr. NICHOLSON: —government administration,—

Mr. IRVINE: Public monopoly is a misnomer.

Mr. NICHOLSON: —where the principle of free enterprise and competition has not been a factor. My hon. friends to the right have never suggested that the government should go out of this important service and turn it over to free enterprise to see how they would make out.

Mr. CASE: I could say a lot in a few words on that suggestion.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think we have had a practical demonstration of what can be done under social planning where the greatest good to the greatest number is concerned. I understand there have been some changes in the staff of the department, and I wonder if the minister would tell us who is now the deputy postmaster general, who is the assistant deputy, and what has become of the previous assistant deputy postmaster general.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We in fact have been paid a great compliment by a foreign country. Recently the republic of Peru entered into communication with my department asking us to send one of our officials in order to improve their postal system. We had a gentleman, Mr. Coolican, who was on the verge of reaching the age of superannuation, whom we asked if he would like to go to Peru for a few years. Mr. Coolican has accepted, and the government has also accepted. The same thing has been done in regard to another official of the Canadian government in the Department of Public Works, whose services have been requested to improve the telephone and telegraph systems of that country. We have sent Mr. Sims to undertake that task. So that Mr. Coolican is now on leave, but he is the only high official who has left the department for some time. There are a few who have almost attained the superannuation age, and there may be some sort of reorganization in the near future, but at this time I could not say very much about that.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was wondering if Mr. Coolican will be returning to the department or if he has retired.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): He has now gone to Peru in order to make definite arrangements with the government of that country. I do not know whether he is going to return. He was quite prepared to go there and help the government of Peru, and I am quite sure he will stay there for some time.

Mr. REID: Is he not over age now?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): He has had one extension.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): In view of what has been said by hon. members to my left about this socialistic department and their experiences, I wish to ask the minister a question. I am hesitant about raising local problems on the floor of the house, but in my constituency I have a situation which is baffling to me and perhaps the minister could clear it up by stating his general policy in connection with the construction of post offices. I am quite aware that the Department of Public Works actually constructs or lets the contracts for these buildings, but I understand that is done on the recommendation of the Postmaster General. All during the war I have hesitated to bring up this matter, but according to the information I have received from responsible officials, in the instance I have in mind the government bought an old property and an adjoining property with the intention of constructing a new post office just prior to the war. I am not sure what amount was paid for the property, but it is a matter of principle anyway. Ever since then the department has been paying the same people quite a nice monthly rent for the property, and I should like to understand why this has been done.

As I said, I realized that it would be unfair to say anything about the matter during the war years, but now that the war is over, these people are becoming agitated, and they think I should do something about this on their behalf. The building is quite dilapidated; it is embarrassing to the officials of this town of about 1,200; it is an eyesore on the main street, and because it is crown property they are unable to tax it. They believe they should have a new post office now that the war is over. I understand that there is some policy followed by the department under which new post office buildings are not constructed unless there is a net revenue of something like $10,000, but I should like to know from the minister just what the policy is, in fairness to these people who were content to stay quiet about the matter all during the war years but who consider they now deserve some reasonable explanation in regard to this unusual situation.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It is true that during the war the Department of Public Works was not called upon to construct any buildings for the Post Office Department, but we have had a survey made and intend to go ahead with quite a large number of buildings as soon as conditions permit. We do not want to enter into competition with the housing programme at this time, but we have definite plans to build quite a large number of post offices when the time comes. For a long time a rule has been established in the department that we put up public buildings in places where the net revenue is over $10,000, as the hon. member has said, and I must admit that in quite a few places where the revenue to-day is more than this amount they have not yet got their buildings, but we hope to be able to construct these buildings as soon as conditions permit.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I hope the minister will keep in mind the fact that his department is still paying rent on the property which belongs to it. I do not know what the argument in support of this may be, but to me it is an unusual case. In view of that fact I think some exception might be made in this case. I should be glad if later on the minister would give some explanation of this unusual situation.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I am not familiar with this particular case, but we do intend to commence the construction of these buildings as soon as possible.

Mr. HLYNKA: I should like to ask the minister if we may soon expect the opening of postal service between Canada and the various camps in the British, United States and French occupied zones. I noticed an item in the New York Times under date of November 24, 1945, which stated:

> Opening of a limited mail service for exchange of personal correspondence between Americans and displaced persons in the United States zones of Austria and Germany was announced to-day.
> The state department, making the announcement, said it would also be possible to send five-pound gift parcels from this country to displaced persons in those zones.
> The announcement said that in the interest of efficiency, it would be necessary that the first dispatch of mail originate in every case with the displaced person. Special postcard forms are being distributed in the American zones for this purpose.
> Americans wishing to carry on the correspondence must present these cards before United States post offices will accept letters or parcels for mailing.

My question is, would it not be advisable for the minister to get in touch with the Department of External Affairs, and also to consult his own officials and endeavour to formulate a similar policy for the reestablishment of this postal service on the part of Canada. I should like to mention also that there are many Canadians who, particularly at this time, are interested in their own relatives who find themselves in these displaced persons' camps, and who certainly would be anxious to assist such people by sending parcels of food, clothing, medical supplies and so on. At the same time they are most anxious to correspond with their relatives as soon as this service is made available. Since the United States has been able to reopen the service I believe Canada should not lag far behind in following that good example.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We are in communication with the intermediary countries, and expect to be able to make an announcement any day now. We will do so as soon as we have reached an arrangement.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister give the committee details as to revenue from the Post Office Department which has been turned over to the treasury in the past year?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I had intended to say a few words at the beginning. However, at this time I shall point out that in 1944-45 the net revenue was $66,055,519, and the net surplus, $13,097,000.

Mr. McKAY: That is, more than $13 million has been turned over to the treasury as surplus.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes.

Mr. CASE: Our custom has been to have a discussion when we deal with the first item. May I say to the minister that, from my limited acquaintance, I regard him very kindly indeed. I should also like to join in the complimentary remarks which have been made by hon. members to my left, but I find that I should make some further observations in view of what I have said about public monopolies. What I said was not said offensively, because this is one place where I agree that there is possibly good reason for a public monopoly. If it were handled in the manner for which my good friends would have you believe I have a preference, namely by private enterprise, it would be a very much muddled system. This is one instance where one can say that public enterprise is the most effective. I should like to emphasize, however, that, even here, there must be a degree of cooperation with private enterprise. Many of our common carriers, both air and rail, enter into this public service provided by the post office, and are doing a first-class job. Further, I can think of a score of smaller post offices owned by private individuals, where space is rented to provide this public service.

While the post office has been more or less a profitable venture—and perhaps I should use the word "service" rather than "venture"—because it is bringing in a considerable amount of revenue to the public treasury, nevertheless the fact remains that with post office buildings as with other government buildings in almost every locality, no taxes are being paid. Therefore it is hard to assess or to determine exactly the degree of efficiency of this organization, when one compares what it does with what private enterprise is required to do.

When I discovered the other day that the Department of Agriculture was paying $2,560 a year rental for 300 acres of land, I did not hear a shout from the other side of the house to the effect that this property should be owned by the people. I felt that it should.

I should like to know from the minister if at this time of the year postmen are receiving overtime pay.

[Mr. McKay.]

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes.

Mr. CASE: The men who are delivering the mail on the many routes in the towns and cities, or wherever service is provided, are performing a tremendously long and laborious job. During the past number of years I know that our postman, in the process of his afternoon route, did not arrive at our home until around ten o'clock at night. Probably he would have a boy with him, pulling a sleigh laden with bags and parcels.

I join with the hon. member for Davenport in paying a real word of tribute to this faithful army of men who are doing a remarkably fine job and are certainly not overpaid. I have always hesitated to say too much about pay, because hon. members on this side of the house particularly, it seems to me, are always critical of expenditures made by the government, and I do not see how we can be consistent if in this instance we say, "You should pay more." I will, however, go so far as to say, that this is a group of men who are not overpaid and who have earned the admiration of all.

Mr. MacNICOL: They are underpaid.

Mr. CASE: I hope they are receiving consideration for the extra long hours they must put in at certain seasons of the year.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): They receive extra pay for that.

Mr. JAQUES: I have a number of complaints from my constituents in the districts of Breton, Lindale and Berrymore. They are isolated districts, and at present they have only one mail delivery a week. These people enjoy few conveniences and would be most thankful if the minister could see his way clear to give them two mails a week instead of the one they are now getting. Will the minister look into this matter?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I shall, with pleasure.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to say a word respecting another group in the postal service, who, I believe, are not overpaid. I refer to those who carry out the rural mail delivery. Probably they are the most underpaid group in the service, despite the fact that they render a real service to the Canadian rural population. Although there may have been some increases in pay, I believe they are still being paid a fairly low stipend.

I should like now to call the minister's attention to the necessity for the establishment of more rural mail delivery routes in western Canada. If one would travel through the west he would find that, in comparison with the east, we have comparatively little in the way of rural mail delivery. I realize, of course, that there are difficulties in that part of the country, because of our people being scattered. However, I notice that the department has a surplus of more than $13 million, and while during the war we have not urged that this service be extended, I consider that we are now justified in asking for an extension at as early a day as possible.

The rural routes in western Canada with which I am familiar have only two deliveries a week. There, again, improvement could be made by giving three deliveries on such routes. This would mean a great convenience to the people out there.

I should like to bring one further matter to the minister's attention. I have been told that quite recently the department issued regulations respecting the closing of all post offices on Sunday. I have had notification from my own constituents to the effect that certain post offices in that locality which formerly remained open for one hour on Sunday are now closed. In certain areas it happens that Saturday's mail does not arrive until after ten o'clock on Saturday evening, when the post offices in those areas are closed. The train leaves on Monday morning, with the result that business men are not able to answer their mail arriving on Saturday until Tuesday. This condition would be relieved if the post offices were left open for one hour on Sunday.

I leave these points for the minister's consideration.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We have given the war-time bonus to mail carriers, and a little later on we gave also the cost of operation bonus. We have discovered that some of these contract rates are quite low. In many cases we are asking for new tenders and there will likely be a larger drain on the treasury. I said that in 1944-45 our net surplus was $13 million, but it must be remembered that that was a war year and we do not expect to be able to have the same surplus in the future. I shall consider what the hon. gentleman has said, and I wish he would send me details about those places where he wants three deliveries a week because I should like to refer that to the superintendent of the postal district. If we can do it, we shall be glad to do it. I wish to emphasize that this is not a revenue department; it is a service department.

Mr. PROBE: There are some matters in my constituency which are somewhat at variance with the statement the minister made earlier. First of all, I wish to refer to the retirement age of permanent and temporary employees of the Post Office Department. I understand that that age limit was waived during the war.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): That is right.

Mr. PROBE: The result is that in Regina—and I imagine the same is true of other places—there are a number of employees who should be given the opportunity to resign in order to make way for younger employees returning from overseas and elsewhere. In our city a number of requests have been received from returned persons to be taken on the post office staffs, and many of them have had to be refused.

Another problem is that concerning temporary employees. This relates not only to the Post Office Department but to all departments. The government policy of hiring persons requires serious revision. Temporary employees should be made permanent after a fixed period of employment, regardless of whether they are on an establishment or not. I have one specific case in mind which would come under the minister's department. This man has been employed by the Post Office Department in Regina for 23½ years, having joined shortly after the last war. He is now 63½ years of age, or 1½ years from the usual retirement age. He was a veteran of the South African and the first world wars, and had two sons in the services during this war, one of whom was drowned in the North sea when his ship crashed.

This man wrote a civil service examination before being taken on the staff and he thought he had qualified for permanent employment. He has been permanently employed in the sense that he has not missed work in 23½ years, but he is considered to be a temporary civil servant. He is now in poor health and is ready to retire. He has been thrifty, and I am sure he would not want me to mention his case on the floor of this house. He has never brought it up by way of complaint, but the fact is that he has no pension rights because he was not allowed to pay into the superannuation fund.

I am sure this case could be multiplied thousands of times in the government service. When a person is taken into the civil service and works for a period of five years or so without having been placed in a permanent establishment, he should be automatically classified as a permanent civil servant. I should like to know how this is handled in the minister's department.

I have a further request to make, one which was received just this morning. There are a number of veterans in Regina who would like to be reabsorbed into the Post Office Department. I urge that there be two deliveries daily in Regina so that these men may be taken into the employment stream. Then, with the retirement of the men and women who are sixty-five years of age or over there would be an added possibility of employment in that city. The minister said that there were too many postal employees still in uniform to permit the inauguration of two services daily, but I think by the time we retire the older employees we should be able to function with two services daily.

Then there is the matter of the revision of the wage schedule which would apply to the Post Office Department as well as to all branches of the civil service. I am glad that for once hon. gentlemen to my right and I can agree that it is time that we raised the salaries of civil servants. Would the minister care to make a statement at this time about the retirement age and making permanent those civil servants who have worked for a few years without being placed in a regular establishment?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): During the war employees were not retired at retiring age because of shortage of man-power, but our policy now is to retire them as soon as they reach the age of sixty-five years in order to give younger men a chance to be promoted.

Mr. PROBE: Is that an automatic arrangement?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is their retirement at sixty-five years regardless of whether they have pensions?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): If they are employees of the Post Office Department they would be under the superannuation scheme and have a pension at sixty-five years. There may be some employees who are employed in what are known as revenue post offices. In these offices the postmaster gets a percentage of the revenue. Such employees would not be under the superannuation system. Previously they were not retired at sixty-five years. They might be postmasters in villages or small towns and were kept on as long as they were able to do their work properly, but in the near future it is our intention to ask them to retire at sixty-five years.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the minister give the committee some indication of what security these people are to have, or are we just going to turn them out like an old work-horse to rough it on the prairie and support themselves as best they can?

[Mr. Probe.]

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): These men have a contract with the government under which they receive a certain percentage of the revenue, and in some places more than the revenue. But we have a minimum. There are small post offices where the revenue is not half the amount that we are paying to the postmaster. As I said before, this is a service department, not a department for revenue. Most of these men have some other job besides running the post office, which is very often looked after by the son or the daughter or the wife. Like anybody else working on a contract with anybody they must look to their own future. Of course there is the old age pension which begins at a certain age, but there is no machinery established to-day, just for the Post Office Department, to superannuate these postmasters when they leave at sixty-five years of age.

The hon. member also asked about temporary employees, and I am in great sympathy with what he said. But especially during the war every employee that we have taken on has had to sign a document clearly explaining that he was only working in a temporary capacity in order that we might keep the position open for a returned man.

As to the returned man who has been in the department before, he is taken on again immediately he presents himself. My hon. friend mentioned one employee who had been a temporary for twenty-three years. I do not quite understand how he has been with us so long as a temporary. I do not know just what we can do for him, but if the hon gentleman will give me the details I shall be very glad to see if we can do something for him if he is a veteran.

Mr. PROBE: There was one other question, about reclassification of wages.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): That question is being studied generally, not only in my department but in all departments. Of course the treasury board has something to say about that.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have one general question that I wish to ask the Postmaster General, but before I do so I wish to comment briefly on one or two things that have been said in the discussion.

I was very glad to hear the Postmaster General say that something was being done to raise the remuneration of rural mail couriers. At every session of parliament that I can remember, for quite a number of years, this question has been discussed and demands have been made for increased remuneration for rural mail couriers, and if the Postmaster

General has a general plan for improving their remuneration I hope that when it comes before us the house will support him, because it is a reform, if that is the proper term, that is long overdue.

The hon. member for Grey North mentioned overtime for letter carriers. I did not refresh my memory before coming into the chamber, but my understanding is that the present system of overtime payment is very unsatisfactory, at least from the letter carrier's point of veiw, because I understand that overtime is not a matter of a cash payment but compensation in the form of holidays later on. I may be mistaken in that, but I do not think I am. I think the letter carriers have to take days off during the summer to compensate them for overtime work during the Christmas and New Year's rush.

The question of temporary civil servants raised by the hon. member for Regina City, as every hon. member knows who has been in the house very long, is an old one. In almost every department there are civil servants who have been there for years and are still temporaries. I do not think the one with twenty-three years temporary service is a particularly outstanding case, because I have heard of longer periods of temporary service than that. On the house staff the situation was corrected following recommendations made by a civil service committee some few years ago. It is a question that I think should be dealt with in the manner suggested by the hon. member for Regina City. That is, any person taken into the employ of the government in a permanent department should, after two years' service at most—I would not say five years because that is too long—become a permanent civil servant. The situation is quite different, of course, if the department itself is only a temporary one.

The question I was going to ask the Postmaster General was, what is the method of printing and selling postage stamps? Does the government purchase stamps; where are they printed, and how are they sold? In the larger post offices such as Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal, are the stamps sold on a commission?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): In normal times the employee who works overtime is given time off to compensate him, but during the Christmas rush, which lasts for almost the whole of December and part of January, we pay for overtime.

Mr. MacINNIS: At what rate?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): At the regular rate.

Mr. PROBE: At the regular hourly rate or the regular overtime rate?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): At the regular hourly rate, and we give them time off. In the city of Toronto we take on almost 5,000 temporary employees just for the Christmas rush, and almost as many, if not more, in Montreal.

As to the stamps, we ask for tenders for the printing of the stamps. They are printed to-day and have been for some time by the Canadian Bank Note company, and by the way, our stamps are considered by philatelists as the best in the world. In the large post office the custom for many years has been to permit certain people to have the privilege of selling stamps on a commission. They have to employ and pay their own assistants, and they have to buy the stamps for cash. That system is in operation in a great number of the large post offices. In the smaller post offices we sell the stamps ourselves, and that practice has also been followed in some of the large cities where drug stores ano other stores have the privilege of selling stamps on a commission, but this practice is disappearing in the larger cities. In Toronto the department is selling its own stamps Wherever a man is doing his work properly and giving satisfaction to the public we do not disturb him in his position, but when he dies or ceases to operate his franchise the department takes it over.

Mr. MacINNIS: Would the minister give me some further information on that, if not now on some future day? Is that system of selling stamps on commission used in the general post office at Vancouver? Who is the contractor and what is the commission paid?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I have all the details here for every town and city, the number of employees and so forth.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to know the number of employees in the Vancouver post office, the rate of commission paid, the amount paid in commissions and the profit that the contractor is making.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Do the contractors include any wholesale merchants?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We have what we call lobby vendors selling stamps in the post office. We have not what might be termed wholesale vendors of stamps.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is now over thirty years since the rural mail service was set up It has been of great service to the rural people, who appreciate it very much, and I wish to pay my tribute to the rural mail couriers for the splendid work they are doing in good weather and bad the year round, going out in the storms of winter and making their way through snowbanks and over the fields to take the mail to the boxholders. It is over thirty years since that system was established, and I think a resurvey should be made of a good many of the rural routes with a view to giving more contract service to bring this convenience to more rural boxholders. I know of numerous instances where thirty years ago there was only a grass farm but where to-day there are houses and buildings, and yet the farmer has to walk three-quarters of a mile to a mile to get his mail. In western Ontario particularly, which I know better than any other part, a resurvey of the rural mail routes should be made to serve better the rural people in that part of the province.

Mr. HANSELL: I was quite interested to hear the hon. member for Mackenzie pay a tribute to the government for the example which the post office is of public enterprise, but of course there never has been anything else but government management of the post office. It is one department where there is absolutely no competition, and I do not think it is a just comparison because, if there were any competition, the post office picture might not look quite so rosy. Again, I do not know that we can be so proud of some of the post offices that we have to go into. I know the method which the minister has described, that some of the offices are what are known as revenue offices and some of the postmasters are revenue postmasters. They supply the best equipment they can and at the same time make a living, which means, of course, that some of the post offices are very dingy, some broken down, needing electric light bulbs so that we can see to write our name on an envelope, and lacking in other respects. I am quite certain that if there were any competition many of these post offices would not do very much business.

Since this is one department of government that is revenue producing, it is only natural that we can expect it to show an annual profit. This is one public enterprise that believes in the profit system, because it is producing a profit every year; $19,000,000, I think the minister said was the surplus this year.

I would ask the minister when the country can expect a reduction in the postage rate now that the department has a $19,000,000 profit. Since there is no competition, all the government have to do is to boost the postage rate and of course they would have a bigger profit. If they lowered the rate too much they would have a loss. Just how many employees are there in the postal service in Canada, taking in everyone? The government might not have to raise their wages very much to use up that $19,000,000 surplus. There are a good many ways of looking at this matter of public enterprise.

I should like to refer to the mail couriers again. The phrase that they are out in the winter storms has been used by nearly every hon. member who has spoken, and I should also like to pay my tribute to these men. I do not know whether that is what they want to be paid. I think they want to be paid in cash.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is what I advocated. We cannot blame them for that.

Mr. HANSELL: It will be very nice for them to get Hansard and to read all the tributes we have been paying them. But what they want payment in is cash, not tributes. I am sure that the people of Canada are waiting to hear from the Postmaster-General about a reduction in the postage rate. Did I hear him say something, or was it just imagination?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I must correct a few misapprehensions. The Post Office Department cannot give a statement showing the net profit because like every other department our revenues are deposited in the consolidated revenue fund, and for the money we need we come before the house, as every other department must do, and ask in the estimates for the sum that is required to carry on for the next year. That gives the house an opportunity of checking everything that we are doing.

Mr. MacNICOL: Not so late in the session; you cannot do so.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): If we were a company showing a statement, whether we have profits or not, we would have our money in the bank and might not in times like these have to come to the house and ask for a subsidy of $60,000,000 or something like that. We increased the postage during the war by one cent, which has brought to the government about $10,000,000 more in revenue. The department intends to ask for a reduction from the present rate and come back to two cents for drop letters and three cents for the others. Our aim is even higher, but I will not say exactly what it is in case my target is too high. We want as soon as possible to transport all our first-class mail by plane from one end of Canada to the other so that, as far as the postal department is concerned, the dominion will be only twenty-four or thirty-six hours, or, at the utmost, forty-eight hours large, so to speak. That would be a great thing for the unity of the country. Of course we are waiting on the department administered by my colleague the Minister of Reconstruction to inform us when we shall be able to carry all first-class mail by plane.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would that include the far north, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes, I do not know if it is the intention of the committee to go through the different estimates, but if hon. members would like to go fast I may say that we are asking this year for over $10,000,000 for air mail services. Of course we are losing money on the operation, because it costs us more than it would if we were sending our mail by some other means, especially when we send it into the far north where planes carry very little except mail. We expect to be able to reduce the rate very soon both on land and in the air. We have 39,208 employees, including rural mail carriers. There are a large number of rural mail carriers and sometimes they work only part of the day, but that is the number of employees we have. There are 1,098 at headquarters in Ottawa and we still have 1,651 who are with the army. As a matter of fact, the number is really eleven hundred and something but when this figure was prepared it was 1,651.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why not give the committee a report on the quantity of air mail carried?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I could do that.

Mr. GREEN: The hon. member for Peterborough West requested me last night to ask a question with regard to salaries paid to postal men. Apparently they were promised an increase of $300 per annum, but instead of being given that increase—

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): My hon. friend is confusing what is promised with what is asked for.

Mr. GREEN: This is what I am told. I understand that they were granted an increase of $120 a year, from $1,500 to $1,620, whereas they were led to believe that they would get an increase of $300.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It seems that I shall have to be the one questioning instead of being the one questioned. I do not know by whom they were promised $300.

Mr. MacNICOL: They asked for it.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): They asked for $300 and were given $120.

Mr. GREEN: Does the minister say that no such promise was given?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): There is no such promise, I am informed.

Mr. GREEN: One other question. I am told that if a person uses the blue airmail form for delivery in Canada the letter is returned; it is not delivered, although the fee for that letter is ten cents, whereas for the ordinary airmail letter it is only seven. Why is that? There is nothing on the form itself to show that it is for use only for overseas. I suggest that if this blue form is to be used only for letters sent overseas a notation to that effect should be printed on it.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We abandoned the airgraph form in July of this year.

Mr. GREEN: I do not mean the airgraph form but the blue form which is in use. I sent one overseas myself the other day.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): There must be some confusion, because we have no particular form of letters to-day for airmail in Canada, although we did have at the start. We were using a very light envelope. To-day businessmen use ordinary envelopes and letterheads for airmail and the fee is seven cents.

Mr. GREEN: I am speaking of the blue form. A person can go into the post office and pick up one of these forms, and in fact that was done by the person who wrote to me. He did not send a letter overseas but posted one from Winnipeg to Vancouver. He paid ten cents postage and the letter was not delivered in Vancouver. After a long delay it was returned to the sender, and yet there is nothing on the form to show that it must be used only for overseas.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I shall make inquiries concerning the matter.

Mr. BRYCE: I wish to bring up a couple of matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BRYCE: I have waited all afternoon for an opportunity to bring up this matter on behalf of my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North. It has reference to the Winnipeg post office. They have a service once a day now. They had service twice a day before the war. There were 261 employees then and only 228 now, and men are being laid off. There are 103 who went to the services, only twenty-seven having come back. I wanted to bring this matter up to see what could be done.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): I will look into it.

Mr. BRYCE: I am afraid I shall have to leave the matter for the time being because I shall not get a hearing anyway. I will bring it up on another occasion.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at six p.m.

Monday, December 3, 1945.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ATOMIC BOMB

Mr. FRASER:

What was the total cost to Canada in connection with the discovery and production of the atomic bomb?

[Mr. Bryce.]

Mr. HOWE: The wording of this question is such that the answer would be, "no expenditure." Canada has not been working on the development of the atomic bomb. It has been working on the development of atomic energy for peace-time purposes. I would not care to answer the question in its present form, other than to say that no expenditure has been made. If the hon. member wishes to reconstruct the question we should be pleased to give the amount spent on the other aspect of the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Answered.

SHORTAGES OF UNDERWEAR

Mr. HANSELL:

1. Has the government or any department or board under government supervision received any complaints by way of correspondence or other representation, respecting any shortages of underwear in: (a) Canada; (b) the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta?

2. If so, what steps have been taken to alleviate these shortages?

Mr. MAYHEW:

1. (a) Yes, in so far as the wartime prices and trade board is concerned. (b) Yes, in so far as the wartime prices and trade is concerned.

2. For the past two years the wartime prices and trade board has issued production directives requiring underwear manufacturers to manufacture specific quantities of various types of garments within fixed time periods. Assistance has been given these directed manufacturers in securing the necessary materials and labour. As a result, the production of underwear for civilian use has, despite large military procurement, been maintained at high levels. Special emphasis has been placed on the manufacture of children's underwear and nightwear and current production is approximately double pre-war rates.

HOUSING UNITS—QUEBEC PROVINCE

Mr. NICHOLSON:

1. How many permits have been granted for the construction of housing units in the districts of: (a) Ste. Agathe; (b) Ste. Adele; (c) Mont-Tremblant, Quebec?

2. What is the estimated value per unit in each district?

3. Are there any houses being built for which no permits have been issued? If so, how many?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. (a) 39; (b) 27; (c) 3.

2. (a) $3,746; (b) $3,859; (c) $3,333.

3. Reports have been made to the department alleging that houses have been constructed without a licence in the localities stated in question 1. These reports are being investigated but until the investigator's report has been made, the information asked for is not available.

FIBRES, TEXTILES AND TEXTILE PRODUCTS—IMPORTS

Mr. CASE:

What is the value of imports into Canada for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944 and 1945, of fibres, textiles and textile products?

Mr. MacKINNON:

Import values of fibres, textile and textile products entered for consumption in Canada during calendar years 1941 to 1944, and ten months' period ended October, 1945:

Mr. BRUCE:

1. Has an agreement been made between Chance Brothers, Research Enterprises and the crown?

1. An agreement was concluded between Research Enterprises Limited and Chance Brothers June 1, 1941.

2. Answered by No. 1.

VETERANS ATTENDING UNIVERSITIES

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. Has the government given consideration to increasing the maintenance benefits for veterans who are students attending universities under the educational and rehabilitation scheme?

2. If so, what is the decision?

Mr. TUCKER: These questions seek disclosure of policy and it is not the practice of the government to disclose policy in giving answers to questions.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. McMASTER:

1. What number of cheques were issued for each province under the Family Allowance Act, for the month of October, 1945?

2. What number of such cheques were issued for families of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 children?

Mr. CLAXTON:

1. Prince Edward Island	11,844
Nova Scotia	74,070
New Brunswick	57,245
Quebec	366,080
Ontario	432,984
Manitoba	86,647
Saskatchewan	103,054
Alberta	99,999
British Columbia	101,848
N.W.T. and Yukon	821
	1,334,592

2. See table on following page.

Note: The discrepancy between the number of cheques issued (see answer 1 above) and the number of families receiving allowances (see table on following page) is explained by the fact that in respect of payment to Indians and to children's aid societies one cheque may cover a number of family groups.

Furthermore, a number of adjustment cheques may be issued during one month to a single family covering retroactive payments.

1. How many bushels of wheat were shipped from western to eastern Canada in each of the years, 1940 to 1945?

2. What was the price per bushel paid by the eastern farmer in each of the above years?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member who asked this question will have to clarify it somewhat. I do not know whether it is one I should answer, or whether it should be answered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It will be noted that the first part of the question reads: "How many bushels of wheat were shipped from western to eastern Canada in each of the years, 1940 to 1945?" From the next question I would assume the hon. member is asking how many bushels were shipped for feeding purposes. If that is what is meant, then it is a question I should answer; if it is not, then I should like the question to be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

LEGAL SERVICES—BORDEN, ELLIOT, SANKEY AND KELLEY

Mr. POULIOT:

For a photostat copy of all cheques received by the government since the beginning of the war from the law firm of Borden, Elliot, Sankey and Kelley, Toronto, in payment of refund of legal fees.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is the first time I have seen a request made for photostatic copies of documents. This introduces something that is new and I think it will have to be considered carefully before assent is given. I am not saying that there may not be cases in which it would be wise to produce photostat copies of documents, but there may be other cases in which that request should not be met. This particular motion asks for the production of copies of certain cheques. Cancelled cheques are not in the possession of the government, and they would not be available for photostating in any event. Unfortunately the hon. member is not in his seat, but I think in the light of these circumstances the motion might well be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand that the motion of the hon. member for Temiscouata should be dropped? Is it the pleasure of the house that this motion be dropped?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dropped.

Motion dropped.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs what steps have been taken to prevent a recurrence of the unwarranted delay which occurred in the issuance of maintenance cheques to veteran students at the university of Saskatchewan and if other veteran students at other universities have experienced the same difficulty.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): This matter was brought to my attention two weeks ago by a telegram, and also by the hon. member for Lake Centre. Immediate action was taken and cheques were issued at the end of the month. The last ones will be issued on December 4, which will be to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have asked the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. IRVINE: I shall not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question asked by my hon. friend involves government policy and it could not be answered offhand at this moment. If my hon. friend wishes an answer he will have to put his question on the order paper.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

190. Departmental administration, $287,000.

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Chairman, as this is the first time the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare have come before the committee I think it might be convenient to hon. members if I described briefly the organization and functions of the department.

It was created by the Department of National Health and Welfare Act, chapter 22, statutes of 1944, which received royal assent on July 27, 1944. That act was proclaimed on October 13, when I was appointed its first minister. The department took over the health branch of the department of pensions and national health. That department had been created in 1928, when the old department of health and the department of soldiers' civil reestablishment were amalgamated. The department of health itself was created in 1919.

When the Department of National Health and Welfare was created on October 13, 1944, the health branch of the department of health and pensions, which was taken over, had a total personnel of 387. At that time the new department had no administrative staff whatever, and no staff in the welfare branch. It was a time, as hon. members know, of great shortages of space and personnel, and at first the work of the department had to be organized from offices in the House of Commons. Later the administration has been carried on from offices in the Birks building, and only now, more than a year after its creation, is the department being gradually assembled in one place, in offices in the Jackson building.

The health branch had a number of different functions. It administered many acts of this parliament which went back even to pre-confederation days. I might list them for the convenience of hon. members:

(a) The Foods and Drugs Act;

(b) The Opium and Narcotics Act;

(c) The Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act;

(d) The Quarantine Act;

(e) The Leprosy Act. The health branch also furnished services with regard to

(f) Maternal and child hygiene;

(g) The examination of immigrants;

(h) Nutrition;

(i) Public health engineering; for example, public works health service; public health on railways, steamships, et cetera, and particular jobs such as water supply at military camps;

(j) Sick mariners service, which since confederation has provided medical and surgical treatment to members of crews of vessels in the classes specified in the Canada Shipping Act. In addition the department makes certain grants to institutions to assist sailors;

(k) Venereal disease control, including assistance to the provinces, coordination of various controls, the distribution of drugs used in veneral disease treatment;

(l) Administration of the laboratory of hygiene, including testing and establishing of standards for food and drugs, standardization of reagents, studying sources of vitamins, et cetera;

(m) Control of food and drug advertising and labelling;

(n) Cooperation with other governments in the administration of sanitary conventions, et cetera.

These functions had been carried on, as I say, by the health branch of the department of pensions and national health, and they were taken over by the new department. Since then a number of new developments have taken place, particularly during the last year, and new divisions have been created to deal with the following matters:

1. Health insurance studies, the purpose of which is to extend the studies that have been carried on by this department and by parliamentary committees in the past.

2. Dental health.

3. Civil servants' health. That was announced in May, 1945, in consequence of authorization being given by the government to supply a service to civil servants which would put the Dominion of Canada on a footing with other good employers with regard to the health service to be furnished to the civil service, including examination on entrance, periodical examinations, X-ray examinations, emergency treatment, advice on health matters and education on health matters.

4. Health facilities. This division is designed to supply advice and information to government departments, to provincial governments and to other agencies with regard to hospital construction. At present there are not a great number of architects qualified to supply consultative advice and assistance in connection with the construction of hospitals, and we feel it is desirable to have such a man with the required knowledge and to equip him and make his services available to other agencies interested in using them. This course was taken in accordance with a resolution of the Dominion Council of Health.

5. Mental health.

6. Blindness control. The proposals made by the dominion government to the provinces provide for extending the age at which blindness will be pensionable from forty down to twenty-one, and also, in cooperation with the provinces for both preventive and curative services to the blind. We hope almost at once to undertake a survey of the files and medical records of blind people in Canada registered with the department so as to arrive at exact statistical knowledge of the different causes of blindness and ascertain how much of it is preventable or curable. On the basis of that information we can start some really constructive work in that field.

7. Tuberculosis control.

8. Advertising and labelling control. The purpose of this division would be to coordinate the work previously done in several divisions of the department and cooperate much more actively with those engaged in the pharmaceutical trade, the advertising agencies and others interested in this field, in order to arrive at standards of medicine and health advertising which will be thoroughly understood and readily applied.

9. National laboratory. Last May I was also authorized to announce that we would plan to have a national laboratory in Canada which would, we hoped, put Canada on a footing with any other country in the world, and which would provide us with the last word in laboratory equipment to conduct the public health business of the dominion. This building is being planned now. It is expected that construction will not begin for some considerable time, but when it is in being we hope it will be something of which the Canadian people can be proud.

In addition to these new divisions which have been created, during the year the department has undertaken a number of other activities. It now publishes the Canadian Health and Welfare Bulletin, which is distributed free to provincial governments, public health authorities and others engaged in that field. The distribution amounts to 50,000 copies in English and 25,000 copies in French. Already it has had a very good reception. It takes the place of a bulletin previously issued by the department, and represents hardly any increase in cost. The department is also working with other government agencies to develop a film library on health matters and also to develop a very much more complete public health and welfare library. In time we hope to be able to provide the provinces and other agencies in the field with information in regard to everything going on in these fields in other countries as well as in every part of Canada, and in this way serve the interests of the provinces and all others concerned. On November 1 the hospitalization and medical treatment of Indians was transferred to the department, but my colleague the Minister of Mines and Resources will include the presentation of those items in his estimates, because since November 1 we have not had time to take them over. We greatly appreciate his courtesy in this respect.

In the general health field, since the department was created we have endeavoured to get into close personal relationship with the ministers and department of health of the provinces and with all the agencies working in this field, such as the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Dental Association, the Health League of Canada, the Canadian Institute for the Blind, the Canadian Nurses' Association, the Red Cross, and a number of others. I am happy to say that all have not only expressed their desire to cooperate but have given every indication of a genuine wish to cooperate in the great work of improving the health and welfare of the Canadian people.

I should say a word about the organization of the welfare department. It started out on October 13 of last year, as I said, with no staff, no quarters, no equipment, and it was faced with the task of seeing that the children of Canada were registered and that cheques were issued by the month of July. There were times when I thought we could not possibly meet that goal, but the thing got going; we commenced the registration of families in Prince Edward Island in February and gained very valuable experience there before undertaking the job of registration in all the provinces, which commenced on March 22 of 1945. At that time we did not even have office space in two of the provinces, and as the forms came in they had to be stored temporarily. In the connection I should like to express a warm word of gratitude to the hundreds if not thousands of volunteer workers in every part of Canada who helped in the work of sorting the forms and generally in the preliminaries of registration. These women were obtained largely through the women's voluntary agencies; many were office women who voluntarily contributed their free services after office hours so that this job of national importance might be done in time.

We were able to make the first payment on July 18 as planned; payments have been made in respect of the months of July, August, September, October and November. The November payment was made about the 18th of the month, and we already have the figures in regard to that payment, which I am prepared to give the committee. It was made in respect of 1,393,546 families and amounted to a total of $19,722,599. The size of this operation I think may be understood when I say that in the month of October alone we had 40,331 changes of address and 92,250 automatic changes occasioned by the children moving from one age level to another. These automatic changes are made without any action on the part of the parent; they are made from the information we have on file, and are done by changing the address slugs and other equipment used to send out cheques.

The work of registration has been greatly facilitated by the simple form we ultimately selected after a great deal of trial. If you compare the form used in Canada with that in use in Australia or New Zealand or Ireland I think you will see that we have by far the simplest form. We have found that it gives adequate information, and by reason of the cooperation of the Canadian people and the amount of publicity that was given, a large percentage of the forms were properly filled out, although delays in payment have occurred in a considerable number of cases through the forms not being properly filled out. For example, some thousands of forms were sent in with no addresses on them. The applicants inadvertently left off the addresses, and we had no means of communicating with them until they wrote in again. Then we had to relate the form to the letter and see that the cheques were mailed in payment. There have been delays, but I think those delays are almost entirely caught up now. They were due to shortages of space, shortages of staff in practically every province, and considerable shortages of equipment arising from delays in obtaining the machinery and office furniture. But to-day in every province except Quebec applications are dealt with the day they are received, and generally speaking correspondence is replied to the following day. In Quebec that is generally true with regard to current applications and correspondence, but there is still a relatively small backlog of correspondence which we hope to catch up with in the next week, and which will put the whole operation on an absolutely current basis. When it is considered that already six and a half million cheques have been issued and that these delays probably do not affect one-tenth of one per cent of the total it is a record of which the men and women who have worked night and day in the regional offices may well be proud.

This work has been greatly facilitated, and indeed I think was possible only by reason of the very fine cooperation we have received from other government departments. I should like to pay tribute to the accuracy of the estimates made by the dominion bureau of statistics, on which all our calculations and organization had to be based. We had to determine through one means or another, sometimes through the post office and sometimes through other agencies, how many forms in French or in English would have to be available in each part of Canada and in each post office in Canada. It should be remembered that we delivered the forms to households, in French or English according to the language of the householder, so that people did not even have to call for their forms unless there had been some failure in delivery. In arriving at the size of the staff and at the quantity of equipment we had to have very accurate estimates. The dominion bureau of statistics made these estimates on the basis of the 1941 census projected to July, 1945, and they were extraordinarily accurate. We have a statistical service which is not only a great credit to those responsible for it but is essential if an operation of this kind is to be carried on. Also the treasury officials, who have done great work, and the post office and the provincial governments as well as the municipal authorities cooperated generously in seeing that this very considerable operation was carried out on time.

It should be remembered that we have had only four months of operation and have been dealing with fifteen years of backlog of children, so that we have not got down to a month-to-month basis. When the bill was being debated in July, 1944, I gave the house an estimate of the cost of family allowance administration in the Department of National Health and Welfare itself; I said we thought it would run not higher than two per cent, and closer to one per cent. I am glad to say that our estimate or guess was well within the limits of actuality; it looks now as if we shall be able to get through the first year with a cost of one per cent and in future years at considerably less. The estimate of staff I made at that time was that we should have 500 in the offices; at present we have 450, with a considerable additional number of casual employees who have been there to take care of the peak load. It may be that we shall need, when the operation settles down, rather more than 500, but it is still too early to say that. On the other hand I said that we would need a field force of 500, and we shall certainly not need anything like that figure. I said that the number of treasury officials would likely total 600; on November 14 they totalled 583. So that generally speaking the estimates were sound, and the aim we set for ourselves at that time has been bettered.

We decided, after considering the whole subject, that this job could be done only with complete decentralization. Family allowance registrations were made in respect of the children in each province, and the family allowance office where they were made was in the capital of each province. Cheques were issued from that regional office at the capital, and the correspondence was conducted from there. That permitted us to do this very large job of organization. We could not have done it in time had we tried to do it at Ottawa. For one thing, the mails would have been swamped at the end of each month. The total family allowance staff at headquarters in Ottawa totals the rather extraordinary figure of seven.

During the year, in accordance with the intentions expressed when the department was established, the administration of the old age pensions branch, which had been with the Department of Finance, was transferred to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The department like other departments of government, was also occupied during a considerable part of the year in working on studies which led to the proposals of the dominion government which were put before the dominion-provincial conference. The proposals regarding health and welfare matters will be found in the green book, as we call it. That contains the proposals of the dominion government, set out at length. I will not refer to them except to mention that those with regard to health include:

(a) A grant for planning.

(b) A system of health insurance on a nation-wide basis to the administered by the provinces, to which the federal government would contribute approximately sixty per cent of the cost, which would give Canadians in every part of Canada complete health service.

(c) A programme of health grants under eight different heads, which would total some $13,000,000 and which would provide a very much larger sum, through provincial contributions to be spent on public health measures as well as on preventive and curative medicine.

(d) Assistance in the construction of hospitals whereby provincial and municipal authorities could borrow money at cost.

These proposals also include the change in the provision for the blind, which I have mentioned, and also a change in old age pensions whereby an old age pension of $30 a month would be payable to everyone in Canada without proof of need at the age of seventy and a similar pension would be payable to those needing it, between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine. The proposals with regard to old age pensions would cost the federal government about $217,000,000 a year, and the proposals with regard to health, if fully implemented, would cost the federal government something like $160,000,000 a year. These proposals are before the provinces now and are receiving their consideration.

That, Mr. Chairman, completes this brief statement of the activities and organization of the department. This department is, I believe, the only one which is by statute charged with responsibility for seeing to the health and welfare of the Canadian people in the federal field, and I believe I am the only minister who is by statute expressly charged with responsibility for seeing to it that these two ingredients of human happiness, health and welfare, shall be attended to in so far as it is within our power. We have been conscious of that responsibility, and we are conscious also of the fact that we have not made along every line the progress we should have liked to make. But in view of the times and of the transition from war to peace, I feel that the officers and employees of the department have reason to congratulate themselves on a good first year. I hope they will feel encouraged by the results so far obtained and that on the foundations laid in this first year we shall be able to build the health and welfare of the Canadian people.

I should like to say a further word in appreciation of the splendid staff in the old health branch of the Department of Pensions and National Health which, when transferred to me from the Minister of Veterans Affairs, we found to be staffed with a group of public servants whose devotion to the public service and the welfare of Canada it would be hard to exceed. They have fitted into the new organization and we are now, we believe, a well integrated unit, and can build on the foundation already laid.

I believe that health and welfare are two matters in which all hon. members of this house, irrespective of party, and every person in the country, are vitally interested. We have had nothing but the best of cooperation from everyone. I believe that cooperation will still be forthcoming, and it is in that spirit that I lay these estimates before the committee for its consideration.

Mr. IRVINE: Is there any grant in the estimates this year for the Registered Nurses Association of British Columbia?

Mr. CLAXTON: The situation with regard to nurses is this. At the beginning of the year 1942, a grant of $115,000 was made to the Canadian Nurses Association. That was increased to $200,000 in 1943-44 and to $250,000 in 1944-45. In this year an amount of $159,950 was fixed as the association's estimate of the cost that it would incur in completing the operations already undertaken. It is not contemplated in these estimates that any grant will be made to the Canadian Nurses Association or through them to the Provincial Nurses Association for work in peace time. These grants were made to accelerate the recruitment and training of nurses in war because of the special needs of the defence forces and the Department of Veterans Affairs. They had an important effect in stimulating training and recruitment, but it is not intended to carry that grant into peace time. It would be difficult to justify a grant for nurses unless similar grants were made for training doctors, dentists, and others. As all hon. members know, the organization and training of all those classes of professional workers come exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. IRVINE: The matter that I am most interested in at the moment is this. I understand that the association, anticipating the continuance of the grant to which the minister has made reference, had made their plans and commitments, and the discontinuance of the grant appears to have come in the middle of their fiscal year. If the minister will say that his department will make good any such commitments, then that will satisfy my question at the moment.

Mr. CLAXTON: The estimates provide for all commitments made being met.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to bring to the attention of the minister one matter which he did not deal with in his factual and interesting resume of the affairs of his department, which, as he says, is entirely removed from the question of partisanship. During the past twenty-five years there has been a marked extension of health services and in improvement of conditions of those why by reason of disabilities of one kind and another are unable to enjoy the standard of living which we believe is the minimum for all. While much has been done in the matter of old age pensions, there is still much more to be done. Pensions for the blind, family allowances, and the like have been provided but there is one section of our population which faces difficulties that ought not to exist. I refer to those who while not blind are physically crippled. All of us know of persons who by reason of congenital crippleness or as a result of accidents are unable to carry on and therefore become a charge on their relatives. Often those relatives are unable to carry on and furnish themselves with the proper standard of living. I do not know the extent to which the minister has statistics on this matter, but it would be of interest to find out how many throughout the dominion are cripples and therefore unable to earn a living. A number of the crippled have formed themselves into organizations and memorialized the minister and communicated with hon. members. I think this is a field which has been neglected. I do not want to go into individual cases, but instances have come to the attention of all of us of the breadwinner, sustaining injury under such circumstances that there is no right of recovery under the provincial workmen's compensation act, and certainly no right of recovery under common law. There is no provision for persons in that category. I shall not discuss in detail the project which has been placed before hon. members in this regard, except to say that the requests made seem to be reasonable. In more than nine other countries provision is made for persons in this category. One can never hope to give them the standard of living that they would have if they had the full use of their faculties, but at least something should be done.

I am not making any emotional appeal in this regard. Any one of us could do that, but something should be done to assist these people. I place before you, sir, the project in general, which is this: In addition to the question of hospitalization, which is being dealt with in the provinces, they suggest that crutches, splints and so forth be supplied to those who can move around, and wheel chairs to those where treatment has failed, in order to give them an opportunity to earn at least a partial living under our competitive system. They ask that classes be set up with specially trained teachers in trades or handicrafts. We are more proud of the training which the Department of Veterans Affairs has given to amputation cases from the armed forces, thus enabling them with dignity to take their part in the battle for life without any suggestion of charity, which so many resent.

I think that without any unnecessary expenditure in connection with setting up new facilities, new structures and the like, the plan followed by the Department of Veterans Affairs is one which might very well be extended to cripples in civilian life. To begin with, in my view some opportunity should be given to civilians to take advantage of the courses which to-day are being given to veterans.

Finally, we have recognized the principle that persons who are working under severe physical handicaps and are unable to earn a fair living are entitled to pension allowances. Pensions are paid to the aged, and there is the scheme of family allowances in respect of the young. Consideration should now be given by the department to the extension of pension privileges to those who, by reason of physical disablement are unable to carry on and to acquire financial resources. I would ask the minister to give the committee the benefit of his views in this connection, and an estimate as to the cost of such a project on the basis of statistics available to him, with pensions being paid at a rate similar to that paid to-day in respect of old age pensions.

As I indicated a minute ago, this is the kind of submission concerning which one must be restrained. It requires consideration of a state of affairs in every part of Canada which has led to the existence of conditions we should not permit. The suggestion I make is one which I am sure the people of Canada as a whole would support, in the belief that it is necessary to the well-being of this very considerable portion of our population.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to commend the minister and his department upon the efficient manner in which the family allowances scheme has been put into effect. Members of parliament usually find out whether or not these matters are functioning efficiently and smoothly. I represent a large working class constituency, one in which there are a great many children, and it gives me pleasure to say that I have received only one complaint from that constituency in connection with family allowances.

The committee must realize that the minister is heading a most important department, one which in the years ahead in my opinion will increase in importance and in the work it has to do. We are just beginning to appreciate in Canada the enormous scope of social work which only the federal and the provincial governments can carry out.

Perhaps one of the most satisfactory points the minister brought out was that in regard to the decentralization which has taken place in connection with the administration of his department. A few weeks ago I had the opportunity of reading the debates which took place in this house and in the other place in 1927 when the Old Age Pensions Act was finally passed. It is amusing to note the expressions of opinion given at that time, particularly in the other place, respecting the extreme dangers involved in passing a measure of the kind—the effect upon the morale of the people of Canada; the taking away from the family of the right, duty and obligation to look after such members of the family as were unable to look after themselves. The gentlemen in the other place appeared to be deeply concerned about the dangers implicit in that small excursion into social services. Whether we like it or not, the development of our social and economic system leaves no alternative between that of increasing our social services and leaving large masses of the community unprovided for.

The point made by the hon. member for Lake Centre was well taken. Not only should we provide for persons who have reached the age at which they are eligible for old age pension; we should look after those who, for no reason whatsoever within their control, are unable to earn an income which would permit them to provide their own living. There is no reason why the man or the woman who has reached the age of sixty-nine, sixty-eight or sixty-five, whatever it may be, should have to depend upon charity, if he or she is not able to earn an income, while the person who has reached the age of seventy, as the act now applies, may receive at least a small income which prevents the seeking of charity. Whether we like it or not we shall have to make provision for everyone in the country who is not able, or who for some other reason is prevented, from earning a livelihood. To-day this should present no difficulty, because our increased production and our ability to produce wealth in the past few years has so largely increased that we can provide almost an unlimited income.

I am pleased again to commend the minister and his department for the excellent work they have done, particularly in connection with family allowances. I hope we may soon go on to the point at which the department will be in a position to erase from every household in Canada care and worry arising from poverty or inability of the breadwinner to earn an income.

Mr. GLADSTONE: I should like to support the remarks of the hon. member for Lake Centre with regard to persons in unfortunate circumstances who, because of trouble or disaster of one kind or another, are unable to do any work. Reports have come to me from lady investigators of the provincial governments respecting many cases which do not fall within that group to which relief measures could be applied. They tell me that these cases are really the most serious they run into in their investigations. There are some who have been bedridden for years and are a heavy charge upon their families. Some means should be found of giving some consideration to these people.

I should like to ask the minister if in connection with his relations with the provincial governments he can undertake some investigation of silicosis. This disease is altogether too prevalent in industries such as moulding shops and rubber factories, and many of the workers end up in a sanatorium. I have no doubt that some investigation has been made, but it should be followed up to see whether some means cannot be worked out of preventing this disease. I commend this as a matter to be investigated by the minister in cooperation with the provincial governments.

Mrs. STRUM: Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the minister upon a number of things; first, upon his social vision. There was a time when I feared that the family allowances scheme would have to wait until our own group took office, but I was delighted to see the administration introduce it. I like the method very much; I like the efficiency and the principle upon which the whole thing is operated. I am glad that there are two alternatives open to these families; they can accept the family allowance and return it through income tax if it raises their income beyond a certain limit, or if their income is below that level they can take it without having to give anything back.

The principle of family allowances is sound. The idea of investing in youth is an excellent one, not only from the moral and idealistic point of view, but also from the point of view of actual investment. If we could extend the same principles and vision to the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act we would accomplish a great deal.

The old age pension group is the most pitiful section of our population. I have received many letters from these people, and I know many of them personally. I know old men who during the last two or three years have almost brought on physical break-downs in their efforts to earn a few dollars to supplement the most inadequate payments on which they are expected to get through the winter. Having made a few dollars in the harvest field, perhaps stooking or attempting in some other way to help bring in the harvest when it was so essential to the war effort, this is the sort of thing they get in their mail boxes:

Dear Sir or Madam:

As a result of improved crop conditions throughout the province, and the consequent improvement in the income of many pensioners, we are reminding you of the necessity of reporting all income received by you in excess of fifty dollars.

We would like to point out that it is in your own interest to advise us of the receipt of income at the time it is received, and have the pension adjusted immediately, rather than to have us ascertain at a later date that you had excessive income—

These people with an excessive income of $25 per month!

—which would make it necessary for us to suspend your pension to recover an overpayment at a time when you could ill afford to have your pension suspended.

I have known of old men who earned a few dollars with which they bought victory bonds only to find their pensions reduced, or withheld in full for a short time. This is a shameful condition. If some of these people have the energy and ambition to try to add to the inadequate sums they receive in order to get themselves a little comfort, perhaps a little coal for the winter; in order to pay the rent themselves or to be self-sustaining and regain a little self-respect, it is shameful that we should penalize them like this.

There are few of us who have not some physical ailment as we get older; people rarely reach old age without having illness. There are certain conditions that require treatment. The only province so far that has undertaken to provide for the needs of old age pensioners is the province from which I come, Saskatchewan. I hold in my hand a copy of a blue card which every pensioner received on January 1, last year. This card allows the old age pensioner who is ill to have a doctor, or it admits him to hospital; it supplies him with drugs or appliances like glasses or anything else that he may need. We thought that this was the proper way to provide aid for our pensioners, although we had already added to their pensions to the extent of $3 per month. The pensioners in Saskatchewan all have the advantages of this card, and in addition they have an extra $3 per month, bringing their pensions up to $28 per month.

Mr. GREEN: Some of the other provinces pay an additional $5 per month.

Mrs. STRUM: We felt that this would be better for these people than to add a few dollars to their pension cheques.

Mr. GREEN: And they provide medical benefits too.

Mr. MacNICOL: I would advise the hon. member that we have provided medical attention in Ontario for some years.

Mrs. STRUM: Does that cover drugs, appliances, surgery and hospitalization?

Mr. MacNICOL: It covers medical attention.

Mrs. STRUM: Just medical?

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not know what that covers.

Mrs. STRUM: We provide surgery, drugs, medicine, appliances, and everything the old age pensioner may need without limit. This came into effect on January 1 last year. By the way, we also provide for our widows and dependents. They receive a similar card, except that it is white, which covers the widow and her children.

In addition to providing sufficient income for old age pensioners, I think the time has come when we should do something about the housing of these people. I realize that this subject would more likely come up under housing, but we should recognize that Canada as it stands to-day is the result of the energy, ambition and initiative of these people; that what we have to-day we owe to the men and women who are now in that particular period of their lives. It is only just and natural that we should recognize the great gift that they have given to us. If we intend to put purchasing power in the hands of as many people as possible we cannot afford to keep this section of our population on such a low spending level.

There are other persons who are not covered as yet. I was delighted when the minister submitted the proposal which is now under the consideration of the dominion-provincial conference. This is a tribute to the vision of the minister in charge of this department. I am glad that he has departmentalized the assistance that he is asking the provinces to cooperate in providing. The planning and organization grant is an excellent thing. I am glad that he has included general public health, tuberculosis, mental health, venereal diseases, crippled children and all others. In our province we shall immediately be able to take advantage of that tuberculosis grant, and the mental health grant, because we have already made mental health treatment free to our people; and the venereal disease grant, which we have made free, and penicillin, which we supply free to our doctors. But I wish the minister would include cancer, because cancer ranks as a killer away up at the top, second only to heart trouble. We have made the care of cancer completely free to our people, including hospitalization, surgery and all other things such as deep ray and radium that are used in its treatment. I hope that the minister will include cancer in a separate category along with these other valuable things that he has set out.

But in addition to the people who are covered here, there is one group that we have not yet made provision for, and that is the blind who fall between the ages of sixteen and forty. I understand that the blind pension starts at forty, and the family allowance is cut off at sixteen; so there is a period in the life of a blind person between sixteen and forty years of age when he or she must depend on the care of relatives or go on municipal or provincial relief. Many of them perhaps could be assisted in learning a trade to support themselves. I do not think we should leave it to chance; we should start the pension for the blind where the family allowance leaves off.

Then there are the arthritics. Mention has been made of crippling diseases, but the rapidly increasing rate at which arthritis is spreading demands I think that we give it special attention. It is something that we do not know a lot about. There are a great many theories and a great many suggested treatments, but the painful and extended nature of this disease demands I think special attention. In moving about the country I have been alarmed to notice the number of people you meet who have been in wheel chairs for years and who have suffered incredible pain and are a terrific burden to their family.

I do not think that there is much more that I need to say except this. I wish the minister could see fit to extend to the old age pensioners the same conditions and the same type of administration that is now set up for the family allowance. I wish we could abolish the means test now; I wish we could increase the pension now. We are proud that the level of our family allowance compares so favourably with that paid in other countries. We who have such a rich country, such a big country, such tremendous potentials for production, should be satisfied only when our country leads, not when we approach or favourably compare with other countries. We who have so much should be satisfied only when there is abundance in every home and security for every Canadian regardless of age or condition.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the statement made by the minister of the new Department of National Health and Welfare. Although it did not contain many details which some of us would like to have, I presume he will give these in breaking down the various items for which supply will be voted later on. I understood him to say that sixty per cent of the cost of health insurance would be borne by the federal government, and if so I consider it a very fair proportion.

I did not hear what amount of money would be available for the construction of new hospitals generally throughout the country, and would ask the minister to tell us the amount which will be appropriated for that purpose. Owing to high taxation, excess profits taxes, corporation taxes and succession duties, the money which formerly was available from private sources for hospital construction has to a large extent dried up, and therefore it is up to the federal government to make a considerable contribution for this purpose. The federal government has taken this money from the people so that they are no longer able to make the contributions they formerly did during their lifetime, and they have ceased to make provision in their wills for the construction of hospitals. They think, and quite rightly, that succession duties will take a much larger amount out of their estate and there may be nothing left with which they might otherwise have contributed to such benevolent purposes as the building of hospitals. So I think there is every reason to expect the government to make a very considerable contribution to hospital construction and maintenance. It might very well be done on a percentage basis, with the government paying one-fifth, say, or one-tenth or some other proportion of the amount raised by public subscription or contributed by municipal and provincial governments. I would ask the minister to take this suggestion into consideration and to give us a decision later.

The minister also spoke of national laboratories. I am glad to know that something is being done in that regard in a very large way when I hope proper provision will be made not only for equipment but for the salaries of research workers. I suggest that a very large sum of money be set aside for research. It is a well known fact that research in medicine in Canada has been starved, and that we spend only a very small proportion per capita of the amount that is spent by other countries on research. It is hoped that Canada will take its place among the nations in providing sufficient money to promote research in a much larger way than hitherto. We have had evidence in this house in past sessions of the need for research when one of our members urged that a certain remedy which was found efficacious in a city in the west should be assisted by a federal government money grant. Ultimately I believe some steps were taken in that direction; but if we had had our laboratory here properly equipped and staffed, it would have been very easy to have this claim of a cure for cancer investigated and the results made known. It is the duty of this government to provide a considerable sum of money for research in cancer, as well as in many other diseases for which cures have not as yet been discovered.

I was glad to hear the minister speak of venereal disease control, and wish to commend the department on the splendid work done by Colonel Williams under the former minister. He instituted control throughout Canada, and stimulated the various provinces into similar activity, so we may hope for considerable improvement in the control of this devastating disease.

I should like to speak of another class of cases for whom assistance should be provided in a very large way, that is, the cases to which the hon. member for Lake Centre referred a moment ago, which would include incurable cases of cancer, paralysis and many other diseases. The accommodation for these people is inadequate throughout Canada. In the city of Toronto we have a home which was formerly called the Hospital for Incurables, but the name of which has been changed to the Queen Elizabeth hospital, which was built almost entirely by donations from private individuals. Recently it has extended its accommodation, but still there is a long waiting list of people who never can be accommodated there. I believe the provincial government is doing something in different parts of the province in regard to the hospitalization of chronic cases, and I suggest to the minister that the federal government make a very considerable grant toward the erection of hospitals throughout the country for these incurable cases.

I do not intend to go into all the other matters mentioned by the minister, because I presume we will have an opportunity of discussing them as we go through the estimates item by item. I should like to say just a word on something the minister mentioned, namely, that health insurance has been referred to the provinces. For two sessions I sat as a member of the social security committee considering the question of health insurance. If I may say so, we did a great deal of hard work and received a great deal of information from interested bodies throughout Canada. Our committee received some 116 presentations, and after very careful consideration a draft bill was drawn up called an act respecting health insurance, public health, the conservation of health and the prevention of disease. Of course this legislation could not be put through parliament at that time because it contained a money provision requiring contributions from the provinces; and until the dominion-provincial conference was held and a decision reached as to the amount to be contributed by the federal and provincial governments respectively one can understand that this measure could not be finally dealt with. However, from what the minister said I take it that this bill now is to be superseded by some other arrangement. I should like the minister to clarify this subject, because I had hoped that this bill might still be incorporated in any arrangement made with the provinces. We drafted a model bill which the provinces might use for the purpose of enabling us to have some uniformity in health legislation throughout Canada. If that is not done we will have nine different kinds of health insurance in this country, and I should be very sorry to see that happen because I think it would materially affect the efficiency of any health act. We devised an act which is comprehensive, providing medical, surgical, obstetrical, dental, pharmaceutical, hospital and nursing benefits, and which I believe is an improvement over any health act in operation in any country. Certainly it is an improvement on the act in operation in Great Britain, because they provide only general practitioner services whereas in the act proposed here we provide specialist services, and many other benefits not included in the British Act.

Let me repeat that in my opinion it is highly desirable that there should be one national health-insurance act for Canada which should operate in all provinces. Special provisions may be made to meet local conditions in any province; and it should be possible to do this under the terms of this national act. If the provinces desire to make any changes in the act of course that is their prerogative, but I would dislike to see nine different health acts in Canada. I believe it would make for confusion, inefficiency and additional expense. I understand that already certain proposals made to the provinces in regard to this matter have not met with the approval of all. For instance, a diagnostic service is proposed by Manitoba and preferred by them to the visiting nursing survice. Alberta does not like the nursing service either, and I understand that British Columbia has made counter proposals. So it would appear that there is not likely to be unanimity as far as health insurance legislation is concerned if the provinces individually are allowed to provide whatever health services they wish, and receive grants from the federal government.

I should like to say further, because there is some little conflict of opinion in regard to it, that health insurance is most applicable to low wage earners and persons in the middle income group, and should not be all-inclusive of the higher income groups. If it applied to everyone in the state it would be an invitation to state medicine, which I believe to be entirely undesirable and unacceptable in Canada. You may ask what is meant by state medicine? It has been clearly defined as a medical system by which doctors are hired, paid and controlled by the state, there being no free choice of doctor by patient. And the doctor-patient relationship is fundamentally important in the treatment of disease. Health insurance, on the other hand, is a plan which permits the establishment of a fund contributed by the employee and the state, on some agreed basis, out of which fund the doctor of the patient's choice is paid for services rendered. It will be seen therefore that there is a vast difference between state medicine and health insurance.

I may say that the medical profession in Canada do not approve of state medicine and would not operate under it; whereas I believe we have every indication from the Canadian Medical Association and other bodies that they are willing to operate under a system of health insurance. I should like to leave further discussion of this question until the various items are before us. I come now to another matter.

Owing to the acute controversy which has arisen as a result of certain opinions expressed in public addresses in the United States and Canada by the deputy minister of health and welfare, I feel in duty bound, as a medical man, to make some observations. On a previous occasion I did not hesitate to defend Doctor Chisholm in this house when he was under attack, but regeret that I cannot conscientiously do so to-day in spite of the support he has received from seven or eight eminent psychologists in messages conveyed to the Prime Minister; for even psychologists may make mistakes.

Doctor Chisholm is a psychiatrist and a thoroughly trained psychiatrist at that. After graduation from the faculty of medicine in the university of Toronto he engaged in general practice for a few years. He then spent several years specializing in neurology and completed his training in psychiatry at the institute of human relations at Yale university. His psychiatric skill has thus been built on an unusual basis of general medicine and special studies in neurology. When he speaks in this particular field his opinion should be heard with the respect due to his studies. It is also possible that the deputy minister has been unduly irritated by certain criticisms directed at the medical services of the armed forces by members of the clergy, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, especially their concern over the methods of prophylaxis employed against the spread of venereal disease.

In that matter there are both medical and moral aspects. The clergy and many others have properly stressed the moral aspects. Doctor Chisholm may have been almost exclusively concerned with the medical aspects. Even though the Christian position in regard to marriage and self-control is the normative ideal, we have been living in an abnormal world, and Doctor Chisholm had to deal with that situation. Nevertheless, in my opinion, this does not justify the addresses which he made and which have shocked the Christian conscience of the country, since they seem to suggest that there are no standards of right and wrong at all, that there is no such thing as the "natural law," and that there is no creative force in the universe that wills good and abhors evil.

He seems to propose the eradication of prohibitions of all definite moral standards. To him at least, so it would seem, all the moral judgments of society are purely relative and based on no eternal and immutable principles such as the natural law presupposes. While not denying Doctor Chisholm the right to hold any views he wishes as a private citizen, views expressed in public addresses gain in importance and influence by virtue of the high government position which he holds. As I said a moment ago, the expressed opinions of the deputy minister have shocked the public conscience of the Canadian people. For while morals go far beyond the civil law, civil law itself has its sanction only as it aims to prevent evil and to promote the good life.

If we regard morals and the laws of God as only the folly of ecclesiastics, may we not be cutting away the ultimate authority of all legislative bodies that pass criminal legislation? Such theories, in my judgment, attack the fundamental basis of law itself. They attack the very basis on which this house legislates in regard to a vast number of subjects. But they do more, for we are a British people and the British seek to be a Christian people. Since Christianity was brought to the shores of Britain and accepted by her kings and rulers we have never enthroned merely the goddess of reason in Westminster Abbey or St. Paul's cathedral. Though there may remain many un-Christian elements in our society, from the beginnings of our recorded history we have held high both the law of God and the law of man. We British are extremely tolerant, and while we are more concerned with how private people behave than with what they think, we are fundamentally a Christian people. Our king at his coronation in 1937 took the oath, as did his predecessors, to preserve the sanctities and liberties of the church, and sought the blessing of Almighty God on his reign.

In one of the songs extolling Canada, sung by a great many Canadians and heard nightly over some of our broadcasting systems, we express our loyalty to both throne and altar, although certain Canadians do not seem particularly to care for the reference to the throne while other Canadians are annoyed at the references to the altar. A minister of the crown or even his deputy will not, however, cast aspersions on either throne or altar with impunity.

These are my public judgments, but privately, and even as a member of the medical profession, I take the same position. As a believer in God I believe in the moral law and accept the Christian revelation. It is increasingly clear to all social students to-day that the whole of civilization stands on the brink of an abyss. Scientists do not hesitate to express their fears that our world may even be wiped out. Scientists who in the past have seemed most neutral are becoming the champions of the moral law. On every hand voices are heard demanding a return to spiritual values, even though the traditional values may need to have some of their dross and barnacles removed. But in my judgment this is no time in the history of the world to do or to say anything that challenges the moral foundations of life.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): We should all be for Santa Claus in this department.

Mr. CROLL: Mr. Chairman, I too have sat here and listened to the commendation of the minister by various members of the house, and I can assure you that it is gratifying indeed to feel that there are other members who think as I do, that the minister has not only vision but imagination. The administrative job that was done on the family allowances is not only appreciated by the committee, but is a model for the rest of the country. What I particularly like about it is the fact that we are able to point out this particular job to business which always claims the government is inefficient and cannot be run on the same level of efficiency and with the same ability as business. I am sure the minister will share the credit for it with the members of his department.

While we are talking about the deputy minister of health, Brock Chisholm, may I say that I too read his speeches. I thought they were good, I thought they were imaginative, and they were thought-provoking. There is one other thing about them; they must have kept the audiences awake. I think it is invigorating to know that in our departments there are men of vision, men who are not afraid to face up to the truth, who are not fearful of new frontiers or afraid to reach for new horizons. We do not all have to agree with what he said, but he does stimulate and alert our thinking, and that is to the good. In spite of all the hubbub I hope that the minister stands steady. I compliment him at this particular time for maintaining the position which he has maintained to-day. This much I do want to say: if resolution No. 9 on the order paper, which deals with our indemnities, passes the senate, even Brock Chisholm will not convince me that there is not a Santa Claus.

My original reason for rising was to talk about the Connaught laboratories in the city of Toronto. I wish to pay a tribute to three institutions which have had to do with what I have to say, namely, the university of Toronto, the Canadian Red Cross, and the National Research Council. In addition to that I wish to pay tribute to Professor C. H. Best, of the university of Toronto. The best way I can pay tribute to him and the institution is by relating the facts. In September, 1939, at the Connaught laboratories in the university of Toronto, a project for the preparation of dried blood serum, used to treat conditions of secondary shock or burns, was commenced. Most hon. members know that from ten to fifteen per cent of the wounded require some form of transfusion. It may be interesting to note that from June 6 to September the British army used 28,709 pints of dried plasma.

To begin with, the problems were many. First, preliminary studies were made as to the chemical and clinical aspects of plasma. Then it had to be dried so as to make sure that there was no change in the physical or chemical properties of the material. Then there was the further problem of storing the material without its losing its value. As the value of the work was appreciated, naturally the work increased. There was the need of accommodation and funds. Then the federal government took a hand and entered into an agreement with the Connaught laboratories and the Canadian Red Cross on January 1, 1941, whereby the federal government paid for the operation and maintenance costs, the laboratories paid for the management, administration and necessary overhead, and the Red Cross provided the supplies of normal human blood.

It is interesting to note that when Professor Best first started he obtained what blood he could from his own staff, the staff of the school of hygiene and the students of the university of Toronto. His staff consisted of three people, and his accommodation was one laboratory bench, one table, and one bed. As the work increased, the Toronto blood donor clinic was opened by the Red Cross; and as hon. members know some 662 clinics were later opened across this country. I think it is well to record here the names of the men and women who originally helped Professor Best, because they are names to remember. They were: Doctor D. Y. Solandt, Doctor Jessie Ridout, Doctor R. R. Haist, Doctor L. Chute, Doctor E. Fidler and Mr. Campbell Cowan. They did the preliminary and pioneer work, and the process used in preparation of dried serum even now is a direct result, modified in the light of experience, of their work.

Thus, directly or indirectly, serum prepared at the university of Toronto from blood collected from volunteer donors has been used by our troops of the three services from Alaska to the Mediterranean. There never was a shortage. They worked seven days a week and twenty-four hours a day; but it was the Red Cross which really drew the blood. In 1944 they had 868,000 donations in 662 clinics. The staff was almost entirely voluntary; it consisted of physicians, nurses, housewives, and people right across Canada. In addition to that, the Red Cross established laboratories in Halifax, Fredericton, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton and Vancouver for the preliminary preparation of serum in cooperation with the universities in those places. Then the laboratories forwarded the partly processed serum to Toronto for the completion of the process of drying.

The university of Toronto shipped over 400,000 bottles of dried blood to the Canadian and allied forces; the Red Cross collected altogether over two and a half million donations, and the Canadian government spent one and a half million dollars. Now I get down to the real crux of the situation. The Connaught laboratories spent $90,000 for direction and overhead, and $54,000 for alteration of the building, a total of $144,000. At the present time the Canadian government has in the Connaught laboratories $100,000 in equipment and $42,000 in unexpended supplies, a total of $142,000. The committee has the two figures. The Connaught laboratories spent $144,000, and the Canadian government has equipment and supplies there to the amount of $142,000. I am not pressing the Connaught laboratories' claim for that extra $2,000, but

I am asking the minister and through him the government that the equipment and the unexpended supplies be left with the Connaught laboratories so that they may be able to carry on the work there. From the indications that the committee have given I do not think there is any need for me to speak any further on the subject at this time.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INCREASE OF CAPITAL—CREATION OF CORPORATION TO OPERATE SERVICES UNDER CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to bill No. 21, to amend the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act, 1937.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think no one could take objection to these amendments. They give an opportunity at this time, however, to direct to the attention of the minister the very great reduction in ocean transport rates instituted during the past two weeks by Pan-American Airways. In my opinion Pan-American has struck a body blow at competition from other airways across the Atlantic by setting as a basic rate $275 one way, or a return fare of $495, an amount which is only slightly higher, if indeed at all higher, than steamship rates.

I should like to ascertain from the minister if he is in a position to advise the house and the country of the attitude Trans-Canada Air Lines overseas units will take in reference to this matter, and whether or not it will be possible to meet this competition, which has been so seriously considered by the director-general of British civil aviation in Great Britain, as well as by those connected with civil aviation in other countries.

All hon. members wish to see Trans-Canada Air Lines give the best possible overseas service, governed always of course by the economy of operation costs and passenger charges. This action on the part of Pan-American seems to go contrary to the principles agreed upon at the international conference which met at Chicago. It is a step in the direction of cut-throat competition if permitted to persist can lead only to great and serious international difficulties.

[Mr. Croll.]

Will the minister give an outline of the situation, with which he more than anyone else is conversant?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the agreement arrived at in Chicago are that rates would be fixed by an international air transport association formed under Picao, the provisional organization, such rates fixed by the air transport council to be subject to review by Picao.

The machinery was proceeding in accordance with that agreement. The meeting of the internationl air transport association was being held in Montreal. The committee studying the Atlantic rates happened to be under the chairmanship of the vice-president of Pan-American Air Lines; nevertheless in the middle of the session, Pan-American Air Lines published from New York a rate of $275, one-way fare across the Atlantic. Of course this caused serious repercussions at the meeting then in progress. The United States government postponed the application of the rate for one month, but it was put into effect a week or two ago. The government of the United Kingdom have refused to give landing rights to Pan-American unless they will comply with the rate that will be approved by Picao—except for the provisions of an old agreement made in 1935 which permits two landings each week. Those two landings can be made under that agreement at any rate Pan-American cares to charge. But the United Kingdom have declined to authorize additional landings.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The agreement was in 1937.

Mr. HOWE: It was 1937, was it? The question of rates is now being studied by constituted authorities. Whether a rate of $275 one way is too low is a question that can be debated. The manner in which it was put into effect, and the manner in which constituted authority was disregarded are, I think, the more serious points.

Trans-Canada Air Lines is charging rates that were established at the time our service was started, and will continue to do so until a new rate is authorized by the international air transport organization. Meantime our passengers are rather dissatisfied, knowing that they could travel much more cheaply by Pan-American.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What is our rate?

Mr. HOWE: There is some exchange problem involved, and I am not just sure as to the amount. I think it is about $560 one way. I believe this matter is bound to resolve itself shortly, but that is the position at the present time.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) I have been wondering if in the very near future we shall not be told that the rates from Seattle and San Francisco to Skagway and Fairbanks have been materially reduced. If so, this undoubtedly would have a material affect upon the proposal discussed by the minister when the bill was before the house in connection with having Trans-Canada Air Lines carry on from Whitehorse to Fairbanks. Is there any rumour of a possible reduction on the Pacific coast similar to that on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. HOWE: There has been a general reduction in passenger rates in the United States. At the present time travellers can travel more cheaply from New York to San Francisco and from New York to Seattle over American lines than they can travel from New York to Vancouver over Canadian lines. The difference is not great, but there is a differential which must in time be resolved. At the present time we feel there is over-enthusiasm for establishing the new rates, and the policy of Canadian lines is to proceed slowly until the matter clarifies.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—DISCOUNTING FACILITIES—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to bill No. 23, to incorporate the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendments are as follows:

First, a new subsection 2 has been added to section 32 of the bill dealing with the appointment of auditors. The new subsection is based on subsection 1 of section 55 of the Bank Act and sets out the professional qualifications of persons who may be appointed auditors. This amendment is desirable and really covers an oversight in the original draft. The new subsection reads as follows:

(2) No person shall be eligible to be an auditor unless he resides in Canada, is an accountant who has for at least six years preceding the date of his appointment practised his profession in Canada, and is a member in good standing of an institute or association of accountants incorporated under the authority of the legislature of any province of Canada.

The second amendment is that a new subsection 3 has been added to section 34 requiring the board to prepare a report "with regard to the administration of the affairs of the corporation", and this report has to be submitted to parliament. The new subsection reads as follows:

(3) As soon as practicable after the end of each calendar year, the board shall prepare a report with regard to the administration of the affairs of the corporation during the preceding calendar year, and the report shall be laid before parliament at the same time as the copy of the accounts and report mentioned in the preceding subsection.

The general principle of the amendment is, I think, free from objection.

The third amendment suggested is an amendment to section 43 of the bill, to provide that section 42, the section dealing with the repeal of the Central Mortgage Bank Act and the transfer of its assets to the new corporation, will go into effect only when part II of the act is proclaimed. That amendment also is free from objection; indeed it is desirable.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY

BILL TO CONFER CERTAIN POWERS UPON THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

On the order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Justice for the second reading of Bill No. 15, an act to confer certain powers upon the governor in council during the national emergency following the war.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the Prime Minister going to explain what the government desires to do?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understood that it was the desire of my hon. friend not to go on this afternoon with bill No. 15.

Mr. STIRLING: That is so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was expecting him to ask that the order be allowed to stand; that is what I was waiting for.

Mr. STIRLING: I should like to ask for the postponement of the debate on the second reading, because I happen to know that there are three of my colleagues who intended to speak. In conversations which I have had I understand that the government is going to propose some considerable amendments to bill No. 15. It seems to me that it would be desirable to have the reprinted bill in the hands of hon. members before proceeding with the debate on the second reading. In addition, the leader of the opposition is fulfilling an engagement outside of Ottawa to-day; he will be back to-morrow, and I think this is a matter on which it would be reasonable to consult him as to his views.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend's request is wholly reasonable; I was expecting it, and was prepared to say that the government would accede to it. My hon. friend has referred to certain important amendments which have been considered and which the minister will be prepared to propose when the bill comes before the house in committee. During the sittings of the coordination committee of the dominion-provincial conference some of the provisions of the bill were under discussion. There were certain objections by some of the premiers to powers that were being requested under the bill. The government undertook to consider the objections that were raised. That has been done, and important amendments have been drafted which we believe and expect will help to meet the objections that have been raised, and incidentally help to meet objections that otherwise might have been raised by hon. gentlemen opposite.

I have in my hand a copy of the bill as reprinted, indicating the proposed amendments. It is the intention of the government to have this distributed at once so that hon. members will have it in their hands to-day. It is not my desire to limit the debate in any way, but there has been an expression from the leaders opposite that this is one measure that it was desirable to get on with as rapidly as possible. After hon. members have had an opportunity of looking at the proposed amendments they may feel that it would be desirable for the house to get into committee as soon thereafter as possible, if there is no exception, and I understand there is not likely to be, taken to the principle of the bill, which is to give the governor in council certain powers required to meet the emergent situation in the transitional period following the war. I make that suggestion in the light of the desire of hon. members to proceed as rapidly as possible with this measure.

Order stands.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF LOANS AND VALUE OF SECURITIES HELD UNDER SECTION 22

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to provide by amendment to the Export Credits Insurance Act that the aggregate amount of loans made and outstanding at any time and the value of securities purchased or acquired and held at any one time under section twenty-two of the said Act shall be increased from $100,000,000 to $750,000,000.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair perhaps an explanation would be desirable and then if any questions arise out of the explanation they can be dealt with in committee.

The house will recall that the Export Credits Insurance Act was passed at the session of 1944. There were two parts to that act. Part I established a corporation to engage in the insurance of commercial export credits. This corporation is responsible to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Part II permitted the governor in council to authorize the Minister of Finance to enter into agreements with foreign governments or their agencies to provide them with credits, or to guarantee credits provided to them by others in Canada "for the purpose of facilitating and developing trade between Canada and any other country."

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to increase the amount which the government may lend to other governments or their agencies under part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act from $100,000,000 to $750,000,000. No alteration is proposed in the amount of the guarantees which the government may give, that is, $200,000,000, or in the amount of business which the insurance corporation is authorized to do.

The government has decided not to introduce amendments to part I of the act at this session, because to do so would unduly crowd the legislative programme. Amendments to part I will be proposed at the next session. Perhaps there will be other amendments to part II, but the main amendments to be proposed at the next session I expect will be to part I. These will include the amendments which were made by order in council last summer prior to the assembling of parliament, when it was necessary to make certain detailed amendments in order to permit the business of export insurance to begin on the most effective basis. The order in council relating to this matter was tabled some months ago. Possibly there will be an opportunity when discussing these amendments for questions in this regard to be answered, but that is a matter for my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon).

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to give the government sufficient authority to make loans to allied governments in the next year or two to enable them to purchase supplies from Canada required by them during the period of reconstruction to repair the damage caused to their countries during the war and reestablish their export trade and normal financial machinery. It is not the purpose of this amendment to provide funds for making loans to the United Kingdom or the sterling area generally. Discussions are proceeding at the present time in Washington regarding credits or a credit from the United States to the United Kingdom, and we expect that Canada will a little later be providing a large credit for the United Kingdom. We hope and expect that as a result of this credit to the United Kingdom she will not need to follow a programme of such rigid austerity as she is following at this moment and will be able to continue to take from Canada in the next year or two most of the products which our economy has been organized to supply to her in the past.

Mr. STIRLING: That will be quite apart from this resolution?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. We have not as yet discussed the matter with the United Kingdom and do not expect to do so until they have concluded discussions with the United States. We expect to come back to parliament next session for additional legislative authority to make large credits available to the United Kingdom in one form or another. I therefore do not propose to enter at this time into a discussion of the terms and conditions of credits to the United Kingdom or on the general United Kingdom and sterling area financial and trade situation.

The funds which are to be provided under the legislation which will follow this resolution are to enable us to make loans to allied countries other than the United Kingdom. More specifically, and in accordance with the details which I shall supply, we would propose to use the bulk of this money for loans to our allies in western Europe, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China and the Netherlands East Indies. The government has already told the government of France that if parliament grants the necessary authority we will lend France Canadian dollars to a total of $242,500,000 to make purchases in Canada this year and next year. We have also given similar undertakings to lend the Netherlands $60,000,000 in addition to the $25,000,000 we have already lent that government; to lend Norway $17,000,000 in addition to the $13,000,000 we have already made available to the Norwegian government; and to lend the Bank for the Netherlands Indies, as agent for the government of the Netherlands Indies, a further $50,000,000 in addition to the $15,000,000 already made available.

In the case of Belgium we have agreed to increase the $25,000,000 we have made available to her government by an amount still to be determined after further consideration of her requirements in Canada and the means of financing them. The amount and terms of a loan to the government of China are at present under discussion with representatives of that government, but we have indicated our willingness to lend an amount to China to enable her to finance part of her post-war requirements in Canada. We are also negotiating with the U.S.S.R., which is interested in obtaining loans from Canada to purchase some supplies originally requested as Mutual Aid, the production of which has been under way, as well as credits to buy other exports for which will be placed with the U.S.S.R. after agreements upon the credits. As yet no amount for a credit to U.S.S.R., apart from the small one of $3,000,000 already reported to the house, has been decided upon pending further discussion about terms, but I feel that in forecasting our requirements we should make liberal provision for the needs in Canada of the U.S.S.R.

In addition we have had inquiries from several other allied countries, and it may be that some countries in the sterling area, India, for example, may wish to get credits from us quite apart from any large credit provided to the United Kingdom. We have not yet reached the stage of negotiating with any other countries than those I have mentioned, but we feel that we should have a modest margin to meet new situations.

The basis, then, of the figure of $650,000,000 in addition to the present $100,000,000, is to provide the specific amounts which I have just mentioned—to France, the Netherlands, the Netherlands Indies and Norway—to enable us to conclude negotiations and provide reasonable amounts to Belgium, China and the U.S.S.R., and to leave us some margin for other requirements which may develop in the future.

The house may wish to know something about the major policies being followed in determining these loans. In the first place we are recognizing Canada's interest in the economic reconstruction of the allied countries. Canada has an immediate interest in reviving and developing our export trade during the reconstruction period, and the orders that have been placed by these countries have already been of great value. The credits have enabled our European allies particularly to place large orders with us not only for food and materials but for manufactures, railway equipment, ships and so on.

Then we have a longer term interest in developing export trade, apart from the immediate or short-term interest. We hope that the furnishing of these credits will lead to a better export trade and a better import trade also in the future. This will be the case if our allies can undertake the tasks of reconstruction soon and carry them on effectively and if they can reestablish their own trade. If this is the case we can look forward to a far better trade with them and with others who sell to them.

We have a security interest as well. If Europe and Asia are economically healthy, wars are less likely to break out. Canada of course cannot tip the scales in this matter but is prepared to recognize that it can help. In the second place we are prepared to accept the risks of lending for reconstruction purposes within reasonable limits and where we recognize that Canada's interests are involved. There are risks now in making loans to almost any country, substantial risks in many cases. The future of international economic affairs is still very uncertain, and at this time I need hardly point out that there are still political issues to be settled in many parts of the world. But if Canadian interests are to be recognized and acted upon we must take these risks. We cannot reasonably expect private investors and private enterprise to resume these major international risks at present. Therefore the government is doing so.

In the third place we are not charging allied governments a premium to cover the risks we are assuming during the period of reconstruction. We accept these within the limit of our Canadian interest as part of the cost of promoting Canada's interest in the reconstruction of allied countries. Consequently we lend on interest rates based upon the cost to the Canadian government of borrowing for a period equal to the average duration of the credit we are providing. That is, we take the yield on our bonds of maturity equal to this average period and add to it a small margin, a fraction of one per cent, to cover costs of borrowing other than interest, then round off the rate to an even fraction. A little later I will give the rates we charge various countries, and it will be apparent that they are closely related to the periods of the credits.

In the fourth place we ask for repayment over a series of years, commencing as soon as the borrowing country feels it will be possible, and extending in some cases for periods running as long as thirty years. We hope that in this way repayment can be made over a period when the exports of the borrower will provide for exchange for this purpose.

In the fifth place we inquire about the nature and scale of the purchases to be made by the countries receiving the credits. These are examined to see how they fit in with the supply position in Canada, to ensure that our own essential requirements are not endangered, and that we do not provide more credit than can be effectively used. But we do not bind borrowers to a rigid schedule of purchases, as they do not know their needs in detail nor what is available in advance. On our side we do not guarantee supply nor even priorities. We do offer some assistance in purchasing, through the Department of Trade and Commerce.

In the sixth place we ask borrowing countries to purchase part of their requirements in Canada for cash, the actual fraction depending on the circumstances but normally being in the neighbourhood of one-fifth or one-sixth. In one case the allied country did not have the foreign exchange to enable it to pay us in cash, so in that case we waived the cash requirement. One reason for asking part payment in cash was that Canada must have some income of foreign exchange from her overseas exports in order to pay for her own essential imports and to maintain the interest, principal and dividend payments on what Canada herself owes to United States investors and others. Another reason is that most of these countries will be doing some cash purchasing, and we feel that Canada should get a share of it.

In the seventh place it has not been our policy to ask for any commercial or other concessions as a consideration or condition for these loans. We regard them as standing on their own feet, justified by the terms of interest and repayment together with the manner and extent to which they themselves promote Canada's trade interests in the short run and the long run. In one or two cases we have taken the opportunity of suggesting exchange of most favoured nation privileges in commercial matters, to help develop our future trade, and even of suggesting other improvements in commercial policy or arrangements, but these have only been incidents or by-products of our discussions and not conditions of granting the credits. I should add, however, that I would not wish to give the house the impression that we would not in any case attach conditions relating to commercial or exchange policy to the granting of credits, as there may well be cases where such conditions are of real importance to Canada, perhaps of more importance than the terms of the loan itself.

With regard to the regulations which govern these loans and the form of the agreements, I hardly think I would be justified in taking much of the time of the house at this stage in describing them or entering into an exposition of them. Questions on these matters may be asked when the bill is in committee, but already the main features of the agreements and the regulations have been dealt with in the brief report on the operations of the act during the last fiscal year, which was tabled earlier this session. There have been three regulations relating to part II of the act. These regulations were referred to in the report. The first simply provided that the Minister of Finance should recognize and be bound by an assignment to a bank of moneys payable under a guarantee agreement, where the agreement provided for such assignment. This is contrary to usual government practice, but is essential if the guarantee is to serve its real purpose. The second regulation defined more specifically than the act itself does what could be included in the cost of Canadian-produced goods, as that expression is used in the act. The third regulation specified that delivery or transportation charges beyond Canada could be included in such costs and therefore financed from the credits under the act if the Minister of Finance is satisfied that the cost of such charges cannot reasonably be met from other sources.

The form of our agreements is relatively simple. It is a commercial form rather than a treaty form. It normally provides for delivery of serial bonds after all the money has been advanced. A copy of the agreement with Czechoslovakia has already been tabled as an appendix to the report of operations during 1944-45. The form of later agreements can be discussed on the bill if desired. I may say, however, that in none of the later agreements have we included schedules of the goods to be purchased, and that in the case of the Czechoslovakian agreement we have already added other items to the list, as the agreement provided might be done.

I think I should say a little about each of the agreements or groups of agreements already made or in contemplation. They are all direct loans except in the case of the U.S.S.R. where guarantees were used. One agreement is with Czechoslovakia. That was the first agreement, signed on March 1, 1945. The amount was $15 million, later increased to $19 million on June 26, to cover transportation costs. It is to be utilized over a period of twelve months commencing with the first drawing upon the credit. As the first drawing upon the credit was on November 27, the twelve months run from that date. It is to be repaid in five equal annual amounts, one each at the end of the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth years from the first use of the credit—that is, on November 27, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953 and 1954. The interest rate is 2½ per cent. The amount of credit already used is $700,000.

Another agreement is with the Netherlands. It was signed on May 1, 1945. The amount is $25,000,000, to be increased subsequently to $85,000,000 if parliament provides the funds under this resolution. The $25,000,000 is to be utilized within two years and the additional $60,000,000 is to be utilized in a period up to five years.

Mr. MacNICOL: Including the two?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, including the two. These amounts are to be repaid in ten semi-annual instalments commencing five and a half years from the date of the agreement and ending ten years from the date of the agreement, that is, from 1950 to 1955. It is stipulated that the borrower may at any time repay at par, plus accrued interest. The interest rate is two and a quarter per cent. The amount of credit already utilized is $24,967,000, but we are extending interim credit to the Netherlands under power which we have under the War Appropriation Act, section 3, which enables the government of Canada to buy as agent of the Netherlands government, and in recent weeks, following the utilization of practically all the $25,000,000, the Canadian government has been incurring costs of these purchases temporarily under section 3, to be reimbursed later by the Netherlands when additional long-term credit is available.

Another agreement was made with Norway. The date of the agreement is June 25, 1945. The amount of credit is $13,000,000, to be increased subsequently to $30,000,000. It is to be utilized within two years.

Mr. FULTON: Is that increase out of the $650,000,000?

Mr. ILSLEY: The additional $17,000,000 must come out of the $650,000,000, and any agreement to make it available is conditional upon its being approved by parliament. It is to be utilized within two years, that is, by June 25, 1947. It is to be repaid in nine equal annual payments commencing six years from the date of the agreement, and ending fourteen years from the date of the agreement, that is, in the period from 1951 to 1959. The interest rate is two and three quarters per cent. The amount already utilized is $2,500,000.

Another agreement was made with the Netherlands Indies. This is an agreement to provide credit to the Bank for the Netherlands Indies, an agency of the government of the Netherlands Indies, whose obligations under the agreement are guaranteed by that government. The date of the agreement is October 9, 1945. The agreement was really entered into, although not in legal form, long before that date. The amount of credit is $15,000,000, to be increased subsequently to $65,000,000. The length of credit and the interest rate are the same as for the Netherlands. The amount already utilized is $600,000.

Another agreement is with Belgium. The date of the agreement is October 25, 1945. The amount of credit is $25,000,000, to be increased subsequently to an amount yet to be determined. It is to be utilized up to June 30, 1947. It is to be repaid in thirty equal annual instalments commencing June 30, 1947 and ending June 30, 1976. As in other cases, the borrower may repay before maturity. The interest rate is three per cent. The amount already utilized is $13,000,000. Belgium has already expended many millions in Canada which were received in exchange for Belgian francs for the use of Canadian soldiers in Belgium. Many millions more, the exact amount not yet determined, will be paid by Canada to Belgium for goods and services supplied to the Canadian army. Belgium's requirements of additional credit cannot be established until after the amount of this payment has been determined.

There has also been negotiated an agreement —or agreements—with the U.S.S.R. On the request of the government of the U.S.S.R., and under paragraph (a) of subsection 1 of section 22 of the act, the Minister of Finance entered into guarantee agreements with five manufacturers and one business acting as consulting engineers, to guarantee the obligations of V.O. machinoimport, an agency of the government of the U.S.S.R., under contracts to purchase hydro-electric equipment from these manufacturers and also to purchase engineering services in connection with the design and inspection of such equipment. The maximum amount of such guarantees totals $3,466,000. Most of the equipment has now been purchased and payments under the contracts made. The form of guarantee agreement was given in the report of operations for the year 1944-1945, already tabled.

[Mr Ilsley.]

On August 22, 1945, the Minister of Finance agreed to lend to the government of the U.S.S.R. amounts up to a total not exceeding $3,000,000 to enable it to pay the costs of hydro-electric equipment ordered from Canadian manufacturers and in connection with which guarantees, which I have mentioned, were given. This loan is to bear interest at two per cent and to be repaid at the end of five years, that is, on August 31, 1950. Up to date, $2,349,500 of this credit has been utilized.

The representatives of the U.S.S.R. have discussed with us on several occasions possible terms of large credits which the U.S.S.R. would like to obtain from Canada. We have offered to provide such credits on terms similar to those we have offered to other countries. The government of the U.S.S.R. has not been prepared to agree to such terms, however, except in the case of the small five-year credit of $3,000,000 for the purchase of hydro-electric equipment. Discussions on the matter are continuing from time to time and we hope and expect that in due course an agreement will be concluded, so that the opportunities afforded by this act will be fully utilized by the U.S.S.R. to obtain Canadian supplies and equipment for use in the huge task of reconstruction in that country.

With regard to France, no formal agreement has yet been made, since France preferred to wait until we could deal with the large amount of credit requested. We have, however, agreed on the amount and the terms. The amount is to be $242,500,000, this figure being based on a detailed programme of purchases and part payment for it in cash. The amount is to be paid in thirty equal annual instalments commencing in 1947 and ending in 1976. The interest rate is three per cent and, as in the case of the Netherlands, interim credits are being provided under section 3 of the War Appropriation Act, pending the completion of the export credit agreement.

With regard to China, we have had a number of discussions with representatives of the Chinese government, including a discussion with Doctor T. V. Soong, premier of China, but as yet we have reached no definite agreement on either the amount or the terms. The Chinese government have said that they wish to borrow from us to purchase equipment and supplies for reconstruction purposes, and we have indicated our willingness to make them loans. We have also expressed our interest in using the guarantee provisions of our act to facilitate credits provided by private Canadian businesses of one kind or another for specific industrial or transportation projects in China. We have discussed one particular project for the supply of ships for river transport and indicated our willingness to use our guarantee powers in this case if satisfactory arrangements can be worked out for this purpose.

In conclusion I should like to say that in making these large loans to allied nations, and using them to send Canadian supplies to those nations, the people of Canada, through the government, are taking a share in the process of reconstruction, as they have in war. We are doing something positive and constructive to rebuild allied countries, and in this way we are making it possible for our export trade to get reestablished and indeed to develop beyond pre-war levels and in new directions. But we must do much more if that trade is to continue to flourish. Our exporters must produce efficiently and sell at competitive prices. That is essential if we are to get the business in the sort of trading world which we in this country advocate and support. Finally we must expect to import more, much more than before the war, and more as time goes on. Only in this way can our export trade be maintained on a long term basis and our standard of living be raised.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the minister a question before he sits down? I did not hear him mention Malta among the countries to which credit is given. Malta, heroic in the defence of her island, was pretty well wiped out during the war. If Malta is entitled to credit, I think it should be mentioned.

Mr. ILSLEY: Malta is part of the sterling area and has made no application. I would assume that the United Kingdom would perhaps take some interest in Malta. We have not had any discussions in regard to Malta.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Before the question is put I should like to say a few words in connection with the long and detailed statement made by the minister. I think I can say on behalf of all the members of this group that we were very glad indeed to hear of the negotiations now under way leading to the extension of credits to the United Kingdom. We wish those in charge of the negotiations every success in bringing them to a successful conclusion. I believe it is fair to say that the name of Canada stands second to none in the sphere of international cooperation in the countries named. In order to maintain this fair name and to carry out our contribution efficiently, we feel it is essential that we should take our fair share in the promotion of international affairs. Therefore I feel that I can safely speak on behalf of all the members of this group when I say that we welcome in general principle any provisions designed to promote that object. However, with respect to the many details which the minister put before us this afternoon I cannot promise such general agreement. These will have to be examined in detail and discussed later.

There are one or two questions I should like to ask, arising out of the minister's statement. Perhaps he will answer them later; or if he feels free to do so now we shall welcome an answer at this time. I noticed that the amount which the government may lend to other governments is to be increased to $750,000,000. That is an increase of $650,000,000 over the amount now authorized. Of that amount I gather from the minister's statement that some $400,000,000 have been used up on the negotiations already in progress. How does that lead the minister or his departmental officials to the conclusion that another $250,000,000 will be required? I should like a general outline as to exactly what they have in mind, as that is all that one can expect in that regard.

The minister said that the measure was not designed to extend credits which would be made available to countries within the sterling bloc. He indicated that separate agreements were being concluded with the United Kingdom; but the question arises whether that means that empire countries such as Australia and New Zealand, which I believe financially or economically speaking are within the sterling bloc, will be excluded from the benefits which may flow from this amendment. If that is so we should be interested in knowing whether any separate provision is contemplated to take care of those countries; because I think it is fair to say that we should have an eye to the promotion of trade within the empire at the same time that we are seeking to promote international trade without the empire.

There is a technical difficulty which is raised under the terms of this resolution. The question is whether, under the provisions of the section which is to be amended, the goods are sold to a country to the government of which the loan is made to pay for those goods. I realize this is a question of detail, but is there any provision to prevent a conflict between parts I and II of this measure? That is to say, under part I we can extend export credits insurance; we can ensure the exporter against loss. If we are at the same time advancing moneys to foreign governments to enable them to buy, it does seem to me that there is a chance of a conflict and perhaps a rather inefficient use of our credits. We would appreciate it if the minister would look into that question and make some statement, when the amendement is under discussion, assuring us that that will not be the case.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think I can say on behalf of the official opposition that we do hope that those negotiations with the U.S.S.R., which the minister said had not yet been completed, or a basis of understanding had not yet been arrived at, will be carried to a successful conclusion. We trust that the government will use its best efforts to bring those negotiations to a successful conclusion, because I need hardly emphasize the fact that this trade is most important to the future of Canada, particularly of that section of the country which looks toward the Pacific. The same thing applies to negotiations being carried on with the republic of China. Perhaps it would apply there with even greater force, because the heroism of China has not been exceeded by any other of the united nations during the course of the long struggle, and anything we can do to help to put that country back on its feet again ought to have the unanimous support of all sections of the country. We welcome the indication given on behalf of the government that measures are being taken looking toward the successful and speedy restoration of free international trade. On behalf of this group I say that we welcome that general principle, while at the same time reserving further discussion of the details.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I believe this measure will commend itself not only to members of the house, without regard to party affiliations, but also to the country as a whole. Among other things, our action in this regard should be based upon the position Canada was in during the war. That is, not only were we free from invasion, but we greatly developed our industrial equipment, and by this means in many respects we were better off when the war ended than when it began. I believe I speak for this group when I say that this is not only a desirable move on the part of the government from the humane point of view, from the point of view of restoring devastated Europe and helping feed the hungry people, but it is also desirable from the long-term economic view of improving trade relations between Canada and other parts of the world. It is particularly desirable from the point of view of making peace possible in the world—a peace which in my opinion is only possible when the world is prosperous economically.

I do not know just what will happen when repayments of the loans will have to be made, because in the kind of world in which we live it seems much easier to sell than to buy. Difficulties are very likely to arise when these countries will want to pay us. They may be very anxious to make repayment, but we may not be so ready to accept the only method by which they can pay, that is, payment in kind. If we do not do that, then in the ultimate analysis I do not believe the people of Canada will receive from these transactions the benefits we otherwise should receive. If the world is really to be prosperous we shall have to exchange in the greatest possible amounts the surplus products of our country for the surplus products of other countries. Then there will be the domestic problem of equitable distribution of products within each country concerned. This brings me to the point I would make in conclusion.

We have before us a proposed expenditure of $750 million. Earlier in the session I proposed a measure of social security for Canada, and it so happens that the amount of money involved was approximately $750 million. In reply the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Claxton) said that an expenditure of that amount would put such a burden of taxation upon the people of Canada that we would not be able to afford it. If we can afford it for people outside our country, I say we can afford it for people inside the country.

I do not emphasize this point with a view to detracting from my approval of the enlargement of this measure under the present bill, and of the action of the government in making trade arrangements with other countries which will not only improve their economic conditions—and ours for the time being—but will go a long way toward preserving the peace to which we all look forward.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have only one word to say before you leave the chair. I am sure hon. members must be in entire accord with the object behind this measure, because the helping of various nations of the world has become the task of countries like Canada, the United States and others which are in a prosperous condition. But when I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) this afternoon I was greatly disappointed to hear him say that no concessions were to be asked from these nations when loans were negotiated. What I have in mind is this: It was indicated by the minister —at least the understanding was implicit— that in the state of world affairs as we have it to-day, one of the conditions of the making of loans to countries needing them would be the breaking or tearing down of tariff walls and barriers. Let us consider France for a moment. I do not know what the conditions are to-day, but I know that before the war, from 1930 on, it was almost impossible for Canada to ship wheat to France, owing to the high tariff barriers which had been erected. If one looks over the subsidies paid in France, Italy and Germany from 1930 to 1939, he will readily see that the subsidies paid for wheat alone in those three countries would have bought more wheat from Canada, and have landed it in those countries, than the subsidies amounted to.

There may be those in the house who differ from me when I say that if there was one thing more than anything else which brought on the war it was the fact that the people in one country, because of high tariff walls, could not have the benefit of goods from another country. Before the war, tariff walls were built around each country, and brought poverty in those countries and some distress in this one. Surely the time has come when we should say to those countries who built high tariff walls, "We will help you; we realize you need this money and food; but for the benefit of your own people we want you right now to take down those tariff walls and let Canadian wheat and other goods from this country enter without tariff." If we are to do anything to improve the living conditions of people in other lands, this is one of the limitations we should impose. I was disappointed when the minister told us that such matters were only incidental to the discussion. I should like to know when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) are going to deal with these things and say, "We are demanding that you take down tariff walls to help your own people, and help us too." Perhaps we will get an answer in committee on that point.

Then there is one other question which arises. I think it is a fact that some countries are being charged 2 per cent and others 3. The Canadian people, for their own requirements are getting 3 per cent on their loans. I am not objecting, but I am just wondering how it works out. I am not altogether surprised that the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) spoke as he did, because the point he raised had also occurred to me. It seems to me there is no difficulty at all in connection with finance. The government is able to give these countries goods, but how is it that when questions in connection with old age pensions are brought up, the question of where to find the money is always raised? Surely what is possible for one is possible for another.

I rose chiefly to speak about tariff walls, and restrictions against our goods entering other countries. Now is the time to bring down those tariffs and carry out the terms of the Atlantic charter. There are many people on the North American continent who think that living conditions here are normal. I say that our living conditions are abnormal and the condition of people in other countries is just miserable. Until we help them I can see no possibilities of a return to normal trade, because those people will be unable to buy goods. Perhaps when we go into committee the minister will be in a position to tell us more.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, on the matter of tariffs I should like to concur in what the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) has said. I agree also with all that was said by my colleague, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). We are very much in favour of the general principle of this measure. As the minister has said, it is in Canada's interests that Europe should be reconstructed at this time. We are interested in world trade.

The minister said that we must sell at competitive prices, which bring to mind an article I was reading this morning touching on wheat. According to the newspaper story it is a strange thing, and I have raised this question at other times, that our neighbours to the south are able to export more wheat at $2.10 per bushel seaboard than we are at $1.55 per bushel, basis Fort William. That is something the responsible minister should explain to us when we are in committee. By government action our agricultural producers have been refused a market in the United States. As I said, I agree whole-heartedly with the principle of this measure. It has been pointed out that free enterprise should not be called upon to carry the entire burden, and I agree that the state must lend a hand. But if the state lends a hand, then the producers of the worth-while necessities of life and the taxpayers generally should be asked to bear a fair share of the burden of taxation which will result. That is not so to-day with the agricultural producers. Because of controls put on by this government they have not been allowed to sell on a competitive basis. As compared with the manufacturers of lumber and others they have been placed in an unfair position through not being allowed to export on a competitive basis.

I do not want to occupy the time of the house any further, but I did want to raise these questions which I hope either the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) will be able to answer. During the next few years conditions will be very uncertain. Repercussions are bound to occur, and those who are to-day bearing an unfair share of the cost of this thing as compared to those in other occupations may again have to bear a greater share during the period of readjustment. I should like to see this straightened out on some basis, and I trust the ministers will give an explanation in committee.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, since this resolution appeared on the order paper I believe some publicity has been given to it and I have been reflecting upon the subject. I am not an expert on international trade with all the complications of international finance; I find it a laborious subject to study because there are so many mysterious things about it. Some people think in words while others think in pictures, and I am one of those who has a tendency to think in pictures. I never did care much for abstract subjects.

I have been trying to think my way through the subject of this resolution to the end that I could understand it. I cannot understand the particular reason for having to advance credits to foreign nations in order for them to buy our goods, although I suppose there is an answer. The peculiar thing is that when our own people were in need of goods in days gone by, the government, which was the same government that exists to-day, could not find it possible to advance money to our own people so that they would be able to buy their own goods. I cannot quite see how that ties up.

Thinking of pictures, this is the thought that has gone through my mind. Here is a man in business, perhaps a grocery business—people need food—with a clothing department —people need clothes. He stands behind his counter and would like to sell his goods. People come into his place of business and look around at the goods on his shelves. Upon making inquiries he finds that the people want to buy his goods but they have no money. So a bright idea comes to him. He opens his till and he says to his customers, "I see the only reason you are not buying my goods is that you have no money." He takes money from his till and gives it to the people in his store and they immediately begin to buy his goods. I do not know whether that is a good policy, but I am quite certain if any business man in Canada did that people would consider he was crazy. I have never known anybody to do it yet, but it seems to me that that is what we are doing with this legislation. If it is not, I should like the minister to explain why it is not.

Mr. ILSLEY: Because it is not a gift.

Mr. HANSELL: I cannot see why we do not just give them the goods and say, "There is a debt standing against you and we hope you will be able to pay it in full some of these days." Maybe that is what they are doing; I do not know. It is a complicated business, but at least one thing is certain. If ever the time comes when we have plenty of goods in this country and no one to buy them, then the government surely will not say, "We are sorry but we have no money to give to our people so that they can buy those goods." Surely they will not put up that excuse again when they now are saying that they can supply money to people outside our country with which to buy our goods.

Mrs. GLADYS STRUM (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend to be an expert in finance either. It seems to me that this transaction is perfectly legitimate. We have a moral obligation because after all we are so much better off than European countries. We have not had one bomb fall in our country; we have not missed a meal or lost a night's sleep. The least we can do is to help these other nations get on their feet.

While we are doing this we are in effect guaranteeing a demand for our own production. We are in effect exporting employment, are we not? We are exporting goods that we shall have to pay for as a nation. The Canadian people will have to foot this bill, which may or may not be collected. Let us see to it that our workers have a decent wage while engaged in making these goods, so that we shall at least derive that much benefit from this measure; and let us see to it that we continue our marketing controls so that our farmers who will grow the food will at least get parity prices and we in turn shall be able to buy our share in Canada of our own production. It is about time that we quit exporting unemployment and at the same time leave unsatisfied the great Canadian market for whose goods there can be an effective demand only when Canadians have purchasing power. That can be accomplished only through seeing to it that wage levels and price levels here are such that our Canadian people too can absorb some of the production of our farms and factories.

Mr. FRED ROSE (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is wrong, as some hon. members have done, to consider credits to foreign countries as one thing and credits to the people of Canada in the form of social services as something entirely distinct and apart from that. I see no contradiction between the two, and those who look forward to a more prosperous Canada and a more prosperous world realize that the two are closely linked together, and that there is no contradiction between them.

The idea of granting more credits to foreign countries is a very good one. It gives work to people in our own country and also helps other countries that need our industrial products and raw materials. A few months ago I spoke to a group of fifty shipyard workers, a delegation from various yards in Montreal. I asked them this simple question: "How do you think we can keep the yards open?" They did not have an answer ready, and so I asked them: "Do you think that the Canadian government should extend credits to certain countries in order that we in Canada can build ships for them? Would you agree to that?" They were French Canadians, these fifty delegates, and they answered unhesitatingly, "By all means." They all agreed that it would be impossible to keep the yards open by building only ships to cruise from Montreal down the Saguenay on pleasure trips. They know that their employment depends on building in this country the freight ships that other countries need. I think the average person can easily be persuaded that export credits are a good thing and that we have to help allied countries, but at the same time recognizing that money must be found for housing in this country and the many other things that the people of Canada need.

It was hard to follow all the figures which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) gave and I am still not very clear who the authority is for the Netherlands Indies to whom credits were granted. Personally I would say that the Netherlands have no control there. The people of Indonesia are fighting now for a government of their own. The minister mentioned that we have given the Netherlands Indies a credit of $15,000,000, and that it is to be increased to $65,000,000. I should like to know if any munitions are being bought with these credits. Is it going to be as the so-called wise men in the state department across the line in the United States said, that they should take the labels off the guns? We need some clarification of the purposes for which these credits are to be used. We have been told that Russia has received a credit of only $3,000,000. Why so little? What are the Soviets asking for, and what are we willing to grant? These things should be plainly told to the parliament of Canada.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (St. John-Albert): The Minister of Finance told us that $700,000 of the credit extended to Czechoslovakia, $24,967,000 of credit extended to the Netherlands and $2,500,000 of the credit extended to Norway had been utilized, and that $2,349,000 of the $3,000,000 credit to the U.S.S.R. had been utilized for certain purposes—hydro electric equipment and engineering services. But he did not tell us how these other credits had already been utilized, what goods and services had been supplied. I think he should give us now or later some break-down of these figures. What goods and services have been supplied? Has any part of these credits been used for the purchase of munitions, or was it all used to buy goods that would be used in peace time?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, perhaps this will be an opportunity for me to answer some of the questions that have been asked. The hon. member for Kamloops said that the amounts which I mentioned as having been arranged for added up to about $400,000,000 and that gave a margin of $250,000,000, and he asked what that margin was needed for and what it would be used for. I assume that the $400,000,000 does not include the balance of the credit to Belgium, which may be substantial, or any of the credits to China, or anything except the $3,000,000 of a credit to the U.S.S.R., and that therefore the $250,000,000 is not an unreasonable margin when one considers that the needs of these countries may be very substantial. I tried to deal with that in my remarks. I said that the basis of the figure of $650,000,000 is to provide specific amounts which are needed for France, the Netherlands, the Netherlands Indies and Norway, to enable us to conclude negotiations and provide reasonable amounts to Belgium, China and the U.S.S.R., and to leave us some margin for other cases that might develop in the future.

The hon. member for Kamloops also asked whether there was any conflict between the operations which may be carried on under part I of the act and under part II. There will be no conflict. The operations under part I consist of insuring private exporters against certain types of loss on their exports. Those exporters will be dealing ordinarily with private importers in other countries, and this insurance corporation is set up to insure them in consideration of the payment of premiums.

The operations under part II of the act cover or are connected with inter-governmental transactions. The government of Canada gives guarantees in some cases, and makes loans to other countries. I am unable to say whether there would be any conflict. This is not a general reply in the debate at all, but I might as well deal with some points or they will be raised again in the discussion in committee.

The hon. member for Vancouver East and the hon. member for New Westminster said that if we could raise $750 million for export credits we ought to be able to raise the money just as easily for social services. I suppose the raising of the money is just as easy in one case as in the other, but the two transactions are different. In the case of payment for social services, that money is paid out and is not recovered. As far as the taxpayers as a whole are concerned, they get nothing back. On the other hand these are loans, represented by assets, and we hope they will be recovered. We expect that in large measure they will be recovered, because most of these countries are excellent credit risks. As I stated, we must take some risk; any country making loans to other countries takes a risk, the world being in the condition it is in to-day, but as far as the people of Canada as a whole are concerned they are entitled to a return and it is expected that they will get a return in future years for what they send out of the country now. So that to my mind—and I hope it is not impaired by concentration on financial considerations—a loan is different from a gift even when one is making the gift to some of the people in one's own country.

Then the hon. member for New Westminster said that we should have seized the opportunity to tie up these countries in regard to tariffs, to get them to agree to keep their tariffs down, or not to raise them, or something of that kind. Well, in the case of France, which he mentioned, we did get them to insert a clause providing for most favoured nation treatment, and that is as far as we have gone. If you go much further than that you have to embark upon protracted trade negotiations, and of course they would be entitled to obtain similar assurances from us with reference to our tariff. Negotiations of that type take a long time. You can go only so far in tying up two matters which are only partly related. These transactions on their face get markets for our goods, apart altogether from the tariffs of these other countries. They effect the purpose, for the time being at any rate, of getting markets for our goods. I do not think the United States, in dealing with these countries through their export-import bank, have undertaken to connect them with commercial negotiations. We considered that, and we decided it was impracticable. The negotiations would be almost endless if we did that. These other countries might very well say, "That is all right, but you must go over your tariff and tell us what you are going to do with it." Certainly we could not have concluded such negotiations at all rapidly, and I doubt the practicability of doing it. The one is a loan transaction by which we get a market for our production. The other is something else again, which of course we shall have to undertake pretty soon. It is very easy to say, "You are in the driver's seat. You can snap your whip and say they must do this or that with their tariffs for the next twenty-five or thirty years or they do not get their money." It is a question how far countries will go in tying up their future independence in order to obtain loans. They may do so under reciprocal trade agreements, when they are dealing with the same matter and we are giving them a similar concession. From the little experience I have had in dealing with other countries, however, they do not like to have dissimilar matters tied up in that way, and I do not like it very much myself when they have tried to do that with the Dominion of Canada. I do not mind making a reciprocal trade agreement, but I do not like tying these things together. Perhaps I have not made a very convincing case on that.

Mr. STIRLING: Surely the borrowing country is the importer of the goods so purchased.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. STIRLING: Then we do not know and do not need to know what their tariff arrangements will be when these goods reach that other country, since it is a government undertaking. It may be that they will not pay themselves the rates under their tariffs.

Mr. ILSLEY: As far as these particular goods are concerned, which they buy under these credits, we need not worry. Certainly they will get into that country; it does not make any difference whether they put on a high tariff or no tariff. The hon. member for New Westminster is talking about future transactions, however, I believe.

Mr. STIRLING: The hon. member may be peering into the future in that regard, but I cannot see that the tariff question affects these transactions.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, it does not.

Mr. MacINNIS: Does not the minister's difficulty arise at least in some respects from the fact that Canada perhaps has not made up her mind yet that she is in favour of low tariffs?

Mr. ILSLEY: No; the policy of the Dominion of Canada has never changed. The policy of the Dominion of Canada is for reciprocal reduction of world tariffs.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was aware that the policy never changed; I had always understood that.

Mr. REID: Was not a statement made by the minister or by some other member of the government that when the time came to make loans to help countries rehabilitate themselves, this would be one of the conditions under which they might obtain such loans? That was at least one of the things that prompted me to make the statement I did.

Mr. ILSLEY: I never made that statement and never heard of its being made on behalf of the government. In the last year I have made quite a few speeches in behalf of export credits, but I never said that we would attach to those credits a condition that the countries receiving them should keep down their tariffs. Any tariff statements I have made—and I have made quite a few of them, too—have been to the effect that concessions in the way of lower tariffs by other countries and lower tariffs in this country are matters which will have to be dealt with on a reciprocal basis, and this is a different matter entirely.

Then the hon. member for New Westminster said that he did not understand why these rates of interest were different to different countries, and lower than the rates of interest we pay for money here. If he will look at the Hansard report of my speech he will see that matter very carefully explained The rate of interest we charge these other countries is the same rate of interest we pay for the money we borrow in Canada, having regard to the term, and a little more, a fraction of one per cent more.

Mr. ISNOR: One quarter of one per cent in one case.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is pretty hard to reckon quickly just what the correct rate is. Take the case of France. The amount is repayable over a period of thirty years starting one year after the advance of the money. The rate in that case is 3 per cent. I would say that the average outstanding is around fifteen years, because it has to be paid back over a period of thirty years. The correct rate is 2·9 something. That is the rate we pay our people for money for that term. A little is added to bring it to 3 per cent. If, instead of being repaid beginning one year after the advance, it began ten years, and so on, all paid in thirty years, the average term during which the money was unpaid might be twenty years, in which event the proper rate would be a little over 3 per cent. The rates are very carefully worked out.

Mr. WRIGHT: How do the rates that we are charging on these long-term loans compare with the rates charged by the United States on similar credits?

Mr. ILSLEY: They are higher, but they are based on exactly the same principle. The United States borrows money from its people at lower rates of interest than the Dominion of Canada and lends money to other countries at the rate which it has to pay plus a small charge. When I say the rate it has to pay, that is a simple way of stating it. I do not want to go into the complications and complexities, but that is not exactly true. If, say, certain issues of our bonds were selling at 104 and paying 3 per cent, then the rate we would be deemed to be paying at that time would be the effective yield to the investor in those bonds at that time. It would be less than 3 per cent, even if we were paying 3 per cent. It is the interest yield that we take as the basis for our dealings with other countries.

Mr. WRIGHT: The point I was trying to bring out was that if the United States makes loans available at the lower rate of interest on which it is able to obtain money in that country, that will give the United States manufacturer or the people who are selling goods an advantage over Canadians who are selling a similar type of goods to those countries.

Mr. ILSLEY: At the present time, if a foreign country wanted a certain quantity of goods and could get them made and delivered in the United States, or in Canada, at its option, they would buy in the United States if they could get the credit, because the interest would be lower. But they want goods wherever they can get them, and a great many of the goods they must have. They try to get them both in the United States and in Canada.

Mr. MacINNIS: Would not the exchange between those countries and Canada and the United States make some difference?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think so. The United States dollar bears a certain relationship to the Canadian dollar. It is a matter of price; the price factor enters into it.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: They might have to pay more for the goods in the United States.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes; that is the point, and it might be of far more importance than the question of interest.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. A difference in price might outweigh the difference in interest. The hon. member for Souris brought up the question of the price of wheat, and cattle and so on. The fixing of the price of wheat in Canada for foreign purchase has been discussed in this house and I hesitate to embark upon an explanation of that pricing policy, but the reasons for that policy have been given repeatedly. If anyone does go into it again it should be my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce rather than myself. I could state it all over again, but I do not think it has any bearing on this resolution.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There was just one question I brought up. I raised one point, namely, the matter of competitive selling, and under our system of supply and demand it seems strange that the United States could be exporting more wheat at $2 a bushel than Canada at $1.55.

Mr. MacKINNON: In answer to the comment of the hon. member for Souris and possibly to correct a false impression, I may say that up to the present day the United States has been exporting about half the quantity of wheat that Canada has been exporting. It is true that the United States have been obtaining more, about $2 at seaboard, than we are obtaining at seaboard, which is not $1.55 but $1.70.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is with freight from Fort William to seaboard.

Mr. MacKINNON: Canada could get the United States price if we were prepared to extract the last cent from our former allies. Wheat is an important item in the imports from Canada of many countries and if they had to pay higher prices now it would retard their rehabilitation.

There is another reason I would emphasize. This decision was taken when the $1.55 f.o.b. Fort William policy for Canada was announced. In return for that the Canadian wheat producer is the only producer in the world to whom a five-year floor price guarantee has been given. At present the floor-price guarantee for the next year is $1.25, but the producer has a guaranteed floor price of $1 for the next five years. The price may be $1.25 or it may be higher, but he has the guarantee that it will not go below $1.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Only on authorized deliveries.

Mr. MacKINNON: On authorized deliveries, and that is a matter which has to be dealt with each year on the announcement of the wheat programme. A great deal will depend on the wheat crops in Canada. Canada is not losing the sale of a single bushel of wheat as a result of our price policy. As a matter of fact, there is to-day a tremendous demand all over the world for wheat and we cannot nearly fill the present orders for this product. Actually we have not the wheat to give them. We are giving a number one priority to the United Kingdom, and we are giving secondary priorities to our allies who have been overrun and who need the product very badly to sustain life in their countries.

The question was mentioned about tying in the price of $1.55 f.o.b. Fort William with our dealings with other countries in the purchase of wheat. It is difficult for anyone to rise in his place in this house and tell about things affecting the internal political policies of other countries, but I think it is a fair and reasonably proper statement to make that we have discussed with prominent representatives of countries concerned the point that, seeing we are doing this for them and putting this price on at the present time, they should not continue the policy they have had of highly subsidizing their wheat production. In at least one important country, while I cannot say that we have been given assurances, our representations were certainly treated sympathetically and, I believe, sincerely.

May I say one more word? I do not want to go into all the arguments regarding the announcement of the price of $1.55 a bushel for wheat at this time if I can avoid doing so. I covered that in a statement I made to the house on September 19. I could give that statement again; it covers the government reasons for the action that they took at that time governing the present wheat selling operations.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is just the point that both the hon. member for New Westminster and I were raising, namely, that the minister would be taking that into consideration in the future in negotiating with those people.

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I think that partly answers the question raised. I hope the minister is not arguing that our friends to the south are using undue pressure in the price they are getting.

Mr. MacKINNON: No; wheat is in great demand. People will pay anything asked.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I want the minister to go farther and explain what the export situation will be in the winter months with regard to our wheat when navigation closes on the great lakes. Is it not right to say that we shall not be able to supply the demand before next year's crop is harvested, and that all we can supply will be taken before that?

Mr. MacKINNON: There is no question about that.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wish to raise a question which has to do directly with the conversations that took place. The minister said that a partial agreement was reached with regard to certain policies within the countries importing.

Mr. MacKINNON: I would not go so far as to say that a partial agreement was reached. I want to be very careful because my remarks may be quoted elsewhere. I want to be very careful in saying that our representations were sincerely and sympathetically received, and I myself feel that there are going to be results.

Mr. WRIGHT: There was one other question I wanted to raise with respect to that. Was there any conversation with respect to accepting basic quantities by those countries which are importing our products? That is important to us.

Mr. MacKINNON: The conversations to which I am particularly referring were not with countries which are now, or were in the last few years, customarily importers of Canadian wheat. They were former importers of our wheat, and we wanted to get into that market again when we had surplus wheat for export. In all our negotiations we have been assured as far as possible by the countries which we are supplying that basic imports would be continued.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Would not the same arguments apply to other commodities? Would not the same principle apply to lumber, farm machinery, electrical machinery and other goods? Would not the high price of lumber or machinery going into those countries seriously affect their rehabilitation? Has there been any other commodity on which the government has set the price arbitrarily, as they did this price of $1.55, of other people who are exporting their materials to those countries? After all, Canada is buying; it is Canadian money buying Canadian goods, and it seems to me that if you are going to arbitrarily set this price on the farmer's wheat in the hope of a better agreement later on, why should you not do it with the other goods? The farmer is compelled to take a certain price. If he is paying for the good will, why should the world price of Canadian wheat not be paid to the Canadian farmer so that he could get the benefit? Why should he be discriminated against? It seems to me you are not treating the manufacturer, and the producers of lumber in the same way that you are treating the producer of wheat. He is a primary producer and is not being treated in the same way as other producers.

Mr. MacNICOL: There is no comparison between the shipping of wheat and the shipping of machinery and so forth.

Mr. MacKINNON: It might be advisable for me to make a brief statement in connection with the general price ceiling policy. I am not now referring to wheat, I am referring to other commodities. The Canadian export board was formed to carry out the procurement of civilian type goods, recognizing that as foreign countries begin to buy these goods rather than to receive them under mutual aid, the same rigorous buying policy that was necessarily and properly followed by the Department of Munitions and Supply might not now be practicable. For example, purchases through the export board are not subject to renegotiation, as were war contracts, and in agreeing to prices we usually have reference to general market prices rather than follow a prescribed formula of a fixed profit margin based on specified costing procedures. This policy recognizes that the Canadian export board exists primarily for the benefit of Canadian producers in assisting them to obtain and develop markets for their product and as such is filling an essentially different function from that of the wartime procurement agency primarily occupied in buying munitions of war with the money of the taxpayers.

What I have just said applies to the general run of goods of a commercial type—non-commercial type sales—that is very large items of an especial nature, such as trucks, locomotives and large volume sales of raw materials—are essentially on a cost-plus basis; that is a cost-plus contract or a negotiated price after an examination of costs. May I give the committee some examples? In connection with the Canadian export board, we have skilled and highly trained men of long experience doing the very best and most careful buying for us on behalf of foreign countries. We have secured capable men from business and other sources. We have called on, and freely obtained the use of such experts as I referred to from the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. For instance, trucks are bought on a cost basis plus five per cent; that is, following out the same system as the Department of Munitions and Supply followed. Locomotives are a continuation of a policy adopted by the Department of Munitions and Supply. Skilled and careful negotiations are carried on with manufacturers. In heavy chemicals exactly the same situation prevails. In all cases the buying is done very carefully by hard-headed buyers of great experience. They also have the benefit of the prices which were paid by Munitions and Supply.

In the matter of subsidized goods, the ceiling price is charged plus the subsidy. One important objective of this very careful buying is to make the money we are furnishing go just as far as it possibly can in terms of employment.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I thank the minister for his reply. I think what the minister has said with regard to the ceiling on trucks and machinery is what the farmer wants. He would like someone to give him his cost of production plus.

I do not think the minister has answered my question. I believe it would be better to postpone the whole discussion until the minister's estimates are before the committee. It does not really affect the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ILSLEY: I should like to correct one misstatement I made in a minor particular. I was asked whether our interest rates are higher than those of the United States, and I answered that they were. The interest rates charged by the United States on loans made to enable foreign countries to pay for material that they would have obtained under lease-lend are lower than ours. Those loans are made at lower interest rates than ours, but they are based on the same principle as ours; that is, the interest rate payable by the United States government to the public, plus perhaps a little more. But I am informed that on other post-war credits being extended by the export-import bank, about three per cent is being charged in the United States on long-term loans, payable from five to twenty years from the date of the loan. Therefore, if that is so, it may be found that their rates of interest are not only as high as, but perhaps a little higher than ours.

Mr. LOW: What form of security is taken by the corporation for any of the advances? In what form are repayments to be made, after credits are due? Are they to be made in bonds, dollars or goods?

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member referred to the "corporation." The corporation does not come into these credits.

Mr. LOW: It is straight government business?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, and they take bonds. The bonds are paid as they fall due.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

Mr. LOW: In what form are payments to be made? Are they supposed to be paid in dollars?

Mr. ILSLEY: In dollars.

Mr. LOW: There is another point. When this $750 million is utilized over a short number of years—and I believe I understood the minister to say that two or three years is the usual period over which the credits must be utilized?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. LOW: And it is repaid over a rather long term, in some instances stretching to thirty years.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. LOW: What provision is the government making to ensure that there is no inflationary effect? We must realize that $750 million is a lot of money, and it is being spent in Canada. The goods are going out of the country and will not be available. What provision has been made to guard against inflation?

Mr. ILSLEY: No more than was made during the war. The war set up powerful inflationary influences. But under these credits, plus the credits to Great Britain, I should not think we would be sending out the same volume of exports we sent out during the war. We shall just have to keep up the fight against inflation by the same methods we have used formerly.

Mr. LOW: It is a bad bogey, but I think we have become more or less accustomed to it.

Mr. ILSLEY: We have quite a measure of it, at any rate. I do not know whether it is a bogey or not. However, the fact is that prices are up by a substantial percentage, and they would be up considerably more if we did not use every method in the world—taxation, savings and controls of every description—to try to keep them down.

Mr. LOW: It seems to me that this $750 million injected into the Canadian economy, with the goods going to some other country, would considerably increase the ministers' problem, and perhaps give rise to the need for exercising controls for some considerable time, perhaps at least for the period during which the credits are being advanced to the other nations.

One further point. What will be the effect upon the Canadian economy when these credits are being repaid? Will it be possible for us to accept goods in repayment, or will these people be able to hustle around and get dollars? If so, how will they get them, and what effect will that have upon the Canadian economy at the time repayments are being made?

Mr. ILSLEY: These countries will have an opportunity of repayment by exporting either to us or to somebody else. Or they will have to send out gold—if they have gold. However, before Mr. Speaker left the chair I said that we would have to accustom ourselves to the fact that we must have a lot more imports than we had before the war.

Mr. LOW: I hope so.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. STIRLING: No. Perhaps the minister would be good enough to deal first with the questions asked by the hon. member for St. John-Albert.

Mr. MacKINNON: I believe the hon. member asked the nature of the goods being taken from Canada.

Mr. HAZEN: Goods that have been taken.

Mr. MacKINNON: Does the hon. member refer to goods that are being taken?

Mr. HAZEN: I am referring to the credit that has already been utilized.

Mr. MacKINNON: The U.S.S.R. took electrical equipment.

Mr. HAZEN: That has been explained.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Czechoslovakia?

Mr. MacNICOL: Cutting tools, is it not?

Mr. MacKINNON: Although these credits have been established, only a small part of them has been used. At present Czechoslovakia has taken only wheat.

Mr. HAZEN: Has she taken $700,000 worth of wheat.

Mr. MacKINNON: Does the hon. member want me to confine my answers to a statement of what has already been shipped, or shall I state what has been shipped and what has been bargained for?

Mr. HAZEN: I shall have to leave that to the minister. The Minister of Finance said that credits to the amount of $2,500,000 have already been utilized by Norway, if we may take that country as an example. I believe that was the way the minister expressed himself. How has that credit been utilized?

Mr. ILSLEY: So far, Norway has bought 4,000,000 bushels of wheat, and trucks and tires to the value of $6,414,000. There has been also a small purchase of leather.

Mr. HAZEN: But I understood that the total amount was only $2,500,000 for Norway?

Mr. ILSLEY: Let us get it straight. I said that the amount already utilized had been $2,500,000.

Mr. HAZEN: And I now understand the minister to say that trucks and tires to a value of $6,414,000 are included.

Mr. ILSLEY: Let us have the facts correct. I have accounted for $2,500,000. Then the difficulty has arisen in the hon. member's mind from my saying that Norway had bought 4,000,000 bushels of wheat, and trucks and tires to a value of $6,414,000. I pointed out, too, that a small amount of leather was included. The question is now asked as to how they paid for it. The answer is that they paid partly in cash. A credit of $2,500,000 was used, and the balance is cash.

Mr. HAZEN: That is the story with respect to Norway?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. HAZEN: Then I understand that the amount of $24,976,000 was utilized in connection with the Netherlands.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right. The Netherlands do some private buying which does not go through government agencies. We only know what they have bought through government agencies. They purchased 9,000,000 bushels of wheat and the following:

Trucks	$11,468,000
Agricultural machinery	510,000
Fertilizers	1,964,000

Mr. WRIGHT: Were those commercial trucks for peace-time use, or would that purchase include Bren gun carriers or other articles that might be used for war?

Mr. JAENICKE: Were they new ones?

Mr. ILSLEY: They may not all be new.

Mr. STIRLING: Is it a term of the loan that the borrower must pay a certain amount in cash?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Is he held to a percentage of the loan?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Has some of that cash been paid already?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: The borrower would have to buy Canadian dollars as best he could in order to pay?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, he buys them from the foreign exchange control board.

Mr. STIRLING: He buys and pays in Canadian dollars?

Mr. ILSLEY: Ordinarily in gold or United States dollars.

Mr. STIRLING: Will War Assets Corporation be able to get rid of some of the enormous quantities of surplus goods they have to dispose of? Has that entered into the plan?

Mr. ILSLEY: Some countries have expressed a desire to purchase our surplus assets with these loans, but I do not know what sales have been made or whether any have been made as yet.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is any precaution being taken to see that these goods are not resold? For instance, our wheat is being sold under the world price.

Mr. MacKINNON: I am not sure that I can give a detailed answer except to say that the wheat board are fully cognizant of that problem and have taken steps to see that the wheat purchased cannot be resold. As a matter of fact, we are not able to give to the usual wheat purchasing countries anything like the quantity they want to buy. As far as I know, these wheat board sales are not sales to private parties but to governments.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Cartier asked about the Netherlands East Indies and wanted to know whether arms were being sent there. The request for a loan was merely for economic construction and not for munitions or anything of that kind. I think I can say that we would take great pains to see that the proceeds of these loans are not used for that purpose.

Mr. STIRLING: Could they be used for the purchase of corvettes or some of the ships that have been declared surplus?

Mr. ILSLEY: We would be careful about selling military or naval equipment. That is not the purpose of this legislation. That may not be 100 per cent true, but the whole purpose is for reconstruction.

Mr. ISNOR: One important point that has been overlooked is the fortunate position in which Canada finds herself at the present time through being able to consider a resolution having to do with an amount of $750,000,000. I am thinking of the effect that this will have upon our future economy and its relation to manufacturing in our country. Could the minister give us an estimate of the amounts which have been spent up to the present time in the purchase of natural and manufactured products?

Mr. ILSLEY: I have not a division based on the distinction between natural and manufactured products, but naturally there would be a lot of natural products, wheat for instance.

Mr. ISNOR: Can the minister give us any idea of the effect this will have on manufacturing plants? He has given us details of some of the articles sold.

Mr. ILSLEY: I can give some idea. I gave some details to one hon. member a while ago. For example, France has bought 12,000,000 bushels of wheat through government agencies, as well as the following purchases:

Railroad equipment	$21,940,000
Road transportation equipment	27,149,000
Metals	3,270,000
Chemicals	3,866,000
Asbestos	1,398,000
Machinery and general purpose equipment	2,444,000
Agricultural implements	2,295,000
Electrical equipment	3,059,000
Fertilizers	7,341,000
Prefabricated houses	1,203,000
Printed matter	1,864,000

Mr. HATFIELD: Would that be mixed fertilizers or fertilizer chemicals?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know.

Mr. WRIGHT: In asking these questions I do not want any one to think I am opposed to the measure because I believe it is a good one. I believe that we should assist these countries in becoming reestablished. But the point I was raising was this: Are some of these countries using their cash to purchase war materials or certain other types of goods and then coming to Canada for a credit for the goods with which to reestablish themselves? Has any check been made by the government of Canada on the financial position of the countries to which these credits are being made available to ascertain the use they are making of their own finances? It seems to me that such a check should be made. I would not say that many of these countries are purchasing war materials, but there may be some.

Mr. ILSLEY: We go into the question of their foreign exchange position pretty carefully with them and get all the information we can about it, how much gold they have, how much in United States dollars, and so on, and we require these cash payments. But we do not require full payment in cash, because these countries that have been pretty badly slashed by the war can always make a pretty good case for need. I do not know what they do with the rest of it; they may make some cash purchases in other countries with it, but so long as they look a fairly good credit risk and will make a reasonable cash payment we lend them the money.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Netherlands East Indies are entering upon a large programme of rehabilitating their rubber forests and Malaya is doing the same thing for their tin industry. Are we—I mean the Anglo-Saxon countries—supplying anything to the Netherlands East Indies or to Malaya for those purposes?

Mr. ILSLEY: They have made inquiries about aluminum latex cups and coagulating pans, which I understand are used in the industry. That is, I think, the only item about which they have made inquiries.

Mr. MacNICOL: Are we getting some orders from them?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think so as yet, but negotiations are taking place.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Are the countries mentioned by the minister the only ones that are to be given consideration under this resolution? A serious situation exists in Greece and Austria.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, they are the only ones with which we have made agreements or had negotiations. Some inquiries have been made tentatively on behalf of other countries, but I do not think on behalf of Greece. There have been no negotiations; there has been an inquiry. Of course we have been giving wheat to Greece.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ilsley thereupon moved for leave to introduce bill No. 217, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ALBERTA TAXATION AGREEMENT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF INCREASED COMPENSATION AND SUBSIDY

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to authorize the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the governor in council to enter into an agreement with the province of Alberta to pay the province increased amounts by way of compensation and subsidy over the amounts agreed to be so paid under an agreement entered into with the province, dated March 30, 1942.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister make a statement?

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, I have not prepared a statement on this resolution. That, however, does not preclude my making a statement now, giving the house the general principle and purpose of the resolution. I can go into it much more fully on the bill.

This is, I think, an interesting resolution and what we are doing is an interesting thing. The province of Alberta in 1936 decided to notify its bondholders that it would pay them only half the rate of interest payable on their bonds; that condition obtained from 1936 until 1945, this year, and a very large amount of arrears of unpaid bond interest accumulated. In 1936 or 1937, I believe it was 1937, the Bank of Canada made some investigation of the economic conditions prevailing in the western provinces and made a report, which received some publicity, that certain of the western provinces be placed in a tolerable budgetary position and receive certain payments from the dominion government. The payment recommended for the province of Alberta was $600,000 a year, but to be paid to them on the assumption that they were paying their full bond interest. They did not pay their full bond interest, and we did not think we should pay them the $600,000 because they were saving it in another way.

In 1941 we had conversations with the provinces leading up to the tax transfer agreements under which the provinces agreed to vacate the income tax and corporation tax fields, in consideration of which the dominion agreed to make them certain annual payments. The payments that were offered to the provinces were based upon one or the other of two plans which the provinces had the option to select. A province could take from the dominion the amount of tax which it collected in the year 1940, or in the alternative it could take from the dominion the interest payable on its debt. In some cases the debt service option was more favourable to the province and in other cases the tax option was more favourable. In the case of Alberta the tax option was more favourable to the province because they had cut their debt service in two by the step they took in 1936. Had they been paying the full interest on their debt instead of only half the interest, the debt option would have been more favourable and they would have been entitled to a considerable sum more per year—I forget the exact amount—than we were paying them.

In 1945, after many conversations with the dominion government, in which it is fair to say that this government took a pronounced stand and expressed its view very strongly, a view which was eventually concurred in by the Alberta government, and I am sure properly so, the province decided that they would correct this condition and pay up the back interest from 1936. and they entered upon refunding operations and so on. So that the dominion felt they should then treat Alberta retroactively just as that province would have been treated if it had continued to pay the interest throughout, from 1936 on. That meant paying them $600,000 a year for 1937, 1938, 1939 and 1940, and paying them an amount I have not before me at the moment for the years following, 1941, 1942, 1943 and on up to the end of the tax agreement, which they would have been entitled to under the offer we made if they had been paying the full interest on their bonds. We agreed with them, last spring or early last summer, that if they would take the step they have taken and arrange to pay up the back interest to their bondholders, which they are substantially doing, we would introduce legislation retroactively treating that province the same as we treated other provinces and on the same principle as we treated other provinces, none of which cut their interest to their bondholders.

That is the principle of the resolution. It is all covered by an order in council which has been tabled and on the strength of which the province of Alberta has proceeded. They have conducted extensive and successful refunding operations in the United States. Today their credit appears to be excellent, and personally, as Minister of Finance of Canada, I think it is a great thing that now, when people have bonds which are signed either by the dominion government or by any of the provincial governments, they have every reason to believe that the interest will be paid in full and that the principal will be paid in full on maturity. Everyone is now proceeding on that principle, and it is well worth this money we are now seeking authority to pay the province of Alberta. After all, it is only what they would have got if they had not taken the step they took in 1936.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): As I understand the situation, what you are now doing is putting into statutory form an agreement already arrived at with the government of Alberta?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): As I understand it, the amount of money being paid is a calculation arrived at on the basis that they had taken the other option at the time the tax agreement was made?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): And now, all the provinces being on the same basis; taking care of their debts, let me say, on the same basis, and all their securities being really worth while, we in Alberta are now simply coming back into that line?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): And you are assisting us to the extent you would have, had we always maintained that position?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then I can only compliment the minister on a job of work very well done.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Did I understand the minister to say that two options were offered the province of Alberta?

Mr. ILSLEY: Every province.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That they could either take the taxes of 1940 or the cost of funding their debt?

Mr. ILSLEY: No; the interest payable on their funded debt; the interest payable on their bonds.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Alberta took the former option, I presume?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: And this payment you are going to make now is the difference between what you paid them under that option and what they would have received under the other option. Could the minister give us any idea of the amount of that?

Mr. ILSLEY: I am sorry; I should have that but I have not. I think the difference is $1,600,000 a year or something like that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is really the difference, then?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: And what is the amount of this back interest which Alberta has not paid and is now paying?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is a large sum, I think about $25 million.

Mr. LOW: Yes, about that.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall have the figures when the bill comes up, if the house would just take my word for them now.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): I rise to say only a word, and I am not one of those who go so far as to say that because a government is of a certain political stripe it is opposed to everything which is not of that stripe. Perhaps this is a good example of the contrary being the case. A responsible government, it makes no difference whether it be Liberal or Conservative, I am quite sure has the interests of Canada at heart, and I am very happy that a move has been made so that as a result of an agreement with the dominion government, no one will now be able to say that the credit of some particular province is not good.

I really rose to pay a little tribute to the leader of this group. I think it should be mentioned here that at one time he was provincial treasurer of Alberta, and it fell to his responsibility to carry on a good deal of both the groundwork and the advanced work in these negotiations with this government, and with other people and institutions who were responsible in a measure for refunding. At the time the refunding was carried out the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) was not provincial treasurer; he had become national leader of our social credit movement, but I think I can say without fear of contradiction that a great deal and perhaps the bulk of the work which led up to the successful refunding of Alberta's indebtedness was carried out because of the ability, foresight and good judgment of the leader of this group.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): I have no objection to the compliment paid to my hon. friend to my left; I think it is probably in place. But I noticed that the minister pointed out that the credit of Alberta was better now than it was some years ago when the amounts which are now being made up were withheld. It seems to me that that is putting the cart before the horse. They needed credit badly then and it was withheld from them. Now they are in a much better position and we are donating to them. That is an extraordinary procedure. However, I have no objection to that if it is the way to do it.

But there is another point that ought to be made here as well as the compliment which has been paid to the leader of the Social Credit group. For a good many years the government of Alberta has taken a good deal of credit to itself for having saved to the people of that province $25,000,000 of interest, and now I understand it is getting this gift of money to which it was entitled before but which was withheld because it had deducted the $25,000,000. It is getting this returned because it has virtually paid back the $25,000,000 of interest. Is that clear?

Mr. ILSLEY: This does not amount to the $25,000,000. I am sorry I have not the total, but I think it is $10,000,000, or $12,000,000, or something like that. The province is paying quite a lot more than that. But with regard to future refunding, it makes all the difference in the world. Now that their bonds fall due they can refund at much lower rates of interest than they would be able to if they did not do this, so that apart from the principle of the thing it is good business for the province.

Mr. IRVINE: I know it is always good business to follow the financial system in vogue and anyone that goes against it will suffer greatly for doing so; but the minister misunderstood my point. My understanding is, from the resolution and the minister's comments thereon, that the government of Alberta has virtually made up to the bondholders the $25,000,000 they had supposedly saved the people of that province during the past ten years or so. That is the point I understood him to make.

Mr. SOLON LOW (Peace River): I did not want to interject anything into this debate, but it seems to me that the hon. member for Cariboo is attempting a little bit of propaganda in this whole business. As a matter of fact, in all our negotiations there was one thing uppermost in our minds, from the time I started these negotiations six years ago, and it was this. We feel that it was our obligation to the holders of Alberta bonds to see that the price of those bonds rose to or near par at the earliest possible date. That was our obligation, and we have taken whatever action was required to bring the market value back so that the holders of bonds might dispose of them and not take a severe loss.

Actually, this resolution, or the bill that may follow, is not for the purpose of making good the total of the unpaid interest on those bonds, and it is not a question of what the people of Alberta have saved or what they are saving. It is a question of carrying through an agreement between the federal government and the government of Alberta to make good a payment that would have been given to the province of Alberta since 1941 had that province selected the debt service option under the tax transfer agreement. If anyone wishes to make political capital of it this is rather a poor place to do so.

I compliment the minister on a good job done. My only regret is that it was not done years ago. It could have been accomplished had we got around the table a little more amicably and with a little more spirit of understanding. I am sure it could have been done. I wish to compliment the minister on having taken a fair attitude toward the whole matter and upon helping us to get the thing cleared away, because it has meant a great deal not only to the people of Alberta and the government of that province but to the whole of Canada. I have felt that for some years.

I wish to thank my colleague for the kindly things he said about me. He did not have to say them because I have taken it in the line of my duty. I felt it was my responsibility.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I simply rise to say that it hardly becomes the leader of the Social Credit group to take umbrage at anyone for raising a political point, because his own group is adept at that kind of thing. My colleague the hon. member for Cariboo asked a very proper question. Here the government of Canada has undertaken to pay certain sums of money to a provincial government, and he wanted to have it clear as to the particular reason for the Dominion of Canada paying these sums. I think he is entitled to an answer.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): There is one thing else that ought to be said. When Premier Aberhart led the social credit movement to the successful victory of 1935, it was never his intention, nor was it the intention of the social credit movement, that anyone should lose as a result of Alberta's determined effort to obtain some sort of justice in the matter of financial arrangements. It ought to be known, and for the sake of those who were not in the house at the time I am going to say, that the province of Alberta was owing a great deal of money at an interest rate which in the light of conditions was fantastic. Imagine owing millions of dollars at an interest rate of six and a half per cent! It was utterly impossible for that province to obtain an adjustment with regard to that interest rate without exactly the measures which they did take under Premier Aberhart.

It is due to Premier Aberhart, seeing that he has gone beyond the veil, that it be stated here that the very first thing he did after he became premier of Alberta was to come east with the object of seeing the financial authorities of Canada at that time in order to obtain a system of refunding Alberta's debt. Had the president of the Bank of Canada and other financial authorities in the dominion had the vision—and it is impossible now to see why they did not have it—they would have sat round the council table with Premier Aberhart and allowed him to refund that great debt of Alberta at a lower interest rate, and all the unhappiness which has resulted from Alberta's defaulting would have been avoided. I feel it is only fair that this be said with respect to the late Premier Aberhart. I look upon him as one of the greatest statesmen in the Dominion of Canada since confederation. Had it not been for the determined stand which that man took, with the province of Alberta behind him, we would not even yet be thinking in terms of interest rates as reasonable as we now know them. Very shortly after the determined stand that Alberta took, we found a tendency toward lower interest rates in Ontario and in other parts of the dominion. Interest rates should be even lower than they are to-day.

[Mr. Low.]

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ilsley thereupon moved for leave to introduce bill No. 218, to authorize the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into an agreement with the province of Alberta to amend the agreement entered into with that province under the authority of the Dominion-Provincial Taxation Agreement Act, 1942.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

126. Departmental administration, $152,565.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Chairman, in connection with this item I think it would be well if I were to make a statement to the committee with regard to Abasand Oils Limited. The Minister of Munitions and Supply in 1942 recommended that the bituminous sand of northern Alberta should come under immediate and detailed examination, in order to determine whether large oil production could be obtained from it. At that time all possible sources of Canadian production were being investigated with a view to offsetting the loss of oil supplies through the sinking of many oil-tankers by enemy action.

On April 14, 1943, the minister reported progress made, outlining the problem still to be solved, and stated that the government had arranged to take title to the plant of Abasand Oils Limited near Fort McMurray as the best method of implementing a recommendation of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada which had carried on an investigation for the government the previous year.

The arrangement was that the government did not pay compensation to the Abasand company for the plant and equipment but was to provide funds to the company for rehabilitating the plant and for carrying out pilot plant operations on mining and treatment of the sand.

The company for its part accepted responsibility for reconstructing of the plant, developing processes for the mining and treatment of the bituminous sands, and obtaining cost data for the various operations.

On May 25, 1944, the then minister of mines and resources reviewed in the House of Commons the progress made under the agreement with Abasand Oils Limited and pointed out the difficulties that had arisen in connection with construction, owing to the scarcity of materials and of satisfactory labour. He indicated that the separation plant was expected to be in operation during the summer, and that operation of the refinery would follow a few months later.

In June, 1944, the separation plant was sufficiently completed for test runs, but operations were on an intermittent or limited basis for several months owing to the need for further separation and refinery equipment and completion of the power house as well as to lack of storage space for production. In December, 1944, the refinery made an initial run and from then on operations were continued on a larger scale. The various handicaps itemized above had been almost entirely overcome by June 16, 1945, when unfortunately, the separation plant, workshops and warehouse were destroyed by fire. It is possible, however, as a result of operations up to that time to arrive at tentative conclusions with regard to the project.

Mining. Commercial utilization of the bituminous sands unquestionably involves year-round operation. Work carried out under the Abasand agreement has demonstrated that mining presents no serious difficulty; in the summer a powerful shovel can excavate the sands without blasting, and in the winter, provided that a reasonably large tonnage were continuously handled, only a relatively thin surface layer of frozen material would require blasting.

Separation. Operation of the McClave hot-water process as it was carried out in the separation plant revealed several weaknesses. The amount of heat required to maintain the pulp at a temperature of 175 degrees Fahrenheit was costly, since thirty per cent to forty per cent of the products recovered from the bitumen were required for heating and power. Further, the distillation of a small amount of the lighter fractions of the bitumen created unhealthy working conditions in the separation plant.

A new method of recovering the bitumen from the sand was therefore developed which appears to have definite advantages over the hot-water process inasmuch as separation is carried out at a temperature of approximately 75 degrees Fahrenheit. Results of operation on the basis of treatment of about 100 tons a day over a period of three months, as reported by the Abasand management, indicated lower costs, higher yields of bitumen, and greater recovery of the diluent oil used in the process. An enlarged unit of 600-ton capacity was being installed to verify these results when the separation plant was destroyed by fire.

Refinery. Operation of the refinery was limited by the comparatively small output of the separation plant. Test runs indicated that the refinery had a capacity of 1,300 barrels of diluted crude, equal to about 600 barrels of bitumen, a day. It is designed for thermal cracking of the bitumen, after recovery of the diluent used in the separation process, yielding a small amount of gasoline, some diesel oil, residual fuel oil, and asphalt. Production of higher grade products from the bitumen demands a much more elaborate and more costly refining process, involving both thermal and catalytic cracking, isomerization and alkylation units, or, alternatively, hydrogenation.

Cost estimates. While the government has not yet received a final report from the company of the results obtained up to the time of the fire, from data collected in the intermittent operations of the plant, certain deductions and estimates have been made by the Abasand management on the cost of obtaining a barrel of bitumen from sands containing sixteen per cent bitumen, and on the cost of obtaining petroleum products from it on the basis of a production of 500 barrels of bitumen a day.

Assuming the removal of one ton of overburden to each ton of bituminous sand treated, the costs per barrel of bitumen according to these estimates would be as follows:

Operation	Cost per barrel of Bitumen
Stripping	$0 12
Mining	0 46
Separation	0 65
Overhead	0 40
Refining	0 88
Total	$2 51
Sales tax	13
	$2,64

Products derived from the crude are assumed to be, gasoline, 7 per cent; make-up diluent, 6 per cent; diesel oil, 10 per cent; fuel oil, 19·7 per cent; asphalt, 56·3 per cent; gas and loss, one per cent. The gasoline is not of the best grade as it contains two per cent of sulphur, removal of which would lead to a considerable reduction in yield and increased cost of production. The make-up diluent is delivered to the separation plant and is therefore saleable to the operation. The diesel oil is of reasonably good quality and is comparable to grades now being used commercially. The fuel oil is too heavy for domestic heating units but is suitable for central heating plant installations. The asphalt is of good quality but would require further processing for production of asphalts to specification.

The cost of producing bitumen as feed stock for complete refining or hydrogenation has been estimated, on the basis of 500 barrels a day throughout at approximately $1.60 a barrel.

Marketing. The estimated total revenue from the sale in Edmonton of such products as can be made by the refinery now installed at the Abasand plant has been estimated as equivalent to $2.85 a barrel of bitumen, showing an apparent return of $0.34 over and above the operating costs of the plant. However, the cost of rail transportation to Edmonton under current classifications and rates has been calculated as equivalent to $1.78 a barrel, which transportation would result in a marketing loss of $1.44 a barrel of bitumen processed.

Since freight rates are large factors in marketing costs, a study was made in order to estimate the effect of different rates on the revenue obtainable. Transportation costs were recalculated using alternative rates for heavy fuel oil and for asphalt. When a rate of 45 cents per hundredweight was used for both heavy fuel oil and asphalt, the freight charges were reduced from $1.78 a barrel to $1.61, and when a rate of 26 cents was used, they were reduced still further to $1.11 a barrel. However, the net revenue still failed to equal operating costs by $1.27 and $0.77, respectively, per barrel of bitumen processed.

Therefore it does not appear to be possible to recover the operating costs of processing bitumen by marketing the products at Edmonton under existing freight rates when the operating cost is $2.51 per barrel of bitumen processed.

It is possible that development of the mining industry in the Northwest Territories within the comparatively near future would expand the market for petroleum products very considerably. If development occurred around lake Athabaska the capacity of the McMurray-Waterways area to utilize pertoleum products would be correspondingly enlarged. In this connection the potential market at Yellowknife was investigated but the results were disappointing. Heavy fuel oil, such as could be produced at Abasand by combining the asphalt, fuel oil and diesel fuel oil fractions of the bitumen, sells at $0.19 a gallon laid down at Yellowknife, from Norman Wells; freight alone on the Abasand product from Waterways would amount to $0.16 a gallon, leaving a net return of approximately $0.03 a gallon to the company. This would make a total net revenue to the company of about $1.62 per barrel of bitumen processed.

With the decline in production of well petroleum in Alberta, imports of crude oil into the western provinces have increased. In the first seven months of 1945 these imports totalled 2,427,770 barrels, and in the same period a substantial subsidy was paid by the government in order to avoid the necessity of permitting increased prices for petroleum products in Canada. If it is found to be expedient to discontinue payment of the subsidy, then increased prices for crude oil and for petroleum products generally may be expected. If the price of crude increased by $0.70 a barrel, then a corresponding increase totalling two cents per gallon of products will follow. However, this increase will not likely be applied equally to all products, and it is practically certain that the lighter products such as gasoline and light fuel oils, which are in greater demand, will absorb practically all the increased cost. Therefore, it is believed that the competitive price of heavy fuel oil and asphalt will not likely be increased more than one cent a gallon for such increase of $0.70 a barrel in the price of crude oil. Such an increase would result in the net revenues of the company being increased by approximately $0.50 a barrel of bitumen.

The government entered into the present investigation of Athabaska bituminous sands under the stress of a war-time emergency and many factors combined to delay the completion of the programme. The objective was to obtain reliable data concerning treatment of the sand and the cost of extracting bitumen from it. A pilot plant of approximately 500 barrels a day capacity was used for the purpose, but it was not expected to be a revenue producing operation. Some results have been obtained which permit tentative conclusions to be drawn regarding the cost of obtaining petroleum products from the bituminous sands, but they are not as conclusive as is desired. Under present conditions the cost would appear to approximate $1.60 per barrel of crude bitumen and $2.50 per barrel of refinery products therefrom. These figures, however, require to be verified by steady operation of the plant before they could be accepted with complete assurance and before they could be used as basic cost figures for calculations under changed conditions that will arise inevitably in the future. It should be emphasized that the Abasand plant is a pilot plant for investigational work; it is not a commercial production plant, and the revenue obtained as a result of its operation was not expected to exceed the cost by an amount sufficient to make it an economic operation unless a profitable market develops. Information as to this revenue is required for determining whether or not profitable operation of large-scale commercial plants is possible.

The expenditures made by the Abasand company in carrying out the investigation have clearly shown that the sands can be mined without any serious obstacles even under winter conditions, and with the more powerful equipment that would be used in large scale operations no mining difficulties should be encountered. Again, the investigation has resulted in the development of a new method of separating the bitumen from the sand. This process appears to have definite advantages over the hot-water process formerly used, indicating lower costs, increased recoveries of bitumen from the sands and lower loss of the diluent used in the process. It has been shown also that for high recovery of bitumen and low diluent loss, the feed to the separation plant should consist of freshly mined unoxidized sand.

A study of the markets for the products of the present plant shows that under prevailing conditions as to freight rates these products cannot be sold at a profit where consumption exists, and that the only profitable market would be within a radius of a few hundred miles of the plant where consumption at present is limited to a fraction of the plant's productive capacity. Mining and natural resources developments in the lake Athabaska area and in the vicinity of Waterways might make the operation of such a plant profitable. A much more favourable freight rate and an increased selling price for asphalt would be required before the plant output could compete with asphalt produced from present refineries in the western provinces.

It is appreciated that the cost of producing bitumen could likely be considerably reduced if a large commercial plant were constructed. It is evident, however, that there would not be a market for the quantities of asphalt produced from the large plant. Therefore it would appear that the commercial utilization depends not only on securing much lower costs for mining and separating the sands, but upon processing the extracted bitumen so as to produce a large proportion of the high price petroleum products. This can be done practicably only in a large-scale refinery of the order of 10,000 barrels a day capacity, embodying thermal and catalytic cracking, isomerization and alkylation units, or alternatively by hydrogenation. The investigation carried out by Universal Oil Products of Chicago into full cracking process indicated that the required products cannot be obtained profitably at the present time. Their estimate of the cost of a 5,000 barrel a day refinery in Canadian funds was $12,000,000. No reliable information is available as to the economics or as to the cost of building a commercial plant. From the information available it is not likely that a 10,000 barrel a day plant could be constructed for less than $25,000,000. When the cost of the same size separation plant, probably $10,000,000, is included it will be observed that substantial capital expenditures are necessary.

It will also be appreciated that the commercial utilization of the sands depends as well upon the costs of getting the products to the available markets. The present freight rate of $1.78 per barrel of products makes it impossible to compete with Turner valley crude oil. However, these costs would be substantially reduced if a pipeline were constructed to provide an outlet for the products of a large commercial plant.

As has been mentioned, the government has not yet received a final report from the board of management of the Abasand company. The report may change slightly the conclusions that have been reached as to the mining and separation costs.

This morning I received from the president of the company a letter containing a definite recommendation from the board of directors that the government should provide the necessary funds to enable the plant to be rebuilt and operated for one year. They estimate the cost will be $700,000, approximately one-half of which would be obtained from the insurance moneys. It is stated that this would permit operations with the improved process being carried through the climatic conditions encountered in each of the four seasons.

It must be realized, however, that although more accurate information as to costs would be secured, once the information had been obtained there would probably be no further justification in keeping the experimental plant in operation.

It is now necessary for the government to decide what action should be taken and whether in the light of all the present known facts it would be justified in making this additional expenditure to obtain the further information suggested by the company. In reaching a decision, consideration will, of course, have to be given to the independent investigations being carried out by the provincial government. It will be recalled that the legislature some time ago appropriated $250,000 for this purpose, and it is understood that a plant will soon be erected some fifty miles north of the Abasand plant. It would be unwise for the two governments to compete with one another in this matter. The dominion undertook the investigation only because of the war. Now that the emergency is passed and the unfortunate fire has forced a reconsideration of our plans, perhaps it might be wise not to make any further expenditures in the Abasand plant until the province has completed its own investigation. Again, it might be the course of wisdom to postpone any further investigations at the Abasand plant until a thorough study has been made of the possibilities of hydrogenation. If we proceed with the proposed experimental hydrogenation plant at Ottawa, an opportunity would be afforded of obtaining reliable data as to the costs of this method of processing the bitumen. The cost of building the test plant is not much more than the amount the company is now asking the government to provide. By the time this investigation was completed the province might possibly have obtained additional information as to the other costs which would be helpful in reaching a definite and final conclusion as to the economics of developing the tar sands.

In the light of the letter received to-day from the president of the company, naturally the government will have to consider what is the best thing to do in the circumstances. The province, as I have said, is making its own investigations. They may have a viewpoint with regard to the development of those sands, and in view of that and the further reports that we have received with regard to hydrogenation, it may be that the best plan would be to proceed with the hydrogenation plant and ascertain more accurately and definitely the feasibility and desirability of erecting again a separation plant. I thought it well that the committee should know the result of the investigations which have been made by various agencies and the data which has been collected, which, of course, will be at the disposal of the provincial government of Alberta in an endeavour to arrive at some conclusion with regard to the operation of the Abasand plant.

Mr. MacNICOL: I wish to thank the minister for his report. I must say that I am greatly disappointed at hearing it, but it was not more than I had expected from what I had heard both from Forth McMurray and from those who had left Fort McMurray. I know very well that the minister is new in his department, but I hope that by the time next summer comes round he himself will go there and make his own investigation, as I have done five different times. I do not take much stock in the reports that I have heard from the department about Abasand, I am sorry to say, because my own investigations have proved otherwise. Commencing where the minister has left off, I am looking for great results from what the Alberta government will be able to show. I know that last summer they did a fine job and their plant shipped out a great deal of material. They have in their employ a former employee of the Abasand company, a capable man, who has got fine results. But unfortunately,—and this is no reflection on the minister because these things all came before his time—the project has been more or less damned—I am using my own language, Mr. Chairman—by the department. At the very commencement the department did engage a reliable and competent firm to make an investigation, the Consolidated Mining and Smelting company. That was, I believe, in 1943. I visited the plant while their engineers were there and talked with them and observed what they were doing, and when they submitted their report later it was a wholly different report from the one which has been submitted to this committee to-night. I want hon. members to realize that the present minister has nothing whatever to do with getting out this report, because I heard all of it on Adelaide street west in Toronto last January, when I was told the contents of such a report; it was very largely the same information, that the report would be damning against the production of oil at Fort McMurray. Here to-night we have the report presented, and it is very much along the lines that I was told it would be on Adelaide street west in Toronto.

The Consolidated Mining and Smelting company are a reputable Canadian company. No man can point a finger at them. Their report is wholly different from that which has been submitted here to-night and read by the minister, not prepared by the minister, because I know the minister has not been long enough in his department to prepare the report.

The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company reported several things: first, that the sands can be commercially mined. I myself know they can, not from somebody telling me, but from having gone up there myself five times, and at a good deal of expense, but I love to contribute to anything that I am interested in getting to the bottom of. The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company reported that the sands are easily mined and that the McClave process is a capital process, as I believe it is. Their report was very largely satisfactory so far as commercial production at Fort McMurray is concerned, and they recommended a pilot plant or that the then plant be used for a pilot plant. What happened? After I spoke on the matter in this house the government created a crown company; the principal men who were in the former company were in a very short time all out of the way and other men were sent in there to carry on. I would ask the minister to ascertain from his department just how many men in his department have been to Fort McMurray, and not only that, but how long each one of them has been there, when they arrived at Fort McMurray by plane, and how soon they got out by plane. I make an exception of one who, I know, has been there for quite a long time, who was there when I was there last, and whose name, I think, is Mr. Rosewarne. Find out how many men who passing comments on Abasand were on that job, and furthermore, how many know any mortal thing whatever about the taking of oil out of tar sands. I think the committee should have that information because, when the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company made a report which cost this country at least half a million dollars, apparently that report was thrown to the winds and another lot of men were sent in to handle this work.

What are the facts? Even with the old original system of the Abasand company, in 1940, the first year I was there, they produced about 17,000 barrels of oil. That was something; the company must have had some success to do that. That was not a new plant and a very indifferent plant at that time. In late 1941 the plant was destroyed by fire some time in the fall, but it produced a considerable amount of oil during the summer. I again visited the plant that year, and I met there one of the chief geologists of the United States department of the interior. He was loud in his praise of the operation, and I will take his word in preference to that of others whom I have heard here, for there is no more eminent geologist in the United States than this gentleman. He went to the Fort McMurray plant and, as I say, he was loud in his praise of the system and of the capacity and possibilities of that area for the production of oil. I do not think a man of his high intelligence and ability, who was sent specially by the secretary of the interior on that same trip up to Norman Wells—I met him on his way back—would have been engaged in such work if he had not been thoroughly qualified to give his minister advice.

In 1942 the plant was rebuilt and in operation, and in that year, the plant and a system which is now condemned, produced about 10,000 barrels. Unfortunately, in 1943, the company operating that plant were displaced, and the government took over the plant. What has been produced since the government took it over? The minister will know that I am not criticizing him in any way. I should like to go with him up to Fort McMurray.

Mr. GLEN: You will.

Mr. MacNICOL: I shall be delighted to go with the minister to Fort McMurray. I know something about it, and I shall be glad to show him what went on and what has been going on. The minister will remember what the first intentions of the government were in this connection. I recall very well that the Minister of Munitions and Supply said, in taking the plant over—I believe it was in 1943-44—that they would be producing enough bitumen that fall for the Alaska highway to return the government the money which was being advanced to take over the plant. Why was that not done? Who interfered with the production of bitumen for the Alaska highway? The American officials on the job told me that the United States would give an order for one million barrels and supplement it with orders up to five million barrels of bitumen for the Alaska highway, and if they could have got it they could have used it. Who fell down? Who was responsible for the non-production of bitumen from the original plant that the government took over?

In 1943-44, instead of proceeding with a plant which the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company said was a very good one, and quite capable of producing bitumen commercially up to the limit of its capacity, what happened? The plant was pulled down. Men were sent in there and pulled it down. I have said before and I say again that newcomers commenced to rebuild a plant in the wrong place. They deny it now, but I will stick to my statement, because that is what I was told at Fort McMurray. They started building it in the pit, but were advised that the river would overflow it in the spring, and they then proceeded to the highest ground to rebuild the plant. It should not have been pulled down. It was not the intention of the Department of Munitions and Supply that it should be pulled down. The intention of that department was that it should be used as a pilot plant, but that was not done. The whole business has been nothing more or less than a comedy of errors from beginning to end since the government took it over. Up to now this country has invested between one and a half and two million dollars, and what has it got? The plant which the minister has referred to commenced about May of this year with a so-called new system of extraction. I am going to ask some questions about that in a minute. Now we are told that had it not been for the last fire it would have been a success. I can not swallow that. They do not know whether it would have been a success or not, because it had not been long enough in operation for anyone to decide. Why did the fire come along? That fire came along very fortunately, and not for the country, but it came along very fortunately.

The minister will perhaps remember that a year or two ago we were asked to vote an additional large sum of money, and upon my asking what the money was for we were told that it was to bring a water line from the plant to the Athabaska river. The old estimates will show it. The next time I went there I made a thorough survey concerning that water line. I engaged a boat to take me down the Athabaska river to where the line was supposed to come to the Athabaska river, but never reached it. I want to know who was responsible for wasting the country's money in attempting to build a line the better part of a mile long. A hole was dug on the rock on the shore of the Athabaska river, but there is nothing in it. I followed it up. I do not know how far back I went to where there was nothing in the ditch at all. But who was responsible for that? I should like the minister to find out. I am not blaming his department, but every specification and every plan which were used at Fort McMurray should have passed through the department. I want to know if the director refused or o.k.-ed every plan which was used in the work up there, and if he did not—I do not mean the director personally, but the department—why did they not do it? Were contractors allowed to do anything they liked in spending the country's money along that line—touch and go, guess and miss it? I asked why they did not take the water out of the Horse river. The reply was that the Horse river froze in the wintertime. So it did, but that is where they got water last summer—out of the Horse river. The line to the Athabaska river was never completed. The whole thing, as I have said, is a comedy of errors. I might say that I am very sorry I was one of those who advocated this work, but I should not be sorry, because I never did advocate that the government take it over, but that the government should support the company in charge of that plant in the development of the tar sands.

The minister referred to a new system of oil extraction. The system which is longest known in America, the system which is used in the various tar sand localities in the United States and in Brazil, is the McClave system. The McClave system could not be any simpler than it is, and I am convinced that it is the right one and, from what the report says, much better than the present system. That system called for a water temperature of 180 degrees. There were two cylindrical tanks, one after the other, and the water had to be that temperature. When the sand came out of the mine it was taken into the first cylindrical tank, went through a revolving process, then out of that tank into the second cylindrical tank and from there it was conveyed into the McClave flotation tank. Now we are told that something new has been tried. Who took the responsibility for that? Did the department assume the responsibility for throwing out the McClave system and installing the new Geco system? Someone must be responsible for it and we ought to know to whom that responsibility attaches. Furthermore, we ought to know whether this other system has been in use and where, and whether it has given results.

Certainly this country cannot any longer allow a great possible resource such as this to be damned by what I was going to call monkey-doodling business—that is about the best name I can find for it—such as we have seen in connection with the attempted extraction of oil out of the tar sands of Fort McMurray.

Last summer the plant burned down, but there was no water in the water pipes on the day that happened. That is my information on the most reliable authority. The fire could easily have been put out if there had been water in the water pipes, but it was alleged there was none. I have a picture of the fire. Why was there no water in those pipes? We paid enough for a fire protection system, and I am sure that had there been water in the pipes, and had the pumps been in operation, such a fire could have been put out. As it was, it was not put out until all that part of the plant had been consumed.

I hope the minister, who is new to the department, will take no one's word for this but will make his own investigation, and make a thorough investigation, calling in those who have worked at the plant at Fort McMurray. Do not let him call anyone who has not been there or anyone who might have been there only between planes. Let him make the trip to Fort McMurray himself and talk to the men who were in charge and the employees there.

I am sorry to say that the department has lost two fine men. I learned only yesterday that Doctor S. C. Ells, than whom there is no more qualified or experienced man in this business, has retired from the department. Why was he allowed to go? For thirty years or more he has been the one man in Canada, or at all events in the department, who knew all about tar sands. He has made a thorough study of the subject and his advice had been used by the previous company. In fact, he was largely responsible for the success of that company. Yet he was allowed to go. Why was his resignation accepted?

I was a business man, and I do not care a fig whether a man is sixty-five years old so long as he knows his business. Indeed, it may be said that many men do not know very much until they are sixty-five. Certainly in business, in law, in mining or in any other profession requiring sound brains, the man who has applied himself to his subject will have acquired a very considerable knowledge of it by the time he is sixty-five, and there is no reason why such a man's services should be dispensed with.

An hon. MEMBER: What about women?

Mr. MacNICOL: The same applies to women. I myself wrote to the department when I heard that Doctor Ells was to be retired, and I suggested that until this business was cleaned up he should remain in the department. Another man at Fort McMurray, in my opinion one of the most successful men, was Mr. Bergehold. I do not know whether he has retired or has been released from Fort McMurray, but I understand he is now going to Brazil into the same line of business.

I had great hopes from the development of the tar sands but I have little hope now. I regret to say that. I have no hopes until some other group is sent in there or some private company is willing to invest some of its own money, with the support of the government, and takes over the business.

As far as freight rates are concerned, the rate from Edmonton to Fort McMurray is an outrage. Why? Because the road is considered an unfinished road. Well, just fancy a railway from Edmonton, 305 miles, extending to Waterways, and having only three miles to go to Fort McMurray and only another half mile around to the famous salt company, being regarded as an unfinished road. Until another three and a half miles is completed it is called an unfinished road and therefore the freight rate is away higher than it should be. Any commercial company taking over that plant and proceeding to produce oil from the tar sands would naturally build a pipeline to Edmonton, which would not be more than 250 miles in a more or less direct line.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Are there any particular difficulties in the construction of the remaining three miles of road?

Mr. MacNICOL: Absolutely not. During the war the United States government ran another mile and a half to what are called the plains where they built their tugboats and scows and they could have gone around the bend to what would have been the salt plant.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Did anyone try to explain why it was not completed?

Mr. MacNICOL: No more than the fact that as long as the road is not completed you get a higher freight rate. That is the reason I would give.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Perhaps another reason for sabotaging the whole situation.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister said something about sulphur. I went into that question very carefully and, while I am not an expert at investigations along that line, I am not a novice. The sulphur can be easily removed. I was glad to hear the minister say that it contained only 2 per cent, and that is a reduction of from 3 to 5 per cent as compared with what we were told previously. In any event, the sulphur is a small item and can be easily removed. Furthermore, the diesel oil was excellent. I followed the ship with the oil right down to Yellowknife on Great Slave lake and to Box on lake Athabaska and talked the matter over with the engineers in these mining camps, and I was told that it was excellent diesel oil. I asked the engineers if the sulphur affected their engines and they said no.

I am hoping that the Alberta government, for the sake of their own province, will make a success of the undertaking. They have taken over Fitzsimmons plant fifty miles down the river. I have been there too, and my information from the men on the job is that they are getting splendid results. They have on the job a man who formerly worked with the Abasand company, and as he knows about taking oil out of tar sands he should be able to operate successfully.

I want the minister to find out exactly how many men who went to Fort McMurray ever had a mortal thing to do with taking oil out of tar sands before that. That is a fair question. I wish the minister would communicate with the men there who are on the job so as to get the facts correctly.

I must confess that this report has me warmed up because I had heard about it last January and it has been cooking since then. Now I find it is as bad as I was told it would be. What is to happen now I do not know. Are the sands to be given back to the original company, and will the government get out of the business? I would say that the government should get out of it in any event, no matter to whom it goes.

From what the minister said in conclusion I would judge that not much will be done with it until after we see whether the government of Alberta makes a success of its proposals. Of course the minister has been in the department for only a short time; but believe me, if I were minister I would produce oil at Fort McMurray and I would not wait to see what the Alberta government does. I would not want it to be demonstrated that the Alberta government can do better than the federal government.

We must have men with a really sincere desire to make this thing go and produce oil out of these sands. I must tell the minister that the department itself, through its staff, is responsible for the whole world believing that at Fort McMurray we have the greatest oil deposit in the world. For years I have read pamphlets issued by the department. Why were they issued if what they said was not true? Why did the department issue pamphlets which stated that we had five times more oil there than all the rest of the world combined? If these statements were not true, why were they made? All hon. members have read, in all sorts of magazines, reports about the tar sands; and those reports are based upon statements made by the department. Now we are told in so many words that there was little to those statements; that it is not a commercial proposition; that it costs too much to get the oil out of the sands; that it is too far away; that the oil has sulphur in it, which makes it unfit for commercial use, and so on. Personally I do not want that kind of report. I want a report along the lines of the report of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, that the sands are commercial; that the oil can be taken out of them; that they make good oil, and that the bitumen is number one also. That is the report we should have, but we get a report like this after an expenditure of $2,000,000.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Of course the minister is completely free of any criticism in this connection. Nothing I have said has anything whatever to do with him, but somebody is responsible. As I said a moment ago, I want to know whether all the plans and specifications that were used at Fort McMurray were sent here and O.K.-ed before construction commenced, and, if not, why not? We had men who were supposed to be in charge of the construction at Abasand. If they permitted this construction to go on without O.K.-ing the plans, then somebody is responsible; and if the plans came down here and were O.K.-ed by them, then they are responsible. There is no other answer to it. If they O.K.-ed the plans they must have thought they were all right. Finally I want to know whether the officials of the department O.K.-ed the Geco system and condemned the McClave system; and if that system is in operation I want to know how much oil has been produced under it, the names of the companies, where the sands are, and all about it. Up to the present we have been told that the McClave system is best for the development of the tar sands.

I want to ask one or two questions and then I am through. I want to know why the firefighting apparatus was not in readiness last June to fight that fire, because we put a lot of money into that plant. According to the reports I have right from the plant, the apparatus was not ready. Then I should like to know what is to happen now. Is the government going on to rebuild that plant and, if so, will it put in this so-called new system without a thorough test having been made? According to the reports I have, after the system was put in there was not time really to demonstrate anything before the fire occurred. I think I have pretty well covered what I wanted to ask. I particularly wanted to know if the department did O.K. the plans and, if they did not, why they did not. I also want to know why they abandoned the recommendation of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company.

Mr. GLEN: I will take the last question first, as to why the firefighting apparatus was not in evidence when the fire took place last June. I have here the report of the insurance company with regard to the fire. In the statement of William Spets, who was a carpenter in that plant, he states that he was working along with another man, Henry Olsen, welding and cutting braces for the feeder. His statement goes on:

When we commenced to loosen the top log I saw fire in the centre of the logs and flames coming over the top of the logs. Gilbert Olsen shouted for the fire-extinguisher and attempted to extinguish the fire. In the meantime I ran into the separation building and shouted "fire" to the workers outside.

I then returned to help fight the fire, running through the separation plant to the garage and helped remove the fire hose and trained the fire hose on the fire. But there was a high wind and within a few minutes the entire building was enveloped in flames, while fire also spread to the warehouse and machine shop. One of the workers within the separation building turned in the fire alarm, which consists of sounding the steam whistle from the power house.

In my opinion the fire started from a spark from the acetylene welding torch becoming lodged between the logs and end wall of the ramp.

Mr. ROWE: Is it true that there was no water in the hose?

Mr. GLEN: This man said he helped to remove the fire hose and train the hose on the fire, so that I presume there was water in the hose. The hon. member also spoke, not in a very complimentary way, of those who had charge of the plant.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is there anything in the statement the minister just read to indicate there was water in the hose, even though the hose was trained on the fire?

Mr. GLEN: The words are:

I then returned to help fight the fire, running through the separation plant to the garage and helped remove the fire hose and trained the fire hose on the fire.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But water is not mentioned.

Mr. GLEN: I would assume there was water or he would not train the hose on the fire.

Mr. BLACKMORE: But water is not mentioned in the report.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member for Davenport also spoke, in a not very complimentary manner, of those who were in charge, and wanted to know if the plans for this plant had been submitted to the department and were O.K.-ed by the departmental officials. My information is that all major plans were submitted to the department and were O.K.-ed by the department. All the operations of the plant were under the charge of a body of directors. Those directors were in sole control not only of the erection of the plant but also of the carrying out of operations. It might be of interest if I were to give the names of the directors of the company:

John Irwin:
President, Abasand Oils Limited.
President, McArthur-Irwin Limited.
President, Canadian Oil Companies Limited.
President (formerly), McColl-Frontenac Co., Ltd.
Vice-President, Commercial Alcohols Limited.
Director, Power Corporation of Canada Limited.

George B. Webster:
Vice-President and General Manager, Abasand Oils Ltd.
Vice-President, Giant Yellowknife Gold Mines Limited.
Director, Broulan Porcupine Mines Limited.
President (formerly), Kerr-Addison Gold Mines Ltd.

H. R. Milner, K.C.;
Director, Abasand Oils Limited.
President, Northwestern Utilities Limited.
President, The Canadian Western Natural Gas, Light, Heat and Power Co., Ltd.
President, Anglo-Canadian Oil Co., Ltd.
President, Dominion Gas and Electric Co., Ltd.
President, Canadian Utilities Ltd.
Director, Burns and Co., Ltd.
Director, Calgary and Edmonton Corporation.
Director, Home Oil Co., Ltd.

P. A. Thomson:
Director, Abasand Oils Limited
1st Vice-Pres., Nesbitt Thomson & Co., Ltd.
Director, Canadian Oil Companies Ltd.

Aubrey Davis:
Director, Abasand Oils Limited
President and Managing Director, Davis Leather Company Limited.
Chairman, Davis Canadian Leather Limited.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That name could not have been Milner, could it?

Mr. GLEN: Yes, H. R. Milner, K.C. I think the hon. member knows him.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): He never put out a fire yet.

Mr. GLEN: The engineering company that built the plant was the General Engineering Company of Canada Limited, of Toronto. This is an engineering company with wide experience in the design, construction and operation of industrial plants in Canada and elsewhere. A few of the plants erected by this company are:

Lead-silver-zinc concentrator and smelter—Mount Isa, Australia.
Concentrator, Rio Tinto copper mine in Spain—(rebuilt).
Concentrator, Hudson's Bay Mining & Smelting Company.
Concentrator, Noranda Mines.
Milling plant, Howey Gold Mine.
Milling plant, Pickle Crow Gold Mine.
Milling plant, East Malartic Mines.
Concentrator, Golden Manitou Mines.
Fuse-filling plant, Allied War Supplies, Project 24, at Scarborough, Ont.

That is the company which built the plant. These are the directors who were carrying on the work, and I submit with all deference that men with the experience they had were certainly competent to build the plant in the best way.

The hon. member has referred to a statement I made to the house, and to the fact that this had been known to him from January of this year.

Mr. MacNICOL: The contents of it.

Mr. GLEN: I hold in my hand the report of operations of the Abasand Oil Company. This is submitted by Mr. George B. Webster, vice-president and managing director, and it is dated October 10, 1945. The statement I read to the committee is based absolutely upon the contents of this report. It embodies only what they, as directors, in the fulfilment of their duty were reporting to the government in connection with operations. The statement I made is a condensed form of what is in the statement made by the president of the company. That statement was received only on October 10, 1945.

The position the company takes to-day is, as I have already said, set forth in a letter I received from the president this morning. During the course of the day I have had no opportunity to decide as to what the government's policy shall be. But I submit, as a business proposition, that with the position of the Alberta government to-day, with their interest to the extent that they are spending $250,000 on the plant to explore the possibilities of these sands, with the statement that has been made by myself, and the report of the directors, surely this is a subject for consideration, and one concerning which a decision as to policy should be made.

As I have said, the dominion government entered this project with a particular purpose in mind, namely, the supplying of oil which was badly needed during a certain period. That emergency has passed. If there is virtue in all that is said by the hon. member for Davenport, in the light of what he has said and in the light of the experience gained by the directors of the company, this is surely a matter for consideration and for decision later. That must necessarily be the position I shall take now—to view the whole matter again in the light of the statements that have been made in the house, and in the light of the report that has been submitted by the directors of the company, and also having in view very materially the attitude of the provincial government, which may desire to make representations to the dominion government in this matter.

If they are satisfied that these oils can be worked commercially, economically, then surely the province of Alberta might desire to make some representations in the matter. They have a considerable interest in the development. It is a matter for future consideration. That is as far as I can go to-night.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not wish to take the attention of the committee from the very interesting subject that has been before us for some time. However, I understand that this is a general discussion on the estimates for this department, and that I would be in order if I were to bring up some other matters. Those who wish to revert to this matter later on, and to continue the discussion will, I presume, be permitted to do so.

I might state briefly that I believe the subject of the tar sands at McMurray is one of great importance. I do not think the report is perhaps quite as satisfactory as many of us would like to see it. However, I hope the government will not abandon its interest in the matter. If the Alberta government continues, so much the better. Perhaps it would receive some assistance from the federal government in connection with financing its experiments in this project. I hope that they will see it gets the assistance, if it is required, and that the industry, if it proves to be an economical one, will be held for the use of the Canadian people.

The hon. member who has just criticized the proposal thought some private company could have made a great success of it. Then he proceeded to say that if he had been minister of mines and resources he could have struck oil easily. This would seem to indicate that either the government or a private company, in his opinion, could be successful. That being so, I trust the minister will stick to his job, and see to it that either the Alberta government or this government develops that great resource in the interests of the Canadian people. However, I am not an oil man, and I do not know the details of such a project. For that reason I shall not discuss the matter further at this time.

I would ask the minister a question on another matter connected with mining. Was a grant of money made some years ago—I think since the war began, but I am not sure—for the building of a mining road in the vicinity of Finlay Forks? I do not believe that the amount of money granted reached Finlay Forks. I should like to know how large the grant was and, if it was expended, how many miles of road were built. If money has already been spent in the building of the mining road in that vicinity, why should the road be abandoned before it is completed?

There is great need for such a road. Indeed, not only is there need from the point of view of mining, but there is a very great need in connection with joining up the Cariboo highway with the Alcan highway. It is only about sixty miles from Finlay Forks to the end of the Fort St. John-Hudson Hope road. If that sixty miles were built it would tap the great coal resources of Hudson Hope, and would be of service to the other mining interests. At the same time it would join up the Cariboo highway, which goes right on to Vancouver and the Alcan highway.

Would the minister give me his views on the proposal, and tell the committee whether it is the intention of the government further to extend grants for the building of mining roads in that vicinity?

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that a grant was given for the building of this road before the war, but that no money has been granted since the war. The hon. member will realize that that will be a post-war project, and his remarks will, of course, be considered in that light. We are hoping to have mining roads assisted now, as they were prior to the war. That is as far as I could go.

Mr. CROLL: I should like to deal for a few moments with the different aspects of the department, particularly immigration. I appreciate that the only immigration the people of Canada are interested in at the present time is the return of troops from overseas and then the return of wives and children.

Mr. GLEN: I do not wish to limit the discussion, but there is a vote which deals with immigration. Would it be asking too much to ask the hon. member if he would withhold his remarks until that vote is before the committee?

Mr. CROLL: I have no objection. I understood that we were getting far afield and I was going even farther afield.

Mr. GLEN: This is really a war item we are dealing with.

Mr. CROLL: I shall reserve all my rights.

Mr. GLEN: I shall take care that the hon. member has an opportunity.

Mr. MacNICOL: I listened with interest to what the minister said, and I should like to point out that the McClave system was in operation in that plant in 1944. In May, 1945, a supposedly new and improved system was put in operation, and the fire occurred on June 16, I believe. We are led to believe that in that short space of time this supposedly new and improved system, the Geco system, demonstrated its superiority.

Mr. GLEN: I have a comparison of the operations when we experimented with the McClave process and the Geco process. The comparative operations were from January 20 to February 4 and from February 21 to March 9; from March 10 to March 26; from April 24 to May 22; and from April 10 to April 12. There is another report which I received in October on the McClave and Geco operating efficiency. They were experimenting and testing as to the efficacy of either system, and one paragraph of the report states that in so far as is known the Geco flotation process is the simplest yet devised for the separation of bitumen from sand. Low temperatures are used. The high temperatures of other processes are offset by the rubbing action of sand particles in the agitation section of the Geco cells. It has been found that most of the middlings returned by the settlers were composed of sand particles from which the oil had not been removed. As the sand particles are under high heat during both separation and settling for many hours, it cannot be expected that the same treatment repeated will result in any further separation. On the other hand, middlings produced by the Geco process are composed of sand particles covered with oil which have mechanically come with the froth. The additional rubbing in the Geco middling cells cleans off the last of the oil.

Mr. MacNICOL: The McClave is as simple as anything could be. What could be more simple than water heated to 180 degrees and the agitation of the McClave quiet flotation tank in which sand goes to the bottom, oil comes to the top and then is taken off the same as is done in gold mining. I understood the minister to say that the Geco system operated at about 75 degrees. It appears to me that the hotter you have the water, the easier it will work because that is all that is required to disintegrate the sand. I doubt very much if water heated to 75 degrees will disintegrate the sand as rapidly as water heated to 180 degrees. The McClave system is in operation in the plants in the United States, and I am sure, if there is any other system better than the McClave system, they would be glad to know about it. The McClave system I am told is used in Brazil in working their large deposits. I am sure they would be glad to know that the government working at Fort McMurray and limiting itself to a few tests carried on almost before the plant was completed had decided that some new system is better.

It is not for me to say that the Geco system is not a good one. I hope it is a good system. I am going to advise the minister to make inquiries and get in touch with the best available men. I understand that next week there will be passing through Ottawa a man who is expert in the taking of oil from sands. If I happen to see him I am going to send him to the minister's office. I did not know that this matter was coming up to-night and I was not prepared to talk on it. However, I have some recollections of my past investigations and I was able to say something.

I remember when this came up in the house previously and the matter of hydrogenation was discussed. That is a simple system. Hydrogenation is simply the use of a catalyst to crack, to break up the molecules. It is applied to many different things. The Germans had it down to perfection and I suggested that we send someone to Germany to try to get one of the plants they had. If the minister is going to come into the house to ask for a vote of $750,000 to build a hydrogenation plant here, he should make a full investigation. I am going to send to the best engineers I can get in touch with in the United States, men who are qualified, to see whether we are to have the proper type of hydrogenation plant.

We have good men here; I met some of them at the plant on Booth street. Some of these men could be sent to Germany, and perhaps the department has already done so; if so, they should have reports as to whether it would be profitable for us to bring over a German hydrogenation plant. I will support any vote to make use of these sands.

Mr. GLEN: When we get to the vote I propose to discuss that matter.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is about all I have to say. We were told in 1943-44 by the Minister of Munitions and Supply that by the fall of 1943-44 I believe this country would recover from those sands with the plant checked up by Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company enough bitumen to sell to the United States government for the Alaska highway to pay for our investment. I should like to know why that was not carried out and why we went through all this other business to try to get oil.

Mr. WEBB: I should like to make a few general remarks on national parks, but if the minister would prefer that I hold them over until that item comes up and promises me a little leeway on it, I am perfectly satisfied to wait.

Mr. GLEN: Yes, most certainly. When that item comes up the hon. gentleman will have every opportunity.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am still not clear about just what is intended in regard to the plant. I gathered from the minister's remarks that the government was undecided whether to continue with the Abasand oil operation; yet in the war estimates there is an item of $400,000 for "remodelling and expansion of plant of Abasand Oils Limited." Would the minister explain whether that is part of the amount which is to be paid to the company along with the insurance money, in compensation for the plant burnt down, or is it to build another plant at government expense?

Mr. GLEN: The amount of $400,000 was for the payment of expenditures on the plant. All of it has not yet been expended. I think the hon. member was not in when I spoke before. I stated that in the light of the report which I had received from the company this morning and in view of the fact that the provincial government are now dealing themselves with the same project, it will be necessary for the government to decide what action shall be taken in regard to Abasand.

Mr. HARKNESS: What is the $400,000 for?

Mr. GLEN: That was for the continuance of experiments in the operation of the plant for the whole year.

Mr. HARKNESS: If the plant is not to be operated, will the $400,000 be appropriated?

Mr. GLEN: Some of the money has not yet been expended.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I read a statement by the president of the Standard Oil Company in New Jersey that he knows that there is a tremendous amount of oil there, and I have also read evidence given before one of the committees of the house last session when officials of the department had some doubt of the ultimate picture. I wonder if the minister knows that the Imperial Oil Company during the last twelve months conducted a lot of experiments there in charge of a friend of mine, Pearce, the son of William Pearce whom the hon. member for Davenport knows so well.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not know the gentleman at all.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. William Pearce of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who is the father of your watering scheme from the Saskatchewan river.

Mr. MacNICOL: At Banff park?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then I do not know him.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Imperial Oil have drilled over one hundred holes in the last twelve months, and this man has been in charge of the experimental diamond drilling done in that area. I am asking whether the government, in deciding whether or not to continue with these operations at Abasand and therefore spending money there, are familiar with the results which have been achieved by the drilling of over one hundred holes in that area by the Imperial Oil Company. I know that has been done because I have talked with the people who did it. Has the department gained any information from that drilling, aside from expert advice from those persons who look from above the ground —and I can see as far into the ground as anyone else? It should be a factor in helping the government to decide whether to continue its operations.

May I say to my hon. friends to my left that I am very proud that the provincial government of Alberta have abandoned faith in what the dominion government are doing and are trying on their own to find out what those sands contain. This may be said in all truth, that in the two years and more in which this government has been spending its money there it has found out exactly nothing; we are not a bit farther advanced than when we started. It does seem to me that the government, without being too proud, might consult other people who have done a bit of work there and whose information might help to determine government policy. Apparently the distinguished gentlemen whom the minister is now consulting have heard nothing of what I am telling them, but I know for a fact that over a hundred holes were drilled by the Imperial Oil Company in that area and they got a lot of information. Their difficulty is that you find there the oil-bearing sand and then a strata of mud. That is not the technical name for it, but it is mud. They are not far up the river from where the government was doing its work, and I am merely asking whether the government officials, being wise gentlemen, have taken into consideration the facts discovered by the Imperial Oil Company.

Mr. GLEN: I am informed of the drilling that has been done by the Imperial Oil Company. They did quite a large amount of drilling, but the department has done very much more drilling. Any information that the Imperial Oil have with regard to their drilling is known to our officers. As a matter of fact, $200,000 has been spent by us in drilling alone.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not pretend to be an authority, but I am sure that Imperial Oil Company, no matter what the amount of money spent, have drilled a great many more holes than the government ever thought of doing. I believe that to be the simple fact because that is all they were doing—just drilling these holes. I know what their difficulty was about six months ago. It was to determine whether in view of the unproductive sand that lies between the various oil-bearing strata which they struck admitted of commercially feasible operations. I am sorry even to seem to disagree with the minister. I am not saying that he is wrong, but I am much inclined to think there is some error in the information which he has innocently just given to the committee.

Mr. GLEN: I am informed that the facts are as I have stated them. We spent about $200,000 in drilling this year and have proved up 258,000,000 tons of sand in one area.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is very easy to say one has proven 258,000,000 tons, but have they found it in depth, without being interlarded with unproductive stuff, which means a great deal of course in the cost of operation? I am quite sure that the minister means to be correct, but did he say that they have proven 258,000,000 tons which are commercially feasible? That is the problem we have there. We know there is plenty of oil; there is no question about that. We know, for example, that there is plenty of gold in the world: you have it in the sea, you have it everywhere, but can you get it out commercially? Is the minister's statement to this committee this, that in this year they have proven 258,000,000 tons of commercially feasible oil sand in that area? I should be very much interested to know.

Mr. GLEN: The information I have given is that we have spent this $200,000 and have proved up 258,000,000 tons of sand averaging about 12 per cent. But the problem is as to its commercial value after it is processed; and that is the burden of the statement which I made in connection with the report on the Abasand company.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Just a word before this item passes. I do not intend to spend much time discussing this problem, because I have discussed it at great length on many other occasions.

Away back about 1912, I think, if I recall the history of it aright, the federal government first took a hand in investigating the feasibility of producing oil from the tar sands of Athabaska. Some $25,000 was spent at first in sending some of this tar sand over to England and having it analysed. The information which the federal government then got was negative. Since that time they have spent a good deal more money, the minister said about $200,000, and they have got to exactly the same place where they got about 1912; that is they have got nowhere.

As I said in the house a year ago, I was of the opinion that the federal government would not get very far in their experimentation with the Athabaska tar sand because, as my opinion was then and as it is now, they never took it seriously. That was a mistake. We should have gone ahead to develop it on a commercial basis. A year ago the urgency was great; the shortage of gasoline was extreme, and this country was in danger of defeat for lack of fuel oil. Yet this federal government did not see fit to go ahead and put forth the efforts which should have been put forth in developing the tar sands there. If an emergency such as the world war could not move them I am quite sure that a few speeches now will not move them.

The report which the minister has just given us is nothing more than I had expected. I am in hopes, though, that the provincial government will go ahead with their plans—of course they cannot do so on nearly the scale which is possible to the federal government—and will get somewhere. When I was in Edmonton last fall the provincial minister of public works, who was in charge of this operation, gave me the assurance that they were progressing very satisfactorily. It was his opinion then that the federal government had by their method sabotaged the Athabaska tar sands. That statement, which he made over a year ago, I read into Hansard when I was speaking here on the subject. It seems that the federal government are endeavouring to wash their hands of the whole thing, to get rid of it as quickly as possible. At the end of the minister's statement a while ago he said that the federal government were undecided whether to go on with it or not; that especially in view of the fact that the provincial government had gone into the field of investigation it might be better to wait and see what progress the provincial government would make before the dominion government incurred any further expense. Of course that is a very nice way of, shall I say, passing the buck to the province and now withdrawing gracefully from that field. The opportunity seems to have presented itself at the right time. I think the minister said that it would take something like $25 million to build a properly equipped pilot plant; that they were hesitant whether they should spend that money now in view of the provincial government's activity there, and that they would wait and see what the developments were.

Mr. GLEN: Not a pilot plant. A commercial plant.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I would suggest to the minister that, the federal government having spent a large amount of money without getting anywhere, it would be good business on their part, instead of spending $25 million there in the erection of a commercial plant, to give about $15 million of that amount to the government of Alberta to assist them in their research work. The provincial government of Alberta has an interest in that oil field and is determined to go ahead and see what can be done with it. My information is that satisfactory progress is being made. and I believe it would be a good financial investment and an important contribution for the federal government to give the provincial government $15 million to build a commercial plant. Added to the $250,000 which the province has already put into the operation it could make a worth-while investigation. It would not only help the federal government but aid this country in time of need. We need not bury our heads in the sand and think that all dangers of war have disappeared and that never again will there be a world war. Now is the time for us to begin to prepare ourselves to obtain those things which are necessary to the operation of the war and which were so scarce during that critical time a year ago. It would be both a gesture toward the safety of the country and a good business proposition from the point of view of the dominion if the federal government would give the province $15 million of that amount which they would otherwise have to spend for the erection of a commercial plant to carry on.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member for Bow River is not quite correct in stating that nothing has resulted from the expenditures of money by the dominion government. I stated, on the strength of a report given by the directors, that the expenditures made by the Abasand company in carrying out the investigations have clearly shown that the sands can be mined without any serious obstacles even under winter conditions, and with the powerful equipment that we use in large-scale operations no mining difficulties should be encountered. That was one of the problems they had to solve, and they did.

The investigation has resulted in the development of a new method of separating the bitumen from the sand.

That also had to be demonstrated in some way before the operations on these sands could be accomplished.

This process appears to have definite advantages over the hot water process formerly used, indicating lower costs, increased recoveries of bitumen from the sands and lower loss of the diluent used in the process. It has been shown also that for high recovery of bitumen and low diluent loss, the feed to the separation plant should consist of freshly mined unoxidized sand.

That may have cost a lot of money to obtain, but it was necessary information before anything could be done in the way of utilizing these sands, and it has been obtained

The hon. member would be interested in the fact that the minister, Hon. Mr. Fallow, has made a statement himself with regard to their test operations. The Edmonton Bulletin of November 15 last reports him as follows:

That extraction of oil from the McMurray sands on a commercial scale will be proved by test runs by next summer, is the hope of the Minister of Public Works, Hon. W. A. Fallow, who said Thursday that separation equipment will be ready for shipment to the plant soon after the spring break-up.

If the machinery is received from the manufacturer during the winter it will be assembled at the waterways railhead and sent down the river with ready-cut building material as soon as ice conditions permit.

Because it has been manufactured to specifications, construction of this equipment is slow, Mr. Fallow explained, but if it can be got to the plant by summer the first test runs will be made some time before the fall.

Mr. MacNICOL: Was that the summer of 1945?

Mr. GLEN: No, next summer. This statement was made on the 15th of November last.

Mr. MacNICOL: A year ago?

Mr. GLEN: 1945, November 15 of this year.

Mr. MacNICOL: That will be for the new plant?

Mr. GLEN: Yes. That is what Mr. Fallow, the minister, said on November 15 of this year. The hon. member therefore will note that all the experiments which have already been made in that plant by the dominion government, at that vast expenditure of money, are available to the government of Alberta. Probably in the light of the information obtained and the experience gained, it is what Mr. Fallow is building his hopes upon with regard to the separation plant. As I said at the beginning, and I repeat it now, this is a matter that will have to be considered by the government, having in view what we have already heard from the directors of the company, and taking into account the project which the provincial government proposes to undertake.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister mentioned three things which the federal government had discovered, one being that now, after this tremendous amount of money has been spent by the Dominion of Canada, it is found that these tar sands cannot be properly worked. A year ago I said that mining was one of the topics being discussed, and after several years of experimentation the federal government decided to employ a man from the United States. That man went there and in a matter of hours he was able to tell the operators how to mine it. The old process was to use machines with cups on them; when they ran against the bank and struck anything granite-like the cups were broken off and their technicians were so good that they did not know how to get around the obstacle. This man simply told them to use a stick of dynamite and blow it loose. That was one of the biggest factors in solving the problem. The other method of separating the liquids was to use either hot water or hydrogenation. It is my information that while the federal government was building its hopes on the hydrogenation process, that was not so practical as even the hot water, and all hon. members will remember that when the Abasand company had the plant they were using the hot-water method.

Mr. MacNICOL: One hundred and eighty degrees.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Yes, and in using that method the Abasand company was able to produce 400 barrels a day; but since the federal government started the use of the new method they have not been producing anything, or at any rate a very small quantity. It is true that the plant burned down and that held up operations.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): How many times did it burn down?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Once. It was pulled down once and burned down once. These are the great discoveries that the federal government has made after the expenditure of over $200,000, or in fact more than that—a million and a half all told. That is rather expensive in view of the results obtained, and it would be much better and more satisfactory if the federal government would get out of the field, which I think they are gracefully trying to do after making such a failure of the venture, and give the provincial government at least half of that $25,000,000 which it would cost them to erect a new commercial plant. Give that half to the provincial government and let them erect a really worth-while pilot plant and produce the oil. It has been proven by the Abasand company, under Mr. Ball's direction, that it can be done, and he was doing it on a small scale. All it needed was effort and ingenuity on the part of the federal government.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the federal government should give up the work they are doing there now, what is to happen to the investment in the plant that we have there? If that is intended, would it not be better, as the hon. member for Bow River suggested, to turn all this equipment over to the provincial government, with whatever records there may be, together with the proven work that the government has done? That is one question. Another question is this. If I heard the minister rightly when he was reading his report, the commercial development of oil sands has been proven, but the difficulty appears to be transportation of the product to where it can be commercially used. If that is the case, has the Department of Mines and Resources considered improving transportation facilities either by means of more reasonable freight rates or by what the hon. member for Davenport referred to as a pipeline from the field to Edmonton?

Mr. GLEN: The first question is, what will be done with the plant? Provision has been made that the company may purchase the plant for the amount of money the government has expended on it.

Mr JOHNSTON: Taking depreciation into account?

Mr. GLEN: The government of Canada will have the first option to take it over.

Mr. ROWE: Has the department had an offer from the company?

Mr. GLEN: No. All we have had is the report from the company's president stating that with an expenditure of $700,000 construction of the plant could be proceeded with and operations continued. That is the offer made at the moment, which I received only to-day.

Mr. MacNICOL: The report from the crown company?

Mr. GLEN: Yes. What was the other question?

Mr. MacINNIS: The other question was with regard to overcoming transportation difficulties.

Mr. GLEN: I did say that a pipeline would considerably reduce cost of production and make it much more profitable for any company to operate these sands, but there must be a large production in order to make it feasible. The hon. member spoke of its having been proven commercially. It has not been proved commercially possible. It has been proved physically possible but not commercially possible.

Mr. HERRIDGE: There is one question which I should like to ask, but I am not sure under which item it should come. Since the Prime Minister tabled the terms of reference to the international joint committee in March, 1943, in connection with the investigation of the possibilities of the Columbia river basin for the development of power, storage and conservation purposes, the people of my constituency of Kootenay West have been very much interested in this matter, which is of vital concern to them because they realize the possibilities in the future. I should like to ask the minister what work has been done and what progress has been made by the members of his staff in connection with the investigation into this question.

Mr. GLEN: At the moment that is in the hands of the Department of External Affairs, but next year I expect it will be transferred to the Department of Mines and Resources to be dealt with.

Mr. HARKNESS: I should like to ask the minister a simple question. After two years of experimentation and expert advice, obtained at considerable cost, does he, and do his advisers, consider that the development of the Fort McMurray tar sands is a feasible commercial propostion apart from transportation costs at the present time? In other words, do the results indicate that the undertaking is feasible? The minister said that at the present time, owing to transportation costs and various other factors, it probably was not.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member is asking a question which is not easy to answer, because I would not wish to say it was a commercially feasible proposition until I knew the result of the hydrogenation process. That is a matter which is being dealt with now. As a matter of fact, as was indicated by the hon. member for Davenport, investigations are being made with regard to hydrogenation; officers of the department have gone to Germany in order to find out what was done there. Doctor Boomer of Alberta, and Doctor Warren of the department went to Germany in order to study the latest methods applied in that country in connection with hydrogenation, since they used so much oil during the war, most of which was produced by this process. Unfortunately Doctor Boomer died shortly after his return and was able to make only a general report. Doctor Warren has made a report which now is being correlated. I hope that within a short time we shall have that report so that the officers will have an opportunity of studying it and coming to a conclusion as to the advisability of constructing the hydrogenation plant. As the hon. member knows, we have another vote for the building of a hydrogenation plant, and if it is constructed the tar sands will be the subject of investigation by our officers to ascertain whether that process is the proper one to adopt. I believe that answers the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. WRIGHT: Have the department any figures as to the volume of production that would be necessary at Fort McMurray before a pipeline to Edmonton would be feasible? That is, a certain volume of production would be required before it would pay to have a pipeline. Then I want to ask the minister one other question, having to do not with this particular development but with the development at Norman Wells. One company has been doing a great deal of exploration work there to determine the amount of oil that may be available in that district. I should like to ask the minister what liaison there is between his department and the company carrying on that work, and what information has been gained so far in regard to the oil reserves at Norman Wells. I think the committee would be interested in learning just what developments there have been so far.

Mr. GLEN: The reply to the first question, in regard to the volume of production necessary for a pipeline to Edmonton, is at least 10,000 barrels a day. As to the second question, we have had an engineer in the Norman Wells district all summer watching what Imperial Oil are doing, and we expect to have a complete report from him very shortly.

Mr. WRIGHT: You have not the report as yet?

Mr. GLEN: No, we have not. The report we have now, if I can summarize it briefly, is that a good deal of wild-catting has been done and they have not found oil outside the proven field.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: If we turn to the break-down of item 126, which is at page 106 of the estimates, we find quite a few matters turning up there for the first time, and I should like a little information on them from the minister. I daresay there is a reason for them, but I wish to know that reason. For instance, why does this department require three solicitors? Apparently it is the only department to require these people. Why a postmaster? Why so many purchasing agents, five in all? Why so many editors, four of them? They seem to require only one in the office of the king's printer. Why a head chauffeur, a chauffeur and an auto mechanic? I suppose what the head chauffeur cannot do, the ordinary chauffeur does, and what he cannot do, the auto mechanic does. It is interesting to see these things for the first time, and I should like to hear from the minister just what their purpose is.

Mr. GLEN: When the Department of Mines and Resources was constituted from the old department of the interior, four departments were joined together. Each of these departments had a solicitor, and they were taken over under the new set-up. With regard to the chauffeurs, we have twenty-three buildings in Ottawa. We have three trucks going all the time between these different buildings, on business of the department. We need them all, and we need the mechanic to keep the trucks in running order.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: What do the solicitors do?

Mr. GLEN: There are multitudinous matters in the department for which solicitors are needed. These men are earning their money, I can assure the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

Mines and geology branch—
128. Bureau of Mines—Bureau of Mines administration, $22,800.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Would the minister give us an outline of what this particular branch has been doing in the past year?

Mr. GLEN: There is a decrease of $933 in the war risk insurance. This is offset by an increase in salaries and cost of living bonus, and to provide for increased disbursements in items charged to the primary allotment of sundries.

Item agreed to.

Mines and geology branch—
129. Mineral resources investigations, $455,790.

Mr. HARKNESS: I do not know whether this is the proper time to bring up this matter, but under the war appropriation there is an item for the investigation of petroliferous deposits and areas. Could the minister give us some explanation as to what the $200,000 to be spent under that heading is to be used for, and particularly if it has to do with the operation of Wartime Oils, to cover their losses?

Mr. GLEN: The $200,000 was the drilling expense of which I spoke in reply to the hon member for Calgary West, in connection with the tar sands. That was under the war appropriation.

Mr. HARKNESS: That is $200,000 in addition to the $400,000?

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. HARKNESS: Then I wonder if the minister could give us any information in regard to Wartime Oils, the crown company which was engaged in exploratory work in the Turner valley area.

Mr. GLEN: No, I cannot, because that is not in my department. That is under the Minister of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to obtain from the minister a statement showing the various amounts it is anticipated will be expended in the different provinces under this item. I wish also to ascertain what has been done during the last year, particularly in Saskatchewan, in connection with the exploration or investigation of potential mineral areas. When this vote was up last year I asked this question and pointed out that an insignificant amount was being expended in Saskatchewan, which I think is one province in which something should be done toward providing some complementary industries alongside agriculture. The potential mineral resources are there. The private companies which during the past ten years pursued these investigations ceased those activities during the period of the war because of the demand for the development of areas and in consequence exploratory work was not undertaken by them, having regard to manpower shortages and the like.

Mr. GLEN: If I may interrupt the hon. member, perhaps the information he requires could be given under the vote for geological surveys. This item is for mineral resources investigations, and consists really of laboratory work done here in Ottawa. All mining throughout Canada receives the benefit of what is done here in Ottawa. What the hon. member has been speaking about might come under geological surveys, and I would be able to tell him what was done.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What does come under this head of mineral resources investigations?

Mr. GLEN: Under this vote are carried on office, laboratory and field investigations relating to metallic minerals, industrial minerals, fuels and mineral economics.

Laboratories are maintained for investigations on small scale and on semi-commercial scale. They are housed in several up-to-date buildings on Booth street, at Lydia street, in the city of Ottawa. The investment in buildings and equipment to December 31, 1943, totalled more than $1,750,000. As a group the laboratories are probably not equalled anywhere. The services provided are in demand by industry to an extent that cannot be met with the existing staff.

[Mr. Glen.]

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: This has nothing to do with field exploration?

Mr. GLEN: No, except from the general laboratory point of view. Industry gets the benefit of it.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is the work done by this branch for independent prospectors?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. HARKNESS: About one-quarter of this item is for temporary assistance. Of what does that consist?

Mr. GLEN: All the labouring staff in the mines laboratories.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Would the minister give us the details of the work which this branch has been doing in the past year? I went through the laboratory a couple of years ago, and I remember that at that time they were doing certain work in connection with coal. Could we have an idea of the work now being done, or what has been done during 1945?

Mr. GLEN: The anticipated activities for the year 1945-46 are as follows:

Physical metallurgy tests and investigations in reference to the production of war equipment, as required by the Department of National Defence (naval, army and air services), the Department of Munitions and Supply, and British missions in Canada and the United States; tests and investigational work on ores and industrial minerals, some of which are still classed as strategic and required for war use; studies and investigational work on fuels, including hydrogenation, for the coal controller and the royal commission on coal; and specialized economic studies pertaining to minerals and metals.

New premises for investigations in physical metallurgy (with a floor area of 32,345 square feet) were occupied in January, 1944, and to these there is to be an addition, now under construction, for the housing of metal forming equipment so necessary in investigations on the most efficient use of metals. Magnesium metal is likely to be the first one investigated.

Funds having been provided for a new hydrogenation laboratory, to produce about 200 gallons of gasoline a day, a considerable proportion of the time of the fuels division staff will necessarily be given to interior design of the building and the equipment to be housed therein.

It should be kept in mind that this "regular" vote, which now includes some $28,000 for cost of living bonus, will be supplemented because of the demands from war services for work which can be done in the bureau of mines, by $340,000 from the war appropriation.

Item agreed to.

Mines and geology branch—
131. To provide for the fabrication, erection and equippng of a hydrogenaton plant in the fuel research laboratories, $770,000.

Mr. HARKNESS: Is this the same hydrogenation plant which was put up to deal with the McMurray tar sands, or is it another one?

Mr. GLEN: This is the same one. The plant is not yet constructed.

Item agreed to.

Mines and geology branch—
133. Geological surveys, $341,000.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is this the item under which my question should have been asked?

Mr. GLEN: Yes. The hon. member for Lake Centre asked a question, the answer to which would come under this vote. Vote 132 is to provide for the administration of the bureau of geology and topography. This is to provide for administration of the bureau of geology and topography; the maintenance of a national aerial photographic library, studies arising therefrom and interpretations from aerial photographs for industry; the operation of a photographic laboratory for the performance of work related to map making and other branch activities; and the maintenance and operation of the geological survey library (upward of 80,000 volumes). In 1945-46 there is an increase of $3,000 in salaries and of $1,300 for purchase of air photographs to permit of purchase of photographs from companies engaged in exploration for oil. There is a decrease of $1,500 because of dropping of war risk insurance.

Then the hon. member for Lake Centre was asking as to the survey field parties in 1945-46. In the northwest territory there were five parties; in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, one; on the Yukon and Alaska highway, one; in British Columbia, seven; in Alberta, five; in Saskatchewan and Alberta, one; in Saskatchewan, two; in Manitoba, three; in Ontario, two; in Quebec, six; in New Brunswick, one; in Nova Scotia, two; various provinces, one. In all there were thirty-seven survey parties.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Do they still confine themselves to surface work?

Mr. GLEN: Then, the topographical field survey, 1945-46: vote 134, number of parties in Yukon and British Columbia, two; Northwest Territories, one; Alberta, four; Manitoba, one; Quebec, one; New Brunswick, one; Nova Scotia, two. This makes a total of twelve.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is there to-day any activity in the minister's branch leading to exploratory work which is taking place with a view to ascertaining where minerals are located.

Under the report of the reconstruction council, one of the activities which the government intended to undertake, with a view to providing employment, was exploratory work to be carried on as part of the general scheme of rehabilitation.

Is any provision being made by the minister's department for the training of men returning from overseas as prospectors, and the sending out of these prospecting parties in order to improve the economy? I have in mind particularly the province of Saskatchewan, where preliminary investigations have shown tremendous mineral wealth, which must be developed as a result of leadership from the federal government. It will not be developed provincially because the responsibility primarily must fall on the dominion government in any national scheme of rehabilitation. We in Saskatchewan have found ourselves in the position that during the war very little was spent in our province for industrial development. Only a few industries were opened.

With the coming of peace we are returning once again to an agricultural economy, although investigations show that our mineral wealth is such that with proper leadership from the department much could be done toward expanding our economy so as to include a mineral economy, with a consequent advantage to the province and to the dominion as a whole. I make the plea to the minister, because in recent years Saskatchewan has been left out of the picture in regard to industrial development, not only by his department but generally. If the government would undertake the ascertainment of the areas and the general location of areas peculiarly fitted to potential mineral development, it might well improve the economy of the province and assure a greater measure of employment and self-sufficiency in that direction.

Mr. GLEN: I have listened with interest to what the hon. member has said. As he may know, we have had great difficulty in getting geologists because, like other staffs, our staff has been depleted owing to the loss of men. Men are not being educated in this profession in sufficient numbers that we may hope in the immediate future to have many additional geologists whom we can send out into the field. This is a matter of great concern to the department and has been the subject of a good many conversations. What the hon. gentleman has said with regard to the post-war period is certainly ever present in the minds of the officers of my department.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to refer briefly to the Merritt district in British Columbia. I have on my desk two publications of the department under the minister's jurisdiction, one dated 1905 and the other 1915. I requested the department to let me have the latest information about surveys made in that area and they sent me a number of publications. These are the only ones in which any reference is made to the district. The first quotation I should like to make is from a report by an official of the department at that time, Doctor R. W. Ells, who made a survey of the Nicola coal basin in British Columbia. I should like to quote from page 47A of this report of 1905 as follows:

The length of the main coal basin of the Nicola-Coldwater area, from the foot of Nicola lake to the south limit on the Coldwater, in a southwest direction, is about ten miles, and the greatest breadth is about three miles. The western portion, from the forks of the Coldwater to the volcanics of Ten Mile creek or Lower Nicola, is about five miles, with an extension, north and south, along the creeks of about ten miles. The length of the eastern or Quilchena basin is about seven miles from north to south and the maximum breadth apparently about two and a half miles.

We have it established there that there is a substantial potential coal field in that area. The point I intend to make by my further quotation is that the surveys made of the area were never completed. Discussing the lay of the land, Doctor Ells says, as reported on page 48A of the same report:

Unfortunately, of several borings made during the season of 1904, none succeeded in penetrating the drift, and as the underlying rock was not reached, no light was afforded as to the structure of this part of the basin.

I quote only to show that there was established the presence of a coal field, but the report is not conclusive as to the economic value. In the report of 1915 Doctor Camsell is reported on page 281 as saying.

The importance of the district about Merritt depends primarily on the presence of oligocene rocks containing bituminous coals.

There were further reports on the coal seams which were found in that area, the thickness of one being reported as being thirteen feet six inches. But again no sufficient survey appears to have been made, and we find Doctor Ells reporting again on page 284 as follows:

In view of the widespread nature of the drift throughout the entire area the actual economic value of these areas can only be ascertained by a number of bore holes.

Further on in the same report he makes the statement that unfortunately none of those further surveys were made. From time to time a number of small mines have operated in that area, but none of them had sufficiently large financial resources behind them to make exhaustive surveys. While this was not the responsibility of the minister, during the war period certain directives were issued by the emergency coal production board. Admittedly that board was not concerned with the small operator; their main concern was to get the largest body of coal out as efficiently as they could. Nevertheless, owing in part to the directives issued by that board, one of the mines operating in that area was closed down.

This operator has undertakings that if he can show the presence of a large body of coal in that area he can interest other capital in the Merritt area and possibly start his mine again now that labour is becoming available. However, as I say, no complete survey has been made, and this man has not at his disposal sufficient capital to undertake the survey himself. I should like to make the same plea as was made by the hon. member for Lake Centre. At one time this was a prosperous community. There is the established presence of a large body of coal in that area. At present the area is largely agricultural and it requires some other industry to produce a balanced economy. I should like the minister to allocate some of these moneys so that an exhaustive geological survey of that area can be made to find out the potential economic resources of the coal fields there.

Mr. GLEN: I have listened to the hon. gentleman, but again may I say that our trouble is lack of expert men to cover the field. This is a large field, but I have noted what the hon. gentleman says and will give consideration to it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: As the hon. member for Lake Centre has shown, there is need for an extensive investigation by the Department of Mines and Resources into the mineral resources of Saskatchewan. I should like to ask for whatever assistance the government can give to the exploration of the mineral resources generally in that province. The area has already proven itself in the case of Flin Flon on the Manitoba border and Goldfields in the north where gold has been discovered. The northern parts of Saskatchewan are beginning to show that they are capable of producing fairly substantial resources in the way of minerals.

I would point out that in that province are some valuable gold mines, some glass sands, some volcanic ash and an inferior quality of lignite coal. Saskatchewan has gone ahead itself rather than as the hon. member for Lake Centre has said. The province was not looking upon this as an entirely federal responsibility; it is sending out investigators to look into the resources in the north. Saskatchewan considers that these natural resources are the birthright of the people and intends to go into the business of developing those resources to the very limit of the resources at its command.

I suppose topographical surveys would come under the next item, but I should like to know when the last geological survey of the province was made and whether it would be available to any one on request.

Mr. GLEN: Geological surveys?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I want data of the last geological survey, together with any revisions that have since been made.

Mr. GLEN: There were two altogether, one in Goldfields, a rare element investigation, and the other in Rotten Stone lake, in connection with metallic minerals.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What was the date?

Mr. GLEN: This summer, 1945.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has a general geological survey been made of the northern part of Saskatchewan and is the data completed?

Mr. GLEN: Just a portion of it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Are maps available?

Mr. MOORE: I should like to say one word in connection with the suggestion of the hon. member for Lake Centre, who asked if it was the intention of the government to train some of our returned men as prospectors in our northern regions. If that is to be done we should see that our returned men who act as prospectors receive better remuneration than prospectors have received in the past. It is very important that we should train men to act as mining prospectors; it will mean much to the development of the country, and I know of no class that have contributed more to the development of mining than the prospectors. It is doubtful if there is any other group that has received less remuneration for the work they have done. It is up to the department to lay early plans whereby our prospectors will receive more remuneration than they have received in the important industry of mining.

Item agreed to.

Lands, parks and forests branch—
137. Branch administration, $20,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Before the war there was a disposition on the part of the dominion government to put up dollar for dollar with the provinces for the purpose of building connecting roads from the international boundary to the provincial highways, largely for the purpose of enabling tourists to reach the parks. I should like the minister to tell the committee whether that is now in contemplation once more, because a good deal of interest is being taken in the tourist movement and a good deal of money has been spent in advertising the tourist business. It will certainly be of great assistance in British Columbia to get tourists from the various entry points on the international boundary up into the park.

Mr. GLEN: Post-war work and projects will be duly considered, and one that will certainly come up for consideration will be the building of roads leading to our parks to invite and encourage the tourist traffic.

Mr. STIRLING: It is not covered by this item?

Mr. GLEN: No.

Mr. WEBB: I should like to say a few words about our national parks under this item. I am particularly interested in it, because for many years I have been in a business in which I have been closely in contact with people who visit our parks from year to year and I have been very much impressed with their reports. I am prompted to speak on this item particularly as it relates to the tourist traffic.

On November 7 of this year, a Mr. A. O. Seymour, of Montreal, speaking at a meeting of the members of the Canadian Association of Tourists and Publicity Bureaux, predicted that some 26,000,000 United States anglers and hunters with more than four billion dollars to spend annually on their hobbies will be in the North American tourist market within a few years. This figure may or may not be exaggerated; I hope it is true, and in support of that I was pleased indeed to see a statement made by the minister of health at the same meeting outlining a new programme of federal activity in the tourist field, including the further development of our national parks. That is a commendable project. I do not think we can go too far in the expansion of our national parks across Canada, because they are so closely linked with the great tourist industry. I should like to bring before the members of the house some important facts which I believe will be of interest. Often we are tempted to become more or less complacent and sit back and think someone else will do the work. We do not regard our parks as important as they really are.

From a small beginning nearly sixty years ago Canada's national parks have expanded until to-day there are some twenty-six parks beckoning visitors to every province. They contain about 30,000 square miles, all under federal ownership and administration, and they are fairly well spread across Canada. with four in British Columbia, six in Alberta, one in Saskatchewan, two in Manitoba, five in Ontario, two in Quebec, one in New Brunswick, one in Prince Edward Island and four in Nova Scotia. In addition, I am told that recently some 10,000 square miles have been set aside adjacent to the Alaska highway in the Yukon territory, as well as two sites offered by the province of Quebec and one by the province of New Brunswick. I believe that discussions are proceeding at the present time for a national park to be located partly in the province of Ontario in my own constituency of Leeds and partly in New York state. If it becomes a reality it will to a great extent be unique, and with its beautiful setting be another link in this great chain of show places across Canada. I hope to have more to say about that later on. Our present system of parks, even without these proposed extensions, is one of the finest and largest in the world. The parks include regions of outstanding beauty, natural phenomena, historic sites, wild bird and animal life. They conserve the country's wild creatures under natural conditions, and provide places for vacationing, no matter in what phase of outdoor life the visitor may be interested. There is, however, a great lack of accommodation in some of these parks for the casual visitor of moderate means, and also a shortage of small roadside parks with sanitary and cooking facilities.

I submit that more small parks should be established. If I may use for example my own constituency of Leeds, there is the famous chain of Rideau lakes. People travel thousands of miles to fish and hunt and enjoy the beautiful scenery, but absolutely no national park exists in the area where tourists can feel free to recuperate and receive the hospitality of our people. In the area there are several ideal spots suitable for small, well-equipped parks, and I am sure there are many such places across Canada. I hope the government will give some consideration to these matters at the earliest opportunity.

To bring out my point, which is the importance of increasing the number of these parks across Canada, and especially the upkeep of those already in use, I am going again to refer to my own St. Lawrence islands national parks, principally located in my own constituency of Leeds. One of the most picturesque regions on the north American continent is the fifty-mile stretch of the St. Lawrence river between Kingston and Brockville. Along this section of great inland waterways its waters are studded with upwards of 1,700 beautiful islands varying in size from less than an acre to several square miles, and separated one from another by picturesque channels. These islands are clothed with groves of pine, oak, maple and birch, which rise above the bluffs of granite and limestone to cast shadows and deeper colour across the emerald waters. Nature has undoubtedly created here one of her masterpieces in river landscape.

For nearly three-quarters of a century the Thousand Islands, as they are called, have been a paradise for the summer visitor, so much so that most of the islands are now privately owned. However, as early as 1904 the government of Canada in their wisdom set aside as national recreational areas a number of these islands which now form the St. Lawrence Islands national park. At the present time the park is composed of thirteen islands accessible from rivers and towns along the St. Lawrence river and mainland area at Mallorytown landing. On many of these islands improvements have been carried out and conveniences provided for visitors. Attractively designed pavilions and shelters have been erected, outdoor camp stoves, tables, benches, and, as a rule, firewood provided, and wharves and boat landings constructed to facilitate approach. Several of these islands have bathing beaches, and excellent fishing may be enjoyed in the surrounding waters. These parks have for many years supplied recreation for thousands of people from many countries. From my summer camp I am able to see three of the islands which form this group of parks, and therefore I have a first-hand impression of the activity about them. Hundreds of boats anchor at the wharves, some just overnight, some for days, some for weeks, and many times when they are caught in a storm. Believe me, I have a pretty fair idea of the value of such parks in the St. Lawrence.

Having said this, I wish to bring before this committee the deplorable condition of these parks and docks at the present time. I believe the same condition applies to several of these parks across Canada. I do not offer this, to any great extent at least, in the way of criticism, because I am cognizant of the shortage of material and labour during the war years, also the high water which has taken its toll in the way of heavy damage to wharves. However, now that hostilities have ceased, I submit that no time should be lost in restoring these parks and wharves to their original usefulness and beauty. I believe this is urgent for, as I see it, we must be ready to receive and provide recreation and entertainment for the vast numbers of visitors moving from one province to another, and the tremendous influx of people from other countries which we are bound to have very shortly, now that the condition of peace again exists.

We must not look at this great tourist industry purely from a monetary point of view; we must meet these people with a sense of genuine welcome, and treat them in a realistic manner while they are our guests. Our national parks were established, in the words of one of our great statesmen, "to recuperate our people and to recoup our treasury." Let there be no possibility of misunderstandings, but let the greatest sense of friendship prevail with these people from all provinces and from all lands.

In conclusion, may I say that all across Canada nature has provided us with the most beautiful settings in the world for national parks and playgrounds—gifts that cannot be set by hands—and no government can or will sit idly by and allow any of these parks to deteriorate when a nominal expenditure will keep up and expand these beautiful show places that present a "welcome" to people of our own country, and particularly to people from other countries, which will leave with them a lasting remembrance of the greatest country on God's green earth—Canada!

Some time during the discussion I am sure the minister will be good enough to comment on the suggestions which I have made.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Just before we leave this item I should like to ask the minister a question. Does the federal government give any assistance for the development of our provincial parks, and, if not, is there any contemplated under dominion-provincial agreement?

Mr. GLEN: The best answer I can give the hon. member who has just spoken and to the hon. member for Leeds is to read a paragraph from the reference book for the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction with which I agree:

> The matter of coordinating dominion and provincial activities in the development of interprovincial and international tourist travel, mainly by means of establishing adequate graded facilities for the use of tourists; the development of national and provincial parks to the highest point of attractiveness consistent with the principles of conservation upon which they are based; and the devising and financing of publicity campaigns representing the experience and interests not only of the dominion but of all the provincial units, surely presents a large and profitable field to be studied and explored by all the interests concerned.

I can assure hon. gentlemen and the committee that the department is keen on establishing parks wherever possible. There is nothing it will not do to encourage such an establishment of parks in any of the provinces of Canada, knowing of course that the land must be surrendered and be given to the dominion by the provinces, and the dominion will then have charge of it. I know from my experience of Riding Mountain park in my own constituency the benefits of a national park to the whole of Manitoba. In particular, I know what an attraction it is to United States tourists. We are getting more and more of them all the time, and I am hoping that in the post-war period we shall have further attempts to make our parks so attractive that our tourist trade will be one of the biggest industries in Canada.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): As to the first part of my question—?

Mr. GLEN: No assistance is given to provincial parks.

Mr. BOUCHER: Could the minister give information as to what national parks there are in Ontario, where they are, what the acreage is, and to what extent the parks department of the federal government cooperate with that of the provincial government?

Mr. GLEN: There are three parks: Point Pelee, Ontario. Recreational area on lake Erie, with fine beaches and unique flora. Resting point for migratory birds. Established 1918; area, 6·04 square miles. Georgian Bay islands, Ontario. Thirty islands in Georgian bay. Unique formations on flowerpot island. Recreational area. Established 1929; area, 5·37 square miles. St. Lawrence islands, Ontario. Mainland area, and thirteen islands in "Thousand Islands" group with recreational facilities. Reserved 1904; established 1914; area, 185·6 acres. Then there are the historic sites, but that is not the question.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Can the minister give us the numbers that have gone through the national parks in the past year?

Mr. GLEN: I shall have to get that information.

Mr. BOUCHER: While the deputy is getting that information, I would urge the minister, on behalf of Ontario, to give a little more consideration to the province so far as park sites are concerned. I do not believe that the parks described by the minister are anything like the extent that they should be in a province bordering on the United States, with the vast number of tourists passing through Ontario. I believe it would greatly benefit not only Ontario but the dominion as well if a much greater effort were made by the department at Ottawa to foster tourist trade and sports of various kinds in Ontario, by the establishment of many more national parks than we have now and also by greater cooperation with the province in the direction of tourists to Ontario. We have a large area near to the United States, bordering on the great centres of that country, and it would be a profitable investment if the dominion were to do much more than it has done so far, because I do not believe that the dominion government has done its proper share in the establishment and maintenance of parks in Ontario in comparison with other provinces. If you calculate the acreage and the expenditures made in other provinces and compare those figures with similar figures in Ontario you will find that it has been pretty well left to the Ontario government to maintain our national parks. There are many places in the province where national parks could be established which would be a real source of revenue to the people of Canada as well as to the residents of Ontario. I should like the minister to give that point his consideration.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. member knows that for any national park to be established in Ontario the land must be offered by the province to the dominion. I will consider what he has said in this regard. As regards the question asked by the hon. member for Souris, I have here a list of parks, with attendance. Would it be in order for me to put that list on Hansard, or do hon. members wish to have me read it?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I would be willing to have it put on Hansard. It would give useful information.

Mr. GLEN: The hon. gentleman is no doubt more interested in the fact that Riding Mountain, in which he is interested, was in 1945 the second largest in attendance in Canada. The list is as follows:

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have extensive notes, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to say something about national parks, but since I do not want to be accused of reading my speech I may say that my notes are: "Banff National park, Indians, fish." I gather that Indians come a little later, so that I will give my notes to the hon. member for Lake Centre and he will work on them tonight and do a good job on them to-morrow. What I intend to say is in a sense critical, but I begin by thanking the minister and his staff for meeting the hon. member for Calgary East and myself shortly after I came here and being very generous to us with the information which they had. I spent two hours very profitably with Mr. Smart yesterday, or perhaps Saturday, and I wish to say how much I appreciate the honest endeavour which was made to answer the questions that were given to me to ask by those persons who reside at Banff. Banff being in my constituency—and I hope they are all listening—I have to say something on their behalf.

I think it fair to make this criticism. I realize thoroughly that during the war period there was little opportunity for the dominion government to do anything for that park, and I assume that had equal application elsewhere. I have looked through these estimates and have sought in vain, although perhaps I missed it, for some assistance to tourist traffic; and that applies, I think, generally to all the parks we have.

It has been well said that tourists are becoming perhaps our second major industry. It may be that I have overlooked the vote; if so, we will cover it at the proper time. With respect to Banff, it is in close proximity to the place where I live and have lived for a long time. It is a place I have gone to often, and its transformation in recent years is something of which this parliament might well take cognizance. I mean this. Years ago these places were summer resorts, but that day has gone. To-day it is impossible to get even a room in which one may live in Banff, as a result of the introduction of this new art called in Norway "She-ing", but which I prefer to describe by our own expression—skiing.

An hon. MEMBER: Use a combination.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You do not use combinations in skis. The hon. gentleman has an old pair of spring skates. Standing by this hotel over here yesterday, Sunday—that of course will not be appreciated by Quebec and Ontario members because none of them are here then—I watched people disgorging from that place by hundreds—and you have not enough snow to fill a hollow tooth. Nevertheless they were enjoying themselves. So that winter and summer these parks of ours are an asset which the department—and I say this with great respect—has so far failed to appreciate fully.

I mention in these extensive notes which, as I said a moment ago, I gave to the hon. member for Lake Centre, the business of fish, and here I do criticize the administration of the parks. We have a fish hatchery at Banff, the only one in that park. They have endeavoured to cover a great deal of territory. It may be they were assisted by the government of Alberta; I do not know. However, I have been fishing for a long time, and I have no unkind remarks to make to you fellows who fish with live minnows or frogs or worms or anything of that sort, but you do miss the most scientific thing in the world, next to golf or billiards; that is, to cast a proper fly in a proper spot. I have been in Kamloops, from which my young friend over here comes, though he has been here for months and has not even mentioned this, and there they have the greatest fly-fishing the world knows. We should have it on this side of the Rocky mountains. Why do we not? Because in the Banff national park sufficient attention has not been paid to it. One need only study the number of licences issued to fishermen in the United States to see what an immense attraction it would be; but as a federal department we have been using only that little hatchery. It has been working hard, and is operated by splendid people, but we have been supplying fish to other portions of Alberta which should be looked after by the province.

Let us go along a step further. I hope no one will think I am talking nonsense while speaking of fish in the House of Commons, because I know how stupid and foolish fishermen are supposed to be, since I am one of them myself. We will go miles and miles in order to drop a fly in a certain spot; then things happen, and who knows who shall succeed?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How long are they?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Perhaps I had better answer that question. In Peter Hope lake, thirty-five miles north of Kamloops, you can take Kamloops trout just about the length my hon. friend indicated; they will weigh six pounds and you can get them on the fly. In one afternoon my wife and I took six fish weighing thirty and a half pounds. That was the greatest afternoon of my life, not excepting the time I have spent in this parliament. But come over to our side of the mountains and it is different, with the exception of one lake where you pack forty-two miles—and that is a big two days' pack—and where you can catch three-pound cutthroats. Other than that I know of no place outside of the mountains where you can catch any fish, certainly no place that can be approached by people who drive a motor car and like to catch a fish or two. Just before coming here in September, my wife and I packed with the greatest guide in the world, a man by the name of Jim Boyce, into the Skoki country. We fished Baker lake and Red Deer lake. The fish in Baker lake were about the size indicated by my hon. friend a moment ago. We caught quite a number, but nothing over two pounds. The answer is very simple; it is failure to have regard to feed conditions, and to stock according to them. The hon. member for Kamloops will know that about eighty-five miles south of his city—I almost called it a town—there is a lake called Penask lake where a man by the name of Dole, the pineapple Dole, built a club. I was foolish enough to join at $50 a year, which meant that the fish I caught cost me about $50 a pound.

In that part of the country we have the greatest opportunity to attract tourists. It has been often figured out that tourists—and

I do not care whether they come in a jalopy or in a big car—leave about $7 per day per person, and that goes to our people here engaged in feeding them, selling gasoline, bedding people down and all that sort of thing. I would wish that the department might get a new inspiration, might have vision to see this grand picture, this great thing that may be done. Some of you bait fishermen may say, well, once you make these places available, then you fish them out and there are no fish left. I can give an example to prove that statement completely wrong. Twelve miles north of Kamloops there is a little lake twelve miles long and not more that three-quarters of a mile wide at any point. It has been intensively fished for thirty odd years. The commission in British Columbia regard that lake and call it their test tube, for the reason that they know pretty well the approximate number of fish that come out, and the number of fish they put in. As I say, it has been intensively fished for thirty odd years; I have been there for fifteen years without a single break. You can catch fish on the fly there roughly from May 24 to the end of the second week in June and then again after September 15. I wish the hon. member for Davenport were here, because he would take you up one side of that lake and down the other without missing a single tree as he went along. I mention that particular lake, because the theory that lakes get fished out is quite true if you do not restock. That lake is restocked by the British Columbia authorities. Try to get a room there this summer; you will fail unless you have made reservations a long time ahead.

I am going back now to the town of Banff; and may I say that with a new minister I trust we shall have a new inspiration with respect to our national parks. These remarks are not made in criticism of Mr. Smart or any of those other gentlemen associated with him. I know what their difficulties are. When a man sets up a business in Banff he goes to live in the cheapest place in the world. He does not pay very much for his lot, on which he gets a long lease. Now you have a town planner who is going to make it a city beautiful, or something like that. A building will be torn down there; a sign will be taken off over there, and I know it is going to be wonderful. But we have there what is called an advisory council, which was formed when the late Sir James Lougheed was minister of the interior and that place came under his department. I have spent some time with those people in Banff. My hon. friends to my left will be happy to know, I am sure, that more of the people of Banff voted for me than all the other candidates put together, and there were four against me there—so that I am very happy to tell you what wonderful people they are.

I hope that the minister, inspired as he will be with his new job and the great future that opens before him, will do something, though frankly I am unable to tell what to do, to end the dissatisfaction that exists as between the local council and the government officials. I am not criticizing Mr. P. J. Jennings, a very old friend who is the superintendent, but I am sure this thing has become so big that you cannot operate the Banff national park from two thousand miles away. There must be a little more delegation of authority and more active cooperation given those who have been elected by their people and who think they know something about the problems of Banff.

May I put it in this way. I am not suggesting that they are right; I do not know. I know they have grievances, although I am inclined to think this will apply to other parts as well. They may be wrong. I am happy to learn that Mr. Smart is going out there in February. Yesterday I was able to write them and say, "You have put all this on my shoulders, but Mr. Smart will be there in February, so jump on his back and see how you get along with him." I told them what a delightful gentleman he was—and of course they already knew it. But I told him to take the matter up with them.

That is what I am trying to get at. I do think—well, I do not even think; I know that parks are a national problem, because of the tourist traffic. I know that the department wants to get United States dollars, and the department has done something. It has joined with the province of Alberta in building two highways leading to Banff national park. It seems to me a liaison could be arranged, through the hon. member who leads the Social Credit party. Let us have a lot more of that partnership, by which even now so much has been done. And yet it is so little, having regard to the main objective.

The complaint to-day in Banff is that you cannot get a lot, or lease one, under any circumstances. I appreciate the minister's difficulties. Water services and light services have to be laid on. I know that the minister is giving this sympathetic consideration, and that the veterans affairs committee—and the Minister of Veterans Affairs knows all about this—made a splendid recommendation the other day to the Minister of Mines and Resources. Our returned chaps have not a chance there, because the assistance which is given in other places really has no application. However, I know that those are little difficulties which will be ironed out.

Now, having talked about fish—and I am not joking; I know how important it is; there is not any doubt about that—

An hon. MEMBER: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I heard someone say "eleven o'clock", and I am sure it was not the clock that said it.

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I will be only a minute or two—but perhaps I had better stop there. I might get my second wind if I were permitted to go on.

An hon. MEMBER: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Very well; it is eleven o'clock. Perhaps to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock you will hear something, Mr. Chairman.

Item stands.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. TUCKER

RESOLUTION OF CANADIAN UKRAINIAN ASSOCIATION RESPECTING SPEECH IN HOUSE ON SEPTEMBER 26

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In this morning's Ottawa Citizen there is a headline which reads: "Score speeches by three M.P.'s on Ukrainians." The article then goes on to say:

> Protesting "slanders and falsehoods" which, it claimed, are being disseminated through speeches by Walter Tucker, F. Zaplitny and A. Hlynka in the House of Commons, the Canadian Ukrainian Association has passed a resolution which states that the views expressed by these men are not those of the majority of Canadian Ukrainian people.

The article continues:

> The association points out in the resolution that a body with headquarters in Winnipeg, the Canadian Ukrainian committee, is collecting money to be used to aid "these nazi collaborationists and traitors to settle in Canada."

It goes on to say:

> In the opinion of the association, the three members of parliament mentioned in the resolution, "actually speak on behalf of fascist and semi-fascist committees among the Ukrainian Canadians who have had previous connections with the nazi in Germany."

This refers to a speech which I made in this house on September 26, 1945, in reference to that subject. I have uttered no slanders and falsehoods. I merely asked that our troops have nothing to do with the forcible repatriation, into Soviet hands, of displaced Ukrainians whose only offence was that they had worked for and favoured a free Ukraine and who feared their fate if they fell into Soviet hands. I pointed out that no one knew for certain what was happening behind the iron curtain that divides Europe to-day and that if this policy were maintained we should not forcibly repatriate these people to what they claimed might be a terrible and undeserved fate.

The Canadian Ukrainian committee is headed by a distinguished Canadian clergyman. Its members are all loyal and distinguished Canadians. It supported, and the bulk of Ukrainians supported, our war effort, not only after Russia was attacked in 1941 but in the dark days of 1940, when those who followed the communist line were attacking the war as an imperialist war and doing their best to hinder our war effort.

When I speak on behalf of this committee, representing as it does the vast bulk of Canadians of Ukrainian origin in Canada, I do not speak "on behalf of fascist and semi-fascist committees among Ukrainian Canadians who have had previous connections with the nazis in Germany." I deny this categorically. I say from long experience that the members of this committee are loyal and true Canadians. They have proved their loyalty. If they have sympathy with their kith and kin in Europe and seek to assist them in their misery, that does not make them pro-nazi or fascist.

Ever since I have spoken on behalf of these people I have been the victim of a slanderous smear campaign. The object is clear. It is to intimidate all public men from saying anything distasteful to the communists, no matter how true or justified it may be. I call on all responsible newspapers to study the situation and not lend themselves to these tactics in any way. I would say in conclusion it is an attempt subtly to undermine freedom of speech in Canada. It will not succeed in this free country.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF LOANS AND VALUE OF SECURITIES HELD UNDER SECTION 22

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 217, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Aggregate amount of guarantees.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to know whether the government consider that they have sufficient power, whether by order in council or otherwise, to deal with similar credits to the United Kingdom if any such question should arise between now and next session. I understand that the Minister of Finance made a reference to this yesterday, but having regard to the negotiations now going on at Washington there is a chance, perhaps even a likelihood, that matters of great interest to us will arise in the interval. Do the government consider that it is a question that will not arise; or if it should arise, do they consider there is power now to deal with it by order in council and therefore it is not a question that should be discussed during the present session?

Mr. ILSLEY: There are powers under the Export Credits Insurance Act to make a loan or loans to the United Kingdom, but the financial limits of the government's powers are such that we do not propose to avail ourselves of the powers in that act to make a loan to the United Kingdom. We are not asking for enough money to give us the scope that we shall require. As I said yesterday, we have not discussed in any real sense a loan from Canada to the United Kingdom, the terms of the loan, the size of the loan or anything of the kind. We shall undoubtedly be discussing those terms before very long.

The only powers that we have to advance money on behalf of the United Kingdom to producers in Canada are the powers contained in section 3 of the War Appropriation Act, and we are making advances under section 3 of the War Appropriation Act at the present time. It will be understood that we owe the United Kingdom money on various accounts, and they owe us money on various accounts. These many and complicated matters are being examined and studied, but in the meantime I do not anticipate that we shall be embarrassed by the lack of any statutory power other than section 3 of the War Appropriation Act to make loans to the United Kingdom.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What is the limitation on that?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is the amount of the appropriations of the acts. There was a war appropriation act last spring, and there is also the War Expenditures and Demobilization Act which was passed recently. The total money which has been appropriated under these acts is something like $3,300 million, if I remember correctly, but of course a large part of that has been used up for other purposes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have no desire to cause any delay this morning, but might I suggest this. It is not immediately apparent to me why we have no opportunity to discuss somewhat further the situation vis-à-vis the United Kingdom, which seems to me even more important than the one we are discussing now. Would it be satisfactory to the minister if it were understood that this matter might be brought up and perhaps some further questions asked, let us say during the estimates of the Department of Finance, or on some occasion of the kind?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, I will agree.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In the alternative, I might as well ask the minister if he will say a word further about it now. This may be the appropriate time. Let me repeat what I said a moment ago. Does the minister not agree that the situation with regard to the United Kingdom is more important, perhaps overwhelmingly more important, than any other situation which we have? He has explained to us that it does not come to any considerable extent under this act, because although there is a small residue of power under the act they do not propose to use it there.

The minister has explained to us the situation generally under the War Appropriations Act. Frankly I have been disturbed, as I suppose everyone in this house has been disturbed, by what has been going on at Washington. The situation there is fraught with results whose importance it is hard to find words to express. I hear people talk blithely about our keeping up our national income. They speak of the national income we have had during the war, and I sometimes wonder if the people who talk in that strain are taking into account the way that national income arose. I do not propose to take time on that. I only propose to say that for that reason I think this bill is of tremendous importance. I suppose we should bluntly face the fact that there is the possibility that we are giving this money away. Why are we giving it? Because we do not dare at the present time to do anything else. We do not dare to refrain from taking measures which will temporarily help to sustain our export trade. We hope that a degree of sanity in world trade matters may emerge within the next few months. Apart from humanitarian considerations, which I take for granted, we are moved by the hope that we are going to get an open door in these countries for our trade; or, putting it a little differently, that we are staking people who will be good customers.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I might ask another question while I am on my feet. I have no desire that we should take a huckstering or technical attitude. The minister spoke yesterday and, if he then said all he wants to say, I will not press the point, but I take it that a very important question arises as to what agreements or understandings we have with those countries to which we are proposing to make these large advances. In the case of France the advances are very great indeed. The French are pretty hard and realistic people in their trading arrangements, and I assume we have given full thought to that.

But I come back to my first point—one, it seems to me, of overwhelming importance—and that is, where are we going to stand with regard to the United Kingdom at the end of the negotiations now going on at Washington and which, week after week, we hoped to hear were successfully terminated The well known United States correspondent, Herbert L. Matthews, writing from London the other day, spoke gloomily about it and said that even if the agreement went through, the British would feel that they had been dealt with in a rather harsh manner, and that they might not go on with the Bretton Woods agreement. The Bretton Woods agreement may prove to be a matter of life and death to people like ourselves.

Mr. LOW: Mostly death.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I would ask the minister again if he does not think that something more should be said on this matter and an opportunity given to the house, before it adjourns, to discuss the tremendously important question of what we are prepared to do and what we should do in the matter of loans and credits and the like. In the case of Great Britain they are not, as I understand it, really covered by this bill at all.

Mr. COLDWELL: This morning it was intimated over the air that within the next forty-eight hours some anouncement might be expected from Washington or London regarding the negotiations at Washington. The way in which the matter was worded leads me to believe that the announcement might be of a kind which may involve the discussion here of our own interest in this matter. I think what has been said by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is very much to the point in that respect. I do not go all the way with him in some of the other points he raised, but I do go all the way with him in that there should be an opening for a discussion in this house, and we should understand whether or not there is sufficient power to do what we may find it not only in the interest of humanity but in our own interest to do within the next few months. The point made in that connection is, indeed, one which the minister should consider.

I do not know what agreements or understandings are involved in this proposed expenditure. Perhaps the house should be more fully informed. To be told, as we were a few moments ago, that the war appropriation and other measures would give the government under the act some $3,300 million, is not sufficient information upon which we can base any opinion. I would urge upon the minister, as suggested by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, that he provide an opportunity for discussion should the occasion arise, as it may well arise. My thought is that if an announcement is made from London and Washington within the next forty-eight hours it may not be that an agreement has been reached, but something quite different.

I am more convinced than ever that the house ought to see to it that the Bretton Woods agreement gets a thorough investigation in the banking and commerce committee before we are asked to vote on it here. I do not think that this is the place to give it the investigation it requires. This is not the place to call the departmental officials whom we must call in order to understand all the implications of that agreement. While on balance we may have to support and accept it, I am much disturbed about it. I am not convinced, and I do not like to be put in the position of having to approve agreements of this sort without having much more information than we have at the present time. However, I rose to concur in the point of view expressed by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario in respect to this particular bill.

Mr. McMASTER: Perhaps when the minister answers the questions asked by the last two speakers he will answer one which I should like to ask. It is a very considerable sum which he is asking us to consent to have guaranteed, and I should like to know whether the government has a policy as to what exports shall be subject to this guarantee. It is easy enough to give stuff away, or sell it cheaply, or sell it to one who cannot pay. I should not expect, for instance, that automobiles would be guaranteed. I suppose the government has in mind some products for export which will benefit Canada to a great extent while also benefiting very much the people who receive them. I hope the minister while he is on his feet will state what is the policy of the government in that regard.

Mr. ILSLEY: I said that the limit contained in the War Appropriation Act of $3,300 million limited our powers to make advances on behalf of other governments as agent. There is no such limit, I find. The power to advance there is to make advances out of unappropriated money. Under the foreign exchange order, there is power to buy sterling as well which would furnish the United Kingdom with Canadian dollars to enable them to make purchases. I wanted to make these corrections so as to keep what I say strictly accurate.

Mr. COLDWELL: That gives a little better picture.

Mr. ILSLEY: It gives a little more freedom.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what I mean.

Mr. ILSLEY: Whether it is too much is for the house to say, but I do not think it is. There are many uncompleted transactions with the British. We shall be paying bills to the British for one thing or another for the next few months, and all sorts of accounts are being adjusted. We have claims against them and they have claims against us, and it would be impossible for me with any definiteness to describe that situation. Mutual aid was concluded on the second day of September, and we knew that with these accounts against each other, and power to make advances, under section 3 of the War Appropriation Act, as agent of the British government we would be able to keep trade flowing until we could make a definite agreement with the United Kingdom. I do not know what agreement they are making with the United States government. As soon as that agreement is made we shall look at it. We have great interest in such an agreement, and the agreement we make will have to take that into account. I am willing to give the committee any information I have when the estimates of the Department of Finance are under consideration, but the government cannot give now a statement of its intentions with regard to size of loan or terms of loan to the United Kingdom, and will not be able to do so for some time. I should think the situation would be clarified before next session, and I anticipate that it will be necessary to have a special act authorizing financial arrangements with the United Kingdom.

As the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario says, that is a matter that is more important than our dealings with any other country in the world, with the possible exception of the United States, our dealings with them being on a different basis entirely—the basis of each one paying for what he buys and neither lending to the other, and so on.

It would be premature for me to say anything definite about what we intend or expect to do or can do with the United Kingdom. I agree with what the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario says; in fact, from what I recollect of what he says, I agree with it all. It is of tremendous importance that we should make satisfactory arrangements with the United Kingdom. It is of tremendous importance that we should keep trade flowing both ways with them. I do not intend to deal with that, except in passing, under this bill, which is designed to authorize loans to countries other than those in the sterling area. I indicated the possibility that some parts of the sterling area might avail themselves of the privileges of this bill, and in that connection I mentioned India, but I have nothing definite in mind.

Yesterday I said—and this touches upon the point raised by the member for Muskoka-Ontario—that in our dealings with France we had stipulated for most favoured nation treatment, and that it was a term of the agreement. I find that the matter is referred to only in correspondence between the two countries, in a letter which I wrote to the representatives of the government of France as follows:

> At this time, when Canada will be assisting France to increase substantially its imports from Canada for purposes of reconstruction, and when the Canadian government hopes to see an increase in exports from France to Canada, it seems to me appropriate to suggest that Canada and France might agree to extend to one another most favoured nation treatment in commercial policy. Such action would, I think, impress upon the people both of France and of Canada our intention to develop future trade between the two countries on a mutually advantageous basis.

I went on to say that I understood the Department of External Affairs would welcome an opportunity of discussing the possibility of such action with representatives of that government at an early convenient day. The relevant passage in the reply is as follows:

> As regards your suggestion concerning the most favoured nation clause, this is a question which in due course will be discussed between the representatives of our countries, but in conformity with the general principles included in the lend-lease master agreement, which is well known to you, and that France has signed, I can now assure you that the French government will collaborate with the Canadian government in concerted action to elminate all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce and to the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers.

It is true that in these loan agreements we have not tied up these countries with regard to tariff treatment or similar treatment on Canadian exports into those countries, nor do I think it would be practicable to do so. The subject matter of these loan agreements is certain goods which will be ordered for the next two or three years, and of course we need have no worry about these goods because they are buying them and taking them into their own country. So that the question of tariff treatment of these goods is not one of indifference to us, though it need not give us any worry, inasmuch as they are borrowing money to buy the goods.

To get a long-term agreement covering other goods during a subsequent period would be a very difficult task. It would involve long commercial negotiations, and the view we have taken is that such commercial negotiations should rest on their own feet. Our policy is to seek and try to obtain reciprocal reductions in trade barriers. The concessions that we would make would be tariff reductions, and the concessions we would seek would be tariff reductions in consideration of our reductions in tariff, without attempting the almost impossible task now of trying to tie up with these loans trade negotiations involving tariff treatment on a wide range of products coming into this country as well as going into those countries.

It may be that some principle should be laid down. In fact, principles were laid down in our mutual aid agreements with these other countries, but apart from general principles I do not think it would be practicable to incorporate in these loan agreements trade agreements covering goods other than the goods they intend to buy with these moneys.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I perhaps gave the minister a slight misunderstanding of what was in my mind. I should be loath to see us tie up with individual agreements, because, if I understand tariff matters rightly, every time you enter into a bilateral agreement with some country it raises difficulties in relation to the broad question of multilateral trade, which seems to me, frankly, the only solution for this country. I wish to reiterate a point I made a few minutes ago. I have been disturbed to find that apparently we have regarded ourselves as nothing more than interested spectators of what has been going on at Washington. To me, we are so vitally concerned in this that I have never been able to feel that we were merely interested spectators.

I inferred from what the minister said that we had nobody actually sitting in at the Washington conference. I had thought that we had some economic observers, and I hoped that they were more than observers because I have always felt that we Canadians ought to be able to do more to bring Britain and the United States together than anybody else. We have talked a lot on that and I think with considerable justification. We have talked a lot about our influence in the world. I think we should have more influence on what is going on in Washington now. We should let it be known. If other hon. members feel as deeply concerned about what is going on in Washington as I do, I think that the house should go on record in the matter. It may be that what we say here would not fall entirely on deaf ears. We played a considerable part in the war; Britain has acknowledged that.

I think the time has come for us not to ask a quid pro quo but to try to play a very considerable part in connection with these trade negotiations which are going on. I want to make my position clear. We must have multilateral trade so that world trade will move, let us say, as freely as it did in the first decade of this century. I am not talking about free trade; that raises all kinds of difficulties. I am talking about a reasonable degree of freedom. Without it the prospect for this country is very bleak. I think we had better be specific about it. I hear people chant about full employment in a kind of incantation; they think that by repeating it we are going to get it. Well, many of the people who talk so glibly about full employment do not seem to understand the full implication of it.

I understand that yesterday someone said: "Why do not we take the money that it is proposed to use for these advances and use it for social services?" The reason we are making these advances is to build up foreign trade so as to give us an income which will enable us to have social services. I hope I have not got the cart before the horse. Let us be frank about this. Let us not make fools of ourselves. Let us look at it in a realistic way and not forget the influence which I hope this country has. I suggest to the committee that there ought to be a debate on this matter in the house. If my views are the views of the members of the house then I think it is desirable that the people of Britain should know it and know it in time, because they are not going to disregard what the people of Canada think.

I believe, and I say it again, with somewhat tiresome iteration, that multilateral trade is essential to this country. If we do not get multilateral trade we face economic reorganization. I was talking to a very competent economic friend of mine yesterday. He told me he had been discussing these matters with a man whom you might describe as an apostle of the new economic thinking. My friend asked the man to be specific and I will also be specific. Suppose we increase the consumption in this country by as much as we possibly can by internal arrangements; how much of the present wheat production will be consumed in Canada? The utmost that we can expect to consume in this country would be about twenty-five per cent of our production. If I am wrong in that, hon. gentlemen to my left will correct me. Am I wrong? If I am right, then where is the remainder of the wheat to go? If we are to have a tied-up regional world where are we to export if we are not in the sterling bloc, into which incidentally we do not fit. Let anyone in the house tell me where. I want to use moderate language. If there is a bloc and all that it entails it is a serious thing for this country. I think we should omit nothing to prevent this. I do not think that a day or two devoted to this talk in parliament would be wasted. If other hon. members present have the views I hold, and to which I have been giving expression, their voice would be heard in Britain, and the views we hold would be known.

Mr. MacINNIS: Perhaps a debate on this question would be worth while, even though hon. members do not hold the views of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. Views have interest and relevancy although they may differ. After all, if all hon. members held the same views I suppose there would be no need of a debate.

A question was raised as to the power which the government may have to make financial and trade agreements with the United Kingdom. To my mind that is a very important question. I do not believe that we can settle the exact terms of that at the present moment, first because of the short time that this parliament expects to be sitting, and second because of the unsettled state of world affairs and the arrangement between ourselves and the United Kingdom. But this house should do something before we adjourn to make certain that the government has sufficient power to deal with any situations which may arise between the time of prorogation and the opening of a new session. If the government has that authority, then I should feel quite satisfied to leave it at that. In fact I am convinced that in any case we shall have to leave it at that, because of the factors I have indicated. I have no objection to the matter being discussed, but I think it will be left in that position.

A moment ago the hon. member raised a point in regard to the conversations going on in Washington between the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States, and indicated that Canada should have an observer at this conference. To me that appears to be a peculiar doctrine in our international affairs if Canada is an autonomous nation. While we may have ties with the United Kingdom, I am sure that those ties do not give us any right to sit in and observe what goes on between the United Kingdom and any other country with which the United Kingdom does business.

An hon. MEMBER: That is wrong.

Mr. MacINNIS: All right; then I should like to hear the right view. If Canada should be sitting in on this conference, then there is no reason in the world why she should not sit in on the conference between the United Kingdom and China, the United Kingdom and Brazil, the United Kingdom and the Argentine or the United Kingdom and any other country. I have no objection to this country having observers at the conference if we are asked so to do, but I am satisfied that it would not be the proper thing for Canada to assert that we should sit in at the conference.

The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario said he had heard someone ask this question: "Why could we not expend for social services in Canada the moneys we are now expending to promote trade with other countries?" Perhaps that version of what he heard arose out of what I said in the house yesterday. Let me first of all assure the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario that I gave my wholehearted support to the export credits insurance bill and supported it, I think, on reasonable grounds. When he spoke a moment ago he said it was likely that we would be giving this money away. He then qualified that by saying that there was a possibility of our giving it away. If we are giving it away, if it is a matter of chance, is there any reason why we cannot give the same amount of money in social services to the people of Canada who need it? There is not. In the past as we looked across from Canada to some other country we have had the hope—I do not know whether we have got over it or not—that we could sell our goods there. We always looked on those countries as a place where we could sell something. There are very fine people in China, we said, and we wondered if we could sell them something. There were very fine people in Brazil, and we wondered if we could sell them something. We always thought of them in terms of what we could sell them. That day has passed. We still have to think of them in terms of what we can sell them, but we have to think of them also in terms of what we can exchange with them in order that we may build up their economy, and by building up their economy we are assuring our prosperity and theirs. If it is not done on that basis it will not be done at all. That is what we must be concerned with from now on. As a matter of fact the old system of capitalist trade was a system which destroyed itself.

When we come to make trade arrangements and bring about freer trade with the rest of the world I am convinced that the people whom we shall find most opposed to that freer trade are the very people who are supporting the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. I have already seen signs of that in the Financial Post, in a statement to the effect that we in Canada could not expect to accept imports to pay for our exports, that the exports would have to be paid for by Canadian loans. There may be certain ways in which that can be done without giving our goods away, but if there are such ways I do not know of them. I do not believe that there are any. If we do not accept either directly or indirectly value for value for the goods which we export, then we are giving those goods away. I am in favour of discussions and debates on this matter, but there are certain fundamental facts which we shall have to keep continually in our minds while those discussions are being carried on.

Mr. QUELCH: I find myself in accord with what the last speaker has said. I could not help but be amazed at the implications of the statement of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. Every once in a while we hear members of the house talk about a large national income and the comparatively small population of the country. They emphasize the fact that it would be impossible for a small population to consume the total production of the country. Then invariably they bring up the question of wheat and try to make people believe that some hon. members suggest we in this country can consume our total production of wheat. Well, in the first place let us remember that the national income is only around nine billion dollars and the population around twelve million. That works out to an average income of around $3,000 per family of four. Does anybody suggest that a family of four could not consume an income of $3,000 a year if they had the opportunity? Nobody suggests that we should consume all the wheat we produce, but we do believe that the people of this country can consume the imports that could be brought back to Canada in exchange for that wheat. We feel that that is the right thing to do, and we have an interest in trying to build up large foreign investments as a result of the sale of that surplus wheat, investments that can pay for losses in the future.

I quite agree that we have a moral obligation, resulting from the war, to help countries which have been overrun by the enemy. That is an entirely different question. Any contribution we make to mitigate the suffering those people have had to endure as a result of the war should be dealt with in an entirely different way from the method adopted in this measure. I know that to a certain extent UNRRA has helped, but the operations of UNRRA have been greatly reduced since the first year it was brought into operation. Originally it was to help to rehabilitate and reconstruct certain areas, but by resolution 12, passed at Atlantic City, it was made into a straight relief organization rather than a relief and rehabilitation organization. The point I am interested in in regard to this bill is exactly how do we provide for repayment of those loans. I take it they are to be repaid in Canadian funds. Do we acknowledge the responsibility of accepting imports to provide the people with Canadian funds to pay the bill? There is a joint obligation. There is no use in giving another country credit in Canada to buy our goods unless we are also prepared to accept credit later in their country to buy their goods. I agree that we need multilateral agreements, but there is nothing to prevent us from trading our credit for the credit of another country on a multilateral basis. The important point is that there should be trade balances. All nations should try to balance their trade. You cannot balance trade by merely balancing the money resulting from the overdrafts as suggested by Bretton Woods. Bretton Woods in reality is nothing more than merely a device to try to bring about balances of payment by having large scale overdrafts. It is interesting to know what is going to happen when each country has exceeded its quota by two hundred per cent.

I should like to know from the minister what main point of disagreement there was between the Department of Finance and Professor Keynes when he was in this country. A good deal of publicity was given to the fact that the main point of disagreement was that England wanted to have the right to repay with her exports whatever loans she got from Canada; in other words, that England was interested only in getting goods from this country that we would be willing to take payment for by accepting imports from England. I think everybody will recognize that that is a sound basis for trade. I should like to know from the minister whether or not that was one of the main points of argument.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, there was no point of disagreement. Certainly that matter was not up for discussion at all.

Mr. QUELCH: It was given prominence in the press.

Mr. ILSLEY: I know; I cannot help that.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister say whether or not Canada did participate in the negotiations which have been going on in Washington between the United States and Great Britain, and whether or not we had somebody observing those negotiations?

Mr. ILSLEY: No. The negotiations at Washington are not trade negotiations; they are financial negotiations. We had no observer present. We were not there because we were not invited to be there. Those were financial negotiations btween two countries, just as we are carrying on negotiations, on a much smaller scale, of course, with other countries at which we have no other observers present.

Mr. HACKETT: If we can rely upon the press, those negotiations involved trade. In any event it is astonishing to most people who know of the close relationship which has existed between Britain, the United States and Canada, to learn that we were not present at negotiations which may have a far-reaching effect upon our trade and our whole economic welfare. The hon. member for Vancouver East suggested that inasmuch as Canada is an autonomous country there was no reason for its being present at negotiations between two other autonomous countries. Well, that is a general proposition which may be defended in a general way. I submit that when the relationship is that which has existed between this country and Great Britain, when we have pledged our future in support of a trade upon which our very lifeblood depends, it is not satisfactory to learn that these negotiations have been going on without our knowledge and may be terminated to our utter detriment and undoing.

Does the minister not consider that Canada's interests are such that it should be intimated to the high contracting parties that we should be heard before any definite conclusions are arrived at? If we cannot export our wares, if we cannot export our wheat, then truly a blight will fall on the prosperity and welfare of this country. Our friends to my left, the hon. member for Vancouver East and the hon. member for Acadia, make some reference to the principles to which they give adherence. That is their right and privilege, but the world at the present time is organized under a different system, and for the present—

Mr. MacINNIS: The world at the present time is not organized at all.

Mr. HACKETT: It is possible that we may be on the fringe of chaos, but that is no reason to find fault with those who are attempting to redeem us from that situation. When there is in the offing a trade treaty which may upset the welfare, the prosperity and the influence of Canada, Canada should be represented when the negotiations are in progress. We hear so much about friendship, we hear so much about community of interest throughout the world, and yet if we are to believe the press, negotiations which may be vital to our existence have been going on in the capital of a friendly power between friendly powers and allies, and we are not consulted. There has been an oversight somewhere. I am inclined to place the blame on the doorstep of the government whose privilege and duty it is to watch over the destiny and welfare of Canada.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, there has been no oversight whatever on the part of the government. Canada's views with regard to trade are well known. They are well known as the result of public statements by this government and they are well known as a result of representations made to the British government, of which I think the United States government is well aware. I want to emphasize what I said before. These negotiations that are going on in Washington are financial negotiations.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister deny that while they may have started as financial negotiations they went on and became trade negotiations? I was credibly informed, and I think it was stated in the press, that subsequent to the beginning of the financial negotiations British trade experts had been brought out.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know whether that is so or not, but I am satisfied that no trade negotiations of any consequence in which Canada has an interest will go on without Canada being a participant. We have no power to bore our way into discussions between the United States and the United Kingdom. Australia has the same right that we have; South Africa has the same right; New Zealand has the same right; many other countries have exactly the same rights. Those autonomous dominions which are part of the sterling area, I was going to say had a greater interest financially in the negotiations than we have. This is not a conference of a number of nations; it is financial negotiations between the United Kingdom and the United States.

With regard to our trade views, with regard to the desirability of multilateralism as contrasted with bilateralism, the desirability of keeping world tariffs low and of eliminating or avoiding the imposition of quotas and embargoes and exchange controls which prevent the flow of trade, our position has been stated repeatedly to the United Kingdom, both to delegations that came here and publicly. The delegation that went to Washington came to Ottawa first. We cannot properly do anything more than we are doing at the present time.

There may be a lot of nervous people around who are afraid that the United Kingdom is going to sell us down the river. I do not expect that they will, but if they do, then we shall have to adapt ourselves to that situation. We cannot run around outside a closed door down there clamouring to be let in to say something about a deal that is being made between the United Kingdom and the United States.

Mr. HACKETT: The door should not be closed.

Mr. ILSLEY: Let us consider what our position is. We have to act with a fair measure of self-respect and dignity in these matters, and with some regard to usage and propriety.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Mr. Chairman, I think it might be helpful if we changed the setting at Washington just for a moment. Suppose this conference were between Russia and the United States. Would either of those countries look with favour upon Brazil or China or Canada or South Africa or any other country sitting in on their conference? It does not seem to me that Canada is in any different position with respect to this present conference than if the conference were between the United States and any other country.

Referring to one other aspect of the situation that has been dealt with, namely, this credit of $750,000,000, I rather view it in this way. Supposing a private individual who was in difficulty and hard circumstances arranged a loan from a friend. It would not be expected that that loan would be paid back immediately. The loan would be made for the purpose of tiding him over for a period. Then when he had recovered himself through his own efforts he might be able to resume repayments. This is exactly what our attitude should be with respect to the credits we grant at this time, not only to Great Britain and France but to various other countries. We should not expect that they will be able to give us goods immediately in return for the goods we supply them. As they are able to rebuild themselves in the years to come we hope that they will be able to repay the loan, either in goods or in cash. I simply suggest that this is a measure which will help out those nations in the meantime. We all realize that the future welfare of the world depends upon the prosperity not only of our own nation but of all other nations.

Mr. FRASER: I do not think that any member of the house said that the credits should be paid back at once, as suggested by the hon. member—none in this group anyway; far from it.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Not in your group, but it was suggested in another part of the house that almost immediately we should receive goods in return for our exports.

Mr. FRASER: I think the main concern at the present time is that we protect the interests of the Canadian worker and farmer. That is what we have to think about, in granting these loans to other countries. But I rose to ask a question. On November 22 I asked the following question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

> I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on what Premier Attlee said when he was here on Monday, namely, that it was not true that His Majesty's government in Great Britain had told the Canadian government that Canada could do business with the United Kingdom and the sterling area only if they erected plants there. I would ask what information the Department of Trade and Commerce has in regard to the United Kingdom refusing to grant import licences to ship Canadian goods to the United Kingdom.

I think this question should be answered before we dispose of this bill. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. MacKINNON: I stated in reply that certain representations were being made by this government to the United Kingdom government. That has been done but so far we have received no reply. When we receive the information I shall be able to make a statement to the house.

Mr. FRASER: On November 23, the following day, the minister said:

> I wish to advise the house that at the very earliest opportunity I intend to make a statement on the question raised by the hon. member for Peterborough West, which is attracting a great deal of attention not only in the house but throughout Canada generally. More completely to inform the house upon the situation, certain communications are being carried on, and just as soon as they can be brought to finality I propose to make a statement to the house.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is still the situation.

Mr. FRASER: I think the minister will agree that it is important that we should have a definite understanding with Great Britain before this bill goes through. I personally suggest that we pass only part of the bill now and let the rest stand over until next session.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have tried repeatedly to make it clear that we do not intend to use this bill for the purpose of making loans to Great Britain. I do not see why the hon. gentleman connects the two matters.

Mr. FRASER: The reason I connect them is this. If we do not know where we stand with Great Britain, we certainly do not know where we stand with any other country.

Mr. FULTON: I wish to refer to a question I raised yesterday after the minister had made a general statement on the resolution and intimated that it was not contemplated to use the extended provisions of this act to conclude agreements within the sterling area. I asked the minister if he would state or give the house some indication of what he had in mind with regard to restoring trade relations between Canada and other empire countries exclusive of Great Britain. I had in mind particularly Australia and New Zealand. The minister in his statement had made a reference to India. This whole question is tied up closely, I feel, with the discussion which has taken place here this morning on the economic negotiations between the United Kingdom and the United States. The minister attempted to make the point that Canada should not be running around outside a closed door, and he said that Australia and New Zealand had not asked to be included in those negotiations.

But Canada is in an entirely different position from Australia and New Zealand, which are in the sterling bloc. Canada, while not definitely tied to the dollar bloc, has largely a dollar economy, but at the same time we are very much concerned in and closely allied with the sterling bloc, and I think we should be consulted. As the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has said, if we are not consulted we should make our views known in the negotiations that are being carried on between the sterling bloc and the dollar bloc, because we are in a peculiar dual position. The minister put us in a wrong position when he said that we should not run around outside a closed door. Neither Britain nor the United States would put us in that position; indeed it exists only in the minister's mind. He should give a fair answer to the representations that have been made on this subject.

Mr. JACKMAN: This bill is of great importance. In involves $650,000,000, in addition to the $100,000,000 already set up under the Export Credits Insurance Act. That $650,000,000 is an amount larger than our total pre-war budget, and yet this measure comes up for consideration late in the session and we are expected to pass upon it in very short order. It is impossible in such a short time, or by the methods at present adopted, to give matters of this financial magnitude the consideration they deserve.

The minister said that the Washington conference was largely a financial conference. Finance is but the bookkeeping of trade, and if we are to believe the many dispatches which have appeared in the newspapers in regard to the conference, now long drawn out, in Washington between the British and the Americans, trade certainly has entered into their discussions in very large measure. As the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario have said, we in Canada are in a peculiar position, because, while not of the sterling area but more largely of the dollar area, we are greatly concerned with the ability of the sterling area to take our goods and to pay for them with goods in return.

Some statements have been made in regard to whether or not we should have bilateral or multilateral trade. I believe what we need in this country is trade, and whether we get it under one form or another is not of particular concern. What we need is the ability to make goods, to provide jobs for our people, and to have those goods bought and paid for by other countries where necessary and that we get something in return. One thing we have surely learned in the last twenty-five years is that we cannot receive money in return. The only way that a foreign country can pay for Canadian goods is by our taking goods in return, although that may not be by a pure bilateral process but through a three-cornered movement or otherwise.

Mention has also been made of the fact that perhaps Canada could use some of the labour and materials which will go into the export of goods which will be financed for the time being through this act by using these goods for our own needs. I believe in foreign trade; Canada, as the fourth largest foreign trader in the world, must rely to a large extent upon that means, for our whole economy —our food economy particularly—and our natural resources must find an outlet for the time being in other great population centres of the world, and we must rely therefore on foreign trade; yet foreign trade is never the equal of domestic trade. If we can build up domestic trade, trade which we can to some extent control, we are much better off. Let us make no mistake about the bill now before us. It is to finance trade largely with countries outside the sterling area which have been the largest consumers of our products, and which have bought far more from us than we have ever bought from them; yet they were able to balance their accounts through their other world trading. If there are at the present time unsatisfied needs of the Canadian people, and we are now suggesting that we should develop exports in certain directions, and we do not know whether those exports will be of a permanent nature or whether this measure is a mere stop-gap, let us carefully consider in this committee whether or not some of the man-power and materials which would go to the furnishing of these goods might not be better applied, not only in the short run but in the long run, to the production of more housing in this country, to satisfy more of the needs of the people of Canada, and to raising their standard of living.

As I have said, domestic trade is infinitely better than foreign trade. We of course must rely to a large extent on foreign trade, but where we can put the emphasis on domestic trade let us do it rather than encourage stop-gap foreign trade, if that is what this should be.

To revert to my original topic, while we may not have been invited to sit in or to be a partner in the British-American conference at present going on in Washington, and we cannot demand entrance, yet I believe that if suitable representations were made we would not find the door so closed that we should not know what was going on there. The discussions have a most direct bearing on the future of this country and on jobs for our people. If we are to grant large credits to foreign countries to take our goods for the time being, what are we to get in return? Shall we obtain any assurances that they will give us long-term trading agreements to take certain of our export surpluses, or are we simply going to find, after we have given them a certain amount to tide over the present time, that we have accomplished nothing, whereas we might have been satisfying the wants of our own people?

I point out that this bill is not, as is the UNRRA bill, a contribution for the relief of distressed areas in Europe. This, as I understand it, is purely a business bill having to do with trade relationships. If we find that we cannot export so much of our present and pre-war surpluses as formerly, it will be necessary gradually, and with as little hardship as possible, to reorientate our own economy and provide more things which our own people can use, rather than continue to have these great export surpluses which we now have in certain commodities.

It is very difficult for us, with all the duties we have as members of this house, to give to this measure the consideration to which it is entitled. I believe that we must apply ourselves to this problem, because of the incursion of parliament and government into the activities of the people, their daily lives and their whole economy depending upon government action to some extent, for direction at least. How different that is from the old days, when everyone believed that the less governments had to do with business the better. Now, every party in any parliamentary system has taken upon itself the responsibility for job creation and for the prosperity of the country. We must realize that our duties have changed in nature, and it is about time we changed our methods of procedure. We cannot possibly give this measure the consideration it requires if we are to do it in the formal body of a committee of the house or in the house itself. We must adopt more of the United States system of committees, if you like—perhaps not in its extended form; but we must be able to have before us those who are experts on these particular subjects, those who attend conferences with other nations with whom we are dealing, so that we may have a fair idea of what all the implications are and not just hit the high spots, which often is as much as is done in the house upon the most important measures. I would therefore suggest to the minister that consideration be given to bringing these matters before a suitable committee so that full representations may be made before that body, and adequate knowledge may be had before we come in this house to discuss such important measures.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I did not agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East when he said he did not think Canada ought to be in the capacity of observer in connection with what is going on at Washington at the present time. It is definitely my belief that we ought to have the best observers down there that we possibly can have, because of what is happening to-day, because of all the influences which are being brought to bear from all over, aiming at the disintegration of the British empire through the breaking up of the system of inter-empire preferences. That system was a great advantage to Canada, and empire trading preferences are one of the things which hold the empire together. I believe it is most important that we make it clear that we are not consenting parties to the disintegration of the British empire through the breaking up of our trade arrangements. Canada is not in the sterling bloc, but individual Canadians have a tremendous number of frozen credits in the sterling bloc and they cannot do anything about it. We are therefore as much interested in the sterling bloc as we are in the dollar bloc; indeed we are more interested than any other of the nations of the commonwealth, and therefore we ought to see to it that competent observers are watching these proceedings very closely.

Mr. GREEN: There are one or two questions, Mr. Chairman, which I should like to direct through you to the minister about the policy with regard to export trade.

The first has to do with mutual aid. This present bill provides to a degree for the continuation of mutual aid, and there was a statement made some three days ago by the Canadian ambassador to the United States reported in the press of December 1, under the heading:

Pearson says Canada wants no settlement for mutual aid goods.

That heading may not represent accurately the statement which was made. However, the first paragraph of the report reads as follows:
