CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FIRST MEETING OF BOARD—TABLING OF LIST OF DIRECTORS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that following proclamation of the Canada Development Corporation Act, the first meeting of directors of the corporation was held today in Ottawa. Under the legislation the government must designate the initial head office. This is to be at Ottawa, but the government has made known to the board of directors its wish to see the location of the head office moved to Vancouver, British Columbia, within two years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: At this morning's meeting, the directors elected Mr. H. Anthony Hampson as chairman of the board, and Mr. M. A. Crowe as president.

Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2), I should like to table the list of directors, together with biographical notes.

AGRICULTURE

LOSSES SUSTAINED BY CERTAIN QUEBEC PRODUCERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I would like to move a motion on an important and urgent matter.

A study and measures are urgently needed in order to help hog, egg or turkey producers whose returns for their production were not high enough during the past year, and who were forced to pay for the feed they used prices out of proportion with the selling price of their production, because of an inadequate cereal policy in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, producers in Quebec alone having incurred a $16 million deficit in 1971.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin):

That the House immediately undertakes a study on the whole matter of the deficit incurred in the last twelve months by hog, egg or turkey producers in Quebec, and on the government cereal policy in order to invite the Department of Agriculture of Canada to co-operate financially with the government of Quebec in giving producers compensation for losses incurred and avoiding numerous bankruptcies in that area.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion moved by the Hon. member. There must be unanimous consent of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimity, the motion cannot be put.

YOUTH

PROPOSED STANDING COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. I do so, Mr. Speaker, in light of a proposal over the weekend by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) regarding what is called a domestic peace corps style program as well as the necessity to study the report of the task force on youth. In light of this, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That this House establish a Standing Committee on Youth in order that there be a continuous study of steps and proposals that might be undertaken for the development and participation of young people in our society.

Mr. Speaker: This motion is also proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion will not be put at this time.

Questions

FINANCE

LOAN PROGRAM TO CREATE JOBS—TABLING OF INFORMATION ON METHOD OF CALCULATING PROVINCIAL ALLOCATIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on October 28 the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) asked a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) regarding the method of calculating provincial allocation of the $160 million employment loan fund. I would like to table copies of statements in English and French setting forth the basis.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BAY OF FUNDY—ATLANTIC TIDAL POWER

Question No. 1,640—Mr. Coates:

1. Have any meetings been held since July 1, 1971, between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or any of his officials, and the Premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, or their representatives, with regard to the terms of reference covering the re-examination of the 1969 Fundy Tidal Programming Board Report and, if so (a) on what dates were such meetings held (b) who attended the meetings?

2. Have satisfactory terms of reference been agreed to by the three governments involved and, if so (a) on what date were they finalized (b) what are the terms of reference?

3. (a) What are the names of the individuals who will carry out the re-examination (b) what are their respective positions (c) were they involved in the original examination?

4. If satisfactory terms of reference have been agreed to, has work started on the re-examination and if no agreement has been reached, will a meeting be held by the parties involved to discuss the matter and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. There have been no meetings between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or any federal officials and Premiers or officials of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to discuss terms of reference pertaining to a proposed review of the 1969 Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board Report.

2 and 3. No agreement has yet been reached on the terms of reference for a Review Board. Draft terms of reference were proposed by the federal government on April 7, 1971. The Premiers of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have recently written to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources outlining specific proposals for setting up of a tidal power Board of Review including suggestions relating to membership; the full membership has however not as yet been selected.

4. It is anticipated that the proposed Board of Review will meet at an early date following naming of its membership.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE—ECONOMIC FORECASTING

Question No. 1,664—Mr. Saltsman:

1. How many professional economists, who are public servants, are currently engaged in economic forecasting in the Department of Finance?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. What are their classification levels and salary ranges?

3. How many consultants and others engaged under contract were retained by the Department of Finance for economic forecasting in the fiscal year 1970-71?

4. What were the names of such consultants and how much were they paid in the fiscal year 1970-71?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1, 2, 3 and 4. For the purposes of this question economic forecasting may be defined as the projection of the aggregate condition of the economy. In the Department of Finance the Economic Analysis Division has prime responsibility for this function and 16 officers devote at least some portion of their time to this activity. Of this group, six public servants are currently engaged full-time in the activity at the following levels and salary ranges, and no consultants or contract personnel were retained for this purpose in the fiscal year 1970-71.

Classification	Number	Salary Range
Economist-Statistician 1	4	$ 6,960–$14,192
Economist-Statistician 2	1	15,236– 20,557

2. How many of these farmers are presently receiving (a) unemployment insurance (b) social welfare?

3. Did farmers assist in the compilation of the Task Force Report on Agriculture and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several departments as follows: 1. Information not available.

2. (a) and (b) Information not available.

3. Farmers and farmers' organizations were consulted on a regular basis by the Task Force members and participated in large numbers (over 50 per cent of delegates) in a Canadian Congress on Agriculture which was convened by the Task Force just before their final report was drafted.

PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,902—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

How many people are presently employed in the Privy Council Office and how many obtained their positions following a normal public service competition for the openings available?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): A total of 238 personnel are employed in the Privy Council Office. Appointments were made in accordance with the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act. Officer appointments are made, according to merit, by the Public Service Commission through competition or other processes of selection from within the Public Service or from outside. Support staff positions are filled by the Privy Council Office under delegated staffing authority from the Public Service Commission and are subject to audit. New support staff members are recruited from outside the Public Service, on merit, through referrals by the local Canada Manpower Centres unless the Regional Office of the Public Service Commission advises that there are qualified candidates available from lay-off lists, lateral transfer lists or interdepartmental competitions.

CANADOME PROGRAM

Question No. 1,904—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

What is being done with the Canadome program during the winter, and are there any plans to make these facilities available for primary and secondary schools during the school year?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of State): The three Canadome displays will be held in storage during the winter months, but material printed for distribution in the Canadomes will continue to be distributed. Plans for the utilization of the Canadomes next year have not yet been finalized.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—WELFARE AND PAY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 2,126—Mr. Forrestall:

Will there be any increase in costs to CAF personnel before the end of 1972 with respect to meals, SDB insurance rates, mess dues, clothing allowances or costs and, if so, by what amounts?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Meals—The charges for prepared rations in the Canadian Forces are adjusted periodically contingent on current food costs. The next adjustment will be effective December 1971.

SDB Insurance Rates—There will be no increase before the end of 1972 with respect to SDB insurance rates which have been in effect since the plan was restructured in 1966.

Mess Dues—The amount paid by each member for mess dues is set by a vote of the members of each mess at a general mess meeting, subject to the approval of the commanding officers. It will differ between messes according to their particular needs.

Clothing Allowances or Costs—Clothing prices are normally reviewed annually and adjustments are made as required to reflect the latest procurement costs. A study is presently under way to determine whether there should be any adjustments to the prices charged for clothing and to determine whether the rate of Clothing Upkeep Allowance should be changed. As the results of this study will not be available until the spring of 1972, it is not possible to forecast what the net result of any changes in clothing prices or allowances will be.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE CENTRES

Question No. 1,931—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many meteorological service centres are there in Canada and where is each one located?

2. Does the government intend to expand the meteorological service and, if so, in what way?

3. To what extent is meteorological information obtained by satellites?

4. To what extent does Canada integrate its meteorological service with other countries?

Return tabled.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary when I can expect answers to my questions Nos. 1278 and 1279 which have been on the order paper since April 6 and deal with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

Mr. Jerome: Just as soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION—PRIOR DISCLOSURE OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT POLICY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister who I was interested and pleased to see has requested a meeting with the President of the United States. In view of the fact the Prime Minister has rejected suggestions over the past three months that it would be a good idea for him to meet with the President of the United States, can he tell the House what specific factors now make it desirable for him to have a meeting with the president?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have never rejected the idea of a meeting with the President. On the contrary, I said he was to visit Canada in the spring some time. The question was one of timing. The timing is more appropriate now and that is why the meeting will happen now.

Mr. Stanfield: As I understand it, the meeting is taking place at the request of the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman say what specific matters he wishes to discuss with the President—what specific matters form the basis of his request for a meeting with the President at this time?

Mr. Trudeau: It seems to me rather apparent from the news media that the President is meeting with a number of leaders at this time, friends of his, allies of the United States, and it does seem appropriate that at this point Canada should be meeting with the President of the United States to discuss multilateral and bilateral questions.

Mr. Stanfield: I had hoped the Prime Minister was doing more than just getting into line with the other distinguished visitors.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I am sorry if I have said anything offensive to hon. members opposite.

An hon. Member: Thanks for the apology.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the meeting has apparently been scheduled for late in December, can the Prime Minister tell the House today whether he intends to disclose to the House the policy of his government with regard to foreign investment before meeting with the President, or will the meeting with the President take place before the government's plan with regard to foreign investment is disclosed?

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid I cannot answer that question. My understanding is that the date of my meeting with the President has not been finalized. It is therefore not possible for me to answer the question until I know when the meeting will take place.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): My supplementary arises from one of the answers the Prime Minister gave. May I ask whether it was he who asked for the meeting with the President of the United States or whether an invitation was extended to him by the President in the first place?

Mr. Trudeau: The approach was made by my office to the President of the United States in the first place.

Mr. Lewis: Would the Prime Minister be good enough to inform us how long ago this approach was made by his office and also whether in making this approach any specific matters were mentioned as a proposed agenda for the discussions.

Mr. Trudeau: The approach was made some time last week. At that time the decision had been made for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to meet with Mr. Rogers in Washington and it was hoped that my meeting would follow that one as soon as possible so that I might be able to follow up some matters which the Secretary of State for External Affairs had discussed with Mr. Rogers. As to subjects on the agenda, there has not yet been an agreement as to the agenda. With regard to the particular question asked by the hon. member, I know of no specific subject which was mentioned; it was just that it would be good for us to get together to discuss multilateral and bilateral questions.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Prime Minister specifically, if he thinks he can inform the House, whether he intends to discuss the following questions with the President, namely, the 10 per cent surtax, other proposals like DISC and the job incentive program, and in particular the policy at which the government may have arrived at with respect to the control or supervision or surveillance of foreign investment in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot answer specifically with respect to any of those subjects until the agenda has been established. They are certainly the type of question we would be interested in discussing together, but, as I say, the agenda has not been established and I do not know whether it will include those specific subjects.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister going to reassert to President Nixon personally the position that Canada should be exempted from the surcharge because the government floated the dollar last year?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, these representations of mine will be made to the President. If it is in the public interest that I say exactly what went on at our meetings, then I shall do so. I do not yet have the agenda so I cannot assure the hon. member that I will be making any specific recommendations.

Mr. Ryan: Is the Prime Minister going to ask the President whether or not the United States government has a list of conditions for the removal of the surcharge on Canadian imports?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the hon. member's suggestion and the suggestions of other hon. members and decide what questions I want to ask the President.

FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGENDA WHEN AGREED UPON

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister. Would he give an undertaking to the House that when the agenda has been agreed upon—at that time I suppose the date will also have been agreed upon—he will inform the House on motions of the subjects that have been put on the agenda for discussion with the President?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I have the agreement of the President to that course I shall consider doing so. I am not certain whether we would want to make the agenda public before the meeting takes place. It is possible that we would not cover all the subjects or that we might cover others that are not on the agenda.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE EARLY SETTLEMENT OF NEGOTIATIONS—DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH PRESIDENT AT FORTHCOMING MEETING

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Does he anticipate an announcement of a settlement of the major negotiations between Canada and the United States on the automobile pact in the near future, as intimated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or does he anticipate that this may be one of the matters he will discuss with the President at the forthcoming meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it depends on the state of the negotiations on that particular subject which have been going on, as the hon. member knows, for a long while. It also depends on when my own meeting with the President takes place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Egmont on a supplementary and then a last supplementary from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

[Translation]

I will then recognize the hon. member for Portneuf.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL REPORT TO CABINET AND OTHER STUDIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of an earlier question raised by the Leader of the Opposition concerning the government's proposals in regard to foreign investment. In light of the Prime Minister's answer last week in the House, to the question whether or not the full Gray report plus other studies would be tabled in the House that an announcement might be made within a week or ten days and in view of the fact he then said outside the House that perhaps he would wait until after the annual meeting of the Conservative party before releasing these materials, inasmuch as this suggestion seems to indicate that these materials are available, and since the Prime Minister might want to distinguish between the recommendations contained in the Gray report and other supporting materials and the government's own decision, would the government give consideration to making them available early enough both for consideration by the people of the country and also—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether the hon. member has now completed his question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member admits that the Conservative party has not made up its mind on this subject yet but could do so within the next ten days. I am looking forward to seeing what their position is. It would be a surprise to us if the Conservative convention took a clearcut position on this or on anything else.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I indicated a moment ago that I would recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a final supplementary. The hon. member for Portneuf should then be recognized and the Chair will return to this matter and recognize the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Egmont.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—NEGOTIATION OF REMOVAL OF AMERICAN IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the government has repeatedly said that it has no intention of negotiating exemption of Canada from the 10 per cent surcharge imposed by the United States, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has now abandoned that position and the reason of his meeting with President Nixon is to negotiate Canada out from under the 10 per cent surcharge?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to both questions is no, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—MEASURES TO IMPROVE SERVICE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Labour.

Can the minister indicate why those who apply for unemployment insurance benefits and who qualify have to wait five or six weeks to receive their first cheque?

Does the minister appreciate that a whole month without salary is too long and very hard to bear—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech. In my opinion, the first question is in order. The minister might wish to answer that part of the hon. member's remarks.

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman has any specific cases in mind I will personally intervene to speed up the procedure.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister say whether the Commission is considering the possibility of improving its procrastinating way of doing things?

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, we are always looking for ways and means to improve the efficiency of the department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe there are a few supplementaries to the first question. The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Egmont.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL REPORT TO CABINET AND OTHER STUDIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister is still suffering from some confusion. Would he indicate whether he is willing to make available the reports and the various supporting studies that have been made in connection with the Gray inquiry prior to the enunciation of the government's position in order that there might be some public participation in the consideration of these various documents before a final decision is arrived at by the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I replied to that type of question the other day I said it was mainly a matter of preparing material, having it printed, translated and so on. That was the reason I could not give a specific date. Let me repeat that I will urge the minister to do so as soon as possible in order that the Conservative party may clarify its thinking on this matter.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether, in view of the interest he has expressed about the views of the Conservative party, he will accept its advice a little more quickly than he did in respect of unemployment?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a supplementary question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the press has quoted a spokesman from the Prime Minister's office as saying that the Prime Minister and the President had agreed on the desirability of holding a meeting for the purpose of discussing the surcharge, related economic matters and international relations, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is telling the House that a spokesman from his office was not authorized to make such a statement and whether, indeed, these are the three main subjects for discussion by the Prime Minister with the President?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the agenda has not been agreed upon by the President and myself. I am not aware of what my office may have said in respect of possible subjects for discussion. As I answered the leader of the New Democratic Party, this is the type of thing we are likely to discuss but there is no agenda set yet.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

IMPLICATIONS OF TELEGRAM FROM PRIME MINISTER'S SECRETARY TO PRESIDENT OF INDIAN ASSOCIATION OF ALBERTA

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the statement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and northern Development to the effect that he was not aware of the telegram sent by the Prime Minister's principal secretary to the President of the Indian Association of Alberta, will he advise the House whether he is aware of the contents of this telegram and, if so, does it reflect his position on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I know of the existence of the telegram, but I would have to refresh my memory as to its content in order to answer the hon. member's second question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are we then to assume that the powers of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have been usurped by the Prime Minister's office?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is entirely out of order.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GRANT TO UNION CARBIDE, BEAUHARNOIS—LOSS OF JOBS AT WELLAND

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has his department made a grant to Union Carbide of Canada to build a manganese alloy furnace at Beauharnois, Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression is that questions of this type ought normally to be put on the order paper. I know that in past days or weeks hon. members have asked questions about individual applications and individual loans made by the minister's department. A question of a similar type was asked last week. I wonder whether hon. members might not think that such questions should be placed on the order paper. If every member were to ask about individual loans or applications concerning his constitutency we might find ourselves spending much of the question period on such questions dealing with individual applications. I really think questions should be more general. The hon. member might like to rephrase his question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I shall try to do that. If the answer to this unacceptable question is in the affirmative, can the minister indicate to the House whether he is aware that such a grant will result in the loss of some 350 jobs in Welland for the creation of a mere 70 jobs in Beauharnois and, if so, does he think—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that the supplementary is hypothetical.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED NUCLEAR EXPLOSION IN SOVIET UNION—CANADIAN PROTEST

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it the intention of the government to make a formal protest to the Soviet Union in view of the very large nuclear explosion reported to have taken place in the Soviet Union this morning?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consider whether there would be anything useful to be served. We have made it very plain to all those who have recently exploded nuclear devices that this is contrary to Canadian policy and that we hope they will cease all nuclear testing, but of course if we had to make a protest against every such explosion, including those made by all the great powers, I would be spending a great deal of my time on that.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us if it is government policy to send specific protests only to the United States of America when these things take place and otherwise just make generalized remarks and utter platitudes at the United Nations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is not in order. The minister might wish to reply quickly and generally, but I would have to find that the hon. member's question is slightly irregular in its terms.

Mr. Sharp: No. As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, we have recently made a protest to China on its most recent explosion.

COMPETITION BILL

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL FOR REDRAFTING

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister complete the answer to my question which was cut off in mid-sentence by Your Honour calling orders of the day last week and which Your Honour said, as recorded at page 9763 of Hansard, might be pursued today. The question again is, will the minister withdraw the controversial competition bill before the end of this session and have it redrafted in an acceptable form?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have made clear since last June 29, when the bill was read the first time, that it would not be proceeded with by the government at this session but that after receiving useful and constructive comments from people it would be reintroduced next session.

AGRICULTURE

FARM ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM—ADDITIONAL FUNDS AVAILABLE TO FARM CREDIT CORPORATION TO OVERSEE OPERATION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement that he is proposing to proceed with the farm adjustment program and in view of reports that the Farm Credit Corporation will oversee the program in part in co-operation with the provinces, can he inform the House concerning the amount of additional funds the federal government intends to make available to the Farm Credit Corporation for this purpose?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that the House approved an item of $16 million in the main estimates this year to deal with the small farm development program.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, do I take it then that the Minister of Agriculture wishes to leave the impression that $16 million will finance the type of program he has in mind?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker, but there will be further estimates in subsequent years and, based on the experience we gain during the next few months, we will come before the House with an appropriate amount.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL FARM PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the technical committee which is designed to develop a national farm program is due to meet in Ottawa tomorrow, can the minister indicate whether it will be the intention of the government to introduce legislation for the development of a national farm program or will this take place within the framework of existing legislation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the technical committee meeting tomorrow will be to reconcile the differences between the provincial governments' proposal and the proposal I laid before members of the House and the committee about eight months ago. I might add that there is very little difference. That is the purpose, not for a wide-ranging agricultural program.

QUEBEC—REPRESENTATIONS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—COMPENSATION FOR HOG AND EGG PRODUCERS' LOSSES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since Quebec pork and egg producers have incurred losses of approximately $16 million over the last 12 months, partly compensated by the Quebec government, could the minister tell the House whether he has received any official representations from the Quebec Minister of Agriculture asking the federal government to compensate part of these losses?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have already announced a specific program under the Agricultural Stabilization Board with regard to eggs and it has had a very beneficial effect in the market place even at this ealry date. I have also announced that as soon as the figures are available for the 1971 year we will probably be making deficiency payment on hogs, but we need to have the figures first.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I realize perfectly that a policy has been established. My question does not concern the future program, but the year which is ending. Since this policy is inadequate, as has been demonstrated, would the Minister of Agriculture be prepared to consider this situation seriously in order to avoid the numerous failures which will necessarily happen in this field?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the purport of this kind of question and representation because certainly if there is a deficiency payment after the figures are in for hogs it will be paid for hogs produced all through 1971 right back to January of this year.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member could perhaps meet the minister after the question period and they might reach an agreement on a question which could be put tomorrow.

INFORMATION

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO ASSURE FREEDOM OF ACCESS TO INFORMATION ON PUBLIC BUSINESS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. In light of the many leaks which have been plaguing the government, would he now consider introducing or will he introduce during the next session a freedom of information bill which would do a great deal to get rid of this problem? I would be prepared to offer him my bill which now stands on the order paper.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for the co-operation he gave me in introducing and passing the Statutory Instruments Act which goes a long step toward making regulations public and reviewable by Parliament. The other step he mentions is one which I will take under consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA-PAKISTAN CONFLICT—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING POSSIBLE DISCUSSION BY UNITED NATIONS—ADVICE TO CANADIAN NATIONALS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on the grave situation involving India and Pakistan. Has the government departed from its view that it is still not efficacious to have the matter brought before the United Nations and can he advise what advice is being given to Canadian nationals in the area?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the first question, we have been discussing this with a number of countries including members of the Security Council and so far none of them feels it would be helpful in bringing about a settlement to have the matter brought before the Security Council at this time. That position may change with time but that seems to be the position now. On the second question, we have given warning to our nationals in both east and west Pakistan to get out of the areas where there are hostilities and also to be prepared to move out of that country if the situation worsens.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER OF ENERGY MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister. In light of the unfortunate illness of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has been unable to attend the House for some time, is it the Prime Minister's intention to appoint a minister to take over that portfolio because of the serious effect of the minister's absence on matters that affect Canada, particularly the relationship between Canada and the United States, and would that appointment be made before the discussions take place on whatever matters the Prime Minister is going to discuss with the President of the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that there are two acting ministers and in certain cases we have even named a third acting minister to meet this unfortunate situation.

Let me say once again that I do not know for certain the date of the meeting and therefore I cannot give the hon. member that assurance. I do not know sufficient at this time about the health and future condition of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to answer the other part of the hon. member's question, but certainly this matter is very much on my mind and I will act as soon as necessary.

NATURAL GAS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STEPS TO ENSURE EXPLORATION PROGRAMS TO GUARANTEE CANADA'S FUTURE NEEDS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the findings of the National Energy Board regarding the inadequacy of gas supplies to meet Canada's future needs, would the Prime Minister undertake to have whoever is Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources make a statement to the House at an early date as to what steps the government is taking to ensure adequate exploration programs to guarantee adequate supplies of gas for Canada's future needs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will transmit the representation of the hon. member to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ACTION TO CONTROL TELEVISION ADVERTISING AIMED AT CHILDREN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the widespread interest in this matter and in view of the interest and approval of all parties in the House during the debate on Friday that action should be taken, does the minister intend to take the necessary action to control in this country advertising on television aimed at children which is especially apparent at this time of the year?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I read the debate with interest and I am sorry I was not able to participate in it last Friday. I think I made the position quite clear some time ago when I said that I welcomed the adoption by broadcasters of a voluntary code, that we would see how it worked, that we urged people to live up not only to the letter but to the spirit of the code, that we were intending to enforce as vigorously as we have over the last three years our campaign against misleading and deceptive advertising, and that after we had seen the two programs in operation for some time it would then be the appropriate time to judge the degree of their effectiveness.

Mr. McGrath: Does the minister intend to recommend to his colleague, the Secretary of State, that immediate action be taken by the CBC in view of the fact that their voluntary code does not take effect until next year?

Mr. Basford: My understanding is that the code was to be put into effect as soon as possible, but I will take up the matter with the Secretary of State so far as the CBC is concerned.

ADVERTISING PRACTICES OF SNOWMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister plan to investigate advertising practices by snowmobile manufacturers that mislead the public and very likely contribute to the dangerous use of all-terrain vehicles?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The law relates only to misleading, deceptive or untrue advertising. If the hon. member thinks that certain types of advertising are in fact untrue or deceptive, I wish he would speak to me and bring them to my attention. If they are unlawful in the view of the law officers of the Crown, action will be taken.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED INDUSTRIAL MILK QUOTA TO MAINTAIN BUTTER AND CHEESE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that a shortage of milk for butter and cheese has developed, will the minister give consideration to opening a quota for industrial milk so as to help to maintain our cheese and butter industries in Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): As I have said, we may be short about eight or ten days supply of butter out of the whole year, but already some adjustments have been made in the market-sharing quota for industrial milk in Ontario and Quebec. Under the new arrangement this now comes under the provincial marketing agencies, and I think they are prepared to increase the quota so that there will be greater supplies for the increasing market.

Mr. Peters: In light of the fact that Ontario and Quebec have a market-sharing quota arrangement under the auspices of the federal government, will the minister, through the Canadian Dairy Commission, ask that this be reviewed immediately so that we will not lose any more of our butter factories and cheese factories in Ontario?

Mr. Olson: The responsibility for that and the assignment of milk to these various factories lies within provincial jurisdiction, not that of the Canadian Dairy Commission.

NEVADA UNDERGROUND NUCLEAR TEST—CANADIAN PROTEST

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the government intend to protest against the United States underground nuclear test which was conducted in Nevada last week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I said in reply to the hon. member for Oxford, I do not think it would be useful to make protests on all nuclear tests, and in this particular case the venting that took place does not seem to have reached Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLICY RESPECTING OPENING OF NEW EMBASSIES

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the recent opening of a Canadian embassy in Algeria represent a change in policy by the government, which was formerly directed toward reducing Canadian representation in foreign countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There has been no further reduction in representation in foreign countries, and a gradual increase in the number of new missions which have been opened since that time. I think we are in a much stronger position to proceed with openings after having closed some of marginal importance.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF PLAN FOR RATIONALIZATION OF HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the railway companies have had access for some time to the proposed plans for the rationalization of grain handling and transportation, which I understand is now in cabinet, can the minister say when the proposed plan will be made available to the prairie governments, Members of Parliament, and all farm organizations in order that they will also have the privilege of seeing what the plan is all about?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will take notice of the question, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR CORN STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the low prices corn producers have been receiving this year, which the minister said are partly due to lack of storage facilities, is the government giving consideration to the representations which I understand have been made to it for assistance in regard to corn storage facilities, and how soon will a program be announced?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am not sure how soon we can announce the program, but the hon. member has accurately described the situation in that we are giving urgent consideration to some proposals that would increase the amount of storage before the next crop comes in. I can also advise the hon. member that corn has moved up about 14 cents a bushel in the last few days.

Mr. McKinley: Can the minister say whether the assistance for corn storage will be for commercial corn storage or on the farm?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Olson: Certainly it would be to increase on-farm storage, but we are hopeful we can find a satisfactory way of increasing commercial storage as well.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): One of the programs suggested was accelerated depreciation for on-farm storage. Would the minister give consideration to the same plan for commercial storage designated specifically for use by farmers?

Mr. Olson: That is one of the proposals under consideration.

CORN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEASURES TO RELIEVE PRODUCERS' DIFFICULTIES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the very great difficulties experienced by Canadian corn producers during this year's harvest season and in light of various reports that have been made to the government in this regard, can the minister indicate when he will be able to make a statement in the House with regard to government policy and a solution to this very grievous problem?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot, but I can advise that only last week I had a further representation from the Ontario Grain and Feed Dealers Association—the people who operate some of the commercial elevators in Ontario. There were some new and interesting proposals that we have only had for a few days.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT SIGNATORIES TO ACHIEVE ORDERLY INTERNATIONAL PRICING OF WHEAT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the statement made by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board during his trip to Australia that Australia and Canada have agreed that the international pricing of wheat should be done on an orderly basis within a fixed price range, is it the intention of the minister or the government to ask the International Wheat Council to press for a meeting of the signatories of the International Grains Arrangement to achieve this objective?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the hon. member is aware of the fact that within the last few days a meeting of the council was held in London. He has no doubt read the press reports relating to that matter. On a ongoing basis Canada has always indicated interest in international commodity agreements of this nature but of course they are only useful as long as they are adhered to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—EFFECT ON PROPOSED VISIT BY PRESIDENT NIXON TO CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, earlier the Prime Minister indicated that one of the principal factors in his request for a meeting with President Nixon at this time was the more desirable timing. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this is related to the proposed visit of President Nixon in the spring. Does this mean that President Nixon's visit to Canada will be cancelled or will it take place, and is the Prime Minister's meeting in addition to that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have misunderstood the question but I shall attempt to answer what I heard. This is in addition to the meeting which will take place in the spring. There is no change of that plan.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ACTION TO ENABLE GREATER USE BY SMALL URBAN COMMUNITIES AND RURAL MUNICIPALITIES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary or whoever is answering for the minister. Has the minister received a telegram from the President of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities protesting that the local initiatives program will be of little value to small urban communities and rural municipalities in Saskatchewan? If so, is the government taking any action to make it possible for such local governments to make greater use of this program than is now possible?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I am not aware of such a telegram but I should be greatly surprised if it contained an allegation to the effect that the local initiatives program cannot assist smaller municipalities, groups or associations.

The program covers initiatives and if smaller municipalities, groups or associations in these smaller municipalities have enough initiative, I am sure they will be able to avail themselves most successfully of the program now established by the government.

[English]

Mr. Burton: Is the government considering any means whereby it might vary the proposed 30 man-month minimum limit so that it will be possible for some municipalities to take greater advantage of the program?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member's suggestion deserves consideration. Furthermore, if it became absolutely impossible for some municipalities, associations or groups to take advantage—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary's reply is hypothetical. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION TO SMALL MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary a supplementary question on the same line. What steps is the government taking to ensure that small municipalities that do not necessarily have a direct pipeline to the government get correct information upon which they can go ahead and make their plans concerning local initiatives?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned they do not need a direct pipeline to the government because I think all our 350 or 390 manpower offices in Canada are well aware of that information and any little municipality or association or «groupement» may avail itself or it by calling on any of these 350 or more manpower centres which have all the information necessary and are ready to help.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RECEIPT OF DECEMBER CHEQUES BY WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS AND PENSIONERS BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister taking the necessary steps to see that the December cheques payable to war veterans allowance recipients, pensioned veterans and their dependants will be mailed in time to reach them before Christmas?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, these cheques are not mailed by my department but by the Department of Supply and Services. I do not know exactly what day of the month the cheques are usually sent but I shall make it a point to see that our veterans get their cheques before Christmas.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, November 26, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. It is the understanding of the Chair that the committee will now proceed to sections 36 to 41 inclusive, 82 to 84 inclusive, 89, 112, 121 to 125 inclusive, 129, 143 and 181 to 197 inclusive dealing with corporations and shareholders.

On clause 1—Section 36: Railway companies.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): First of all, Mr. Chairman, I was just wondering whether in that list read out you included all the appropriate sections that deal with corporations. For instance, I did not hear sections 123 and 124 mentioned, even though I may have heard 125. I have not got the list before me but sections 82 to 95 and 181 to 197 all deal with corporations. It seems to me any list would be incomplete, unless we were to deal with them all. I should like to be able to do that because there may be some disposition later this day in looking at some sections which—

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has some difficulty in hearing the hon. member for Edmonton West. Would hon. members please give their attention to the work of the committee?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I see my genial friend, the hon. member for Labelle is acting today—I am sorry, that used to be the name of his constituency—

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I have had the honour in the past of representing the Labelle riding. Now, it is my privilege to represent that of Gatineau.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the hon. member. I had no intention of giving offence to the people of the Gatineau riding, this was a mistake.

In future, I shall call the hon. member the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board. In this way, I am sure we shall get along very well.

[English]

Mr. Chairman, at this point I would almost issue a challenge to the hon. parliamentary secretary to take this Committee through the complexities of the sections, and explain in what way Bill C-259 differs from the white paper provisions with regard to corporations. I think it is fair to say, as I was pointing out on Friday afternoon, that if any particular groups of sections require more time to be spent in studying them, in order that we may understand them, it is these particular groups. We have heard representations from professional bodies, from the Chamber of Commerce and from businesses, of all types. We heard representation from the tax foundation only a fortnight ago. The competence displayed at the annual meeting of the Canadian Tax Foundation two weeks ago at Vancouver vastly exceeds the professional and technical competence that is available to both the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue. It was the considered opinion of the Tax Foundation that more time should be made available for an examination of these particular sections in order that we may see whether they will accomplish what they were designed to accomplish, and also in order that departmental officials may be in a position to explain the complexities of these sections to business representatives who may ask for rulings or for some indication of the meaning of the blessed statute.

You know, Mr. Chairman, one must repeat this, and I will repeat it. There is no prerogative in the Crown in the presentation of a tax statute that is against the wishes of the public. Not only is it against the wishes of the public; it is also against the desires of the public as well as the understanding, particularly the understanding. If one seeks any reason as to why Bill C-259 or a substantial part thereof should be deferred, it is found precisely in this group of sections dealing with corporations and their shareholders. I will not pretend that I can explain to the House these provisions or that I can even track a tenuous way through their complexities. The hon. member for Outremont and my colleague on the finance committee, the hon. member for Laurier, will resist any challenge with regard to taking anyone through the complexities of these sections. They would be the first to resist any such challenge. If such hon. gentlemen who have great professional knowledge and competence with regard to tax matters confess their failure to being able to take anyone through these particular sections; if they cannot advise clients as to the meaning of the sections and what action should be taken in order to conform with them, and if they cannot at the same time advise clients as to the preferable course to be taken for the better conduct of their business, who on earth can interpret these sections with any degree of equanimity?

There is a further reason for my suggesting that the bill should be deferred, and it is this. The government was closely questioned today on something that has been the subject of public controversy for the past two weeks, the degree of foreign ownership of Canadian industries and the foreign ownership policies of the government. To all hon. members on the government side who are so prone to say: "Carried, carried"—

Mr. Gibson: Let us make some progress.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —may I suggest, and particularly to the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, that the restrictions on small businesses contained in this bill constitute a complete prejudging of government policy on foreign ownership. I say that because the members of the Committee will be asked to adopt certain restrictions with regard to small business which may be at complete variance with the ultimate policy regarding the foreign ownership of Canadian business that will be announced by the government. Are we to take it that the restrictions contained in section 125, I believe, will not apply, or that they are government policy now? After all, section 125 defines a Canadian controlled private corporation and the small business provisions will apply only to Canadian controlled private corporations. The small business changes brought in by the government are a far cry from the recommendations of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. To that extent, the parliamentary secretary must feel some chagrin, because he was chairman of the committee and presided over its deliberations when it came to these conclusions and many others having to do, particularly, with small, incorporated businesses.

I will ask the parliamentary secretary this: is he prepared to justify section 125, which is entitled, "small business deduction". Is he prepared to accept the ceiling of $400,000 cumulative of taxable income; is he prepared to accept the provision that even if the company is a public one, because its earnings are restricted, it will not be entitled to the small business deduction based upon the provision regarding the $50,000 annual total profits for the year? Is he prepared to accept the situation in which a company, owned in part by a foreign concern or individual, which has operated for a generation or more in this country, which employs Canadian labour entirely and which has been Canadianized as much as possible, will nevertheless be driven out, because the ordinary rule regarding corporate taxation will apply to it? Will the parliamentary secretary and members of the committee accept the situation in which a distributing firm handling equipment or tools or goods from overseas is to be thrown to the wolves? That is a very specialized business. The overseas parent company saw fit in the past to establish a Canadian branch. Notwithstanding the fact that the management of the company is Canadian, that its employees may have worked for 25, 30 or 35 years for the company in Canada, is that company to be tossed to the wolves.

I predict, Mr. Chairman, that in the industrial heartland of this country and in the oil sector of Alberta, that is, Calgary and Edmonton, many firms will close as a result of the restrictions in section 125. They will close because they will not be able to operate as a result of increased taxes. I want the parliamentary secretary to pay particular attention to my remarks. Some time today, I hope he will answer these questions and attempt to justify the thrust of these small business restrictions contained in section 125. I am very serious about that. They are the ones that demand an answer.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Do hon. members support the idea of disqualification because of foreign ownership—and incidentally a total disqualification—of small business? Do they support the principle that if a small business does become disqualified by reason of being sold or absorbed by a public corporation or foreign interests there shall be a retroactive assessment for recovery of taxes? There is a recapture of tax because of the changed status. I wonder if hon. members opposite are prepared to accept all of this.

Mr. Ryan: They did not know about it before.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My colleague, the hon. member for Spadina, says possibly they do not know about it.

Mr. Cullen: That is his second mistake.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wonder whether the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton is prepared to support this type of legislation in light of the across-the-border interests in his city. Some people in Sarnia conduct business in Michigan, and some people in Michigan have business interests in Sarnia.

Mr. Baldwin: That is his second mistake. His first is belonging to that party.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is very interesting, Mr. Chairman. If I wanted to be difficult, I could pick on Mr. Speaker whose constituents have business in New York State and vice versa. The citizens of New York State own businesses on the Canadian side of the St. Lawrence. Will there be imposed on us some degree of reciprocity if we impose instalment one of the foreign ownership policy of the government? That is what this is, instalment one. I do not know whether instalment one will agree with the rest of the book. Considering the lack of planning that goes on across the way it may be at complete variance with it, yet the committee is being asked to approve section 125 and the principle of foreign ownership involved in that section. Frankly, it is a nonsensical position. Until the government sorts out its priorities with regard to foreign ownership, section 125 should not be passed.

One of the chief offenders against this particular section is the province of Ontario where most of the corporations in Canada are located. More corporations are located in Ontario than in any other province or grouping of provinces. Certainly, business in Ontario pays far more income tax than the totality of the rest of Canada. However, it is impossible to change the Ontario corporation tax act to make it mesh with these particular sections. It is not possible to do so. I am going to repeat what I said on Friday afternoon. This government has only a partial interest in corporation tax.

The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth should advance this argument on behalf of his constituents. During 1972, the corporations resident in his constituency will have to conduct their affairs under two different corporation tax sections.

Mr. Gibson: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Most of my people are working people, employees. I have very few corporations in my constituency.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is indeed a real question of privilege! The hon. member thinks that to identify with the word "corporation" is anti-labour. Some members think that the word "corporation" leaves a nasty taste in the mouth. Those people who are doing business and employing people in the hon. member's constituency are operating corporations. It is a corporation when two painters put the word "limited" behind their company name. I can also refer to the constituency of the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine. Any company in Quebec with the letters "Inc." or the word "limité" behind its name is a corporation. This applies where two small individuals are running a trucking business. I am not talking about the big corporate organizations. As we mentioned in discussing section 74, even a husband and wife who incorporate their grocery store, dry cleaning business or whatever it is, are operating a corporation. If those are not the people about whom the hon. member is concerned, then he is wrong.

In any event, any small business that is incorporated in Ontario is going to have to operate under two different sections. What right does the federal government have to say to the provinces that they must amend their acts in order to conform with ours? The federal government has no greater jurisdiction with regard to income tax than do the provinces. The only reason we have one main act is the ease of collection and universal interpretation. However, we all know that for years the provinces have been entitled to a certain share of the revenue. The federal government has no business telling the provinces that they must change their acts to conform with the federal act. The provinces were not consulted with regard to the changes in the corporation tax, yet they have an equal right to impose that tax. The hon. member can make a speech. I would love to hear him make a speech defending the stand of the government on this form of taxation.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I must do so to advise him and the committee that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member for Edmonton West continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I prefer to yield to the hon. member for York South whom I know has a pressing engagement. I can come back to this debate. I will yield to the hon. member. Perhaps, too, there will be contributions from the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth and other members over there who seem to be pretty vocal.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The Chairman: Before I see the hon. member for York South, perhaps I might refer to the point of order which was raised earlier by the hon. member for Edmonton West with respect to the sections included in this group. It seems that sections 85 and 127 are the only ones which the Chair did not read—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not 127. I did not say 127. Section 127 concerns the logging tax deduction and is not related to this at all.

The Chairman: Then, it appears that section 85 is the only one which is not in the group as read. Perhaps by consent we could include section 85 in this group. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry I could not help with the numbers of the sections, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre is away this afternoon, an event which should be marked, and he has the list.

I shall be very brief. I shall not follow the approach taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I rise to make two or three short points as strongly as I can. There are proposals in the sections now before the committee to which my hon. friends and I take strong exception. We object to the increases in the dividend tax credit from 20 per cent to 33 1/3 per cent.

An hon. Member: Even though it is grossed up?

Mr. Lewis: Even though it is grossed up. I notice that in the booklet originally distributed by the department, the booklet entitled "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation", among the examples chosen in connection with this subject is the case of a person whose marginal tax rate is 25 per cent. Then, there are cases of persons whose marginal tax rate is 40 per cent and 60 per cent respectively. An attempt is made to show, and it is shown, that the person whose marginal tax rate is 25 per cent would gain from this particular change in the dividend tax credit.

Mr. Francis: It is true.

Mr. Lewis: Of course, it is true. But it is not relevant. Let me say to the Minister of Finance and to the hon. gentlemen opposite who support this provision that this is the kind of red herring which may fool the hon. member for Ottawa West, but which does not fool me. I should like to know how many Canadians having a marginal tax rate of only 25 per cent own any shares in corporations which are worth more than a goldarn. Of course, they may own the occasional share or two receiving, maybe, a dollar and a few cents on each and amounting to a total dividend of $6 or $7 each year. But this example to which I have referred is merely an attempt to mislead.

Mr. Francis: I should like to ask the hon. member whether, in working out the arithmetic, he believes the new proposal is more favourable to those in the higher brackets, or less favourable.

Mr. Lewis: I will tell the hon. member for Ottawa West that I do not know the exact answer.

Mr. Francis: It is less, and you know it.

Mr. Lewis: I have not worked out the details and I wish the hon. member would stop jumping out of his seat. All I can tell him is that I am not impressed by an example which tries to tell me that a fellow whose marginal tax rate is 25 per cent has an interest in these comparisons at all. The point is that here is another concession to those who derive their income from dividends to the point at which it is important. To compare this with dividends derived by a man who may have a few dollars a year from that source is to talk irrelevant nonsense. Furthermore, anyone who understands the Canadian economy knows that as far the volume of investment is concerned—not the number of investors, but the volume of investment—the most important role is played by corporate investors. The largest amount of investment in a corporation, if it is of any importance, is held by other corporations.

So all this exercise, as far as helping individuals is concerned, seems to me to be totally unacceptable and the mere change in the tax credit is objectionable to us. Similarly we object to the proposals to reduce corporate income tax over a period of time to 46 per cent from its present level. We object to the whole concept. We object to the double standard which is shown throughout this legislation, and I have called attention to only one example of it.

The whole of the tax legislation we are now discussing makes us unhappy because we take exception to the double standard which is employed, the different treatment accorded to those who are making their money out of capital gains, which are to be taxed only to the extent of 50 per cent, or through special concessions to mining or oil corporations, or through dividends, and so on, as compared with that accorded to the working man and woman whose taxes are deducted at source. Over and over again, the standard applied to the rich is much more favourable than that which is applied to the ordinary Canadian.

I rise merely to emphasize a point which has been made by some of my hon. friends over and over again. We do not intend to go on making these points ad nauseam. It appears we cannot change the government's view with regard to some of them and we do not intend to keep on talking and putting our arguments forward without serving a useful purpose for the Canadian Parliament or the Canadian people. But we believe that every time an issue of this kind comes up it is our duty to place our position on record, for we are against treating the corporations and the rich with silk gloves while placing the real burden of the tax system on the middle class and those living at a low income level.

Before I sit down I wish to make it clear as leader of my party that we have nothing in common with most of the objections raised by the spokesmen for the Conservative party. We have nothing in common with the hon. member for Edmonton West when he sheds tears for the corporations, or with the kind of objections he is raising to the legislation. We may sometimes be wrong. No doubt we are. But we are interested primarily in the protection, in our view, of the poorer sections of the community and of the middle income people. To the extent the corporations, or people with a great deal of wealth, pay less, that much more has to be contributed by those who have little. That is the history of this new tax system. This proposal makes a few desirable changes but does not basically alter the inequities from which our taxation system has suffered. It is for this reason that I cannot agree with the suggestion the leader of the Conservative party made the other day outside the House, and I think inside the House, though I was away on the day it may have been made, in regard to passing the entire bill, bringing certain sections of it into force immediately and then waiting some months for the others. This seems to me the kind of suggestion that derives from an element of society which really does not need or deserve the concern of the members of this House.

We want some basic changes made to the provisions having to do with co-operatives and credit unions so as to ease the burden of taxation where it should be eased. We do not think it is of any value to keep on talking on the bill for a further period of months; we have already talked about the bill for a long time. Neither do we intend to fold up unless the government is prepared to see the justice of certain representations that have been made, and to make substantial changes to the law in regard to the taxing of co-operatives and to other provisions in the bill. If these substantial changes are not made, it is our duty to continue fighting for them. I took this opportunity of rising for a few minutes to make clear that I do not share the suggestion made by the leader of the official opposition, any more than I share the tears shed by spokesmen of the Conservative party over the penurious corporations that are affected by this legislation.

Mr. Osler: Would the hon. member permit a question that revolves around a statement made by Premier Schreyer, quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press. I am sorry I cannot give him the date from the reproduction that I have, but I will send it to him if he wants it. He was griping about some statements made at a convention of his party and said that his government should concentrate on economic development which will provide the most jobs for people. Then, his industry minister said that he was tired of all this ideological hang-up that had been shown and stated that the bulk of the industry in Manitoba is private and deserves their support.

In view of the statements that the leader of the NDP has just made about Canadian corporations, most of which are small and to which we are trying to give some measure of support, would he tell us what is his philosophical position? Does he believe that small corporations are worthy of some support, as do the premier of Manitoba and the industry minister of Manitoba?

Mr. Lewis: If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre understood what he has read he would find no difficulty reconciling what I said and what the premier of Manitoba said. I agree with the premier of Manitoba, and so does my party. We accept the fact that most of our economy is privately owned and controlled, and if we had an opportunity of doing something about it as a government, either federally or provincially, we would look forward to a mixed economy for a long time to come, if not forever; I do not know. By all means, we agree that the smaller corporations have to be given the opportunity to live and to make a fair return on their investment. I have no doubt that the minister of industry in Manitoba is prepared to have the Manitoba Development Corporation assist any industry that provides jobs, whether that industry is privately or publicly owned.

On that score, there is no difference between him and me or between the provincial party in Manitoba—that is, the majority of them—and the federal party. I have no difficulty reconciling the two. All I am saying is that, whether it is a small or a large corporation there ought to be an equitable tax system that ensures we all carry a fair burden of taxation. I particularly object to the increase in the dividend tax credit from 20 per cent to 33 per cent, because I am not convinced from what I have seen that this does not give a very positive advantage to those who make a large part of their income from dividends. I frankly admitted I had not made a lot of calculations, and I do not accept the tables provided by the department as the final word. Only experience will show. A good many other matters have to be taken into consideration, such as total income, marginal rates and so on. I am not at all convinced that this change is a change for the better as far as a more equitable tax system is concerned.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I have found the reference to this report and will provide it for the information of the House. It is the Winnipeg Free Press for November 22, 1971.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to participate in the debate on this very important section of the tax reform bill dealing with the taxation of the operations of small business corporations. Certainly, I do not put myself forward as an expert on taxation but I do happen to have had some experience operating a small business, and it is from that standpoint that I should like to make a few points for the consideration of hon. members on both sides of the House.

It is obvious to me that this legislation—in fact, the whole concept of the provisions with which we are dealing this afternoon—is the product of academics and theorists who have very little experience with, or knowledge, of, the day to day workings of a small business, its ups and downs, the vagaries of the country's economy both internationally and nationally, the whims of the weather, and the responsibility one has of meeting one's commitments, discharging his various obligations and meeting the weekly payroll, while at the same time attempting to eke out a reasonable living for oneself. I am sure the drafters of this bill have never had to deal with their bankers, friendly or otherwise, in order to meet the day to day expenses of operating a business or the meeting of overdrafts. I happen to be in the automobile business and have to deal with trade-ins, accounts receivable and all the ramifications which come forth in such an operation. There is no provision whatever in the bill that appears to me to be an incentive to small business.

I should like to ask the spokesman on that side of the House how in the name of heaven he can suggest that this proposal is an incentive to small business, as is suggested in the summary of the 1971 tax reform legislation. In the competition bill—we do not know whether it is still in the House or out of the House; right now, I suppose it is in a state of limbo—there are some guidelines or criteria established for what we refer to as misleading advertising. If an intelligent man found an advertisement misleading, that would constitute a contravention of the bill. I would certainly suggest that after reading page 37 of the Tax Reform Summary one could very easily be mislead into believing that this bill is the salvation of small businesses. Unfortunately, it is not. Those responsible for drafting this legislation are also responsible for proposing the wholesale extinction of small businesses in this country. We only have to face the reality of the business climate of this country to know how uncertain the existence of small business is in Canada.

In my part of the country, about 35 per cent of the economy is in the form of small business enterprises. The business climate in this country is very uncertain at this stage. We have pressures on the international economy which not only affects small businesses but large businesses as well. We know that bankruptcies are at a 10-year high. Businesses, particularly in my part of the country, have to rely to a large degree on the ups and downs of the agricultural industry, and that industry is affected in a very disastrous way. In other words, this is a period of gloom and doom for the people in that industry.

We see the proposal is that in 1976 corporation incomes of $50,000 or more will be taxed on the basis of 46 per cent rather than 50 per cent, which is a reduction of 4 per cent. At the same time, small business corporation taxes will be increased from 21 to 25 per cent, which is an increase of 4 per cent. I know there are ramifications in respect of the distribution of dividends and what not, but that is another of the complexities of this bill I want to discuss. Many rational observers of the tax reform bill, including the members of the legal profession, have advanced major criticisms in respect of this area of the tax reform legislation which affects small businesses. Certainly, it is in this area that the private entrepreneurs have difficulty in affording the required expertise of professionals to file their tax returns in such a way that they may derive the greatest benefit from the provisions of the law.

Certainly, nowhere in this tax bill do I see any incentive for small businesses. Let us look for a moment at the number of corporations this bill affects. The Guardian issue of 1970 provides some very interesting statistics in this regard. Based on 1967 tax returns, some 88 per cent of firms operating in Canada, filing Canadian tax returns, reported income below $35,000. These proposals strike at the very heart of business in this country. A total of 81,366 firms of the 92,239 for which data was on file, fall into this category. If we are to stifle that massive part of the business economy of this country, certainly we are going to lead ourselves into wholesale unemployment, worse than we have today.

People in this type of business are providing jobs. They are certainly working more than eight hours a day. As a matter of fact, as a result of government regulations we find they are working perhaps 15 or 16 hours a day, eight hours in production and another eight hours in order to abide by the rules and regulations prescribed by the government. If we continue to work in the direction of destroying the initiative of small corporations, we are going to aggravate the economic situation in this country beyond all possible cure. Instead of increasing the tax on small business corporations, we should decrease it.

It is my belief it is in the area of small business that we have the most effective and efficient operation, the best innovations which have provided new jobs and the development of facilities we would not otherwise have. I recall the formation of the Versatile Manufacturing Corporation which started out as a one-man operation. It was a small business in the city of Winnipeg. It grew to the point where it is now a large exporter of Canadian machinery products. This corporation has served a very useful and viable purpose, to the advantage of the agricultural community of Canada. It has become the exporter of a great deal of machinery to the United States. This corporation started as a one-man operation. He joined forces with another and they developed a system of hydraulic engineering service for combines. This, in turn led, to the development of grain augurs and swathers. Today, this company produces a great deal of farm machinery. It is a wonderful Canadian organization and I should like to see more of the same type. I believe more operations of this type could be encouraged by government incentive, combined with the expertise and ambition of the type possessed by Mr. Robinson of the Versatile Corporation.

In passing, I might suggest that one-third of the small businesses with an income of less than $35,000 per year exist in western Canada, but over the past few years they have experienced a very difficult time. We only have to look at the report of the Barber commission on farm machinery to understand the situation. We find there is one area, that of the dealer distribution of farm machinery, that is not out of line in respect of price increases in this country. It was made abundantly clear that farm machinery dealers were discounting their sales to the extent of 15 per cent in order to remain competitive, hopefully, to survive. However, when we look at those farm machinery dealers in the three prairie provinces, we find that because of the slowing down of the agriculture industry a number of companies have either had to consolidate or go broke. That is perhaps the only advantage one has of running his own business. He has the privilege of going broke.

We see a consolidation of business taking place without any corresponding initiatives by the government to overcome the economic plight which they face. Instead, this government is moving in the opposite direction. We see a massive consolidation of small corporations which become big corporations. Small businesses, particularly in rural areas, are the lifeblood of small communities. I notice that the Minister of Agriculture has now redirected the Department of Agriculture toward the provision of stronger rural communities. Perhaps this has occurred as a result of the ministers of agriculture in the prairie provinces taming the minister in respect of his agricultural adjustment policy. This, in my opinion, is long over due. We need a new enthusiasm for small corporations, small businesses and private, independent intrepreneurships so that they might be fostered and developed. We do not see any provision for that in this tax bill. It is for this reason I rise in my place today to make a most vigorous objection to this provision in the bill.

There are now, I believe, five provinces which have urged this government to postpone implementation of this measure which bears on corporate domestic and international income. It is far to complex. Certainly, the Leader of the official opposition put forward very recently a compromise proposal that we pass the sections of the bill which deal with the increased exemptions and so on, because we would seem to be getting into a situation here where we are running a race with the clock. I believe a tax bill of this nature, magnitude and complexity should not be proceeded with on the basis of a race with the clock. So, I believe the Minister of Finance and members on the opposite side of the House owe it to themselves, and to the people of Canada, to urgently consider the proposal put forward by my leader.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the hon. member?

Mr. Mazankowski: When I am finished, Mr. Chairman, he can ask me a question. The other point which concerns me is the whole climate in which small businesses must operate and the fact that consideration of small business is generally absent from the formulation of government policy in this area. We know that governmental policy is influenced by big business and big unions. I believe everyone in this House of Commons should examine very seriously exactly where we are headed in the matter of small business in this country, because I believe there is something about small business which is unique. A man must have an opportunity to develop his potential to the maximum of his ability so that he might utilize his initiative in a spirit of pride. The trend to bigness and the trend to big corporations produces an important part of our problem today. The labour unrest and the pressure of big unions have been a result of our total approach to bigness. As I said before, the dominating forces of both unions and big business play a very important role in respect of government policy. We know small businessmen do not have an effective organization and therefore are not readily able to analyse and influence government decisions. They lack the opportunity, the expertise and the organization to put forth their proposals in a firm and articulate way.

The other point is that small businesses lack any political clout because they do not control large blocks of votes. I believe members in this House of Commons who have small business entities and enterprises in their constituencies certainly should rise in their places to urge the government to give some consideration to streamlining this bill so that it would be easily understood by the average person and small businessman generally. These are the average people who look upon the government as infringing upon the decision-making functions they have. When we have a situation wherein 46 per cent of the gross national product is being extracted by the three levels of government, we find we have a network of regulations which do nothing but bring about increased frustration and anxiety for the average businessman. I would hope, throughout the reshaping process which is taking place in this country in respect of small business, that the government would step back a little and have a look at the situation in an objective way because the three bills before us now—Bill C-259, the competition bill and the amendments to the Labour Code—could very well change the whole structure of the small business community in this country.

Rather than the small businessman being soaked with an increased rate of taxation, I would hope there would be some incentive for new independent entrepreneurships to develop, to grow and to help the economic climate in this country, because in that manner I believe we would develop major corporations such as Versatile, the Canadian farm machinery manufacturer in Winnipeg. I would also hope that we would make it possible for more organizations such as this to develop. While governments probably have assisted organizations like Versatile in some way, I believe as we look around this country we will see there are many more innovators, if I may use that word, who could develop products which could be sold both domestically and internationally. In this way jobs could be provided for Canadians, revenue for governments at all levels, and certainly a better climate of enthusiasm in this country.

Mr. Osler: I have a very small interjection, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the hon. member for Vegreville has any suggestions to make in respect of his concern about the race with the clock to which he referred. I wonder whether he has any suggestions concerning how we could beat this clock instead of being confused by it. It has occurred to me that in the mother of Parliaments, where the Conservative party happens to be the majority party at the moment, they worked out a time allocation which enabled them to consider the whole vast problem of entering into ECM in a matter of a week. If the party in Canada shares the enthusiasm of the party in Britain in respect of time allocation, I wonder whether some way might be found to deal with this tax bill which, although complicated, is somewhat less complicated than the ECM problem in England. I am wondering if the hon. member intends to make some suggestion to his House leader about time allocation which would help us follow the example of that party in Great Britain in the mother of Parliaments, which we all admire and which we have often had invoked as a precedent to us.

I would also suggest briefly to the hon. member that when he talks about helping small businesses get off the ground, as it were, he look at page 37 of the plum coloured summary, because he will see that this is exactly what this government proposes to do. On that page we read:

The rate will be 25 per cent on the first $50,000 of business income of Canadian-controlled private corporations.

The incentive will stop, however, at $50,000 in any one year, and of course will stop at the accumulation of $400,000 because we do not want large corporations to take advantage of an incentive that is meant specifically for small ones. If they did they would be getting something that they did not need and to which they would not be entitled, so individual taxpayers and the small corporations would have to make up the difference. It seems to me also that when the hon. member uses Versatile as an example, he uses an excellent example.

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It has been stated, and I think it continues to be stated, that we in the opposition are attempting to filibuster the bill. I want to go on record as saying that when comments are made by way of long speeches rather than questions, the filibustering comes from the other side.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has the floor.

Mr. Osler: I am sorry my purpose was misunderstood. In my own small way, I was trying to make an interjection and not ask a question. I am sorry that my delivery was not sufficiently clear to get this across, but it really is meant to be an interjection and not a question.

As I was saying, Versatile is the product of two ingenious men, not one, of Robinson and Pacosh. It is my understanding that they started and developed their company by using the perfectly legal device of grouping quite a number of small companies until they were able to get the thing off the ground and consolidate into one, which became Versatile. I think they launched it with $5 million at that point; but until they got up to the point at which they could employ $5 million of equity capital they were using this device which we are proposing to retain here, by means of which a small company can obtain tax concessions until it grows. They had something like 11 companies. I am not sure of the exact number; it is a long time ago. It was only after they consolidated that they became a big company. The reason for their phenomenal success was twofold: one, their great brains in the mechanical engineering field, and two, their great perception in the marketing world because they set up a marketing system which was somewhat unique. They were able to pretty well steal a march on their competitors from as far north as Edmonton, as far south as Texas and as far east as Pennsylvania. I am proud they are in Winnipeg and I hope they will remain, although I have heard rumours that they were thinking of moving out because of the high taxes they pay now in Manitoba. I hope they will not do that because the short term should not be measured against the long term, and sooner or later they will get tax reductions, even in Manitoba, when the government changes there.

I did want to interject my delight in the thought that perhaps members of the opposition were becoming time conscious and were thinking of coming up with some suggestions for time allocation, in the hope that they really understand that this proposal does genuinely help small businesses and therefore merits their support, if the sentiments they have been expressing are their true sentiments.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Before I give the floor to the hon. member for Vegreville, perhaps I should make a comment to the committee to clarify which sections are under study at this time. It was brought to the attention of the Chair by the hon. member for Edmonton West that last Friday, November 26, the committee accepted sections 36 and 37. The committee is proceeding now with the study of sections 38 to 41 inclusive, 82 to 85 inclusive, 89, 112, 121 to 125 inclusive, 129, 143 and 183 to 197 inclusive.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Somehow or other sections 36 to 41 slid into this group. We want to look at the subject matter of section 36, which is on railway companies and which we passed on Friday. Section 37 is on scientific research. We also passed that on Friday. Section 38 is the opening section on capital gains. We had that section under discussion on another occasion, and as a matter of fact there is an amendment and a subamendment to section 38. Section 39 deals with capital gains. Section 40 is headed "general rules". It has nothing to do with corporations except as it might incidentally apply to corporations. Section 41 determines the meaning of taxable net gain from dispositions of listed personal property, which has nothing to do with corporations and shareholders, except inferentially when they list personal property. I do not know how corporations could list personal property. I suppose they can have paintings, jewels and so on, but it seems to me that there is a better point of departure than through this group of sections. I did not want to make my comment publicly and I was doing it privately, but events have overtaken me.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, did I hear you say sections 183 to 197? Shouldn't it be sections 181 to 197?

The Deputy Chairman: I did mean sections 181 to 197.

[English]

Following the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West, the Chair wishes to seek the advice of the committee regarding the sections that should be studied at this time. It is very difficult for the present occupant of the Chair to judge the relationship between one section and another unless I make a thorough examination at this time. Therefore, I would invite either the parliamentary secretary or the hon. member for Edmonton West to make some kind of suggestion by which the committee could abide.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is very simple, Mr. Chairman. I read out the first block of sections that is not very relevant. Then, we come to section 82 which is included in Your Honour's list, subdivision h—corporations resident in Canada and their shareholders. The heading of the section is "taxable dividends received". That section has to do with shareholders. So, let us hinge the discussion on section 82, and all the other sections will remain as read out.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I think sections 38 to 41 deal with capital gains.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Am I to understand that we would not consider at this time sections 38 to 41, which were read out at the opening of the committee this afternoon, so those sections which will be called will be from section 82 onward. Shall section 82 carry?

Mr. Mazankowski: I merely wanted to reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I can assure members of the House that I will not be as longwinded in my answer as he was in his question. His first question was whether we were disposed to speed up the process. I believe that my leader offered a logical proposal, and if members on the other side in their wisdom wish to accept this proposal, I am sure it would speed up the process significantly. But it seems that hon. members on the opposite side of the House consider that when there are any concessions to be made, they have to be made by the opposition rather than by themselves.

With regard to the debate that is taking place in the United Kingdom with respect to the European Economic Community and their participation, I understand the debate was merely a matter of the resolution and as yet the bill has not received final passage. The full details of the bill will be examined later.

Getting back to the incentive with respect to small businesses, perhaps it is because I am not a tax expert that I cannot understand, but it seems to me when a small business has its income tax increased from 21 per cent to 25 per cent, that is not an incentive. It is a very simple matter of narrowing the gap between small corporations and large corporations. I object to this very much. I would say if the government truly wanted to offer an incentive to small private businesses to get started, they could have gone the other way perhaps, thinking of many Canadians desirous of establishing their own business to the benefit of all Canadians.

With respect to the matter of Versatile, he is right. Versatile was co-founded by two men, and this was allowed to I believe in my remarks. I believe the leadership was provided by a Mr. Robinson, and a man by the name of Pacosh was taken in who happened to be an engineer. I would not want the impression left that there was only one man. The success of the company resulted from the combined expertise of Mr. Robinson and Mr. Pacosh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I wish to resume the argument I was making at the conclusion of my first round. If we look at the proposals for the taxation of corporations, I think it is necessary that we look at what we have now, what was proposed in the white paper and what all of these sections now represent. Incidentally, I have found another section which has nothing to do with this subject, section 122 and it is on the list. It deals with inter vivos trusts and not in any way corporations and shareholders.

We know that at the present time we have what is generally known as the two tier system, that any corporation whose income is less than $35,000 in a taxation year will pay at a base rate of 21 per cent plus any surtaxes or what have you that are in existence; at or over $35,000 the rate climbs to 50 per cent plus surtax if any. This two tier system has had an historical development. As I recall, the 21 per cent first applied to the first $20,000 and ten or eleven years ago that was increased to $35,000, bearing in mind the devaluation of money over the period of time and other requirements.

One would have hoped that the only change made now would be to generally take into account the inflationary change. Business understood the two tier system. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, and hon. members, that I cannot tell which excited the most comment, the deemed realization every five years on shares of widely held companies, the capital gains tax on principal residence or the elimination of the two tier system dealing with the taxation of corporate business. The latter seemed to excite everybody. It was universally condemned with the exception of those academics who think that they are such intellectual purists and who insist upon this so-called principle of equity or as it is sometimes described, absolute neutrality between classes of taxpayers. These people have never been in business and would not know how to run a peanut stand or a service station. They do not know the problems of getting a small business started, running it and developing it so that it is a viable operation supporting the owner and his employees. It was with the same reaction, it seems, that members of the Senate Committee as well as members of the standing committee of the House of Commons received these protests that the two tier system should go and that everybody should be taxed in the same way. I just cannot see why there should be neutrality, Mr. Chairman.

Coming back to the point I have made time and time again, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the taxpayer's understanding of a tax, and his willingness to pay under a tax system, are just as important as administrative convenience or some fancy theories of the tax experts. This blessed bill seems to have forgotten the taxpayer, though he is the one having to bear the tax. He must understand the tax he pays, whether he is in business, whether he is a wage earner or is on a salary. Is there some God-given right that enables administrative officials to devise a tax system, put it on the back of the taxpayer and then have him treated like a dumkopf, simply a dumb head? Is he supposed to be thankful that he is going to support a system of taxation whether or not it is understandable? Certainly, the philosophy behind the white paper on tax changes has something to do with being a taxpayer who has to produce, not simply with someone on a salary which has its source in someone else's productive energies and abilities.

We have moved away from the white paper proposals, except that there is a vestige of integration left in the "gross up" in credit involved with regard to the elimination of the 20 per cent dividend tax credit. A mild form of integration is involved there. Thank goodness we did away with the nonsense of "closely held corporations", "widely held corporations" and the distinction between "Canadian corporation" and "foreign corporation".

Let us see what is before us now. I should like to deal with section 123, "Rate for corporations". My colleague from Vegreville has already spoken about this section. At the present time, corporate taxes on corporations are paid regardless of nationality of ownership. I suppose it might be said that there is neutrality. Those people who were the great exponents of neutrality between taxpayers should look at the present act. There is neutrality regardless of size or nationality of ownership and the tax rate is 21 per cent on the first $35,000 of the taxpayer's income and 50 per cent on the excess.

As we know, and as is explained in the bill, the general rate of tax will be 50 per cent in 1972 and that will reduce by one percentage point per year until it reaches 46 per cent in 1976. There is to be a continuing general abatement of provincial taxes at 10 per cent and, to replace the 21 per cent, there is to be a much more restrictive reduction with regard to the general rate for small businesses. There are also some transitional provisions that appear in the interim transitional rules in section 51. We need not go into them at present. It must be noted that for corporations a rate has been suggested that includes the "standard" provincial rate and that there is a 10 per cent provincial abatement as under the present system. But the decrease to 1976 will reduce federal revenues only. So, we must see what the provinces will do. After all, at the last dominion-provincial conference of a fortnight ago, it was set down clearly that if provinces want to get additional revenues, there is a flexibility for them to tax. We know that in certain provinces the total corporate tax rate is much above 50 per cent. In Manitoba and Alberta there is a form of surcharge. Ontario is the only province that imposes the basic 50 per cent.

If one examines the flow through of ideas from section 123 to 124 and then looks at section 125 which is entitled, "Small business deduction", it will be seen how difficult it is to disagree with the interpretation placed on section 125 by the hon. member for Vegreville. Underlining what he said, I invite the parliamentary secretary to explain section 125, and particularly the last paragraph of section 125(1) which reads in part:

> ... the reference in this subsection to '25%' shall be read as a reference to '24%' for the 1973 taxation year ...

Let him explain the deductions. You see, the section says that there may be deducted from the tax otherwise payable under this part a certain amount. The tax payable under this part actually is 50 per cent, declining down to 46 per cent in 1976. So, there may be deducted from whatever figure appears under "tax otherwise payable" an amount equal to 25 per cent of the figure derived from the formula that is given. According to the last paragraph of subsection (1), in place of "25 per cent" you must read in subsequent years, 24 per cent, 23 per cent, 22 per cent and 21 per cent. Therefore, the deduction from the tax normally payable will be on a reducing basis. A company availing itself of the small business provision will be fixed with regard to the rate of tax. Let us look at the rate for 1974: it is 48 per cent. According to section 125, in 1974 the deduction shall be 23 per cent. Unless I am wrong, 48 less 23 leaves 25. Therefore, the rate for small business is forever fixed at 25 per cent. They will not get any additional advantage, as provided for in section 123. I may be wrong. The hon. member for Vegreville may be wrong. If we are, we invite the parliamentary secretary to show where we are wrong in interpreting this particular subsection. It seems to me that here there is a grave difficulty.

In discussing restrictions that are imposed under section 125 I really want to discuss the provisions of subsection 2(a) saying, "a corporation's 'business limit' for a taxation year is $50,000, ... ". I should have liked to see a platform or a plateau in a two-tier system introduced which would have brought the former limit of $35,000 up to $50,000. That is the spirit I should have liked to have seen on the part of the government in an attempt to comply with the realities of inflation. It would have been so simple, so very simple, to bump up the $35,000 figure to $50,000. Business would have understood just what was being done and the government would have acknowledged the inflationary situation, as it has done in the past, by increasing the limits to conform with the realities. That would have been the fundamental reason for that action. Individuals are now enjoying much higher incomes; they are not real incomes but much higher dollar incomes bearing higher tax rates.

Why will not the government give businesses the benefit of the type of thinking that has been extended to individuals. But, no, we are to introduce a very complicated system and there is a limit of $50,000 within one year. Once the accumulation of taxable income reaches $400,000, the small business provisions or privileges will no longer apply to that business. Why, at $50,000 a year, under inflated dollar values, it will take a business about eight years to accumulate $400,000 of inflated dollar income. I invite the parliamentary secretary, in whose constituency there are many small businesses and who knows something of business, he having been in business, to comment on this. Under inflation you can reach the figure of $400,000 just as quickly as you could have reached $275,000 under the present provisions. I think we all recognize that that would have been quite unfair. If such a level was unfair then, why should it not be unfair now? It seems to me that business will not thank the government for introducing these restrictions.

Furthermore, if companies are in a group, if they are associated with one another in a taxation year, and they have filed a certain type of agreement, the minister must consider them all as being part of a group and the small business provision does not apply to them. There must be some relation between this provision and old section 138. I will look. I see, having looked, that this is not like old section 138(a) of questionable parentage under which the minister was given great discretionary powers to determine who were associated companies. This is an indication where discretionary powers are granted to the minister.

I now come to the third matter. I referred to this in my speech earlier this afternoon. If a company is controlled by a public company or non-Canadian ownership interests, it cannot in any way qualify for the small business provision. I think the parliamentary secretary owes the committee a very serious and detailed explanation. Is this to be the thrust of the government's foreign ownership policy? I do not want to return to that in great detail, but is that going to be the thrust?

Other companies which may not qualify for the small business provision are companies without Canadian active business income. In other words, they may not qualify if the income is from investments. Corporations that have Canadian business income can only use the rate for that income and not foreign income, interest income, or other passive income. Why the distinction? If a Canadian company has foreign business income, why can it not use the provisions of the small business section? If it has business income from non-Canadian sources, why should it not be able to use that? There are many answers required to a multitude of questions. Before this committee should even be asked to pass these sections, there must be some answers. I can go on and on with regard to these particular subsections.

What about these ineligible investments and all of these things that come under sections beyond section 125? I wonder if the parliamentary secretary is now in a position to reply to this series of questions. We cannot participate in an intelligent debate until we know the position of the government. I have directed several questions to him. I hope we can get some answers. I do not want to embarrass the parliamentary secretary. I know the minister is not here this week and the Minister of National Revenue will be taking over later. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is likely participating in some rejoicing as the result of a certain football game which was played in the rain.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): What do you mean?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo should not boast about the weather in his province after that kind of a show for the Grey Cup.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I am moved to make a few comments on this aspect of the bill. I am interested when I see the faces of members in the government benches. I am sorry the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is not in the chamber. He was here a few minutes ago. He did not hear the very reasonable answer by the hon. member for Vegreville with regard to the length of time that is being spent on this bill. He complained about this and made a comparison with legislation in the United Kingdom. I agree with and want to reinforce the answer given by the hon. member for Vegreville.

The debate in the United Kingdom, in the Mother of Parliaments, if I can use the hallowed phrase which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre used, was on a simple motion on the question of whether or not the United Kingdom should enter the common market agreement. This is to be followed by a number of legislative proposals. The debate on the motion was limited to eight days by agreement. The labour party has made it quite plain that it intends to debate, as long as possible, the issues involved in the legislation which will deal with the type of agreements to which the United Kingdom will be asked to subscribe in order to bring her into the common market.

I hold no brief for the labour party. They may have just cause for doing that. However, there is this distinction to be made. The government bringing in the legislation in the United Kingdom is a Conservative government. I think it is notorious that a Conservative government always brings in good, sound legislative proposals.

An hon. Member: They allocate time.

Mr. Baldwin: Of course, they do. In this case the opposition agreed to eight days on a motion. What happened here when the hon. member for Skeena attempted to move for the approval of the unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development? The government cut off debate after one day. When do we have a situation in which the government will allow this House to debate one motion for eight days? There is the distinction.

It is well known that any government of Conservative persuasion will inevitably bring in good legislation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I see that no one challenges me on that score. It must be accepted. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth rose on a question of privilege because he represented a constituency of simple, working men.

Mr. Gibson: I did not say "simple". They are hard-working men.

Mr. Baldwin: I was thinking of their representation, that is all. Surely, he must realize that on the question of incidence of taxation, with the possible exception of capital gains tax, taxation is always an element in the charges which are passed on by business, corporations and individuals. This cost is always passed on to the consumer, regardless of whether it is for services or goods. The incidence of taxation, whether it is bad or iniquitous, inevitably falls on the back of the consumer. It does not really matter whether you represent corporations or simply consumers.

I want to follow up the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West last Friday, and repeat it today. It bears directly on this group of sections with which we are now dealing. I hope the parliamentary secretary will have time to absorb the very searching and brilliant questions asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West in order to reply to them when I have completed what I have to say.

The issue with regard to the wisdom of taking this group of sections, together with others to which we have referred, and deferring their ultimate implementation to some time in the future certainly appeals very strongly to me. It should also appeal to other members of this committee. We are now beginning to see, hear and read that an increasing number of Canadians are terribly concerned about what will be the ultimate effect of many of the proposals, including those before us today. What will be the impact of these provisions upon the economy and industry, whether it is business industry, labour people, farm people or agriculture? It is becoming increasingly apparent that the proposal advanced by my leader and approved by my hon. friend from Edmonton West and the rest of this party is gaining wide acceptance.

There was an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen today approving the suggestion. The words used were "split the bill". We are not precisely engaged in that exercise. We understand that the government is determined to get the bill passed and we are trying to facilitate its passage as well as we can. But what we do want is an opportunity for those sections which must be passed, and which are obviously required at this time, to be enacted, to be implemented, as they will be upon Royal Assent. When that happens, all the clauses of the bill to which a delaying clause is not attached will become law. I think it is desirable that the clauses to which I have referred should be enacted and implemented. We shall be prepared to do even more than we are doing now to facilitate the passage of the bill so that there may be a completion of this debate, and I hope hon. members to my left in the New Democratic party and the Créditistes can be persuaded to join us in seeking that the bill is passed if an arrangement of the kind I have mentioned is made. But it should be clear that the sections which in our opinion are repugnant or undesirable or unclear and in need of amendment will be the subject of a proclamation motion. This would mean they could only be implemented upon what is known as an affirmative resolution continuing the proclamation being brought into the House, debated and approved.

These are the issues which are being discussed at various levels at the present time. I have every hope that the government will be persuaded to see the merits of the proposal which the Leader of the Opposition has made. I say this because it is becoming apparent that all sections of our economy and of our social structure believe it to be a sensible one. The business writers in all the newspapers of the country are not legion in number, I know, but they do speak for a substantial section of the community and they have almost universally declared that a compromise of the kind I have described should be adopted. I heartily agree with the pertinent remarks of my hon. friend from Vegreville as to the need to encourage small business as part of the economic and social structure of the country.

Just the other day the Retail Merchants Association, which reflects the views of thousands of small business people said: In the name of Heaven defer these provisions in the bill. As for the farmers, I have been out west twice in the last ten days or so, over each weekend. The farm population is concerned without exception about the impact of this bill upon them. They are not clear as to what its ultimate effects may be. They have said: You are right. The proposition advanced by the Leader of the Opposition amounts to a sensible and reasonable compromise without loss of honour on either side. Defer the bill. The members of this party believe that is a tactic which is eminently suitable.

Mr. Gibson: No doubt.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Baldwin: The experts, the so-called experts, from the legal profession, the accountants and the tax experts, have all said practically the same thing. I realize there are also those who say: Let us settle the uncertainty. We do not like the bill, but at least let us have it. I do not think that is the correct attitude. We should be derelict in our duty if merely because we were unwilling to take the time to give the legislation the careful, though limited, scrutiny we are giving it at present from this side of the House, we should let the bill pass regardless of the consequences which might arise when it was finally implemented and the taxpayers had to worry about it. I recall, reading about this subject, that when the income tax was first enacted in this country it was called a temporary war income tax. That was in the days of the first world war. Its temporary nature has long been forgotten and these proposed amendments will become a burden fixed on the backs of taxpayers next year, the year after, the year after that and for many more years to come. The view of the minister and of the parliamentary secretary seems to be: blessed are the taxpayers of Canada, for they shall walk in the valley of permanent despondency.

It is for all these reasons that I support the proposal by my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition. It would not be very damaging for the government. There is no question that further amendments to the bill are even now being considered. If I were a betting man and allowed to bet in this House I would venture a large amount of money that today, on the desks of members of the minister's staff, numerous amendments are awaiting consideration. I would prophesy that large numbers of amendments to this bill are even now being considered and when we go into the next session, the last pre-election session, I would be very surprised if the minister did not bring down an act to amend the Income Tax Act as amended by Bill C-259. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. Gibson: What about the pressure of Canadian nationalism and so on, and foreign ownership generally? Don't you think we should get on with these things?

Mr. Baldwin: A very interesting question. I would estimate that this bill, Bill C-259, was before the cabinet for several months. This delay in processing the legislation through the rigid and antedeluvian structure the Prime Minister has set up—

Mr. Gibson: Time spent in consultation, so that the people might know what was being done.

Mr. Baldwin: After all that, he wants us to put the bill through in a very few weeks. As to the entire subject of foreign ownership, it is only because somebody saw fit to exercise his own judgment—I do not say he was necessarily right in doing so—in deciding to make public the information the government had before it that the people have any idea about the government's thinking on the question.

Mr. Gibson: You are begging the question.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: This government has been sitting on a decision on foreign ownership for long enough to hatch all the eggs this country needs for the next ten years. I suggest the hon. member has raised a non sequitur. It is eminently desirable that this bill be not hastily rushed through the House; it would be wrong to do so. There is no doubt at all that it will be substantially amended at the next session of this House.

All we are asking the government to do at the moment, if lack of clarity is the question bothering people in the country, is to say that it accepts the proposition of the Leader of the Opposition that the bill be passed, but that the implementation of clauses that need clarification, that to some extent are undesirable, that need to have added to them other sections so as to make them workable, be postponed in order to offer the officials of the department an opportunity to speed up the amendment process in which they are now engaged, and to enable the business community, including farmers and others engaged in agriculture, to examine at leisure exactly what is going to be the effect of the legislation when passed. In that way, we can work together in that measure of harmony and co-operation that is so essential to securing those amendments that the minister will bring down in order to make the legislation more desirable. I am as satisfied as I possibly can be that thousands and thousands of people, including those who should be knowledgeable of these things, have yet to determine what in their opinion will be the ultimate impact of this legislation. I am sure there are those in the department who are conscientious, honest and hard working who believe the same thing.

Surely, our suggestion would restore a measure of confidence to the economic life of this country and to the business and agricultural community, unlike the situation today where there is no confidence at all. I think that a declaration by the government that, in its view, the proposition made by the Leader of the Opposition should be accepted would do more than any other thing to revive confidence among leaders and those who follow them in the economy and business life of this country. I venture to say that when and if the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of Finance stands up and says that yes, Mr. Stanfield, the Leader of the Opposition, is correct in his proposal—

Mr. Gibson: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth on a point of order.

Mr. Gibson: I respectfully submit that the use of a member's name is out of order. I would ask the hon. member not to refer to another member of this House by name.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member is quite right. I was only quoting from memory a newspaper reference to the name of Mr. Stanfield, and that is all.

Mr. Gibson: You have been around here long enough to obey the rules.

Mr. Baldwin: I was talking about the question of confidence, and as long as we have interruptions like that from those who support the government, obviously there can be no confidence in the government. There are some parliamentary secretaries who have indicated through speeches in this House on this issue that they lack confidence in the government.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Baldwin: That is as true as anything I have said today. Confidence is what we need here. This government is showing today an obvious bias against private initiative, enterprise and incentive. The major legislative programs are set up in such a way as to constitute the destruction of initiative and incentive, things that made this country what it is today.

I think we all recognize that in the social structure we now have there is a duty cast upon us to apply certain minimum standards of support. But we are not seeing this, we are seeing much more. We are seeing a situation where the government of this country deliberately, and with design and malice, is directing its attention toward providing sanctions, punitive sanctions, against those who are prepared to work in the expectation that initiative ought to be rewarded.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he has unanimous consent to continue.

Mr. Baldwin: I would be glad to carry on if requested, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Would the committee give unanimous consent to allow the member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Before giving the floor to the hon. member for Peace River, perhaps I should take this opportunity of announcing the proceedings on the adjournment motion tonight. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, finance; the hon. member for St. John's East, fisheries; the hon. member for Winnipeg North; power.

Mr. Baldwin: May I thank the committee for its courtesy. When I have concluded, as requested by the hon. member for Sarnia, I think it was, I shall identify the authorship of these remarks.

I list some of these measures I have referred to which have been proposed in recent months. There were some of the farm program bills, part of the competition bill, part of the labour code and the so-called new aspects of the tax bill. It is true that the latter bill has been reduced in severity from the drastic proposals of the white paper, but it still contains real punishment for those who believe in the value of the individual enterprise system. When one has been threatened with a great injustice, one sometimes accepts a smaller injustice as a favour. This is the philosophy of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Finance. They make a great threat and then reduce it, and as a result the smaller injustice seems almost to be a friendly act. An injustice occurs when the many are denied reasonable rewards and recognition for their contribution and others are unduly rewarded.

The twilight of our society grows on us when we see the extent of excessive government intervention and control as it spreads through the land—in our farms, our businesses, our industries and our factories. We have built great shining temples as monuments to, and luxurious housing for, the bureaucrats. They are the new high priests of society, and we worship at their altar. If this twilight turns, as it surely will, into the dark night of an unhappy and cheerless life, we can blame none but ourselves. Because we will have built the abyss into which we shall slide, and have constructed the darkness which prevents us from seeing the precipice.

That was a speech that I delivered last Saturday night at the nominating convention for the hon. member for Palliser.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I have been following the debate and can only come to the conclusion that our whole taxation system is in an incredible mess, particularly in the area of corporate taxation. In no section of this bill is there less evidence of any tax reform than in the proposals dealing with corporate income. In fact, we are continuing a system that has been in place for a long, long time, a system which to some extent was unworkable before and will be even more unworkable now. I am interested to note that the opposition finds itself in a position, in respect of taxation changes, to be as critical as ever. I think, by and large, our whole approach to corporate taxation has failed completely, and we should be taking a second look at this situation. During the years in which we have studied our tax system we should have been able to come up with something more successful in respect of corporate taxes. Most of the suggestions of the opposition were thrown away and we now find ourselves back where we were at the beginning. All we have succeeded in doing in respect of corporate taxes has been to shift their impact. Corporate taxes in Canada have actually become sales taxes which are passed on to the customer. There is growing evidence that this is what is happening.

• (5:00 p.m.)

All our attempts to extract income from the larger corporations have met with less than success. If we look at the amount of tax governments are collecting as compared to the amount paid by corporations, we find there is a decline. More and more funds are coming from individuals and less from corporations. Everybody wants to collect money from the corporations, but at every turn of the wheel the corporation has managed to outfox the tax collectors of this country. We must take this fact into account. We are talking about extracting funds from corporations, but it seems the corporations wind up as the winners in that kind of an encounter. We have considerable evidence that present corporation tax acts are insignificant and inefficient. Our corporation tax laws reward the inefficient and penalize the efficient individuals in this country. Corporation tax is collected from companies that make money. We find many corporations which are using valuable resources in this country but are not paying taxes. It seems to me that the world source of resources should be husbanded. Perhaps this idea does not make a great deal of sense. It seems very obvious that we must come up with a taxation proposal a great deal better than the one now under consideration.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

This government seems completely lost as to how to handle corporations. The government has responded to all kinds of pressure, contrary to what my friends in the party to the right have said. The government has not accepted its responsibility. Twice the government has proposed changes in this legislation, and each change has made the legislation worse and less understandable. All we have done has been to make more work for tax lawyers and chartered accountants. Even the professionals do not understand the ramifications of this tax reform as they relate to corporations. There is a lot of headscratching going on among Canadians who are trying to comprehend this bill. Many people are trying to understand how to advise clients about the ramifications of this measure. I wonder whether the government itself understands this bill. The government brought it in and changed it, and when we make adjustments we must try to understand those adjustments as they take place. There is apparently no logic, clearly definable goal or purpose to what is being proposed. In many ways, this tax system goes contrary to our Canadian economy, and I have made reference to this before.

It is important to look at our present aim to see where the changes suggested should occur. The absence of a capital gains tax has probably done more to encourage foreign ownership of Canadian industry than anything else. As a result of this measure, we will have a one-half capital gains tax, which in itself does contain an element of encouragement. For many years we have been in favour of incentives to corporations in the form of dividends, tax credits and other things. In fact, there has been an acceleration in the terms and the amount of foreign ownership in this country. There has been an absolutely miserable policy in respect of corporation tax and our tax system generally to present to Canadian industries. We are now being asked, through the legislation before us, to deal with corporations in a way that will continue the same situation. The present measure no longer continues the 20 per cent tax credit. We are now faced with a 33 per cent tax credit. There is going to be a one-half capital gains tax, but again this will differentiate between one kind of income and another.

This government has been unsuccessful in previous legislation in stopping the sell-out of Canadian industry, and I suggest the legislation now before us will also be ineffective. This is a very serious matter. This country is in danger of losing its entire economy, and I do not think we should encourage a tax system which will contribute to the sell-out of our own industries. We should not exclude foreign ownership from Canada. Foreign ownership can be helpful and there are a number of examples in western Canada which indicate that foreign ownership is advantageous, but we should be selective in this regard. We must exercise some selectivity in respect of applications for foreign ownership and decide which applications might be helpful and which might not. Up to this point we have refused to do so, and we still refuse. Our tax incentives have obviously failed, and our system does not provide the revenue required. To the extent the treasury is depressed, the taxpayers who pay taxes on wages and salaries pay more. The average taxpayer is at the mercy of our tax collector and has little or no opportunity to control the system.

All the arguments put before us in the past regarding the prevention of the sell-out of Canadian industries are now being put to us again. These arguments are no more convincing than they ever were. We have had a chance to examine the background of these arguments and we know what they mean. One of the benefits of having been a member of the committee which examined the white paper on taxation was the privilege of travelling around the country, speaking to a lot of people and learning how they feel about our tax system. One of the most impressive presentations to the committee was made by a chartered accountant and a farmer from British Columbia. I am not sure, but I believe his name was McIvor. I have not had an opportunity to look at it, but it was an impressive brief. When he first made his argument, I believe members of the committee were saying, "Oh no, this man has to be a bit of a kook". However, he was a chartered accountant and could not be dismissed that lightly. He also had been president of the British Columbia association and this made it even more difficult to dismiss him. His performance, and the logic of what he was saying, made it impossible to ignore what he was telling the committee. This man was making the argument, perhaps more effectively than I am at the moment, that our corporation tax has failed to achieve its purpose. He argued for a form of a value added tax in which one would pay for the resources as they were used.

There are two ways we could move. Both of them, in my view, are more desirable and effective than the suggestion before us. Certainly, the government has had sufficient time to examine the alternatives to corporation taxation, rather than following the discredited principles we have before us at this time. One way in which we could have moved is that suggested in the Carter royal commission report, and that is the integration of personal and corporate taxation. The government toyed with the integration idea. The white paper suggested integration with a capital gains tax. The effective integration would have been to remove, to some extent, the present corporate tax structure and replace it with something else. This would have had the great advantage of simplifying the tax system and bringing all sources of income into the tax base because the integration proposal of the royal commission called for a full capital gains tax. The capital gains would have been added to the base and been calculated on that level.

The government's argument, as I understand it, is that full integration at the present level of corporation tax would be too costly, and would deprive the government of the revenue it requires; but that is true only if we leave the corporate tax at the present rate and there is no reason for that. We could have adjusted the corporate tax rate in order that the government could obtain the revenue it would require and have the degree of equity, fairness and simplicity that was available through the integration proposal that was not accepted. The government's ludicrous proposal in the white paper of having half integration has all the problems of a half capital gains tax, as well as the problem of having the whole thing fouled up with two systems running side by side. Also it would fail to obtain the full benefits, if there are any, from the present system as well as fail to get the real benefit from the integration proposal. I do not know why the government brought in the half integration system, unless it was deliberately looking for a way to destroy that proposal, but certainly it came under heavy fire and the government withdrew it.

When one reads the Carter commission report, it emerges quite clearly that the Carter commission, had all industry in Canada been Canadian and had all the owners of industry in Canada been Canadian, probably would have recommend the abolition of the corporation tax and the substitution of a more effective way to tax corporations by taxing the resources they use. The reason this could not be done is that such a system would confer a substantial benefit on the United States treasury and on United States holders of property in Canada. Because we have so much foreign ownership, even an attempt to design our tax system becomes a nightmare. What might be an acceptable and perfectly valid approach becomes unacceptable and we are not able to carry it out because of the high degree of foreign ownership which exists in Canada.

If we should go to a value added tax, and many European countries are now moving in that direction and there has been some discussion in the United States of moving in this direction, there would be a tax on the amount of goods corporations use in the manufacture of whatever they are doing or on the services they provide. This would take care of many of the troubles we have in our tax system. We have had tremendous discussions concerning how we should handle the non-taxable benefits of people who work for corporations or who are self-employed. How should we handle the expenses of the car, the convention, the hotel, the meals these people consume or the entertainment they provide. Every proposal which has been attempted has broken down for one reason or another. I suggest that with a value added tax these things would be of less concern. If they wanted to do more advertising or more entertaining, they would pay for it and it would not be deductible from their future corporate tax. In fact, society is subsidizing all kinds of marginal things. Non-taxable fringe benefits have been subsidized in the past.

At this time, I do not wish to become involved in an extended debate on either the integration system or the value added tax system. First of all, there is not too much time and second, with the exception of the integration proposal, we certainly do not know too much about the value added system at this time. All I am trying to point out is there were alternative approaches which might have been taken to the whole problem of corporation tax, and in the face of the failure of the corporation tax to really accomplish some of the purposes we set out, the government should have seriously discussed these other proposals rather than rejecting them, I think to some extent out of hand, because they did not conform to the traditional pattern. The government, in fact, did not seem to have enough courage to really want to bring about tax reform. It wanted to use the words and talk about tax reform, but there is really no instinct or no commitment on the government side for a genuine tax reform system for Canada.

So, we are continuing with a system of corporation tax that retains some shabby concepts. Under the legislation we are debating at this moment, it is less important in this country how much a person earns than how he earns it. The wage and salary earner must continue to pay full tax on all his earnings. If a person should be receiving dividends rather than wages and salary, he would pay less tax. If part of those dividends incorporate capital gains, he pays even less tax. If he has dividends from an oil company or a natural resource industry he gets a further break, and so on in our society. This is something to which I personally object a great deal. It is also something to which my party is very much opposed. I refer to this concept of inequal treatment. We think it serves the people in our country very badly. We think it serves the interest of the development of industry very badly, that the corporation tax as we now have it is unfair and is in a large measure responsible for many of the ills and inefficiencies which exist in this country because we have failed to look at its inadequacies.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Chairman, I am impelled to offer a few remarks concerning this portion of the tax bill owing to the fact that I am anxious to support the suggestion which has been made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, reinforced by the hon. member for Peace River, when they tried to impress upon everyone within sound of their voice the general desirability of passing a portion of this monstrous bill and leaving the controversial and unacceptable parts to future discussion and future examination. In this way, we could ensure that this whole bill, which after all is a matter of great consequence to the Canadian public, would be taken in stages rather than inflicted upon the people in its entirety. So, I rise for the purpose of supporting that argument and I hope it will meet with some consideration by the government.

I am not expert enough in the rules of this House to know whether or not a large bill with as many sections as this one has could be passed subject to proclamation, and then various sections proclaimed when the government decides that it is appropriate to do it. Personally, I see nothing wrong and no reason why that course should not be applicable to this bill. It seems to me to be fair and desirable, if the government wishes to have the whole bill passed, that they introduce as part of the bill a proclamation clause so that the various sections can be proclaimed as it develops that those sections should be proclaimed. I realize that any suggestion coming from over here will not necessarily be treated with tremendous respect, but I hope that this suggestion which has been advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Peace River this afternoon and which, I understand has been advanced also by the Leader of the Opposition,—I hope my friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West will not take me to task when I say this—will meet with favourable consideration by the government.

In the white paper proposals there were certain suggestions regarding corporate taxation. I do not wish to go into the details of what took place at the various hearings which the committee held, sometimes in the east and sometimes in the west of Canada, but it has been suggested that they took these proposals to the people for the purpose of securing their opinion. I might say, as a member of that committee, that I never saw or heard tell of any proposals which received as much opposition as did the white paper proposals almost in their entirety. So, if the government learned anything from the hearings which were held by the committee, surely they must have been impressed with the fact that in general terms the proposals were undesirable and unacceptable to the majority of the people of Canada.

I happen to think that the government is wrong in its approach to the whole question. I have said before, and I repeat it because I think it bears repeating, that they could have accomplished the changes that they wished to accomplish by amending the statutes which have been in existence in connection with taxation ever since the inception of parliament, and certainly those in connection with income tax dating back to 1917. There is no reason the government could not have taken what is acceptable to them and then added or taken away from that as it suited them. We would then not have had such a complex and difficult bill to understand. I am not the only one who says that it is difficult to understand. We have had chartered accountants and lawyers who said that they were bewildered by it and were unable to digest it.

So, I submit that the nearest approach to retaining something that is good in the present statute would be for the government to carefully consider the addition of a proclamation clause to the bill, following which it would proclaim from time to time certain sections as the staff and the general public seem to understand them and as they appear to receive that degree of acceptance which would be necessary.

The white paper proposals were examined by the committee under the very capable chairmanship of the parliamentary secretary who is piloting the bill this afternoon. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that he handled those hearings in a most distinguished way and brought great credit to himself and to the government. I am glad to see him occupying the position he does here this afternoon in piloting this bill. I think that he is more likely to accept some of our proposals than is the other parliamentary secretary who was here last week, at least I hope that is the case, Mr. Chairman. On June 18, in his budget speech, the Minister of Finance modified the proposals in the white paper. He acknowledged that the proposals were unacceptable, not only to the business community but also to a number of provinces. As a result, the government decided to modify the existing system for taxing corporate income rather than introduce a comprehensive new system.

Then, as you know, within the last month or so the government has decided to accept the recommendation that has been advanced from this side of the House on a good many different occasions that they stimulate employment by a reduction of taxation. In other words, what the government acknowledges is that they are willing by a reduction of taxation to encourage private business to employ at least a portion of the people who are presently unemployed. That is what the minister said in his speech. As a consequence, the corporate tax has been reduced by 7 per cent of the amount payable. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will digest this. When the government accepts the proposal that it is going to take 7 per cent of the corporate tax as a means of stimulating employment and the economy, surely that means that when they changed the tax laws, thus increasing taxation, they must have been wrong. I do not criticize them for this reduction as I think it was necessary and I am sure every member of this House hopes and expects that some benefit will result.

I turn now to the 20 per cent dividend tax credit that is being replaced by 33 1/3 per cent. I do not propose to go into that matter in detail because it is rather complicated. I cannot follow the argument that to increase the dividend tax credit will not stimulate the ownership of companies by Canadians. I cannot see how it could fail to have that effect.

I should like to speak now about small corporations with annual incomes of up to $50,000. Under the present act the rate is 21 per cent on income up to $35,000, and under the proposed legislation it starts at 25 per cent but the amount on which that would apply is raised to $50,000. As an alternative to the present lower rate of corporate tax on the first $35,000 of income the government has introduced a small business credit to be available only to Canadian-controlled private corporations. This restriction excludes from the eligible group any private corporation controlled in any manner whatsoever by non-resident persons or by some combination of non-resident persons and Canadian public corporations.

The credit is applied to reduce the federal corporate tax and is computed initially at 25 per cent on no more than $50,000 of business income of each taxation year. The rate of credit is to be decreased concurrently with the decrease in the general corporate tax rate to 24 per cent in 1973, and by a further one percentage point per year until it reaches 21 per cent in 1976. Corporations may continue to claim the credit until such time as they have accumulated and retained $400,000 of earnings.

Since the credit is to be granted at the corporate level it has been found necessary to retain the present detailed associated company provisions, with minor modifications, and the present provision for ministerial discretion in order to restrict the amount of benefits which might be claimed. Both the $50,000 annual limit and the $400,000 retention limit must be allocated annually amongst companies which form an associated group.

I believe that a degree of foreign ownership is beneficial. I believe if you have participation in the management of a company and it brings with it the research it has established as being desirable, and the experience of its operation, it tends to distribute more jobs. I think Canadians should try to emulate this sort of thing and learn from it. Foreign ownership does not necessarily mean ownership within the United States of America. In my province there are companies controlled by the British and some by the French, and in every case they bring ideas to the country. To say that all investment of foreigners should be kept out is ridiculous and I do not subscribe to any such doctrine.

To my certain knowledge there are companies that have been doing business in Canada for 25, 30 or perhaps even 50 years and have acted as good corporate citizens. If they have established a reputation and have conducted their business in accordance with the laws of Canada, then to say that they cannot receive a particular tax benefit seems to me to be rank discrimination. I repeat, these companies have established a reputation for living within the laws of Canada, being good, law-abiding citizens, paying their people well and abiding by the labour laws of the country.

I want also to speak about the total business limit of $400,000. That is what they will be allowed—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is taxable income.

Mr. Flemming: That is right. What will probably happen is that they will be able to use the benefits of the lower tax rate for expansion and to make themselves more efficient, and at the end of the period they will be prevented from selling it even to one of those good corporate companies which I mentioned earlier. By being obliged to retain it, they will not have the liquid funds to carry on because they have been put back into equipment and general improvements in the plant. It seems to me that some consideration might be given to the question of corporate taxation as it applies to companies with a long record of satisfactory performance in accordance with the laws of this country.

If the government in its wisdom, or lack of it, decides that in future things will be changed and there will be no foreign ownership of business in Canada, that is their right. But they should at least present it to this Parliament and the people of Canada for approval. It is my opinion that the people of Canada will not approve it. It is my opinion that the government will go out of business on that issue. If they want to do it in the future, possibly there is some justification. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot say to corporate citizens who have had satisfactory business relations and who have contributed to the building of flourishing communities, "You are no longer welcome in Canada and you must get out". I do not think the people will support that kind of attitude and will say to the government, "You are the ones who should get out."

That is my contribution relative to the small business provision. I know something about small business. I know something about frozen assets, about small businesses not having ample funds and not having a great deal of liquidity. Nevertheless, small business is helped a good deal by government taxation policies. Compared with taxes which large corporations pay, the tax rates of small businesses are somewhat favourable. The government reduced corporate taxes by 7 per cent in 1971 with the idea of stimulating business. I believe in that policy and I hope, as I am sure we all do, that it will bring benefits and improve employment and the general economic situation of the country.

We must bear in mind that developments taking place from day to day may affect some of the things that governments can do. I do not pretend to be an expert on oil and gas. The other day the National Energy Board decided that we did not have a sufficient surplus of natural gas for additional export and that we should not export more than had already been approved. I am sure we all recognize that the National Energy Board comprises a group of men who are anxious to do a good job and perform a worth-while service for the country.

Nevertheless, I submit, Mr. Chairman, through you to the parliamentary secretary that since there is a demand for this product, since our neighbours to the south want it, it would be the essence of common sense for the government to say to those exploring for oil and gas, "Not only will we make the tax laws applying to you beneficial; we will make them even more beneficial than they have been." It seems to me that you will not get people to risk their money for holes to be dug in the ground in search of oil and gas unless there is a reasonable prospect that at some point they may receive some benefit from the venture. After all, they will drill many dry holes in the process.

The government, I submit, should be encouraging exploration because a market for gas has been established. I have found that when there is a demand for a product, people do their best to produce it and meet the demand. When there is demand, people will always attempt to fill it. The government, however, will not acquire for this country additional supplies of oil and gas if it imposes taxes so onerous that people will not undertake the risks associated with the finding of those products.

My time has almost expired. I urge the parliamentary secretary to note what has been said about small business. There is one more thing I want to say. If an owner should dispose of a small business, what would be the difference to him if he were to dispose of it to a Canadian owner as opposed to a foreign owner? It seems to me that someone should rise and in simple language tell the members of the committee just what is the position of the owner of a small business and what he can do in this regard. I realize that some may say, "Why do you not read the bill?" I much prefer to hear an expert who is familiar with the bill and has studied it explain to the committee what he has discovered. I hope that before long we will receive in this committee a simple explanation. How will the owner of a small business be affected if he sells his business to Canadians or if he sells it to foreign owners? What will be the difference to him?

I come back to my first observation. I do not understand why the proclamation provision should not apply to the entire bill. It could be proclaimed if the government, after it has discussed the matter in this chamber, feels it is desirable to do so in the interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, in resuming the discussion on section 125 dealing with small business may I say that the committee should know that under section 125(2) the maximum deduction in any one year is, as has been mentioned many times, $50,000. There will be a $12,500 deduction in 1972, reducing to $10,500 in 1976 and subsequent years. However, that is but one opinion. The truth of the last observation depends upon the correctness of the interpretation—and I trust the parliamentary secretary will speak about this—which the hon. member for Vegreville and I made regarding where the deductions apply to the 25 per cent figure referred to in section 125(1).

The $50,000 is a corporation's business limit. Those words come right out of the legislation. Also, the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte made the point that once a company has reached the level of $400,000 of taxable income—and it need not have reached it at the rate of $50,000 a year for eight years, because the corporation could have made $100,000 in one year—the total or, shall we say, maximum qualification is exhausted.

Here we have a total business limit minus a cumulative deduction account operating at the end of the immediately preceding year. Mr. Chairman, total business limit and cumulative deduction account are two brand new terms which have been introduced into the Income Tax Act, and neither the departmental officials nor the professionals have been able to settle on the items that go to making up these so-called totals. Unless one can get an absolutely clear appreciation of these terms it will be impossible to determine what is the result of the business operation for the year. I think the Minister of Finance gave the impression, as did some people talking about the provisions affecting small business as disclosed in June, that the government was being very generous to small business. Frankly, that is absolutely the reverse of the truth.

First, $35,000 has been eroded by inflation and the devaluation of the dollar. The net result is that it is much easier to get to $35,000 and then go to the higher rate. The government is the beneficiary of this progression from the lower to the higher tier. Actually, the so-called low rate as a small business incentive is considerably less attractive than the former one. The annual taxable income is less than $35,000.

In an extreme situation, an otherwise qualified corporation that earned taxable income of $400,000 in the first year of the new system and paid no dividends would be eligible for a $50,000 small business deduction in that year but no subsequent deduction. A corporation accumulating taxable income would only be eligible for the small business deduction on its income each year until its taxable income totalled $400,000. It would then cease to qualify for the small business deduction. You have to contrast this with the present system whereby the low rate on the first $35,000 applies indefinitely.

It will be noted that taxable income is an important factor in the cumulative deduction account, so the $400,000 maximum amount will be net in respect of business losses but will include non-business income and capital gains. We note that in other areas the low rate cannot apply to non-business income or non-domestic income, yet the accumulation of $400,000 of taxable income will include non-business income and non-Canadian income. Therefore, small business is doubly hit.

Surely, equity suggests that if the company is to be taken out of the category of small business by having reached the $400,000 ceiling, this should apply only to the total income which qualifies for the lower rate. In other words, active businesses earning Canadian income are the only ones that qualify for the lower rate. Justice says the $400,000 ceiling should apply to the total of that type of income and not bring in all the others which now qualify for the lower rate and on which the government, under the act, will exact a 50 per cent rate or whatever will be the appropriate rate by 1976.

Let us look at ineligible investments under sections 188 and 189. Further complexities arise where ineligible investments are made; for example, where a corporation uses excess funds to purchase portfolio securities rather than to pay dividends or to expand the business. This is quite the thing. All sorts of businesses must have reserves set aside for a rainy day. Management would be most imprudent if having some spare cash it did not pay dividends which would attract taxation or did not engage in unwanted or unneeded business expansion, if it did not put it aside in securities investments lasting longer than a year. However, those are ineligible investments and the returns thereon will be taxed as non-business income. On one hand, it will push the total income toward the $400,000 ceiling but they have to deduct it from the otherwise income of the company in order to qualify for the lower rate.

Ineligible investments under the bill are defined as being all property acquired after 1971 that are not used to produce income from an active business. However, excluded from the term ineligible investments are bank deposits and bonds. I presume government bonds will qualify as eligible investments because they are government bonds. However, if they are bonds, for example, of some electric utility company they would become passive income not in the ordinary course of business and therefore would be disqualified.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Edmonton West had the floor on sections 82 to 85, 89, 112, 121 to 125, 129, 143 and 181 to 197.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Before the dinner hour I was discussing the effect of sections 188 and 189 on ineligible investments. I think the dinner hour came at a fortunate moment because I had the impression I was treading on shaky ground in arriving at my definition as to what might be eligible investments. When I said that government bonds might qualify but not those of an electric utility I found I was not completely right. Neither would qualify if the maturity of the issue exceeded one year.

I find it extraordinary that a company having funds in excess of its day to day working capital requirements should encounter such a restriction. The size of the reserves might still be well within the sum necessary for the prudent and efficient management of the company's affairs, yet the only thing it is permitted to do with this money is keep it on deposit with a chartered bank or a trust company or buy short-term issues. On no account must companies invest in anything which reaches maturity after one year. So, for example, investment in long-term bonds, which the government has a great desire to encourage, is forbidden. Let us consider which ones are eligible.

any bond, debenture, mortgage, hypothec, note or other similar obligation

(A) of or guaranteed by the government of Canada,

(B) of the government of a province or an agent thereof,

(C) of a municipality in Canada or a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada,

(D) of a corporation, commission or association not less than 90 per cent of the shares or capital of which is owned by Her Majesty in right of a province or by a Canadian municipality, or of a subsidiary wholly-owned corporation—

Strangely enough, companies cannot invest, in these circumstances, in any obligations, even the Canada Development Corporation. One of the bright stars which is very much in the government's eye at the present time is on a muted note. It blows its trumpet about projecting some life into that otherwise moribund body. I would have bet last June that this was to be a non-starter. I still think it will be a non-starter, nothwithstanding the fact that some people have got together to form the board. In any event, the obligations of the Canada Development Corporation do not qualify under this particular section. All investments are required to be subject to the one principal requirement that they mature not later than one year after the date of issue of the obligation.

Then there are a number of other ways whereby money can be invested, but I am surprised this limitation has been put on this sort of investment. I should like to know what is the difference between interest on a treasury note and that on a Dominion of Canada medium-term bond. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary can tell the committee why this disabling restriction was applied at this particular point.

Where there is an ineligible investment, a special tax will be levied equal to 25 per cent of twice the cost of the investment or 25 per cent of the corporation's—this is another new term—"preferred rate amount" minus the net amount on which it has previously paid tax under this provision. The definition of "preferred rate amount" in section 189(4)(c) once again is complex, but normally it would be amounts on which the corporation had previously claimed the small business deduction minus an allowance for dividends paid. I apologize for the language, but this is pure Greek. Then there is a comment which reads as follows:

Perhaps an indication of the complexity of some of these terms, their computation and their inter-relationship is the fact that the bill as drafted appears to extend eligibility for the small business deduction by the simple expedient of making ineligible investments and subsequently disposing of them. This unintended benefit will obviously be removed prior to enactment into law.

It will be very interesting to see how quickly the appropriate amendment will be made if this is something that has winnowed its way through the gate and escaped attention. Business might have been able to do something about it on an interim basis, but as long as you qualify by certain dates you will be all right. The comment continues:

The thrust of the intended procedure is to ensure that the 25 per cent small business deduction is available only where the funds are used to expand the business or have been brought to personal tax by dividend distribution. The corporation can no longer be used to shelter excess funds from personal tax unless the excess funds are invested in short-term paper or bank accounts. This exception will be relatively unattractive.

For the life of me I cannot understand the treasury's or the government's preoccupation with excess funds that are ultimately going to come to the government anyway in the form of tax but which in the interval are going to be put to work either in government obligations or in obligations in some other concern. They are invested and are a reserve against unforeseen eventualities. They are part of an accumulation used for expansion, not this year but next year or the year after.

I want to be as charitable as possible, but this is not the first time I have run across this sort of thing. When dealing with Treasury years ago I came across the idea that once a dollar has been made, the Crown had the right to take its share at once. Since when has it had that right? What God-given right has the Crown to say that as soon as $1 is earned by business, the Crown gets its share; that the Crown must exact its pound of flesh? It will ultimately get its share, but straight away envious eyes are cast on those dollars.

As a matter of fact, that was the motivation behind the proposal in the white paper for the work accomplished accrual basis. As soon as the work had been completed, presumably the dollars had been earned and the Crown was entitled to its share. I have heard the Minister of Finance himself say that the Crown had the right to its money. Nothing could be further from the truth, yet at this particular juncture we have another example of this philosophy.

The two-tier system of tax assessment was inserted into the legislation precisely to assist small business to accumulate capital for expansion purposes, so that small business did not have to pay out dividends that would be subject to tax, that it would not have to spend money immediately in the year in which it was earned. It was allowed to accumulate capital since other avenues of financing were not open to small business.

I have heard Liberal Ministers of Finance expound on this theory of what they were doing for small business. The two-tier system was introduced by a Liberal administration, and I use a capital "L". Then it was expanded by Hon. Donald Fleming when he was Minister of Finance so that small business was able to accumulate capital for expansion purposes. Now we have the present administration acting on God knows what philosophy of taxation. From cover to cover of this blue-covered book there are disincentives, and this is one of them. As I say, this money will come to the Crown in due course. The fact that it is invested, that it is earning income, that it is going to produce a substantial expansion of business or that it may be paid out as dividends where it will attract its full share of taxation, matters not; there will be a disincentive at this particular point. This is one of the more regrettable features.

As chairman of the committee on finance, the parliamentary secretary will recall that when we put together our recommendations we thought there would be something akin to the two-tier system to help small business, which quite frankly is having one hell of a time competing not only nationally but internationally. I would ask the committee to reject section 125 and section 189.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, the original purpose of the reduced rate—the two-tier system for small business—was to allow small business to accumulate capital in larger amount than corporations. The original thought was that small business had a distinct disadvantage when it came to procuring money to assist business expansion compared with larger corporations. Indeed, I do not think there is any doubt that that was the case. The problem arises here of so-called equity of taxation. If one company for various reasons can procure capital to expand its operations faster than some other company as a result of its size or its situation, then equity of taxation becomes difficult to accomplish.

During the hearings on the white paper on taxation many representations were made in regard to the small business deduction. No one that I am aware of felt that the premise of a two-tier system for taxation of companies was not a valid one. Large companies who felt no need for this system agreed that a strong business sector made up of small corporations was valuable to the country. There was no argument that the small company receiving taxation benefits that would not aid in the growth of the country and would not aid in increasing the economic status of our industry. In the proposals in Bill C-259 it is obvious the government has retreated a great deal from the idea of a two-tier system. It has so hedged the act that the benefit will not be really as great as it has been. I think this is unfortunate.

Wherever one goes in this country one finds that representatives of small business companies say it is becoming more difficult for them because the tax structure, the various actions of our government and the happenings in the market place seem to be placing small business at a disadvantage. Yet at this time the government has chosen to increase the disadvantages which were present in the old act. I believe this is regrettable because in the last few weeks, by the action of the U.S. through its surcharge and DISC proposals and because of the European Common Market, we face a general darkening of the trade outlook. A country such as Canada, with its scattered and small population, needs the ingenuity and entrepreneurship of our very important individual Canadians in order to provide the jobs that are so necessary for our expanding labour force of the seventies.

I view with considerable regret the action of the government in respect of the taxation of small business. I should like to discuss the small business deduction. Generally speaking, the proposal is that the taxable income of all corporations will generally be subject to a single federal corporate tax rate, which for 1972 will be 50 per cent and which will be reduced, starting in 1973, by one percentage point a year to a rate of 46 per cent in 1976 and subsequent taxation years. What will happen next year applicable to small business is something I do not believe the minister has pointed out, in view of the fact that it is to be a 7 per cent reduction for the year 1972 in corporation tax.

The special rules will apply to Canadian-controlled private corporations as defined in Bill C-259, section 125(6)(a). All resident private Canadian corporations that are not controlled either by non-residents, public corporations or a combination of both, will qualify for a special incentive. The incentive will take the form of a deduction from the company's tax otherwise payable—section 125(1). The deduction will be computed at the rate of 25 per cent for 1972, reducing by one percentage point a year commencing in 1973 to a rate of 21 per cent for 1976 and subsequent taxation years, of the least of, first, the company's taxable income from an active business for the then current year—section 125(1)(w)—and, second, the company's business limit for the year, business limit being defined as $50,000—section 125(1)(c) and section 125(2)(a).

Then there is the difference between the company's cumulative deduction account and its total business limit, a total business limit being defined as $400,000—section 125(1)(d) and section 125(2)(b). Then, again, the amount by which the company's total taxable income for the year exceeds an amount calculated under a formula with respect to foreign taxes paid by it—section 125(1)(b). The cumulative deduction account of a company is defined by section 125(6)(b) as the aggregate of its post-1971 taxable income plus four-thirds of certain taxable dividends received, less certain deductions. Taxable income includes all income from active business, investments, dividends, capital gains or otherwise, less applicable losses.

The cumulative deduction can be reduced by the company paying dividends to its shareholders—section 125(6)(b)—and in addition there are complex rules which allow the company to deduct its outstanding refundable tax in respect of ineligible investments and its dividend refund under section 129. Because the amount of the deduction is to be reduced concurrently with the reduction of the general corporate rate, the effect will be to maintain an effective rate of tax of 25 per cent payable by a corporation which qualifies for the small business deduction.

Since the total business limit is based on the company's aggregate total taxable income, dividend payments used to reduce the amount of the total business limit must be calculated on a comparable basis and, therefore, four-thirds of all dividends paid are to be deducted from the company's total taxable income—section 125(6)(b)(iii). This calculation takes into account the grossing-up of the dividend by the taxpayer when he computes his personal income tax.

Turning now to capital losses, a corporation's business limit and cumulative deduction account are the main criteria on which the small business incentive provisions are based. The cumulative deduction account requires the calculation of a corporation's aggregate taxable income for the relevant period of time. In calculating taxable income no account is taken of capital losses except to the extent they reduce capital gains. We submit that for the sole purpose of determining entitlement to the small business incentive a corporation's capital losses should be taken into consideration, since these losses will probably be reflected in an impaired working capital position. The company will be less able to grow and will run the added risk of exceeding its business limit and total business limit at the time when it can least afford to lose the incentive tax reduction.

What about the total business limit? The small business incentive provision places pressure on the shareholders of a company to draw out the reserves of the company as it nears the $400,000 level. The government's aim, as stated at page 39 of the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation, is the following:

> The main objective of continuing the incentive is to provide private corporations with funds for use in their business.

If that is the aim, why should small business be forced to pay out money by way of dividends that it requires for working capital, even though the recipients of these dividends could loan them back to the company and replace at least part of the working capital? It must also be remembered that the payment of dividends will, generally speaking, result in tax being paid by the recipient, so that the full amount of the dividend will not be available to be reinvested in the company.

We believe that in order to preserve the government's aim as stated above, the incentive provisions should not contain the limit of $400,000 on the aggregate of taxable incomes but they should be based on annual active business profits with the $50,000 annual limit on those profits. Otherwise, the small business will be forced to pay out its working capital as it approaches the $400,000 level. The concept of cumulative deduction account, on which the incentive provisions are based, is concerned with taxable income upon which tax has been or is about to be levied. Therefore, a particular company's cumulative deduction account must be reduced by 25 per cent—the amount of the exigible tax—in order to arrive at what is available to the company for working capital purposes. Thus, the total business limit represents only $300,000, rather than $400,000 of working capital reinvested in the company, assuming only business income.

Turning to the matter of dividends, curiously enough it may be more expensive for the shareholder of a small business to take the dividend than to leave it in the company. At page 9 of the summary it is stated:

> The 33 per cent reformed dividend tax credit completely offsets a corporate rate tax of 25 per cent.

The summary says that if a company which is eligible for the small business incentive pays out all its after-tax income as dividends to its shareholders, the effect would be that all of the company's earnings would be taxed at the marginal rates of its shareholders. However, this is based upon the shareholders receiving the entire amount of the tax dividend credit already added to their income for grossing-up purposes.

Under the bill, the shareholder is only entitled to deduct four-fifths of the amount grossed up from his taxable income under section 121. The extra deduction of the extra one-fifth is dependent on the provinces. Thus, when on page 36 of the summary the table in column 1 discloses a situation where a shareholder taxable at the 25 per cent level would pay no further tax over the amount paid by the company, this is dependent on the province of his residence having accorded him a similar tax credit. If there is no such credit, the extra tax payable by the recipient of the dividend would be $20. Even if there is a full 100 per cent tax credit, the proposal for crediting of dividends will result in more tax being paid in the short run than if working capital had been retained to enable the company to grow.

There would appear to be a further anomaly in the suggestion that companies will be allowed to reduce their total business limit by the amount of dividends paid to their shareholders. The payment of dividends presupposes that the company has cash on hand or cash otherwise readily available to it for this purpose. This would be cash not otherwise required for business purposes. But the purpose of the incentive is to allow the company to grow, presumably by plowing back its earnings. Therefore, the company which has surplus cash which it can use for the payment of dividends will be in a position to retain the small business incentive for a longer period of time than a company earning the same before-tax business income but requiring all its cash for business purposes.

We recognize that the payment of dividends by a company eligible for the small business deduction will often result in the payment of tax by the recipient of the dividend so that the total tax on the dividend will be at the personal rate of the recipient shareholder, but the combined effect of the two tax bites will usually be less than the top rate of corporate tax, even when this has been reduced to 46 per cent. This will result in the decision to pay dividends and keep the total business limit below $400,000 rather than to reinvest the earnings in the company and pay the top corporate tax rate thereon. This is not consistent with the intention of the small business incentive provisions, although it would appear to be consistent with the scheme of the small business shareholder treatment to tax corporate earnings at the rate of the individual shareholder.

I should like to speak now of associated corporations. In order to prevent the proliferation of companies for the purpose of the small business incentive, the bill perpetuates the concept of associated corporations under section 125 (3) and (4). The rules are similar to those under the present act but it does mean that associated corporations will allocate the $50,000 business limit among the members of their group and the $400,000 total business limit will be determined for the group as a whole.

There is an apparent paradox here. It is of interest to note that with the effective corporate tax rate being increased to 25 per cent from the present federal rate of 21 per cent, companies now earning no more than $35,000 per year will pay more tax than at present, while companies now earning between $35,000 and $50,000 per year will pay less tax. It hardly appears equitable for the very small business company to have to pay more tax while at the same time a relatively large corporation will receive a tax deduction.

So I think the government has gone a long way toward nullifying the effect of the small business incentive provision for the company earning below $35,000. Whereas under the old system that company had the advantage of 29 per cent as opposed to large corporations, under the new legislation it would be much less, the difference between 25 per cent and 46 per cent as opposed to 21 per cent, so that the reduction is by one-third. This comes at a time when we say that we should be giving small businesses aid.

What are the incentive restrictions? When a company which was receiving the small business incentive reduction becomes a foreign-controlled corporation, it will be required to pay any tax savings previously received under the incentive. These are to be repayable over a five-year period. This will certainly impede foreign takeovers of small businesses. I believe that the repayment requirement constitutes an undue hardship and penalty. If the reason for the deduction was to help the company to grow, then in our submission all that should occur is that when a company becomes foreign controlled it should no longer be eligible for the deduction.

The new, foreign shareholders would not receive the benefit of the incentive except that perhaps the company's surplus on hand might be larger than if it had paid the regular rate of corporate tax. However, if all of the surplus had been paid out by way of dividends to the old shareholders, the new shareholders would not be receiving any benefit from corporate surplus on hand.

If two companies that are eligible for the small business incentive become associated or amalgamate with each other, and if as a result of the amalgamation their combined cumulative taxable income exceeds $400,000, they will not have to repay the amount of the incentive they have respectively enjoyed but the benefits of the incentive will no longer be available to the new company, nor is repayment of the incentive required if the company becomes a public company but, of course, the low rate will no longer be available to it.

What are the investment restrictions? Ineligible investments are defined as every conceivable type of investment except cash, certain bonds and short-term notes. These investment restrictions are much too narrow and should be expanded to include all reasonably short-term and liquid investments. If the small business incentive has as its purpose to allow companies to grow, it should be given to those who cannot easily raise money on the market. Surely these companies should be allowed to have a reasonable reserve on hand to expand their business.

After all, companies cannot each year expand their business by a specified amount. It must come in fits and starts, and it would be reasonable if moneys were allowed to be accumulated at the incentive rate so that when an opportunity presents itself the company can make an expansion which would be reasonable for it. Companies should be able to have a reasonable reserve on hand not being immediately used for business purposes, and this reserve should be allowed to be invested properly without tax penalty or disadvantage.

To those who have studied the bill, such as accountants and so on, one of the major technical problems with the general small business incentive proposal would appear to be the substantially increased requirement for record keeping.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allowed to him has expired unless he receives unanimous consent of the committee to continue. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ritchie: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall shortly complete my remarks. As I was saying, one of the criticisms is that there would be a substantially increased requirement for record keeping. This is a criticism which in my opinion may fairly be applied to all the proposals as they affect both individual and corporate taxpayers. But the major burden would appear to fall upon the corporation. The incentive proposals as contemplated will greatly add to the increase in paperwork. This is for corporations that will not have the back-up ability to easily take care of it. We all realize that it costs money to take care of the paperwork. I would respectfully suggest that the proposals should be carefully re-examined in order to attempt to reduce the bookkeeping.

Is the establishment of a total business limit really necessary, or could the simple business limit test work effectively in conjunction with adequate policing safeguards such as the active business test? In my view, these questions should be answered before the proposals are enacted into law.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, listening to the debate I hoped that I might hear something about how these business incentives relate to the well-being of our society, how they relate to the wage and salary earners of our society—but I have not heard much along that line. At the risk of being rude I raise this question: What happens to the majority of people in our society who are not eligible for these special grants?

It is my understanding that something under 100,000 people in Canada would be eligible for the special tax treatment outlined under the small business grants. What happens to the others? The simple fact is that the change the government has made from the original white paper to the present proposals means that $315 million more every single year will be available as a result of the changes. In the original white paper proposals and on many other occasions the Minister of Finance stated that this particular change, the change away from the split rate on corporations, would raise government revenues by $400 million a year. The projection is that if it is based on 1968 incomes the government would increase its revenue by $75 million, and if it is based on 1972 incomes the revenue would be increased by $85 million. Deduct that figure from the projected increase that they stated initially, of $400 million and you get $315 million.

All of us here are sympathetic to the problems of small business. Some of us have been in business and know that the small business needs assistance in getting off the ground. I have no reluctance in seeing such assistance provided. I am sure all hon. members would agree with that statement. But the real question that arises is, what we are suggesting is necessary for all small businesses, and is this the best way of proceeding with assistance?

It is the scatter-gun approach, still the old approach. The tax rate has been changed, allowable ceilings have been changed, but it is the old story—if you spread it around some of it is bound to do some good. If only a small amount of money was involved, perhaps there would be some kind of justification. But when you are asking the wage and salary earners of this country to pay something like $400 million a year on the offchance that it will provide a positive stimulus to some business, I think a much better system is required.

The Carter commission suggested that the split rate on corporations, the differential between the two kinds of corporations, be abolished and that instead a more positive way of assisting small business be sought. The Commons committee that examined the white paper proposals and the various other tax proposals which came before it had great difficulty trying to find an acceptable formula that would reduce the cost to the treasury, reduce the burden on the wage and salary earners and at the same time find an appropriate way of assisting small business. I am sorry that the committee and the government failed to find an answer and now have to return to the old system and the scatter-gun approach.

What is the difference? There are some differences between the present proposals and the old system. The chief difference is that the larger corporations, eligible for the preferred rate under the split rate, will not get it because if their profits exceed $50,000 they are out of the picture. Previously, the legislation applied to the first $35,000 profit of all corporations. That is an understandable and acceptable method. In my view there is still considerable evidence that most of the money that will be handed out in this way will not be used for expansion or increasing efficiency of business but will simply be a bonus to some of the self-employed in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to paraphrase some of the submissions made to us in the maritime provinces during the hearings on the white paper on tax reform. If anybody wants a more definitive picture I will be glad to find the relevant portion in the committee minutes so that he can examine it himself. On one occasion a group of maritime businessmen appeared before the committee and argued very positively the need to maintain the system in its present form, saying there was an imperative need for small business to continue receiving the preferential tax treatment because, after all—and it is a very compelling argument for those of us from central Canada—they are very short of capital in the Maritimes and this is an extra reason why entrepreneurs there should be entitled to this kind of tax break.

Of course I am sympathetic, except that there are a number of flaws in that argument. One is that most of these people were investing their money outside the Maritimes and another is that most of their businesses had not expanded in years and the extra tax savings went for purposes other than business expansion. This does not apply just to the Maritimes, of course, Mr. Chairman; it applies all across the country except that it is a more poignant argument in that part of the country.

In fact, the savings have not been used to develop business as was intended. On the contrary, I think if we wanted to look at the argument very closely we could see that by providing these incentives to businesses that do not require them—I want to differentiate between businesses genuinely in need and deserving of the consideration of this House and the taxpayers of Canada—many businesses have not expanded and have no trouble getting the money they require for their operations, yet they are getting this tax benefit.

This leads to an accumulation of surplus and makes things difficult because they cannot get it out of the business. They have all kinds of profits accumulated and if they try to get it out it will be subject to marginal tax rates. Therefore, there are all sorts of shenanigans of income stripping, splitting up of companies and such techniques. Some companies are likely to say, "We have to use up this surplus we have acquired at the differential tax rate, so why don't we pad the others a little?" What was supposed to be a spur to efficiency turns out to be simply a nice, fat cushion to pad them for a number of years, encouraging inefficiency.

While the objective of assisting small business is worthy and one which I think we should be pursuing, in my view the way we have approached it is all wrong. It has been costly and has had the opposite effect of what was intended. I think the proposals should be scrapped; they are the same kind of approach with, admittedly, a different mechanism. By introducing this new legislation the government thinks it has closed all the loopholes.

Even the most sanguine people in the government—I am speaking not only of those in the political part of the government but of those who are government advisers and tell the government how things should be done—will know that from here on in that surplus of up to $400 million for small business will be an irresistible lure for anyone looking for ways in which to advise people to get out of paying certain taxes. Periodically they will come to us and say, "This has become a hopeless mess. Let us take this provision out because people have found a way of working around it. Let us take it out and replace it with a preferential tax rate of 15 per cent, say."

They will say that because the tax system will not have worked as we all thought it would work. How often have we gone through this in the House merely because the tax system had not worked as we thought it would. The accumulated surpluses will work against efficiency in the management of business operations. We have been forced to admit that our legislation has been a failure and we have said, "Let us clean up this thing. Let them take it out at a rate of tax below what it would normally be and start all over again."

We are starting on the same path that got us into this trouble before. I think this is important and we must be careful about what we are doing. If you start out to help, but then go the opposite way, what you will be doing in some cases will be worse than useless. This, to me, appears to be the situation at the moment regarding this section concerning the corporate program. I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that the wage and salary earners of this country are being asked to pay $400 million more in taxes than they would normally be required to pay under existing legislation.

Actually, in this case, I think the figure should be reduced to $300 million. That is still a very substantial amount to take from the wage and salary earners of this country for a program that will not be effective or that will be only marginally effective and will lead to all kinds of new difficulties in the taxation of corporations in this country. Also, it will further remove the real possibility of providing a much better level of assistance to small business than is contemplated in the program before us.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, sometimes when we get involved in debates like this our hopes sink very low. Our spirits may sink. However, after listening to the hon. member for Waterloo, I am always brought back, shall we say, to the realities of what makes this economy tick. The hon. member is a charming fellow; you could not ask for better. But I do not know where he learned his economics, I do not know where he learned his principles of taxation, and I do not know whether at times he is paying lip service to the doctrinaire stands of his party or is coming out with some new theories.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hope the hon. member will stay. I am not going to castigate him.

Mr. Saltsman: I want to improve my knowledge of economics.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I think I heard the hon. gentleman say that there are certain programs, not necessarily those contained in this tax bill, which hold out an incentive or a particular inducement to small businesses. According to the hon. gentleman, some economist—he remains nameless because I do not think he can substantiate this—says that this will cost the country $400 million per annum.

Mr. Saltsman: It was not an economist. The Minister of Finance said that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not know who said it, but that is the most unadulterated tripe that could be peddled by anyone. That statement regarding the $400 million presupposes that there is that amount taken out of the stream of economic activity and somehow buried, secreted, burned or wasted somewhere else. Of course, that is not so at all. To the extent that such incentives to small business provide jobs and provide the scope for advancing or expansion, if the impact of tax does not bring about a passing on of an increase in prices then the whole national economy gains, and particularly those people that the hon. member is ever wont to come to the defence of, the people who are not engaged in business on their own behalf.

Let us look at the $400 million that the hon. member says will be the cost of such a program of incentives to small business through the two-tier system, or whatever one may want to call it. Surely to goodness we know and he knows, and if he does not know it is high time he did—and it would be far more honest of him to admit that this is a fact—that an income tax increase whether imposed on business, on salaried individuals or on persons earning wages, is passed on at the first opportunity. And who ends up paying the increase? John Customer does. The Canadian public ends up paying it. And who is the gainer? The Minister of National Revenue.

An hon. Member: Not personally.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I mean, the government. The Minister of National Revenue epitomizes the government. It is the government and not the minister personally that ends up as the gainer. And what does he do with the money? I know that the NDP approves of money being taken into public coffers that shall be subject to the direction of some faceless individuals, suddenly become genies, who frankly have not made a success of their own affairs but are great in telling others how they should run theirs.

Sir Stafford Cripps—I must be careful with the name—said that all the bureaucracy that was hired by the Labour government that came to power after the end of the Second World War was engaged in economic production. Of course, he was the greatest of the dreamers and of the bureaucrats, and the whole system fell like a house of cards pushed by a child. Why, Mr. Chairman? Because it only took a child to knock out so many of the things that were set up under those wildly idealistic, theoretical dreams that had been dreamed up over the years by people in books and by others—and none of them had ever run a business, none of them had ever faced the need to finance inventories, none of them had ever faced the problem of meeting a payroll.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Waterloo did.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Waterloo may have, but he was not then a dedicated member of the NDP. Since then he has sold out, so that he does not need to worry.

An hon. Member: He sold out in more ways than one.

Mr. Saltsman: That is not true.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He no longer runs a business.

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member should say what is correct and get the facts straight.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He no longer runs a business successfully.

An hon. Member: Move two seats to the right, Max.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You know, this is funny. I always find that the NDP are awfully good at telling other people how to run their business. For themselves, however, they do not apply the same rules.

• (9:00 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Is that true, Max?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are arch capitalists. They abide by the orthodox rules. They work hard. I do not deny that when the hon. member for Waterloo was in business, he ran close to having ulcers. His blood pressure was up and he had sleepless nights.

Mr. Saltsman: That started when I came here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He made money, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: He made millions.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He kept people operating. He provided jobs.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Waterloo is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Saltsman: I am sorry I have to rise on this question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. While the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West are very interesting, I hope he will confine his comments to the subject before us rather than a Dun and Bradstreet evaluation of my affairs.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I think it is the function of the Chair to decide that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The only reason I am spending an unduly long time on my friend, the hon. member for Waterloo, is because of the extent of the affection which the House has for him.

Mr. Lewis: Don't be jealous.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member told us that the conduct of small business by Canadians under a system that has been in existence for over 20 years, and certainly at the present level of income tax at $35,000, 25 per cent, a two-tier system for 11 or 12 years, if my memory serves me right, has been wasteful from the point of view of the national economy. We have not heard too much about how he would replace the present system, what incentives he would give to small business and how the system he advocates would provide even one more job. After all, the hon. member must be concerned about jobs. The hon. member for Laurier knows that. He argued the same point. He maintained that same point of view in the finance committee.

This country runs on the jobs that are provided. People are interested in jobs. They want a new job or a proper job in order to provide a roof over their head, enough food for their family and some return for the future. This is what the ordinary individual is concerned about. I do not care whether he earns $50,000 a year or $5,000 a year, depending on his capabilities—we all have that same philosophy. This is what we must devise as the groundwork for a tax system, one that is based on incentives.

Man is a curious individual. Maybe I am subjective on this. I always work better with a carrot, some incentive or goal ahead of me, rather than the restrictions and disentitlements of strict regulations and so forth. Incentive is what we must have in Canada. After all, we are not only competing on the national scene but in the international market place. This is becoming tougher and tougher. This bill is full of disincentives; nothing more is contained in these sections on corporations. I have been going over the group of sections that Your Honour's sharer of the chair read to us as being the subject matter of today's discussion. I think that less than 50 per cent of the sections are new. Most of these are headed "tax on" or "additional tax on". Bearing in mind the various ramifications, it is almost impossible to pick out any sections that are carried forward from previous legislation.

I have been able to come up with eight or nine sections which I will be prepared to discuss with the parliamentary secretary or the government House leader, as I did last Friday afternoon, in order to show that this debate can produce some degree of understanding in certain places. We use this House as a forum to expose the weaknesses or advocate the strong points of legislation. This is what I have been endeavouring to do, albeit at the same time working out a list of sections which, after consultation between now and ten o'clock, I hope to be able to put before hon. members for acceptance.

Mr. Saltsman: He just took a breath. Now he has a second wind.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member should know that I can shift gears very quickly. The hon. member provided me with an almost unparallelled opportunity for a philosophical dissertation on the difference between the New Democratic economic philosophy and that of the party which I represent. The Minister of Justice is looking at me with a quizzical eye. Is he inviting me to give a dissertation between Liberal economic philosophy and that of the Conservatives?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I was just going to suggest that if you let out your clutch you would strip those gears.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister is exhibiting a bit of impatience. We would welcome the minister's legal knowledge or legal opinion. Before he came into politics he was with what is possibly Canada's leading tax advisory firm. It would have been very instructive to have the minister take us through some of the clauses on drafting sections which have been brought forward. The minister can grin. He knows damned well he can't do it.

I now come to the restrictions on small business and the matter of ineligible investments. It must be pointed out that the one quality or characteristic that defines ineligible investment is its ownership at the end of the tax year. It is not what you had six months ago that worries the tax man. It is that which you have at the end of a tax year. This can invite, shall we say,—

[Translation]

How would I say that in French—corporations purge themselves at the end of the financial year?

[English]

In other words, they purge themselves of anything which would be ineligible. On the other hand, one week thereafter they go right back into the old bath, if that is not mixing metaphors too much. They step out of the dirty water they are supposed to be in, stand lily white on a new bath-mat and say, "Here I am, all nice and clean." As soon as they finish the inspection they go back into their comfortable bathwater, which is not so clean but which from their point of view is much more remunerative. Outside of the fact there might be some pretty substantial brokerage charges on one hand, the cost of getting in and out of these investments, there would be no other disincentive against this move.

• (9:10)

I admit the tax people would be here within eight or nine months, or maybe even less, with a hole-blocking amendment to the act but at the present time the sections in question are deficient to that extent. I shall not say it is wrong to point these things out because various firms of chartered accountants have been quick to advise their clients of them.

The last point with which I should like to deal concerns a restriction which I feel is most amazing, namely, that a company which has been enjoying a small business status loses its qualification should it become no longer Canadian-controlled. Where a Canadian-controlled private corporation which has the benefit of the small business deduction ceases to be Canadian-controlled but remains a private corporation, a special tax is exigible equal to 25 per cent of its preferred rate amount minus four times the tax paid on ineligible investments less any refund thereof.

I shall repeat part of that and ask hon. members across the way who happen to be chartered accountants, this question. If a corporation remains a private corporation, there would then be a special tax equal to 25 per cent of its preferred rate minus four times the net tax paid on ineligible investments. Where is the sanctity of this formula? What is the rationale? Why four times the tax paid? Is it an arbitrary figure? I ask the parliamentary secretary to explain. In effect this will mean the recapture of the small business deduction benefit previously received minus the allowance for dividends previously paid.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The unanimous consent of the committee is needed. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under this formula, if a private corporation ceases to be Canadian-owned it loses its status of a private corporation and becomes subject to a tax of 25 per cent of its preferred rate as a small business less four times the tax which would be payable on the ineligible investments, less any refunds. What should have been said there is "four times the net tax paid on ineligible investments".

All this means is that small businesses which had previously received certain benefits will be obliged to refund them. This becomes pretty tough, Mr. Chairman. Suppose there has already been a benefit amounting to $400,000—on the income, but not on taxes. Tax will be 25 per cent. After all, that is what it is, 25 per cent of $50,000. In 1972 the maximum tax on $50,000 will be $12,500; in other words, one-quarter. So one arrives at $12,500 each year for eight years, which comes to $100,000. So the penalty imposed upon a Canadian-controlled private corporation which ceases to be Canadian-controlled will be $100,000 in tax recaptured.

Mr. Paproski: That's not much.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not much? One hundred thousand dollars! I can hear a lot of people saying this is a good feature because it will keep small private corporations Canadian-controlled. That may be. But remember, the owners of these Canadian-controlled private corporations may sell by way of merger to another Canadian corporation at which time the tax is not exigible. Control could change voluntarily on sale of control to non-residents or on sale to a Canadian private corporation controlled by non-residents. It could also occur involuntarily on the death of a Canadian controlling shareholder who bequeathed his shares to a non-resident heir.

The situation here could become extremely difficult. Suppose citizen A, a Canadian, owns controlling shares in corporation X. By his will he bequeaths his interest to his son who, just before his father's death, decides he will live in the Bahamas or, even better, he does not go to the Bahamas—because that is a voluntary decision—but is posted abroad by the international company for which he works, and is resident abroad. The son might be working for a Canadian international firm, say in Australia or in Indonesia—working for the Canadian nickel interests out there. He inherits the shares from his father in this Canadian-controlled private corporation. And what happens? The small corporation's status is lost. That is a completely involuntary result of this operation.

That is the effect of the law. Mind you, the tax would not become exigible if control was acquired by a Canadian public corporation or if the company itself went public though it appear that in both these cases subsequent conversion to a private corporation controlled by non-residents would trigger the tax. But for a private company to go public is something which is accomplished only at great cost. It is not too easy a step. Frankly, if a private corporation goes public it means it has abandoned the thinking behind the two-tier system; it is going public because it wants access to public sources of finance. That is the principal reason it voluntarily abandons its status as a private corporation.

It certainly appears that the required refund of the small business deduction tax saving is likely to depress the price a non-resident is prepared to pay for the shares of the corporation, particularly where the price placed on the shares is close to break-up value. When taken together with the deductibility of interest on money borrowed to buy shares, it should place acquisition-minded Canadian corporations in a better competitive position vis-à-vis their non-resident competitors.

That may be so, but I say that in many instances this will not be the result. As I have already said two or three times this afternoon, this is part of the policy of the government in regard to foreign ownership. Or is it? Certainly is an expression of it. Yet we are asked in a backhanded way to define Canadian policy on foreign ownership by the piecemeal discussion of various clauses of a tax bill. To me this is quite wrong and reinforces my earlier argument and that of my colleague for Peace River, as well as the argument of the Leader of the Opposition, that these particular sections must be deferred so the government can make up its mind what it is going to do about foreign ownership. Why ask us to place the cart before the horse? In fact, you usually know what kind of horse and what kind of cart, but in this instance the government has not even spelled out the kind of nature of either the horse or the cart.

It may be that I shall want to address further remarks tonight to this subject, but I would appreciate it if someone would allow me to negotiate the various sections I want to discuss so that we can make some progress.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry? The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I thought the hon. member for Laurier was leaving his seat. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Laurier.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in the debate but after hearing the hon. members for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and Edmonton West (M. Lambert) who were on the Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, I could not resist the urge to say a few words on the corporate income tax.

I challenge the hon. member for Waterloo to prove the accuracy of the figure of $400 million. I have studied the summary of the bill of fiscal reform published when the budget was brought forward on June 18 last. It contains instances of changes to the income tax payable by corporations during the first year of the new system's implementation. Based on 1968 incomes, the increase would have amounted to $20 million and on 1972 incomes, it will amount to $30 million.

The member for Waterloo could perhaps explain how he arrived at the figures quoted in the House? In addition, he delivered, as usual, a rather eloquent speech and I wish to congratulate him, especially for his comments on incentives for small businesses.

As mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West, the Creditistes must again explain not only how we have provided for incentives in Bill C-259, but how they would have proceeded to perform such a task.

Evidently, the legislation is complex. Speaking to the Canadian Tax Foundation last week, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) stated that we are living in a rather complex industrial community and that when we want to make exceptions in a legislation to make sure that incentive will only be profitable to the small business, we are compelled to establish some formulas to be certain that contrary to what is provided under the present act, big corporations do not benefit from incentives provided to small businesses.

The hon. member for Edmonton West said that corporations are now purging themselves. They do purge themselves for a very simple reason: so that the surpluses accumulated before December 31, 1949 be freed and distributed free of charge to the shareholders, which means that for the shareholders who are going to receive them, these will be non-taxable. This seems interesting enough as an incentive.

Corporations are also purging themselves so that surpluses accumulated since 1949 become non-taxable, by paying only 15 per cent, so that they be distributed free of charge to shareholders. We realize then that companies might be prompted to purge themselves so that their shareholders benefit from the generosity of the federal government under the bill now considered, in the course of transitional periods, because, obviously, beginning in 1972, the new act shall be effective.

As the hon. member for Edmonton West was saying, incentives to the small business serve to encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian corporations; at the present time, that does not seem to be happening. In fact, an analysis of statistics relating to investments by Canadians shows that such investments take the form of bond purchases and bank deposits, rather than investments in Canadian corporations. I suggest that the new law should provide incentives to encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian societies.

There was some mention of "four times something".

Of course, some mathematical formulas are set in the bill. Indeed they had to be to save the hon. Minister of National Revenue the trouble of making rules on ways and means of implementing the new legislation and perhaps to invite him to use his controlling authority more sparingly.

Many theories are brought forward in the discussion of those figures. Some say it could harm Canadian industry, but that has not been substantiated. However, if sections of the bill really hurt the national economy and employment promotion, I am convinced that as soon as there will be evidence of it, and even before that, the government will have enough far-sightedness to make the necessary amendments.

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to spare the committee a third dissertation in one day on this particular section.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't do it.

Mr. Saltsman: I have been persuaded by my colleague that I should not do it, and since I value his judgment very highly I should like to contribute just a few remarks to this debate, particularly in response to some of the arguments made by the hon. member for Edmonton West who I see is trying out a government seat. Although the polls are somewhat better than they have been for his party, I think he is being unduly optimistic.

I always listen with great interest to the remarks of my hon. friend from Edmonton West because they are remarks that are seldom heard—seldom since the eighteenth century anyway. I think the last time such views were held was in a book entitled "The Fable of the Bees" by Bernard Mandeville. The argument was essentially that of the hon. member for Edmonton West and it ran something like this: We should encourage the luxurious consumption of the well-to-do because, after all, the poor benefit because the rich hire chimneysweeps, the rich need people to look after their gardens, the rich require clothes which need buttons sewn on, and all kinds of things. So we should see that the rich have lots of money and that no one takes their money away because, after all, they provide employment and where would society be if the rich did not have the money to provide employment?

This is basically what my friend thinks. I for one have never suggested that the money which goes to business or the money which goes to those who already have it is locked away somewhere and is not used. That is not the argument at all. The money is used. The question is, for whose benefit is the money used and whether that is the best way to stimulate our economy. This is known as the trickle-down theory. If you have enough rich people with all kinds of consumption or investment plans, then everybody else must benefit. This might have been a valid enough theory in the seventeenth or eighteenth century, but surely our economics have advanced beyond that point.

I think the issue in this debate is whether the $400 million given under the old program and the $300 million under the proposed legislation is best used to help the economy by being dispersed in the way suggested. I think not. This is the argument I have been attempting to make. I also heard the hon. member for Edmonton West say that if we do not give business some of these advantages and tax benefits, prices will rise. What I believe he is really saying—I hope I am interpreting him correctly—is that business will take what it wants to take regardless of what we do with our tax system; that we can increase taxes or put off giving certain benefits but they will still take what they want to take.

I think there is some evidence that this is what is happening, but it hardly seems pertinent to the debate before us. More importantly, however, I want to meet the direct challenge the hon. member attempted to put to me when he asked what I or my party would do to replace the present legislation since we have said we are interested in helping small business. We are very concerned about this. He asked what we would do rather than have this $400 million bonanza. I think that was a fair question.

Since some personal elements have crept into this thing—there has been reference to myself as a small businessman—I might say I have been in business for about 25 years and therefore have some experience. I have even met a payroll on occasion, and on occasion did not meet it because we did not have the money. So I believe I am qualified. Somebody has put the stamp on me and I can now talk about these unholy measures which are restricted to somebody who has met a payroll.

Let me recall some of my experiences. My opposition to this arises from my experience. At a time when I desperately needed help, this legislation was of no help to me. A small businessman needs help when he is not in a profitable position and is attempting to get off the ground. He does not need it when he has a profit position of $30,000 a year. Some of these people do not get off the ground. The way to help them is not by giving them an additional reward when they have made money. They do not need it then. However, they do need it when they are starting up.

One of the finest programs the government introduced is one which unfortunately the banks have never extensively promoted. I am speaking of the small businessman's loans program by which a person could go to a bank and obtain $35,000 payable over a long period at a low rate of interest. That was of more value in getting people started in business than anything else. Another thing which has been of value has been reduced depreciation. A small businessman needs assistance in the way of an initial loan. He needs it in the way of assistance if he is going to do research if he should be in that kind of field. He needs it to help him in marketing. He needs it in his contacts.

Perhaps he even needs a preferential buying arrangement. He needs it to build up his inventory if he should be in the retail trade. He perhaps needs it in the way of a tax deferral if he can indicate he is in an expansionary period. All these are legitimate ways, in my view, to assist small businessmen. They are ways to help small businessmen to a much greater degree than the proposed measure. And, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, at infinitely less cost.

What are we really talking about? If my hon. friend from Edmonton West is really concerned about helping small businessmen, those who are trying to get started and those for whom he feels strongly—and I am sure he does—why does he not suggest measures such as an expansion of the small businessman's loans and depreciation allowances in the first years in business? After all, they are willing to do this for the large mining corporations. We give them a three-year tax holiday? They are willing to do it for the oil companies, but where is it for the small businessman?

This is something Carter recommended. There are many ways, I know from experience, in which small businessmen can be assisted. The idea of giving them tax benefits after they have made up to $50,000 profit is laughable. If you want to give them a tax benefit on the Mandeville fable, or the trickle-down theory, if you want to use eighteenth century economics, fine—and by the look of this bill, this is what we are doing. But if there is any genuine concern for helping the little man get off the ground and giving him help when he needs it, then this legislation is not the way to do it and it cannot be justified on those terms.

I ask hon. members to consider what I have said because the hon. member for Edmonton West—and perhaps some of his colleagues feel as he does—thinks our opposition to the $400 million give-away is opposition to assisting business. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are very anxious to assist business, and small business in particular. If a business is profitable, it has less claim to my sympathy or to my tears. Any kind of tax on business is probably going too far so far as the Conservative party is concerned. I see that the Conservative party is very envious of the Liberal party's ability to open the purse-strings of business and are hoping that they might have a nice little poke at that bag themselves. This is understandable.

We are not so blessed. Those purse-strings remain tightly closed to us. The unions do not get these tax free allowances. I hope there will be debate along the lines I am suggesting, and that we turn our thoughts to more significant ways of helping small business in this country instead of blathering about giving additional rewards to those who are already making significant profits and do not have to show that they are prepared to use those profits for the needs of their business, for providing employment or for the benefit of the country.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, better it should be my day in the House today to point out some of the deficiencies in the legislation, than that the House be deemed to have looked at these things and just dismissed them or passed them very cavalierly. I hear from the background something about a concept in economics. That hon. member's economics would not get him out of the woodwork in a service station, if we were to apply them. I should like to see him run a business.

In any event, a number of able briefs have been presented to the government. Unfortunately, this type of operation in committee of the whole prevents any hon. member discussing these briefs with government officials or even with ministers. We have had a succession of parliamentary secretaries who have been taking turns at doing House duty. As we say in French—

[Translation]

Silent as the grave.

[English]

They give no information. The only one who has been able to speak at any time is the hon. member for Calgary South, and he has done more to alienate certain personalities in the opposition than contribute to the efficacy of the debate. Certainly he has not contributed to any greater knowledge.

Some excellent briefs were put forward to the government by the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, a number of major chartered accountants firms, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, mining associations and a number of other business organizations. They represent large and small interests. But if there is such a thing as an amalgam of small businesses or individuals, such as the Canadian Congress of Labour, and if it wanted to get off its collective stern and get something down on paper where it would be of some benefit to its membership, it would be discharging its responsibilities instead of abdicating them.

Those bodies exist for the purpose of advancing the interests of their members and it is a good thing that some of them do. If one relied upon the silence that we get from certain quarters, one could pass any type of petition. I am sure the hon. member to my left would like to sign one that advocated his own hanging.

In the brief of the Canadian Bar Association there is one observation which should go on record—and may I say that in its approach the Canadian Bar is not unfriendly to some of the spirit of the legislation, particularly in this section. I do not quite agree with all it says, but they point out some of the inconsistencies. Here, again, is something that is not included in the 150-odd amendments that have been brought forward. I think the Minister of Justice should lay the whip to some of his draftsmen again. He had them under the gun all spring and summer to produce Bill C-259. In any event, the following statement is made in the brief:

Basically, it is hoped to clear out the 1971 undistributed income on hand and the 1971 capital surplus before the earnings or gains under the new system are distributed.

I suppose that various Ministers of Finance have dreamed of what they claimed to be vast reserves hidden somewhere under layers of corporate camouflage. But financing has been so difficult that I am surprised that any Minister of Justice or any of his advisers should continue to be under the illusion that so much money was hidden when people were desperate for money. I remember when years and years ago they said that Canada had billions and billions of bushels of wheat, but somebody had lost sight of the fact that a good number of people had been able to dispose quietly of their stocks. They were not going to let government regulations stand in their way of liquidation. The same thing happens here. The brief continues:

Once these historical anomalies are cleared up, the system should function with relative ease. We wonder, however, why complications were added to some of the amounts which were to become of historical interest, such as paid up capital deficiency, so that current situations continue to apply to them. Any simplification of the rules for what amounts are attributed to what accounts or "pots" for the purposes of shareholder distributions would be most welcome. Of all the confusing concepts in the new legislation, none is more difficult than the pot contents set out in the definitions in section 89.

If hon. members would look at section 89 they would see that there we have a reference to pot contents. It is a difficult thing under the act to define what is in this particular pot. The other day I saw a diagram on mineral taxation where reference was made to storage bins, to particular mixing bins and this sort of thing, and finally some sort of amalgam came on at the end. I do not think even the author or the artist knew what on earth had come out in the end. The brief goes on to state:

We believe there are too many pots and too many difficult calculations to make to determine what amount is in what pot. In the definition of paid up capital deficiency, for example, all but one of the ten subsections which must be examined cross-refer to other provisions of the statute or involve complicated definitions contained in other paragraphs of subsection 89 (1). Almost all of these cross-references lead to further cross-references or definitions, which are not helped by the erroneous cross-reference in (IX) to subsection 111 (1)(b) which should be to subsection 111 (1)(a). Yet, essentially, the section is defining only the amount of a capital deficit with which existing corporations will enter the system. In most cases, there will be no necessity to make the calculation because the corporation will not have a capital deficit anyway. We believe there must be a simpler and clearer way to enact one operative section which would set out in logical sequence the rules for taxation of future distributions of those corporations entering 1972 with a capital deficit.

That is the nature of the criticisms that appear in the brief entitled "Canadian Tax Reform—A Review". I could go on and pick out some more but because of the time factor and as a result of discussions I have had with representatives of the other parties, with the exception of the Créditistes—

I am prepared to propose to the parliamentary secretary that the Chair call the following sections which we have up for discussion tonight, along with another one which did not form part of this group but is related to it and which we would be prepared to have included. If the Chair would call the following sections, I think the committee might generally be disposed to pass them. Certainly members on the government side would welcome this.

Perhaps the Chair might call sections 181, 182, 183, 185, 187, 191, 193, 195 and 197, and outside the group of sections that was before Your Honour today which referred to bankrupt corporations and is merely a carry forward of existing legislation and causes no problems, section 128. I think there would be disposition as far as we are concerned to accept those clauses this evening and then call it ten o'clock.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: The spirit of Christmas has got into the hon. member—Santa Claus.

Mr. Benjamin: You guys are being too nice.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We make progress.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the Chair now call the sections enumerated by the hon. member for Edmonton West?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I was just going to ask if there are any government amendments to any of these sections.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There do not appear to be any amendments on these sections, so I shall call them one by one.

Clause 1, sections 181 to 183 inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 1, sections 185, 187, 191, 193, 195, 197 and 128, agreed to.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might ask before you get in your exalted position in the Chair, and our having made such great progress today, what particular sections the government will see fit to concentrate on tomorrow. Perhaps the government House leader or the parliamentary secretary would suggest some sections which would permit hon. members on the other side of the House to make a contribution for a change.

Mr. Paproski: That will be the day.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, tomorrow we will call division I, sections 166, 167 and 168; division J, sections 169 to 180 inclusive; followed by part XV and part XVI, sections 220 to 247 inclusive; followed by what has mysteriously been called residuals.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it is a few minutes before ten o'clock I wonder if the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) could be called first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES—SUGGESTED TALKS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES TO DETERMINE REACTION TO POSSIBLE CANADIAN EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO COVER CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, November 25, my colleague, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), and myself directed questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) asking if he was aware of the bill passed by the legislature of the state of Massachusetts extending the fisheries jurisdiction of that state to 200 miles or 100 fathoms, in other words, to take in their continental shelf. The minister replied, as reported at page 9872 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of it. I will certainly make inquiries to see what has really happened and look at the implication for Canada.

On the following day, Friday November 26, I directed a similar question to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and received the following reply at page 9918 of Hansard:

I have made inquiries, Mr. Speaker, but I have not yet seen this legislation. It would seem to me to be ridiculous. There could be no possible parallel in Canada. If the hon. member is suggesting that Newfoundland alone declare a 200-mile limit, then I think he should talk to the government of that province.

Mr. Speaker, I was alarmed, to say the least, to learn that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the minister charged by Parliament with the responsibility of looking after our foreign interests, would not be aware of a bill passed in the Massachusetts legislature and held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of that state, extending their jurisdiction up to 200 miles or taking in effective jurisdiction of the continental shelf on that eastern seaboard of the United States.

It is even more alarming when we learn that our Minister of Fisheries, who is charged with the responsibility of looking after the interests of our fishing industry, would suggest in reply to a question in this House that he had not seen this act of the legislature of Massachusetts which was passed on November 8, ratified by the governor of the state on November 16 and subsequently upheld by the courts of that state as constitutional. The action taken by Massachusetts flowed from a meeting of the governors of the New England states which took place last summer, at which they adopted the following resolution:

New England governors resolve to urge extending limit to 200 miles—

Whereas, the virtual extinction of New England's offshore fisheries resources by foreign factory vessels is a clear and present danger to the region's commercial fishing industry; and

Whereas, the continued exploitation of this irreplacable natural resource threatens the stability of the region's marine environment; and

Whereas, the need for intelligent management of New England's marine resources requires the extension of jurisdiction over living marine resources beyond the present 12-mile limit;

Now therefore be it resolved that the New England Governors' Conference hereby urges the New England congressional delegation and the executive branch of the federal government to lend their full support to passage of emergency legislation which would extend fisheries jurisdiction 200 miles from our nation's shoreline or to the one hundred fathom curve. We are convinced this policy is essential to both the health of our regional maritime economy and our nation's ecological balance.

That resolution was passed by the governors of the New England states in July or August of this year and was followed by an act of the legislature of the state of Massachusetts aimed primarily at bringing pressure to bear on the government of the United States to act to protect the fisheries of the New England states. Mr. Speaker, the commercial fishing industry is much more important to the provinces of Atlantic Canada than it is, I say with respect, to the New England states of the United States, yet no similar action has been taken in our country.

No action has been taken notwithstanding repeated urgings in this House by hon. members, myself included, and notwithstanding the formation of a special committee of the fishing industry called the Save our Fishery Association which has been formed by participating members from the Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec. Its aim is to bring pressure to bear on the federal government to act and to protect this vital Canadian resource which has been threatened as a result of overexploitation by the foreign fishing fleets that frequent our shores.

One of the ten points in the program put forward by the Save our Fishery Association states that they would be applying maximum pressure to have the federal government clarify its position on continental shelf control and have controls implemented before the end of 1973. If these steps are not taken, said Mr. Etchegary, chairman of the Save our Fishery Association, in the near future we will have no inshore fishery in Canada.

This is cause for much concern in my province of Newfoundland where thousands of people directly and indirectly depend on the fishing industry for their livelihood. This important industry is threatened with extinction because we as a nation have been unable to take the necessary steps to protect it. This industry is vitally important to the Atlantic provinces of Canada and to the province of Quebec. It is obvious that unilateral action must be taken by Canada. The precedent is there. We now have jurisdiction over the resources underneath our continental shelf, in other words, over the oil resources and so on.

It follows that we should have the same jurisdiction over resources above our continental shelf. Those resources are there. We are exploiting them now. Those resources are providing many jobs for Canadians and taxes for the economy. The industry is very important in the Canadian economy yet, Mr. Speaker, we do not seem to be able to translate this concept into government policy. The Secretary of State for External Affairs does not seem to be interested enough in the importance of this issue to obtain the necessary bilateral agreements with the countries that exploit our fisheries and to take the necessary unilateral action to declare sovereignty over our continental shelf in order to protect our fishing industry.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, despite all the static raised in this House regarding a certain bill passed by the Massachusetts legislature, one wonders what there was to be excited about for that bill went completely unnoticed in the Boston newspapers. I took the bother of checking both the Globe and the Herald, and the bill in question did not receive so much as a mention.

The fact of the matter may be that our friendly American neighbours may finally be waking up to the serious threat of the depletion of our oceanic resources. Canada has been leading in this field for a number of years. We have taken positive action. We have already acted positively to curb this threat and we will continue to lead in this area at every meeting, at every domestic conference and at every international conference.

The Massachusetts enactment purports to extend the jurisdiction of the state off its coast for the purpose of the management of the fishery resources to 200 miles or 100 fathoms, whichever is the greater. It is of interest as reflecting the attitude of one American state on the importance of the Law of the Sea matters. Enforcement of this legislation would, I believe, involve certain constitutional questions in the United States upon which it would be inappropriate for me to comment. It should be noted, however, that the United States government continues to claim and enforce only a three-mile territorial sea and a further nine-mile fishing zone.

With respect to further development of the Law of the Sea by international agreement, the United States government has indicated that it would support a maximum 12-mile limit for the territorial sea and/or fishing zone, with provision being made for some preferential rights for coastal states in fishing resources beyond 12 miles.

The Canadian government has been pressing, particularly in the context of the forthcoming Law of the Sea conference, to achieve international agreement on the management of coastal fisheries beyond the limits of the territorial sea and exclusive fishing zones. Canada is seeking to obtain recognition of the coastal states' right to manage coastal fisheries for conservation purposes and to reserve for its fishermen a preferential share of those species which are vital to its coastal population.

Mr. McGrath: By the time the government begins to act there will be no fishery left.

POWER—PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT ON ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on October 29 I asked the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) whether he would make public the survey which his department is conducting into the ecological effects on northeastern Quebec and Ontario which would result from the proposed power project which the government of Quebec is planning for the James Bay area. The reply of the minister was somewhat evasive. He said if the studies were ready he might make them public or available to interested environmental groups. What is involved here is probably the largest project of its kind ever attempted on the North American continent. Half a dozen or more rivers are to be diverted, huge dams are to be built, an ocean port constructed, thousands of square miles of trees are to be cleared and billions of dollars are to be expended in order to produce electric power, a large part of which will be sold to the United States.

Some of the most eminent scientists in the employ of the government and some of the people most actively interested in the problems of environment have questioned the whole concept. They have pressed the government of Canada not to permit this tremendous project to go ahead with such breakneck speed until some of the very important questions of its effects are assessed. We know from experience the very bad effects which followed the building of the Bennett Dam. We know of some of the bad results of the building of the Aswan Dam in Egypt.

[Mr. Corbin.]

The Canadian government, which has repeatedly said we must be concerned about the problems of the environment, is saying virtually nothing in this case. In connection with the proposed trans-Alaskan pipeline and tanker route down the British Columbia coast, the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) said in this House on May 4:

> It is time to ensure that the protection of our natural heritage becomes a major priority of public policy—
> Large new engineering projects should not be undertaken before adequate information is available on the environmental risks which would be entailed.

This is precisely the question which we ought to be asking ourselves about the project with which the Quebec government is going ahead. This project will have an effect on the people of Quebec, a possible effect on the climate of Hudson Bay as well as an effect on people of northern Ontario and northern Manitoba. The whole ice floe in the Hudson Bay may be affected. The operation of the port of Churchill in Manitoba may be completely disrupted.

Dr. Lloyd M. Dickie, of the Bedford Institute at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, one of Canada's top scientists, recently warned that man-made projects such as the James Bay project may alter our climate. He pointed out that the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Gaspé climate has warmed by seven degrees since the St. Lawrence Seaway has been built. He predicts the opposite will happen if the James Bay project continues unaltered.

We are talking about an area which is of vital importance to the wildlife of the North American continent. This is one of the major areas for wild geese flight and the trapping of beaver. Close to 10,000 Indians who live in the area have vigorously protested against this project. This does not mean we ought not to go ahead with the project, but surely in light of the effects of the Bennett Dam on the Indian who lived behind it, the Department of Indian Affairs as well as the Department of the Environment should be expressing concern. They should be looking at the situation and protecting the Indians in the area.

Instead, what we find is the same kind of indifference, the same kind of silence as was encountered while the Bennett Dam was being built, and the effects will be a disaster of the kind that followed the building of the Bennett Dam. I urge the government to abandon its policy of silence and tell the people of Canada what, if anything, it has learned as a result of its studies of the damming of a number of rivers and the building of very high dams.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question dealt with the environmental aspect and I would like to deal with its first.

In August, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) agreed with the competent authorities in Quebec to set up an informal task force composed of experts drawn from Environment-Canada and various provincial departments. The task force would make a preliminary evaluation of the impact of the project on the environment, evaluate the relative importance and sensitivities of the various elements of the ecosystem that will be affected, map out the further in-depth studies to be conducted and, finally, report simultaneously to Ottawa and Quebec.

Since the studies are being carried out jointly with the province of Quebec, the concurrence of the province will be required before the reports can be made public. The Minister of the Environment made that clear in reply to a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on October 29, as reported on page 9151 of Hansard.

As far as the portion of the hon. member's observations dealing with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned, may I say that the area affected by the proposed developments in James Bay contains a population of 5,500 native people comprising seven Indian bands and a number of Eskimo families. Their traditional pursuits will undoubtedly be affected by the proposed development as much of the wildlife is confined to the river valley areas. The probable effects are being studied.

Needless to say, the proposed development is bringing to the fore the question of Indian interests in the land in which they have lived and toiled for so many years and which was transferred to the province of Quebec in 1898 and 1912. In recent years, Indians have expressed a great deal of concern about rights not only in Quebec but in the whole of Canada. The National Indian Brotherhood and the respective provincial associations, with financial assistance from the government, are playing a leading role in researching their rights. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is also directly concerned with the determination of the nature and quality of the Indian interests in the land of the province of Quebec, in the James Bay area in particular, and the study of this subject is continuing.

On the provincial side, early in 1967 Quebec created a commission to study the integrity of its territory. That commission, commonly referred to as the Dorion commission, published a part of its report concerning the Indian domain in February, 1971. The conclusions and recommendations of the report are known, but the views of the government of Quebec on the report have not as yet been expressed.

During the same period the Indians of Quebec Association submitted various briefs to the government of Quebec. One of them concerned territorial rights and another concerned fishing and hunting rights. Meetings and discussions between the association and successive governments in Quebec have taken place. To date, however, agreement has not been reached. Negotiations are continuing on this particular aspect of the question and the department is keeping in close touch with the Indians of Quebec Association on these and related matters.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLAN TO HELP OVERCOME DIFFICULTIES IN MARKETING CANBRA RAPESEED

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House of approval for an assistance plan to help overcome the interim difficulties in marketing the Canbra or low erucic acid type rapeseed produced on some 400,000 acres last summer. A two-pronged approach will be taken. On the one hand, assistance will be provided to encourage the movement of Canbra rapeseed into commercial channels for both domestic crushing and export sales. On the other, measures will be taken to defray extra costs of assembling and holding for export purposes Canbra rapeseed that otherwise might be lost through mixing with regular rapeseed.

This action is being taken to smooth the transition of Canada's rapeseed production to the new varieties with low erucic acid content.

The conversion program which started in 1970 has progressed well and farmers now have ample seed of the new varieties for 1972 planting. However, the Canbra rapeseed produced for crushing has not moved rapidly enough for conversion purposes because of the large quantities of regular rapeseed in trade channels.

It is necessary to take this action to assure early use of the Canbra stocks. In this way we can provide that Canbra oil will be available to the food processing industry and conversion can move forward without disruption next year.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if the government is doing anything in this regard we will be very happy as it will be the first time they have done anything to help rapeseed producers.

Mr. Olson: That is not true.

Mr. Baldwin: It was only under the administration of my right hon. friend from Prince Albert that steps were taken to bring rapeseed from a zero position under the former Liberal government to make it viable.

Apart from those few general comments, Mr. Speaker, I simply say we will watch these two prongs, how long they are and how sharp they are, and see what happens. The government has told us nothing and the minister has told us nothing. We will watch with interest to see what happens.

Mr. Olson: You just do not understand.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that approval is being given to an assistance plan to overcome interim difficulties in marketing low erucic acid type rapeseed. He has not specifically said what will be done to accomplish that objective.

I am reasonably sure the minister knows what ought to be done. What the farmers of western Canada really want to know at this time is whether or not the emphasis next year should be on planting low erucic varieties or on the standard varieties they have been planting up to this time. Questions were asked in this regard at the outlook conference but were not answered. We were informed that the government was waiting for reports from commissions representative of government and industry that are currently overseas.

The difficulties in the marketing and in the crushing industry have stemmed from lack of clear direction and decision up to this time. They stem from a lack of clear acceptance of these varieties by the crushing industry in Canada and by those who are purchasing our rapeseed overseas. It is up to the Department of Agriculture and the food and drug people to come through with clear direction to the farmers as to where they are going in this very important crop.

Mr. Olson: We have.

Mr. Gleave: This has not been done. On that direction hangs a big piece of the farm income in western Canada. If you look at 100 million bushels you are looking at over $200 million in gross income, and the future of the rapeseed crop is hanging on this kind of decision.

I have never been satisfied that the food and drug experts knew what they were talking about and I will say so in this House. An industry like this is too important to rest on decisions that hang fire for 18 months. I urge the minister to take an early stand on this matter, and I urge that clear direction be given to the rapeseed producers of western Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the statement which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has just made seems quite important, according to him. As for us, while reading it, we find it extremely vague, as it deals with assistance for the marketing of colza produced on 400,000 acres of land. Now, what we would like to know is whether the dealers or the producers are unable to produce or market the crop. As for us in eastern Canada, we maintain that the government must support the marketing of some western products and we must congratulate the minister in this regard.

After listening to this statement today, we do not know if the government wants to help the dealers or the producers. We should nevertheless congratulate the minister on his announcement. We ask him to be kind enough in the future to be clearer in his statements so that we know where we are in this House. We should then be better informed than we are now by this vague statement made by the minister.

ADVERTISING ON CHILDREN'S TELEVISION PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Under Standing Order 43 I rise on an important matter of urgent and pressing necessity. With Christmas buying in full swing it is especially important that children be protected against the pressures of television advertising which frequently cause confusion between fact and fantasy and often cause children to bring pressure on their parents to buy unnecessary and unduly expensive foods and toys. I therefore wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Secretary of State, through whom the CRTC reports to Parliament, take up with that body the desirability of imposing an immediate and complete ban on advertising on children's television programs for the remainder of 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43. The motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

[Mr. Gleave.]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GRANTS TO UNION CARBIDE AND AEROVOX—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which provides that in cases of urgent and pressing necessity a motion may be moved if unanimous consent is given. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity arises out of the recent decisions of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to make grants to Union Carbide of Canada Limited and Aerovox Canada Limited to move part of their operations from the province of Ontario to elsewhere in Canada. Such grants are not only unfair to Ontario workers but detrimental to the regional development program itself—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot argue the case. The hon. member can have the floor at this time to indicate in brief terms the urgency of the matter, but the hon. member is now arguing the substance of the motion and to that extent his presentation is irregular. He should limit his speech at this time to the matter of urgency.

Mr. Broadbent: Given the undesirable situation to which I have just referred, I should like to move under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That this matter be referred for immediate consideration to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

IMPLEMENTATION OF INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY TO PROVIDE JOBS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the pressing need revealed in the report of the Economic Council of Canada released yesterday for an industrial strategy to be implemented without delay in order to meet the large job-creation goals urgently required to avoid a continuation of unacceptable unemployment levels.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has given the Chair due notice of his intention to request leave to move the adjournment of the House in order to discuss the suggested need for an industrial strategy in relation to the creation of jobs and the avoidance of unacceptable unemployment levels.

It may be that the report of the Economic Council raises a new element in relation to the question of unemployment, but it does appear to the Chair that in essence the hon. member proposes that we should entertain a renewed debate on the question of unemployment.

It seems to me that the question of current and future unemployment levels has been the subject of wide debate on numerous occasions in the present session. I need only draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the debate on the subject which took place under special circumstances in the sitting of October 14 last. A like debate also took place on the third and fourth of this month on a supply motion.

It is agreed by all hon. members, I am sure, that the question is a most serious one and is of national and urgent interest, and that the Economic Council's report is of national importance and interest. I am sure the House will have many opportunities to discuss these matters at length in the days and weeks ahead.

For these reasons the Chair does not feel that this motion meets the requirement of urgency of debate under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ECONOMIC COUNCIL ANALYSIS OF GROWTH NECESSARY IN NEXT THREE YEARS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT TO 4 PER CENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether his government accepts the analysis contained in the report of the Economic Council of Canada published yesterday to the effect that a growth of about 6½ per cent per annum will be necessary in the next three years to reduce unemployment in Canada to approximately 4 per cent? I assume the Prime Minister has not had time to personally study the report in depth, but in view of the importance of this question I also assume the Prime Minister has sought to see whether these forecasts are consistent with those of the government. Does the government accept this analysis and these forecasts made by the Economic Council?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is right in his assumption that I have seen the report but that we have not had a chance to look at it in any great depth. It was only made public yesterday. I believe one of the difficulties with the report is that it sets out goals and aims with which the government agrees but does not indicate in any precise way how they can be simultaneously attained. For instance, on the question of the Leader of the Opposition it would depend a little bit on the degree of inflation the Economic Council is prepared to recommend to go along with this particular objective.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the question I am interested in at the moment is quite apart from how one achieves this rate of growth or how one avoids an undesirable rate of inflation. Whatever the answers may be with regard to those problems, will the Prime Minister indicate whether or not the government accepts the analysis with regard to the amount of economic growth required in the next three years to reduce unemployment in Canada to approximately 4 per cent? Surely this is something the Prime Minister of Canada has immediately sought an answer for. Does that jibe or conflict? Is it consistent with the prediction of the government itself in its own analysis?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Leader of the Opposition say he does not care what happens to the rest of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come off it, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: That is exactly what the Leader of the Opposition said, Mr. Speaker, and I believe it is an irresponsible position. I cannot answer one thing without the other.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I said no such thing.

Mr. Olson: You said you were not concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not say I was not concerned. Quite apart from the question of how the goals are reached and what measures one takes to offset unnecessary inflation, I asked whether or not the government accepted the prediction, the analysis, of the Economic Council as to the degree of economic growth necessary, and I will not stand here and have my remarks twisted—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —by a Prime Minister who has to resort to that kind of tactic to avoid answering questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the specific predictions and forecasts by the Economic Council of Canada with regard to the economic growth required, I ask the Prime Minister what the government's own goal is with regard to the rate of economic growth over the next year or two? What are the government's own goals specifically in light of these forecasts of the Economic Council of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, if we could afford like the Leader of the Opposition not to be concerned with the other aspects we would have a better goal than the Economic Council has put before us.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ECONOMIC COUNCIL FORECAST OF NEW JOBS REQUIRED TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT TO 3.8 PER CENT— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question similar to the one asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition but on another aspect. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government agrees with the conclusion of the Economic Council of Canada in its recent report that our country will need an additional 1.4 million new jobs in the first half of the 1970's in order to bring unemployment down to the relatively high level of 3.8 per cent, and if the government does not agree with this estimate, what forecasts has the government with respect to the number of jobs required to meet the increase in the labour force?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We always took the position that the labour force was growing very rapidly indeed in Canada and that there would be a need to create a great number of new jobs. I cannot say whether the figure of 1.4 million is correct after having heard it for the first time yesterday.

REORIENTATION OF ACTIVITY FROM EXTRACTION TO MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): In view of the fact that the increase in Canada's labour force has been foreseen by economists and was foretold by the Economic Council of Canada in reports several years ago, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is considering a program to reorient Canada's economic activity away from extraction industries, which are capital intensive and produce very few jobs, to a massive expansion of manufacturing industries where large numbers of jobs Lccaan be created?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Certainly we have given a great deal of attention to this problem, but it is not certain that the solution is to be found in the conventional wisdom expressed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. It might be, for instance, that it is expansion of the service industries rather than the manufacturing industries which would be the most important in the years ahead.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are obviously a large number of supplementary questions to come. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South on a supplementary question and then go on to other supplementary questioners.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that the government headed by the Prime Minister has pursued a very bad part of conventional wisdom—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that the series of questions asked now might easily develop into a debate. The hon. member for York South has the floor for the purpose of asking a supplementary question. Perhaps he might do that now.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I appreciate that ministers of the Crown can refuse to answer questions, but with the greatest respect I do not quite appreciate the fact that the Prime Minister can make debating points and that in a question one cannot refer to these debating points as being shallow and unsupported.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is obvious that neither the Prime Minister nor the hon. member for York South may make debating points, but the hon. member has made his debating point and so did the Prime Minister. When they are made it is a little difficult for the Chair to rule subsequently, but I simply invite the hon. member to ask a question. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that the concentration on large capital expansion of the extraction industries has not produced jobs and in view of the insistence of the report of the Economic Council of Canada that in order to create jobs emphasis must be laid on domestic demand, particularly in light of the present international situation, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is considering fiscal and other programs to expand the manufacturing and service industries in Canada for the purpose of creating the jobs necessary?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is that we have achieved these results. I do not have the statistics at hand but I believe that if we look over the past decade we will see that there has been a faster increase in the manufacturing and service industries than in the extraction industries.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO BRING ABOUT INCREASE IN PRODUCTIVITY IN CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada states that "productivity in Canadian industry must increase substantially if the required number of extra jobs are to be produced", does the government intend to bring this about by offering tax incentives to induce additional productivity, or is it planning on bringing this about by some other means? I ask this question now because the government has had this matter under consideration for some considerable time.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and myself have something in common. We have both returned from long trips.

Mr. Bell: Did you have a lot of fun?

Mr. Pepin: I missed about 70 hours of sleep during mine. It appears that the hon. member did miss some too. With respect to tax exemptions or incentives my hon. friend should direct his question to the Minister of Finance, not to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, having held the portfolio that the minister now holds, and having had exactly the same type of questions addressed to me over several years, I would say that if the minister feels he cannot answer these questions then he is not doing his job properly. So, Mr. Speaker, I will ask him a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will soon be running short of time if every question is prefaced by a statement. This also applies to answers by ministers. I would hope we could try to get on with the business of the question period.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, following on the non-answer that the minister gave me I wish to ask how long the government intends to pursue the policy that there is nothing quite so good as doing nothing and maintaining the status quo?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER TAX CUTS FOR LOW-INCOME CANADIANS TO STIMULATE DEMAND AND PROVIDE JOBS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the income tax bill as presently drafted is still before the House, and the stress by the Economic Council of Canada on increasing domestic demand, I wonder if the Prime Minister has conferred with the Minister of Finance and discussed with him the possibility of further tax cuts for low-income Canadians in order that there can be a greater stimulation of domestic demand to provide these much needed jobs in coming years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to discuss that with the minister when he returns from the Group of Ten meeting in Rome. In the meantime it would be helpful if the legislation presently before the House could be passed as it has the effect of reducing taxes on the low income groups.

UNEMPLOYMENT—DEVELOPMENT OF INDUSTRIAL POLICY TO UTILIZE SCIENCE GRADUATES UNABLE TO FIND WORK

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a further supplementary question. Perhaps I could preface it by saying that there has been no reluctance on the part of the Minister of Finance to bring in a number of amendments since the bill first came before the House. I would ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the statement in the preliminary report of the Department of Manpower and Immigration on the requirements for university graduates in 1971, issued yesterday, that in 1971 the demand for Bachelor of Science graduates declined by 44 per cent and for Doctor of Science degree holders by 31 per cent, the government is giving consideration to this very serious situation, and is it taking the advice of the Science Council of Canada for the development of a new industrial policy that will utilize this growing number of highly skilled scientific manpower resources that are presently unable to find work?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are many aspects of our industrial policy which are aimed with this in mind, and I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will send copies of his statements to the hon. member if the hon. member wants to look into them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I mentioned a moment ago that there are a number of hon. members seeking the floor to ask supplementary questions. For the present the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Shefford and then return to further supplementaries on this subject.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NEW BRUNSWICK—IMPROVEMENT OF FRENCH TELEVISION NETWORK

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State and of his parliamentary secretary, I shall put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to give soon to over 200,000 French-speaking people in northeastern New Brunswick, a French-language television service through the CBC, as the residents and organizations of that area have requested it repeatedly?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): He has just come back from New Brunswick!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member travelled to other parts of the country, he would see that there is also a demand for more French-speaking television or radio stations.

The Secretary of State is making a study of budgets and he will do his utmost to assist in making French-speaking television and radio available to French-speaking people in different parts of the country.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Since 200,000 citizens of New Brunswick repreent one-third of the population of the province and this demand has existed for several years, can it be hoped that the government will soon cease making studies and take action in behalf of New Brunswick's Acadians?

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED SPLITTING OF BILL, PASSAGE OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS AND ABANDONMENT OF REMAINDER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question in light of the Prime Minister's statement about passing Bill C-259. Would he be prepared to recommend to the Minister of Finance that he split the income tax bill in view of the fact that the newspapers show that several Canadian companies that are also operating in other lands are prepared to move their offices and factories from Canada, which will cost Canadians thousands of jobs? Would he consider splitting that bill, letting the good part of the bill through and killing that which is killing the economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the premise of the question. Therefore the answer is no.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Prime Minister understands the premise because he has not read the newspaper reports.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO INCREASE INVESTMENT BY CANADIAN BANKS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Following the revelation by the Gray Report that too little of the investment funds of Canadian banks actually goes into the Canadian economy, and following the remarks of the Prime Minister this afternoon that more needs to be done to expand the service sector of the economy, is the government giving serious consideration to taking steps which would lead to greater investment in the Canadian economy as a whole, and particularly in the job-creating service sector, by Canadian banks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We are studying that question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West who has been trying since yesterday to ask a question.

FINANCE

CANADIAN INITIATIVES AT GROUP OF TEN MEETING TO RESOLVE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY PROBLEM

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman tell the House whether the Minister of Finance has taken any instructions from the government of Canada to the meeting of the Group of Ten in Rome with a view to developing initiatives in resolving the international monetary situation, or is Canada merely to adopt a passive role—

Mr. Hees: Just hope and pray.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —and to react to the suggestions of other countries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings hopes and prays, the Minister of Finance will be following the line he has taken in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is because of the minister following the usual line that we are making these inquiries. He has had a complete blind spot in regard to this problem. Therefore I am asking whether we in Canada have developed any particular initiatives to try to resolve this problem?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, again, of course, there is disagreement on the premise of the question. If the hon. member feels the minister has had a blind spot, then he can do no more than hope and pray, like the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. We will show results.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-U.S. PRODUCTION-SHARING AGREEMENT—1963 AGREEMENT ON MAINTENANCE OF DOLLAR BALANCE—INCLUSION IN CURRENT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Is he prepared to indicate whether he signed an agreement some time in June, 1963, on behalf of the government of Canada with the then United States Secretary of Defence, Mr. McNamara, the effect of which was to require the maintenance of a rough dollar balance in our defence production-sharing arrangements with that country?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, following discussions with Mr. McNamara I did make a report to the House on the conclusion of those discussions, and in general this was confirmed by an exchange of correspondence. As I think the House is aware, this particular arrangement is now under rather delicate negotiations with the Americans and is no longer my responsibility but that of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Forrestall: I thank the minister for that indication, and I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is a slightly different question but I suggest it is very closely related to my first one. Can the minister indicate if the present negotiations between Canada and the United States in the field of defence items, defence purchasing, and the area of related research and development information on material and programs, are being conducted on the basis of a required dollar balance formula with the United States and, if so, what is going to happen to the present surplus of $500 million that lies in our favour?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to correct the statement made yesterday by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. The $500 million Canadian surplus is a cumulative advantage for 1959-70 and not last year's Canadian surplus under the defence agreement. That is the first point I wished to make.

In the document referred to by the President of the Treasury Board the concept of "general balance" was set out, but it has never been defined. This is where I believe the analysis of circumstances becomes very important. What has happened since 1963 is that there has been a very extensive United States defence commitment around the world and a reduction in Canadian procurement of defence equipment. These circumstances are now changing and last year's surplus for Canada was brought down to $4 million. I think that the agreement of 1963 has to be interpreted in light of those circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, having returned from Algeria, Tunisia and other African countries he visited in order to find trade, apparently has not studied the question very carefully; otherwise he would not have made the observation concerning myself. In view of that observation I now ask him whether he will table the agreement of June 6, 1963, I think it was, in connection with the defence expenditures. If he will do that we will have a complete answer, which we do not now have.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to put the record straight. At page—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Answer yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister that we are getting into a debate. Perhaps he might try to reply to the question quickly. Perhaps we could avoid debate either in the questions or the answers.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to bet the right hon. member for Prince Albert ten bucks that I am right.

Mr. Hees: Make it $20.

Mr. Pepin: On the second point, whether I will put on the table—

Mr. Hees: Put up the money. I have the bet covered.

Mr. Pepin: Right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. member does not have $10 because he spent so much on his trip I will lend the money to him so he can bet it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East on a supplementary. I also suggest to hon. members that I do not think we are progressing very quickly at this point.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION ON HYDROFOIL AND GAS TURBINE ENGINE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence or to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can either of these two hon. gentlemen indicate to the House whether or not we have turned over to the United States government the full evaluation reports on the Bras d'Or study and on the JD-6 gas turbine engine so they may be developed and produced in the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that would be no. There has, of course, been an exchange of information through a NATO committee on hydrofoil systems.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If hon. members will look around they will see that perhaps 30 or 35 hon. members are seeking to ask questions. We will not reach too many unless we try to proceed more quickly.

PRODUCTION OF TUCUMCARI CLASS HYDROFOIL BY UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN PURCHASES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Since Boeing Aircraft Corporation is now going into the production of the Tucumcari class of hydrofoil, since there is pressure from the United States for us to increase our defence purchases there and since we need coastal patrol vessels, is the government of Canada considering purchasing Tucumcari class hydrofoils for that purpose?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that a hydrofoil class of ship for coastal work would run into real problems with ice and other floating objects off the Canadian coast while a long-range open ocean hydrofoil of the type such as we are working on would not, so I think the answer is no.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—DISCUSSION RESPECTING CO-ORDINATION OF OTTAWA AND QUEBEC PLANS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs stated yesterday that he intends to table a bill on family allowances before the end of December and that it would be difficult for Quebec to introduce a valid measure without knowing the nature of agreements with the federal government, could the Prime Minister assure the House that the negotiations now going on between Quebec and the federal government will be completed before the province introduces its bill in the National Assembly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot answer the question, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know in detail what will be the attitude of the Quebec government. As for the position of the federal government, it is known because we have already gone through first reading of the family allowances bill.

Regarding the general principles Prime Minister Bourassa mentioned at the beginning of September, we have indicated our willingness to negotiate. I cannot give the assurance that negotiations will be completed if Mr. Castonguay wishes to introduce his bill at such a date.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

PURCHASE OF TROPICAL PLANTS FOR NEW FINANCE DEPARTMENT OFFICES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of Finance but in his absence I will direct it to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of information just revealed in the supplementary estimates indicating that the Minister of Finance has authorized his department to purchase $75,000 worth of real or natural tropical plants from the United States to be used in the new offices of the Department of Finance in the Bell Building on Elgin Street—

Mr. Baldwin: They are lemons.

Mr. Hales: —may I ask the President of the Treasury Board if he will look into this incident—

An hon. Member: That's flower power.

Mr. Hales: —in the hope of stopping this extravagant waste of the taxpayers' money?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think that probably that question can more usefully be explored in committee when the subject of estimates is discussed.

Mr. Hees: Oh, come on now.

Mr. Drury: I can say for the benefit of the hon. member from the Lake Ontario region that this is part of a rather more economical method of providing partitions and is known as office landscaping.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Do you have any horses on the payroll?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to provide those who still live in the last century with information.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that this matter might be examined in committee. I understand that it was examined in committee. If the department insists that these plants be real or natural rather than artificial, would the minister make sure that they are bought in Canada? I can inform him that there is a company in Dundas, Ontario, from which they are available.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member's representation has been noted.

Mr. Baldwin: There will be a rose for every taxpayer.

MAINTENANCE OF SERVICE ON WEST COAST OF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport on the matter of subsidies to coastal ship services in Canada, with particular reference to the service on the west coast of Vancouver Island which is slated to be withdrawn on December 31. Will the minister use his good offices with the Canadian Transport Commission to make sure that this essential service is maintained at least until some alternative method of transportation is available for the communities involved, inasmuch as at present they have no other means of getting in their supplies?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression on the basis of information provided by the Canadian Transport Commission that alternative means of transportation were available. If the situation is as my hon. friend describes it, for a short period of time it may be possible to cover that hiatus through continuation, but the matter is one that rests entirely with the CTC.

Mr. Barnett: I will discuss this at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM INVOLVING HOMOSEXUAL MARRIAGE BETWEEN MALES

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State who reports to the House for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Hees: Take it easy, now.

Mr. Muir: My question deals with a program using taxpayers' money to be telecast tonight on the CBC and involving a homosexual marriage between two males. In view of the fact this is a half hour program in prime network time—

Mr. Jamieson: Do they need more time?

Mr. Muir: That is pretty good, Don. You must know something about it. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether this program is intended as entertainment or propaganda?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have very serious doubts about the way the question is asked. I would doubt that the hon. member would expect a reply to that question.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North rises on a point of order.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege relates to the question asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys of the Prime Minister with regard to a CBC program which is going to be produced tonight, has been advertised, and involves a so-called marriage between two homosexuals of the CBC—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, we have been laughing a lot about this and I can appreciate there might be something humorous in it were it not for the fact that the taxpayers' money is being spent on something that is vulgar and distasteful to almost every Canadian in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the point made by the hon. member but I think it is a point of argument. Perhaps the Prime Minister might be allowed to reply to the question but my thought was, and I think I was right, that the way the question was asked by the hon. member was by way of a protest in the same way as the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North is doing now. I do not want to be unfair. If the right hon. Prime Minister feels he should reply to the question he may do so.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the House knows, Mr. Speaker, when we introduced legislation on this subject it had to do with consenting adults in private. I am not quite sure whether television would be looking at that aspect of it. As one hon. member behind me said, maybe the whole thing is a fairy tale. I do not know.

Mr. Baldwin: It is more likely a catastrophe.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you that the member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys said to the Minister of Transport that he must know something about homosexuality. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is the kind of slur which should be withdrawn by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It would appear that my original judgment might have been justified to some extent and that we might have left well enough alone. I think the hon. members really intended to raise the matter by way of protest and I think they have to assume that their protest has been noted.

Mr. Muir: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege? The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Coates: On the question of privilege, I still do not believe we have had a satisfactory answer from the government in this regard, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Coates: I am sorry that the Secretary of State is not here because he is the logical person to make the CBC aware of the feelings of the House with regard to this program in prime family viewing time. I believe that the government should give an indication to the CBC that this House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That, of course, is not a question of privilege. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys is rising on a point of order. I would hope that after this, in the three minutes left, we might try to get two or three questions before we call orders of the day.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I shall not have very much to say but I have a question of privilege. I can only say this to you, sir, that I have the highest regard for the Minister of Transport. In every way possible he is a real man—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Watch your fanmail now, Don.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really think we might go on to another subject. It is my impression that this subject has been exhausted. Order, please. I do not think much can be gained by pursuing the matter. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys has a right to raise a point of order or question of privilege, but I hope we can go on to other matters as quickly as possible.

Mr. Muir: I should like to finish my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. All I can say is that if other hon. gentlemen across the way would take the Minister of Transport as an example with regard to his activities and his actions in this House we would have a better House and a better government. With regard to the utterances by the Prime Minister, I leave that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir: I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the hon. member had expressed his question of privilege. I really suggest to the hon. member that he has made his point, and I wonder whether he would not agree that we are not helping the situation by prolonging the matter much longer.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Muir: With regard to the utterances and actions of the Prime Minister, I leave that to the people of Canada to judge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

QUEBEC—REPRESENTATIONS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—COMPENSATION FOR HOG AND EGG PRODUCER'S LOSSES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but I have to wait until he has resumed his seat.

To a question which I addressed to him yesterday, the minister replied that he had not understood its meaning. I therefore gave him notice.

Here is my question: Has the Minister of Agriculture received from his Quebec counterpart a request inviting the federal government to compensate the loss of $16 million incurred by Quebec hog, egg and turkey producers over the last 12 months?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture for Quebec has made some representations to me and has outlined the problem of loss of income. I am not sure about the exact figures but in fact we already have some programs under way to help the situation with respect to eggs. We have also announced that there will be a program under the Agricultural Stabilization Act as soon as the figures for 1971 are available.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Not on the Port of Vancouver Authority, Mr. Speaker. LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—DATE OF REPORT ON INVESTIGATION—POSSIBLE PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the continuing interest in the subject of cabinet leaks, I would ask whether investigations are still being pursued, whether the RCMP are involved, and whether he has given any indication of a date by which he would like a report in this connection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The matter is still being looked into. There is no indication of any time at which any report might be made.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the investigation will more than likely point the finger at some person or persons, is it the intention of the government and the Prime Minister to lay charges against such person or persons who may be responsible for the leaks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question is hypothetical at this stage.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I take the opportunity to rephrase the question? Is it the policy of the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member sought the floor on a point of order but he merely wishes to rephrase the question. I shall allow him to do so in a moment. First, I shall recognize the hon. member for Palliser.

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—POLICY OF GOVERNMENT IN DEALING WITH OFFENDERS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Supplementary to my last question, which was perhaps somewhat ill-phrased, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is the policy of the government to lay charges against those who are responsible for leaks regardless of who he or she might be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can hardly state the government's policy on this complex matter in answer to a question. As the hon. member knows, it is unlikely we would deal with a leak from a cabinet minister in the same way as we might in the case of somebody else, and it is unlikely we would deal with it in the same way if it were a member of the public who was infringing the Official Secrets Act. In other words, there are various ways of getting at someone who is responsible for a leak and I do not know in advance, without being specific on hypothetical cases, how I could say we would act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One law for the powerful and another for the civil servants.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON TALKS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the government received a report on the energy talks in Washington last week from its officials who attended those talks, including Mr. Robert Howland, chairman of the National Energy Board?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I had a very short conversation with Dr. Howland on these matters, but that particular phase was not summarized for me to any extent. I will inquire further.

YOUTH

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF EMPLOYMENT DIFFICULTIES TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as leader of the House. In light of a statement in the review issued by the Economic Council of Canada that young people are experiencing great difficulty in finding employment, and in light of statements by the Secretary of State over the weekend, will the hon. gentleman now give consideration to the formation in this House of a standing committee on youth?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): As the hon. member knows, we are already complaining generally about the large number of committees and, in particular, about the large number of committees meeting during the busy periods of the session. It seems to me it should be possible to permit one of the existing committees to deal with the problems of youth, especially those related to their employment prospects.

Mr. Nystrom: Bearing in mind what the minister has just said, may I ask him whether he will undertake to refer problems concerning young people to one of the present standing committees of the House?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be happy to consider that idea.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF PRODUCTION—POSSIBLE INJURY TO WESTERN PRODUCERS BY ONTARIO PROGRAM—NEED FOR NATIONAL MARKETING LEGISLATION

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the newly-publicized provincial loan program to increase beef production in Ontario through the encouragement of cow-calf production. In the absence of national marketing legislation arrived at jointly between the government of Canada, the western provinces and Ontario, can the minister inform the House of any conversations now under way to determine the manner in which serious injury to the cattle industry in western Canada as a result of this new provincial policy might be avoided?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. We have not held any discussions specifically concerning this policy. I think it is one which will probably be completely within the jurisdiction of the provincial government. However, I am sure the hon. member is aware that there was almost unanimous agreement by all provinces that we should get on with national enabling legislation.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO SALARIES OF PRESIDENT AND CHAIRMAN

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell the House what salaries are being paid to the president and chairman of the Canada Development Corporation?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency attached to it, it might be considered at the time of adjournment. The hon. member knows it is not normal to ask, during the question period, what salaries are paid to officials.

AGRICULTURE

PROMOTION OF EDIBLE OIL PRODUCTION FROM RAPESEED—DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAM IN CONJUNCTION WITH OTHER PRODUCERS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. It is based on the announcement he made in the House earlier today. I should like to ask whether the government, in its promotion of greater production of edible oils, particularly from rapeseed, has developed its program in conjunction with other producers of edible oils in Canada, or whether it will be solving the problem in one area while creating further problems in others, as has been the case in so many instances?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think this will create problems in other areas because, outside the use of rapeseed oil in Canada, almost all of the other oils are not produced in sufficient quantities in Canada to supply the domestic market. What we are primarily interested in is that the trade should be in a position to accommodate the health standards without too much economic difficulty.

RAPESEED—DETAILS OF ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Would the Minister of Agriculture clarify the type and quantity of assistance to rapeseed producers and what is actually involved so the House will know that it is not a subsidy proposition and so that hon. members will know the extent of what is aimed at in the statement he made in the House today?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I would be very happy to do that. I wonder if I might have another ten seconds. When I come into the House with a statement which contains a great deal of detail, the opposition ojects; when I do not bring in enough they still object.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The government resumed, from Monday, November 29, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendment to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 1—Section 167: Application to Review Board for time extension.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I invite hon. members who may wish to leave the chamber to do so as quickly as possible in order that we can proceed to the work of the committee.

In accordance with the statement of the President of the Privy Council, as recorded at page 9992 of Hansard of November 29, the committee will now resume consideration of sections 167 and 168, 169 to 180 inclusive, followed by part XV and part XVI, sections 220 to 247 inclusive. I must bring it to the attention of the committee that section 166 has been agreed to. The committee has an amendment to section 167 before it, proposed by the hon. member for New Westminster, as indicated at page 9664 of Hansard.

Shall the amendment to subclause 167 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I put the amendment again?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, would you inform us which clause you are calling at this point as it is difficult to hear. Is it 167?

The Deputy Chairman: I appreciate the point made by the hon. member. There has been quite a bit of noise while going into committee and I would invite hon. members to let the committee proceed as quickly as possible with the study of the clause in front of us. If any hon. members wish to have personal conversations, I think these should be carried on behind the curtains. It is very difficult, even for the Chair, to hear what is being said. The committee is studying clause 167 at this time and the question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster, which reads as follows:

That subsection (1) be amended by the deletion of the words "because of the death, incapacity, sickness, or bankruptcy of a taxpayer".

And that the same words be deleted from subsection (4).

Is the committee ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, hon. members will recall that the last time we dealt with that section, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth) wanted it to be amended because it was a little restrictive and would be unfair under certain circumstances. For instance, should the secretary forget to send the letter or the notice required, this could cause a wrong to the taxpayer. This is why the hon. member for New Westminster had moved that amendment which is acceptable and approved by the government.

With the committee's permission I would like to read the government's amendment to section 167.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Does the Parliamentary Secretary suggest that the first amendment be withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the House because the government wants to move another one?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it be withdrawn because the government's proposed amendment meets with the hon. member's wishes.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: The parliamentary secretary is suggesting that the government has an amendment to replace the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster. This can only be done either by voting on the amendment or withdrawing it by unanimous consent. Does the committee give unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member for New Westminster to withdraw his amendment?

[Translation]

I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would tell me whether the hon. member for New Westminster agrees that his amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for New Westminster, is aware of the government's amendment. He agrees to withdraw his own amendment.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the withdrawal of the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for New Westminster is prepared to withdraw his amendment, then I see no objection to that course.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, is it the wish of the committee that I read the government's proposal?

[English]

Is it the wish of the committee that I read the government's amendment?

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. If the parliamentary secretary only wants to read his motion, the Chair will allow him to do so, but he cannot move another amendment until the amendment which is now under study has been withdrawn. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary might read his amendment for the information of hon. members.

Mr. Béchard: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but my understanding was that the committee had agreed unanimously, following consent of the hon. member for New Westminster.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair was under the impression that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) wanted clearer confirmatin of the desire of the hon. member for New Westminster to withdraw his amendment, and I think that the only way that we are going to make any progress is to put the question again.

Does the committee agree to the withdrawal of the motion of the hon. member for New Westminster?

[English]

Does the committee give unanimous consent to allowing the hon. member for New Westminster to withdraw the amendment that is before the committee?

Mr. Aiken: Once again, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for New Westminster should stand in this House and indicate his consent to its withdrawal. I have no objection at all to that being done if that is his wish, but I think it would be up to the hon. member to indicate that he is prepared to withdraw his amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I am told that the hon. member concerned is not here today. However according to the statement made by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine the hon. member for New Westminster has agreed to withdraw his amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. parliamentary secretary knows that this amendment can only be withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the House. If the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka maintains his objection there will be no other solution for the committee than to discuss that amendment and to vote on it.

[English]

The Chair is inviting hon. members to co-operate, and to give the Chair guidance, so we can come to a quick decision and proceed with the work of the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is quite correct in saying that an amendment can be withdrawn only if the mover so requests. However, I think the hon. member would agree with me that if any member of the House can stand and say that he is so doing on behalf, and with the approval, of that hon. member, then we can accept it. I believe that what bothers us up to this point is that we have had vague statements on the part of certain hon. members opposite that the hon. member for New Westminister will agree to this but that is all. If we can have a firm statement from an hon. member that he is doing it at the request of the hon. member for New Westminister, then I believe we would accept it.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I cannot say that the hon. member for New Westminister has explicitly authorized me to withdraw his amendment.

However, after proposing his amendment the hon. member for New Westminster had a talk with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and agreed to accept the proposal of the department.

In order not to delay the proceedings, I would suggest that the clause be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In that case, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment should be withdrawn at this point. After all, we have to protect every member in this respect. Either the matter stands and we move to something else, or the amendment will have to be put to a vote. If the government wants it defeated, it can soon defeat it, so why not call the vote?

Mr. Béchard: That is what I said, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment should stand.

Mr. Aiken: Let us vote on it now and get it out of the way.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair cannot accept the suggestion made by the parliamentary secretary that the amendment stand. If the government wishes to suggest to the committee that the clause be stood, then the Chair would have no objection.

[Translation]

But I must point out to the hon. member that it is quite difficult for the Chair to suspend the debate on this amendment and let the government introduce another one on the clause now under consideration. If the government is ready to allow clause 167 to stand, I think that it would be acceptable to the committee.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth).

Amendment (Mr. Hogarth) negatived on division: Yeas, 23; Nays, 50.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think it should be made clear that in voting against the amendment we just disposed of we are not opposing—

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Probably the Chair was just about to do the same thing the hon. member is attempting to do. The minister knows he is not allowed, under the Standing Orders of the House, to comment on any vote taken previously.

Mr. Gray: Your point is well taken, Mr. Chairman. It is my intention to comment not on the vote but on the point of view expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster. Because his point appeared to have validity, we are prepared at this time to move an amendment which we think will give recognition to the point of view he has expressed. I should like at this time to move the following amendment:

That section 167 as set forth in clause 1 of the said Bill be amended

(a) by striking out lines 14 to 26 on page 441 and substituting the following:

Application to Review Board for time extension

167. (1) Where no objection to an assessment under section 165 or appeal to the Tax Review Board under section 169 has been made or instituted within the time limited by section 165 or 169, as the case may be, for doing so, an application may be made to the Tax Review Board for an order extending the time within which a notice of objection may be served or an appeal instituted and the Board may, if in its opinion the circumstances of the case are such that it would be just and equitable to do so, make an order extending the time for objecting or appealing and may impose such terms as it deems just.

(b) by striking out lines 1 to 13 on page 442 and substituting the following:

Application for time extension to Federal Court

(4) Where no appeal to the Federal Court of Canada under section 172 has been instituted within the time limited by that section, an application may be made to the Federal Court of Canada by notice filed in the Court and served on the Deputy Attorney General of Canada at least 14 days before the application is returnable for an order extending the time within which such appeal may be instituted and the Court may, if in its opinion the circumstances of the case are such that it would be just and equitable to do so, make an order extending the time for appealing and may impose such terms as it deems just.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment moved by the Minister of National Revenue. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 167 as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, just as a matter of clarification I understood there was another amendment. It may have been disposed of, but there was, according to my recollection, an amendment to section 167 subsection 1 to the effect that the words "because of the death, incapacitating sickness or bankruptcy of a taxpayer" be struck out. Perhaps we disposed of this amendment. If so, I stand to be corrected. However, it was my recollection that this amendment was before the committee.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, we just disposed of that amendment a while ago. It was included in the amendment of the hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on this matter? I believe it is rather important. What happened was that the amendment which came before the House had certain underlined words in it. I suppose it could be said that the underlined words in the amendment moved by the minister replaced the phrase referred to by my hon. friend, but the fact is that most members of the committee could, if faced by the wording of the amendment referred to by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, really be caught by surprise.

Admittedly, I can see that the words being added are intended to cover the words being struck out, but we have had sort of half the loaf presented and the other half not presented. I do not know whether this is really a good point of order but it probably illustrates better than anything else the difficulties that can be encountered when trying to deal in a body of 264 people with a complicated act which affects over 22 million people.

[Mr. Gray.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member knows the Chair can only abide by the decision of the committee. The question was on the amendment of the hon. member for New Westminster and that was defeated. Perhaps the best solution to this problem might be for the hon. member to move an amendment which would clarify the proposal he wishes to take. This course is open to all members of the committee. The Chair cannot give direction. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the Chair can only abide by the decision of the committee.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I just rise to say I was under the impression there had been another amendment, but I am assured there was not, and therefore we can proceed with this clause.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps on this particular point of order I might bring to the attention of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka the fact that there was an amendment to section 167 in respect of the French version. It was adopted on November 17, 1971.

On clause 1—Section 168: Notice of intention to revoke registration.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I say a few words on this section? Perhaps I might ask the parliamentary secretary for an explanation, because this deals with the machinery to be set up within the government to revoke the registration of Canadian charitable organizations. This section is not intended to apply to a request being made by the organization in extremis, I presume, but when it ceases to comply with the requirements of this act for its registration as such under (b). Is there any procedure by which the organization could, in effect, take issue with the minister if he decides that it has failed to comply with the requirements of the act for its registration, and what would that procedure be?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Clermont: I will refer the hon. member to section 172 (3).

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 168 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Section agreed to.

Clause 1, Section 169 to 171 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 1—Section 172: Appeal.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now study section 172, to which there is an amendment that was moved by the Minister of National Revenue on October 22. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 172 as amended carry?

Mr. Aiken: No, Mr. Chairman. I have several points to raise in connection with section 172, having disposed of the other sections fairly rapidly. I propose to move an amendment, unless the point that I wish to raise is covered. The first point relates to section 172 (3) which states that where the minister refuses to register an applicant, there is a right of appeal. What I am asking is why this right of appeal is not broad enough to cover almost all cases. Why is it limited to just this one? I know that there are several other situations in which a minister might very well refuse to do what is expected of him and in that case there would be no appeal unless it was covered by (a) (b) (c) and (d). I would like to ask why it is limited in this way.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, to my mind section 172 (3) which the hon. member mentioned covers more than appeals dealing with charitable donations.

Here are a few cases where one can appeal the decision of the minister: first, when the minister refuses to register a charitable organization under subsection 168(1); second, when he refuses to register an amateur athletic association; third, when he proposes to revoke the registration of a charitable organization or an amateur athletic association; fourth, when he refuses to register a retirement savings plan; fifth, when he refuses to register a profit sharing plan; sixth, when he refuses to issue a certificate of exemption under subsection 212 (13). In all those cases, one must appeal to the Federal Court of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: In connection with the same problem, the appeal envisaged under section 172 (3) is to the court of appeal rather than to the trial division. It seems illogical in a case such as this that people should have to go through the procedure of going to the court of appeal as if they had already had a trial on the issue before a judge in the first instance. Courts of appeal require the transmission of documents, evidence, and so forth, and in most cases a factum that will allow the three judges to consider all the evidence, but in fact there will have been no preliminary decision on the problem. This results in two things: first, the appellant will have difficulty in finding out exactly what the minister decided and for what reasons, and second, it will be an expensive proposition to go to the court of appeal rather than to the trial division. This point has been raised in the submission made by the Canadian Bar Association, and I would be very loath to argue with them on this point. I imagine that the submission of the Canadian Bar Association on this particular point was made to the minister and I wanted to ask whether the point has been considered. If it has, and has been rejected, I would like to know why.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has received a copy of the brief of the Canadian Bar Association. I am not now in a position to comment the remarks of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: The hon. member has just pointed out one of the difficulties we are encountering in the committee in dealing with this bill. I do not wish to show any disrespect for the parliamentary secretary, who is doing his best to pilot this bill. I cast no aspersions on the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance who has on other occasions been here, nor do I cast aspersions on the adviser who is before him, but I want to point out to the committee that our problem is that the minister is not able to be present to pilot this bill through, and we cannot get any definitive answers. I do not blame the parliamentary secretary. I know he is doing his best, but not only has he difficulty in making responses but he is also in the impossible position of being unable to make any commitments, or accept any amendments, or take unto himself the powers that a minister, piloting a bill through Parliament, ought to be able to exercise. This has caused a lot of the delay in passing the various sections.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) should be back in a moment. He was called outside the House, but he will soon return.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing new here. The hon. member who is a distinguished member of the Bar knows that administrative decision-making follows the appeal procedure rather than the method he described earlier.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I may have been diverted, but I want to know whether the suggestion of the Canadian Bar Association has been considered by the Minister of Finance. Has he rejected it and, if so, why? I do not think the Minister of National Revenue could help us very much. Unless he has been concerned with the bill daily, he would be unable to answer this question. I will let this matter stand for a moment because I do not want to be unduly difficult about it. I shall go on to the other subsection on which I intend to be difficult, dealing with time limitations for appeals.

Under this subsection, if a person files an application for registration, or for any of the other things covered here, and if the minister does not make a response to it, then there is nothing from which to appeal. As it is, it takes long enough to have an appeal heard and go through all the procedures that are set out in the legislation. By refusing to give a decision, the minister can divert an appeal. It is the old story, that justice delayed is justice denied. An organization may apply for registration as a charitable organization, an amateur athletic association, or something of that sort. If it gets no response to its application, there is nothing on earth it can do about it.

The organization cannot appeal against rejection because its application has not been rejected. The applicant is placed in an impossible position. This is similar to the type of question raised by the Canadian Bar Association. There should be a time limit within which the minister must either refuse or accept an application, and if the application is not dealt with in the time spelled out, the applicant should be able to proceed as if the application has been rejected. He would then be able to go ahead with his appeal and try to get some answers from the courts that he could not get from the minister.

I wish to move an amendment providing for the addition of a subsection (4), but before doing so I would like to ask if anyone sitting opposite can tell me why there should not be a time limit within which the minister must reply to an application.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, if the minister refuses to take action or to arrive at a decision along the lines mentioned by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, one could ask the Federal Court to issue a writ of mandamus against the minister, depending upon the circumstances.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A writ of mandamus?

Mr. Béchard: Yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If they cannot have bread, let them eat cake.

Mr. Béchard: Pardon?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If they cannot have bread, let them eat cake.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, surely these obscure procedures are not the kind that you would ask a Canadian charitable organization or amateur athletic association to go through—mandamus applications? In many cases the minister could appear before the court on such an application and say, "We are still looking into the matter." In this way the application could be stalled. In order to get the matter before the committee and on the record I move:

That clause 172 be amended by the addition of a new subclause—

(4) The Minister shall be deemed to have refused any application under 3(a), (b), (c) and (d) above, if he has not notified the applicant of his disposition thereof within six months after the date of submission of the application.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I would first like to say that I think this amendment is reasonable. Some of my colleagues suggest I am being quite generous with the minister in allowing him six months in which to consider and decide on an application. They say 90 days would be enough, but what I am trying to do is simply close this loophole because it will cause some difficulties in the future. Through this bill we are trying to give the public a bit of a break; at least, that should be our objective. It certainly is the objective of the official opposition, and I am sure the government would say it has the same objective.

Here is a straightforward amendment. I cannot see any reason it should not be accepted. If the minister has not decided on an application within six months, he will be deemed to have refused it. I could have worded the amendment so that he would be deemed to have accepted the application, and then it would be up to the minister to appeal. But I am not trying to cause administrative difficulties for the department. I am merely saying, "You have to make a decision on an application within six months and, if you don't, then there is ground for appeal as if you had refused it; the people involved can take their appeal before the courts." I do not have much more to add. I think the request is reasonable. It would not change the substance of the section and, if accepted, would make this provision much more clear for the average individual who wants to have an appeal heard but who is fed up with waiting. It would provide a definite time limit. I think that all those on the government side of the committee will concede this is a reasonable amendment.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, may I just add my support to the general thrust of the amendment proposed by my colleague. I think that the parliamentary secretary gave a very poor answer when he said that in cases of this kind a writ of mandamus is available. It seems to me that is a most cavalier attitude to display towards the taxpayer. There is one criticism of the amendment. Frankly, it gives the ministry too long a period in which to make up its mind with regard to registration under section 172(3)(a). I am referring to its right to refuse registration of an application or to revoke a registration, all of which is quite properly provided for in the bill. You know, people learn different things around Ottawa, and one of those things is that what are usually set out as maxima become minima. I would think that a 90-day period would be more than ample for determining whether a charity is a proper charity or whether some application should be accepted, refused or a registration revoked. Ninety days should be the limit, and from there on any remedies available should be open to a taxpayer.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the hon. member who has moved the amendment that, for the time being, proceedings should be delayed for a few minutes in order to give the Minister of National Revenue the opportunity to get a copy of the amendment which we do not have at present.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 172 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1—Section 172, stands.

Clause 1—Section 173, agreed to.

On Clause 1—Section 174—Reference to Federal Court or Tax Review Board of common questions.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, section 174(1) reads:

Where the Minister is of the opinion that a question of law, fact or mixed law and fact is common to assessments in respect of two or more taxpayers, he may apply to the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court—Trial Division for a determination of the question.

I think I understand the reasoning behind the section. In cases where the minister is in some doubt about whether a ruling involving, say, three different people who have brought forward similar cases, is right, it would be quite logical, I think, for him to take advantage of the section, refer the matter to the courts, and get the taxpayer to put his argument forward before the court. However, I think in this particular case the taxpayer should consent to that proposition, because we will not go to court unless he wishes to go. He may find himself in the position that the minister is appealing for him a case which he, the taxpayer, would just as soon let drop. Surely, the taxpayer should have the right to decide what he wants to do.

Second, the taxpayer may feel that his case is different from the one involving the other people, and that the cases should not be tried together. I am, therefore, suggesting that section 174 should only come into effect with the consent of the taxpayer and that the decision should not rest solely with the Minister of National Revenue. I think it is most likely, in situations like this, that the taxpayer would consent; after all, he will need to pay only a portion of the costs of obtaining counsel and taking the matter to appeal. I am suggesting that the section should be invoked only with the consent of the taxpayer, and the decision should not rest solely with the minister. May I have some comment on this? I think it is a reasonable request. I have not prepared an amendment yet on this particular section, but I might be prepared to do so if there is not a reasonable response.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, while I am addressing a few remarks to the Chair and to the minister, perhaps my colleague will consider whether he wishes to submit an amendment. I share his apprehension. I do not think that the minister should have the sole determination of whom the parties shall be in this, shall we say, reference to either the Tax Appeal Board or the Federal Court, Trial Division. It is a well known axiom, and it is provided for elsewhere in the act, that there must be no riding in on coat tails. In other words, one taxpayer cannot sit idly by and let another taxpayer bear the brunt of litigation, either before the Tax Appeal Board, the Federal Court, Trial Division, or a higher court, in the possible anticipation that the result will be favourable to the original litigating taxpayer. Otherwise, once the litigant taxpayer has obtained a satisfactory decision from the tribunal, the chap who has sat idly by could ride in and make a claim as well, without having shared or borne any risk or cost and I do not think that this is right.

However, in this particular case it is the minister who has discretion as to whom he may join and whom he may put aside and keep out of the case. It may be that the taxpayer in question has not had the opportunity of knowing that the minister will start proceedings against someone else. It seems to me that there has to be some protection for a taxpayer who has been excluded, but who should have been included by the minister. You will have it either one way or the other. Either the minister's discretion to join certain parties shall be challengeable in one way or another, or the exclusion by the minister from the proceedings shall not operate to the prejudice of the claim of a taxpayer who has a common basis for the assessment. I know this is a rather fine point, but I suggest that we must provide justice on both sides of the street, shall we say. The minister is entitled to do something. I fully accept the proposition that the minister should have some rights in regard to these matters; but then, I think the taxpayer has certain rights, too. The prerogatives are not entirely with the minister.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think the last two members who have spoken have raised some very useful points with regard to this section. First of all, I would submit to the committee that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is attempting to give the wording of the section a wider meaning than is in fact intended. I would suggest that the wording of the section in effect, provides that the jurisdiction given would be circumscribed in that there must be a common question in fact and law, and not merely a similar question, in order for the minister to take the action intended under Section 174(1).

Also Mr. Chairman, may I submit that if one looks at Section 174(2) and (3) I think it would be apparent from the wording that a taxpayer who is included in a notice from the minister would not therefore automatically be bound by a decision of the Tax Review Board or a Federal Court but rather, if I may use the wording of the section, the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court would have to be satisfied:

> —that a determination of the question set forth in an application under this section will affect assessments in respect of two or more taxpayers who have been served with a copy of the application and who are named in an order of the Board or the Court, as the case may be, pursuant to this subsection, it may
> (a) if none of the taxpayers so named has appealed from such an assessment, proceed to determine the question in such manner as it considers appropriate, or
> (b) if one or more of the taxpayers so named has or have appealed, make such order joining a party or parties to that or those appeals as it considers appropriate.

I would think from this, Mr. Chairman, that it is open to a taxpayer who receives a notice to go to the Tax Review Board and make his case that he should not be included in any determination of the question referred to the Board by the minister because the question is not a common question of fact and law.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. members who have just commented on this section have raised points which are certainly worthy of consideration, but I respectfully submit that the wording of the section does, in effect, deal with the matters of concern.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I think we have a rather important point here, because of the changes that are being brought about in the Income Tax Act, so I should like to present for the consideration of the minister the following suggestion. He has mentioned that under Section 174(1) it is a question of law or mixed law and fact common to assessments in respect of two or more taxpayers.

Let us consider the example discussed earlier under a subparagraph which was passed, and which may have a great deal of relevance to thousands of people across Canada, namely the travelling salesman who is provided with the use of a company vehicle. The first four or five travelling salesmen in the fray, who have a question of law or mixed law and fact common to themselves and also common to several thousand other travelling salesmen who have not entered the fray, may be blazing the trail to try to find out exactly what the law is on this point. I wonder why the minister, or whoever drafted the bill, did not make this provision broad enough to include an association of travelling salesmen or an association of this, that or the other type of taxpayer with common interests who could raise questions before the court. Was any consideration given to the approach of not really dealing with the numbers of taxpayers but dealing with the class or kind of taxpayer?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has also raised a useful point. I think he is right in saying, and I am so advised, that associations of the type he had in mind would not be covered by the sections we are studying. I think the reason is that there is quite a difference of opinion among people in the type of associations he has in mind about whether they should be bound by action taken allegedly on their behalf by the association—perhaps a professional association. It was thought, therefore, that for the time being we would not attempt to resolve this question.

If I may have the floor for another moment with your permission, Mr. Chairman, and if I am out of order I know you will bring me to order. We had asked that Section 172 stand so that we could have a chance to read the wording of the amendment proposed to it by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. We have now read the wording and we would certainly like to give further consideration to the point he has raised. It may be that something could be considered in the area he has suggested, but at the very least we will have to give further consideration to the wording and so on. I should like to inform the committee and the hon. member of this and ask the consent of the committee that this section continue to stand, not simply to allow a reading of the hon. member's amendment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister does not feel at all put out that we are questioning rather closely on this particular group of sections. If he will examine Bill C-259, he will see that, according to the explanatory notes, all of the paragraphs in these sections are new. These are new sections, so I think we would be remiss if we did not question them very carefully. After all, if there had been prior experience with this type of legislation we could say that it had been working out fairly well in the past, but this is all brand new. The point made by my colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka is just one example.

The other point I have to make, and I would like the minister to take it under careful consideration, is one that is quite relative to this section. It is very much on all fours. I refer to the section which gives the minister, and I repeat, which gives the minister a discretion in joining of parties properly qualified as to communion of circumstances. If, as a result of the exercise of that discretion, a person who should have been included in the action is thereby excluded, this exclusion should not operate to that person's prejudice. That is what I want, justice for the minister and justice for the taxpayer.

I should like the minister to take that point under advisement so that there are not people who are simply told "Look, old boy, we did not join you; perhaps we should have, but the fact is we did not". There is another rule which says, because you were not a party to the action or you did not take any formal steps such as filing a notice of appeal or an application to be joined to the action, you are thereby precluded from any benefit of the court's decision. I think that would be terribly wrong.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member that these sections are very important. I think that the hon. member can infer from responses not only by myself but by the parliamentary secretaries who are speaking on behalf of the government on this subject, that we are trying to listen very carefully to the points raised, and to give them reasonable consideration. I can only repeat the points I made when I last spoke a few moments ago on the section.

First, I would think there is recourse for people who are mentioned in the notice and who think they should not have been mentioned. But I hope the hon. member's point is somewhat different—that it deals with people who are not joined in the notice but who would like to be joined. It would seem to me that the recourse for them would be to have the matter disposed of through an appeal directed to their own particular case, and this could be done without altering the section in any way.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps I see a glimmer of the solution to the problem I have posed. Under paragraph (b) of section 174(3) the tribunal is given power to join a party who was not originally a party to the appeal.

> If one or more of the taxpayers so named has or have appealed . . . the review board or the federal court . . . may make such order joining a party or parties to that or those appeals as it considers appropriate.

It seems to me it is within the practice of the tribunal in dealing with the conduct of its affairs to provide for a simple form of notice in which a taxpayer can say to the board, in effect, that he has heard that a certain case is to be tried, that he has a case which is comparable, and he would like it to be heard also. It could all be done in very simple language, and a solution might be devised by way of regulations covering either or both tribunals.

Mr. Aiken: My hon. friend from Edmonton West and I have approached the same problem from different directions. I did not find the response of the minister satisfactory from my point of view. I have read through the subsections (2), (3) and (4) in the light of the hon. gentleman's remarks, and I still feel that a taxpayer who does not particularly wish to be drawn into a case with another taxpayer is left without any real remedy. The subsection provides that his case can be joined and makes a decision on his assessment final. It is as simple as that.

I can think of a number of cases where the consequences would be undesirable. For example, a fraudulent or scandalous aspect might arise in connection with a particular tax case, and one of the taxpayers may have no connection whatever with those particular circumstances or with those concerned—he just happens honestly to be in a similar situation. He may wish very much to dissociate himself from the publicity which might attach to that case. It is possible that such a case might become a matter of public interest, that the press would take it up, believing there was a real story in the events behind the scenes. Another person in a similar situation might well have no desire in the world to be associated with those circumstances. Yet he might have been unfortunate enough to have come along at the same time and to have been forced into becoming a party to the appeal.

Then again, a taxpayer may feel that his situation is not, in fact, similar. He may believe there are other points of fact or of law which he needs to make. It do not feel that the review board or the federal court could in fact determine whether this was so or not without going through the whole case. I can see no reason for a taxpayer being forced into a court case to which he does not want to be a party. I can advance a dozen reasons, and I have already given two examples. He does not want his appeal to be tied to the appeal of someone else. This would only seem to be fair to the taxpayer.

All I would propose at the moment, and I am putting this forward for consideration by the minister, is that if, in fact, a person can separate himself from the appeal of another taxpayer, and the government agrees this can be done, it should be spelled out in the bill. My proposal would be that the words "with the consent of such taxpayers" be inserted in section 174(1) in line 43 on page 446. The subsection would then read that the minister, in respect of two or more taxpayers, and so on, might, with the consent of such taxpayers, apply to the tax review board or to the federal court, trial division, etc. As the section stands I do not think the exception in subsection (3), in accordance with which the review board or the federal court has to decide that cases are similar, is sufficient protection for the public. I have prepared an amendment to this subsection, but before putting it I should like to know whether the minister is unequivocally opposed to my proposition. I cannot see any reason he should be.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I can see the hon. member's point of view. It seems to me that the wording of the section before us does not fail to meet his point to the extent that he suggests. First of all, I think he will agree that the final word on whether there is a common question of law, fact, or mixed law and fact is not that of the minister but that of the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court. Of course, this provides a further opportunity for the taxpayer in question to make his point that he should not be included in the matter.

Second, the hon. member has spoken of a similar question of fact; if I am not mistaken, he did use the word "similar". Again I submit that the jurisdiction intented by the clause is already circumscribed by the existing wording in that there must be a common question of fact or law and not a similar question.

If I may take a moment I should like to give the committee some idea of the type of case intended to be dealt with in this section. For example, it is contemplated that the section could be used in those cases where there is a dispute as to whether amounts paid or received have been paid or received as alimony. For example, under section 56 an amount received by a taxpayer as alimony is required to be included in his income, and under section 60(b) the amount so paid as alimony may be deducted in computing the income of the person who made the payment.

In many cases of payments between former spouses there is often an irreconcilable difference of opinion as to whether moneys paid, say, by the husband to the wife are payments on account of alimony. In such cases, the revenue authorities are basically indifferent to the resolution of the dispute provided it is one that applies both to the person who has made the payment and the person who has received the money. I use this as an example of the type of situation to which it is intended this section should apply.

I might also point out that if the wording of the hon. member is included in an amendment to section 174—I think the wording he suggested is "with the consent of the taxpayer"—I am advised that, in effect, section 174 would be really no different from section 173, with which I think we have just dealt. That section provides that where a minister and the taxpayer agree in writing that a question of law, fact, or mixed law and fact arising under the act should be determined by the Federal Court, the question shall be determined by the court, and so on. This section we are presently studying is intended to deal with a somewhat different situation.

Mr. Aiken: That is rule 75(c).

Mr. Gray: However, as I say, I can see the hon. member's point of view, and if he would let us see his wording, and the committee consents to standing the clause for a period, we are prepared to give the matter some further thought.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned the point I am going to raise to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and he was kind enough to yield me the right of way. I should like to raise this question with the minister and his officials so they will consider it along with the matters raised by my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka.

My point can be briefly expressed. Canada is a very large country and to notify a taxpayer in, say, Halifax that he has the same problem as a taxpayer in Midland or in Edmonton might work some injustice. These people could be stuck with journeying to courts situated far away from their own territory in order to join in a common front against the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue.

I have read section 174 on three or four different occasions, and it does seem to me that the powers being given are a little too broad in that no regard is had to the fact that a taxpayer might be put to more expense than a case was worth. For example, a taxpayer might be put in a position where he has to say he will not go to Toronto to argue a case since it will cost him $500 to do so, whereas the point at issue could be settled for, say, $300. This might sound like a very technical objection, but I think it is a valid one given the wide geographical spread of Canada.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to have the minister consider this amendment. I should like him to consider this additional matter at the same time. He pointed out that we have just passed section 173 which deals with doing things by consent. He said this provision would cover the situation to which I was referring. But what I am trying to prevent is this. I have no objection to the provisions in section 173 where the parties agree that there shall be an appeal presented, but I do object to a situation where the parties say they will not agree and then the minister comes along and says they will have to go to court anyway because they are going to be added under section 174. This is rule 75(c) of the House of Commons rules being repeated in the Income Tax Act. The minister is saying that he will give the taxpayers one chance to come in by consent, and that if they do not come in under section 173 he will bring them in under section 174. I do not generally agree with rule 75(c), and I do not agree with its being repeated in this bill.

I also do not know why, if the minister so desired and he had a number of cases of a similar type, the minister could not submit one of the cases as a model case to the court for the court's opinion. But regardless of the other things that he should or should not do, I object to that part of section 174 under which taxpayers can be told that, whether they like to join in proceedings or not they will be forced to do so, and that in order to escape it they would have to apply to the court.

Perhaps my amendment is not framed exactly in the wording the minister would like, but I want to take the compulsory aspect out of this provision and make it easier for the taxpayer who does not want to be a party to litigation. Surely, there is no principle of law—that I know of anyway—under which a person can be forced to go to court when he does not want to do so. If there is some other way that the same end can be achieved, then I would be happy to hear about it. I am happy to allow the section to stand for the time being, and incidentally I hope that if we have some answer to this point before too long we will be able to put the sections through.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I hope to make some further comment in a definitive way on this matter shortly, if not before the supper adjournment then after supper.

The Chairman: Shall subclause 174 stand?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, there is one other problem before standing the whole clause and it is this. In subclause (5) of section 174 I understand there is a "not" in the original draft that should not be there. It is at line 15 on page 448. Unless I have read it wrongly, I understand that the word "not" should not be there. It was noted in the Canadian Bar Association's presentation that they believed this "not" was a misprint. I did want to draw that to the attention of the minister now before finally dealing with this clause.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: I would like to thank the hon. member for drawing this to our attention. When we are ready to come back to his earlier point we will also attempt to dispose of that one.

The Chairman: Section 174 shall stand.

Clause 1, section 174 stands.

Clause 1, sections 175 and 176 agreed to.

On Clause 1—Section 177: Disposal of appeal.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, section 177 is former section 100(5) modified. I should like to ask the minister what the modification is. I do not have a cross reference. If the modification is not of substance then I have no objection, but I should like to have some clarification concerning what change has been made here.

Mr. Gray: I do not know if my comment will meet the point of the hon. member, but I am advised that this section concerning disposition of appeals is similar to present section 100(5).

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, the answer is very simple. I do not want to appear to be butting in, but is it not a fact that the modification is in respect of a changing of numbers. The figure 180 is being exchanged for something else. This was the explanation given to me of the meaning of the modification in many instances.

Mr. Gray: I am advised that the words "other than an appeal to which section 180 applies" is not in the original section and that these words have been added.

Clause 1, section 177 agreed to.

On clause 1—section 178: Court may order payment of tax, etc.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering why in section 178 (2) the amount is $2,500. Is there a particular cut-off area with regard to the amount? Why is there an arbitrary amount of $2,500 in this clause?

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anything new here; the point was raised before. Indeed this has already been amended in the Income Tax Act with respect to the Tax Review Board.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Right.

Mr. Béchard: The committee will recall that amount was raised from $1,000 or $1,500 to $2,500 following a suggestion made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Goode).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The piece of paper containing the amendment was handed to him.

Mr. Béchard: No, it was following a suggestion by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta and in the tax appeal board legislation this amount of $1,000 or $1,500—I do not remember exactly—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): $1,000.

Mr. Béchard: —was raised to $2,500 and the Crown has to pay the costs win or lose.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I suggest that a very fine point was raised concerning whether it was within the authority of the minister to put forward such a proposal, under the Federal Court Act, and I have not received a very satisfactory answer to that question. As you recall, Mr. Chairman, I used this particular clause as the reference in respect of a point I was making concerning discretion as to cost. My argument was turned down because it might impose another charge on the Crown. The Chairman, when comparing it with this section, found that somehow or other a mandatory direction as in this clause under discussion was not of the same category. I followed his argument. I did not share his reasons and I do not share his opinion. I am particularly conversant with this thing. The hon. member for Bonaventure is quite correct when he states that this was changed in the Justice Committee at the time the tax review board was under consideration. However, a serious point of procedure was involved and we were considering this very item. I hope on an appropriate occasion I can come back to the Chair to get what I consider to be a more logical decision.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer, but I am not convinced there should be a sum in here at all. If the minister should make a mistake, bring someone in for appeal and then find that the individual wins the case, why should an arbitrary figure of $2,500 apply. The case might involve $5,000. Probably the lawyers have some particular reason for an arbitrary amount, but I do not understand why an amount has to be placed in here at all. If the government is wrong it should pay the expenses of the case.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I understand as well as the hon. member that it was not necessary to mention this amount of $2,500 and cases could involve $100 million or $200 million, but the government decided to mention an amount and set it as $2,500.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In any case.

Mr. Béchard In any case, yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Win or lose.

Mr. Béchard: As I said a while ago, whether the taxpayer wins or loses, the Crown has to pay the costs.

[English]

Clause 1, sections 178 and 179 agreed to.

On clause 1—section 180: Appeals to Federal Court of Appeal.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I see there is a salutary change in some of the philosophy of giving notice to taxpayers. Section 180 is entirely new. It constitutes a departure. There had been a rather regrettable practice in the past in respect of the time of the filing of a notice. It was to run from the moment of the issuance of a document here in Ottawa, whether the taxpayer lived in Lillooet, British Columbia or in Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland. Now, I see a much better practice has been adopted and the time shall run from the receipt of a registered notice by mail, which will get there in due course, and there will be evidence of service. I think this is perfectly alright. Even if they do not go to double registered mail, the registered mail in the ordinary course of delivery would be within so many days. This is much better, but may I ask the reason for the distinction between (a) and (b).

• (4:40 p.m.)

In (a) there is mailing by registered mail of a notice to a party who institutes an appeal. Under (b) it is mailing of notice to the registered Canadian charitable organization or registered amateur athletic association under subsection 168(1), and there is a period of 10 days. Why should the particular association be precluded from the protection of service by registered mail as compared with another taxpayer? It seems to me that a charity or an athletic association should be entitled to the same protection as is any other organization or any other taxpayer. To allow a judge of the court of appeal to vary the time because of certain circumstances may simply mean that the organization or person in question will have to put out an extra $250 or perhaps $400 to pay for counsel to appear before a judge of a court of appeal on an extempore application for an order for leave or an order to extend the time, either for filing the appeal or for doing whatever is necessary.

It is very nice to give this relief, but it must be realized that great expense is involved for any organization which may be at the other end of the country. It seems to me that it would have been quite simple under (b) to maintain the mailing of the notice by registered mail to the registered Canadian charitable organization or amateur athletic association.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member for Edmonton West should refer to section 168(1) where there is a specific mention as to "registered mail".

[English]

—may by registered mail.

[Translation]

There is no more discrimination against this association than against other taxpayers since section 180(1)(b) provides that:

from the mailing of notice to the registered Canadian charitable organization or registered Canadian amateur athletic association under subsection 168(1)—

Subsection 168(1) reads as follows:

[English]

—the minister may by registered mail give notice to the registered Canadian charitable organization—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will accept the explanation given by the hon. member. However, I find, as has been pointed out time and time again in a number of briefs, that this idea of cross reference rather than specific mention does lead people astray, as I was led astray here. It is simple to say that this is a notice that is required under section 168(1), and I accept that, but strangely enough we are dealing with a section which tells us we are to file an appeal within 10 days by registered mail. What has unfortunately led us astray is a complete reliance on the cross reference. I apologize if I was just an ordinary citizen here and not the most prescient of lawyers, but you can see where this type of drafting leads us.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add just a few words to say that in view of the thickness of this bill, it was to avoid adding additional pages to it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but this makes the bill more confusing.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: I was about to rise to speak to subsection (2) with a slightly different complaint. The complaint is that serving anybody a notice by registered mail and expecting anyone to take legal action within 10 days is completely unreasonable. The minister is given 30 days under section 168 (2) (f) and he has 30 days from the day he has mailed the notice. Having taken part in a good many situations of this kind, not all of them tax cases but appeals of different kinds, I feel that to have 10 days from the day notice is given by the minister in which to get an appeal filed is completely unreasonable. For example, notice can be mailed on a Monday or Tuesday to a point some distance away from Ottawa, and the notice may not reach the party concerned before four or five days at the very best, even when it is sent by registered mail. If it is either mailed or comes in on the weekend, you have lost the weekend. If a person happens to be away when the notice arrives, more time is lost. I do not know of any law in the world that requires a person to stay home waiting for the Minister of National Revenue to mail him a notice to which he has to respond in two or three days after the minister may have taken a year to reply.

I know there is a saving clause, and this can be brought forward, that a person may apply to a court of appeal or a judge thereof for further time, but for the average citizen it is a costly and time consuming procedure. A person may not have a lawyer available to file a notice of appeal when he is suddenly faced with a decision, and 10 days will have gone by. This is almost impossible. Even in the ordinary courts of most of the provinces in this country, you have 10 days from the day on which a summons or other document is served on you to put in an appearance in court, and that is 10 days after it is proven that the document has come into your hands. That 10 days is altogether too short a period, even in ordinary litigation.

I think it is absolutely unreasonable to expect anyone to file a notice of appeal in a federal court within 10 days after the minister has mailed a notice here in Ottawa. I would say that most of the time it would be an absolute physical impossibility. I protest against this strongly. I cannot see any reason for cutting the time so short. What difference is it going to make? Give the public a break and let them have 30 days in which to file their appeals. What difference is it going to make to the minister or to anybody else, if he has taken six months or a year to come to his decision? Now, he is going to turn around and require that the next day the person concerned must rush into court. I object to this time period. I would like to hear whether or not someone concurs in my belief.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, having listened to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), I have to agree with him that the time period is too short. However, I must tell the hon. member, since we might run short of time, that we could undertake to study his suggestion along with the other amendments he has submitted earlier today.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: That would be quite satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Section 180 will stand. The committee will now proceed to the consideration of Part XV. The first section under Part XV is section 220. Shall section 220 carry?

On clause 1—Section 220: Minister's duty.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, since Part XV covers a fair number of sections are we to be given leeway to make comments at the start which might be applicable to all sections, or are we to wait until the particular sections come up on which we wish to make specific comments?

The Chairman: The Chair suggests, and I think the committee will agree, that we should follow the practice established in the committee heretofore, so that general remarks might be made on all of Part XV. Is that the wish of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: The point I want to raise deals with the power given to the government under section 239(2), at the top of page 550, which reads:

> Every person who is charged with an offence described by subsection (1) may, at the election of the Attorney General of Canada, be prosecuted upon indictment and, if convicted, is, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years and not less than 2 months.

This gives the government rather awesome power in that it can pick and choose as to whether those who are delinquent in the payment of taxes are going to suffer jail penalties in addition to fines. I think everybody in this chamber is well aware of the fairly recent case concerning two Canadians, one of whom was treated in such a way that he did face a jail sentence, and the other in such a way that he faced only a fine. Both these gentlemen were very prominent in Canadian life. One has died since the charge against him was laid, and that disposes of his case except in so far as it relates to his estate.

I realize that this provision has been in the law for some time, but that should not prevent us from asking whether it is a power that any government or any minister of the Crown should enjoy. If the minister decides on a certain procedure, then the person involved, if convicted, goes to jail. I wonder if the parliamentary secretaries who are now carrying the burden of the debate can reply to this fundamental point?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, may I continue with this point to which reference has been made? I, for one, refuse to accept any suggestion in any act that it is a minister of the Crown who is to determine that somebody is to go to jail, without the option of a fine. Under section 239(2) every person who is charged with an offence described by subsection (1):

> —may, at the election of the Attorney General of Canada, be prosecuted upon indictment and, if convicted, is, in addition to any penalty otherwise provided, liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years and not less than 2 months.

It is unfortunate that the Minister of National Revenue is not present. I would have liked to have had a minister of the Crown, responsible for the administration of the act, explain why this provision, which I know has been in the act for a long time, should continue to appear in it. I think it is a most reprehensible principle that a minister of the Crown should have the right to determine that a man shall go to jail. This is something for a court to determine.

Under section 239(1) if a case is proceeded with by way of summary conviction, there is provision for the alternative of a fine "of not less than 25 per cent and not more than double the amount of the tax that was sought to be evaded," or both the fine as described and imprisonment "for a term not exceeding 2 years." In this instance, it is a properly constituted court that determines whether a man is to go to jail or merely be fined. Yet by proceeding by way of indictment, if convicted a man is liable to a jail sentence, and this on the decision of a political individual, the Attorney General of Canada, or of some faceless bureaucrat behind him who does not have to answer for his decision. This may be the Deputy Minister or the Director of Prosecutions, who does not have to answer for his decision or recommendation to proceed by way of indictment, and the facts being what they are, if the taxpayer either pleads guilty or is convicted, and I am not trying to exculpate him at all, he must go to jail. True enough, he can be fined; but he must go to jail.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: That is barbaric.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Who is the one who decides to play such ducks and drakes and why, Mr. Chairman? Is there some pecuniary yardstick that is applied? The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, my colleague, referred to a recent case. The amount was large; but I can honestly tell you that a few years ago out in my part of the country a number of taxpayers were involved in an equally blatant and apparent fraud. I am not prejudging the Toronto case. Let us say that there is an alleged fraud. Nevertheless, in the case to which I refer, shortly after the proceedings started the defendants pleaded guilty. It was all arranged, it seemed. The court affixed a penalty, pursuant to what is now section 239(1), and it cost the parties dearly for their years of syphoning off profits during a building boom. Actually, one firm almost went into bankruptcy, because the penalty cleaned them out. There had been some skimming off, but nobody went to jail, Mr. Chairman. There was no proceeding by way of indictment. And why was there not, Mr. Chairman? Was the reason religion, or was the reason political persuasion. Is it by reason of the status in the community of the individuals that the decision is made one way or the other, or is it made by reason of the fact that somebody might be a political force and might be friendly to the government?

Let met read section 239(1)(d), the basket clause:

(d) wilfully, in any manner, evade or attempted to evade, compliance with this Act or payment of taxes imposed by this Act, . . .

It is an offence under section 239(1)(d) to fail to file a return when requested. Failure to file is caught by that basket clause. It is as such a failure to comply with this act. I have no quarrel with the offence being subject to summary conviction. It is up to the magistrate to judge in any particular case. I know of many instances where an individual refused to file an income tax return after being requested to do so. Section 235 now says that every person who has failed to make a return as and when reqired by regulation under subsection 215(4), by regulation under section 221, and so on, is liable to a penalty. This is not governed entirely by statute. This matter comes under regulations that are passed by the governor in council under the authority of section 221 of this act.

An hon. Member: But the matter is scrutinized.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not object to the fact that there is an offence. That particular offence is caught up by the basket clause. A good many other offences are created under this act in cases where you do not comply with a requirement of the act or of the regulations. Those offences may merit summary conviction. I accept that. Yet, if the Attorney General of Canada shall decide otherwise, and he has only the good Lord to answer to under this act, he can proceed against the taxpayer by way of indictment. It is he who decides; the taxpayer may have no defence. After all, you either file an income tax return or you do not. There is no way of getting around that. Whether or not you should pay tax in a stated amount may be a matter of honest dispute; but your failure to file a return is a fact and, so, one is guilty of failing to file a return and proceedings may be by way of indictment. Very likely they would not be, but instituting them is within the power of the minister. A conviction means a minimum of two months in jail.

You know, this is arbitrary power. It is only the court that should determine whether a person shall go to jail; but this discretion is not given to the court. If the court of first instance awards too lengthy a jail term, the taxpayer has the right to appeal, as a common thief would, as a bank robber would or as any other criminal would. Yet, under section 239(2) of the Income Tax Act, he must go to jail. Mr. Chairman, that should not be. I repeat, that should not be. Section 239(2) should be stricken from this act. If the penalties are not great enough under section 239(1) to take into account the higher level that is provided for in section 239(2), then let us amend section 239(1). But, for goodness sake, let a court of law decide whether a man goes to jail or not, and not the minister or one of his faceless individuals. I do not mean that in any derogatory sense, but they are not identifiable. There is none amongst them who must answer for his actions.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I misled the House. I referred to the fact that at the end of the indictment procedure the person convicted might go to jail for a day or a number of hours. As a matter of fact it is set forth very clearly that it is not less than two months. I apologize for my inadvertence.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 40 to inform the House that questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Selkirk—The Canadian Economy; the hon. member for Winnipeg North—Manpower—Availability of Jobs in Thompson and Sudbury; the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby—Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise the same point. Previously in the debate on this bill, the question was raised about double jeopardy for people who may be considered by the tax department not to have paid their tax or filed their return. The penalty is additional tax under a previous section which we have already discussed. The second penalty under Section 239 is a fine of not less than 25 per cent and not more than double the amount of tax that was sought to be evaded. Finally, we have Section 239(2) which provides a jail sentence without the option of a fine.

It seems to me that this subsection is unreasonable and in favour of tax administration. Among other things, we have been trying to give the taxpayer a reasonable break as against the all powerful Income Tax Act. There is no doubt in the world that the procedures and penalties under this act are greater than under almost any other federal legislation. You can prove the mailing of a notice from the department by affidavit evidence given in court saying that the minister has sent out a notice. That is absolute evidence that the notice was sent out without anybody appearing to say so. I think Section 239(2) is not only overpowering against the citizen, but it leaves a political tool in the hands of the government in a case where such a penalty was never intended. We have here the option for the Attorney General of Canada to decide whether to proceed against an accused person by way of summary conviction. This would give the provincial judge the right to determine the sentence, whether it be fine or jail, depending upon how he sees the circumstances, and would give the right to the minister to make that decision. We feel this is wrong.

It is easy for inspectors and investigators going through the taxpayer's papers to talk to the taxpayer and other people and come to the conclusion that perhaps this person has fraudulently misrepresented his case and tried to deprive the government of taxes. It is absolutely no part of normal justice in this country that the prosecution shall prejudge how the case shall be disposed of by the courts, but that is what this particular section allows. It leaves this tool in the hands of the government. They may say to a taxpayer that they are going to proceed by way of indictment, and they may say to the judge that the taxpayer has to go to jail for two months. It does not leave the judge the option of hearing the defendant's case. Surely, this is fundamental justice, that the defendant may bring forward certain facts for the court's consideration in determining sentence. In this case when the individual has been found guilty there is no option for the judge to decide to impose a fine. There is no alternative but to send the accused to jail or to acquit him.

This section, first of all, takes away the right of the courts to determine sentence and, second, takes away the right of individuals to place a case before the courts in mitigation of sentence. This gives a third kick at the cat, a third penalty that the Department of National Revenue can impose upon the taxpayer. This is the final and most severe, that he can be sent to jail.

As I said earlier, there is always the other possibility, that we are placing in the hands of the government, of the Attorney General, and of the Attorney General's officers a very powerful instrument and that is the right to say to this individual, "We are only going to prosecute you under summary conviction and you may be fined", or to say to him "We are going to ask for procedure by indictment and you may go to jail". It is too powerful a tool in a tax situation. It is open to abuse at a lower level within the department because in a lot of cases I presume that the Attorney General does not make the decision. This section leaves it open to the investigator or someone above him to make this decision and to hold out a threat of some sort against the accused. If he does not squawk too hard, if he pays his penalty and admits everything the case will not proceed by way of indictment.

[Mr. Aiken.]

While this is not likely to happen, it is not likely that any attorney general would take such a position, the power does exist and it is the most dangerous power open to the government, the power to discriminate between one citizen and another. There may be reasons for which a certain individual who is friendly to the government, who has been a regular contributor out of the money he has saved from taxes, who has been a helper of the government—and I am not referring now to any particular government—might be dealt with more lightly than another person who did not happen to be known to the government or to the attorney-general.

While we do not have much complaint about the remainder of this administrative and enforcement portion of the bill, we feel this is the appropriate point for a reconsideration of 239(2). It is no use bringing the matter up a year from now or two years from now by way of a private member's bill. The time to do it is now, while we are considering a new piece of tax legislation. I, therefore, suggest there should be a reasonable modification of this subsection before we proceed with the remainder of the sections.

Mr. McCleave: While the ministry is considering the points my hon. friend has raised, I should like to inquire about two matters which were put forward by the Canadian Bar Association in its brief dated August 20, 1971. The first concerns section 231(2). The Bar Association made this point:

> We suggest there is no need for an ex parte application as the minister already has the documents involved. The question is whether or not he should give them back within 120 days. Surely, the taxpayer should be able to present his views to the court as to why the documents should be returned, particularly where they can be photostated.

The second point arises out of something which appears later in that particular section, in 231(8). The Bar Association made the point:

> The appointment of the hearing officer by the tax review board is a welcome change if the hearing officer is someone other than a member of the Department of National Revenue. If members of the department are still to be appointed they might as well be appointed by the minister in the first place.

I would ask whoever is to reply whether it is the intention of the government to appoint someone other than a member of the Department of National Revenue in connection with the provisions of 231(8).

Mr. Gray: With regard to the second point the hon. member raised, it is my understanding the intention would be to appoint someone other than an official in the category he mentioned.

With respect to the first point, I should like to have it taken under advisement. We shall attempt to make some further response, possibly later this evening, at which time we would also be in a better position to respond to the argument put forward by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. Perhaps those subsections could be allowed to stand as well.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. McCleave: I think that really means we should stand 231 and 239.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Somehow or other we started off on a different tack by saying we could discuss generally, on 220, anything from 220 to 247. I think it is quite improper to keep prodding the committee by saying "Shall section 220 pass?" It seems to me it should be open. We should complete the general discussion and then pick up the items. Or else we should proceed to discuss section 220 and stay away from general discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we government members are the ones who asked you to call subsection 220. We accept the argument put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West that the member in the Chair at the outset of the sitting on Bill C-259 heard the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was not my suggestion.

Mr. Clermont: —I believe it was rather the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) who suggested that Part XV be discussed as a whole, but the Chairman did not give us any instructions as to the order in which the subsections should be called.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: In answer to the hon. member, it was understood that each subsection would be dealt in a general way, then passed separately.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): At the end.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: At the end.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Moreover, Mr. Chairman, we have questions to ask the minister, especially on the points raised by my colleague and myself about subsection 239 and again about subsection 231.

We may find others also. For pity's sake, let us limit ourselves to the general discussion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there agreement on the part of the committee?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, having heard the case so ably stated by the three opposition members, that is the hon. members for Parry Sound-Muskoka, Halifax-East Hants and Edmonton West (Messrs. Aiken, McCleave and Lambert), concerning section 239(2), I agree with what they said about the powers granted ministers of the Crown to imprison or not Mr. So-and-so, and I believe that the committee members, and especially the hon. member for Edmonton West and the two members of the official opposition who participated in the debate, are well aware of the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) is a compassionate person and know that he would not impose such a sanction on a fellow-citizen.

As we are discussing the whole of Part XV and have stood some sections in order to study them after supper, I believe that by then we shall have found the necessary answers. In fact, we have them already. No doubt we could also stand section 239(2) for later discussion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I thank the parliamentary secretary for his remarks. I am sure that the bill will have improved following the introduction of an amendment by the government, after supper.

Having disposed of this matter for the time being, perhaps I might again point out that section 231(15) brings about something new and I believe that it improves the legislation. At page 542 of this bill, one can read the following:

Rights of person whose affairs are investigated.

In the past, it was known that the officials of the Department of National Revenue could sequester the property of an individual and, in his absence, conduct an inquiry. But today, we have a new provision which, I think, amounts to an improvement. And I resume the quotation:

Any person whose affairs are investigated in the course of an inquiry authorized under subsection (7) is entitled to be present and to be represented by counsel—

. . . or his agent.

We can derive a certain degree of satisfaction from this. I do not include myself with those who have consistently congratulated the government, during this debate, for the changes made in the Act, but I thank the government for this improvement.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 220 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suppose I must rise or the Deputy Chairman will operate on the piston principle that a section must pass or must not pass.

Mr. Faulkner: Try voting on it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member says—I do not know whether he is still a parliamentary secretary—we should try voting on it. As a lawyer, I wish he would turn his undoubted talents to dealing with the difficulties in this law.

Mr. Murphy: He is not a lawyer.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): So I am told he is not a lawyer.

Mr. Faulkner: That is a band of people I would never be associated with.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then, I will take it all back; but I must say that the hon. member's constituents are thereby the losers. I think I can say that in regard to matters of this kind.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is a bachelor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But not of laws. When his constituents complain to him about some of the difficulties in this law, which undoubtedly there will be, I trust he will derive a great deal of satisfaction from saying, "Well, I said nothing on the bill; I knew all these things". The hon. member has been the recipient, as I have, of briefs submitted by the Canadian Bar Association and analyses of this legislation by any one or more of half a dozen of the leading chartered accountants establishments in this country. He too has had letters almost without limit from constituents and others drawing his attention to this or that particular difficulty. But all this seems to have gone for nought.

I suppose the hon. member feels that all of these representation shad nothing to do with the content of Bill C-259 because they were made following the publication of the bill. I am not aware that many of the amendments were not already in the pipeline, so to speak, within the administration be it of the Department of Justice, the legal section of the Department of Finance or the legal section of the Department of National Revenue.

The input by hon. gentlemen in regard to the representations made on Bill C-259 is not particularly manifest. At least one can say that those of us of the opposition who have paid particular attention to these sections have been putting before the government as forcefully as we can, with our limited talents—

Mr. Langlois: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I suggest to the hon. member for Chicoutimi that he will sprain his rather ample wrist and shoulder, not in patting his desk but in patting himself on the back for being so assiduous in calling "Carried" and also in failing to recognize, as we do, the limitation of our talents when they are applied to an examination of the income tax law. This is particularly so since the hon. gentleman was not one of those who availed himself of the opportunity of attending sessions held by the Institute of Chartered Accountants which were a great help to those who did attend. How can anyone who failed to attend those sessions, and who does not have much knowledge of what appears between the covers of this massive volume, insist that sections be carried? It is merely rote, an attempt to put a rubber-stamp on those matters that one must understand.

I should like to go back to the point I raised prior to section 245 strictly with regard to administration and enforcement, and again with particular reference to section 221 which authorizes the Governor in Council to make recommendations. I wonder how many mambers know the volume of regulations made under the Income Tax Act. I am sure there are few, if any, present in this chamber who have any idea of the thick volume, printed on fine paper, containing various regulations. I am rather surprised that I am urged by members on both sides of the House to pass this or that section rather hurriedly so as to make progress. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is a great one to talk about progress, but he has not the slightest idea not only of what is in this text but of the regulations. For the benefit of the hon. member for Chicoutimi, let me go to section 235 which provides as follows:

> Every person who has failed to make a return as and when required by regulation under section 215(4)—

And so on. This particular text in the bill does not tell hon. members what return shall be filed; rather, it is defined by regulation that the Governor in Council has passed what heretofore need not necessarily be published.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois: That is nothing new.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Just because one law has transgressed on the rights of others is no reason all laws should do it.

Mr. Langlois: Come on. You went through this in 1961 and 1962.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And we made changes. The hon. member can say we have been through this, but the volume has increased. If the hon. member had followed my speeches in the opposition since 1963 when I left the chair, he would know how often I have spoken against sweeping regulations. I put it to the hon. member that it takes a lot of time to study the regulations and laws. However, by the time I had had experience with the Department of National Revenue I became cognizant of all this. But one speaks up, and I hope we are able to make some progress. I am really concerned. It may be that some time when the government gets around to it we will have the joint committee on statutory instruments which may be in a position to consider the regulations, provided they are not exempt under the act relating to statutory instruments and provided they are not exempt from passing through the fine screen of that committee.

Also, that committee cannot act until there is a change in the rules of the House concerning what is meant by an affirmative resolution, what is meant by a negative resolution and how it shall be handled. There is no provision in our House rules for that. So for the moment this question is for consideration some time in the indefinite future. The intentions are good, but time and time again the road to hades has been paved with good intentions. I suppose this is one of the worst clichés, but it is factual. In any event, let us look at section 221. It provides:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations
> (a) prescribing anything that, by this act, is to be prescribed—

That is as illuminating as the snow clouds that have hung over Ottawa today. The section continues:

> —or is to be determined or regulated by regulation.

That leads us precisely nowhere. They can make regulations for something that has been regulated by regulation. I suppose there are some sections which say the minister "may by regulation," or it may be that by regulation taxpayers will be required to file returns and therefore the minister is authorized to make this regulation. That might be the explanation of this section. The next part I believe is quite right:

> (b) prescribing the evidence required to establish facts relevant to assessments under this act,

I think that is so, provided it is published and within the knowledge of the taxpayer. The next paragraph provides:

(c) to facilitate the assessment of tax where deductions or exemptions of a taxpayer have changed in a taxation year,

I agree with that. Then we have this paragraph:

(d) requiring any class of persons to make information returns respecting any class of information required in connection with assessments under this act,

That one becomes a little more difficult. In any event, we come again to what I consider to be the bugbear. It is something that is built in and which gives a discretion to the minister and the Governor in Council and allows no review. It will be very interesting to hear the argument of ministers and the reaction of the Attorney General of Canada to paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 221 which reads:

(j) generally to carry out the purposes and provisions of this act.

Who has the discretion to determine whether a regulation generally is to carry out the purposes and provisions of this act? If a regulation were to be challenged in the Federal Court appeal section, I put it to the hon. gentleman that the court would refuse to adjudicate because it will not substitute, as a general rule, its discretion for that of the government or of an official. This is precisely one of those instances where the greatest injustice can be done to a taxpayer. Remember, the taxpayer is not standing there almost naked, almost cold, ready to be plucked and sheared of everything he possesses; this is not the position of the taxpayer.

My colleague says that all these things have been done to him. They have, but that is not the position of the taxpayer. The taxpayer is an ordinary citizen of the country. He may be a corporation, an individual or a partnership. Whatever is the legal entity in existence, he is the taxpayer and he has rights: they are not all on one side. But here we have regulations "generally to carry out the purposes and provisions of this Act."

Fortunately, the government do not include in this act what they were attempting to do in an act which I believe dealt with sales finance companies. There is the famous provision in the regulations section authorizing the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the minister to make regulations generally which in the opinion of the minister would properly carry out the purposes and provisions of the act. I have seen it described elsewhere as "generally for the proper carrying out of the purposes and provisions of this Act." That just cannot be. A court must determine that matter. One cannot have that subjective opportunity built in authorizing, shall we say, the author of the regulations to judge whether they are correct or not.

As I have said, it would be very interesting to have the Attorney General of Canada appear before the committee on statutory instruments, when it next meets, to see whether he would insist that either he or his colleagues, whatever may be the political stripe of the administration, judge whether or not a regulation shall be generally to carry out the purposes and provisions of this act.

There are those who would say that once Parliament has granted the authority to a ministry to make regulations, that is an authority which cannot be removed by Parliament. This was argued at the time of the passage of the Statutory Instruments Act: it was said that Parliament did not have the power to revoke the authority to make regulations. Here we come to a real question of principle and I put it to you, Mr. Chairman, that this House and the other place, having passed a bill authorizing the making of regulations, can at any time, by proper action, amend, delete or revoke any such regulation. It has the right to alter that authority.

But on the side of the ministry there are those who insist that once the authority to make regulations has been given, it is gone and forever has been transferred from parliament to the administration. That is something that members of the House must never accept and never allow, even for reasons of expediency. It is much better to protect the right of individuals and of this House than to fall down in adoration of the false god of administrative or governmental efficiency.

I want to complete my remarks now, because after eight o'clock I want to discuss the particular matters raised in sections 239 and 232 and then we can proceed with sections 245 to 247, and if we have time I have suggested to the government House leader that we could proceed with section 248 which is a most voluminous interpretation section; it covers some 16 pages of text and might possibly provide a fair amount of progress.

Mr. Aiken: I have one question remaining on section 221 (2) which concerns me considerably. It reads:

No regulation made under this act has effect until it has been published in the Canada Gazette but, when so published, a regulation shall, if it so provides, be effective with reference to a period before it was published.

This afternoon and on previous days we have raised the problems of double jeopardy and heavy penalties in connection with offences under this act. But here is a situation where a regulation can be published in the Canada Gazette and shall be effective at a time before it was published. This indicates to me that one could be convicted in a court and sent to jail for two months, which is the minimum under the indictment section we have just finished discussing, for breaking a regulation which had not even been published. This seems to me to be a terrible provision in any act of the Parliament of Canada.

The second point is that the section seems unreasonable in itself—not just with regard to the penalty—unless the limitation is to the time at which the regulation is actually passed, because if this provision is taken at face value, with no limitation or exception, a regulation could be passed requiring a person to file a return of a certain type, in a certain manner or at a certain time, that regulation being effective two months before it was published. A person then could be in breach of the regulation without its having been in existence. So I think that subsections (1) and (2) of section 221 deserve very serious consideration, particularly in light of the other matters which the ministry has asked to stand for further consideration.

May I call it six o'clock. Mr. Chairman?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Before rising may I point out to the committee that the hon. member for Edmonton West mentioned that he would like to discuss.

after eight o'clock, section 248 which, as hon. members know, has been carried as amended.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: I apologize, Mr. Chairman, for my absent-mindedness. What section, did you say, has been carried?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I explained to the committee that the hon. member for Edmonton West wanted to discuss section 248. It so happens that section 248 has been amended and carried on November 10. There is no question of a debate; I merely wanted to inform the committee.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, if such is the case, there is nothing to add.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: With reference to the point of order, I think it was merely a suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that this would be the last section to be discussed in the event that we completed everything else prior to that time. We will see that he is so advised.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock, section 220 was being considered.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, it had been suggested this afternoon that sections 172, 174 and 180 be allowed to stand.

The government intends to introduce an amendment to section 172, but it is impossible for us to do it tonight in the two official languages.

As for section 174, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) has proposed an amendment and the government would also have an amendment to propose.

Regarding section 180, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka had pointed out that the period of ten days was too short; a minister will move an amendment to that section stating that this period be 30 days.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary having indicated that the government has two amendments to sections 174 and 180, I would be pleased to hear them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On sections 172 and 174.

Mr. Aiken: No, 174 and 180. Section 172 is to stand. I am satisfied with the amendment to section 180 which would extend the time from ten days to 30 days. I have not yet seen the intended amendment to section 174, but if it goes some way to meet the objection I raised this afternoon I would most certainly be happy to consider it.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. For mere procedural reasons, I think that the committee should stand consideration of section 220 to get back to sections 174 and 180.

[English]

Does the committee agree to stand section 220 at this time and revert to section 174?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause I, section 220, stands.

On clause I—section 174: Reference to Federal Court or Tax Review Board of common questions.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, the amendment the government will be moving in a few minutes in connection with section 180, page 451, is as follows:

That section 180 as set forth in clause 1 of the said Bill be amended by striking out line 15 on page 451 and substituting the following:

'Court within 30 days from'

The amendment the department would like to put before the House in connection with section 174, page 446, is as follows:

That section 174 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill—be amended by striking out lines 40 to 46 on page 446 and substituting the following:

'Reference to Federal Court or Tax Review Board of common questions

174. (1) Where the minister is of the opinion that a question of law, fact or mixed law and fact arising out of one and the same transaction or occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences is common to assessments in respect of two or more taxpayers, he may apply to the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court—Trial Division for a determination of the question.'

• (8:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister of Agriculture moves:

That section 174 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill—be amended by striking out lines 40 to 46 on page 446 and substituting the following:

'Reference to Federal Court or Tax Review Board of common questions

174. (1) Where the minister is of the opinion that a question of law, fact or mixed law and fact arising out of one and the same transaction or occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences is common to assessments in respect of two or more taxpayers, he may apply to the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court—Trial Division for a determination of the question.'

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we could go immediately to section 180. The amendment is clear and understandable and exactly meets the point I raised this afternoon. I think we should pass it immediately. I then should like to discuss further section 174.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand section 174 at this time and proceed with the amendment to section 180?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 1—section 180: Appeals to Federal Court of Appeal.

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister of Agriculture moves:

That section 180 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill be amended by striking out line 15 on page 451 and substituting the following:

'Court within 30 days from'

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Olson) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 180, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee wish to revert to section 174?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 1—section 174: Reference to Federal Court or Tax Review Board of common questions

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to section 174 carry?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the intricacies through which we have just gone. The point I want to make is similar to the one I made this afternoon. I am referring to the situation in which taxpayers who live in different parts of the country may be competing in the sense that they are involved with the Department of National Revenue. Those taxpayers may be facing certain problems. Despite the proposed amendment, the minister, under this section, could create considerable difficulty for those taxpayers especially if he were to ask, say, the taxpayer in Halifax to compete with the taxpayer in Hamilton, or the taxpayer in Hamilton to compete with the man in Vancouver.

The question that arises is, where do you hold your court, where do you take your witnesses and your lawyers, since the provinces have different rules in this regard? And what lawyers are you allowed to take? That is the point I thought I had argued with a reasonable amount of intelligence and diligence. I should like to hear from my learned friends opposite on this question.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) explained this section very clearly this afternoon and it deals with very specific cases. As to the fears entertained by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), who is asking where the cases will be heard, I would say that the Court will have to determine that.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: With all respect to my hon. friend, that is not a satisfactory answer. It is within the initiative of the minister to take the case wherever he wants to take it. If he wants to take it to the court in Vancouver, that would cause great difficulty for the person in Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto or Halifax. I asked that question because I hoped we could avoid this situation. I hoped the committee might contain within it a Solomon who could bring forward an answer that would solve the objection.

It is the option that probably is the worst feature of the section. The minister may be a very humane and sensible person and he may decide that he will not put taxpayers in the far corners of the country to the expense of travelling great distances. On the other hand, he might be a kind of obdurate bureaucrat who is full of self-importance and decide the matter in such a way as to have people flocking to one centre from the far reaches of the country.

I was hoping there might be a better answer than that to this problem because I do not think we should impose on taxpayers of the country immense financial burdens in this regard. It would not be fair to ask a man to spend $2,000 merely to fight a claim worth $100. I do not think anybody should be put to that sort of trial. That is why I asked the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I believe the hon. member seems to think that even if the minister is the Minister of National Revenue he is not a human being, who is aware of what happens in the life of any taxpayer. I believe that if this man, who as I say is a human being, he abuses his powers, it will be up to the Court to decide where the cases will be heard.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I think there is probably a simple answer to this problem and it is this. Many elections in Canada have been fought on the issue of whether the people who formed the government at the time were reasonable human beings. Be that as it may, perhaps five or six people will go down the drain in the process of having this question determined; that is why I raised this very serious matter. I do not think the government should put people in a country as vast as Canada through an exercise such as that.

I give the government credit for bringing in new provisions. If we are trying to help people solve their problems and not add to their expenses, I suggest we should not put them to great expense when they try to determine the pros and cons of any question under a very complex act such as the Income Tax Act and its regulations. I think everybody will agree with that, even though some may disagree with almost everything else I say.

Although some of these provisions are perfectly human, they also give the minister the power to compel people who live perhaps 1,000 miles apart to come to a certain court. If you consider the distance across Canada, there could be three such people. The minister can compel them to unite in some kind of common cause. If they do not want to come, they may send their lawyers. But they are to be bound by the decision that is handed down. That, I think, is wrong. There must be some way in which persons can disunite themselves, so to speak, and take their chances before the Federal Court in their own backyard. I think all we need is a simple amendment along that line.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants as an eminent disciple of Themis understands the situation, I am sure. For instance, if someone from Halifax which the hon. member knows very well is, let us say, separated from his wife and if the wife is living in Vancouver, or if a merchant sells his business in Halifax and takes up residence in Vancouver, I imagine that it will be necessary to determine if and where proceedings will take place. Obviously if the minister decides that this must be done at a certain place, this to the detriment of the two parties, the Court will be called upon to rule which is the best place. Someone simply has to decide where the proceedings will be held.

If this has happened previously, it could perhaps enlighten us more.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not know why the parliamentary should bring in divorce matters, but I can think of cases where that might arise. But let us take the case of salesmen who are provided with company cars and who in Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto or Halifax might be faced with a situation as to the amount to be considered as income under sections which we passed earlier. Is the minister to say to these salesmen that they will be marched into a federal court in Inuvik, Quebec City, or anywhere else in Canada? Are they to be marching there with their laywers? Lawyers cannot easily straddle provincial boundaries. A lawyer is supposed to know something of the law in his own province but unless he pays other Bar fees he is not supposed to know very much of the law in other provinces. Is everybody supposed to march into Quebec City, for example, to appear in a case? Surely it would be a simple thing to have an option for the taxpayer who is picked out by the minister to determine a court case, if the minister says that he does not want to try it on a particular day.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, it must be pointed out to the hon. member and to the members of the committee that the amendment reads as follows:

[English]

Where the minister is of the opinion that a question of law, fact or mixed law and fact arising out of one and the same transaction or occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences is common to assessments in respect of two or more taxpayers—

[Translation]

This is a specific case. In my opinion, the hon. member should not lose sight of the facts mentioned in the amendment, because it is thereby provided that it deals with the same transaction common to two individuals.

If I mentioned earlier a matter perhaps of great concern to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, it was quite by accident. I did not talk about divorce, but about separation, which is not the same thing altogether.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, to whose learning, as well as that of the hon. member who has just spoken, I pay a great deal of attention thinks that my point has been answered, the point being——that a question of law, fact or mixed law and fact arising out of one and the same transaction or occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences is common to assessments—

[Mr. Béchard.]

Our difficulty is that no matter what kind of assurance we are given from across the aisle—those assurances have been given in the past and will be given in the future—no court in the land is bound by the opinion expressed by a minister or parliamentary secretary in this place. Perhaps the most famous example occurred a number of years ago when Mr. St. Laurent made a statement here and the Supreme Court of Canada reversed it. I am sure the right hon. gentleman fully believed what he told the House of Commons.

Since the government has tried to make the point that we made earlier this evening, I will accept the assurance given by my colleague, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, and my friend the parliamentary secretary that the amendment covers exactly the point that I hoped to prove. In a couple of years from now I hope nobody will say that the member for Halifax-East Hants rose and said, "I told you so".

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I would go so far as to say that this amendment has answered completely the objections that I and my hon. friend from Halifax-East Hants raised. I think there are still some marginal problems, particularly the one he mentioned of people living a long distance from each other and having to be drawn into one court.

I feel, however, that the central point of the objection has been met by linking all the cases to one series of occurrences or one set of facts. What concerned me this afternoon was the question of people who had no connection with each other except for the accident of fact that they were in the same situation. I expressed my concern about the taxpayer who might find himself involved in an appeal related to some other appeal which had a whiff of scandal about it with which he did not wish to be associated. That point has been covered to some degree by the amendment, and while I am not entirely satisfied with it I appreciate that the effort has been made and I would be prepared to support it.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the hon. member for his willingness to consider the amendment which my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board has read as a way of dealing with the very important point that he raised. I am therefore very pleased to formally move at this time that section 174 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill be amended by striking out lines 40 to 46 on page 446 and substituting the following. Mr. Chairman, perhaps we can take it as read in the wording used by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I should bring to the attention of the minister that the amendment he proposes to move has already been moved by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Gray: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I was not able to be in the House at the beginning of this evening's session and I was advised by my colleagues that it had not been formally moved.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Olson) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 174 as amended carry?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, another point was raised in connection with subsection (5) (b) of section 174. I made the suggestion that the word "not" was there by mistake in line 15. I do not think we should pass the section until I am assured that it should be in there.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Béchard: I will read this in English because I have it in English. A question has been raised regarding the wording of subsection (5) of section 174. The suggestion is that the word "not" in paragraph (b) of that section is inappropriate. I hope the following explanation will persuade hon. members that the wording of the paragraph is correct and appropriate.

Subsection (1) of section 174 provides that the minister may make application to the Tax Review Board or to the Federal Court in certain circumstances. Subsection (2) of that section permits the minister to name the taxpayers he wishes to have bound by such order as the board or court may issue. When such an application is made, subsection (5) provides that the time in respect of any appeal periods of persons named in the minister's application ceases to run. When the order of the board or court is finally made, paragraph (a) of subsection (5) provides that the time for appeal periods starts to run again but only for those taxpayers who are named by the board or court as being bound by the order.

A provision is therefore required for those persons who are named in the minister's application and for whom, consequently, the time period for appeals was stayed, but who are not named in the order of the board or court. Paragraph (b) of subsection (5) is that provision. It provides for the giving of notice for persons who have not been named in the order of the board or court. When such notice is given to such person, the time for his appeal period begins to run again. Consequently, the word "not" in paragraph (b) of subsection (5) is correct and appropriate.

I hope the hon. member followed that explanation.

Mr. Aiken: If the parliamentary secretary and the government are satisfied, then so am I. I raised the question because it seemed to me that a person did not need to be served with a notice telling him he had not been named in an order. But I am happy to accept the explanation which is given and which appears to be satisfactory.

Clause 1, section 174, as amended, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 176 carry?

Mr. Aiken: I am not sure. We have already passed 176, I believe.

The Deputy Chairman: Then the committee will return to the examination of section 220.

On clause 1—section 220: Minister's duty.

Mr. Aiken: On a question of procedure, I presume Your Honour called section 220 so that we might proceed with our discussion of the block of sections running from 220 to 247. I should like to know at this point whether the government has reached any decision on what it intends to do with respect to subsection (2) of section 239 which was stood in order that further consideration could be given to it.

We think it is important that the court should have the final say in regard to sentence and that it should not be a matter for the Attorney General of Canada to decide. What has the minister to say about the absolute right of the Attorney General to proceed by way of indictment without the option of a fine being provided?

Mr. Gray: I am advised that this type of provision has been in the act since 1948. There is no indication that it has been used other than in a manner appropriate in the circumstances. This being the case, I respectfully submit that the circumstances which led to it being in the act in the first place continue to prevail at this time.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the minister used the phrase "appropriate in the circumstances". Appropriate in what circumstances? Does he mean appropriate in the circumstances of a government department trying to collect taxes, or appropriate in the eyes of a court, which would never be asked to rule in any case when it is dealing with a case by indictment because if a person is found guilty the court has no option but to sentence him to a jail term under the provisions of the subection. He cannot say "appropriate in the circumstances" when each one of us would have to decide how to proceed in such cases as Smythe in Toronto and Drapeau in Montreal. One is dead and the other is before the courts. I say the minister cannot use the phrase "appropriate in the circumstances" because what is involved is an absolute judgment.

Courts are either faced with a summary conviction procedure and if they find the accused guilty they carry out the law as they find it in the act, or if it is an indictment procedure and they find the accused guilty they have no option but to impose a prison sentence plus a fine. I think the minister is treating us ill when he says it is appropriate in the circumstances. It is a judgment matter and that is what we are trying to get away from in this chamber.

We are trying to pass a new, so-called tax reform measure under which the Attorney General of Canada can be faced with an awful decision. I think it must be awful for a man to decide whether he will prosecute somebody for tax evasion to the point where the man pays a fine and may have an option of going to jail, or to proceed by indictment and, by God, if you are found guilty the judge will send you to jail.

For the Minister of National Revenue, one of the few for whom I have admiration because he buckles down to considering the problems we send to him, to say "in appropriate circumstances" beggars the intelligence of the House of Commons and I hope he can do better than that on the second round.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I will yield the floor to the minister if he wishes to answer at this time. If not, I wish to make a few remarks on section 239(2). I am wondering how there can be equality under the law in view of the differing treatment given individual tax evaders and large corporations. Obviously it is impossible to punish a corporation by putting it in jail, yet an individual taxpayer who may be guilty of no great offence against the state is in double jeopardy. Not only is he subject to what may be double or triple penalties under the act, but at almost the whim of the Attorney General of Canada he can be indicted and put in jail.

I could name cases involving millions of dollars where large corporations got off scot-free or made retroactive tax payments—and I shall have something to say about making tax laws retroactive when we come to section 221. Surely the purpose of reforming our tax laws is to make them equitable. An individual in breach of the tax laws is almost persecuted, not prosecuted. I should like to hear from the minister how the law can be equitable when corporations and individuals who similarly breach the regulations or the act are treated differently.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, in the circumstances outlined by the hon. member I think there would very likely be evidence that would lead to individual officers or employees of the corporation being charged. Therefore, the problem he refers to is not so likely to occur as he thinks may be the case.

Mr. Bigg: That may be half an answer, but as we well know senior members of corporations very rarely are held personally responsible for the misdemeanours of the corporation as such. It is very easy for them to claim that they were away on leave when the books were kept or the returns were made. On the other hand, an individual taxpayer does not have this professional protection or ability to fight. He is the one who is faced with what I have referred to as double jeopardy. A loophole still exists in the law since it is impossible to put in jail a corporation and all the members jointly responsible for tax evasion.

In the case of multinational corporations it is impossible to round up the people concerned since they are not subject to our law, certainly not subject to our criminal law. The only way of penalizing them is to impose an enormous fine. In some cases this might mean putting the corporation concerned out of business. Be that as it may, they would not lose their personal liberty.

My personal view—and I have had experience of the law—is that the only kind of law that is any good in a country like this is that which treats us all equally. As I say, I see no equity in a law that makes an individual subject to double or triple jeopardy whereas some other outfit that hides behind legal jargon is able to escape entirely its responsibility and thwart our properly thought-out and administered revenue laws. I am still not satisfied with the answer.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon I raised this particular problem. Since one is sometimes asked what one would do to solve problems one raises, might I be permitted to give the Minister of National Revenue, his officials and parliamentary secretary an opportunity to consider this suggestion. In the case of certain offences, where an accused wishes to see the kind of evidence that is brought against him he is allowed to do so by way of preliminary hearing before a magistrate. That official then decides whether the evidence is sufficient to send the accused to a higher court for trial. On the other hand, there are cases where the accused is given the option to proceed by way of summary conviction in a lower court. The advantage in being tried in a lower court is that the penalty that is usually imposed is much less severe than that imposed in the higher court for the same offence.

I suggest we can tackle this problem in one of two ways. Perhaps it is not capable of solution tonight. In any event, I think the government should study this proposal overnight, and I would also be interested in the views of any of my colleagues as to whether I am on the right track. I suggest that we extend the maximum under section 239 from two years to five years. Perhaps this remedy is not as palatable as my other suggestion, which is simply to give the accused the option of deciding whether he wishes to proceed by way of summary conviction or by way of indictment. If the latter, he runs the risk, if convicted in the higher court, of suffering an additional three years' sentence, though every other factor would remain the same.

I do not know whether that suggestion commends itself to the government, but at least it would not put the Attorney General of Canada in the position of having to decide what type of procedure he would use against particular individuals. The individual would be put in the position of deciding that he prefers one course or the other. Since I raised this problem initially, I thought I should try to come up with some kind of answer to it.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, we would certainly be pleased to take the suggestion made by the hon. member under advisement, and for that purpose I ask that this section stand.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I spoke at considerable length on this point. I heard the minister's reply just as I came back into the committee and I was astounded to hear him say, especially since he is a lawyer, that he accepts the principle that a public servant will determine whether a man goes to jail or not. The minister knows as well as I do that a mandatory penalty is attached to the indictment procedure. That can follow from any non-compliance with the act, pursuant to section 239 (1)(a), (b), (c) or (d). That includes the failure to file an income tax return on demand.

There is no way that the administration can justify that it must have the right—I emphasize this—to determine that a man shall go to jail. It is the courts that will send a man to jail. We have courts of law for that purpose. It is the judge who will decide, on the merits of the case—not the Attorney General, not the Deputy Attorney General or the director of prosecutions. None of those persons is in a position to determine that a man shall go to jail. Therefore, subsection (2) of section 239 must be wiped off the statute books.

The penalty can be increased, if it is so desired, under paragraph (g) of subsection (1). I prepared amendments. I have the amendments ready and I intend to move them so they will be before the committee. I want hon. members to determine and to vote on the question of whether they are prepared to have government officials or a minister of the Crown determine that a man shall go to jail, because that is the nub and essence of this problem.

An hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is in respect of income tax. So they broke the law! Ask the Attorney General of Canada if all people go to jail all the time for breaking the law. The emphasis is away from jail to pecuniary penalties. I ask the hon. member for Sarnia if he can justify that a minister of the Crown or members of the Department of Justice have the right to send a man to jail.

Mr. Jerome: They do not do that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Sudbury wants to get the facts. There is a mandatory jail sentence.

Mr. Jerome: Surely the hon. member will agree that whether or not that discretion in the section is exercised, if it is exercised in favour of indictable proceedings there must be a trial.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The point is that perhaps the fact cannot be denied. For instance, there may be no question about the failure to file an income tax return. It does not matter whether you should have paid $5,000 or $3,000 in income tax. Let the parliamentary secretary study the bill, particularly sections 239 and 235.

Mr. Jerome: You are presuming guilt before trial.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is a fact. The parliamentary secretary should know there are things which are factual and others which are not. If a demand has been made in the appropriate way by departmental officials to file an income tax return, and none has been filed, this is a fact. In Montreal today there is a summary conviction procedure outstanding for failure to file, and this carries a jail sentence if the judge so desires. However, if the Crown had proceeded by way of indictment there would be a minimum of two months and up to five years in jail without any choice. The judge has no other choice.

Mr. Jerome: The judge does have a choice.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Now we know you do not know the law.

Mr. Jerome: I do know the law. Are you saying the judge must convict?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The judge must convict.

Mr. Jerome: Guilt is assumed before trial! Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am telling the hon. member that if there has been a failure to file a return, no return is there—

Mr. Jerome: It has to be proven.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —and the man cannot produce any records to show he has filed—

Mr. Jerome: Then he is guilty.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is guilty. So he goes to jail if you proceed by way of indictment. That is what I want to eliminate. Why must we have the indictable procedure when there is a mandatory jail sentence of up to five years? Is that for someone to play ducks and drakes with the taxpayers? Why must the minister play ducks and drakes? I was parliamentary secretary to a Minister of National Revenue who would under no circumstances allow a proceeding by way of indictment. He said the law was repugnant. It was up for revision.

Why should the Attorney General of Canada have this power? It is not needed. All you have to do, if you want to increase the jail sentence which provincial judges may impose—and their jurisdiction has been increased—is raise it to five years on summary conviction.

I move:

That clause 1, subsection 239(1)(g) be amended (a) by deleting the words "two years" in line 39 at page 549 and substituting the words "five years" and (b) by deleting the whole of subsection (2) thereof and renumbering the following subsections accordingly.

Mr. Bigg: I second that motion.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. With this amendment the committee will find itself in a procedural difficulty in the sense that although all the sections in the group are before us, only section 220 has been put. Therefore I invite discussion and advice from hon. members concerning the procedure they wish to follow. Should the committee stand section 220, the basic section, and open discussion on section 239 on which I would put the amendment?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, my amendment is in the same category as the amendments advanced the other day by the Minister of National Revenue. At that time a number of amendments were stood and are waiting until the section is called. My amendment is in the same category.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I agree with the hon. member; his point is valid so long as he does not wish section 239 to be brought to a decision at this time. Shall section 220 carry?

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has just presented an amendment and his colleague from Nova Scotia has presented one. I said, in response to his colleague's request that the government give consideration to the points he raised that the matter would be taken under advisement. I said that the hon. member, quite properly, made similar points before the supper hour and has now added to them. Now he has moved an amendment. In fairness to his colleague I suggest we should deal with the hon. member's amendment in the same way. Therefore, I would suggest that the portion of the bill before us stands so that further consideration can be given to the amendments to sections 239 and a response made as soon as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have just agreed to that.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the minister's suggestion that section 239 be removed from the group which we are studying at present? Perhaps the Chair could make the suggestion that the section be stood and that the committee carry on with the examination of the group of sections until we reach section 239.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my choice of words was not the most appropriate. I do not claim to be completely familiar with the manner in which the committee has been dealing with subsections to which hon. members are proposing amendments which are then stood for study. I did not suggest that we attempt to dispose of clause 239 but, rather, that it should be stood to give the government an opportunity to consider the amendments just now proposed by two members of the official opposition, and that the committee dispose of the other sections under the general grouping before it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The handling of this bill is unique in our history, but I really do not think there is any difficulty about the matter now before us. We are considering the group of sections from 220 to 244, but the one Your Honour called is 220, so we are having a general discussion. Now we have notice that when we get to section 239 there are two amendments that have been moved. All we are agreeing to is that those amendments wait until Your Honour calls section 239. In the meantime we are still on the general discussion sparked by the calling of section 220.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 220 carry?

Clause 1, section 220, agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 221 carry?

On clause 1—section 221: Regulations.

Mr. Bigg: Section 221(2) at page 530 provides for retroactivity of the regulations under the act. As we all know, the regulations are often more important than the statute. It appears to me that even when the act has been published the taxpayer will not know what he is facing until the regulations are out, and the regulations may well provide inherent, unseen dangers and pitfalls in the tax structure. Therefore it is most difficult today, when any businessman, farmer or taxpayer of any kind has to set his house in order, has to look to the future, see whether it would pay him to incorporate or not to incorporate, to be a partner or not to be a partner, to know what regulations he is facing. As I read this bill, he might even become delinquent under the law, faced by regulations of which he has no knowledge whatsoever. This is not only taxation in retrospect but in many cases it is jeopardy in retrospect.

When we are breaking new ground in almost every facet of Canadian life in this bill, it seems to me that we must be very careful that the taxpayer knows what dangers he is walking into. If we are to have regulations which are more intricate than ever—and goodness knows the bill is hard enough to understand with its seven pounds of intricate and devious writing; and the regulations will no doubt be more voluminous—the taxpayer must know exactly what his tax position is. We are breaking new ground in the matter of retroactivity, and I would like to see the point clarified. The regulations should be ready at the time the act is passed, certainly where they have any definite effect on the taxpayer, his right to his property and money that he may or may not owe the government.

This is a very dangerous section of the act in that apparently there is no limit on how far back you can go. I am only guessing, but I presume that he can only go back one fiscal or one taxation year. Today when you are putting the onus of proof on the taxpayer, the government can go ahead and do what it likes and it is up to the taxpayer to prove that he has been unjustly treated. If it is not written into the act, I presume he would have no resort. I do not like the word "presumption" and I do not like the taxpayer having to presume anything. He should be able to read in simple, basic English regulations which are not devious but are well understood and have no retroactivity whatsoever.

I would be quite willing to resume my seat if the minister or any person speaking on his behalf would clarify this issue and tell us how retroactive this section is and whether it is needed at all. I do not see any need for retroactivity. It is bad enough to be taxed in the new field, but how retroactive is that tax with its double and triple penalties and even the possibility, under section 239(2) which we have just discussed, of a taxpayer facing criminal charges for being negligent under this voluminous legislation?

If a person is a day late filing his income tax return he may be subject to all these penalties. The matter is left to the judgment of someone who is not even a judge and who may not even be trained in the law. That someone can be a member of the ruling party of the day, and under the legislation he will have the responsibility of determining who is and who is not to be treated as a criminal. Then when the trial takes place, the taxpayer suddenly finds himself in the very reverse of the position he occupied under common law and criminal law of being deemed innocent until proven guilty. Here we have a perverse regulation forcing the taxpayer to prove himself innocent of any offence under the law. Such a regulation can make a criminal out of him and he may carry a criminal record for the rest of his life. He may be sent to jail for at least two months, if I read the bill correctly. If it does not mean that, at least no one on the government side has risen to say exactly what it does mean.

The bill says in plain language what the penalty will be. It says it may be up to a five-year prison term and no less than two months. We have a retroactive provision in section 221(2) which is adding insult to injury. It is a very serious matter. People are worried about the unknown pitfalls of taxation. It is impossible for a man to order his business, arrange his family affairs and decide whether or not he should incorporate. I know that I am repeating myself, Mr. Chairman, but this is an important point. We are being asked to rush this bill through the House. We are getting the same old blackmail that we always get when Christmas is arriving: You won't get home to see your families unless you hurry up and pass this bill—which nobody wants or understands.

There have been 148 amendments already submitted. We are getting more every day. We are not unreasonable when we see a minister of the Crown attacking the problem with forthrightness, fairness and candour, and when an amendment is reasonable we will pass it with very little discussion. That has been demonstrated already today. There are many provisions in the bill that need to be questioned. I have been following the debate closely, and most of the points have been made by hon. members on this side of the House. The 148 amendments submitted by the government are not really helpful in making this bill a reform of the tax law. But well thought-out amendments have been submitted by hon. members on this side of the House and I know that some of them have met with approval of hon. members opposite. However, I am a little disappointed that we do not hear more from those hon. members.

I know that hon. members opposite must be getting mail dealing with this bill. My mail is mountainous. People want to know where in the world we are going. They want to know what to do about estate planning, about passing on the little estate that may be left to them after the enormous taxes that people in this country are experiencing. It is expensive to incorporate and it is just as expensive to get out of being incorporated.

We do not know where the law is taking us. We do not know what incorporation will mean by the time this bill is passed. We do not know what the regulations interpreting the bill will mean. That interpretation is important and dangerous. If those interpretations are made retroactive, then not only are we in a fog but we are in a bog—and it isn't easy to get out of a bog when you are in a fog.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief comment on section 221 (2) in order to demonstrate its usefulness. I will give an example.

If after a budget speech the minister of Finance announces amendments to the Income Tax Act, the bill submitted to the House to obtain Parliament's approval for these amendments may be adopted after two or three months only and if i understand well subsection (2), regulations cannot be retroactive. Regulations are promulgated following the amendment of an act and I understand that section 221 (2) is necessary in the case I mentioned and in other cases.

[English]

Clause 1, section 221, agreed to.

Clause 1, sections 222 to 224 inclusive, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 225 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall section 226 carry?

On clause 1—section 225: Seizure of chattels.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On section 225, Mr. Chairman, again this is a provision that had been in existence, and I believe it was my colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka who spoke about the difficulties connected with the ten days' notice. In this day and age of less than efficient mail service, with only a five-day delivery per week, unless the notice emanates from the office of the local director of taxation there may be considerable delay in having it delivered.

I wish to ask whether the notice will emanate from the local director of taxation, in which case it might be deemed to be relatively local mail, or does the notice come from the enforcement section of the Department of National Revenue, in which case it emanates from Ottawa? In the latter case ten days' notice is not sufficient for some of the rural areas of the more distant provinces where there is no such thing as next day delivery.

On this matter I do not speak from lack of knowledge. I know that if a letter is mailed in Ottawa on Wednesday and gets to, say, Grand Prairie, Alberta, on Friday it may sit there and not be delivered until the subsequent Monday, and in some communities it may not be delivered until the following Tuesday. We know that in the larger cities in particular, with the accumulation of mail from Friday afternoon through Saturday, Sunday and Monday some mail cannot be delivered on the Monday. All this delay eats into the ten days' notice period. If the parliamentary secretary can tell me that the notice period will be from the date of receipt of the letter by registered mail, and that there is an unequivocal interpretation of that, I will be satisfied. But if the dispatch of a letter by registered mail is being considered, say, from Ottawa through to northern British Columbia or northern Alberta—

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: Or Hamilton.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —or to any point like that, then those ten days are eaten into. What is meant by the registered mail provision? Is the time to apply from the time of the signature for the registered letter? Does the period start from the time of the signature, or does it begin with the date stamp on the letter which may have been registered for greater certainty of delivery?

Mr. Alexander: Sometimes one cannot trust even that method of delivery.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member for Edmonton West whether he would like a period of so many days to be set, since I see no 10 or 15 days stipulated in section 226?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We are dealing with section 225.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I thought you had called section 225 and that it was carried.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but I was on my feet at that point.

[English]

The Chairman: I wondered whether the hon. member for Edmonton West was directing his remarks to section 225 or section 226. Section 225 was called and carried. Was the hon. member addressing his remarks to section 226?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, to section 225. I was on my feet. I heard Your Honour call it and I said "No." I had my hand up at the time. I realize that it may be difficult for the Chair to hear members who are farther away than others. Some members may take objection to parts of a section. I want information, I am not objecting. I want clarification of section 225.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, it may be that, inadvertently, section 225 seemed to have been agreed to, but I did see the hon. member for Edmonton West object at that point. So—

[English]

The Chairman: The Chair did not notice that the hon. member for Edmonton West was objecting. I appreciate that he may have done so; it may be that I did not see him. The Chair was trying to be careful and not move too quickly. I think it is important for these matters to be aired in this informal manner. Does the committee consent to revert to section 225, deal with the matter raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West and then deal with section 226?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that section 225 be allowed to stand for a few minutes? I thought that section 225 had been passed; this is why I was referring to section 226 and I could see no section concerning a time limit. Then the hon. member for Edmonton West—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nevertheless I spoke long enough about it.

Mr. Clermont: Does the hon. member accept my suggestion to stand section 225 for a few minutes? I hope to give him the information which he requested.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Agreed.

[English]

The Chairman: Is it agreed that section 225 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1, section 225, stands.

Clause 1, sections 226 to 229 inclusive, agreed to.

The Chairman: Hon. members will note that an amendment to section 230 was proposed by the Minister of National Revenue on October 22, 1971, as reported at page 8959 of Hansard.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 230, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: Again, hon. members will note that the Minister of National Revenue proposed an amendment to section 231, as recorded at page 8959 of Hansard.

On clause 1—section 231: Investigations.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 231 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): One moment, Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka wished to introduce an amendment to section 231. I had been talking with the hon. member for Bonaventure, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, with regard to the precise answer that applied to section 225, and now we have arrived at section 231. I am particularly interested in subsection (13).

Some of my colleagues have raised points with regard to section 231 and I hope we get answers before the section is passed. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council knows of the comments I made with regard to the provision of answers or non-answers, and I prefer to leave it at that unless we are to be denied answers. I am not suggesting that the answers will necessarily be the ones we want, but at least we should be given some answers.

On clause 1—section 225: Seizure of chattels.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, coming back to section 225, I am informed that the powers under sections 225 and 226 have been exercised in headquarters at Ottawa only.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect, in his statement on section 225 the hon. gentleman referred to powers that have been exercised in the past. But the whole act is back on the table, and I could not care a damn what was exercised in the past.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What I am concerned about, in seeking information under section 225, is the time from which the ten days begins. Does it run from the time the official of the Department of National Revenue takes the letter to the post office and the date stamp appears on the letter, do the ten days begin whenever the addressee or his representative signs the deliveryman's book acknowledging the receipt of a registered letter or from the time he goes to the post office and signs a book acknowledging receipt of the registered letter?

From what time and from what date will the ten days run? That is a question of information and it is not a question of what was the practice heretofore. I was not asking for an immediate answer. I am prepared to give whatever time is required. Surely a question of this nature is capable of receiving a very simple, administrative answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, we shall accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West that section 225 be made to stand, but I was under the impression that he was asking for some explanations. I have given him the information that the officials gave me but, apparently, that is not satisfactory to him. So, I accept his suggestion that section 225 be made to stand so that it may be considered later on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is good practice, but tell me what it is all about.

[English]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this would be an opportune time for me to interject an announcement. There have been discussions about the business of the House for tomorrow. We will continue in committee of the whole on the tax bill and deal with clause 2.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I wanted to make that abundantly clear so we are not faced with any confusion on clause 1. We will discuss clause 2 which appears at page 596 and deals with the repeal of federal succession duties and the Estate Tax Act. We would go on to other business on Thursday. There has been preliminary discussion about whether we would return to other sections which have already been discussed, but for tomorrow it is agreed that we will deal with clause 2 of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, is the parliamentary secretary reasonably hopeful that we will not take as long on clause 2 as we have on clause 1?

Mr. Jerome: Very much so.

The Chairman: To review the position, it is the understanding of the Chair that section 225 was stood by consent and it is the understanding of the Chair that with the consent of the committee it shall remain stood. The committee next has under consideration section 231(2) to which there is an amendment moved by the Minister of National Revenue. That amendment was put to the committee and passed. I am now prepared to put the question. Shall section 231 as amended carry?

On clause 1—section 231: Investigations.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, may I propose to the hon. member for Edmonton West that section 231 be made to stand?

[English]

Clause 1, section 231, stands.

Clause 1, sections 232 to 234 inclusive, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 235 carry?

On clause 1—section 235: Penalty for failure to make returns.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, this of course relates to section 239 and in the same way but to a lesser degree to section 233. In section 233 there is an obligation to file information. It is not a return, but failure to file the information as a result of the request by the minister, which means one of his officials, is non-compliant with the act. It is unfortunate that the Minister of National Revenue is not present.

There are a number of areas in which regulations can be made and authorized. There are a number of new sections which will call for new regulations. Section 221 authorizes the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the minister, to make regulations in order to carry out all general purposes of the act. Following the presentation of a brief by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to the Minister of Finance on Bill C-259, a letter from that body dated November 17 suggested that the public should see the regulations in draft form before the act was finally passed. This was done by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in connection with the textiles bill when the regulations that would be applicable were tabled in draft form. The committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs did not put a stamp of approval on the regulations but at least the public knew what they were.

The regulations under the Income Tax Act may be half as thick as the act which is before us. Certainly the regulations as they existed were about the same thickness as this blue, unilingual version of Bill C-259. There are many new terms and concepts in this bill which will have to be defined and explained by way of regulation, yet the Canadian public has seen nothing although the act is supposed to take effect on January 1, 1972.

There is no one here from the Department of National Revenue. It is unfortunate that the officials cannot speak because I would like to know whether they have any regulations ready with regard to capital gains and with regard to mining and petroleum which will be effective on January 1.

An hon. Member: They don't care.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If valuation day should be in the latter part of December, how can we tell whether a capital gains tax is payable if there are no regulations? Canada will be in the most ludicrous position. It will have a capital gains tax in effect but the vendor, the purchaser nor representatives of the Department of National Revenue will be able to tell what regulations bear upon transactions starting January 1, 1972. We are supposed to be running a logical, intelligent operation. I wish the officials could talk and tell us if the regulations are ready. Can either of the parliamentary secretaries tell us whether the regulations are ready on capital gains?

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I understand that section 235 deals with penalty for failure to file returns. It does not deal with regulations generally.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is that an answer, when this section deals with a failure to file a return pursuant to regulations passed under other two sections? Does the parliamentary secretary have the gall to tell us that this does not deal with regulations? I will specify it: Are the regulations with regard to sections 215 and 221 ready? I want to know.

It may be that because they are a carryover the regulations will be much the same. But they have not been enacted. They would have to be enacted by a new order in council to make reference to the new sections. Even if section 221 has been passed, I am still in the general area and can talk about this subject. Have the regulations been made with regard to these matters?

Maybe the parliamentary secretaries do not read this kind of correspondence, but the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has asked for assurance that they will see regulations which will affect transactions starting on January 1. The parliamentary secretary will agree with me that if there is a transaction in the first week of January which is to be affected by regulation, the parties to that transaction should surely be in a position to know what the regulations are. The regulations might completely change the position of the parties. I want to see them. Surely to goodness we should be entitled to an answer.

Where is the Minister of National Revenue? I was assured yesterday he would be on duty today so as to answer questions. I do not hold it against the two hon. gentlemen who are here. They have not been placed in the position of having the information. Merely to sit there and have to take abuse is an ungrateful job, I understand that. But information of this kind is vital to the committee when it is called upon to determine whether it will pass sections under which vital regulations are supposed to be made. The bill is supposed to be operable in a month from now. Will the regulations be ready by January 1?

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Could I put a question to the hon. member for Edmonton West?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Certainly, but it is not up to me to answer questions.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. member for Edmonton West refer to some cases where, during consideration of a bill, regulations were introduced before the end of the consideration of the bill?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Chairman. In several cases, the act was not to become effective before a given date. The act was subject to promulgation.

Mr. Béchard: Give an example.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I shall refer to the case of the Textile and Clothing Board Act. This Act was not promulgated before the regulations governing the activities of the Board. But the minister was sensible enough to make these regulations before the passing of the Act; he introduced them so that they be considered by the members of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic affairs. As I explained, everybody was there, witnesses from the textile industry, manufacturers or importers, and they knew what it was all about.

I hope it is a good example, but what makes the big difference is the fact that the whole Bill C-259 will be effective on January 1, 1972, and there will be a capital gains tax.

Since there will be regulations on capital gains—

Mr. Béchard: There will be.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, of course, and we cannot expect the world to stop, nor trade nor business for that matter. But parties to a deal are at least entitled to know the rules governing such deal. I am merely asking a question.

Will the regulations be ready by the first of January?

Mr. Béchard: Yes, if the bill is carried.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton-West): Nonsense, Mr. Chairman, the regulations will be ready! So I shall ask the parliamentary secretary whether he went to the other place this evening to get the report of the chairman of the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. What were the very "close" comments made by those who form the majority in the Senate, and what will be done about them?

Mr. Corbin: We will make you a senator.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right, you are the first candidate.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A senator, what is that?[dd]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton-West): I want to know. I have been assured that the Minister of National Revenue would be here to give answers.

I know that the necessary information is not given to the Parliamentary Secretary of the President of the Treasury Board. He cannot tell us whether there will be regulations or not. It is not his jurisdiction. I am not blaming him personally. It is the system.

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a correction as to the impression which the hon. member for Edmonton West may have left, probably unwittingly, concerning today's debate. He said that the parliamentary secretaries to the Minister of Justice and to the President of the Treasury Board respectively had been listening. In order to get things straight, I wish to specify that in most cases, members who asked questions got answers from the Minister of National Revenue, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice, or myself. I wonder if more than two amendments—I am not talking about amendments proposed by the government, of course—have been carried in any one day of debate on this bill following a suggestion from members of the Official Opposition.

As for regulations which the government might introduce once the Act has been passed, let me say that I belong to a responsible party whose task it is to govern this country, and that if the bill goes through Parliament, I have no doubt that regulations will follow.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The parliamentary secretary should know that unfortunately he is not in a position to give an undertaking on behalf of the government. I know he is making his statement in good faith and that he hopes these regulations will be forthcoming in good time. But what we want to know from the Minister of National Revenue, who is the minister in charge of the administration of this act, is whether they have the regulations ready—whether they will be ready by January 1, 1972.

I do not wish to repeat myself six times in order to get this information. I should like to make progress with this group of sections, but since we cannot I am quite prepared to see this one stand and go on to some of the others.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that section 235 be stood?

[English]

The Chairman: Is it agreed that section 235 stands?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1, section 235, stands.

Clause 1, section 236, agreed to.

On clause 1—section 237: Application for assignment of social insurance number.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I do not mentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour will laugh on know whether members of the committee know this, but under the Income Tax Act it is an offence to fail to show one's social insurance number on one's income tax return. That is in non-compliance of the act, subject to regulation of course and also subject to penalty. Perhaps the Parliathe other side of his face—

Mr. Perrault: I am not laughing at the hon. member.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —if he gets caught under section 239 because he failed to catch this little point. This is bureaucracy gone mad.

Clause 1, section 237, agreed to.

Clause 1, section 238, agreed to.

On clause 1—section 239: Offences.

The Chairman: There is an amendment proposed to this clause by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that section 239 be stood.

[English]

The Chairman: Is it agreed that section 239 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, there is a further point under subsection (4) of section 239. This provision is completely new:

> Where, in any appeal under this act, substantially the same facts are at issue as those that are at issue in a prosecution under this section, the Minister may file a stay of proceedings with the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court, as the case may be—

Then it provides that either the board or the court must stay the proceedings. Since the Minister of National Revenue is now in the committee perhaps he could tell us why priority is given to the criminal proceedings under section 239 as against the proceedings in the Federal Court, trial division. If a case has some element in it involving criminal proceedings, why are these proceedings given priority? Why are the criminal proceedings not dealt with subsequent to completion of the civil case?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think two comments might be made in response to the hon. member's question. First of all, it seems to me that if the type of procedure contained in the proposed subsection was not available, there could be two separate tribunals dealing at the same time with similar facts and one can see there could possibly be unfairness to the taxpayer concerned. There is a second point I should like to check and I will speak to it in a moment or two.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, since this is an important point and we have a new provision here, I think the minister should take this under advisement. I want to know why criminal proceedings have priority over civil proceedings. Criminal proceedings are directed by the Attorney General on the one side and the Minister of National Revenue is being asked to comply with the desire of his colleague to enter a stay of proceedings on the civil side. This would mean that the proceedings before the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court would be stayed. I feel the priorities are reversed here.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I see it is about ten o'clock and perhaps it would be more helpful to the committee if I attempted to provide the information to the hon. member at the next session of the committee.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—LEAKING OF REPORT TO CABINET—DESIGNATION OF ALL GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS AS PUBLIC UNLESS OTHERWISE INDICATED

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, November 15 I asked the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) whether the government was also considering reversing current government policy which requires that government documents be confidential unless otherwise designated so that all government documents would be public documents unless otherwise designated by the government. To this he replied:

> Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak for all those who have been charged with responsibility for government when I say that unless there are confidential relations between public servants and the government the whole system breaks down, and that is what is at issue here.

Mr. Speaker, I asked that question because it is distressing to me to see so much time and energy being devoted to, and so much glee and chagrin being displayed over the making public of a document that should never have been secret in the first place. The information being compiled by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) in order to assist the government in coming to a decision on the whole question of foreign ownership in Canada is being compiled at the expense of the taxpayer. It is of vital interest to the entire nation and is information that is essential to proper judgment being made about the policies which would be based upon the data being compiled by the minister.

The report should have been a public document. If it had been, we would not now be subjected to this tempest in a teapot. But my concern goes beyond the so-called Gray report and the alleged cabinet minutes of July 29. My concern is to see the entire existing concept of secrecy of government documents—that is to say, that the documents are considered to be classified documents unless declared to be otherwise—reversed. I want to see the whole system reversed.

My question arose out of a belief that there is an increasing desire on the part of the public to participate more directly in the making of the decisions which inevitably affect them. My question arose also out of the belief that the power of the legislature to control the cabinet has been diminishing and ought to be increased. In our society information is power. When one party in an argument or a dispute or a discussion has a virtual monopoly on information, the exercise is extremely one-sided. Participatory democracy is a meaningless phrase if only the government has the information necessary to participate meaningfully. Legislative control of the executive is virtually non-existent if the legislature does not have ready access to the information necessary to exercise that control.

For those reasons current regulations governing the secrecy of government documents make a mockery of our claims to democracy, participatory or otherwise. Instead of requiring that all government documents be confidential unless otherwise designated, the government should make all documents available upon request unless they have been specifically designated as confidential. Naturally, there would have to be limitations and exceptions to this general rule. My colleague from Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) in 1965 submitted a private member's bill to this House which said that the law that documents should be accessible to the public should not apply to records or information that affect national security, that are exempted by statute from disclosure, that concern trade secrets and commercial or financial matters of a privileged or confidential nature obtained from private persons, or that concern cases where the right to personal privacy excludes the public interest.

The crucial point is that the principle would be reversed; the right of free access would prevail. Given the limitations already outlined, limitations which should be set out explicitly in the constitution or in a secrecy act, a person should have access to any administrative document without proving that he has a legal interest in that document and without stating the purpose for which he wishes to see it. Further, such documents should be made available immediately or as soon as reasonably possible.

Moreover, a citizen should be able to file a petition with the courts if he is unable to obtain documents within a reasonable time. The argument advanced against my proposal was that unless there are confidential relations between public servants and the government, the whole system breaks down. It is not good enough to say that civil servants will not be as candid in their submissions to the government if their submissions might be read by the public. One could argue that, if anything, to protect their reputation their documents would be more candid. For one thing, the personal proclivities of their immediate superiors would weigh less heavily with them.

As with so many proposals for social change, the predictions about the consequences are not based on fact but on fancy and are often greatly exaggerated. To permit access to government documents as a natural right would not destroy our democratic system but, rather, would enhance it. We would not be the first country to adopt such a law. For over 200 years Sweden has provided open access to official documents and provided full information to any citizen about administrative activities. There are many many sources which indicate it has been far from harmful to the Swedish system.

There are so many indications of undesirable effects which result from government secrecy that the whole principle must be seriously questioned. The list of minor stupidities and major disasters which have resulted from this policy is endless. The concept of mindless governmental secrecy is incompatible with democracy, with the people's natural right to have access to the information upon which policy decisions are based. Canada inherited its love affair with secrecy from the archaic and outdated system of absolute monarchy and it has been preserved by successive governments and officials mainly for thieir own convenience, to protect themselves against the consequences of possible error.

I suggest it is time to reverse that policy. It is time to make information available to all sectors of the public so that the public and Parliament can discuss matters intellingently and with full knowledge, and so influence government policies. It is time to reverse that policy so that we will not be subjected to any more of these ridiculous debates about who did what, where, when and how with respect to a document which should have been public knowledge in the first place.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All dressed up.

Mr. Danson: I thought it was a formal debate. I was prepared with what is perhaps a reasonable and logical answer which would be obvious to any thinking citizen in tonight's debate, but the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) referred to ridiculous situations and ridiculous debates and I think that is what is taking place tonight. When he mentioned the so-called Gray report and the cabinet minutes of July 29, he is talking about a figment of imagination to an extent. This is not government policy. They are cabinet doducments. No doubt there have been agreements in principle, but situations do change and this is the reason for some degree of secrecy.

When the hon. member for Selkirk discussed the question of people participating in decisions of government and referred to participatory democracy he was talking about what this government has been practising. The fact that there is some discretion and caution used in the public interest with regard to the secrecy of documents is another question completely. He spoke about regulations. There are no regulations relating to this. There is the report of the Royal Commission on Security, the abridged edition of June, 1969. The matter is dealt with on page 69, but I cannot use up all my time dealing with this. It is a matter of common sense practice. The hon. member mentioned the Swedish experience. People from our government have gone to Sweden and examined their system. The Swedish people are not that happy with it and they are not getting more information.

This is a sensitive issue, but it is also a key issue and it is important that the hon. member raises it because we live in a democratic system and the matter of secrecy within government is a very important one and one which should be dealt with, I think, in the way in which the hon. member has begun to deal with it. But I think the arguments should be more compelling.

It is a matter of government practice that civil servants and officials cannot deal with one another in complete frankness when they think that information is readily available. I think it is a matter of government discretion, but if that discretion is being abused it is the duty of hon. members opposite, such as the hon. member for Selkirk, to get up in the House, as he has tonight, and challenge the government and question whoever the government of the day may be to find out whether this secrecy is not being abused, to ensure that the public interest is being looked after and also to ensure that too much secrecy is not being imposed.

I have often wondered about the value of these "late show" debates, but this is a perfect example of their value because government officials and civil servants become sensitive to public opinion, and this is a form of protection. Officials and civil servants must be frank with one another but not overcautious—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

MANPOWER—AVAILABILITY OF JOBS IN THOMPSON AND SUDBURY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): On November 18 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on what information he based the statement he had made a day or so earlier in which he said that while there was large-scale unemployment, every person who really wanted a job could find one. He used as an illustration of this claim the fact that supposedly jobs were available for miners in Thompson, Manitoba, and Sudbury, Ontario, when in fact in Thompson, Sudbury and at Port Colbourne some weeks earlier the International Nickel Company had begun a series of lay-offs.

I was appalled by that flippant remark of the Prime Minister, not just because it was flippant in relation to a very serious problem but because I thought that with his large and supposedly efficient staff, much greater in size than that of any other Prime Minister in Canadian history, he would have been better briefed. He simply did not have the facts. As I say, lay-offs had begun at Sudbury and at Thompson weeks before the Prime Minister made his remark.

The situation with regard to unemployment is serious. In October, 1971, the last month for which we have figures, there were 447,000 people unemployed. The seasonally adjusted rate for unemployment was 6.7 per cent, the highest October rate in more than ten years. For more than 18 months the percentage of unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis has been over 6 per cent, and in September we had the almost unprecedented rate of 7.1 per cent.

One would think that if there were a large number of vacancies our Canada Manpower centres would know about them. After all, Mr. Speaker, we have been pouring increasingly large amounts of money, hundreds of millions of dollars, into the various programs of the Canada Manpower centres. According to the Financial Times News Service in November over 480,000 people who were looking for work were registered with Canada Manpower centres in the major cities of Canada and the number of job vacancies which the Canada Manpower centres had on record was just 48,000. In other words, the number of people looking for work was ten times as many as the number of jobs available for them.

Yesterday the Economic Council of Canada issued a report which ought to make even the Prime Minister, who has been so unconcerned about unemployment, worry a little. It pointed out that we face the formidable job of finding 1,400,000 new jobs in the next five years, almost twice as many as we have been able to find in the last few years.

The report points out that if we are to reduce the percentage of unemployment to 3.8 per cent, which is not a figure picked out of the air because it was the average rate of unemployment in the last three years of the Pearson government, we will have to increase the number of new jobs at a rate of about 3½ per cent per year. But, Mr. Speaker, we have not done better than increase that number by about 2.2 per cent per year. So we have a tremendous task before us. The government began that task late.

Some weeks ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) announced a new program. I suppose one could say that late conversion is better than no conversion at all. I close by saying that the unemployment problem will not be solved and our thinking about the problem will not be helped by the kind of flippant witticisms to which the Prime Minister so frequently subjects the country.

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, concerning the recently reported lay-offs at the International Nickel Company of Canada Limited, the situation arose because of the sharp decline in world markets for nickel. As a consequence, the company laid off some 250 salaried workers at Sudbury, Thompson, and at head office in Toronto. Some 445 hourly personnel were laid off at the company's refinery in Port Colborne, Ontario. In addition, the company suspended the hiring of miners and smelter workers at its Sudbury and Thompson operations. It was indicated that no significant lay-offs of production workers would occur at either of these sites due to the fact that normally high attrition rates due to quitting, retirements and other personal reasons would not necessitate a lay-off of personnel. Prior to the suspension of hiring of miners and smelter workers the company recruited several hundred workers every month during 1970 and up to late October, 1971, for its Sudbury and Thompson operations. This happened quite recently.

Concerning the job vacancies in metal mines generally, the number of job vacancies registered with Canada Manpower centres for 1971, up to the end of October, averaged 1,655 per month. To fill these vacancies an average of 2,215 referrals per month were made by Canada Manpower centres during the period concerned. Based on periodic reviews and analyses of hirings and separations information that is available for certain sectors of the mining industry, it is apparent that some mine operators experience a fairly heavy turnover of workers. This accounts for a considerable number of the job vacancies that arise in the industry every month.

For some mine operators the availability of adequate numbers of qualified workers presents difficulty. As a consequence, representations are made by these mine operators to promote and publicize the industry in order to attract workers to it. In addition, requests have been made by mining companies that a recruitment program for foreign workers should be implemented by the government to alleviate problems encountered in obtaining adequate numbers of qualified workers. In view of the general availability of workers in Canada, the response of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to these requests is that no program for the recruitment of foreign miners can be considered.

Mr. Orlikow: What kind of answer is that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Was that an answer to the question?

Mr. Danson: It was an excellent answer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You and your dress suit!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—GRANT TO UNION CARBIDE, BEAUHARNOIS—LOSS OF JOBS AT WELLAND

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson) does not read the same answer that he read in reply to the previous question when replying to the point I am about to raise.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It would be just as relevant.

Mr. Broadbent: Two years ago, during this period, I was on my feet objecting to the fact that the government had given Duplate Canada, Limited, three quarters of a million dollars to move part of its operation from Oshawa to Hawkesbury. All that did was to move employment from one part of Ontario to another at public expense. The excuse given at that time by the minister responsible was that the legislation did not allow for discretionary authority, that certain formal requirements had been met and that the grant had to be made. Apparently Duplate Canada, Limited had met the formal set of criteria and therefore had been given this money from the taxpayers.

That answer was not entirely acceptable even at that time but was, within limits at least, a plausible kind of argument. We were assured, when the legislation was subsequently amended to give the minister discretionary authority in matters involving regional grants, that such foolish use of public funds would not be repeated. The members of my party and I specifically supported the change in the legislation that would give the minister discretionary authority. I did so at that time with the provision, if you like, that I would look with particular interest at future grants made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It seems that the bad habits are repeating themselves. A week ago Aerovox Canada Limited was given a $235,000 grant to move part of its operation, and therefore its jobs, from the city of Hamilton, Ontario, to Amherst, Nova Scotia.

• (10:20 p.m.)

This wonderful act was not to be let alone. It was followed by the announcement about a week later, by the same department, that the Union Carbide Company of Canada was going to be given approximately $1.3 million to move from Welland, Ontario, to Beauharnois, Quebec, thus taking 70 jobs from the province of Ontario—shuffling unemployment around within the country.

It seems to me that the issue is very clear, Mr. Speaker. At the very best the minister is not making wise decisions. He is not spending public funds as they were intended to be spent in terms of regional development in the country. He is simply creating unemployment, in this case in the province of Ontario, by providing jobs elsewhere. This, of course, is unjust and unfair to the workers directly involved in this province and raises the important question about the future of the regional development program in general.

The program has always been dependent on the strength and viability of the economy of Ontario. Throughout, not only this government's regional development plans but those of preceding governments have relied on income transfer payments generated by the economy of this province being shifted to those areas of Canada less well off. I think this is a highly desirable process. But if this government continues to make grants to companies simply to move from the province of Ontario to other parts of Canada, not only will we be doing an injustice to the workers directly involved in this province but we will be building up general opposition in Ontario to the whole idea of regional development.

It is one thing to appeal to a worker in this province on the basis of some commitment to principle, to equity, to the idea that we must use funds to encourage development outside the province, but it becomes quite unacceptable to the same worker when it is evident that the funds are being used not simply to create jobs elsewhere in the country but to take his job out of his province. If the government keeps this up it will be undermining the acceptance of the program in Ontario.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the eloquence of the hon. member is not supported by the facts of the situation. I made inquiries this afternoon and understand that the company will make a statement tomorrow. Without wishing to prejudge, I think there are certain relevant facts which should be brought to the attention of the House. The first is that the number of people affected by the action is not 350, but 70.

Mr. Broadbent: I just said 70.

Mr. Roberts: In the House earlier the hon. member referred to 350 workers. That is true on the metals side of the operation of the industry. There is the expectation that 70 people will be affected. By late 1972 the graphite and carbon section of the operation will be sufficiently active to employ a significant number of the 70. Second, the fact is that the furnaces in operation in this project are all of pre-World War I vintage. They are obsolescent and do not meet the pollution standards of Ontario. The result is that three of them must be discontinued almost immediately, and the other four by the end of 1973.

The company is therefore faced with a decision as to where its new capacity should be located. Unfortunately, in relation to Welland there are certain drawbacks, partly the cost of electricity, partly the cost of transportation. The real question is not whether the capacity is to be created at Welland but whether this capacity is to be retained in Canada at all. Because of the low cost of extracting and processing the ore in South Africa there is a real danger that this operation might not continue in Canada for long.

The fact of the matter is that were it not for the assistance offered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the favourable hydro rates available in Quebec, these new installations would not be built in Canada at all. So the question is not the transfer of employment from Welland to Beauharnois; the real question is whether employment is to be created inside this country or outside it. The department is interested in maintaining this level of employment inside Canada rather than see it go elsewhere.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

STATUS OF WOMEN

TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR CO-ORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT ACTION FROM MINISTER OF STATE FOR URBAN AFFAIRS TO MINISTER OF LABOUR

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce the transfer of ministerial responsibility for the co-ordination of government action on the status of women from the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to the Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am happy to report that the interdepartmental committee which was set up last spring has now completed its examination of the commission's report and is drafting its recommendations for cabinet consideration.

[Translation]

The study of the interdepartmental committee indicates that the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour covers a good part of the legislative action to undertake. For this reason, I asked the Minister of Labour to assume this additional responsibility.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON BRITISH PROPOSALS FOR SETTLEMENT OF CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION OF RHODESIA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on November 24 the British government announced proposals for settlement of the constitutional position of Rhodesia. By now, hon. members will be familiar with the main features of these proposals which include provisions concerning the franchise and the composition of the legislature designed to give an increasing political voice to Africans, provisions intended to reduce racial discrimination, including a justifiable Declaration of Rights, a large development program, and a test of acceptability to be conducted by a commission appointed by the British government.

For the convenience of members I am prepared to table the British white paper containing these proposals which are complex and cover a number of interrelated procedures that must be completed before a settlement can be said to be secured.

The reason I say I am prepared to table this document is that I am not sure whether it is proper to table in the Canadian House of Commons a white paper put out in Britain. If there is any question about it, I have copies which hon. members can obtain.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement that the Secretary of State for External Affairs may table the white paper to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: From the beginning, Canada has held that the solution in Rhodesia should be a constitution providing for the rapid election of a government broadly representative of the Rhodesian people, of whom the overwhelming majority are black. The constitutional arrangements which have been announced fall short of this objective. The period for the transition to majority rule is not specified and the means for achieving it are highly complicated. Given the past experience with complicated constitutional provisions in Rhodesia and in various other parts of the world, there is inevitably concern as to how these arrangements will be implemented. Much will depend on the good will and co-operation of all concerned—qualities not always evident in recent years in the conduct of the Rhodesian regime.

When I visited Africa last March I was struck by the fact that two great contemporary dramas were being played out on that continent. Southern Africa is the scene of one of the most crucial chapters in the world-wide search for racial equality and human dignity, and the scene of the final stages in the liquidation of the European colonial empires.

Both of these themes are found in Rhodesia. In seeking to provide equitable arrangements for Rhodesian independence, Britain has had to face the fact that the white minority is at the present time unwilling to yield power to the black majority and that British capacity to influence the situation is very limited. Even mandatory United Nations sanctions have not been sufficient to produce this transfer of power. The only alternative means of bringing about a radical change would have been the use of force, a course of action which has been judged unacceptable by successive British governments.

Mr. Godber, the British Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, whom I saw on November 27, gave me to understand that in the stalemate which has resulted such factors as the political stagnation for the Rhodesian Africans, the drift toward apartheid, the isolation of all Rhodesians from the outside world, and the distortion of Rhodesia's economic and social development, had led the British authorities to believe there were serious disadvantages to the perpetuation of the status quo. These were among the considerations behind the decision of the British government to make these proposals which they hope may establish a new point of departure for Rhodesia's political development.

We expect there will be strong misgivings on the part of many Africans over the proposals. It is entirely understandable that they should wish all Africans in Rhodesia to have the advantages which they themselves have obtained through independence on the basis of majority rule. Canada is completely in accord with the desire of Africans to achieve the abolition of all forms of racial discrimination throughout Africa and the realization of full political rights for all African peoples, a desire we and they have repeatedly expressed in the United Nations and at Commonwealth meetings.

The Commonwealth has not been successful in its attempts to solve the Rhodesian problem. In my view this does not mean that the Commonwealth should be considered of lessening importance. In its brief existence as a multiracial association, it has contributed greatly to the adjustments required by the accession to independence of its members from Asia, Africa and the Caribbean. Canada is confident that the Commonwealth can continue to perform a vital role in the seventies.

The proposals envisage seeking the views of the people of Rhodesia. It is entirely right that this should be so. This is obviously a vital element in the achievement of any settlement. The provision for a commission appointed by Britain represents a serious attempt to test the opinion of Rhodesian Africans. Nevertheless, there are inherent complications. The vast majority of the people have been given little opportunity in the past to express their political will, certainly not on complicated constitutional questions. There are definite physical limitations on the ability of the commission to consult everyone. Another cause of concern is the state of emergency which apparently will prevail during the commission's deliberations. African nationalist parties such as have come to power elsewhere, notably ZAPU and ZANU, will, it appears, continue to be unable to operate, and their leaders will be prevented from influencing public opinion during the consultations.

I am sure that I speak for all members of this House when I say that we hope that notwithstanding these limitations the commission will be able to ascertain the views of the Rhodesian people and, in particular, the African population as to the acceptability to them of the proposed agreement. I feel confident that men of the integrity of those nominated to be chairman and vice-chairmen will report not only the views they hear but also on the adequacy of the procedures for ascertaining those views.

As Canadians we may view the proposals as falling short of what is desirable, but we cannot substitute our judgment for the judgment of the Rhodesian people themselves as to whether they prefer to go on as at present or to accept the settlement that has been proposed. Whatever happens, Canada will not cease to be concerned with the attainment of full democracy and social justice in Rhodesia.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, this is a statement to which it has been difficult to find a response that satisfies. In one sense I feel it is a bit premature for us to pass judgment upon what has been done or, indeed, to express an opinion. I am sure we would all welcome an announcement of the end of a certain type of government wherein such a minority rules over such a majority by such means. Therefore we do not regard this as an announcement of the best kind by any means. Indeed, the minister couched his statement in those terms.

These are the kind of questions about which there is no monopoly of concern in any group or in any country. I am sure that we cannot over such questions mount a successful exercise in excessive party or personal purity. We all wish that more could be accomplished toward the aims to which this country has paid its allegiance, and to which all of us still pay allegiance.

We know that in Britain there is great concern and anxiety about the longlasting Rhodesian problem. I have been watching with great interest the concern that a man like the Right Hon. Nigel Fisher, one of the great liberal Africanists of today, a man so well acquainted with African problems and so sympathetic to them, has displayed. He has come to the conclusion that the step that is being proposed is in fact a step in the right direction.

I also noted in the minister's statement a realistically painful recognition that many of the programs that were brought about in connection with the Rhodesian problem have not been very successful. I think we have all reached the stage where we must admit not only the lack of success but the great degree of hypocrisy connected with the sanctions program. Indeed, some nasty person said the other day that the sanctions were as leaky as certain governments. The other day we read with anxiety that the United States was to purchase chrome from Rhodesia. Of course there should be reason for that anxiety, but Rhodesia has been producing chrome for years and years and I have heard no one say that it has been stockpiled. It might be interesting to know where that chrome has gone in the last eight years.

An hon. Member: To Russia.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was impressed by the minister's statement about the importance of events in South Africa. I agree with what he said. I would point to that to renew my urging that the government, which the other day with flags fluttering and banners flying opened a legation in Algeria, should move to open a legation in Zambia which I understand has been seeking such an opening for a long time.

I know there is much that can be said on the other side about the satisfactory situation of some people in Rhodesia in that, although they do not wield power, the economic conditions under which they live are better than those in other countries of Africa. I am impressed by that but not convinced by it. I agree with John Stuart Mill who many years ago said that even good government is no substitute for self-government, and I do not call the government of Rhodesia a good one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macquarrie: I ought to note, because the people of Canada are interested in this question, as they should be, that certain misleading statements in the press have indicated that what is taking place in this area, or may take place means the return of Rhodesia to the Commonwealth. This is not so. This is a matter which must be decided by the member states of the Commonwealth and not by the United Kingdom alone.

There is one aspect of this which interests me. Although the British, since this is their constitutional right and, indeed, their problem, and it has been a difficult one, have chosen to appoint a commission of British subjects or native nationals, I think it might have been more imaginative if they had broadened the scope of that commission and appointed a Commonwealth commission. I can think of some outstanding African statesmen who could have served on it with distinction. I can think of some Canadians who could have made some important contribution to that commission. The name of former Prime Minister Pearson was mentioned. I also say that another former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), who did a great deal in bringing about a colour-blind Commonwealth, could have made a great contribution. I think that Howard Green, whose services have not been sufficiently used by the government of his own country, could have been very valuable on such a body. The Commonwealth could have been involved in this very important matter.

Canada made an important contribution 50 years ago in establishing the equality of states within the Commonwealth. A few years ago one of our prime ministers made a great contribution toward establishing the principle of equality of peoples within the Commonwealth. So there could be a Canadian role although, as I say and admit, the constitutional problem is one for Britain to deal with. We all realize that this situation, which we must study very carefully before we become too definite or final in our judgment, falls far short of the ideal. However, for the first time Mr. Smith has signed an important document which says:

> The Rhodesian government have intimated to the British government their firm intention, within the spirit of these proposals, to make progress toward ending racial discrimination.

That has been admitted, and while there may be some concern as to how long this will take, at least that intention is something. Of course, I agree with the minister that Canada cannot and must not desert its concern for the attainment of full democracy and justice in Rhodesia. That must be our goal. That must be our value judgment. However, I think that at this stage it might be prudent, it might be pragmatic and, in the long run, sensitive, to allow for development of the commission which, after all, has set out to elicit the views of the Rhodesian people. They must entertain the views of as many Rhodesians as possible, especially those who are politically activated and politically concerned.

The minister's statement—the best part of it in my opinion—was that no matter how concerned we are we cannot in the long run substitute our judgment for the judgment of the Rhodesian people. We hope and pray that every effort will be taken to ascertain fully and thoughtfully the judgment of these people.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was faced with a difficult task in commenting on the proposals for the settlement of the Rhodesian constitutional problem. The proposals are complicated and the dilemma is excruciating. I find it, therefore, rather difficult to blame the minister for the vagueness and ambiguity of his statement. None the less I wish the minister had felt himself able to take a more unequivocal stand in favour of self-rule for the black majority of Rhodesia—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: —and against the inadequacy of the present proposals we are discussing. The principle of what has become known as NIBMAR, no independence before majority rule, in our view is the only basis for a satisfactory settlement of the Rhodesian question. The Canadian government repeated this principle as recently as November 23 without prejudging the proposals of the British government.

Sir Alec Douglas-Home claims that the proposed settlement is fully within the five principles to which the British government has constantly adhered. We do not agree.

The fifth principle, and perhaps the key to the question now facing the world, is that any basis proposed for independence would be acceptable to the people of Rhodesia as a whole. If in fact the present proposals were acceptable to the people of Rhodesia this country and the world community might, whatever its misgivings, have to accept the proposals. But under the present proposals this test of acceptability is to be determined by a commission headed by a judge from Britain, Lord Pearce, supported by two other commissioners who will tour Rhodesia.

There are a number of reasons this test may well be unsatisfactory. There is no proposal for a referendum. The present state of emergency in Rhodesia is continued until after the lifting of sanctions. Normal conditions do not prevail in Rhodesia. Radio and television time to discuss the proposals is available only to political parties represented in the House of Assembly. This effectively excludes some of the most important national African leaders from the discussion of the proposals. At the time the test of opinion is under way only 54 of the 116 political detainees will have been released. In these circumstances the most careful scrutiny must be insisted on before the conclusions of the commission could be accepted by world opinion.

Principle one of the five principles is that the principle and intention of unimpeded progress to majority rule would have to be maintained and guaranteed. The proposals do include the removal of the provision in the 1969 Rhodesian constitution which precludes any possibility of progress beyond parity. But this provision is specious. It means that the 100 per cent impossibility of going beyond parity is changed to something like a 95 per cent impossibility. Progress to majority rule can be impeded by a handful of white Members of Parliament. It is by no means assured or guaranteed.

There are some 250,000 white people and some five million black people in the country. The parity proposed is parity between 250,000 whites and five million blacks. As the blacks increase their literacy and their role in the economy, their representation may slowly move upward.

However, a statistical analysis published in the Sunday Times last Sunday found that majority rule would be possible in about 65 years. According to the former Prime Minister of Great Britain, Harold Wilson, it would take Africans to achieve legislative parity—this is not majority rule—between 15 years and 600 years. Does the world expect the people of Rhodesia to wait so long for this incomplete and inadequate goal of simple parity?

Principle No. 3 was that there would have to be immediate improvement in the political status of the African population. The proposal we are discussing calls for immediate improvement in the political status of the African population by the addition of four extra African seats in the assembly. This is minimal. It constitutes in substance a very grave omission from the five principles.

Principle No. 4 is that there would have to be progress toward ending racial discrimination. The proposals we are discussing simply record the Smith regime's intention to reduce racial discrimination and set up a three-man commission to review the question without any powers.

The Land Tenure Act is the main bastion of apartheid. This act is only to be reviewed by the commission. There is no guarantee that there will be any action on it. The commission's recommendations will be "commended" by the Smith regime "except where there are considerations which any government would regard as overriding". This is a loophole a mile wide. All in all the proposals are quite inadequate.

The Canadian government should express grave reservations about the whole proposal. It should not rush headlong into endorsing what may turn out to be a snare and delusion for legitimate African aspirations, and should maintain its sanctions until the opinion of the black people of Africa has been secured and the United Nations has accepted their withdrawal.

Canada has a good reputation as a white western country that has shown sympathy and understanding of black African aspirations and an abhorrence of racial discrimination. In the interest of good relations between the races of the world and in the interest of future world peace and security this reputation must not be thrown away. Canada should consult with its Commonwealth partners and should withhold recognition of an independent Rhodesian government until genuine majority rule in Rhodesia is attained.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has just tabled a statement by the British government concerning the agreement recently entered into between the British government, representing the Commonwealth, and the Rhodesian government.

Mr. Speaker, before I had the opportunity of visiting Rhodesia on August 16, I had been brainwashed as most other Canadians were. Indeed, the international news services had led me to believe that Rhodesia was a dictatorship, a fascist and totalitarian country. Now I had the opportunity with three other members—and I think it would be advisable to have them express an opinion—to travel in Rhodesia whence we returned with a similar conviction. During our trip, we were compelled to leave our prejudices aside, to squarely consider the facts and to investigate. We visited the whole of Rhodesia. We met all heads of government as well as the revolutionary chiefs who want the government to follow the example of other black African countries which, after gaining their independence, have become communist satellites of China or the U.S.S.R.

I am happy today to give a different version from that of the hon. members who spoke before me. We have found that order, discipline and prosperity prevail in Rhodesia. We were asked to send our surplus technicians to Rhodesia where, we were told, work would be found for them when there is little for them here in Canada. The unfortunate fact with regard to Rhodesia is that, in 1961, when England tried to interfere in the internal affairs of the country, the latter declared its independence unilaterally. That was its sin.

Today, after five years of unsuccessful economic and political sanctions from Canada, the United States and other countries, we must envy the prosperity and discipline of Rhodesia.

Canada even stopped selling wheat to Rhodesia. That country did not produce wheat, but following the economic sanctions imposed by several countries, it started its own production of which it even exports a part today.

General Motors, Ford and Chrysler closed their plants in Rhodesia. That did not affect the white minority, but the majority of black people who worked for them.

Mr. Speaker, those who have had the privilege of visiting Rhodesia can repudiate the misinterpretation of facts that is constantly appearing in newspapers. And instead of giving advice to the Rhodesians or to rebuke them the House should appoint a special committee responsible for carrying an investigation in that country, which has not been done since 1961. If such a committee were established it could ascertain whether the Rhodesians are such bad people as the international press portrays them.

No country is now exercising economic control over Rhodesia. It is strange that the United States and some other countries which have imposed sanctions are nevertheless exporting goods to that country. Why? Because Rhodesia has the necessary funds to purchase various things.

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to say a word about the famous sin of discrimination. The majority rule in Rhodesia does not exist. I am not going to read comments or articles from newspapers. I have in hand a copy of the Debates of the Senate of Rhodesia, dated September 1, 1971, where it says that the Senate has returned a bill through a black majority. The Rhodesian Africans represented in the Senate or in the government of Rhodesia have reversed a bill which was deemed to have been introduced by the Whites. Contrary to what some people would have the whole world believe, it is untrue that the Whites are governing Rhodesia and that the Blacks are under their authority because the Rhodesian African senators have returned a bill which was deemed to have been introduced by the government. This means that the black senators have, on any given day, the possibility of rejecting any bill which they are not satisfied with. This is why it is so deceiving for other countries to denounce the scandal which allegedly exists in Rhodesia.

I recently read an article on the agreement between the British Commonwealth and the Rhodesian government. Having imposed ineffective sanctions against Rhodesia in 1961, England must change its decision.

Strangely enough, the leaders of the communist countries are in agreement with those of many other countries to denounce the alleged dictature which exists in Rhodesia.

Mr. Speaker, if the communist governments denounce Rhodesia, it is because they do not have the opportunity of creating discord and upsetting the government in view of the economic stability, the order and the discipline which are prevailing. Far from lecturing Rhodesia, we would have lessons to learn from that country provided we would go over there and find out what is going on. It cannot be that the government, with its white minority, will indefinitely control a black majority if it is as bad as it has been intimated, from the time Rhodesia has committed the sin of leaving the Commonwealth.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF WOMEN WHO MARRY NON-INDIANS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF REVIEW OF LAVELL CASE BY SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, several questions have been raised in the House about the disposition of the Lavell decision of the Federal Court of Appeal of Canada. On October 8 of this year the Federal Court of Appeal pronounced judgment in the case of Jeanette Vivian (Corbiere) Lavell against the Attorney General of Canada. The three-man court, speaking through Mr. Justice Thurlow, ruled unanimously in favour of Mrs. Lavell's contention that the Canadian Bill of Rights rendered inoperative those provisions of the Indian Act pursuant to which Mrs. Lavell's name had been struck from the register of the Wikwemikong Band upon her marriage to a non-Indian.

Under the Indian Act, where an Indian woman marries outside her band she is no longer entitled to be registered with that band, but if her husband is an Indian belonging to another band she may be entitled to be registered with that other band. However, if she marries a non-Indian she loses completely her status as an Indian and her name is automatically struck off the register. On the other hand, where an Indian male marries he continues to belong to his band and his wife, whether she is an Indian belonging to another band or a non-Indian, is entitled to be registered with his band.

The Federal Court of Appeal found these provisions discriminatory by reason of sex, and that they denied the right of an Indian woman as an individual to equality before the law because they did not accord Indian women the same rights and privileges on marriage as Indian men.

This is a most important case, Mr. Speaker. It is important with respect to women's rights and the status of women upon marriage; it is an important case with respect to Indians as a group and as a people; and it is an important case because it places a further interpretation on the application of the Canadian Bill of Rights with regard to the concept of "equality before the law." It is also the first case dealing with "discrimination ... by reason of sex."

Because of the importance of the Lavell case with respect to the very important issues I have mentioned, and because it will be necessary for the government, with the assistance of the Indian people, to devise policies and laws that will respect the legitimate claims of all concerned, I have concluded that it is my duty as Attorney General of Canada to ask the highest court in the land, the Supreme Court of Canada, to review the judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal. In this regard I think that the women of this country, the Indians and, indeed, all Canadians who may be affected at some time by the interpretation that has been placed on the Canadian Bill of Rights are entitled to have the judgment of the court of last resort on the important issues that are involved.

In the course of these remarks I should make it clear that it would be imprudent, indeed improper, for me as Attorney General to express any views about the merits of the judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal, particularly as the issues involved can still be regarded as sub judice. However, I do believe it to be important to have the court's judgment reviewed by the Supreme Court of Canada and affirmed, if it was correctly decided, or reversed or modified, if it is found to be in error. I have therefore instructed my counsel to make certain that all of the important issues and arguments in the case are fully canvassed before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for sending me a copy of his statement at about one o'clock today. I appreciate having had the opportunity to read it and to review the decision in the case.

At the outset I may say that the first question with respect to this matter was asked by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) on April 20, 1971. I am advised that the husband's father and mother live in his constituency.

Briefly may I say that the facts of the case are very simple. The appeal court of the new Federal Court created by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) ruled unanimously, by a judgment of Mr. Justice Thurlow, in favour of Mrs. Lavell's contention that the Canadian Bill of Rights rendered inoperative those provisions of the Indian Act which, as interpreted by the Department of Indian Affairs, meant that when an Indian woman marries and at the time of her marriage is a member of an Indian band living on a reservation, then because she marries a white man she loses all her rights as an Indian and ceases to be a treaty Indian. However, if the facts are reversed and an Indian man romances a white girl then that man does not lose his rights. The situation seems very strange in view of the fact that when we have pressed the Minister of Justice from time to time to institute an appeal in reference to the constitutionality of Bill C-176 he has refused.

I just want to take a moment to put in its proper perspective what the position is in regard to the Bill of Rights. Section 1 of the bill says:

It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex—

The Bill of Rights confirms that all individuals, whatever their sex may be, are equal. If the Lavell decision makes any sense surely it is because it decides for the first time in Canada that all men and women are equal and that men of all colours are equal in Canada. This, of course, is the first premise of the Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Section 1 of the Bill of Rights must be read in conjunction with section 2 which reads as follows:

Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgement or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared—

I have already set out what the freedoms are as far as this matter is concerned. It seems very strange to me that this government and this minister would want to use the taxpayers' money to enter an appeal on a question of social justice, real justice, when we have for the first time a ruling establishing equality between the sexes and equality as far as race and colour are concerned.

In brief, the Federal Court ruled that an Indian woman cannot be deprived of her rights because as an Indian she married and romanced a non-Indian. Apart from the Drybones case this is the first time a Canadian court has applied the 11 year old Bill of Rights to the issue of sexual equality or sex equality. The trial judge was reversed by the appeal court which has delivered a judgment tempered with justice, natural justice and social justice, ending once and for all the discrimination between sexes and above all between all colours, races and religions. It is therefore most surprising that the government has taken this attitude.

When the appeal goes before the Supreme Court of Canada I hope the Minister of Justice will see to it that the respondents receive money from the treasury of Canada so they can afford the best counsel, the best kind of evidence and put forth the best kind of argument for social justice, equality of the sexes and equality for people in Canada irrespective of race or colour.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in 1961 when we passed the Canadian Bill of Rights the philosophy behind it was equality of all persons regardless of race, religion or sex. After waiting for ten years I am sure that Indian women must have considered that this law of equality did not apply to them.

Taking into account that many of the provinces have passed legislation with regard to discrimination in employment and housing and other matters it rather surprises us in the New Democratic Party that the Minister of Justice did not act earlier with regard to this serious problem. Surely it could have been solved many years ago by making a simple amendment to the Indian Act. This would have avoided not only the appeal to the Federal Court of Canada but also the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. The Minister of Justice still has time to bring forth legislation to amend the Indian Act and to give Indian women an opportunity to appear before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to state their views with regard to the provisions of that act.

Regardless of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, I hope the Minister of Justice will take the initiative and amend the Indian Act. Not only should he do that but he should follow the recommendations set forth in the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and bring forward other legislation concerning discrimination in other fields that is affecting women across Canada. This approach would be much better than to undergo the delay that will be caused by the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. members who spoke before me, I too have doubts that it should be necessary to go through the Supreme Court to apply a basic principle of human rights.

I should merely like to point out that this is an example of the difference that often exists between theory and practice. In the Bill of Rights, the rights are expressed in theory, but the vast majority of the Canadian people doubtless are not aware of the discrimination that exists, even though human rights should normally be recognized. Consequently, the laws applied in our land should take this fact into account.

But I still want to make a minor reservation in view of the privileges acquired by the section of the population of Canada comprising Indians and Eskimos. Of course we should not go against the interests of those directly involved, the Indians. I wonder whether that is not the major reason behind the minister's decision to go through the Supreme Court.

Anyway, I am still wondering whether this was necessary. I think the minister could have given us more information and enlightened us more on the present dilemma, which is, whether the Indians themselves would prefer things to be left as they are at present, as was ruled by the Federal Court of Appeal.

Let us hope that all this will promote real freedom in our country ,and that we will always—in any legislation—respect the rights of the individual and the community.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF TIME ALLOCATION MOTION FOR COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE STAGE ON INCOME TAX BILL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that, even though talks have taken place, agreement could not be reached on the provisions of Standing Order 75A or Standing Order 75B with respect to the proposed allocation of sitting days for the consideration of the committee of the whole stage of Bill C-259.

Accordingly, I am now giving notice that at the next sitting of the House I shall move, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, that four additional days be allotted to the committee on the whole stage of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: What generosity!

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I can be heard through the unseemly merriment on the other side which hardly seems justified I want to take what I consider to be some well-founded and reasonable technical objections to the procedure as it has been launched. Other hon. members will have opportunities to speculate on the wisdom of this course after the very sensible proposal made by my leader which was stupidly rejected. Because of that but also because of the fact this is the first time the government has attempted to pursue its very vague way throughout the dangers, shoals and reefs of Standing Order 75, and because we are treading new roads and establishing precedents for the future, I think it is essential that I take exception. After listening to the President of the Privy Council I think I can do so in two respects.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I know that Your Honour is well aware of the provisions of Standing Order 75, but I must go through all the provisions in order to lay the foundation for the argument I propose to make. Standing Order 75A provides:

When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in this House, states that there is agreement among the representatives of all parties to allot a specified number of days or hours to the proceedings at one or more stages of any public bill, he may propose a motion—

I emphasize the words "one or more stages". Standing Order 75B is just a little different but the difference is significant. It reads:

When a Minister of the Crown, from his place in the House, states that a majority of the representatives of the several parties have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours for the proceedings at any stage of the passing of a public bill, he may propose a motion—

Standing Order 75C reads:

A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration—

I admit at once that, when we were holding the discussions which constitute the conditions precedent before the minister would even have the legal status to launch this application, we considered the number of days which would be required with respect to the committee stage and third reading. I think my friends will agree that in doing so so many days were suggested in respect of the committee stage and so many days were suggested in respect of the third reading stage. However, Mr. Speaker, we were dealing with a package proposition. We are not met here, as we should, must and have to be met, with a situation where a minister of the Crown, within the terms of the Standing Order, states that there was a specific request to limit the numbers of days for the committee of the whole stage alone.

I suggest this is like a tax bill. Under the interpretation of statutes it must be construed strictly against the government. Unless the minister is able to say to the House that he had a discussion with regard to the committee stage alone, the stage in respect of which he proposes to move at a later date—I will have something to say about that later—he is out of court. I will be quite candid and say that in respect of the agreement which we had been discussing I told the minister yesterday that it was impossible for us to meet the terms of Standing Order 75A or 75B.

With the greatest of respect, I suggest that in coming here today the minister must be prepared to state categorically that he offered to the representatives of the other parties, within the meaning of Standing Order 75, a suggestion that there should be a limited time with respect to the debate on the committee stage alone. That was not done. We discussed a package deal. In the package deal there was a division. It was compartmentalized. We considered the total number of days divided between the committee stage and the third reading stage.

This is not simply a technicality. We are dealing with a very serious matter, an attempt to impose fiscal measures upon this country through the use of closure. I ask for Your Honour's serious consideration of that argument.

As I understood the words of the minister, he said "I will be moving on the following day". I assume that to be tomorrow. He used the words "the following day".

I may be premature but I also wish to point out the following under the provisions of Standing Order 75C:

—and has given notice of his intention so to do may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days—

I suggest that any motion proposed must be considered in relation to the terms of Standing Order 42(1) which reads:

Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee—

Throughout the years I have been in this House it has been standard practice as far as a substantive motion is concerned that, unless there is wording in the particular Standing Order to the contrary upon which the government or the mover of the motion may rely, 48 hours' notice is essential and is a condition precedent before the motion can be put.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The Liberals use closure.

Mr. Baldwin: Your Honour may not be called upon to make a clear decision on this point today. If the minister, pursuant to what I understand is his announced intention, rises in the House tomorrow to move, as he indicated he will, the allocation of time, the guillotine, I will expand on this argument tomorrow. I make my argument now to Your Honour for the two reasons I have indicated. The notice which the minister sought to give today is not one of which he can avail himself in order to make tomorrow this particular motion with which he has threatened us today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Closure!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on the two points of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River and I then wish to raise one of my own.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that any debate on the substance of the motion must, of course, take place when the motion has been presented to the House, presumably tomorrow, so at this point we are dealing only with procedural points that should be dealt with before we move to the stage of actual debate.

Despite the many times I find myself in very close agreement with my friend from Peace River, I am afraid I do not see eye to eye with him on the points he has raised this afternoon. It is true that in the secret meetings of House leaders we discussed the whole package.

An hon. Member: A lot of leaks there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well, leaks are the order of the day. In this case the government has to operate under Standing Order 75C as it reads. Standing Order 75C permits a motion dealing with only one stage of debate. There is a reservation, namely, that if there were a report stage and third reading coming up, those two could be dealt with in one motion, but as far as a debate in the committee of the whole stage is concerned a motion under Standing Order 75C can deal with that and that alone. I do not see that the minister is out of court on that count.

The second point that the hon. member for Peace River raised had to do with his contention that 48 hours' notice is required, that the motion has to be put on the order paper and so on. Again, however, I have to disagree with my good friend because it seems to me the wording of 75C is quite clear. It says that a minister of the Crown who from his place at a previous sitting has done two things, has stated that agreement cannot be reached under 75A or 75C, and who has given notice of his intention to do so, may move that motion at the next sitting. The hon. member relies on Standing Order 42. I suggest that 75C is more analogous to Standing Order 33 in this respect. Standing Order 33, an infamous one, provides for the full-dress kind of closure and in that Standing Order there is the same kind of reference, namely, to the minister giving notice the previous day from his place in the House. No 48 hours notice is required in that case; no notice is put on the order paper. So I would say that the minister has the right to give notice, as he has done today, and to make his motion tomorrow.

However, despite my disagreement on those two points there is a point which I feel should be raised even though Your Honour might feel you should treat it simply as a caveat. As the hon. member for Peace River has said, this is the first time, out in the open at least, when an attempt has been made to use Standing Order 75C. So whatever happens now becomes a precedent and we may find ourselves guided in the future by the precedent created on this occasion. The point which it seems to me ought to be made is that Standing Order 75C can be used by a minister of the Crown only when he can assert that there has been no agreement under either 75A or 75B. If, at this time, the three of us on the opposition side of the house were in agreement as to what we should do about the remainder of the debate, and could cite that agreement, the minister would not, I submit, be able to proceed under 75C. This is obvious, but it seems to me that if this point is not made when the rule is being used on this occasion the minister might on some other occasion get up and try to do it again in circumstances which were somewhat different.

The fact of the matter is that on this side of the House, although all three parties are opposed to Bill C-259, we differ as to how we should spend the remaining time, what subjects we should spend it on, and so on. We have not been able, therefore, to reach a three-party agreement as to what should be done with the remainder of the time. It is only because of this situation that the minister is in a position to use Standing Order 75C. My indication at this time that we do not take procedural objection to the use of this rule by the minister is made for the purpose of the record and it is put there for future reference.

When we come to discuss the motion itself, presumably tomorrow, we shall indicate our opposition to this rule being used. We believe that just as we have conducted this debate so far—granted, for many days—on the basis of unanimous agreement among the House leaders, a further attempt should have been made to reach a conclusion to this debate by agreement rather than by the method of confrontation.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I support the comments which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has just made. Bill C-259 is in my opinion a kind of bill omnibus and I wish that it could have been split up. It could have been passed more quickly.

It is now useless to hope that it can be split up. We should bow to facts and take matters as they come and I think that we, of the Social Credit party, have expressed our willingness to co-operate with the government so that parliamentary procedure would be complied with, that we could have reasonable discussions and that the government could pass the bills it has introduced.

I think that if we read the same things in French we can come to an agreement.

I think that Standing Order 75C which is being used for the first time will pose certain difficulties. You will remember that Standing Orders 75A, 75B and 75C were debated in this House. Of course, the majority came up on top but it was understood that it was simply a measure of protection and that Standing Order 75C would never be applied.

In any case if it became necessary to do so its application would be dictated by certain rules that are well established. I think the minister assuming the responsibility of introducing such a motion should give notice as he did today and the motion could be passed tomorrow. This is my way of seeing things. I think that if the government intends to resort to Standing Order 75C, it should give hon. members enough time to assume their responsibilities as representatives of the people and study as many sections as possible. There are 330 in all, and there are still roughly 220 to be passed. So, it is not easy.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the hon. member had the floor a few days ago he pointed out that it was perhaps unfair to him—order, please. I am just drawing attention to the fact that the hon. member for Bellechasse took exception some time ago to the fact that when he or another member of his party took the opportunity to raise points of order or make statements on motions they did not receive the same attention as did other members. The reason suggested was that they were expressing themselves in French. I could not agree with that, but this is another occasion upon which it is extremely difficult to hear what the hon. member is saying.

[Translation]

I believe the hon. member should enjoy the same privilege as his other colleagues, that of being heard in the House.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your generosity and sense of justice for all members, even those who express themselves in French. I am sure all hon. members will wish to co-operate. I once brought up that point and realized that the majority of members agreed. I would not like to get back to the matter every day. I thank you for your intervention and for setting the record straight.

In concluding, if the procedure proposed today is approved, I believe a precedent will be created. If, some day, Canada should live under a government with more pronounced dictatorial ideas, then, our parliamentary system might be ruined and we would turn towards the establishment of a parliament which would not discharge its duties as efficiently and as democratically as today.

In my opinion, the motion which has just been introduced should be studied carefully. The House leaders of the different parties should study it in order to reach an understanding, in order that the whole country—and even the Commonwealth nations—should not be left with the impression that the Canadian Parliament is becoming more and more difficult, but rather that it is a Parliament where the members are really responsible, where even those in the opposition are ready to co-operate. To co-operate does not mean that all the bills introduced by the government should be rushed through. To co-operate means to study them wisely and intelligently, to make suggestions, to propose amendments such as the rules permit.

I do not think that there was obstruction, and I would not like to see Standing Order 75C applied at the present time.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Peace River rising to speak to the same point of order? The hon. member will appreciate that he has already spoken but it may be he would like to address himself to the additional point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I see at the same time that the hon. member for York East wishes to participate in the procedural debate and perhaps he should be recognized first.

Mr. Steven Otto (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I rise only to deal with the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I ask your instruction since he indicated that he wanted you to rule on the interpretation of the word "or" in Standing Order 75C. He wanted to enter a caveat depending on how Your Honour interpreted the meaning of that Standing Order. He interpreted it to mean where an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A "and" 75B. If Your Honour is going to make a ruling on that point, then I think we should have an opportunity to argue it. I suggest with all respect that the only issue at stake now is Standing Order 75A. There has been no unanimous agreement. I submit that is the only point you should cover in your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might lay to rest or ease the hon. member's difficulty if I tell him that my understanding of the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was that it was more theoretical. He indicated he was only entering a caveat. I think any hon. member who has looked at this rule over a period of months would appreciate that there is a difficulty here. Fortunately for the Chair that decision does not have to be made at this time. That is my understanding of the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 37 I wonder whether I might confirm what Your Honour has just said. I was not asking what the hon. member for York East said I was asking in any case. But neither was I asking for a ruling from Your Honour on the crucial point in this rule at this time; I was simply entering a caveat so that on another occasion what has happened today will not be a precedent that could be used against us.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, on the same basis may I say I am not going to deal with the matter raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre save as it is related to what I said on my first point. What I was saying, if I may put in one sentence—and I think it is substantiated indirectly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—was that the minister cannot stand today and say that an agreement was not reached under 75A or 75B in respect of the stage which we are now at, the committee stage, because never were we asked with respect to the committee stage alone to agree to this number of days. We dealt with the matter as a package—five days and three days.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to interrupt this interesting debate and if hon. members want to make further contributions I will listen to them. It might be easier for the Chair to listen to argument on this point than to go to the question period. If there are no other contributions I am prepared to make a ruling.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I begin by agreeing with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the point of order presently before the House does not raise the point against which he has now issued his caveat. I quite agree that what is occurring now would not constitute a precedent for a future event. I also want to enter a caveat and to reserve our position to argue that point when it does arise on an entirely different basis.

I have two comments to make and one has to do with notice. I have read the words of the Standing Order which on that point seems to be clear. I am reinforced in my position by the wording that appears, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned, in Standing Order 33, which seemed to me to be absolutely four square. As we know, in the past Standing Order 33 has been interpreted as permitting me to give notice today and to move the motion tomorrow. So on that point I do take that position.

With respect to the first point made by the hon. member for Peace River, it seems to me that my obligation, or at least the obligation of a minister of the Crown, is to state that there has not been an agreement. That obligation is imposed upon a minister by the Standing Order.

It is clear from the discussion that there has not been an agreement. There has not been a majority agreement along the lines that would frustrate the operation of Standing Order 75C. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has stated, if a conclusion had been possible under 75B, if all the opposition parties had agreed to a particular position, then he would at least be able to argue the point of order that he will argue at some time in the future. But at the moment it is clear from what has been said that I am perfectly correct in telling the House that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B. That is clear and it has been supported by the evidence of all opposition House leaders. Therefore I feel that the conditions of Standing Order 75C have been met.

Standing Order 75C does not prescribe any by-laws or guidelines on the way that the informal meetings of House leaders should be conducted. In the absence of that we must take the wording of the Standing Order as it is. All I can say is that the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River was fully covered in our discussions. He knew, as all other hon. members who took part in the discussions knew, the proposal that I had made relating to the committee stage of the bill. That is the fact and it has been supported by another spokesman.

Therefore I simply argue that I have satisfied the obligation of a minister of the Crown to state that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B. It seems to me it is not for anyone to inquire at this stage how that factual conclusion was reached, but that is the factual conclusion.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other contributions to the interesting debate on the procedural point raised by the hon. member for Peace River I might be prepared to give my opinion at this stage.

Dealing first with the last point, that raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I should like to reiterate that what he is doing now is entering a caveat which refers to the possible application and reference of Standing Orders 75A and 75B and to the question of whether, in certain circumstances, it would be open to a minister on behalf of the Crown to invoke the provisions of Standing Order 75C in cases where there had been agreement between the three opposition parties, or more if there were more in the House. Of course, as had been pointed out by hon. members, this is a theoretical point at this time on which the Chair should not be called upon to rule. I should therefor like to go to the other two points which were made by the hon. member for Peace River.

The hon. member for Peace River suggests that the motion should propose a time allocation to cover all the remaining stages. He suggests, if I understand him well, that it is irregular to have a motion which would refer to only one stage. This, essentially, is the point that he has made. If I am wrong, and the hon. member seems to indicate that I am, I will ask him to correct me in my interpretation of what he said.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate ever to correct you. The point I was trying to make was that our discussions took place with relation to both remaining parts of the bill, the completion of the committee stage and third reading, and that our discussions with regard to that were bounded by that particular consideration. It is true that a number of days was considered with respect to both parts, but it was a package. I suggest that the minister must now establish prima facie that we rejected an agreement with respect to the committee stage alone.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the point which the hon. member is making. Effectively, what he wants the Chair to do is to go beyond the terms of the Standing Order as it now is. That is exactly the point which was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He suggested that the Chair has to rule on the Standing Order as written and as it is before me for interpretation. Standing Order 75C says that if a minister has given notice of his intention so to do he may "propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage." This, I suggest, is what the minister has done at this particular stage. I do not see how it is open to the Chair to go beyond this. Perhaps the Standing Order should be rephrased and presented in another way, but my understanding of it is clear. I have to take the statement made by the minister as expressing the situation which is covered by those words of the Standing Order.

The second point is perhaps a little more knotty, a little more difficult to deal with. It has to do with notice. Obviously, in a general way all motions proposed to the House require 48 hours written notice. I think it is important to note that in this particular case it is not notice of the motion which the minister is required to bring forward at this time, which might put him under the disposition of Standing Order 42(1) dealing with 48 hours of notice of motions. Standing Order 75C requires the minister to give notice of intention to move a motion. I suggest that there is a substantial difference between the two. Standing Order 42(1) specifies the circumstances in which any member of the government or any member of the House proposing a motion must give 48 hours written notice. The type of notice specified in Standing Order 75 is not, I suggest, covered by the terms of Standing Order 42(1). It seems to me that this type of notice is more analogous to the type of notice required under Standing Order 43, under Standing Order 6(5)(a) or even under Standing Order 26, where a specific and perhaps exceptional procedure is proposed by the Standing Order.

I think it should be mentioned, to be fair to hon. members, that we are not dealing with something which, in practice, is all that serious. If the Chair were to rule that 48 hours notice is required, it would mean that the notice would be filed this afternoon before six o'clock and, instead of the motion being moved tomorrow, it would be moved on Friday. I appreciate that 24 hours difference and an additional day's debate in the House is a matter of importance. I am not trying to minimize that at all. However, we are not dealing with anything which is basic or substantial. I would think that the Chair would find it very difficult to convince himself that the provisions of Standing Order 42(1) apply to this case and that 48 hours written notice is required. I have to take the Standing Order as it is presented to me. That is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested. He stated a moment ago that he does not often disagree with the hon. member for Peace River. I would say that although I sometimes disagree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in this case I think his interpretation of the Standing Order is closer to mine than that proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. I would think I would have to rule that the notice of intention proposed by the President of the Privy Council would meet the requirements of the Standing Order as it appears in the Standing Orders of the House at the present time.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which does not arise from the notice or from your ruling. Some days ago I asked the government House leader whether the standing committees of the House would sit while the tax bill was being debated before the committee of the whole House. Since the guillotine is going to fall, I would think that the government and the government House leader ought to act in the best interests of Parliament. These committees have been sitting. I had to attend a committee session yesterday, because I was obliged to, and I therefore missed a part of the debate on the tax bill. If the guillotine is to be lowered, let the government introduce some procedure under which Members of Parliament can express their views on a bill as important as the tax bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Although I have not looked this up, I recall that when I raised this matter with the government House leader he suggested and gave me to understand without any qualification that there would not be any standing committees sitting. We find ourselves involved in this sort of procedure because the government will not even accede to our suggestion and split the bill.

An hon. Member: Guillotine MacEachen.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, more than once I gave assurances to the House that I would attempt to reduce the sittings of committees at times when we were sitting in committee of the whole on the tax bill. If you look at the record you will see that while this bill has been in committee of the whole very few committees have been sitting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: It has not always been possible to prevent sittings of committees, because chairmen of committees and other hon. members of the House who have rights, as has my hon. friend who has raised the objection, have come to me and said that for one reason or another a committee must sit. This applies to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates because it is operating under a dead-line of its own. Today, for reasons which the chairman can explain, a particular committee will sit. I do not think it is a great obligation on members of the House, even though I am striving to cut down the number of sittings of standing committees, to expect them to attend one or two committee meetings while the House is sitting in Committee of the Whole. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, from my own observation of the Committee of the Whole members are not impeded in attending the committee because of other committee sittings. I think it is because they have other responsibilities not in the standing committees which have prevented them being in the chamber in the last few weeks.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I have not read it, but if my memory serves me right—I have not checked it today because this matter arose after the notice and ruling were given—the government House leader said there would not be sittings. He did not say that some would not sit and others would. I would like to hear him say that he gave his word to the House that the committees would not sit.

Mr. Horner: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say what was said by the government House leader or by the House leader of the Conservative party. I wonder if we could have an indication from the House leader of the government concerning what will happen now that closure has been invoked by the government. Will the committees continue to sit during the four-day debate on the tax legislation? Could we have some statement from the House leader in that regard? Surely, owing to the country's concern over this tax bill, no committees should sit except the Committee of the Whole of the House of Commons.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to advise my hon. friend that closure has not been invoked and it is not the intention of the government to invoke closure on this particular bill. This is an entirely separate procedure. I will tell my hon. friend what I told the hon. member for Calgary North earlier, that I will do my very best to reduce the number of committees or eliminate them entirely. I do not remember exactly what I said at the time and neither does my hon. friend, but I did say I would cut them down as much as possible and I will do that during the next few days.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Questions

MOTOR VEHICLE SAFETY—DEFECT INVESTIGATION

Question No. 1,795—Mr. Mather:

Is a motor vehicle safety investigation being made into alleged (Nader) defects of (a) Chevrolet—engine mounts in 1966-69 models (1969 models currently under NHTSA investigation) (b) Chevrolet Corvair—clutch cable in 1965-66 models (c) Pontiac, Chevrolet, Buick and Oldsmobile—Rochester quadrajet carburetors in 1966 models (d) Chevrolet Vega—dash panel flammability in 1971 model (e) GM full size model cars—power braking systems in 1967-70 models (f) Mercury Capri—engine fires in 1970 model (g) full size Ford—hood latch in 1970 model (h) Plymouth, Dodge and Chrysler—Brake Drum in 1967-71 models (i) Fireball Industries, "Castaway 18.5 Motorhome"—spare wheels size does not correspond with size of "running" wheels?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Department officials are investigating the alleged defects in 1966-69 model Chevrolet engine mounts. The size of the affected vehicle population in this country has been defined and officials are now examining service records in cooperation with General Motors of Canada as well as evaluating the performance of specific Canadian vehicles of this design.

With respect to the other alleged defects announced in the United States by Mr. Nader, the Department is attempting to obtain all available information form the United States Department of Transportation and Mr. Nader so that investigations of similar Canadian vehicles may be initiated.

PREPARATION AND PUBLISHING OF GOVERNMENT REGULATIONS

Question No. 1,816—Mr. Fortin:

1. Did the government publish the texts of all regulations promulgated since January 1970 and, if not, which texts were not published and for what reasons?

2. Were such texts drafted in French and in Egnlish and, if so, when did the government adopt this policy?

3. What are the names of the legal officers in charge of drafting the regulations promulgated by the government?

4. Are the legal officers bilingual and did they receive Common or Civil Law training?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The Prime Minister's and Privy Council Offices and the Department of Justice advise as follows: 1. Yes, with the exception of those regulations exempt from publication, pursuant to section 9 of the Regulations Act, by Order in Council P.C. 1954-1787 of 18th November, 1954, which was published in Statutory Orders and Regulations Consolidation, 1955, Vol. 3 page 2676.

2. The texts of regulations as defined in the Regulations Act are required to be drafted in the French and English language. This policy was first established by Order in Council P.C. 5355 of 30th December, 1946, which was published in Statutory Orders and Regulations of January 8, 1947, page 2.

3. and 4. There are no legal officers particularly charged with the drafting of regulations promulgated by the Government. The drafting of regulations is part of the duties of every legal officer advising a department, board, commission or corporation that makes or recommends the making of regulations.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Question No. 1,870—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has corporal punishment been used in federal institutions in 1970 and, if so, how many times?

2. How many prisoners have received corporal punishment more than once?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

STATISTICS ON CANADIAN AND INDIAN POPULATION

Question No. 1,879—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the last year for which figures were available, what was the total per capita investment in housing?

2. In the same year, what was the total per capita investment for Indian housing from (a) the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development appropriations (b) band revenues (c) individual contributions?

3. What were the average salaries and wages (excluding military pay) for 1970 earned by Canada's labour force?

4. What was the average income of Canadian Indian families excluding general assistance and family allowances?

5. What was the average age of death for all Canadians, male and female, for the last year for which figures are available?

6. What was the average age of death for Canadian Indians, male and female, for the same year?

7. Of the total Canadian population, how many families live in houses of three rooms or less?

8. Of the total Indian population, how many families live in houses of three rooms or less?

9. Of the total Canadian population, how many live in homes which are provided with electricity, sewer services or septic tanks, running water and indoor baths?

10. Of the total Indian population, how many live in homes which are provided with electricity, sewer services or septic tanks, running water and indoor baths?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. The total "per capita" new investment in housing for the Canadian population was estimated at $102 during the calendar year 1970.

2. (a) $105.52; (b) 13.15; (c) 5.87.

3. Not available as asked. The total salaries and wages paid during 1970 divided by the average number of paid workers was $6,522.15.

4. Accurate information relating to average income by families is not available. Data are being compiled and based on information obtained in a National Survey in 1969. Approximately 14,395 individuals were earning up to $1,000; 9,133 individuals were earning up to 3,000; 3,159 individuals were earning up to 4,000; 6,530 individuals were earning over 4,000.

5. Average age of death for all Canadians in 1969 was: Males, 62.9 years; Females, 67.3 years.

6. Average age of death for Canadian Indians in 1969 was: Males, 38.6 years; Females, 42.1 years.

7. Distribution of families by number of rooms per dwelling is not available. However, 1961 Census data show that at that time in Canada there were 682,376 households living in dwelling units of three rooms or less.

8. 30.6 per cent of total number of on-reserve families live in houses of three rooms or less.

9. This information is not available for families, but at the time of the 1961 Census there were the following numbers of Canadian households with: Running Water 4,058,313; Installed Bath or Shower 3,659,520; Connection to Sewer 2,902,622; Septic Tank 948,257. The question on electricity was not asked in the 1961 Census.

10. 81 per cent of Indian homes on reserves are equipped with electricity. 25 per cent of Indian homes on reserves are equipped with sewer services or septic tanks. 30 per cent of Indian homes on reserves are equipped with running water. 19 per cent of Indian homes on reserves are equipped with indoor baths.

INFORMATION CONCERNING STAFF OF PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE AND PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Question No. 1,886—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. (a) How many full-time employees were there on the staff of the Prime Minister as of October 1, 1971 (b) what was the total salary cost of that staff as of October 1, 1971, in terms of gross annual salary rates?

2. (a) How many full-time employees were there in the Cabinet Secretariat as of October 1, 1971 (b) what was the total salary cost of that staff as of October 1, 1971, in terms of gross annual salary rates?

3. (a) How many full-time employees were there in the Federal-Provincial Relations Secretariat as of October 1, 1971 (b) what was the total salary cost of that staff as of October 1, 1971, in terms of gross annual salary rates?

4. (a) How many full-time employees were there in the Administrative Division of the Privy Council as of October 1, 1971 (b) what was the total salary cost of that staff as of October 1, 1971, in terms of gross annual salary rates?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. (a) Total of 90 including two by contract, 39 stenographers, and 21 clerical staff and messengers. (b) $915,684.

2. (a) Seventy six, including 31 stenographers and one clerical staff. (b) $1,119,448.

3. (a) thirty two, including 14 stenographers (b) $406,476.

4. (a) One hundred and thirty, including 12 stenographers and 99 clerical staff and messengers. (b) $926,736.

OWEN SOUND AIRPORT—INSURANCE OF LICENCE TO OPERATOR OF NOR-VAR AERODROME

Question No. 1,894—Mr. Noble:

Does the Minister of Transport intend to issue a licence to the operator of an aerodrome designated as NOR-VAR, located near Owen Sound, Ontario?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No. The Minister considers that the NOR-VAR aerodrome is too close (2.6 miles) to the existing Owen Sound Airport.

HIGHWAY SAFETY—LIGHTING, DEFROSTING AND DEFOGGING SYSTEMS

Question No. 1,907—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the government advise when the testing under Canadian conditions to improve vehicle forward lighting systems and rear-window defrosting and defogging systems will be completed?

2. Will the recommended changes apply to used motor vehicles as well as new ones and will the new regulations be implemented this year?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The headlamps comparison phase of vehicle forward lighting systems testing has been completed in September and a computer simulation model will be developed by N.R.C. at the end of the next year. The cold chamber testing of vehicles rear-window defrosting and defogging systems is being completed now; the analysis of data and the evaluation of performance levels are expected to be reported in the spring.

2. Notice of proposed regulations for rear-window defrosting and defogging will be given later in 1972. These safety standards will apply only to vehicles manufactured after the regulation is proclaimed.

CONSULTATIONS CONCERNING SPECIFICATIONS RELATIVE TO FERRIES HOLIDAY ISLAND AND VACATION ISLAND

Question No. 1,921—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

What consultations took place between the Department of Transport and the Government of Prince Edward Island relative to the specifications for the two ferries, the Holiday Island and the Vacation Island on the Tormentine-Borden run?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The specifications for these two vessels were compiled after full and careful studies were made of present and future traffic demands. The Government of Prince Edward Island was consulted on the data on which architectural decisions were made and on certain aspects of the vessel design such as cafeterias, etc., for the crew.

QUEBEC—NUMBER OF ENGLISH SPEAKING PENSIONERS IN RECEIPT OF OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 1,932—Mr. Godin:

In the Province of Quebec, how many English speaking pensioners receive Old Age Security?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Old Age Security records are not kept in such a way as to make it possible to answer this question.

*roHALIFAX HARBOUR—CONTAINER TERMINAL FACILITIES

Question No. 1,933—Mr. Stanfield:

1. Has the Minister of Transport completed his review of the serious allegations made with regard to the container terminal facilities in Halifax Harbour and is the Minister now satisfied that all facilities are fully adequate?

2. Will the Minister table any reports or studies on the adequacy of the facilities?

3. Will the Minister inform the House when additional container facilities will be established in Halifax Harbour and has a location been determined?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is rather long, and, with the consent of the House and particularly of the hon. member, I would ask that it be printed in Hansard and considered as read.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The above-mentioned answer reads as follows:]

The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. The 55-acre container facility at Pier C in Halifax completed in August of 1971 with two cranes and two berths appears fully adequate to meet short run current demands. Its capacity can be expanded if demand warrants with the addition of one or two cranes.

2. Studies of both long term and short term demands are now in progress by consultants who will recommend the most suitable location for any additional container handling facilities that may be required. The consultants Gibb Albery Pullerits and Dickson were recommended by the Port Task Group of the Metropolitan Area Planning Committee and the studies are financed jointly by the Province and the Federal Government DREE. Publication of the consultants' report is a decision to be made by the Metropolitan Area Planning Committee.

3. The National Harbours Board after receipt of the Consultants' Report will recommend when and where new container ships berths should be constructed. The Minister will report to the House after due consideration the action to be taken on those recommendations.

IMPORTATION OF RUSSIAN TRACTORS

Question No. 1,947—Mr. Gleave:

1. When were the first tractors of Russian make imported into Canada?

2. Who was the importer and what was his address?

3. How many Russian tractors have been imported to date and what was (a) the total for Canada (b) the total for each province?

4. Is a supply of repair parts assured for those tractors which have been sold and are in operation and, if so, where are the parts stored?

5. What discussions has the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce had with their USSR counter-parts in order to assure that the conditions of financing and supply would be satisfactorily arranged?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Agriculture as follows: 1. The first Russian tractors were imported into Canada for trial purposes in 1968. There were eight tractors involved in this phase.

2. The importer was Twin Lake Tractors Ltd. located at the time of importation in Orillia, Ontario. This company is now located in Oakville, Ontario.

3. There have been 115 units of various sizes imported into Canada, since May 1970. Of these, some 40 are in the hands of farmers in Alberta, Ontario and Quebec. The balance is in warehouses in Oakville and Montreal. 70 per cent of the total sales have been to Ontario with the balance split evenly between Quebec and Alberta.

4. Service and repair parts are available for all units in operation in Canada and this service is operated from Montreal.

5. The arrangements made for marketing the Russian built tractors in Canada was a purely commercial venture between Tractorexport and Twin Lake Tractors Ltd. Neither the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce nor the Department of Agriculture have participated in any discussions with their USSR counter-parts.

SCIENCE COUNCIL EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,950—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

What amount was spent for the fiscal year 1970-71, for the Science Council?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Science Council of Canada is concerned, the amount spent for the fiscal year 1970-71 is $1,184,740.97 and the amount of major services provided without charge by other government departments for the same period is $124,240.

MOTOR VEHICLE EMISSIONS

Question No. 1,956—Mr. Robinson:

1. Will the government require that all gasoline powered vehicles be fitted in such a manner as to control the pollution of exhaust emission?

2. Will the government ensure that all motor vehicles will have pollution control equipment without increasing the cost of the vehicle to the consumer?

3. To what extent is it anticipated that the pollution control for motor vehicles will be effective and what will be the anticipated percentage of pollution reduction from the average motor vehicle?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Motor Vehicle Safety Regulations prescribe exhaust and evaporative emission standards for buses, chassis-cabs, multi-purpose passenger vehicles, passenger cars and trucks.

2. The present emission standards have added to the cost of gasoline powered vehicles over those which were manufactured prior to the Regulations. Costs will be considered in establishing future Regulations.

3. Pollution control regulations have already reduced the emissions of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons from individual motor vehicles by 60 per cent to 70 per cent from the emissions of pre-regulated engines.

FISHERIES—CASSILIS, NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY FISH HATCHERY

Question No. 1,997—Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi):

1. How many salmon fry were hatched at the Cassilis, Northumberland County Fish Hatchery, in the years 1968, 1969, 1970?

2. What rivers were stocked with such young salmon, and what percentage of the total hatch was deposited in the Miramichi River or its tributaries in those years?

3. What percentage of the eggs used to produce such fry were obtained from salmon caught after August 15, in each of the above years.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. 1968, 921,485; 1969, 316,584; 1970, 533,515.

2. 1968—Northwest Miramichi and tributaries; Southwest Miramichi and tributaries; Little Southwest Miramichi and tributaries; and Tabusintac. 1969—Southwest Miramichi and tributaries; Little Southwest Miramichi and tributaries; Northwest Miramichi; Bartibog; and Nepisiquit. 1970—Southwest Miramichi and tributaries; Northwest Miramichi and tributaries; Little Southwest Miramichi and tributaries. Percentages to the Miramichi and its tributaries in 1968 were 99.2; 1969—87.7; 1970—73.8. The remaining percentages were used for smolt production, Fisheries Research Board studies and pollution studies.

3. 1968, 96.4 per cent; 1969, 93.1 per cent; 1970, 59.4 per cent.

WORLD WAR II VETERANS—EDUCATIONAL GRANTS

Question No. 2,004—Mr. Robinson:

How many veterans of the Second World War obtained educational grants for (a) elementary school (b) secondary school (c) trades training (d) university education (e) professional education (f) other special courses?

Questions

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Statistical information relating to this question has not been maintained in the categories specified. To provide the information as requested would require an examination of each veteran student's file. Training at the elementary and secondary school levels was provided to approximately 29,000 World War II veterans in order to qualify them for entry to trades training or post-secondary education. Trades training was provided for 80,495 veteran students, and post-secondary education including university was provided to 53,949 veteran students. These figures include those who have received educational benefits under the Pensioners Training Regulations subsequent to the immediate post-World War II period.

WORLD WAR II VETERANS—TOTAL COST OF EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 2,008—Mr. Robinson:

What was the total amount paid to veterans of the Second World War for educational rehabilitation payments?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The total cost of educational assistance provided to veterans of World War II under the post-discharge rehabilitation order, the Veterans Rehabilitation Act and Pensioners Training Regulations was $197,202,453 to March 31, 1971 including the costs of education and training paid to educational institutions and allowances to the veteran student.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REMOVAL OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY SIGNS

Question No. 2,021—Mr. Southam:

Does the government support the recently announced British Columbia Government policy to remove Trans-Canada Highway signs on that part of No. 1 Highway going through British Columbia and to replace them with signs "British Columbia No. 1"?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Trans-Canada Highway sign was designed by representatives of all ten provinces in cooperation with federal government officials. By agreement by all ten provinces, this route marker was erected along the entire Trans-Canada Highway. It would be regrettable if the Government of British Columbia or of any other province saw fit to withdraw from this voluntary agreement.

MINIMUM WARRANTY STANDARDS FOR NEW CARS

Question No. 2,032—Mr. Mather:

1. Is consideration being given, in co-operation with the provinces, to establishing minimum warranty standards for new cars which will clearly impose upon the manufacturer the responsibility to repair or replace defective parts within a prescribed time limit at no cost to the purchaser?

2. Is consideration being given, in co-operation with the provinces, to initiating and developing an effective program to dispose of abandoned motor vehicles, including a plan to rid the countryside of such vehicles and to speed the re-cycling of old cars into useable materials?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No.

[Mr. Robinson.]

2. No, it is not within the purview of the Department of Transport.

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES FOR HEALTH AND SCIENCES

Question No. 2,056—Mr. Orlikow:

In each of the past three years, what were the federal expenditures on the planning, building and equipping of health sciences teaching facilities for (a) Hospital Construction Grants (b) National Health Grants (c) General Public Health Grants (d) National Research Council (e) Medical Research Council (f) Health Resources Fund (g) others?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and National Research Council as follows: Under the various programs administered within the Health Insurance and Resources Branch, Federal expenditures on the planning building and equipping of health sciences teaching facilities were as follows for the fiscal years 1968-69, 1969-70 and 1970-71: (a) Nil; (b) nil; (c) nil; (d) nil; (e) nil; (f) 1968-69, $33,922,922; 1969-70, $34,382,978; 1970-71, $37,500,000; (g) nil.

3. (a) 2,753; (b) 574; (c) 72; (d) 6.

4. (a) One for the period ending Sept. 30, 1971; (b) Nil.

(a) 1969-70, Nil 1970-71, Nil 1971 to October 31, Nil
(b) 1969-70, Nil 1970-71, Nil 1971 to October 31, Nil

6. Not applicable.

POWDERED MILK PURCHASES

Question No. 2,084—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Have any commercial organizations or companies requested to buy powdered milk for exporting purposes during the month of October 1971 and, if so, which organizations or companies?

2. Which organizations or companies did buy powdered milk and in what quantities?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): In so far as the Canadian Dairy Commission is concerned, the answer is: 1. During the month of October some commercial organizations, both Canadian and foreign, enquired of the Canadian Dairy Commission whether it had milk powder for sale for export. The Commission had no powder and no record was kept of the enquiries. Information is not available as to requests to private Canadian organizations.

2. None from the Canadian Dairy Commission. Information is not available as to purchases from private Canadian companies.

COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITES

Question No. 2,104—Mr. Robinson:

Will a system of communications satellites obviate the necessity of having cablevision and will the government consider the feasibility of providing sufficient communications satellites so that Canadians will not require cablevision to obtain TV viewing excellence?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): A system of communication satellites is not expected, in the near future, to obviate the necessity of having cablevision for those who wish to enjoy a variety of signals and who wish to avoid the use of an antenna. The government is engaged in research work in the communications satellite field, designed to take maximum advantage of what this new technology has to offer. It is expected that, in the course of time, broadcasting from satellites direct to homes will prove to be attractive in certain situations, perhaps first in the rural and remote areas and later in urban areas. A great deal more needs to be known about the costs before accurate predictions can be made.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

COPY OF REPORT ENTITLED "ECONOMIC IMPACT STUDY OF ALTERNATIVE NATIONAL PARK PROPOSALS AT VAL MARIE, SASKATCHEWAN"

Motion No. 259—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of a report prepared for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development by Kaplan Consulting Associates Limited, entitled "Economic Impact Study of Alternative National Park Proposals at Val Marie, Saskatchewan".

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 259 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it agreed that this motion be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notices of Motions Nos. 75, 243, and 256.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—RESEARCH STUDIES

Motion No. 75—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the research studies undertaken by the Transportation Policy and Research Branch of the Department of Transport as reported in answer to Question Number 223 in Hansard of December 17, 1969 at page 2069.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this motion seeks the release of 12 different consultant studies prepared for the transportation policy and research branch of the Ministry of Transport. Some of these studies have already been tabled, others have been provided to the hon. member. The three remaining studies are considered confidential and under the circumstances I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the motion could stand until the hon. member returns.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

1971 CENSUS, REGINA EAST—NAMES OF PERSONS EMPLOYED

Motion No. 243—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the following regarding the 1971 Census (a) the names of all census enumerators in the constituency of Regina East (b) the names of all others who were engaged to work on census work in the constituency of Regina EAst (c) the names of all those who applied for work in taking the census but who were not engaged.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, parts (a) and (b) are acceptable; however, with respect to part (c), Statistics Canada is applying the same rule as in section 25 of the Public Service Employment Regulations. Section 25 prevents such disclosure without consent of the individual concerned. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) feels that it would not be in anyone's best interest to secure such consent and to publish these names. If this is agreeable to the hon. member we would table the requirement in parts (a) and (b).

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I will agree to the proposal as it is now subject to my right to resubmit a motion dealing with section (c).

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO SPECIFIC PROJECTS OF THE OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Motion No. 256—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between Ministers of the Crown and the Secretary of State relative to the approval of specific projects of the Opportunities for Youth Program.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is considered that such correspondence is of a confidential nature and that it would not be in the public interest to disclose it. I would request, therefore, that the hon. member be kind enough to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I find this an unusual request insasmuch as cabinet ministers are being given preferential treatment relative to other members of the House. It is a well known fact that members were asked to communicate with the minister in respect of this program. Therefore I would ask for an immediate vote.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AGENDA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister about his trip to Washington on Monday. In view of the statements from the President's office in Washington that the meeting with our Prime Minister is being held as part of the President's plan to meet with allied leaders prior to his visits to China and the USSR, can the Prime Minister tell us what is the principal purpose of his visit to Washington and what topics are on the agenda.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the agenda, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot enlighten the House yet. There has been no final agenda agreed to. The indication I have is that the President would prefer a very wide ranging discussion on very general matters, international and bilateral. For my part, I do intend discussing with the President some of these international matters but equally matters of concern to us as a result of Mr. Nixon's measure of last August.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—POSSIBLE BREAKTHROUGH IN SOLVING PROBLEMS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of some of the statements from the Prime Minister's office, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what kind of "major breakthrough" he was referring to when he spoke to the press I think on Monday last? What kind of "major breakthrough" was the right hon. gentleman hoping for?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am rather certain I did not talk of a major breakthrough. What I did indicate was that discussions had been going on at the official and ministerial level for weeks and months, particularly since the August measures by the United States, and that we felt there were a certain number of questions which might be brought to a head at the meetings in Washington next Monday between the president and myself.

FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—DISCUSSIONS OF AUTO PACT AND ARMS PRODUCTION SHARING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield: I think the Prime Minister has indicated that he hopes to discuss the economic initiatives taken by the president in August, that is the surcharge. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he also intends to discuss with the president the auto pact and the arrangements we have between the two countries regarding production of armaments.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau: It is possible that these questions will be discussed. I am waiting to learn from officials whether they are at the stage, as I think they are, at which we might be able to reach some conclusions. If further discussions are needed between officials, I will not try to take any final position in Washington.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—ALLEGED AGREEMENT TO REMOVE AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether reports that some agreement at the official level with regard to Canada's abandoning of certain safeguards in the auto pact are correct, and whether the Prime Minister intends to inform the House before he goes to meet the president of the United States of the government's position with regard to the auto pact, and particularly whether the government is in fact ready to agree to the removal of the safeguards contained in it.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I have just indicated to the Leader of the Opposition, it is possible that by next Monday we will be in a position to state to the president Canada's bargaining position on this. I am not in a position to do so now. Both I and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have said that the auto pact has been under discussion for many months, even before President Nixon's measures last August, and that of course there is always the possibility that one or the other side would denounce the pact and cease making it operative. That is why in our discussions we have always tried to ensure that there would not only be the best possible deal for Canada but that there would be also a deal which would be acceptable to the United States.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—POSSIBLE LACK OF NECESSITY TO BARGAIN FOR REMOVAL OF SURTAX

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will inform the House, and therefore the people of Canada, what the government's position is with regard to the negotiations on the auto pact. May I also ask him whether he has found, in the surveys that have been made I understand, that the impact of the 10 per cent surtax makes it unnecessary for him to seek to bargain with the president of the U.S. to have it removed so far as Canada is concerned.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We always took the position that we would not bargain for the removal of the 10 per cent surcharge. It was a unilateral decision by the United States, and we do not intend to bargain in any sense with the United States or to give away any of the things which we believe to be in Canada's interest in exchange for the withdrawal by the U.S. of its unilateral measure. As to the auto pact itself, it has been under discussion for many months, as I have said, long before the measures last August, and the two subjects are not related.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF GRAY REPORT AND SCREENING MECHANISM BY WASHINGTON

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): In the discussions which the Prime Minister will have with the president of the U.S., can he assure the House that the so-called leaked Gray report will not be approved by the president before it is approved by the Parliament of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister failed to rise in his place to answer my first very logical and serious question, could the Prime Minister assure the House and thus the country that the screening mechanism outlined in the Gray report is not to be the White House of the U.S.?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Mr. Speaker: I will return to the hon. member for York South for a supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FOREIGN OWNERSHIP BEFORE PRIME MINISTER MEETS U.S. PRESIDENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in order to avoid misunderstanding, whether we can expect that he or some member of the cabinet will announce the government's policy with regard to foreign ownership, the screening process or whatever elements there are in that policy, before he sees the president of the U.S. and therefore before he discusses that policy with him, because in answer to a question some days ago the Prime Minister said that that subject might be discussed with the president of the U.S. Therefore, I would like to know whether we will hear from him before that happens.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): When I dealt with this matter a few days ago, I indicated that the government intended announcing its policy and publishing the background material on the facts and the analysis at the same time. I indicated that this was really a technical question of translation, printing, editing, and so on. I made this announcement before I, myself, knew that I was going to see the president next Monday, and we have been trying to do this as quickly as possible. The government's position is known to the government. We will make it known to the country as soon as possible under the conditions which I indicated to the House a few weeks ago.

UNITED STATES SURCHARGE—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVAL IF AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS REMOVED

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has the government received any assurance from the government of the United States that the 10 per cent surcharge, as it applies to imports from Canada, will be removed if the two principal safeguards embodied in the auto pact are eliminated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA—POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF ENERGY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the questions being put to the Prime Minister I wonder, without going into detail because I am not suggesting that would be proper, whether the Prime Minister would make a short statement before he goes to see the president indicating the subjects he intends to discuss. That is the first part of my question.

The second part relates to the matter of energy. Is it the intention of the Prime Minister to discuss this, particularly in view of the fact that our proven reserves in the last ten years have moved from 23 trillion to 60 trillion cubic feet, and there is a need for energy in the United States as well as a need for trade.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can only repeat that I cannot say what the agenda will be or what it will include, mainly for the reason that it has not yet been arrived at. I am only able to repeat what I said to the Leader of the Opposition, that I had an indication from the White House that they wanted to have a general discussion on international and bilateral talks. It is possible that we will raise the question then.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT BY CANADA TO RAISE CEILING ON DUTY FREE PURCHASES BY TOURISTS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Has the government tentatively agreed to raise the $24 ceiling on duty free purchases by Canadian tourists in the United States to make it more in accord with the allowances that the Americans give to Canadians, and will this agreement be formalized during the Prime Minister's visit to Washington?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not so agreed. But if we had, I imagine it would be very unwise of me to tell the House that we had if we wanted to use this as a bargaining point with the United States. It seems unwise for the opposition to ask the government to put all its cards on the table and thus throw away all its bargaining points.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary question. But first, I take the liberty of bringing to the attention of hon. members that there are quite a few supplementary questions which are being sought, and we may have to limit them in a short while. For the moment, the Chair has recognized the Leader of the Opposition.

ALLEGED AGREEMENT BY CANADA TO REMOVE AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS AND INCREASE TOURIST ALLOWANCES—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs was stating government policy when, as reported in the Toronto Star of today, he said that Canada agreed to drop the safeguards in the auto pact for two years and tourist allowances would be enlarged.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs informs me that he never said such a thing. He was not correctly quoted by the Toronto Star. He said that these subjects were discussed but that is as far as he went, and that we were studying them but that no decision had been made; certainly, none was announced by him.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY IN ADVANCE OF RELEASE OF GRAY REPORT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the acknowledged difficulties that he has pointed out regarding the publishing and the printing of the Gray study, would he state government policy in advance of the publication of this study to end the uncertainty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF FRENCH LANGUAGE IN QUEBEC AIR CONTROL TOWERS—FEAR FOR SAFETY OF OPERATION

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that about a month ago in the House the Minister of Transport was informed that the president of the Air Traffic Controllers Association, Mr. Campbell, was really concerned about the use of French in certain Quebec control towers, would the minister be in a position to tell if Mr. Campbell's concern is well founded or if this is news of minor importance only.

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I had what was agreed by both parties, and was so stated publicly, a most useful and successful meeting with representatives of the Air Controllers Association. This subject was fully covered. I think I can make two reports to the House. The first is that the bilingual policy, as it has been announced in relation to air controllers, does not in any way compromise safety, and the second report is that it is not an abnegation of the government's policy as stated with regard to bilingualism.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—POSSIBILITY OF CONCESSIONS ON DEFENCE SHARING AND ARMS PURCHASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked previously by the Leader of the Opposition, and deals with discussions that the Prime Minister might have with the President of the United States on questions of armaments and defence sharing. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether, in determining positions before he goes to Washington, he has concluded that this might be an area where we may have to make some major concessions with respect to future purchases of equipment for the Canadian Armed Forces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not see how a member can ask the government to say in advance that it is seriously prepared to make a concession in a negotiation that has not yet begun.

FORTHCOMING MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER WITH U.S. PRESIDENT—REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION OF INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of his pending visit to Washington on Monday next, would he consider placing high on his agenda of discussions with President Nixon an item asking for the President's full support in a move to re-activate the International Grains Arrangement, more particularly as it would establish a floor price for wheat?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the hon. member's suggestion under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the right hon. Prime Minister indicated yesterday that he could not give an assurance that negotiations on social security with the province of Quebec will be completed before the introduction of that province's family allowance bill on December 25, could the minister indicate what stage negotiations have reached at the present time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): There are ongoing discussions, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO BILL C-264

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St-George's-St-Barbe): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate when we can expect second reading of Bill C-264, and is it still his intention to put increased family allowances into effect before May 1, 1972?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to proceed with the legislation depending on the time available in the House for it and on discussions with the provinces, including Quebec. Precisely when it will come before the House depends on both these matters.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

HEALTH

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS FOR NURSES IN MIDWIFERY TO RELIEVE SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the serious and acute shortage of doctors, is the government prepared to explore ways of assisting the provinces in establishing programs for nurses in midwifery? In this respect, I mention the program which is currently being undertaken in the province of Ontario?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, through national health grants we are already supporting many demonstration projects being carried out in the provinces through medical schools, having this purpose in mind.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED APPROVAL OF ROUTE OF PIPELINE THROUGH LANDS COVERED BY TREATIES 8 AND 11

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would like to ask the minister whether he has conveyed to Westcoast Transmission Company a letter of intent with regard to a right of way for what is known as the Pointed Mountain Pipeline and, if he did, was he aware of the fact that this proposed pipeline would pass through territory involved in Treaties 8 and 11, concerning which no settlement of Indian lands has been arrived at?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes.

As for the second part, the hon. member himself gave the answer when he said that treaties nos. 8 and 11 have not been settled, which means that no lands have been made available to Indians in that area of the country.

[English]

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF APPROVAL FOR CONSTRUCTION OF PIPELINE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether in view of the objections to his course of action, which have been voiced by the Indians of the Northwest Territories, he will inform Westcoast Transmission that he is suspending this approval for the time being, and certainly until the Energy Board has held its hearings?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we consulted with Indians of the Liard River area in that regard and several of them worked at the construction of installations there, and will later work on the pipeline project. I do not think it would be wise to take a new decision at this stage.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is it true that a certain individual—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: —in charge of the supervision of Indian education has been fired recently—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: —because he attended a meeting of the Indian Affairs Committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that a question cannot be asked in this way. Perhaps the minister might assume that the question has been asked correctly, and so reply to it.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rephrase my question.

Mr. Speaker: I was hoping that the minister understood it, but perhaps the hon. member might rephrase it.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that someone was suspended for failing to meet obligations towards the Public Service Commission of Canada. Under the regulations governing the Commission that person was suspended as are all civil servants behaving likewise.

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the minister has suggested that a certain individual has been suspended. Would he qualify that? Does that mean suspended for X number of days or for X number of reasons, or does it mean fired, dismissed, and a complete fait accompli with regard to his employment?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, to me, "suspendu" means suspension.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED SMUGGLING OF ALIENS INTO UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Acting Prime Minister if the government had yet a report on an investigation made in connection with allegations of large scale smuggling of aliens into the United States from the Montreal area. I should like now to ask the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in light of new charges concerning large scale traffic in the smuggling of aliens and immigrants into the United States from both British Columbia and the Montreal area, when will the government be introducing its amendments to the Immigration Act and will the government refer this matter and related matters to a committee of this House to make a thorough and complete investigation?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of illegal entry of persons to the United States by way of Canada is one of continuous concern to the minister. He will be back in his place in the House on Monday, and I hope to see the question referred to him as early as possible.

INDUSTRY

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND U.S. PRESIDENT—POSSIBILITY OF SALE OF CL-215 AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURED BY CANADAIR

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has left the House, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Could the minister tell us whether the Prime Minister will take the opportunity of his meeting with President Nixon to discuss the possible sale of CL-215 aircraft to the United States, in order to create employment at Canadair, which is seriously affected by unemployment these days?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister has said that the agenda has not been discussed, but I do know it will be the purpose of the Prime Minister in his representations to the United States to support the economy and employment in Canada.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie. I apologize to the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, he had a supplementary question. The hon. member for Mackenzie will be recognized afterwards.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

In order to clarify my question as well as the minister's answer, does the minister intend to ask the Prime Minister to suggest to the United States that they buy CL-215 aircraft, with a view to increasing production at Canadair?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN MAN-MONTH REGULATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Some time ago I directed a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which was taken under advisement by the Minister of Labour. It related to the 30-man hour requirement before a project could be approved. At that time the minister said he would take it under advisement. Has any decision been made in this regard so that smaller municipalities may participate in the program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I took the matter up with the deparment, and I think the question was raised subsequently in the House. The minister pointed out that the department was quite responsive to the concept of pooling small projects for smaller municipalities. There seems to have been some objection from certain municipalities to the basic formula, however. After the review of the 30-man day concept in the next few weeks, possibly the minister would be able to make a statement on whether it is necessary to vary this particular format.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask, after the government has made a decision in this regard whether they will be meeting with some of these municipalities to discuss some sort of formula that could be implemented immediately so that there would be no further delay in this matter?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the present scheme allows for a 30-man day formula. The difficulty with this formula is that some of the smaller municipalities and some of the smaller projects are unable to meet this standard. The minister has suggested, with some effectiveness, that certain projects be pooled in order to meet the 30-man day formula, which means hiring only six people over five months. If this proves to be ineffective as well, then I presume the minister would want to consider further modifications.

STATUS OF WOMEN

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF TASK FORCE STUDYING RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMISSION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): In the absence of the Prime Minister, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of the statement the Prime Minister made today that the task force considering the Status of Women report has finished its work. Could the minister, who has now taken upon himself the heavy responsibility of dealing with women's rights, give some idea when this task force report will be tabled in the House?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am at a disadvantage, not having been here when the Prime Minister made the announcement. If I recall the report, it was sent to the appropriate interdepartmental committee. That committee has finalized its report, and is in the process of reporting back to me. I would imagine it would be at least two months before the report of the interdepartmental committee is on my desk for appropriate action.

RIGHTS OF INDIAN WOMEN WHO MARRY NON-INDIANS—REQUEST THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT UPHOLD DECISION OF COURT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question for the minister of Justice. In light of the last question, and in light of the fact that the appeal court has ruled there should be equity as between women, will he now instruct the counsel whom he will pay to represent the Attorney General of Canada to take the position that the law as set down in the appeal case should be upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I made my statement earlier today, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION TO ENSURE EQUALITY BETWEEN SEXES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister of Labour supplementary to that posed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Unlike the Minister of Justice, who does not believe in the equity of the sexes,—

An hon. Member: Wait till he goes home.

Mr. Alexander: —I was wondering whether the Minister of Labour was now in a position to advise us if he is now reviewing the Fair Employment Practices Act and other labour legislation in order that we can have some consistency with regard to equality of the sexes? Has he any report in this area?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the legislation which has been brought forward so far this session reflects this positive approach. I am hopeful that in the next session of Parliament, when the Fair Employment Practices Act is revised, it will further reflect the principle that all of us in this House support, that of equality between the sexes.

An hon. Member: Would that be for Indians, too?

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. At the time he brings in this legislation, I wonder if he would take the matter up specifically and primarily first with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have always found the Minister of Justice to be a very strong advocate in this particular field.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He is one of your boys.

Mr. Nowlan: One Irishman to another.

CANADIAN NATIONAL

CLOSING OF STATIONS IN BELLECHASSE—REQUEST THAT CTC HOLD PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the intention of the Canadian National authorities to close many stations in my constituency and to replace them by another service called Servo-Centre, may I ask the minister whether the Canadian Transport Commission will hold public hearigns in the area in order to provide those involved with an opportunity to express their views in that respect?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if this rationalization by the Canadian National Railways in the servo-centre sense is one which comes under the Canadian Transport Commission. I am making inquiries and will inform the hon. member.

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROJECT—EFFECT ON ENVIRONMENT AND INDIANS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and also to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that the Quebec government has let a $20 million road contract in connection with the James Bay Power Project, what steps have been taken by the federal government to determine the effects this project will have on the environment, and what steps are being taken to protect the livelihood of thousands of native people which could be jeopardized?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development might handle the latter part of the question. There is a joint study going on in respect of the environmental effects between the province of Quebec and the federal Department of the Environment. Preliminary results will be made available in a study to be published in a few weeks time.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to answer the question of—

[English]

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would very much appreciate it if the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development could answer the latter part of the question, since it is very important.

Mr. Speaker: This is what the minister was trying to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was already standing to reply to the hon. member, and I am happy to tell him that the Quebec government, the federal government and the Indians have agreed that a conciliator should consider the problems of all Indians in this area, and the conciliator involved is already at work.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would recognize the hon. member for St. John's East. We will be running short of time in a few minutes, so perhaps hon. members who have had an opportunity to ask questions during this question period will have to wait until tomorrow. The hon. member may have a supplementary, but we will have to try to limit supplementaries during the next eight or nine minutes.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only reason I would like to ask a supplementary is that both ministers will not be here tomorrow, so I appreciate this opportunity. I hope the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will make sure that the consultation with the native people of this area will not be of the same type as it has been in Alberta, so that we will not have the same confrontation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since the first report of the Atlantic Development Council has been on the table of this House since April 7, and since it contains important recommendations on the strategy for development of the Atlantic region, may I ask the minister if any policy decision has been taken on those recommendations and if not, why not?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. I ask the minister if the government intends to adopt, in whole or in part, the recommendations of the Atlantic Development Council?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We are surely going to adopt some of the recommendations, but certainly not all, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

FREE TRADE ALLEGED OBJECTIVE OF AUTO PACT—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following the publication in today's Globe and Mail of a letter by the important Chairman of the United States Finance Committee, Russell Long, in which he reiterates the American position that the autopact is a free trade agreement, and following a report that came today from Washington to the effect that senior Canadian and American officials have agreed on the abandonment of the safeguards in the autopact, could the minister inform the House that it is the Canadian position that one of the objectives of the autopact is free trade in automobiles?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the immediate effects of the automobile agreement, which was criticized in many parts of the House, was to open up a great deal of trade between Canada and the United States. The principal objection of the United States was that they felt we got a great deal more advantage out of it than they did. Perhaps, my hon. friend agrees but I do not.

• (4:10 p.m.)

AUTO PACT—ALLEGED AGREEMENT TO ABANDON SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question. Having received no answer at all, I ask the minister if it is government policy, as reported in Washington today, that the Canadian government is willing to give up the existing safeguards on the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Put in that way, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION ON REACTIVATION OF JARRING COMMISSION AND SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 242

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the United Nations General Assembly debate, is the Canadian delegation taking any initiatives which might lead to a reactivation of the Jarring commission which might bring about a situation in the Middle East whereby the Security Council resolution 242 might become something close to an actuality?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is the objective of the Canadian government to support resolution 242. We would be very happy if Ambassador Jarring could resume his activities. This is the general purpose of our activities in New York at the present time. However, as the hon. member knows, there are many difficulties in the way.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF RIGHTS OF INDIAN WOMEN MARRIED TO NON-INDIANS—COSTS OF LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Earlier this afternoon there was an announcement by the Minister of Justice regarding a decision handed down by the Federal Court respecting the rights and privileges of Indian women married to non-Indians. The minister said this decision will be referred to the Supreme Court. Can the minister assure the House that the costs of legal counsel chosen by the Indians will be taken care of by the department?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to consider the hon. member's suggestion.

RIGHTS OF INDIAN WOMEN MARRIED TO NON-INDIANS—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF RETROACTIVE ASPECT OF COURT DECISION

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): A supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since a decision was handed down some time ago by the Federal Court respecting the rights of Indian women married to non-Indians, can the minister say whether any study is being made by his department to give consideration to the retroactive aspects of this for the protection of Indian women who married non-Indians in the past and lost their Indian rights?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the consequences of the ruling of the Federal Court of Appeal and we are waiting for the Supreme Court decision before taking any action. It is obvious that radical changes will take place in the administration of my department if the Supreme Court upholds the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXTENSION BY MASSACHUSETTS OF FISH PROTECTION AND POLLUTION BOUNDARY 200 MILES SEAWARD—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government studied legislation approved by the State of Massachusetts to move their fishing protection boundaries 200 miles eastward, as promised by the minister on November 25? Can the minister say what indication this action will have on Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I said in reply to the question at the time, Mr. Speaker, we are asking the United States state department what they think about this. We have not yet had a reply.

FISHERIES TREATY WITH NORWAY—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My question is to the Minister of Fisheries. It is related to the previous question asked by the hon. member for St. John's West. Can the minister say whether on July 15 the federal government signed a treaty with Norway regarding the sealing operation on the Atlantic coast, and whether that treaty enables Norway to harvest our marine resources up to within three miles of our coast, thereby violating our territorial seas? Will the minister table that document, and when?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, an agreement has been under negotiation with Norway relative to the phasing out of Norwegian fishing operations in Canada's fishing waters. Ratification of that agreement by Norway is now in process. The question as to when it might be tabled might better be addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been waiting three days to ask this question. The minister should answer it. Was a treaty signed between the two countries and does the treaty permit Norway to harvest marine resources within three miles of Canada's coast?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the Minister of Fisheries has said, Mr. Speaker, we have negotiated an agreement with Norway. It is not usual to publish such an agreement until it has been ratified. It is my understanding that the Norwegians have now released the text, and I will be happy to table it.

Mr. Lundrigan: When?

ALLEGED PURCHASE OF TROPICAL PLANTS FOR DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT BUILDING IN HULL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. It is similar to a question asked yesterday about tropical plants. Will the minister investigate another report that nearly $40,000 worth of tropical plants were purchased for the Department of the Environment building in Hull and perished due to inadequate heating facilities?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I will be glad to investigate that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. Perhaps the matter of tropical plants ought to be pursued tomorrow.

WAR MEASURES ACT

CHANGES SUGGESTED BY QUEBEC MINISTER OF JUSTICE—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is for another flower on the government side, the Minister of Justice.

An hon. Member: He is a wilted lily.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of a recent speech by the Quebec minister of justice, Mr. Choquette, in which he recommended three extensive changes to the War Measures Act having to do with the referral to the Supreme Court, the establishment of an ombudsman and a human rights tribunal, has the federal Minister of Justice conferred with the Quebec minister on these recommendations and are these recommendations presently under consideration for legislation, either later this session or in the next session?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker. There is an order of the House calling for a referral of this matter to a committee of the House.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question. The minister said "no". Does he mean no, there has been no communication with the provincial minister on his suggestions, or no to the fact there is no legislation beyond that which is presently on the Order Paper?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I meant no globally, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

QUEBEC CABLEVISION LEGISLATION—ALLEGED REQUEST OF QUEBEC MINISTER TO DISCUSS JURISDICTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question may be related to that asked by the hon. member for Egmont. However, I want to ask it separately. Your Honour will be happy to know I am not going to ask the Secretary of State about the state of naïvety of the Quebec Provincial Police. My question may have something to do with naïvety. Has the Secretary of State, who is responsible for the CRTC, received repeated requests from the Quebec minister of communications to meet with him to discuss jurisdiction over cablevision? If so, has he replied to them and, if not, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Minister of Communications (Mr. Stanbury) and myself have held meetings with the Quebec Minister of Communications; the latter came here once and in answer to his invitation we went to Quebec two or three times.

QUEBEC CABLEVISION LEGISLATION—ALLEGED INTENTION OF QUEBEC TO ISSUE LICENCES

Mr. J.P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question. In view of that rather equivocal answer and the fact that the minister may or may not have answered the question directly, I ask the minister if he is aware of the provisions of bill 35 in the province of Quebec and, more particularly, has he been personally advised by the communications minister that the province of Quebec intends to legislate or regulate the issuance of licences for cablevision provincially and ignore the CRTC?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, provisions in Bill 35 or in the Quebec green paper are self-explanatory. As to what the Quebec minister of Communications has told me in this regard, it concerned meetings about which we had, by common agreement, decided to make no public statement.

QUEBEC CABLEVISION LEGISLATION—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the hon. Secretary of State.

As the Minister responsible for Communications in Quebec has given the outline of his bill, can the hon. Secretary of State tell us whether negotiations between Quebec and Ottawa have been completed and if so, when he is to make a statement in order that Quebec may legislate seriously in this matter?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe Quebec has been inhibited in legislating, or has been concerned with our negotiations or the stand of the federal government. I can make no statement at all as to what action the government of Quebec will take. In my opinion, I must say, negotiations and exchanges have not been completed.

SCIENCE

POSSIBLE CREATION OF ORGANIZATION TO FORMULATE POLICY AS SUGGESTED BY OECD

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Is the government considering creating an organization to formulate policy on general scientific and technological information as suggested by a report from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): I am sorry, but I did not fully understand the question. Perhaps the hon. member would put it again. There was noise on the other side of the House.

Mr. Ritchie: Is the government considering creating an organization to formulate policy on general scientific and technological information, as suggested by a report from the O.E.C.D.?

Mr. Gillespie: I do not know whether the hon. member is referring to an old report of the O.E.C.D. which suggested the formation of a ministry of state for science and technology.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): With reference to a question of privilege I raised earlier today, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs met at 3.30 and I see we have just finished the question period. Since I raised this question, I should like to read a short excerpt from Hansard for September 14, 1971. I put the following question to the leader of the House:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the government House leader in reference to the business of the House during the Income Tax debate? Has he given serious consideration to seeing that none of the standing committees of the House sit during the tax debate because of the difficulty and complexity of the bill that is under consideration and which will be considered further in the Committee of the Whole House?

The answer by the leader of the House was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to ensure that while the Committee of the Whole is sitting and discussing the tax bill no meetings will be scheduled for standing or special committees. That is the general policy that I hope will be followed. There may have to be an emergency committee meeting, but that is not planned. I hope that committees will meet in the mornings and that we will have the rest of the day for the bill.

In no way has any emergency arisen with regard to Bill S-9 or the other business before several committees. The minister cannot get out of his difficulty by way of that loophole. Knowing the leader of the House, I believe he will be the first to stand up and say he gave the undertaking which has been quoted. What has happened may not have been his fault, but the way in which these committee meetings have been scheduled has imposed heavy burdens on those who are trying both to attend committees and take part in the debate on the tax bill, particularly now that the guillotine, or call it what you will, has fallen and the hon. gentleman is ending the debate. So much for the undertaking given on September 14.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I thank the hon. member for reading that statement. I think I have carried out that undertaking. It has only been in the case of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee,—

Mr. Horner: And the Justice Committee which is meeting right now.

An hon. Member: And other committees, too.

Mr. MacEachen: —which is operating under a special time deadline, that in order to give an opportunity to the committee to do its work I agreed that it might meet in the afternoon. In the case of a meeting this afternoon, the chairman represented to me that it was vital to hold a meeting today.

Mr. Nowlan: That is not correct.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the representation which was received. I shall continue to curtail, as far as possible, the meetings of standing committees while this tax bill is in Committee of the Whole. I disagree with the conclusion reached by the hon. member. I believe I carried out that undertaking.

Mr. Speaker: And that, of course, is a matter for debate between hon. members. Perhaps House leaders might discuss the question among themselves at the first opportunity.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 30, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. In accordance with the statement of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, as reported at page 10,032 of Hansard for November 30, the committee will now proceed to Clause 2 appearing at page 596.

Shall clause 2 carry?

On clause 2: Estate Tax Act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The clause reads as follows:

The Estate Tax Act does not apply in the case of the death of any person whose death occurred after 1971.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, to be relatively as brief as that clause is. Since the leader of the House is here, may I preface my observations by expressing the hope that in future we shall get away from the nonsense of one and a half hours on a Wednesday being counted as a debating day. I take strong objection to that. A good deal of the time spent so far today has been taken up by lengthy government statements. I hope that in addition to the nonsense of allocation of time the House will not be restricted by artificial guillotines in the form of time wasted by the government.

With regard to the clause under consideration, we in the official opposition are in favour of it. Nevertheless, one has to look at some of its effects. As I said on second reading and on a number of other occasions, the people of Canada are being saddled with an extra tax as a result of the imposition of the capital gains tax. There is no way any government member can defend the imposition of an additional tax. The capital gains tax is incorporated into the income tax schedule and it is a new tax. The estate tax is being eliminated. True enough, in the province of Alberta this will mean there will be no estate tax or succession duty collected; that province will have the new tax.

One may say that a capital gains tax is merely a prepayment of an estate tax. The provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia at the present time levy their own succession duty, since provinces do not have the constitutional power to levy an estate tax. Succession duty is a direct tax; estate tax is an indirect tax. The net result is that by exercising its constitutional power, the province of Quebec is levying and collecting its own succession duty as is Ontario. Hitherto the federal government levied and collected estate tax, but there was an agreement with the province of Quebec whereby there could be mutual credits. In effect, the heirs of a citizen of Quebec who died, did not pay a double tax, and the same applied to citizens of Ontario and British Columbia.

We are now told that Manitoba and Saskatchewan intend that a succession duty be levied, since there is no way those provinces can get an estate tax. There is no federal-provincial agreement on intercredits or mutual credits in regard to a capital gains tax and a succession duty. Therefore, John Citizen who unfortunately passes away will have his estate subjected to two taxes in the appropriate cases, first the capital gains tax because of the deemed realization on death, and secondly the succession duty of the province in which he lives. Just because he pays a capital gains tax, it does not mean that he will pay any less succession duty. To the extent that he pays capital gains tax, he will be paying more tax. How does this sit with members, particularly those from the province of Quebec? Can they explain to their constituents that they are not paying additional tax as a result of this so-called tax reform?

Mr. Paproski: They do not care about the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Horner: They are all Trudeau servants. They do what they are told. They are serfs of the imperialistic Pierre.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I put the same question to hon. members from Ontario, such as the hon. member for Essex West. Is the former parliamentary secretary over on that side going to take the same attitude on this particular point as he took on the subject of co-ops and credit unions? Is he going to face up to his farmers and say they are not to be taxed an extra amount? He is going to have to admit that. If the government had followed the proposal put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, about which I have spoken many times and outlined in great detail, the federal government and the provinces might have reached an accord in the interval. The problem might, in this way, have been resolved. But this bill is going to come into force on January 1, 1972 come hell or high water, says the government.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is why I find the attitude taken by government backbenchers so incomprehensible. They are supposed to represent their constituents, here in Ottawa and, as well, they represent the people at large. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Finance has said, it is an undeniable fact that the people in those provinces where succession duty applies, or where one is going to come into force, are going to pay an additional tax, a new tax. Not one hon. member opposite can deny that. Certainly, I defy the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to gainsay that statement.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, may I have the floor on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Osler: My point of order is this. I was invited to say something, then when I rose in my place I was shouted down. I think the committee was left with the erroneous impression that, (a) I did not know what the people for Winnipeg South Centre wanted and, (b) for some reason they did not want this bill passed. Let me tell the hon. member I have been back to my riding quite often recently and the message that comes through loud and clear is that the people are fed up with the length of time this bill has taken. They want it passed, even though it may not be a perfect bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair does not think the hon. member should take advantage of rising on a point of order to make that point. He should seek the floor if he wants to make any comments.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that the hon. member would be moved to make a speech, not to raise a spurious point of order.

Mr. Osler: You should not make statements like that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I invite the hon. member to read an editorial which appeared in the Vancouver Sun for November 26. It quoted the main point made by the Minister of Finance and reads:

> Mr. Benson's main point is that "the uncertainties of the current economic situation argue against delay".

That is what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said. It continues:

> "We would accomplish nothing by a further unsettling period in anticipation of tax reform," he said. He also argued that his tax bill is incapable of separation into key components because of the "financial inter-relationship" among them".

That is wrong. I have shown how the clauses can be carved up without any difficulty. The editorial continues:

> This is nonsense. Business planners and business advisers have told the minister almost unanimously that they can't understand many of his reforms let alone foresee how they might adjust to them. Members of parliament are even more uncertain about the consequences.

How true that is. Even when we asked the advisers to the parliamentary secretary yesterday, we could not get any answers because they were uncertain.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Osler: What are you trying to sell?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Certain government supporters have no idea as to what this legislation will do. They have no idea about these interrelationships.

Mr. Gibson: How does the hon. member know that?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would say that the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is possibly one of the most ignorant of the implications of the provisions of this act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think hon. members on both sides of the committee should let the hon. member make his speech and, at the same time, give the Chair a chance to hear what is being said.

Mr. Gibson: The hon. member is being carried away.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, some of the statements hon. members on the other side of the committee make have no more effect than the cawing of crows that sit on the wire fences on the prairies. Be that as it may, may I conclude my remarks—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —by saying that although we support this section, we want it clearly understood that there are reservations about it. I hope the hon. member for Ottawa Centre, the former Solicitor General, who applauded when I said I was about to conclude my remarks, will take the time to explain to his constituents the suggestion that there is not to be a new tax for them, that there is to be a credit system between Ottawa and the province of Ontario whereby there can be an intercredit with regard to whatever is paid on capital gains, that is, on the deemed realization on death, and the succession duty that may follow. I know he is a competent solicitor and in his former portfolio must have been familiar with this problem. I am sure he will be able to explain to the satisfaction of his constituents how it is that additional taxes are no longer additional taxes. They are, somehow, to be melted into something else. Now you see them, now you don't. That is the precise effect which the government wants to bring about with regard to the capital gains tax and the continuation of succession duties in the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West has made much of the estate tax formerly levied by the federal government, except that in some cases the government handed over the amounts levied to these provinces.

We are talking here in terms of approximately $120 million of which 75 per cent was given back to the provinces. The point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West has no special merit. On the other hand, I respect him very much for he sat with many of us on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. He contributed much to the debate and we needed his enlightened comments from time to time. But I think that in this case, his lights seem to be rather dim.

I must say that faced with a loss of revenue which could amount to $75 or $100 million approximately, some provinces will have to manage without that.

The hon. member for Edmonton West spoke of the province of Quebec, and even attacked us to a certain extent asking us to be brave enough to speak on behalf of our province. I say it again: I am pleased to accept his challenge. I say to him that, if my memory serves me right, there was a Bélanger Commission on taxation. I believe the secretary of that commission was Mr. Robert Bourassa, an economist and lawyer. One of the main recommendations this commission made to the province was that is it should tax capital gains.

Now, basing myself on the report of the Bélanger Commission, whose secretary was Mr. Robert Bourassa who, fortunately for the province of Quebec and Canada as a whole, is now premier of that province, I am convinced that the income Quebec loses can easily be made up by a capital gains tax. I feel that in the near future the Quebec premier will also want to introduce a mini-budget or at least make a few proposals concerning a tax reform in Quebec, a reform which will, in particular, also consider taxing capital to recoup its losses as far as succession duties are concerned. I do not think, however, that those hypothetical expenses could be removed, as suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I have perhaps some information sources which are not available to the hon. member. This can happen. As a result of a possible loss of revenue, namely the succession duties, in order to come to an agreement with the provinces which have not established succession duties and to discourage Canadians from moving to provinces where there are not any to die, I am convinced that the province of Quebec will closely consider that bill to increase its revenue by levying a capital gains tax.

What are the terms of such taxation? I do not know, but I think that our terms are satisfactory. However, it is unnecessary at the present time to discuss how capital gains will be taxed, because the matter has been eloquently stated by the hon. member for Edmonton West. However I think it is a very plausible solution, bearing in mind what has already happened in the province of Quebec.

I was listening very attentively, as usual, to my hon. friend from Edmonton West, who was speaking as though the bill had already been adopted. I am very happy about that. I believe, of course, that the bill will be adopted shortly. I am happy to see that he talks about it as if it were already law. It will come into force on January 1, 1972. I am very happy about this.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, after resorting to closure!

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, although many sections in this bill seemed to have been introduced in a fit of absent-mindedness and, sometimes, in a spirit of expediency on the part of the government, the particular section dealing with estate taxes seems to be introduced in a fit of pique. It seems that, the government became angry with the provinces because the provinces were not agreeing with every suggestion the federal government was making and that it said to the provinces, "We are not getting much money out of estate taxes, the heck with it. Collect your own. We are out of it." I suggest that that was a most irresponsible act on the part of the federal government, particularly since in many areas of federal and provincial jurisdiction there is friction. We ought to make every effort to co-operate, and we should not bring about confrontations such as this particular section of the bill may do.

I listened to arguments about capital gains taxes versus estate taxes, and some hon. members spoke in a way that suggested you could trade off one tax against the other.

Mr. Horner: That is what the minister suggested.

Mr. Saltsman: I find it difficult to believe everything I hear. I do not know how much hon. members who suggest that one tax may be a trade-off against another know about taxation. How do they think taxes are raised? Do they think that you raise taxes from people who have no money, from the poor, or do you raise them according to ability to pay, and therefore from those who have sizeable incomes. There is no other way. One is not a substitute for the other.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The fallacy of the argument is suggested in another way. While it may be true that some estates do have capital appreciation and might be subject to capital gains in the course of the years as the estate progresses or even upon realization of death, many estates have no capital appreciation. The capital gains tax, therefore, does not apply to those estates and we have handed them a large bonus. They will not be paying a capital gains tax and now they will not pay an estate tax, either. This whole thing from any point of equity is incomprehensible to me. We have to ask why this section was introduced and why Parliament is being asked to abolish estate taxes.

Just a little while ago we made a number of changes in the legislation which I think went a good distance in meeting some of the representations about estate taxation in Canada. For instance, we exempted the widow or widower survivor from particular taxes. We enlarged the provisions to enable surviving children to be granted major exemptions, particularly minor children. It looked as if we were moving in the right direction in respect of estate taxation. Even with this legislation, there would be an absolute limit concerning the amount of money any estate would pay. In many cases, our estate tax legislation was far more lenient than that of most countries of the world. Why then has the government apparently thought it is necessary to abolish the estate tax completely, if not as a way to retaliate against the provinces and then say in a very piqued way that it will collect the money for them. This is a continuation of the system of taxation anarchy we had hoped to avoid.

Now, the government says that it is putting the provinces in a very difficult position and that if four of them agree maybe something can be worked out. We have a situation where the provinces are trying to get the federal government to find some method to assist them in the collection of estate taxes. While it is true that estate taxes do not represent a large proportion of the federal government's revenue, in the case of some provinces it represents a sizeable income for them which they can least do without. It is incomprehensible, when we are talking about more sharing between provinces and when there is a need for some sense of accommodation between one province and another, that we would deliberately make it possible for one province to have a better deal than another province. Presumably, national advertising campaigns will be conducted pointing out the glories of dying in Alberta in contrast to dying in Manitoba or in British Columbia. It is an insane program. In my view it is not something this House should countenance.

The Carter Commission looked into this aspect of taxation and made what in my view and in the view of my party was a very reasonable and sensible proposal. They said the tax should be borne by the recipient and not by the estate, and should be paid for at the marginal rate of the person who receives the benefit from the estate. A very wealthy man receiving another considerable or sizeable estate would pay a higher rate than the person who was not wealthy and received an estate. This would seem to be the fair way. Again, there is a maximum of something like 50 per cent on that. There are two ways to look at an inheritance. Some people, I suppose, would say if they were left $1 million it should not be taxable. Others might say they should have to pay $500,000 in taxes and receive an amount of $500,000. Another person might say, "Isn't it wonderful, I received $500,000".

Now, you can always make an argument for a person who has earned the money directly himself because he would say he should have some enjoyment of the money he acquired primarily through his intelligence, his perseverance or whatever it might be. I believe he has a fair claim. It is a claim which must be listened to. But how strong is the claim of a person who did not contribute to the formation of the estate when he says he does not want to pay any tax on it. What claim does a person like that have? Certain people have claims. Farmers' sons, for instance, have some claim because I know that very often sons of farmers contribute to the establishment of the estate. Therefore, my party is quite agreeable to seeing special provisions brought into the estate legislation that would recognize the claim of a farmer's son.

I think the wife of a person who has acquired an estate also has some claim, because even Carter has pointed out that very often the estate is built up, not through the work of the male head of the household alone but also through the contribution of the wife. We realize the validity of that claim that the wife should be exempt from taxation during her lifetime in respect of the inheritance. Then, there are the claims of those who often are not even immediate members of the family and who may be removed by considerable distance from the family itself so far as blood relationship is concerned. What claim do these people have that they should not pay their fair share of taxes on the wealth they inherit? In my view, they have very little claim and I find it very difficult to sympathize with people who do not wish to pay a share of the taxes that I think are due to society.

There is another factor in this argument which I believe is important. Society, in my view, has a claim on estates. In the modern world, very few fortunes are built up just through the personal work of the individual. Many fortunes are acquired because of the social structure of our society and because of the protection our society affords to entrepreneurs through education, markets and many other things. Therefore the wealth created in our society is not created by an individual alone but by all the things in our society which assist him. A person who wants to live by himself in the jungle, and who can make $1 million selling coconuts to himself may say he is entitled to all the money he can make selling coconuts to himself, but that is not the way things are in Canada or in any other modern civilization. Therefore we think this section is a great mistake. It is a mistake in the sense that before long Parliament will have to consider alternative legislation in order to avoid a war between provinces, a war which most provinces would not want, in the field of inheritance taxation and related items of that kind. We will regret the passage of this particular section and we will regret that there was not sufficient foresight on the government benches to anticipate the problems which arise from the abolition of estate taxes in this country.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton West who has done such an outstanding job on this bill. I must say that as I listened to him I obtained a greater appreciation of the importance of this legislation to the Members of this House. Because I believe the bill is important, and because I feel members of the House should be here to hear this debate I move:

That the committee now rise, report progress and seek leave to sit again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (5:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Order.

Some hon. Members: Out.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Out.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think hon. members know the rules. The motion has not been put as yet. I have not read it. The minister wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is not rising on a point of order.

Mr. Gray: How do you know? I have not stated it yet.

Mr. Bell: Put the motion, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bell: Put the motion.

Mr. McGrath: This is disgraceful conduct on your part, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I recognized the minister on a point of order.

Mr. Bell: You cannot do that.

Mr. McGrath: Put the motion.

Mr. Paproski: Put the motion. The motion comes first.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. The motion for adjournment has been made. It must be put forthwith. There can be no debate, no point of order, no discussion.

Mr. Gray: I would like to speak, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bell: You must put the motion. You have been waiting 15 minutes to put the motion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Yes, order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Will you resume your seat. I recognized the minister on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: You cannot. I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East moved that the committee rise, report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? All those in favour of the motion.

Mr. Bell: Gibson, out. You were not here all the time.

Some hon. Members: Deachman, out.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bell: The Liberal whip just came in. Out.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: All those against the motion?

Mr. Bell: This is phony. They cannot come in.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Those against the motion please rise.

Mr. Bell: Oh, no. This is a farce.

Mr. McGrath: To hell with this. This is disgraceful.

Mr. Crouse: The Chairman should resign.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Will all hon. members resume their seats, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Out you go.

Mr. Bell: Rotten.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Will hon. members resume their seats.

Some hon. Members: Resign. Leave the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Standing Order 12(2) reads:

When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the House, or make any noise or disturbance.

Mr. Bell: They must leave.

An hon. Member: Put the motion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I read the rule so that if any hon. member has not followed the rule he will remember that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Deachman, out.

Mr. Bell: The Liberal whip sneaked in. Leaky Dick sneaked in.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: All the hon. members who heard me read the rule, will please take note. All hon. members opposed to the motion, please rise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: That is rotten. It is a sham.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: How can you do it?

Mr. Horner: They did not win on the first count so they want to win on the second. How rotten can you get.

Mr. Côté: Come on, now.

Mr. Crouse: The House leader was not in the House when the vote was called. He has no right to vote.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Will everyone resume their seats, please?

Motion (Mr. McGrath) agreed to: Yeas, 44; Nays, 42.

Progress reported.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time on a question of privilege. During the course of the vote that was just taken there were one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine members on the government side who came into the chamber and participated in the vote after the question had been put. I will discuss this further. There will probably be other proceedings taken in respect of it, but I thought it was my duty at this first opportunity to put the matter before the House.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of privilege dealing with the procedure during the taking of the vote. I know that the Assistant Deputy Chairman was caught in a very embarrassing position and I hold no animosity towards him for the way in which he attempted to clarify the wishes of the House, but I want to point out to Your Honour that on the occasion of the vote just taken the government side was counted twice, with quite an interval between the counts, while those upholding the motion on this side of the House were only counted once. It may well have been although I did not notice it, that members came into our ranks too during that interval.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Horner: I am assured by my colleagues that there were none, but still the principle is the same, that only one count for each side should be taken. There should not be a second count taken on the other side if there are not enough members there in the first instance. I cannot help but rise at the first opportunity to raise this point of privilege because this may be establishing a precedent which will not augur well for democracy in the years ahead.

Mr. Otto: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has put forward a position which you might take into consideration, and if the counting of the heads was not proper then of course the count should be nullified.

Mr. Crouse: You are the rottenest one of the lot over there.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I merely rise on a point of order to point out to Your Honour that in contravention of Standing Order 12(2) hon. members walked into this House while the vote was being taken.

Mr. Jerome: On both sides.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The point has been made by the hon. member for Peace River, and other hon. members, who indicate that in their view there was an irregularity in connection with the vote taken in committee. The matter can be looked into, but there is really nothing before the House now. I am wondering what order of business should be identified.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to refer to what happened in the committee—

Mr. Crouse: You can't because you were not even here. You sneaked in. That is why you cannot speak.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am—

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would take his right seat he could then address the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that we have solved that problem, that one point which is well taken.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member and I thank him for drawing this to my attention. My seat had been occupied by another person. That is why I was not in it.

In view of the fact that it is 5.20, Mr. Speaker, and that it would not be appropriate to call another item of business, I would move that the House adjourn until tomorrow at the regular time of sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister making a formal motion, with a seconder?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I second it.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), moves that the House do now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 5.19 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—CONDUCT OF MEMBERS DURING PUTTING OF QUESTION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave oral notice yesterday afternoon and which I have supplemented by a written notice today. My question of privilege deals with the conduct of hon. members yesterday in committee of the whole, contrary to the provisions of Standing Order 12(2) which was read at the time, which I am sure Your Honour knows by heart and which I suggest some hon. members should learn by heart. Standing Order 12(2) provides:

When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the House, or make any noise or disturbance.

By STanding Order 55(1) that provision, of course, is made applicable to the conduct of hon. members in Committee of the Whole House.

There have been some varying interpretations of that rule, but I have been here—some would say too long—almost 14 years and as I have seen that rule interpreted it has been one of the rules most scrupulously respected both by the Chair and by hon. members. In other words, there can be no movement into or out of the House or the committee from the time Mr. Speaker or the Chairman puts the question. If that were not the case there would only be anarchy, particularly when you have a situation with a majority on one side of the House and groups constituting a minority on the other side. If there were not a fixed time at which the votes can be taken on all those important issues that effect this country, chaos would descend upon this House.

I shall not attempt to argue the rule, Mr. Speaker; it is there and, as I say, has been applied without any qualification. It was breached yesterday and breached to a substantial degree. I have been informed that there were some eight or nine hon. members—eight Liberal members specifically—on the other side of the House who entered the committee contrary to the provisions of the Standing Order.

It has also been said that there may have been a member enter on this side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: It has been said that there may have been a breach of the rules in other respects on this side of the House. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when there has been an injustice, an inequity, suffered it is logical for members to protest. It may well be that in the heat of the debate, and in light of the circumstances that existed yesterday, their protest was not as tempered as might have been desirable. In the grey light of day following the events of yesterday, it is easy to say that we wish we had not done what we did, but the extreme provocation offered hon. members on this side of the House would, in my humble opinion, have justified an even greater degree of protest than what took place yesterday.

We have been discussing a difficult and lengthy bill and have not had the benefit of the presence of the minister in the committee to answer questions. Yesterday we had a situation where the government saw fit to impose closure. That is their right, of course, and since we will be debating this later I shall not refer to it now. Following upon that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) called the attention of the government House leader to what he felt was a fairly firm undertaking regarding the establishment and continuation of committee meetings while the tax bill was being considered in Committee of the whole. A little later when, pursuant to our right, we called for a vote in the committee there was an unruly and disorderly situation because a number of government members entered the committee and were present for and took part in the vote. I know of at least one on the other side who, having entered, did not vote—there may have been others who acted likewise—and I give him credit for that.

In any event, no matter what may have taken place on this side of the House the situation cannot be condoned that we witnessed in this chamber yesterday afternoon as a result of government members entering the committee and trying to participate in the vote. A government that has 150 members and is caught short with only 30 members in the House right after having imposed closure has no right under those conditions—indeed, it has no right under any conditions—to take an action that is nothing short of scandalous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I am not going to move a motion, Mr. Speaker, but I would have been derelict in my duty, with the limited responsibilities that I bear, if I had not brought this matter to the attention of the Chair and of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. The hon. member for Peace River did give the Chair notice of the question of privilege that he intended to bring to the attention of the House at this time and, as he might suspect, I have given the whole matter very serious consideration in the meantime. This is a situation that has worried me a great deal. Obviously—I should not say "obviously" because the word may be too strong—apparently there were irregularities in the voting yesterday. I would want, with charity to hope that none of these irregularities were committed without malice aforethought.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Deliberately.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps hon. members are not as charitable as I am.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Certainly I think we must take into account the fact that the hon. member for Peace River has brought this situation to the attention of the House and the Chair. It is always a very touchy and delicate situation when the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole—a position I occupied for a few years so I know how difficult it is when the question has to be put by the Chair—has to try to convince hon. members who were behind the curtains or in the lobby or who perhaps came down from their offices that they ought not to come into the chamber, that they have no right to enter and should not stand or move about the chamber during a vote.

This principle, as the hon. member for Peace River emphasized very well, has been recognized for a long time. I would therefore hope that the incident which took place yesterday and which we all deplore will remind us that we should not forget the provisions of the Standing order when the House is in Committee of the Whole.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The hon. member for Richelieu is rising on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I know that the question of privilege of the hon. member for Peace River is not debatable, but I cannot ignore certain assertions. In fact, I have counted—I declare this on my oath of office—six members who entered from the other side of the House.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: You are lying.

Mr. McGrath: That's a lie.

Some hon. Members: Liar.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he should have given notice of it to the Chair, as did the hon. member for Peace River. It is as simple as that.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it is incumbent upon the hon. member who just raised the question of privilege to name the hon. members on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Get up, you liar.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member thought he had a question of privilege. I suggested to him that he did not. He is welcome to so think, but I really do not think he has a question of privilege. That is the ruling I made a moment ago.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Nowlan: I rise on the question of privilege. I was in the House yesterday when the events that have been described happened. There was one member who came in at a certain stage, the member in front of me, the hon. member for—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Red Deer.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). He came in and left. He did not participate in the vote. He entered the chamber when the vote was being called on the other side. I ask the hon. member to name the six members who came in while this was happening. If he does not do this, Mr. Speaker, we on this side who did vote all have a point of privilege that has to be clarified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really do not think the hon. member who raised this question of privilege had any justification for doing so. The matter was raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). There was no motion proposed. Obviously his intention was to bring to the attention of the Chair and the House the difficulties with which we were faced yesterday. He has done so and I really do not think there is any further action that should be taken by the Chair at this point.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION MOTION FOR COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE STAGE ON INCOME TAX BILL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 75C I should like to move a motion in the following terms, seconded by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: You are the father; it is your illegitimate child.

Mr. MacEachen: I assure you, Mr. Speaker, there was considerable competition for the privilege of seconding this motion, but finally I decided I would give the honour to the Minister of National Defence. I move, seconded by the minister:

That, in relation to Bill C-259, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, four sitting days shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole stage of the said bill:

That, on the fourth of the said days, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, any proceeding before the committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage to the said bill, shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in beginning my short comments on this motion I should like to begin by saying that the subject matter of the bill has been in the public domain for quite a long time. The subject matter has been extensively discussed in Canada over a long period of time. The right. hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was Prime Minister of this country, established the Carter Commission to inquire into and investigate the taxation system in Canada and that commission spent a period of five years hearing representations from all groups in the community. The report was not completed during the right hon. gentleman's period of leadership but it was presented to the former government. Subsequently, in November, 1969, a white paper was presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The white paper was examined by a committee in this House and by a committee in the other place. I believe the work of the standing committee of the House of Commons on this white paper, aided by expert staff, was outstanding. Their report was presented to the House and many of the recommendations were incorporated into the present bill. So it is not correct to suggest that the subject matter of the bill was suddenly plucked out of the air and presented to this House without much advance consideration in the public domain.

The second point I want to make is that the tax bill itself was unveiled to the House of Commons last June and the main points of the tax bill were elaborated in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance and in that six-day debate many of the principles of the amending bill were discussed. In addition, the bill itself was put before the House of Commons and in order to give the chamber and the country an opportunity to consider the bill. The House was adjourned for a period of two months and was recalled in September for the principal purpose of examining the bill that is now under discussion.

• (2:20 p.m.)

I think it is clear to hon. members that in the House itself the bill has had extensive discussion. Hon. members may argue that it should have more discussion, and there may be differences of opinion on that point, but nobody can honestly argue that the bill has not had a very extensive exposure in the House of Commons. There were 12 days of debate on second reading of the bill, quite a long time but not excessive in terms of the importance and complexity of the bill, and yesterday we completed the 27th day of consideration in the Committee of the Whole House. So we have now had almost 40 days, almost eight solid weeks of parliamentary time, devoted to the consideration of the bill now before the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nonsense!

Mr. Nowlan: How many more amendments? How many more pounds?

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. members opposite will have an opportunity to put their case and I will give them a full hearing. I would like the same privilege from hon. members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: You do not know the meaning of your own words.

Mr. MacEachen: Those who are objecting to what they describe as a muzzling of Parliament seem ready to muzzle me as I am attempting to lay the case before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I want to mention also that before we began consideration of the bill in committee and as the bill was being examined in committee the House leaders of all parties, joined by the hon. member for Edmonton West, met very frequently to discuss the evolution of the discussion in the House of Commons. It was because of the considerable attention given at those meetings to the bill that we were able, in Committee of the Whole, to proceed in an orderly way to move from one major subject area of the bill to another. At the beginning I had proposed a different procedure, but I accepted what I thought was a better procedure suggested at the House leaders' meetings. We completed just a few days ago, in accordance with the arrangements reached, consideration of every major subject area that had been designated at those meetings as worthy of discussion. We completed that process several days ago. It is true that we did not carry all the sections related to those subject areas, but we did discuss the issues involved.

We have attempted to maintain a flexible attitude toward the bill. We have listened to the representations made in the country and in the committee with respect, for example, to the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions. I am happy to state that when we go into the committee we will be moving a series of major amendments—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —which will assist the situation for the co-operatives and credit unions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You finally saw the light.

Mr. Paproski: You won't have to resign, then.

Mr. MacEachen: The full details of these amendments will be disclosed in the committee, but let me say that the concept of capital employed will be removed and it will be replaced—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: —by a withholding tax system that will be fully satisfactory to the co-operatives. A similar amendment will be made with respect to the credit unions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I see you rising to your feet. I just have one more sentence, if I may finish.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister's time has expired.

Mr. Nowlan: It sure has.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister said he had one more sentence. He did have heavy going for a while and perhaps he might be allowed to finish.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave of the House to finish?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am in the hands of the House. I intended to conclude with a ringing call to the House to reach a decision on this bill, but I do want to say one simple thing. In my opinion, in light of the background of the discussion that has taken place on this bill and the great amount of time in committee and on second reading, it is now appropriate for the government to take its responsibility to permit the House to take its responsibility in reaching a decision on the bill. To do otherwise, it seems to me, is to lend credence to the point of view so frequently stated in Canada today that the House of Commons is an anachronistic institution and is incapable of acting effectively and decisively on the major problems facing the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the Leader of the Opposition I think I should put the motion, now that the minister has completed his remarks. Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moves:

That, in relation to Bill C-259, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, four sitting days shall be allotted to the further consideration in Committee of the Whole stage of the said bill;

That, on the fourth of the said days, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business in such sitting, any proceeding before the committee shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the Committee of the Whole stage to the said bill, shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Hon. Robert Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I agreed to the government House leader continuing for a minute or two because I wanted to see if he could make a case for what he is proposing to do, since he had not made it up to that time.

[Mr. Paproski.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: This is the most complex bill ever to appear in this Parliament. I say that with great confidence, Mr. Speaker. It is some 707 pages in length. The minister spoke of it having been introduced last spring, when he was referring to the lengthy consideration that it has had. The bill was not distributed to our principal financial critic until two or three days before the House reconvened, and the rest of us did not receive a printed copy of the bill until after the House had resumed. I am not suggesting that the government House leader deliberately misled the House, but I am saying that apparently he is not fully aware of when in fact the bill was distributed, and he has perhaps unintentionally vastly exaggerated the length of time that members have had to study and consider the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And the public.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: That is point No. 1, Mr. Speaker. It is not merely that the government House leader does not know what is in the bill but obviously he does not know how long it has been available to members of this House to consider.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is intricate legislation and it affects everybody in the country. He says that the subject matter has been discussed for months and indeed years. Not the subject matter of this bill, Mr. Speaker. Tax experts whom I know spent the whole summer doing nothing else but trying to understand this bill and then came to the conclusion that they could not understand it. There are a few people who claim to understand this bill but they are—

Mr. Davis: Where did they get it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Just one minute, Mr. Speaker. I am not talking about when the bill was printed; I am talking about when the bill was distributed. The bill was not distributed to members of this House until the House reconvened. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) can smile all he likes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That is a smirk!

An hon. Member: It is a petulant smirk!

Mr. Stanfield: There is only one thing that is clear. If this bill is passed in its present form, anyone engaged in any kind of active life in this country will need a tax expert at his elbow all the time.

Not only is the bill 707 pages in length, Mr. Speaker, but 97 amendments were introduced on October 22, 28 amendments were introduced on October 29, eight amendments were introduced on November 16, and some of those were amendments to previous amendments. Now we are getting more and more amendments and we will have many more before many months have passed.

Sir, if the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had issued the Ten Commandments one tablet of stone might have been enough to get him through the short form title but he would have needed to use all of the Laurentian mountains to get through the bill and he would have needed the Rocky mountains to accommodate the amendments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, nobody really knows whether this bill is relevant to conditions that have changed substantially since it was introduced last spring. The provinces have requested postponement of the implementation of the bill. We have no idea what arrangements are going to be worked out with the provinces in the fields of estate tax and succession duties. We do not know what kind of tax jungle is going to arise out of the stubborn persistance of the government in bulling ahead. Yet the government is insisting on lowering the guillotine on discussions of a bill that nobody on that side of the House understands.

I want to emphasize in the few minutes I have that we have not taken a position of intransigence on this tax bill.

An hon. Member: Oh, no?

Mr. Stanfield: On the contrary, we proposed a course of action that we felt was both sensible and honourable. Unlike the parliamentary secretary, Mr. Speaker, we felt some obligation to understand it before passing it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We proposed a course of action that we thought was both honourable and sensible and we had high hopes at one point that the government might be prepared to accept that course. We had such high hopes because earlier in this session, in relation to another difficult although much less complex piece of legislation, the government did accept in principle the same kind of procedure when an impasse seemed to have been reached. Negotiations at that time were not all take and no give on our part. Those negotiations were subsequently frustrated; there are various interpretations of the reasons for that frustration but I am not going to go into that in the few minutes available to me. What is significant is that the government showed for a brief moment during that episode one of its rare demonstrations of faith in the parliamentary system.

In making our proposal in relation to the tax bill we felt there was at least a recent precedent that the government, however fleetingly, was prepared to treat this House as it should be treated, as a human instrument whereby men of good will can fulfil the needs of the country as much as is humanly possible by consensus.

I congratulate the government House leader for his common sense and his courage in setting that precedent on that occasion. But I cannot congratulate him today. I see no courage in his action on this occasion with regard to this bill and I see that common sense has been sacrificed altogether. I have to ask myself why the government rejects today what was acceptable in principle a few short weeks ago. There can be only one answer—to save the political face of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: What a face!

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister and the other members of his cabinet know that the rosy bloom of this government has faded and they have felt the sting of having to withdraw unacceptable legislation such as the shoddy attempt to muzzle the Auditor General.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: They have felt the tide of popular support run out on them on any number of unrealistic and half-baked brainstorms. They do not like it because it is bad for their image.

An hon. Member: What image?

Mr. Stanfield: But the people of Canada and Parliament must learn—

An hon. Member: Just fuddling around.

An hon. Member: It is a gay image they have.

Mr. Stanfield: The attitude of the government is that people must be shown that this government knows best. Give the people a show of strength—that always goes over well. Put Parliament in its place. Show that bunch of nobodies on this side of the House that this place is merely supposed to be a glorified rubber stamp for legislation produced by this brain trust or policies produced by this government. Make the opposition shut up.

There is no question here, Sir, of the government's right to govern. There is no question here of the opposition stonewalling a government measure. There is no question of any real need for the government to take the course it is proposing and which the government House leader has just launched the government upon. What we have here is a political manoeuvre, an ego trip with the government supporters on the other side of the House foisting on the country a bill they do not understand just to try to save the face of the government.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at this stage I wish to indicate three reasons for voting against the motion that has been presented by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). May I state the three reasons in capsule form and then come back to each of them.

In the first place, I think that the use of closure is the wrong way to deal with legislation, that there are better ways. In the second place, it is a fact of history that every time a form of closure has been used in this House it has produced ill will, chaos and confusion, and has resulted in a period of time during which nothing constructive or effective is done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In the third place, Mr. Speaker, I contend that a tax bill, and certainly a tax bill as voluminous as this one and as confusing to the people of Canada as this one, is too important a piece of legislation to be passed under closure.

An hon. Member: It is too important to pass, eh?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I come back to the first of my three points. I firmly believe that there are times when we must allocate the time of this House, organize our business and get on with the job that is before us. But I suggest, Sir, that we have proven over the years that this can be done by understanding and by agreement. I suggest that even with respect to this important bill, contentious though it is, there have been many unanimous agreements among the House leaders. We have determined the amount of time that should be spent on certain subject areas. These agreements have been announced in a low key to the House and have been accepted. I believe it would have been far better to continue in that way and to achieve an end to this debate by agreement and by understanding instead of by the use of the big stick unilaterally wielded by the government. I suggest that the announcement the President of the Privy Council made in the course of his remarks proves my point. We in this party welcome enthusiastically the announcement he made to the effect that the government will make amendments improving the situation with respect to credit unions and co-operatives. How has that come about?

Mr. Alexander: That is the question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It has come about because of free debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It has come about because of free debate in which hon. members in all parties in the House took part. I give credit to the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), to the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), as well as to others on the government side of the House who took part in that debate. As a result of that debate—since there was no time limit we could make our points and drive them home—the government has seen the light and the welcome announcement was made by the minister today. He is pointing to himself. He wants credit for what he did as well, and I give it to him.

An hon. Member: He needs it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was part of the deal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The point is that when debate is free, that kind of thing can happen. I suggest that from now until a quarter to six on Wednesday the debate in the Committee of the Whole stage will not be free. We will just be riding out the time. There will be no yielding by the government on any other points. Many amendments that opposition members might wish to make will never be made because there are 707 pages to the bill and many sections and subsections have not been discussed and will not be reached. Yet at 5.45 p.m. next Wednesday the 100 or so amendments moved by the Minister of National Revenue and many sections which have not even been debated will have to be voted on one by one. That is not free debate. That is not dealing with legislation in the proper way. I reject it completely.

I insist that the opposition party House leaders have the right to say that we have given the government a good run of co-operation. Here I give credit to the President of the Privy Council as well. He has been a good government House leader in the sense that he has been very co-operative. We have done well during the last two or three years. I do not know why he has to reverse that process and use the big stick with respect to this piece of legislation. That is my first point, Mr. Speaker. This is the wrong way to do it. There is a better way, and it has worked time and time again. I wish that this House would stick with the better way.

The second point I announced when I first started was that it is a matter of historical fact that every time we get into one of these situations in which closure is imposed, ill will develops. We have already seen it in the House yesterday and today. The danger is that this sort of thing will continue. When it does, we do not see Parliament at its best. I do not mind confrontation. I like it. I do not mind the cut and thrust of debate. I like it; I like debate to go back and forth. But when we get to the stage of chaos, furore and good will, that just is not Parliament.

An hon. Member: Shouldn't that be ill will?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, that should read as ill will. So far as what will happen between now and a quarter to six on Wednesday is concerned, why, we might as well take the vote now because the kind of Parliament we are used to within our experience will not be operating. Even so, even though this has begun to happen after it was announced that closure would be put into effect, even though it has already started in this case, I stand here as a member of the opposition and plead that we not do that and that we not operate in that way. We have only so much time left for the tax bill. Let us spend that time on the bill. Let us deal with as many sections as we can. Let us not have too many sideshows or too many diversions. Let us not lose any of the time it is proposed to allot to us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The third thing I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at the beginning, is this. Speaking as one who has never been willing to support closure, I think there is a particularly strong case against closure with respect to this bill. Nothing so affects all the people in the country as a tax bill. Everybody has to pay taxes one way or another, directly or indirectly. This bill has about it many misunderstandings. There is much confusion about it. In the course of the next year or so after this bill is put into effect there is bound to be a good deal of feeling against its provisions. If the Canadian people remember when they fill out their income tax forms and pay their taxes that this bill was imposed upon them under closure, they will feel even more bitter about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I submit, Mr. Speaker, that since the opposition parties in this House represent, according to the vote of 1968, more than 50 per cent of the people in this country, more people than the members on the other side of the House represent, our desire that this bill be dealt with by free debate rather than under closure is a valid point. As a House leader I would be glad to continue taking part in discussions to try to achieve some understanding, some way, to bring the tax debate to an end. I submit that this is the wrong way, that it produces ill will and that it is unfair to foist upon the people of Canada, under closure, a tax bill of this magnitude. Therefore, Sir, I hope the House will vote against the motion that is now before it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the arguments brought forward by the government leader in support of his motion include three main points which I should like to analyze very objectively.

First of all, he referred to the white paper which was produced and which, for many months, has been available for public perusal. The public was in a position to make representations to enable the government to make changes called for by the organizations which were prepared to submit relevant briefs.

I readily recognize that the hon. minister is right in saying that the public had the opportunity to make an exhaustive study of the legislation. I would however point out to him that preliminary studies for preparation of Bill C-259 involved very lengthy work sessions for department officials over several years. And today the members who have been acquainted with this omnibus bill for only a few months are being asked to pass it in all haste.

I recognize that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) moved a motion in this connection on June 18th. But the bill itself was handed over to the members only in early September; it contains provisions and amendments of great importance to various organizations; representations are being made to us almost daily since the opening of the debate, and we must make sure that the individuals and organisations that are hardest hit will not be taxed unfairly.

The Croll report on poverty mentions that 60 per cent of federal taxes are paid by low wage earners. We must take the necessary steps to study tax reform in order to guarantee some categories of people the possibility of getting a more equitable treatment.

• (2:50 p.m.)

At the second reading stage, Creditistes were wrongly accused of filibustering a little when the House made the detailed study of sections 135, 136 and 137 of the bill regarding co-operatives and caisses populaires. But our only intention then was to make suggestions to the government, to propose ways of improving the tax system, while being very careful not to destroy the co-operative movement which served Canadians so well and is still able to do so.

The hon. minister informed us today that amendments would be brought forward with regard to capital employed.

This is what we suggested in order to speed up the debate, namely that the proposed concept of capital used which would serve as the main basis for computing the cooperative corporations tax, be simply removed. If the Minister would introduce an amendment of such a nature in order to remove this concept, there would no longer be any discussion, and the section would be passed very quickly I do not see any reason why it was felt necessary to invoke Standing Order 75C to limit the debates, because as soon as the government moves these amendements that meet with the wishes of the caisses populaires, the co-operative corporations, the credit unions as well as our own, he can be assured of the co-operation of all the hon. members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, we are not here to make deals. I find it extremely unpleasant to see that when we want to speed up business, we try to make offers and counter-offers. I really do not like this business about making conditional concessions. Let us be honest with one another. Surely we can come to an agreement without having to sound as if we were making a deal at the taxpayers' expense. Let there be honest, concrete suggestions made, let valid amendments be proposed, and the government can be assured of our co-operation. I object to the false information handed out to the public to the effect that whenever we take a stand, we do so in order to filibuster. I would also like the press to be more objective so that the public might be better informed of what goes on in this House.

On behalf of my colleagues I oppose this motion aimed at limiting debate on Bill C-259 to four days. Next Wednesday, after these four days, at a quarter to six, it will no longer be possible to propose amendments nor to continue the debate. That amounts to gagging the House. No matter whether you agree or not, the majority decides.

Mr. Speaker, it is the first time that such action has been taken since I came to the House. I sincerely deplore that. Yesterday I thought there was still some possibility that this motion would not be introduced today. I still had some hope. Even today, at noon, I told a journalist who had asked me about it that I hoped that the debate would not get even more complicated by such a motion. But, having taken this decision, the government will also have to bear the consequences. I will have to vote against that measure, but let it be clear that I do not vote against the amendments that will be proposed in order to improve the situation of co-operatives and caisses populaires.

Furthermore, we had asked that construction and forest workers as well as of mechanics and railwaymen be taken into consideration so that their travelling expenses be deductible under the bill, thus affording them a measure of protection.

I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that the front benches are so irresponsible because when we try to bring forth arguments likely to justify our position, they laugh and talk in order to confuse the speaker. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell them that I am not thrown off the track that easily. I know where I am going I am sure of the positions I have to take and I do so honestly.

Finally, I must say that despite the government's attitude, we will co-operate just the same so as to make the best possible use of such a situation. Life must go on. Let us hope that we shall continue just the same to understand one another and to work efficiently in the best interests of our fellow citizens.

[English]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is essential for the country and for taxpayers generally, and particularly for those hundreds of thousands of taxpayers who will be taken off the tax rolls if this bill passes—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —that the present uncertainty concerning the fate of the tax reform bill be brought to an end as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think all members of the House are aware that business decisions are pending throughout Canada, awaiting passage of this bill, that capital investment is being delayed until this bill is passed, that budget formulations are being made on the assumption that this bill will pass, that the accounting systems of most businesses, particularly those whose fiscal years have already begun and will end in the period covered by the bill, are being adversely affected by the failure of Parliament to come to grips with the situation.

I need not cite any greater authority on uncertainty than the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Last February he was complaining in a speech that the government's alleged failure to announce decisions on tax reform was having an unsettling effect on the economy. This is what he said:

It is this aspect of uncertainty about our economy that tax legislation could go a long way to clearing up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This bill has been studied and digested more thoroughly than any other piece of legislation which has come before this Parliament or any other Parliament I have known. It has been suggested from the other side that it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Baldwin: No.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What chaos that would produce, with business not knowing whether to rely on the present taxation law or to rely on a future taxation law, having already prepared itself to operate on the basis of a future taxation law.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The Leader of the Official Opposition and his House leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), have put to the House and the government the proposition that the tax bill be split. How ought it to be split, Mr. Speaker? Technically it would be a nightmare to do so.

Mr. Bell: It already is a nightmare.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Parliament and the Committee of the Whole have had a very full debate to this date consisting of 37 days, 12 days on second reading and 25 in Committee of the Whole.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Might I clarify a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition. To my knowledge and from advice I have received I can tell the House that the bill was distributed to the House by the distribution office on July 12.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baldwin: That was the version in Chinese.

An hon. Member: Another of those cabinet leaks.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member would not know that because he was on vacation. The bill has been discussed in Committee of the Whole on the basis of an interparty agreement among the House leaders. All of its major aspects have been debated, such as personal exemptions, the capital gains tax, corporate income, the way the legislation affects the farming community, the problem of the basic herd and so on.

Mr. Baldwin: We have a basic herd on the other side of the House.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): All of these major aspects of the bill have been thoroughly canvassed on second reading and debated in Committee of the Whole. Surely the time has now come, after almost two months of debate in this House, for Parliament to express itself on the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): After all, democracy means debate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —but democracy also means the taking of decisions after debate. No member of the House would pretend that this bill is a perfect instrument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has only ten minutes in which to make his speech and it has become very difficult for any member of the House, including the Chair, to follow what the minister is saying.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This parliament, Mr. Speaker, must pronounce itself on the bill. The people will also decide. The government, of course, will in due course be accountable to the people. But what the members on this side cannot accept is accountability for the uncertainty that the opposition is attempting to thrust upon this Parliament. Our responsibility is to try to persuade Parliament to bring this uncertainty to a close.

I want to issue a challenge to the opposition. I want the opposition to take a position on this bill and on some of the individual clauses of the bill. Let them vote against those clauses they do not like, but let them allow the bill to come to a vote so that the positions of both sides of the House be made clear.

Despite the rhetoric used by members on the other side of the House, this motion is not brought under Standing Order 33 or under the closure procedure. This motion falls under the rules providing for the allocation of time, Standing Orders 75A, 75B and 75C.

Mr. Baldwin: It is closure.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government House leader tried to get an allocation of time under rule 75A by agreement among all parties in the House. He was unable to get any agreement whatsoever for any period of time. The government House leader then proceeded under rule 75B hoping that he could get what the rule calls a qualified agreement to allot time, but he was not even able to get from the opposition a qualified agreement to allot time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: It is still closure.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The government House leader, as contemplated under this time allotment rule, and as he was entitled to do, then moved under rule 75C, which is the procedure whereby if—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I must call for order. There is absolutely no possibility for the Chair to hear anything that is being said either by the hon. member who has the floor—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that they should allow the Speaker to speak even if they will not allow the member who has the floor to speak. I would bring to the attention of hon. members that if we are going to have a debate we should give an opportunity to the member who is recognized to make his speech. This would be a rather dull place if there were absolute silence all the time; it is good for debate that hon. members should have the chance to express their views in one way or another. But, as I say, the hon. member who has the floor should be given a chance to be heard.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having failed to persuade the opposition House leaders to agree to an allotment of time under rule 75A, and having again tried to get a qualified agreement under rule 75B, the government House leader was entitled under the same set of rules to move for an allotment of time under 75C.

The proposition is a simple one, Mr. Speaker. After full and fair debate Parliament must be given the opportunity, must take the responsibility, of reaching a decision on this bill so that Members of Parliament can be accountable to the Canadian people for the bill. That is the purpose of this motion.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I hope my time will not be reduced by the length of the unseemly applause that I was given as I rose to speak. I was very much impressed by the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He said that there was no reason to object to what is being done. He contended that the vast mix-up of taxation laws under this bill that affect other fields of endeavour has been thoroughly digested. In his opinion there was no reason for further discussion of them. My record shows that of the 707 pages in the bill only 190 have been discussed. I suggest that when the minister speaks of digestion he could not have had the government in mind. In the past couple of weeks there have been 133 amendments moved, which indicates that the government found that its digestive apparatus was not working very well. It regurgitated what it had produced and which it thought it had well digested.

Hon. gentlemen opposite who spoke about democracy and what it means gave an amazing performance. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) knows what democracy means.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is the only one who applauds it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He knows what democracy is because he said on one occasion that his favourite politician was a gentleman from Florence—Machiavelli. Machiavelli was noted for his—

Mr. Trudeau: He is not from Florence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to miss these words of wisdom.

Mr. Trudeau: It is "Mac". It is a Scottish name.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Machiavelli was known for his craftiness. He was known for his ability to pretend. He was known because he was often misinterpreted, frequently misinformed, but never mistaken. I do not know how far one is supposed to carry this analogy. Mr. Speaker, they are not even through with the amendments. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) said in effect, "We have a few more".

Mr. Stanfield: They are just starting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They had a lot of difficulty digesting what taxes they were going to apply to co-operatives and credit unions across Canada. Then they back down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: You said you were going to stand. You still have more than 140 amendments that have not been considered. In addition there are some further amendments being brought forward.

An hon. Member: Straighten him out, Bob.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government are in the position of having a mathematical majority and, therefore, regardless of whether Parliament is raped or not, intends to cut off discussion. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) mentioned 75C. That thing was brought in by closure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I sat on this side of the House in 1956. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) laughs. At that time he was engaged in other activities of a leftist nature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In 1956 I saw the ministers ridicule the opposition. I saw the members supporting the government treat us derisively and contemptuously as they are doing today. Ridicule was heaped on the opposition for daring to say the government had not permitted discussion. Today we are dealing with a matter involving personal income, capital gains, taxing of corporations and shareholders, taxing of mining and petroleum industries, business and property income, international income and taxation of farmers. The government does not know where it is going. Otherwise, you would not have produced all these amendments. You do not want discussion. You have a majority in Parliament and you can trample on Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to the Prime Minister, you can trample on Parliament, but today you only have 40 per cent of the people of Canada who believe in you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me tell you this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister points. He usually thumbs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the right hon. member. Perhaps I should not interrupt him, but I am wondering whether he has been addressing his opposition more than the Chair. He has been using the pronoun "you". I do not know whether that is strictly rhetorical. Perhaps he might address the Chair rather than members on the opposite side of the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This House can be turned into an institution of fuddy-duddies. As far as I am concerned, it is not going to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to the Prime Minister that this is proper debating because I necessarily say it through Your Honour to him. I do not direct it to him. There are only ten minutes available.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it because of the fear of argument that they hoot across the way? I remember the immortal words of the Prime Minister in 1968. He said, "We are your masters". Oh, yes.

An hon. Member: That was in 1963.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member is so far behind that he does not realize we were defeated in the House in 1963.

An hon. Member: November, 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Constitutionally, we resigned. However, when the Pearson government was defeated in 1968 it stayed on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Just like Joey.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister has treated this institution with the most supreme contempt that I have ever seen shown to the Parliament of Canada in all my life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Those who sit behind the Prime Minister applaud. They hear their master's voice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The degree of the decibels indicates that I have gotten under their hides, if I may use that expression. This is a serious occasion for Parliament. It is being treated as the pawn of the Prime Minister. Over and over again he has left the House when criticized. Only a few days ago he walked out of a press debate in Halifax. He said, "Let's go home." The Prime Minister's place is to take part in the major debates in Parliament. In the entire period he has been in office he has not spoken more than two or three times.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Five.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is correcting me. He says "five". I think there is a little multiplication there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: How is Parliament being treated? This is a bill that very few people can understand. There are sections that are completely incomprehensible. They might as well be in Sanskrit. Nobody can understand them. The government cannot. Instead of having a minister pilot the bill, the government has a parliamentary secretary doing so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope Your Honour is watching the time. This type of interruption reduces one's opportunity to speak. That is the reason it is done. It is an irresponsible course. The parliamentary secretary has no responsibility. He cannot speak for the government. If he could, the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) would have been speaking for the government the other day when he spoke of the dastardly mess the economy of Canada is in because of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Parliamentary secretaries, however able they may be, cannot pilot bills before Parliament. That is a rule that has been upheld all through the years. It is something which has been swept aside by this government. The Prime Minister once before had a moment of forgetfulness. He forgot his age. That was selective forgetfulness, but the other day he had so many parliamentary secretaries that he forgot he only had authority for 27 and appointed 28. With great pride he brought them before the House and three hours later said that the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) was supernumerary and was out. One hundred and ten members of the 150 on the Liberal side of the House have various jobs and some of them are filled with an abiding interest. They feel that if they make it clear that they hear the master's voice, ultimately they will hear the master's voice say, "Follow me".

Mr. Woolliams: Where the hell were they yesterday?

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is the ultimate rape of Parliament by a group of members who do not represent the majority of the people of Canada. Their support has fallen away in recent weeks to such an extent that whenever the election comes that will be the end of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Smallwood.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made a biblical reference earlier in his speech.

An hon. Member: To you.

Mr. Jamieson: I was about to say, Sir, that if the Leader of the Opposition can make a biblical reference perhaps I might be permitted to say that if God had had to choose someone to holler the Ten Commandments from Mount Sinai he would have picked the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. If he had had the help of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings he would have made even the Ten Commandments sound like a first degree murder indictment.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) knows of the high regard I have for him. I would hope he would not class me among any fuddy-duddies in this House. He also made an analogy involving Machiavelli. He talked about the rare talents of Machiavelli which he said included craft, various other skills, and a certain amount of deviousness. Indeed, it might be that for a moment I had the impression he was talking about himself. Under these circumstances he will not regard that as an insult because in fact he will know too, as a great student of history, that at long last Machiavelli is being in a sense restored to a position of prominence in the eyes of many people, including historians, and there is still hope that the hon. member may yet achieve a rehabilitated position himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: May I say I sympathize profoundly with him on one point. He referred to the backbenchers of this party and the way in which there is an immediate and almost uniform response on every occasion to what he described as a master's voice. We can understand the difficulty on the other side because the voice tends to come from two places almost at the same time and is often contradictory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that time is short. I am aware also that my right hon. friend and I enjoy this kind of thing.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Quote your Prime Minister and tell us about the bums and idiots.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Transport has the floor.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, once again I am so grateful to the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert and may I quote him in response to the somewhat offensive remarks from the opposition side by saying when I am on the trail of elephants I am not detracted by rabbit tracks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: In the limited time, if hon. members—

An hon. Member: You are surrounded by seals.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition spoke in his usual way and perhaps his natural way—quite modestly. I suppose it could be said he has a great deal to be modest about. But I want to say to him it is a fact that for whatever reason the documents concerned were not delivered into the hands of some opposition members they were in fact available from July 12. If the conclusion to be drawn from this is that the Tory party does not have a single friend among the tax experts in Canada, I can very well understand that. May I also say on a more serious note that despite comments to the contrary—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member had to get it by a leak.

Mr. Jamieson: The right hon. member should know that when we do that we do not tear the cover off the book.

I would agree, Mr. Speaker, with the House leader for the New Democratic Party. As is often the case he had, in my opinion, the most reasoned and most sensible comments to make in this debate. It is of no consequence on either side that I do not happen to agree with them in a basic way, but I do admire the fair and sensible way in which he put them forward and decided to dwell on the issues and not on extraneous matter. Because I would dearly love to have followed his example-

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He doesn't want to get experience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: If hon. members want to holler I can give them a bigger holler than almost anybody else.

In the few moments remaining I should like to make one or two serious comments and direct them to the issues which have been raised in the usual statesmanlike manner by the leader of the House party of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: This gentleman says—my apology.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: Perhaps the wish was father to the thought. On the points that he made, may I say very briefly that it is, of course the wish of all of us that it could have been possible for us to achieve the kind of unanimity that would have produced not only a bill with which we could all agree but, most important, a bill that could be introduced and enacted quickly, thus putting an end to the indecision. This was not possible for the House leader to do, and I think it is a terribly important point. Incidentally, it has been said that we have dealt with only 191 pages of the bill. I say to the right hon. gentleman with all due deference, and I do not mean it unkindly, that this is something of a representation in that the most of the key points in the bill are in those 191 pages.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nonsense!

Mr. Jamieson: Let us assume that the rate of progress that has been made was adequate.

Mr. Forrestall: What are the 500 pages left for?

Mr. Jamieson: I will tell you what they are for, to hold up this bill for another nine months—nine months of indecision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: If it took this House three months to study 191 pages, it is surely logical to assume that, given the snail's pace of progress on some of these matters, we would be here for another nine months, and that is too long to wait in indecision in this country on such an important measure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Joey Smallwood knows how to hold things up.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure who has the floor. I ask hon. members to give the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) a chance to complete his remarks. He has just about one minute left.

Mr. Jamieson: I may say that it would be folly for the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) to request any foghorns in his riding in the future because I know he will not need them.

However, in the moment remaining, may I remind the House very briefly of the exhaustive study that these measures have had from the very first day on which the right hon. gentleman appointed the Carter Commission. It is true that we could go on indefinitely on many of these matters because surely it would not be possible, on a measure of this magnitude and complexity, to ever expect that this House would be unanimous on the total bill. At some point there would have to be disagreement. All we are asking is that the House use the normal amount of time which we think is adequate to the job.

May I remond hon. members in passing that the house of commons of the United Kingdom took six days of debate to decide on entry into the European Common Market.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I will not try to argue the point, but let me say finally that while we have responsibilities to the opposition which, quite properly, they never let us forget, I suggest that the opposition has the responsibility to the government to let it bring its program forward and to enact it into law. Finally, of course, we both have a responsibility to the people of Canada. We are satisfied to take the reaction that will result from this procedure because we are satisfied that what the people of Canada are really saying to us is to get on with the job, and that is what we are trying to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Today, we seem to have proof as to who is expert in the House on extraneous matters. In ten minutes, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) hardly referred to the motion or the issue before the House. It would appear that he got lost in the rabbit tracks to which he referred in reply to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). He did mention Machiavelli. I can think of no one more qualified in this House to speak about Machiavelli because the minister learned about Machiavelli from an expert, the premier of Newfoundland. The Minister of Transport would do well to direct his efforts and his attention to the mess in Newfoundland today resulting from the intransigence of the Liberal party in refusing to listen to the wishes of the people of Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is Liberal democracy for you, Mr. Speaker. Here is a party that was defeated by the people of Newfoundland and yet refuses to resign. We will have another opportunity to meet the minister on this question. We will be seeing him in Sally's Cove.

The minister spoke about closure; he spoke about the opposition's objections to this device, this guillotine on the part of the government. Indeed, the right hon. member for Prince Albert referred to the fact that, now that the device has been used, rule 75C itself was born of closure. Why was it that the government had to use closure to bring in Rule 75C? They had to use closure because 75C was a repugnant to us then as it is now. Here we have the same government that imposed closure on the House to change the rules of the House just a few years ago now taking the unprecedented step of imposing closure on a tax bill. I doubt that there is a precedent anywhere in the annals of British parliamentary history. All I can say is that the arrogance of this government is only exceeded by the contempt it has for this institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: They are using closure to impose a tax bill of major dimensions on the people of Canada without having regard to the traditional and ancient right of the elected representatives of the people to examine all government tax legislation. The government will have to answer for this, and let us hope that it will not be too long before they have to go to the people of Canada. This government has so badly mismanaged its affairs that it introduced a bill for which subsequently it had to bring in over 130 amendments, and yet they talk about us taking up the time of the House. They are the ones who monopolize the time of the House by introducing an unsatisfactory bill to which they had to bring in over 130 amendments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: It might be well to repeat the facts. The legislation before the House, as my leader has said, was not introduced until June 30, the day Parliament recessed for the summer. It did not receive second reading until September 13, and it is interesting to note that after it received second reading on September 13 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), as a result of the government's mismanagement of the economy, had to introduce a mini-budget which added further proposals to the tax bill already before the House. They say that we are taking up the time of the House. Notwithstanding the enormity, complexity and importance of the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again, I bring to the attention of hon. members that it is difficult to follow the speech when there are conversations, conferences and caucuses going on in the House. I invite hon. members to give the Chair an opportunity to listen to the speech.

Mr. McGrath: What can one expect from the government whip who misuses and abuses rules of the House by walking into the House during the taking of the vote. He would do well to leave this House now.

They talk about taking up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker. We have taken a total of 34 days on this bill, notwithstanding the fact that it contains 707 pages and has over 256 different sections. All I can say is that we have needed the time that has been taken thus far, and indeed we need more time just to deal with the government amendments, and the amendments to those amendments.

The only ones who really stand to gain from the government's ineptitude are the tax lawyers and accountants who cannot wait to get their hands on this mess. In reality this bill contains eight different legislative measures, all of them of tremendous importance.

Mr. Pepin: Great importance.

Mr. McGrath: I would suggest that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should take off on another one of his junkets, if that is the best he can do in this House. What about the provisions dealing with credit unions and co-ops? That must have been some caucus today, Mr. Speaker. I would have loved to have been in that caucus and hear the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), and also the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), who threatened to resign from the Liberal party if the government did not do something about the provisions with respect to co-ops and credit unions.

A bill that directly affects every facet of life in this country, that directly affects the lives of all Canadians deserves the time of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Who will deny our right, and indeed our responsibility, to examine every clause of the bill in detail, and to examine the government's amendments, and its amendments to its own amendments? That is our responsibility, Mr. Speaker, as well as our right. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that government incompetence in the management of the business of the House is directly to blame for the situation in which we are right now. Because of that mismanagement of the business of the House this bill was not introduced until the eleventh hour, and the government's amendments were not introduced until we were well into discussion on the bill; hence, we had no opportunity to examine those amendments.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the use of closure on this bill,—

Mr. Gibson: It isn't closure.

Mr. McGrath: —contemptuous as it is, is an insidious attempt by the government to hide the facts, and the facts are its own mismanagement of the business of the House as well as its mismanagement of the economy. We have never really been given a chance to examine this bill and, what is more important, the people of Canada have not been given an opportunity to examine the bill or the amendments to the bill introduced by the government. That is one of the important functions of Parliament. It is one of the reasons why Parliament must make detailed examination of bills of this magnitude, in order to provide the people of Canada with an opportunity to understand the bills. Parliament provides an opportunity to focus attention on a bill, and provides the people of Canada with an opportunity to react to a bill.

When the government imposes closure on this House it is in fact imposing closure on the whole country by denying the people an opportunity to react to the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: But what I consider to be more important, or perhaps I should say equally important, is what the government is doing to Parliament because in the process members of the government are destroying this institution, and they well know it. I can think of no better authority to quote on how Parliament should function than the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and his words can be found at page 72 of Hansard for September 16, 1968, when he referred to:

> —the delicate and essential balance between government and opposition so necessary to the proper functioning of Parliament.

I say to the government of Canada and to the government House leader that they have, in fact, today destroyed that delicate balance, and by destroying that delicate balance between government and opposition they must be prepared to put up with the consequences of their action. What are the consequences of their action? They are a House in which there is no good will, and a House in which they never again can expect to get the co-operation of the combined opposition parties.

Finally, may I just remind the government that it took the King-St. Laurent governments 22 years to become arrogant to the point where they could impose closure. It has taken this government less than four years to achieve the same degree of arrogance, and the same fate awaits it as befell the King-St. Laurent governments after 1957.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, although the subject under discussion is obviously important, it is a bit difficult to see that importance emerge from some of the discussions we have had. I want to deal only with what is before us. I want to say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), that consciously or unconsciously they really put the case before the House and, between them, condemned what the government has done, and condemned rule 75C.

I understood the Minister of Transport said he was chasing elephants somewhere in the jungle, when he declared that if the government had not done what it did do, we would be nine months longer studying this bill. I tell him that is not chasing elephants, that is chasing red herrings. I tell him that statement is not honest, that it is not justified, that the co-operation of the opposition parties in allocating time for every section of this bill in Committee of the Whole proves that his statement that it would take nine months more is a total fabrication, and that he ought not to have made it.

The Minister of Transport has the evidence of the actions and the behavior of the opposition parties throughout the discussion in Committee of the Whole when we agreed on a day for this subject, and two days for that subject, and so on. It may well be that agreement could not be given for limiting debate to four days—

Mr. Sharp: Or five.

Mr. Lewis: It may well be that the government House leader could not get agreement on any particular number of days, but as the House leader for our party pointed out, that does not mean to say that if he had continued to seek the co-operation of the opposition parties he would not have got it. Perhaps by agreement it could have taken six days or eight days.

Mr. Gibson: Or nine?

Mr. Lewis: The second point I want to make is in connection with a statement made by the Minister of Justice. I may not have it word for word, but I think I have it basically correct. I believe he said that democracy means debate but it also means decision after debate. That is the kind of trite statement that really attempts to hide the subject. Let the Minister of Justice visit some children in any public school and tell them the same thing, and they will all raise their hands in agreement with him. Of course, the issue is how long a debate, how deep a debate, how broad a debate—not the silly trite nonsense that you have to get to a decision some time. Who the devil disagrees with him on that?

The fact is that what the Minister of Justice said was echoed later by the Minister of Transport. Again I have not got it word for word, but I think the essence of it was that when we debate something for what the government considers adequate time, the government wants the right to have a decision made. Who the devil are they to make that decision? The government makes that kind of decision only if it abrogates to itself the kind of arrogant and absolutely totalitarian powers which it included in rule 75C. That is why we opposed it in 1968-69. That is why we were ready to agree with 75A and 75B seeking a House order when parties have agreed unanimously, or by a majority. And that is why we opposed 75C because we recognized it placed in the hands of the government a power which it will abuse, and it is abusing that power today.

[Mr. McGrath.]

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, it is for them alone to say how long this debate can take. I do not say that the debate should be endless; I do not say that there should not be agreement on allocation of time from day to day as we go along and I am sure that can be obtained. If the debate had lasted a long time anyone could legitimately and reasonably say it was too long and then perhaps the government would have a case to go and plead with Parliament to do something. I say to the ministers, to the House leader, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that even though they add everything up and say we have had 37 days of debate, 12 on second reading and 25 in committee of the whole, that that is not only not an unreasonable length of time to debate this bill but it is obviously an inadequate length of time to debate it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: A bill that deals with every aspect of life and the economy of Canada as far as it affects income tax and other aspects of taxation and covers 707 pages requires three or four months of study instead of only 25 days or 37 days, and it cannot be said that sufficient time has been taken.

Nobody has referred to this point, Mr. Speaker, and I want to make it with all the force I can: this government is guilty not only of arrogance in the way it is dealing with the question of time now but was guilty of stupidity or arrogance or duplicity or something else when it drafted the bill. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said that members of the opposition can vote against the clauses they do not like. Let me tell him that unless you, Sir, change what are the habits of this House there will not be any opportunity to vote on each clause that we do not like. This is because the mandarins, who really draw up the legislation, drew one clause for the most important part of the bill. Clause 1 is 596 pages long and deals with 256 subclauses. It deals with every aspect of the tax law that is important. It deals with exemptions, with capital gains, with exemptions for mining and oil companies. Every aspect of income tax that we are concerned with is in one clause, Mr. Speaker, and we will be able to vote only once on that clause. That was done deliberately, Mr. Speaker; that cannot have been an accident.

No one can tell me that the advisers to the government or the Minister of Finance could not see what they were doing, that they were placing Parliament in an absolutely impossible straitjacket in having to vote on one clause that covers all the sections of the new tax bill. They knew what they were doing and they did it for exactly the same reason they have done everything else. There is some sugar in the clauses, there is some pepper and bitterness in the clauses, and they intend to make members of the opposition vote either for the sugar or for the pepper in a bill deliberately designed to confuse and make it impossible for an intelligent discussion or an intelligent vote to be taken on every part of the tax law, which is what we should have had.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that most of the difficulty as to time has arisen out of that shameful, stupid or deliberately arrogant way of presenting the bill, because we have not been able to deal with a clause or two and then go on to something else. I want to make it clear that we will vote against the motion and we will vote against the bill. I want to make it clear also that our opposition is not that of the Progressive Conservative party. We are not here to protect the corporations and the difficulties they will have. We are here to protest the way in which the government, through the bill, is twisting the economy and threatening our future by the concessions it makes to the corporations.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that it was unnecessary for the government to take this step and that it is impossible for anyone who has any concern for Parliament or democracy to vote for this motion.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for a new member of the House to join the distinguished company that has already participated in this debate.

Mr. Woolliams: That won't put you in the same package.

Mr. Jerome: I notice that the first one to holler is the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who is distinguished, of course, for the piece of the action he got while his side was in government. That is why he is so happy now.

Mr. Stanfield: I think there is some hurting over there today.

Mr. Jerome: I want to say., Mr. Speaker, that the trepidation I feel in entering the debate is made the more obvious because of the last interjection from the other side. It is trepidation not because of the opposition but because of the quality of the contributions I have to follow from this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You won't have to be very good.

Mr. Jerome: I should like to point out two things. First, the approximately 100 members of this House who, like myself, were newly elected in this Parliament learned very quickly that the veterans of this Parliament seemed to feel that somehow they had a monopoly or patent on the formula for parliamentary democracy and that their understanding of it in the endless days of debate and filibuster was the kind of understanding and appreciation and pride in our parliamentary institutions that was shared throughout the country.

If I have no other task this afternoon except to destroy that myth, Mr. Speaker, it will be my pleasure to do so because I want to say that particularly among the young people of this country it is indeed a myth. What should be a sense of pride in this institution, in its efficiency, in its work and in its decisions is more often, pitifully, a sense of disgust at the procrastination, the filibustering, the needless delay in this Parliament in getting anything done.

An hon. Member: There is a Fascist speech!

Mr. Jerome: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a matter of any pride among the people of this country to know that we are the last of the Parliaments to embrace something that should have been done some time ago, something that has been embraced in every other country in the world, some kind of intelligent system for programming, not after the fact as is the rule with closure but programming in advance as is the case with the time allocation rule for debating time in this House and the calendarization of the parliamentary year.

Mr. Speaker, public demands and the precedents of other Parliaments led us to this point where, after much battle, we introduced and implemented a time allocation rule. I say to those who have continually used the word "closure" that it is surprising that they want to rush to that term when they know it is false and does not apply to this rule. Most of the time they rush to the public and the media. They pride themselves on the precision of their language, on their integrity and honesty in this chamber, but they know when they call this closure that they are being dishonest because that is not what it is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jerome: It was out of that spirit, out of the desire for some intelligent programming of the business of this House that is evident in every other Parliament of the world, that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization met at the beginning of this Parliament. In this spirit of tremendous co-operation, which was an example to me as a new member, the House leaders of all parties achieved a number of very beneficial rule changes not the least of which were rules 75A, 75B and 75C.

It is no news that rule 75A which provides for time allocation in the event of unanimous agreement amongst House leaders added little to the procedures of the House because basically things have been that way. We all know that when all are agreed this House can set time limits as it wishes.

Standing Order 75C was really the departure from previous practice and a step into the future in line with what other Parliaments have done in that it provided some machinery whereby time allocation could be proposed and voted upon by the House in cases where the House leaders were not in agreement. All members of that committee will agree that Standing Order 75B was put forward as a compromise between the two positions. Shortly after it was brought before the House, the salient feature of the Standing Order seemed to be the fact that the majority proposed in 75B did not include the government. Many since then, both in the House and outside, have said that, theoretically, the absence of the government from that majority envisaged in 75B makes the rule unworkable. I disagree, Mr. Speaker, and I want to say to the House that, from my understanding of the proceedings of that committee and the spirit which governed that committee, if that rule had been drafted any differently the debate on it in the House would have been even more acrimonious than was the case. I believe that this rule is being put forward in this taxation debate in a most exemplary manner and shows the will of Parliament. We have not come to the point yet at which we are prepared to accept the kind of time allocation rule adopted by the British Parliament. Nor have we come to the point at which, as in Australia, an officer of the House is responsible for negotiating all the timing of debates. The Canadian Parliament has moved slowly; at least, however, it has taken a step by introducing rules 75A, 75B and 75C. It is fortunate for Parliament and the country that the rule is being first invoked on such an important measure of such broad scope.

The most significant feature of the rule, and I want to draw this to the attention of the public, is this. If the House leaders of the opposition parties want to frustrate the government, they may be able to do so by agreeing unanimously among themselves on how long to debate a measure and thus make up the majority stipulated under 75B and put forward a proposal for time allocation in that respect. The significant part about what has happened has probably been missed by a great many of the public and the media, and I want to stress this now. The most important feature of this entire debate is to be found in the fact that the two smaller opposition parties, the New Democrats and the Créditistes, in addition to being opposed to passage of the bill for their own reasons and principles, have been even more opposed to the proposition brought forward by the official opposition. Far from being in any way united with the official opposition, the smaller parties are diametrically opposed to what the official opposition has put forward in seemingly good faith. That proposal, I say, was never put forward in good faith. It was never, at any time, more than a sham designed to bring this debate to the ground.

It is significant in that regard to remember that several days ago, before any talk of time allocation had arisen with respect to this measure, the Leader of the Opposition was prepared to come before this House with a text. He made his speech later in the day before the media. I give him due credit for wanting to make it in the House. He could not. Hon. members will recall the exact day, because that was the day when the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) moved concurrence in the report of the Indian Affairs Committee and it was not possible for the Leader of the Opposition to make his speech that afternoon. That day his remarks were made to the media. He suggested that closure would have to be invoked on the bill and he said that when there had been no such discussion. That was a prepared statement, made on the very same day that his representatives, in negotiations, put forward what they now call an intelligent proposal to split the bill. They knew it would never be accepted. They knew it could do nothing less than destroy the negotiations. It was a stall and a shameful sham that they put before this Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Jerome: The commentary on that need not come from our side of the House, Mr. Speaker. A much more elegant and eloquent commentary came from the leader of the NDP when he refused to support the official opposition. It came from the leader and members of the Créditiste party when they refused to accept that proposition. Mr. Speaker, that was responsible conduct on the part of two of the opposition parties in this House. Since they did not use the rule to frustrate, I submit that they recognize that the government has the right and the responsibility to govern through Parliament, that legislation after it has been debated must come to a vote. They could try to stop all this if they wanted to; however, they have refused to associate themselves with the sham put forward by the official opposition. I therefore say that there is no difficulty here. The rule has a safeguard. It stands there as a credit to the smaller opposition parties. What we shall bring in is not closure but a reflection of the will of this Parliament, a will which is in favour of intelligent government planning rather than useless procrastination, of logical procedure and government decision rather than the kind of useless delay, frustration and filibuster that seem to have been the tactic and intent in this debate of the official opposition.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this historical debate on the government motion to introduce closure may I say at the very beginning that I have been disappointed in the strength of the arguments put forward by government members and I was particularly disappointed by the speech of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) who undoubtedly must be under a great deal of strain. He has seen true examples of Liberal arrogance in Newfoundland and no doubt he sees shades of that arrogance become ever more evident in the federal Parliament. No doubt that was getting under his skin and that was why he was not himself today. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) made a weak defence of the government's action in this regard. I will deal with his speech later.

Before saying more may I correct something raised by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome). He said we should get to the position in which we can program our legislation. How can the government program legislation when it keeps bringing in amendments? We are told that the government will introduce more amendments. Why did these amendments come about? They came about as a result of debate and argument, that is to say, as a result of concerted efforts by all members of the House of Commons. We argued in support of changes and we got changes. We dealt with 190 pages of a 707 page bill. The government realized we were making too much sense. They must have said, "We cannot keep introducing more and more amendments."

Mr. Osler: You could not sell that to your constituents.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member says I could not sell that to my constituents. I could sell that argument much more easily than I could sell this closure. It is important to improve legislation when it has been so poorly drafted in the first instance. The government has brought forward omnibus bills which encompassed too many subject matters. They have been poorly drafted. That is why the government from time to time has had to introduce amendments in order to get bills through the House of Commons.

The comparison that the hon. member for Sudbury made between the Parliament of Canada and the British Parliament is not valid. In the British Parliament 630-odd members are elected. The government controls a country which could be put inside any one of our provinces except Prince Edward Island. There you see the difference. Ours is a vast country, stretching from the Pacific to the Atlantic. It is regional in its makeup and that is why it is all the more important for us to protect our freedom of speech as soon as it is threatened by an arrogant government, no matter what that government may be called.

The Minister of Justice made some interesting remarks. He said the bill is not perfect. He also said that the opposition, in delaying passage of the bill, is causing great economic havoc across the country. If the bill in its present form is passed, havoc will be caused across the country for the next ten years because there will be case after case before the courts. People will try to determine the meaning of the bill and they will want to see how various sections should be interpreted.

Speaking in Vancouver on November 18 on the tax bill, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), who will have to interpret the sections of the act and collect the taxes, said in part:

> Once tax reform comes into effect, the increased need by the taxpayer for rulings and interpretations will make greater demands on the limited numbers of staff engaged in the work.

He went on to say:

> I am concerned about the problem involved in finding additional staff that will be needed.

It is no secret when I suggest that once the bill comes into effect the real confusion will start. There will be much litigation and case after case before the courts in an attempt to interpret the exact meaning of the sections of the bill. No doubt there will be much confusion about it. There is validity to the remarks of the Minister of Justice when he says that the country is concerned about the tax bill and concerned about the application of the capital gains tax. The only way of alleviating or overcoming that concern is for the government to take the course suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Let it split the tax bill, pass those sections dealing with increased exemptions and tax cuts, and deal with the rest of it later after those parts have been more fully debated, improved, and accepted by the provinces.

At the federal-provincial conference here in Ottawa, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) attended about two weeks ago, five provinces said that the bill in its present form ought not to be proceeded with now. They said it was too complicated, that they did not know how it would fit into provincial tax structures. Surely, if we believe at all in co-operative federalism, when five of the provinces, containing well over 50 per cent of the population, ask that a bill should not be proceeded with, the government should pay some attention to their views. But here we have a government which pays no heed to the wishes of the provinces and as a result there is confusion and concern across the country.

Some members assert that a decision must be taken, that they were elected on June 8, 1968, and the fact of their election gives them the right to do anything they please. Mr. Speaker, in a responsible parliament it does not. They can administer the country, but when it comes to new tax measures they must bring them before Parliament and be responsible to Parliament. In the same way, if it is thought there may be too much filibustering, everyone in the opposition is ultimately responsible to the people. This is really what is meant by responsible government.

If cabinet ministers feel they can go across the country in the next election and kiss a few babies, dive off a few high-diving boards, do a back flip or two and win the support of the people they are being badly fooled. The people of Canada have seen all the arrogance they want and they do not need the government to demonstrate it to them any more. In the next election they will want to see evidence of a concerted policy, a clear statement of what the government intends to do.

Where is the Minister of Finance? Where has he been during this debate? He has not been here during this debate. And he will not be around during the next election, the papers say. Where is the Prime Minister? He left the House shortly after some of the initial statements were made. Can he not stand the heat? I see his parliamentary secretary is here, but he is not responsible except for keeping the Prime Minister out of trouble, something he failed to do when he was in Russia with him. These ministers are not around. They do not want to contribute anything to the work of this Parliament. They believe they have a supreme right to rule and do whatever they want to do.

Implementation of closure convinces me, and will convince everybody across the country, that the government believes it has a divine right to rule and that it can continue to rule no matter what happens. Their attitude is somewhat reminiscent of Joey Smallwood's attitude in Newfoundland. This government feels exactly the same way as he does. They thought of calling an election last fall, but they did not do so because they became a little worried; they did not know whether they could blame all Canada's troubles on the United States. They will get their tax bill, apparently, after closure, and then their troubles will begin. They will not call an election next year either; they will go to the limit and then the Prime Minister will find some reason for not calling an election at all. He will find trouble in one of the provinces among the ten and then say there will not be an election at all. For the moment, though, it is a case of an arrogant government using closure to impose its will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly under the provisions of Standing Order 37(1).

Division

When I was speaking this afternoon between 2.40 and 2.50 I referred several times to the proposition that if this motion were to carry the votes at the end of the Committee of the Whole stage would take place at a quarter to six on Wednesday. That statement was obviously based on the assumption that there would be four more days for discussion. However, when I study the motion carefully I realize that the four days could end on Tuesday. Therefore, when I said the votes would be taken at a quarter to six on Wednesday I should have said they would be taken at a quarter to ten on Tuesday night.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure I accept the interpretation of the hon. member at this moment, without reflection, but I understand he is making his point in order to correct his interpretation of the Standing Order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And only if the motion passes.

Mr. Speaker: That is correct.

It being 4.17 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of Standing Order 75c have now expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the said Standing Order it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion. Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please?

Some hon. Members: Remove him!

Mr. Mahoney: Out!

Mr. Speaker: I would again remind hon. members of the admonition which was delivered earlier today. We should make an effort to keep in mind the provisions of the Standing Order while the question is being put.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek clarification. Now that the motion has been passed, according to the motion four sitting days shall be allotted to the further consideration in committee of the whole. I note it is almost ten minutes to five o'clock. At five o'clock there will be private members' business, and after eight o'clock we will be seeking information from the government on questions and other matters. That may leave anywhere from an hour or an hour and a quarter for further consideration in committee if the whole. I therefore seek from the Chair clarification that today is not a day within the meaning of the four sitting days as stated in the motion.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I note there is a point of order here but from my point of view it would be quite acceptable, without asking the Chair to rule on the point of order, that the fourth day begin at the beginning of the next sitting.

Mr. MacInnis: When is the first day going to start?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I meant to say the first day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That was understood. I wonder whether the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) is rising on the same point of order.

Mr. McCleave: It is a different point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says it is a different point of order. I am not sure whether it is necessary to rule, but in view of the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated earlier today that his interpretation was that this meant four days beginning today, perhaps I should make a ruling. My interpretation would be that the four days would begin tomorrow. I think we could have taken up most of the day as we actually are going to do now: with the question period and routine proceedings we might well proceed through a substantial part of the evening sitting. So the four days would really be four days beginning tomorrow.

I do not know whether this is a precedent for the many instances in the future when the House will be called upon to vote on a motion under Standing Order 75C, but I would think that should be the normal interpretation of the Standing Order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, since we are being denied the right to examine many important amendments to this bill, including amendments the government House leader introduced today, and since I have some responsibility as do other members with regard to examining this legislation for the people of Canada, I ask if the government House leader would be disposed to give consideration to extending the hours of sitting during those four days.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to extend the sittings in accordance with the discussions we might have among the parties, by motion or by bringing in a suggestion in the form of a house order tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the understanding the House has just reached, to the effect that the four days will begin on Friday, I was correct in my original understanding that the committee of the whole stage would end on Wednesday. The correction I made under Standing Order 37(1) was apparently unnecessary. I was right the first time.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, in rising on a point of order I thought I would try to introduce an element of orderly consideration into the problems we face as a result of the vote. The point I wanted to make was simply that because we are faced with a rather large catalogue of tax changes, because we are faced with a rather smaller catalogue—but still pretty impressive—of the implementation of corrections and changes, and because we are now faced with four days of having to deal with these changes in committee of the whole, would it be possible to reach some kind of understanding this evening concerning a deadline in respect of notice about changes which are to be brought in?

The reason I ask is simply that at the very last moment 100 new changes might be thrown at us which we would never have the chance to consider and debate. If we could get some idea from the government as to when new changes as to co-operatives and credit unions would be brought in, at least we would know where we are going. That was my point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: I assure my hon. friend that we will produce the amendments relating to co-operatives and credit unions as soon as possible, and I will make inquiries to determine whether they can be available before the weekend. If there are any other amendments, although I do not think there are, I will advise my hon. friend.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in view of the reference made a moment ago. I wonder if it would not be more sensible if the House had the question period between 5 p.m. and 5.40 p.m., rather than going into private members' business and having the question period tonight. We could either postpone private members' hour to eight o'clock or suspend it altogether.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be no agreement in this respect. My understanding of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is that we dispense with private members' hour and have the question period and routine proceedings immediately. This would require the unanimous consent of the House. I will ask again whether there is unanimity in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity, so we will have to proceed with the order of business as provided by the Standing Orders.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today, without reflecting on the move, the House adopted a motion that would cut off debate on the taxation bill by some time late Wednesday afternoon. It now appears that in so doing we were assenting to this without realizing that amendments would not necessarily be before the House today or even tomorrow. I wonder how it will be possible for us to limit debate, the subject matter of which has not yet been placed before the House or may not even be placed before us shortly before the termination of the debate next Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would have to rule, if that would answer the point of the hon. member, that it seems to me this was the purpose of the two-hour debate which was terminated by a vote. I do not think I could suggest that the result of the vote be changed on the basis of the information which has been given since then.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a further point of order. I thought it was clear at the time the House leader was speaking that amendments to which he referred would automatically be tabled this afternoon. It is a difference of some magnitude that amendments which were only referred to may not even be presented when perhaps more than half the allotted time has expired, placing not just this House but thousands—indeed, millions—of people who will be directly affected by changes in this legislation in an impossible situation.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice that I wanted to propose a motion. Are we still on motions or are we going to come back to them later on?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Speaker: We will call the motions in a moment; that is the next order of the day.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

AGRICULTURE

LOSSES INCURRED BY CERTAIN QUEBEC PRODUCERS

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I would have hoped that my notice of motion would have originated from the government.

Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter which gives rise to an urgent economic situation and affects a great number of people.

The loss of millions of dollars suffered by hog, egg and turkey producers represents a real disaster which will drive many of them to bankruptcy shortly if the government does not take the necessary action to remedy this situation immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse has given notice to the Chair of his intention to move this motion under Standing Order 26.

The hon. member has moreover given the Chair additional information in order to underline the importance and urgency of this matter. I recognize that this is an important and urgent matter of interest, as the hon. member has said, to a great number of Canadians and obviously to all members of this House. The Chair must decide if the business of the House should be interrupted to permit consideration of the question that the hon. member has raised. He will admit that this problem is not new. In fact, during the last weeks, he has had the opportunity of bringing this matter to the attention of the House through the many questions he has directed to the responsible minister day after day. If I remember correctly, he has even proposed that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture pursuant to Standing Order 43.

All this indicates that this is a serious, and even urgent, situation which has existed for some time already. The hon. member suggests that action should be taken immediately to solve this problem. I do not think—and I suggest this to the hon. member with great consideration—that this is the type of question that we can, today at least, ask the House to consider under the provisions of Standing Order 26.

It may be that the situation is changing and that circumstances will become such that the Chair could be convinced by the hon. member or some of his colleagues that a debate should be held under the provisions of Standing Order 26 but, for the time being, I am not prepared to recognize that the business of the House should be adjourned for the purposes suggested by the hon. member for Bellechasse.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order for the purpose of clarification. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated he would table an important document on an agreement between Canada and Norway. Is he in a position to table this document, and would the procedure permit him to do so at this time?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have the necessary documents to table. Perhaps I will get a chance before the day is out to ascertain that I have fulfilled the requirements of the hon. gentleman and then I will ask to revert to motions to table them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. Jerome (Sudbury) (for Mr. Sulatycky) moved that Bill S-21, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it was not intended to proceed with this bill. As I understand it, it is to provide authority to build a short piece of railway line to a pulp mill that now is not going to be established. The explanatory note reads:

The purpose of this bill is to authorize Canadian Pacific Railway Company to construct and operate—

Here I quote from clause 1:

—a line of railway commencing from a point in the southwest 1/4 of section 15, township 59, range 14, west of the third meridian in the vicinity of Sergent, in the province of Saskatchewan, at or near mile 75.5 of the company's Meadow Lake subdivision, thence generally in a northerly direction for a distance of 62 miles more or less to a point at or near the boundary between township 68 and township 69, range 12, west of the third meridian in the vicinity of the confluence of the Beaver and Dore Rivers in the said province.

Clause 2 provides:

If the construction of the said line of railway is not commenced within a period of two years or is not completed and put in operation within a period of five years after the passing of this act, the powers of construction hereby conferred upon the company shall cease and be null and void as regards so much of the said line of railway as shall then remain uncompleted.

This piece of spur line in the Meadow Lake subdivision is to serve a pulp and paper plant to be constructed by Athabasca Forest Industries Ltd. Canadian Pacific is asking for this authority from Parliament because the power of the Canadian Transport Commission to authorize construction of branch lines is limited to lines not exceeding 20 miles in length.

It would appear that this branch line is to be built to move the products of Athabasca Forest Industries from that area to the main line. I presume this request for authorization is the result of negotiations between Canadian Pacific and Athabasca Forest Industries Ltd. This pulp and paper mill was the subject of controversy in Saskatchewan, in particular during the recent provincial election. I presume that following the change of government in Saskatchewan the project has been scuttled. It was one of the grandiose schemes of the late Mr. Thatcher, but the election has changed the circumstances relating to it and I am surprised that the sponsor of the bill has not seen fit to withdraw it.

This afternoon we had an example of the inefficiency of Parliament. Things are not done here in the manner that the man in the street would expect. They are not done as I would expect. It seems logical to me that if construction of the pulp and paper mill is not to proceed, the sponsor of the bill and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have a responsibility to Parliament to withdraw the bill. I point out that the Senate has already held a hearing on the bill and that in fact Canadian Pacific has another bill before Parliament with respect to the building of a pipeline; in fact, that bill succeeds this one on the order paper.

I can recall when Parliament gave authorization to the Labrador-North Shore Railway Company to build a railway line in the province of Quebec. The line was to go to Ungava and was actually built from Seven Islands to Labrador City. The company refused to put the line into Wabash where another mining company had an operation under development. In fact, the railway company had its own mining operations and even though it had the right to extend the line it wished to keep competing mining companies out of the area. In other words, they did not want to live up to their responsibility as a railway company but wanted to live up to their responsibility as a mining corporation. Until they were ready to mine they did not want anybody else mining there, so although there were seven or eight major iron properties in that area the railway would not be constructed.

The clause in this bill was also in that bill. They came before Parliament at least three times and asked for an extension of five years without any intention of building the line within that time. What they did was get a licence to build it so they could keep everybody else out, which they did. After the third extension this House, in its wisdom, refused to give an additional extension to the railway.

The Wabash iron mines wanted to build a line beyond Labrador City and were told that not only would this railway company not extend the line to Wabash but they would not allow connections from Wabash to the Labrador Northshore line. There was a Supreme Court case and the decision was reached that Wabash would be given a line because they threatened to put a line of their own right down to the St. Lawrence. They were given the right to put in a line and connect to this other line at Labrador City. Northshore was instructed that they must carry the iron ore from Wabash because they were given the right to be a common carrier and therefore could not restrict anyone else from using the facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this bill should be withdrawn. I see nothing wrong with Canadian Pacific Railway coming to Parliament and asking for the right to put in this line. However, as I understand the Railway Act there is the restriction that is written into this bill which says that within two years you must start construction, and the line must be constructed within five years, or you must reapply for a charter to build a line of over 20 miles.

This is not a small company coming to us because they made a mistake or did not know. I am sure this railway has top advisers who can advise them of the potential of this project. I am sure they would agree, because of the fight during the election, that in the foreseeable future it is not likely there will be a pulp mill in that area. I am saying that from a political point of view. There are two sides to the question, but it seems that the problem is settled at least for the time being.

No financial institution in Canada today will allow money to be spent for a pulp mill, unless it is out of its cotton-picking mind. Probably the only people I can put into that category are those in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion who are still supporting the extension of some areas when other areas of the country are facing massive lay-offs in the pulp and paper industry. There is no market today for our pulp and paper and it is not likely that anybody except the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would even consider such a project.

I am sure Canadian Pacific Railway is aware of these facts. To be fair to the mover of this motion, Mr. Speaker, I would have thought he would have been informed that they wish to withdraw the bill and, if necessary, re-submit it. The need for this bill does not now exist.

Mr. Cadieu: How do you know?

Mr. Peters: The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) asks me how I know. When this bill was asked for, a full-scale operation was going on for the establishment of a pulp and paper mill in that area by Athabasca Forest Industries Ltd. The hon. member knows, and I know, that as long as that project was progressing with reasonable alacrity there had to be a parallel project by the railway company to raise the financing and meet the legal requirements for the building of a spur line.

I am not suggesting that we will not have a shortage of pulp within two years or that we will not need more paper in the international field. All I am suggesting is that the development of the pulp and paper mill has to be paralelled with the spur line. If no development takes place in the industry, then there is no need for the developement of a spur line. I am sure the hon. member for Meadow Lake would not disagree that if we pass this bill, within two years the line must start and at the end of five years it must be completed. If there is no reason other than the pulp mill to put that spur line in, obviously he will not get any benefit because no trains will be running over it. I am sure that in the interests of economy and common sense he would agree with that.

If this railway is not proceeded with—and my information is that there is no intention to proceed with it—I would strongly urge that the hon. member for Meadow Lake inform this House whether there are other developments that the spur line would handle. In the explanatory note of this bill it is specifically mentioned that the purpose of establishing these 62 miles of line is to serve a pulp and paper plant to be constructed by Athabasca Forest Industries Ltd. Nothing is said about servicing the elevator in that area, and I am not familiar with its location. I must take the information that is available to me.

[Mr. Peters.]

• (5:20 p.m.)

A number of statements concerning this matter have been made by the government of Saskatchewan. It has said that it will review the matter of supplies and whether there is any possibility of success with regard to what is proposed here. Feasibility studies will be undertaken and until those feasibility studies have been completed this project will not be considered.

I am suggesting that the House should not consider this bill in a vacuum. We do not know whether this line is a feasible proposition. That being so, we should consider other pieces of legislation that are obviously more current and much more to the point.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—National Security—Authority for payment of special force; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—Canadian National Railways—Metro Development Centre, Toronto—Alleged agreement to demolish Union Station; the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Regional Economic Expansion—Atlantic Development Council report—Inquiry as to decision on recommendations.

PRIVATE BILLS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jerome (for Mr. Sulatycky) that Bill S-21, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I did not plan to speak on this bill. I thought that possibly the bill would be withdrawn. I understand that the deal for the pulp mill in question as between the Saskatchewan government and Parsons and Whitmore had not been completed when the provincial government was defeated. The present government of Saskatchewan, and Parsons and Whitmore, are still negotiating and if the line is not built within the next two years the proposition will not be considered. I do not think we should waste the time of the House discussing this matter. We do not know whether the people concerned will get together and if this line will be built. I therefore do not see any point in taking up the time of the House on this bill.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a disposition in the House to pass this motion referring the bill to the standing committee and then call it six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the point I wish to make is that I think my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), is saying that the bill ought to be withdrawn. He has indicated to me that if the procedure suggested were followed the withdrawal could take place in committee. On that basis we would go along with the suggestion made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome). It is too bad the ministers are not present, because we could hold the question period.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to proceed with Bill S-22, with the permission of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair)?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair feels that the best procedure would be for the motion to be put in relation to Bill S-21. When a decision has been rendered on it, the House must decide what it will then do. Is the parliamentary secretary seeking the floor? I might say that I do not think the parliamentary secretary should seek the floor to discuss the point raised by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) because I think the two matters are not directly related.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, it would be unfair to hon. members opposite if I did not indicate accurately my understanding with regard to this matter. A private bill is before the House. Hon. members have spoken on it. There are at least two other hon. members who are available and who will talk on it until six o'clock. They could talk it out. On the other hand, if the House gives its unanimous consent those hon. members are prepared to see the bill referred to the standing committee, to then call it six o'clock and not to exercise their prerogative of talking on the bill until six o'clock. I know that the other measure which the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) referred to is important but it does not constitute part of the acknowledged agreement that was today entered into by hon. members. Going ahead with it would be unfair. As I say, hon. member are prepared to speak on the bill before the House until six o'clock, but they will exercise their option of not speaking if the bill is sent to committee. We could then call it six o'clock and leave to another day the next measure.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to the agreement reached by the House, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—ALLEGED REQUEST OF ONTARIO FOR PRODUCTION GUARANTEES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister concerning the auto pact. The government of Ontario allegedly stated that the safeguards under the auto pact are essential and that, if possible, the production guaranteed to Canada should be increased. Will the government be making a statement on its position regarding the auto pact before the Prime Minister leaves for his visit with President Nixon next week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I do not think the hon. member has quoted the Premier of Ontario correctly. At least, that is not what I understood him to say. In any event, the answer to the question is, no. The government has been negotiating an auto agreement over a period of some months and negotiations have not reached a point where the government can make a statement.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT ON PRODUCTION GUARANTEES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Can the Acting Prime Minister say whether any consensus has been reached between officials of the United States government and Canadian officials regarding the production guarantees as they now stand under the auto pact. Can he assure us that the auto pact has not been weakened?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I have not, of course, taken part in the discussions among the officials. The advice I have received is that an agreement has not been reached and, of course, they cannot reach agreement; only the representatives of the two governments can reach agreement.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO—MAINTENANCE OF PRODUCTION GUARANTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): The Premier of Ontario has asked that the Ontario minister for trade and development be given an opportunity to meet with the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has that idea been taken up and is it the intention to arrange such a meeting before the Prime Minister goes to Washington?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that my question was so important. I wish to thank hon. members for that applause. In all seriousness, is there to be such a meeting and, if so, when?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): However competent he may be, the Acting Prime Minister cannot know everything that is going on. The minister seemed to imply the other day that such a meeting had not taken place. In fact, a meeting did take place between representatives of the federal government and of the government of Ontario at which the situation of the automobile agreement was received quite fully. The views of the Ontario government are well known to myself and to my department.

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister assure us that the safeguards which are so essential will be maintained and that the auto pact will not be weakened as a result of this forthcoming meeting?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the minister of trade and development of Ontario showed a much more sophisticated approach than the hon. gentleman does, at least in his present question. He said he was interested in the maintenance of the advantages of the automotive agreement for Canada, and we agree with him entirely in that respect.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF EXCLUSION OF HOSPITALS AND EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the announcement by the minister's parliamentary secretary on November 24 that the local initiatives program would exclude hospitals and educational institutions, is the minister prepared to make a statement on motions in explanation of this policy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The reasoning is rather simple. It was thought that the likely demands for assistance under the local initiative program would be so great that some narrowing of the criteria would be desirable in order to avoid too great a flood of submissions. The objective is to provide as many jobs as possible with as little administrative delay as possible.

Mr. Knight: In view of the fact that some hospitals, such as the Weyburn Union Hospital, went to the expense of hiring architects to draw up plans in an effort to qualify under the local initiative program, is the minister prepared to reconsider the policy of excluding hospitals from the ambit of this program?

Mr. Lang: We are presently considering whether changing the criteria would improve the program. I cannot say that anything will be excluded under the terms of this review, but I must tell the House that the flood of applications at the moment is such as to justify the approach we have taken.

[Mr. Alexander.]

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CRITERIA—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON PROJECTS APPROVED

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Since only a few projects have so far been approved, though we have now entered the month of December, and since it has not been possible to accept many projects under the criteria initially enunciated, can the minister tell us whether these criteria are to be further considered?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): First, I should correct the hon. member. He suggests there have been changes in the criteria governing programs. There have been no changes up to this point. I expect a great number of applications to be approved in the very near future.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I did not say the criteria had been changed as yet. In view of the fact that all of the projects will not be acceptable under the original criteria, might there not be some further elaboration or restriction of the criteria? Can the minister say whether this is under consideration. Secondly, could the minister indicate when he might be able to make a further progress report, particularly on those projects that are ready to begin on the say so of the minister's department?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be able, I believe, to give further information about the decisions taken very shortly. I do not expect any narrowing of the criteria in connection with the programs since within the initial criteria I believe the department can select those applications that produce the best result in terms of number of jobs created.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SASKATCHEWAN PROTEST WITH REGARD TO EXCLUSION OF SCHOOL PROJECTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether he has received a telegram from the minister of municipal affairs for Saskatchewan protesting the exclusion of school projects, regardless of whether they are construction projects or renovation projects, from the scope of the local initiatives program? If so, would the minister indicate his response to this representation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have received the telegram. It came to hand today but I have not replied to it yet.

NATO MEETING IN BRUSSELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION RESPECTING REDUCTION OF FORCES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could he say to the House whether Canada will attend the Brussels meeting next week and what position it intends to take. Will it decide in favour of a unilateral reduction of Canadian armed forces or will it object thereto?

In addition, will Canada follow the example of the United States by maintaining its undertaking in favour of a strong Atlantic alliance?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my hope and expectation to be in Brussels next week for the meeting of NATO powers. Perhaps my colleague the Minister of National Defence will be there, too. We have been one of the strongest advocates in NATO of mutual and balanced force reductions. We will be continuing to press for this, which involves not unilateral reductions but multilateral reductions.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR DECISION ON AID TO FISH PLANTS AT MULGRAVE AND CANSO

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the critical economic conditions in eastern Nova Scotia caused in part by the continued closing of the Acadia fisheries plants at Mulgrave and Canso, and in view of the minister's recent visit to the area in connection with negotiations that have been going on between the minister's department, the province of Nova Scotia and the proposed operator, can the minister now inform the House when we may expect some decision on federal aid for this vital project?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, last week I met with the minister responsible for development in Nova Scotia, Mr. Fisher.

We are now reviewing the matter and I hope to make a decision within a week.

NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO FISH PLANT AT BURGEO

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I direct to the Minister of Fisheries. What steps is the federal government taking to assist in the reopening of the fish plant at Burgeo, which is a very important fish plant on the south coast of Newfoundland in the constituency of the Minister of Transport?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at the matter very carefully.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. Hon. members have probably noticed that practically every member to my left is seeking the floor to ask a question. Hon. members will realize that they cannot all be recognized if there are too many supplementaries. For the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and will return to the hon. member for St. John's East in a moment.

GOVERNMENT TREND PREDICTIONS ON UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Acting Prime Minister. Can the hon. gentleman inform the House whether the government's trend predictions indicate that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate this winter will reach 8.2 per cent with approximately 10 per cent in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I saw a reference to this in the press as well, but certainly this is not any seasonally adjusted expectation.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of that response and the response of the Minister of Finance, who I believe said "nonsense" when I asked my question, can the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance indicate whether they have made any trend predictions and, if so, have enough confidence in them to make them public?

Mr. Sharp: No, we have not been making our forecasts, which we make for internal purposes, public. We hope that they are fairly accurate but we have no intention of publishing them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF SEALING TREATY WITH NORWAY AND EXCHANGE OF NOTES ON FISHING PRACTICES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I said a little earlier that I should like to take the opportunity of tabling some documents that had been requested. Might I have permission to do so now?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies of an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Norway on sealing and the conservation of seal stocks in the northwest Atlantic, dated July 15, 1971; and also an exchange of notes between the government of Canada and the government of Norway constituting an agreement with respect to Norwegian fishing practices off the Atlantic coast of Canada of the same date.

Mr. Lundrigan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that no statement was made on motions on the tabling of this document, which is an agreement between Canada and Norway that permits the country of Norway to violate our territorial seas nine miles off our coast, I wonder whether it would be in order to ask Your Honour if unanimous consent could be given to permit comments on the tabling of the document.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do I understand that the hon. member is asking leave to have the document appended to Hansard? Is that his request?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the document, I think some hon. member on this side of the House should be permitted, by unanimous consent, to respond to this violation of our territorial seas resulting from this agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What the hon. member is asking for is a debate. He can do that only if the House reverts to motions and a statement is made. Does the House give unanimous consent to reverting to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to recognize the hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order stems from the statement made this afternoon by the Acting Prime Minister to the effect that later today he would ask permission to revert to motions in order to table a document. The very minister who made that promise is now refusing to carry it out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

GREECE—REQUEST THAT CANADA JOIN DENMARK AND NORWAY AT NATO MEETING IN SEEKING RESTORATION OF FREE INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the inconsistency between the declared purposes of NATO, which include strengthening free institutions, and the practices of the Greek military dictatorship, will Canada at the forthcoming session of the NATO council join with Denmark and Norway in seeking action for the restoration of free institutions in Greece?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the Canadian government to use the NATO forum for this purpose. We have made our views known directly to the government of Greece, but not in the council of NATO.

POSSIBILITY OF SELLING CL-215 AIRCRAFT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I thank the Acting Prime Minister for informing the House that the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) will be accompanying the Prime Minister of Canada on the occasion of his meeting with the President of the United States.

Does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce intend to promote sales to the United States of Canadair CL-215 amphibian aircraft in order to stimulate the aircraft industry in Canada and thus avoid lay-offs at Canadair?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the federal government's endeavours in behalf of the company involved are well known and should the United States government need that type of aircraft I shall promote them.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE OF PROPOSED INCREASES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question was to be directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is supposed to be in the House, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the poverty that exists in this country today, could the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that the increases in benefits under the family allowance program will be effective by May 1, 1972, as proposed by Bill C-264?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be the last to try to prophesy what will happen in this House. Certainly, the government would like to proceed with this legislation but, as you know, unless it uses extreme measures it cannot always get its way.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question. I can assure the Acting Prime Minister that if this Bill C-264 came before the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-U.S. PRODUCTION SHARING AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF 1963 AGREEMENT ON MAINTENANCE OF DOLLAR BALANCE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The day before yesterday, the minister attempted to respond to the right hon. member for Prince Albert who had asked him whether he would consider tabling the documents signed by the present President of the Treasury Board on June 7, 1963 with respect to production sharing, research and development with the United States, before he goes to that country this weekend?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): By the way, I am still waiting for my $10 bet multiplied by two from the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: With regard to the question, there is a motion for the tabling of papers, motion No. 264 if my memory serves me well, which will provide an opportunity for the opposition, and the member who presented the motion, to demonstrate to the House and to the Canadian public that it would be in the national interest to table the document referred to now. I am waiting to hear these arguments.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question. Do I gather from the minister's response that a secret document or secret understanding does exist between Canada and the United States with regard to the maintenance of the dollar balance, the exchange of arms and a research and development program?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the opposition is looking for leaks and secrets at the moment. I do not have to treat this as secret because it was fully reported in the House by the then Minister of Defence Production, now the President of the Treasury Board—

Mr. Forrestall: It was not.

Mr. Pepin: —on June 7, 1963. I will give the hon. member the page number in Hansard.

Mr. Forrestall: I read it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Meadow Lake. Is the minister rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Pepin: I rise on a question of privilege to defend the position of the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Forrestall: Defend your own position.

Mr. Pepin: Anyone who looks at Hansard for June 7, 1963—

Mr. Forrestall: I have.

Mr. Pepin: —will see—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege. It is debate between a member and a minister. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Meadow Lake.

AGRICULTURE

FEEDER CATTLE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF DEATH OF ANIMALS IN TRANSIT AND COMPENSATION FOR OWNER

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): My question is for the Minister of Transport. In his absence, I will direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary. It concerns agriculture, but that minister is not present either. Out of two recent shipments of feeder cattle from Alberta, one of 700 head from Fort Macleod and the other approximately 900 head from Brooks, Alberta, by Canadian Pacific Railways, approximately two dozen head died. Agriculture officials checked and found that the animals did not die from any disease. The explanation of the CPR is that because of a heavy snowfall in Winnipeg, the cattle did not get enough feed, water and rest at that point. Is the minister investigating why these feeder cattle did not receive sufficient feed, water and care in Winnipeg, as a result of which they died en route to Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Can we assume that the question has been asked? If the hon. member wants more information, he can ask a supplementary. The minister might be allowed to reply to the first part of the question.

Mr. Cadieu: A supplementary question. Will the minister ensure that the investigation is made public and that complete compensation will be provided to the owners?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the department has recently been informed of this problem. We are investigating the whole matter. If necessary, we will make a report in the House in due course.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED AGREEMENT OF UNITED STATES TO DEVALUE DOLLAR—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN DOLLAR CONTINUE TO FLOAT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In doing so, may I welcome him back from the IMF conference in Rome. In view of the fact that reports from the conference indicate that the government of the United States may agree to devaluation of the American dollar by 5 per cent or more, will the minister assure the House that the Canadian government will not peg the Canadian dollar at its present level, but will allow it to float in accordance with the international currency market?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a great many propositions were put forward in Rome and considered by the ministers of finance and governors of banks who were present. I stated our position quite clearly, that we felt the Canadian dollar should continue to float and that Canada had taken a great deal of the burden with respect to the adjustment of the United States dollar through the floating of the Canadian dollar, that we had taken our knocks so to speak, and the Canadian dollar should continue to float.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNITED STATES IMPORT SURCHARGE—PRECONDITIONS FOR REMOVING

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. John Connally, at the conference in question apparently outlined some of the preconditions for removing the 10 per cent surcharge on imports into the United States, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he is now in a position to tell the House what those preconditions are and if he will be prepared to make a statement fairly soon as to Canada's reaction to those preconditions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the preconditions have been indicated many times before, starting with the statement of the President of the United States on August 15 where he said there must be an adjustment on currency values vis-à-vis the United States dollar, there must be some adjustments on the burden sharing and some relief on trade barriers. We took the position from the beginning, and we continue to adopt the position, that all of the conditions mentioned by the President of the United States have been fulfilled by Canada long ago and that we should not be subject to the surcharge.

DISC PLAN—SUGGESTION THAT PRIME MINISTER EXPRESS CANADA'S OPPOSITION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the fact the Minister of Finance has agreed that the DISC plan may be of unparallelled danger to the Canadian economy, can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that the Prime Minister will express Canada's opposition to this program and will urge President Nixon to not proceed with this measure?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The answer to that is yes, Mr. Speaker, but of course we have many times expressed this point of view to the United States administration.

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—ACCEPTANCE OF CANADIAN POSITION BY UNITED STATES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether the view he has expressed with regard to the Canadian economy—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Stand up straight.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps I should ask the hon. member for St. Boniface to stand up and leave, but that is not my privilege.

[Mr. Benson.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the minister whether he has put forward the thought that the Canadian dollar has already been adjusted to the extent of between 7 per cent and 8 per cent and this is all the Canadian people should be expected to take in the way of knocks? Has this view been accepted by the representatives of the United States in these discussions?

• (8:30 p.m.)

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier many propositions are before the group of ministers. These propositions are being considered. Indeed, perhaps I might say the Canadian public has taken too many knocks in respect of the adjustment of the United States dollar.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps the minister did not understand my question. I asked him whether the representations he had made with regard to the relationship between the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar had been accepted. Have the views expressed by the minister been accepted by the United States authorities? That lends itself to a yes or no.

Mr. Benson: They have been made quite clear to the United States authorities. As I said earlier there are many propositions before the group of ministers, the Group of Ten, and they are all being considered at the present time, but no decisions have been made.

FINANCE

MEETING OF GROUP OF TEN AT ROME—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RESULTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a question, for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister intend to make a statement on motions tomorrow on the result of the meetings of the Group of Ten and, if not, why not?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I will consider this. I am not sure it is necessary. The meeting has been fully recorded in the press. I will consider the suggestion of the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the question I was about to ask of the Minister of Finance has already been put to him.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FISHERIES TREATY WITH NORWAY—INQUIRY AS TO RATIFICATION BY PARLIAMENT

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs by way of clarification. With regard to the document he tabled a little while ago, to which he referred as an agreement, can the minister say if that is what it is or is it a treaty which requires ratification by this Parliament before it comes into effect.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there were two documents I tabled. One is a treaty. I described it as an agreement, and it is so described, but it is a treaty and will require ratification. It is not the intention of the government, however, to present it before Parliament. The hon. member knows, having been a member of a previous administration, that it is only rarely such a document is brought before Parliament before ratification by the government.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious question of privilege which I should like to raise, and which will take five or six minutes, rather than wait until the end of the question period. It relates to the secret treaty which has been made between Canada and Norway.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot take up too much time on a question of privilege. If he has a question of privilege, I shall be delighted to receive it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on July 15, 1971 a secret document was exchanged between the government of Canada and the government of Norway which, if ratified, would permit Norway legally to pursue a course which has not been pursued since the 18th century. It would permit Norway to violate the territorial seas of Canada. Perhaps I might quote from article XII of the terms of the treaty.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps hon. members who are not interested in the sealing operation would pay a little attention to the sovereignty of the nation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps hon. members would allow the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate to indicate what his question of privilege is.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I might quote, in part, from Article XII of the terms of the treaty:

> —Norwegian vessels engaged in sealing operations are allowed, notwithstanding the provisions of the Exchange of Notes between the Government of Canada and the Government of Norway of July 15, 1971, to take seals
> (a) within the outer nine miles of the territorial sea on the Atlantic coast of Canada between 48° 00' North latitude and 55° 20' North latitude, and
> (b) up to but not closer than three miles from the nearest land—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should indicate quickly what his question of privilege is. As the hon. member knows he has to indicate how his Parliamentary rights and privileges, as well those of the Parliament of Canada, have been affected by the tabling of this document or the signing of a treaty. I would like him to indicate his question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if I might be allowed one tenth the latitude allowed members such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, then I will get around to my question of privilege. The treaty continues:

> —in all the waters of Notre Dame Bay and of the Strait of Belle Isle—

Further, it indicates briefly that either party may terminate this agreement upon three years' notice in writing. However, no such notice shall be given by either party before December 31, 1975. It is signed for the government of Canada by Mr. Beasley and for the government of Norway—I cannot pronounce the name.

In view of the remark made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, it is clear that this matter, the secret treaty, would never have been made public but for some loyal people who were willing to offer a service to members such as the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and others. Because of the fact the minister indicated this treaty will not be brought before Parliament, and in view of the urgency and the principle involved in the document concerning the conservation of the marine resources of Canada, an important aspect of the Canadian economy, I feel it is incumbent on the minister or on the Minister of Fisheries, who we have felt up to date has been fairly loyal to our cause, to have this document referred to the House of Commons for debate and further to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. I would move such a motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot, during the question period, rise and propose a motion. The hon. member has taken the floor on a question of privilege and has stated his point clearly. The Chair has to rule concerning whether there is a question of privilege. Obviously, in my interpretation of parliamentary privilege, the parliamentary privilege of the hon. member has not been injuriously affected. The matter to which the hon. member referred may be very important, but I really suggest to him and to all hon. members, it can hardly be considered by way of a question of privilege. Perhaps some other way might be determined in which the situation could be considered by the House.

Mr. Lundrigan: I thank Your Honour for his statement. I give oral notice now, and shall give written notice tomorrow, of my intention to move a motion asking for unanimous consent of members of the House to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not have to give verbal notice. He can give his notice tomorrow and I assure him that it will be considered, as it ought to be.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether this agreement has been ratified yet and if not when is ratification likely to take place.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the ordinary procedure in agreements of this kind is not to make them public until they come into force; that is, after ratification. In this particular case it became public because the Norwegian government, in the course of its procedures for ratification, released the text so I felt we were privileged to release it too. It would be our intention to ratify it immediately.

An hon. Member: It is already ratified.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES TREATY WITH NORWAY—REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS TERMS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this treaty, several facets of which have been mentioned already, and in view of the fact that it will permit the annual seal massacre to take place until at least 1978, can the minister assure the House that an opportunity will be given to Parliament to discuss the terms of the treaty before this licence to further decimate our wildlife is made final?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not sure the hon. member has in mind the same reasons the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has in mind in raising the question. There might be an opportunity at some time to have a discussion of this matter such as during consideration of the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and my department. There will be plenty of opportunities. We have nothing to hide about this agreement.

FISHERIES TREATY WITH NORWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the matter and the very serious questions raised thereto by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, and since the minister says he has nothing to hide, will the minister give a statement to the House tomorrow on this treaty?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to issue a statement on this subject.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member in a moment.

The hon. member for Gaspé.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will have to wait a little.

[English]

The hon. Member for St. John's East is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: May I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that I directed my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who still has the responsibility of the House for international treaties. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would make a statement on this treaty, not the Minister of Fisheries.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will come back to the hon. member in a few moments.

[Mr. Sharp.]

[English]

I will return to the hon. member for St. John's East in a moment, but at this time we have a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister has indicated to the House that the secret treaty of July 15 has not been ratified. I am not multilingual, but I have a document in my hand which refers to the accord between Canada and Norway and which is signed by the minister's own "expert" in external affairs, Mr. Allen Beasley. What does that mean?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

STEINBERG'S—INQUIRY AS TO RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN INCREASED PROFITS AND PRICES

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Considering the announcement made today by Steinberg's Company to the effect that their profits for the last quarter are higher that expected, does the minister intend to ask for an investigation in order to determine whether the enormous profits made in 1971 by that chain store have contributed to the increase of consumer prices?

[English]

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have not seen those reports, but I will have a look at them to see whether there is any correlation between the profit level and price levels. I would point out to the hon. member that there are many reasons for profit increases, including the efficiency of the operators of the firm, and that there is not necessarily any correlation between the two levels.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he tell the House if and when he will be tabling the white paper on immigration which I believe he promised the House last spring.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The discussion that has taken place in the House has generally been about the changes to the immigration law, with some comments about the reference in a previous Speech from the Throne to a policy paper. We have been working toward the final version of these matters. I cannot put a precise date as to the tabling or first reading, nor can I predict whether it will happen in the remaining short portion of this session or the next session.

NUMBER OF ALIENS IN CANADA ILLEGALLY—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO REMEDY SITUATION

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): In view of the fact that there are some 7,500 cases pending before the Immigration Appeal Board and allegedly 200,000 aliens living in Canada illegally, will the minister table a white paper on immigration as quickly as possible, if he has one, or bring in legislation to curb this kind of activity?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The proposed amendments to the immigration law will, of course, attempt to deal with the administrative difficulties which exist. I must say, however, that the suggestion of 200,000 illegal immigrants is complete guesswork.

REGULATIONS COVERING EMPLOYMENT OF ARTISTS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. He has indicated to the House that it might be some time before there are substantial changes made to the Immigration Act. I have been after the hon. gentleman for some time about changes in the regulations which would allow reasonable reciprocity in terms of temporary employment of artists, and men in other vocations, in Canada under the present regulations, but who are denied similar privileges—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask the question. It is a complicated question, if it is a question.

Mr. Rose: I was trying to lay the basis for my question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister now whether he can give the house some indication when he might use his authority to alter the regulations to prevent this kind of loophole which is causing considerable difficulty among Canadian creative people.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): What the hon. member regards as loopholes some other people at least do not, but we are looking at the question of what we can do under the existing legislation, and there is certainly a possibility that we may attempt to proceed with changes in the regulations prior to the enactment of legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Perhaps we might try to have two or three more questions before the end. I doubt that we will have time for further supplementary questions on this subject.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The same answer has been coming from the minister for possibly two years. He has been looking at it for two years. When will he bring in the regulations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—APPLICATIONS FROM MUNICIPALITIES—NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Would he tell the House how much use is made of the Local Initiatives Program? Are the municipalities taking advantage of the benefits offered by the government? Are many jobs created through those programs?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The minister may reply briefly to the question. Because it is so general in nature, it seems to me that it should be answered by way of a statement on motions. However, if the minister can reply to it quickly, we will go on to the next question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in due course I will be able to give a report which would be more satisfactory to the hon. member.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE FOR PAYMENT OF RETIREMENT ALLOWANCES

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In 1967 Parliament passed legislation setting up the Cape Breton Development Corporation, section 18 of which dealt in part with former employees.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Don't read.

Mr. MacInnis: I knew that somebody would fall for it some day. This is a blank piece of paper. It would be the hon. member for St. Boniface who would open his big mouth at the wrong time. This is a blank page.

Section 18 of that act dealt with a portion of the petition placed before Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that hon. members should give the hon. member an opportunity to ask his question and then give an opportunity to the minister to reply. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has the floor.

Mr. MacInnis: The subject matter of section 18 in the petition placed before Parliament was studied by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. My question to the minister is as follows: Now that the Devco authorities have partially complied with section 18 A(ii) of the act, can the minister indicate whether the allowances which have been increased to $75 a month, less the Canada Pension Plan payments, for over 40 years of service will be retroactive to the date the legislation came into force or will they be paid on the basis of the dates of the individual retirements?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I suppose the hon. member is asking me for a legal opinion, and I cannot give it at this time.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I take strong exception to the minister stating that I am asking for a legal opinion from him or, for that matter, from anybody on the government side. He and I know it is against the rules of the House to ask for a legal opinion. All I am asking the minister is whether section 18 A(ii) of the act will be complied with. Will the moneys be paid as of the date when the act came into force or will they be paid on the basis of the date of the individual's retirement?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): May I take the question as notice and answer it later on.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a supplementary question? We have just about reached the end of the question period. The hon. member may ask a supplementary question.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite are hollering and screaming to the effect that I want a legal opinion. I have been perfectly satisfied—in fact, more than satisfied—with the findings of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee which was chaired by an hon. member of the party opposite and manned by 12 members of that party. All I ask of the minister as a supplementary question is: After looking at this legislation, will he instruct Devco to assure the dependants of former miners of their rightful payments under the legislation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I just said that I am taking the question as notice.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood. I will try to recognize another hon. member before the end of the question period.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT WHITE PAPER OF 1966—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATIVE PROPOSALS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It arises out of previous questions when there was some suggestion about introducing a new white paper on immigration. Has the minister any plans to introduce legislation to carry out the proposals that appeared in the government's white paper of 1966?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reviewing the possible amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act, we have also been taking into consideration changes that might be made in the Immigration Act, some of which might deal with matters raised in the white paper to which the hon. member refers.

TRADE

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO MAINTAIN AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the United States, New Zealand and Australia are making strenuous efforts to maintain agricultural exports, particularly grain, to European Common Market countries, what steps is Canada taking to protect its grain export interest in this area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know the United States is trying to reach agreement with the European Economic Community on grains, and if such agreement is reached we will of course ask to be part of it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note there are a number of points of order and questions of privilege that hon. members wish to raise. I will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate first on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question with regard to the tabling of a sealing treaty between Norway and Canada, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed to table it. After the time for motions had passed today I again raised the matter and the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated he would table it later today. Tonight, after making a response to a question, he did table the document. I then rose and asked for the unanimous consent of the House—which might or might not have been in order—so that I or somebody else on this side could respond to the document which was tabled. We were denied that privilege. I have in my hand a copy of a press release which was issued on December 2—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to inform the hon. member that the rules of the House apply to him also. I have twice ruled that he has no question of privilege. He puts the Chair in a very difficult position. I would invite him to say immediately what his question of privilege is, and then allow me to make a ruling on it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, there is a rule in the House of Commons which allows ministers to make statements on motions and spokesmen for opposition parties to respond to them. I have in my hand what is in fact a statement made outside the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: The statement was made this very day after the minister came into the House. Before that it was presented to the press. It is a fairly succinct statement which gives the details of the document which was tabled. Because the minister, outside the House, presented this fairly detailed statement to the media of the country, he has denied the right of members of this party to make representations on behalf of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, he has not only denied the right of hon. members here but has denied that right to every Canadian on the east coast of Canada—and I only hope that all Canadians who are interested in marine resources will speak out. I do not know what Standing Order I can quote in order to justify that I have a question of privilege, but if the Standing Order which enables ministers of the Crown to make statements on motions is to be abused by presenting this kind of statement outside the House, thus circumventing our rights, we might as well eliminate the procedure for statements on motions and enable hon. members when important documents are subreptitiously brought before the House—

Mr. McIlraith: Explain.

Mr. Lundrigan: —to present the points of view, briefly and succinctly, of Canadians who are affected. The behaviour of this minister, which is reflected throughout the whole cabinet, is part of a process to downgrade Parliament and is preventing us from presenting the views of the people whom we represent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of National Health and Welfare was not in his seat during the question period. He has just arrived in the chamber. He will not be here tomorrow, and I would like to pose a question to him which is very urgent because there is a deadline of December 8—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member could do this with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. I have to draw to the attention of hon. members that I extended the question period by a few minutes to take into account the fact that we had a number of points of order and of privilege. As I say, I tried to take this into account by extending the question period. That period of our activities ended 15 minutes ago, and I think this has been a rather generous extension.

Mr. Paproski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have noticed that I asked whether there was unanimous consent to prolong the question period, and there was not unanimity.

Mr. Paproski: Then I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to say that the roster system has gone to hell; but this is a very important matter. There is a deadline so far as having a team in the 1972 Olympics. That deadline closes on December 8. There is still a possibility for us to enter the 1972 Olympics with a national team. All I want to do is ask the minister a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member—

Mr. Paproski: The hon. member for Northwest Territories said no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression is that the hon. member has pleaded his case with eloquence. If there is agreement to extend the question period, the hon. member might be allowed to put his question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I regret there is not consent.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please. The Chair is not getting assistance from either side of the House. I am trying to do a job on behalf of members of the House. If members think the House should not be sitting, there are provisions under the Standing Orders which would allow the Chair to take into account the fact that there is not the order that there should be in the House. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member for Northwest Territories did not notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had given his consent with respect to answering the question. I am sure that if the hon. member had noticed this, no objection would have been raised. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare wishes to allow this very important question, I would hope that agreement will come from the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we should not spend the rest of the evening trying to ascertain whether a question can or cannot be asked. The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the question period I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would make a statement on a treaty, the contents of which he tabled tonight. The Secretary of State for External Affairs permitted the Minister of Fisheries to reply to the question. The Minister of Fisheries circumvented the rules of the House by saying yes, he would issue a statement. Coincidentally with the minister saying that, a statement was issued and circulated to members of the House and to the press.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I object to this circumvention of the rules and practices of the House. It is incumbent upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make a statement in the House on this very important treaty, thereby enabling all hon. members to respond to his statement. I object to the procedure that has been followed tonight. The rules have been circumvented by the Minister of Fisheries in issuing this statement to the press before a statement was made to the House.

Mr. Sharp: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I draw the attention of the House to Hansard, page 10067, where there is recorded a question put to me by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. He asked: "Will the minister table that document and when?" I complied with the request of the hon. gentleman.

An hon. Member: Why are you afraid to make a statement on this?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacInnis: The Secretary of State for External Affairs—and a check of the "blues" will bear me out—this afternoon in answer to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate said that later today, or some time during the day, he would be prepared to revert to motions to make such a statement.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. MacInnis: Tonight the minister is the very person who is refusing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This point has been made on a number of occasions over a period of 30 minutes of the time of the House.

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know why the hon. member for Northwest Territories refuses to let me speak about our national game and about entering a team into the 1972 Olympics. This is my question of privilege.

Mr. Forrestall: I want to know, too.

An hon. Member: He is against it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Northwest Territories rises on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orange: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member across the way could say something intelligent, I would try—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we are sinking lower and lower. I really do not think we should continue in this vein. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 1, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: It is my understanding that the committee will now resume consideration of sections 21, 35, 46 to 48 inclusive, 59, 64 to 66 inclusive, 87 and 124 dealing with mining and petroleum.

On clause 1—section 21: Cost of borrowed money.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, before I speak on the resource industries so far as the tax bill is concerned I have a question for the parliamentary secretary. I know he is as interested as I am in the development of our resource industries, particularly because he comes from Alberta. Would he take a few moments this evening to compare the depletion changes in the new bill and what they do to the former act having regard to the depletion allowances in the United States?

I ask this question in all seriousness because I have in my hand the reasons for the decision of the National Energy Board. At page 59 appears the information that the reserves of proven resources of natural gas in Canada—and that means western Canada—are 60.3 trillion cubic feet. Ten years ago, when the Borden commission made its report, the proven resources of natural gas were approximately 23 trillion cubic feet.

The demand in Canada is less than the supply asked for by the United States at the present time, which is approximately 2.7 trillion cubic feet. The decision to turn down those licences by the board is such that there is concern about Canada's needs in the domestic and industrial fields for the foreseeable future. They do not think we have enough proven resources. I come back to the question. The National Energy Board seems to have ignored—Mr. Chairman, if the Secretary of State wants to hold a meeting on B and B, why doesn't he go outside the chamber to do it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That's a good idea.

The Chairman: Order, please. I have a great deal of sympathy for the hon. member who has the floor. There is in my opinion, far too much discussion in the committee. If hon. members have other things to do than in the committee, they should do it behind the curtains.

Mr. Woolliams: This bill is so complex that nobody understands it. I am about to put a few questions to the parliamentary secretary to find out what the bill is really about—but these ministers brought in closure this afternoon and all they do is hold council meetings about their own matters.

I will come back to the subject matter. In light of the fact that the National Energy Board did not appear to take into consideration the reserves that will be determined by future exploration, and that it has been suggested by the resource industry that the bill seems to be killing exploration and that two-thirds of the industry and operators in Alberta are now idle because of the decision of the National Energy Board, let me ask the parliamentary secretary to summarize the new depletion allowance provisions in the tax bill. Will he compare them with the previous provisions and tell us what difference they will make to the industry, and compare them with depletion allowances in effect in the United States?

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I will be delighted to comply with the hon. member's request in all respects except one. I am not prepared, without notice, to compare the system in Canada with that existing in the United States. This is Canadian tax law and I am not entirely clear as to the relevance that United States tax law would have in this kind of situation. I will certainly get the information for the hon. member, if he thinks that is desirable. I do not have it in front of me.

I believe the hon. member was speaking of section 65. It continues the provisions in the present act which give authority for the deduction of depletion allowances for mining and oil properties, as determined under the regulations. The present regulations provide for a depletion allowance of 33-1/3 per cent of the profits derived from the operation of a mine or oil well. This does not apply to gold mines, which receive an allowance of 40 per cent of profits of $4 an ounce, whichever is the greater, or to coal mines, which receive an allowance of 10 cents per ton.

Non-operators who receive royalties or rentals are entitled to an allowance of 15 per cent of the gross rent. There will be no changes in the amounts of depletion which may be charged under that section until 1977. Commencing in that year, depletion allowances will have to be earned. As the earned depletion system matures, allowances will tend to be related to expenditures on exploration and development activity rather than to profits. I am sure the hon. member will, on reflection, agree that in view of the absence of any major discovery in the southern tier of Canada since 1966, it is most desirable for further exploration to be encouraged and stimulated and that we are taking a positive step in that direction by tying depletion allowances to expenditures and development costs rather than to profits, which benefit principally the established and producing oil companies rather than those searching for new resources.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, can the parliamentary secretary tell us why there will be no changes until 1977, so that we may see the full picture?

Mr. Mahoney: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We have here a transitional seven-year period in which companies which have accumulated depletion but not earned the profits against which to offset it can use up the depletion they have already accumulated. Actually, the period would be seven years because the earned depletion provisions date back to the date of the white paper. That is a seven-year period in which to use up depletion that they have already accumulated against future profits. Since during the period dating from the white paper the eligible expenditure provisions for earned depletion will be available to them during this transitional period, they will have basically the benefit of both systems.

This is a transitional provision and has been brought in to try to avoid as much as possible and in a practical way any retroactive impact on companies which in good faith have spent money in the past on exploration and development, but which have not realized the profits which are necessary if they are to benefit from the depletion allowances they are entitled to.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I thank the parliamentary secretary. Now we have some basis on which to talk. May I ask another question. Some leading national chartered accountants have suggested that the bill makes only basic changes in the provisions affecting the resource industries and that most of the changes will result by order in council. They say that letters have been written to the industry setting out, basically, what those orders in council will contain. Is that correct?

Mr. Mahoney: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. As in the present act, the depletion allowances system is merely and basically authorized by the act. The detailed implementation of it is to be found in the regulations. It is proposed to continue that system in the near future.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I thank the parliamentary secretary for his courtesy. May I now turn to something else. There is at present a lack of confidence that is evident in the industry. This stems partly from the fact that much of the law in this area is unwritten law, so to speak, since it will be enforced through regulations.

The parliamentary secretary has said that the present automatic depletion provisions for operators and non-operators, including recipients of royalties, are to be continued until 1976 or 1977. He mentioned special provisions relating to gold mines and coal mines. We are told that taxpayers engaged in this area will be required to spend $3 on exploration and development in order to earn $1 of depletion allowance. Royalty income will be classified as production income and, consequently, will be eligible for the earned depletion allowance. Let me pause there. I had good reason for asking about the United States system. As my good friend opposite will understand, and as many experts in the resource industries have said, the petroleum industry and allied industries need to operate with large pools of capital. These industries work with risk capital because drilling wells or digging for mines is a risky undertaking. Consequently, and you cannot escape this; large international concerns are engaged in this field.

Home Oil, a Canadian company, has undertaken much development in the last few years outside Canada, in the North Sea, up in the Arctic and in Alaska under leases from the United States. If these companies are to function properly, they must function in the right kind of international atmosphere. The point I want to drive home is this. I am not being critical of the parliamentary secretary when I say that this bill is as thick as the bible. There is no doubt about it. It contains as many words, probably, as the bible. I have not counted the words in either.

An hon. Member: It weighs more.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, it weighs a great deal. Much depends on how big is the bible that you are comparing. If our companies are to compete with American companies, British companies, French companies and others that are engaged in exploration and development, our tax laws and depletion allowances must be as favourable as the tax laws and depletion allowances made available by other countries. That is my first point. It seems obvious that this is not the case.

May I refer again to the National Energy Board's decision recently handed down. Five companies came before the National Energy Board, Mr. Chairman, to apply for permission to export natural gas. They wanted to export approximately 2.7 trillion cubic feet. Those export licenses were turned down by the board. You will find part of that decision on page 6-8 of the National Energy Board's reasons for decision. The board said that having analysed the proven reserves of natural gas, they had come to the conclusion that we did not have enough proven reserves to permit export and at the same time satisfy Canadian needs for domestic and industrial use in the foreseeable future.

Let us see what Canada's needs will be. It is estimated that in 1971 we will need 1,049 million cubic feet of natural gas for our own use. For 1972 the estimate rises by about 200 million cubic feet to 1,278 million cubic feet. In 1973 we shall need 1,416 cubic feet. In 1974 we shall need 1,522 million cubic feet, and in 1975—according to figures estimated by the National Energy Board—we shall need 1,632 million cubic feet. All those figures—I mention this to help Hansard—will be found at page 4-12 of the National Energy Board's reasons for decision.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Orange: Twenty-five years from now.

Mr. Woolliams: I am talking about where the figures come from, and I am coming to that. The member for Northwest Territories has put his finger on the very point I am about to make. In order to come to a conclusion as to what we may need in the foreseeable future, the National Energy Board has arrived at a formula whereby one takes the fourth year times 25. So the fourth year from 1971 would be 1973 or 1974, depending on whether it was estimated from 1970 or 1971, and multiply that by 25. And they add that we have 25 years of proven reserves at the present time.

If you multiply the fourth year, which is one trillion, five hundred million cubic feet, more or less, by 25—that is the formula which is used—they then say that when you look at the proven reserves we have at the present they will amount to 60 trillion cubic feet. So when they say we are short about one-fifth of some million cubic feet for 25 years of projection, I say that they have failed. This is my opinion, one which I will put before the committee tomorrow.

I want to ask the National Energy Board some questions. In my opinion they have failed to take into consideration what will happen in the next 25 years of exploration. They have failed to take into consideration the exploration in the Arctic. What they have done is to say that we have 60 trillion cubic feet of gas; we will need all that in 25 years, and forget about any more exploration: we are not going to allow these licences. Why have they done this, Mr. Chairman? I cannot read the minds of the National Energy Board and I am not going to try.

The second point I wish to make, and it is the most important point, is that under the tax structure proposed, the national chartered accountants of Canada, no matter what firm you want to choose, have done research into the Canadian tax reform review—and I have read several of their studies. All of them have come to the conclusion, as have the financial papers of Canada, that the present tax structure is such that it will discourage exploration. Having come to that conclusion, the chartered accountants and the financial press of this country have led me to ask myself this question: Are their deductions correct? I say, Mr. Chairman, they must be correct, because today, for the first time, in Alberta two-thirds of all the drilling companies lay silent and idle while men are out of work and revenue is ceasing to pour into the provincial and federal revenue departments.

There must be some reason for this when we have 60 trillion cubic feet of proven reserves of natural gas and the National Energy Board is not predicting anything for future exploration. I say, therefore, that this tax law will kill or stymie the development and exploration of energy resources in Canada. If, on the other hand, this government had brought forward a tax structure giving the country a tax climate in which we would have encouraged exploration and development, not only in Alberta but in the Arctic and wherever else it can be carried on, then the National Energy Board could have projected that these reserves would be increased and that we could now export natural gas to the United States.

The point I make is this. Since the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert set up the board, and since after six months of hard work and accounting they came to the conclusion that we had 23 trillion cubic feet of gas in ten years—I want the committee to pay attention to this, Mr. Chairman—in ten years we explored in western Canada and produced 40 trillion cubic feet of gas, twice as much as we knew we had in the sixties. That is why I say that when people talk about Leduc, they are 20 years too late, because Leduc was found in the early forties.

If we had the right atmosphere in the tax structure, the men and women who are now out of work in Canada could have jobs, not only in the drilling rigs but in the tertiary industries. For the export of natural gas you must have pipelines. Pipelines demand steel. The steel industry provides jobs in the east. Jobs in the east build pipelines, and pipelines carry natural gas across the country.

The next question I think the government would consider, instead of killing off development and exploration in this country, is to make sure that we have an adequate transportation system. There is no reason why the province of Alberta should have to sit on its energy resources and wait for this government to create either an atmosphere or motivate a group, through private enterprise or themselves, to provide pipelines to carry the natural gas from the sources which we talk about. What we have reached now, Mr. Chairman, is stagnation. We have now, as the National Energy Board admits, 60 trillion cubic feet of gas. Even taking their formula—which is a small "l" liberal formula of 25 years—if we never found another cubic foot of natural gas we have enough for Canada's use for 25 years.

But this government in its despondency, and even the National Energy Board, says they may not find or explore any more energy in this country. We heard before the committee yesterday that in the United States half its energy is already nuclear and that in another 25 years 90 per cent of the energy will be nuclear. Here we have a great resource in western Canada being stagnated. I am glad to see that the minister of industry is here, because he is responsible for pouring out money to try to stimulate the economy.

With vision, Mr. Chairman, from this source alone it means a billion and a half dollars to Canada every year. This is big business to everybody and it means—I say this to hon. members to my left who oppose the export of natural gas—that if we create a market we will create the industries in eastern Canada, British Columbia and the Prairies. This in turn will give thousands of jobs to Canadians. The tertiary industries which would result from the gas and petroleum industry are worth about $400 million or $500 million dollars right now to Ontario, and $400 million or $500 million to Ontario means a lot of jobs, if you computerize it right down the line from the little man in the steel factory to the man who is helping to ship the pipe west to build the pipelines. That is what I am talking about when I talk about the resource industry. That is why I am discussing the very serious social question of resources tonight in an atmosphere where it is very difficult to get answers.

This is what the parliamentary secretary has said on this subject, Mr. Chairman—and this is the last point I wish to make. First of all, he has said that most of the law will be written by regulations. He should read the life story of Mackenzie King if he wants to be a great Liberal. Mackenzie King said, "You should know the law as you sit; you should know the law as you run; you should know the law as you walk". Mr. Chairman, we don't even know what the law will be until the bill is passed and some cabinet minister sits down and creates regulations and a climate for industry in western Canada. It will be a law which Parliament can never be allowed to debate. Nor will Parliament be able to discuss the regulations which flow from this socialist bible.

This bill is a socialist document. Its regulations will crush and stagnate the economy. It is a bill that is not being debated in a House where 90 per cent of its members do not understand its significance. This is why it is so important that the bill be divided. We do not even know what the law is going to be that affects one of the great resources of western Canada. Neither do we know, nor have we bothered to find out in the haste of the government to push the bill through, what the law on depletion is in the United States, Great Britain or France.

The parliamentary secretary says that does not matter, that this is Canada and we are making laws for Canadians. He says it does not matter whether the United States out-depletes us, whether France out-depletes us, whether Great Britain out-depletes us or whether Japan out-depletes us. The government is using the cod liver oil treatment. They pour the oil into our mouths and we have to like it or lump it. That is what closure is all about, and this is happening to Canada. Parliament is being gagged. We do not know what is the law and we cannot find out what it is. Even the Canadian Bar Association and groups of chartered accountants say this bill is so complex that they cannot understand it.

Mr. Osler: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member may ask a question if the hon. member who has the floor agrees.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wish to be polite and courteous to the hon. member, but whenever he has interrupted others on this side who have spoken thus far he has always tried to play politics. If the hon. member wants to ask me a question with regard to something I have said, then I will answer him. If he has another of his nonsensical, political questions that has no relation to anything, then I will not answer him.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. member's point and I will take care to stick to it because he has made a very good point. In view of the fact that time is so limited and that gas seems to be in limited supply, is it possible to get on to the subject matter of this bill at this time?

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has listened throughout the debate in committee of the whole fairly carefully. The committee must remember that we are discussing a group of sections, and hon. members will recall that it has been the practice in committee to let discussion range within the group under discussion. With respect, I think the hon. member is relevant and I ask him to continue his remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In view of your remarks I shall ignore the question. Having expected that type of question I am not disappointed, and when one is not disappointed one cannot help but feel happy.

Mr. Alexander: It is exhilarating.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, it is exhilarating. A glance at the new tax amendments and regulations within Bill C-259 raises the question—what are these measures going to achieve in the energy sector of the economy? I say that they will achieve stagnation. There will be no more exploration, particularly in time of demand. According to the formula used by the National Energy Board, there is a demand for accelerated exploration and a need to double our reserves of energy. This formula is costing western Canada $1.5 billion, which is a lot of money.

One conclusion is obvious: the proposed tax amendments will severely restrict, and are presently restricting, our oil and gas industries at a time when every attempt must be made to keep them healthy and expanding and to maintain an expanding economy. To carry this conclusion further, will these proposed tax changes be the foundation upon which to construct a comprehensive energy policy to meet the energy requirements not only of this nation but of the export market? Predictions for the remainder of this decade suggest that the demand for mineral and energy resources will escalate at an unprecedented rate. By 1980 the United States, it is suggested, will consume—as I pointed out the other night—over 80 per cent of the world's production of mineral and energy resources. Canada, as a result of its proximity and close affiliation to United States markets, must formulate a Canadian resource policy. Part of that policy is a sound tax law in order to stimulate the growth of corporations, a growth that will bring fuller employment of labour.

Although a continental energy policy has been proposed, no one really understands it. This may be a side issue, but anyone who links the export of water to natural gas or crude petroleum would be mistaken. I would be the first to oppose such a relationship. We are living in the age of petroleum resources. There is a time to use these resources, as there was a time to use energy in the form of coal. But we are now moving into a new era, the nuclear age. I shall have something further to say on other sections, but on that tone I draw my remarks to a conclusion since the Chairman has been very gracious in allowing me a few extra minutes.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member was speaking on section 65 and on depletion allowances, I wonder whether he would expand on the rationale of his thesis regarding the change in the system of depletion allowances which he related directly to exploration and development and to giving resource companies an opportunity to earn exactly the same depletion that they can under the present system, but contingent upon their carrying out exploration and development programs. How can this possibly serve as a disincentive to exploration, as he indicates the present provisions will?

Mr. Woolliams: I answered that in my speech, Mr. Chairman. I said we must have a comparable depletion allowance to the United States. As my hon. friend appreciates, up until now much of our development has been financed by foreign capital. Foreign capital has come to this country because depletion reserves and allowances were built up in the United States at a greater rate pro rata than in Canada. As a result, this has encouraged investment dollars from the U.S. since these dollars are tax free here.

This is why I said that our depletion and tax laws must be comparable. I would say they must be even more attractive than those of the United States if we are to have exploration and development. That is why I asked the parliamentary secretary, before I commenced my remarks, about the depletion law in the United States. He replied he would bring the information to the committee and let me know. I think I have a pretty good idea what it is, but I should like to hear it from the government.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, discussion on the tax bill and the matter of resources brings up the question of the attitude the government must take in regard to how much tax a resource industry should pay. In my opinion this is largely a political question. There has been widespread feeling among Canadians that through depletion allowances and other incentives the oil companies have been able to make unusually large gains and to pay much less tax then should be the case. From a personal point of view may I say I remember my family investing $1,000 in the oil industry of Alberta before the war, some time during the 1930s, not one cent of which they saw again. So it is not the case that such investment is always profitable.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I think that a significant answer to this problem was given to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in reply to the chairman, the hon. member for Gatineau, by officials of Shell Oil appearing before the white paper committee. I quote:

THE CHAIRMAN: Depletion, gentlemen, is an incentive. How will you determine whether a particular incentive is overgenerous? Why 33⅓ per cent? Would not 30 per cent, 25 per cent, 20 per cent, accomplish the same development in Canada?

MR. BRIDGES: Mr. Chairman, this question came up again earlier today in a slightly different context. How do you judge what is the right level of an incentive for an industry? I think the problem is a very complicated one.

May I go back a little and talk about the history of oil in the North American continent? Perhaps it was not stressed sufficiently this morning that there have only been two really big discoveries of oil in the whole North American continent: one was East Texas and the other is now Prudhoe Bay. The rest of the oil in this continent is in thousands and thousands of small accumulations, all of which cost a great deal in exploration money to find.

If this situation were to change—let us suppose that we suddenly could expect that, in the new frontier regions of Canada, we are going to find half a dozen fields of the size of Kuwait or Abqaiq, or some other fields like these enormous fields in the Middle East—I will tell you quite frankly, right now, we would need no incentive whatsover. The chance of this happening is just infinitesimal we really believe.

Let us be frank right here. The United States and Canada are the only two countries in the world where you present a depletion allowance. The reason is, just as I have explained, because the majority of the oil in North America is contained in an enormous number of small accumulations which are hard and costly to find, costly to develop and of course, as we move closer to these frontier regions, that much harder to bring ashore or to some location where they can be shipped either by pipe line or by tanker to a consuming area.

And here we come to the really difficult question: What is the right kind of incentive? Truthfully, of course, one can only answer that after all the oil of Canada has been discovered. One can, in retrospect, say what was the right level to encourage this development. Right now, we can only say that these big fields, even East Texas and Prudhoe Bay, are still small compared with fields of the size of Kuwait and Abqaiq in the Middle East. Certainly, the Prudhoe Bay field is in a remote location.

We hope there are some more of this size of field in our Canadian frontier areas, but we cannot count on it. We believe it will be wrong for the government to feel that it is certain that there are going to be half a dozen of these fields around just waiting for somebody to find.

We believe this is unrealistic; the chances are that again we are going to find more oil, but again it is going to be of the normal type of North American accumulation, which is relatively small, difficult and costly to find, and, of course, the more remote the area, the move difficult to bring to a market. Therefore, we feel an incentive is required.

I think this comment by the people of the oil industry is very valid and to the point. We must give incentives to our oil industry or have the oil stay in the ground until such time as world prices rise and supplies of oil, particularly in the Middle East, become depleted so that our oil pools will be able to be brought into production. Of course, all this raises the valid important consideration of what are our own needs in Canada of oil and gas. At what price should it be sold and what incentives, if any, should we offer for the exploration of oil and gas? The action of the national Energy Board last Friday in banning the sale of gas exports to the United States is largely of political significance. It certainly is an example, as in the tax bill, where the government is changing the rules in the middle of the game to its own advantage.

It has certainly decided that the gas producers, especially of Alberta, shall take a very reduced price for their gas so that consumers in central Canada will benefit. In other words, it is obvious that at this time the National Energy Board has made a purely political decision and it has subverted the interests of western Canada for the interests of central Canada. The amount of gas rejected by the National Energy Board was, of course, insignificant in relation to our long-term needs. It was made in face of the decision of Alberta's energy resources conservation board that there was natural gas in the province surplus to present and future needs of its citizens. The National Energy Board said there was no surplus available for export.

Mr. Lougheed, the Premier of Alberta, asked the federal cabinet to request the National Energy Board to reconsider its decision, and——in particular the extreme weighting given eastern Canadian requirements.

Alternatively, if the National Energy Board is not prepared to reconsider its decision, then the federal cabinet should take the necessary action to assure the requirements in eastern Canada as set forth in the decision are immediately covered by purchase contracts.

The Premier said this would significantly assist the current situation of locked-in natural gas reserves in Alberta. This energy decision of the federal government, taken under the guise of the National Energy Board, has been widely haled as an example of Canadianism. In fact, it is mainly beneficial to eastern Canadians who do not want to pay more for their gas, and in the immediate future this might well be so.

Since last Friday—which might well be a milestone in the natural gas industry—as reported in the Globe and Mail of November 23, the gas industry officials are assessing the immediate and long-term consequences. The gas industry will no longer have a hope of supplying a premium fuel to a high-priced, energy-short market. The immediate possible developments are as follows. There may be a substantial drop in U.S. risk capital that has poured over the border in vast amounts in the past two years in the hope of triggering new finds and exporting the gas. Higher domestic gas prices, especially in the Ontario market that now accounts for 41 per cent of all gas sales from western producers, could result.

A dampening could occur in U.S. enthusiasm for northern exploration, financed largely in the hope of exporting the gas that might materialize, and there may be a reassessment of U.S. plans for a pipeline to move Arctic fuel to southern markets. It has been agreed that gas producing facilities of major oil companies will find foreign money and even domestic capital will be tighter and will be dispensed much more carefully in the absence of reasonable expectations that gas it helped to find can be removed.

One company which has spent $75 million since 1969 is quite undecided as to its future. In all, about $100 million from the United States has gone to Alberta since 1969. Furthermore, similar amounts of money being spent in the Arctic create similar development problems in the Northwest Territories. Almost certainly United States capital will not be allowed to export gas found in the Territory in the future. I think the action of the National Energy Board will create a void in the investment in the natural gas industry which Canadians presusmably think they wish to fill and they will have to call on their own financial resources.

There have been increased demands for domestic price increases and producers have claimed lately that they are subsidizing eastern customers. What about the obvious differences of opinion between the Alberta energy conservation board and the National Energy Board? It certainly seems quite likely that the National Energy Board's decision was highly political. The action of the National Energy Board, which obviously could not have been taken without the agreement of the government, triggers a new and important phase in Canadian-American relations. It has certainly served notice that the Canadian government is willing to change rules at any time it suits them and with no apparent policy to compensate for this change.

It perhaps is the general feeling that Canada has natural gas fuel and that in some way this gives Canada an advantage over its competitors if the gas is not exported. This action might be held by Canada, first as a great victory for Canadian nationalism—but everyone knows that in this modern world we are significantly interdependent. Certainly, the United States against whom the National Energy Board's decision was made has great economic power in the world. If the United States had to exist without Canadian natural gas, I think no doubt it would do so. The Japanese have proved over and over again that people who are resourceful and hardworking, with good investment policies and industrial policies, can survive with almost no natural resources of any kind.

The action of the National Energy Board is precipitate and hasty. If we need to curtail the export of natural gas or prevent it altogether, certainly this is our privilege; but I think that the government should give due warning of their action and have some public discussion, particularly in view of the fact that responsible boards such as the Alberta conservation energy board had sanctioned the export of gas.

Now that the government has indicated that there is little chance of natural gas being exported in the future—and I am sure this government will move the oil in some way—our oil resources will, obviously, largely have to be developed by our own capital. For various reasons capital in Montreal and Toronto has never been interested in western oils in great quantity. There is no indication that they are interested today. The government, in the present tax legislation, has seriously reduced the tax incentives for Canadians to invest in a high risk venture. Bill C-259 further reduces the incentive to invest in high risk ventures such as petroleum and mining.

The action of the National Energy Board has had significant impact on the exploration for oil and gas in this country and it complements what the tax bill is doing. It points to a policy that indicates the exploitation of our renewable resources should not be carried out. It certainly points to the necessity of manufacturing being necessary to carry a much greater burden of international prosperity than it has so far shown itself capable of doing. So I think Bill C-259, along with the action of the National Energy Board, has so changed the climate that we will lose investment in the natural gas and oil industry in Canada at a time when so many jobs are needed. This will not be a good thing for Canada.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the arguments of the last two speakers and I wonder if they would review their thinking on the suggestions they have put forward. If I understood correctly what they said, there is a United States input and a United States emphasis in respect of exploration and development of the petroleum and mining industries in Canada. They say that this bill should be the instrument by which we should compete this United States emphasis. In other words, if I understood them correctly, they are saying that if we raise the depletion allowance and we lower the income tax, more Canadians would invest in our petroleum, gas, and so on.

Mr. Woolliams: Good boy!

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, let me go a step further. If we did this, would not the United States then compete with us by lowering their income tax and increasing their depletion allowance? Indeed, it would be to their advantage to do so, because Americans who come here to explore and develop think it is very unfair that we should have any energy board to prevent them from taking out the gas and oil. How can we compete?

If we should lower our income tax and increase the depletion allowance and the United States should go still further, how far can we go? We cannot compete against a country as vast as the United States, with the breaks it can give to its industry. To say we should compete by raising the depletion allowance does not make sense. We do not have that kind of money and therefore cannot compete with the United States. I agree that we should induce Canadians to develop their own resources, but certainly not by increasing the depletion allowance or through this bill, because it cannot be done in that way.

If hon. gentlemen opposite can tell this House how we could possibly compete with them, I would be ready and willing to listen; but so far the only thing I have heard is that we should get into competition with the United States. We would not win in such a competition. Therefore, I do not think the arguments we have heard would change the situation one iota. With respect, I suggest this argument does not apply to this bill and that the amendment they are asking for will not do the job.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, it is just about ten o'clock. I would have liked—and I shall do so tomorrow—to answer a question put to me by the parliamentary secretary in respect of some of the recommendations of the Senate committee. I am sure my good friends across the way would like to hear a compliment from me, because I do not always pay them compliments. I congratulate them on their wonderful attendance here tonight.

Mr. McGrath: It is edifying.

Mr. Woolliams: It is edifying. I think it is now ten o'clock.

The Chairman: Order, please. Is it agreed that the Chair call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL SECURITY—AUTHORITY FOR PAYMENT OF SPECIAL FORCE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, the question which concerned me the other day was that I thought,—and I believe some of my colleagues also thought—,that the spending program for Colonel Bourne's special advisory force to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Solicitor General somehow slipped through the tight net we usually put on the spending program of the government. I believe this has happened since July of this year, and therefore I had the feeling that this matter should be pursued in the House and, more particularly, at this late hour when as we know the galleries are filled and people are just bursting to get the information which can be passed along by the Solicitor General, myself or anybody else.

The question I asked dealt with this question and arose out of the fact that section 54 of the British North America Act provides:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or bill is proposed.

It is granted that that view was set forth in our constitution, that the constitution is sacrosanct and should not be amended without at least a great deal of consideration and that this is the law under which we operate. Then I and a number of my colleagues asked ourselves why Colonel Robin Bourne and his advisory force to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have suddenly crept into the Canadian scene. I do not think we have had a satisfactory answer to that as yet, hence my temerity in trying to raise the question again tonight.

We have asked questions both inside and outside the House of Commons and perhaps I can put it here, without referring to the debate in the House, in simple language. I think that when you deal with the security of the country, when you deal with people who, as the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) advised us earlier, give advice to the RCMP on security or on other matters—when, in short, you deal with anything that has to do with the RCMP as the force that protects most of us in Canada—you must have a pretty good reason for advocating a change from the traditional practice.

What shook most of us in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and indeed those who were considering the security of the country, was that we voted on something and now we find—this can be proven by the answer which the Solicitor General gave me the other day which had nothing to do with the question I raised—that we have never had a real explanation of why this force was set up in the first place. It turns out that a year or more could pass in the affairs of this Parliament with regard to the spending program of the RCMP and nobody will be coming before us, including the Solicitor General, to account for the fact that there has been a great departure from ordinary practice in the administration of his department.

I see the hon. gentleman is leaving the chamber at five minutes after ten. I hope that somebody will be able to account for his absence and for my presence and will answer my question. Nobody is able to tell us why a new force giving advice to the RCMP should be imposed upon the Canadian public upon whose establishment we have never had a chance to vote. That is the essential question:

If it is so good and proper, why were we never presented with the reason for its existence; and if it is so bad, why were we not told about it? With those questions I close my case, and I would like an answer from those who respond on behalf of the greatest police force in the world.

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): I can assure the hon. member that nothing, as he has suggested, has slipped through the tight net of government spending. If the hon. member had listened carefully to the remarks made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) in this House he would realize that this group was not set up to advise the RCMP, as he suggested, nor is it a part of the RCMP.

A proposal for the establishment of the security, planning and research group in the headquarters of the Department of the Solicitor General was submitted to the government in April of 1971. The group is established to study the nature, origin and causes of subversive and revolutionary action, its objectives and techniques, as well as the measures necessary to protect Canadians from internal threats, and to compile and analyse information collected on subversive and revolutionary groups and their activities, to estimate the nature and scope of internal threats to Canadians and to plan for measures to counter these threats, and to advise the Solicitor General in respect of these matters so that he can properly advise the government.

In that regard the government approved the establishment of the group in May, 1971, and subsequently positions were authorized for eight officers, three stenographers and one clerk. Colonel Bourne, of whom the hon. member has spoken, was seconded from the Department of National Defence. His salary is paid by that department and will be reimbursed by the Department of Solicitor General as and when this Parliament authorizes funds for it to do so.

One other member of the group was also seconded from the Department of National Defence and another from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Their salaries, likewise, are being paid by those establishments and will be recoverable from the Department of the Solicitor General on the same basis as that of Colonel Bourne. The remainder of the group are members of the public service of Canada. The government considered the need to establish this group on a priority basis. Other positions in the headquarters of the Department of the Solicitor General which had become vacant were utilized so as to provide for recruitment action on a priority basis.

Funds for the reimbursement of salaries to the Department of National Defence, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and to pay the salaries of the remaining members of the group will be found in vote 1 of the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General and, if sufficient funds are not available in vote 1, in further supplementary estimates, something which was mentioned before the supplementary estimates committee the other day.

As of this date, of the eight officers, three stenographers and one clerk currently authorized by Treasury Board, six officers and three stenographers have been hired and are carrying out the duties of the group as described by the Solicitor General in his statement to the House on September 21, 1971. Any inquiries in respect of the group can be made any time that vote 1 of the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General is before the House of Commons or the appropriate committee.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—METRO DEVELOPMENT CENTRE, TORONTO—ALLEGED AGREEMENT TO DEMOLISH UNION STATION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on November 16 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) inquiring whether Canadian National Railways had entered into an agreement with Metro Development Centre, Toronto, to sell Union Station and, if so, did the federal government agree with the demolition of Union Station. The answer the minister gave was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the hon. member I believe is aware that it is a consortium that is planning what is commonly referred to as Metro Centre. It has the full support of the government. We have given a good deal of assistance to the main parties concerned in order to get it going. One of the objectives is a new terminal, and I believe this involves the destruction of Union Station, but I would assume that the decision whether it is to be destroyed or not would be up to the municipal—

I imagine he wanted to finish by saying "the municipality of the city of Toronto." Mr. Speaker, why is it up to the municipality of the city of Toronto to determine the destruction of Union Station in Toronto? May I remind hon. members that this Union Station land is comprised of approximately nine acres, is owned by the city of Toronto but is subject to a renewable lease of 21 years, in perpetuity, to the railway companies.

In a report by the development commissioner to the executive committee of the city of Toronto on May 6, 1971, the commissioner stated that the maximum value of the nine acres would be in the region of $50 million if it were unencumbered. The encumbrance is the lease to the railways which they obtained at the turn of the century. After obtaining it, subject to a clause which says it must be used for railway purposes only, they proceeded to rent 15 per cent of the land to the Post Office. In 1939 the federal government expropriated the 15 per cent that had been acquired by the Post Office.

In 1946, in determining the compensation for the land that had been expropriated the Exchequer Court said that the encumbrance had no real effect with regard to the value of the land in question. So you have the development commissioner setting a value of $50 million and the real estate experts of the railway company setting the value at $1,500,000, and next the city says they will give it a realistic value of $9,500,000. The question arises, Mr. Speaker, where has the $40 million gone? Perhaps the answer lies in the attitude of the railway which wants to construct the new terminal just south of the Union Station because they know that the present site has greater marketability as a commercial site. I would think that is the reason for the difference in the valuations.

More important are the esthetic qualities of the Union Station. I have with me a picture of Union Station which I wish I could distribute to all members of the House. I wish it could be printed in Hansard because it shows its majesty and beauty. Mr. Speaker, I would not want you to rely on my evaluation of what is beautiful, so I would ask you to note the comments of the vice-president of the Architectural Conservancy of Ontario who sent a letter to the chairman and members of Toronto city planning board on June 29 as follows:

Next to our federal Parliament buildings, the Toronto Union Station is the most majestic of Canada's public structures. Its concourse is easily the most magnificent enclosure of space in the country.

With lamentable disregard and in complete insensitivity, it has been proposed that this national heritage be demolished, despite the fact that its useful life span could be prolonged indefinitely. Such vandalism is all the more inexcusable when it is realized that its design is well adapted to fitting into any new complex.

I should also like to quote Professor Richardson, another vice-president of the Architectural Conservancy of Ontario, who appeared before the private bills committee of the Ontario legislature. He stated as follows:

They are heroic buildings of noble stance and national importance—

The station has been described as a ticket lobby, but that vast concourse is the most noble room in this country.

Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that we become very disturbed with regard to the actions of the government on this beautiful building? It is not only the commercial value that the railways see with regard to changing the railway from Front Street in order to locate it further south that concerns me, but also the transportation problems that will result as a consequence of the change. We not only have the main trains going into the station from all parts of the country, but we have the GO train which services the many commuters who come to Toronto to work. If they move that to the locations they have in mind, there will be a distance of 850 feet between the GO train ticket office and the TTC subway ticket office, approximately 300 yards, and a distance of 1600 feet from gate to gate between the main line of the subway line, roughly 550 yards.

There is also the problem of the economic feasibility of a bus terminal within the Metro Centre. We all know that the Spadina expressway has been cancelled. It will involve many transportation problems in regard to moving pedestrians and other traffic in the downtown core of the city.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) I would like to refer him again to the Minister of Transport's statement in the House on November 16. It is a direct answer to his question. On that day the minister explained that the metro development project was a consortium of companies and that it had the full support of the federal government. The fate of Union Station was one which lay not within his purview but with the municipality.

A great deal of planning and consultation has gone into what is known as Metro Centre, Mr. Speaker. It is a very complex and challenging venture, and I am told it will include a multi-modal transportation terminal, an office-commercial area, a large residental community, a communications and broadcasting sector and other attractive facilities. Since this project was first announced in 1968 there has been extensive consultation with all levels of government. In this case they were not only with the federal government but with the province, metro and the city of Toronto.

After many years of planning, Metro Centre is now moving into the implementation stage and several intergovernmental liaison committees have been established to ensure effective liaison and co-operation between the public and private sectors.

The hon. member has made a number of observations which I will be glad to bring to the minister's attention.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO DECISION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on April 7 the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) tabled in the House the first report of the Atlantic Development Council. The Atlantic Development Council, under the distinguished chairmanship of Professor William Smith of Fredericton, New Brunswick, a man well known and respected in the Atlantic provinces, was set up under the Government Organization Act of 1969, that being the same statute that set up the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Section 31 of the act sets out the function of the council. It says that it is the function of the council to advise the minister——on matters to which the duties, powers and functions of the minister extend and, in particular, to give consideration to, and make reports and recommendations to the minister on,

(a) plans, programs and proposals for fostering the economic expansion and social adjustment of the Atlantic region;

(b) the feasibility of particular programs and projects and the contribution those programs and projects will make to the economic expansion and social adjustment of the Atlantic region; and

(c) such other matters relating to the duties and functions of the minister under this act in respect of the Atlantic region, as the minister may refer to the council for its consideration.

On December 1, as recorded at page 10065 of Hansard, I directed the following question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion:

Since the first report of the Atlantic Development Council has been on the table of this House since April 7, and since it contains important recommendations on the strategy for development of the Atlantic region, may I ask the minister if any policy decision has been taken on those recommendations and if not, why not?

To which the minister replied: "No, not yet, Mr. Speaker." I should like to know when the government intends to act on the recommendations of the council. The principal recommendations with respect to the ten-year strategy of development for the Atlantic region involve, first, the creation of 170,000 new jobs over the next ten years and 50,000 jobs in the manufacturing centre. Second, the need for a full employment framework within which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion can operate more successfully. Third, an emphasis on the industrial complex approach. Here the idea in mind is a Crown corporation or something similar to it creating a series of interrelated industries in a particular area. Fourth, regionally sensitive monetary and fiscal policies. Fifth, increased consultation between different levels of government and between government and citizens and, sixth, an outlining of Department of Regional Economic Expansion policies so that they may be fully assessed by the public and appreciated.

I believe it is incumbent on the government either to accept or reject the recommendations of the Atlantic Development Council. If the government persists in its policy of ignoring these recommendations, in view of the lack of regional development strategy for the region and in light of the department's persisting in an ad hoc approach to the problem of the chronic unemployed of the region, I believe it is incumbent on the government to ask for the resignation of the members of the Atlantic Development Council.

• (10:20 p.m.)

It seems to me that the recommendations outlined in the press report are exactly what are needed for the region. They contain a ten-year development strategy for a region which is facing chronic unemployment despite the fact that the government has poured substantial funds into the province.

I believe, as do others—including the Atlantic Economic Council, economists in the region, members of provincial governments, and so on—that this approach is exactly what is needed. In other words, there must be a planned approach whereby new jobs can be created and the necessary monetary and fiscal framework prepared by the federal government within which this strategy can be operated effectively. In the absence of a policy statement by the minister on the observations of the Atlantic Development Council, I believe it is incumbent upon him to say exactly what his own policy is. Otherwise we can only assume that he and his principal advisers have no confidence in the members of the development council.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has suggested we should either accept or reject the advice given by the Atlantic Development Council. I think it would be more sensible to study the suggestions thoroughly before deciding whether we ought to accept or reject them. No doubt we shall accept some of the recommendations and reject others.

As the hon. member indicated, it is obvious that these suggestions are wide ranging in a complex field. They deserve the careful study they are receiving. As he knows, there has been a turnover of senior personnel in the department and it is not surprising that the study of a report of such scope should take a considerable amount of time. Certain of the proposals have already been implemented.

I should like to draw the hon. member's attention to the announcement by the minister on October 21 of the establishment of two new programs the creation of which was specifically recommended by the council. I refer to the Atlantic region labour education centre and the Atlantic management institute. It might encourage the hon. member if I tell him there will be a formal meeting between the minister and the members and officials of the council in mid-January. At that time the minister will be exchanging views with the members on the major features of the report.

In light of this, the hon. member's assumption about a need to seek the resignation of the council does not reflect the view of the government, which is treating the report as a matter of valid concern which we believe will make the programs of the department even more effective than they are at the present time.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WITHDRAWAL BY MEMBER FOR PEACE RIVER FROM HOUSE LEADERS' MEETINGS ON INCOME TAX BILL

Mr. W. G. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly on a point of order to say publicly in the House what I have already told the government House leader privately, that because of circumstances I no longer intend to participate in meetings of House leaders in connection with Bill C-259 and the operation of the modified closure, guillotine, bulldozer rule in that respect.

Because of the interpretation of the rule which is that it is not necessary to go behind the statement made in the House by the minister. I do not impugn his veracity at all, but in the circumstances, unless there is in fact a united position taken by the three opposition parties as to the need to hold up part of the bill for reasonable debate and discussion, the whole proceedings become farcical. For that reason, with respect to this bill and the operation of rule 75 I do not intend to participate, nor will there be a representative of this party.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). It does seem to me that, even though we are now under closure in respect of the committee stage of this bill—and our position on that is well known—it is useful to organize such time as we have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I therefore regret the decision of my good friend not to attend our meetings. Maybe he could indicate his wishes to me and I could speak on his behalf. At any rate, I hope we shall find a way to use to the best possible advantage such time as has been left by the government for consideration of Bill C-259 in the Committee of the Whole stage.

FISHERIES

STATEMENT ON AGREEMENT WITH NORWAY RESPECTING SEALS AND PHASING OUT OF CERTAIN FISHING PRACTICES OF EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement on seals. I should like to describe the agreement negotiated with Norway and I should also like to say a word about the phasing out of the traditional fishing practices of European countries from Canada's territorial sea and new fishing zones.

As hon. members know, we have been pushing our fisheries' limits seaward. We have drawn baselines and fishery closing lines across the mouths of our major bays and inlets. We have also extended our territorial waters 12 miles beyond these lines.

In the eyes of some long-distance fishing nations this policy is expansionist in the extreme. For our part, we believe that these moves are well-founded and essential for the sound management of the fish and marine animals which live near our shores.

In recent months negotiations have been conducted with Norway, Denmark, the United Kingdom, France, Spain and Portugal. They have culminated, or will shortly culminate, in agreements which will not only recognize Canada's jurisdiction in these areas off our coast but will also see the progressive elimination of traditional foreign-based fishing operations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and in our territorial sea along the Atlantic coast.

This is a major accomplishment. Not only have we acted on our own initiative by drawing fisheries lines authorized by Parliament but we are also getting other nations to formally admit that these lines exist and that the waters inside them are within Canada's fisheries jurisdiction.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) is concerned about Norwegian fishermen continuing to take seals along certain stretches of our coast off Labrador and northeastern Newfoundland. I would point out to him that the seal herds in the North Atlantic are often found far out at sea. The only way in which we can ensure that the total stock of seals—both in national and international waters—is well managed is to have an agreement in respect of them as a whole and share the catch with other participating countries, in this particular case with Norway only.

Under our new agreement Canada and Norway are setting up a joint commission on sealing. This commission, manned by some of the world's top experts on conservation, will set quotas. These quotas will apply to the entire herd in the North Atlantic, offshore, and occasionally near our shores. The quotas they recommend to Canada and Norway may be similar to the amounts of the catch in recent years or may be zero. The numbers remain to be seen. But Canadians are now guaranteed two things. One is the perpetual protection of the seal herd in the North Atlantic. The other is a fair division of the commercial catch. This will depend on the recommendations made by this group of international experts.

The hon. member says that Norwegian fishermen will be, in his words, "invited in to within three miles of our shores." He says this as if it is something new. Foreign nationals, including Norwegians and Russians, for many, many years have been coming close to our shores to take seals. The only difference now is that Norwegians will come only when there is a proven surplus of seals and the take will have to be shared in any case with Canadians.

I should mention the special position, the privileged position in a sense, of our small inshore fishermen. They are in a special category. They have first claim on any quota which may be declared as surplus to the basic seal stock in the whole of the North Atlantic. The number of longliners operated by inshore fishermen off the northeast coast of Newfoundland has been increasing. Presumably the take of these small inshore fishermen will be guaranteed under the new agreement with Norway.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite claim that our new agreement with Norway, like the other agreements with other European countries being phased out of our fishing waters, should be debated in this House before it is ratified by the government. Presumably they realize, also, that to follow this procedure would be to depart from normal Canadian and British parliamentary practice. It would be to adopt United States practice. It would be to adopt a procedure which is characteristic of the U.S. presidential system. I doubt very much whether hon. members opposite would want that to happen.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed the minister did not see fit to provide an advance copy of his statement until two or three minutes ago. First of all, in respect of his concluding remarks about having the matter debated in the House of Commons may I say that the fact the government is not willing to place this matter before us does not surprise me. They never would have placed the present arrangement before the Canadian people except for moves by a number of members in the House of Commons in the last couple of days.

As far back as 1963 the Canadian government started talking about imposing a 12-mile limit, called a territorial sea, and baselines drawn from headland to headland on the Atlantic coast. Recently we have had the application of the 12-mile limit and more recently have had the Gulf of St. Lawrence closed off as a completely exclusive Canadian fishing zone.

Hon. members have heard from day to day for the past year from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), every time we have raised questions about conservation problems on the Atlantic coast, about the great achievement of having made the gulf an exclusive, Canadian fishing zone a body of water that is completely Canadian. Now we have received the treaty between Canada and Norway which trades off the rights of the sealers on the northeast coast of Newfoundland in an effort, the minister tells us, to phase Norway out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the next three years. I believe, if I read the exchange of notes correctly, it says that Norway must be out of there by 1975.

In order to do that we are establishing a principle which has never been agreed to by any nation since the seven years war when the defeated nation was forced to give up certain territorial rights. In order to do that we are permitting Norway to violate our territorial seas by nine miles on the northeastern coast of Newfoundland and to actually come within three miles of Canadian territory on the southern part of the northeastern coast of Newfoundland in Notre Dame Bay. This will mean that the Norwegian sealing fleet or any kind of vessel in part of Notre Dame Bay can actually be nine miles inside Canada's nearest land, Fogo Island, which is 12 miles off the coast. It means that the 5,000 people there who have engaged in the seal fishery will have to compete with the great Norwegian sealing fleet nine miles inward from their island.

The minister mentions that traditionally the seals are out to sea in international waters. We have asked the government of Canada if they would enforce the 12-mile limit which would prevent Norway from being encouraged to take the gamble of sending their fleet across the Atlantic because the minister knows well, if he knows anything about the sealing industry, that for many years the seals—this is why a special treaty was arranged—have come within the 12-mile limit and frequently right up to the shores of Canada. If the government of Canada were to enforce the 12-mile limit on Norway in regard to sealing it would make it impossible for Norway to take the gamble. They would have to stay home with their ships. In the last decade they have taken in excess of 100,000 seals a year. They are the biggest harvesters of seals in the world. This agreement would permit Canada to continue its harvest at the present quota and allow the herd to flourish and grow. This move is an anti-conservation move and a treacherous move toward the people on the Atlantic coast.

The fundamental question which has to be raised is what will we trade off to other nations that we are trying to get out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence? What are we going to trade off to these other nations that have no fishing rights in the gulf? What will we do with France in the matter of St. Pierre and Miquelon? What are we prepared to trade there? The government might revert to the time before the seven years war when it comes to that particular trading.

We have been encouraging the government for purposes of conservation to push our territorial sea beyond the 12-mile limit and to follow the lead of Iceland and other countries by extending our jurisdiction over marine resources. If we accept this agreement it will mean that no other move will be made by the government to extend our territorial seas to protect marine resources. This is a devastating precedent. The principle is fundamental for all Canadians and I feel that this action cannot be agreed to by Canada. The matter should be referred to Parliament and referred immediately to the Standing Committees on Fisheries and Forestry and External Affairs and National Defence. If the Canadian government has any interest in Newfoundland and its role in Confederation it will have to revise its present position.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Take off your parka.

An hon. Member: Don't flounder.

Mr. Brewin: —this subject is of such vital importance to the people of the Maritimes and particularly to our fishing industry that I regret that the members of our party who are particularly expert in this matter are not available to answer the minister's statement. However, as one who has been interested in some aspects of this matter, namely, those that affect the development of international law, I do make bold to make a few brief comments on the matter.

• (11:20 a.m.)

We in this party have all been in favour of the extension of the territorial waters of Canada. We think this is essential in this modern age not only to conserve fishing resources but in order to preserve the rights of Canadian fishermen but also to deal with the very grave problems of the pollution of our waters. In so far as this agreement recognizes our right to extend control beyond three miles from our shores, we welcome it.

There is great concern across Canada with respect to the problem of seals. It has aroused the consciences of many people. We are concerned that sealing practices should be humane, but over and above that we are more particularly concerned that in the conservation of wildlife there be no extinction of these species.

It appears to us that the agreement the minister has announced in his statement on the setting up a joint commission on sealing is a forward step. We hope this joint commission on sealing will make its major responsibility the conservation of seals and the enactment of humane practices in regard to sealing.

I admire, as I think all members of our party do, the energy with which the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) has expressed his concern about the right of Norwegian fishermen, conceded in this agreement, to come within three miles of our shores. But we do take some comfort from the fact that, as the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) said, this is not a new development but something that has been happening in the past. We believe that if this was necessary in order to secure adequate international control of sealing, then perhaps it was a necessary concession.

We will observe developments in regard to this commission with a great deal of interest. We note the statement that eminent conservationists are to be members of the commission. We hope they will be in fact a majority of the commission, and that there will be no special interests represented on it but that those who are truly concerned with the conservation of this great national resource will be the effective majority on the commission.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my situation is similar to that of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). At the Noranda mine at Lake Dufault, in my area, there is no problem like the one raised this morning by the minister.

I understand however that experts who advise the government, who are conversant with the matter of Canadian territorial waters, have this important problem under active consideration. The hon. members from the Maritimes are deeply concerned about this problem, as much as the hon. members from the Prairies are concerned about the wheat problem.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I leave it to the better judgment of the experts who advise the government and of the minister responsible to find solutions to protect the resources of this country for the benefit of Canadians. I cannot be more concerned about that matter because I am not familiar with it, but I believe that with the advice of experts advising the government our resources will be protected for the benefit of all the citizens of Canada.

AGREEMENT WITH NORWAY ON SEALING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move a motion under Standing Order 43 not only because of the urgency of the particular matter before the House but especially after having noted the lack of concern on the part of members of two other parties in the House, or perhaps a lack of understanding on their part that is not their fault. Because of the implications of the treaty between Canada and Norway, which permits the latter to violate our territorial seas, and because of its long-term implications I would like to move, seconded by my colleagues from the Atlantic region, if that can be collectively done, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please put the motion in proper form?

Mr. Lundrigan: —seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this whole matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put at this time.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

U.S.-CANADA PRODUCTION SHARING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity involving the defence production-sharing agreement between Canada and the United States. I do so in view of the fact that the imbalance of payments is a little more accurately described as being $404 million and not in excess of $500 million and that this imbalance is due mainly to the situation created by the Viet Nam war and therefore is not a matter of shared continental defence priorities to which the agreements of 1963—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech. He knows that under Standing Order 43 and the practice of the House he should indicate what the motion is and the Chair will inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Forrestall: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie):

That the whole question of the defence-sharing program between Canada and the United States be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and that the members of the committee be able to study any document, understanding, written or oral, pertaining to this particular defence-sharing arrangement.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

[Translation]

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is no unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

U.S. DISC LEGISLATION—PLANS TO ASSIST CANADIAN INDUSTRY—FORECAST OF EFFECTS—REPRESENTATIONS TO PRESIDENT NIXON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Prime Minister relating to the DISC program. In view of the answers the Prime Minister has previously given with regard to this program and in view of the apparent decision now reached by the Senate-House conference committee in Washington with regard to the DISC proposals, has the government any plans to assist Canadian industry to compete with export industries in the United States when the DISC program goes into effect there?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been studying contingency programs for several months now. I am not aware when the DISC program will go into effect, but if it does and we have reason to announce anything we will do it at that time.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the government going to canvass industry in Canada and the provincial governments with a view to obtaining an accurate forecast of what the probable effects of the United States DISC program will be on Canadian export industries before the possible storm actually descends upon us?

Mr. Trudeau: As far as governments are concerned, Mr. Speaker, the whole matter was on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference a few weeks ago and the governments were invited to make their views known to the federal government. As far as industries are concerned, perhaps the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce could reply.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Just to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is terribly difficult to know, first of all, what will come out of Congress by way of the DISC program; second, if the President is going to agree with what comes out of Congress and, third, what use will be made of it by the different companies in the United States, and a few other elements of uncertainty. In these circumstances it is impossible to give any scientific assessment of what the effect of the DISC program will be on Canadian industry. Besides, of course, it would vary greatly from one industry to another.

Mr. Stanfield: No doubt it will vary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to take this matter up with President Nixon when he meets him next Monday, specifically the DISC program in the form it now seems to have been approved by the joint Senate and House of Representatives committee? Does the Prime Minister intend to take this matter up and to press the Canadian point of view? Also, will the Prime Minister be able to take with him forecasts as to the effect of the DISC program if it implemented in the form that has been approved by the joint Congressional committee.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to the last part of the question concerning forecasts, I believe the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has indicated what the answer to that is. As to taking up the matter itself, I am sure we will be discussing bilateral economic relations between the two countries although, in line with what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has just said, I do not know if the President will want to take me into his confidence and tell me what he is going to do with the DISC program that emerges from Congress, or whether he will express his veto.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Has the Prime Minister been able to indicate to the American government, the President or his representatives the damage that will be caused to manufacturing in Canada by the introduction of the DISC program?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I understood the hon. member well. If the hon. member is asking about the extent of the damage which might be caused, then in so far as that question is not hypothetical it has just been answered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Stanfield: He said he did not know.

Mr. Trudeau: He said that we cannot make at this time any precise assessment because this is based on a series of hypothetical actions by a foreign government.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman's answer leaves me in some doubt as to how the Canadian government can bargain with the United States when we cannot tell them in any reasonable way what the effects of the DISC program will be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please ask his supplementary. I believe he has been recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, may I then ask if the Prime Minister, before meeting with the President, intends to have some assessment made of what the potential damage to the Canadian manufacturing industry will be so he can indicate that to the President?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer this question by repeating what I just said. It is terribly difficult to know what will come out of the United States Congress by way of a DISC program. One day we read in the papers that President Nixon is threatening to veto the tax bill. Today we read in the same papers that the employment tax credit may not go through—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: —that it might not become law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell the House if the government's plans in this regard to assist Canadian exporters will be presented as amendments to amendments to the tax bill through the usual rubber stamp process?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South. There are a number of supplementaries to be asked but I think that in fairness we should complete the first round of questioning, after which I will return to the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

REDUCTION OF OPERATIONS AND LAY-OFFS BY CONSOLIDATED BATHURST LIMITED—STEPS TO ASSIST COMMUNITY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of press reports quoting the Prime Minister as saying last night in Toronto that Canada's economy is booming, may I ask whether he is aware that Consolidated Bathurst in Bathurst, New Brunswick, is laying off 450 mill workers and is closing down its woods operations with the expectation that there will be 1,400 people out of work in that small community? What steps is the government taking to save that community from the disastrous situation into which it is now plunging?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been in communication with the New Brunswick government. I have spoken to the Premier myself. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration—I am not sure which. We sent an official down who is there now and who is trying to assist in finding ways to combat this unemployment.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Prime Minister whether, when he spoke to a black tie dinner of Canadians of Italian origin in Toronto last night, he tried to find out how many new Canadians of Italian origin in Toronto are out of work and expect to be unemployed this winter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in connection with the lay-offs at the Consolidated Bathurst Limited.

Could he assure us that the Department of Manpower and Immigration will speed up the manpower services at the local office of the Consolidated Bathurst Limited, in order to lessen as much as possible the social inconvenience suffered by those families?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the question is quite relevant and I have obtained the assurance that an official is already on the spot to look after that matter.

PULP AND PAPER—ASSISTANCE TO NEW BRUNSWICK IN MAKING SURVEY

Mr. Thomas A. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the first question asked by the hon. member for York South. May I ask the Prime Minister whether, in addition to what he has said the government is doing and particularly in view of Premier Hatfield having shown great leadership in going ahead with a survey of the pulp and paper industry—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member is now asking a question. I have the impression that latest supplementaries have been more in the form of debate than supplementary questions. If the hon. member has a question by way of supplementary inquiry, he should ask it now.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I was thrown off track by the reference to Italians. I should like to get back to New Brunswick and to the original question. Since the province of New Brunswick is making a full survey of the pulp and paper industry will the federal government, in a particular way, offer its good services in connection with this whole matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member was cut off when he was telling us how Premier Hatfield was showing leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Prime Minister will be recognized for the purpose of replying to the latter part of the question asked by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister came all the way back from Toronto; surely we all want to hear what the Prime Minister has to say on every occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Get the feathers out of your mouth, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: It is very nice to be made welcome by members of all parties on my return.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Feathers and all.

Mr. Lewis: Do not read too much into such comments.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the feathers I had were from a hat. The horse feathers are on the other side.

An hon. Member: Horse feathers?

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps I should say donkey feathers. The question can be answered by reminding the House that we are having a meeting on Monday morning with representatives of the pulp and paper industry and we hope to come to grips with many of these questions.

Mr. Baldwin: After that kind of answer, you might as well go back to Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of hon. members are seeking to ask supplementary questions. I am not sure whether they are supplementary to previous questions. I think we should complete the first round of questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Témiscamingue and then we will try to sort out all those supplementaries.

TRADE

INQUIRY RESPECTING COMMERCIAL AGREEMENTS WITH ALGERIA—INTEREST RATE ON LOANS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since his recent visit in Algeria, have trade agreements been entered into with Algeria for the exchange of products?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is thinking in terms of private exchanges, there have been some; I could not mention all of them here. If he is thinking in terms of public exchanges, there have been agreements indeed. The Export Development Corporation, which had already committed $50 million for certain projects in Algeria has allocated another $10 million for a short-term loan with a banking agency of the Algerian government. And Mr. Aiken, the president of the company, told me when I went to Algiers that he was willing to finance exports to Algeria, to the extent of some $100 million, provided interesting projects were submitted to him.

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister tell us at what rate of interest those loans of $50, $60 or even $100 million will be granted?

Mr. Pepin: At the normal commercial rate, Mr. Speaker. There are no subsidies with regard to the rates of interest, except, of course, in the case of CIDA projets; these are special in that they represent assistance to underdeveloped countries.

STATISTICS

DEVELOPMENT BY UNITED STATES AND CANADA OF COMMON FORMULA FOR REPORTING FINANCIAL DATA

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal on a supplementary.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): My question might stand on its own, Mr. Speaker, but it flows from earlier questions on the matter of DISC and so on. I have given the minister notice, short notice, but notice. Are Statistics Canada and the Department of Commerce of the United States working on an urgent basis on developing some agreed-on formula for reporting statistics, particularly financial data, so that the differences in things like balances of payments, which now amount to several hundreds of millions of dollars, will at least be subject to a common denominator in statistical data?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Such difficulties are not confined to relations between Canada and the United States; the problem exists all over the world because of the difficulty in establishing such statistics. As a matter of fact our two countries have been working on it for a number of years and, during his recent visit to Ottawa, Mr. Stans, American Secretary of Commerce, suggested that special efforts be made in that regard. Since then, we have sent one of our experts to Washington and he is presently attempting to clear the ground with his American counterpart.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might mention that for the moment perhaps this should be the last supplementary on this point. I will then recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Fairweather: Do the United States and Canada now agree on the totals of their respective balances of payments?

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, our present way of dealing with conflicts is to put the point of view of Statistics Canada on one side of the page and on the other, that of the Secretary of State for Commerce of the United States.

GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF CHAIRMAN AND DIRECTORS OF CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AS TO VIEWS ON ECONOMIC MATTERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of what appears to be a tendency on the part of the Canadian investment community to invest Canadian risk capital in American ventures in Canada, an example of which was the sale by the chairman of the Canada Development Corporation of his firm to American interests prior to his appointment, is the Prime Minister willing to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that the committee may have an opportunity to examine the chairman and the board of directors with regard to their views on investment and other important economic matters so vital to Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly ask the House leaders to consider this matter when they have begun to talk to each other once again.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As usual, the Prime Minister is as usual at the south pole when I am at the north pole. I referred only to Bill C-259 on which the government is employing its bulldozing tactics.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF MAJOR APPOINTEES AS TO ATTITUDES AND VIEWPOINTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since government agencies such as the CDC have such a tremendous influence on the economy and investment in Canada, would the Prime Minister agree to a system whereby major appointees to agencies such as the CDC might come before a standing committee of the House to be examined as to their attitudes and viewpoints?

An hon. Member: And conflicts of interest.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that would be a step toward the presidential system and everyone knows I am against the presidential system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Mackenzie resume his seat? I have noticed him. I have also noticed that he is getting very impatient. He will be recognized in a moment but unfortunately not now. I have to recognize the hon. member for St. John's East first.

Mr. McGrath: Because of the growing tendency by Parliament to delegate authority and tremendous powers to agencies such as the CDC—and it is only in these cases that it would be relevant—surely the Prime Minister would be prepared, without departing from our customs or our system, to consider referring these appointees to a standing committee of the House, such as the Standing Committee on Finance, so they may be examined with regard to their views on economic matters and any possible conflict of interest that might exist?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is a very searching observation. I certainly agree there is a growing tendency of seeing power exercised by administrative bodies in all our societies. The corrective I am concerned with now is less that of having Parliament exercise an overview of that authority but to make sure that the executive of government itself has some input into this power as exercised by the administrative bodies.

Mr. McGrath: Thank you, Mr. President.

TRANSPORT

INSTALLATION OF FLASHING LIGHTS ON RAILWAY ENGINES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My frustration tends to make me understand Your Honour's frustration. I want to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On several occasions I have asked the minister whether he would take up the question of flashers on railway engines. He said he would take it under advisement and suggested that the railways perhaps should consider them. Since then, unfortunately, I have lost several friends. I want to ask the question: when in hell are we going to start with this?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that either in the same kind of language or otherwise. In the first instance, it is a matter for the railways. What I undertake to do for the hon. member, in addition to having conveyed his questions to the railways, is to determine if the CTC can perhaps incorporate the use of flashing lights as part of their current study of the whole question of railway safety. I will see that this question is passed on to them immediately.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ANNOUNCE POLICY BEFORE MEETING PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the right hon. member's statement to the House on Wednesday that the government's position on foreign owenership is known to the government, will the Prime Minister consider making the government's position and policy known to the House and the public of Canada before his meeting and discussions with President Nixon next Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the House is aware, Mr. Speaker, we did consider this alternative, but I announced to the House and I believe the Minister of National Revenue also made the point that we found it advisable to have the government's policy statement appear at the same time as the background material, which we will do.

Mr. Burton: In view of the importance of this subject to the people of Canada, will the Prime Minister consider making his position known to the public before Monday and then proceeding with the publication of background studies at the earliest possible date, recognizing the technical difficulties involved?

Mr. Trudeau: We have considered that point, Mr. Speaker. We took another position mainly because there is such misinformed discussion on this whole subject of foreign ownership that we wanted the policy statement and background material to appear at the same time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON—DISCUSSION OF APPOINTMENT OF NEW UNITED NATIONS SECRETARY GENERAL

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I have a supplementary question to that of my leader. It is with regard to the Prime Minister's visit with Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure how the hon. member is asking the question. Perhaps I got up a little too soon. I got the impression he was asking a question of his leader.

Mr. Paproski: My question is supplementary to a question asked by my leader. Does the Prime Minister plan to discuss the appointment of a new Secretary General of the United Nations and is it true that the Prime Minister favours the appointment of Issofou S. Djirmahoye of Niger as the successor to U Thant?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the question is in order. I must say that the purport of the question escapes me so it would be difficult for me to make a ruling on it.

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON—SUBJECTS ON AGENDA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that several members, starting with the Leader of the Opposition, have asked questions of the Prime Minister as to what discussions will take place with the President of the United States, will the Prime Minister now tell us, as this will be the last opportunity for us to ask him, if he has a program of the items he will discuss with the President and what priorities in that program he will be discussing?

• (11:50 a.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot give those details at this time, mainly because I do not have them.

[Mr. Burton.]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister consider as one of the priorities that he will discuss with the President of the United States the subject of energy, in light of the fact that before a standing committee this morning it was admitted by the Energy Board that reserves in the Arctic were not taken into consideration when the board vetoed the four applications for licences to export natural gas to the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NEWFOUNDLAND—COMMUNICATION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT WITH LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR CONCERNING SITUATION FOLLOWING ELECTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I ask him whether or not there has been any communication between the government of Canada and the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland in connection with the situation created by the action of the premier of that province in hanging on to office having been defeated at the polls?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, if there has been any communication by any minister. As for myself, I know I have not communicated and therefore I would assume that the Governor General would not have communicated with the Lieutenant Governor. I will inquire as regards other ministers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Governor General would have nothing to do with it so we can exclude him. I ask the Prime Minister, having regard to the pirouettes that Mr. Smallwood has been dancing with constitutional practice, whether the government or the Prime Minister would direct to the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Newfoundland his constitutional responsibilities, that Lieutenant Governor owing his appointment, of course, to the government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a rather shaky constitutional doctrine, but I will certainly look into the matter. If indeed I have the authority to direct a Lieutenant Governor of a province to do certain things, perhaps I will avail myself of that opportunity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not direct him to do that: I said, let him know what the constitutional practice is.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Lieutenant Governors are appointed by the Governor General and hold office subject to his pleasure, and in view of the fact that the Governor General acts on the advice of his ministers, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to have a discussion with the Governor General as to what advice he might give?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, is the question related to the previous one about advice that the Governor General might give to the Lieutenant Governor?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not share the hon. member's view that that is the correct constitutional position, and I am glad to be supported by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert who said that the Governor General has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has either of the right hon. gentlemen read the constitution lately?

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East on a last supplementary, but I must bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that we will soon be running short of time and there are quite a few members who have not had an opportunity to ask a question. If we spend too much time on supplementaries and I have to make too many observations, we will run out of time.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister been consulted on this matter either by the Premier of Newfoundland or the Lieutenant Governor?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you had not realized it but, with all deference, I think this question is not within my competence. However, the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In view of the increasing number of bankruptcies in Canada and the considerable loss of tax revenues they represent for the government, which amounted to $190,-173.01 for the last twelve months, could the hon. minister say whether the Bankruptcy Branch succeeded in preventing many bankruptcies or whether it published reports?

AIRPORTS

COMPLETION OF NEW TERMINAL AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—DECISION ON SITE OF NEW FACILITY

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether any extraordinary steps have been taken to expedite the completion of the second terminal at the Toronto International Airport, and can the minister inform the House when we may expect a decision on the site for a second airport for Toronto and the neighbouring area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as to the first question, the situation is that we have changed the contract with the contracting company to employ a very substantial additional number of workers and increase the pace of the work over the winter. This will have the double objective of getting more people to work and getting the first section of the terminal open by April and the full terminal open by June. In regard to the second question, the answer is the same as I gave a week ago.

May I have the indulgence of the House to add to an answer I gave a few moments ago to the hon. member for Mackenzie, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might return to that question in a moment. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Egmont.

SUGGESTED CONTINUATION OF SERVICE TO SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I. BY EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRLINES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent decision to review the situation in regard to suspending Eastern Provincial Airlines service to Summerside in light of EPA once again carrying air mail, and since there is a very short period of time here, I wonder whether or not the minister would request Eastern Provincial to continue its service since the original suspension date was for early in January. Second, has the minister conferred with Eastern Provincial officials and considered with them the possibility of continuing service under these new circumstances?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have done neither because I am in the awkward position, as the hon. member knows, of having been advised formally that I will be receiving an appeal from the decision of the CTC. In view of those circumstances it would not be proper for me to consult with the parties in advance of receiving the appeal. Given these new circumstances, I will look into the matter and see what I can do to accommodate the hon. member.

U.S.-CANADA AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE CANADIAN AGREEMENT TO SUSPEND SAFEGUARDS FOR TWO YEARS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Two days ago it was denied in the House that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had said there was an agreement involving suspension of the safeguards in the auto pact between Canada and the United States for two years. My question for the minister is: Has such an agreement been reached, and is the position being put forward by the government of Canada to the United States one that would involve a suspension of the safeguards in the auto pact for two years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There is no such agreement, Mr. Speaker. I do not know what the Secretary of State for External Affairs could have said to lead to that interpretation, but there is no agreement on the auto pact between Canada and the United States at this time. If there should be an agreement it will be announced in the proper way.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the minister misheard my question. Is the government proposing to the United States—I did not ask whether it had reached an agreement with the United States—a suspension of the safeguards in the auto pact for a two-year period?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, what our position will be on this matter is not to be announced this morning.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Following his meeting yesterday with mayors of Ontario cities—Kitchener, St. Catharines and others—who are very concerned about removal of the safeguards in the auto pact, can the minister advise the House whether he sent the mayors home with the assurance that the safeguards will be maintained?

Mr. Pepin: I have not yet learned to read faces, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—REQUEST FOR SUBMISSION OF PROPOSALS TO PARLIAMENT BEFORE FINAL DECISION TAKEN

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will he assure the House that no agreement will be made or final decision taken until he brings the proposals to Parliament?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said something to that effect on May 21, 1970, I think it was.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—CONCESSIONS SOUGHT BY CANADA FOR REMOVAL OF SAFEGUARDS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time but I will recognize the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a supplementary.

Mr. Hees: Would the minister advise the House what concessions the Canadian government is trying to persuade the United States government to give in payment for removal of the safeguards in the auto pact, which it is obviously trying to do?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the position on that is that the United States has a number of minor "irritants" with Canada on the auto pact for example and similarly we have a number of minor "irritants" as far as the United States is concerned. We will try to solve as many as possible during subsequent days.

• (12 noon)

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—PRESSURE BY UNITED STATES FOR REMOVAL OF TAX ON VEHICLES IMPORTED INTO CANADA BY INDIVIDUALS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I have a supplementary for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Are United States officials pressing Canada to remove the 15 per cent tax imposed on vehicles imported by individuals into Canada from the United States and, if so, what is the position taken by the government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This is part of the discussion in connection with the automotive agreement. The United States officials think that the safeguards, including the ratio, the Canadian value added and the tariffs were temporary. We say that the tariffs, at least, were a permanent feature of the agreement. This is part of the discussion which is going on between the two governments. Any reaching of a conclusion will be announced in the proper way. I was referring a moment ago to the answer I gave in May, 1970, when I said I would take the House into my confidence before finalizing anything on the auto agreement with the United States.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): May I ask the minister to clarify what he means by taking the House into his confidence? Does he mean that no final decision will be made until approval has been given by the House?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker. I remember vividly I said no to that question. The hon. member commented, at the same time, "How frank can the minister be?". I did not say that I would ask for approval of the House. I said I would take the House into my confidence, but a decision would not be conditional on the approval of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ryan: Is the government determined to maintain the embargo against the importation of used cars into Canada by individual Canadians?

Mr. Pepin: That is one of the positions which will presumably be taken by the United States negotiators. They feel that the tariff and embargo on the flow of used cars between Canada and the United States is not necessary. That is not the position I take.

It had to do with the interest rates charged by the Industrial Development Bank. Will the government take steps to ensure that interest rates charged by the Industrial Development Bank are at least brought into line with those charged on comparable loans by commercial banks so that the IDB can carry out the duties it was intended to carry out?

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is really supplementary to a previous question addressed to the Prime Minister concerning his forthcoming visit with President Nixon. It has to do with the paving of the Alaska highway. In view of the large number of jobs such a project would create, and in view of the fact that negotiations have been going on between Canada and the United States concerning the paving of the highway and that the Canadian government has made a proposal to the United States with regard to it, would the Prime Minister place this matter on the agenda in the hope that an agreement can finally be reached between the two countries concerning a cost-sharing program for the paving of this highway?

REPRESENTATIONS TO CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION TO PREVENT SALE OF LA PRÉVOYANCE TO UNITED STATES INTERESTS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I consider it to be urgent and important in view of the increasing rumours about a sale of La Prévoyance insurance company to American interests. Since the Canadian Development Corporation now has a Board of Directors, does the Prime Minister intend to call on that government agency to prevent the sale of that Quebec insurance company to a foreign concern?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity of discussing the matter with the Minister of Finance. He has explained that as the company involved is incorporated under provincial legislation the federal government itself cannot intervene as it does in the case of insurance companies incorporated under federal legislation. In this case, then, it would rather be the responsibility of provincial authorities.

As to the second part of the question, concerning the Canada Development Corporation, I must say I am rather surprised that the hon. member would already want the government to interfere and tell this Corporation how to operate. This was not our purpose in establishing the Canada Development Corporation. However, I will consider the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether this new government agency has a duty to try and invest in Canadian companies in order to prevent their falling into foreign hands. If this is the case, can the agency prevent this sale, and can they themselves see to the interests or to the purchase of La Prévoyance?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the objectives of the Canada Development Corporation, and just in case they might not be aware of the possibility suggested by the hon. member, maybe the government could bring this matter to their attention.

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF FEEDER CATTLE BY RAIL—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister carrying out an investigation into the movement of cattle by rail from western Canada to eastern Canada and, if he is, will he consider referring the whole matter to the Transport Committee. We could then call representatives of the railways before us and inquire into the difficulties which have arisen this fall particularly and which have been very detrimental to the movement of feeder cattle.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I think that makes sense, Mr. Speaker. I did it with regard to the grain movement, and I see no reason the railways should not be asked to give an explanation with regard to cattle. I am looking into the specific matter raised yesterday by the hon. member for Meadow Lake.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF SUPERSONIC AIRCRAFT IN EXERCISE—COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE DONE BY SONIC BOOMS

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence. It arises out of a news release concerning a joint strategic air command exercise which is to take place over eastern Canada and the United States on December 7 and 8. The news release indicates that some of the fighter aircraft may achieve supersonic speeds and that residents may hear sonic booms. Has a procedure been established for compensation for any damage that may be done?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): There will be no special procedure instituted. There has, however, been an ongoing policy in this regard which would provide compensation.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CANADA'S NATO COMMITMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Since he is about to depart for talks in Europe, can the hon. gentleman indicate to the House whether or not he will carry with him any specific instructions from the government to change any of the basic positions which Canada now assumes within NATO?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it will be a matter of confirming with the other NATO states the increase in our NATO contribution indicated in the white paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I should indicate that we have reached the end of the question period, although we might try to recognize a few hon. members who have been trying for a few days to ask questions. The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

WILDLIFE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF ACT

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the very able Minister of the Environment. Can the minister tell us when he expects to introduce a new Canadian wildlife act and can he indicate whether there will be provisions for assistance, financial and otherwise, for bird sanctuaries or wildlife refuges which, if properly assisted, could contribute greatly to the conservation of our wildlife and the education of our people in conservation?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be possible to introduce an act along those lines at the next session of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should not have a supplementary on this matter which really does not appear to be too urgent. The question itself could have waited for 24 hours or 48 hours. We have reached the end of the question period.

TRANSPORT

INSTALLATION OF FLASHING LIGHTS ON RAILWAY ENGINES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Transport might be permitted to complete the answer he was trying to provide me when he indicated he had some further information.

[Mr. Rowland.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to update the answer and say that the Canadian Transport Commission, since the question was asked this morning, has advised me in fact that they have had consultations during the last month with Canadian National and Canadian Pacific with a view to getting the most appropriate kind of flasher. It is not a question of whether it should or should not be used. It is a question of the most appropriate one. I will have a full report within a couple of days.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the minister rising on a point of order?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF OPPOSITION DAY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to adivse the House that next week we will have the last opposition day. At the moment it is planned to call it on Thursday of next week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 2, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It is the understanding of the Chair that the committee will resume consideration of the sections dealing with capital gains. The group of sections as listed at page 9251 of Hansard for November 2, 1971 includes sections 38 to 55 inclusive, sections 3, 9, 71, 73, 85, 87, 88, 89, 96 and 111. Section 9 of this group was adopted on November 2, 1971.

On Clause 1—section 38—Meaning of taxable capital gain and allowable capital loss.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 38 carry?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak in this debate, I wish first of all to quote from Hansard the remarks of the President of the Privy Council, as recorded at page 10,077:

We have attempted to maintain a flexible attitude toward the bill. We have listened to the representations made in the country and in the committee with respect, for example, to the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions. I am happy to state that when we go into the committee we will be moving a series of major amendments—

Since the government has invoked closure, I hope that the remaining four days will not be completely wasted in discussions about matters of little value or use. I hope the government has a flexible mind and will consider certain changes in respect of the application of the capital gains provisions, such as sections 29 and 39, which apply to the agriculture industry. As recorded at page 9442 of Hansard, I posed a question to the parliamentary secretary—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order I had thought of raising earlier. In view of the reference just made by the hon. member for Crowfoot, I think it should be raised. I believe it was understood that the debate today would include, not only capital gains in general, but more particularly capital gains as related to farmers. I thought sections 28, 29, 30 and 31 were also in the general area we are discussing. The hon. member for Crowfoot has just mentioned one of them. I agree with him, but it struck me that we should have this understood. In other words, are we discussing today the principle of capital gains generally or are we discussing the farm situation and capital gains as it applies thereto and the whole question of the basic herd. I thought it was to be a farm day.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, we are quite willing to discuss both.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then, Mr. Chairman, perhaps you would identify clauses 28, 29, 30 and 31, because we agree with the Minister of Finance that the discussion is on both capital gains generally and farm problems as well.

Mr. Benson: It is quite agreeable to the government.

The Deputy Chairman: In that case, does the committee agree that I invite discussion also on sections 28, 29, 30 and 31 dealing with farming which was also considered on November 9, 1971. I wonder if the committee would wish the Chair, when putting these questions if we ever reach that proceeding, to put them at the end of the list I have already given.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I was just about to read from page 9,442 of Hansard where I put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. I shall not read the whole question. I dealt with the subject matter of the introduction of capital gains and how it applied to the basic herd. I said:

Regarding the change in the basic herd concept, could the parliamentary secretary indicate whether I am correct in assuming that this provision was brought about because of the introduction of the capital gains tax?

The parliamentary secretary replied:

Yes, Mr. Chairman. It is the view of the government that with the introduction of a capital gains tax the need for the basic herd is greatly reduced or eliminated.

On those particular days, November 8 and 9, we dealt with this matter at length. The government was good enough to accept the suggestion we made on November 9 that section 29 should be allowed to stand until they reconsidered our suggestion. I would like to think that in the intervening time they have reconsidered their position. I pointed out that, in essence, there is a capital gains tax in the United States but they still have the basic herd concept, the capital asset concept. This proves conclusively to me that, with the introduction of the capital gains tax, it may still be useful to the agriculture and livestock industries to maintain the basic herd concept. If our competitors in the country to the south of us are maintaining it, and we are all in the North American market, we should have the same privilege here in Canada.

Much has been said in this House about the agriculture industry and the plight of the farmers, but I find that more and more words of concern for the agriculture industry fall upon deaf ears. Farmers today are the forgotten part of our society. I suppose that this has come about partly because farmers have cried wolf too long and too often, and governments of one stripe or another have become more or less immune to those cries and have rejected them. Surely, we must concern ourselves with the major employer in Canada, namely, the agriculture industry. I was reading a publication recently in which it was said that a dollar spent in agriculture has the greatest multiplying factor in the creation of jobs, more than in any other industry. I notice that my remark caught the ear of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I am glad it did because he knows about the multiplying factor of dollars spent in industries in the creation of jobs in our society. Surely, it has been known for a long time that if you give the farmer a dollar he will spend it on machinery, and this creates opportunities and jobs for Canadians which we really need.

So, as much as the government would like to say, to heck with the farmer and his problems, we should concern ourselves with him if we want to create jobs and opportunities for the other segments of our society. It has been said many times that the farmer lives poor and dies rich. Why is this so? It has often been said also that farming is not a way of life, it is a business. To me, the farming industry is still a way of life. A farmer owns his land and works on it. He does not keep track of the hours he spends on farming. Sometimes he works ten hours a day, then goes out after supper and works for another five or six hours fixing something in the yard or some machinery in the shop. He does not count how many dollars he receives per hour, and in many instances these extra hours which he spends working on the farm go into maintaining the farm and increasing its wealth as an establishment, increasing the value of the farmstead. He does not reap the value of that farmstead until he passes it on to someone else.

I remember going to visit a well known farmer in the Ottawa district. He had two big pictures hanging on the wall of his living room. One showed the farm when he first bought it and the other one was of the farm after he had had it for 20 years. There was a tremendous difference between the two pictures. The farmhouse and barn were dilapidated when he bought them. In 20 years, he had improved the farmstead immensely. All this takes extra time and labour by the farmer and his entire family. They all do it willingly, and they do not count the number of dollars per hour. But when the capital gains tax is applied against that farmland, the farmer must somehow or other account for the great improvement in the value of the farm and explain why he should not pay tax on it. It seems to me that it is a rather cruel piece of tax legislation which says that you have a $1,000 exemption per year if you are living on the land, but it does not apply if you are not living on the land.

Many farmers throughout Canada have had to move into town in order to be in close proximity to the schools or universities which their children attend. Many farmers want their children to have a good education. They leave the farm for what they consider to be a temporary period, and they go back to it every weekend or in the summer. Sometimes the husband is on the farm every day, but he is not living there. Since he is not living on the farm, when he dies or when he wishes to pass on the farm to the next generation, he will not receive the $1,000 exemption. I wonder if the minister could tell us how many dollars the government hopes to acquire from the removal of the $1,000 exemption in such cases where the farmer is not living on the land.

Mr. Benson: First of all, I should like to say that what the hon. member said is not correct. If the farmer moves into town and, as my hon. friend said, he spends the summer on the farm and has a home there, that can be his residence; he can opt that that is his residence and thus obtain the $1,000 exemption.

Mr. Horner: I am pleased that the minister has clarified the position. However, there is still the question of the improvements that he has made to the farm and whether or not he will stay on the farm. It depends on whether he wishes to divide up the farm. There may be more than one child in the family and the farmer may want to divide the farm among three or four children. It is very difficult for some people to understand that every member of the family makes a contribution to the increased value of the farm, and each one should receive some benefit from this growth. Many a farm boy has contributed much work in building up the farm, but when his father and mother die he cannot acquire any portion of that farmland without the capital gains tax being applied.

There is one other question which I wish to put to the minister, and I sincerely hope he will take an interest in this problem. We had the report of the Barber Commission on the prices of farm machinery. The commission turned out 11 or 12 volumes and spent $3 million studying the matter. This tax bill will do more to increase the price of farm machinery than anything else. The Barber Commission report has not contributed to lowering it. The Barber Commission studied the contributing factors to increase in the price of farm machinery, but this tax bill will cause a rapid rise in those prices because in this tax bill the minister will tax that portion the cost of machinery which is fully depreciated, but which will be regained on resale or trade-in. What amount of money does the minister hope to gain by not exempting from the capital gains tax farm machinery which the farmer may sell and which is fully depreciated? The amount would be infinitesimal; it would be a very small portion of the money that the government is spending.

I hope that in the next four days the minister will consider this important matter because many farmers trade in their farm machinery, such as a combine or a tractor when it is fully depreciated. If he trades it in today, the value he receives is considered a capital gain and he does not have to pay income tax on it. I see the parliamentary secretary frowning at me. I wonder if he will rise to correct me, because this is a very important point that many farmers will learn to their regret after this bill passes. At that stage they will not have this privilege, if they are depreciating their machinery at the 15 per cent rather than the 33 per cent rate.

I agree that under the 33 per cent rate today they do have to consider it a capital gain, but under the 15 per cent rate deduction plan they do not have to consider it a capital gain, and do not have to consider it as income. If the parliamentary secretary would allow that privilege to continue I know that farmers all across Canada would appreciate it very much because they believe that the cost of farm machinery has gone up far too much in recent years. I know that the parliamentary secretary is eager to answer. If he can correct me on this, I will be glad to hear him.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, just before the parliamentary secretary rises, and I may say we will be glad to listen to him, I want to mention that we are happy to see, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary North, so many members on the government side of the House for a change.

Mr. Benson: Where are your members?

Mr. Baldwin: But, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: There are only seven Tories in the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River is speaking on a point of order, and I hope hon. members will allow the Chair to hear him.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the very point I wanted to make. With great respect, Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to remind hon. members that this is not the place for a social hour. This is a place to gather to listen to the words that are being addressed to the Chair. I suggest that the Prime Minister and others who are here might do well to pay attention to the pearls of wisdom which are being cast by the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Benson: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the seven Conservatives in the House that anybody who cannot hear the hon. member for Crowfoot speaking above any kind of noise in the House must be deaf.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: This is a real test.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I think the poor attendance of the Official Opposition here today is a pretty clear indication of the genuine interest they have in the bill, and perhaps indicates that the time to terminate the debate has indeed arrived, since only seven of them appear to be with us.

Mr. Horner: On another point of order, Mr. Chairman, this petty bickering that the minister and his parliamentary secretary are indulging in does nothing for the debate, but I advise them to do their counting just a little more accurately. There are more than seven members of the Official Opposition in the house.

Mr. Gibson: Where are they?

Mr. Benson: Seven.

Mr. Horner: Just be a little more accurate, boys.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. These points of order and arguments not related to the bill do not help the work of the committee. I would invite hon. members to come back to the various sections that are before the committee at this time.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I must apologize to the hon. member for Crowfoot. There are indeed eight Tories in the House. Now, with respect to the question that I was rising to answer when the hon. member for Peace River opened this riposte with his point of order, the hon. member for Crowfoot seems to be trying to leave the impression that a capital gain is realized when a farmer disposes of an item of farm equipment. This is no more true of a farmer disposing of an asset than it is of anybody else disposing of an asset.

The gain is the increase in value, the increase over what the item cost him, or what its base cost was, in the case of an item held at the beginning of the tax system. The gain is the increase that he receives over what it cost him, when he disposes of it. It is not the purchase price itself. I would suggest that in the case of farm equipment it would be a rare and unique piece of equipment that could be disposed of for more than it cost, and therefore capital gains will not arise in a practical sense on the disposition of items of farm equipment.

What the hon. member is confusing for a realized capital gain is recapture of depreciation, which is an income, not a capital gains item. But again, when the farmer stays in business presumably he will be acquiring additional assets of the same class as time goes on, and these recaptures of depreciation, with farmers as with other types of businessmen, generally speaking will be rolled along and absorbed in increased depreciation claims. It is only at the time that the farmer goes out of business, and disposes of all items of the assets of that particular class, that in fact the recaptured depreciation would be final and would come into taxable income, and the tax would be payable in respect of it.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the minister and the parliamentary secretary were 16 per cent out in their counting of members in the House, and I think that the parliamentary secretary is about 16 per cent out in counting how income tax is equated by the agriculture industry. If we just had a few more people with a little basic experience in the House, then perhaps the application of the law would be better understood. If I could use the example of the income tax inspectors who come around and visit my place regularly—

Mr. Mahoney: I don't blame them.

Mr. Horner: Apparently you and your department have "sicked" them on to me from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: But I might add that the last time they visited my farm they saved me some money. In fact, they were not able to find out where I owed them any.

Mr. Baldwin: To their regret.

Mr. Horner: Much to their regret and disappointment. Anybody who has been in the business of selling and buying farm machinery knows that this question comes up regularly. Recaptured depreciation is perhaps the correct term, and it has to be accounted as income. Whether or not you continue to buy tractors does not really matter if you made that income. Apparently the parliamentary secretary never had a net worth statement taken out on his operation. Maybe he has good friends in the department—

Mr. Mahoney: I have no net worth.

Mr. Horner: You have very little net worth as a Member of Parliament, and as a listener to this debate, or you would know more about the importance of net worth for a specific year to the agricultural industry.

I want to return to the subject of the basic herd. Surely, the parliamentary secretary will agree that the American cattle producer is permitted to use the basic herd concept. Mr. Chairman, we went all through this on November 9, and the parliamentary secretary finally agreed that it was two years instead of 12 months that the cattle had to be retained before they could be considered as capital assets. Now, we see the provinces of Ontario and Quebec encouraging farmers to go into the livestock industry. Although agriculture may be looked upon as the problem child in the Canadian economy, the one portion of it that has been relatively sound has been the livestock industry. Why has it been sound? It is because we have been able to compete in the North American market. Surely, the parliamentary secretary would like to think that he would allow Canadian livestock men to continue competing in the years ahead. We have placed ourselves in a very poor competitive position with Australia in the livestock industry and in an equally poor position with regard to the export of cattle to Europe, Great Britain and even Japan. Australia has the advantage of us there. If we wish to maintain our ability to provide meat and meat products to the United States, we must place our farmers in a better competitive position in comparison with farmers there.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The disallowance of the basic herd concept is one more thing that will increase taxes for the Canadian farmer, but there are few methods for increasing the price and lowering the cost of production. No matter where taxes are applied, they contribute to the cost of producing anything. This bill will increase taxes to the agriculture industry on three basic inputs in the cost of production, the cost of cattle, machinery and land but will do nothing to increase the price the farmer will receive for his product.

It seems to me that the parliamentary secretary is confused about the recaptured depreciation concept for farm machinery. I should be glad to discuss this with him and show him how it works. I should also be glad to discuss the concept of the basic herd and how it appplies to the cattle industry. I suggest, too, that the capital gains tax should not be applied to farm lands used for bona fide agriculture. In relation to the total tax bill, these three items do not amount to much in dollar value and I would urge the minister and his parliamentary secretary to give them some serious consideration in the next four days. Perhaps a conference of interested people could be held and certain changes suggested.

Mr. Mahoney: You would attend such a meeting?

Mr. Horner: I would attend.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, it is a real pleasure to have an opportunity to express the views of Assiniboia in terms of this legislation which contains tax proposals that affect them. During the by-election, very grave concern was expressed to me as a candidate by many farmers on the question of capital gains in relation to farming. This capital gains tax has been reviewed and revamped in respect of its effect upon corporations ever since it was first suggested. May I take this opportunity to call upon the government to seriously consider changing the capital gains tax provision in regard to its effect upon the farmers of Canada. There are a number of ways it will restrict the ability of the farmer to make a reasonable income or to retire with dignity. May I suggest at least three areas where it does not take the farmers' situation into consideration.

There is the problem of the farmer who sells his property and buys another. I think an amendment should be accepted in this area. Then, there is the question of transfer of land within the family, when another member of the family is going to carry on farming. I think this transfer should be exempt from capital gains tax. No consideration is given to the immense amount of labour that is put into the family farm. The farmer works hard, but this is not considered when he retires and faces capital gains.

The Conservative party proposed an amendment to this particular section of the Income Tax Act which I suggest lacks application to the exact problem before us now. The amendment suggests a situation whereby western lands, or farm lands in general, are open to speculation and purchase by corporate interests. If the amendment were accepted as it stands, then the only area free of capital gains would be farm land. In such circumstances, it would be in the interests of the corporations to purchase land. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the government should give serious consideration to the amendment to that amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Regina East.

[Mr. Horner.]

I should like to review that amendment because of its importance to the farmers of western Canada. The amendment of the hon. member for Regina East reads:

That the amendment be amended by adding the following after the word "act":

"under the following circumstances:

1. when farm property is transferred by sale, gift or legacy to a spouse or a son or daughter or a spouse thereof when the minister is of the opinion that it is the intention of the recipient of the property to continue farming.

In that case, there should be exemption from the capital gains tax.

2. when a farmer sells farm land and uses the proceeds to purchase other farm land provided that the said farmer satisfies the minister that he intends to continue farming and that his usual principal source of income is from farming.

In that particular case, the proceeds of the sale should be exempt from capital gains tax.

3. any instance when a bona fide farmer on the sale of farm land is not allowed to invest the capital gain therefrom in a registered retirement savings plan which will result in the farmer concerned being taxed only on benefits received from the said plan as they are received; and"

I believe that should be accepted by the Minister of Finance as well.

Another aspect of this bill that concerns me is the way in which the government intends to evaluate land for capital gains. Reading through Hansard, one assumes that they are going to use the fair market value approach. But I do not believe, however, that this would be the best means of evaluation because fair market value, in a sense, is controlled by how much urban use is made of farm land and how much speculation is going on. The fair market value is affected by the fact that the farmer may buy an extra quarter section or half section of land at inflated prices in order to make his economic unit viable. In our society, the value of farm land is very often very volatile. I believe that the fair market value system, as used in connection with the capital gains tax, is an unreasonable system and an unreasonable method.

• (12:50 p.m.)

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I hope the government will consider the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina East. I believe the constituents of Assiniboia on November 8 told the government in no uncertain terms that they expect to see a change in the attitude of the government towards western agriculture.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, may I first congratulate the hon. member for Assiniboia upon the way he handled himself in what I believe was his first speech in this chamber. He spoke on behalf of his constituents and on behalf of farmers in western Canada. If I may be allowed to digress, I cannot help thinking of the time when I made my first speech and I can assure you that, as I listened to the hon. member, my thoughts went back to that time. I blush when I think of my first attempts at speaking. I congratulate the hon. member upon his endeavour and wish him well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Korchinski: Not only do I wish him well; I hope he can understand that there are other points of view in this committee. Be that as it may, I was glad to hear the hon. member, freshly arrived here as a representative of a farming area, point out that farming communities are not entirely enamoured on the capital gains philosophy, a philosophy that his party has been espousing for a good many years. I am one who thinks that certain industries in this country are not quite ready to enjoy the luxury of paying a capital gains tax. I do not think the government can say that the country has reached that great a level of prosperity which would enable all segments of society to pay a capital gains tax, come hell or high water.

The government's policies seem to make little sense. On the one hand, it slaps on a tax which is restrictive and which will increase the costs of certain business operations and, on the other hand, it turns around and, with good intentions, attempts to pass legislation designed to assist certain industries. There is a conflict here, just as when the Minister of National Health and Welfare, on the one hand, tells us to quit smoking and the Department of Agriculture, on the other hand, provides grants for the improvement of tobacco strains. That is exactly how confusing government policies are today. On the one hand, the Minister of Finance slaps on a capital gains tax and, on the other, the Minister of Agriculture works well into the night trying to develop policies to help agriculture. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board may also be working on policies that are intended to improve Canadian agriculture.

It seems to me that these policies make little sense at this time. The government is trying to rationalize its position while at the same time slapping on taxes wholesale that will affect the agriculture industry. Why is it taxing agriculture on the one hand when, on the other hand, we must spend millions of dollars in trying to bail out that industry? It seems to me that not much revenue is to be garnered from a capital gains tax applying to agriculture. Think of the confusion that these policies create. It is certain that the industry will suffer. For years to come, every dealer in agricultural products and farm machinery will be confused. He will not know how the capital gains tax will affect him and will wonder about his position. You can rest assured, Mr. Chairman, that the farmer will not benefit in all this. First of all, the dealers are already in trouble. If they were not, one could say that they could bear the brunt of the capital gains tax. However, they are not in that position. One need only note how many dealers have gone out of business, have lost their shirts, so to speak, to see that I am correct in what I say.

The capital gains tax will be in the minds of farmers and dealers when they get together. You can almost hear the farmer saying to the dealer, "Before we make a deal, let us figure out exactly how the capital gains tax will operate. Let us see what the situation will be with regard to this deal." I think every dealer will be confused, and the farmers will not be any better off. I wish the department would set up some sort of zenith number which people could call to determine exactly their position with regard to capital gains taxes or other federal taxes. It would be of great help if the dealer and the farmer, when sitting down to make a deal, knew they could call some sort of zenith number, for example, and ask the department what the tax position with regard to the deal will be. The Department of National Revenue will rake in many millions of dollars. Surely, it could provide some free service of that type.

It should not be necessary for farmers to consult lawyers, because the lawyers will want to argue with other lawyers who adopt an opposite viewpoint. Surely, it should not be necessary for farmers to resolve these problems by going to court. Must they resolve their differences this way? Is there no obligation on the department to help?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for Mackenzie had the floor.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago a member of the government side uttered a comment about where all my friends were. I can only say that anyone who can get the Prime Minister to listen to him—

Mr. Trudeau: I am not going to listen to you. I am just here.

Mr. Korchinski: —has at least 95 per cent of the Liberal party listening to him. Therefore, it does not really matter how many are here on my side. What is really important is that the message gets through to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the right hon. member for Prince Albert invited the Prime Minister to attend some of the important sessions of the House for a change. I am glad that the Prime Minister gave up the handshaking, kissing and glad-handing in Toronto to attend a session of the House of Commons. This is a rare occasion. It is evident that the Prime Minister takes this matter seriously. Never before have we seen the Prime Minister pay so much attention as he is paying to this question of closure. He is wondering how it is going to affect everyone here. He is beginning to worry about it. I am glad to see him here because, for once, he has been able to hear the message, as it was expressed a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

I want to be able to speak to the Prime Minister. I would not even dare to try to get an appointment with him. There is no way you can get through to him on the question of the capital gains tax as it affects farms. Over the years he has uttered a few expressions which indicate that he could not care less what happens to the diminishing number of farms. In his speech, the hon. member for Crowfoot referred to an occasion in western Canada when the Prime Minister said "Why should I sell your wheat?" That statement reflects the attitude he has toward farming. However, there is hope at this time. It is a kind of deathbed repentence; I can feel it coming. All of a sudden, the Prime Minister is realizing that there is another side to the story. Why is it that the Gallup poll indicates his popularity is slipping?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but it is my responsibility to remind him that the committee is presently studying a number of clauses dealing with capital gains. I allowed the hon. member to make a few remarks which I thought were introductory to the deliberations of the committee this afternoon. However, if I allow him more time on this, I am not really assuming my responsibility. I invite the hon. member to come as quickly as possible to the clauses under consideration at this time.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, is it not true that the clauses before us also include references to the basic herd? That is what we see opposite us today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will excuse me if I seem over-exuberant but it is not often I have the chance to speak to the Prime Minister. It is a rare occasion indeed when the Prime Minister listens to farming problems; in fact, I think this must be the first occasion he has done so.

May I point out to the Prime Minister, and to the rest of his supporters who have come so obediently to the committee at his request following the government's recent defeat in committee, that there are certain aspects of the bill that are unacceptable to the farming community. For example, the capital gains tax. Land is purchased at a nominal price with the purpose in mind of improving it. Some of the land is Crown land. The moment the land is improved it increases in value. As a result, if the sum of $1,000 had been paid for the land, with the added improvements a capital gain is realized if the land is sold. My point is that the amount spent on improving the land should be deductible over a period of years for income tax purposes, and the deductions should begin when the capital gain is recorded.

This would be one way for the government to express its faith in the agricultural community, instead of the agricultural community looking to the government for assistance for ever and a day. It would show the farmers that the government is willing to leave the agriculture industry in their hands, but that if they found themselves in need of assistance then government policies could be geared toward providing that assistance. Instead of this the government is imposing a tax on the industry, which is really asking the industry to turn against itself. Every young farmer, knowing the price his father paid for the land is going to wonder just what price the department is going to set. If the amount were tied to the assessed value, a fraction of the amount should be negotiable and then the young farmer would know where he stood. Many fathers pass their farms to their sons and continue to work on the farm, in some cases free of charge, so that the farming operation can continue. Now, the government is going to impose a capital gains tax, and this is the kind of government policy that is a deterrent to the continuation of farming operations.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

It is true that the business community must know exactly where it stands at this particular time. But so must the agricultural community. Business is not simply a case of the corner store or the man who owns a factory; business is making a buck. And if a buck can be made, tax should be collected on it. What farmers dearly want is to make a buck, and on that buck they will pay as much tax as is properly due. Farmers have never asked to be relieved from their fair share of taxation. On the other hand, neither do the farmers want additional taxes imposed on them at this time. I think we have just as much need for assistance as those industries that have been given assistance to meet the 10 per cent surcharge imposed by the United States President. The government acted wisely and did give industry special consideration under the circumstances, but my point today is that the agriculture industry is depressed and should also receive special consideration. If the government is able to solve our problems, then we will pay every bit of tax due, with interest.

I see the parliamentary secretary smiling again as though he comes from another part of the world. I cannot understand his attitude, and I do not know whether he intends to be funny or laughs simply because he has nothing to say. Speculation in the agriculture industry is quite common because if a farm proves at all profitable its value increases. Actually, the value of farms fluctuates up and down depending on the year, but the biggest increase in value is in years of inflation. There was a time when one could buy land for $10 a quarter, but that is no longer the case. This was not land bought for speculation purposes; that was about all it was worth. You could not make more money from the land today than you could in previous days.

Land today is not necessarily worth more, but it is easier to get credit today, unlike previous years, and it takes you 25 or 30 years to pay for land purchased today. That does not make the land any more productive. It does not make the land worth any more. Inflation may mean we have to spend extra money but it does not necessarily mean there are really any gains realized from the sale of that land. How should we get around this difficulty? I believe there should be some provision for depreciation, related to the inflation rate. This would take care of one problem.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. Unless he is given unanimous consent he cannot continue. Does the committee agree to allow the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: I shall be very brief. I do not wish to impose upon the committee. I have had a few years of experience in the municipal field. We looked at the assessment of properties and tried to relate the productivity of lands to their assessed value. I believe the department should announce at this time that there will at least be some relationship between the assessed value and the sum at which the land would finally be valued on a particular date. At least, those affected would then know where to start. If there were any disagreement, the matter would no doubt be taken to court eventually, but I do not think each and every individual should have the responsibility of arguing the assessment of every item of land or property on the assumption that the matter would ultimately be decided in the courts, because in no way would decisions be handed down within a reasonable length of time.

I make one further appeal. I was very sincere in my suggestion that the department should set up a unit composed of officials who would be prepared to advise rather than give firm legal opinions, people who would be prepared to assess property in order that those concerned would at least know the department's point of view. I hope something can be worked out along these lines, taking account of the fact that this is a new tax bill and that many questions will arise from it. Some of these questions could be answered during a simple and credible conversation, without the necessity of litigation or hiring lawyers who themselves might not know the correct answer. I may hold one opinion and the lawyer may hold another. The department may hold yet another point of view. If my opinion coincided with that of the department, I would at least be in a position to say I was on the right track. If my proposal were adopted, we would at least get some advice from the government during the transitional period.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, there are several points I want to raise with the govermment, and with the parliamentary secretary in particular, arising from the discussion of the subject which took place on the last occasion this group of sections was before us. First, I wanted to raise once again the question of the basic herd concept. When this subject was last before the committee, the parliamentary secretary asked, on behalf of the government, that section 29 be stood. This was agreed to by the House so that the government might give further consideration to this question. I presume hon. gentlemen opposite have now had time for further reflection and for consultation with interested organizations and individuals. It would be very useful if the government would make a statement apprising the committee just where they now stand on this question in the light of the undertaking given to the committee that they would give it further consideration.

We have, of course, objected to the government's proposal to abandon the basic herd concept. But we are not necessarily making a case in favour of the present regulations and legislation. We are not necessarily making a case for the status quo. We recognize that there may be certain difficulties in this area and that changes may be warranted. It should also be recognized in all fairness that the abandonment of the basic herd concept, in the absence of any new concept, will present difficulty to most farmers. I am sure the government recognizes that many farm organizations and many who are interested in farm affairs, are greatly concerned about this question. I think we should hear from the government at this point. Even though we are operating under a four-day closure rule it is important that we should get answers to some of the questions which have been posed in previous sittings of the committee when we were operating on the basis of free and unlimited discussion. I hope the government will not produce trite answers, but answers showing there has been analysis in depth of the rural problems to which attention has been called.

For example, there are the specific questions I raised with respect to farm accounting. In particular, there was some discussion about the advantages of cash accounting as opposed to accrual accounting. I call attention to the difficulties which could be encountered by farmers engaged in mixed grain and cattle production. Their grain operation, at least in western Canada, is such that they have no control over marketing or deliveries. It is left to others to determine when a farmer may deliver his grain. We are not objecting to the quota system applying to western grain deliveries, but this is the situation and is one which has to be taken into account in the framing of tax laws. It has been recognized quite properly in the tax legislation that a farmer may stay on a cash accounting basis if he wishes and we are in favour of a provision of this sort. But a problem remains with regard to those who are engaged both in grain and in cattle operations.

The effect of the new law, especially of section 29, may be to force farmers to change over to an accrual system of accounting, not because they are required to do so by law, but in practice, taking into account economic and financial considerations. I asked specifically about farmers engaged in more than one line of activity. Would they have an opportunity to account for one part of their operations on a cash basis and for another on an accrual basis? The parliamentary secretary replied that they could not, because if they were allowed to do so the accounting picture would be unduly complicated. Has the parliamentary secretary given further consideration to this question since that time and, if so, what are his conclusions?

Another matter I raised with the parliamentary secretary had to do with the question of the transitional period for those farmers who may decide, of their own volition, to switch from cash accounting to accrual accounting. Here, there is the problem that there are no transitional rules for such cases. There are transitional rules for professional and other groups who are required to change over from a cash accounting basis to an accrual accounting basis. However, there are no such rules for farmers or, I understand, for fishermen. Has the government given this matter further consideration? When this matter was last up the government was to take a look at it. We would like to hear what the government intends to do in this regard.

There is another matter I should like to raise. I think it must be recognized that there have been a good many discussions on this question. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance no doubt is aware of a letter, a copy of which I received, from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association dated November 12. It poses some rather difficult problems which should be cleared up in the committee. First of all, the letter from Mr. Charles A. Gracey, manager of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, thanks the parliamentary secretary for the reception given their representations and then continues:

We are, of course, hopeful that several recommendations will receive the most serious consideration.

In that connection I was disturbed, Mr. Mahoney, when sitting in the Gallery on Tuesday afternoon I listened to the exchange between yourself and Mr. John Burton of Regina East pertaining to Mr. Burton's representation that a transitional period from cash to accrual accounting should be granted to farmers. I was astounded at your response. First of all to the effect that in view of the fact that farmers were not being forced to switch from cash to accrual accounting, there was therefore no need for a transitional period. Secondly, you argued that you had received no representations in this respect. I was deeply disturbed and confused at these remarks, Mr. Mahoney, because not many hours earlier we had discussed this very point with you in your office and I had the clear impression at that time that irregardless of whether you agreed with our recommendation in this respect you did fully understand the recommendation and the reason for which we made it. I therefore want to register with you our very great concern at this apparent inconsistency on your part and to urge you to bear our recommendations in mind as this legislation moves through the appropriate channels.

Well, Mr. Chairman, no doubt there has been further correspondence on this matter.

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. In view of the fact that Mr. Gracey supplied the hon. member with a copy of the letter he wrote me, perhaps he has supplied him with a copy of my answer. If so, I wonder if the hon. member would read it into the record also.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Gracey did not supply me with the answer. I thought that the parliamentary secretary would have done this himself, because the copy of the letter I received made it quite clear that a copy was being sent to me. Therefore, the parliamentary secretary might have supplied me with a copy of his answer. I have no doubt there have been further discussions between Mr. Gracey and the parliamentary secretary. Indeed, there may have been some confusion. In checking the Hansard record, it would seem that there may have been some confusion between two points under discussion, namely, the matter of the transitional rules and the question of whether farmers could have both a cash accounting system for part of their operations and an accrual accounting system for the other part of their operations. There may have been some confusion there and I am prepared to acknowledge that on the basis of the record before us. But it seems to me that this evidence of misunderstanding demonstrates the need for further discussion on some of these questions.

It is my understanding that, in fact, this organization and some others have made representations that the government should allow the present system to continue in operation for a year until a new system could be worked out which would be more satisfactory to all concerned. This would appear to be a reasonable proposal. It does not mean that we would be accepting on a permanent basis, as part of the framework of this new law, the old approach to the basic herd, but certainly it would allow for a transitional period. I believe there is some justification for allowing the necessary time in which to work out a new plan that would be acceptable, and which would take into account the problems faced by some people.

There is just one matter I wish to raise which has to do with our proposals for taking into account some of the special problems faced by farmers with regard to the application of the capital gains tax. We in this party have made clear we are in favour of the basic principle of a capital gains tax. In fact, we feel the basic concept should have gone further than it has. We also recognize that for some groups in this country there are special problems which arise from the nature of the occupations in which they are engaged. More attention in respect of the application of this tax should be given to the problems of people operating essentially on a small business basis. This includes farmers as the largest single group in this category, if I am correct.

Thus, when this subject was before the Committee in the middle of November, I moved on behalf of the New Democratic Party an amendment to a Conservative proposal which it seems to me would be reasonable and would provide for the taking into account of some of the problems faced by farmers. In fact, there would be a provision whereby we could deal with the problems involved with transfers of land within the family, whether by sale or by legacy. Second, there would be a provision for a roll-over and, thirdly, there would be a provision in respect of farmers whose savings fund at the time of retirement is their farm. There would be some provision for this situation. I should like to ask the government whether it has, in fact, given any further consideration to the situation facing farmers as a result of the imposition of the capital gains tax and whether we might have some reason to hope for a response from the government by way of suitable amendments that would give adequate recognition to this special situation.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, I am indeed delighted to participate in the debate on this aspect of the bill before us, particularly in the presence of so many distinguished members on the opposite side. It is even better than the question period. I hope this is an indication of the genuine concern hon. members have for this particular portion of the bill—

An hon. Member: There is not anyone on your front bench.

Mr. Mazankowski: I can look after you any time. If you want to stand up and make a speech, I would welcome your participation. On the other hand, if you are not prepared to speak perhaps you would sit back and listen because you might learn something.

I hope the presence of so many hon. members today is an indication of the fact that they are genuinely interested in this debate.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask hon. members to keep order, and let the hon. member who has the floor speak so that I can hear what he is saying.

Mr. Mazankowski: That you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would have thought that their line of behaviour would have been discussed at their latest caucus meeting. Nevertheless, I do hope that hon. members opposite will pay heed to the submissions that are made by members on this side of the House as they relate to the future of the agriculture industry and the impact that this measure will have.

• (2:40 p.m.)

There is no question in my mind that those who were responsible for the drafting of this bill were rather far removed from the realities of the business of farming. I believe they have taken a theoretical and academic approach to the whole business of farming, and have failed to recognize that there is something unique in farming. It is a way of life. I do not say for one moment that it can be looked upon as just another kind of business. It is an industry which is largely dependent upon the success of the export markets, and that has its ups and downs as a result of the vagaries of the weather. In most cases, the reward for the labours of those engaged in farming is the appreciation of their investment.

This was very clearly outlined in the brief that was submitted on behalf of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association to the minister, and which pointed out the high investment and low returns in farming. I will quote the following statement from the brief of November 1, 1971:

> It has long been recognized that the ratio of investment to returns in agriculture is extremely high. Not only is this a characteristic of agriculture but the problem is further compounded by a moderately high risk factor associated with the vagaries of climate and markets.
> Indeed the low returns to agriculture are evident in the fact that banks are reluctant to extend long term credit to farmers and hence the need for and use of the government administered Farm Credit Corporation.
> Thus, it is obvious that in a high cost, moderate risk, low return industry the effects of capital gains taxes would be more disruptive and burdensome than they would be in a low investment, high return business such, for example, as is common among the professions.

Another recognition of this fact is to be found in the report of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce dated November 4, which also sets out in very clear and categorical phraseology the fact that it is their view that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of this country. It goes on to say:

> Over the years, this sector of the economy has become increasingly subjected to pressures which have led to a profound change in the nature and use of farm lands. Your Committee is concerned by this trend and believes that measures should be taken to reverse it.

We are in a situation where the business of farming will be treated like any other business, without cognizance being taken of the fact that there is something unique about farming and that we must work toward preserving that lifestyle. This measure has failed to recognize the fact that there has been a decline in the rural population with a consequent deterioration of rural communities. I believe that it would be very unwise for us to stand idly by and allow this government to bring in measures which would adversely affect the family enterprise. We should be working in the opposite direction. We should be encouraging rather than discouraging this type of activity, which is so basic and so fundamental to the economic and social well-being of our nation.

Combined with this tax proposal, we have many other legislative measures which do nothing more than speed up the process of rationalization and of moving people off the farms and into the cities. I should like to quote from a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture, as reported in the Vancouver Sun of December 2. This is the direction in which the government is moving. It is substantiated by the bills with which we have dealt, this bill included. The article reads as follows:

> Details are being worked out to take inefficient or marginal farmers out of the agricultural scene, federal Agriculture Minister H. A. Olson told the 38th annual convention of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture here Wednesday.
> He said that agriculture today is so complex and world competition is so keen that it is for the good of the nation that such a program be available.

On the other hand, the spokesman for the B.C. Federation of Agriculture said the following in his opening address, as reported by the Vancouver Sun:

> —during 1971, producers were as efficient as ever, crops were not too bad, farmers worked harder than ever—"and yet we seem to be going broke faster than perhaps ever before".

The question I want to ask is, who will decide who is efficient and who is inefficient. Certainly, it seems to me that with the lack of incentive in this proposal the industry will find that there will be nothing more than a speeding up of this process which is now well under way.

Another point that concerns me is the fact that this bill is so complicated and confusing. We are being subjected to a form of coercion in that this measure is being stuffed down our throats. The Liberal leader in the province of Alberta has said, and it has been said more than once, that the new system is so complex the average businessman will have to spend a considerable amount of time with his lawyer and accountant. In fact, one observer has suggested that the name of the new income tax act should be more appropriately "an act to provide financial relief to needy lawyers and accountants".

The capital gains provisions in the bill have been outlined by the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Mackenzie. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary, or indeed the Minister of Finance, have any figures to indicate just what they will mean in terms of revenue to the federal treasury when the capital gains tax, as it relates to farmers, is enacted. I wonder whether it is significant in terms of revenue, and whether the matter of administration has been taken into consideration. I wonder whether consideration has been given to the disruptive effect which these provisions will have in the future on the family farm operation.

I believe that unless all three of those factors have been taken into consideration in a realistic way, the capital gains provisions relating to farmers might very well need a reappraisal. If the revenue that is derived from this is rather insignificant, then the disruptive effect that the measure will have on the future of farming, and on the handing down of land from father to son, would not be worth the administrative difficulties, the harassment and confusion that are about to be created as a result of this measure. I hope that the Minister of Finance or the parliamentary secretary will shed some light on this matter.

The other point on which I hope the minister might comment, and which was touched on briefly by the hon. member for Crowfoot this morning, relates to the tax on the sale of depreciated farm machinery. I think the present provisions in the Income Tax Act have been acceptable to farmers in enabling them to maintain a modern line of farm machinery. This had important side effects because, as is well known, one dollar spent on agriculture yields a multiplier effect of $7. I believe the hon. member for Brant will confirm that as a result of current pressure on the agriculture industry, the manufacture and sale of farm machinery have been slowed down. I believe that this measure not only will affect farmers directly but will also affect further sales of farm machinery. It will affect the dealers, and the manufacturers of farm machinery in this country. I point out, Mr. Chairman, that a royal commission strongly urged that we encourage the manufacture of farm machinery in Canada.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Again, for the life of me, I cannot see, in view of what appears will be an insignificant amount of revenue, why we are going to disrupt the manner in which farm machinery depreciation and recapture have been managed. The impact of the new provision will be widespread. I hope some consideration will be given by the government to relieving farmers of the extra burden which is going to be imposed on them through these provisions.

I would now like to quote from a letter which I received from an income tax accountant in the city of Lloydminster, Saskatchewan. He draws attention to the very severe impact on the net income position of farmers that will result from the termination of the provisions for depreciation that exist in the present act. Here, I quote from the ltter sent to me by Mr. Fred Lonsdale:

> The group of taxpayers whom we represent mainly are middle income people who own property. In the long term I can envisage their tax load increasing sharply. This in particular applies to farmers through the elimination of Part XVII straight line depreciation through recapture of depreciation except that such recapture is subject to 100 per cent taxation whereas capital gains are only 50 per cent.

I note that the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Crowfoot had an exchange over the question of whether this was capital gains or income, and judging from Mr. Lonsdale's observations the recapture of depreciation will be taken in as income in the particular year involved. His letter continues:

> There is a further loss even to those farmers presently on the diminishing balance Part XI system in that they will in the future be subject to a capital gains tax where equipment is sold in excess of cost—this is quite common where farmers trade up equipment.

That is contrary to the observation made by the parliamentary secretary in his exchange with the hon. member for Crowfoot earlier today. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will be in a position to comment on these provisions before the debate concludes.

The other matter I wish to touch on is that of the basic herd, a subject which has been debated fairly extensively by others, including the hon. member for Crowfoot. I know the hon. member for Wetaskiwin is also going to deal with it. The Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has recognized the special significance of the farm industry and categorically stated that the basic herd concept should continue for the benefit of farmers and ranchers engaged in this occupation. Very succinctly, in its report at page 47:7, it states:

> Your committee recommends that provision be made in the proposed legislation for the continued recognition of a farmer's permanent herd as a "basic herd" and, therefore, as a capital asset.

I believe this is very important. Again, I do not think a huge amount of revenue will be derived from the repeal of this provision, and certainly its repeal will result in a considerable amount of confusion and re-organization on the part of farmers and ranchers.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

I wish to comment briefly on the observation made by the hon. member for Mackenzie, who suggested that because of the complexity of the tax bill the department might make a zenith number available which taxpayers could call in order to get accurate information without going to the expense of hiring tax accountants and tax lawyers. I think the suggestion is a good one. I note that the Department of Agriculture is doing something like this right now. The other day I dialed a number and heard the Minister of Agriculture give a great spiel about the agricultural policies of the government. If he can provide this sort of service for political propaganda, certainly it should be provided to disseminate facts and explanations with regard to this bill.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment briefly on the position of hon. members to my left. They seem to be waffling somewhat in their position with respect to capital gains. Originally, they said the tax bill did not go far enough, and they maintained that they alone spoke for the farmers. But if we look at their philosophy, we find that they do believe in the concept of capital gains and of estate and gift taxes. As a matter of fact, I believe that the government's of Saskatchewan and Manitoba are in the throes of preparing legislation to impose estate tax as soon as this measure has been passed. Yet members of the NDP in this House sanctimoniously say that they alone are speaking for the preservation of the family farm. That is not in accord with the facts. Members of the NDP cannot have it both ways. On the one hand, they cannot say that the bill does not go far enough, then say they are defending the small family farm and want to see it passed on from generation to generation. I think they should stick to the basic philosophy which they expound so vividly on the hustings, the dissolution of all capital assets on death. If they did so we would know better where they stand, and so would the farmers.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. McBride: Mr. Chairman, it does my heart good, as a private member of this House who has been heavily involved in agriculture, to hear the very distinguished member for Vegreville tearing strips off the people to his left along the lines that he is afraid they are being too sanctimonious when they imply that they, and they alone, are protecting agriculture and the family farm and that they alone believe the rural way of life to be of value to our nation. These are precisely the kind of words that we have uttered over and over again in agriculture committees of this House—and we want to reiterate today that it is also sanctimonious nonsense for the hon. member for Vegreville or any other member of the House to imply that all the concerns about agriculture are to be found in the ranks of the opposition parties and none over here.

An hon. Member: We have not seen it.

Mr. McBride: If my participation this afternoon achieves no other purpose, I hope it makes clear that within the Liberal Party and with members such as myself there is a very deep and abiding concern for the welfare of rural Canada, and we are in a position to use the influence we have to attempt to create policies to help rural Canada.

An hon. Member: Like closure!

Mr. McBride: The hon. member for Swift Current is speaking, as he does, from his seat. I was very impressed, Mr. Chairman, to hear on the CBC this morning—

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McBride: —that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member made reference to me. I did not utter a word. If he cannot get his constituencies right—

An hon. Member: He can't see, either.

Mr. McIntosh: —how can he speak on this tax bill?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Ask for divine guidance.

Mr. McBride: It was the kind of comment, with all due respect to the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, that I have learned to expect from him and might have led me to believe that he said what in fact one of his colleagues said.

I was absolutely amazed this morning to hear on the CBC that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is a most distinguished gentleman, was suggesting to the nation and to the House that this government had created ill-will by deciding that there ought to be a day, after the proverbial 40 days and 40 nights, when we come to vote on this tax bill. This was absolutely astounding, perhaps not to him because he is from the city of Winnipeg, but certainly to members who sit behind him and at least masquerade in this House as representing agricultural interests. We heard the distinguished new member from Assiniboia speak this morning, but anybody who knows anything about a riding like Assiniboia must be keenly and bitterly aware that it was his own party that sabotaged Bill C-244.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: You sabotaged it.

Mr. McBride: If you want to talk about closure or cutting off debate, you might better suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre ought to have a black mask and a broad axe, because that is the kind of activity he has perpetrated on the agricultural industry by masquerading his party as acting for the farmer when in fact it killed the grain stabilization bill.

Why did they do it? As the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, who is not here this afternoon explained to me one day, it is because it did not contain what I would describe as a guaranteed income for farmers. It might be a fine thing to have a guaranteed income for Canada, but when you say it is the government that is bringing closure into the House and destroying good will I ask you, Mr. Chairman, where is the good will when measures like Bill C-176, the national farm marketing legislation, and Bill C-244, the stabilization bill, are being sabotaged and killed by the opposition to prevent some forward steps in agricultural legislation in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McBride: I will, as soon as I finish my remarks, with great delight. The point for all of us to remember is that our real concern ought not to be whether we on this side of the House make the New Democratic Party or its very distinguished House leader pleased, happy and positive toward us, members like the hon. member for Vegreville and the hon. member for Crowfoot, or even a man as distinguished—and I am glad to see him here this afternoon—as the right hon. member for Prince Albert: the point is we ought to be doing something for Canadian agriculture. That is what the aim should be. It is not whether we are making other Members of Parliament think we are very nice little boys—

An hon. Member: You are not.

Mr. McBride: —or, since the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is here, boys and girls—she is a girl, a very young lady. But we ought to be getting on with the work.

Mr. Mahoney: Hear, hear!

Mr. McBride: The section before us is of considerable concern, especially when we hear what the media say in agricultural communities such as the one I represent. It should be clearly pointed out that there is provided an opportunity for a farmer to decide that he will take a deduction in a capital gain on his property of $1,000 a year for his residence—his home—and an acre surrounding it or, alternatively, a deduction or removal from going into capital gains of $1,000 for each year that he lives on the farm. In common with many other members, I represent an agricultural area which is not wealthy and it is a very rare situation when you find a farm increasing in value at a rate greater than $1,000 a year. Another point is that when, and if, it increases in value at a rate greater than $1,000 a year, it does not become taxable at 100 per cent—which is the implication you usually hear—but it becomes taxable only at half rate.

It is also extremely important to point out that amendments have been brought in and consideration is being given to enable those who have a farm unit which would increase at a rate greater than $1,000 a year, and therefore would become liable for capital gains tax, to pay this tax over a period of five years. This is true, of course, when a death occurs. In the case of an ordinary gain—say if the farm is sold out of the family—then you have the other five year averaging provision already available to farmers.

However, Mr. Chairman, there are one or two questions I want to put to the parliamentary secretary and upon which he might comment a little later. In areas like Ontario, especially eastern Ontario you frequently have a farm unit made up of a 100-acre lot in one location, another some miles away and a third some miles away again—so that you have three different segments in the one operation—obviously the farmer cannot live in three places. The question is, should we take the bill before us to mean that he has the exemption of $1,000 only on the 100 acres where he in fact resides and has no capital gain exemption applicable to the other two 100-acre units, or ought we to assume that it applies to all three together?

• (3:10 p.m.)

In addition, what happens when a man who owns three different 100-acre units decides to sell one unit which, because it may be near an urban area or for some other reason, has risen rapidly in value? What does he do? Do the exemptions apply to him or, under the section to which I have referred, would any exemptions be applicable?

I also want to refer to the dialogue on farm implements that we have heard today. The likelihood is pretty remote that farm implements will increase in value as the years go on, and not decrease. I suppose that if some historical significance could be attributed to certain of these implements, they could increase in value.

I now want to direct the attention of the parliamentary secretary to a problem that has frequently been discussed with farmers in my area and with those who are in the beef-raising industry. If the bill is to encourage farmers to move from a cash to an accrual form of accounting, I believe it follows that arrangements will have to be made for some transitional period—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I would point out that there are hon. members in the aisle who are carrying on some kind of caucus. I do not think that is proper.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the plural of caucus is "cauci". Be that as it may, may I return to what I was saying before you so charitably interrupted me. I think we must provide an opportunity for the tax that will become payable when the individual farmer shifts from the cash to the accrual basis to be paid over a period of time. It is all right for the new farmer just entering the business. He can adopt the new system and it will be easier for him. He will just be starting out and he can abide by the new rules as he goes along. Most beef producers say that they do not really care which system is adopted. They say, "We are happy to pay under the accrual system if that is what you prefer but we cannot, all of a sudden, bear the cost in one year of an incredibly heavy tax burden which a changeover would require. They have a good point. I hope the parliamentary secretary will consider it and address himself to it as the debate goes on.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I repeat that the vast majority of farmers in eastern Ontario, certainly in northern Ontario and many parts of Quebec and the Maritimes—and it is well to remember that much agricultural production in Canada is in areas other than the Prairies—will, because of the exemptions built into this bill, not pay any capital gains tax. There will be no hindrance with regard to the transfer of land from one generation to the other. I hear groans from the other side of the chamber. They are mostly western groans, mostly prairie groans coming from people who do not know, as do the people of eastern Canada, what poverty in agriculture means.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. McBride: People say to me over and over again, "Murray, why do you do so much for the western farmer? What about the eastern farmer? Why do nearly all farm bills in this House concern themselves with the problem of western agriculture only?" One of my colleagues says that the people in Quebec say the same thing. I have been to ridings in western Canada. One night I had the privilege of meeting 1,250 farmers in Prince Albert. When I pointed this fact out to them they said, "Nobody has ever told us this. We thought that only in western Canada were there difficulties in the agricultural industry." I explained that Canada is a nation spread out over many thousands of miles and has within it about 9,900 so-called forgotten corners. I am sure every member of this chamber has heard constituents saying, "Why are we in the forgotten area? Why is our industry a forgotten industry?" and so on. I think we ought to look at the nation over-all. I see the hon. member for Annapolis Valley behind the curtains. Certainly his area comes into the category I have mentioned.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McBride: I will be happy to, perhaps after the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has asked his question. I suggest that, as representatives, the members of the House must first and foremost be interested in their own constituencies. Yet would we not have a sad government and a sad governmental process, as made evident in this House, if hon. members were interested only in their own areas and were not prepared to take seriously the concerns of the people of other areas of Canada? I say to the committee, as one who has long been interested in agriculture, that the day has long gone when we could assume that the only concerns in agriculture have to do with prairie agriculture. I can just imagine some bright member saying, "That was spoken with eastern arrogance." That is nonsense.

An hon. Member: It is not, on the opposition side of the House.

Mr. McBride: Recently I had the privilege of meeting certain farmers in western Canada. Every farmer I met in Assiniboia constituency said to me, "We conclude that the government itself did not believe in the grain stabilization bill or it would have passed it. That is why we lost confidence in you. You should have used closure, but you did not." That, of course, was a different ball game to the one in which we are now engaged. The farmers of this nation want strong, decisive action. They want us to put through the bill we are considering and not to shilly-shally around with wishy-washy proposals and endless talk on issues which have been kicking around for months and, as in the case of this bill, for several years.

On that count, Mr. Chairman, I think it is good for the nation that we have set some parameters, so to speak, to this debate and that we are prepared to move forward and consider the issues at hand. I was interested to note that most of the speeches today seemed more relevant, more cogent and more concise than they have been hitherto.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was rising, not exactly on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, but to ask the hon. member a question or two.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): First, may I express to him my sympathy. He has had difficulty in speaking this afternoon. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton is a pretty faithful member of the Friday afternoon club. He is usually here and he speaks often at this time of the week. As a rule it is fairly easy to speak on Friday afternoons because not many hon. members are present. This afternoon he had to talk above the babble on the other side of the House.

Mr. Benson: To say nothing of the four NDP members.

An hon. Member: Where is your babble?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The solid phalanx of Liberal members and all these cabinet ministers on a Friday afternoon almost frighten us.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who knows the rules so well, rose to ask a question. I think he ought to ask his question.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Chairman, could we not hear from the hon. member for Crowfoot first?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, when I first came here I knew how to ask questions directly. However, the longer I have been here the greater have grown the preambles to questions, and I thought I would try a preamble myself. In the course of his speech he suggested that Bill C-244 was a fine bill and he accused us of killing it. If Bill C-244 was such a wonderful bill, and since it is still on the order paper, why does not the hon. member persuade the government to come forward with it again; or is it the case that the provincial election in Saskatchewan and the by-election in Assiniboia gave the government the answer?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. McBride: The point I was making is extremely valid. It is simply that the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could be boiled down to the simple fact that the grains bill had no guaranteed annual income in it. That is a phony argument against the bill. It was meant to mislead. It was effective. I do not criticize his colleague. He was successful in winning the constituency on that basis. However, it is despicable when a member with the experience and national reputation of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—I say that with all due respect—goes on the CBC network and says that the government is creating ill-will when his own party uses a more deadly form of closure than this government ever did.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Peace River rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. In my usual desire to be helpful I note that today, for the first Friday in three years, we have more than two cabinet ministers in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Because we have no answers to questions asked—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: —I ask leave for there to be a supplementary question period—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: —from now until four o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair did not hear one word said by the hon. member.

Mr. Baldwin: Having made my preliminary point, Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask for unanimous consent to have a supplementary question period, as there are 17 ministers present, in order to get answers to questions which we have not been able to get all week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton preaching to his colleagues as if it were Sunday morning, perhaps I will be excused if I come back to the bill in question. I was not sure whether it was a debate, a question period or both.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. McBride: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I do not object to personal reflections being made by the very distinguished hon. member for Wetaskiwin, but the fact remains that the nation must know there is a religious zeal for agriculture in the Liberals ranks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Moore: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I missed the point.

Mr. Paproski: There was no point.

Mr. Moore: I did not get the connection. After some of the bills mentioned by the hon. member, I am not even sure what bill we are now discussing.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Moore: I wish to take a few minutes to deal with a small but very important part of this bill. That is the basic herd aspect with regard to dairy farmers. I wish to point out to the previous speaker that I am talking about dairy farmers in every part of Canada, not just western Canada. They are all affected, even those in the Renfrew area. I understand from what has just been said that this is an area of poverty.

An hon. Member: They have no member to represent them.

Mr. Moore: This is the message I got. This is one of the largest groups of farmers in the country. Under this legislation I feel that this group will be shafted, if not ignored. Many dairy farmers are forced to retire earlier than other farmers. This is a very important point. There are different reasons for this early retirement. One reason is that they are forced to retire because of recent government dairy policies. The second reason is unavailability of help. Third, the physical strain on the operator precludes him from carrying on his operations into old age. Therefore, he is very much affected by this legislation.

Some dairy operators are on rented land. When this is the case, their only equity is the dairy herd. On having to disperse his herd, he does not have anything left but the proceeds of the dispersal sale. This refers to a basic herd. If he has no basic herd, the whole amount obtained from the sale is taxed. In other cases a dairy farmer may have to sell his herd but continue to live on the land. The basic herd at least enables him to hold on to the full proceeds from the operation of the herd. That is basic in the case of a herd dispersal. The dairy farmer, to a great extent than other farmers, can reclaim little from the huge investment he has in dairy buildings and equipment. What does he have left from his years of labour? He has much less left if he cannot take advantage of the basic herd. Every farmer who has a herd dispersal sale is faced with the fact that much of the proceeds go to the government that year.

Further to what my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, said concerning the Senate committee report, the House of Commons committee report on the white paper proposals stated that since taxation was recommended on a capital basis this necessitates retention of the basic herd concept. As we are hearing speeches of compassion for the farmers, even at this late date, from members on the government side, possibly they can be urged to show some compassion for the man who has worked long hours for many years with little hope of return.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I have been asked a number of specific questions. I apologize to the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, but I would like to get these answers on the record before private members' hour. I shall not be too long.

Mr. McIntosh: Why not get answers to my questions on the record also?

Mr. Mahoney: If I am not too long, and you are not too long, perhaps we will. If the hon. member has some specific questions I will certainly yield the floor to him.

In his opening remarks the hon. member for Regina East suggested that I had asked to have section 29 stood in order to permit the government to give further consideration to it. If the hon. member checks the record he will find that I agreed to a suggestion by the hon. member for Crowfoot to that effect. Indeed, the matter has been thoroughly reconsidered. The government feels that its original decision was correct, namely, that the concept of the basic herd is of little or no use in the future, with the institution of the capital gains system.

The hon. member reiterated the argument of cash basis versus accrual basis for accounting purposes, and suggested that somehow or other something in the bill forces farmers and ranchers to convert from the cash to the accrual system notwithstanding the provision in the bill that they can continue to account on a cash basis.

Again, this is not a conclusion that we accept as valid. It is true that it might be good business for a farmer or rancher to switch to the accrual method of accounting because in that way he would pay his tax on a more even basis over his lifetime and not encounter a fairly large lump sum tax liability in the year he discontinued his farming operations. However, that is the choice that he has. I do not think total tax liability would be significantly altered by this provision. Most taxpayers seem to feel that there is some advantage in deferring taxation for as long as they can. Again I must say that we cannot accept the premise that there is any forcing of farmers or ranchers to switch from cash to accrual accounting. Indeed, the bill specifically provides that they can continue on the cash basis.

This leads me to the hon. member's third point, the question of transitional provisions. We have provided for transitional rules to cover professional people who are obliged under the new bill to covert from a cash to an accrual basis, and it does seem appropriate that transitional rules be provided where a taxpayer is forced to change his accounting method. However, in the case of farmers or ranchers such a change is purely voluntary, so the provision of transitional rules would not seem appropriate.

The hon. member read from a letter Mr. Gracey wrote to me. I think the hon. member will appreciate that I have not had, nor am I likely to have, an opportunity to leave the chamber to obtain a copy of my reply to that letter. However, I will take the opportunity in the debate next week to put on the record my reply to that letter. The hon. member was remarkably clairvoyant in divining the nature of my reply in his subsequent remarks.

The hon. member for Vegreville raised the question of the revenue derived from the application of the capital gains tax on farmers. The revenue estimates declared by the department do not break down as between particular professions, undertakings or occupations, but it is estimated that the capital gains revenue in the first year of the new system will amount to about $80 million. Against that is a revenue loss of about $65 million resulting from the federal estate and gift tax abandonment. The net amount of tax therefore expected to be gained from that combination of measures is $15 million. I do not think the farmers' share of that increase is likely to be the make or break item in the decision made by a particular farmer. It would work out to about 70 cents for each Canadian and I think as such it will not be a determining factor in any decision that a farmer, rancher or anybody else may make in regard to continuing in his chosen profession.

The item of recapture was also raised by the hon. member for Vegreville. In view of the time and desire of other hon. members to take part in the debate, I do not think it would be useful to repeat remarks I made in response to the same question raised earlier by the hon. member for Crowfoot. With regard to information services, the hon. member for Vegreville raised a very valid and good point. I am advised that the Minister of National Revenue spoke in Vancouver recently about his department's program. In the very near future he will be making an even more complete statement on the intentions of his department.

In this connection I can only say that I hope not too many Canadian taxpayers will be panicked into retaining professional tax advisers if they have not needed them up to now. The Department of National Revenue does intend to render every assistance to Canadian taxpayers. Indeed, I think most Canadian taxpayers will find that if they have not needed professional tax advisers hitherto under the present system, there will be no reason for them to need them under the new system. I realize, of course, that a number of people sometimes use scare tactics in order to drum up business in anticipation of valuation day, and so on. I can only say that I hope our taxpayers will wait and see what information and assistance is available to them from the Department of National Revenue before spending their money on that kind of service.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton raised the question of the farmer who owns three separate parcels of land and resides on one of them. The $1,000 per annum deduction from capital gains in lieu of the exclusion of place of residence applies only to the parcel of land on which the residence is located. If the hon. member would refer to section 40(2)(c) on page 100 of the bill, I think he will see that that is very clear.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to speak generally about the capital gains tax, and so on, but in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton and those of the parliamentary secretary perhaps I can deal for a moment with two specific recommendations put forward on this side of the House by members of all opposition parties. These two specific points are the basic herd and capital gains made from farming.

In referring to these two items the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton said that every time a member on this side of the House—at least, this was the implication—criticized not only this bill but Bill C-244, and I suppose he also included Bills C-197 and C-176, he was doing so for purposes of political expediency. We have on many occasions said that we are concerned with all farmers in Canada, not just farmers in western Canada, as he implied. We from western Canada have no axe to grind about the treatment afforded farmers in eastern Canada by the government. We hope that they will get a square deal. In fact, they are entitled to a square deal.

An hon. Member: And they are not getting one.

Mr. McIntosh: As one of my colleagues says, they have not been getting a square deal. I was very surprised to hear the hon. member say that he spoke to about 1,200 farmers in the Prince Albert area recently, not one of whom spoke in favour of any measures for eastern agriculture. I do not want to say that the hon. member is lying, but I would say that that is not the truth. He should realize that most of these farmers' ancestors came from eastern Canada and so these farmers are very interested in what happens in Ontario and Quebec.

The hon. member also said he had been speaking during the last two months in the riding of Assiniboia. I can speak with some authority on that riding since it was formerly part of my riding. For example, the ancestors of farmers in the Strasbourg and Duval areas came from Quebec, and I am sure they did not tell him what he alleges they said. Perhaps this will convince the hon. member that we from western Canada do not speak about problems only from our particular region. We are Canadians.

I would like to issue a challenge to the hon. member who said that every time we get up in the House to speak we do so for purpose of political expediency. I would ask him this question! If some body in Parliament which was favourable to the government were to make certain recommendations, would he accept them? I refer to the two recommendations made by the Senate committee with reference to the subjects we are discussing. As hon. members know, the other place is composed principally of appointees, followers of the present government. It is certainly composed, to the extent of 80 per cent, of followers of the hon. member's party. If we say nothing further from this side with regard to basic herds and capital gains on farmland, would the hon. member try to persuade the Minister of Finance, the parliamentary secretary—

• (3:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: And the Prime Minister.

Mr. McIntosh: Never mind the Prime Minister. I want to be clear in this regard. Would he disregard what we have said and accept these representations made by a body composed to the extent of 80 per cent of members sympathetic to his own party? The parliamentary secretary said the basic herd concept was not a good idea for farmers and ranchers, and I suppose he will be saying the same thing about our representations having to do with capital gains. If the proposal does not affect the government's financial picture one way or the other, why not give these people what they want and what they feel is good for them?

The Senate committee asked that provision be made for the continued recognition of a farmer's permanent herd as a capital asset, rather than treating it as inventory or stock in trade as proposed in the measure before us. Everyone who has anything to do with farming knows that the basic herd is the production machine of the ranch or farm. It is the production machine which provides the calves year after year. Why cannot it be treated in the same manner as other productive machinery is treated? This is what farmers are asking. I do not know whether it is good government ought to do, and we in the opposition agree with them.

The Senate committee also recommended consideration be given to extending the roll-over provisions to permit land together with any other capital property which is used by an individual in a farming activity to be transferred, either during lifetime or on death, to descendants without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions. On the issue of capital gains and farmland the committee took the view that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of this country. That is true. Over the years this sector of the economy has become increasingly subjected to pressures which have led to a profound change in the nature and use of farmland. The committee was concerned by this trend and believes that measures should be taken to reverse it.

I ask the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton whether he accepts this, whether he will go to the parliamentary secretary and ask him to make this concession to the people of our country who are calling for it. It is not asking very much. I suggest to the hon. member from Renfrew that he consider this point carefully because we are asking this not only for the farmers and ranchers of western Canada but for the livestock producers in eastern Canada and, indeed, all over Canada.

I was surprised to hear the hon. member talk about good will in reference to Bill C-259. I ask him where the good will was when he rose in the House a couple of days ago and referred to meetings which the Minister of Agriculture held with the provincial ministers of agriculture on the subject of national marketing boards. He implied in his question—I do not know whether it was a planted question or not, but I have my suspicions—that all the provincial departments of agriculture were now in favour of a national marketing board. Why did the hon. member ask that question? The agreement which was made at that time—and he knew it when he asked the question—was only in respect of poultry. I know that Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba are not in favour of a national marketing board in the sphere of agricultural production, if the hon. member wants good will from this side of the House he should extend a helping hand from his side.

Mr. Paproski: It is better to give than to receive, especially around Christmas.

Mr. McIntosh: If I were asked whether I was in favour of a capital gains tax as defined in the bill, my answer would be no. One reason for this point of view is the extreme difficulty which a large number of members are experiencing in arriving at a satisfactory definition of the term "capital gain." Possibly the most important question we must ask ourselves in this young country of ours is whether a capital gains tax would be good for Canada at the present time. Again my answer must be no. I am reminded of a fairy story which I often heard when I was a small boy, about the goose that laid the golden egg. The reasoning used by the government right now is the same as was used by the man who killed the goose. He looked at the golden egg and then thought he would try to get all the eggs at once without waiting for the goose to lay them. This is what the government is trying to do.

My belief is that one cannot apply a capital gains tax while achieving the full potential development of our country, nor can we reach our national goals. What are those goals? We have read a great many articles in the newspapers about what these goals should be. In particular, we have read many articles and heard many debates on the subject of foreign investment. It is my feeling that individual citizens in Canada should be given an opportunity to promote Canadian development and that the imposition of a capital gains tax would markedly curtail the growth of our country. In the second place, it would work against the desire which most Canadians apparently possess to buy Canada back and would do little to ensure that future growth of our country would be in Canadian hands.

What the government is doing by imposing this capital gains tax is killing this goose that lays the golden egg. It is curtailing the growth of our country. It is limiting opportunities for future ownership of our country by Canadians, and it is reducing the opportunity to repurchase what some people say foreign countries own. In my view, in any equitable system of capital gains, capital losses would have to be an offsetting factor and hence the revenue derived from capital gains is likely to be small.

Due to the administrative burdens such a tax would place upon the revenue authorities, the cost of collection would probably be disproportionately high. In periods of rising prices, many so-called capital gains are illusory because they represent an inflationary-created increase in the price of property sold, rather than an increase in its true value. Many farmers are asking, "What is the value of the land we are farming?" Many members sitting here today have lived in western Canada for a number of years and have seen farmers leaving their land because it was worthless. They could not even pay the taxes on the land. Then in a period when the produce of that land could be sold, prices were inflated. We have gone through another period when the produce of the land could not be sold because of competition in respect of prices and lack of support by this government and the value of the land has gone down.

It is very difficult to determine what is the capital gain on any one piece of land. As I said before, it fluctuates by reason of inflationary trends. There is also the cost-price squeeze. We have heard this term used on many occasions during debate in this House. The situation so far as the farmers are concerned—this is why they should be placed in a special category—is that in the past farmers did not use the sophisticated machinery in their operations that they require today. We could go through history and remember when crops were reaped by binders. Then there were combines, then a special kind of combine with rubber tires, and so on.

There are reasons for all this. The farmers were forced into this situation. Many years ago people by the hundreds went out west from eastern Canada at harvest time to help with the harvest. Because the war intervened, those extra bodies were not available and the farmers had to acquire more sophisticated machinery. The combine was developed in western Canada. In fact, rubber-tired tractors and machines were developed in my constituency at the dominion experimental farm. Farmers have been forced into this situation. One might compare the cost of the binder which used to do the job with the cost of the modern combine. During all this period the produce of a farm has increased very little in value per bushel.

These are some of the reasons that I suggest to the parliamentary secretary and to the Minister of Finance that this group of Canadians should be given special consideration. This is the reason the Senate committee recommended that the government give this group special consideration. We ask for it only on those two items. The parliamentary secretary said it would not make any difference. If the farmers are asking for it, and if it does not make any difference to the government, then why not give the people what they are asking for? This is all we ask.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, since it is almost four o'clock, and while the government House leader is still here—and many other cabinet ministers—may I ask the government House leader a question about Monday. In particular, will the government by Monday be ready to introduce its amendments to the income tax bill in respect of co-operatives and credit unions? If the answer to that is yes, will we take those sections of the bill when we deal with this legislation on Monday?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the answer to both questions is yes. The amendments will be ready and we would like to move them on Monday.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Peace River heard the answer and he assumes, of course, that when this bill is first discussed in committee of the whole on Monday there will be requests made, and if the amendment in respect of co-operatives is available and a request is made at that time, of course we will be prepared to consider it. Apart from that, Mr. Chairman, and apart from any agreements made on the floor of the House, I would assume that when we resume committee of the whole consideration we will proceed in the normal, traditional way, starting at the top and working our way down to the bottom.

The Chairman: Order, please. Is it the wish of the committee that it be called four o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills. There will be difficulty conducting private members' hour if hon. members move about the chamber and carry on conversations. I have difficulty hearing the Clerk Assistant.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, I understand that during private members' hour today there is disposition to take up item No. 4 on the order paper, appearing at page 8 and standing in the name of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), and that the subject matter of item No. 6, although not the motion itself, be open for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman). Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed on that basis?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN PROVIDING COLLECTION AND STORAGE FACILITIES

The House resumed, from Monday, November 23, 1970, consideration of the motion of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of providing loans and grants to encourage the building and improvement of fishing facilities along the Atlantic coastlines for the better collection and storage of all marketable species of fish.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise and support the motion put before the House by my colleague, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), on November 23, 1970. At that time the motion was talked out. I hope the motion will have more success today. It is not my intention to speak for too long because I know other members wish to speak on the motion, and I am sure the House will wish to vote on it before we adjourn.

I suspect the situation which motivated my colleague in placing this resolution on the order paper is similar to that which exists in most parts of Newfoundland and, I suspect, in most parts of eastern Canada. Fishermen in the Atlantic area, especially in Newfoundland, are severely handicapped by virtue of the fact that they do not have adequate facilities to exploit the fishing industry and to derive from it a living which they could make very successful if these facilities were provided.

I can think of situations in my riding of St. John's West where fishermen are required to operate under conditions that are antiquated. I make numerous requests to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) and the Minister of the Environment and Fisheries (Mr. Davis). It seems that these two ministers are hung-up on the old question as to which comes first, the chicken or the egg, because if you ask for a breakwater, cold storage equipment or wharves the Minister of Fisheries will report back to his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, that there are not enough Lffiishermen in the area to warrant the expenditure.

Of course, the minister does not explain to his colleague that there are few fishermen fishing in that area, due largely to the fact that there are not enough facilities to encourage them to make a successful living from fishing. I can think of instances, again in my own riding, when I requested a mechanical hoist to enable fishermen to remove fish from their boats and place them on the deck of the wharf. These devices cost perhaps $1,000 or $2,000, but certainly it is a very insignificant amount of money considering the huge sums that are being spent almost daily on projects that are certainly less worthy than some of those I have put forward to the two ministers.

It is regrettable, also, that in this day and age when many millions of people are starving, we have thousands of tons of high protein food such as herring and other species from the sea being dumped almost daily in Newfoundland because of the absence of proper cold storage facilities. If the government were to assess the situation and then set about to install cold storage and other facilities, there are a large number of species of fish in the waters around our shores that could be economically exploited to the advantage of fishermen who depend on fisheries for their livelihood.

That is why I am proud to support the resolution of my colleague. I feel that if cold storage and other facilities were provided, fishermen would be encouraged to develop other species of fish. I can think of several species off the shores of my riding, such as shrimp, that are there in abundance but are not being properly exploited because of lack of proper facilities and wherewithal on the part of fishermen which would enable them to develop economically that aspect of the fishing industry.

Obviously, there is also need for other facilities. I realize the the motion deals primarily with cold storage facilities, but other facilities are also badly needed. I refer to haul-out facilities for people with boats, slipways to make it easy for fishermen to pull in their boats from the ocean in periods of rough weather, breakwaters, wharves, mechanical hoists on wharves, harbour facilities, dredging, cold storage facilities and additional bait storage facilities. These facilities are badly needed in the Atlantic area and in Newfoundland to enable fishermen to ply their trade and increase their income which in many cases is below the poverty line.

I do not intend to take up any more time of the House because I know other hon. members want to take part in the debate, and I am sure the House will want to vote on the resolution before we adjourn. I strongly urge the House to approve the resolution of my colleague, because it means so much to a large number of Canadians who are struggling to make a living and are not given too much encouragement to stay in the fishing industry so far as assistance by the federal government is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) who has provided us, this afternoon, with the opportunity of dealing with a subject that is of vital interest to Canadians who depend on fisheries for their livelihood. Such opportunities are only offered during the throne speech debate and the budget debate.

It can readily be seen, Mr. Speaker, that such a debate is of the highest interest to me because of the population pattern in my riding and its geographic location. In fact, the people of Bonaventure—which includes since 1968 the Magdalen Islands—rely heavily on fishing for their livelihood. However, I should say in all honesty that the Magdalen Islands are more closely related to this industry than other parts of my riding. This is why my comments, though motivated in part by what I would call the continental part of the Bonaventure-Magdalen Islands riding, will stress mostly the importance of harbour, storage, cold storage and other facilities for the people of the Magdalen Islands.

I think it is important to point out that the jurisdiction over fisheries in the province of Quebec is shared by both levels of government but a great deal of administrative and other decisions are taken by the authorities of the province of Quebec, the federal government having nothing to do with them. However, I think that co-operation between the two levels of government has always been honest and sustained. The fact remains that the Canadian government is taking positive and beneficial steps for the Quebec fishermen. It does so very successfully, and even more for those who earn their living from that occupation, at sea, at the factory and in business.

Hon. members, particularly those from the province of Quebec, will recall that in the early 1960's under ARDA, which was passed by the Canadian government, an economic study financed by both federal and provincial governments was undertaken by the government of the province of Quebec in the pilot area of the lower St. Lawrence, of the Gaspé region and the Magdalen Islands.

The organization responsible for that study was the Bureau d'aménagement de l'Est du Québec known as BAEQ. The study was to determine the economic possibilities of the pilot area in various sectors: industry, agriculture, fisheries, culture, etc., in order to raise the economic standard of that area and indirectly to improve the well-being of the population because the economy was progressing at a much slower pace than anywhere else in the province of Quebec and in Canada.

Following that long and costly study, a voluminous report was submitted in 1966 by the BAEQ study group to both governments, particularly to the government that had established it, namely the government of the province of Quebec. The Quebec government and the federal government followed up this report with the signature, in May 1968, of an agreement on the development of the pilot area making available to it the amount of $268 million, $212 million of which was provided by the federal government.

Everyone knows the problems that we faced in the implementation of that program. Among other things, it provided for the centralization of endeavours in many sectors in order, as it was said, to ensure more efficiency, better organization and higher production, as well as a higher revenue for those involved in the various industrial sectors of the pilot area.

For my part, I agree with the approach set forth in the BAEQ report. In fact, Mr. Speaker, such a policy, if well implemented, cannot but benefit those directly concerned, in this instance, the fishermen.

Of course, governments cannot do more than allows the budget voted by Parliament. Now, in the past, because of the large number of wharves and seaports—and this was easy to understand considering the means of transportation available to fishermen—the government had to rely on its yearly appropriations to make repairs or improvements in many places, in order to maintain good harbour facilities for the benefit of fishermen. But because of that sprinkling of public funds here and there the fishermen did not always have the necessary facilities.

That is why nowadays, considering the new transportation means, it seems normal to wish to centralize such harbour facilities so as to provide fishermen with the fishing wharves and ramps they need, where their boats will always be safe even in bad weather.

It is on account of that centralization that only eight seaports or fish landing wharves were left in the Magdalen Islands out of the great number existing before. The Canadian government built a $5 million main seaport in Cap-aux-Meules, in the Magdalen Islands, which is now completed; incidentally, I am told that the people of the Magdalen Islands had been asking for that seaport for more than sixty years.

It is also according to that centralizing concept that a more modest seaport is being built in the Grande-Entrée, again in the Magdalen Islands, which will meet the needs of the fishermen in the area. It will cost about half a million dollars.

Plans and specifications have also been ready since the Spring of 1970 for the building of port facilities in l'Étang-du-Nord, again in the Magdalen Islands, but these facilities which unfortunately could not be built in spite of the plans made by the Public Works authorities for this year, may be developed in the Spring of 1972. The same type of development has long been overdue in the area between Étang-des-Caps and l'Anse-à-la-Cabane, but as early as next year we hope to undertake such construction.

After all, Mr. Speaker, if we want better cold storages and modern plants, we must first build facilities where the fishermen can send their fish. The fisherman's trade, as everyone knows, is a tough trade. The fisherman who sails out in the small hours of the morning must often face a very rough sea and he works hard the whole day. But if he has to drag his fishing boat and deliver his fish to inadequate facilities, he will soon get discouraged and more and more people will go on welfare. That is why I ask the federal government to speed up the building program of port facilities for those fishermen and I request it mainly to listen not only to the member who knows and should know his constituents' problems but also, since there are local and regional agencies, the officials of the Department of Public Works. The government should carefully pay attention to the proposals from these local agencies because the engineers from the federal Department of Public Works are always in the field and are aware of the fishermen's needs as does the member for Bovaventure-Îles-de-la Madeleine. I have already emphasized to senior officials in the Department of Public Works that it was not from their office in Confederation Heights that they can be aware of the needs of the fishermen in Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

In this connection, I wish to state what the federal government has been doing for several years to improve the fishermen's lot. A considerale amount of work has been done in the Paspébiac harbour in the last few years, in the mainland area of my constituency, and a contract in excess of half a million dollars has been awarded by the Department of Public Works for extending the wharf there.

• (4:20 p.m.)

But only the offshore fisherman benefits by all these important projects. What about the inland fishermen who meet, as I said a few moments ago, around Magdalen Islands? The Federal-Provincial Committee on Fisheries has decided, in the framework of the development of the territory, to keep eight wharves only for unloading fish. In the Bonaventure area which is on the mainland, it has decided to keep three only on a distance from 125 to 140 miles. But the inland fishermen, the small fishermen who do not have those magnificent trawlers built with the generous aid of the Canadian government, what facilities will they have since the existing wharves are deteriorating due to a centralization policy? This policy is undoubtedly very good but it must not be forgotten that there will be inland fishing as long as there is fish and lobster in Chaleur Bay and in other Canadian waters.

Consequently, it is not normal that the coastal fishermen should be neglected, they who spent considerable amounts of money on their fishing gear and that they should be forced to travel a distance of 50 miles to find shelter and dispose of their catch.

Obviously, hon. members do not know every community in the riding of Bonaventure. Some of my colleagues, who live near Bonaventure, know the Gaspé Peninsula for having toured it briefly. They know, for instance, that between Gascons—is that not a pretty name—and Paspébiac, a distance of some 50 miles, there are no ports and no wharves to accommodate the coastal fishermen.

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): What a shame!

Mr. Béchard: I agree with the Parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Ouellet) that it is a shame.

This is why I recently met those fishermen who told me that they would never agree on the site where such facilities should be built. If ever the time comes, they have decided to leave the choice of the site to the engineer of the Department of Public Works whom they trust.

Between Paspébiac and Carleton, which are 50 miles apart, there are no harbour facilities for the fishermen. We ask the Department of Public Works to repair the wharves, but they always answer: "According to the area development plan, only three wharves have been kept in the constituency and, consequently, it is useless to go against that policy.

In Ruisseau-Leblanc where there is a very nice wharf which would render great services to inshore fishermen and keep several families off welfare, a resourceful citizen, as are all my constituents, has built a plant to handle the catch of inshore fishermen and to process it for marketing purposes.

With the help of the government, if this wharf could be kept in good condition, if at least Ruisseau-Leblanc were made into a seaport and included with those that the federal-provincial committee has decided to maintain, this plant, in two or three years, would provide jobs to some fifteen persons, apart from the fishermen who could supply this plant and, as I was saying a moment ago, prevent many families from being compelled to their great shame, to live on welfare payments.

In the Magdalen Islands, the same situation prevails. A certain community which is called Fatima—a famous name—and which was endowed with a beautiful seaport, has been struck off the map. Fishermen are there today without any port facilities and they keep asking for them. So, the Department of Public Works as well as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the federal-provincial committee should wake up some day and implement the suggestions made by the hon. member for Bonaventure and the fishermen of the Magdalen Islands.

An hon. Member: That is right!

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I think I have said enough a short while ago about what the various federal departments have done to assist the fishing industry. A lot has been done, but there is still a lot to do.

There is also the part played by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for the development of fisheries which awarded grants to industry in the designated areas. Other plants like the one at Ruisseau-Leblanc, which I mentioned earlier, could themselves make good use of such grants.

Again in the Magdalen Islands, in order to help families who until now had been living on social welfare during a good part of the year, we built a plant last year at Grande-Entrée, with the co-operation of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and this plant was awarded a $40,000 or $60,000 grant. As soon as it went into operation, its manager, who is also the mayor of Grande-Entrée and who took the initiative of establishing it told me: "I had to go as far as Havre-aux-Maisons to recruit workers". He had to hire people 60 and 65 years old because no one else was available. He had to hire people 60 and 65 years of age because no other workers were available since most families had been living on welfare until then, that means they were sponging off society.

That is what the government did to help fishermen of that small village of Grande-Entrée in Magdalen Islands.

Assistance to shipbuilding is also worth mentioning. As recently as last year, thanks to the federal government, two very big trawlers were launched at Sorel shipyards for a company operating at Cap-aux-Meules in Magdalen Islands. I was told this fall that the two boats made miraculous catches last summer and we paid 35 per cent of their construction cost or about $1 million. That amount represents the contribution of the federal governmeent to help the fishing industry in Magdalen Islands.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the fisheries problem is one of the most important ones in this part of the country, and in my riding in particular. I think the federal programs implemented at this time are and will be very beneficial if the government is willing to listen to the local people who are prepared to accept centralization but, who want at the same time the little fishermen to be able to make a living. To do this, the small fishermen not only those of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine but also in Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe as well as Newfoundland, in short, all Canadian fishermen, must be able to continue to live from that industry where it is difficult to earn a livelihood, I must admit.

However, the fishermen who have intestinal fortidude,—those I know, at least,—want to earn their livelihood and not depend on social welfare. They want society, the Canadian government to which they pay taxes, to give them, in return, the facilities that will enable them to ply their trade and provide honorably and honestly for their families.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmough-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, it is a strange situation when one finds himself rising to speak to a motion in which he has already spoken. I gather that under the arrangement made earlier we are discussing the motion of my friend, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), but with the permission of the House I shall direct my remarks more along the lines of the motion which is included in this debate. If this is objectionable to anyone, I hope he will say so now.

With the help of the library I shall do something which I rarely do, that is, refer to notes because I think this matter should be put on the record very extensively. I am very pleased to see in the House the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis). Problems of the sea are a major part of his responsibility and he is very much aware of them.

The economic, social, cultural or other goals sought by a society determine the value of scientific enterprise in any field. The Science Council of Canada undertook to identify a set of goals indicative of the aspirations of Canadians, the factors or elements basic to the attainment of each goal, the contributions of science and technology to such attainment and conditions favouring the technological effort. For example, one element in national prosperity is the reduction of regional economic disparities; and technological contribution might be the development and application of new marine technology in existing or new industries, or sound programs for the optimum use and conservation of ocean resources.

Freedom and security for the nation and its people are dependent upon the development of necessary military technology, particularly in this age of atomic submarines and the deployment of missiles throughout the inner space of the ocean. An element in world peace is the limination of hunger. By means of advanced technology, the ocean could be a more productive source of foods, particularly of proteins, which are deficient in many areas of the world. Exploitation of the mineral and chemical resources of the ocean could benefit the economies of some developing nations as well as those countries which possess the advanced technology to effect such recovery. Certainly, the global character of marine science would make it a useful instrument of foreign policy and foreign aid. Oceanography, marine and undersea technology is an area to which the Science Council proposed to give future consideration after major programs were started in space, in water resources management and in some other important fields in Canadian life.

Perhaps the pace of technological development is hastening consideration of Canada's future in oceanography, which may in the near future lead to a more definitive statement of national objectives relative to the ocean. It has been more than a year since the Science Council of Canada made known in its report to the nation its views. Not the least alarming fact in this connection is that there has been no useful or meaningful progress along the lines recommended in reports that have been before us for a considerable period. The Committee on Marine Science and Technology reported in 1970 on organization for the formation and implementation of national marine policy, the need for a major program in marine science and technology, some major projects, facilities, manpower needs and the scale of marine science and technology expenditures. In order to achieve a balanced program, the committee suggested that the formulation of national policy be assisted by a widely representative national board on marine activity which would make recommendations to the minister responsible for science policy. I ask the minister where that board is and whether its members have been named.

Implementation and co-ordination of policy in marine science and technology would be the responsibility of departments with marine interests, the Canadian Committee on Oceanography and a Canadian ocean development corporation. I ask the minister, before he leaves the chamber, what has happened to that development corporation.

I do not ask my question rhetorically; it is an important matter. This Crown corporation would be responsible for organizing marine development and innovation projects in industry, for the rapid establishment of a solid technological base and for the promotion of marketing products and services at home and abroad. Marine environmental problems would be kept under review by the proposed environmental council reporting directly to the office of the Prime Minister. In consideration of the challenges and opportunities existing in our ocean frontier, the committee stated that a major, national program in marine science and technology is needed.

With regard to technology and industry, the committee drew attention to the need for effective promotion by the government, promotion which has been totally absent during the past year. The committee said:

> Marine technology is about to enter an era of rapid growth. Its development requires close attention to ensure an orderly growth with a substantial Canadian participation. Here is an area that can benefit the investor and provide meanginful employment to skilled Canadians, if we are willing to accept the challenge. If Canada does not act, others will try and they will reap the benefits.
> Canadians have been active in the areas off our coasts for some time, and the technological capability necessary to support our coastal fisheries maritime forces and scientific activities offshore does exist, but mainly in government and university laboratories. Unfortunately this expertise has not found its way into industry.

That expertise does not exist outside of government or the university laboratory because the government has failed to heed one of the essential recommendations of that report and get on with the job of promoting the development of the ocean and establishing a development corporation. In other words, the government has failed to recognize that the greatest resource available to Canadians is not necessarily found on the land but, in all likelihood, may be found in the sea. That is the policy the government has failed to implement.

The administration of that policy would be the responsibility of the proposed Canadian ocean development corporation of which we have heard virtually nothing. I spoke one year ago about the scale of expenditure in connection with this and I want to enlarge upon those remarks. I referred to expenditures in the order of $300 million in 1980 when I spoke on November 30, 1970. I dealt with the question of costs and I think it is worth repeating what I said. As recorded on page 1600 of Hansard for November 30, 1970, I said in part:

> What about the cost factor? That is clearly set out in the report of the Science Council. They call for an escalation in expenditure so that by the 1980's our investment will be in the order of $300 million. I support this proposal. Surprisingly enough, the figures that I worked out one year ago differ from the figures of the Science Council with respect to 1980 by only $15 million. One of the things we must be concerned about, if we are to accept this proposition after careful study, is this: we must make sure that the build-up, if it does take place, will be sustained. I imagine that the Science Council would support this idea, although it does not particularly deal with it in its report.

I am alarmed because the government has seen fit to deal with this matter only in the last ten or 12 months. The United States of America, the United Kingdom and a dozen other countries around the world have already made extremely important and significant progress in this area. In many instances other countries have made significantly greater progress than Canada in an extensive examination of the resources of the sea and the relation between those resources and national goals. I quote briefly from the report made to the President of the United States by the commission on marine science, engineering and resources, as follows:

> The nation's stake in the uses of the sea is synonymous with the promise and threat of tomorrow. The promise lies in the economic opportunities the sea offers, in the great stimulus to business, industry, and employment that new and expanded sea-related industries can produce. The promise lies also in expanding the nation's horizons, in strengthening its international position and peaceful collaboration among nations, and in the possibility that action today will permit man to make a start toward ultimate control of his planetary environment. The promise lies in making available new reserves of important minerals and in ensuring new sources of food.
> The threat lies in the potential destruction of large parts of the coastal environment and in the further deterioration of economically important ports, recreational facilities, coastal shellfisheries, and fisheries on the high seas. There is the threat inherent in any failure by the nation to utilize successfully its fair share of a major planetary resource; the United States simply cannot afford less than its best effort to utilize the global sea. Finally, there is the threat that unbridled international competition for the sea's resources may provoke conflict.
> A time of decision is here. Multiple pressures force the nation to turn to the sea, and multiple opportunities await the seaward turning.

Those words are prophetic. The government, with all its interdepartmental committees, cabinet committees and various ways of dealing with the business of the nation, has had one year to ponder this problem. Surely it has had sufficient time to give us some word about the ocean development corporation, the relationship between the Atlantic Ocean, the Arctic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean, Hudson Bay, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the resources of these waters in terms of fish and the tremendous mineral content, the resources that are on the seabed and under the surface. Now that we are well launched into the 1970s, surely now is the time for a statement on national goals with respect to the sea. It is to this matter that I direct my remarks.

• (4:40 p.m.)

It is regrettable that with only 15 or 20 minutes remaining in today's sitting no speaker on the government side has directed himself to this important concept of awareness and utilization in the fullest sense of the resources that lie off our coasts.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, implicit in the resolution advanced by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is the suggestion that the government has in some way failed in its responsibility to the fishing community of the east coast. The resolution suggests there should be far more government involvement in measures to assist that industry. I cannot help but comment paradoxically, the party which is today talking about poor government participation has been saying, non-stop for 38 solid days, that the government should interfere less in the lives of Canadians, should reduce taxes, the government is too big, wants larger government expenditures for the areas they represent. The philosophy they enunciate in the House is completely by the board on those occasions.

I have visited the Maritimes. I was impressed by what I saw. I refuse to believe that the gloom, doom and the disaster gang who represent certain maritime provinces in this House of Commons represent the spirit of Newfoundland. No province faced with the challenges which have confronted Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island could possibly have been built into a great province with the spirit that pervades the House from the other side of this assembly. There are problems in the Atlantic provinces, just as there are in other provinces of Canada. However, when are we going to hear the Newfoundlanders in this assembly tell us that during the past year the average price per pound of fish on the east coast has been the highest in history? When are we going to hear that kind of information? Instead we hear the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twilingate (Mr. Lundrigan) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: My point of order is very simple, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault)—

Mr. Perrault: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That question is within the Speaker's jurisdiction to determine. I cannot make a determination until I hear the point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour is not permitted by the rules of the House to read the notes which the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) gave him during his ten-minute break.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has just confirmed that it is not a point of order.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I hope the St. John's press makes careful note of the deliberate attempts by certain Newfoundland representatives here to prevent the facts being placed on the record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: I hope they consider the bona fides of the group which makes up the government of this country. Why cry the blues when the fishing industry in the Maritimes is, happily, the highest in history during this year?

Mr. Bell: Highest what?

[Mr. Perrault.]

Mr. Perrault: The sad, sad talk that you get from that corner of the House does not inspire one ounce of confidence in those people we are trying to inspire to invest their money in the fishing industry of that area. Happily, many of the investors who have come in such large numbers to the industry in the past two or three years have not listened to the doom and gloom of opposition members in the House.

The present minister responsible for fisheries, and the government of Canada, have acted decisively and effectively to assist the fisheries in the maritime provinces. When the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister of Canada he did not advance one single measure on behalf of the fisheries of Canada in five long, doleful years as leader of the government. This is incredible.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know the hon. member and I know that he is well informed. Consequently, I can only come to the conclusion that he is deliberately misleading the House, because the statement he just made is not true.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That point, of course, is a matter of argument.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I am simply contrasting the performance of that group when they were in government with what has been done on this side of the House. In five months, more than five important fisheries measures have been advanced by this minister and this government. This morning there was reference from the opposition members to the plight of baby seals. Another member from the great province of Newfoundland was spreading gloom and doom. The fact is that when the people opposite formed the government they did not bring in one single measure to conserve the seal stocks of Canada.

If the invasion of the Russian and Norwegian fleets had been allowed to continue in 1971, we would not be talking about a limitation of the seal fishery or the seal catch. We would be looking at pictures of those species of seals on lithographs as well as passenger pigeons and dodo birds. This is what would have happened if those policies had continued. Yet we hear criticism of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis). Opposition members talk about inaction. The three-mile limit has been in effect in Canada almost from the time of Confucius. What did these people do about the three-mile limit? Not a single thing. They did not even make decent speeches on the subject.

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: I will permit a question when I have completed my remarks.

Mr. McGrath: It will be too late then; you will have talked out the resolution.

Mr. Perrault: In a spirit of democracy I will permit a question at the end. When we hear talk about the great concern for the fisheries on the east coast from these people, in contrast with the performance when they were in government, this must be the greatest conversion since St. Paul was blinded on the road to Damascus. When they had their chance, their policy was one of benign action.

The passionate opposition refused to initiate any substantial action on behalf of the fishing industry when they were in office.

Mr. McGrath: That is not true and the hon. member knows it. He should not continue to mislead the House.

Mr. Perrault: They tell us we are not doing well enough.

Mr. Lundrigan: I am one of the most broadminded members in the House of Commons and I do not want to restrict—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should state his point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House does not have anything to do with the topic which the hon. member is discussing.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Perrault: If there is one thing that hon. members opposite have yet to learn, it is when to sit down. Let me put some of it on the record.

Mr. Forrestall: Some of what?

Mr. Perrault: Some of the assistance that has been given to east coast fishermen. The government is fully aware of the need for facilities of the type referred to in the hon. member's motion and has been actively supporting this approach over a period of many years. Despite the many accomplishments of the past it is fully recognized that in many areas, especially the more isolated ones, there is need for facilities that will enable fishermen to sell and obtain income from all the species which they now land and for which a demand exists. That there is a demand is admitted by the department.

Programs already undertaken by the fisheries services of the environment department have introduced fishermen to many new types of gear and larger, more mobile boats. This has in turn increased the proportion of their catch which is made up of species other than cod which fishermen cannot process themselves and which must therefore be transported to a plant where more sophisticated processing equipment such as freezers is available.

Mr. McGrath: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I think the hon. member has an obligation to the House to identify the document from which he is reading.

Mr. Perrault: Unlike some of the speeches made by the hon. member, I am presenting to the House facts in the form of extended notes to make sure that they are absolutely accurate. At the same time, the demand in the market for species other than cod has increased a great deal during the past decade. Resulting from this we have been bringing into production species and product forms hitherto not generally processed in Newfoundland.

Already many steps have been taken to provide collection facilities to enable these species to be delivered to the nearest plant having facilities to process them. There are many so-called community stages and fresh fish collection centres scattered around the coastline. While initially the community stage program was intended for the production and storage of salted fish, some of these have now in fact been upgraded and altered so as to enable them to become collection centres where all species can be assembled, sorted and held prior to being transported to a processing plant.

Mr. Lundrigan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has indicated that he will not accept a question until he has concluded his remarks.

Mr. Perrault: In addition, many of the fishermen in my hon. friend's riding can obtain loans through the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act to construct new shore facilities or improve existing ones as well as to obtain new boats, gear and other seagoing facilities. Under the program of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion there are a number of sources of financial assistance—

Mr. Marshall: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Marshall: May I point out to the hon. member that under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act three loans were granted in Newfoundland last year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is raising a matter of argument, not a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not know how a point of order can arise when the parliamentary secretary has not spoken since the previous point of order was raised.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then I raise a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), like all hon. members, has a responsibility to present the facts. The community stage program was discontinued years ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: He is deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members must observe the rules of the House. The parliamentary secretary has the floor.

Mr. Perrault: Another thing I have found out about Newfoundland is that the people there believe in democracy. That is another reason—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: The Liberal party of Newfoundland does not believe in democracy.

Mr. Perrault: The Regional Development Incentives Act has enabled many fish plant operators to improve and expand their facilities. It has also provided the means whereby new processing facilities have been built in more marginal areas where fish is available but in quantities which made their viability uncertain without this assistance. Through these programs more fishermen than ever before are now able to dispose of all the species which they catch.

Aside from this we must not overlook the fact that already located throughout Newfoundland are many well equipped fish processing plants. Indeed, at this time the processing capacity is probably greater than the actual requirement. As a result of this situation, most of these plants have continued to extend their systems and facilities for collecting fish from outlying settlements.

Some of the opposition members from Newfoundland are terrified of democracy. It is interesting to hear their reactions to it.

Mr. McGrath: We have reason to be terrified of democracy with the Liberal government we have in Newfoundland.

Mr. Perrault: Using ARDA funds, the government of Newfoundland and Labrador is also providing a number of facilities of the type the hon. member is referring to in his motion. While I have referred to a number of ways in which solutions to the problem are being found—and found enthusiastically and optimistically, not in the mood of gloom, doom and disaster that we have listened to this afternoon—nevertheless this is not to suggest that there is not a continuing need for improved fishing facilities. This government will continue to improve the program, hopefully with the co-operation of some of the doomster opposition members on the other side of the House. To this end the fisheries division of the Department of the Environment is constantly reviewing the situation and formulating new plans with a view to providing better facilities in areas still not adequately serviced.

Under a whole range of government programs, not only has a substantial amount of the DREE budget gone to the Atlantic provinces to provide new fish plants, herring reduction plants; it has also assisted in the re-establishment of centres and communities. One third of the cost of every fishing boat, except for the fleets that are limited by law, has been provided by the federal government which has been under unfair assault on this matter for so long. In addition to this, the government has financed water supply systems for new and existing plants.

Mr. McGrath: Question. Don't talk it out.

Mr. Perrault: Why don't these Newfoundland members, who claim to be so objective in their political views, stand up and give vocal and public support to some of the measures brought in by the government?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 6, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ELECTION OF LATE J.S. WOODSWORTH

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to notice which I gave to Your Honour this morning, and as a matter of privilege, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the significance of this day in Canada's history. It was on December 6, 1921, exactly 50 years ago today, that the late J. S. Woodsworth was first elected to the Parliament of Canada. We in this party are of course deeply conscious of our debt to him for what he did for our movement. I think it might also be said that few men have made a mark on the history of this country such as that made by the former member for Winnipeg North Centre, whom I had the honour to succeed when he died in 1942.

I believe members of the House might be interested in knowing that his widow, Mrs. Lucy Woodsworth, now 97 years of age, is resident in Ottawa at St. Vincent hospital. It may well be that members would like our greetings to be extended to her on this occasion. If so, I know of no one more qualified to do that than the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Woodsworth, the distinguished member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON OUTBREAK OF WAR BETWEEN INDIA AND PAKISTAN

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know that I speak for all members of the House when I express the government's profound regret that open war has broken out on the subcontinent of India.

General hostilities erupted between India and Pakistan last Friday. Each government has accused the other of having started this latest stage in their tense confrontation which began some eight months ago. Reports of the fighting are contradictory. It seems fairly clear that neither side has yet heavily committed its forces on the western front; in and around East Pakistan, however, Indian forces are exerting considerable efforts to gain territory. India has recognized the provisonal government of Bangla Desh.

An emergency session of the United Nations Security Council was called Saturday evening on the initiative of nine of its members to consider the deteriorating situation. It met again on Sunday and will meet also this afternoon. A number of resolutions have been presented but no consensus is yet in sight. Our ambassador at the United Nations is in close touch with events there and is keeping us informed. It is our hope that the Security Council will find enough common ground to be able to act decisively. In the absence of such action, it will be necessary to consider what the General Assembly could achieve.

The safety of Canadian citizens on the subcontinent has been very much in our minds this weekend. In India, there are some 1,100 Canadians registered with the High Commission in Delhi. More than a month ago, those living near the border with Pakistan were advised to consider moving to a safer location. In East Pakistan there are 40. In the early hours of this morning, at the request of the Secretary General of the United Nations, a Canadian Armed Forces C-130 aircraft was diverted to Dacca to help in the evacuation of United Nations personnel. It was intended that it should also be available to any Canadians who might not have left earlier, Commonwealth citizens and other nationals. Although a local ceasefire had been arranged by the United Nations with the Pakistani, Indian and Mukti Bahini forces which would permit the aircraft to land at Dacca, that airport was attacked at precisely the hour our aircraft was to begin its approach to the area. The aircraft returned to Bangkok safely. We trust that with renewed assurances of another local ceasefire, we shall have better success tomorrow.

• (2:10 p.m.)

In West Pakistan, where 270 Canadians are registered at the High Commission in Islamabad, those responsible on the spot have not yet concluded that action is necessary. Some time ago Canadians in the Lahore area were advised to consider moving, and it was suggested to those in Karachi that they should be prepared to leave at short notice. Yesterday nine Canadians arrived in Teheran on a commercial flight from Karachi; their families have been informed. There have been reports that other commercial flights have followed.

From the beginning Canada has been in touch with the governments of India and Pakistan at the highest levels. To the government of India we have urged patience and restraint in a situation of great difficulty. To the government of Pakistan we have stressed the urgent necessity of speeding up of a return to civilian and representative government, particularly in East Pakistan. We have been among the most concerned and engaged in the great world humanitarian effort to succor the refugees, and have latterly been directing our efforts to increased assistance to India to help relieve the burden on its budget and development program which the pressure of so many extra people represents.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): It is needless to say, Mr. Speaker, that it was with heavy heart that I listened to the minister's statement. I know that I share with him and all hon. members a profound sense of sorrow at the developments which we have been learning about in recent days and hours in the Indian subcontinent.

We are, of course, particularly concerned about the welfare, safety and security of our own nationals in the area. I am particularly distressed that certain hostile actions have been taken at times, not only in the place mentioned by the minister but at other evacuation points, when the innocent and proper removal of civilians was being undertaken. It is deplorable and regrettable. I hope we will not have further reports of such unfortunate incidents.

The whole question in recent months has not brought forth much reason for optimism. For a long time we should all have seen the gathering clouds over the Indian subcontinent, and should have been prepared for the prospects of the kind of warfare which is being waged by these two countries at the present time. For months there has been tragedy in the subcontinent. Now, with the opening of hostilities, the tragedy has been widened and broadened and given more painful dimensions, and who knows how horrendous might be the situation if this continues.

It is all the more painful, I think, because these are friendly states of the Commonwealth. We feared the situation and we wondered. The burden which India had to bear was a terribly heavy one. Yet, while neither a pacifist nor a dove, I can never believe that a warlike solution today is in fact a solution to problems of this kind. Perhaps the world has not taken sufficient note of the dimensions of the problem. Perhaps the international community should have moved more quickly. Now it is too late to pass judgment on the past.

I am sure everyone here is disturbed about the seeming incapacity so far of the Security Council to take effective action, indeed, Sir, to take any action on this terrible, awful conflict involving so many people and with the grim potentiality of involving so many more. The Security Council, having met hour after hour, seems to end with the use of the veto and in futility. Whether it will be necessary to move from the Security Council to the General Assembly through the technique of the "uniting for peace resolution", as it was once called, we do not know. I would hope the minister might tell us more about the Canadian government's point of view on that. I hope he will also be able to tell us more about what the Canadian nation and the Canadian delegation are prepared to do.

I thank him for this statement. I realize there is not much he can say at this time, but I hope that in the future he will keep the House and the country informed. I can assure him that all of my colleagues, and I am sure all Canadians of decent outlook and concern for the peace of the world, will support the Canadian government in any measure which it can take to help roll back the frontiers of hatred and bring about as quickly as possible that which surely is of the essence today, the cessation of hostilities through a ceasefire.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to assure the Secretary of State for External Affairs that we appreciate the efforts the government has obviously taken to assure the safety of Canadian nationals in the area referred to. It is also unnecessary, I think, to say to him that we appreciate fully the difficulties of the situation and the fact that the contribution which Canada is able to make in the solution of the political and military problem is necessarily limited.

I want to underline in my comments on the minister's statement the seriousness of the war not only for the people directly concerned, the people of India and Pakistan and the people of East Pakistan, but for the future peace of the world. The failure of the Security Council to arrive at any consensus, Mr. Speaker, is not accidental; it is due to the fact that the Soviet Union has launched itself on one side and Mainland China has launched itself on the opposite side and the United States of America is trying to make up its mind precisely where it belongs. It is the ranging on opposite sides by these big powers that makes it impossible for the Security Council to reach any solution to the problem and makes the war so dangerous to the future peace of the world.

I say through you, Mr. Speaker—and I hope not presumptuously to the people concerned on this subcontinent—that if the war continues very long and attracts the forces of perhaps China on one side and the Soviet Union on the other, or accelerated military assistance from one side or the other or both, then obviously world war will come a step closer and the danger of nuclear destruction will become as serious as it has ever been since the end of the last war. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without wanting to be dramatic about the subject I think the Canadian government ought to consider very seriously whether the matter should be left very much longer with the Security Council in view of the futility which has resulted from that or whether it should be taken to the General Assembly where the veto does not exist and perhaps the international world might take some steps to advance peace in the area.

I think it is important to remember that this outbreak of war is the result of many years of conflict and was particularly sharpened by the shortsightedness of American policy in 1958 or so when the Indian declaration of nonalignment suggested to Mr. Dulles and his associates in Washington that Pakistan ought to be militarily strengthened. It ought also to be remembered that the war has occurred because of the completely indefensible step taken by Mr. Yahya Khan, the head of the government in West Pakistan, against the Awami League, which had won all of the seats in East Pakistan and some in West Pakistan in a democratic election in that country. Mr. Yahya had refused to permit Sheik Mujib to become the head of government of all Pakistan as the election required him to do. Instead, he has imposed a military government and has outlawed the Awami League and imprisoned not only Sheik Mujib but others as well. In our anxiety to have the war ended by a ceasefire—all members of my party in the House are as anxious to see that as any other member or any other citizen of Canada—we should not fail to remember what Yahya Khan has done to the democratic process in Pakistan and to the people of East Pakistan and no step should be taken at the expense of the freedom and the future of the people of East Pakistan.

• (2:20 p.m.)

May I also say a word which I imagine is unnecessary but which I feel ought to be put on record. This war ought in no way to interfere with the assistance given, and which must be continued, to India to deal with the eight to ten million East Pakistani refugees now in India who require succour and aid. I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs will agree that Canada will in no way reduce its determination to continue its assistance to the refugees, and I hope our influence will be used so that other countries in the world will not cease or reduce their aid.

All of us in this House hope that some solution may be found to this war, perhaps a temporary ceasefire to be followed by a political solution that will recognize the rights and the freedom of the people of East Pakistan and, indeed, of West Pakistan as well, and that the military junta, to use a South American term for an Asiatic government, that now seeks to control all Pakistan will be dispossessed of its power by the free democratic process of the Pakistani people.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we were aghast at hearing, over the past few days, the news concerning the war between India and Pakistan. I believe few Canadians have any hope of immediate settlement of that war, at least so long as the issue remains in the hands of the Security Council.

Last night again, I was listening to news on television coming to us from New York, where the aristocracy of the world boldly plays politics on the occasion of such serious conflicts as the one opposing India and Pakistan. So long as powers like Communist China and Russia will be providing the two parties involved with arms, there is little hope that peace may be restored in that part of the world. Furthermore, so long as wars will supply major markets for arms manufacturers, notwithstanding the United States, embargo on shipments of arms to India, nations will lie at the mercy of warfaring countries. It is an open secret, Mr. Speaker, that major international arms manufacturers need no permission for their arms.

I believe the government and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) share our pessimism judging by the very important security measures that have been taken in order to ensure the evacuation of Canadians living in that part of the world.

Mr. Speaker, when such conflicts arise we should let the countries concerned, in this case Pakistan, settle them. The world would then be better off.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): It is estimated that there are 700 public servants of retirement age who are still working.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—EDUCATION BRANCH

Question No. 2,055—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is there a curriculum section in the Education Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and, if so (a) how many people are employed in such section (b) what are the qualifications of each (c) how long has each been with the section?

2. How many books have been written for use in the North since the section was established?

3. What liaison is there between the section and the teachers in the field who are in close touch with the actual learning problems of Indian and Eskimo students?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No, the schools follow the prescribed provincial curricula. The Branch supplements these curricula through supporting the development of culturally oriented instructional materials and programs of cultural enrichment. (a) and (b) The Education Branch employs a Curriculum Coordinator who is a former teacher and specialist and has a Bachelor's degree. (c) Seven years.

2. From 1956 and until January 1970 when the Government of the Northwest Territories assumed responsibilities for Education, in the North, the Department produced special materials numbering 67 titles for use in northern schools.

3. Liaison is maintained through school visits, participation in conferences, workshops, orientation courses and correspondence.

COLOMBO PLAN

Question No. 2,067—Mr. Robinson:

Is it the intention of the government to extend the Colombo Plan beyond 1971?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): At the Colombo Plan Conference held in Victoria, Canada, in 1969, the Consultative Committee of Ministers agreed to an extension of the Colombo Plan for a period of five years from July 1971 to June 1976 and approved the recommendation that the Consultative Committee continue to meet annually with consideration of a further extension to take place in 1974. This decision was concurred in by Canada by the Secretary of State for External Affairs who acted as Chairman of the Consultative Committee at the 1969 Conference.

RE-CYCLING OF METALS

Question No. 2,082—Mr. MacRae:

As a conservation measure, which government departments are re-cycling metals?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): None, however the Department of the Environment is initiating a program for solid waste management, which will encourage and assist the development of methods to re-cycle valuable materials including metals and glass.

RE-CYCLING OF GLASS

Question No. 2,083—Mr. MacRae:

As a conservation measure, which government departments are re-cycling glass?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): See reply to question numbered 2,082.

5. (a) What is the name of the business services manager under the Fund for the Maritimes (b) how was he appointed (c) who authorized the appointment (d) on what date (e) for what term?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Norhtern Development): 1-4. The Maritimes Regional Advisory Board of the Indian Economic Development Fund has not yet been appointed, therefore, answers to Parts 1 to 4 of this question are not available.

5. (a) Mr. M. D. Hanly; (b) following a national competition conducted by the Public Service Commission; (c) Public Service Commission; (d) August 9, 1971; (e) on a continuing basis.

HISTORIC SITES—GOVERNMENT HOUSE, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 2,120—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What designation has been given to Government House, Charlottetown by the National Historic Sites Service?

2. What restoration or other work is planned for this structure?

3. Have any other residences of lieutenant-governors been so designated and, if so, what are the dates of such designation?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Old Government House, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, has been declared of national historic and architectural importance and will be commemorated by a plaque of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

2. None.

3. Yes. (a) Old Government House, Fredericton, New Brunswick, in 1958; (b) Governor's Cottage, Sorel, Quebec, in 1957; (c) Old Government House, Regina, Saskatchewan, in 1968.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PAY AND ALLOWANCE TRADE CATEGORIES

Question No. 2,121—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to CAF pay raises, what are the three new trade categories and which ones have been deleted?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): During 1971, a joint Treasury Board-/Department of National Defence evaluation team re-evaluated all military trades as part of a regular biennial review, and the results of the evaluation led to an appreciation that three pay fields were to be desired over the existing five. Therefore, effective 1 October, 1971, each of the 90 Canadian Forces Trades, formerly assigned to a pay field in a five pay field system, was reassigned to one of three pay fields in a three pay field system. In the former system the pay fields were known as Pay Fields Three to Seven inclusive, while in the current system the pay fields are known as Pay Field A, B and C. There has not been a cancellation of pay fields but rather a melding of five into three, i.e. the number of trades has not changed. In general, trades formerly assigned to Pay Fields 3 and 4 are now assigned to Pay Field A; trades formerly assigned to Pay Fields 5 and 6 are now assigned to Pay Field B. Pay Field C contains all trades formerly assigned to Pay Field 7 and one trade formerly assigned to Pay Field 6.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—RENTAL INCREASES FOR MARRIED OR SINGLE QUARTERS

Question No. 2,122—Mr. Forrestall:

Will there be rental increases before the end of 1972 for residents of CAF married or single quarters and, if so (a) at what locations (b) by what amounts?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Attention is directed to Hansard dated June 11, 1969, page 9987, and April 6, 1970, pages 5492-3. The next scheduled adjustment of charges for married quarters is April 1, 1972. The present Weighted National Average System of charges for married quarters is currently under study, to determine whether some revisions are required to the present system or whether an alternate system should be developed. Should a new system be introduced there could be adjustments to charges for April 1, 1972, but at this time it is not possible to quote dollar values. In so far as single quarters are concerned, there have been no revisions made since the new Canadian Armed Forces Pay System was introduced in 1966. The subject has been under review for some time and it is possible some increases will be effected during 1972.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PAY AND ALLOWANCES, CRITERIA FOR RAISE

Question No. 2,123—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With respect to the 38 trades for which counterpart trades were identified in the Public Service, were any of these Public Service counterparts tied to the principle of area prevailing rates in determining new pay levels for the CAF?

2. With respect to the remaining 52 trades in the CAF for which there are no identifiable Public Service counterparts, was the principle of prevailing rates followed and, if not, what were the standards used to determine the new pay structures?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. The 38 counterpart occupations in the Public Service, which were used in the determination of the revised rates of pay in the CAF, included both those that are paid on a national rate (such as technicians) and those that are paid on a zone pay basis (such as trades in the General Labour and Trades Group). Where the counterpart Public Service trade was one paid at a zone rate, the military population in each applicable pay zone was used to calculate a national weighted average rate for that trade. These weighted average rates were then combined with the national rates of the other Public Service occupations to produce pay field rates of pay at the Corporal rank (Pay Level 5A). Pay rates for pay levels above and below Pay Level 5A were then established, using the Corporal (5A) as the benchmark, to achieve an appropriate series of pay differentials between the various ranks.

2. Prevailing rates were not considered for the remaining 52 trades, constituting 40 per cent of the military population at the Corporal level, as there are no Public Service counterparts. An evaluation team made up of members from the Department of National Defence and Treasury Board, ranked all military trades using a point evaluation system based on skill and knowledge required for each trade. The pay rates determined from the matches that were made provided the salary range into which all 90 trades fell according to the point scores they received.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PAY AND ALLOWANCES, CORPORAL TRADESMEN

Question No. 2,127—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to the 1,100 Corporal-Tradesmen who have been "re-allocated to a lower pay category" and as a result "will receive little or no pay increase" (a) what are the seven trades (b) by environment, what is the percentage distribution (c) was the principle of area prevailing rates used to determine that these men were overpaid and, if so, is it government policy to apply the principle of prevailing rates to part or all of the CAF with respect to pay levels (d) on what date will their pay levels be reviewed (e) on what date were they last awarded a pay increase?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) Weaponman Surface, 100 per cent Sea; Weaponman Underwater, 100 per cent Sea; Firecontrolman, 99 per cent Sea, 1 per cent Air; Air Traffic Controller, .5 per cent Sea, 8 per cent Land, 91.5 per cent Air; Radioman (Sea), 100 per cent Sea; Radar Plotter (Sea), 98.8 per cent Sea, .8 per cent Land, .4 per cent Air; Sonarman (Sea), 100 per cent Sea.

(c) No, the principle of area prevailing rates was not used to determine that these men were overpaid. The pay categories or payfields for the seven trades along with the remaining 83 trades in the military were determined by an evaluation team, comprising members of the Department of National Defence and Treasury Board, who ranked all military trades on a point evaluation system based on the skill and knowledge requirements for each trade. The CAF Trade Specifications call for higher trade skills and knowledge for the above-noted trades at the ranks of Sergeant and above. Consequently, these tradesmen were assigned to a higher pay category (i.e. pay field). On the other hand, lower trade skills and knowledge are required for Corporal and below and, therefore, the tradesmen in question were assigned to a lower pay field.

(d) Pay categories (payfields) will be upgraded upon promotion to Sergeant (Pay level 6A) for the seven trades. However, Canadian Force Headquarters continually reviews trade specifications for all military trades to assess their validity according to current military requirements and a possible restructuring of certain trades could result.

(e) There were last awarded a general pay increase on October 1, 1970.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—NUMBER KILLED SINCE KOREAN WAR

Question No. 2,145—Mr. Robinson:

How many Canadian Forces personnel have been killed, wounded etc., since the Korean War and what were the causes of the casualties?

MONTMAGNY, QUEBEC—PASCAL-TACHÉ MONUMENT

Question No. 2,167—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Has the federal government contributed to the building of the Pascal-Taché monument in Montmagny and, if so (a) what was the amount (b) what department or agency was involved?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes. (a) $22,962. (b) National and Historic Parks Branch,

*IMPLEMENTATION OF LAW TO TAX SCHOLARSHIPS AND BURSARIES

Question No. 2,196—Mr. Woolliams:

Is it still the government's intention to implement the law to tax scholarships and bursaries awarded to Canadian students attending universities and colleges in Canada and elsewhere?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): At present there is no law taxing scholarships and bursaries in Canada. Bill C-259, now under consideration by the committee of the whole House, would require that the amount by which the aggregate of scholarships, fellowships and bursaries received by an individual in a year exceeds $500 must be included in his income.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—POSSIBLE CONSIDERATION BY UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY—COMMONWEALTH ACTION TO ACHIEVE CEASEFIRE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has tentatively come to any conclusion as to how long the question of the fighting between India and Pakistan should be left with the Security Council to settle? Has the government of Canada taken any tentative position as to when the matter should be raised in the General Assembly of the United Nations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Security Council should be seized of the matter as long as there is some hope that they can reach an agreed resolution. I am sure the hon. member will agree that would be the best possible outcome. Reference of the matter to the General Assembly is not likely to produce results that will help in settling the dispute.

Mr. Stanfield: Are the minister and his department conferring with other countries about the general question as to how long the matter should be left with the Security Council, in other words, how long the matter should be simply left in the hands of the great powers and other countries represented on the Security Council? Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs actively conferring on this point?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when I was in Washington on Friday this was one of the subjects I discussed with the Secretary of State of the United States. That was before the discussion had begun. He laid before me his view that what was important now was a ceasefire. As the hon. members know, so far his efforts to get agreement on that have been aborted. Many other efforts have been made. While I am pessimistic, as I think anyone must be, I for one have not yet reached the point where I would want the Security Council to throw in the sponge. I repeat that a discussion in the United Nations General Assembly is not the same as getting an agreed resolution from the Security Council. To have a general discussion in the United Nations, as we know from many previous occasions, is more likely to exacerbate than resolve the difficulties.

Mr. Stanfield: Has any effort been made within the Commonwealth to formulate a concerted approach to bring about pressure for a ceasefire?

Mr. Sharp: Before hostilities broke out, Mr. Speaker, several efforts were made by various members of the Commonwealth to offer their good offices but they were rejected. I do not think the prospects now are as good as they were then. In my view, efforts within the Commonwealth are likely to be met with very great difficulty. At the moment, I do not think either side is disposed to do anything but continue the hostilities that unfortunately have begun.

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—SUGGESTED MEETING OF REPRESENTATIVES WITH CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TO ACHIEVE SOLUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My supplementary arises out of the last question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. In view of the fact that to all intents and purposes the Security Council appears to have become emasculated as a result of the division of opinion between the U.S.S.R. and Communist China, I ask the minister whether he will give consideration, because of Canada's peculiarly favourable position as a nation highly regarded in both India and Pakistan, to asking these nations to send representatives to Ottawa to meet here with representatives of the government of Canada? A similar course was taken in 1905 by the President of the United States, President Roosevelt, at the time of the Russo-Japanese war. Would the minister consider doing this, because certainly we have a large volume of good will in those countries and no one could suggest we have any interest there other than an interest in world peace?

• (2:30 p.m.)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the right hon. gentleman for his suggestion. I would point out to him that the Prime Minister of Canada has been in frequent consultation both with Mrs. Gandhi and with President Yahyah Khan; we have done our best to give counsel to both sides. I believe these overtures have been met with sympathetic understanding, but they have not produced the kind of results we would like to see. I do not think the kind of initiative suggested by the right hon. gentleman would be any more successful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If this suggestion, or anything like it, has not been tried, would the hon. gentleman not think that every possible means should be exhausted in an effort to prevent what is now happening over there which can develop into the potential of a world war?

Mr. Sharp: I can assure the right hon. gentleman that we shall do everything that is reasonable—even, indeed, things which may appear to be unreasonable—if it appears that anything can be done to help bring these hostilities to an end. But I would be misleading the House if I were to suggest that initiatives by us along the lines suggested by the right hon. gentleman had any chance of success, because I do not think so.

EAST PAKISTANI REFUGEES—AVAILABILITY OF RELIEF

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs give the House any new information on the status of the relief organizations engaged in bringing relief into the area now that fighting has begun on a major scale?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Perhaps I might make one or two comments. In East Pakistan conditions are such that to all intents and purposes relief operations have ceased. I have received no reports of any new interruption in India itself, and we are hopeful that the refugees can continue to get the assistance which has been provided and which has been promised.

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—POSSIBLE RECOGNITION OF NEW STATE OF BANGLA DESH

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): In view of the fact that India this morning declared its intention to officially recognize the new state of Bangla Desh, and in light of reports that both India and Russia are attempting to persuade friendly states to extend similar recognition, may I ask whether the government of Canada is considering its own position in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not been formally requested to give recognition to Bangla Desh but in any event it is not our intention to do so.

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO POSSIBLE PEACEKEEPING FORCE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Is the government taking any steps to make ready a contribution toward a peacekeeping force should the services of such a force be sought in this very difficult situation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Canadian government would not, of course, refuse to contribute to a peacekeeping force. It is our hope that hostilities can be brought to an end, and I have no doubt that if they were an observer team of some kind would be needed. I can say on behalf of the Canadian government that in principle we would be prepared to participate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe on a last supplementary. If it is not supplementary, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS BY CONSOLIDATED BATHURST LIMITED—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a domestic question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister inform the House what his department has done in connection with the lay-offs at Consolidated Bathurst in Bathurst, New Brunswick, whether a team has gone there, whether any discussions have taken place and whether the lay-offs will be postponed or carried out as indicated?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as soon as we heard the news, my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs contacted me. I spoke to the Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Hatfield, who was supposed to go to Bathurst; I do not know whether he did.

As for me, I sent a high ranking official of my department, accompanied by a representative of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in order to see what can be done right now to assist the people who are being laid off.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Can the minister inform the House when these officials went to Bathurst?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think it was on Friday. I am not sure whether it was Thursday or Friday.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Has the minister yet received a report from officials of his department?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. As soon as I receive one, I shall be pleased to disclose its content to my hon. friend.

[English]

LAY-OFFS BY CONSOLIDATED BATHURST LIMITED—NOTIFICATION TO MANPOWER DEPARTMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the hon. gentleman's department been involved in these lay-offs at Bathurst, New Brunswick, when did the minister receive notice of such lay-offs, and does his department have any kind of general plan to encourage manufacturers and others to notify his department of proposed lay-offs ahead of the date upon which they are announced?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In addition to the requirements about lay-offs under various laws which lead to our being informed, we encourage all manufacturers and business people to let us know as soon as possible about any potential lay-offs. In this particular case, officlals of the Department of Manpower and Immigration have been holding discussions with company and union representatives during the past year, and as a result of that preparation it is likely that a manpower incentive agreement may be entered into perhaps this week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBLE MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND ATLANTIC PROVINCES PREMIERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Bearing in mind the impending lay-offs at Consolidated Bathurst and other lay-offs in the Atlantic provinces, which are aggravating an already seriously spiralling unemployment situation, may I ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether he proposes to meet with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces prior to his meeting with the members of the Atlantic Development Council in January?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No date has yet been set with regard to this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Abitibi.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi. Order, please. Is the hon. member for St. John's East rising on a point of order?

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister whether he proposed to meet with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces, bearing in mind the lay-offs at Bathurst and other impending lay-offs in the Atlantic provinces. I should like to know specifically whether the minister does intend to meet with the premiers before the end of the year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order.

[Later:]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, at page 10117 of Hansard of Thursday, December 2, the minister's parliamentary secretary on the adjournment motion in reply to my question indicated that the minister would be meeting with members of the Atlantic Development Council in January. My question at this time more specifically is, does the minister intend to meet with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces in view of the serious escalating unemployment situation in that area?

MANPOWER

ON-THE-JOB TRAINING—AGREEMENTS RESPECTING AGRICULTURAL INSTRUCTION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

The minister announced some time ago that $35 million had been earmarked for a consultation program with business leaders, labour unions representatives and provincial authorities in order to increase the assistance to manpower training. Can the minister tell us whether arrangements have been finalized and if this amount, in part or in whole, is available at this time to finance vocational training in agriculture?

[Mr. Lang.]

[Later:]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I already met with the three Maritime premiers of a few months ago. We agreed on principle that it might be desirable that we meet from time to time—without, however, any date being set. But I certainly would not call a meeting with the four Atlantic premiers every time a plant closes down or lays off some of its employees.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The $35 million for the training program is really divided into two parts. Fifteen million dollars is supplementary to the regular training programs. Negotiations with the provinces for the placement of these funds, and of additional people in training, are well under way. The $20 million for on-the-job training has received a very good response from companies across the country and we are in a position almost immediately to begin entering into agreements with companies in connection with these on-the-job training programs.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS—DATE OF PAYMENT OF INCREASES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact the Premier of Quebec has indicated that his government and the government of Canada have settled administrative problems concerning family allowances, will the minister confirm this agreement and tell us when he will be making a statement to the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, discussions are still going on between officials of the federal government and the government of Quebec regarding the administrative arrangements, and no specific conclusions have been arrived at yet.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that so many hardships are being caused to the poverty-stricken, would the minister indicate if any action is being taken to update May 1, 1972 as the date for the increase in benefits under family allowances?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear now, with all the time that has been taken by the opposition on the tax bill, that it is very unlikely—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We had closure. Didn't you hear about it?

Mr. Munro: —that we would have got to the family allowance legislation in any event at this session.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I would promise the Minister of National Health and Welfare that if he would proceed with Bill C-264 we would pass it in one or two days.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO INCREASE BUSINESS INVESTMENT AND REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. As the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada states that business investment in Canada is now running about 12 per cent below what is necessary for the country to attain its economic objectives and to get unemployment down to a reasonable level, is the government taking steps to correct this situation and, if so, will the Acting Prime Minister mention what those steps are?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this is a very general question which normally ought to be answered by a general statement on motions. Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister can reply briefly, but I suggest to hon. members that we should try to keep questions short and have brief replies because I have a suspicion there are many aspiring questioners this afternoon.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may attempt a brief reply, the government has been very gratified at the very great increase in business activity in recent months.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Economic Council of Canada has not heard about these things which have been brought to the attention of the government. As I take it from the minister's answer that the government is taking steps, does the government have any reason to feel confident that these steps will reduce the present high level of unemployment to the 3.8 per cent level which the Economic Council considers to be economically acceptable?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer as to unemployment. What we have noticed, and I hope the hon. member has too, is the very substantial increase in employment. There has been about as large and as rapid an increase in employment as we have ever seen and I hope it goes up still more.

Mr. Hees: Unemployment is rising.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Lisgar.

GRAIN

ABILITY OF TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM TO HANDLE MOVEMENT—TURNING DOWN OF SALES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In the past few weeks we have seen a fairly good movement of grain out of western Canada. I should like to ask him if the transportation system has now reached its uppermost physical limit in so far as the movement of grain is concerned?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to observe that the hon. member has noticed the record movement of grain. He is about a year late.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: It is somewhat a speculative matter to determine what the absolute maximum of our carrying and handling capacity is. The Wheat Board and various other officials with whom I have been in contact have put the figure between 750 million bushels and 800 million bushels. It now looks as though we may be selling into that range and of course having another record year this year.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister responsible for the Wheat Board whether or not it is a fact that in the past few weeks at least there have been grain sales turned down by the Wheat Board because of the fact we have not got adequate transportation facilities to move the grain?

Mr. Lang: Well, the Wheat Board is still selling grain. It is true that in certain specific weeks or months they have sold to such an extent that they could not book for those particular times, but our buyers are usually able to adjust their purchases. It is of course true that, as our sales effort reaches the limit of 750 million bushels or 800 million bushels, we will be faced with the question of additional facilities and this government is facing up to the matter now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would hon. members kindly resume their seats. I notice there are four or five members seeking to ask supplementaries. I shall return to this subject in a moment, but as I suggested a moment ago we should make an effort to try to move on as quickly and as effectively as we can this afternoon. I recognize the importance of the matter just raised and will return to it in a moment. However, at this time the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

ENERGY

PROPOSED TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE SYSTEM—INDICATION OF INTENTION TO PROCEED—NATURE OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Arising out of the statement by the United States Secretary of the Interior to the effect that a permit will probably be issued before the end of January to proceed with the trans-Alaska pipeline system, I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if this was a subject of discussion with Secretary of State Rogers when he met him a few days ago and whether there is any indication that the United States government intends to reverse its decision in respect of the construction of the TAPS program?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I also noted the statement by the Secretary of the Interior. It is only partially quoted by the hon. member. However that may be, I did not have occasion to talk with Mr. Rogers about this subject.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on Friday in answer to a question from the hon. member for Calgary North the Prime Minister indicated that energy would be a subject for discussion with the President of the United States whom he is meeting with today. Can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House who asked that the subject be put on the agenda and whether or not the discussion on energy matters will deal with the TAPS program or whether it will deal with bringing gas from the Arctic down to the United States through Canadian territory?

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: I think the House will have to await the return of the Prime Minister on both questions. I am not certain whether the subject arose on the initiative of the Canadian government or the United States government. Of course it has been a subject of discussion now for a considerable length of time. To hear what happened between the President and the Prime Minister we will have to wait until there is a report to the House.

NATURAL GAS—REQUEST FOR COMMISSION TO DETERMINE PROVEN RESERVES IN ARCTIC AND ELSEWHERE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): This may be a related or a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and I direct it to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, who has appeared before the committee. In the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the chairman of the National Energy Board stated that the proven reserves of natural gas in the Arctic and elsewhere in Canada were not taken into consideration in determining the decision to turn down the four licences for export of natural gas. In view of that fact, would the minister now consider appointing a board or commission to determine the quantitative factor as to the proven reserves in the Arctic and in other places, which is so necessary to come to an equitable and economic decision?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I should think that the course of conduct recommended by the hon. member is unnecessary. In his testimony before the committee the chairman of the National Energy Board made it clear that as soon as the gas reserves in any part of Canada are sufficiently established to be taken into account in their calculations of available supply, that will be done, and in those circumstances further consideration can be given by the National Energy Board to the adequacy of supply for ourselves. Therefore there was complete attention to the available gas supply in Canada by the Energy Board in the course of its most recent deliberations.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary North on a further supplementary question and then recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister make certain that the information regarding proven reserves in the Arctic will be placed before the board, as the chairman of the board said that if they had additional evidence they would review the decision to turn down the export of natural gas from western Canada?

Mr. Lang: The full facts available were indeed before the board and, as the Chairman of the National Energy Board said before the committee, none of the parties arguing before the board thought it appropriate to attempt to establish northern reserves on the basis of the facts yet available.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ELIGIBILITY OF REPAIRS TO RETAINING WALLS ON ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could he tell us whether a project presented under the local initiatives program to repair heavily damaged retaining walls on the St. Lawrence river would meet the criteria established by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and would be considered acceptable?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt very much that the question as put is in order. It seems to me that such a question should normally be placed on the Order Paper, but the minister could perhaps briefly answer it.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I cannot really comment on the specific proposal. Renovations and repairs, if carried out by an appropriate organization, certainly come within the general criteria, but I have to have more details to give a more specific answer.

Mr. Baldwin: How about renovating the cabinet?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I would not want to force the minister into making comments. I am merely asking whether a project of that type would meet the criteria adopted, and could be accepted?

[English]

Mr. Lang: I do not see anything in what the hon. member has said that would rule it out. Therefore I would encourage him to let me see a more concrete application.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION—NATURE OF INQUIRIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It is now several weeks since confidential cabinet documents were leaked or came into unauthorized hands. Is the Acting Prime Minister now able to say whether the government has completed its investigation into how this happened? Has the inquiry been completed and, if so, is the government going to make a statement as to what has been ascertained?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): It is my understanding that inquiries are still continuing.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask a supplementary question about this matter which I am sure is of great concern to the government but also of great concern to the Canadian people. Will the government make a statement to the House as to what measures have been taken with regard to the inquiry and also indicating when the House may expect a full statement on the results and on what has taken place, or does the government just hope that everyone will forget about the whole thing?

Mr. Sharp: If we wanted to forget about the whole thing we would not be continuing our inquiries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest to hon. members that we should move on. I will recognize the hon. member for Yukon and then the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My supplementary question is to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he inform the House whether the loss of the cabinet document with respect to the Gray report as well as the loss of the cabinet document which apparently escaped with respect to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are being investigated by the RCMP, or are these losses being investigated simply by departmental sources?

Mr. Sharp: The RCMP have not been brought in to conduct the investigation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: For a good reason, because you do not want to be found out.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the Acting Prime Minister inform the House whether the special security force of the Solicitor General is being used to conduct these investigations and, if not, how are the inquiries being conducted?

Mr. Sharp: They are being conducted in the customary way, that is, within each department.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE LOWERING OF MAN-MONTH REQUIREMENT

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of previous representations that have been made to him by myself, and I presume by others in respect of lowering the man-month requirement for local incentive programs so that this program may be more accessible to small municipalities, has the minister decided whether any change will be made in this requirement so that they too can be assisted by this excellent program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have been watching the flow of applications and now begin to believe that it may be possible to accept applications with a lower minimum. This matter is now being reviewed in a final way and the decision should be known very shortly.

SECRETARY OF STATE

INQUIRY AS TO GRANT BY DEPARTMENT TO STUDY SURVIVAL IN CANADIAN WILDERNESS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Has the Department of the Secretary of State given funds to a person or persons to undertake a study on survival in the Canadian wilderness? If so, can the Secretary of State say how much money is involved and why such a study should be undertaken by the Department of the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest respectfully to the hon. member that normally this question should be placed on the order paper. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Nesbitt: I will rephrase the question and direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Perhaps he might be more aware. Is it the position of the government that the government's economic policies will force all of us to learn wilderness survival?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN FOREIGN AID PROGRAM—SHIPMENT OF GOODS THROUGH CANADIAN BROKERS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is very pedestrian after the previous one. It is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and arises from one I asked him some days ago. He was to look into the question of having Canadian instead of New York brokers handle our external aid shipments and also having foreign-going freighters under the Canadian flag and registry carry such shipments.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am glad the hon. gentleman has finally asked the question. I have had the answer here for a number of days.

The policy of permitting Canadian funds to be used for ocean shipping is relatively new and to date has only been applied to a few countries. However, in so far as gifts or grants are concerned, the policy is to pass all work possible to Canadian brokers or Canadian forwarders. Further, where the schedules, rates and availability of Canadian-owned shipping companies permit, contracts are awarded to such shipping companies.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TORONTO—POSSIBLE TENANCY IN NEW METRO CENTRE—CONSOLIDATION OF OPERATIONS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. When will the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation be announcing whether or not it intends to become a prime tenant and user of the planned Metro Centre in Toronto?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as usual, I shall ask the Corporation to supply the answer to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Since the CBC English network operations are scattered all over Metro Toronto, is it the intention of the CBC to locate these in one place, that is, in Metro Centre, or in another location in Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this kind of question should be placed on the order paper, but since it has been asked the minister might be allowed to reply briefly and quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am aware of the works which are under way in Vancouver. As for the intentions of the CBC with regard to consolidation of its services in Toronto, I know that such a step is contemplated, but I would have to inquire from the CBC in order to be able to provide the hon. member with the details he has asked for.

PENSIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Labour has to do with a wire that I understand the hon. gentleman received in his office this morning requesting him to look into the problems of railway pensions. In the interests of labour-management and, incidentally, grain shipping stability is the minister considering this request, and when does he expect that a full statement will be forthcoming on the inquiry requested?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if I am the appropriate minister to answer a question on railway pensions. However, I do know it is in the best interests of the railway workers that this matter be handled through the recognized union leaders rather than through well-meaning groups active outside of the traditional lines of communication and negotiation through which negotiations are usually carried on by elected representatives of the railway workers.

GRAIN

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER CONCERNING POSSIBLE DROP IN EXPORTS IN 1972-73

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. I would like to ask him whether, when he spoke to the pool delegates in Regina and made the statement that exports of wheat could drop to 500 million bushels in 1972-73 and, if this happened, it would have the effect of requiring an additional $200 million or $300 million in cash for payments to farmers under the agricultural stabilization program—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase the question. He knows that in relation to statements made outside the House questions have to be directed to the Prime Minister or Acting Prime Minister inquiring whether the statements represent government policy. Perhaps the hon. member might ask the question directly of the minister concerned.

Mr. Korchinski: Based on that statement, could I ask the minister whether that prediction was made on the basis of knowledge he has within his department or whether it was intended as coercion of the members of the wheat pool—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

LOBSTER FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN REGULATIONS TO CUT LOSSES FROM STORMS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that lobster catches since the beginning of the season have been about half those landed last year in Nova Scotia, due in part to serious storms which raged along the coast, would the minister give consideration to changing the present regulations so that licensed lobster fishermen may haul their traps on Sunday, if bad weather makes that necessary, in order to cut down on losses of their equipment?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): We will always give consideration to a reasonable recommendation, Mr. Speaker.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT CORPORATION COMPLY FULLY WITH RETIREMENT REGULATIONS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that Devco last week announced its intention to comply partially with section 18(a)(2) of the act, would the minister issue instructions to the Devco authorities to comply not only partially with this section of the act but to carry out its provisions fully?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, what happened last week at Devco is that benefits to be paid out to the miners have been improved, but there has been no change in principle and Section 18A has not been misinterpreted.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to indicate what his point of order is. I think there are only two minutes left before the end of the question period, so perhaps the hon. member might indicate as quickly as possible what the point of order is.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of the minister's statement that there has been no change in policy. My point is that there has been no policy and that the act, which made it mandatory on Devco authorities to carry out the law of this land, has not been put into force by the Devco authorities. In fact, this is why we are now rid of the three original administrators of that Crown corporation. I contend that the minister should impress upon the new administrators that the act which Parliament passed in 1967 should be fully carried out for the benefit of the miners who are suffering now and who are waiting for an opportunity to fight the government in court.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a debating point. I do not think I have to rule on whether or not it is a point of order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will hear the hon. member on his further point of order and then I will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. MacInnis: My point of order on this occasion is only to get guidance from the Chair and to ask the Chair whether or not, when legislation passed by this Parliament in 1967 is not carried out by the responsible persons, it constitutes a point of order when the minister rises and says that there has been no change of policy?

Mr. Speaker: I would tend to reply in the negative. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—EARLIER RELEASE OF FIGURES BY STATISTICS CANADA—REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE BE PRESENT TO ANSWER QUESTIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Acting Prime Minister or to the government House leader. In view of the fact that Statistics Canada has announced that it is going to issue its employment and unemployment figures a bit earlier than has been the practice, and in view of the fact that this announcement will be made tomorrow, could arrangements be made for the Minister of Finance to be here tomorrow to answer questions on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is with the Prime Minister in Washington. I believe that the whole party is expected to return before the question period tomorrow, and I am sure the Minister of Finance would want to be here if he can be.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the Chair calls orders of the day I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West has a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to revert to a point of order that has arisen in connection with Bill C-259. This bill has been fraught with difficulties from the very day of its inception. You may recall that when I first spoke on this bill on second reading there had to be prepared a curative motion because of the difficulty that arose in that Bill C-259 departed in major ways from the ways and means motion that had been adopted by the House.

What concerns me now is that we have some 150 or more amendments before the House, and there is a question as to whether any of them are valid. I would put this matter to Your Honour for consideration because I think it is very urgent. There is no question that the point of order is hypothetical or anticipatory because amendments have been adopted by the committee, and again I would put it to you that there may be a question as to their validity.

I am concerned primarily with the special order on the bill which was adopted by the House on September 28. You will recall that after some difficulty, after the motion had been made and Your Honour had given it a good deal of thought, you did make a ruling on it, because I had pointed out that Bill C-259 differed from the ways and means motion and therefore was not properly before the House. I further raised the question—even when the hurdles were overcome—since the ways and means motion was in the form of a bill whether a committee or any member thereof could amend or reject any provision of a bill based upon the ways and means motion, since any such amendment or rejection would vary a question already decided upon by the House in June following on the adoption of the general budgetary resolutions. Those amendments would therefore be out of order.

• (3:10 p.m.)

May I refer to what Your Honour said at that time, and I quote:

If the House of Commons accepts this procedure and adopts as part of the ways and means resolution a draft bill, I do not see how any amendment can be adopted or suggested to the House at any time thereafter either by the government or the opposition, because the objection can be very well made at any time an amendment is made by the government, the opposition, a member of the opposition or any individual member of the House that this amendment is not in keeping or in accordance with the terms of the ways and means resolution. It will not be, of course, because it is different from the draft bill which has been submitted.

I think the House got itself into a bit of a bind and difficulty by following this procedure. I think it should be for the House to find a way out of it. For the moment, I suggest to hon. members that we proceed with the bill before us.

Then, Your Honour suggested that perhaps the House leaders should meet and find a solution. That excerpt is from Hansard of September 13, 1971. On September 28, at about five minutes to six, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council put the following motion to the House:

That, notwithstanding the terms of the ways and means motion upon which Bill C-259 was introduced, this House deems that the said bill was properly introduced within the terms of Standing Order 60, provided that the form of the said ways and means motion shall not be accepted as a precedent in any future case;

That appears at page 8249 of Hansard. I have no quarrel with the first paragraph; the second paragraph is the one that is deficient. It reads as follows:

And that it shall be an instruction to the committee of the whole on the said bill that the admissibility of any proposed amendments thereto shall be governed by the bill as read a second time, and shall not be limited by the said ways and means motion although all other procedures relating to financial or tax measures shall apply.

I refer primarily to the mandatory nature of those two paragraphs. I point out to Your Honour that Nay's Parliamentary Practice, 17th edition, at page 536 contains the following statement:

Before the committee, to which a bill has been committed, commences its consideration of the bill, an instruction may be given to such committee, the purpose of which is either to empower the committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to define the course of action which it must follow. The first type of instruction is called permissive, the second mandatory.

Instructions may be given not only to a committee of the whole House, but to any other committee. An instruction to a committee of the whole House can only be moved in the permissive form.—

That is why I say that the word "shall" cannot appear in that particular motion made by the parliamentary secretary. The reason I am raising this particular point is that I think we can cure it but it must be posted in the same way Your Honour posted the flag on the procedure that was used in June with regard to the bill. This type of operation must not be repeated, and I am suggesting that what has been done on this occasion must not be repeated. In effect the instruction to the committee on Bill C-259 is that the committee must, with regard to the admissibility of amendments, follow the substance of the bill and ignore the ways and means resolution. There is no doubt that the instruction is mandatory and should be declared out of order.

Further, a second rule applying to instructions to a committee of the whole is that the instruction is invalid if its effect would be to widen the powers of the committee beyond the ways and means resolution which governs the bill. I refer again to May's 17th edition at page 541, where we consider instructions to the committee. I shall not quote the whole of subparagraph 5 which indicates that you cannot extend the powers of the committee. I do not want to go further on that particular point.

The third point to which I wish to direct Your Honour's attention is contained in Redlich, "The Procedure of the House of Commons", Volume II, at page 197. The instruction to the committee was not made an order of the day; it was merely a motion which stayed under "motions" and it is a fact the chairman of the committee did not incorporate into the record of the proceedings of the committee the direction from the House, even though the direction from the House may be deficient on other points. It was not done in the committee. All I am pointing out is what should be done properly. The motion of the parliamentary secretary should have been made an order of the day so that it would have been referred directly to the chairman and then he would have read it in committee.

I know this is a long, difficult point of order, and that it is perhaps a refinement, so to that extent I apologize to the House. But having raised the first point of order on second reading which clarified the procedures, Mr. Speaker, I thought that again it was incumbent to do it at this time. After all, the minister is going to come forward at some time with other changes in the Income Tax Act following the type of mini-budget of October 14, again for a first time practice, so I think it is incumbent that we have correct procedures and guidelines with regard to these new rules. Now is the time to straighten this out, although it appears to be rather nitpicking, so that in future we can be guided by what Your Honour has said on the previous point and, I would submit, on consideration of what I have raised this afternoon when Your Honour is ready to indicate again the guidelines for the future conduct of the House within the meaning of Standing Order 60.

Mr. Speaker: The point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is most interesting. It follows the discussion which took place in the House some weeks ago when the hon. member had risen on a point of order. It is as a result of the ruling which had been made by the Chair at the time that discussion took place among the House leaders and it was agreed that there should be an order to try to correct the procedural difficulty which had been raised. The hon. member suggests now that perhaps we went further than we might have or could have gone, and suggests that perhaps we had no right to do what we did. I am not quite prepared at this moment to accept the suggestion. I would rather think that the House can, by its order, do practically anything in keeping with the kind of instruction the hon. member referred to, that is, the kind of instruction referred to in the citation of May's quoted by the hon. member is not the same kind of instruction as that which is in the part of the special order of the House. However, I am not prepared at this time to make a ruling in general or a ruling in theory or in principle on the subject.

My understanding of the point made by the hon. member is that he feels we should not establish a precedent by which we should be guided at all times in the future. He is raising a point which he said himself is the red signal flag which indicates the danger of a practice which has been adopted in this instance. He may be quite right, and I shall closely read Hansard tomorrow, or perhaps later today for the statement made by the hon. member. I shall study it very closely and perhaps in due course I will be in a position to indicate to the hon. member what my conclusions are.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, December 3, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Honey in the chair.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The Chairman: It is the understanding of the Chair that the committee will resume consideration of sections 135, 136 and 137 dealing with credit unions and co-operatives. An amendment was proposed by the Minister of National Revenue to section 135 and a subamendment by the hon. member for Regina East, as indicated on page 9682 of Hansard for November 18, 1971. Shall the subamendment moved in connection with section 135 carry?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Heretofore we have proceeded in a reasonably orderly discussion of the various subject matters listed under the various sections of the bill. On Friday, it is true, the government House leader said, in response to a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that we would proceed to consider the sections relating to co-operatives and credit unions. Referring to this matter I said on Friday, as recorded at page 10147 of Hansard, that I assumed, of course:

—that when this bill is first discussed in committee of the whole on Monday there will be a requests made, and if the amendment in respect of co-operatives is available and a request is made at that time, of course we will be prepared to consider it.

Other amendments may be proposed. Perhaps the government House leader or the parliamentary secretary will bring forward another amendment in this respect. Perhaps the government House leader will bring forward an amendment along lines he has previously indicated. His suggestion sounds reasonable in many respects. All the same, with all due respect to the Chair and to the government, I think we should follow the procedures we have adopted in the past. The amendments should be tabled at this time so that we, on this side of the committee, will have a reasonable period to consider them, say until tomorrow afternoon, which would not be too long. Perhaps they will be accceptable as they are or perhaps we will bring forward suggestions to improve them further. I do not know. I think, in all seriousness, that if the government proposes to follow the suggestion put forward on Friday and introduce these important amendments, those amendments ought at this time to be tabled and not moved, so that we might have a reasonable period in which to consider them. If we have finished considering them before tomorrow, I will indicate that in the committee.

I submit, however, that we should be given at least until tomorrow afternoon. It is important for us to see them, and for us to make suggestions, if necessary, as to how such amendments could be improved. I think this is very important. An exceptionally important meeting is going on in another part of the city. Many hon. members of this House are attending that. At that meeting decisions will be made which will influence the course of the next government of this country after the next election.

Mr. Jerome: Not very much.

Mr. Baldwin: Many hon. members of the House who are deeply concerned about these matters, and who made speeches as a result of which the government was persuaded to abandon its rather intransigent position and adopt some of the changes suggested with respect to the sections we are dealing with are not here at this time. Those hon. members should have a chance to be heard. Reasonable opportunity should be given for them to consider any amendments. If we reach any decision with respect to the amendments before tomorrow, I will advise the government House leader accordingly. I therefore suggest that there is no agreement for us to consider immediately, at this time, these particular sections.

I do not want to argue as to what the government's attitude is and as to whether they are entitled to adopt this or that procedure. I am merely saying that, barring agreements to the contrary, we must deal with the bill section by section and in the time allotted to us by virtue of the guillotine motion, deal with as many sections as possible until a quarter to six on Wednesday. We will be perfectly happy if the government tables the amendments in question so that we may know what they are. That practice was followed in the past. We will know by tomorrow, or perhaps before tomorrow, whether they are acceptable. In the meantime, I feel that we should proceed with the orderly discussion of the bill from the top, as it were, and work our way down.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I say at the outset I take no objection to the idea that the committee of the whole be given 24 hours to look at the amendments respecting co-operatives and credit unions which the government is now prepared to move. That would be reasonable, even if there were not another meeting in another part of the city to which reference has been made. I imagine that any amendments implementing the principles that the President of Privy Council referred to last week would be quite complicated. The proposition that members of the committee should have a chance to look at those amendments is entirely reasonable. That means we could discuss something else today and deal with this matter tomorrow, despite the fact that we agreed on Friday that we would consider only these sections today.

Mr. Baldwin: There was no such agreement on our part.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope it is not nitpicking, to use a phrase my friend from Edmonton West used a while ago, when I suggest that there is no provision for tabling anything in committee of the whole. Tabling can only be done in the House. It is possible to put motions on Hansard, in committee of the whole, without moving them formally, but they cannot be tabled. Up to now, all amendments which have been proposed from the government side have not only been read, but have been permitted to be moved at that time—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, no, surely that is not correct.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no; just a minute. What I said is correct. You could go back over Hansard and see places where amendments were read and moved—admittedly perhaps not at the moment they were read—but they were moved within a day or so, well in advance of the time when they were to be discussed. Any suggestion that the moving of these amendments should be held off indefinitely is hardly a suggestion one can accept at this time.

If the President of the Privy Council is going to introduce these amendments, and I think that he will be co-operative in this regard, I think he should be permitted to read them first. I hope the committee will give its consent for them to be moved. Let me say at once that I think the committee will have to give that consent, because there are other amendments before us at the moment. The Minister of National Revenue has moved an amendment to section 135, and the hon. member for Regina East has moved a subamendment. After we have heard what it is that the President of the Privy Council proposes to move in place of those amendments, the chances are that we will be willing to have those amendments withdrawn. Really, I am trying to say two things: one, yes, it is appropriate for the decision on this to be left until tomorrow and, two, I think we should get the material on the record and go as far as we can at this point. so that we know what we are doing. If we are satisfied about the new amendments, I hope the committee will consent today to the withdrawal of the old ones so that we will be in a position to act on the new amendments tomorrow in accordance with the will of the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I raise a point of order before my friend for Edmonton West pursues this matter. Of course, I agree with my friend for Winnipeg North Centre that the amendments cannot be tabled in committee of the whole. I was using the same expression used by the Minister of Finance, and it is always a mistake to follow his wording. An interval has elapsed, of course, between when amendments were put on Hansard and when they were moved.

With respect, there was no agreement whatsoever so far as this party was concerned and so far as I was concerned on Friday. We did not agree to the calling of the sections dealing with co-operatives. I think I suggested that we would wait until the amendments were introduced. I think we should look at these amendments, after which we could proceed from that point. I will now defer to my friend from Edmonton West. I wanted to make my position abundantly clear.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Without wanting to quibble about this particular point, Mr. Chairman, I was surprised there was consent that section 135 be brought on today. That was not my information. There were other clauses outstanding which the government indicated it wished to defer. On Thursday, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council asked whether I would agree to defer consideration of the so-called administrative clauses because the answers from the Department of Justice were not yet ready. This is the point. It was a case of not considering certain points because the answers were not forthcoming. Further, the department had not made up its mind with regard to an amendment I put forward.

I find it difficult to understand why anyone would consider moving an amendment today which may or may not be admissible because there are before the committee an amendment and a subamendment, both duly moved. I do not know the intentions of the government or how the amendments that may be proposed will be carried out. There is no clearly enunciated indication of what the amendments may cover.

The amendment to subsection (3) covers half a page. The deletion which the subamendment of the hon. member for Regina East would effect covers at least a page and a half of text, three subitems. If they are still before the committee, it is not possible for any minister of the Crown to make another motion proposing some different type of amendment. I think the answer is if the government, merely for purposes of information, will read into the record the nature of the amendments they propose, we could then compare them with the amendments of the hon. member for Regina East. I think they have the same general thrust. At least, that is what I am led to believe. Tomorrow, Wednesday or whatever time may be chosen, we could then make up our mind, agree to them and someone could move them. We should not prejudge the issue. I do not think the hon. member for Regina East would be prepared to withdraw his subamendment. I certainly would not consent to it. The committee is now seized with the subamendment. It requires unanimous consent to withdraw. I do not think that would be possible.

There is only one way to proceed, namely that we accept the reading into the record the amendment that might be proposed to that section by the government. We would defer consideration to a later time and revert to the ordinary course of considering the bill without the gentleman's agreement that we had before.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I believe we are a little concerned about sections 135, 136 and 137, which have already been dealt with and to which definite amendments have been proposed.

However, on Thursday when bringing forward the motion for closure, the government announced its intention to present further amendments to these sections and if I understood correctly what was said at the time those amendments would tend to abolish the tax on capital utilized.

At any rate, in order to permit a thorough study of these sections, as well as of amendments and proposed amendments to be brought forward, I believe that within the rules of procedure a method should be found whereby hon. members could take cognizance of these future amendments as early as possible. As the previous speaker said, they might very well contain major changes to previous amendments. That would greatly facilitate the discussion and perhaps allow to proceed more rapidly.

I therefore agree with the remarks that have been made in that regard and I think that we should know the contents of the amendments as soon as possible. Otherwise, it would be better to deal with another subject, which could only help the proceedings of the House.

[English]

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, has suggested a sensible and acceptable course of action in dealing with the new government proposal which the government wishes to place before the committee. As I understand the proposals referred to previously by the President of the Privy Council, they will in fact carry out and put into effect the principle of the subamendment which I proposed in an earlier sitting of the committee, namely to do away with the capital employed concept as it applied to co-operatives and credit unions in the bill now before us. No doubt there will be other consequential amendments that will accompany it. Also, there will be some provision for the alternative which the government is proposing.

On that basis, and on the basis of carrying out its stated intentions of doing away with the capital employed concept and coming up with an acceptable alternative at an appropriate time, I am prepared to ask the committee for leave to withdraw the amendment which I proposed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I realize quite well that in order for the government to propose amendments, when the sections are called it will be necessary to have the consent of the committee in order to withdraw the amendment of the hon. member for Regina East and also the amendments that have been previously moved by the government. That is acceptable.

Mr. Lewis: Or vote them down.

Mr. MacEachen: As the leader of the New Democratic Party says, if there is no readiness to give unanimous consent to withdraw these amendments, it is open to the committee to defeat them and make possible the submission of new amendments. I am also aware of the fact that in order to move the amendments, the Chair must put the committee in a position to deal with a number of sections; section 135, section 137 and later clauses 57 and 58.

It is quite possible that, within the circumstances of the present situation, procedural difficulty could frustrate totally the moving and the carrying of these amendments. In wishing to make these amendments, it is obvious that the government is really in the hands of the committee. If it wishes, the committee can prevent these amendments from being put now or at a later date. I am quite clear on that in my own mind.

What I suggest, and I think this is in accord with suggestions that have been made, particularly by the hon. member for Edmonton West, is that we might call one of these subsections. I could give a statement of the nature of the amendment and attempt to outline as clearly as possible the nature of the amendment. This will allow the committee to consider the content and allow me to move the amendment tomorrow. That is the proposal I have at the moment. For procedural reasons, I am reluctant to table these amendments now in the absence of an opportunity to move them. I believe, however, that what I would say in a statement would provide the committee with more information than it would get if members started looking at the actual wording of the amendments, which are complicated.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We are on clause 1. Go ahead.

Mr. Baldwin: There is no desire on our part to frustrate the minister. What he has announced is reasonable and logical. If he were to make one of his interesting speeches he could certainly outline, as part of it, the type of amendments he proposes to introduce. I do not think we have any objection on that score. I hear some voices in the wilderness over there. I hope those hon. members will take part in the debate and cease to operate their self-imposed closure. If the minister would agree to make such a statement we would have an idea of what the amendments contain and, certainly no later than tomorrow, he would be able to proceed along the lines he has indicated. In the meantime, we have a fair amount of the bill to digest.

Mr. MacEachen: What I shall do is this. I shall outline as clearly as I can the content of the amendments and then, after that, if we think something else is necessary, we can decide what course to take.

Last week I announced that the government would introduce relieving amendments for co-operatives, credit unions and caisses populaires. I would now like to explain the nature of these amendments in more detail. I shall deal first with co-operatives.

Under the present act, the patronage dividends of a co-operative could not reduce its income below 3 per cent of capital employed. With the introduction of Bill C-259 an attempt was made to re-examine the appropriate tax treatment of co-operatives. Bill C-259, and the several amendments to C-259 which the government has previously moved, reflect a new percentage limit, a new definition of capital employed and other transitional and long term rules designed to establish an appropriate level of taxation for co-operatives.

During this period, the government has continued to communicate with the co-operative movement. Representatives of that industry and many members on both sides of this House have argued persuasively that the "capital employed" concept is inappropriate in the case of the co-operatives and that, with the introduction of general tax reform, a new and better system should be developed. Rather than modifying the old system—a system which was inappropriate to start with—the government was urged to seek a new and more appropriate method which would recognize that a co-operative is a group of people who have organized to help themselves.

The government has decided to abandon the notion of "capital employed" and henceforth co-operatives will no longer be taxed on income from business with members which is distributed to members in the form of patronage dividends.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Therefore, the limit on deductibility of patronage dividends will be removed. In its place, the government proposes that there be a withholding tax at the rate of 15 per cent on patronage dividends in excess of $100 paid to a member in any year. The withholding tax would, of course, be refundable to the extent it exceeded a taxpayer's tax liability.

This new approach will have the following results. Recipients of patronage dividends will be treated as before: if the patronage dividend relates to the recipient's business it will be included in his income for tax purposes. In other circumstances, it will not be taxed. The withholding of tax by the co-operative will permit the government to administer the system efficiently and yet obtain the appropriate result depending on the character of the patronage dividend in the hands of the recipient. This change will provide substantial relief to co-operatives concerned about their treatment under the new Act.

I should like now to deal with Credit Unions and Caisses Populaires. The main concern expressed by credit unions and caisses populaires involves the reserves they must set aside under provincial statutes. It has been pointed out that these mandatory reserves exceed the reserves allowed against income for tax purposes, and that they are unlike the ordinary surplus of a corporation in that they cannot be distributed to members. Credit unions and caisses populaires argued that they could not obtain the same enjoyment of the small business deductions as other corporations which were not subject to provincial regulations. As a result, small credit unions and caisses populaires felt subject to the high rate of corporate tax prematurely.

In response to this argument, the government will introduce an amendment the effect of which will be to tax the income of a credit union or caisse populaire at the rate of 25 per cent as long as the reserves in excess of those allowed against income do not exceed 5 per cent of deposits and share capital. This will be accomplised by an adjustment of the small business deduction. As I understand it from my discussions, this amendment will provide the last remaining goal sought by the credit union movement.

This special right to use an effective corporate tax rate of 25 per cent might not in itself be sufficient for small credit unions or caisses populaires which would need a reserve in excess of 5 per cent of financial stability. Accordingly, the small business deduction available to other corporations will continue to apply so that a credit union or caisse populaire can build up $300,000 of reserves out of income taxed at 25 per cent whether or not such reserves exceed 5 per cent of deposits and share capital.

The right to build up 5 per cent reserves will, of course, only apply to increases in those reserves after 1971. Transitionally, the credit union or caisse populaire will be considered to have reserves equal to the lesser of the maximum 5 per cent of deposits and share capital or the actual reserves measured by taking assets at their value for tax purposes. Thus, if the actual opening reserves are less than 5 per cent they may be built up to 5 per cent out of income taxed at 25 per cent in the future. If the actual opening reserves are greater than 5 per cent, the fact that such extra reserves have been accumulated in the past will not affect the right of the credit union to use a 25 per cent rate in the future. The government believes that in this way credit unions and caisses populaires will be able to obtain the appropriate entitlement to the small business deduction and thereby enjoy the benefit of a 25 per cent rate of tax on an appropriate amount of income.

Finally, as a consequence of abandoning the notion of capital employed for co-operatives, the government does not believe it to be appropriate to retain this concept for credit unions and caisses populaires. Therefore, the government proposes that the limit on interest rebates related to capital employed be deleted. This is something they did not ask for. They are getting it as a throw-away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I believe the statement I have made reflects accurately the proposals which have been transformed into the series of amendments which I hope to move. Frankly, I have no objection to making these amendments available, although I would prefer to do so when I have an opportunity to move them. In any case, it would be the intent of the amendments to carry into law the proposals contained in this statement. If hon. members can show in the committee that indeed the amendments do not have that effect, we would be happy to make sure they do.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the minister, and what he states seems to be an acceptable program so far as we are concerned. In the light of what he has said, I would have no objection to the amendments being formally moved at this time, provided of course, that the hon. member for Regina East, as a condition precedent, would withdraw his amendment. I assume he will do so. The hon. member for Edmonton West and the rest of us will probably agree to that. I think, however, it should be understood that we would have an opportunity to examine the amendments, discuss them, and that debate would be postponed. It may well be that it would be postponed until tomorrow or earlier, but I shall keep in touch with my colleagues, the House leaders. We might finish this section much sooner than was originally contemplated. In light of what the minister has said, I would hope that these amendments would now be formally moved and that we would move on to some other subject matter contained in this bill for the rest of the afternoon.

On Clause 1—Section 135: Deduction in computing Income

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, in light of the statement made by the President of the Privy Council, I would ask leave of the committee to withdraw the subamendment to the amendment which I moved on November 18.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Does the committee grant leave to the hon. member for Regina East as requested?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: So ordered.

Amendment (Mr. Burton) withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I presume that someone over there has authority to ask for the withdrawal of the amendment moved by the Minister of National Revenue. We shall consent to that withdrawal as well.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I was rising to ask the consent of the committee to withdraw, as the hon. member for Regina East has, the amendment moved on October 22, I believe, to this particular section by the Minister of National Revenue.

I wish to thank the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for making it possible for us to get along with the work and to move these amendments today, with the understanding that the discussion can be withheld until a later time or a later hour.

While I have the attention of all hon. members, I should mention there is one other amendment that is not related to the co-operatives and credit unions which I should like to move under the same privilege. The amendment is to section 172 and relates to the right of appeal of an applicant who is deemed to have been refused registration as a charity and so on. I would move that after I have moved the credit union and co-operatives amendments, and on the same basis, if the committee is agreeable.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the President of the Privy Council. So that the committee knows what it is dealing with, the amendment referred to by the minister was moved by the Minister of National Revenue on October 22, 1971 and appears at page 8953 of Hansard. It states, "that section 135, as set forth in clause 1", and so on. Is it the wish of the committee that the minister shall have consent to withdraw the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) withdrawn.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I move:

Income Tax Act

That section 135 as set forth in clause 1 of the said Bill be amended

(a) by striking out lines 32 to 44 on page 355 and lines 1 to 4 on page 356 and substituting the following:

'Amount to be deducted or withheld from payment to customer

(3) Where at any particular time in a calendar year and after 1971 a payment pursuant to an allocation in proportion to patronage is made by a taxpayer to a person resident in Canada, the taxpayer shall, notwithstanding any agreement or any law to the contrary, deduct or withhold therefrom an amount equal to 15% of the lesser of the amount of the payment and the amount, if any, by which

(a) the aggregate of the amount of the payment and the amounts of all other payments pursuant to allocations in proportion to patronage made by the taxpayer to that person in the calendar year and before the particular time exceeds

(b) $100,

and forthwith remit that amount to the Receiver General of Canada on behalf of that person on account of that person's tax under this Part.'

(b) by striking out lines 20 to 47 on page 357 and lines 1 to 23 on page 358 and by relettering paragraphs (g) and (h) on page 358 as paragraphs (f) and (g), respectively.

(c) by striking out lines 33 to 48 on page 359 and lines 1 to 9 on page 360 and substituting the following:

'Amount of payment to customer

(6) For greater certainty the amount of any payment pursuant to an allocation in proportion to patronage is the amount thereof determined before deducting any amount required by subsection (3) to be deducted or withheld from that payment.

Payment to Customer to be included in income

(7) Where a payment pursuant to an allocation in proportion to patronage (other than an allocation in resect of consumer goods or services) has been received by a taxpayer, the amount of the payment shall be included in computing the recipient's income for the taxation year in which the payment was received and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, where a certificate of indebtedness or a share was issued to a person pursuant to an allocation in proportion to patronage, the amount of the payment by virtue of the issue thereof shall be included in computing the recipient's income for the taxation year in which the certificate or share was received and not in computing his income for the year in which the indebtedness was subsequently discharged or the share was redeemed.'

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, this amendment is lengthy and perhaps there is another one which is equally lengthy. I wonder if the minister could be given the consent of the committee to place the whole text of these amendments in Hansard as if they had been read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I thank the members of the committee, through you, for allowing me to present these amendments.

The Chairman: Order, please. I do not want to interrupt the minister, but perhaps we should deal with this matter. Is it agreed that the amendments be printed in Hansard as read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 1—Section 137: Deductions in computing Income.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should like now to move an amendment to section 137. However, there were, I understand, amendments moved on October 22 and October 29, 1971 which I should like to have withdrawn with the consent of the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, may I ask if it would be possible to get the French version of the amendments?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You have it.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): No, I do not.

[English]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I think if the hon. member will look a little deeper into the pile of papers delivered to him, he will find that everything he has in English he also has in French.

The Chairman: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council has asked leave to withdraw two amendments to section 137. I should identify them for the purpose of the record. The first was moved on October 22, 1971 by the Minister of National Revenue and appears at pages 8953 and 8954 of Hansard. It is an amendment that section 137 as set forth in the bill be amended. Is it the wish of the committee to give consent to the minister to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) withdrawn.

The Chairman: The second amendment was moved by the Minister of National Defence on October 28, 1971 and is recorded in Votes and Proceedings for that day at page 2. The amendment asks that section 137 be further amended. Is it the wish of the committee to grant leave to the President of the Privy Council to withdraw the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) withdrawn.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I move:

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

That section 137 as set forth in clause 1 of the said Bill be amended

(a) by striking out the heading immediately preceding section 137 on page 361, and substituting the following:

'Credit Unions and Savings and Credit Unions'

(b) by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 361 and substituting the following:

'Deductions in computing income

137. (1) In computing the income for a taxation year of a credit union or a savings and credit union (in this Act referred to as a "credit union")'.

(c) by striking out lines 35 to 42 on page 361 and lines 1 to 29 on page 362 and substituting the following:

'Additional deduction

(3) There may be deducted from the tax otherwise payable under this Part for a taxation year by a corporation that was, throughout the year, a credit union, an amount equal to 25% of the lesser of

(a) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the corporation's taxable income for the year

exceeds

(ii) the least of the amounts determined under paragraphs 125(1)(a) to (d) in respect of the corporation for the year, and

(b) the amount, if any, by which

(i) 4/3 of the corporation's maximum cumulative reserve at the end of the year

exceeds

(ii) the aggregate of the corporation's preferred-rate amount (within the meaning assigned by paragraph 189(4)(c)) at the end of the immediately preceding taxation year and the amount determined under subparagraph (a)(ii), except that in applying this subsection for a taxation year after the 1972 taxation year, the reference in this subsection to "25%" shall be read as a reference to "24%" for the 1973 taxation year, 23% for the 1974 taxation year, "22%" for the 1975 taxation year, and "21%" for the 1976 and subsequent taxation years.

Amount deemed deductible under s. 125

(4) For the purposes of this Act, any amount deductible or any deduction under subsection (3) from the tax otherwise payable by a credit union under this Part for a taxation year shall be deemed to be an amount deductible or a deduction, as the case may be, under section 125 from that tax.

Amount paid in respect of members' share deemed paid as interest

(4.1) For the purposes of this Act, any annual or other periodic amount paid or payable by a credit union to a member thereof in respect of his share in the credit union, other than any such amount paid or payable as or on account of capital, shall be deemed to have been paid or payable, as the case may be, by the credit union as interest and, when received by the member, to have been received by him as interest.

Member's income

(5) Where a payment has been received by a taxpayer from a credit union in a taxation year in respect of an allocation in proportion to borrowing, the amount thereof shall, if the money so borrowed was used by the taxpayer for the purpose of earning income from a business or property (otherwise than to acquire property the income from which would be exempt or to acquire a life insurance policy), be included in computing the taxpayer's income for the year.'

(d) by striking out lines 32 to 34 on page 362 and substituting the following:

'for a taxation year means an amount credited by a credit union to a person who was a member of the credit union in the year on terms that the'

(e) by striking out lines 8 to 45 on page 363 and lines 1 to 38 on page 364 and substituting the following:

' "Credit union" (b) "credit union" means a corporation, association or federation incorporated or organized as a credit union or cooperative credit society if

(i) it derived its revenues primarily from

(A) loans made to, or cashing cheques for, members,

(B) bonds of, or guaranteed by, the Government of Canada or a province, or a Canadian municipality, or bonds of a municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada,

(C) bonds of a corporation, commission or association not less than 90% of the shares or capital of which was owned by the Government of Canada or a province or by a municipality in Canada, or

(D) loans made to a cooperative credit society of which it is a member, or

(ii) the members thereof were corporation or associations

(A) incorporated or organized as credit unions, substantially all of which derived their revenues primarily from loans made to members or from bonds of, or guaranteed by, the Government of Canada or of a province,

(B) incorporated, organized or registered under, or governed by a law of Canada or a province with respect to cooperatives, or

(C) incorporated or organized for charitable purposes, or were corporations or associations no part of the income of which was payable to, or otherwise available for the personal benefit of, any shareholder or member thereof;

"Maximum cumulative reserve" (c) "maximum cumulative reserve" of a credit union at the end of any particular taxation year means an amount equal to 5% of the aggregate of amounts each of which is

(i) the amount of any debt owing by the credit union to a member thereof or of any other obligation of the credit union to pay an amount to a member thereof, that was outstanding at the end of the year, including, for greater certainty, the amount of any deposit standing to the credit of a member of the credit union in the records of the credit union, but excluding, for greater certainty, any share in the credit union of any member thereof, or

(ii) the amount, as of the end of the year, of any share in the credit union of any member thereof; and

"Member" (d) "member" of a credit union means a person who is entitled as a member or shareholder to full voting rights in the conduct of the affairs of the credit union.'

Mr. Burton: May I ask the President of the Privy Council a question before he proceeds to the next stage? Do I understand from what he has said that the amendment to section 136 which was moved on October 22 is still allowed to stand?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not proposing any change to section 136 at the moment.

The next amendment which is related to this batch of amendments is to clause 57 on page 685. Do I have the consent of the committee to have clause 57 called to make this amendment?

The Chairman: Shall section 135 stand?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, if we consider clause 57 at this point, we would be jumping with seven league boots. It must be remembered we would be moving from clause 1 to clause 57 of the bill. This has not happened before. Up to this point the movement has been within clause 1. What the minister is now proposing is either a transitional or a consequential amendment, but this is an entirely separate clause and it is a departure from the practice of the past to read amendments to that they would be before the committee and they could be acted on before the guillotine falls. I hope that the same reciprocity will be given by government members to any member of the opposition who might wish to move an amendment some distance down the road so that it could be dealt with before the guillotine falls, otherwise we will be operating on a one way street. I hope that the principle of two way streets is recognized.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Edmonton West is quite correct in pointing out that what the President of the Privy Council is now seeking to do is to propose amendments to clauses way beyond clause 1, namely clauses 57 and 58. However, since those amendments—and we have now seen copies of them—are related to, and consequential upon, the amendments to sections 135 and 137 of clause 1, I hope that the committee will give that consent. At the same time, I support the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that if consent is given from this side for amendments to be introduced at this stage to other clauses of the bill, the same kind of consent will be given by the other side to the introduction of amendments. Perhaps we could have a House leader's meeting to get this sorted out.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There is one further point. Before the minister can move such an amendment, if we consult an up to date copy of the bill we will see that it contains an amendment which has already been put forward to the clause and which should now be withdrawn.

Mr. MacEachen: I quite agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West. There is an amendment that was moved to clause 57 which should be withdrawn, and I would like to have the consent of the committee to withdraw the amendment.

The Chairman: Before I put the question I will have to ask the consent of the committee to standing section 135.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Income Tax Act

On Clause 57: Specified personal corporations.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the request of the President of the Privy Council for leave to withdraw the amendment now standing to clause 57 in the name of the hon. member for Rosedale moved on October 29, 1971. Shall the minister have consent to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) withdrawn.

Mr. MacEachen: I move:

That the said Bill be amended by adding, immediately after clause 57 on page 689, the following clause:

'Co-operative corporations

57.1 (1) Where a co-operative corporation (within the meaning assigned by section 136 of the amended Act) has a taxation year part of which is before and part of which is after the commencement of 1972, the tax payable by it under Part I of the amended Act for the year shall be determined by the following rules:

(a) determine the tax under Part I of the amended Act that, but for this subsection, would be payable by it for its 1972 taxation year on its amount taxable for its 1972 taxation year;

(b) determine that proportion of the amount determined under paragraph (a) that the number of days in that portion of its 1972 taxation year that is in 1972 is of the number of days in the whole taxation year;

(c) determine the aggregate of the taxes that, but for this subsection, would be payable by the corporation for its 1972 taxation year

(i) under Part I of the former Act, and

(ii) under subsection 24(5) of the Old Age Security Act as it read before being amended by section 3 on the assumptions that

(iii) its amount taxable for its 1972 year were computed as if

(A) subsections 75(3) and (5a) and paragraph (75(4)(b) of the former Act were applicable, and

(B) the references in subsection 75(3) and paragraph 75(4)(b) of the former Act to section 27 of that Act and to paragraph (k) of subsection (1) of section 62 of that Act were references to section 111 and to paragraph 137(6)(b), respectively, of the amended Act, and

(iv) Division E of Part I of the former Act and subsections 24(5) and (6) of the Old Age Security Act as it read before being amended by section 3 were applicable to its 1972 taxation year;

(d) determine that proportion of the aggregate determined under paragraph (c) that the number of days in that portion of its 1972 taxation vear that is in 1971 is of the number of days in the whole taxation year;

(e) determine the aggregate of the amounts determined under paragraphs (b) and (d) in respect of the corporation; and the aggregate determined under paragraph (e) is the tax under Part I of the amended Act payable by the corporation for its 1972 taxation year.

Ss. 51(1) not applicable

(2) Subsection 51(1) does not apply for the purpose of determining the tax payable by co-operative corporation (within the meaning assigned by section 136 of the amended Act) for its 1972 taxation year.

"Amount taxable" defined

(3) In this section, "amount taxable" of a corporation for its 1972 taxation year has, subject to subsection 51(2), the meaning assigned by Division E of Part I of the amended Act.'

The Chairman: Shall clause 57 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 58: Credit Unions.

Mr. MacEachen: May we now call clause 58, Mr. Chairman? May I have the consent of the committee to withdraw the amendment to this clause moved on October 29, 1971?

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to give consent to the minister to withdraw the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosedale on October 29, 1971?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) withdrawn.

Mr. MacEachen: I move:

That clause 58 of the said Bill be amended

(a) by striking out lines 20 and 21 on page 690 and substituting the following:

'the product obtained when the number of full taxation years in the period'

(b) by striking out lines 35 and 36 on page 690 and substituting the following:

'of such improvement or addition, as the case may be, exceeded $10,000),'

(c) by striking out lines 30 to 49 on page 691 and lines 1 to 27 on page 692 and substituting the following:

'Deemed deductions

(2) For the purposes of paragraph 137(1)(c) of the amended Act, a credit union shall be deemed to have deducted, in computing its income for its 1971 taxation year

(a) under paragraph 137(1)(a) thereof, the maximum amount determined in prescribed manner that would have been claimable by the credit union under that paragraph as a reserve in respect of property described therein in computing its income for its 1971 taxation year if section 137 of the amended Act had been applicable to that year, and

(d) under paragraph 137(1)(b) of the amended Act, such portion of the amount, if any, by which its 1971 reserve exceeds the amount determined under paragraph (c), as does not exceed the amount described in paragraph (b).

Special rule applicable to 1972 taxation year

(3) Where a credit union has a taxation year part of which is before and part of which is after the commencement of 1972, the tax payable by it under Part I of the amended Act for that taxation year is that proportion of the tax otherwise payable by it under that Part for the taxation year that the number of days in that portion of the taxation year that is in 1972 is of the number of days in the whole taxation year, and subsection 51(1) does not apply for the purpose of determining the tax payable by it for that taxation year.

Additional deduction for 1973 to 1976 taxation years

(3.1) For the purposes of subsection 137(3) of the amended Act, where a credit union has a taxation year (in this section referred to as the "particular taxation year") part of which is before and part of which is after the commencement of any of the calendar years 1973, 1974, 1975 and 1976 (in this section referred to as the "particular calendar year"), the percentage referred to in subsection 137(3) of the amended Act for the particular taxation year is the percentage equal to the aggregate of

(a) that proportion of the percentage so referred to for the particular taxation year that the number of days in that portion of the particular taxation year that is in the particular calendar year, is of the number of days in the whole of the particular taxation year, and

(b) that proportion of the percentage so referred to for the taxation year immediately preceding the particular taxation year that the number of days in that portion of the particular taxation year that is in the calendar year immediately preceding the particular calendar year, is of the number of days in the particular taxation year.

Determination of maximum cumulative reserve at end of taxation year

(3.2) Notwithstanding paragraph 137(6)(c) of the amended Act, for the purposes of section 137 of the amended Act a credit union's maximum cumulative reserve at the end of any particular year is the amount, if any, by which its maximum cumulative reserve at that time, determined under paragraph 137(6)(c) of the amended Act without regard to this subsection, exceeds the lesser of

(a) its maximum cumulative reserve, determined under paragraph 137(6)(c) of the amended Act without regard to this subsection, at the end of its 1971 taxation year, and

(b) the amount, if any, by which its 1971 reserve exceeds the aggregate of the amounts deemed by subsection (2) to have been deducted by it in computing its income for its 1971 taxation year.'

(d) by adding, immediately after subclause (4) on page 692, the following subclause:

'Amount of non-capital loss

(4.1) The amount, if any, by which

(a) the aggregate of amounts each of which is the amount, as of the commencement of the credit union's 1972 taxation year, of any share in the credit union of any member thereof,

exceeds

(b) the amount that would be the credit union's 1971 reserve if paragraph (5)(c) were read without reference to subparagraph (vi) thereof shall, for the purposes of section 111 of the amended Act, be deemed to have been the credit union's non-capital loss for its 1971 taxation year, and, for greater certainty, section 37 does not apply for the purpose of computing a credit union's taxable income for any taxation year.'

(e) by striking out lines 13 to 23 on page 693 and substituting the following:

' "1971 reserve"

(c) "1971 reserve" of a credit union means the amount, if any, by which the aggregate of amounts each of which is

(i) the amount of any money of the credit union on hand at the commencement of its 1972 taxation year,

(ii) an amount in respect of any property described in paragraph (1)(a) or (b), equal to the amount at which it is required by those paragraphs to be valued at the commencement of its 1972 taxation year,

(iii) an amount in respect of depreciable property of a prescribed class owned by the credit union on the first day of its 1972 taxation year, equal to the amount determined under paragraph (1)(d) to be the undepreciated capital cost thereof to the credit union as of that day, or

(iv) an amount in respect of any capital property (other than depreciable property) owned by the credit union at the commencement of its 1972 taxation year, equal to its cost to the credit union computed without reference to the provisions of section 26, exceeds the aggregate of amounts each of which is

(v) the amount of any debt owing by the credit union or of any other obligation of the credit union to pay an amount, that was outstanding at the commencement of its 1972 taxation year, excluding, for greater certainty, any share in the credit union of any member thereof, or

(vi) the amount, as of the commencement of the credit union's 1972 taxation year, of any share in the credit union of any member thereof.'

I thank members of the committee for their readiness to allow me to move amendments to clauses 57 and 58. I wish to assure the hon. member for Edmonton West that I will extend the same courtesy to him, if not in the length of the amendments at least in the number, at the appropriate moment.

Now may I ask the committee if we could return to clause 1 and I will put the amendment with respect to the appeal right for the registration of a charity, that is section 172. But first I need to have the consent of the committee to go back to clause 1.

Mr. Aiken: This is the section on which the parliamentary secretary had undertaken to come up with the proposed amendment some time ago. I would like to suggest that after this amendment is produced we could proceed with consideration of it as well as the remainder of the administration sections which were stood over last week.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, if the questions to be considered at this time are ones that are primarily the responsibility of the Department of Justice rather than of the Department of Finance, I would be in entire agreement to proceed with these sections, provided we have time to get the appropriate officials on the floor.

The Chairman: Shall section 58 stand?

Some hon. members: Stand.

The Chairman: Shall the committee consider clause 1, section 172?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 1: section 172—Appeal.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move:

That section 172 as set forth in clause 1 of the said Bill be further amended by adding, immediately after subsection (3) on page 446, the following subsection:

'Deemed refusal to register

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), the Minister shall be deemed to have refused

(a) to register an applicant for registration as a registered Canadian charitable organization or registered Canadian amateur athletic association,

(b) to accept for registration for the purposes of this Act any retirement savings plan or profit sharing plan, or

(c) to issue a certificate of exemption under subsection 212(14), where he has not notified the applicant for registration or for the certificate, as the case may be, of his disposition of the application within 180 days after the filing of the application with him, and, in any such case, an appeal from such refusal to the Federal Court of Appeal pursuant to subsection (3) may, notwithstanding anything in subsection 180(1), be instituted under section 180 at any time by filing a notice of appeal in the Court.'

The Chairman: Order. The committee now has before it clause 1, section 172, with an amendment thereto by the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very close to the one I suggested. If I am not mistaken I have a formal amendment before the committee on this matter, and when it comes to the point of the question being put I am prepared to withdraw my amendment in favour of the one that the government has put forward.

In large part, the amendment now before us meets the objection I raised. The fundamental problem here is that if the minister made no decision on an application for registration of a charitable organization, or of some other organization, there would be no ground for appeal because an appeal could only arise as the result of a refusal. In this particular case, the applicant would be completely frustrated in his desire to come to a decision. My suggestion was that a time limit should be imposed during which the minister must make a decision, and if he did not he would be deemed to have refused the application so that an appeal could be allowed. In large part the proposed amendment covers this point.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The only point I should like to raise, and my colleague from Edmonton West raised it when we discussed the section earlier, is that sometimes when an outside limit is established it becomes the accepted norm in the department. The officials feel they have six months to consider the application and do not concern themselves with it until the six months have passed. I sincerely hope that the effect of this amendment will not be for the departmental officials to consider that they have six months in which to consider the application. I hope that the parliamentary secretary can assure the committee that the maximum time within which the minister must reply will not become the minimum time. Aside from that general principle, and subject to certain comments which my colleague from Edmonton West may have, the amendment generally meets the proposal I made.

The Chairman: Order. Just before I see the hon. member for Edmonton West, I thank the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for drawing the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is an amendment to section 172 in his name. The committee has moved so quickly this afternoon that our "ticker" is a little behind. In any event, it might be a good idea if I ask for the consent of the committee, as requested by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, that he be permitted to withdraw his amendment to section 172. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Aiken) withdrawn.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I think my colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka has indicated the general thrust of my remarks. They are a repetition of what I indicated the other night in considering this particular point. With all due respect to the Canadian Bar and my colleague, I felt that 180 days or six months was far too long a period to give the minister to refuse to an application of a Canadian charitable association for registration or to register a Canadian amateur athletic association or to give notice that he proposed to revoke its registration or that he would refuse to accept for registration any retirement savings plan.

As my colleague indicated, it is an old axiom around here that any indicated maximum of time becomes, in practice, a minimum of time. Therefore, it behooves anyone who is going to apply for registration of a Canadian charitable or athletic association to get the application in at least six months ahead of the time when it wants the registration. It seems to me patently wrong to say that it is going to take more than three months to investigate a charitable association to determine why it should or should not be registered, in addition to which if there is a subscription fund to be registered on behalf of the charity or particular commission, that it should be necessary to apply six months ahead of the time for registration. I am thinking of those people who have had experience with fund drives on behalf of charities and amateur athletic associations. Frankly, I fail to see the reason for the limitation of six months; it seems to me that 90 days would be more than adequate.

In the case of refusal to register a retirement savings plan, I think if it is going to take the Minister of National Revenue six months to make up his mind about the plan, then he places it in jeopardy in so far as the employees applying for it are concerned. Life does not proceed that slowly. I should like to have the advise of the parliamentary secretary or some officials from the Department of Justice, the Department of National Revenue or the Department of Finance on why 180 days was chosen rather than 90 days. I know it is a matter of choice.

Mr. Mahoney: I agree with the point that the hon. member has made, but in my experience people who apply for registration of charitable institutions usually want the registration granted yesterday rather than tomorrow.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Sometimes it is necessary.

Mr. Mahoney: This is quite true, but I think from a practical point of view the hon. member will appreciate that once it is decided to make an application these people do put the heat on the Department of National Revenue. I hope that no practical problem such as he anticipates will arise, but it is certainly something that we will observe. I shall bring the comments of the hon. member to the specific attention of the Minister of National Revenue. It is not intended that this be the outer limit, and I am sure the Department will operate in the way the provision is intended rather than use the 180 day time limit as a reason for being dilatory in processing these registration applications.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 225 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Have we considered section 173?

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on section 172?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I merely rise to say that we have accepted the amendment and we can now proceed to accept the section.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall section 172 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1, section 172, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 1—Section 225—Seizure of Chattels.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, if my memory serves me right, there are some other sections under which the same sort of notice is given. I think perhaps section 168 is one. Briefly, I should like to know at what time the period of notice starts to run, when one says ten days notice by registered mail addressed to the recipient. Is this from the date of registration or the date of receipt of the document of notice?

Mr. Mahoney: From the date of mailing, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is what I was afraid of. That is good for Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto. It is too bad the Postmaster General is not in the House. There is an increase in the number of cabinet ministers sitting in the House this afternoon, and this may be a salutary lesson from last week.

Mr. Davis: Sedentary.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Minister of the Environment may call it sedentary, but he may improve his knowledge of the income tax laws by sitting here. This is the only way cabinet members will be able to do it, because they certainly did not know what was in it before. Why should the person in British Columbia, Newfoundland or some other point to which it may take between three and five days to send a letter be penalized, whereas the person in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa or other point close to the capital have an advantage because he gets his mail delivered quickly. I point out to the officials concerned that mail leaving Ottawa on Wednesday, and very definitely mail going out on Thursday, very often is not delivered in certain areas until Tuesday morning.

• (4:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: That happens in Hull.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am told that this happens in Hull. I give the benefit of reasonable doubt, shall we say, to the post office with regard to reasonable performance. The parliamentary secretary knows that these delays occur in Calgary. Mail which arrives in Calgary on Friday afternoon will not be delivered on Saturday or Sunday. Because of the accumulation of mail in the post office, it will not be sorted and delivered on Monday. One must wait until Tuesday. What on earth prevents notice beginning from the date of receipt of that notice by the recipient? What prevents that? Would that not bring justice in this regard right across the country?

You know, Mr. Chairman, I have often complained in the past about what I call the capital city syndrome which applies to people who sit in comfortable pews. They only worry for two or three days about the delivery of letters and then they can go to their lawyers. They have the time to do it. Do not let anyone say to me or to any member representing one of the farther reaches of the country, "A person can go to a judge and get leave to open the case." Do you know just how much it costs to do that? Such suggestions are even worse than Marie Antoinette saying, "If they cannot get bread, let them eat cake." I defy anyone to make an application to a judge, either of the federal court or of the Supreme Court, for less than $250. That is the cost of such an ex parte application. One has to retain an Ottawa representative, and there must be an appearance at the Supreme Court or at the federal court level in order to obtain leave to extend the period. That will cost $250. I have had experience of this with respect to the Immigration Appeal Board, and I say it is a damnable shame to fix the time in such a way.

Let us consider what happens if there is an Air Canada strike. I should like to see the employees of Air Canada who were responsible for a damn fool strike pick up the tab for two people who are faced with a deportation order. They had to apply for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. They had to obtain the transcript of the hearing before the Immigration Appeal Board and a copy of the order. All these materials had to be shipped by pony express, so called, across Canada. May I say that that cost over $300 extra for these poor chaps, simply because the Immigration Appeal Board Act says that the period for appeal shall be ten days after the making of the order and the publishing of it in Ottawa.

We are now considering the same sort of thing. Why on earth do we always see this sort of capital city syndrome with regard to certain statutes. Why cannot administrative people be more accommodating and get up off their sterns, to put it frankly, and accommodate the citizen who is being affected, so that no matter whether a citizen lives in Lillooet, British Columbia, or Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland, he shall have ten days' notice, just as the person living in Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton or Ottawa does. I think it is downright unjust to draft statutes this way. To those who say to members representing districts some distance from Ottawa, "Oh, but you people always scream; you are cry babies," I say, if you go to the court for relief the individual concerned must pay the additional cost. I do not see why that should happen. I should like to hear the parliamentary secretary tell me what justification there is for continuing this unjustice that requires the period of the notice to run from the date of the mailing of the notice. The date of receipt is ignored.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I waited for a moment to see if the parliamentary secretary would come forward with an amendment. I am prepared to move one if he is not so prepared. My amendment would be similar to one that was accepted previously. In that case, the requirement for ten days notice was altered to 30 days' notice. In this case, we are considering a serious penalty involving the right to seize personal chattels ten days after notice has been mailed by registered mail. For the reasons that my colleague has enumerated, I think it would be sensible to increase the period involved to 30 days, so that the person concerned can go to the bank and get the money for paying up his arrears, if that is what he wants to do. Surely, the ten day provision in this section is not less unfair than the ten day provision was in the previous section that was amended. In that case, a person had to launch an appeal within ten days of the mailing of the notice in Ottawa. In both cases, I submit, the ten day period would be unreasonable, and in one case an amendment was accepted.

If the government agrees with me, I will sit down. If not, I am prepared to move an amendment to alter the period in section 225 to 30 days. The parliamentary secretary indicates that I should proceed with my amendment. I will do so, Mr. Chairman.

I move:

That section 225 of clause 1 be amended at page 532 by striking out the figure 10 in line 22 and by substituting the figure 30.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, we have no objection at all to this amendment. I feel that measuring time from the date of mailing is the only practical solution; otherwise, we shall be involved in all manner of disputes as to when a particular letter is delivered, when it gets into the hands of the person concerned, if it ever gets there, and that sort of thing, or whether somebody else signed for the registered letter, and so on and so forth. That sort of problem is constantly encountered in the service of documents by mail.

However, the 30-day period should give ample protection to people in all parts of the country; taxpayers will be able to receive their notices in time and react to them, if they choose to do so. I think the hon. member's amendment is quite reasonable. I would not, however, agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West that it would be practical, however desirable it might be in theory, to depart from the time of mailing as the time from which we shall measure the beginning of the period in question.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment will go a long way towards meeting the objections that I have. However, the parliamentary secretary's practice of law must not involve much litigation. After all, most of the service of documents of the courts in his city is done by double registered mail. Certainly on matters of much greater import than this, such as a foreclosure, the documentation is always served by double registered mail. That is the only way. It never causes any particular inconvenience.

I have always found it very difficult to understand the so-called administrative difficulties in the Department of Justice. The provincial authorities have had a reasonably happy experience with double registered mail. This must mean that the people in the federal Department of Justice do not have any faith in the Post Office and that is why they turn down the idea of double registered mail. I know some of them will privately agree that they do not have any faith in it, but publicly they have to put on a much better face than that. By making the period 30-days, there is sufficient latitude and I am quite satisfied there is. I thank the parliamentary secretary for accepting this proposal, albeit I think it an imperfect solution.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I had been about to make some comments on this when I heard my hon. friend's amendment. I am inclined to go along with it. The parliamentary secretary need not worry about there being any division. I want to ask the parliamentary secretary if there have been any judicial decisions on existing sections of either the Income Tax Act or comparable legislation where the courts, having been requested, have given a decision as to what, in their opinion, is the meaning of 10 days notice by registered mail. The parliamentary secretary said this is what the department deems it to be. I have no doubt that this is their intention. Are there judicial decisions which have been given? The parliamentary secretary is now being briefed on this, so I will not repeat what I said.

Mr. Mahoney: On the specific point, Mr. Chairman, I am instructed that the Interpretation Act provides for this matter and the date of mailing is not included in the time period. The day immediately following the day of mailing is day one.

Mr. Baldwin: The date of receipt counts, but the date of mailing does not.

Mr. Mahoney: That is right.

Amendment (Mr. Aiken) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 225, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In section 225(2) we have a further 10-day period for the keeping of goods after seizure. I wonder what the experience has been there. I am looking to the departmental officials to tell us whether they have encountered difficulties or criticisms in the courts from the rather short period because, if memory serves me correctly, I believe that under provincial statute seizures must be retained for longer than 10 days. The charges for storage and so on are the debtor's or the taxpayer's expense. Dealing with the outer reaches, is 10 days frankly adequate from the taxpayers' point of view?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the 10-day period here is the period during which the property is kept at the cost or expense of the taxpayer. At the end of that period, of course, the Crown is at liberty to proceed to the public auction. However, any costs or expenses incurred in retaining the seized chattel beyond the 10-day period is at the expense of the taxpayer. The length of time does not seem to be inappropriate. At this particular point, the taxpayer is very well aware of what is happening and has certainly had every opportunity to avail himself of whatever legal recourse he chooses. The limitation of 10 days is basically to assure that the taxpayers costs are not run up, as well as to give a decent period of time for him to take whatever action he needs to take, if he wants to redeem the goods.

The Deputy Chairman: The question asked by the hon. member for Edmonton West did not re-open the discussion on section 225 which was adopted as amended. We will now go to section 231.

On clause 1—section 231: Investigations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Just a minute, Mr. Chairman. You are going a little fast.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Edmonton West said the Chair goes too fast. The Chair is trying to follow the directions of the committee which flow from the agreement accepted earlier.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I am just rising to hold the fort for the hon. member for Edmonton West. Section 231 is one of the sections the hon. member asked to have stood at the last hearing. I believe he referred particularly to subsections (2) and (15), and perhaps other subsections.

I have some comments on these two subsections. The first comment relates to subsection (2) which requires the minister, within 120 days from the date of seizure of documents, records and papers, to return them to the person from whom they were seized. This is a long period of time to hold documents when copies can be made in a few minutes of any documents which may be relevant to a prosecution. This provision could result in a tremendous loss to a person who had documents seized, particularly if he were trying to carry on a business and the documents seized were essential to his business. It comes to a halt. Not only can he not defend himself on the charges that may be brought against him because his documents have all been seized, but in the meantime he may go out of business. It seems that 120 days is an unreasonable length of time to hold these documents.

At this time I should like also to refer to subsection (15) of section 231 which reads:

> Any person whose affairs are investigated in the course of an inquiry authorized under subsection (7) is entitled to be present and to be represented by counsel throughout the inquiry unless the hearing officer appointed under subsection (8) in relation to the inquiry, on application by the minister or a person giving evidence, orders otherwise in relation to the whole or any part of the inquiry on the ground that the presence of the person and his counsel, or either of them, would be prejudicial to the effective conduct of the inquiry.

I do not see how one could consider the presence of a person who is being investigated as prejudicial to the inquiry. I think it should be a basic right which should not be taken away by the person holding the inquiry. I can see no reason why a person so charged should not be present. If the department believes there are such circumstances, I would be pleased to hear an explanation. But the exception might then become the rule. Whoever is appointed to hold the board of inquiry might feel that the person whose affairs are being investigated would become a nuisance if he were allowed to be present. He might ask too many questions, raise too many points of order, and so on. As I say, I can see no justification on grounds of fairness for excluding from the hearing the person whose affairs are under investigation, or his counsel.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I raised one or two questions on Tuesday last with regard to section 231 and the parliamentary secretary who was conducting the bill suggested we should stand the section.

I have been looking at the record. I think I did refer to section 231. We are again on 231(3). Notice is given or a demand is made by registered letter, and no specified period is set out, I want to know what is the period that is related to registered letters in matters of this kind. We were just looking at notice by way of registered letter and the period there was ten days. We are again getting a demand by way of registered letter and what is the time that is allowed by practice because there is no stated time under 231(3). If a registered letter is satisfactory to establish that a demand has been made in this particular case, why was a registered letter not administratively possible to use as I had suggested under section 225? It seems to me that in one case this is all right, but in the other case administratively it would be difficult. Frankly, I think before the courts one is faced with the same problem, proof of notice. If merely the mailing of a registered letter is sufficient to establish notice, I find that very difficult to understand.

Mr. Mahoney: If there is a customary or common period, I will find out and let the hon. member know in a few moments.

With regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, there is no doubt that to have records tied up for 120 days can be a great inconvenience to a taxpayer. However, the taxpayer does have full right of inspection during the period. It is the practice to permit him to make copies and extracts. I believe the hon. member's recollection of the laws of evidence will confirm my statement that original documents are most desirable as evidence when they are available, and that copies would not be as satisfactory in the case of the department deciding to proceed. From a practical point of view of any taxpayer going out of business as a result of this procedure, if the hon. member has any example of a taxpayer going out of business as a result of this procedure to cite in support of his speculation we should like to hear about it.

With regard to his statement that he cannot imagine circumstances in which a person should be excluded from a hearing under section 231(15) I would point out that this refers to inquiries authorized under subsection (7) for any purpose related to the administration or enforcement of the act. These are not simply inquiries into a taxpayers' affairs with a view to determining possible tax evasion or tax due on unreported revenue. This could involve situations where officials of the department have been bribed, or offered bribes. It could involve many aspects of the administration or maladministration of the act and, in circumstances of that sort, it might very well be necessary to undertake a closed inquiry. The hon. member will appreciate that any prosecutions would proceed in court after the result of the inquiry had been made known. In other circumstances, the taxpayer involved might be an employer. Evidence might be needed from his employees and there might be a possibility of intimidation. In the circumstances, the inquiry officer might decide that the taxpayer being investigated should not be present in order that the interests of justice might best be served.

What we are considering here is a new subsection. Previously, these investigations were all held without the person being investigated having the right to attend the inquiry. There are many situations involving the administration of the act in which an inquiry might be necessary, and at which the person being investigated ought not to be present.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 40, I should inform hon. members of the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment. They are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley East—Airports—Hawkesbury—Action to remove possible safety hazard created by Canadian National Railways; the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands—Finance—Special development loan program—suggested increase in British Columbia allocation—amendment of formula; the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington—Administration of Justice—Granting of parole to Nelles kidnappers—refusal to return licence to person convicted of impaired driving.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary has taken a very interesting position. I can understand that there is a distinction to be made between a departmental investigation involving, possibly, issues such as bribery, intimidation and so on and other cases involving taxpayers directly, but I would have thought such cases could have been brought outside the scope of subsection (7). The subsection is a new one, as is subsection (8) and subsection (15). This involves the consideration of who will be the hearing officers. Will they be from the public service? Will they be departmental people? If so, I agree thoroughly with my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka. I think it is altogether improper and unethical to give a judicial function to a government employee. Then, within the judicial capacity given by this section, the government official who is the hearing officer could, completely within his own discretion, refuse to allow the person whose affairs are being investigated in the course of an inquiry to be present and represented by counsel.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Now, quite obviously if the people whose conduct is being investigated, that may be allright. However, I believe there should be some distinction made here between people in that category and taxpayers. I think it should be quite plain there is no intention by this subsection to say to taxpayers that they cannot be present and cannot be represented by counsel because the hearing officer so decides. The parliamentary secretary has said that the intent is to make this distinction, and I gather from him that he feels there will not be a situation where a taxpayer in respect of whom an investigation is being conducted by a hearing officer will, in fact, be excluded or in fact not be allowed to be represented by counsel.

I think it is a matter of wording this so the plain distinction is drawn between two types of persons whose affairs are being investigated. It should be made absolutely plain in so far as taxpayers are concerned that when their affairs are being investigated that there is the right of appearance by counsel or personal appearance. I think possibly the parliamentary secretary might consider it in that light.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I should point out that under subsection 8 the hearing officer is appointed by the tax review board on application by the minister. It would be contemplated that, in the ordinary course of events in the investigation of a taxpayer's affairs, this would be an independent person and not an officer of the department. I find it difficult to imagine the circumstances under which the tax review board would agree that that type of investigation could be appropriately carried out by an officer of the Department of National Revenue who in essence is one of the parties to the dispute. I think we can and should rely on the tax review board to see that it appoints appropriate people as these inquiry officers.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, in view of what the parliamentary secretary has said, and in view of the other arguments presented, I would make a suggestion to see how the government would react to it. I believe it would meet both points which have been raised. The parliamentary secretary has said there may be parts of an inquiry which do not relate directly to an individual or a certain person and it might be felt that he should not be present. However, if a person is to be excluded from such a hearing, I believe the grounds should be clear and that the onus should be on the hearing officer to establish that nothing will proceed in the absence of that person which affects him. I am wondering if it would be acceptable if all the words after the word "inquiry" in line five were deleted and the words "so far as it relates to such person" substituted. In that case a hearing officer would have to determine whether or not the proceedings or the portion of the proceedings then going forward related to such a person, and the onus would be on the hearing officer—and also to guide himself during the absence of such person—not to deal with the rights of such a person under inquiry in his absence. I think such an amendment would alleviate the possibility which concerns us at the moment. I am throwing out this suggestion.

I repeat that everything after the word "inquiry" in line five should be deleted and that the words "so far as it relates to such person" be substituted. I should like to hear the reaction of the government on that proposal, because I think it would meet the problem which has been posed in respect of parts of an inquiry which do not relate to the person concerned but which relate to some departmental practice or procedure.

Mr. Mahoney: That is quite true, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. member's amendment would nullify the whole section because at the point at which it involves the departmental practice or procedure, presumably the person being investigated is the departmental officer who is alleged to have been corrupt or corrupted. I think that the hon. member should realize that unless the inquiry were to take account of irrelevant or extraneous matters, the person investigated would inevitably be affected.

Mr. Aiken: Then you have destroyed your whole argument that there is any point at which the evidence would be irrelevant. If as the parliamentary secretary says every part of the inquiry would relate to such a person, then why should he be excluded? I thought his argument was the other way around.

Mr. Mahoney: No, Mr. Chairman. I think Judge Hoffman could outline situations for the hon. member where it would be essential that the party be excluded for good reason in order to effectively carry out the hearings. These things do happen. They have happened in our own country in cases some of which are still sub judice and which we cannot discuss. However, there are special circumstances in which it might be advisable, in the interest of justice, that the person be present or be represented by counsel. I have outlined some of these before. I have to go back to the fact that this is an inquiry officer appointed by the Tax Review Board and not an officer from the Department of National Revenue who is making this decision. The decision can be made only on application either by the minister or by some witness who is appearing before the inquiry. It is not one that the inquiry officer can institute. So I believe there are built-in checks. I believe we have indicated the policy desired that these people be present or represented wherever possible. I have also pointed out that these are administrative proceedings. This is an inquiry.

What happens in the judicial sense will depend on the resolution of that inquiry and will be disposed of in the ordinary courts of the land, in the Tax Review Board and so on. Frankly, my sense of justice is not offended by this provision. I think it is a very positive and new provision in the bill which will give rights which heretofore have not been enjoyed by taxpayers. I think perhaps it is overdue, but I do not believe this particular subsection offends any basic principle of justice.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I find it rather difficult to follow the parliamentary secretary at this point. As he said this is a new section. I cannot say that I am satisfied that the administrative practices under this section have been good because there have been no administrative practices under this particular section. On the other hand, I must say that I complimented the President of the Treasury Board the other day, and through him the government, for introducing the concept that the person involved could either be present or be represented by counsel when his affairs are being examined. Naturally, I did not say anything about the proviso. After all, the right that is being recognized is new. Then, there is the proviso according to which, the parliamentary secretary tells us, the minister must apply. But to whom must he apply in order to exclude the taxpayer and or his counsel? The hearing officer is appointed by the minister himself.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: By the Tax Review Board.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the parliamentary secretary will look at subsections (7) and (8) he will see that the person who may be appointed a hearing officer may or may not be an employee of the Department of National Revenue. The person appointed is subject to confirmation by an order of the Tax Review Board.

Mr. Mahoney: May I clarify this? Under subsection (7), the person appointed to conduct an inquiry may or may not be an officer of the department. He is analogous to the prosecuting attorney, if you like. Then, the hearing officer before whom the inquiry is conducted is appointed under subsection (8), and he is analagous to the judge, if I may make that analogy. He is the one who is appointed by the Tax Review Board. So, there are two different people.

Mr. Baldwin: Does the parliamentary secretary not contemplate that on the application to the Tax Review Board the minister will nominate a person and that when he applies, by means of whatever procedure would be adopted, he would say to the Tax Review Board "I am requesting the appointment of a hearing officer and I suggest such-and-such a person." I am not suggesting that this will be the course pursued, but I would like the parliamentary secretary to say that there is no intent on the part of the department for the minister to nominate the hearing officer.

Secondly, while the parliamentary secretary is considering that, let me refer to the point raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. While I realize that any commitments or statements made in this House are not binding in a court of law, nevertheless perhaps the parliamentary secretary might indicate that it is the intent of the government, in dealing with subsection (15) and its implementation, not to deprive a taxpayer whose affairs are being investigated of the right to be present and represented by counsel. Is he able to give that reassurance that that is the intent and the practice which will be observed so far as the department is concerned.

Mr. Mahoney: May I say on the first point that I think the Tax Review Board would be most reluctant to appoint an officer of the Department of National Revenue as the hearing officer in an investigation involving a dispute between a taxpayer and the department. I can visualize circumstances where the subject matter of the inquiry is departmental administration rather than a dispute between a taxpayer and the department where it might be appropriate, although I think that a competent, independent person would be more appropriate in almost any case.

On the second point, I cannot give the assurance for the simple reason that the inquiry officer will have to decide under subsection (15) that:

—the presence of the person and his counsel, or either of them, would be prejudicial to the effective conduct of the inquiry.

I do not have the imagination to be able to say that that would not occur in the case of an inquiry into the affairs of a taxpayer. I hope it would not occur often. The intent is that the person be allowed to be present or to be represented by counsel in all cases, and only when it is prejudicial to the inquiry does the presiding officer who is appointed by the Tax Review Board come to be called upon to make the decision to exclude the person. But circumstances might very well dictate to him that the ends of justice and the purpose of the inquiry would be best served by excluding him. That is why the option is there for the officer to make that ruling.

Mr. Baldwin: To sum it up then, there are no guidelines. The hearing officer has the power, without any direction from the statute, to exclude on his own discretion a taxpayer and or his counsel from an inquiry.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was very interesting to hear the observations of the parliamentary secretary and to hear him say that he did not think the special hearing officer would be an employee of the Department of National Revenue. It should not be too strange if the practice were adopted, because under the Immigration Act when a prospective immigrant to this country who wishes to be landed is examined by an immigration officer as to his qualifications for being landed and is then turned down, the appeal is by way of a special inquiry under a special inquiry officer who may be a fellow employee of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, in the same blessed branch, and who is asked to rule upon a prior decision of his colleague. That is why there are 7,500 cases before the Immigration Appeal Board now. I hope that at the appropriate time the appropriate minister may make the necessary changes in this respect. This is why there is this built-in abuse where one man is asked to rule on a prior decision of his colleague. This is what we find when we read the transcripts. I am not discussing the Immigration Act and the practices thereunder, but what I am saying is that this can happen within the realm of government administration and it is conceivable that certain officers of the Department of National Revenue could be recommended as special hearing officers. There is nothing to prevent this.

Mr. Baldwin: I admire the confidence of the parliamentary secretary. Let me say that many things are done in this House which have a different impact outside the House than was contemplated. I can recall the early days of my practice of law in Peace River. At that time under the Fisheries Act—it may still be there for all I know and I am sorry the Minister of Fisheries has left the House—an enforcement officer of the Department of Fisheries could investigate alleged infractions against the Fisheries Act, lay a charge, appear as the justice of the peace, and try the case. The parliamentary secretary smiles.

I remember raising this point during the course of a dispute before the officer of the Fisheries Department who thought he had every right to do this. He was indignant that I would suggest it was not the thing to do, and finally I had to proceed by way of certiorari and have the conviction quashed. But I am quite convinced that when the House of Commons was discussing this particular clause some minister attempted to sooth the doubts and anxieties of members of the opposition by saying, "This does not mean anything. No one would operate in this way under it." But the facts of life are that when these powers are given, officials act under them and injustices do occur.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I am not going to say any more. I did contemplate moving an amendment. The government seems to be in a very flexible position today regarding amendments but I will not try my luck. When one considers the extent to which these provisions will be reflected in actual practice, one can see there is ample scope for grave injustices. I repeat that injustices will occur, and before too long a period has elapsed these sections will have to be amended along the lines that we have suggested. Certainly after the next election, when we form the government, we will do it if it has not been done before then.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not want to filibuster this worthy section, but I would not wish to see the debate on this particular point terminate with any aspersions directed towards the Tax Review Board, which is a judicial body, and which is the body charged with appointing this person who conducts the inquiry, the hearing officer. I am confident that this board can be expected to exercise its powers of appointment as well as its powers in other respects in a judicial fashion. I have every confidence that this is a very progressive step and will not be abused.

Mr. Baldwin: So far as I can see this step is far more conservative than progressive. No one is casting aspersions on the Tax Review Board, but it is my experience through long professional life of having to combat people engaged in the administration of government that, for what they deem to be good and sufficient purposes and reasons, they have no objection to utilizing all the scope of ambiguously worded sections of this kind, which grant great powers, and that under those conditions injustices occur.

I will leave it at that, Mr. Chairman. I think the parliamentary secretary is wrong. I think the situation is much different from what he contemplates, and I prophesy that these powers will be abused. We have done our job as a responsible opposition. We have directed the attention of the committee to the dangers which exist. Having done that, and having filed our caveat, if the government insists on passage of these provisions without any amendment then the responsibility rests on it.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a very important principle involved here. That is why I wish to support the position taken by the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Peace River. All of us can recall that when Department of Veterans Affairs legislation was being debated here some months ago, one of the important principles then established was that of a separate and distinct appellate division. It was the feeling that if the person called upon to conduct a review was, in effect, the same person or administrative body that made the decision in the first place, then the kind of problem mentioned by the hon. member for Peace River had a greater chance to arise, and discrimination could occur.

On behalf of a number of my constituents I have made requests for review boards to various ministries, including National Health and Welfare, Manpower and Immigration, National Defence and others. In most cases I have found that an independent review takes place, but in others I had a strong suspicion that the review was conducted by the people, or friends of the people who made the decision in the first place, and that they were content to defend the original decision. The reason for the existence of any appellate court is to provide an open and fresh look at a particular problem. I think this is best achieved if the party first involved in the decision making is not connected with the review.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if the parliamentary secretary wishes to reply to the hon. member who has just spoken, but if not we could proceed with the voting.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall section 231 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 231 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall section 239 carry? There is an amendment from the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, have we passed section 235? I thought it had been stood.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We just passed 231.

Mr. Aiken: Are we now proceeding to 235 or 239?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We are on 239 and, as I said, there is an amendment from the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that 235 has been passed. I think it has been stood.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I understood section 235 had been passed. I said we just passed 231. Shall 235 pass then?

On clause 1—section 235: Penalty for failure to make returns.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, section 235 is tied in with section 239, and I want to hear the reply to my amendment to section 239. Actually 235 is the present counterpart to 239 (2), because 235 says it is an offence under the act to fail to file a return under certain subsections, and 235(2) sets out other circumstances under which a person who fails to act in accordance with regulations passed under authority of "paragraph 221" may be prosecuted.

First of all, what about the regulations? Are they ready? I see looks of surprise among some of the officials. If they had been present last week they would know whereof I speak, because at that time I questioned whether certain regulations were ready since they have just as much import with regard to the administration of the act as do the statutory provisions.

Section 235 is a classic example. It is conceivable that these are merely a carry forward of section 129(1)(2) of the present act and that there are regulations in existence with regard to them. As I have pointed out again and again, however, this is a new act. All is on the table, including the regulations. I want to know if it is proposed to make any new regulations, or are they to be the same as heretofore in regard to section 235?

I spoke about sections 235 and 239. Under section 235, for instance, it is an offence to fail to file a return, and it may be very important that returns are consistently not made following demands—as an open defiance of the act and perhaps a suppression of revenues—but the penalty provided is on summary conviction. Mr. Chairman, there is another provision which says that there can be another penalty. Section 239(1) lays out another type of penalty for non-compliance with the act. Subsection (2) says that anything that is in non-compliance of the act under subsection (1) may be the subject of an indictment. So an offence under section 235 could prove to be indictable.

I ask why the indictment procedure is upheld in some cases and not in others. As I said already in reference to section 239 (2), it is completely contrary to any sense of justice for a minister or official to decide that a man shall go to jail. That is the effect of section 239 (2) which I shall argue in due course. I have made my preliminary argument with regard to section 235. I have some preliminary questions in that respect, but the real thrust of what I want to get at is section 239 (2).

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that particularly bothers me about the combination of sections 221 (2), 235 and 239. Under section 221 (2), to which we raised objection but on which we were overruled, regulations under the act shall, if the regulation so provides, be effective with reference to a period before it was published. We already have that on the books; the section has been passed. It seems to me that it meant that if there is a prosecution under section 235, which we are now considering, for failing to make a return as and, when required by regulation—under section 221—a person can be charged with committing an offence which did not exist at the time he committed it. In other words, the regulation can be backdated: it could be published on September 30, effective the previous June 30.

What would happen to a person who on July 30 failed to comply with a regulation which was not then promulgated or published? Under the combination of these three clauses he could be found guilty under section 235 and sent to jail for two months under section 239 for failing to comply with a provision under section 221 which did not exist at the time he breached it. This seems to me the most ridiculous part of the Income Tax Act that we have before us.

It is all very well to say that the Department of National Revenue would never do such a thing. I do not suppose anybody would intentionally do it, but I think it behooves members of this House to make sure that such a situation cannot happen and that we are passing sensible laws. This is an example of the most senseless group of sections I have ever seen. Section 221 was not well drafted, in view of sections 235 and 239; but I am afraid we cannot go back to section 221 as it has been passed. We cannot go back to section 221 (2) and I suppose I should not be reflecting on the vote, and I am not, any more than to say that since it has been accepted it has left us in a ridiculous situation with regard to sections 235 and 239.

Section 239 gives the minister the right to proceed by way of indictment against a person for failing to file a return under section 235. He proceeds by way of indictment and the penalty is a minimum of two months in jail. Section 235 specifically mentions regulations under section 221 which can be promulgated and become effective before they are even published or made known to the public. Ignorance of the law is no excuse—but surely ignorance of a law which does not at that time exist, ignorance of a law which at that time is not known to the public, has not been promulgated and has not been published, should be a defence. Yet that is not the way in which this combination of sections has been drawn. From the beginning we objected to the absolute right of the minister to proceed by way of indictment under section 235 particularly, which can be nothing more than failure to file a return.

To carry the argument further, the offence could amount to nothing more than failure to file a return in the prescribed form. If the regulation is introduced on September 30, to be effective on July 30, there is no way that a person could comply with it. But he could be sent to jail for two months for non-compliance. If my reasoning is wrong, I should like to have it corrected.

I have looked at this matter in connection with sections 239 and 221. I do not see how the department can justify section 239(2) in concert with section 235—the section we are considering—unless 239 is amended in the manner proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West. If accepted, the question of sentence would be left to the presiding judge, and the minister merely on his own authority would not be permitted to proceed by way of indictment. The judge would have to determine the circumstances of the case in sentencing. Frankly, I am not even prepared to go that far. There are some judges whom I would not trust, either. I will not name them, but I would not trust them any more than I would trust the government. I have appeared before them.

If the present provisions of the bill become law, judges will have no option but to convict. I can almost hear a judge saying to an accused, "I know that this is a ridiculous situation, but I am required by the law to convict you and send you to jail for two months for failing to file a return, which requirement did not exist at the time you were supposed to file the return." What can a judge do? He will have no option but to enforce a ridiculous provision in the law. I will say no more until the parliamentary secretary tells me that there is something wrong with my argument and that what I have suggested cannot take place.

Mr. Mahoney: I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is within the power of the Governor in Council by regulation to create retroactive criminal consequences. I think the hon. member contemplates that this might happen. I am advised that that is beyond the power of the Governor in Council and that the courts would not uphold such regulations.

Mr. Aiken: Then why did we pass section 221(2) which provides:

> No regulation made under this act has effect until it has been published in the Canada Gazette but, when so published, a regulation shall, if it so provides, be effective with reference to a period before it was published.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, it is contemplated that there will be necessity for numerous regulations to have retroactive effect after this act has been implemented, in order to make sure that there is no punitive impact on taxpayers as a result of the transitional period. It is anticipated that these retroactive regulations will be relieving in nature. It is certainly not contemplated that punitive regulations will be passed. Indeed, as I indicated earlier, such punitive regulations would not be legal if they were passed.

We recognize the necessity for relieving regulations. For example, let us consider the instance, raised earlier and debated at some length, involving the B.C. teachers and the credit union—a matter in which the hon. member for Edmonton West took great interest. In that case it would be necessary to pass a regulation that would be retroactive to budget day so that the type of investment these people have been making will be a qualified investment for the purposes of their pension plan. That is the sort of thing that is contemplated.

Mr. Aiken: I appreciate what the intention may be, but regardless of all these fine intentions the act specifies that regulations can be published and be effective prior to the publication date. The situation I alluded to could arise. What I am trying to do is to include a provision, either under section 235 which we are now considering, or section 239 which will prevent the suggested situation from arising and which the parliamentary secretary says is not likely to happen. If in the future section 221 is deemed to be illegal, or if regulations passed under that section are found to be illegal, why should we pass such regulations now? Why should we not include in the bill a saving provision?

The parliamentary secretary has suggested that we must pass retroactive regulations now because they will all be retroactive to the date on which the bill will become effective. I am objecting to passing regulations which will not be in existence at the time of a prosecution. I think we should make sure, either by amendment to section 235 or to section 239, that such situation cannot arise. The parliamentary secretary has suggested that you cannot legally pass retroactive criminal legislation. I do not agree with him. Talking off the top of my head, I suggest that we often pass criminal retroactive legislation.

An hon. Member: That is how the public order bill worked.

Mr. Aiken: Yes. When we passed the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act it was to be effective on a date prior to its implementation. I also cite the War Measures Act. That act was invoked by order in council and Parliament approved it some days later. It could not have been approved in a form different from that in which it was proposed.

I have given two examples but I can think of many others to show that we have passed criminal legislation and dated it back, so to speak. That is why section 239(2) is so dangerous. It gives the minister the right to proceed by way of indictment in the sort of situation to which I have alluded. I cannot understand why that should be done. We have not yet dealt with section 239, but since we are dealing with these matters perhaps the parliamentary secretary would reassure us concerning the amendment to section 239 which the hon. member for Edmonton West has moved. Is he prepared to accept this or a simiar amendment? If he is, some of the dangers I have outlined may be eliminated.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding all the pious hopes of the parliamentary secretary and protestations regarding the good behaviour in future of the administrative people, I think that what the parliamentary secretary said is, frankly, fatuous. The parliamentary secretary said that no government or administration would make retroactive legislation that has a penal effect. Then what in the blazes is he talking about in section 235? Section 235 provides:

• (5:50 p.m.)

Every person who has failed to make a return as and when required by regulation under subsection 215(4), by regulation under section 221—

It does not say section 221(1) or 221(2); it says section 221. That means all the section.

—or by subsection 227(2) is liable to a penalty of $10 a day for each day of default but not exceeding in all $2,500.

In other words, the regulations under section 221 can, and specifically do, create an offence under the act. Section 235(2) provides:

Every person who fails to comply with a regulation made under paragraph 221(1)(e)—

Section 221(1)(e) provides:

—required to make an information return to supply a copy of the information return or of a prescribed portion thereof to the person or persons in respect of whose income the information return or portion thereof relates.

In other words, it is with regard to his employees. If he fails to do that, he can be fined $10 a day up to a maximum of $2,500. That is non-compliance with the act. As I have said, anything which is made an offence under section 235 is ipso facto an offence under section 239(1). Under section 239(1) there is full authority to proceed against the individual by way of indictment. As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka said, the net result is a regulation and it is spelled out in section 235. Any kind of regulation can be made with a retroactive effect requiring compliance. Within the neutral period there could be non-compliance. This then becomes an offence under the law, with the consequences I have pointed out.

Let no one say we are stretching things. If there is not to be any offence created, and if it is not the intention to use the section for that purpose, it is not required within the law. That is simple. Therefore, why this confusion? I want the parliamentary secretary to tell us that what we are suggesting cannot in fact happen. He can say that he does not think it will happen. But it is very possible it can. The language is clear. It is absolutely possible for it to happen. Therefore, it should not be in the act.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I wish we could get some assurance on this section before we pass it. I am not ready to let section 235 pass until we know where we are going on section 239. We have not yet had an answer. It is almost six o'clock. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would like to consider the position over the dinner hour. This is a serious point. It is the basis of the whole administration and enforcement section of the Income Tax Act.

All the other things are there, the whole 700 pages, but the administration and enforcement of it are contained within the three sections we are now considering. We would be irresponsible if we permitted this section to be passed into law without a good deal more assurance than we now have. Either section 235 or section 239(2) requires amendment. If the government clearly states it does not intend that any prosecution shall proceed under a regulation which is promulgated subsequent to an alleged offence having been committed, all they have to do is write it into the income tax bill and we will be happy.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were discussing section 235.

Mr. Aiken: I rise merely to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the government has anything to offer the committee with regard to the problems we raised this afternoon in connection with sections 235, 221 and 239(2).

Mr. Mahoney: I wish I could satisfy the hon. member better than I am sure I shall be able to do. First, I must take some exception to the suggestion he made before dinner that I had not responded to his questions earlier. I believe I did respond, though I can understand that he might not be satisfied with the answers I gave. But that is another question. We are dealing here with an area of the bill which, frankly, does not lend itself to the provision of the happy answers I might otherwise be able to supply. Experience of enforcement indicates that we require these sections very much unchanged.

We have no amendments to put forward, neither have any amendments been forthcoming from elsewhere that we are prepared to accept. This is the sort of thing the hon. member for Edmonton West, in his previous position of parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, no doubt had to live with. I am sure at that time he presented to his minister many suggestions as to how the sections might be improved. The fact is that the sections before us are a carryover from the existing act. We feel that in the practical sense, in their practical application, there is little room for inequity. If there is, we shall be prepared to move and act accordingly.

Section 221 is not a new section and it is not a punitive section; it is one which is referred to in section 235. A number of the provisions in that section are new. They have been made in anticipation that regulations will be required to relieve taxpayers of unfair burdens during the transitional period. It is for this reason that we anticipate that regulations will be passed having a retroactive effect.

I realize that hon. members opposite can argue that regulations might be passed which would impose a burden of some description upon taxpayers on a retroactive basis. They can argue this in theory but in practice I do not think the courts would uphold any regulation which imposed a burden on taxpayers retroactively because, essentially, that would be the imposition of a tax, which is the prerogative of Parliament, and not of the Governor in Council. Again, I regret that my response is not likely to satisfy the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka or the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In that case, I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he look at the implications. He may say these are carryovers and have never given rise to any problems. But it is only in the past session that the House approved the Statutory Instruments Act. It would be an extremely interesting situation if the committee which will be set up at some time to review statutory instruments were to find that the effect of a regulation was totally unfair, though the minister might have been relying on the authority given him by the House to impose such a regulation.

This is the difficulty. Allowance has been made in section 221(2) for retroactive regulations. During the currency of the existing act there has been no such thing as the Statutory Instruments Act. The parliamentary secretary should remember what the Minister of Justice said when that act was passed—that orders in council or regulations would be subject to screening by the committee, and to adverse recommendations, if they applied with retroactive effect.

• (8:10 p.m.)

How does Parliament square-up a recommendation from a committee of the House which says that this regulation is bad in so far as it is retroactive. Yet the House has authorized retroactive regulations in this legislation. I cannot square this up at all. I know the House has given approval to section 221(2), but the effect comes home in section 235 because that section speaks of section 221 and provides a penalty for an offence under any regulation passed pursuant to the whole of section 221.

I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would be prepared to accept a proviso to section 235 in respect of section 221. As my colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka indicated, there is good reason for section 221(2) in order to give effect to the provision that no regulation shall be effective until it has been published in the Canada Gazette, and to that part we say "Amen." We agree with that, but we do not agree that under section 235 there can be a penalty imposed on a taxpayer under the retroactive effect of section 221(2).

I am wondering whether we might insert a proviso within section 235 which would clearly eliminate any question of penalty. I admit the regulation would have to be effective, but there should be no penalty for an offence committed under a regulation before its publication, regardless of the effective date of the regulation. This is the point which bothers us in respect of this section. Is the parliamentary secretary prepared to accept an amendment? We would have to sit down and arrive at some careful wording here. However, that is the idea we want to get across. We want to eliminate any question of a penalty under the retroactive portion of the regulation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, while the parliamentary secretary is considering these weighty words I wish to reinforce what my hon. friend from Edmonton West has said. I sat on the statutory instruments committee. Before the bill came into the House a lengthy report was tabled by the committee and accepted. Everyone spoke glowing words about it and said what a wonderful report it was. It was unanimous. There was complete agreement on all sides of the House.

I suggest one of the essentials upon which the committee founded its report was that regulations should not have a retroactive effect. I was not in the House when section 221(2) was passed. My friends were here and of course made their comments about it. I am sure had I been here I would have spoken very strongly indeed, because here we have a report from the committee on statutory instruments, which sat for some time, received a lot of guidance had the benefit of the experience of the United Kingdom and Australia and finally brought in a report saying unanimously that regulations must not be retroactive in effect.

Here we have the case of Parliament going one way in respect of a report of the committee of the House, and the government going in the opposite direction by ignoring it and trying to pass two trains on one track. This section has been passed and nothing can be done about it. However, there will be an opportunity for the scrutiny committee to do something. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary would try to light a little fire under the appropriate part of the anatomy of his respective ministers in order to get the committee set up.

I would feel a little safer and worry less about the taxpayers of this country if there were in effect today a parliamentary scrutiny committee charged with examining regulations passed and which, under the terms of the Statutory Instruments Act and pursuant to the very definite mandate given by the committee to this House, would look at a number of things including whether or not regulations passed should have a retroactive effect. I know there are ministers in the cabinet, some members on the government side—I except a lot of people here, but not all of them—and people in the administrative services who are very anxious about what will happen when this committee is created, in respect of the sins of omission and commission which have been discreetly covered over but are contained in regulations, amendments to regulations, orders in council and amendments to orders in council which rarely, if ever, see the light of day. A lot of people are concerned whether a committee will ever be established under the Statutory Instruments Act to look into this matter about which my hon. friend from Edmonton West has spoken.

I see the Acting Prime Minister sitting over there. I do not wish to provoke him into debate. He has been very patient in listening to me and my hon. friends, and I hope he is learning something. But I should like him to stand up and say that before this session ends the government will establish a joint committee under the Statutory Instruments Act so that when we come to situations where regulations are passed pursuant to Bill C-259 which have a retroactive effect and under which retroactively people can be punished, fined or sent to jail, there will be a scrutiny committee to pay attention to governmental misdemeanours and, I hope, challenge the government and bring the matter back to Parliament for debate and reconsideration. That is the purpose of such a committee.

For months I have been attempting to get this committee established. We are prepared to deliver our list of nominees to this committee. An additional reason now is the bill before the House and the regulations which permit the government to do these things. These things might be done for the very best of reasons, but it is iniquitous, wrong and vicious to have a situation where a government can by regulation put people in a position where they will be punished by fine and/or imprisonment for having committed an offence prior to the enactment of the regulation. For this reason, if the government is not prepared to change this provision and accept the reasoned and logical arguments of my friends, I hope they will recognize the problem and be prepared to expedite the establishment of the statutory instruments committee for the purpose of looking at the problems created by this section.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: First, I do understand that the Statutory Instruments Act has been proclaimed and will become operative on the first of next year. Therefore, any regulations that are likely to be passed under the act will be passed subsequent to the Statutory Instruments Act coming into force, and there is no reason of which I am aware to think that the regulations passed under this act will not be subject to the scrutiny that the hon. member for Peace River has indicated.

Second, we are most reluctant to concede that there is an opportunity under this bill to pass punitive regulations with retroactive effect, and for that reason we have no amendment to propose, However, I say very sincerely to the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that if they have an amendment to propose to this section which would improve the position from their point of view and solve the problem as they see it, we will certainly look at it very seriously.

However, it is our position that any regulations passed under this legislation that would have a punitive effect on any taxpayer retroactively would be ultra vires of the delegated authority given under this bill. I want to make that very clear. That is the reason we do not want, by any amendment that we might offer, to imply that such regulations could indeed have any force and effect. However, I will await with interest any amendment proposed by hon. members and we will certainly consider it seriously. I think hon. members have acknowledged in their general comments that this is a complex problem. I would not be prepared to see their amendment voted on immediately it is proposed, but we will certainly look at it seriously and if it is not acceptable to the government we will have a reasoned argument for rejecting it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I accept that there can be a need for section 221 (2), but where I do not want it to have effect is in a punitive section such as section 235 which we are considering. Therefore, I suggest on reflection that notwithstanding the fact that the road to Hades is paved with good intentions—and I know these are all good intentions of the parliamentary secretary—the punitive feature in a regulation would not be ultra vires of the fact; it would not impose an additional tax but it could be justified on the basis of the existence of section 221 (2) which gives full power to pass a retroactive regulation—and Parliament has consciously made a decision on that matter. Therefore, with regard to section 235 I move:

That subsection 235 (1) at page 547 be amended by deleting in line 22 the figures 221 and substituting therefor 221 (1).

Under section 221 there is all the power and specification of the type of regulation that can be made. Under section 235 there would be no penalty or retroactive feature because 221 (2) gives retroactive effect to a regulation. I know this will require some study but I make this motion, if it is accepted by the Chair, for consideration by departmental officials at the appropriate time.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members have heard the motion.

Mr. Mahoney: Certainly, we take no procedural objection to this amendment and unless there is further comment on the section we ask that it be stood overnight to permit the law officers to consider it and to give any legal advise that may be desirable.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that section 235 and the amendment be stood at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1, section 235, stood.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now proceed with section 239, on which there is an amendment by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

On clause 1—section 239: Offences.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not think I need add much more on this section because we argued it at great length the other night and we argued it at considerable length this afternoon. However, I wish to reiterate some points for the great number of hon. members who are in the committee tonight. We are appreciative of the fact that the lash seems to have been imposed with effect last Thursday, and that gracing the House tonight are more cabinet members than we had during the question period. They are gainfully employed this evening.

I do not think there is one hon. member across the way who would want to be in the position of the minister who has to decide whether a taxpayer shall go to jail. The Minister of Justice, as Attorney General for Canada, has the right to do that under section 239 (2) because non-compliance with the act within the terms of the section is a matter of fact. Wilfully refusing to file a return demands a great number of actions under section 239. These are matters of fact. There is no question that there may be other than a finding of guilty or a plea of guilty, yet by the minister proceeding through the indictment route there is a mandatory jail sentence.

I put this case to anybody who has had any connection with the Department of National Revenue or the Department of Justice. Some time ago I had three years' connection with one of those departments. At that time it was the Minister of National Revenue who decided these matters, not the Attorney General. As soon as it became apparent to a taxpayer that the government was likely to proceed by the indictment route, you could bet your bottom dollar that the next morning a friend of a friend of a friend of the taxpayer was on the telephone to the minister, putting the pressure on him not to go by the indictment route because the individual involved would have to go to jail. I defy any member opposite to say he wants to be put in the position of a minister who is under pressure to decide whether a particular non-compliance with the act must result in the defaulting taxpayer going to jail.

My amendment would provide for proceeding by way of summary conviction with the judge, usually a provincial judge in these cases, having the power to impose a sentence of up to five years imprisonment, which is what is provided in section 239 (2). Already under section 239(1) the judge has power to impose a fine or jail sentence, or both, but the limit is two years. Surely to goodness it is elementary justice that there is only one instrument to sentence a man to jail, and that is sentence after a court hearing, by a properly constituted judge from whom there is an appeal. Under the indictment procedure there is a mandatory jail sentence and there can be no appeal except as to the length of sentence.

Is the Income Tax Act to be that tough? In many respects it is tougher than the Criminal Code. Is that the kind of law we are asked to pass in this so-called enlightened day, when the Minister of Justice and his colleague the Solicitor General are talking about a more enlightened correctional policy and a more enlightened administration of justice? It is said that we in Canada are sending too many people to jail, yet in this instance we are being asked to provide a mandatory jail sentence for a taxpayer.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

The quantum of the fine must also be considered. Section 239(1)(f) provides for "a fine of not less than 25 per cent and not more than double the amount of the tax" involved, and there is also the possibility of a sentence of up to two years in jail. I provide in my amendment for an option of up to five years in jail, which is the penalty provided for in 239(2), where presumably in the past there was a special penalty reserved for the really bad boys. Why does the minister have to make the decision that a man shall go to jail? Why is it he or his officials who decide, by choosing the compulsory imprisonment route? I object to that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, if one stays around here a while he learns a lot of law, but I confess I have been finding the learning process in relation to this section a bit slow. I am not going to say anything to show my ignorance or to underline my difficulty, but I wish some of the lawyers in the House—and we have scads of them here tonight—would give a serious answer to the contention put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

I confess that as I read the section it seems to me there still has to be a conviction by a court. In other words, it is the court that sends somebody to jail. Yet the hon. member for Edmonton West, who is a distinguished member of the Bar, has said a good many times that the way the act is set up it is the minister who decides that someone shall go to jail. If he is right, this is pretty bad. If he is not right, then I wish some of the distinguished members of the Bar on the other side would explain it. I am not trying to resolve the issue; I am just saying that as a neophyte in this area I would like to know what this argument is all about.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Edmonton West is both overdramatizing and oversimplying the situation. It is not the Minister of Justice who decides whether someone will go to jail: that is a determination made by the courts.

What does happen is that the Minister of justice may determine in this particular case, as I understand he can in some others, that the matter is of such a serious nature that it should proceed by indictment rather than by summary conviction before a magistrate; in other words, that it must proceed by indictment to the Supreme Court. At that point the court must still decide, on the evidence presented to it, whether an offence has been committed and whether a conviction is warranted. Once the court decides that, then certainly this section does come into operation: it does provide a minimum penalty of two months' imprisonment. But it is not the Minister of Justice who determines whether a person is guilty or innocent, or what the penalty will be. That decision is the decision of the court.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, in any criminal offence there are two elements. First, there is the question of guilt, and on it the minister can have no concern. That is for the court to determine. The second element in any criminal offence is that of punishment. In the kind of society in which we live, the question of punishment really becomes of equal importance—and sometimes even more important, particularly in tax laws—than the question of guilt.

Here we have a minister of the Crown making a judicial determination.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The minister of the Crown may say, "In my opinion and in my administrative capacity I have decided that the offence this person is to be charged with is so serious that it warrants a penalty of so many months or years in jail." That is a judicial determination. No minister and no administrative official should have that power. I agree that in evaluating whether the gravity of the offence and the surrounding circumstances warrant a man's going to jail is something that should be determined by a court. However, in this case the court has no alternative; the man must be sent to jail as a result of an administrative decision by the minister. I think that is a very simple point and I hope my friend from Winnipeg North Centre sees that distinction.

I saw that the hon. member for High Park, who is a lawyer of no mean distinction, was quite interested in this question and I would be glad to hear his opinion on it. I am sure he has the welfare of the ordinary person at heart and I think he will agree with me. I know that at one time he had some ideas about the right of a minister to make decisions of this kind. He might be willing to agree with me now or when a vote is called.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is widespread practice under the Criminal Code, and it was at the time the hon. member's party formed the government, that you have this choice of proceeding by way of indictment or summary conviction. Is the hon. member suggesting that this choice ought to be taken out of the criminal statutes?

Mr. Baldwin: Each one to be considered on its merits. When this government brings before us the Criminal Code for general review, I think we will eliminate a lot of this problem.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In all cases?

Mr. Baldwin: No, but in many cases. It should not be an administrative decision. If there were ever any ground for it, it certainly should not be a Liberal government that has to make the decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What the hon. member is saying is that with regard to some offences under the Criminal Code he would leave the choice in there, but for middle-class crimes such as income tax the hon. gentleman does not want his friends to go to jail.

Mr. Baldwin: Does the hon. gentleman not recognize that with regard to punitive sections, so far as tax penalties go there is a difference. The rigid liquor control laws failed at one time in some parts of Canada for that very same reason—these alternatives were not given. We often find that when the state is involved and is worried about its revenues, it would much rather send a man to jail for five years than impose a penalty more in line with that imposed for a similar criminal offence. This is a red herring, and the Minister of National Defence is a man of red herrings: he holds that distinction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: This is a red herring, and it is a very ancient one because it smells mouldy.

Mr. Gibson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, if it is a better question than the one asked by the Minister of National Defence.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gibson: I wonder if my friend would permit a question.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope it is a better one than the last.

Mr. Gibson: Without trying to score a debating point, and with respect, I wonder if my hon. friend is familiar with the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal which recently decided an issue of this kind under the Bill of Rights. The discretion of the Crown was challenged because the Attorney General, through the Crown Attorney, was given the choice of proceeding by way of indictment or summary conviction in the case of Regina v. Smyth, who is now deceased. In that case the Court of Appeal came to the conclusion that despite the fact there was a more severe penalty by indictment than by summary conviction, the Crown had always had discretion to choose which form of prosecution it would use. I wonder if my friend is aware of that? If he had read that case he might have a different view.

Mr. Baldwin: That was a judicial interpretation. The judges were saying what the law was, but I am saying what the law should be. I think it is time we got away from the position where we are putting rights of this kind in the hands of ministers of the Crown.

I go back to what my friend the Minister of National Defence said. There may be some circumstances under the Criminal Code where this discretion is necessary, but very few. I should like to see a complete review of the Criminal Code so that this improper discretion would be eliminated. This authority should not rest with administrative officials. If we have courts, if we have judges, if we have juries and give this right to them, we should not leave it in the hands of a minister. I would not want to see it in the hands of a minister who formed part of a Progressive Conservative government any more than I would want to see it in the hands of a minister who formed part of the Liberal government. I say nothing about my friends to the left because they will never form a government, so I do not need to worry about that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: Hon. members may laugh at this, but the time is coming when the people of this country will look askance at this kind of authority being given to a government to exercise its discretion. It is wrong and I think it is time we stopped it. I am glad my hon. friend from Edmonton West raised this question and that we have a chance to make these points. I do not know whether we will have any amendments, but I suggest to my friends on the other side that they should look very seriously at this as a matter of principle as well as with respect to this particular issue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member for High Park wish to ask a question?

Mr. Deakon: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth, I still ask, why does the Crown have the authority to choose which way we will proceed? It is wrong because that is imposing one law on one group of citizens and another law on another group. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River in this regard.

Mr. Mahoney: That is the best argument I have heard today.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are getting into a philosophical question. I listened to some of the comments and would suggest that what we are doing in some instances is putting this income tax legislation above the Criminal Code. That is what troubles me. I wish to give only one example in this generally related group of sections. Section 243 says, "notwithstanding the Criminal Code or any other statute". It seems to me that this is a bad thing.

Another point along the same lines has been advanced from time to time by other hon. members, including the hon. member for High Park. I agree with his philosophy. In section 244 there is another example. Any criminal lawyer knows that there are certain defences open to an accused when an information is defective on its face. In this income tax legislation we see again that it does not make any difference how deficient, negligent or inappropriate an information may be, or how it is drawn—there is no way an accused can have the benefit of counsel pointing this out, under section 244. I realize that we are talking about section 239 but it is all part of the same question.

It seems to me that we are getting into a situation where we are putting this proposed Income Tax Act above the Criminal Code. I think this is a fundamental matter and I do not think it is in the best interests of Canadians to have an act which is dictatorial and coercive to the extent this act appears to be, and above the Criminal Code.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I confess I am still thinking out loud and pursuing my study of the law. The remarks which have been made recently remind me that the criminal law of Canada is not, as I have been told a number of times, confined to the Criminal Code. As I understand it, a person stealing a loaf of bread or a few dollars is dealt with under the Criminal Code. It could be that here we may deal with people who defraud the country, that is the people of Canada and the treasury, of thousands of dollars because they make false entries, destroy records and do that kind of thing. Is not that kind of thing as much a crime as stealing a loaf of bread, stealing clothes from a store or stealing a few dollars?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We are with you, Stanley.

Mr. Mahoney: We are presenting a united front.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the parliamentary secretary a moment ago, after the hon. member for High Park had spoken, said that was the best argument he had heard from the other side, I am beginning to wonder if I am on the wrong track.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend from St. Boniface says I am on the right track, and that makes me wonder. Mind you, it is confusing seeing that phalanx of Liberals on the other side of the House. I think my friend from Edmonton West and others who have adopted his view raised something we should not overlook, the placing of dictatorial power in the hands of ministers. I do not know where my friends of the Conservative party were when we were complaining about the crackdown on some people who had broken the Unemployment Insurance Act. We felt that just as much effort should be made to make sure people get what they are entitled to as to catch people who commit an offence. Here we are dealing with very much wealthier people, with people who can save a great deal by defrauding the treasury.

An hon. Member: In many instances they are small businessmen.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says that in many instances they are small businessmen. Often, they are even smaller than that. From my reading of section 239, there is a long list of pretty serious crimes for which you could be penalized—crimes like false entries, deception, the burning and destroying of records and wilfully doing everything possible to avoid paying what is owing to the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: And destroying ballots.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Destroying ballots? It is in Newfoundland where they destroy ballots. All these crimes I have enumerated are pretty serious crimes. There seems to be a choice as to penalties that will be imposed if this law is broken. If someone is convicted, he is liable, on summary conviction, to pay a fine of not less than 25 per cent and not more than 200 per cent of the tax that was sought to be evaded. If a little fellow is involved and the amount of tax is small, perhaps no great sum will be levied, even though he has committed a serious crime.

However, as I see it, in cases where there is a wholesale defrauding of the public treasury that runs to thousands or millions of dollars, it is proper for the law to say that in such cases action can be taken by way of indictment. I said when I began that I was trying to learn what this is all about. I have been listening to the hon. member for Edmonton West and those on the other side and I am glad that my questions have produced comments both ways. It seems to me that we must provide for penalties and for people to be taken to court for the crime of defrauding the treasury of Canada, in the same way as we have made provision for those who have stolen a few things from a store and I gather that that is what this section provides.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, it appears that some hon. members have not read section 239(1). The Minister of National Defence has suggested that we are trying to protect the big fellow. I did not know he was interested in law of this kind since I understood he is more interested in international law, as he told a gathering of people the other day. I suggest to hon. members, and particularly to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Winnipeg North who is sitting with him, that section 239(1)(a) deals with the little fellow who has been moonlighting and fails to disclose that he earned money on the side. That is not a big fellow. The section provides:

Every person who has

(a) made, or participated in, assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive statements in a return—

Those last words refer to an understatement of income. A return like that would be a deceptive return. I do not care what the source of the income may be. The offence may be a failure to disclose dividends—and some think that failing to disclose them is all right, unless you are caught. If you are, the law will deal with you. It could be that a farmer has understated his returns from the sale of cattle, wheat or what-have-you from his farm, or that a small businessman has understated his sales or overstated his costs, that is, his purchases, has understated his inventories or has two sets of books with regard to receivables. That would be an offence under subsection (1). Subparagraph (b) of subsection (1) provides:

(b) to evade payment of a tax imposed by this act, destroyed, altered, mutilated, secreted or otherwise disposed of the records or books of account of a taxpayer—

This refers to a man who may have altered his payroll accounts. He might be a small contractor and he might have padded his payroll account in order to inflate his expenses. That is an offence under the act. Or the man may have—

(c) made, or assented to or acquiesced in the making of, false or deceptive entries, or omitted, or assented to or acquiesced in the omission, to enter a material particular, in records or books of account of a taxpayer—

Of course, he is the taxpayer. Again, the same sort of thing is involved—payroll padding, record falsification, inventory inflation and doing all sorts of other things to your records. Are these offences necessarily the prerogative of the middle-class or the well-to-do? That is what the Minister of National Defence suggested. I suggest to him that the number of prosecutions or threats of prosecution under section 239 will fall more on the smaller categories of taxpayer because they are far more numerous than the well-to-do. The penalty for the offence is a fine of not less than 25 per cent of the tax sought to be evaded and not more than 200 per cent of the amount of that tax. That penalty is imposed on summary conviction plus, if necessary—

• (9:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) on a point of order.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, it may not be a point of order, but I would like to ask a question to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), if he allows me to do so.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member knows that he does not have to rise on a point of order, but with the permission of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), he may ask him a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Agreed, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): If the hon. member for Edmonton West is willing to answer my question, I would like to obtain some explanations.

I did not completely understand a while ago, when he pointed out that a 200 per cent penalty was levied and I would like him to repeat his statement, so that I may try to understand how he can arrive at 200 per cent, because section 239(1) reads as follows:

(f) a fine of not less than 25 per cent and not more than double the amount of the tax—

Now, I find it hard to understand how the hon. member can arrive at 200 per cent.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It seems to me that the explanation—

[Translation]

—that the explanation be clear enough. Doubtless, taxes must be paid. The hon. member is aware of this. One must, first, pay the tax. Furthermore, following a summary conviction. a magistrate may impose a fine of at least 25 per cent and at most double the amount of the tax. Double, as I see it, is 200 per cent! One hundred per cent of the tax is the whole tax and double the tax is 200 per cent.

So—

[English]

—double the amount of the tax that was sought to be evaded. If the tax that was sought to be evaded was $1,000, the fine could be $2,000. The tax is also recoverable there. In all, the total penalty to the taxpayer would be $3,000. He would have to pay the tax he sought to evade. They would collect that. Then there is a fine of double the amount of the tax, 200 per cent, in addition to which there can be imprisonment of up to two years. However, for all the offences listed under subsection (1) discretion lies with the Attorney General of Canada, because line 3 of page 550 reads:

—at the election of the Attorney General of Canada, be prosecuted upon indictment and, if convicted—

The proof would be the same as it would before a magistrate. However, if a man had altered the books and in the investigation admitted that he had done so, there is no question that he would be found guilty. The evidence will be there. He must then go to jail for at least two months. There is a maximum of five years. If you want to read further, go to section 243, which clearly states:

Notwithstanding the Criminal Code or any other statute or law in force on the 30th day of June, 1948, the court has in any prosecution or proceeding under this act, no power to impose less than the minimum fine or imprisonment fixed by this act and the court has no power to suspend sentence.

That means there is a mandatory jail sentence; the man has to go to jail. It is that to which I object. There might be a little more consideration of this matter. If it is agreeable, I suggest that we stand this section and go on to others. We are at a bit of an impasse, and we might make some progress on other sections. If we stand section 239 perhaps it would be as well to stand section 243.

Mr. Mahoney: Agreed, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that sections 239 and 243 be stood at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1, sections 239 and 243 stood.

Clause 1, section 240, agreed to.

On clause 1—section 241: Communication of Information.

The Deputy Chairman: I do not wish to press the committee, but I hope hon. members will find their way through these sections which may have implications.

Mr. Baldwin: I wish to ask the parliamentary secretary a question about section 241. It is an interesting section on which we had varying legal decisions some time ago as to the communication of information and the extent to which a criminal or civil court might call upon officials to give evidence. These are just repetitions of sections which are in existence.

In light of those decisions, can the parliamentary secretary give us an indication of the present position in case we want to make alternative suggestions? I admit I have not read recent decisions regarding officials of the department being called upon by the courts to provide information in either criminal or civil cases. We would like to know the facts.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, officials of the Department of National Revenue have absolute privilege in civil cases. With regard to criminal cases there is an exception which is embodied in subsection (3). Other acts have been changed throughout the years to make provision for the kind of evidence that can be called into court. In civil cases, the privilege provided by subsections (1) and (2) of section 241 is absolute. The hon. member will note that in subsection (3) there is an exception that deals with criminal cases and with cases of a criminal nature relating to the administration of this particular act.

Mr. Baldwin: It must be related to the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Mahoney: It must be related to federal offences, not provincial offences.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am wondering whether section 241(1)(a) has been related to some of the other acts which are in force. I have in mind especially the new Statistics Canada Act under which powers are granted to certain officials of Statistics Canada to examine income tax returns in order to compile statistics. There may be other statutes under which similar powers are given—the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, for instance. The governing words in the bill before us are "except as authorized by this act," meaning the Income Tax Act. There appears to be a very strict limitation on the officials of the Department of National Revenue preventing their communicating any information obtained on behalf of the minister. We read here:

Except as authorized by this section, no official or authorized person shall . . . knowingly communicate or knowingly allow to be communicated to any person any information obtained by or on behalf of the minister for the purposes of this act.

That is a very sweeping restriction designed to secure secrecy of information. Then we come to subsection (2) which provides:

Notwithstanding any other act or law no official or authorized person shall be required to give evidence in connection with any legal proceedings.

That is a limitation. However, subsection (3) says that notwithstanding what is said in subsections (1) and (2) this restriction does not apply in the case of criminal proceedings. A further exception is made in subsection (4). An official or authorized person may communicate information in the course of his duties to other official or authorized persons in connection with the administration or enforcement of the act, that is to say, the Income Tax Act. Then, under subsection (6) provision is made for an appeal from an order of a court requiring an official or authorized person to give evidence, and so on. There is provision for stays of orders, offences are described and penalties proposed for officials of the department who wrongfully disclose information in their possession and, finally, there is a subsection which deals with definitions. Here we find definitions of "officials", "authorized persons," and so forth.

Knowing that the Statistics Canada Act which was discuseed in this session of Parliament includes specific provision for information to be given, I am somewhat surprised that the section does not appear to authorize employees of the ministry of national revenue to communicate this information. There is no doubt that officials of Statistics Canada are allowed access to information from income tax returns and to examine them as a class. This is one exception to the limitations imposed on communication, and there may be others, in which case the section before us may have to be amended. In any case, there are too many "notwithstandings" in it, and even so it may be that the language used is too restrictive to enable the purposes which Parliament has approved to be carried out.

Mr. Mahoney: Perhaps I might elaborate on the answer I gave earlier to the hon. member for Peace River and point out that the privilege attached to information here extends even to civil courts. That type of evidence cannot be given in civil appeals concerning income tax assessments, and so on, even though the Minister of National Revenue may be a party to the case. The privilege is absolute in relation to what officials may disclose.

As to the specific point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I think that if all the provisions of subsection (4) were compressed they would read something like this, "An official or authorized person may communicate or allow to be communicated information obtained under this act to any person otherwise legally entitled to receive it." The Statistics Canada Act does authorize officials of Statistics Canada to receive for their particular purposes the type of information that is referred to.

Mr. Baldwin: Is an authorized person defined in the interpretation section?

Mr. Mahoney: The definition appears in the Statistics Canada Act.

Mr. Baldwin: Is there a definition in the interpretation subsection relating to section 241?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I think the present language does not cover the situation. For the purposes of clarity it might have been better and more helpful to the lay person, or even for those who are trying to examine this legislation, if it had been spelled out in the bill before us and an authorized person described. There is nothing in the Income Tax Act which tells us clearly who is a person legally entitled to this information.

Is a lawyer who is advising a client obliged to comb all the Statutes of Canada in order to find out who is authorized to get this information? We know that certain people from the Department of Justice would be legally entitled to have access to this information. I would hope the minister might agree to putting a better definition into the Income Tax Act itself. Otherwise we are doing a disservice to the public who must rely on this legislation.

The parliamentary secretary says the information can be given to those who are legally entitled to have access to it. But who are these people? We do not know. It is necessary to look at some other act or at a number of other acts in order to find out. I confess I do not think it is helpful at all.

The Chairman: Shall section 241 carry?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary and the officials would make a distinct note of this so that in due course we might have an amendment to clarify this point, or are we to rely on the jargon of the income tax department or the Income Tax Act in order to enlighten the public?

Mr. Mahoney: We will certainly consider the suggestion. I am not sure it would achieve the simplification of the Income Tax Act which members opposite have been advocating with some considerable force in the past few days, but certainly it is a serious suggestion and we will give it consideration.

Clause 1, section 241 agreed to.

On clause 1—section 242: Officers, etc., of corporations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have one or two comments on this section, Mr. Chairman. In case people are not aware of this particular provision—and there is indication that the Minister of National Defence is not aware of it—any directors of companies, whether large or small, if they participate in or acquiesce to the falsification of corporate records, and presumably these are the so-called privileged class, notwithstanding whether the corporation has been prosecuted or not are liable to be charged with an offence. They would follow the fate, shall we say, of section 239. So if you are a single individual or a director of a company, and there has been non-compliance with the act—an attempt to evade or defraud—it matters little because the penalties will be the same.

Clause 1, section 242 agreed to.

The Chairman: The Chair understands section 243 has been stood.

On clause 1—section 244: Information or complaint.

The Chairman: There is an amendment to this section by the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, has the amendment been put? Frankly, I do not know where it fits into section 244. I wonder whether we might be enlightened on this.

Mr. Baldwin: Could the amendment be read?

Mr. Mahoney: It might be, but not by me. The amendment is to the French version of the text only and is to ensure that the wording of subsection 18 of section 244 conforms to the wording in the subsection 17 in the French version.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 244 as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate the point made by my colleague from Central Nova that while there are certain procedures under the Criminal Code whereby an individual is protected if there are difficulties in respect of deficiencies in the charges or whatever procedure has been laid out for laying a charge, under the Income Tax Act one can be almost as loose as a goose, to use a trite phrase: however, I believe it puts the point across.

No information or complaint can be called in question for lack of authority of the informant or complainant except by the minister or the one acting on behalf of Her Majesty. In other words, the dice are loaded. If the taxpayer has been charged under an improperly filed information or an incomplete information, that matters not; he cannot challenge it. The only one who can challenge the type of information is the Crown. The taxpayer has the dice loaded against him. Why is it that a taxpayer under these circumstances should be less than a citizen appearing in a criminal court? The parliamentary secretary might like to explain that. Why should a taxpayer be placed in this position?

The taxpayers are the citizens of this country. They are not a group of people who are to be pushed, bullied, plucked, shorn or the subject of slipshod procedures or injustices. We already know that in so much of this act in the past the onus has always been on the taxpayers. A taxpayer had to prove that he was not guilty or that he did not have to pay the tax. Some changes should be made in the administration in this regard. I hope this will be the case.

Just who are the taxpayers of this country? They are the constituents of all hon. members, including the minister and the parliamentary secretary. Yet when it comes to paying income tax, every citizen is supposed to be deemed to be something less than a whole individual. Why does that have to be the situation under the Income Tax Act? The stature of the individual is recognized in other statutes and he knows his rights. But under the Income Tax Act his rights are diminished.

What is so holy about income tax that this should be the situation. On whose behalf is this act? Is there something sacrosanct in respect of the government or the Crown or the provinces with regard to income tax vis-à-vis the citizen? Why do they not hold a gun to his head and empty his wallet? Most people feel they do this anyway. Under the Criminal Code, certain standards are applied concerning the rights of the individual. However, when it comes to the Income Tax Act these rights disappear very quickly.

An hon. Member: Why should they?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not know why. It seems to me there is an entirely wrong philosophy about this. I do not know why the citizen should be any less under the Income Tax Act than he is under the Criminal Code or under any other statutes which establish his responsibility to the state. But in so far as the Income Tax Act is concerned he counts for less than a human being.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, I do not often agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West, but I think that some of the things he said tonight reflect my feelings.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Edmonton West is usually right.

Mr. Gibson: I did not hear the snide comment of the hon. member for Peace River who is sitting there reading the newspaper in the front row.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member said I was reading the newspaper. He knows I never read newspapers in the House, particularly if he is speaking. I was reading my own speech. I find it is a good speech and I wish it had been a little longer.

Mr. Gibson: If so, I withdraw my comments. But I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West who has pointed out with some force some of the inequities in the penalty provisions of the Income Tax Act, particularly some of the almost vicious and cruel limitations on the judge or magistrate to reduce the fine and to allow a suspended sentence. I can remember cases I fought where rather weak characters appeared in court after having made some bad mistakes as a result of a disaster in the family and who, through desperation, had fallen afoul of the law. The judge had said, "I wish I could give a less severe sentence".

I do not see, as the hon. member for Edmonton West said, why we cannot relax the regulations and give discretion to judges to take the sting out of some of these vicious fines which are often more severe than the fines imposed by vicious loan companies. I think there is much merit in what he said.

Mr. Aiken: Section 244, which is very long, is an important section of the bill and most of it is in the original act. But I think comment should be made about a couple of the subsections. Anyone who has tried to defend a person charged under the Income Tax Act has found that the procedures under section 244 weigh very heavily in favour of the Crown. The methods of proof are very easy for the Crown but difficult for defence counsel to meet. I do not say that that is necessarily bad. I will point out one particular section on which I would like to have an explanation.

The first few subsections permit the Crown to prove their case against an individual for failure to file, or for a similar offence, by affidavit. Under this section it is sufficient for them to file an affidavit which purports to have been signed by a person who purports to be an official in the minister's office in charge of the records. It has always been difficult for a defendant to prove the negative. The Crown has proven that a notice was mailed out to an individual and that according to the records of the department there was no reply. These two pieces of information added together automatically make the person guilty. Some clerk or secretary in the minister's office signs an affidavit that he is in charge of the records and that according to the records a person was given registered notice on a certain date, but that according to the records there was no response. Under the act that person is guilty of failure to file.

I see that subsection (18) of section 244 seems to give the taxpayer something of a break. I do not have the original act with me, but the note shows that subsection (18) is former section 136 (15) modified. I should like to have it clarified for my own satisfaction in what manner this previous situation has been modified. It seems to me that where formerly the taxpayer was deemed to be guilty, now at least he has a chance of going before a magistrate and saying that he mailed a return and can show a copy of it. The magistrate can then accept the fact that he has filed a return. Yet subsection (18) seems to deal only with proceedings under division J of part I, and I am wondering whether this might raise a defence for the accused person to counteract the heavy onus that is laid on him in the earlier subsections of section 244.

I hope I have made myself clear. I hope that under this amendment the taxpayer will be given a break, and if he is, I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. Mahoney: The modification to the section about which the hon. member has inquired is a deletion of the reference to division I in the original act. That is the only change to the section.

Mr. Aiken: Therefore my hopes have been dashed and the taxpayer does not get a break.

Mr. Mahoney: I should explain to the hon. member that under the revision the old divisions I and J are combined and are found entirely in division J of the bill. So there is no change despite the modification.

Mr. Aiken: I thank the parliamentary secretary for that answer. I had hoped there had been an improvement in the situation. This leaves me with the comment that the procedure set out in section 244 is heavily weighted against the accused person. There are many people who have received notice to file a return. They mail it not by registered mail and then the department claims they never received it. The person claims that he did mail it but it must have gone astray. In many cases this is considered to be a lot of hot air by magistrates, but in some cases magistrates and provincial judges are inclined to accept the excuse. I do not think we can hope for a further amendment on this. So far as I know, judges and magistrates have been reasonable. If a person comes along with any excuse at all, in most cases they hesitate to convict.

I should like to go back for a moment to subsection (4) of section 244 which relates to limitations of prosecutions. There is a five-year limitation under this section, which I think is reasonable. But the part which seems unreasonable to me is the exception, which provides:

> An information or complaint . . . may be laid . . . within one year from the day on which evidence, sufficient in the opinion of the minister to justify a prosecution for the offence, came to his knowledge—

• (9:40 p.m.)

It seems to me that according to this provision there is no limitation on the time in which a charge can be laid. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary if there are any cases in which this section has been used, where prosecutions were brought after five years by reason of certain facts coming to the attention of the minister and, if there are such cases on record, were they anything other than cases considered to be straight fraud?

Mr. Baldwin: While the parliamentary secretary is thinking about that question, on the same section he might answer a point that came to my mind when I read it. Is the knowledge of the officials of the minister deemed to be constructive knowledge of the minister? In other words, let us assume the officials in the department had knowledge which in their opinion justified prosecution but the minister was not acquainted with it. As a lawyer, the parliamentary secretary will realize what I mean. Is the constructive information in the hands of the department presumed to be information within the knowledge of the minister, and does the time of one year run from then?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the minister, of course, has constructive knowledge of anything his officials have knowledge of, and that is the date from which the time runs, not from the time it necessarily comes to the personal attention of the minister.

I am afraid there is no real answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. The section says exactly what it does say. It is possible that prosecutions could arise other than in cases of fraud or misrepresentation, although I am not aware of any charges having been laid after the five-year period.

The Chairman: Shall section 244 as amended carry?

Mr. MacKay: I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary this question: Is not the effect of subsection (4) simply to say that the minister has knowledge when he says he has knowledge because, by the language implicit in that subsection, there is no way in which the minister's certificate can be disputed? If that is the case, why have it in there?

Mr. Mahoney: If it were not in there, certainly his certificate could be disputed. That is why it is there.

Mr. MacKay: Should there not be some equitable way in which such a certificate could be disputed? There may be a very real possibility that the minister would not have knowledge within the ambit of the intent of the section. If it is absolutely impossible ever to dispute the minister's certificate, what is the point of this?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If there is no more debate on section 244, I see no reason why it should not be passed and, if it is passed, we have completed this group of sections and would have to proceed to a new part of the bill. I understand that the Minister of Transport has a statement to make. May I suggest as a matter of procedure that after we have completed section 244 we should revert to motions for the minister to make his statement and for hon. members to reply to it?

Mr. Mahoney: That procedure is quite acceptable, Mr. Chairman. However, there was one question that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka asked earlier today with regard to section 231 and I now have the information for him. I may add that I understand that tomorrow we will start to deal with the co-ops and credit unions, and when that subject has been exhausted we will go where the good Lord takes us around the rest of Bill C-259.

Mr. Burton: May I ask the parliamentary secretary if it is his intention tomorrow just to deal with sections 135, 136 and 137, or will we also be dealing with sections 56 and 58?

Mr. Mahoney: It would seem sensible to me that we should deal with 57-1 and 58 as well as sections 135, 136 and 137.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall section 244 as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 1, section 244, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I understand there is agreement among all parties to allow us to revert to motions for a brief moment because of a statement I would like to make.

Mr. Mahoney: Before we do that I have one bit of information that I promised the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. Under section 231 I am advised by the Department of National Revenue that normally they will allow a 30-day period. However, sometimes they specify either 45 or 60 days if it is expected that the matter is very complex. Thirty days seems to be the minimum.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that in accordance with the suggestion of the Minister of Transport I should rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

AUTOMOBILE SAFETY

GENERAL MOTORS—RECALL OF CERTAIN VEHICLES FOR INSPECTION AND REPLACEMENT OF POSSIBLE DEFECTIVE PARTS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was advised late this afternoon, too late for a statement on motions today, with regard to a communication which my office received from General Motors of Canada. I feel it is important that this announcement be made immediately and that it be made in the House.

I want to recommend that all Canadian owners of vehicles involved in the current recall campaign of General Motors of Canada return their vehicles to authorized dealers for inspection and installation of an engine movement restraining device. The notification by General Motors of Canada involves Canadian owners of approximately 600,000 1965 through 1969 regular size Chevrolets and Novas as well as 1967 through 1969 Camaros and certain light trucks, which include some GMC models with similar V8 engines. No Chevelles, Corvettes or six-cylinder models are included in the company's campaign.

I note that General Motors Corporation agreed to initiate this campaign as a result of intensive investigations in the United States and Canada by the company and by officials of the U.S. Department of Transport and of our own ministry of transport. General Motors plans to begin notifying owners by mail as soon as current owners' names can be obtained from Canadian vehicle registration records and as soon as parts can be produced and delivered to dealers.

At very low speeds and heavy throttle, engine-mount failure might result in lifting of the engine and consequent interference with the throttle mechanism. Symptoms of this condition may include momentary sticking of the accelerator pedal, possible transmission shift to neutral, and interference between the engine fan and radiator or fan shroud which would result in a loud noise. Throttle interference could contribute to an accident.

General Motors of Canada have advised me that the engine movement restraining devices should be available at Chevrolet dealerships in the latter part of February. I also note that only in rare instances does engine lift involve the throttle and become a problem following engine-mount separation. I advise that if vehicle operation should be affected by engine-mount separation, the driver should turn off the ignition key and brake the vehicle to a stop. I particularly urge Canadian owners of affected vehicles who have already experienced engine-mount failure to have their vehicles checked and ensure that the restraining devices are installed as soon as available.

I should like to add that I appreciate the co-operation of General Motors in carrying out this program in our country and the fact that they have moved voluntarily.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I should like to take the opportunity of thanking the minister for his announcement and his interest. This announcement reinforces my belief that most large corporations are interested in the welfare of their customers. Had they not been, I submit they would not have become large corporations notwithstanding the continual sniping from certain consumer advocates and advisers. Notifying 600,000 customers by mail has meant a sizeable expenditure for General Motors. In any event, with a view to safety one can take comfort from the fact that the defect is likely to be a minimal cause of accidents.

I commend the minister and the corporation, and heartily endorse the recommendation that customers avail themselves of this service.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to thank the minister for at least making the statement in the House and not to the press outside the Chamber. I think he is to be commended for that. As we look at the models involved we are speaking about a period from 1965 to 1969. This further points out that we must have a militant and imaginative department to look after the consumer. If we are concerned about consumer protection, we should be moving in the direction of safety regulations.

When you look at the statement made, General Motors is telling us that we have been riding around on a bomb since 1965. I wonder how many cases have come to light where the driver has been charged with responsibility when in fact it was a defect of mechanism. I think it is good that General Motors is recalling these cars. At the same time I would urge the minister to set up strong safety regulations for some type of testing by the department. The consumer in this country is entitled to good protection and this can only be assured through safety regulations. We know that some of our regulations are imported from the United States. We may have added some, but we must take this duty upon ourselves and the government must assure the consumer that safety is a prime concern.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to sincerely congratulate the minister who took the initiative of advising the Canadian people of what General Motors has revealed to him today.

I myself learned this morning the decision of General Motors to recall over 6 million vehicles in North America, over 600,000 of them in Canada. To my mind, this was a gratifying decision because it will protect the consumer to a certain extent.

It will also give this large company the opportunity to check its production methods so that, in the future, it might spare its customers the inconveniences they are now experiencing.

I therefore urge the minister to continue warning people against problems as serious as those the purchasers of General Motors vehicles are now up against.

Adding my voice to that of the minister, I urge Canadians to take advantage of the services offered by General Motors for the correction of the mechanical defects that might crop up.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of hon. members that the Chair call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—HAWKESBURY—ACTION TO REMOVE POSSIBLE SAFETY HAZARD CREATED BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a matter was brought to my attention recently by the Canadian aircraft owners and pilots association which prompted me to question the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) regarding aircraft operation safety at Hawkesbury airport. As a pilot of some years standing, I am perhaps more receptive to representations from the flying fraternity than those who have never been involved in making decisions from an operator's viewpoint. In this particular instance I feel that the members of a certain flying organization have been dealt with somewhat arbitrarily and I would like to present their side of the case.

The Montreal Soaring Council has operated for more than 15 years out of an airfield located at Hawkesbury, Ontario. This location was chosen, as airports must be, with regard to wind factor, suitable terrain, existing obstructions, etc., all viewed necessarily with safety of the operation as a prime factor. The Hawkesbury location has proved admirable in this respect and over 4,700 flights have already been logged in 1971. With increasing use of the existing licensed runway, expansion is of immediate concern and additional runways have already been planned for construction during 1972 and 1973.

In August of this year the Montreal Soaring Council was approached by officials of the CNR and informed that a spur line of the railway was proposed to cross the southern section of their property, which would have the effect of rendering useless for flying purposes one-third of their airfield. The CNR at this point had already spent considerable time and money on the preliminary stages of the project which was initiated without consultation with the organization owning the property involved. The CNR, as a Crown corporation, does have the authority to take such action under the provisions of the Expropriation Act and the CNR Act. Unlike the CPR, they are not obliged to approach the Canadian Transport Commission prior to construction of a new railway line. When the line is completed, they must then apply to the CTC for an order to operate the line which is by this time completed. But until then no notification of any sort is required. It is not my intention at this time to dispute the provisions of the acts in question but only to point out that inevitably instances arise which might indicate that the authority bestowed by Parliament is being used without proper regard for the rights of individuals and, in this instance, of aviation safety.

Although prior discussions between the Department of Transport and CNR officials resulted in their agreement that the area of operation remaining after the disposal of the property in question could still be fully licensed under DOT regulations, provision for expansion has not been made, considering the present growth rate of 20 per cent per annum. In addition—this is a most important point and one which is not covered under existing DOT regulations—no separate regulations now exist which govern airfields used by soaring craft as opposed to powered craft. This means that even though an airfield might meet minimum licensing requirements for powered aircraft, those minimum requirements would not necessarily be adequate when applied to soaring craft. There is no indication whatsoever that any consideration was given by the CNR or DOT in their discussions to this most important aspect of the operation.

A glider port such as the Hawkesbury facility must not be compared to an airfield used exclusively by normal power aircraft. For example, a towing aircraft has a slower rate of climb and, with a glider in tow, the angle of take-off must be shallower. The same holds true for landing approaches. There, obstruction clearance limits become more stringent due to the presence of the tow-line dangling behind the tug. Also, since when soaring conditions suddenly wane many sailplanes must land at once, a large operating area is obviously required. Other technical factors are involved. In the interests of brevity I will not list them point by point. I have the material in hand and will be happy to turn it over to the minister or any member of his department who will take the time to peruse it.

The Montreal Soaring Council does not wish to obstruct in any way the task of CNR in building a spur line which has been planned to serve an industrial site a few miles distant and which will prove to be of benefit to property owners and municipalities in the area. The council would be only too willing to co-operate with CNR in selecting a site which would be mutually agreeable to both parties. They would be equally willing to sell CNR such property as would be necessary to construct the line. The Montreal Soaring Council believes that such a site already exists a few hundred feet south of the proposed CNR site. An abandoned Canadian Northern Railway roadbed parallels the highway and the power lines on the southern boundary of the airfield.

Relocation of the rail line to this site, which is a feasible engineering undertaking, would minimize the disruption of the existing facilities of the airfield and allow for future installations to proceed as planned. The spur line could still service those industrial areas, present and future, for which it was intended. It is true that certain sites on the other side of the presently proposed line would not be reached by the route suggested by the Montreal Soaring Council, but that property is owned by the council and it has no intention of selling that particular piece of land for industrial development.

The council feels that the Hawkesbury airfield is a valuable asset to the area. Existing and proposed industries in the immediate vicinity can only benefit from an active, well maintained airfield in the area. A rail line site is available a short distance from where it has been planned at present. I urge the minister to give earnest consideration to requesting Canadian National Railways to reconsider the route of the spur line and for the company to arrange a meeting with the Montreal Soaring Council in order that the problem may be resolved on a mutually agreeable basis. The Montreal Soaring Council is anxious to co-operate.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) for the opportunity of providing some information to the House respecting the operation of Hawkesbury airport and the effect on its operation of the construction of a spur line by Canadian National Railways. This line will provide access to the Industrial Fasteners Limited wire rod mill at Longueuil, Ontario, and will be approximately 4.44 miles long. The authority for the expropriation is contained in sections 15, 16 and 17 of the CNR act.

The hon. member has referred to a possible aviation safety hazard as a result of the construction of this line. I want to assure him that officials of the ministry of transport have made a very thorough assessment of this proposed spur line with respect to Department of Transport standards for airports. Their results indicate that no aviation safety hazard will be created. In addition, I understand that a very useful meeting was held on September 16 between the railway and representatives of the Montreal Soaring Council. CN plans were discussed in detail and a full understanding was reached. The exact location of the line was studied at length by CN before the final one was chosen, and serious consideration was given to alternate routes.

I know of the hon. member's personal interest in the aviation community and all members are, of course, intensely interested in safety. That is why I am pleased to give these assurances with respect to the operation of aircraft at Hawkesbury.

FINANCE—SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN PROGRAM—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA ALLOCATION—AMENDMENT OF FORMULA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, ever since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) made his announcement regarding the special loan fund on October 14, I have been critical of the allocation of that $160 million fund as between the various provinces. On November 24 the Minister of Finance sent me a letter setting forth some of the statistics. He wrote:

> Since the allocation of each provincial share is based largely on its relative share of unemployment, the changes in shares from last year's program to the present program are more readily illustrated by examining the share of unemployment by province. The following table shows the proportion of unemployment in the various provinces to Canada's total for the period June to September, with comparisons with last year.

I ask the House to look at the comparisons. The percentage of the total unemployed in the province of Newfoundland last year was 3 per cent compared to 3.4 per cent this year. The money they will be allocated out of this fund has gone up from $6.8 million to $7.5 million. Prince Edward Island was .4 per cent last year. It is the same this year. It received $1 million last year and will receive $1 million this year. Nova Scotia had 3.1 per cent of the unemployed last year and 4 per cent this year. Its share of the loan fund has gone up from $4.3 million to $7.4 million. New Brunswick had 3.4 per cent last year and 3.4 per cent this year, exactly the same. However, its allocation has gone up from $5.4 million to $9 million.

Quebec has dropped from 36.6 per cent to 36.3 per cent. Its allocation has dropped from $70.3 million to $63.2 million. Ontario's share of the unemployment went up from 26.1 per cent to 28.8 per cent. Its allocation has gone up from $17 million to $26.5 million. Manitoba went up from 4.1 per cent of the unemployment to 4.4 per cent. Its allocation has gone up from $8.6 million to $9 million.

Saskatchewan was 3.1 per cent last year and 2.5 per cent this year. They did not receive anything last year but will receive $6.9 million this year. Alberta had 5.3 per cent of the unemployment last year. It went down to 5.2 per cent this year. Its allocation went up from $6.8 million to $8.5 million. British Columbia had 14.9 per cent of the unemployed last year. It has dropped this year to 11.6 per cent. Its allocation has dropped from $39.8 million last year to $21 million this year.

There are two extenuating circumstances which the minister pointed out in his letter. British Columbia received $2.8 million of the Saskatchewan funds which Saskatchewan did not use. Even that is $37 million last year compared to $21 million this year. Also, the minister has tabled a formula setting forth the very complicated basis upon which this allocation was resolved. After looking it over I am convinced it has created more anomalies that it has solved.

It is significant that the province of British Columbia, where unemployment in this period this year is a little over 20 per cent less than last year, has had its allocation cut by almost 50 per cent. I am not complaining about what any province is getting. I am simply pointing out that this is a very arbitrary and discriminatory way in which to divide the $160 million between the provinces. I recognize that at this late date the government cannot start to notify the provinces that it has changed the allocation. But what the government could do was what it did last year when it found there were inequities. An additional amount was made available; the government stepped up its original $150 million to $160 million so as to iron out some of the inequities. I urge the government to increase the total amount of the fund so that some of the inequities which are self-evident when one examines the figures I have just quoted may be straightened out and no province is subjected to any sense of discrimination.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Two weeks ago, the province of British Columbia had already used up the entire $21 million despite the fact that neither of the two larger cities, Vancouver and Victoria, had yet made application. My own constituency, one of the municipalities which was very quick to get started on this project, put in proposals for a sewage program but found it was too late and had to take its place on a waiting list. This meant it had to ask the citizens in a referendum to approve going ahead with the sewage project despite the fact that it does not know what the cost will be because it is not known whether any benefit will be received from the special loan development fund.

I urge the government to seriously consider increasing the amount of the special loan fund above the $160 million at which it is fixed at the present time. I do not know any program which would help to put people to work more rapidly and which would at the same time provide greater social benefits. Should whatever government which is in office repeat the program next year, I hope it will be done six months ahead of time and that a decision to proceed will no longer be left until fall. I would have thought that after the experience of last year, when the announcement came much too late for effective use to be made of the scheme, the government would have acted promptly this year so that measures could be taken by the municipalities to make good use of the funds available.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The government will certainly take seriously, as it always does, the representations which the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has made. I have a fair amount of paper before me in anticipation of questions I thought might arise in the course of the hon. member's remarks I believe he has made a serious representation and one which is very worth while, but basically there are no questions which appear to require answering so I can only undertake to bring the hon. gentleman's remarks to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) immediately.

Mr. Douglas: Thank you.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—GRANTING OF PAROLE TO NELLES KIDNAPPERS—REFUSAL TO RETURN LICENCE TO PERSON CONVICTED OF IMPAIRED DRIVING

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise to protest what I believe to be a gross maladministration of justice and a disparate and disproportionate application of the granting of parole by the National Parole Board. On Tuesday, November 23, I put a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) as follows:

> Can the Solicitor General explain to me and to the House why the parole board is granting parole to the convicted criminal kidnappers in the notorious Nelles case in 1969, after only one-sixth of their sentences have been served, while the same parole board will not grant the return of a driving licence to a penitent constituent of mine?

I am sure Your Honour understands exactly why I raised this question. I suppose I could just as well have directed my inquiry to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). I do not think it requires a lengthy answer. By asking my question tonight I am simply bringing justice, as it is administered today, into perspective. Canadians are not satisfied with what is going on.

I think the House and the people of Canada deserve an explanation from the Solicitor General, from the Minister of Justice, and especially from the organization known as the National Parole Board. The people of Canada demand to know why Mr. Street and his board have granted parole to most of the gang of criminal kidnappers in the notorious Nelles case after only an average of one-sixth of their sentences have been served. And if Mr. Street and company are to be that lenient with these convicted persons, why can they not be fair and grant a poor youth in my constituency the return of his driving licence which was taken away for two years for a conviction of impairment?

Now, when he and his parents ask for its return, after he has learned his lesson, they are given a terse, curt "no". I point out that it is said that none of the Nelles case men had a previous record. Neither had my constituent who lost his driving licence. He has served well over half of the penalty in being deprived of his driving licence.

Many people do not know that if one is convicted of impaired driving—which is classed as a criminal offence, rightfully—the parole board has, truthfully speaking, the keys of one's car. That is all right. I am not kicking about that, Mr. Speaker. It is perfectly proper that this authority hold that right. But when the parole board uses such disparity and disproportionate judgment as I have just outlined in these two cases it is time the truth was known and it is time it gave reasons for such judgment.

I demand full revelation for the House and the people of Canada of the judgment and record of parole of this high-class gang of criminals in the Nelles case. I demand that the Attorney General smarten up and look into this matter. Or is he pursuing the policy as outlined in his recent statement where he said that this government is more interested in rehabilitation of criminals than in the protection of persons and property?

While I am on the subject, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to you and the House that according to the Toronto Star of November 27, the man who shot and killed a gasoline filling station attendant, David Seedhouse, last month in Weston, Ontario, had been paroled from prison only last July after serving two years of a six-year term for gas station robberies. The National Parole Board paroled him under these lenient terms, and less than four months later this man committed a brutal murder, shooting down defenceless David Seedhouse who did not have a chance. I want an explanation for these two cases from Mr. Street and his board, and I demand that the Solicitor General sees that the House gets an explanation.

In these times of trouble, especially when one takes into account the terrible circumstances of lawlessness that prevail in our permissive society under this Trudeau government, if a vestige of the hoped for just society is to survive we must pay more attention to the keeping of law and order and to the punishment of criminals and transgressors in a manner consistent with the sentences that the courts of justice are handing down. Is there any justice in sentencing a man who makes a practice of robbing service stations at gunpoint to a deserved six years and then having the parole board let him out in two years to pave the way for him to commit capital murder four months later? The answer the Canadian people give to that question is an unequivocal "No."

That is why I say I am bringing justice into perspective here tonight when I say to the Attorney General for God's sake, if he is going to allow the paroling of all the Nelles gang, in the name of justice return to my young constituent his driving privileges. If we can get this done, I will give the parole board my constituent's name. I do not mention it here tonight as a matter of courtesy because I do not wish to embarrass him and his family. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my request this evening will receive an early and favourable response from the Attorney General and his department. I remind him that the people of Canada are awaiting an explanation.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): As the hon. member knows, individual decisions pertaining to the granting of parole are made by the National Parole Board. This applies to all persons in custody of the federal government. As the hon. member further knows, the parole board is a quasi judicial body vested with certain powers under the Parole Act, and the whole concept of granting these powers to a board is based upon the premise that such matters should not be the subject of political interference, political influence or political decision. Accordingly, in so far as such decisions are concerned, the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) even though he may from time to time, as the hon. member has done here tonight, question an individual case, he is not only reluctant to interfere but indeed he cannot.

Explanations as to why parole is given in any one individual case would take much more than the three minutes that I have. The files are elaborate and the reasons are equally elaborate. In any event, it is impossible and not in the interest of justice, I suggest, to balance one case against another. There is no reason, because a kidnapper is paroled in Toronto, for a young man in the hon. member's constituency to have his driver's licence reinstated, nor is there any reason, because the young man should not have his driver's licence reinstated, for the kidnappers in Toronto to be kept in jail. There is no correlation between the two cases. Careful consideration must be given to each case.

The Solicitor General is quite satisfied that although from time to time apparent errors are made, such as would appear in the case of the filling station attendant who was shot, nonetheless the parole board has given careful consideration in each instance. The Solicitor General is prepared to admit that parole is a very difficult matter. In modern penology, where the risks are between the protection of the public and the rehabilitation of an individual, those risks are equal. The parole board will, hopefully, come down in favour of the individual, giving him the benefit of the doubt as being a rehabilitated citizen. Sometimes this does not always work but it is found that in most cases it does, and although the hon. member has suggested a few failures there are many thousands of successes that go unheralded and unheard of in this great country.

I direct the hon. member's consideration to an article that appeared in the Vancouver Sun last Saturday dealing directly with this point. In any event, if the hon. member wishes to have his views further known, on December 15 the Senate judicial committee is commencing an inquiry into parole policy and the parole board, as well as how the Solicitor General's functions relate to this board. He is certainly welcome to appear there and to present such views as he has presented this evening.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON MEETING WITH PRESIDENT NIXON IN WASHINGTON

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, I spent several hours yesterday with President Nixon in Washington. I should like to take a few moments of the time of the House to report on those meetings and on the discussions which took place concurrently between the Ministers of Finance and Industry, Trade and Commerce, with their officials, and the United States Secretaries of the Treasury and of Commerce and their officials.

One of the purposes of my visit was to seek reassurance from the President, and it can only come from him, that it is neither the intention nor the desire of the United States that the economy of Canada become so dependent upon the United States in terms of a deficit trading pattern that Canadians will inevitably lose independence of economic decisions. I stated to the President as candidly as I was able the concern which had been expressed in Canada, and indeed by some hon. members, with respect to the character of the U.S.-Canadian relationship. That concern was precipitated, of course, by the introduction on August 15 of the new United States economic policies, but it has been reflected increasingly in recent years by the continuing flow to Canada of American investment with its inherent advantages and disadvantages.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the warmth and the understanding with which President Nixon responded to my questions and the candid attitude which he revealed. He assured me that it was in the clear interests of the United States to have a Canadian neighbour not only independent both politically and economically but also one which was confident that the decisions and policies in each of these sectors would be taken by Canadians in their own interests, in defence of their own values, and in pursuit of their own goals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The century-old desire of Canadians to benefit from our North American neighbourhood and to profit from our relations with the United States, while at the same time remaining Canadian to the degree and extent that we choose, was put to the President by me and accepted by him without hesitation or qualification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We are a distinct country, we are a distinct people, and our remaining as such is, I was assured, in the interests of the United States and is a fundamental tenet of the foreign policies of that country as expressed by the Nixon administration.

I should add that the President was sensitive to the suggestion that his August 15 policies could be interpreted as evidence that the United States was unable to accept a Canada with a strong trading and current account position vis-à-vis the United States. This interpretation he could understand, but he stated to me forcefully that it was incorrect. I have not the slightest doubt, having spoken to him, that his interpretation is the correct one and will be borne out by events.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not so sure about that.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: If I may turn for a moment to the specific question of reforms in the monetary and trading practices of the world, the President and I agreed that no benefit would be gained by any short-sighted attempt on the part of any single country—the United States included—to gain immediate advantage. If the world trading nations and the international monetary community are unable to support with confidence whatever agreements are reached, then no progress will have been made. The same inherent instability and uncertainty which precipitated the August crisis will return, but with a viciousness not so far present because governments and the private sector will have lost confidence in their ability to come to grips with problems of this importance and this magnitude.

In short, Mr. Speaker, while the state of negotiations on specific points does not permit me to reveal to the House the precise state of play on any of the items which are understandably of interest to all hon. members, I am able to say that I have not the slightest doubt that those negotiations will be culminated soon, that the economic issues outstanding between Canada and the United States will be resolved, and that Canada will emerge in a healthier state. Much of the credit for progress in the process is due to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), and to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) for the skillful, tough and professional manner in which they have led the Canadian team of negotiators.

Prime Minister's Meeting in U.S.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

I have emphasized in these remarks those parts of my discussion with the President which were directed to economic issues and to Canadian-American relations. I hasten to add, however, that we spent a good deal of time on broader international matters—on the tragedy which is now unfolding on the Indian subcontinent, on the steps which are being pursued in the United Nations to arrest the hostilities and create a measure of confidence that the grievances in that area can be redressed, and on East-West relations generally. In keeping with the President's desire to inform the major allies of the United States about his pending visits to the People's Republic of China and the Soviet Union, we talked of the initiatives taken by both Canada and the United States to lessen tension and contribute positively to an orderly international climate.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform hon. members that the President told me with what pleasure he and Mrs. Nixon were looking forward to their visit to Canada this spring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I assured him that the warmth of the reception which I knew awaited them would be a clear indication of the friendship between the peoples of our two countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me state that it will not surprise the Prime Minister to hear me say that I was very pleased he had this talk with the President of the United States. I am also very pleased that the Prime Minister has returned home reassured as to the essential good will of the President of the United States toward our country, and reassured too as to the intention and firm determination of the President of the United States to see our country develop in independence and in accordance with our own priorities. I am pleased too that the feelings of uncertainty the Prime Minister expressed publicly some time ago to the Canadian people as to the intentions of the President and the intentions of the American people toward Canada, his feelings of uncertainty about the basic attitudes that the President might have as to the role of Canada in North America and as to the direction that the Canadian economy should take in the future, have been relieved and that some of the general feeling of uncertainty is now eliminated in his own mind and presumably, as a result of his statement, in the minds of the Canadian people.

I had hoped, of course, that the Prime Minister would have taken steps some time ago to try to remove these uncertainties somewhat earlier than he has done, but I am pleased that this has happened.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Then congratulate him.

Mr. Stanfield: I am even pleased to see the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) in his usual form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Former St. Boniface.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. McGrath: Idiot form.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, unquestionably it should be emphasized that good relations between our two countries and a clear understanding between our two countries are very important to us. However, in addition to general assurances from the President of the United States as to his views about the relationships between our two countries and his firm resolve to respect our independence, political and economic, and to respect our decisions as to what course of action we might take—and I do not doubt their sincerity for a moment—surely we have to get down to specifics when the relationship between our two countries is so interdependent. It is the attitude and the response of the United States administration on specific issues that will really affect this country. It never occurred to me seriously that the United States had any desire to pursue policies intentionally designed to cripple this country. The question really is, what view does the United States administration have with regard to balance of trade and terms of trade? What view does the United States administration regard as consistent with its own interests? What view does the United States administration have as to when its actions might impinge upon the independence or autonomy of Canada? It is also important to us to know specifically how the administration regards the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the United States dollar. Are the views of the United States administration on this subject likely to impinge in any way upon our independence? These are matters upon which we will receive further enlightenment in due course.

I am pleased to hear the very optimistic statement made by the Prime Minister this afternoon as to the manner in which he believes these problems—presumably the value of our currency in relation to the United States dollar, the auto pact, the general attitude of the United States toward trading relationships, the balance of trade between our two countries, the attitude toward Canada manufacturing rather than being basically a supplier of raw materials to the United States—will be solved. It is these specific matters that we have to be concerned about, Mr. Speaker, in view of the high degree of interdependence between our two countries. While we are pleased to receive a general assurance as to the good and firm intentions of the United States, the question really is how the United States administration will interpret its interests and our interests on any particular matter.

In view of the degree of interdependence between our two countries it is my belief that we must not only have a statement of general intention, which we welcome, but we must also work out some guidelines between our two countries which will assure us in a specific way that decisions are not going to be taken unilaterally in Washington that could have a very detrimental effect upon our economy and its development. I realize such guidelines cannot be worked out in the course of a single visit. I do not expect that. I am glad the process has been started. I am pleased—I do not know what is going on with my hon. friends at the back on the other side, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps they would like me to attack the government. I am trying to be reasonably positive and constructive in light of what I regard as a constructive move on the part of the Prime Minister.

• (2:20 p.m.)

I emphasize that as a Canadian, and my feeling is widely shared in many quarters of this House, I am concerned about the degree of interdependence between our two countries and the extent to which decisions taken in Washington can affect us. I consequently believe it is important for us to try to establish guidelines between our two countries for governing our behaviour toward each other which will at least reduce to a minimum the possibility of unilateral decisions being taken that can affect us very significantly. I repeat that one cannot expect this to be achieved in one visit. I am pleased that President Nixon is to come to Ottawa in the spring. I hope the Prime Minister will regard sympathetically the suggestion that the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States should meet frequently and regularly and that one of their objectives at least ought to be the achievement of significant and specific guidelines on how we are to behave toward each other.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot join in this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot join in this song of praise over the visit of the Prime Minister to Washington and his statement on returning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I suggest to you, Sir, and to the Prime Minister that this is one of the most distressing declarations by any Prime Minister of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: What the Prime Minister has said is that he visited Washington and that he has the assurance of the President of the United States that Canada can remain independent. Is that not wonderful, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: What else did the Prime Minister expect the President of the United States to say to him? I say to the Prime Minister that it is not assurances from the President of the United States or the administration of the United States regarding the independence of Canada that Canadians need. They need to be assured by this government that it will not continue to sell Canada out to the multinational corporations and thus continue to endanger our independence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The same old stuff!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order in the House. The hon. member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, hon. members can yell or scream or yelp. I intend to say what I think I must say as a Canadian. If hon. members, by interrupting me, want me to take longer, that is fine by me. I have lots of patience and I hope you have too, Mr. Speaker. I suggest it is humiliating for Canada and Canadians for the leader of their country to have to go to Washington to be reassured about Canada's independence, to be reassured by the President of the United States that he does not intend to treat us like a colony, as I heard the Prime Minister suggest at the press conference.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: I think this is a measure of the kind of continentalist thinking that has been going on in Liberal ranks and, indeed, in Tory ranks in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have never had any doubt—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I have never had any doubt that Canada's dependence on the United States is not due to the Americans raping us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I have said more than once that there cannot be rape where there is invitation and consent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Canada's dependence on the United States Canada's dependence in trade, in monetary policy, in the control of our economy—

Some hon. Members: In unions.

Mr. Lewis: And in unions, Mr. Speaker. Obviously I must be saying something that has some truth in it, from the pain it has caused. Canada's dependence on the United States has not been the result of any decision by Presidents of the United States of America. It has been the result of decisions by Canadian political and business leaders to hand over our resources to the American corporations and to ask American capital to come into this country to build branch plants as subsidiaries of multinational corporations. Therefore the statement of the Prime Minister to the House today, as well as his statement before the press conference in Washington, is a humiliating admission of the bankruptcy of the Liberal party's attitude and policies toward Canada's development and the development of Canada's identity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: It is not anything more than that. It is not of the slightest help to Canada. I hope that in the very near future the Prime Minister or some member of the government will rise in his place and tell us what the government's policy is with regard to foreign investment and with regard to regaining control of Canada's economy. I hope the government will tell us exactly what it intends to do. Because of one statement the Prime Minister made at the press conference, I am worried that the government's policy will not only be too late but too little for Canada's future independence as a nation.

We need to know, and I hope we will in the very near future, the results of the negotiations between our ministers and the relevant secretaries of the United States. How much are we giving away with regard to the auto pact? How much are we giving away with regard to defence purchases? How much are we giving away as concessions? If I remember correctly, the Prime Minister clearly said during his press conference that Canada will make concessions to the United States to assist them in their present position but we will extract some concessions from them. This Parliament and the people of Canada are entitled to know precisely what concessions Canada is making and what concessions it will be getting from the United States, if any. We want to know what our energy policy is with regard to the Americans, whether we will continue to sell our natural resources to American multinational corporations as we have done until now. I know this will be considered offensive, but I have to speak the truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Before anyone gets excited, let me put it this way. I have to speak the truth as I see it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. I am not pressing the hon. member at this point, but I should like to remind him that according to the Standing Order comments made in response to ministerial statements ought to be brief and should not be of such a nature as to give rise to controversy. I am not sure whether the hon. member's last statement is on all fours with the Standing Order. As I said, I am not pressing the matter, but I think we should try to proceed with a view to the termination of comments on the statement made by the Prime Minister.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have not been keeping my eye on the time, but I hope you have given me credit for some of the time taken up by interruptions.

I was saying that in my opinion the declaration by the Prime Minister is in no sense a reassurance to Canada. It is in our opinion a mark of humiliating thinking by the government of this country with respect to Canada's independence. We shall not be satisfied that Canada's future independence is in any way safe in the hands of this government unless we have a policy on foreign investment and foreign economic control which has teeth in it and will reverse the continuing sell-out of resources and manufacturing facilities to United States corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we were fortunate this morning to be able to hear the Rt. Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on the occasion of a press conference in Washington, state something like this: "The Prime Minister of Canada and the President of United States have agreed that they should each guide their own political and economic destinies while respecting the freedom of the other."

Today, at the opening of the House, he is still using this most diplomatic phraseology which, in any event, will solve nothing and bring absolutely nothing to the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that will have to be said in the House one of these days, and it is that this government is a past master in creating artificial crises in order to manipulate more easily Canadian public opinion. For instance, There were an economic depression and an extremely high unemployment rate in Canada long before imposition of the American surcharge on imports. At that time, the government put the blame on the United States in an effort to disclaim responsibility, thus finding an excellent scapegoat.

Mr. Speaker, I shall remind hon. members on the other side of some statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in October last, and particularly in a newspaper article titled: "Benson anticipates danger of return to the glommy thirties."

People get scared and that's the way the government seeks to get them grovelling on all fours before Finance.

That is what they are trying to do to Canadian public opinion in order to make it forget the government's inefficiency and administrative fiasco.

And at the same time, our foreign policy is taking another direction. The government is opening friendly negotiations with socialist and communist countries. It is also allowing our relations with the United States to deteriorate. Indeed, without warning and at the cost of millions of dollars, the government is taking steps to give some impetus to our economy in order to impress Canadians; and those funds will be borrowed from the Americans or from other countries.

This artificial crisis in our relations with the United States has been entirely created to justify a rapprochement with communist countries. The Prime Minister has spent whole weeks in these countries, but only two hours in Washington. Today he comes back with empty hands. He says that good understanding has been restored, that all is well and yet, there is an increasingly persistent rumour—newspapers have reported it this morning—that Canada is about to purchase more weapons from the United States. However, the Canadian government boasts that it is working for peace.

This morning again, I heard—this is serious and I shall end on this—that Retail Credit of Atlanta, Georgia, in the United States is purchasing all Canadian credit offices and that so far those of Montreal, Winnipeg, Toronto, Vancouver and Regina have already been handed over to American interests, which means, to all intents and purposes, that from now on the Americans are going to decide about the financial situation of thousands of Canadians.

The right hon. Prime Minister said: We come back with the assurance that in the future we can freely orient our own economic and political destinies, and this with the respect of others.

Mr. Speaker, I say this is bluff. This is a put-up job by the government to make us forget their administrative failure, to make the Canadian people gobble up more easily communist socialism. We protest energetically against such dishonest tactics; the future will surely prove us right.

The problem will certainly not be solved by two hours' negotiations. If the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was so right in October, then today the Prime Minister is wrong. One or the other is lying and, to my mind, the last one who went over is.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—TABLING OF EVALUATION REPORT

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in both official languages an evaluation report regarding the Opportunities for Youth program.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe there was an undertaking given earlier this session by the Secretary of State that at the appropriate time, when he was introducing this document, he would also have something to say with reference to the government's own position. Since an extensive amount of work has been done in connection with this important evaluation, I find it surprising that the parliamentary secretary would merely table the document without commenting on the government's position so that opposition spokesmen might have an opportunity to express their views.

Mr. Faulkner: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the only undertaking made by the Secretary of State was that he would table the evaluation report. This has been done. One would think it would be more sensible to hear statements from representatives of the opposition after they had read the report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There should really not be a debate on the matter. The rules are clear. Is the hon. member rising on a further point of order?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order or a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As the opposition spokesman on this important subject I issued a report some weeks ago dealing with this matter, as is well known to the parliamentary secretary and others. I am most anxious to have the opportunity to respond to whatever initiatives the government may be taking but it is obvious they have no initiatives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave under Standing Order 43 to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture announced a $150 million program which it appears he intends to proceed with without giving farm organizations, representatives of the farmers or, indeed, members of this House an opportunity to express their opinions. Having regard to the record of the government as far as farm legislative programs are concerned, it is imperative that this proposal be thoroughly debated and examined by the House and the standing committee. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

• (2:40 p.m.)

That the matter of the $150 million program announced by the Minister of Agriculture yesterday in Winnipeg be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that representatives of provincial governments, farm organizations and others may have an opportunity to express their views on the details of the program.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)—DELAYED DELIVERY OF FRENCH "HANSARD"

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I would like to know why we still have not received the French version of yesterday's Hansard. I presume there is some reason for it, but I would not like this to occur every day, as it is very interesting for members of this House to be able to read Hansard before the House meets.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. member that unfortunately there have been printing problems which are entirely beyond the control of House of Commons authorities. We are, of course, sorry for the delay, but cannot take responsibility for it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE EARLY SETTLEMENT OF WORLD MONETARY CRISIS AND REMOVAL OF U.S. IMPORT SURTAX—BASIS FOR PRIME MINISTER'S OPINION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has indicated he feels that the world's monetary crisis will be settled and that the United States surtax will be removed following the next meeting of the Group of Ten or the subsequent meeting some time in January. When the Prime Minister formulated his opinion that these matters would be resolved within this time, what were the factors upon which he based this very optimistic opinion that he has expressed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I was interpreting what I understood Secretary Connally's position to be, that he was hoping the December meeting would be a conclusive one and that we would see an adjustment and a movement toward greater stability. But he did concede that if it was not successful this time he had very high hopes for January. I was mainly reflecting the thoughts and desires of the main actor in this particular scene.

Mr. Stanfield: In other words, this optimism of the Prime Minister was not based on any particular information that he received in Washington.

REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO PRESIDENT NIXON RESPECTING CANADIAN DOLLAR LEVEL AND UNITED STATES DISC PROPOSAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister what representations he made to the President on behalf of the government of Canada on the subject of the appropriate level of Canada's currency in relation to that of the United States. What representations did the Prime Minister make with regard to the view sometimes expressed in the United States that Canada is expected to permit a further upward revaluation of our dollar? Can the Prime Minister indicate what representations he made on this subject and what assurances he received?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the President did not convey to me any such hope or representation; therefore I found no need to destroy what would have been a straw man in this particular case.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the Prime Minister regard the views expressed by Secretary of the Treasury Connally as creating a straw man? In any event, the Prime Minister has answered my question. I should like to ask him what representations he made on behalf of the government of Canada to President Nixon regarding the DISC proposal which has been very much in the forefront in the United States and, again, what assurances, if any, he received from the President.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, our conversation on this point did not go beyond the statements which have been made in the House last week by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by myself, the effect of which—

Mr. Stanfield: Surely there was something more than that.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition thinks otherwise, but I am reporting to him what the conversation between us was.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTERS OF FINANCE AND INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE AND U.S. SECRETARIES OF TREASURY AND COMMERCE—SUBJECTS COVERED

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the discussions that he and the Minister of Finance had with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce of the United States. Would the minister be good enough to inform the House what specific areas were discussed with his and the Minister of Finance's counterparts in Washington?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my involvement was mostly one having to do with the solution of irritants.

Mr. Stanfield: We know all about irritants on this side.

Mr. Pepin: I used a word that everybody in Canada knows the meaning of. If the Leader of the Opposition is still unfamiliar with the word, let me describe them as the "so-called irritants".

Mr. Baldwin: What did you use on them, vanishing cream?

Mr. Pepin: The essence of the exercise was to try to obtain a balanced package of irritants, if that is clear to the Leader of the Opposition. I would say that we know now what we can do in terms of solving the irritants that the United States has identified. My feeling is also that they now know fairly well what we can do.

Mr. Paproski: Did they tell you what you can do?

Mr. Pepin: We have also indicated to them a number of irritants we have with the United States and have suggested a number of things that they might do. We suggested that they might move on a number of these items. They are considering that possibility now and hopefully in coming days there will be another meeting at which more efforts are going to be made in order to find a balanced package in the solution of these irritants. A solution to these irritants is considered by both sides as being useful in the present circumstances.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that the minister is obviously suffering from some irritant, may I ask him this question. On numerous occasions we were informed that the United States felt there were irritants in the direction of the auto pact, defence purchases and one or two other matters such as tourist exemptions, and that we felt there were irritants with respect to uranium and a number of things of that sort. Were any other questions laid on the table in these discussions, or were they confined to those matters that the minister and the Prime Minister have on various occasions informed the House about?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has a fairly good idea of what was talked about. He could add a few others such as some difficulties we have had with anti-dumping legislation in the United States, some difficulties we have had with respect to tariff items on agricultural machinery, and that sort of thing. Balancing the package is the very essence of the present exercise. I cannot say today what we would be willing to give but it is quite understood by the United States side that we can only give in return for something given. This is the philosophy of the balanced package.

Mr. Lewis: Is one right in assuming that the Canadian government has indicated to the United States authorities a willingness to make some concessions in the area of the auto pact, defence purchases and tourist exemptions, that the Canadian government has in fact informed United States authorities of its readiness to make concessions in at least those three areas?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, if I may quote a former minister of defence on these matters, they know fairly well what we could do and we know what they should do in order for them to find out what we would do.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: That was a most eloquent answer.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am very much impressed with the singsong of the minister, but I would ask him now to give us a catalogue of the irritants Canada spoke of and the counter-irritants raised by the United States. Do not serialize it, and just answer the question and at the same time let us know whether or not the question of the upward valuation of gold was discussed and what was Canada's attitude thereto.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, any two countries dealing with each other in trade matters at the level at which Canada and the United States are, which is more than $19 billion, are bound to have difficulties. It is surprising how relatively few we have and how few we cannot solve in the proper way. Nevertheless the catalogue is fairly long on both sides but being terribly intelligent, both sides have identified a selected number of irritants and have concentrated their attention on these. We are working with a short catalogue of seven, eight, nine or ten. That is about it now. On currency and the relationship of gold, I would prefer the Minister of Finance to answer that one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if the minister was no clearer yesterday when he spoke to the Americans than he is today I can understand that everybody would be perfectly satisfied. I am asking him now, will he give us a catalogue of these irritants and not the generality. What did he say? What were the points which were raised, or does he not know?

Mr. Pepin: The Leader of the New Democratic Party mentioned two or three or four and I added two or three to that. That gives a fairly good indication of what it was all about.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. gentleman rises on a question of privilege. The Chair will hear him and then recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière. I think we should try to complete the first round of questioning.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise to say that playing with the House like this—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —is not in keeping with the dignity of this House. I asked a simple question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the minister wants to plead ignorance, he has certainly established it.

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTION OF EXPENSES INCURRED BY CERTAIN CATEGORIES OF WORKERS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Since consideration of Bill C-259 in committee of the whole will end tomorrow, can the parliamentary secretary tell us if the government intends to amend section 8 of this bill in order to recognize for income tax purposes expenses incurred by mechanics, lumbermen, construction workers?

Mr. Speaker: Order! I suggest to the hon. member that he is putting a question related to a bill now before the House. I think that this question should be put when the House sits in committee of the whole to examine the bill. It is certainly out of order to put such a question during the question period.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, if I did put such a question, it is because the amendments to be made today in favour of co-operatives and credit unions were announced yesterday. I thought that the same thing could be done in the case of workers.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—ADDITIONAL MEASURES TO CREATE JOBS IN LIGHT OF LATEST FIGURES—FURTHER ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES TO MEET WELFARE COSTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Statistics Canada figures indicate that unemployment is up for November over the previous month, may I ask the Prime Minister if the government is reviewing its policies to stimulate employment and if the government anticipates any other further stimulants to create jobs in view of the significantly high figures?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I notice the member is now reverting to the unadjusted figures after a long period during which the opposition has used the adjusted figures. I can merely respond as I have previously by saying we are trying to watch the trend to see if it is moving in the right direction. By the seasonally adjusted figures unemployment is down, albeit only slightly. We are hopeful that the measures announced by the Minister of Finance some weeks ago, which have not all taken effect yet, will take effect as soon as possible.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, adjusted or unadjusted, the figures are that 503,000 Canadians are jobless, or 27,000 more than in the previous month. In view of that very startling fact may I ask whether the government plans to introduce reforms or changes to the Canada Assistance Plan in order to provide greater assistance to the provinces where unemployment is greatest and where the burden of welfare payments is the greatest?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will look at the measures announced a few weeks ago by the Minister of Finance he will see they were conceived in terms of helping those provinces where unemployment was highest.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that unemployment is greatest in the urban areas of the country and hence the burden of welfare is the greatest there, may I ask if the government proposes to establish any special aid programs for the cities to help alleviate the welfare loads this winter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can announce today in this respect.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Spadina for the moment and then recognize the hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

HOUSING

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER THAT PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF LAND IS ONE WAY TO CONTROL COSTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of State for Urban Affairs expressing government policy in Toronto last week when he stated that one way to control increasing housing costs is public ownership of land for housing?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member for Spadina—I do not know whether knowingly or unknowingly—has misquoted me and taken a statement out of context. What I did say was—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that it is irregular to refer to statements made outside the House by a minister except to ask whether that statement represents government policy. I appreciate there is difficulty when the minister claims he was misquoted, but certainly there is not much purpose to be achieved by having discussions on speeches made outside the House.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Urban Affairs. The quotation may have been out a word or two but the sense of it was there. Is the government doing research on public ownership of land for housing and the growing cost of land and, if so, are these studies being done with the involvement of the provinces and will they be made public soon?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the whole question of land policy as it relates to federal jurisdiction is under study. The results of these studies when they are available unquestionably will be placed before the provinces and hopefully the municipalities at tri-level consultation meetings which are being negotiated now.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—METHOD OF INTRODUCTION—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture may I ask a question of his parliamentary secretary. Would the parliamentary secretary inform the House under what procedure the government or the minister intends to introduce the $150 million program which is purported to be of assistance to the small farmers of Canada? Is the minister prepared to bring legislation into the House, and will he refer the subject matter of the proposal to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so there may be adequate discussion and examination?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. However, when we read and re-read the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture yesterday, we realize that such a policy is now under discussion, and that a special committee has been set up, in co-operation with the provinces, to provide the terms for its application.

With regard to the $150 million, it is noted that it will be spent over a seven-year period and that the amounts will have to be voted by the House of Commons.

I would also like to point out to hon. members that a while ago $16 million had been provided in the department's budget for the establishment of some kind of retirement fund for agriculture. Unless I am mistaken, this program is directly related to that retirement fund which was to help farmers.

With regard to the consideration of that program by the Standing Committee on Agriculture I shall discuss it with the minister. If such a procedure is to be followed I think the order will be given in due course.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—NATURE OF PLAN—ADJUSTMENTS FOR SIMILAR PROVINCIAL PROJECTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I want to address a supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he say whether the cost of the program referred to in the previous question will be borne entirely by the federal government or will it be a cost-sharing program with the provinces? What adjustments will be made with regard to provinces where similar projects now exist, such as Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this program is entirely a federal program, and we are presently holding discussions with the provinces to adjust our program with their existing programs so we can achieve better success on the whole.

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): My question is for the parliamentary secretary. Is the minister prepared to proceed with the announced program without having such vital questions as the definition of small farms debated in the House first?

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): With regard to the definition of a small farm, if we have to start a debate on that in the House I am afraid it will be many months and years before we will be able to proceed with our program.

MEASURES TO INCREASE NUMBER OF JOBS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. This question is complementary to that one asked by my colleague concerning unemployment. If it is true that there was an increase in unemployment in Quebec during the last month and that the number of people employed decreased notably from October to November, what does the government then intend to do to increase the number of jobs in that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Again, Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the hon. member makes the same error his colleague made earlier. If you look at the seasonally adjusted rate for Quebec, you will notice that there was a decrease last month.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie on a point of order.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken of available jobs and workers in the province of Quebec. As, on the whole, the number of available workers and jobs has decreased, rather than the unemployment index, would the Prime Minister tell the House what action the government intends to take in order to increase the number of jobs available in Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member does not appear to understand is that, when we speak of available jobs, we are talking in absolute terms and, when we speak of unemployment or of the unemployment rate, we are not using absolute figures but a percentage. And that percentage, I repeat—because it is adjusted to take seasonal variations into account—has decreased in Quebec in the last month.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS TO ENABLE MANPOWER OFFICIALS TO ASSIST CHRONICALLY UNEMPLOYED

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact there are now 123,000 people who have been unemployed for six months or longer, and the fact that many of these people are unable to participate in present manpower programs on a continuing basis, I wonder whether the minister has looked at these figures or whether he has begun to consider some amendments to the present legislation so that the Canada Manpower officials may be able to be of greater assistance in terms of either programs or other opportunities for people who are in this chronically unemployed group?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Of course we are always looking at ways in which our rules may be amended to make our services more available. The recent changes in our offering of training programs, particularly on-the-job training programs, is one example of the positive steps in this direction, and others will certainly be examined.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Egmont, but may I take the opportunity, as I do from day to day, to remind hon. members that we are running short of time and that I am still hoping to recognize this afternoon a number of hon. members who tried to ask questions yesterday. I see them smiling at me, but I hope to be able to give them a chance to ask their questions later during the question period.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the fact that over the months this problem has grown and the minister has been unable to give us little more than general statements, would he agree to provide within the next week specific facts and figures about how effectively these programs are operating with regard to the growing number of people who are chronically unemployed?

Mr. Lang: We will be providing reports from time to time on the special employment programs particularly. I would hardly think that the $498 million being spent under these programs can be considered a general statement.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister did not answer my question. He referred to specific programs. I asked him a question with regard to facts and figures respecting the chronically unemployed and whether he would speak to this matter in terms of his own departmental responsibility.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF ENERGY AT MEETING OF PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It is really supplementary to questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. members regarding the agenda and the subjects that were discussed with the President of the United States. Was the question of energy discussed with the president? Who raised the matter, and what was said in reference to Canada on this subject if it was discussed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did not discuss the subject of energy.

Mr. Woolliams: May I just read something to the Prime Minister with your leave, Mr. Speaker. I asked the following question on December 3, 1971:

Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister consider as one of the priorities that he will discuss with the President of the United States the subject of energy, in light of the fact that before a standing committee this morning it was admitted by the Energy Board that reserves in the Arctic were not taken into consideration when the board vetoed the four applications for licences to export natural gas to the United States?

The Prime Minister answered:

Yes, Mr. Speaker.

So I take it that even though he stated in the House that he would the Prime Minister did not discuss that subject.

Mr. Trudeau: The answer was that I would take it into consideration, which I did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was it not one of the irritants?

TRAINING AND RETRAINING PROGRAMS—CRITERIA—JURISDICTION RESPECTING ELIGIBILITY OF CANDIDATES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could he say whether, under the training and retraining program that has been set up and to which a few million dollars were added, it will be possible for a greater number of people to get the benefit of courses and whether acceptance or refusal of applicants come under provincial jurisdiction or not? If so, could we here in Parliament nonetheless know what the criterions are?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I would be glad at some time to discuss with the hon. member the detailed criteria for placing people in courses. Essentially, it is a matter of placing in courses those people who, in the opinion of manpower counsellors, seem to be likely to benefit most from them in the way of being able to obtain a job with the additional skill or training which the programs can provide. The additional money has been allotted for supplementary training to be offered in the various provinces across the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question.

Is he aware of the fact that many applicants have been turned down supposedly because no space is available and registration is complete?

[English]

Mr. Lang: That is one of the reasons for refusing candidates training. On such occasions it has nothing to do with the individual. A limited amount of money is provided each year and this money is used in the best possible way for training programs. At that point, no further training programs can be offered.

GRAIN

REGULATIONS TO PROTECT FARMERS WITH CROP STILL IN SWATH AGAINST POSSIBLE LOSS OF QUOTAS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, on November 15, as recorded at page 9557 of Hansard, I directed the following question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board:

Because of the amount of crop still out in swath in western Canada and particularly in Manitoba, and as this grain will not be combined until spring, and because under the new quota system these farmers will not be able to take advantage of the earlier specified delivery dates, does the government intend to introduce regulations so these farmers will be protected against possible loss of quota under these circumstances?

The acting minister took the question as notice. Is the minister now in a position to answer it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it would not be a matter requiring any change in the regulations. It would be a matter requiring further discussion with the Canadian Wheat Board, and a decision by them on whether anything can be done in the particular circumstances to help individual farmers. I will report to the House further.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS QUALIFY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this is a supplementary question, although it might be an ancillary question. The minister has been dealing with programs that will assist employment and one of them is the local initiatives program. I have received representations, as I am sure have other hon. members, from various church organizations across Canada asking whether or not they qualify because there have been cases in which their applications have been turned down. I ask the minister whether he will see to it, if it is not already the case, that church organizations will come within the provisions of the program because they have a lot of work they can undertake which would provide assistance for those who are unemployed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, church organizations do indeed qualify among the groups of responsible community organizations which can apply. There have been some approvals, I know, with regard to these organizations. I would have to look at specific cases to know if there have been any problems in the refusals to which the right hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, will the minister give his assurance that church organizations, with regard to construction, fixing up of premises and the like, do come within the provisions of the program in question?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the criteria as such which excludes them. In general, of course in making approvals the attempt is made to prefer those projects which have as broad a community betterment in them as possible, but that is more a matter of preference than of rigid eligibility.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

ALLEGED ERRONEOUS STATEMENT BY COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN CONCERNING GOVERNMENT MAJORITY

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. Is it the intention of the chairman to recommend changes in the party standings within the Public Accounts Committee consistent with his erroneous statement over CBO radio this morning when he said that the Liberals constituted a majority on this committee?

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may wish to rise on a point of order, but he will appreciate that the Chair cannot allow a question asked in this way of the chairman of a committee. That is not in order.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on a point of privilege. I would be happy to say that if I did state the number of government members of the committee in error, I apologize. I gave the number of the members on the government side as 12, I believe, and the number is ten. I apologize. I gave them the benefit of the doubt of two more members. The correct standings in the committee are ten Liberals, six Conservatives, two NDP, and two Social Credit.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO COPE WITH BACKLOG OF APPEALS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the announced total of some 7,500 appeals outstanding before the Immigration Appeal Board, a total that is increasing each week, is it the intention of the government to bring in legislation in the very near future to deal with the problem of appeals or the method by which the board deals with these appeals? Otherwise we will be in a terrible position.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SEDGWICK REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise the House as to the whereabouts of the Sedgwick report, whether or not in fact any of the recommendations in that report have been accepted by the government and, if so, when does the minister expect them to be implemented?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the report was tabled and I am sure the hon. member can find a copy of it somewhere. The report was taken into consideration by the department in looking at the question of appropriate changes to be made in our immigration appeal procedures, and of course this work will be reflected in the legislation to be brought forward.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—POSSIBLE ADDITIONAL DEMANDS BY UNITED STATES REGARDING EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of his optimism regarding a settlement of the international currency exchange rates problem. I want to ask if the American government has accepted the Canadian position that the unpegging of the Canadian dollar represents full compliance by Canada with the request of the United States, or whether any additional demands are being made on Canada with respect to the exchange rate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really would not venture to talk for the American government on this. I believe that, much as we are taking cautious negotiating positions and not stating our final aims and objectives, they are doing the same thing. My information from the Minister of Finance is that there has been some talk that they want Canada to do more, but as I told the Leader of the Opposition, I believe, this is not a subject that the President pressed on me.

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS—POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE BY UNITED STATES OF CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister if the United States government has accepted the Canadian position, in light of Secretary Connally's demand that there be a balance of trade, that the balance of payments ought to be the criterion as otherwise the invisible payments by Canada may leave her in a deficit position regarding the balance of payments? Has the American government accepted the Canadian position with respect to that situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to convey to the House was that on this general subject—and I am sure they know the difference between the over-all balance of payments and current accounts—the Americans did not have any preconceived notion as regards Canada. Secretary Connally did state publicly before several of us at the working dinner last night that one of the objectives of the United States was to reach a position of balanced trade with the world. He did not go further to comment on current accounts but he did make this statement on the side, and the President in talks with me did indicate he had no preconceived notion of how the current accounts should go with Canada.

MULTICULTURALISM POLICY—PROTESTS FROM QUEBEC AND FRENCH-SPEAKING CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the Quebec Premier has expressed serious reservations about the policy on multiculturalism and as the French-Canada Chambers of Commerce last Sunday spoke against setting up a single bilingual district in Quebec, can he tell us whether he intends to consider the arguments of Quebec as well as those of the Chambers of Commerce with a view to changing the policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I shall consider any reasonable representation and study the arguments to be presented to me in the future by the Quebec Premier, or which he has already set forth in the past as he did in a letter written to me some time ago; but I must say that, for the time being, I see no reason for changing the policy on multiculturalism the federal government now advocates.

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN PRIVILEGES TO RONALD STATFORD

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General which is perhaps not as earthshaking as some of the others today. It involves an individual in Collins Bay penitentiary. Will the minister take action to rectify an injustice apparently done to Ronald Statford, an inmate of Collins Bay, who lost privileges to work on a theatrical production simply because he spoke to a reporter about his plans after his release from prison, and will the minister take into account that many politicians could be caught the same way?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Jerome: Except they are not in prison for it.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the inmate in question had been told that he would be allowed to work outside the penitentiary on the express condition that he would not meet representatives of the press. He broke his word; so, this privilege was taken away from him.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EVACUATION OF CANADIANS AND ALLEGED DAMAGE TO AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall(Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker, and concerns the regrettable and deplorable incidents that are taking place in Pakistan with respect to Canadian efforts under United Nations sponsorship to get Canadian nationals and United Nations personnel out of that war area. I wonder if the minister can give us some report, particularly as to the authenticity of reports that Canadian military aircraft were fired on?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the report the aircraft had been damaged was false, but we cannot determine conclusively whether the aircraft was deliberately fired upon. There was at least one anti-aircraft burst close enough to the aircraft that it was heard by the crew when it was in the vicinity of three naval vessels in the area.

I can advise the House that negotiations have been resumed through U.N. headquarters in New York to try to get assurances from the different parties involved that the Hercules aircraft will be able to fly into Dacca for the purpose of bringing out U.N. personnel and other foreign nationals. We hope to get an agreement, if not a 24-hour truce, at least one from dawn to dusk to ensure that the operation would be effective.

Mr. Forrestall: A brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the minister would want to give us some indication as to the particular situation with which Canadian nationals in that country are faced. Are they in any danger?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would like to comment on that. I can comment with regard to the armed forces personnel with the United Nations military observer group for Indian and Pakistan. While communications are not good, the information we receive is that they are not in any danger. Perhaps my colleague could comment on other nationals.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are now taking steps to evacuate Canadians from West Pakistan. We believe the time has come when measures should be taken to remove some of them to a safer location. Arrangements are now being made which we hope will achieve this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period, but the hon. member for Lambton-Kent might be given an opportunity to ask his question.

SECRETARY OF STATE

STUDY OF GERMAN HOSTELS BY DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): My question is for the Secretary of State but I wonder if I may direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Can he advise the House during what months this winter the 12 employees of the minister's department will be making their study of German hostels? Further, can he explain why only 12 persons are required on this junket?

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—PROBLEMS DISCUSSED AT CONFERENCE AND TYPE OF AID OFFERED

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Transport. As a result of his meetings yesterday with the pulp and paper industry, I wonder if the minister could indicate to the House what the main problems presented were and what aid was offered by the government?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the question might more appropriately be answered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who was the chairman for the delegation, but in brief I can say that we ranged over virtually all the problems facing the industry and a number of specific proposals were put forward which will be considered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must apologize to the House. I did not understand the purport of the question. I would suggest to the hon. member that the question ought to have been directed primarily to the minister responsible rather than to the Minister of Transport who, I assume, did not attend the meeting in the capacity of Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If the hon. member has a supplementary it might be directed to the minister who has administrative responsibility.

POLLUTION

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR RELIEF FROM HIGH COST OF CONTROL MEASURES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I should like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of the Environment who has some responsibility. In view of the willingness of the government to consider aid to the pulp and paper industry, would the minister indicate whether he will accede to requests from the industry to relieve the high cost of implementing pollution control measures which can affect the future of the industry?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under close study jointly with the industry.

UNITED NATIONS

REFERENCE OF INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR TO GENERAL ASSEMBLY—POSSIBLE FORMULATION OF PEACEKEEPING OPERATIONS

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the Pakistan-Indian war has been referred to the General Assembly, is the Canadian government consulting with other members of the assembly with regard to the possibility of formulating ceasefire and peacekeeping operations? Has the minister anything to report on this?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. Our delegate to the United Nations has been consulting closely with all the countries concerned. We are not at all satisfied that the kind of resolution that is likely to be put forward is one that is realistic, or has very much chance of being complied with, but we are doing our best to make it more realistic. We are hopeful that the assembly will take quick action.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SURVEILLANCE AT QUEBEC UNIVERSITIES—REQUEST FOR REPORT BY MINISTER

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

Recently a female student leader stated that the RCMP had infiltrated Quebec universities to keep an eye on political activities of students. It has even been said that the federal police is paying students to watch the activities of their fellow students.

Faced with this serious charge, would the minister be in a position to inform the House about federal police activities on Quebec university campuses?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the minister can reply briefly, as the hon. member's question is one which I feel should normally be answered on motions. If the minister can reply very briefly, the Chair will allow him to do so. Otherwise, I will have to remind hon. members that we have to proceed with orders of the day.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have met on two recent occasions with representatives of the Canadian Association of University Professors to inform them that basically the policy announced by Mr. Pearson in 1963 has not changed. As for the details of those meetings, I suppose they will appear in the Association's official publications.

I must say that for some time now I have been reading quite a number of paranoid statements made on this issue by certain university professors and students.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST PAKISTANI REFUGEES—CONTINUATION OF AID

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister implied yesterday in reply to a question from my colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, that the Canadian contribution to the relief of refugees from East Pakistan would be continued. I should like to ask the minister whether he would make it explicit that aid to the innocent victims will not be diminished by political events as long as it is possible to make sure that they are the actual recipients of the aid?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that position and add that it is one of the purposes of the Canadian government to try to keep politics out of humanitarian endeavours.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe rises on a point of order.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, just to clarify my position, may I say that the reason I asked the Minister of Transport the question on pulp and paper was an article in the Globe and Mail indicating that he did make a statement on the matter, and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was out of the country.

Mr. McGrath: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think it places members of this House at a decided disadvantage when ministers assume responsibilities outside the House other than those required by statute. This is especially apparent with the Minister of Transport who speaks for every department of government in his own province, but we are confined to asking him questions on his own responsibility as Minister of Transport. In this particular instance, the Minister of Transport negotiated with the pulp and paper industry on behalf of the government of Canada, and I think that members of the House should be allowed to direct questions to him in that capacity.

Mr. Speaker: I merely stated the rule which has existed for a long time. Although I am not expert in political matters, it may well be that the practice of ministers making that kind of statement has been in effect for many years. I would think that both situations have prevailed for a while and that ministers have sometimes been known to make statements about matters other than their own administrative responsibilities, but even in these circumstances the rule has applied. I have to apply the rule as it exists. Perhaps it is not justified in certain instances, but the rule is there and I would not think hon. members would think the Chair is authorized to make exceptions to it even in special circumstances. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, December 6, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. In view of the statement of the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance to be found at page 10199 of Hansard for December 6, 1971, the committee will now resume consideration of clauses 57(1) and 58 as well as sections 135, 136 and 137 of clause 1. May I bring to the attention of the committee the amendment proposed by the President of the Privy Council to clause 57, as indicated at page 10178 of Hansard for December 6, 1971.

On clause 57—Specified personal corporations—

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, we, on this side of the House, look on the amendment proposed by the President of the Privy Council with a great deal of satisfaction for two reasons. First, it is encouraging to know that a government even as bullheaded and arrogant as this government can be persuaded finally to think that, possibly, it has been wrong. This is a major breakthrough and it gives us much satisfaction. The amendments also disprove many statements which members on the government side of the House have made on radio, television and in the press, as well as in the House.

An hon. Member: And through leaks.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): I am not talking about leaks; that is another matter. Those hon. members have suggested that we are wasting time debating this bill because government experts have studied the bill and everything is fine. They have said that we are obstructing, and holding up the passage of legislation. We, on this side, have always held that legislation should not be put through simply because the government has proposed it, because Liberal government legislation is not, per se, good legislation. We have always made that point. Now, by bringing in these amendments, the government has proved the necessity and the value of debate in the functioning of a free Parliament. If any proof were needed that it is the function of the opposition to point out flaws in the legislation, the proof has been supplied by the government. We must point out that legislation is bad and let the people know what is happening. That is why we debate bills like this one, and that is what parliament is all about. As I said, if any proof were needed of the value of Parliament and parliamentary functions, that proof is supplied by these amendments we have been asked to consider.

The opposition attacked this legislation from the beginning. As early as September 14, in the second reading debate, the Leader of the Opposition, in referring to these sections of the tax legislation, said that the co-operative and credit union movements must not be killed. They must not be crippled by hasty and ill conceived legislation and we, in the opposition, must make certain that this does not happen. Well, if we had listened to our friends opposite, we should not have discussed these particular sections of the bill. They told us that this was great legislation, that it has been studied by their experts, by civil servants who sit in ivory towers, read text books and draw up legislation, and that everything about the bill was fine. How much do these civil servants know about the world of farming and business? They do not know much about running businesses and, obviously, they did not appreciate the true function of the co-operative and credit union movements. If it had not been for the work of the opposition in this House, these sections would have been rushed through by the rubberstamp members on the other side. That is what they were told to do.

You know, it is amusing for members on this side to see how government supporters can swallow their own words. I remember that on the finance committee the government had a majority. The committee gave its rubberstamp approval to the co-op sections, as they were then drafted. When the bill came into the House, the opposition had a chance to point out the inequities in these particular sections. All the backbenchers on the government side, and I will exclude the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and the hon. member for Ottawa West, because early in the debate they said that these sections were bad and should be changed, accepted the Liberal philosophy. They had been told to do so by the Minister of Finance, by the Prime Minister or by others in that party.

Suddenly, after the debate in Parliament made people aware of this bad legislation, we find the trained seals on the other side wanting to get into the act. Now, they are beginning to tell us what they think about the legislation. Why did they not speak up in committee and in the second reading debate? Why were they all, except the two hon. members to whom I referred, silent? Suddenly, however, they realize that something is wrong with the bill and they think that perhaps they had better get in on the act. If we have accomplished nothing else during the present session, we have at least proved the real value of parliamentary debate. The members on the other side, whose leaders seem to think that they run a sausage machine type of operation and that it would be a mistake to permit their supporters to speak their minds, are now speaking up. They were the people who were complaining most about the opposition wasting time in debating this bill in Parliament. I can only say to those people, if that time was wasted it was well wasted. We have amendments now that will correct a great deal—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There is too much noise in the chamber. I have wanted to interrupt the hon. member for the last little while. I do not think I ought to allow him to pursue his remarks in the present vein. As the hon. member knows, we are at this time studying a specific part of the bill in committee. I was hoping that he would relate his remarks more closely to the clauses that are now in front of the committee. I do not think the Chair should allow an open debate on the principles of the bill or the principles of debate at this time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Moncton and I feel that he was dealing with the amendments before the committee.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I do not feel it is correct to say that he has in any way departed from the subject before the committee this afternoon.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member must understand that the Chair has also been listening carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Moncton.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Chairman, apparently we are not speaking the same language. I have been talking about the amendments to these particular sections dealing with co-ops. That is all I have been talking about, and I do not know how I could make my remarks any clearer. I will try. I was saying that the opposition recognized right from the beginning, with the introduction of the white paper, that these sections dealing with co-ops were bad. We opposed this part of the legislation from the beginning. I am now saying that we may take some small satisfaction from having prevailed on this bullheaded, stubborn government to make some necessary changes.

We do not agree entirely with the new provisions but, at least, they are much better than the original sections of the bill. We pointed out from the beginning that the arbitrary method of taxing co-ops was unique in the world. It was something that had been pulled out of the hat. No one on the government side, so far as I know, spoke on the capital employed concept after I had spoken on second reading and in committee. I suggested that the government should consider seriously deleting these particular sections of the bill or, at least, giving; them further, serious study and deciding whether there was not some better way of taxing co-ops than under the capital employed concept.

I do not think anybody has suggested, and certainly the co-ops have not, that the co-operatives are not prepared to pay their fair share of income tax. We have heard the suggestion from people who oppose co-ops that they were not paying their fair share of tax. However, never in any of my conversations with members of co-ops have I ever heard them suggest they were trying to avoid taxation. They have always been prepared to pay their fair share of taxation, given the peculiar nature of the co-op as distinct from other incorporated companies.

• (3:40 p.m.)

We suggested that these sections be removed from the bill and some satisfactory way of taxing co-ops and credit unions be devised. I realize these amendments tie in pretty well with the presentation of the co-ops to the finance committee and the minister. I presume, therefore, that the co-ops and credit unions are quite happy with them. I do not say that I am completely satisfied with these amendments. However, since they are so much better than the original sections in the bill, I think I speak for my party when I say we will wholeheartedly support these amendments.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I did not say a few words at this time about these amendments—

An hon. Member: You are not on yet.

Mr. Whelan: I am on now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I would be remiss at this time if I did not say a few words about these amendments submitted by the President of the Privy Council on behalf of the Minister of Finance. First, I say, to him and the government, thanks on behalf of all the credit unions, caisses populaires and co-ops in Canada, if I can be so vain as to take that right unto myself. I wanted to make it plain that I am not saying this because I will not have to resign or because of any statements that I made at that time, but because of the great assistance these amendments will be to over 5½ million people in Canada. These Canadians believe in helping themselves and, in turn, by the very type of their operation, help Canada as a nation. I have talked to some of the credit union, caisse populaire and co-operative people since these amendments have been submitted to the House. I have been informed that they are quite happy with them. If they are happy and satisfied, Mr. Chairman, so am I.

At this time I would like to compliment the officials of the caisse populaire, credit unions and co-operatives for the way they made their representations to Members of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: At all times their representations were made in a very responsible, reasonable, respectable and informative manner. Other groups who make representations to Members of Parliament should take a lesson from them as to how it should be done. To the many members of credit unions, co-operatives and caisses populaires, as well as people from all parts of Canada who wrote us letters and made other forms of representation by telephone or personally, the same remarks apply to them. At this time I want to say that all the representations I made to the government in the normal form in caucus and so on were received in a good fashion. They were always ready to listen. I did not know how far their amendments would go. Some said I made too strong a representation on behalf of the co-operatives and other organizations affected by this legislation. I do not think I did. I do not think I have ever felt so strong about any issue that I have been confronted with since becoming a Member of Parliament. I meant every word I said.

We on this side of the House, regardless of what people on the other side of the House and in other parts of the country may think, have feelings for people. The government has proved it has feelings for people by its action in bringing in these amendments.

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I received telegrams and so on from people across Canada, from my own area and Ontario, complimenting the government upon bringing in these amendments. In my opinion, these amendments are a new charter to co-ops, credit unions and caisses populaires. It might be said that this is a magna carta for these associations.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I wish to state that we support the amendments introduced yesterday by the President of the Privy Council. They are in line with the amendment I moved on November 18 on behalf of the members of the New Democratic Party. We are happy that the Minister of Finance has at last seen the light or had a change of heart. If this amendment is not the result of the minister seeing the light or having a change of heart, then someone else got to him and successfully twisted his arm.

It is important to note that this is an historic day for the co-operative and credit union movement in Canada. In fact, it has been said they are receiving a new charter. This is a new day for them, since a taxation provision which has been on the statute books of Canada for 25 years, one which can only be classified as discriminatory and iniquitous as it applied to co-operatives, has at last been repealed. It might be interesting to note that it is 25 years since the capital employed concept of taxing co-operatives was introduced. It was in the summer of 1946 when, following considerable study of the subject and after a good deal of pressure from organizations that I need not name at this moment, the government buckled and introduced a piece of legislation which set the stage for discrimination against the co-operative movement in Canada.

When this subject was debated in the summer of 1946, I had the opportunity of sitting in the gallery of this House of Commons and listening to some of the debate on the subject. I recall listening to Mr. T. J. Bentley, the late member for Swift Current, outlining the operation of co-operatives in a very simple fashion. It should have been very simple for anyone to understand but, even at that time, it was apparent that some members of the government had a great deal of difficulty understanding some of the elementary concepts involved. Later in the House of Commons, I listened to my late father, Mr. J. W. Burton, the member for Humboldt, speaking on this same subject. I took note of some of the remarks he made at that time, along with the late Mr. Bentley. One sentence my father used in the debate at that time is as relevant today as then. He made this statement, and I quote:

> There is the other factor, the minister's attempt to force all cooperatives into paying a return on the invested capital. I ask: Where is their so-called free enterprise when they are forcing those who find good in the cooperative movement to accept their pagan philosophy that the wages of money must receive the first consideration? That is a vital question in so far as those of us who are in the cooperative movement are concerned.

That statement is as relevant today as when it was made on July 18, 1946, 25 years ago. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre was here at the time.

• (3:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: He has been here since the olden days.

Mr. Burton: This subject was debated in committee of the whole on November 18 and 19. The discussion centred on the inequity involved in the government's proposals as contained in Bill C-259. I wish to place on record the fact that there were objections from both sides of the House. Members of the New Democratic Party were unequivocal in their stand. They made it clear they were opposed to the government's proposals as they were first put forward, and even to the later modifications, because those amounted simply to a change in degree, not to a change in principle. I moved an amendment to strike out the capital employed concept for taxing co-operatives. I noted that consequential amendments would be required to give effect to such a change and to introduce the alternative of a withholding tax as had been proposed by the co-operative movement and by the Co-operative Union of Canada in particular. The New Democratic Party was unanimous in its opposition to the proposals in the bill and in calling upon the government to accept the proposals which had been placed before it by the Co-operative Union of Canada. We are happy that at last the government has seen fit to accept those proposals.

It is interesting to note the changes which have been made in the government's position on this matter during the past year. In the white paper originally submitted late in 1969, it was proposed to retain the capital employment concept as applied to co-operatives and to extend it to the credit union movement, which was obviously ridiculous. In addition, it called for an increase in the level of capital employed which would be used to calculate the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions—there would be an increase from 3 per cent to 7 per cent. Objection was taken to this and the government thought it was responding by saying: Well, the old legislation fixed it at 3 per cent, the white paper said 7 per cent, so let us split the difference. The result will be a nice compromise. It is a question, Mr. Chairman, whether slow strangulation is preferable to quick strangulation. That is the only difference. Later, the government was forced to admit that its proposals were still not good enough.

The administration came up with a third proposal under which an option would be given to the co-operatives: they could be taxed at the lesser of the 5 per cent capital employed formula or one-third of taxable income in the way any normal corporation operates. This proposition, too, was unacceptable because it opened the door to further changes which might destroy the movement. Now, a fundamental change has been proposed and placed before the committee. We are happy that this change has been made by the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Burton: I was particularly interested in one statement made by the President of the Privy Council when he introduced this new proposal yesterday afternoon. He said that rather than modify the old system, a system which was inappropriate to start with, the government would seek a new and more appropriate method which would recognize that a co-operative was a group of people who had organized to help themselves. I agree with that point of view. I took particular note of the comment "a system which was inappropriate to start with." It seems to me it is not a case of someone suddenly seeing the light. This must have been known to some people in the government for a long time before the minister made his statement yesterday, and I can only conclude there must have been tremendous pressures on the government from behind the scenes which prevented them making such a necessary change before the minister made his statement yesterday.

The amendments which have been introduced recognize that co-operatives and credit unions are non profit-making institutions designed to provide a service to members at the lowest possible cost. The rule for taxation should be the proper taxation of refunds in the hands of recipients. The proposals now introduced do include coverage of two points which the co-operative and credit union movement has fully acknowledged. The first is that there should be full taxation of earnings by non-members. There is no question about this. Second, there should also be taxation of undistributed earnings. These are important points which need to be kept in mind. We are very happy with the provision for the taxation of patronage funds in the hands of recipients, taxation to be confined to refunds which are associated with the individual's business in earning a living; in other words, directly related to business rather than to consumer purchase.

As a result of these changes which, I am sure, will be approved, the co-operative and credit union movement is faced with a new challenge to do even more in our society than has been done in the past. Taxation impediments have now been removed. This opens the door to new opportunities for the movement. The co-operative and credit union movement has already made a significant contribution to the welfare of the Canadian people. It is also making a significant contribution on the international scene. In the developing countries of the world, the co-operative and credit union movement is considered an important tool in improving conditions and providing for a greater measure of equity between nations. There is a continuing role for the movement to play in Canada and on the world scene. New opportunities will emerge, new challenges will have to be faced. I certainly hope that both the co-operatives and the credit unions can accept these challenges and play the full role which they must play if we are to see a better Canada. They can make a significant contribution toward achieving greater equity among the Canadian people; and doing away with the injustices which have been so rife in our society. And, as I say, they can make a significant contribution to national development. All these things are part of the job which the movement must carry out. Now, let us get on with the job. The Parliament of Canada has gone a good deal in introducing and implementing these amendments as they affect the co-operative and the credit union movements.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this amendment which has at last been brought before the House, not without difficulties, because yesterday I attended the discussion on the amendments and subamendments which had to be withdrawn in favour of the one presently under study.

Frankly I was disappointed to note that the department was confused and seemed to wonder what the officials had put in the wording of the bill for things to be mixed up that way. We wondered if the amendment would be read or moved. Some Liberal members yelled not to do anything nor talk about it. We simply had to read the amendment since there were only two days left. Two days! One day of debate in Parliament represents four hours only, and often much less. Which means that we have approximately seven or eight hours of debate left and then it will be said that the opposition carried on a filibuster for four, five or six days, which is absolutely untrue. I would like the Canadian people to know that a day in Parliament is not eight hours long, but more often lasts only two hours. We therefore have only seven hours to discuss that bill of 700 pages with amendments and subamendments covering over 300 pages and we will have to pass it, because we are now under closure.

Those amendments were read yesterday and I arrived here early this morning to examine them. Unfortunately, they have just been distributed to us which means it will be quite difficult for us to study them. All I read on the matter was the report published this morning in the newspaper Le Devoir and I quote:

New Amendments in favour of Co-operatives and Credit Unions

I object against those misleading headlines, especially since they refer to "amendments in favour of co-operatives and credit unions".

In order to encourage co-operatives and credit unions, the government should have left them as they are. I would have supported that but I am objecting now because we are destroying something that made no sense to replace it with something else that does not make much more sense either.

Mr. Chairman, I quote from the paper's article:

NEW AMENDMENTS IN FAVOUR OF CO-OPERATIVES AND CREDIT UNIONS

The government leader in the House, Mr. Allan MacEachen, announced yesterday during the debate on the tax reform bill that the "employed capital" concept will be abandoned with regard to co-operatives.

Thus, the income of co-operatives resulting from business transacted with their members and which is distributed in the form of patronage dividends will not be taxed. The ceiling on admissible deductions for such patronage dividends will be removed.

As a substitute, the government has proposed that the patronage dividends be subject to a withholding tax of 15 per cent to be applied to any amount in excess of $100 paid to a member in a given year. The withholding tax collected will be reimbursable to the extent that it exceeds the amount of tax owed by the taxpayer.

Mr. MacEachen has indicated that those receiving patronage dividends will be treated as they were before, that is to say if the dividend is related to the business of the man receiving it, it will be included in his income for income tax purposes.

In the case of the small credit unions and the caisses populaires, the government has decided to tax their income at the rate of 25 per cent as long as their reserves exceeding those allowed under the Income Tax Act do not exceed by more than 5 per cent the deposits and capital stock.

In the opinion of Mr. MacEachen this special prerogative to use an effective taxe rate of 25 per cent on corporate income may well be insufficient for the small credit unions and the caisses populaires which would require reserves upward of 5 per cent to ensure there financial stability.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

I will stop here Mr. Chairman, because the minister admits it may not be enough for small credit unions. But he does not give a darn about it. Small credit unions may disappear or keep on losing ground, he does not care. That is exactly what the government wants in proposing those amendments.

We have always stood by the principle that whenever obligations are imposed upon the caisses populaires, they should be granted at least the same benefits as others. If we compare the caisses populaires to the chartered banks and if, at the outset, we wish to tax them as much as chartered banks, they should get the same benefits as the chartered banks and should be able to create as much credit as those banks. If the caisses populaires could, whenever they have $6, lend $100, we would not have anything to say. The caisses populaires would then say that they can pay their taxes. But that is not what happens: it is even worse because the caisses populaires are not given the right to have hidden reserves like the ones the chartered banks have had for years. Those hidden reserves amount to one, two, three, four or five billion dollars. Chartered banks never paid and will never pay any tax on that. Nothing is said about it; small caisses populaires and credit unions have to pay, we try to collect a few cents from them, sparing the big shots who have everything for nothing and who are undermining our economy. And Canadians must pay for that.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I have realized since I came to this House, that there are two ways of having a tax accepted. First of all, the government confronts us with an apparently inoffensive bill, but later progressively increases taxation each year or twice a year. In that way, it reaches its goal, which is taxation at the rate of 100 per cent. In the past, several governments resorted to such a method.

However, this government is using another strategy in order to have its proposed taxes accepted. It stuns its victim with white papers in which the 100 per cent tax rate is suggested. No doubt it was noted that each time a white paper is published, Canadians react with rage, precisely, because it proposes maximum taxation. After the first shock, hon. members consider the white paper, express criticism, point to the drawbacks and finally propose amendments. Therefore this means that opposition members have endorsed its principle whereas, at the outset, we simply stated that we rejected the principle of both the tax and the omnibus bill. In other words, most of the opposition members have accepted the principle once the first fight has been won. This is precisely the government's intention: have the taxation principle accepted so as to appear more conciliatory while reaching its original objective, namely the desired taxation level. I agree this is quite clever on the part of the senior officials who often spend three or four years studying the method they will use before tabling a bill in the House. This is how the government manages to have the House adopt as a lesser evil an unfair and unpopular tax.

The caisses populaires have accepted that as a lesser evil: instead of having their throat cut, they will have their hand cut. This government goes even further since it has the absolute majority. In order to disguise its indigestible measures, it invents omnibus bills like Bill C-259 with its 700 pages, not to mention the amendments that cover 300 additional pages.

Of course, the public will not be able to say that those thousands of top civil servants who are lavishly paid from our taxes are doing nothing. It is their job to cheat us in a clever manner and they manage to do that. The proof is that the majority of this House will carry Bill C-259 which will extort an additional $1.5 billion or more from our workers by resorting to closure. Again, whatever the minister might say, this notorious bill will enrich the treasury by more than $1.5 billion through taxes.

You can't work over such a long period on a bill seeking to extract a few more billion dollars without everyone noticing it. That is the purpose of the bill. Let us hope that the days of the "tax-happy people" are numbered. That is my heartfelt hope so that there may be a change of policy before our population is plunged into the blood-bath of a civil war mongered by the finance hawks who exercise a dictatorship over our country.

In the meantime, I tell government members: Tax away, go ahead, and hurry up before you are thrown out.

We of the Social Credit Party, who have long identified the real thieves of our vast national wealth, we tell the puppets of finance that their act has come to an end and our group was not taken in. That is why we have never recognized even the principle of this notorious omnibus bill. We have never accepted that monstruosity of a bill and we will vote against it. As for the caisses populaires, instead of cutting their throat they will cut their hand. We shall tolerate the amendments as a lesser evil but we will vote against the very principle of the bill.

[English]

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak today until a moment ago when I heard the hon. member for Moncton. It is very difficult indeed to remain seated after the vitriolic nonsense couched in typical negative verbiage that he heaped upon our heads over here with his typical pompous scorn.

An hon. Member: Now, we are to hear some more.

Mr. McBride: It may well be that it is the role of the opposition, as he pointed out, to complain, and then if something useful is done to jump on the bandwagon and say, "Look, Canada, what we have done for you". It is unfortunate the hon. member is not here because I hate to speak about an hon. member who is absent. But be that as it may, I have rarely heard such negative nonsense as we were privileged to hear this afternoon from the hon. member for Moncton.

So far as these amendments are concerned, he attempted to create the impression that somehow the government and the House of Commons, all of us to whom he referred as trained seals, had no idea there was anything wrong until the Official Opposition pointed out to us that there should be a change made concerning co-operatives and credit unions. That was done, I suppose, to get some political Brownie points, to quote the distinguished hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, and to convince at least the supporters of the opposition, who I understand are meeting this afternoon at the Chateau Laurier, that this was the case which it was not.

So far as co-operatives in particular are concerned—and I am not so familiar with credit unions—we have been subjected in recent weeks to one of the ablest lobbies that has ever been mounted since I have been a member of this House. I think the credit ought to go to the representatives of the co-operative movement, and I must refer to those I know best, in the province of Ontario, who were sufficiently responsible citizens to come here not for political gain or to create a lot of turmoil and get a lot of notice in the press, but rather with cogent and concise arguments. They came forward and said to many of us, "Look, I think you might take another look at these sections which are before you because we think changes ought to be made." They made their case well and, more than any other single factor are responsible for the results we see before us today. The hon. member for Essex explained this very well as he can so ably do. I wish to concur with what he said when he pointed out that the credit should go to the leaders of the co-operative movement.

There is another thing I am delighted to say which refers directly to the hon. member for Essex. All of us know that very few members are as diligent in pursuing things about which they feel strongly as is this particular member. One day, if changes were not made, he threatened to kick up a storm in this House, and elsewhere I presume, the like of which we had never seen and would never see again. We all know that the respected leader of the Official Opposition commands the name of "Big Thunder" in many circles in Canada, but I want to suggest to the House that even "Big Thunder" himself would be like a Pacific breeze in a tropical island compared to the tornado that could be kicked up by the hon. member for Essex if he so decided to do.

The point I am trying to make is that for the sake of peace, order and good government, if for no other reason, those of us on this side of the House who hold in awe and respect the hon. member for Essex had to work very hard to see if we could give him what he wanted. I think it is extremely important to note that the hon. member for Regina East points out that he has been asking for this sort of thing for a long time, too, and that his party is fully behind these amendments. When action such as this is taken, I suppose we should expect a lot of me-tooism. In a sense, I suppose, this is always the weakness of any government which attempts to listen to the people. Certainly, it is the weakness of the white paper technique of participatory democracy, because if you do listen to the people and do respond to what the people request there are always some political opportunists who will use that fact against you for political gain. However, I think we ought not to be disheartened by people like the hon. member for Regina East, but rather essentially ignore them and take seriously into consideration the fact that a good government ought to listen to people who have a case to make, as the co-operatives have done so ably, and then go on to take action which takes their position seriously.

It is for that reason of course that the government has decided to abandon the idea of capital employed. From this point forward, co-operatives will not be taxed on income from business which is distributed to members in the form of patronage dividends. I could go on, but all members are quite familiar with this. I want to conclude by saying one other thing. I, like many other members, have had a good deal of correspondence on this subject. I want to take the time to read two short paragraphs from a letter which came to me from a Mr. Plewes of Carp, Ontario which read as follows:

• (4:20 p.m.)

Credit unions are non profit organizations which help low income people to borrow at reasonable rates. We need them today as we always have, more so indeed. The proposed tax will wipe out many credit unions, if you do not believe this you will have to prove it for yourselves, by which time it will be too late to right matters.

I am bringing this to your attention in the naïve hope that you will see the truth of it and do something about it. I must say that it always seems to me an exercise in futility to write to a member of parliament about anything whatsoever, but hope springs eternal.

The point I want to make is that too few Canadians recognize the pressure they can bring to bear on the democratic process by putting their views forward to their representatives. I want this citizen to learn that his views have played a small part in effecting a big change. But we must all recognize that, in spite of the very negative attitude of the hon. member for Moncton, his obvious hostility toward what the government is and what it represents, in spite of the kind of position that he took even on an amendment that he wanted to approve, and in spite of the obvious political disadvantage of the kind of me-tooism represented by the hon. member for Regina East, this is a good government doing what a good government should do. We have introduced amendments which will help the co-operative movement in all parts of Canada, even in the riding that is represented, either capably or incapably as you wish to judge, by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville who is giving a mini-speech while remaining seated as I am addressing the Committee. I think the credit for what has happened must go to the co-operative movement, to the minister and his representatives, who were willing to listen to the representations that were made from many quarters. Among those who most ably made representations were the hon. member for Essex, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton and a great many others.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How unctuous can you get.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, we are grateful for the reminder that has been given to us by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton this afternoon indicating to us just how difficult it has been to persuade the Prime Minister and his colleagues of the wisdom of the action they have finally taken. He pointed out, along with other members of the House, the lengths to which not only opposition members but government members such as the distinguished member for Essex were prepared to go in order to set on the correct path a government that seemed to be completely oblivious of such an important issue. I think all hon. members should be grateful to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton for putting that on the record again, because, quite frankly, in these dying hours of debate we have an opportunity to reflect, not only on how we have arrived at our present situation with respect to an important piece of legislation which is now being forced upon the country because of the government's imposition of closure, but on what is perhaps the overriding characteristic of this government.

[Mr. McBride.]

I think perhaps the hon. member was so caught up in his own oratorical skills that he inadvertently contradicted himself by saying at one point that it must be the weakness of this government that it listens to the people. Whatever the weaknesses of this government are, it will never be criticized for being weak to the point of listening to the people, and no one will be able to say that more objectively and more enthusiastically than the thousands of members of co-operatives and credit union movements who have agonized over the utterly inept performance of this government in dealing with one of the economic keystones of our country.

We all agree this afternoon, government and opposition alike, because the government has finally come to its senses. The important question is not to score brownie points on the issue, whether it is the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton or anyone else, but to realize substantially what lies behind the days of debate that have taken place in the committee which would have been totally unnecessary had this government responded to the reasonable requests put forward not only last summer following the introduction of the taxation bill by the Minister of Finance but put forward months and years ahead of that and which were seemingly extremely sensible to all members except those on the government side.

Surely, it is quite clear, and it should be clear to the people of this country, that the imposition of closure is contrary to the interests of the people and this has been demonstrated by the fact the government has responded to the requests for these amendments. The government has said that it is necessary to use closure in order to get this legislation adopted, while at the same time, as I pointed out to the House leader last week, it had to bring in further amendments in order to deal with the incredible situation in which the government has placed itself. Why did this happen? Why was it necessary for the government—

Mr. Gibson: This is participatory democracy and it works.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): This is participatory democracy which refuses to listen until every last ounce of pressure is exerted.

Mr. Gibson: Your speech is out of date now.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am not concerned about whether or not my speech is out of date.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would like to hear what is being said by the hon. member for Egmont, so I will ask the hon. member to take his seat to allow the hon. member for Egmont to continue.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I think there is more than arrogance—

Mr. Gibson: Repetitive nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hope that it will be possible at some time to give a medical examination to the hon. member opposite who finds it impossible—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gibson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I should like to say that my wife found me to be rather cranky the other day. I did go to a doctor and I received a clean bill of health, but I think it is high time that the Conservative party organized a research team to investigate some of their members.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am glad that at least the hon. member is on the right track, Mr. Chairman. I hope that they will find out what causes the disability which makes him speak more efficiently while seated than on his feet, and once that is corrected perhaps he will be serviceable to the House.

I think it was more than insensitivity, arrogance or some kind of death wish that propelled the government to continue its policies, almost to the final hour, with regard to the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions.

Mr. Mahoney: This is an expert analysis.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As expert as any the hon. member opposite presented with regard to this matter.

I think that the heart of the matter here is that the government, whether it is the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance, has never really taken the time and trouble to consider what the co-operative and credit union movement was all about. I am glad that the Prime Minister is making one of his rare visits this afternoon during the debate, because perhaps, unlike last week when he was not prepared to listen, he might be prepared to listen this afternoon. I notice he is not listening at the moment, but that is not unusual for this Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Why don't you listen?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am endeavouring to listen but some people would rather speak while remaining seated than on their feet.

An hon. Member: They make more sense.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The problem from the beginning, from last June, was an unwillingness to accept the unique economic and social role played by the co-op and credit union movement. It was obvious, even to a layman such as myself—I am not an active member either of a co-op or a credit union—that the government, in some kind of ham-handed way, had tried to deal with the co-op and credit union movement on the same basis as it would deal with any corporation or business enterprise. That has been the essence of the problem.

Somehow or other members of the government got themselves convinced, and it must be assumed not with a great deal of thought, that they could simply enact the same kind of tax laws to apply to co-ops and credit unions that apply to other forms of economic activity. There was no willingness to consider what has been a basic principle from the beginning of the co-op and credit union movement, the principle of member participation and of equity in terms of that participation. As long as members of the government were looking at this in terms of what I would call a completely austere and unrealistic economic outlook, they were in effect willing to destroy the heart and soul of the co-op and credit union movement.

An hon. Member: That is illusory.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): If it is illusory I would like to know why the Minister of Finance has finally agreed to these changes.

Mr. Gibson: Isn't that what you want him to do?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Exactly. You are not listening.

Mr. Gibson: Yes, I am. This is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): If you can control that space below your nose you will be able to listen more carefully.

Mr. Gibson: I am listening carefully, and it is all nonsense.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I wish that the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth would please let the hon. member finish his speech.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I don't really mind. A good speech always needs a little comic relief and the hon. member is providing that. It is obvious that it took the government some months to understand that there is something important about member participation in the co-op and credit union movement. It is obvious that that is such a basic principle that members on both sides of the House were willing to go to rather extreme lengths to preserve that principle, in the belief that failure to adhere to it in terms of our tax laws would ultimately destroy the co-op and credit union movement.

Much has been said in this chamber with respect to what would have happened had the government not taken the advice offered from all sides and by a variety of individuals. That principle has now been preserved, and we must be careful to prevent a possible future reversal through some further blunderous excursion, either by this government or any successor of it, which could destroy the unique contribution that is continuously made every day by the co-op and credit union movement.

I think it is important for the people of the country to realize that this House performs a very vital function in the democratic exercise in protecting their rights and privileges. In this instance, we have seen a clear example of the importance of debate on the dangerous changes that the government had advocated for so many months for co-ops and credit unions. Lamentably, Mr. Chairman, we are only a few hours away from the time when debate will be cut off on this bill, and I shudder to think of how many other areas, in terms of the taxation laws of the country, will be adversely affected by too little participation in this debate, both by members of the committee and by the public at large. I do not think one needs to be very much of a prophet to suggest, as I do, that in a very short period of time, perhaps early next year, we will be faced with another series of amendments to this major tax measure because the government has blundered in the direction that it has taken in this tax bill.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Gibson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that a government member would be recognized.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to express my opinions on these amendments and the co-op and credit union movement. May I take this opportunity to compliment the government on introducing these amendments. I would like to agree with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton that the co-op and credit union movement did an excellent job of what he called lobbying, but what I would call stating their case against the legislation as originally proposed by the government. It is because of the case stated by the co-op and credit union movement, and because of the case stated by the NDP in the House of Commons, that the legislation has been changed.

I am sure that the legislation is not being amended just to comply with the philosophy of cabinet ministers. All hon. members of this House received much correspondence with respect to the legislation, and many personal calls and petitions. Mr. Chairman, I represent a riding where 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the population are members of co-ops and credit unions. That riding contains the largest credit union in the world and, Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity to have a better reading of public opinion recently than other hon. members. On November 8, that public opinion told the government in no uncertain terms that this legislation, as it then stood, was unacceptable. May I compliment the citizens of Assiniboia for delivering the message to the government that its legislation was inadequate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knight: There was another issue in that by-election, Mr. Chairman, the government's grains stabilization policy. In that connection, I would point out that last Friday the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton had some comments to make about the government's legislation designed to implement that policy. May I suggest to him that his comments on Friday had about the same effect as his comments in the riding of Assiniboia prior to November 8.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness may I compliment my colleagues who spoke out against the government's attack on the co-op and credit union movement. I want to complement them for the excellent job they did in offering alternatives to the government's position. And I want to compliment the odd individual in the Liberal party who stood up in defence of the co-op and credit union movement. Those of us in this party from Saskatchewan who are members of co-ops and credit unions are pleased with the amendments that the government has introduced. We hope they will remain in force for a long time, and will not be suddenly changed a year after the next election. Once again, Mr. Chairman, may I thank the government for changing its position on these sections. Since they accepted the message on November 8 and changed their position on the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions, we hope they will take the same position on the grain stabilization policy.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

• (4:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, after hearing the last speaker praise the government it may be repetitive to speak for any length of time on this subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Gibson: However, Mr. Chairman, it is not often in this place that one has the opportunity to urge an amendment, as I did and many of my colleagues too, in this House ten days ago when I urged the government not to be like a football team that is known to get to the ten yard line and then fumble the ball. We urged the Minister of Finance to go forward and score a touchdown, as the famous Calgary Stampeders did, rather than to fumble as the Toronto Argonauts did.

I urged the government to change the provisions in the Income Tax Act which taxed co-operatives and credit unions. I received many requests from my constituency that we should take a strong line on this and try and have these amendments made. Having supported the credit union movement as we have, I want to commend the government for these excellent amendments which encourage the supporters of the credit unions, the co-operatives and the caisses populaires. I feel that by encouraging the lending of money through these organizations in a responsible way to individuals who are often caught in emergency situations, we have assured an extraordinary measure of support for this kind of venture.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, as pointed out so aptly by my colleague for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), we may perhaps rejoice in the fact that the government has agreed at long last to lessen the disastrous effects of the famous Bill C-259, particularly with regard to the caisses populaires.

Indeed, the bill in its original form simply threatened to assassinate those institutions which have been, and still are a sort of backbone, especially in the province of Quebec. Caught and included in this heavy but lightly treated tax reform, the caisses had no choice but to insist with the members that at least amendments be moved to make some of the sections a bit more palatable. The amendments moved by the minister prove how right we were in criticizing those responsible as well as the bill itself.

There was no dely in debates, nor was there any filibustering from the opposition. We are rather confused by a thick, heavy, mixed up, incomprehensible and incoherent bill which embarrasses everybody, beginning with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the ministers and their parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Chairman, one is confused by a jumble of sections which are supposed to constitute a reform. When you say "reform", you generally mean "improvement"; if you change something, it is to better it, to make it more profitable for those concerned with it. But such is not the case, because the amendment which we are now considering means that the government itself has to redraft, bit by bit, its own legislation, and this, over a certain period of time, since the duration of the debate has been limited.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that the people know that the object of closure is "presumably" to accelerate the business of the House. I say "presumably", as closure was applied because the opposition was annoying or worrying the government. Obviously, that is completely false. Considering that each one of those sections requires a lot of consideration and study, how can the work be done rapidly? It is physically impossible, and the proof lies in the fact that section 137 has gone by the wayside.

Now, Mr. Chairman, If some sections are so badly written that they have to be completely revamped, we must say that in the 700 pages of the bill, dozens of clauses should also be modified.

That is why we feel that it was absolutely necessary to take all the time required to carry out the tax reform. It would have been easy—as many hon. members and many of my colleagues have repeatedly pointed out—to divide the bill in two and adopt immediately the sections that were not contested. There was no reason to submit a package bill that is badly written, incomprehensible and incoherent. But just the same, we must be happy that the government is nevertheless willing to lighten the much too heavy burden which the savings and credit unions have had to carry.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, this does not mean that in itself—as my colleague from Roberval said it so well—the reform is good. We do not want to help in the passing of legislation drawn up haphazardly, without any consideration being given to the views of the people.

In any case, this bill will be passed, whether it is good or bad. It must be admitted that when this bill was outlined in the White paper, the officers of Caisses populaires and co-operatives found out that high officials, or even the minister himself, had overlooked credit unions. If they had been forgotten at the time of the drafting of the bill, we must say that despite studies deemed to have been made and the publication of the white paper, a reform was considered much too soon. It is not that reform is not needed, as we of the Social Credit know very well—and we say so loud and clear—that there must be real economic reforms in order to get a proper financial and fiscal system. But to make reforms and speedily pass a tax measure for the sake of it, or to expect to go before voters at the next general election and be able to say that a certain thing has been done is illogical and most of all frustrating for the whole Canadian population.

[English]

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief this afternoon. I want to make a few comments in connection with the amendments which we are studying. When the parliamentary secretary resumes his seat, I want to ask him a question or two about one of these sections. At the outset, may I say that I am completely happy for the co-ops because they have made their point. I am also happy, of course, because the hon. member for Essex will still be with us, at least for a little while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: Generally speaking, I think it is fair to say that all of us approve the amendments submitted yesterday by the government House leader. We are most relieved to be rid of these provisions as they were originally drafted, because they were most regressive. I think we ought to remember, however, that they had not been accepted by government supporters until the time the co-ops, credit unions and caisses populaires mounted their very, very effective lobby. My friend for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton complimented the credit unions and the co-ops on their most effective lobby. There has been much bantering back and forth—it seemed a little silly to me—about who should get the credit for the changes that the government finally saw fit to introduce. I will say nothing regarding credit. I opposed the restrictive regulations affecting co-ops right from the beginning. However, I think it is fair to point out that the one thing we have discovered in this country is this: this government will respond to pressure. In that there is an object lesson for the rest of Canada. Canadians must remember that old adage, the squeaking wheel gets the grease. I compliment the co-ops on their very large, very active and totally justified lobby.

Having said that, I must bring up one other subject which members of this House ought to consider. What about the individual businessman? What about private owners of business? I have a message for them, and that message is coming through loud and clear. If private individuals and private businessmen want any consideration from this government, they will have to organize themselves as they were never organized before. They must do that to be heard. I am suggesting to the retail merchants, who in their submission asked for some parts of this bill to be deferred, that they had better beef-up their organization and make it as good as the organization behind the lobby of the co-ops.

Theoretically, no private business can compete with an efficiently run co-op. Yet, Mr. Chairman, they do compete and compete quite successfully. How is that, I wonder? Again, as I say, much has been said this afternoon about where the credit lies for causing the about-face of the government. That is not important, because the reason for the about-face is pretty apparent. The reason lies in the 2,373 co-ops in Canada with 1,690,000 members who are potential voters. That is the answer. The old power of the ballot box was suddenly felt. What about the other distasteful sections of the bill affecting those individuals in this country who are not organized?

I should like the parliamentary secretary to explain and make just a little clearer the effect of proposed section 135(7), as set out on page 10175 of Hansard for December 6, yesterday's Hansard. The proposed subsection reads in part:

(7) Where a payment pursuant to an allocation in proportion to patronage (other than an allocation in respect of consumer goods or services)—

This wording leaves me just a little bewildered. I am thinking of a very well run and effective co-op in my area. They have a feed mill, buy grain and do all manner of things. They run a retail department where farmers can buy farm supplies, fence posts, wire, hog waterers, cattle waterers, and all those things that are incidental to the successful operation of a farm. I wish to ask a question, and I know the parliamentary secretary will be able to answer it. I am a little concerned about what happens to patronage dividends in that particular area that are available to members of that co-op. Of course, I am delighted to see less red tape. The less red tape we have in this country, the better. I am all for that.

However, let me point out an anomaly in this area which fortifies my argument regarding the protection for the individual. Let us say that we have a customer who deals with a co-op. Let us say that he gets $99.99 worth of patronage dividend. There is no withholding tax, as I understand it, and there is no record or anything like that. Let us compare that situation with that pertaining to a poor, dear little old widow who has $200 in her savings account, on which the bank pays her 5 per cent. So, what happens? She gets a T4 income tax form for her income of $10 from that source.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. McCutcheon: I do not think that is quite 100 per cent satisfactory. I will be the first to admit that no tax is withheld. However, these two examples show how inconsistent these provisions are. It is all right to have a $100 patronage dividend if you are a member of an organization, but if you are just a plain, ordinary, unprotected, unorganized Canadian without a strong lobby, forget it.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, before I commence, I am willing to have the parliamentary secretary answer the questions of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent asked a couple of specific questions. First, the distinction between patronage dividends that consumer co-operatives issue and other types. Of course, the person who patronizes a co-operative store for his groceries is buying those goods with after tax dollars and any patronage dividend that he receives is a reduction in the price of those consumer goods and, accordingly, is not intended to be taxable. That is the reason for the distinction raised in section 135(7). This distinction exists in the present act as well.

Where the consumer is a farmer who buys binder twine, barbed wire and the other goods the hon. member mentioned, he is receiving a refund of payments he has made that he will presumably claim as business expenses as a result of his farming operation. The expenses that he claims must be reduced by the amount of the patronage dividend to determine his business income. Accordingly, the patronage dividend will be included in income in that case.

The fact that the withholding tax does not apply until the patronage dividends reach the $100 mark does not mean the patronage dividends are not taxable or that the amount should not be included in income. Co-operatives will be required to issue slips, analogous to the ones the hon. member mentioned in connection with the poor little old lady and her savings account, to their patrons with regard to their patronage dividends, whether they amount to $100 or not and whether or not the withholding tax has been applied.

The onus is placed on the taxpayer to decide whether the type of business he does with the co-op is of a consumer nature and hence the rebate or patronage dividend is not an income item. Alternatively, if it is a patronage dividend with respect to business expenses he has claimed, the onus is on the taxpayer to report that as income. However, the fact that a withholding tax is not required until the $100 amount is reached does not affect the obligation of the co-operative to issue a statement to the taxpayer. That statement, of course, is verifiable by inspection by the Department of National Revenue. I do not think there is an unfairness here, as the hon. member suggested there might be.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Before I recognize the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform hon. members that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—Combines—Sale of Toronto "Telegram" subscription list to Toronto "Star"—Federal aid policy for Canadian publications—Press review board; the hon. member for Humber—St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Family income security—Family allowances—Negotiations with Quebec—Increases; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave)—Grain—Use and leasing of interior elevator facilities.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, the members of the New Democratic Party welcome the changes with regard to co-ops and credit unions. I will direct my remarks to credit unions because the hon. member for Regina East and the hon. member for Assiniboia have related their remarks to co-ops. That does not mean I have not been interested in co-ops. I have the honour of being a member of a consumer co-op in Toronto as well as a credit union. One of the reasons the consumer co-op failed in Toronto was the keen competition from the chain stores and some of their purchasing methods which denied co-ops certain buying privileges. Be that as it may, the co-ops have a very impressive record across the country, especially in the west. With regard to credit unions, I join with the many members in the House who have given credit to the co-ops and credit unions for the way they persuaded the government to bring about these changes.

One may ask, why the change? I can only relate my remarks to my experience while a member of the finance committee during the last Parliament. We were making changes to the Bank Act. I will always remember the tremendous persuasiveness of the banks with regard to taking the 6 per cent ceiling off loans. They were successful in doing it. One of their arguments was the intrusion of credit unions into the field of lending money to people across the country. There is quite a difference between a banking institution and a credit union. The philosophy of a credit union has been underlined many times. Its purpose is not profit or charity, but service. I received many letters from credit unions in Toronto, particularly one which is called So-Use. It has a very impressive record of lending to new Canadians and has done well over the years. I quote from their letter of September 24, 1971:

> New arrivals to Canada needed loans to establish themselves in this country; others were still paying their homes off, rehabilitating themselves after the depression and war. Lending institutions of all descriptions were demanding high securities and/or high interest rates, both of which were rather burdensome for most of the consumers. Therefore the Credit Unions flourished with the appealing slogans of low cost loans, loan and savings life insurance and mutual assistance for one another. Everybody felt like his brother's keeper. We had no direct access to the money from the Bank of Canada at the lowest rates of interest. We had to depend on the understanding and loyalty of our members. Warmth and confidence of our members to and in one another are the causative factors of our growth. It didn't just happen.

Those words are from one of the successful credit unions in Toronto. I wish to read the words of a credit union in my constituency. It is called the Woodgreen Credit Union Limited. In a letter to me, the president of that credit union said:

> There are 92 credit unions in your riding. They all provide very worthwhile services to their members. I am in constant contact with their officers and believe me, John, only a half dozen out of 92 could survive.

He meant survive under the provisions the government originally introduced. When I think of the caisse populaire which have flourished in Quebec, I am impressed with the excellent record they have obtained. I wonder if conditions would not be much worse in Quebec if the caisse populaire had not filled the gap which banks and other financial institutions left through their failure to provide loans to people who did not have the necessary securities and credit rating that the banks demanded. I have heard it said many times that one of the reasons the credit unions are comparable to the banks is that they charge 1 per cent per month on the unpaid balance on loans. On the example of borrowing $1,200 at 1 per cent a month on the unpaid balance over a period of 12 months if $100 a month were repaid, the total sum paid in interest would be $78 and if you divide the $1200 borrowed by 78 the effective interest rate amounts to 6.5 per cent. Account must then be taken of the fact that the effective rate is likely to be even lower when the credit union declares its interest rebates to those who have borrowed money. Is it any wonder that the banks and other financial institutions put such strong pressure in the Finance Committee when changes were being made to the Bank Act? They realized that the fine motive of the credit unions was not profit or charity but service to the people.

I cannot avoid the conclusion that when the original provisions of this act were determined the government was corporation-oriented; it had been directly influenced by the large corporations, the banks and the financial institutions. Otherwise it would not have brought down the provisions which are contained in Bill C-259. Who would have thought of the capital employed concept which the Minister of Finance attempted to apply, not only to the co-operatives but to the credit unions? It certainly was not dreamed up after consultation with the credit unions. It was certainly arrived at after pressure from banking and other financial institutions.

I give very little credit to the government for bringing in these amendments. We welcome them, but I do not give them credit. In the first instance, the minister and his colleagues were influenced totally by the corporations. It was only after members from all parties had spoken out against the proposals that the government yielded. Incidentally, I found it passing strange that during the discussion of the personal exemption rates, the changes from $1,000 to $1,500 in the case of single persons and from $2,000 to $2,850 in the case of married couples, very few supporters of the government pointed out that 20 per cent of all Canadians would still be living below the poverty line. I am disturbed that supporters of the Liberal party did not rise on other sections and allow their voices to be heard in favour of necessary changes. I notice the parliamentary secretary giving me a slight smile. I can recall that when we were discussing the expenses to be allowed to workers there was a cemetery-like silence from the benches opposite, and that no criticism was levelled against the bill when we were discussing the expense accounts which are to be allowed to members of the boards of corporations in connection with their business.

We have a proud history in Canada in connection with credit unions. Back in 1900 Alphonse Desjardins of Lévis, Quebec, began the credit union movement in Canada. From that humble beginning credit unions have spread across the country and served a most useful purpose. It disturbs me that the government should have brought forward provisions which would have strangled the growth of the movement. It took the efforts of members of all parties to persuade the administration of the necessity of credit unions and of their social usefulness. The argument which the credit unions put forward respecting the necessity for statutory provisions relating to reserves, the argument in support of their inability to distribute reserves to their members in the same way as corporations distribute their reserves to shareholders must have had some impact upon the government, because the changes made in the legislation reflect this point of view.

I trust that never again will the government be persuaded by the banks and financial institutions that credit unions do not play a vital part in improving the living conditions of most Canadians. When I read the statement by the Prime Minister, the remarks he made on National Credit Union Day, I realize he was setting forth the true philosophy of the credit unions. He said, then:

> Credit unions have experienced enormous success because they encourage both regular savings and the wise use of credit. But even more important, credit unionism encourages self help, mutual assistance, and personal involvement. In this sense credit unions are more than financial institutions, they are a positive social force within our communities.

I hope the other members of the cabinet will take to heart the message the Prime Minister sent to all Canadians and never again be persuaded by the corporate interests of this country to bring forward such proposals as they first brought forward in Bill C-259. If they do that we shall succeed as we have never succeeded before in bringing about some of the social improvements which are necessary in this country.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, we have just heard the praise which the hon. member for Broadview has rightly heaped upon the Prime Minister. As one who has been associated very closely with many cabinet ministers, I should like to assure the hon. member for Broadview that the cabinet ministers do strive very hard to emulate the Prime Minister in that regard.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Haidasz: I have been a member since its inception, 26 years ago, of the St. Stanislaus Credit Union, the largest in Ontario, with more than 12,000 members with its headquarters in Parkdale. I, too, was pleased to make representations in this House in favour of appropriate amendments to Bill C-259, and today I wish to express to the Minister of Finance, to his parliamentary secretary and to their officials, the appreciation of all credit union members in Canada for their patience and understanding in drafting the amendments which were announced yesterday. As hon. members know, the income of credit unions and caisses populaires will now be taxed at the rate of 25 per cent as long as reserves in excess of those allowed against income do not exceed 5 per cent of deposits and share capital. A further amendment will also mark the abandonment of the notion of capital employed and embodies the proposal that the limit on interest rebates related to capital employed be deleted. These amendments will go a long way to enabling credit unions to grow and assist their members, and, consequently, to further the growth of the Canadian economy.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I should also like to take this opportunity to pay a tribute to the credit union movement which has rendered assistance to numerous immigrants, especially in helping them to procure loans to buy houses. This is a great service indeed. For some reason or other, these immigrants have found it much easier to get a loan for a home from the credit union than from other sources. I am delighted to join the hon. member for Essex and my other colleagues in the House in expressing once again to the Minister of Finance our appreciation and also to congratulate the credit union representatives who have presented their case to us in a very reasonable, courteous and effective manner. We have seen participatory democracy work and succeed.

[Translation]

Mr. Rodrigue: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my colleagues, I would like to point out that we support the amendments proposed by the government House leader to sections 57, 58, 135 and 137 which deal particularly with co-operatives and credit unions.

I am very happy that the representations of the co-operatives and credit unions and the reiterated requests of hon. members of all parties have been heeded.

As for us, of the Social Credit party, I know that we have not been very soft on the government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when we asked that the sections I have just mentioned be amended. This is why I reiterate our appreciation for the proposed amendments. These are amendments which I think are much more equitable that the initial proposals. It seems to me following the talks my colleagues have had in these amendments.

Everyone will try to interpret the tabling of amendments in their own way. Some will say that the government has taken a backward step, others that it has made a gain. I myself consider that the amendments to the clauses concerning co-operatives and credit unions are the result of numerous negotiations and pressures exercised by those organizations which stated their views in an intelligent manner but without kicking up a shindy. It therefore proves that it is possible to obtain results from a government when the people exercise the right amount of pressure and make themselves heard.

However, people should be in a position to make themselves heard. The government follows too easily the advice of officials who tend to try and settle problems with over-simple methods, without paying too much attention to justice. Our agreement to the amendments brought forward in regard to co-operatives and credit unions does not mean that we approve the bill as a whole. The latter contains a lot of nonsense, such as the inequitable way in which it sought to deal with credit unions and co-operatives. Several other amendments would therefore be in order.

The concept of capital utilized which has been incorporated in the Income Tax Act for the past 23 years, and which was the basis for taxing co-operatives, is a striking instance of the errors and inequities contained in the bill before us. I am happy that representations made to the minister have succeeded in moving him to bring forward amendments to correct an inequity which was about to be sanctioned.

Co-operatives and caisses populaires will now know what they are faced with. They are faced with a new challenge: that of taking a greater part in the Canadian economy and of having their members participate in the many services which they provide for five million people.

The co-operative movement is still new in Canada. In fact, it is only starting, after groping its way for a long time. I think that it has acquired valuable experience during those last few weeks' discussions and will be in a position to take up the challenge.

I do not intend to retrace the history of the co-operative movement in Canada, as others have done so before me—with great competence. I am glad of the turn events have taken and I hope this will serve as a lesson not only to members of co-operatives and caisses populaires, but to all Canadians.

That is a striking example which shows that solutions can be found when there is the will to talk business seriously. This is an important lesson for the government which will have to pay more attention to the wishes of the people.

In the course of the debates ahead further amendments to this bill will be introduced and I hope that the minister will welcome those proposals.

[English]

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the significance of these changes to the bill. The government has moved from a substantial widening of the capital employed formula on which it taxed co-operatives to a complete elimination of it. This is a change that goes further than most of us expected, but which I think is basic to the co-operative movement. The capital employed formula did not seem to have much basis in fact; it was a formula that was made use of during wartime in order to replace the excess profits tax. We are now returning to a straight 15 per cent withholding tax. The capital employed formula was a very poor way of taxing co-operatives, and as I say it is significant that this formula has now been changed.

I should like to make some comments on the effect of this proposed change on the western grain handling companies, which are divided roughly into three groups. There are the three western pools; the United Grain Growers, which operates under a somewhat different structure but is still to some extent a co-operative; and the private line elevator companies. It is significant that this change is made at this time because the grain handling system in western Canada is being reorganized. Even though the United Grain Growers has been in operation for 60 years and the pools have been operating for 40 years, the line elevator companies are still able to get between 30 and 40 per cent of the grain that passes through the system each year, in spite of the fact that in general I think they are at a disadvantage to their competitors, particularly the pools.

The elimination of the capital employed formula should substantially increase the competitiveness of the pools, and to some extent the United Grain Growers, vis-à-vis the line elevator companies. Whether this will see the growth of a monopoly in this area remains to be seen, but I think it is a definite possibility. We must wait and see how these changes to the corporation tax affect the value of this tax as a means of raising money.

We have seen a downgrading of the corporation tax in the last few years. The 7 per cent reduction mentioned by the Minister of Finance a few weeks ago and the dropping of the 1 per cent corporation tax each year for four years means that the government is moving away from corporation tax as a means of raising money for the treasury and is placing more emphasis on income tax. These changes with respect to co-operatives should further increase the revenue of the government through personal income tax. So I believe we must look at these changes to see if the corporation tax is to be reduced significantly over the years in line with the amendments in respect of co-operatives. If not, there may well be significant changes in our economic structure particularly in rural areas involving producer co-operatives.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, first of all, like some other hon. members I wish to commend the Minister of Finance and his parliamentary secretary for bringing in the amendments they did yesterday. I can assure them that in a constituency like mine, which has dozens of small and large co-operatives, this is most welcome. The fact that the government has moved on this issue is a credit to the Parliament of Canada, as is the fact that members of this House realized that co-operatives would be strangled by this bill and have been able to convince the powers that be that changes ought to be made.

The New Democratic Party, as everyone knows, was committed to fight as hard as it could to change the mind of the government. I am very pleased that the Minister of Finance and the government have recognized this. I know also that many members of the Liberal party, particularly the hon. member for Essex, made their intentions very clear and because of this the government changed its mind.

More important, however, I believe is the fact that the co-operative movement itself deserves credit for the changes before us. I think we should all congratulate them for the tremendous job they did in articulating their cause and in convincing members who had not been convinced about the reason co-operatives exist and why this bill as first presented would have been very injurious to them. They should be complimented at the national and local levels.

I received 50 or 60 telegrams, letters and resolutions from co-operatives in my constituency, wheat pools and credit unions. I congratulate these people for coming forward and persuading the government it should change the legislation as originally presented to the House. In a democratic system I believe government should listen to the people and be flexible enough to amend legislation to coincide with the wishes of any sector of our society.

I believe all of us felt that if the bill had gone through in its original form it would have eventually strangled the co-operative movement. I think it is essential that government recognize that co-operatives served a very significant purpose in the history of this country. This is particularly true in a province such as Saskatchewan where the co-operative movement is a vital part of the way of life. Co-operatives are an integral part of the community. Back in the thirties when the farmers faced the great depression they had to band together by forming co-operatives in order to protect themselves from corporate businesses which did not care about them. In every town and village across the province of Saskatchewan hundreds of people are active at the grassroots level in co-operatives, not as a profit-making venture but as a service to themselves, to their families and their communities. This is the type of thing I believe should be encouraged in Canadian life.

I think we should note that our party, in 1945, in Saskatchewan about a year after it formed the government established the first department of co-operation in history and appointed a minister of co-operation. This is the type of leadership we should have in all parts of Canada. As I have said before, the co-operative movement is not a profit-making operation but, as the hon. member for Broadview pointed out, is a movement controlled by the people who use the co-operatives. You have one member with one vote, and not a few directors sitting on a board in some smoke-filled room behind closed doors making decisions which affect the people.

This is the direction in which we should be moving and I am thankful the President of the Privy Council presented these amendments. I hope they will stay with us in the years ahead because they will be of great benefit to the co-operative movement. I appreciate, as do my constituents, this step in the right direction in the decision of the government in amending the original bill.

Mr. Osler: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words to say this afternoon. They are not particularly weighty or well thought-out. I am very pleased to hear the tenor of the remarks of all hon. members who have spoken. They all agree, as I do, that it is a great thing to see these amendments and the changes made, since the future of co-operatives and credit unions is assured because of them. I certainly agree with the hon. member for Essex who first brought out the idea which has been repeated by other hon. members, that those who should be given credit for this are the credit unions themselves who did an excellent job in a very legitimate lobby. I would say this is a classic example, of which opposition members are not always aware or willing to recognize, that in a democracy if a story is told clearly, logically and cogently to enough Members of Parliament, people will change their mind and take a slightly different course in order to accommodate them. That is what Parliament is supposed to be all about.

I am very pleased that in this aspect we are proving, as we have at other times, that Parliament does have life and is not dominated by a bunch of dictatorial technocrats. This is the language of members of the opposition.

This procedure has shown that we have a future as a democratic state and that Parliament has an important place in a democratic state. We did not have television cameras in the House this afternoon. I am opposed to their being here because I think we do enough grandstanding without being encouraged to do more television. If the Canadian people were to have seen the great workings of this democratic, this almost sacred institution, this afternoon what would they have seen? They would have seen everybody agreeing to amendments to a bill, which shows the good sense of hon. members. Also they would have seen everybody here doing something that nobody in Canada can understand. They would have seen members wasting a whole afternoon saying, "You should have done it sooner," or "I was the guy who suggested it," or "It was me too"—a whole bunch of extraneous garbage which has nothing to do with the fact that Parliament has changed its mind and is passing a constructive measure. As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River said a while ago, for grown men to be fighting over Brownie points all the time is not something that the people of Canada find very stimulating.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: Then why are you on your feet?

Mr. Osler: This afternoon we have wasted a lot of time.

Mr. Paproski: Then why don't you sit down?

Mr. Osler: I wish that some members who most need instruction would listen to a little instruction from time to time. I suppose the fact that there are so few Conservatives in the chamber makes them want to make a great deal of noise. There are only four here now and the rest are away, thinking about how they will save the nation. I have not yet seen any blood on the street in front of the Chateau Laurier, but I think there must be some by now because they have been meeting for a day and a half.

The ghoulish glee that people have been expressing all afternoon, seeing that there is a time limitation on this important bill, is a waste of time. Everybody on the opposition side says that time limitation is a crime and that they should be able to talk forever on this important subject. Yet we have four days during which to talk on it and we waste all one afternoon hearing people say, "I should get the Brownie points, not you". Surely we should have spent our time talking about other things. Great screams were heard last week when we said the time had come to pass this bill. But we have spent all afternoon listening to nothing more than ghoulish glee from hon. members on the opposite side.

After a perfectly legitimate process of tax investigation has been completed, we should now get on with the legislation. I should like to know whether members of the opposition are seriously preparing, when this tax measure is out of the way, to give us their views on poverty, on a guaranteed annual income and on how we are to attack our other problems. The fact is that all the old problems of regional disparity have not yet been solved in Canada's 100 years of existence and these are problems to which this government, and indeed any other government, must address itself.

Another matter for discussion is the development of trade on the Pacific rim, which our Prime Minister foresaw was the next big springboard for this country and which he has helped to encourage. Some people, in their ignorance, accuse him of taking off and flying all over the world. It so happens that when he flies all over the world we get an order for something, and if we do not have an order we will not eat.

Mr. Paproski: You have an order—the 10 per cent surcharge.

Mr. Osler: That is enough from you. What we should hear is some truth and logic. You do not sell to the Japanese without making friends with them. You do not trade with emerging countries such as Malaysia without talking to them. You do not get anywhere without developing relationships so that people get to understand and trust you. Because we are the biggest trading nation, per capita, in the world, someone must do these things. But instead of members of the opposition coming forth with their viewpoints on how trade should be developing, they go around with whispering campaigns like a bunch of schoolboys. They say that the Prime Minister is out of the country too much.

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you read what our leader said as reported in the newspapers?

Mr. Osler: That is another thing that is pitiful—Brownie points made with newspaper columns. We take our responsibility of trying to run this country under the mandate that has been given to us. We are not afraid to find newspapers sometimes a little behind us. We do not look over our shoulders all the time, nor do we ask some guy whether we could vet the particular thing he is writing, and please will he make it nice. What we are trying to do is to get things done. We have developed more trade than any other government. We have sold more wheat to more people than any other government, and we have employed more people than any other government. But all we get from you people is raspberries and screaming all afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has the floor.

Mr. Osler: I will not be too long, Mr. Chairman, because it is obviously useless to waste any further time of Parliament trying to put fresh ideas into their heads. As I said, trade development is important. Let us hear some views on that matter when this tax measure is passed. It is almost passed now. Ten years have come to an end and the country is ready to go on to the next task, but all the opposition is doing is bellyaching about the fact that it is too bad that an amendment regarding co-operatives was not put in by one guy instead of another guy. That is real statesmanship!

The problem of the native peoples is a very difficult one which I do not suppose any of us understands as well as he could. But, by God, this government has tried to advance the lot of the native peoples as no other government has. It has a lot to learn and it has to grope its way ahead. It would be great if you people helped us.

Mr. Paproski: We will.

Mr. Osler: Another matter is international relations. Instead of complaining that we are not friendly enough with the Americans, or we are too friendly with the U.S.S.R., or some other damn thing ad infinitum—

Mr. Paproski: You said that.

Mr. Osler: I said, instead of complaining give us your views about what international relations should be. All we have heard all afternoon is talk on one point, namely, who should or should not have brought in an amendment to a particular section in the tax bill which is 700 pages long. I have been listening very hard and that is all I got out of it. The hon. member for Dauphin was most constructive, but he was speaking in the past so that it was educational without advancing an argument. However, he spoke very intelligently and I learned a lot from him.

But the main point is that this sort of procedure, as I said, is not a tragedy for either a Liberal or a Conservative government, or indeed an NDP or a Social Credit government if there ever should be such an animal. The tragedy, which nobody here seems to understand, is that if we had television here this afternoon the people of Canada would completely lose their faith in the parliamentary system, and then where would we be? There is no way in which the people of Canada will buy this kind of stalling and fiddling about. They do not understand it.

The one thing I have heard for weeks is, why the devil have we not applied time allocation since we have a majority? We are asked why we do not get on with the job and do something. People do not want this stuff. The only time in my parliamentary career that I regret we do not have television here is this afternoon, because it would be illuminating if the people of Canada could see for once how time is wasted by the very people who are shedding crocodile tears all over the country about this government that has imposed closure, which it did not do. What it did was to impose time allocation.

I hope that in the next ten minutes some member of the opposition will talk some sense and will address himself more closely to the subject.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, I intend to intervene only briefly in the discussion this afternoon. I begin by congratulating the government for introducing these amendments which should go a long way toward meeting the requests of the co-operatives and credit unions of Canada. There is one aspect that amazes me, and that is why the government has taken so long in bringing forward its policies and why it has been so inconsistent. When I say inconsistent, I refer to the different attitude that was shown by the Department of Finance on the one hand in the bill which they introduced and, on the other hand, the activities of several other departments.

• (5:50 p.m.)

For years the Department of Fisheries encouraged marketing co-ops among fisherman and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development encouraged the development of co-ops in the north for various purposes. While this bill was being drafted that department was commemorating the establishment in my riding of the first credit union in North America, although at the time it was not called that. I believe this was a wise decision on the part of the National Historic Sites service, commemorating the establishment of The Farmers' Bank of Rustico which is in my constituency. A plaque was placed on the building which still exists, and it reads as follows:

> Under the leadership of Rev. G.-A. Belcourt, a former pioneer missionary in the West, his parishioners erected this building to house one of the first people's banks in Canada. Chartered in 1864, and directed by farmers and fishermen, it continued to operate until 1894 and foreshadowed the development of the credit union movement. The bank, by providing cheap credit, enabled the people of this predominantly Acadian community to gain economic independence.

These types of self-help organizations have been a very vital factor in my province and in fact in many parts of the Atlantic region over the years. It is fitting that that sort of self-help when it is exhibited by Canadians, in the form of banding together either in co-ops or credit unions, should be encouraged. I want to congratulate their national organizations, their regional organizations and their local organizations for the very excellent job they did, not in lobbying—because I think that term has connotations which are slightly derogatory—but in educating the Canadian people on what they were requesting and informing Members of Parliament of their objective view of the matter.

They wanted nothing but a fair competitive position with respect to other types of organizations. I think that the work done by co-ops and credit unions in informing Members of Parliament and the government was a very useful exercise, and I congratulate the government for finally reacting favourably to their submissions. I must admit that it is not very reassuring that it took the government so long to react favourably. If I were concerned with the life expectancy of the government, which at present seems to be rather short, I would suggest that it react more quickly and more sensitively to the wishes of the Canadian people with respect to changes in policy.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think the amendments will meet the requirements of both the co-ops and credit unions in my province where they have done a great deal of good work over the years.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words in connection with these amendments because I think that no one from the west coast has yet spoken and a great many people out there have been sending letters and communications to us for a long time with respect to this matter. Those people will now be as happy as the rest of us to see amendments introduced which they have wanted for so long.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre spoke of tragedy and indicated that it was a great waste of time to discuss these amendments. In reply I say that for many of us this is not a day of tragedy but of triumph, because for a long time we have been trying to get across to the government the fact that co-ops are not ordinary business or commercial concerns in the private enterprise sense. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre should be patient enough to let us discuss just how these amendments happen to have been proposed.

As the hon. member for Regina East pointed out, it is 25 years since the government of the day, which I believe was also a Liberal government, succumbed to the pressure of big corporate concerns and enacted a type of tax legislation for co-ops to which they should never have been subjected simply because they have never been the ordinary type of business concern. For 25 years we have been going down the wrong road and now the government seems prepared to change direction. This is something for which we should be profoundly thankful.

However, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be fulsome in my praise of the government and say it was a sudden burst of enlightenment on its part that caused this change to be made. That does not represent the facts. There are members on the government side of the House, just as there are in all parties, who fought for the co-ops. But over the years those government members were a very tiny minority, and so far as converting the government to introduce the right type of tax laws for co-ops was concerned, they were simply fighting a hopeless battle because the majority in their party did not agree with the co-operative way of thinking or the co-operative philosophy.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I was saying when the House adjourned at six o'clock that I think it is pretty important that we recognize how we got these amendments relating to co-operatives and credit unions. I believe that the credit must go to those organizations. In this House there were spokesmen who believed in and worked for amendments of this kind, but it was mainly the solid work of the co-operatives and credit union members and organizations outside this House that brought about the change.

[Mr. MacLean.]

I think it is important to understand what happened because in my view this is participatory democracy. I do not think any government by itself, no matter of what party, can do the job of governing without having counterpoise and counterweight from outside in the form of organizations to keep it informed and, if need be, to put pressure on it. I firmly believe this. The credit unions and co-operatives brought this pressure to bear on the government which did, in quite a proper manner, bring about the changes that were required. This is participatory democracy in the real sense. It is not people turning out to acclaim a leader or to admire images and that sort of thing; it is people who know what they want, who are well organized and bring pressure of the right sort on Parliament and the government in order to get the changes they need.

This is exactly what happened to bring about the changes in those sections of the bill relating to co-operatives and credit unions. I am very glad to see this happen, and far from being censorious of the government for having changed its mind, I think it deserves credit. When you get a government or individual who is afraid to change his mind, you have a dinosaur or something which is no longer in tune with the needs of the day. I think the government did the right thing in changing its mind. I am almost tempted to name the individuals who had a lot to do with changing it, but I will not.

These amendments mean that the government now definitely recognizes that co-operatives and credit unions are different from the ordinary run of private business. Some time ago I picked out an editorial from The Western Producer of September 30, 1971. This is a time-honoured organ of the Prairies. I should like to quote the editorial as follows:

> There is a fundamental difference between a co-operative and a privately-owned enterprise: the co-operative principle means that member-patrons share earnings according to the extent of their patronage of their own business, but in the private corporation, earnings are paid out to shareholders, who may or may not have the slightest interest in the corporation in which they invest, beyond the collection of dividends on their shares.
> The member of a co-operative, on the other hand, has interests in common with his fellow members. They set up their co-ops to provide themselves with goods and services at cost; they do not expect any return on whatever they have invested in their own business.

I think that is basically the difference and I am very glad that the government has recognized it. The co-operatives and credit unions are comprised of people working together to secure goods and services for themselves. The co-operative movement, whether it be through co-operatives or credit unions, is a way of living, a philosophy of life. In this House we worry a lot about poverty and low income groups, but I think the co-operative movement has done more for low income people than almost any other movement which can be mentioned—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: —from the days of Father Tompkins in the maritime provinces and the friends of the fishermen. The government House leader knows very well the work that was done by his own university, St. Francis Xavier. That university did tremendous work in eastern Canada and its students went overseas to help the underdeveloped countries. One of their slogans was to the effect that if you give a man a fish he will be able to live for a day, but if you teach him to fish he will make his own living. I know that those are not the exact words, but the spirit of them is exact.

On the western plains the co-operatives have done tremendous work for farm people and have taught them rugged initiative and individual enterprise. If this government will recall its experience with its recent farm legislation it will realize that in western Canada it was up against a breed of people who had no intention of doing something just because somebody told them to do it. The co-operative movement had a good deal to do with teaching them to work together to serve the interests of their own group.

In England and Scotland the co-operative movement began with poor people, the 28 weavers who started it, and it moved into Scandinavia and other countries. In the underdeveloped parts of the world the movement is teaching people to work together as a group to achieve their own interests and not to pay toll to any other interests that stand between them and the things they need. I think the co-operative movement could play a very great role in North America. It could be a counterpoise to those great business corporations which are becoming larger and larger and more monopolistic as time goes on.

In Scandinavia co-operatives have been able to stand up to big corporations and compete with them in a way that other business competitors have never been able to do. I remember years ago visiting Sweden and seeing the Luma electric light factory. Previously only General Electric had been operating in the area. General Electric had been increasing the price of its light bulbs until finally the co-op stepped in and built the Luma electric light factory. Even while the factory walls were rising, General Electric cut the price of its light bulbs in an effort to deter the building of the factory. That did not work, and the result is that through the co-operative movement the people of Sweden have broken the monopoly of General Electric and are able to buy electric light bulbs for considerably less than they paid before the co-ops got busy.

That story has been repeated over and over again. That is why I want to end my remarks tonight by saying to the government that, far from scolding them for changing their mind, I am very glad they did so and that the co-operatives and credit unions have been able to bring this charge about with the help of people in all parties who believed in the necessity for change such as the co-ops wanted, and who believed in the co-operative and credit union movements. For these amendments the government will not need to apply closure. There will be no difficulty regarding passage; these sections will go through easily. As I say, the government was expecting too much if it thought we would pass these sections without taking time to hail them as a triumph for the co-operative and credit union movements of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I want to take up only a few minutes of the time of the committee to say that I wholeheartedly approve of the amendments the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) proposed to the bill we are studying tonight and which deal with the taxation of co-operatives and caisses populaires.

This afternoon, I heard several members of the opposition, notably of the Progressive Conservative party, say that the government has simply betrayed the co-operatives by equivocating.

Mr. Chairman, it seems those members did not understand the proposals of the co-operatives last summer, when they appeared before the Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in connection with the white paper on tax reform, as they probably did not understand either the amendments proposed by the government.

When the representatives of the co-operatives first came to testify, their original request referred to a withholding in the case of members receiving patronage dividends. The government rejected that proposal, because it thought—I agree with that as well as several other members—that the members of co-operatives who received patronage dividends for the purchase of consumer goods should not pay income tax on those patronage dividends. It is only as a result of discussions, specific proposals and serious studies by co-operatives and the Canadian Co-operative Council that an administrative formula was devised and that it was agreed, in accordance with statistics for the last few years, that a tax would only be levied when the patronage dividend would be over $100, so that only the members of co-operatives who would receive such patronage dividends, to be deducted from expenditures already claimed for income tax purposes, would pay income tax.

The opposition members—particularly those of the Progressive Conservative Party, including the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) and the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—who said that this afternoon did not seem to fathom the consequences of the first proposal by co-operatives, and probably not these either.

I wish to thank the government for introducing these amendments, thus showing it understands and appreciates the benefits the co-operative system and caisses populaires bring the country. Several times I spoke in the House of the social and economic implications of the co-operative movement in my riding, and I do not think it would be useful to state the arguments all over again. However, I would like to say that what the government did will have happy results in my riding where co-operatives are strong, not only because they enroll people in a certain socio-economic movement but because where they are active, mostly in the fishing sector and other industrial fields, producers obtain more for their goods. I think it is a recognized fact that wherever there are co-operatives, companies set their prices in accordance with the prices established by those co-operatives—which means that not only members of co-operatives, but all fishermen, benefit from it. The same phenomenon can be seen in the farming industry.

Before concluding, I would like to express my gratitude to members of the opposition, and particularly members of the New Democratic Party, who, I feel, have co-operated with the government during the debate on co-operatives in order to make sure that if the debate was to end with the application of Standing Order 75C, the amendments concerning co-operatives and caisses populaires would be introduced and passed.

Several members know of the discussions and negotiations which have taken place concerning this issue. We must admit that but for the co-operation of opposition members, those amendments could not have been brought forward. I would like to thank them, and to say once again that I support the government in this move which I feel is a victory for the rural economy of Canada.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I grew up in a part of Canads where poverty was a very great problem and where it still is somewhat of a problem. I have seen the effects of certain social measures that have been instrumental in overcoming that poverty and I can fairly say that the work of the co-operatives, both in selling basic supplies to people and in providing marketing outlets for their catches, has probably been the most worth-while work of economic value that I have seen.

I make no apology for my remarks. Indeed, I am proud to support any tax change that will add to this process. Accordingly, I welcome the announcement made the other day by the President of the Privy Council and wonder at the hon. gentleman's ability to horse-trade. He indicated to us that not only were the co-ops getting all that they had asked for, which must have come as a delightful surprise to them, but they were getting even more than they had asked for. So they wound up with all their own horses that they were willing to trade in this business as well as with some of the government's horses. I give the minister full marks for that.

The co-op movement mounted a most effective lobby. I think we should note that here "lobby" is used in its pure sense. They came to us, put their arguments before us and have reaped the harvest they deserve. When I spoke on this matter earlier I said that co-operatives were a chance for the ordinary Canadian to have some piece of the action in this country. I reiterate that remark.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I would add that there is generally a limit to the extent to which people wish to co-operate with each other in order to form an effective co-operative. I say this in answer to those who bring their concerns to us through correspondence. They are concerned about the growth of the co-operative movement in Canada. As far as co-operatives in the food business are concerned, they will continue to grow. However, in my city of Halifax an attempt very recently along those lines fell flat on its face. I suspect that where there is a community interest there will more likely be development in the co-operative field.

I have tried to interest people in solving their housing problems by the co-operative method. There is a limit to the number of people who will sit down together to work out a common plan. Some people go for co-operative building and others do not. If I had any suggestion to make in this field as a counter-measure to what is proposed by the government, it would be that the issue is of such intensity that it would better have been separated from the measure with which we are dealing. It deserves substantial consideration in view of the storm that was raised involving not only the government but all of us as parliamentarians. In other words, as a compromise in a difficult situation I would suggest that we leave the law where it stands, a law that both sides are accustomed to living with, until we take a longer look at the situation.

As it is now, the government has made its position known. There will not be much opportunity to examine all the implications from the side of the co-operatives and from the side of the business companies. The government has taken that risk. I am not prepared to quibble with it. I will vote in favour of the proposed amendments.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, a number of members have today quoted statements about co-operatives lobbying. The previous speaker used the word lobby. He said he did so in a kind way. I wonder whether it is a kind word when you see the lobbying of Colin M. Brown of London, Ontario, when he placed full-page ads in newspapers trying to blast the situation now before Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: Anyone who uses the word lobbying with regard to the co-operative movement has failed to realize he is also including the wheat pools in the prairie provinces, the credit union, the fisheries marketing agencies and the like. The activity the co-operative movement has undertaken in this case has been well reasoned and well documented. They have gone about it in such a way that everyone is familiar with their reasoning and documentation.

I quote from the propaganda of the Equitable Income Tax Foundation with regard to the amendments affecting co-operatives:

—which in our view is misleading and designed to portray co-operatives as the unwitting victims of tax reform.

That is what I call lobbying on the part of a well heeled, well organized campaign under the authorship of Colin M. Brown of London, Ontario. When we talk about lobbying we should talk about the well heeled people who pay for these ads in the newspapers of this country. They are not concerned about the co-operative movement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: The co-operative movement made no bones about it when they replied to the propaganda published by the Equitable Income Tax Foundation. They said:

Co-operatives have not asked and do not ask that they should not pay corporate tax on any earnings voluntarily retained by them. They merely ask that there be no arbitrary formula imposed which requires the compulsory retention of earnings.

That is over the signature of the president of the Co-operative Union of Canada on behalf of other co-ops.

I also wonder about the position of the official opposition. I quote from page 7762 of Hansard of September 13, 1971:

We have had quite a reaction to this bill from the co-ops. I do not know what the House is going to decide, but it seems to me that the government has advanced its proposals after looking at some of the largest co-ops in the country, organizations which have lost their co-operative origins, that operate in the hundreds of millions of dollars class, their boards of directors being far removed from the ordinary members, in the same way as the boards of the biggest multinational corporations are far removed from the shareholders.

Those words were spoken by the financial critic of the Progressive Conservative party, the hon. member for Edmonton West. The amendments which have been brought in are over the signature of the President of the Privy Council, not the Minister of Finance or the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. They take care of some of the concerns and worries of the co-operative movement. When the hon. member for Edmonton West associates co-operatives with the biggest multinational corporations, I suggest he is unfamiliar with what co-operatives are all about. He is not familiar with the fact that today the wheat pools must have active members on their boards of directors. It is strange to hear members of the Progressive Conservative party extol the virtues and good work of the co-operatives. No doubt they come from areas which recognize the importance of co-operatives. However, the official spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party stood in his place and associated co-ops with multinational corporations.

Mr. Baldwin: It shows what a lively party we are.

Mr. Skoberg: I am sure all hon. members are pleased with these amendments. There may be doubts in the minds of some members as to how far the amendments go. The co-operative movement has made its views known. It is unfortunate that some of the other points about which we are all concerned and which affect the agricultural economy have not been taken into consideration in the same way as the co-operative movement amendments.

I am sure that all members of the co-operative movement recognize the importance of the amendments that have been introduced. The hon. member for Regina East was pleased to withdraw his amendment to make room for the government's amendments in order to bring about an improvement so far as taxation is concerned. We are all pleased to support that type of amendment. We would like the goverment to bring in other amendments before this bill comes to a vote tomorrow afternoon. As we look at some of the proposals made by recognized farm organizations, surely the government recognizes that proposals and amendments should be brought in to look after other situations about which people are just as concerned.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Whiting: Mr. Chairman, I like all other members of the House received representations from credit unions in connection with this section of Bill C-259. When I began to receive these letters I felt it was my duty to meet with the credit union organizations in my riding because I must admit, as I freely admitted to them, that I am not as knowledgeable on this subject as I should be. One of the first things they pointed out in their attempt to educate me on this subject was the motto of credit unions—"Not for profit, not for charity, but for service." I believe this mottc clearly spells out their purpose.

A credit union is not a money-making or commercial organization. Many of them are small groups of individuals sometimes organized in a parish or a church. In many cases it is a group within a manufacturing or commercial establishment which has banded together. It is a form of mutual aid which has grown to a social force. We have heard some hon. members tell the House how they, as members of credit unions, have been enabled to buy implements to start them off as young farmers. I know of men who through their membership in a credit union have been able to acquire sufficient capital to make a start in buying a home.

I know of another case where a man was able to obtain far more desirable employment simply because money loaned to him by his credit union enabled him to buy a car to provide suitable transportation. Credit unions, even the larger ones, have a humanitarian aspect to their operations which is often absent when dealing with the strictly commercial organizations. They fill a definite need.

A credit union is a classic example of man helping man, not through charity but through co-operation one man with another. It is a form of brotherhood. Because credit unions faithfully played a part and have been instrumental in the creation and development of opportunities as well as providing the wherewithal for many to take advantage of opportunities, their membership has grown throughout Canada. In Ontario alone there are now over 1,400 credit unions in operation. But with this growth has come bigness, which has led to the need and development of central credit unions whose function, according to provincial legislation, is to act as the bankers for local credit unions and in this capacity they are the depositories of substantially all of the liquidity reserves of the locals. Centrals are bankers, too, for the operating bank accounts of the locals and in this capacity act as the clearing agents for the credit union movement which function is the means by which payment is effected for credit unions orders negotiated by banks and the cheques negotiated by the locals.

Coming back to the motto of the credit union movement, "Not for profit, not for charity, but for service," a good many of the credit unions in Ontario are operated by a group of voluntary helpers with minimum operating costs. The profits are then distributed through (a) patronage dividends, which really amounts to a reduction in the interest rate charged on the loans to members; (b) dividends—that is, interest—to members; (c) additions to reserve funds; (d) 20 per cent, in Ontario, of the net profits are set aside as a guaranteed fund established by statutory requirement by the government of Ontario.

The dividends issued to members are reported and tax collected through the issuing of T-5 forms. The only tax money, therefore, which the government is now seeking to obtain is the money set aside for reserves and the money set aside by statutory requirement in excess of that allowable under Bill C-259. According to information available to me, it has in the past rarely exceeded 20 per cent of the net profit of the union. This is the point which has been obscured by the discussion. In the House we are led to believe, not through any intention to deceive on the part of any hon. member, that credit unions do not pay taxes. In reality the amount not being taxed is the amount required by law to be put into reserves. The rest is paid through the members themselves in their private tax returns. Although there is a strong legal case for tax exemption, with supporting precedents, credit unions have interpreted the white paper and the tax act as pronouncements of government policy and have from the outset agreed to pay their fair share of taxation.

I return now to the social importance of credit unions and the part they play in the betterment of living for many people, and maintain that it is just too much to ask voluntary workers in small credit unions to administer the complicated taxation formulas proposed. I agree with many credit union men that it would mean the winding up of many credit unions throughout Canada. The law would be the master, not the servant.

I was not in the House yesterday when the amendments were made to the sections dealing with credit unions, but during the weekend I had an idea which I should like to put forward now. It is that the formula proposed in Bill C-259 with respect to credit unions be scrapped and in its place rules should be established whereby a credit union must allocate its profit to its members. Each member would receive a T-5 form reflecting his share of the profit, being the equivalent of interest on his deposit with the credit union, which he will include in his taxable income. The profit so allocated would be the profit after all allowable operating expenses and "patronage" dividends. Further allowance should be made with respect to such amounts as are required to set up a reserve to provide for anticipated uncollectable loans, such a reserve to be based on a reasonable percentage of loans outstanding. The remaining profit is the amount to be allocated to members.

This is substantially what is done by the amendments which were introduced in the committee yesterday. Interest on deposits are taxed at personal rates. Dividends on shares are also taxed at personal rates. The amount transferred to reserves because of statutory provisions will be generally taxed at 25 per cent. This is not an unreasonable tax rate. Really, the government has now considered credit unions as a true agent of the members of the Credit union and is dealing with them as such for taxation purposes. It is true that these new rules are somewhat complicated but I believe the complicated period will not last longer than a year. After that, the government's formula should be simple for all credit unions to follow.

In conclusion I should like, along with other hon. members, to compliment the credit union movement and co-operatives for the very sane and sensible way they presented their case to all members of this House and to commend the government for taking the steps it did in bringing in the necessary amendments to Bill C-259 as it affects them.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. member for Halton put forward the thoughts he had collected over the weekend in a most eloquent way, I am wondering whether he intends to move his suggestion as an amendment to the amendment put forward by the President of the Privy Council. Would the hon. member answer that question?

Mr. Whiting: Mr. Chairman, I am quite satisfied with the amendments that were brought forth by the minister yesterday, which I think substantially cover what I said in my remarks.

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take part in this debate in order to make a few points. I want first to join with those many members of one of the opposition parties who have praised the government for its wisdom in bringing this debate to a close. It seems that my hon. friends from Moose Jaw and Fraser Valley West agree with me, since in their speeches they mentioned how happy they were that this debate was being brought to a close.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, it is quite obvious that the opposition parties have run out of things to say and, after so many days of debate, can no longer discuss this legislation.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for some twenty minutes yesterday talked about everything but this legislation and the amendments thereto.

The amendments introduced yesterday in order to give a break to the Caisses populaires and co-operatives were highly welcomed by all hon. members. I also wish to say that I recognize the great importance of this Caisse populaire movement which has allowed a host of my fellow-citizens in St. Jérôme to become home owners. I can remember that during the years 1935-40, mortgages were hard to get and people had to resort to usurers to get a mortgage to realize a life-long dream.

The Caisse populaire movement allowed people of modest means to become home owners. In fact, the number of home owners in Quebec, which represented only 17 per cent of the population in 1946, today exceeds 50 per cent.

The Caisse populaire movement is extremely important for the labourer and the small wage earner. It is also important in many other respects. It was largely responsible for the education provided the workers and union members, as it encouraged them to save money. That movement should have been embraced by the labour unions, and I have always blamed them for not worrying about what went on in the plants; even during the 40's, they should have started training their members to save in the hope of sharing later on in the ownership of the businesses which employed them. But such is the task that the Caisses populaires and credit unions set for themselves; to get the small wage-earner to save money.

The Canadian people, from what we read and hear, have been relieved to learn that the period of uncertainty caused by the introduction of this bill as well as by the study which has been going on for almost 10 years, if the Carter Commission and the white paper are taken into account, will end shortly. The bill will be put to a vote and quite obviously passed tomorrow Wednesday at the committee stage.

Those are the few remarks I wanted to make. I urge the opposition members who have not yet spoken to follow my example, namely to be brief!

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 57 carry?

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, your haste is understandable, but I can assure you I shall not keep the committee long. It seems to me that at the moment all hon. members are trying to claim some credit for the changes made to the bill in order to benefit co-operatives. At least I am not going to do that; I shall give the credit for that to somebody else. Over the weekend I was at a convention in Regina and the subject of taxation of co-operatives came up. I assured the questioner that the hon. member for Regina East had quite a bit to do with having these changes made.

I have one other comment to make. When a number of people wrote to me about this bill some time ago, I suggested to them one appropriate remedy was to lobby, which quite frankly I think is now part of our political process. The co-operatives have done that and they now see the result. This committee has in its wisdom made some changes to the bill that I think benefit those who need protection, such as small investors who have dealings with co-operatives. Those who have to pay tax under the bill can well afford to do so, but I am happy to see that the small individual will benefit from the proposed deductions from his income tax.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, though I intend to be brief I would like to express my satisfaction about the amendments presented since yesterday. I am under the impression that I have been living one of the most pathetic days of my parliamentary career. In fact, in three and a half years I never witnessed a warmer climate than today when congratulations are coming from everywhere and when the minister is being commended whereas he was condemned not even two weeks ago. This demonstrates that the arguments raised a few days ago, the briefs submitted by various organizations and the speeches of members made the minister understand how important these changes are. In addition, I am glad to recognize the understanding and the broadness of mind of the minister who considered the arguments and the briefs in such a fair way and agreed, considering the turn of events to review his position and allow those organizations to enjoy a very special status considering their aims.

I believe it would be a waste of time to go over all the arguments heard last week during the day spent to ask those changes from the minister, but I cannot help saying how pleased I am to support such movements, considering their work, their achievements and the objective which they had in mind until now and which they can maintain in order to expand in the interest of thousands of citizens who believe in those co-operative movements, in the Desjardins movement and who, rightly so, have known fantastic results.

I was wondering a while ago why the government seemed to create a climate of anxiety during a few months. Was it necessary for us to wait so long for those movements to hear the good news they heard yesterday? Was it necessary for these organizations to make these representations which are always quite expensive? Fortunately, it is the results that count. These, I think, have been satisfactory. It appears from comments received from both the Desjardins movement and other such organizations, that the amendments introduced by the minister yesterday are quite acceptable. The responsible authorities of these institutions stated today that they were very happy about them.

I would have been derelict in my duty had I not acquainted the minister of my complete satisfaction in the hope that representations in the same vein will be made in the future with as much objectivity. It should be acknowledged that the briefs submitted were most unbiased and very serious. I believe that this had much to do with the minister's decision and I hope that such realistic briefs will be submitted in the future to make the government understand the needs of the community. I think this is the way we will be able to obtain favorable answers for the organizations concerned.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I will simply express the wish to see again great days like the one we had today because it seems that the climate which exists today could generate faith among the population.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am moved to speak after hearing so many voluble supporters, members and sympathizers of the co-operative and credit union movement from all sides of the House. It leads me to ask the members of this House where they were when they were needed a few weeks ago. I find it passing strange that when in committee of the whole any member of this House may at any time move an amendment that would coincide with the speeches they have been making all day today—

Mr. Nielsen: All of a sudden.

Mr. Benjamin: All of a sudden. I am glad the hon. member for Yukon said that, because when the financial critic of the official opposition spoke about the credit union and co-operative movement in this country he was all for letting the little co-operatives survive. It was all right, and they should not be taxed too much. But once they become too big, whatever that means, they should be treated the same as any other corporation.

In view of those remarks by the financial critic of the official opposition I find it passing strange that the Conservative party has yet to move one amendment. They did not speak up until everything was over and done with. My question to them is, where were they when the co-operative and credit union movement needed them in this chamber? However, they did speak today. Also, none of the voluble Liberal backbenchers who have been catching hell from the credit unions in their constituencies failed to move any amendments in committee of the whole. However, I am happy the government has brought in these amendments. I think this is a good illustration of how a government can act positively and responsibly on an issue.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): When it has to.

Mr. Benjamin: When it has to and has no other choice. I would hope as a result of this experience and the experience the government had on another matter two weeks ago, for example, that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, will have learned some lessons about how to bring in amendments to legislation, about how to accept representations from organizations and Members of Parliament, and about how to quit being stubborn.

Mr. Chairman, if this House and members of the government have learned nothing else from this experience—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Gloucester rising on a point of order?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course.

Mr. Breau: Would he now agree, in view of his reasoning, that it would be advantageous to Saskatchewan to have Liberal members in that province so we could amend the legislation which affects Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I am glad the hon. member asked that question because it provides an opportunity for me to say something that otherwise you would rule out of order. If the hon. member and his colleague from Saskatoon-Humboldt learned anything from the Assiniboia by-election, they should have learned that three-quarters of the people in that constituency belong to a credit union, a co-operative or the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. One Liberal from Saskatchewan now is one too many.

I ask the parliamentary secretary why the original proposals in this tax bill were included in the first place. If all his colleagues are such ardent supporters and believers in the co-operative and credit union movement, why were these provisions put in the legislation in the first place?

After the issuance of the Carter commission report a campaign was launched by the Income Tax Foundation, which hon. members on the other side and in the official opposition know something about, to destroy and discredit the co-operative and credit union movement in this country. Much of what was in the original tax bill was in the promotion of that breed of cat. When one looks at the representations made to this government, to the cabinet and to the caucuses of this House prior to and since the bill was proposed, one finds it passing strange that there were no protests from the official opposition, from the government backbenchers and from independent members. There was not a word.

Let this be a lesson to everybody in this place that when there are organizations that are part and parcel of the movement of the people of our country, whatever section it might be, any government moves at its peril to destroy that. Thank goodness this government and the happy parliamentary secretary, who has a lucky football team, did this, because the fight would have had to go on.

Let us also learn that these amendments which the government brought in are to undo what an outfit like the Equitable Income Tax Foundation were party to, headed by one Cecil Lamonte who used to be head of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. He has some friends in this place. The membership of that outfit consists of the private grain trade and the private lumber industry. They have exerted all their efforts and hundreds of thousands of dollars to destroy the wheat pools and to destroy the consumer co-operatives which handle lumber and other hardware products. I did not hear a word on this from any member of the official opposition or from the backbench Liberals who today are so happy about these amendments.

If the parliamentary secretary did what I think would be perfectly proper, he would discriminate in favour of the co-operative and credit union movement. It is very possible that these amendments will mean less revenue for the Minister of Finance: it is possible, if not likely. I think this is very good. If there is any other way of doing something about the kind of activity of the corporate people in Canada who have been hiding in tax havens for years and have been making incomes without lifting a shovelful of dirt, so to speak, or doing a decent day's work out of which they paid no taxes, then it is about time we discriminated in favour of a sector of our economy that does do something for and about the needs of people in our system.

Mr. Nielsen: What are you shovelling now?

Mr. Benjamin: If the amendments of the parliamentary secretary do nothing else—and I hope they will—they will make it possible for the co-operatives and credit unions to become larger, more numerous and stronger, because if they do not then an area will be left in our economy into which the state will have to move. They play a necessary and needed role in our economy if for no other reason than that they serve as a check upon the private corporate interests in this country, if for no other reason than to show that those who talk about competition will have to do more than just talk a good fight; they will have to compete.

When the private grain trade says, "We give you as good a price for your non-Wheat Board grains in the elevators as the co-operative does," that is perfectly true—but it would not be true if the co-operatives were not there, as farmers learned through bitter experience for too many years. When I walk into my consumer co-operative and it costs me perhaps two cents a pound more for peanut butter than it does in the local private enterprise operation, there is a perfectly good reason for it, that is, that the private enterprise operation has some competition for a change and has had to reduce prices.

I hope that the amendments of the parliamentary secretary will mean that the government of Canada and this Parliament will discriminate, for a change, in this small way in favour of the co-operative and credit union movement. If this kind of co-operation arises again on another item of legislation, may I leave one further message for the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt. There is a way to bring in amendments as a result of representations and as a result of what Members of Parliament say, and there is a way to cease being stubborn and to do something that needs to be done in terms of the grains industry, and that includes the three prairie wheat pools and United Grain Growers who in my opinion should be the only ones handling grain in the three prairie provinces.

Let me conclude by saying that there has been a great deal of posing going on today. I do not apply this word personally to any individual member, but there have been many members in the House who have posed today. I have felt sad and disappointed with them on a personal basis because they are people of whom I am proud and of whom I think a great deal. Many of those who posed today were not here when we needed them earlier. Had they been here, the original proposals in the tax bill would never have been in the legislation. We would not have had to go through this exercise had there been genuine and sincere interest in the support and growth of the co-operative and credit union movement in this country.

Mr. Baldwin: I was delighted to hear the hon. member speak. He is usually very meek and mild, and it was nice to see him gather his courage together to make that sort of speech. However, I must correct him in one or two instances. He, together with other hon. members of his party, always views with alarm and is dreadfully frightened of things. This reminds me of a teacher I once had who was not quite able to put his phrases together. His way of expressing alarm was to say, "I smell a rat. I see it floating in the air. I shall nip it in the bud". The trouble with the hon. members of the party to my left is that one never knows where they stand. You have your full waffle, you have your half waffle, you have your quarter waffle and you have your non-waffle.

Mr. Nielsen: Waffleburgers!

Mr. Baldwin: We are never sure how they are going to vote and where they are going. We had an example of that a short while ago on the motion moved with respect to closure, when some members of the NDP voted to impose closure. I am sure they did so in full belief of the rightness of their cause, although we know that they were wrong and I think by now they know they were wrong.

I want to correct the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre who spoke of the official spokesman of our party on this measure. The official spokesman with respect to co-operatives is the hon. member for Moncton, who was the first speaker on this issue when these sections were called. The hon. member for Moncton was put forward by our party as our spokesman and to indicate our party's position. Until that time my impression, on listening to the members of the NDP, was that they were confused and did not know which way to go. But those of us who are in the House heard the brilliant and eloquent speech made by the hon. member for Moncton when he indicated quite plainly his position, which was our position, with regard to co-operatives and made certain proposals. I was glad to see that he had such a tremendous effect on the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre and on other hon. members that they were able to accept his views. For the first time they came to a common position on co-ops and I compliment them for listening to reason.

As a result of that they moved an amendment which I thought was a good one. We would have been prepared to vote for it, but because the government put forward the present amendment they have withdrawn theirs. I say this with all due kindness, far more in sorrow than in anger. Having disposed of the New Democratic Party I would now like to turn to the Liberal party, those mice who roared today for the first time.

Why was this amendment put forward, Mr. Chairman? It is very interesting. Just a few weeks ago, in fact on November 10, some correspondence passed between the Alberta Wheat Pool and the Minister of Finance. The Alberta Wheat Pool, aided and comforted by the Conservative party, the official opposition, was attempting to secure certain amendments to the legislation. Knowing they had our support, the members of the Alberta Wheat Pool had been in communication both verbally and through correspondence with the Minister of Finance. On November 10 the minister replied to the Alberta Wheat Pool and this is what his letter said in part:

> The status of co-operatives was carefully considered during preparation of the tax reform bill. Originally these were small organizations, local in application, serving limited groups of people on a non-profit basis. However, many have now grown to a point where they compete with normal commercial enterprises while still benefiting from preferential tax treatment.

His letter concluded:

> The government considers that the proposed new tax bill, as amended, will result in a fairer distribution of the tax burden while helping co-operatives in the transition from exempt to taxable status.

Some five or six months after this bill first came to the cabinet, and three or four months after it was first distributed to members of the House—I will not go into the issue of when members of this party received copies of it; hon. members opposite may have got theirs early but we did not get ours until September, and some hon. members opposite, judging from their speeches, still have not read it—the Minister of Finance gave his firm and considered opinion that there would be no change in the bill with respect to co-ops. I repeat that he gave that as his opinion on November 10.

This shows the value and the efficacy of parliamentary debate. There has been a great deal of loose talk tonight about who was responsible for these changes. I join with those who say that the representatives of the co-ops, pursuant to their duty and instructions, laid their case before Members of Parliament, before the respective caucuses and before the Minister of Finance. But they were getting nowhere until the Members of Parliament, and I include one or two members opposite—the hon. member for Windsor should stand up and take a bow; he had an opportunity to listen to the hon. member for Moncton and his doubts were changed into full support for the position of the official opposition and I give him great credit for that—

Mr. Hogarth: Everybody has a mental lapse.

Mr. Baldwin: If more of his colleagues would follow us, this would be a better Parliament, a better government and a better country. When we see what happens with a determined opposition, with some slight help voiced in a very determined way by a member on the government side, it shows how essential it is to have effective, sustained and lengthy parliamentary debate. And when this vicious and savage government, in pursuance of its desire to have its own way, imposes the guillotine—it will probably also be considering imposing the guillotine with regard to third reading—it shows the fallacy of its own actions.

As I stand here today I venture to say that there will be dozens, possibly 100 or 150 amendments to the bill brought forward next session. There is no question about that. Earlier I challenged members of the government to stand up and deny that. They have not done so, nor can they do so because they know I am correct. For this reason it is essential for the democratic process to have the kind of debate which produced this change, and the course of the debate yesterday was responsible for producing additional changes.

I am convinced that if closure had not been imposed and this debate had maintained its normal, reasonable length we would have been successful in compelling the government to bring in more changes, the changes that we need. Those are the facts. I think they must be accepted. I hope, Mr. Chairman, having disposed of the Liberal party we can now have the question put and vote on it.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to intervene in this interesting riposte between the has-beens in the official opposition and the never-will-be's in the NDP—

Mr. Bell: And the never-should-have-been's over there.

Mr. Mahoney: It has been a most interesting evening. However, the hon. member for Peace River has raised the matter of the time allocation and I think today's debate presents an excellent demonstration of just why that had to happen. At 3.32 this afternoon orders of the day were called and we started to debate five sections of the bill and the amendments that were introduced to those sections yesterday by the government. We have now spent almost three and a half hours in the House of Commons during which members on all sides have congratulated each other, have congratulated the co-op and credit union movements, and a few have even congratulated the government for the amendments that have been introduced.

There has been no suggestion that the amendments that have been introduced with respect to co-ops and credit unions have not been adequate. There has been no suggestion by any member that he wishes to introduce a further amendment to improve them. There has been no suggestion by any member of the House that he opposes those amendments. And so, Mr. Chairman, three and a half hours later we are still congratulating each other. This has reminded me of about the longest private members' hour I have experienced. Are we trying to talk out this bill? Are we trying to talk out these particular amendments? Or is there some possibility that having congratulated each other as often and as frequently as we have, having taken all the credit—surely more credit than is due to us—having given the co-op movement all the credit that is due to them, we might gratify them and the country and do some dignity to this House in committee of the whole by bringing the matter to a vote?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: I am rising to speak, Sir.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Laval.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take part in this debate, but in view of what has been said about the bill and the amendments, I feel I must join with my colleague, the honourable member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), who has expressed very well the feelings of the members on the government side. I think that all of us wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Mahoney) for having accepted to amend Bill C-259 through amendments which are important especially for the urban caisses populaires.

We are aware of the services rendered by the caisses populaires to the small investors. Before I entered politics, I sat on the credit committee of a caisse populaire and, having received many letters, I must congratulate the executive of the caisses populaires on the manner in which they made their representations, informed the Liberal members of their grievances and of the possible solutions.

Mr. Chairman, the caisses populaires are an asset in the province of Quebec and, in my view, the action taken tonight by the government confirms the extent to which it will welcome the suggestions of movements or organizations which have views or solutions to offer.

I should like also to suggest that the 50,000 farmers in the province of Quebec who are members of the 227 agricultural co-operatives of the province, are happy to see the extent to which the government has really dealt with the problem of small investors in regard to the caisses populaires and the various farm co-operatives in the rural community.

Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary said that for the past three and a half hours, we have heard praise from both sides of this House. I think that a certain member must be most unhappy about the speech he made this afternoon and which I followed closely. In fact, I believe that after reading Hansard, tomorrow, he will be ashamed of his speech. It is a disgrace, in the eyes of the whole agricultural community in the province of Quebec. I am thinking of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

He was speaking on behalf of the Social Credit, but I hope he reads tomorrow morning the speech he made this afternoon. I hope the Quebec farmers will see once again that the government members from Quebec deal with farming problems, that when briefs are presented to those responsible for the government administration here in Ottawa, they fall into the hands of people who do not want to make politics at the expense of private investors, the caisses populaires or the members of farm co-operatives.

Mr. Chairman, the statement of the member for Roberval is a disgrace for the Social Credit.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the parliamentary secretary a moment ago are a typical example of why this Parliament does not get things done in an efficient and effective manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: He has that Liberal syndrome: This is our legislation. It is good. You shut up in the opposition and let us pass it.

The same thing applies to the amendments. Simply because they were brought in, the parliamentary secretary expects everybody on this side to shut up because everything they do is good and so there is no way they can be criticized.

An hon. Member: After 40 days?

Mr. Nielsen: Those backbenchers over there who are so silent in this debate are all of a sudden on their feet. Why is it, Mr. Chairman? It is because closure has been invoked and all of a sudden they are turned loose to take up our time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Even the arithmetic of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is bad. He says we have spent three and a half hours on the debate today. A more accurate count is four hours, but in that time there were 11 interventions by Liberal members. How many of them have risen to their feet during this debate? Not one. Everybody was silent, and all of a sudden they are saviours of the co-operative movement and the caisses populaires. What phoniness, what hypocrisy!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Mahoney: How many guys have you got in the gallery?

Mr. Nielsen: The gentleman from Regina talks about posing and posturing, yet spokesmen on this side from first reading onward have been advocating changes to the sections dealing with co-operatives and caisses populaires. Just look at the record.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, look at it.

Mr. Nielsen: This chamber is for debate. This chamber is for the violent exchange of opinion, for the violent clash of differing viewpoints. We are not here to be silent, as are the backbenchers on the other side.

An hon. Member: You were not even here.

Mr. Nielsen: They say, "Be quiet or out you go to the woodshed and you won't get any of these nice parliamentary secretaryships that are waiting in the wings." They know on which side their bread is buttered, and if they dare speak up while the debate is in progress they are put at the bottom of the list for the goodies. They are told to be quiet and they are quiet.

Mr. Mahoney: They can't tell you; you are never here.

Mr. Nielsen: The parliamentary secretary knows that is not true.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mahoney: It is.

Mr. Nielsen: All he has to do is look at the index to Hansard to find out how many times I have participated in debate. I am willing to lay that against the record of any of those backbenchers. I see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is sitting behind the parliamentary secretary. He came up to my riding. When making his first political speech during his visit there he said that he is in the Yukon more than I am in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I can tell him that I am in the House of Commons more than he is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You can, but it would not be true.

Mr. Nielsen: When he is told to be gone, he is gone; and when he is told to come in and sit down in his seat, he is there. The same thing applies to all the cabinet ministers; they are told to be there and say what they are told to say and nothing more. That is exactly what goes on behind those closed cabinet doors—You be good boys in the cabinet or out you go.

Mr. Osler: Where did that speech come from?

Mr. Nielsen: After this debate is over and after the great guillotine is brought crashing down on free speech, let us see on the next measure how many of these voluble Grits will be critical of government measures which they criticize so vehemently in caucus and which they criticize so vehemently and so hypocritically in their ridings. This is sad stuff. Mr. Chairman, it would be really humorous if it were not so sad—

• (9:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: —to see this display of hypocrisy and phoniness, and to see Grit members who believe in saying one thing in this House and then travelling home and saying something else. Mr. Chairman, this simply makes me sick.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that we did not intend to take part in the debate. I know that this is the usual excuse of those who want to make a speech.

The few notes I have are a good indication that it was not my intention to enter into the debate, but following the remarks of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Center (Mr. Benjamin) and more especially those of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and perhaps those of the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney), I feel I must make a few comments. It seems that in the House the rules of the parliamentary game are ignored although they are frequently used. It is well known that those we call backbenchers do not participate in the debates as often as they would like to. The reason is they have ample opportunity of doing so. I do not know what happens in the other parties' caucuses, but I know that ours is called regional or national caucus of the Liberal party and I have had complete freedom to express myself there since 1968. And the real representations that can be made—the most effective and often the least obvious, from the standpoint of publicity—are very surely those made by the private members during the caucuses held every week and attended by the ministers concerned, the Prime Minister and all hon. members.

The hon. member for the Yukon states that we have obtained the authorization, no doubt a special one, of the whip and of the government leader to speak tonight. For my part, I believe that, in the House—with all due respect for parliamentary institutions—an abundance of useless speeches are made, considering the amount of work to be done. But to be told by the hon. member for the Yukon that we were authorized to speak is surely for us an invitation to answer him, always in the parliamentary style that he cherishes, that is on a very high level.

I say to the hon. member for Yukon that we are facing a dilemma. Either, as he says, we are permitted to speak now and are not talking or backbenchers never open their mouth. It seems that many hon. members are frustrated. For instance, during the oral question period, some government members can rise as many as 30, 32 and 34 times to ask questions. I recall my own case because I have taken note of the number of times I rose without being recognized by the Speaker. I certainly respect him as well as his rulings since the question period is reserved to the opposition members. I would also add that with regard to the oral questions asked from September 7, 1971 to November 5, 1971, 63 were from Liberals, 781 from Progressive Conservatives, 343 from NDP members, 77 from Créditistes and 18 from the two Independents. So it might be a good idea some day to explain clearly to the Canadian people how parliamentary rules work in the House of Commons, so that they may understand why backbenchers speak less frequently while they have the best opportunity to voice their views in caucus. This is what we have done and will continue to do. I do not intend to disclose the secrets of the caucus—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I will come to the hon. member and refer to the by-election in Assiniboia, if he wants me to do so. But the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, that it is sometimes difficult for members to remain silent—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I will answer the hon. member in a while, because there are some political matters which I would like to raise with him not in private but in public.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the representations made by ordinary members in caucus have certainly moved the government to reconsider the amendment now before us.

I also know—an essential thing—that the representations made by the Caisses populaires, the credit unions and the co-operatives have been an example of dignity and co-operation. That could easily be given as an example of the co-operation that can take place between people who fight for the same interests.

[English]

Regardless of what has been said, I wish to say that I have admired the co-operation that has gone on between the caisses populaires and the credit unions and co-operatives. They have worked hand in hand because they have a lot in common—

An hon. Member: Not with the Liberals.

Mr. Prud'homme: They had a lot in common with certain representatives who did not necessarily belong to the opposition.

[Mr. Prud'homme.]

An hon. Member: But not with the Liberals.

Mr. Prud'homme: At times I am afraid that I honestly and consciously believe that people like the hon. member who is trying to interrupt me have adopted their positions strictly for partisan, political purposes.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Prud'homme: I remember other debates in which we dealt with the question of American deserters. We cooperated closely with the members of the hon. member's party and succeeded in working together in that instance. I think it is time for us to consider what is at stake. It is time for those who want to be thought of as defending the caisses populaires, credit unions and co-operatives to stop saying that these changes have been brought in because of their representations or their party's representations. They should not downgrade those who really made this possible. After all, no matter whether some people like it or not, the party I support is still the government and will be until given notice by the Canadian people. Therefore, representations made before our caucus still count for much. I strongly believe that representations made by our members have had a great deal of effect.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to remonstrate with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre who talked of the efforts being made by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Had the voters in Assiniboia elected one or two more members to support the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), that might have helped him. But what can one man in a province do? If he says a bill is excellent, people are prepared to believe him, but right after that the leader of the Saskatchewan Progressive Conservative party, the former Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), formerly leader of the Saskatchewan New Democratic Party and former minister of Saskatchewan say the bill is inadequate, followed by the whole horde of Progressive Conservative and New Democratic members, also saying it is inadequate.

Of course, the hon. member has managed to confuse the people to such a point that they finally thought it was no good. But I would like him to repeat in his riding all the congratulations he offered a while ago to the government, because in any event I can assure the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) that if he repeats to his constituents in Saskatchewan what he has just said in the House, namely that this bill is an excellent one and that the government was well advised to make a new attempt, I will see to it to put things straight when I go to Saskatchewan. But what can I do when I go to Saskatchewan? However, I know one thing, and that is that the people of that province will soon realize that the Quebecers and the people of the Prairies have a lot in common in the economic field and that they will get excellent measures if they try to understand each other.

I know that if the hon. member keeps on trying to destroy all measures that the minister attemps to implement—

[English]

I am surprised. Most of the policies the minister is bringing forward are long-range and should be acceptable to the members of the New Democratic Party. However, because they come from the minister or someone in the Liberal party they have to be bad. I think sometimes we become too involved in politics. What is important is that we have in common the best interests of the Canadian people. When we have that in mind, I am convinced that the members of the New Democratic Party and the members of the Liberal party can work together in the best interest of the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I waited until tonight before taking the floor in the hope that we would have a chance to discuss section 8, as everybody welcomes the proposed amendments—not that they are perfect, but because they are real improvement to the bill. We have an amendment to section 8 to propose in order to try and bring this country closer to the just society which has been promised but never achieved. However, judging from the verbiage which we have been hearing from both sides, it seems that tonight, again, political parties will take precedence over the working man.

Mr. Chairman, I am extremely surprised by the attitude of those very people who were going to strangle the caisses populaires and credit unions, and who prepared this 790 page Bill C-259—that is to say, the Liberals. They are the ones who were ready to strangle in the caisses populaires, namely the Liberals.

Mr. Chairman, let us clear matters up. We are not talking here for the sake of politics, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), who was talking politics instead of giving his opinion on the bill. We are here to clear matters up. I will take only five minutes but everything will be clear.

The Créditistes, contrary to what the hon. member for Laval said, were the only ones to rise to call for real improvement of the sections of the bill concerning the caisses populaires and the credit unions. I will say to this House—and I call the House leaders to witness—that when we tackled Bill C-259 at meetings of the House leaders the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) asked everyone of us: What part of the bill do you want to discuss? For your party, what is the most important part of the bill? The minister is my witness that I said three things on behalf of our party. The one who speaks on behalf of our party is not the hon. member for Laval, who finds it hard to speak on behalf of his own electors and who never takes the floor.

At that time, I replied to the President of the Privy Council, on behalf of our party, that the three things we wanted to discuss were: personal income tax, capital gains and the problem concerning the caisses populaires and the credit unions, created by the government's bill.

Whereas the other parties had prepared long lists, we centered our effort on the more modest, the more deprived members of society, the more forgotten by this government in order that this tax reform may bring them a ray of hope and justice.

Mr. Chairman, this is why we avoided petty politics.

I was astounded to hear what was said on the other side of the House. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), who never takes the floor, got on his feet and with great fanfare said that he numbered among those who had contributed to loosen a bit the noose that was to choke the caisses populaires.

Finally, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) also indulged into such glib talk. I just came from his constituency where I met the leaders of "CRAN". I need add nothing else; he will understand. I urge him to repeat in his constituency, the poorest in Canada, the remarks he makes in the House. Strangely enough, when the beginning of this clause was discussed, the hon. member was not there to discuss it but today, when amendments are being brought forward and the government is amending the bill in compliance with the valuable representations made by the caisses populaires, he gets on his feet to say something.

Such are the facts. I shall say no more.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Gloucester is rising on a point of order.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Is the hon. member for Gloucester rising on a point of order?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a question of privilege. The member for Lotbinière (M. Fortin) was imputing motives to me. I was in the House discussing the bill on second reading and in committee of the whole and asking the government to introduce amendments while my hon. friend was politicking throughout the country.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, whatever the hon. member says, he is not talking the same language in his constituency.

Anyway, I will end my remarks with this. If those members are so in favor of the assistance for which they have been asking for such a long time so that a degree of equity may prevail, I would refer them to their own studies on poverty in Canada. My colleague from Bellechasse (M. Lambert), if hon. members can refrain from politicking in the House, is prepared to take the floor on section 8. The Chairman of the Privy Council will testify that we are not among those who took up too much time. The hon. member for Bellechasse intends to introduce an amendment to help the working man and to get him a better deal. When this amendment is put we shall see whether these members were sincere or were indulging in party politics!

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Laval on a question of privilege.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the House but I would simply like to suggest to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) that he read in Hansard tomorrow the speech made by his colleague the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). Then he will see that my interjection was logical and warranted.

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I would refer you to the rules of this House and remind you that an hon. member has the privilege to say honestly what he thinks, and my colleague for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) was entirely right in saying what he did. For the benefit of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) who was in the House at the time it is not our fault if he did not understand anything. This is nothing new.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

I would like to ask the hon. member who just spoke to abide by the same principles. In fact he said that our hon. friend for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) was not saying the same things in his riding that he was saying here. So he was accusing him of being a liar. I think the hon. member should apply the same rules—

[English]

The Chairman: Order. The Chair has to rule that the hon. member for Laval, the hon. member for Lotbinière and the hon. parliamentary secretary are really engaged in argument; they do not have points of order or questions of privilege. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Gilbert: I wish to address a short question to the Minister of Finance, one which I forgot to ask this afternoon. What is the estimated amount of tax the government had hoped to collect from the co-operatives and credit unions under the old section of the bill, and what would be the amount of tax the government hopes to collect as a result of the new provisions?

Mr. Mahoney: I do not have those figures. Some rough estimates have been made but I do not regard them as being very authoritative. The revenue implications have never been of primary concern here. It has been a matter of trying to achieve a proper method of taxation for these particular bodies. The revenue consequences have never been foremost in the mind of the government.

Mr. Burton: I want to make two comments with respect to some of the things which have been said in the debate today. Members from all parties have taken part in the discussion and I hope this will have the effect of ensuring that the provisions we are now enacting will remain in the law for a long time to come and that we shall ensure fair treatment for the co-operatives and credit unions.

I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the hon. member for Calgary South, the parliamentary secretary, have missed the significance of today's debate. The members who spoke in favour of what is proposed by the government, commending themselves or each other as the case may be, wanted to make sure that these provisions stay in force not only this year, next year or until the next election but on a permanent basis and are not removed after the next election. That is part of the function the debate today served.

The hon. member for Calgary South did the committee a poor service when he referred in the terms he did to the time taken by this discussion. Since the white paper was published we have spent days and days talking about capital gains, corporations and their shareholders, mining companies and things of that sort. Today we are talking about people. It is people who make up credit unions and co-operatives. It is their interest we are concerned about, and there is something wrong with our parliamentary institution if we cannot afford a day to talk about people as we have today.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member for Saint-Denis made some remarks which require me to say that while he was in Assiniboia helping to defeat the Liberal candidate by not saying anything about the co-operative and credit union movement as affected by the government's income tax law, those people told everybody else, even if he was not listening, what kind of amendments were needed.

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. It is true I participated in the election in Assiniboia but I wish to remind the hon. member, very humbly and kindly, because he raised the question, that we won the six polls in which I was working.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: And may I add that the Liberal vote was 200 votes lower in those six polls? If the argument used by the hon. member for Saint-Denis were logical, he has just put forward the case for a one-party government because according to him the only way to get amendments to government legislation is to be a member of a government caucus; anything anybody else says does not count.

His reference to what Liberal backbenchers did in their caucus is not relevant to this debate on co-operatives and credit unions. If he really believes that argument, what he is saying is that Members of Parliament need not say or do anything in this chamber because only backbenchers belonging to the government party can get the law changed.

Mr. Whelan: He did not say that.

The Chairman: Shall clause 57 carry?

Clause 57 agreed to.

Clause 58 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, section 135 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Put the amendment first.

The Chairman: There is an amendment to section 135 moved by Mr. MacEachen on December 6, 1971, appearing at page 10175 of Hansard. Hon. members are familiar with it. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 135 as amended, carry?

Clause 1, section 135, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: On section 136 an amendment was moved by Mr. MacEachen on December 6, reported at page 10178 of Hansard.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 136 as amended carry?

Mr. Mahoney: There is also an amendment to section 136 in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton which should be called.

The Chairman: As the parliamentary secretary has pointed out, there is an amendment by Mr. Blair to section 136.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Blair) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 136, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 1—section 137: Deductions in computing income.

The Chairman: Members of the committee will know there is an amendment to section 137 of clause 1, moved by the President of the Privy Council on December 6, which appears at page 10176 of Hansard. Hon. members are familiar with it. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 137, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment to clause 58 before the committee and I am not sure whether Your Honour called it before calling the clause itself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, that was my point of order. I think that includes both clauses 57 and 58.

The Chairman: I beg the committee's pardon. Is it the wish of the committee to revert firstly to clause 57 to deal with the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 57: Specified personal corporations.

The Chairman: There is an amendment to clause 57 moved by the President of the Privy Council on December 6, 1971, which appears at page 10178 of Hansard. Hon. members are familiar with it. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Clause 57, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee to revert to clause 58 to deal with the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 58: Credit Unions.

The Chairman: There is an amendment to clause 58 moved by the President of the Privy Council on December 6, 1971 which appears at page 10178 of Hansard. Hon. members are familiar with the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Clause 58, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

COMBINES—INVESTIGATION OF SALE OF TORONTO "TELEGRAM" SUBSCRIPTION LIST TO TORONTO "STAR"—FEDERAL AID POLICY FOR CANADIAN PUBLICATIONS—PRESS REVIEW BOARD.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I believe we all agree that ideally the publishing of newspapers, magazines and books in Canada should be Canadian-owned as well as competitive and financially healthy. I also believe that Canadians today are more and more alarmed to hear that newspapers and publishing companies are going bankrupt or coming under foreign ownership or, even worse, developing into a monopoly.

In December, 1970, when the special committee of the Senate on the mass media reported to Parliament, 77 of 116 daily newspapers in Canada were already owned by newspaper chains or groups. The very recent sales of three independently owned Ontario dailies to newspaper chains have further increased this concentration of ownership. The three newspapers involved are the Belleville Intelligencer, sold to Thomson Newspapers Limited, and the Brantford Expositor and Windsor Star, sold to Southam Press Limited. In addition, it is believed that Southam Press is negotiating to purchase two other unidentified newspapers.

The decision of publisher John Bassett to stop printing on October 30 the 95-year old Toronto Telegram must have chilled the blood of many publishers across our country. Earlier today we learned that Thomson Newspapers Limited has bought the Cape Breton Post, Sydney's only daily newspaper. This purchase brings the number of Thomson newspapers in Canada to 32. This means that almost half of the daily newspaper circulation in Canada is owned and controlled by three chains, Southam Press, F. P. Publications and Thomson newspapers. The Desmarais group controls four of the nine dailies, plus 13 weeklies in Quebec and K. C. Irving has acquired all the English language dailies in New Brunswick.

What is most disturbing about this concentration of ownership is the fact that in less than five cities all the chain-owned newspapers are published in single newspaper towns. There is no local competitor to stimulate their enterprise in covering the news or to provide a diversity of opinion. We hear that dailies in Calgary, Winnipeg, Quebec City, Moncton and St. John's are apparently experiencing financial difficulties.

From available evidence it would appear that, given the competition from other news media such as radio and television, the advertising revenue available to the newspaper industry is often insufficient to support competition within a specific readership market. However, when a natural monopoly exists, such as only one newspaper in a city, there is a profit to be made. This being the case, many Canadians believe the public interest would be better served by an independent, locally oriented newspaper rather than a group, chain-owned newspaper.

If true competition cannot be sustained, then concentration of ownership must be avoided as much as possible because a combination of both circumstances may not always be in the public interest. A variety of forces have combined to produce a growing concentration of press ownership. Technology and economics may be the dominant force since they undoubtedly favour the development of increasingly large units of newspapers. But there are other factors also. These include laws and regulations involving income tax and succession duties and the apparent ineffectiveness of existing legislation governing mergers, trusts and monopolies.

It is desirable to study these factors deeply and as quickly as possible. Only seldom in recent Canadian experience has a newspaper merger come under official scrutiny. The Combines Investigation Act applies to products. Newspapers are a service industry. However, in 1957 the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission investigated the amalgamation of the Vancouver Sun with the Vancouver Province to form Pacific Press Limited and found that the merger did not constitute a restrictive monopoly but recommended that no further ownership change should be made without court approval. It also stated that a further decline in the number of independent dailies would be prejudicial to the public interest.

In view of the difficulties encountered by daily newspapers, the ethnic press, the church press and others, there is need for involvement by the federal government and its agencies to ensure that the Canadian press will be in a better position to serve the Canadian reading public in a better way. The federal government and other levels of government as well should take steps to preserve the existing independent papers by all proper means. Canadians are waiting impatiently for an announcement of a federal policy on Canadian publications.

In the formulation of this policy the government should give serious consideration to the recommendation of the Senate committee on mass media, such as a press ownership review board and a publications development loan fund.

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In accordance with section 27 of the Combines Investigation Act all inquiries under the act shall be conducted in private. For this reason, no statements can be made about the progress of any investigation until a report is made by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission or until proceedings are commenced by the Attorney General of Canada. However, as was indicated in the House on an earlier occasion, the matter was being looked into by the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act.

The government is studying the issue of assistance to Canadian publications and will announce first steps in assisting book publishing within a few months. The recommendations of the Senate media committee are now under study and the government has not yet prepared its position with respect to these recommendations.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY—FAMILY ALLOWANCES—NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS—DATE OF PAYMENT OF INCREASES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, while I apologize for bringing the parliamentary secretary back to the House tonight I find that I must do so because of the difficulty in getting straightforward answers in the House or being able to continue a line of questioning to extract answers. Be that as it may, I am becoming increasingly concerned with the evasiveness of answers with regard to the government's proposal to increase family allowances under the family income security plan introduced in the House under Bill C-264. Last year, under the policy proposals indicated in the white paper on income security for Canadians, the government said:

> It is expected that legislation will be introduced in Parliament early in 1971, so that the program may go into effect September, 1971.

As is my duty as a Member of Parliament, I sent notice of this good news to all my constituents, especially those who are in dire need of assistance in order to provide a few necessities for their children. I am sure that many other members did likewise. You can imagine my disappointment and that of many Canadians across the country when the government suddenly announced subsequently that in view of advice from various agencies the program would have to be revised to include families beyond the proposed cut off at the income level of $10,000.

However, giving the government the benefit of the doubt and knowing that even with all the expert advice they profess to have they can make mistakes, my faith was restored when they introduced Bill C-264 for first reading on September 13, 1971, and indicated that the target date for the repeal of the old act would be May 1, 1972. The answers given to me to questions in the past few days, especially in view of the ambiguity regarding special agreements on social security with the province of Quebec, renew my suspicion that another delay may be in the offing and this worries me very much.

On one hand the Premier of Quebec expresses confidence that agreement will be reached, and on the other hand all I can extract from the minister and some of his colleagues is that discussions are ongoing. But I wonder if they realize that many hundreds of thousands of Canadian families in the low and no income brackets who depend on family allowances for extra food and clothing for their children have been waiting since the 1940s for some show of sympathy and understanding of their needs.

It is very obvious, also, that in spite of tales of woe that the opposition are holding up the enactment of legislation, Bill C-264 could be introduced for second reading and passed with little or no delay—within a couple of days. Surely the bill could be completed in committee in another couple of sittings and third reading could be completed in another day or so. This would mean that if the government were really sincere in solving poverty in the country, since they are faced with massive unemployment, and if they are concerned about poverty stricken Canadians they would get immediate agreement from all opposition parties to pass the bill with the least possible delay.

In order to assure the people of Canada that the family income security plan will be dealt with, I ask the minister the following simple questions:

1. In view of the hardships being experienced by many hundreds of thousands of poor Canadians, will the minister assure them on behalf of the government that they can expect increases in benefits as indicated in Bill C-264, on May 1, 1972?

2. Does the decision as to putting into effect these increases depend upon the discussions with the province of Quebec and, if no agreement is reached, will it delay implementing the benefits to the other nine provinces?

3. In view of the compounding unemployment situation which cannot be resolved, even with the many measures introduced by the government, can the minister say if the government will consider introducing Bill C-264 immediately with a view to having it passed as an emergency measure, and thereby enable the government to update the payment of family allowance increases as soon as possible, even before May 1, 1972?

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to reassure the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe by telling him that he did not have to call me back in the House tonight because I spent the evening here listening to the speeches of my colleagues.

I have noted the questions which the hon. member has just put. In reply to his first question, I can say that that it is certainly the intention of the government to proceed as soon as possible with the implementation of the bill which will provide low income families with benefits far more substantial than at present.

As regards his second question, I would like to state that the discussions now taking place with the government of Quebec have certainly not delayed passage of this bill. I think that the hon. member is aware that the proceedings of the House are unfortunately slow and he will understand that the government would have wished to introduce this bill earlier. It has unfortunately been unable to do so by reason of the crowded agenda of the House.

As to his third question, I would like to state that the government would certainly like to give priority to this bill when the order of the day allows it to do so.

In any event, I think that the government's forthrightness cannot be challenged in terms of its desire to help Canadian families and all Canadians increase their income. That the government wishes to combat poverty is obvious. On the one hand, it has acted quite quickly on the question of increasing old age pensions and granting additional income to senior citizens who have no other sources of income. It has considerably improved the unemployment insurance legislation and it proposes also to increase the benefits for large families, with low income.

I think that the hon. member should be commended for granting the government the benefit of the doubt when he said a few moments ago that he understood very well that it had intended to improve the bill by introducing certain amendments to the original proposal included in the white paper which was published two years ago. The amendments which were introduced between the time of publication of the white paper and the introduction of the bill by the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) are evidence that the bill has been substantially improved.

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON USE AND LEASING OF INTERIOR ELEVATOR FACILITIES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this matter which is almost as much a question of privilege as it is one of simple discussion. On November 25, as recorded at page 9875 of Hansard, I asked this question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson):

Can the minister inform the House if and when bids were called for the purchase of the Canadian government interior elevator at Lethbridge? Will the minister also inform the House which grain company is acting as agent at the government elevator at Moose Jaw, and whether the elevator has been leased, is under contract, or under what terms it operates?

I did not get a proper answer to that question; Mr. Speaker called me to order. I asked again, with the permission of the Speaker:

• (10:20 p.m.)

Will the minister make a statement on motions in the near future informing the House what the policy of his department is, and indeed of the federal government, in regard to the use and leasing of interior grain facilities in western Canada, and explaining the basis upon which the grain will be handled in these facilities?

The Minister of Agriculture answered:

No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so, but I would be very happy to answer the hon. member's question if it is put on the order paper, and perhaps to expand on it a little.

These questions arose in the miscellaneous estimates committee and some questions I put to the deputy minister as to what arrangements they were making regarding the contract for these elevators. I could not get a straight answer from the deputy minister. He said that he believed it was a written agreement. I asked if it was an agreement between Pioneer Grain and the Board of Grain Commissioners and he replied that he could not speak on behalf of the Wheat Board and Pioneer Grain. I asked a further question, and he replied:

No, but you asked for arrangements that the Wheat Board and Pioneer Grain had. I am making the reservation that I am not in a position to make any commitment in tabling such documents.

That was in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on November 24, 1971, at page 44 of the report.

On November 19, Mr. Speaker, Pioneer Grain Company Limited sent a circular letter to all elevator managers of its company headed, "Re: Arrangements finalized for using Canadian government elevators at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon". This came from its head office at the Richardson Building, Lombard Place, Winnipeg, Manitoba. It outlined the arrangements and agreement reached with the elevators. The second paragraph reads as follows:

> Producers who named Moose Jaw or Saskatoon as their primary or alternate delivery point can now haul grain on quotas authorized by the Canadian Wheat Board directly to the Canadian government elevator at either of the locations mentioned and make use of 5½ million bushels of space available at each of these grain handling facilities.

Yet the Minister of Agriculture who is responsible for the Board of Grain Commissioners refuses to answer a simple question about what is being done as to the disposition of these grain handling facilities. He refuses to say what sort of arrangements are available to other elevator companies. He also refuses to table in the House what are in effect the studies into grain handling in western Canada which have been made available, as I understand it, to the grains council, to the railroads and to other institutions. He does not make the information available to this House.

At the same time, a deal has been made with one grain company with headquarters in the Richardson building in Winnipeg to have handling facilities out of the interior terminals in Saskatchewan. Why the secrecy, Mr. Speaker? Why, when on November 19 the grain company was circularizing its agents in western Canada, could not the people responsible in this House answer a simple question put on November 24 and 25? Do they not know, or are they afraid to tell what they are doing?

I know that very recently they moved a trainload of grain directly out of the facilities in Saskatoon. I know they spent money upgrading the facilities so that grain could be delivered by truck. I am not opposed to this. I am merely saying that this House and the farmers of Saskatchewan should be advised of the policy of this government, what they are doing and how they are proposing to use these interior elevators which are paid for and operated by the taxpayers of this country. If they are paid for and operated by the taxpayers of this country, then I submit those taxpayers are entitled to know the manner and type of agreement which has been entered into under which these facilities are operated.

I am dumbfounded at the minister not being able to answer a simple question and give simple information to this House and preferring to say, as recorded at page 9875 of Hansard, "No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think so, but I would be very happy to answer the hon. member's question if it is put on the order paper." The minister should long ago have made a statement to the House on how these interior elevators were to be operated.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first, the question raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) cannot be all that simple, even though he might say it is. After all, it took him ten minutes to explain his point. As I listened to him it seemed that he took strong objection to the minister not answering his question and to the minister's suggestion on November 25 that the question be put on the order paper. When the minister said, "No, I do not think so," he was answering the part of the question in which the hon. member asked if the minister would make a statement on motions.

May I suggest to the hon. member that he follow the minister's recommendation, if he has not already done so, and put his request for more information on the order paper in the form of a question. Or he could write directly to the minister, if he has not done so already, and in that way perhaps learn a great deal about the whole matter.

May I now attempt to answer the questions the hon. member has raised at this time. According to my information, in the case of the elevator at Lethbridge there has been an offer to sell and bids were called for in the press on November 3, the bids closing at noon on November 26. Applications have been received and are under consideration pending a decision. As for the elevator in Moose Jaw, to answer the other points the hon. member raised a few moments ago, I am informed that our policy has not changed there and that the elevator still operates under the Canadian Grain Commission. It receives grain for the account of grain companies, as has been the standard practice for years. I do not know if anything has changed there recently.

The hon. member mentioned Pioneer Grain Company Limited and the agreement that company has entered into. That company, I suggest, is doing the same thing as any other company. It has entered into an agreement with the government for using limited facilities. It seems that that has been the practice for years and will very likely continue. After all, the commission is accepting deliveries of grain on behalf of grain companies. That has been the practice in the past; that is the practice now. As to whether the practice has changed, I am not informed. I suggest to the hon. member that if he wants a complete answer he should write to the minister. I am sure he would be pleased to give a proper and complete answer.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BLACKBURN—CONTRADICTION BETWEEN REPLY TO WRITTEN QUESTION AND STATISTICS CANADA REPORT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It was only yesterday late in the afternoon that I received in my office a copy of the annual report by the "Dominion Bureau of Statistics" for the fiscal year 1969-70, dated "November 1971."

That report contains a statement concerning the job vacancy survey which is being carried out by Statistics Canada for the Department of Manpower and Immigration. That statement is at substantive variance with the reply given on October 18 of this year by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) to question No. 1,719 which I had put on the order paper on September 20 of this year.

To my question, "what is the first month in which results from the survey were prepared", the parliamentary secretary replied: "June, 1970." The Statistics Canada annual report, page 24, states:

> The complete system of this twice-a-month survey, including all mail and field interview phases, became operational late in 1969. Since that time, data have been produced for the Department of Manpower on a regular schedule.

The parliamentary secretary's reply also states that the initial publication will be for the period commencing June, 1970, that thereafter data will be reported monthly and that the initial publication is scheduled to begin before the end of 1971.

My question of privilege relates to the fact that as a member of this House I am only permitted to make inquiry of the ministry, pursuant to Standing Order 39(1). The ministry is not obliged to reply. But since the ministry chose to reply I maintain that I have the right to accurate information.

In view of the statement in the annual report by Statistics Canada, addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), I am faced with contradictory information.

I do not intend to present a motion at this time, but I will resubmit the same question with the hope that the two ministers involved will agree on a mutually acceptable answer.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—STATEMENT ON OPERATION AND CHANGES

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement on the recently announced local initiatives program. As of yesterday, December 7, a total of 2,752 applications had been received by the regional offices of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Of these 2,247 were from private groups and organizations and 505 were from municipalities.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The first approvals were made on Wednesday, November 24, and as of yesterday a total of 177 projects had been approved, for a total federal contribution of $4,569,419. It is expected that 2,231 jobs will be created by these projects, all of which are either under way or ready to commence immediately.

Representations have been made by and on behalf of many small communities, indicating that the minimum project size of 30 man-months employment placed the program beyond their capabilities. In response to these representations I am pleased to inform hon. members that the minimum is now reduced to 15 man-months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Any projects previously rejected because of failure to supply 30 man-months of work may be resubmitted.

It is now apparent that more applications which meet the basic criteria will be received than can be approved within available funds. To spread funds as broadly as possible it was felt that construction and maintenance projects for educational institutions and their grounds and hospitals and their grounds might be excluded from support under the program. This position was stated in a release dated November 24. Since that time representations have been received from some provinces requesting that this limitation be removed.

In response to these representations I am pleased to inform hon. members that applications by or on behalf of educational institutions and hospitals will be considered on their merits and given support under the local initiatives program where appropriate when viewed in relation to available funds and other applications from the area. All such applications will be treated as municipal for purposes of fund allocation and as such will be considered by my department only after receiving the concurrence of the provincial government concerned.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the rate of approval of applications has now increased to a fairly rapid one. I have just been informed of today's figures bringing up to date the number of applications approved. These figures show that 231 applications have been approved for a total of $6,427,475 and an expected creation of 3,015 jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I want to express our appreciation to the minister for his attention to our observations on the local initiatives program. I want to say as well that we are pleased that our recommendation that the 30 man-month restriction be eliminated was accepted in part but we are still not totally satisfied with the 15 man-month restriction. I firmly believe that this will limit the number of communities that can apply for assistance under the program.

Before making in two or three minutes a few recommendations to the minister, I should like to remind him of some realities that the government must consider in respect of the program. One is that, according to yesterday's figures, 503,000 Canadians are unemployed. Another is the deepening disparities across Canada made evident by the figures released yesterday. This will be further strengthened by argument from other members on motions later. There is also the fact that the program did not officially get under way until November 24 when the first jobs were created and will be terminated in May. The program was not well prepared; it was pulled out of the desks of deputy ministers when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) realized that unemployment was going to be as bad as we had said it would be if no action were taken.

The final reality is that, using the minister's corrected figures given a few moments ago, 231 applications have been approved for 3,000 jobs out of, I would presume, roughly 3,000 applications received. According to the earlier figures the minister gave us, 177 applications had been accepted out of 2,752 received, for the creation of 2,231 jobs. Inasmuch as in the previous month we lost 100,000 jobs in Canada, this does not provide too much consolation to the government or to the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: Here are a few suggestions for the minister. First, the decision-making process must be speeded up. We have received complaints of applications lodged for 21 days without a response despite the fact that I know that officials in the department are working many hours of overtime to try to accommodate the program. Second, since only 3,000 jobs have been created, and in view of the terrible ratio between applications accepted and applications received, consideration must be given to increasing the funds available. Third, consideration must be given to extending the program beyond the month of May because, as we saw last winter, some of the months with the highest unemployment were in the late spring, even including June. I think the minister must reconsider his position on that particular point. Fourth, consideration must be given to introducing more flexibility into the program in order to allow smaller communities that are not formally, structured as municipalities, local improvement boards or the like to make applications even if it means the creation of only three, four or five jobs for the winter months. I say that because some of these smaller Canadian communities suffer from the highest unemployment rates. Fifth, we believe that special consideration has to be given to areas of high unemployment. I am not referring necessarily to provinces with high unemployment as much as to particular parts of Canada, to certain municipalities or communities that are being hit so hard by the unemployment which has been induced in recent years as a result of the government's restrictive measures. I am especially thinking of the pulp and paper communities across this country that are being devastated as a result of lay-offs.

Finally, or semi-finally—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lundrigan: —having looked at the ratio between applications received from private institutions and from municipalities, I think the 50-50 basis for allocation of funds which I believe was incorporated in the original terms issued by the minister has to be reconsidered, because it looks as though private groups are responding to a greater extent than many municipalities. This should be considered. Finally, we feel that the program must be taken under continuous evaluation so that corrections can be made from week to week in order that what was an ill-defined and ill-conceived program can have a more beneficial effect as the winter months go by.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, that is a tough act to follow. I should like to join in welcoming the announcement by the minister that the minimum project size under the local initiatives program has been reduced from 30-man months of employment to 15-man months and that applications by or on behalf of educational institutions and hospitals will be considered on their merits and given support under the local initiatives program, where appropriate, when viewed in relation to available funds and other applications from the area. I am pleased to see that the minister and the department have been sufficiently flexible to accommodate real need and to adjust the program as a result of representations made in this House and by municipalities. I find it unfortunate that these provisions were not included in the program as initially devised, because the delays in making these decisions and communicating that information to the communities which will want to become involved in the program now that the regulations have been changed will mean that fully effective use of the funds available simply will not be possible.

I also wish to point out to the House that even now, at this late date, only about 6 per cent of the funds allocated have been utilized. I think this shows the disadvantage of introducing such a program as late as it was introduced and demonstrates the lack of attention which was given to details in the devising of the program. The protests which were received from the provincial governments necessitated further delays and consideration before the plan could come into effect.

I want to underline at this point the necessity for the local manpower centres, now that these two decisions have been made, to communicate that information to the municipalities within their areas, to the hospital boards that might be interested and to the school boards that might be interested and, as well, to communicate that information widely, effectively and immediately. This information ought to be made available at the earliest possible moment so that the communities can get down to work and make plans for submission to the government in order that they may become involved in this program.

• (2:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is a good thing for the minister to report to the House once in a while on progress made to this day under the local initiatives program.

Personally, I am not at all surprised by the changes that have been made in order to allow a greater number of municipalities or small communities to meet the requirements which, in my opinion, was extremely difficult for some localities to do before. I was precisely telling the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Prud'homme) yesterday that I was worried because the minimum of 30 man-months of work prevented many small rural municipalities from taking advantage of the program. The fact that it has been reduced to 15 man-months should enable a greater number of small municipalities to benefit from the programm in submitting projects which I hope would be considered acceptable.

What surprises me in all that is that on page 2 of the statement appears the following:

It is now apparent that more applications which meet the basic criteria will be received than can be approved within available funds.

Once more, we have a ceiling because of lack of funds, artificial scarcity of money. Men are available, waiting for work, seeking jobs. Materials are plentiful, dealers and manufacturers are falling all over themselves to sell them. Nevertheless, we shall have to restrict work for lack of funds. An artificial scarcity of money.

I don't know when it will be realized that money should be man's servant and not his master, and that a responsible government in a democratic country such as ours should act as a wise administrator and arrange for money to be available when people plan to carry out work that will benefit the population. In any event, I believe we should consider this matter more thoroughly and take the necessary steps in order that the funds be made available at the proper time, so that we may be able to answer favourably all reasonable requests.

Secondly, I wish to express my sales fact on and congratulate the minister for having amended the program so that school boards and hospital authorities will benefit from it.

Personally, I think it is an improvement from which several Quebec communities and school boards will benefit—I refer to these because I know them best—thus clearing the way for school renovation while creating a number of jobs in appropriate conditions of, instead of cutting branches in four feet of snow workers can do some painting in public building, which the whole community could benefit from, I think this would be a good step forward.

Mr. Speaker, I must limit my remarks because you remind us of it quite often. In concluding, I would simply ask the minister to continue to provide us with information. As far as we are concerned, we can promise him that we will give him our support and make suggestions which may improve the program in order that our unemployed can find employment before May 31. Time goes by very quickly indeed and applications must have been received before January 31.

I think that it will be possible to do more, but once again I would like the applications to be considered and answers given as soon as possible so that the people will know that we mean business and so that our program will operate efficiently.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL REPORT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I do so because of the November unemployment figures released yesterday by Statistics Canada which showed that the number of unemployed persons in the four Atlantic provinces is 9,000 higher than in the previous month of October.

The unadjusted unemployment rate for each province was greater than in the previous month. In Newfoundland the rate jumped two percentage points to 11.4 per cent. In Prince Edward Island the rate jumped by 2.5 per cent to 7.5 per cent. In Nova Scotia the rate rose from 6.1 per cent to 7.4 per cent, and in New Brunswick the rate increased to 6.5 per cent from 5.5 per cent for the previous month.

In view of this deteriorating situation and the failure of the government's regional economic policies in relation thereto, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That the first report of the Atlantic Development Council, containing recommendations for a development strategy for the region, be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not, and the motion cannot be put at this time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I took great pleasure in seconding this motion because we are seeing a proliferation—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): There is an increasing proliferation of important documents which are being tabled, witness the report tabled yesterday by the Secretary of State on the Opportunities for Youth program. There is no opportunity under the present system for members to consider seriously these important documents.

MANPOWER

PROGRAM ADVERTISING EXPENDITURES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S. O. 43

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask leave of the House to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Yesterday in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the Minister of Manpower and Immigration admitted that $2,220,000 in over-expenditure reflected money spent or to be spent on advertising the local initiative program, the student summer employment program and the Keep Canada Growing campaign. The additional funds represent a 271 per cent increase over the amount originally requested for advertising by the department in the main estimates.

The urgency and importance of this matter are related to the need to ensure beyond all doubt that public funds are not being used, even indirectly, for partisan or electoral purposes, and are also related to the fact that there will be no further opportunity to discuss the matter in the House. I therefore ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson):

That the extent and nature of government advertising be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: Just as in the previous case, this motion presented under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity and the question cannot be put.

TASK FORCE ON ARGENTIA PROBLEMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S. O. 43

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion in a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

On February 15, 1970, a special federal task force was appointed and charged with the responsibility of making recommendations to the government with regard to the serious social and economic problems existing as a consequence of the phase-down of the United States naval station at Argentia, Newfoundland, and also the added financial burden placed on the municipalities in the area by the government's resettlement program. Since it is now obvious that the task force has failed to deal effectively with the problems and has not come forward with a long-range plan for the area—indeed, it has not met since April of this year—I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the chairman of the task force be directed to appear before the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not and the motion cannot be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CMHC—STAFF COURSES

Question No. 992—Mr. McCleave:

1. Who attended a recent "think-in" organized by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

2. What was its general purpose?

3. Where was it held, for how long a period and at what cost?

4. What were the total fees paid and what was the range of such fees?

5. (a) In what form are the conclusions of the "think-in" to be presented (b) will these be made public (c) how soon will the government react thereto?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation held a staff training course for 25 of its employees.

2. The purpose of this course was to develop the skills of the employees to enable them more effectively to contribute to the policy development functions of the Corporation.

3. The course was held at Ste-Adèle, Québec, from January 10 to January 22, 1971. The costs of such training courses, conducted by the Corporation, are internal administrative matters. It has not been the policy, nor the practice, to answer questions relating to the internal administration of the Corporation.

4. Arrangements for the participation of speakers, and payment to them, were made by the Intendes Research Foundation, which was then under contract to the Corporation.

5. (a), (b), (c) Since this was a training course, reports were not called for nor made.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—THE GENERAL STORE

Question No. 1,742—Mr. Hales:

1. What was the total amount paid to the Alice Street Commune (The General Store), Project No. 548 under the Opportunities for Youth Program?

2. Was there an on-site inspection of the project before the grant was approved?

3. Was an audit conducted before the final payment was made?

4. What were the names and addresses of those employed in the store and what salary was paid to each?

5. What was the total number of customers and sales of the General Store?

6. What were the operating expenses not including wages?

7. Is an audited statement available and, if so, from whom?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. The total amount paid to the Alice Street Commune (The General Store) Project 300-548 under the Opportunities for Youth Program was $4,250.

2. No, but immediately following approval, as per normal procedure, a visit was made.

3. The project organizers have not yet received final payment. However, the project will be audited before the final payment is made.

4. It is the policy of the department not to divulge publicly either the name or the place of residence of each employee of a project. However, Michael Bernhard and Fred Dell'Amico are the two contact people for the General Store. They can be reached at 6A Alice Street, Guelph, Ontario. Each member of the staff received a salary of $800 for a ten-week period.

5. Approximately 100 shoppers used the General Store per week for a total of 1,000 shoppers for a ten-week period. Sales varied from $200 to $350 per week. The money received from sales each week was turned over for buying new stock.

6. The operating expenses for the project were $250.

7. The audited statement will be prepared by the Department of Supply and Services. However, this statement constitutes an internal document for the use of the department and other government agencies only.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS EXCLUDED FROM COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Question No. 1,808—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the government introduced any changes in the terms and conditions of employment of a non-salary nature since the last report of the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation (the Clyne Committee) regarding (a) the executive category (b) other public servants excluded from collective bargaining?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): (a) Yes. As a result of the recommendations in the second report of the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation, certain non-salary benefits have been extended to employees in the executive category. These are payment by the employer of the premiums for the basic life insurance and five units ($50,000) of accidental death insurance under the Public Service Management Insurance Plan, four weeks' vacation irrespective of length of service and provision for extended sick leave of up to 6 months when needed, and if the employee has insufficient sick leave credits available. (b) Yes. Revised terms and conditions of employment for other public servants have been approved and are being issued. In general the terms and conditions of collective agreements will apply to excluded employees in comparable groups. At more senior levels, in the Administrative and Foreign Service and Scientific and Professional categories, provision has been made for certain additional non-salary benefits. These are management leave in lieu of overtime, improved meal allowances when working overtime and provision for repayable advances of sick leave credits of up to thirteen weeks.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR RESEARCH PROJECTS

Question No. 1,810—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many applications for grants to finance research projects did the Department of National Health and Welfare receive in the past year?

2. What was the total dollar value of the projects requested from the Department?

3. How many of the applications made to the Department were approved in full?

4. How many of the applications were approved in part only?

5. How many applications for research grants were turned down last year?

6. What were the reasons for the refusals?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): For the fiscal year 1970-71, under the Public Health Research program, the National Health Grant program and the National Welfare Grants program: 1. 469.

2. $12,529,442.

3. 268.

4. 76.

5. 125.

6. Applications not within terms of reference; poor scientific merit; weakness of presentation and design; proposed methodology judged inadequate; lack of funds; duplication of research.

CMHC—INVENTORY OF HOUSING

Question No. 1,842—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the government have an inventory of housing in Canada?

2. Does the government have any forecast of the numbers of senior citizens requiring housing or shelter in the next ten years and are plans being instituted to take care of this problem.

3. What is the total number of public housing units and what percentage is this of the total amount of housing units?

4. How many public housing units will be needed over the next ten years?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Although the government does not have an inventory of housing in Canada, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made estimates of the housing stock which, in 1971, is estimated to total 6,217,000 dwelling units.

2. The government has a forecast of the number of persons 65 years of age and over for the next 10-year period, based on assumptions concerning such things as mortality rates and immigration. It is estimated that this section of the population will number 1,916,700 in 1976, and 2,188,800 in 1981. Some members of this group will require shelter and provisions for financing needed housing units are included in the Capital Budget of the Corporation.

3. To August, 1971, the total number of public housing units built or approved under the National Housing Act is 90,695 and 1,025 hostel beds. These self-contained units form 1.5 per cent of the total estimated housing stock in Canada in 1971.

4. To the end of 1969, 59,264 self-contained dwelling units and 295 hostel beds had been approved under the NHA in public housing projects. Commitments in 1970 and in the first eight months of 1971, have totalled 31,431 self-contained dwelling units and 730 hostel beds in such projects. The government recognizes the increasing need for the provision for accommodation of low-income families and is maintaining a high level of participation in the provision of housing for low-income families in the Capital Budget of the Corporation.

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS

Question No. 1,943—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Since September 1, 1970, how many grants were made by Canada Council?

2. What agencies received grants?

3. What was the amount of each grant?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: 1, 2 and 3. The Canada Council is not in a position to provide this information for the specified period. However, the Council's latest annual report, tabled in the House on October 28, 1971, lists all grants made in the period extending from April 1, 1970 to March 31, 1971.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—GRANT FOR PRODUCTION OF «THE PEOPLE'S HISTORY OF CAPE BRETON»

Question No. 1,945—Mr. Coates:

Was a grant provided to a group of individuals under the Opportunities for Youth Program to produce "The People's History of Cape Breton" and, if so (a) what was the amount of the grant (b) to whom was it awarded (c) what were the names of the individuals associated with the project (d) what was the outcome of their work?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. Yes, a grant was provided to a group of individuals under the Opportunities for Youth Program to produce "The People's History of Cape Breton". (a) The amount of the grant was $3,130. (b) The grant was awarded to Allan Story. (c) It is the policy of the department not to divulge publicly the names of individuals working on a project. (d) They published a 47-page booklet, researched, designed and prepared by three students. A teacher's manual and a bibliography were also included.

INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 1,965—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For the periods 1867 to 1965 and 1966 to 1970 inclusive, by provinces and territory, how many acres of land on Indian reserves and settlements have been purchased by (a) Canadians (b) Americans (c) others?

2. For each year, 1965 to 1970, how many teachers in (a) federal schools (b) non-federal schools are Canadian Indians?

3. To date, how many federal and non-federal schools for Indian children teach mostly in (a) French (b) English (c) Indian?

4. How many (a) federal schools (b) non-federal schools for Indian children include in their curricula Indian culture and traditions?

5. For the period September 1970 to June 1971, how many primary schools in the Province of Quebec taught (a) French only and a few hours of English per week (b) English only and a few hours of French per week?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Departmental records are not kept on an ethnic or nationality basis, therefore, the information requested is not available.

2. (a). 1965-66, 114; 1966-67, 135; 1967-68, 136; 1968-69, 158; 1969-70, 130; 1970-71, 206*.

*This figure includes teachers and teacher-aides.

(b) Information on teachers of Indian status employed in provincial schools is not available.

3.(a) and (b) All schools, federal and non-federal, use English as the main language for teaching, with the exception of 96 schools in the Province of Quebec where the main language used for teaching is French. (c) In British Columbia and Manitoba, the Indian languages are used for part-time instruction at pre-school level.

4.(a) 207; (b) 253*

*This figure excludes schools in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario where such instruction is provided as an option or supplement to established curricula.

5.(a) 81; (b) 44.

CMHC—RESEARCH ON IMPACT OF HIGH RISE APARTMENTS ON FAMILY LIFE

Question No. 1,967—Mr. Kaplan:

What studies have been conducted or are being conducted by or for the government to investigate the question of the desirability of raising children in high rise apartments?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State in Urban Affairs): In February, 1970, a grant was authorized by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under the National Housing Act, Part V, to the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto to undertake research on the impact of high rise apartments on family life. This study is not intended to reflect on the desirability of high rise apartments for family living, but to examine factors which affect family living in this form of housing. The study is still in progress, with the final report being expected early in 1972.

CANCER RESEARCH

Question No. 1,975—Mr. Robinson:

Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare prepared to advocate an increase of support of cancer research by increasing the size of the block grant it has given to the National Cancer Institute of Canada, particularly in the area attributable to cigarette smoking?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): More than $40,000,00 is being made available for health research mainly through such programs as Medical Research Council, Public Health Research Grant, National Health Grant and Smoking and Health program. Consideration is given to all applications for support projects in the field of cancer research within the terms of these grants, including those submitted by the National Cancer Institute.

AWARD TO NATIONAL CANCER INSTITUTE

Question No. 1,977—Mr. Robinson:

Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare advocate an increase in the size of the annual award to the National Cancer Institute of Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Upon receipt of a suitable application from the National Cancer Institute, the Department is prepared to repeat in the fiscal year 1971-72 the $250,000 grant that was made to the Institute in 1970-71. Researchers in the field of cancer research, including the National Cancer Institute, are encouraged to submit applications for support of specific projects within the terms of the Department's research grant programs.

NUMBER OF WORLD WAR I VETERANS IN CANADA

Question No, 1,993—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many veterans of the First World War are there in Canada?

2. How many veterans of the First World War are receiving veterans pensions?

3. What is the average pension received by veterans of the First World War?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In the records maintained by the Department of Veterans Affairs, information with reference to veterans of World War I includes the veterans of the Boer War. Consequently the answers to Parts 1, 2 and 3 of this question incorporate the information requested in Question No. 2002. 1. Based on information obtained from the 1961 Census and adjusted for mortality by the Canadian Life Tables, 1960-62, the estimated number at June 30, 1971 is 96,500.

2. 21,122 as at September 30, 1971.

3. Pensions are paid at varying rates dependent on the degree of assessable disability. Additional pension is paid to pensioners with dependants, and allowances are granted for certain other factors such as need for attendance and exceptional incapacity. As an example, a married 100 per cent pensioner with six dependent children, in receipt of the maximum Attendance and Exceptional Incapacity Allowances would receive $11,712 annually, non-taxable. A single man, at the 5 per cent rate, without additional allowances, would receive $175.20 annually. 21,122 World War I veterans, as at September 30, 1971, were receiving a total amount of $30,822,543.

NUMBER OF WORLD WAR II VETERANS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,994—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many veterans of the Second World War are there in Canada?

2. How many veterans of the Second World War are receiving veterans pensions?

3. What is the average pension received by a veteran of the Second World War?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Based on information obtained from the 1961 Census and adjusted for mortality by the Canadian Life Tables, 1960-62, the estimated number at June 30, 1971 is 789,000.

2. 102,033 as at September 30, 1971.

3. Pensions are paid at varying rates dependent on the degree of assessable disability. Additional pension is paid to pensioners with dependants, and allowances are granted for certain other factors such as need for attendance and exceptional incapacity. As an example, a married 100 per cent pensioner with six dependent children, in receipt of the maximum Attendance and Exceptional Incapacity Allowances would receive $11,712 annually, non-taxable. A single man, at the 5 per cent rate, without additional allowances, would receive $175.20 annually. 102,033 World War II veterans, as at September 30, 1971, were receiving a total amount of $124,120,803.

NUMBER OF KOREAN CAMPAIGN VETERANS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,995—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many veterans of the Korean War are there in Canada?

2. How many veterans of the Korean War are receiving veterans pensions?

3. What is the average pension received by veterans of the Korean War?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Based on information obtained from the 1961 Census and adjusted for mortality by the Canadian Life Tables, 1960-62, the estimated number at June 30, 1971 is 26,000.

2. 2,025 as at September 30, 1971.

3. Pensions are paid at varying rates dependent on the degree of assessable disability. Additional pension is paid to pensioners with dependants, and allowances are granted for certain other factors such as need for attendance and exceptional incapacity. As an example, a married 100 per cent pensioner with six dependent children, in receipt of the maximum Attendance and Exceptional Incapacity Allowances would receive $11,712 annually, non-taxable. A single man, at the 5 per cent rate, without additional allowances, would receive $175.20 annually. 2,025 Korean Campaign veterans, as at September 30, 1971, were receiving a total amount of $2,172,803.

NUMBER OF BOER WAR VETERANS IN CANADA

Question No. 2,002—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many veterans of the Boer War are there in Canada?

2. How many veterans of the Boer War are receiving veterans pensions?

3. What is the average pension received by a veteran of the Boer War?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1, 2, and 3. Estimates of the veteran population and record of pensions in payment do not separately identify veterans of the Boer War. These data are included in World War I figures provided to answer to Question No. 1,993.

Questions

STUDY ON THE EFFECTS OF ABORTION

Question No. 2,024—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the feasibility and necessity of conducting a study on the effects of abortion upon society?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The forthcoming proposed debate on abortion in Parliament should allow the government the opportunity to consider a study on the effects of abortion upon society.

YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ORIENTATION COURSE FOR TEACHERS

Question No. 2,043—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is there an orientation course for teachers going to teach in the Yukon or Northwest Territories and, if so, how long does this course last?

2. Who were the teachers at least year's orientation course, and what were their qualifications and training for the course?

3. What were the subject-matters covered at the orientation course?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yukon, no. Northwest Territories, yes, the duration of which varies from three days to six weeks.

2. Teachers at N.W.T. orientation courses were as follows: (a) Mr. N. J. McPherson, M.A., who did his major work in teaching English as a second language and who has ten years experience in the North. (b) Mr. M. Mallon, B.A., head of the Eskimo language school at Rankin, fluent in Eskimo. (c) Professor R. Williamson, University of Saskatchewan—fluent in Eskimo. (d) Mr. W. D. Thomas, M.A., Director of Education for IAND, Alberta an Indian with many years experience in Indian education. (e) Dr. Gloria Sampson, specialist in the field of teaching English as a second language. (f) Dr. J. W. Chalmers, expert in inter-cultural education, Alberta. (g) Mr. Paul Robinson, Director of Curriculum, NWT Department of Education. (h) J. H. Parker, Deputy Commissioner of the Northwest Territories. (i) B. C. Gillie, Director of Education, NWT Government.

3. Subject matters covered at the NWT orientation courses were school-community relations, curriculum adaptation including cultural and linguistical components, functions and objectives of schools in native communities, northern development emphasizing future objectives. In addition, panels of native peoples addressed the teachers on various aspects of community needs in the north.

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

Question No. 2,049—Mr. Robinson:

Has the government considered making the Royal Ontario Museum a national museum for grant purposes?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No. We are, however, drawing up a policy dealing with museums and the national heritage, following the guidelines set out in my public announcement last February.

CBC—LOSS OF EQUIPMENT FROM PARKED VEHICLE IN TORONTO

Question No. 2,064—Mr. Hales:

Did the CBC have some of their equipment stolen in October, 1971 from a parked vehicle in Toronto and, if so (a) what was stolen and what was the original cost of the equipment (b) was the vehicle locked (c) how long had the vehicle been parked in that location (d) on what date was the theft reported and to whom (e) what disciplinary action was taken (f) was the equipment insured and, if so, was the cost of the equipment recovered?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: The CBC has no knowledge of any of its equipment being stolen from a parked vehicle in Toronto during October. However, the question probably refers to a missing camera package and its subsequent return in the month of September. The equipment involved was an assembled camera package consisting of an electronic camera, viewfinder, zoom lens and camera shoulder-mount, having a replacement value of approximately $20,000. The CBC truck containing this equipment had been parked on CBC premises and locked at about 11:30 p.m. on September 6 but was found unlocked on the morning of September 9. The theft was reported to the police late that afternoon following internal investigation. No disciplinary action was taken as no case could be established. The equipment, which was insured, was found and returned to the CBC in good working order; hence no claim was necessary.

PUBLIC SERVICE—HIRINGS AND DISMISSALS

Question No. 2,091—Mr. Robinson:

In each of the past ten years, how many public servants were (a) hired (b) released?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: (a) Hired 1961, 23,124; 1962, 19,338; 1963, 14,750; 1964, 19,199; 1965, 21,700; 1966, 21,979; 1967, 31,293; 1968, 20,397; 1969, 20,773; 1970, 23,055.

NOTE: The data on hiring relate to the number of initial appointments to the Public Service made by the Public Service Commission and its predecessor, the Civil Service Commission.

The Public Service Employment Act (1967) widened the Commission's appointing authority to cover certain kinds of employees such as "prevailing rate" employees and ships' crews who were exempt from the previous legislation. Thus the data for 1967 to 1970 are not strictly comparable with the data for previous years. It should also be noted that the total for 1961 includes about 1500 employees in Revenue Post Offices who were brought under the Act at that time.

(b) Released 1961, 12,466; 1962, 12,396; 1963, 11,226; 1964, 13,162; 1965, 14,546; 1966, 14,343; 1967, 16,830; 1968, 17,465; 1969, 17,512; 1970, 20,619.

NOTE: These figures include separation for various reasons such as resignations, death, rejection on probation, dismissal, personal reasons, etc. They do not include summer students, seasonal and term employees.

PUBLIC SERVICE—NUMBER OF INDIAN AND ESKIMO EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,093—Mr. Robinson:

How many Indians and/or Eskimos are employees of the Public Service?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: Section 12(2) of the Public Service Employment Act provides that the Commission, in prescribing selection standards, shall not discriminate against any persons by reasons of sex, race, national origin, colour or religion. As a consequence, no records are maintained of employees on the basis of ethnic origin.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Question No. 2,107—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many people were employed by CBC during each year 1960 to 1971 inclusive?

2. What was the CBC budget in each of these years?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Number of continuing CBC employees as of March 31 for each of the years in question: 1960, 7,127; 1961, 7,431; 1962, 7,756; 1963, 7,606; 1964, 7,783; 1965, 8,130; 1966, 8,284; 1967, 9,123; 1968, 9,042; 1969, 9,147; 1970, 8,951; 1971, 8,885.

2. CBC net operating budgets for each of the years in question, provided through parliamentary appropriation: 1959/60, $52,300,000; 1960/61, $59,288,000; 1961/62, $70,252,000; 1962/63, $72,655,000; 1963/64, $78,377,000; *1964/65, $85,869,000; 1965/66, $95,063,000; 1966/67, $112,403,000; 1967/68, $139,503,000; 1968/69, $148,329,000; 1969/70, $166,000,000; 1970/71, $166,000,000.

*CBC began to pay capital loan principal and interest out of operating funds

CBC absorbed the shortwave international service into its regular operations.

NUMBER OF CANADIANS JAILED FOR DEBT

Question No. 2,131—Mr. Robinson:

How many Canadians have been jailed for debt in each year 1960 to 1970 inclusive and 1971 to date?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: This information is not available.

PUBLIC SERVICE OF CANADA

Question No. 2,143—Mr. Robinson:

How many women and how many men are employed in the Public Service of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The Public Service Commission Annual Report to Parliament for the year 1970, Appendix E, page 76, indicates that as at December 1970 there were 55,861 women and 142,840 men under the Public Service Employment Act.

These figures do not include term employees.

NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS FOR PENSION AWAITING DECISION

Question No. 2,175—Mr. MacRae:

What is the total number of applications for pensions presently awaiting decising before the various adjudication bodies, i.e., the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Pension Commission and the Pension Review Board?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): As at October 24, 1971, the Canadian Pension Commission had 5,639 applications for entitlement to pension awaiting adjudication or in the process of adjudication. The Department of Veterans Affairs does not itself deal with pension applications. The Pension Review Board presently has no applications for pensions awaiting decision.

3. What work is currently in progress?
4. How many employees have been hired?
5. What is the name, the address, the qualifications and the salary of each employee?
6. To date, what amount has been expended?
7. What is the estimated budget for next year?
8. How many additional employees will be hired within a year?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES—NUMBER OF CARIBBEAN STUDENTS

Question No. 2,095—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many students from Caribbean countries attended Canadian universities during each of the years 1960 to 1970 inclusive?
2. What subsidy is paid to these students by the government?
3. How many students have remained in Canada after training at Canadian universities and colleges?
4. Is there any requirement whereby the students must return to their own country after receiving their education in Canada?

Return tabled.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on January 28, 1971—almost a year ago—I put question No. 830 on the Order Paper. I have often drawn the attention of the parliamentary secretary to this fact and he promised several times that an answer would be given. Could he tell us when the minister will answer my question?

[English]

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give that information this time.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion No. 75?

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—RESEARCH STUDIES

Motion No. 75—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of the research studies undertaken by the Transportation Policy and Research Branch of the Department of Transport as reported in answer to Question Number 223 in Hansard of December 17, 1969 at page 2069.

[Mr. Crossman.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, last week I pointed out that we had given to the hon. member several of those studies, that some had been tabled and that three others were privileged. Moreover, I asked the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, in view of the courtesy extended in supplying a number of studies that the department has, I agree to withdraw my motion at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Jerome: May I ask that the remaining notices of motions stand?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, with regard to Notice of Motion No. 257 standing in my name, since the Minister of Transport was kind enough to supply these materials to me directly I would ask to have this motion withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Are the other notices of motions allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION—DISCUSSION WITH U.S. TREASURY SECRETARY—CONTINGENCY PLANS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Prime Minister told the House that he had not raised the problem of the DISC legislation with the President of the United States in Washington. Did the minister raise this subject with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Connally, when he was in Washington and did Secretary Connally advise the minister as to how this legislation might be applied in so far as it would affect Canada? May I also ask whether the government now has any contingency plans in regard to the DISC legislation, or is it the minister's attitude that the whole matter is still hypothetical?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter has been discussed with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and we have indicated our opposition to the DISC proposals. I am presently having my department analyse the DISC proposals as they are proceeding through Congress, and we do have some contingency plans or at least are considering what we might have to do in case the proposals are enacted.

CANADIAN-U.S. DOLLAR RELATIONSHIP—DISCUSSION WITH U.S. TREASURY SECRETARY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question relating to the minister's efforts in Washington. The Prime Minister also said yesterday that he had not raised with the President the relationship between the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar. Did the minister raise this matter with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Connally, and did he receive from the secretary any assurance that the United States would not insist upon a further upward valuation of the Canadian dollar in relationship to the United States dollar?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the determination of a country's currency is a national matter and is not determined by the United States or anybody else. Second, I should like to state that we have made our position quite clear, that we believe that if there is a general realignment of currencies the Canadian dollar should, at least in the short run, continue to float.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It is clear from what the minister has said that he did not receive any approval or acceptance of this point of view from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Benson: Nor do I require it.

Mr. Stanfield: Following his conversations with Mr. Connally and following the view expressed by the Prime Minister that these monetary matters would all be settled at the next meeting of the Group of Ten or at the subsequent meeting and that the United States surtax would be repealed at that time, I am wondering whether the Minister of Finance, being the great economic prophet of this government, shares this prophecy of the Prime Minister and is prepared to bet on it?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT—POSSIBILITY OF NEW PROGRAMS IN LIGHT OF SMALL DECLINE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister inform the House whether the decline in the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment from 6.7 per cent last month to 6.6 per cent this month represents, in his opinion, an adequate decline for this time of year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's question is not asked in the proper way. He is inviting the minister to express an opinion and in those terms his question is not in order. The hon. member might like to rephrase the question or to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase my question. In light of this very small decline, is the minister giving any consideration to announcing new programs to reduce the rate of unemployment markedly?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not at this point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister whether he can assure the House that this slight decline is the beginning of the movement toward the less than 6 per cent unemployment that the minister has been predicting for some time now?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a supplementary.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SPECIAL PROGRAM FOR LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has any special program to offer those Canadians who have been unemployed for a long time in view of the fact that the statistics released yesterday show that 42 per cent of the people who are unemployed are classified as long-term unemployed?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have already announced programs that are unprecedented in Canada's history.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES ON STUDENT EMPLOYMENT—EARLY IMPLEMENTATION NEXT YEAR

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. It relates to the evaluation report tabled yesterday on the Opportunities for Youth program. In view of the limited information it gives about clearly important questions, I wonder whether the minister can indicate to the House whether or not there has been or will be any extensive consultation with the municipalities and provinces regarding the general question of student employment in so far as that comes within the responsibility of the federal government, and will this form part of the over-all proposal that the minister will put forward in regard to the Opportunities for Youth program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): The answer to both parts of the question is yes, Mr. Speaker. I have spent the better part of my time, in the last three weeks, at those consultations and, of course, their result will constitute an important element of any policy on youth the government may adopt sometime in December.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could indicate if he will be prepared to make a statement in the House before it adjourns inasmuch as he indicated two days ago to a question that he would be prepared by the middle of the month to indicate the government's position with regard to the program?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: That is not exactly the case, Mr. Speaker. I said the decisions would be made around the middle of December and that a statement, probably on motions, would be made at the latest on January 15, provided of course the House is sitting at that time.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the overriding concern many students will have as a result of this year's experience with the lateness of the date and the planning time needed, can the minister assure the House that the program will be implemented early in the new year so that adequate planning can take place both on the part of students and those responsible for administering the program?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I did indicate the latest date on which the announcement will be made, provided of course the government finally agrees to maintain its Opportunities for Youth program. That would be January 15.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—SUGGESTED HIGHER REMUNERATION FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that according to the evaluation tabled in the House yesterday only 5.8 per cent of project leaders and 3.7 per cent of the staff saved more than $800 in the program last summer, can the minister assure the House that next year's program will have a more realistic per capita remuneration so that working class students who participate can be assured of earning enough money to go back to university next fall?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I can assure the hon. member that this question is under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATIONS ON FILE

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the proposed program and the possibilities for next summer, can the minister say whether there are any projects on file at the present time with the department?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the meaning of the hon. member's question.

[English]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to say if he knows whether any projects are at present on file with the department in the event that the proposals may come up or that the program may be put into effect.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I am afraid I still do not understand, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member would specify—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure it would be very conducive to the efficient conduct of our business if the question were to be repeated, but the hon. member might like to repeat the question a third time and hopefully the minister will understand it. Otherwise we will have to continue our business.

Mr. Simpson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In view of the short notice of this program given last summer and in view of the fact that many proposals which were sent in only a week or so after the program was initiated were turned down, I would ask the minister now whether there are any applications on file with the department for a possible program next summer?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, some projects submitted last year are still on our files. But, should the program be re-activated, it is possible that, because of the experience acquired last year , we feel that the standards to be announced before January 15 should be changed, and in consequence, those projects may not meet the new standards at all. In such cases, the young people should be invited to bring their projects up to date.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize a last supplementary on this subject by the hon. member for York South and then, recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—EVALUATION BY TREASURY BOARD

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary of the President of the Treasury Board. In the normal supervision by the Treasury Board of expenditures has the Treasury Board or the minister's department made any evaluation of the Opportunities for Youth program and, if so, I wonder whether the House could have the report on that evaluation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in the ordinary course of events the Treasury Board would not make an evaluation of the program but merely an audit of the evaluation made by the department. The responsibility for the evaluation is that of the department and the responsibility of the Treasury Board is to see that an adequate evaluation is made.

NATIONAL LIBRARY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY BOARD

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. When will the Secretary of State be appointing the National Library Advisory Board which is called for under the National Library Act passed by Parliament about two years ago?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Very soon, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the vital importance of the National Library as a centre for unbiased information, as contrasted with the government's chosen propaganda instrument, Information Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member for Joliette have a supplementary?

* * *

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—CONTINUATION OF PRESENT POLICY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State.

In view of the great interest which all members of this House as well as several Canadian organizations have in the Opportunities for Youth program, and considering that some organizations are concerned as to whether the program will be continued, and, finally, in the light of the minister's remarks, I would like to ask him, without trying to know specifically how it would be implemented, whether the Opportunities for Youth program will be continued in 1972.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a definitive answer in this connection as the final decisions have not yet been made. However, I can reassure the hon. member by saying that it seems likely that the program will be continued.

AGRICULTURE

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO QUEBEC HOG AND EGG PRODUCERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the minister of Agriculture.

In addition to the deficiency payments adjustments provided under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, has he given consideration to financially helping hog and egg producers who have been operating at a loss in the last 12 months?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can repeat the announcements I have made in the House on several occasions but I am sure you would not allow me to do that. For the hon. member's information, I will be very happy to send him a printed copy of what we are going to do for the egg producers and the hog producers as soon as we have the statistics for 1971. I can also give him a report on the very significant improvement in egg prices as a result of the action we took about a month ago.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO NATO—DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the announcement that ten European NATO members will increase their 1972 contributions to NATO in order to relieve the United States military and economic burden, has there been any change in this government's policy in respect of NATO?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. As I recall it, the purpose of the U.S. policy, as was ours, was to increase the contributions that European countries would make to the NATO alliance.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. During the recent talks between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States was Canada's commitment to NATO one of the topics of discussion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the President and I did talk about NATO in general terms.

SHIPPING

MAINTENANCE OF SERVICE ON WEST COAST OF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The minister will recall that a few days ago when I asked him a question about the need for maintenance of the boat service on the west coast of Vancouver Island he indicated this was a matter for consideration by the Canadian Transport Commission. Has the minister had any response to the request that this matter be considered by the CTC and can he tell us the result?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did make representations to the Canadian Transport Commission and furthermore satisfied myself that alternative means of transportation are not yet available in the area. I indicated this to the CTC and as a result they have agreed to the extension of the subsidies for a period of six months.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF CERTAIN STATION AGENTS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Transport. When is the minister going to express his position on the application of Canadian Pacific Railway to the Canadian Transport Commission to remove 56 station agents in Saskatchewan and when will a statement be made on this matter?

• (2:50 p.m.)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am surprised at the nature of the supplementary question. I did not realize we had ferries in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: In any event, I will take this question under advisement.

AIR TRANSPORT

HIJACKING—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—CHARGES LAID IN RECENT CASE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. In light of the present heavy air traffic which will continue to increase because of the festive season, will the minister be bringing in special legislation with regard to hijacking offences to guarantee that there will be a real deterrent against this crime being committed again in Canada in light of the hijacking of a plane flying out of Calgary?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The Secretary of State for External Affairs signed an extradition treaty with the United States last week which will be before the House. In that treaty there is provision for mutual extradition of hijackers. In Calgary seven charges were laid against the accused. We hope to complement the extradition treaty as soon as possible by legislation which will be incorporated in a larger bill.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether, without getting into any details of the offence itself, the minister would tell the House what charges were laid and whether the accused is being held in custody in light of the serious situation that has developed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Perhaps the House will allow me to give a list of the seven charges to the hon. member.

[Later:]

HIJACKING—POSSIBLE RETROACTIVITY OF LEGISLATION IMPLEMENTING EXTRADITION TREATY

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Does he intend to introduce legislation with regard to the extradition treaty to make it retroactive so that it would apply to the accused man in Calgary?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one previously asked of the Minister of Justice. Will the extradition treaty recently signed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs allow for the extradition by the United States of John Doyle, or does it require Joey Smallwood's signature?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Later:]

HIJACKING—CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE OF CONVENTIONS ADOPTED BY INTERNATIONAL AIR TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will we also be asked to deal with the conventions passed by the International Air Transport Association regarding hijacking?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Will who be asked to deal with—

Mr. McCleave: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. In trying to make my question short I have lengthened the time it will take. When the House is asked to deal with the Canada-United States extradition treaty amendment with regard to hijacking, will we also be asked to deal with the conventions passed by the International Air Transport Association this year in Montreal?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would have to discuss that matter with the House leader and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED WARNING TO DOCTORS OF DANGERS OF HEXACHLOROPHENE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the food and drug administration in the United States has sent out a warning to 600,000 physicians and other health professions regarding the dangers of hexachlorophene, what has the Minister of National Health and Welfare done to alert doctors and ancillary services in Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am pleased to advise the hon. member that the Food and Drug Directorate is looking at this very matter now and I expect to have an announcement very shortly.

[Later:]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether similar warnings will be sent out to the trade and whether warnings on labels against this drug will be required?

Mr. Munro: As I indicated, we are preparing our position on this matter. I will not be in a position to answer the hon. member more specifically for a day or two.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED LEGAL AID PROGRAM FOR THE YUKON

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a question for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Attorney General for the Yukon. Since he has inaugurated a program of legal aid in the Northwest Territories as part of his responsibilities as Attorney General for that territory, can he say what steps he is taking to inaugurate a similar program in the Yukon as is his responsibility as Attorney General for that territory?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): As long ago as last August, before I went up to Yellowknife to sign with the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories a program of legal aid for the Northwest Territories, I made a similar offer in similar terms for the same type of legal aid agreement for the Yukon. I was not able at that time to persuade the Commissioner of the Yukon, Mr. Smith, to sign a similar agreement.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question for the Attorney General for the Yukon. Since the barrier seems to be the Commissioner of the Yukon and since the Commissioner takes his orders from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, can the Attorney General for the Yukon speak with his colleague to see if this log jam can be broken?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am in constant friendly communication with my colleague.

Mr. Stanfield: One of the few people who are.

Mr. Aiken: That is because you are not an Indian, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should point out to hon. members that there are many postulants for questioning and we will be running short of time unless we limit supplementaries.

REPORT ON NATIONAL LEGAL AID SCHEME—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Can the Minister of Justice advise the House if he has received a report on a national legal aid scheme for Canada, and when will he be publishing the contents of that report?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have been in communication with all provincial Attorneys General and expect to make a report to my colleagues within the next few days.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—ARRANGEMENTS FOR LANDING OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES PLANE AT DACCA—COMPLAINT AGAINST FIRING

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have arrangements been made with India and Pakistan for the unimpeded landing at Dacca of the Canadian defence forces plane which has made two unsuccessful efforts to land there, and has the government lodged a complaint with India over the anti-aircraft fire brought to bear on this plane by an aircraft carrier and two destroyers in the Bay of Bengal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In reply to the first question, we have a Hercules and the Royal Air force has two Hercules waiting in Bangkok to fly into Dacca as soon as we can get agreement on a ceasefire. That we have not yet obtained.

As to the second question, it is very difficult for us to lay a complaint because the facts are not altogether clear.

Mr. Harkness: I wonder if the minister could explain why the facts are not clear? I think he is aware that the Pakistanis do not possess an aircraft carrier but the Indians do and it was from a ship of this kind that the firing came.

Mr. Sharp: There are several things that are not clear about the incident. It is not at all clear that there was firing on our Hercules, but in any event—

An hon. Member: The pilot would know.

Mr. Sharp: —there was a clear indication that we should not land, and we did not. I do not think much would be gained by putting in a protest at present. What we would like to do is to get the plane on the ground.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CROWN CORPORATIONS SUBJECT TO NEGOTIATIONS FOR TAKEOVER

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. The chairman of the Canada Development Corporation, Mr. Anthony Hampson, said, following a meeting of the directors, that the first activities of the corporation would be to negotiate with the government to take over Crown corporations. Can the minister enumerate to the House which of the Crown corporations are subject to negotiations for takeover by the Canada Development Corporation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It is in the bill.

Mr. Douglas: Is the minister saying that negotiations are now going to go on with respect to all the Crown corporations enumerated in the bill?

Mr. Benson: Yes, the Crown corporations enumerated in the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford would perhaps permit me to give the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands the opportunity of asking a second supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION IN MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION—CANADIAN FINANCIAL CONTROL—ROLE OF PANARCTIC OILS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Canada Development Corporation has affirmed the possibility of participating in the construction of Mackenzie Valley oil or gas pipelines to bring Arctic supplies to southern markets. Can the minister assure the House that any financing of oil or gas pipelines from the Arctic to bring supplies to the south will be under majority Canadian control and whether Panarctic Oils, in which the government has a major interest, will be included in such a consortium?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): This is a very hypothetical question. I do not really think that the chairman of the board of the CDC was setting out anything definite. It is merely a matter of interest to the corporation. This corporation should be interested in projects to develop Canada.

POSSIBLE DEBATE ON RADIO BETWEEN MINISTER AND FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME INC.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General.

Did he recently undertake to hold a public debate at a Montreal radio station with the people in charge of the Lapalme employees in order to discuss their problems?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED ILLICIT TRAFFIC IN ALIENS ENTERING UNITED STATES THROUGH CANADA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I would like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question of which the Minister of Labour took notice a few days ago. Is the minister doing anything and, if so, will he make a short statement to the House later about the suggestions and charges that there have been large-scale, illegal movements of aliens from Canada, through Quebec and British Columbia, into the United States in which criminal elements are involved, including the allegation that there is laxity in the immigration laws of Canada which lead to this result?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would only say briefly that the Department of Immigration and the authorities in Canada co-operate fully in attempts to detect any such movements. There have been no special circumstances recently to show new or different operations than those which occur from time to time. But our co-operation is extended in the fullest way in every way we can.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

ABILITY OF QUEBEC TO SECEDE FROM CANADA—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question in connection with a resolution passed by the Labour Federation of Quebec which apparently accepted the principle that any province can secede of its own volition. What attitude does the government of Canada take on this unconstitutional position?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I treat that question as purely hypothetical.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, apparently everything is hypothetical that might embarrass the government. I ask the minister, whether he has been in touch with the provinces in connection with whether or not it would be constitutional for any province in this country to secede of its own volition? Has there been any correspondence or discussion with the provinces in that connection?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, sir.

FINANCE

SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN PROGRAM—CO-OPERATION OF ONTARIO TO EXPEDITE MUNICIPAL APPLICATIONS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that many municipalities in Ontario have been in a position for some time now to make application—

An hon. Member: The minister isn't here.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, may I redirect my question to the very capable Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that many municipalities in Ontario have been in a position for some time now to make application for loans under the $160 million special development loan program, and in view of the fact that none of these applications can be processed here in Ottawa until the Ontario government makes up its mind as to how it will allocate its $27.7 million share of that fund, would the parliamentary secretary ask the minister if he would approach the Ontario government for an early decision so that these municipalities could be helped by this federal program?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

Mr. Cafik: On a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member was not asking a question but making a suggestion and he has to assume that somebody has noted it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AGREEMENT WITH MARITIME PROVINCES ON CONTINUED OPERATION OF DEPARTMENTAL ENGINEERING SERVICES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the minister in a position to indicate if an agreement has been reached between his department and the three maritime provinces with regard to the continued operation of the engineering services of his department that are located in Amherst?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with the council of maritime Prime Ministers. I think that this matter has now to be approved by the cabinet and that it will be done very shortly.

UNITED NATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY—CANADIAN ROLE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that consideration of the India-Pakistan warfare has been transferred from the Security Council to the General Assembly, can he advise what role Canada contemplates as a member of the latter body as a consequence of yesterday's important move?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during the discussions and the lobbying that took place in the General Assembly, Canada was not altogether satisfied with the nature of the resolution that was ultimately put forward although we did support it. We are now trying to get some action in addition to what has already been taken that would be of a more realistic nature.

Mr. Macquarrie: Will Canada take leadership in proposing yet another resolution on this matter to the General Assembly?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if necessary we would. What we are trying to bring into discussion is a procedure to attempt to bring about a settlement and not simply a resolution condemning the participants.

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—EVACUATION OF CANADIANS FROM WEST PAKISTAN

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the evacuation of Canadians from West Pakistan. Would the minister state whether the flight from West Pakistan is now under way to evacuate Canadians in Karachi, Lahore, and Islamabad?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have a plane close at hand ready to fly into Karachi and probably into Islamabad. Unfortunately, we have not been able to obtain agreement to a ceasefire from the Indian government. The situation is very serious and I have sent a personal message to the Foreign Minister of India urging him to give clearance to the flight as soon as possible.

DUMPING OF EFFLUENT BY ATLANTIC RICHFIELD OIL INTO WATERS ADJACENT TO CHERRY POINT, WASHINGTON—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. It is supplementary to one asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena, some days ago which the Secretary of State for External Affairs took as notice. It has to do with the reported large discharges of refinery waste by the Atlantic Richfield refinery into the waters at Cherry Point, which are adjacent to the waters of British Columbia in that area. Is the minister looking into the situation to safeguard our area from this threat of pollution?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. We have been in touch with the United States environmental protection agency and we are assured that the standards which will be in effect in the United States will be similar to the high standards which are in effect in Canada.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot make a speech. He has asked a question and perhaps he could allow the minister to answer it briefly.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the announcement that I made the day before yesterday respecting additional assistance to small family-type farms is another example of the concern which this government has always expressed for this kind of operation.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—POSSIBLE ADDITIONAL MEASURES TO TRACE SOURCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On Monday the Acting Prime Minister reported he was unable to state that there had been any progress or any results with regard to the investigation being conducted into the leaks of confidential cabinet documents several weeks ago and reported that the inquiries were in the hands of the departments. In view of the length of these examinations and the lack of results reported by the Acting Prime Minister, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to leave the investigation in the hands of the departments, or does he intend to take any additional measures with a view to tracing these leaks?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what the Acting Prime Minister said the other day. We are following a very long established practice of previous governments in making the responsibility for any such leaks lie with the departments themselves. That is why after the incidents referred to I asked each minister to start an investigation into his own department. Where they need assistance or help they get it from the advisers in the Privy Council office or from the RCMP, but the investigation is still going on at the departmental level.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question. Since it is obviously not the intention to refer the matter to the skilled investigators in the RCMP, and it has not been referred to the special security police of the Solicitor General, what was the purpose of setting up the new security force under the Solicitor General?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that there are problems of security in the country outside of the civil service.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ACTION TO EXPEDITE PROCESSING OF CLAIMS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It is a matter of concern to every member of the House. I ask the question because of the unprecedented large number of unprocessed and unpaid claims to entitlement for unemployment insurance that are presently directed to my attention. Can the minister not do something to increase efficiency in expediting claims, since many of these people are forced to resort to municipal relief because of their inability to obtain satisfactory payment of unemployment insurance benefits to which they are entitled?

[Mr. Olson.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I answer this question periodically. I can only say that there are 8,000 public servants working for the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I think the constant attacks on these 8,000 public servants are very unfair. First of all—

An hon. Member: There is your problem.

An hon. Member: You have too many.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a right to ask a supplementary, but there are only two minutes left before the end of the question period and I am trying as hard as I can to give an opportunity to as many members as possible. The minister's reply should be as brief as possible. If supplementaries are required they might be asked at the time of adjournment or perhaps tomorrow.

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister says my attack on so many thousands of civil servants is unfair. I am not making any unfair attack. I know that these public servants are working to the best of their ability, but because of the large number of cases that efficiency is not good enough.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTED RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In face of escalating unemployment in the Atlantic region especially, with the figures for November showing a substantial increase in the four Atlantic provinces, and in view of the failure of the minister's policies to seriously affect the situation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask the question? This is debate.

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON GOVERNMENT DEPOSIT WITH CHARTERED BANKS FOR CASHING OF CHEQUES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Canadian government must leave on deposit with the chartered banks of Canada $100 million interest free in return for cashing government cheques, and as it is over a year since the chartered banks agreed to cash all cheques, personal and government, free of charge, I ask the minister if he will take steps to collect interest on this $100 million left on deposit, or will he have the Bank Act amended so it will not be necessary for the Canadian government to leave $100 million on deposit interest free?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think this is an excellent suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I shall look into it.

SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN PROGRAM—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO ENABLE VANCOUVER AND VICTORIA TO PARTICIPATE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister received representations from the mayor of Vancouver to the effect that this area of British Columbia, which includes 35 to 40 per cent of the total provincial unemployment, has been excluded from the federal-provincial employment loans program and, if so, what action does he contemplate to remedy the situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have received representations from the mayor, Mr. Speaker. What happened was that the amount available for the province of British Columbia had been allocated by the provincial co-ordinator and therefore approved prior to the application from Vancouver having been considered.

Mrs. MacInnis: In view of the fact that two weeks ago the province of British Columbia had already used up the entire $21 million allocated to it under the program, neither Vancouver nor Victoria having been included at that time, will the minister consider making additional funds available to the province?

POST OFFICE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALARY INCREASE FOR POSTMASTERS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Is the minister in a position today to reply to a previous question regarding the long delayed increase for postmasters staff of post offices across the country?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on November 10 a collective agreement was signed between the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the Treasury Board for the program administration group, the group to which managerially excluded postmasters' pay rates are related. The collective agreement, which is retroactive to October 1, 1970, calls for increase in rates of pay up to 17.5 per cent for levels one and two and 16.5 per cent for levels three to six over the three-year period ending September 27, 1973. In addition, the Treasury Board has recently revised its policy to allow for additional payment to managerially excluded employees for overtime, call-back and standby at the discretion of the deputy minister. Previously, no compensation was allowed in these cases.

AGRICULTURE

SMALL FARM DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture supplementary to one asked earlier regarding the small farm development program announced on Monday. As this program appears to be simply an expansion of the ARDA concept, will it be carried out under the present ARDA agreement and administered by the present ARDA staff of the provinces?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, it will not be administered by those staffs. It will be administered mostly by the Farm Credit Corporation and, hopefully, with some joint arrangements with the provinces for the extension and counselling services they already have in the field.

Mr. McKinley: Before this program is finalized would the government agree to have it brought before the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that questions can be asked and ideas contributed to the program, or will legislation be involved?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, in the next session there may be a bill. But this House has already given approval in the amount of $10 million in the last fiscal year and $16 million in this fiscal year for this type of program.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Since the minister and the authorities or the Premier of Quebec have differences of opinion about the grants of his department, could he tell us whether he has had talks with the Quebec government concerning the grant policy of his department?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister, the minister in charge of economic development and the Minister of Trade and Commerce are all quite satisfied with the way the department has been dealing with the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The oral question period has now expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON—DISCUSSION OF INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT AND FLOOR PRICE ON WHEAT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday I asked the right hon. gentleman if he would place high on his agenda for discussions with President Nixon this week the suggestion that the President should co-operate with Canadians in reactivating the International Grains Arrangement and, more particularly, placing a substantial floor price under wheat. Can the Prime Minister advise the House if he acted on this suggestion and, if so, what was the President's response?

SUBJECTS DISCUSSED AT MEETINGS BETWEEN MINISTER AND DIRECTORS OF CERTAIN PHILATELIC SOCIETIES

Mr. Charles Turner (London East): I have a question for the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. I understand that today the minister is having deliberations with the directors of the Royal Philatelic Society of Canada and the board of governors of the British North America Philatelic Society. Is the minister in a position to take this House into his confidence and reveal the subject of these deliberations and what progress is being made?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The distinguished members and officers of the Royal Philatelic Society of Canada and the board of governors of the British North America Philatelic Society have graciously agreed to meet, at my invitation, to offer suggestions and advice on a national stamp collection and a postal museum. Our deliberations have been very useful and rewarding. Many excellent ideas have been advanced relative to establishing a national stamp collection and a postal museum. SPORTS

PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN HOCKEY TEAM IN 1972 OLYMPIC GAMES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the minister recently said that the 1976 Olympics will be the greatest event ever to occur in the history of Canadian sports, and since the 1972 Olympics are to be a great event for Canadian athletes, great enough that we should be represented in our national game, can the minister advise the House why he advised Hockey Canada and the CAHA not to make representations today to the Olympics committee so that Canada could be represented in the 1972 Olympics?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not advise Hockey Canada. Hockey Canada is a corporation composed of representatives of all the interests in hockey, including the fitness and amateur sports directorate of my department. Collectively they advised me, and I must say I agree with them, not to field a hockey team at the winter Olympics. We will maintain our position internationally and not field a team until such time as we can put our best players on the ice to represent Canada effectively.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary. As hon. members know, because I was anxious to recognize a number of hon. members who had been trying to ask questions for a few days I took the liberty, with the consent of the House, of extending the question period. I wonder whether we should not now call orders of the day. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there are players available who could make up a competent and competitive team. Honour and glory as measured by a gold medal may be a remote possibility, but there are Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 7, consideration in committee of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon amendments to that act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: May we have order, please, in the committee. It is very difficult for the Chair to read the order unless hon. members who are to participate in the work of the committee come to order.

On clause 1—section 2: Tax payable by persons resident in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I propose in a few minutes to move an amendment which would have the effect of dividing the bill for purposes of proclamation, with a veiw to bringing into effect immediately those sections relating to personal income tax which are clearly desirable and not controversial and which are designed to help with regard to assessments and with regard to old people. These are measures which, although not perfect, are recognized by all members of the House, I think, as representing a very substantial improvement.

Much of the bill is so complex that I doubt if anybody in the country really understands it, although some claim they do. The bill is so complex that small businessmen in particular will need tax experts at their elbows every time they turn around. Although this may be great for the business of tax experts, it will be very rough indeed on the ordinary, small businessman who is struggling to get along and keep his head above water. We have here a bill of 707 pages, with a vast number of amendments. Even those who pretend to understand this bill admit that it is somewhat easier to understand Einstein's theory of relativity.

The other night I heard the Minister of Finance talking about this bill. I heard him describe it as the envy of the world—the envy of the world, Mr. Chairman! The thought immediately occurred to me, "Would it not be a great thing to export?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As I listened to the Minister of Finance extolling the virtues of this bill, the virtues of this 707-page piece of legislation which is the envy of the world, I wondered how big would be the line-up outside the government publisher's office and how big would be the demand for this bill that we are told is the envy of the world. Of course, the truth is that it is a complicated absurdity. The provinces have asked for a delay in the implementation of substantial parts of the bill, if not of the whole bill. How can the provinces be expected to produce immediately duplicates of this horror of complexity?

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition. As I reminded hon. members earlier, it is difficult to conduct the proceedings of the committee if hon. members insist on carrying on private conversations. I sincerely ask hon. members who want to engage in conversation to go into the lobby or behind the curtains so that we can proceed with the committee's work. I would appreciate then co-operation in this respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I was explaining briefly the difficulties of the provinces in duplicating very quickly on their statute books a copy of this horror of complexity. We must also consider the confusion on the part of the provinces with regard to succession duties. If the government jams the bill through, if it insists on proclaiming the whole bill immediately, what will be the virtual and immediate result?

An hon. Member: Chaos.

Mr. Stanfield: We shall have a bill that not only members of this House but practically everybody in the country cannot understand. We shall have a bill which the provinces have asked to be deferred. They want its implementation deferred. A bill will have been passed which includes a provision for imposing a capital gains tax. I repeat, I am not opposed in principle to a reasonable tax on capital gains, although in this case I am certainly not satisfied with the provisions in the bill relating to capital gains taxation applying to farmers. I think almost everybody in this House agrees that if there is to be a reasonable and equitable tax on capital gains, there must be associated with that a significant adjustment in connection with estate taxes and succession duties.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As far as this bill is concerned, the government is simply abandoning the estate tax field. It is suggested that the abandonment of the estate tax field by the federal government solves the whole problem, but it does not. According to my understanding, there has been absolutely no accord reached with the provinces as to what they will do in the field of succession duties. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance and the government to take the attitude that the whole problem will be solved by simply withdrawing from the estate tax field. However, the fact remains that the citizen is the same citizen whether he is caught by a federal estate tax or a provincial succession duty tax.

We are being asked to pass this bill. In fact, it is being forced through the House. The bill involves taxation of capital gains with no assurance as to what the end result will be. With the knowledge we now have, we are likely to end up in a tax jungle with this House being forced to adopt a tax on capital gains, and provincial succession duties piled upon us in a manner which we have no way of knowing will be equitable or in line with the views of a committee of the House of Commons when it was considering this subject. The sensible course would be to defer the capital gains until arrangements have been worked out with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In the meantime we should retain the federal estate tax until these arrangements have been made. That is one problem, the relationship with the provinces and the matter of provincial taxation. The second question is, how relevant is this bill to Canada's economic conditions as they exist in the context of the situation that developed over the summer?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: If it was relevant last spring—and this is by no means obvious—it is by no means clear that it is relevant now in the context in which this country finds itself as a result of President Nixon's initiative. We have the DISC proposal in Washington, although the Prime Minister did not feel it necessary to raise this matter with the President. This can have far reaching effects upon Canada. In addition, we have recently been reminded by the Economic Council of Canada of the challenge facing the government and this country in connection with additional jobs and further employment. There is not anything at all cheerful in the recent reports on unemployment published by Statistics Canada.

The need for an industrial development strategy and an economic development strategy in this country has been talked about for years. It was even assumed by the authors of the leaked, so-called Gray report that the government would produce a strategy for economic development and the screening process would be related to implementing that economic strategy. We are being asked to adopt this tremendous, complicated morass of legislation with no idea of what the strategy for economic development in this country is going to be.

With regard to the loss of revenue involved, I would hazard a guess that if the estate tax was left in operation it would produce more revenue for the government in 1972 than the capital gains tax proposed in the bill. I agree that what I am proposing will involve some uncertainty in the business world and among taxpayers as to what will eventually be worked out and adopted as a long-range tax plan for this country. However, there is uncertainty anyway. The passage of the bill at this time will not remove the uncertainty that exists. There will be uncertainty, in any event, for many months as far as taxpayers are concerned with regard to getting interpretation on this very complex bill and officials of the Department of National Revenue trying to figure out what it means. There will be these uncertainties plus rulings, and the action taken by the provinces in the field of succession duties. There is a possibility of confusion as a result of the action the provinces may take in the field of personal and corporate income taxes. Passing this bill now will not eliminate these uncertainties.

It will be far better to delay the proclamation of the complex and involved parts of the bill for a while, than to stick the Canadian people and the Canadian economy with these 707 pages of legislation and all the amendments associated with it. The amendment I will propose will provide desirable, uncontroversial and clearly understood parts of this bill relating to personal income taxes coming into effect promptly, with the rest of the bill not being proclaimed until there has been further discussion and an affirmative resolution adopted by this House. I suggest that is the most sensible course to follow.

The reason for the government using closure to jam the bill through at this time is not to aid the Canadian taxpayer and to invigorate the Canadian economy; it is simply the result of stubbornness and a desire to save face. If the government really wants to do something for the economy it should accept the proposition I am putting forward, give priority to the tax reductions that are proposed and inform us of its policies so that we can deal with the serious trade situation that could develop into a crisis if we are not active and careful.

Let the government give us its trade policies. Let it give us its measures to offset the effect of the proposed DISC program in the United States. The government should inform us of its policies for restoring confidence and getting industrial development moving forward at a satisfactory rate, rather than giving us the dismal figures as to expectations as a result of surveys made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We do not need bad, ill-conceived bills such as this that do not offer anything to the Canadian people except confusion piled on confusion.

Nothing can undo the mistakes which the government has already made. You cannot recall time. But perhaps my appeal may help this government to at least partially regain its senses. If I can do that, the efforts of myself and my colleagues will not be completely in vain. For the sake of Canada, I hope this is so. I ask the government to accept the amendment which I now propose. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River:

[Mr. Stanfield.]

• (3:40 p.m.)

That clause 1 of the bill be amended by deleting lines 1 to 3 on page 1 and substituting therefor the following:

"1. Parts I to IIIA and parts V to VII of the Income Tax Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor so as to apply, subject to the said act as hereby amended and to part III of this act, to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years but the said act as hereby amended, excepting thereout those portions thereof containing an arrangement, revision and consolidation of the provisions of the said act as the said act is amended by the application mutatis mutandis of the provisions of sections 6 and 8, subsection 12 of section 20, and sections 62, 63, 109, 110 and 117 of the said act as hereby amended, shall not come into force and have effect as law until a day to be fixed by a proclamation that shall be subject to affirmative resolution of the House of Commons:"

The Chairman: Order. I have very serious reservations as to whether I can accept the amendment which the Leader of the Opposition has proposed. I would be pleased to hear from hon. members who would like to assist the Chair on the procedural aspect. It does seem to me at this stage of the proceedings—I make these preliminary observations without in any way indicating to hon. members that I have any firm opinion—that the proposed amendment might involve something more than the committee of the whole has power to do. This appears to be a major amendment which might very well be opposed to the principle of the bill which was agreed to on second reading. However, I make this observation without being committed to a firm view and I invite the assistance of hon. members.

Mr. Baldwin: We agree that a major step is involved in the amendment which my leader has proposed. But let me put it to Your Honour in this way: there is no other means, no other place available to us. Most bills contain a provision naming the date at which the bill is to come into force. The Interpretation Act provides that if there is no such date mentioned in the bill, the measure shall become law upon receiving royal assent. In clause 9 of the bill before us we read that the act shall become effective in certain ways and for certain purposes as of January 1, 1972.

Surely, it is only in committee of the whole that it is possible to deal with a specific clause. Your Honour would agree, I am confident, that it would be absolutely impossible for us to move an amendment of this kind on third reading or to have moved it on second reading. It is true we might on third reading move that the bill be referred back to the committee so the committee might consider certain matters and recommend to the House that parts of the bill be not implemented until a certain time. But if we cannot do so now, when should such an amendment be moved?

It might be argued that we should wait until this debate is finished. But having regard to the drastic restrictions which have been placed on these discussions—I could use other words but they would not be parliamentary—we shall probably never get to a serious consideration of the balance of the legislation. There are probably 200 sections of this bill which we shall never be able to debate before the guillotine falls. This being the case, my hon. friend has to make a move at this point or not at all.

It should not come as any surprise, because notice was given by way of a speech which my hon. friend made some time ago and in which he declared his intention of moving an amendment of this sort. I believe he said at that time that he would move it with respect to clause 9. Obviously, our prospects of getting to clause 9 are somewhat remote, so if the amendment is to be moved, it must be moved now. In these circumstances, the amendment can only be directed to one clause of the bill, and we are now on clause 1. I submit that an amendment can be moved which has the effect of providing that certain parts of the bill shall come into force at one time and other parts at another time.

If there is a ruling from the Chair that the amendment is not acceptable, I say with all respect there is no other place where it can effectively be moved during the time available for the consideration of this bill. We take this matter very seriously. This is not a spontaneous motion but one with regard to which notice has been given in statements made both inside and outside the House. This is our view of what constitutes a reasonable disposition of the difficulties which confront this country and the House, and only in this way can we place it before the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would refer Your Honour to the wording of clause 1. These are the operative words bringing about the repeal of the totality of the present Income Tax Act. The 500 or more pages which follow are merely a substitution therefor. If the present act is to be repealed, it must be done at this point. It cannot be done at any other point. The motion put forward by the Leader of the Opposition seeks to repeal certain parts of the act and substitute certain other provisions which include the tax cuts he has enumerated. My hon. friend proposes that the rest can only be proclaimed at a date to be fixed by proclamation, which would be subject to further discussion in the House.

The reasons in support of such a course have been outlined and I would suggest that this is the appropriate place at which to move such a motion, unless Your Honour holds that third reading is the only stage at which this can be done and that there must be a referral back to this committee with instructions to do precisely what Your Honour would forbid the committee to do now.

One has to realize that this is the point of departure. This is the time at which such an amendment must be put. If we are to be told that it must be done on third reading, that there must be a motion to refer back to the committee, should such a motion carry we would be back discussing the same kind of motion as we have just heard this afternoon.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: With the same objection.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, with the same objection. We would be back at third reading, and what sort of merry-go-round would that be? I put it to you, Mr. Chairman, that now is the time to put such an amendment, right on clause 1.

The Chairman: If there are no other hon. members who want to assist the Chair on the procedural aspect, since the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member for Edmonton West and others have indicated that they view this amendment very seriously I must say, quite frankly, that I should like a little time to consider it. I would not be fair to the Leader of the Opposition or to other hon. members if I tried to give a decision before satisfying myself about it. If I have the permission of the committee, I should like to take the matter under advisement. I will, of course, make a ruling as quickly as possible.

Mr. Baldwin: Is Your Honour suggesting that we debate the amendment while it is being taken under advisement, or is Your Honour suggesting that we adjourn for that period? The amendment is a very general one in the sense that it does not inhibit general debate. My own view, which I am sure is shared by the mover and by other members of our party, is that we should continue to debate the amendment as if it were in order and had been properly put. Your Honour could then consider your position on the amendment while debate continued.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, may I first take exception to the suggestion that we adjourn. After all, within two hours from now the entire discussion in committee of the whole will end. That is short enough time, so let us not shorten it any further.

The other comment I wish to make arises out of the fact that we are under an order to end this stage of the debate at 5:45 p.m. Therefore, it seems to me that to have discussion now on a motion which has not yet been accepted, a discussion that might last the full two hours, is unfair to some of us and to others who have proposals they would like to put before the committee. It is very clear that we cannot have all the discussion that we might want before the order becomes operative at 5:45 p.m.; but surely, just as the Leader of the Opposition has had an opportunity to put his amendment, I submit other hon. members should have a similar opportunity to put other amendments.

I think Your Honour should consider that you have called clause 1 and let such members as get the floor make any amendment they may wish to make. Then at some time before a quarter to six Your Honour can rule on the amendment now before the committee, and then at a quarter to six we can vote on all the amendments that are in order. I support the idea of Your Honour having time to consider this amendment, but I think that the rest of us should also have an opportunity to put amendments before the guillotine falls.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that there may be some very fine and meaningful amendments coming from hon. friends to my left, and we are always interested in such amendments. But we think that the amendment that has been moved is a major one, and while I do not want to inhibit my hon. friends I think we should have an opportunity to debate it. It may well be that we are persuasive enough to have the government first bring the Minister of Finance into the committee and then, having brought him in where he can listen to our arguments, be able to convince him that what we have suggested is reasonable. Both of these would be major accomplishments and I do not know whether either of them will take place; but I would not like to see the motion left so there is no opportunity to debate it.

In my view we should debate the amendment now. I do not think that the matter will take very long. It is a simple amendment and a decision can be made on it if Your Honour holds that it is in order. I think our debate on the amendment should commence now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Peace River was quite correct in assuming that in part I was speaking for myself and my colleagues in suggesting that we have other amendments to move. But I also know that my hon. friends in the Social Credit party have been waiting for days on end for a chance to move an amendment to section 8, which is one of the sections within clause 1. I do not think it would be fair if the remaining 105 minutes were used to debate one subject only when there are other subjects that hon. members would like to put before the committee in time for them to be put to a vote.

The Leader of the Opposition has achieved his main purpose: he has presented this amendment. The next hurdle is to get Your Honour to accept it. Then the final hurdle, of course, is to get it voted on at a quarter to six. However, surely other members should have the same opportunity to move amendments.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I fear that we are treading on very dangerous ground. There is no question about the importance of the motion moved by the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party, but if the Chair does not take a decision very soon and if we were to consider the motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to the effect that his motion be discussed even it has been ruled out of order, this would mean that the House assumes that we believe the amendment is valid. Mr. Chairman, if this motion were to be considered acceptable after one or two hours of discussion, this would mean that all other members would have lost this time during which they could have moved other amendments.

And, as the previous speaker said, we do hope, by 5:45, to be able to submit an amendment allowing workers to deduct the cost of their equipment and other expenses for income tax purposes. We consider such an amendment to be extremely important and I feel that our arguments in this regard would hold water just as well as those of the Progressive Conservatives in favour of their amendment.

That, Mr. Chairman, is why we hope you will render a ruling as early as possible, to avoid our getting onto a slippery slope which would make us waste time.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to amendments being put, but since this party, as it usually does, has taken the proper initiative in moving the amendment I feel we should not be deprived of an opportunity of debating it. It might be that other hon. members will have an opportunity to put their amendments, and we are not trying to inhibit them. But we do feel that there should be an opportunity for us, having moved the amendment, to debate it. I do not know what sort of time Your Honour has in mind before arriving at a decision, but I should like to think that in no later than three-quarters of an hour we should have an opportunity to continue the debate.

In the meantime, other hon. members might speak to any amendments they have, allowing a 20-minute limit in each case. Then possibly we can come back and debate the amendment that has been put. I understand that the other opposition parties would like to have on the record amendments that will not be chopped off at a quarter to six, and I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I think we have reached a happy resolution of what might have been an impasse. If Your Honour assumes that you have called clause 1 of the bill, then your next course is to see speakers in whatever order you choose to call them. If, when members of the Official Opposition are called, they wish to speak to their amendments, they should be allowed to do so. If I wish to speak to some other part of clause 1 and to move an amendment, and if my hon. friend for Lotbinière or one of his colleagues wishes to do the same, then I think that should be allowed. It seems to me that the suggestion that has come out of the discussion does resolve the situation.

Mr. Baldwin: And without any help from the government.

The Chairman: I think hon. members have resolved the situation and, without binding my colleague who may take the chair later, I do not see any difficulty. I think we should proceed.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am now asking for the floor to take part in the debate, not to continue the discussion on the procedural point.

As hon. members are aware, we are getting to the end of committee of the whole discussion on Bill C-259. I think it is unfortunate that there will be so many sections within clause 1 and so many other clauses of the bill which will not be discussed at all before we are called upon to vote on them.

In addition to all the remaining sections within clause 1 and all the other clauses—about 72 of them, covering 100 pages—there are many amendments which have been moved by the Minister of National Revenue and other ministers, so that we really have a tremendous package to deal with at 5.45. It will be interesting to watch the voting on those questions because there will not even be an opportunity for a question to be asked concerning what the various amendments might mean. This is very unfortunate. This, of course, is one of the reasons we opposed the imposition of closure at this stage. However, I must not use all the time there is in complaining too much about that matter when there are a few things I would particularly like to say.

Clause 1 of the bill which we are now discussing includes, in lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, a pretty general statement. It provides:

> An income tax shall be paid as hereinafter required upon the taxable income for each taxation year of every person resident in Canada at any time in the year.

So with those words as an introduction to this 596-page clause it would look as though one could talk about anything that is "hereinafter required." One of the requirements stipulated is the rate of taxation. That is found in some of the other sections in clause 1. We have had discussion about those rates and a vote or two on them. I regret there does not seem to be an opportunity to have a discussion on a related matter, namely, clause 3 of the bill. Clause 3 will not be reached because it is beyond page 596. It has to do with the proposal to abolish the collection of special taxes for old age security either from individuals or from corporations.

I wish we had had a chance to get to that clause so that we could discuss this matter. I mention it now because it seems to me it is related to the general rates of tax that will be imposed upon individuals and corporations. In other words, when that clause comes into effect there will no longer be a special tax, either on individuals or corporations, for old age security. Rather, the money for old age security will be obtained from general taxation. That in itself is a good move, which we welcome. We have long contended that a flat tax with a ceiling on it was regressive in nature, and we believe it is far better that the money to be put into the old age security fund should come out of the general sources of taxation. We believe this to be a more progressive basis than the other tax.

However, there is one point which concerns me. This is the reason I wish we had reached the clause, so that we could have had a statement from the government on it. I hope there will not be a tendency on the part of the government to say that the people of Canada will no longer be paying taxes for their old age security, because the language of clause 3 is clear, that there will not be a direct, earmarked tax but that the Minister of National Revenue will be asked to estimate each year how much would have been collected if that tax were in effect and recommend that that amount be taken out of general taxation and put into the old age security fund.

I should like to make the assertion that even though the imposition of taxes on individuals and corporations for old age security will not continue, the people of Canada both as individuals and corporations will still be paying taxes that go into the old age security fund and, among other things, that establishes their right to benefits under the Old Age Security Act. I note that although the government is prepared to cancel the direct income tax on individuals and corporations for old age security, it has kept in existence the most regressive tax of all, namely, the 3 per cent sales tax for old age security purposes.

Now, sir, this is ground for discussion. If the minister or someone should get the floor this afternoon and want to comment, I would be glad to listen to any such comment. As I say, I welcome the change but I do not want anyone to come around in a year or two and say that the people of Canada are no longer paying taxes for their old age pensions. They will be paying them all right, but in a different way and, indeed, perhaps in a more progressive way.

Among the many things we would like to have done something about is the question of the capital gains tax. The Leader of the Opposition this afternoon indicated that although he favoured the principle of a capital gains tax, he does not like the form in which it is set out in this bill. May I say that our party's position, which has been made clear a number of times, is that the capital gains tax principle does not go far enough.

We agree with the Leader of the Opposition that special consideration should be given to the application of the capital gains tax to farmers, and my colleague, the hon. member for Regina East, has presented an amendment that would deal with that aspect of the matter if it were passed by the committee at 5.45. But apart from that, it is our view that it is grossly unfair and it is a form of discrimination and inequality to say to the industrial worker who struggles in a factory, or to the professional worker who works at his calling, that all the money he earns is taxable income, but to say to persons who enjoy capital gains that only half of it is income for taxation purposes. We think that anomaly should be corrected.

We are all for the kind of protection farmers have sought and the other improvements which perhaps should be made, but so far as the basic principle is concerned we feel the entire amount of a capital gain, wherever a capital gain is taxable, should be considered as the taxpayer's capital gain. In a moment I should like to present an amendment to that effect. But just as the Minister of National Revenue has presented not one amendment at a time but 50 and 95, and other ministers have done the same, I have two amendments and perhaps I might present both now—I was going to say, in order to avoid the necessity of my getting up again but perhaps I should do it now in case I do not get both amendments in before a quarter to six.

My second amendment has to do with the special exemptions given to periodicals like Time magazine and Reader's Digest. There is a section in this bill which grants them concessions, and we think it ought to be deleted. There is no time for the kind of argument that we would like to develop, and it would not be fair to my friends to the left and to the rest to take more time. Therefore, may I present these two amendments so that, like the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition, they may be put to the committee and voted upon at 5.45 p.m. My first amendment reads:

• (4:10 p.m.)

That Bill C-259 be amended at page 97 by deleting the phrase "½ of" from line 4 and also by deleting the phrase "½ of" from line 9.

That would be an amendment to section 38 of clause 1. Section 38 is the one which says that the tax on a capital gain is one half of the capital gain. We would like to delete the phrase "½ of" so that when a person has a taxable gain as defined elsewhere in the act, the whole amount is taxable income just as is the whole amount in the case of an industrial or professional worker. The other amendment that I wish to present is:

That section 19 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill be amended by striking out subsection (2) on pages 58 and 59.

That is the part of the bill that would provide certain exemptions for magazines such as Time and Reader's Digest. This is an amendment to section 19 of clause 1. I place these two amendments before you, Mr. Chairman, hoping that these two issues as well as others that are outstanding can be voted upon when we reach that point at 5.45 p.m.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the Chair might take these two amendments under advisement in order to consider them. I maintain that both amendments are out of order in that both tend to increase taxes.

The Deputy Chairman: While it was the intention of the Chair to suggest to the committee that the two amendments be taken into consideration, I was trying at the same time to locate them. I found one, but as to the other I have only an indication of the pages involved. I think the best procedure would be to take a moment to examine the implications of the amendments that have been put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am sure hon. members will wish to co-operate with the Chair in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to support the proposals made a few weeks ago on section 8 by the hon. members who spoke before me. The publicity surrounding this bill and alleging that we were faced with a tax reform entails a thorough consideration of this section and its effects.

It is obvious that this legislation provides for tax deductions, but it is not certain that these changes are really valid. I, for one, think that the advantages of the legislation are very limited as compared with its disadvantages.

For example, when we see that the legislation in force as well as the bill under consideration recognize the right of contractors, salesmen, lawyers and doctors, to deduct the cost of their machinery, equipment or other expenses incurred in the exercise of their activities, whilst the government proposes to limit the amount deductible by workers to $150 per year or 3 per cent of their income whichever is the lesser, we maintain that there is an anomaly somewhere.

The only obvious conclusion which we can draw is that lumberjacks, mechanics and construction workers, for example, have been discriminated against and, in short, there is a flagrant injustice towards the majority of Canadian workers.

I acknowledge that the amount of $150 would cover part of the expenses incurred by some workers, but these are very few. In fact, it is not an amount which is granted to the workers, since its deduction is allowed. Actually, it represents some $20 to $25 per year.

Mr. Chairman, if this is not a mockery of the worker and his efforts, I wonder how we can describe this attitude. The minister has probably not thought of it, which is normal when one considers how busy he is. It is also possible that the officials who drafted the bill are spoiled kids who have entered the public service because of the protection they enjoyed, guys who think that they know it all and do not realize that other citizens contribute to the progress of this country and to the increase in Canadian production.

I think it is quite possible that those officials who have never seen anything but the streets of Ottawa and the beaches of Florida might have forgotten the working classes. This is why I say that an allowance of $150 per year is not much for the employee of the forest industry who has to drive 40 to 50 miles a day to and from his work. The $150 allowance does not even cover half the cost of registration of the car or small truck he could not do without.

Mr. Chairman, there are also those who have to drive 50 to 100 miles on the weekend and who must pay transportation expenses as well as for the purchase and maintenance of chain saws. Again, it is obvious in this case that the $20 tax deduction is far from the actual amount they will have to pay.

Also the construction workers who on top of their travelling expenses must buy equipment that can cost up to $1,000 in certain cases and that needs to be replaced and repaired.

Everybody knows that the workers have to travel more than they ever did. The jobs are less and less permanent. Sometimes a great number of workers have to travel in order to follow their bosses. Contractors from Trois-Rivières get contracts in Quebec City and bring workers there who must travel every weekend. Contractors from all areas get contracts outside of their territory and if the workers want to keep their jobs they myst follow their boss and often pay the costs.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, for a Parliament member earning $26,000 per year, public accounts for the year 1970 show expense accounts of $4,000, $5,000 and even $6,000. A member who lives near Parliament has a smaller account, another who lives farther a bigger one. Everybody agrees with that. I repeat: It is strange indeed that in the case of a worker earning only $6,000 or $7,000 per year, Bill C-259 should provide for a deduction of $150 only, while in the case of a member earning $26,000, the deduction for expenses may amount to $6,000.

Mr. Chairman, this government has been in power for three and a half years and the people have been waiting for three and a half years for the establishment of a just society. I think that certain proposals will have to be taken into consideration if we want to come up with more than $20 a year for the workers' expenses.

As regards mechanics, the implementation of section 8 of Bill C-259 is also discriminatory if we compare it with the method applied for dentists, doctors and all other professionals.

It is ridiculous to offer a $150 deduction per year to mechanics.

We all have friends who are mechanics. Everybody knows that the mechanic who has to buy a complete set of tools must pay $1,400 or $1,500 for it. We also know that some tools must be replaced and in spite of depreciation the value of those tools is always between $1,200 and $1,500.

I am entirely in favour of permitting doctors, lawyers and other professionals to deduct the cost of replacement of their equipment as well as other expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties. However, I am convinced that the same treatment should be granted workers in the fields of forestry, construction and automobile.

The government allows substantial deductions to groups of persons who complete their tax returns according to their conscience. When it comes to taxation, however, some people slip their conscience into their pocket, under their handkerchief.

Mr. Chairman, whenever I consult my lawyer and obtain some advice allowing me to do good business, I am satisfied. I am ready to give him $15 or $20. I pay cash and do not ask for a receipt. And when my wife and other members of my family go to the dentist, the same thing happens.

If my son or my daughter has a toothache, I spend $10 to help him or her sleep soundly and the whole family is happy. The deal is good, the $10 bill is handed over and no receipt is asked for.

Indeed the government does not know how much these people earn each year; nonetheless, it acknowledges all their expenses. Today, by proposing an across-the-board amount of $150 as employment expenses for the worker, the government recognizes that there is discrimination between wage-earners and professionals. Finally the government has recognized the existence of a problem and has tried to do something about it. Unfortunately, it has followed its usual bureaucratic method and has adopted a standard exemption, casting everybody in the same mould. The same exemption will be allowed to the employee who needs only a ball-point pen while certain workers in the building industry must buy $500 to $1,000 worth of tools.

I think it is an appropriate opportunity for the government to decide to eliminate this inequity already tolerated for too long. This inequity is recognized but still no concern is shown for the work-man who invariably comes last.

I wonder for how many years we will have to protest in the House and outside so that justice prevail and laws be identical for all taxpayers. When shall we stop passing special laws? In the case of the auto workers, when the owner of a repair shop buys the very same tools he is allowed to deduct the depreciation from his income along with the cost of replacing and repairing them while the workman is imposed a $150 limit or 3 per cent of his income, whichever is the lesser.

Mr. Chairman, the remarks I am making today are based on experience since I worked as a lumberjack and a carpenter before my two years as manager of a company in the building trade. I have witnessed hundreds of those inequities, always at the workman's disadvantage.

It will be argued that by allowing the workers to deduct expenses incurred in their trade, the application of the legislation would be difficult and costly, but I consider this a very weak argument. We could ask ourselves why its application would be more difficult for workers than for professionals. I believe its implementation is easier for workers than for professionals.

In the case of wage earners, the department knows exactly how much they make, while it does not even know the income of professionals or others. Very often, expenses that are in no way related to the nature of the business are claimed by the taxpayer as deductions.

Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to find out how many wives of professionals, industrialists, merchants have the advantage of using a car whose depreciation costs are claimed by the business or businesses the husband owns. How many expenses are deducted for business trips which are in fact only pleasure trips! I could go on giving similar instances for a long time.

Mr. Speaker, we should return to facts and stop being so stingy with workers. We have been hearing about a thorough fiscal reform, but now is the time, I feel, to make a thorough job of it so that the law may be the same for all.

Therefore, I move, supported by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That section 8(1) of clause 1 be amended by substituting, in line 25, the word "all" for the words "such of", by deleting the word "following" in line 26 and by adding after the word "source", in line 27, the words "with supporting papers".

Mr. Chairman, the adoption of this amendment will allow the Canadian taxpayer to do with his expense account what he does now with receipts for charitable donations. This amendment would make it possible for the taxpayer which has very few expenses to avail himself of the deduction of $150 or of 3 per cent and those who will claim the deduction for greater expenses will be treated according to their tax returns and supporting evidence.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair wishes to ask leave to consider the amendment moved by the hon. member, especially in order to understand correctly the meaning of the amendment and to be able to take a better decision concerning its receivability. Therefore I intend to take as soon as possible a decision concerning the three amendments the House is discussing now which are the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the amendment that has just been moved by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin). [English]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on just a couple of points. In last night's Hansard, at pages 10246 and 10247 there is reference to clause 57. I believe that should be clause 57.1 dealing with co-operative corporations, rather than clause 57 which deals with personal corporations. I would request a correction to that effect.

While I am on my feet in this regard, there was an amendment by the hon. member for Moose Jaw on section 8(1)(e) dealing with railwaymen and their expenses. The government subsequently introduced an amendment to carry out the effect of his amendment. I understand that the hon. member is in agreement with it and that his amendment is to be withdrawn, if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That statement is correct. Therefore, on behalf of the hon. member for Moose Jaw I ask that his amendment be withdrawn in favour of the one introduced by the government.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Moose Jaw to withdraw his amendment to section 8?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Skoberg) withdrawn.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to support the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition. It gives force to the reasons that I expressed earlier this week and several times last week as to why passage of the bill should be deferred. We have gone over this time and time again. I want to add a further reason which has to do particularly with hon. members who come from the province of Quebec. This refers to the result of the elimination of the estate tax.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I am told by representatives of the Society of Notaries that practically every will which includes the term "subject to the federal law" will have to be changed and that they do not know in what sense precisely. In the same way, if a will contains the term "subject to the provincial law" changes will have to be made and, again, they do not know in what way. Until there is agreement between the federal government and each province as to the impact of its succession duty, it is merely compounding confusion to insist upon passing this bill and its provisions dealing with repeal of the estate tax. The federal government has no right to tell the provinces to conform, but that is precisely what the provision we will vote on today is telling them—"Come to heel or else you will be responsible for any mess".

The provinces have equal jurisdiction with the federal government, but the federal government is insisting that the law come into effect on January 1. I say it has no more right to do this than has the province of Ontario to insist that the government of Canada amend the law to conform with theirs. They have the right to levy personal and corporate taxes. The provinces have rights with regard to the levying of succession duties, but by agreement only which expires in 1972. The federal government has offered to collect this income tax based on a uniform tax law in the provinces, and eight provinces have agreed. Ontario has farmed out the collection of personal income tax to the federal government but collects its own corporate tax.

The province of Quebec collects its own personal income tax and corporate income tax. Ontario collects its own succession duties, as does the province of Quebec. British Columbia has moved into the field of succession duties, 75 per cent, and all the other provinces which have a succession duty can get 75 per cent of the proceeds of estate tax under redistribution by agreement and they do not levy their succession duties. That is the way to get accord.

Mr. Chairman, today this government is asking members to tell the provinces, "We don't care a hoot about you. Come to heel and conform to this act". Most of the corporations of Canada are located in Ontario and Quebec, but neither province is in a position to amend its Corporation Tax Act nor to conform with this act. Of course, they may not want to amend and they have a perfect right not to. In this time of economic difficulty all we get are cracklings from the Prime Minister and other ministers to the effect that they are doing all they can to help the economy recover. But it is a backdoor approach. If any hon. member feels that he has greater wisdom than members on this side, let him undertake to operate a corporation in Ontario or Quebec as successfully as it should be operated.

Mr. Jamieson: I will take that on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With two tax systems that operate on different principles? I invite the Minister of Transport to operate them as successfully as it should be done, under two separate systems of taxation and even fundamental differences in principle. If the minister thinks that the office of Minister of Transport is sometimes difficult, I suggest that he would go straight up the wall and through the roof as a result of trying to operate such a business. Yet this is what the government is compelling businessmen in Ontario and Quebec to do. I wonder at the gall, the unmitigated arrogance displayed in that attitude. It is not just a question of trying to override the opposition because they have greater muscle. Just who do they think they are trying to overcome?

Mr. Chairman, those idle cracklings that come out of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Osler: We have heard this speech ten times.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Sometimes in order to get through a thick skull one has to repeat, and I am telling the Minister of Agriculture, who in fact has one of the thickest skulls in this House—

Mr. Olson: I am not even close to it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He showed that on Bill C-176.

An hon. Member: Smile, Marcel.

Mr. Paproski: Sock it to them, Marcel.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The government's insistence on this particular point is not acceptable to the Canadian public. Whom do they think they are trying to overcome? Whom do they think they are trying to smother but the Canadian taxpayers? They are the people who are affected.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Why do not the parliamentary secretary and others over there read the editorials in their friendly newspaper, the Winnipeg Free Press? Let the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre read the editorial of December 2 and then go and hide in shame. And the Vancouver Sun, another newspaper that is friendly to the government—

Mr. Jamieson: With friends like that, who needs enemies?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Minister of Transport asks, "With that kind of friend, who needs enemies?" The Vancouver Sun? We will remember that remark in due course, and I hope the Sun will too. The Winnipeg Free Press, the Vancouver Province, the Globe and Mail—

An hon. Member: How about the Montreal Star?

Mr. Mahoney: That is a real Liberal rag, the Globe and Mail!

An hon. Member: The Toronto Star?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I'll tell you about the Toronto Star. The Toronto Star kneels in adoration at its own altar. It bows before its own image.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about the Montreal Star?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister mentions the Montreal Star. Does he think it is friendly to the government on this bill?

Mr. Paproski: What about the Montreal Gazette?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Take whatever little comfort you may from any of these newspapers.

Mr. Baldwin: How many votes have they got?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How many editors across this country are in favour of the guillotine cutting off debate on this bill?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have made my point. We have repeated this argument. The facts are there, and the people will remember. The other day I brought forward an amendment to section 3 with regard to the capital gains tax affecting farmlands. At that time, for purposes of greater clarity and certainty, I ought to have brought forward a companion amendment to section 39. Therefore, to make sure that there is consistency in the stand that we have taken on section 3 with regard to farmlands disposed of for continuing farming purposes, I wish to move an amendment to section 39 as follows:

That section 39 of clause 1 be amended by:

(1) deleting in paragraph (a) the word "and" in line 33 at page 97 and substituting therefor the word "or" and

(2) adding immediately thereafter the following:

(iv) land used in farming as defined in this act and to be used for continuing farming and

(3) deleting in paragraph (b) in line 13 at page 98 the words "or (iii)" and substituting therefor "(iii) or (iv)".

It is difficult to draft these amendments because the original provision is extremely complex. However, I think the purport of the amendment is clear.

My third point is this. The other night we embarked on an extensive discussion on section 239(2) which deals with the indictment procedure. That procedure may be invoked at the election of the Attorney General of Canada. Since the government's position needs clarifying, I have moved an amendment. That amendment, in this case to section 235, says that there shall not be a penalty under any regulation that is made retroactively under section 221(2). In case the Minister of Justice wishes clarification, let me say that section 221(2) provides that a regulation shall not be effective until it shall have been published in the Canada Gazette, but if it is so stated in the regulations it can have a retroactive effect prior to the date of publication. I do not want there to be a penalty with regard to the period between the so-called effective date and the date of publication. There are many things wrong with the principle of having offences created under a regulation that has not been published because it will not be known that such an offence exists. My amendment to section 235 seeks to correct this. I agree that a regulation can have retroactive effect, but I do not agree that there shall be any penalty thereunder.

I should like to know the government's position on section 239(2), bearing in mind the amendment I have moved. I know that certain members of the government expressed reservations, as I did, about the justice of allowing a minister of the Crown, even on the basis of incontrovertible facts put before him by the Minister of National Revenue, to say that a man shall go to jail. Under section 243 the court has no right to suspend sentence. I do not believe that any minister of the Crown has that right. I do not believe that he has the right to decide that a man shall go to jail. It is for the court to decide whether a man shall go to jail and, surely, not for a minister, a deputy minister or a director of prosecutions.

In no circumstances must we have that law in Canada. There can be adequate provision as to the sentence to be imposed by the court, and that shall be subject to appeal. Surely to goodness there should not in these cases be proceedings by way of indictment, especially since the finding of the court may indicate a considerably lesser offence than that charged in the information. For instance, a man may be charged with defrauding the Crown of a quarter of a million dollars and it may turn out that the amount is only $2,000. Yet because of the indictment procedure the man must go to jail. There is no relief; there can be no suspended sentence under section 243. This procedure may be invoked at the election of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Woolliams: I never heard of such nonsense in any bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, while awaiting for His Honour to make a decision on the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition—and I am sure that sweet reason will compel him to decide in favour of the validity of the amendment—I wish to make a few comments on that amendment. On dirty Wednesday of last week the government, through its infamous closure measure, brought about a situation under which in a few minutes we shall be compelled to cease and desist from further discussion and debate on this bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I thought I heard hon. members on the other side say that they are in favour of closure. They do not need to say that; we know it.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you all.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, closure of debate on this bill—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth rises on a question of privilege.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Gibson: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. With the greatest respect, I submit it is not right to call this closure when it is time allocation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Baldwin: When I look at this bill I am reminded of the phrase "For whom the bill tolls". It tolls for members opposite, members on this side and all the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Benson: With the reductions!

Mr. Baldwin: We have been attempting to secure an equitable arrangement so that those parts of the bill which are necessary to provide stimulation of the economy will become law without further delay. The complex and difficult measures which the Minister of Finance and his officials do not understand should await careful deliberation before becoming law. We have the imposition of closure in an even more insidious way. If the member for Hamilton-Wentworth wishes, we can get into a debate on that point. If this were really closure a motion would have to be moved in respect of every section. This is a much more infamous way of dealing with it. We have been deprived of debating these measures. This is why rule 75C was invoked rather than the more moderate closure measure rule which any normal government would have invoked. Because of this closure there is no opportunity for reasonable debate and discussion on many of the sections.

Do hon. members know that we have passed between 115 and 120 sections? There are still over 200 sections and subsections to be passed. There has been casual discussion on them but not the kind of debate which is essential on such an important matter. This infamous conduct on the part of the government makes it all the more necessary to suspend the operation of those parts of the bill to which my leader referred in the speech he made earlier today. Members opposite say that we have had discussion. We want more than discussion, Mr. Chairman; we want discussion leading to change. There are some parts of the bill which do not need change. We admit that. We are reasonable people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benson: Why did your members not attend the committee?

Mr. Baldwin: There are many sections which need change. The proof of that is in the fact that day after day amendments were brought forward by the government. I challenge the genial Minister of Finance to stand in his place now and deny that during the next session the government will be introducing substantial amendments to the Income Tax Act. I am prepared to yield to the minister if he will accept my challenge. His refusal to accept it is proof that what I have said is correct.

I call as a witness one of the minister's colleagues, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has a bill before the House in respect of the competition act. He is now engaged in chewing it up piece by piece, trying to explain away the fact that the bill will not be proceeded with in this session. He has made so many speeches that it is hard to keep up with him, but in a speech to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Montreal on November 30 he said:

> We have developed new techniques for the introduction of the legislation, by inviting the co-operation of the people with the practical knowledge and experience to make their own studies of the proposals and to put forward their view—
>
> Surely, this is the responsible and appropriate way to approach legislation so fundamental to our economic life as the competition act.

For that I substitute "the amendments to the Income Tax Act."

> And an approach consistent with producing sound legislation. To the extent that we can draw on the views of businessmen from the different sectors of the economy—

I think he said something different when the labour people were before him. I think he substituted "labour people" for "businessmen."

> —that we are able to understand, and thus take account of, the particular needs of the many diverse and often conflicting elements that make up the Canadian economy—

I know that members opposite say that we have had a lot of discussion. Of course we have, as we must have discussion on matters so intrinsically important as this. We are not now dealing with the original discussion, the white paper or the original royal commission report; we are dealing with a bill which only came into our possession at the beginning of September.

Mr. Benson: July 12. You were not here all summer.

Mr. Baldwin: I was here throughout most of July. It is necessary to have a watchdog here to keep check on this government. I was here but I did not see this bill until after this session began.

Mr. Benson: You need a new secretary.

Mr. Baldwin: I have every reason to suspect it was probably leaked to me then.

Mr. Hogarth: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, when I am finished. I have a lot to say and little time in which to say it. That is what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had to say. It is not the way this bill has been rammed through this House. I suggest to hon. members and to the people of Canada that there is coming shortly a day of retribution. The Minister of Finance, his parliamentary secretary, all the members of the government and their supporters will have to answer to the taxpayers at the polls at the next election. That is the day they fear; that is the day they dread. I suggest that they now give thought to this last opportunity presented by the Leader of the Opposition and support his motion.

Only yesterday the government proposed very substantial amendments with regard to co-operatives and credit unions. The night before, as a result of proposals of this party, the government took into account some very cogent and reasonable arguments we made with regard to the administrative clauses. During the reasonably short debate on this bill, 135 or 140 amendments have been introduced by the government. Surely it is common sense to suspend the operation of these more difficult sections until there has been further opportunity for consideration. How is it possible for the tax experts, lawyers, accountants and their advisers, as well as the advisers of officials and corporations, to competently and intelligently advise their clients, the taxpayers of this country, where they stand? I doubt if many of the ministers' advisers can do so. If so, they have not discharged their function. Certainly the minister and his parliamentary secretary do not understand them as well as they should.

In light of the amendments which have been introduced, and the fact the minister has not denied that he will be introducing a host of amendments in the next session, we have one of two ways in which to look at this matter. Either the government introduced the bill knowing it would be changed, which is both hypocritical and fraudulent—and this government excels in both of those characteristics—or they introduced the bill without being aware of its meaning and effect, which is plain stupid and indicates both administrative and parliamentary incompetence. I do not know on which pan of the scale to lay it. I think that in large measure it consists of both fraudulence and hypocrisy, and stupidity and incompetence.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Hogarth: Watch your language.

Mr. Baldwin: When the government introduces amendments on the scale it has done, how can its members have the unmitigated gall to say to the country, "Please pass this bill. We want it through. We want every part of it and we are not prepared to accede to the reasonable request of the Leader of the Opposition." It shatters my faith in the government, what little faith I have left. Talking of shattering, I address this question to the minister: What shattering tragedy would come about if he were to accept the amendment offered by my leader? If it lies within the scope of the mind of man to devise a monstrosity like this bill, the same mind should be able to change it, to adapt it to cover the requirements of the amendment moved by my hon. friend.

There is another aspect. We are aware of the experience in the United Kingdom. Some years ago they introduced there, not a massive bill of the kind before us, one which is well called the "First Book of Ben," but a relatively short bill providing for a capital gains tax. I was in Britain not long ago. I talked with some of the officials there and they told me the measure had given rise to one of the most vexing administrative problems their competent and experienced staff had ever been called upon to face, namely, the integration of the new capital gains tax into the existing tax structure.

However, the government of Canada is not satisfied with this. They are providing for other changes as well. All the preponderance of convenience rests with us with regard to changes we have proposed. I know the answer may well be that any more delay will result in further uncertainty. But how much more uncertainty could there be than the uncertainty which presently perplexes the business community? It will be many months, possibly many years before tax appeal decisions have been handed down on a great many of the point which are now in doubt. I shall be greatly surprised if within a year or two not less than 150 amendments are brought in to change the unworkable and iniquitous provisions of the bill before us.

I conclude by saying this. Taxes, like death, are very final. What we are seeing now is a form of fiscal euthanasia. It is a tax rip-off. It will place small business people, farmers and everybody else in a terrible predicament. I urge the minister to repent at the last minute, to stand up now and say; "I recognize the validity of the arguments which have been made. I respect the views of the Leader of the Opposition and I am prepared to accept his amendment." If he will do this, he will rise very sharply in my esteem. I shall now give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Hogarth: Would the hon. member permit a question? He said he did not get a copy of this bill until September. Did he ever write to the Minister of Finance and ask him to deliver one as soon as it was available?

Mr. Baldwin: No. I understand there is a distribution office here and when bills are left at the distribution office they are to go to members. The only reason I did not get the bill was that it did not go to the distribution office.

An hon. Member: You were not here.

The Chairman: If I might have the indulgence of the committee I should like to take a moment or two, in connection with the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition, to deal with the point of procedure which the Chair raised and which was ably argued by hon. members who assisted the Chair.

The Chair is of the opinion that in the circumstances in which we are operating today, that is to say, when an order of the House imposes a time limit upon debate, it would be exceedingly difficult for the Leader of the Opposition to redraft his amendment should it be found that it was necessary to do so in order to meet procedural difficulties which might arise.

I shall not take the time of the committee to deal in detail with a matter which touches on an important constitutional question, but the final words of the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition cause me some extra concern. I mention this so there may be no misunderstanding. I refer to the words "shall not come into force and have effect as law until a day to be fixed by a proclamation that shall be subjected to an affirmative resolution of the House of Commons." This seems to propose a new concept in the legislative process. It is very doubtful, to my way of thinking, whether any precedent could be found to support the proposition that an amendment to a financial bill can override the principle that an act passed by two Houses of Parliament cannot be nullified by a resolution of either House. That is fundamental.

Having made this observation, however, I do not consider it to be a question to be summarily dealt with by the Chairman of the committee of the whole at this time because of its important constitutional implications. I do not wish to deal with this aspect for the time being, because of the lack of time this afternoon and the attendant circumstances. In my opinion, the committee should be allowed to resolve the question and I shall accordingly put the amendment. Is it the wish of the committee that I read the amendment again?

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Whicher: I have listened for the last few minutes to my good friend, the hon. member for Peace River. He used a few words like "fraudulent" and "hypocritical" and actually applied them to me. Not only was the government guilty of fraud and hypocrisy, he said, but its supporters were fraudulent and hypocritical. That includes me.

Mr. Baldwin: Oh, no.

Mr. Whicher: May I respectfully point out that people in glass houses should never throw stones?

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, I would not for the world be guilty of using the words "fraudulent" and "hypocritical" in relation to members of this House. I said the government was hypocritical and fraudulent or else stupid and guilty of both administrative and parliamentary incompetence. Anyone who wants to extricate an adjective out of the last phrase can do so, but not the first.

Mr. Whicher: I think the hon. member probably said a few things which were not in his notes. However, I am glad to accept his apology. When the Carter commission was picked in 1962, the right hon. member for Prince Albert was meticulous in his choice. The commission was picked by a Tory government. Ever since the Carter commission brought in its report our friends have been running away from it as if it had a very bad case of diptheria. As far as any tax legislation and changes are concerned, since the Carter report there has been at least nine years' gestation, and even an elephant requires only two years. We could have developed a whole herd of elephants in Africa in the time it has taken to bring in tax changes in this country.

• (5:10 p.m.)

There are many good things in this bill. If the government is to be criticized at all, I think the criticism should be levelled at the fact that it is only now that we have taken a firm stand. In June, 1968, the government was picked by the people of Canada to govern. The reason hon. members on the government side are sitting where they are is that the people of Canada had confidence in them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: The reason opposition members are sitting where they are, and where they will remain for many years, is that the people have no confidence in them. Some people hum and haw about things for years, but it is high time hon. friends to my left understood that they lost the last election and that the government has a duty to govern. As a backbencher of the Liberal party I am glad the government has finally taken this initiative.

As I say, there are many good things in this bill. I think, for example, of the increased exemptions for all people in Canada. Approximately one million Canadians, once this bill is passed, will no longer pay tax as they have in the past. This is a bill of which we should all be proud. In addition, there are one million old age pensioners in Canada who, through the goodness of this government, are receiving benefits supplementary to the basic old age pension and who will no longer pay tax as a result of the provisions of this bill. I say that the Minister of Finance should stand up and take a bow.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: For years the mothers of Canada have complained not only to Conservative members but to all Members of Parliament that if they go out to work they have to employ a baby sitter to look after their family. There was no way they could get an exemption for the money thus expended. But now such a proposal is being implemented and I say that the mothers of Canada are proud of the government.

Furthermore, although our Tory friends have talked about implementing the capital gains tax, they are afraid to face the fact that it is only common sense that the man who makes half a million dollars on the stock market should be prepared to pay his just dues to society in the same way as if he is in receipt of a salary. Ninety-eight per cent of the people of Canada are in favour of a capital gains tax. Every western country supports such a tax, and they do so because it is a tax that is just and right. Our Tory friends who are sticking up for business interests do not have the gumption to stand up and say that a capital gains tax is a good thing.

It is true that this is a very large and comprehensive bill. It may also be true that there is no one in Canada who understands the entire bill. But that part of the legislation affecting 99 per cent of the people of Canada is very easy to understand and the people of Canada will appreciate it when it is passed and comes into effect on January 1 next. For too long have we been lead-swinging on the subject of tax legislation in this country. As far as I am concerned, the criticism that can be levelled at the government is that it did not take the initiative several months ago and do what it is now doing. The government was sent here to govern. The time for talk is passed; that is something hon. friends to my left should remember.

Periodically the Tories hold a convention and change their name. I remember when they were the good old Conservative party. Then they became the Progressive Conservative party. In view of the way they are acting on this bill, or were a couple of days ago, they should change their name to the retrogressive Conservative party—looking forward into the past and backward into the future. We need a constructive opposition in this chamber and the government does want to have a few members of the opposition back here after the next election. If the opposition would be a little more responsible, then at least some of them might get back here.

I have elaborated upon only four or five of the many good points in the bill. Lest my Tory friends think we are unwilling to face the electorate on this bill, let me tell them that we are willing to accept the gauntlet whenever the Prime Minister throws it down.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think I should take a few moments to comment on the amendments that were moved earlier when I was presiding over the deliberations of the committee. I wish to inform hon. members that I have considered the three amendments that have been put on sections 38 and 19 by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and on section 8 by the hon. member for Portneuf. Although I still have strong reservations, particularly about one of them, and about the procedural acceptability of amendments to sections 38 and 8, as has already been mentioned by the Chairman of the committee I feel that the Chair should not at this time, in view of the exceptional circumstances and the limited time for debate, take the time of the committee to try to resolve the procedural problem presented by these three amendments.

I am sure hon. members will understand the difficulty that the Chair is facing and thus will not object to the question being put on these three amendments so that the committee can resolve them by voting on them. At the same time, I wish to add that this should not in any way be regarded as a precedent to be followed under more normal circumstances. I intend to put the three amendments at this time to the committee, unless there is objection.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

As I have just said—and I want to point this out particularly to the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin)—I have examined the three amendments—including that of the hon. member for Portneuf—which have been proposed on section 8. The Chair does not want to take valuable time from the committee to discuss a matter of procedure relating to these amendments. This does not mean, however, that under normal circumstances the Chair would accept those amendments, as there really is a problem there. But for the present, considering the debate is to end in a few minutes, I will officially introduce those three amendments to the House.

[English]

It is moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

That Bill C-259 be amended at page 97 by deleting the phrase "½ of" from line 4, and also by deleting the phrase "½ of" from line 9.

It is also moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

That section 19 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill be amended by striking out subsection (2) on pages 58 and 59.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) moves:

That section 8(1) of clause 1 be amended by substituting, in line 25, the word "all" for the words "such of", by deleting the word "following" in line 26, and by adding after the word "source", in line 27, the words "with supporting papers".

[English]

Order. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Bellechasse.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment moved by my colleague from Portneuf (Mr. Godin), I believe that this is probably the last opportunity I shall have of speaking during the debate in committee of the whole on Bill C-259, because the government—contrary to the wishes of all opposition parties and consequently of the majority of the Canadian people which they represent—has decided unilaterally to put an end to the debate on a subject that is nevertheless very important since it will affect for many years to come the taxation system applicable to millions of individuals and thousands of corporations.

Once again I say that the party in power is the only one that can assume responsibility for this unfortunate decision, and it will have to attempt to explain to the people of Canada why it has compelled the legislators to vote in a few hours on a great many sections of this bill which are still remaining and some of which are nevertheless most important.

I quite agree on the need for a total tax reform to correct, among other things, some intolerable situations that in many cases had become obvious display of iniquity and frustration.

If I can support without any hesitation many provisions of the bill before us, I must also say that I can't do the same in connection with several others which seems to me completely inappropriate.

Thus, I felt it my duty to fight vigorously the notion of employed capital which was proposed as the main method of computing the co-operatives' taxable income. In this regard, I am very happy that the government has finally agreed to give more flexibility to its initial position and to delete this most controversial aspect.

There is however another point of prime importance which I must discuss. Indeed, I have objected since the beginning to section 8 (1) (a) which limits the employment expenses deductible from earnings from that employment. I really cannot see why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) establishes an arbitrary maximum of 3 per cent or $150. It seems illogical to me not to grant the thousands of taxpayers who use the T-1 short income tax return the same rights and privileges from which other classes of taxpayers benefit, including professionals of every category.

I think the government should take account of all the types of workers whose tools and travelling expenses eat up a substantial part of their modest income. Let us take for example a mechanic or a carpenter who, even before beginning to make a profit, must spend several hundred dollars for basic equipment or tools to which will be progressively added some quite costly implements many of which must regularly be replaced.

The same applies to the logger who in addition to being away from his family for weeks must bear heavy travelling expenses and considerable expenses for the purchase, maintenance and replacements of the essential tools of his trade.

As for travelling expenses, it seems to me entirely normal that they be deducted from taxable income, taking into account however such restrictions as a reasonable daily or weekly commuting distance. Let us consider, among others, the thousands of employees of the private and public transportation systems—railways workers, truckers, etc.—who are compelled to eat most of their meals away from home; as a result, they incur additional expenses for food and in some cases also, for lodging, both of which are basic individual needs and therefore lead to unavoidable expenses.

The government should therefore allow, in computing the taxable income, that those additional expenses directly related to such employment be taken into account.

Finally, I shall bring up another case in support of this proposal; the case of miners who, because the closing down of mines operating in an area close to their homes, must henceforth earn their livelihood at locations sometimes pretty far from their main residence, resulting either in major weekly, bi-montly or monthly travelling expenses, added to the expenses of setting up a secondary residence or, alternately, in a decision to move the whole family which involves, over and above disruption of the individuals social environment, the quite substantial material costs of actual moving expenses.

Mr. Chairman, I am not inventing those facts; they are real problems which hundreds of miners must face in Abitibi. We are actually witnessing in this area a constant shift of the Timmins-Rouyn-Noranda-Malartic-Val d'Or mining operations toward new development centres of mining explorations always located more to the north, hence the newly created towns of Matagami, Chibougamau and Chapais. These problems of regional economy, which directly affect the mobility of miners, are not only in this outlying Quebec area. I am convinced that other provinces are at grips with this type of difficulties. Those are, of course, very complex problems which the government, unfortunately, seems to overlook in its tax reform legislation.

I therefore ask the Minister of Finance to kindly reconsider seriously section 8(1)(a), that all types of workers might in the future deduct from their taxable income all expenses related directly to their work. The government owes it to itself to meet the needs and aspirations of all Canadian workers, and not only of various groups of professionals who already benefit from the advantages we request. The government cannot, in all honesty, treat individuals differently, according to their social status or occupation. The contribution of every worker, regardless of his trade or occupation, is important to the community and constitutes an essential part, an important fraction of a whole called the "collective effort" of society. It is therefore here and now, more than ever, that the Liberal slogan of the "just society" should be put into practice. The concept of equality of citizens in matters of taxation should also be recognized in the section of the bill dealing with deductions applicable. Otherwise, the general principle of tax equity underlying the bill before us will be defeated.

It is not a question here of claiming rights or privileges for a small group of citizens. It is rather a matter of including a general provision of which all workers could avail themselves and which would affect them more directly.

For instance, according to Statistics Canada, the number of workers in logging in 1969, was estimated at 64,900 and that of construction workers at 377,200. Those are two classes of workers who would benefit from our proposal. Construction workers only represented, in August 1971, about 6.8 per cent of Canada's labour force. If we add all the other groups of workers already mentioned, we find that they represent a very substantial part of the total labour force, which shows the importance of protecting them as much as the other citizens who benefit from a different tax treatment as regards deductions and who have nevertheless a substantially higher income than the workers affected by the proposal before us now.

Finally Mr. Chairman, while deploring the insanity of the coercion climate in which the debate on Bill C-259 is to come to a close, I should like to ask all my colleagues who are really concerned about respect for the fiscal equity principle and whom the arguments I stated may have influenced, to support unreservedly the amendment presented today by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin).

This amendment would include in the deductible elements of income all expenses directly related to the work of the individual whose transportation expenses exceed some limit to be set by regulations made under the legislation. We must consider that this amendment could, among other things, grant construction workers, lumbermen and mechanics the right to deduct from their income their various moving expenses and the cost of purchasing, maintaining and replacing their tools.

In the final analysis, such a provision would only bring about a higher degree of justice, since besides the classes of workers abovementioned and which would be the more affected, this proposal could also be applied, it need be, to all the groups of workers in our society who must incur large expenses in the practice of their main trade.

Therefore I believe that all the classes of workers I have mentioned largely contribute to build up and maintain many things that benefit the whole society.

If a husband and father leaves his family for weeks or months to work hundreds of miles away from his home, for instance to supervise the construction of a hospital or take part in the extraction of our natural resources, often in difficult and sometimes inhuman conditions, he deserves the same benefits granted to others able to earn larger sums of money in much better conditions.

After the government introduced amendments to the sections concerning the co-operatives, Caisses populaires and credit unions, several hon. members discovered their call was to defend such institutions, whereas at the start of the debate they were completely mute. This is the time to speak up for the Canadian workers to whom justice is not rendered under Bill C-259. All hon. members who belatedly took position on sections 136 and 137 must now have the courage to support the amendment.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: I apologize to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants but I think at this time I should revise the procedure regarding the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West. I am informed that this amendment has not been formally put to the committee so I will put it at this time. It was moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West:

That subsection 39 of clause 1 be amended by: (1) deleting in paragraph (a) the word "and" in line 33 at page 97 and substituting therefor the word "or" and (2) adding immediately thereafter the following: "(iv) land used in farming as defined in this act and to be used for continuing farming". (3) deleting in paragraph (b) in line 13 at page 98 the words "or (iii)" and substituting therefor ", (iii) or (iv)"

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, we have four minutes before the vote and we have agreed to share that time equally with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

When one has a knife at one's throat, one is rarely a philosopher or a philologist in deciding whether what is happening is time allocation, gagging or some other form of despotic corruption. This will happen to us in a few moments.

I make these points, but first I wish to explain my party's opposition regarding many of the sections on which we will be voting. It is because we have not had explanations on complex sections. When section 104, dealing with trusts, is called and we say it is passed on division, let the government understand that it is because it has 22 subsections and covers 10 pages and we doubt that anybody over there knows what it is all about.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I would have liked an opportunity in this debate to discuss the interesting section on good will and the sale of "nothings." I simply make the point that when the hon. member for Bruce and his colleagues in the Liberal party troop to the polls next time, they will find out how quickly good will depreciates, and they won't get a market for "nothing."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants for sharing these last four minutes with me. I indicated that I would like the floor for this short period mainly to indicate how we intend to vote on the amendment proposed this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition. As hon. members are aware, despite any good that is in this bill, and despite the improvements that we have been able to have included in it in the last few days, we still feel there is so much in the bill that is bad that we have no alternative but to vote against it when we reach third reading, as indeed we shall do this evening.

However, Sir, we do not feel that we can support the amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition. We take this position for three reasons. In the first place, it seems to us that if the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition means anything, it involves concessions to big business. We do not go along with those concessions. In the second place, we do not think that the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition means anything for big business or for anything else, because if the amendment were carried and written into the bill and the bill were passed in that way, all the taxes in the bill would eventually come into force just as they are now spelled out in the bill and the people who thought they were getting something by the amendment would be fooled. They would not get anything at all except a change in the date when the tax changes would come into effect.

Our third reason for being opposed to the amendment is that we have too much regard for the parliamentary system. We think that trying to pass a bill through both Houses, yet having in it a provisional clause, is not the way to deal with legislation. We are against the bill. We are against this monstrosity. We deplore the fact that we have not had a chance to discuss hundreds of its pages. We deplore what will take place in about 30 seconds from now. But we do not think the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition makes any improvement. Therefore, we shall vote against it.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, before the guillotine falls, and on behalf of all taxpayers in Canada, I want to show what I think of what is happening here by tearing this bill into pieces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to order made Thursday, December 2, 1971, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of committee of the whole stage of Bill C-259, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act. The Chair will first put the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition. Moved by Mr. Stanfield, seconded by Mr. Baldwin:

That clause 1 of the bill be amended by deleting lines 1 to 3 on page 1 and substituting therefor the following:

"1. Parts I to IIIA and Parts V to VII of the Income Tax Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor so as to apply, subject to the said act as hereby amended and to Part III of this act, to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years but the said act as hereby amended, excepting thereout those portions thereof containing an arrangement, revision and consolidation of the provisions of the said Act as the said act is amended by the application mutatis mutandis of the provisions of sections 6 and 8, subsection 12 of section 20, and sections 62, 63, 109, 110 and 117 of the said act as hereby amended, shall not come into force and have effect as law until a day to be fixed by a proclamation that shall be subject to affirmative resolution of the House of Commons:"

Amendment (Mr. Stanfield) negatived: Yeas, 54; nays, 150.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, contrary to the provisions of Standing Order 12(2) the hon. member for Cochrane came into the committee and voted after the motion had been put. I would ask Your Honour to make a ruling.

The Chairman: May I deal with the point of order first and then I will recognize the hon. member for Cochrane. The Chair did not notice when the hon. member came into the chamber. Perhaps this would be a good time for me to read Standing Order 12(2) referred to by the hon. member for St. John's East. I entreat all hon. members to observe the provisions of the Standing Order which reads as follows:

• (5:50 p.m.)

When Mr. Speaker is putting a question, no member shall enter, walk out of or across the House or make any noise or disturbance.

I know that hon. members will want to observe this rule.

Mr. McGrath: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman, I submit, with respect, that the vote taken was improper not only because the hon. member, contrary to the provisions of the Standing Order, came in after the motion had been put—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: And voted. Take the vote over again.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair accepts what the hon. member for St. John's East has stated. If the hon.

member for Cochrane did vote irregularly, I am sure he will indicate it at this point.

Some hon. Members: Ask him.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): First of all, Mr. Speaker, when I walked into the chamber there was such a din going on—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): —which I found out later was because the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings—

An hon. Member: He went out.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): —was being asked to leave. I really did not know what was going on and as a result I simply voted with my colleagues.

Mr. Woolliams: He is like the rest of the members—nobody knows about this bill.

Mr. Jerome: You are afraid to read it.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Cochrane has indicated that when he came into the chamber he was not aware that a vote was being taken. I accept his word and the vote will be altered accordingly.

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, to indicate to the committee that I am paired with the Minister of National Defence and had I voted I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. McGrath: I submit to Your Honour, with great respect, that the Chair has no authority to alter or change the vote in any way. If the Chair upholds my point of order, the vote must be taken over again or it must be declared that it was not a legitimate point of order.

The Chairman: Order, please. With respect, I suggest there are many precedents which clearly show that when an hon. member has indicated that another hon. member may have voted irregularly, and that hon. member indicates that he may have voted irregularly, the vote shall be altered accordingly.

Shall clause 1, section 2, carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. McGrath: Read it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Mr. McGrath: I want to know what I am voting for or against, and I do not know unless Your Honour reads the section.

Mr. Jerome: Where have you been for the last six weeks?

The Chairman: I will, of course, be guided by the advice of hon. members. It seems to me, however, that it would be very unusual and irregular to read clauses which appear in the bill and which hon. members have had before them for some time. I would not think that situation would apply as far as amendments are concerned. Unless the hon. member can quote some authority to show that the Chair should read the clauses in a bill, I would not be prepared to do so.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. McGrath: I will be guided by your suggestion, Mr. Chairman, but I submit that there is nothing usual or regular about the procedure being followed here tonight.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1, section 2, carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 2, agreed to.

The Chairman: On clause 1, section 3, there is an amendment by Mr. Burton which appears at page 9622 of Hansard. I think the committee might deal with this amendment first.

Amendment (Mr. Burton) negatived: Yeas, 21; nays, 182.

The Chairman: The question is now on the amendment by Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West), appearing at page 9564 of Hansard.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived: Yeas, 56; nays, 148.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall section 3 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 1, section 3, agreed to.

The Chairman: Sections 4 and 5 have been carried, as have sections 6 and 7. The hon. member for Portneuf today moved an amendment to section 8. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Godin) negatived: Yeas, 33; nays, 178.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I am rising with respect to a point of procedure which could be classed as a point of order. This procedure is most confusing, to say the least, besides being autocratic. This is no way to do things. Amendments to the bill have not been printed on the pages of the bill. They are not available on our desks and I think that it would be reasonable and more democratic if Your Honour were at least to read the amendments that have been moved.

Mr. McGrath: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: There are numerous amendments to the bill. Would it not be possible for them to be read so that we may know what we are voting for or against?

The Chairman: The hon. member's request is entirely reasonable and I have no hesitation in agreeing with him. As I indicated earlier, if hon. members indicate that they wish amendments to be read, they will be read. I think that is how we should proceed. Some amendments, particularly those which have been moved by the minister, have been included in Hansard, in some cases for weeks. I wonder whether hon. members would wish me to read those.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: Perhaps the Chair ought to read amendments which have not been printed in Hansard. If hon.

members wish the Chair to read amendments that have been printed in Hansard, they will be read if hon. members so indicate. The Minister of National Revenue has moved an amendment to section 8, as indicated on page 8934 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough East has also moved an amendment to section 8, as indicated at page 9608 of Hansard.

Amendment (Mr. O'Connell) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 8, as amended, carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 1, section 8, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: Hon. members will note that sections 9 to 13 inclusive have been carried. Shall section 14 carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 1, section 14, agreed to.

The Chairman: Sections 15 and 16 have been carried. Shall section 17 carry?

Clause 1, section 17, agreed to.

The Chairman: Section 18 has been carried. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved an amendment to section 19 as follows:

That section 19 as set forth in clause 1 of the said bill be amended by striking out subsection (2) on pages 58 and 59.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 187.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall section 19 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Clause 1, section 19, agreed to: Yeas, 180; nays, 26.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Clause 1, sections 20 to 28 inclusive, agreed to.

Clause 1, section 29, agreed to: Yeas, 126; nays, 86.

Mr. McKinley: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think it should be brought to the attention of government members who do not know what they are voting on that the basic herd just went down the drain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: You have milked your last cow.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Agriculture just rose to his feet. He should be heard. Perhaps he wants to explain the reason—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Champlain on a point of order.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the hon. mem ber for Langelier (Mr. Marchand) and the hon. member for Saint-Boniface (Mr. Guay) were trying to indicate, with their hat on their head, that their party has a bee in its bonnet.

[English]

Clause 1, section 30, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 31 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 31, agreed to.

Clause 1, sections 32 and 33, agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 34 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 34, agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, that is the problem which we face and were already facing when we started considering this bill. You are calling the numbers and maybe it's not your fault but you are calling them perhaps a little too fast. Finally, we have some difficulty to understand what section we are on. Also, when we say "on division" you do not hear it and it looks like the section is being carried unanimously, when it is not the case.

Mr. Chairman, since all the procedure is in English would you give us a chance to participate?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Just follow the text of the bill.

[English]

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if it would be possible, when reading the numbers of the sections or clauses being voted on, to have the marginal notes read at the same time.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that we support this suggestion to allow hon. members to know where they are going and what they are voting on.

• (6:20 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: The Chair will deal with the two points of order, which are related. I apologize to the hon. member for Lotbinière if I am proceeding too quickly. But I would point out that the Chair is labouring under some difficulty, too, because there is murmuring in the background.

Mr. Bell: That is the taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: It is sometimes difficult to hear it when hon. members call "On division". I invite any hon. members who wish a vote carried on division to interrupt the Chair. It is difficult to hear at this distance, particularly when there are discussions in the background. If an hon. member rises and indicates that a section is to be approved on division, it will be recorded that way.

With respect to the point raised by the hon. member for Regina East, I think it would be a departure from well established practice for the Chair to read either the sections of the bill or the marginal notes. Hon. members have had the bill before them for some time. Unless any authority can be shown, I would prefer not to read the marginal notes. But I will proceed more slowly.

Mr. MacLean: May I suggest to Your Honour that when you call the sections you also mention the page number? Some of these sections take up only part of a column while others are several pages long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: As we finish each ten pounds of the bill, Mr. Chairman, would you let us know?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: I think the hon. member for Malpeque has made a reasonable suggestion. The Chair will do that.

Mr. McGrath: It will be a long night. I wonder if it would be possible for us to vote from our seats?

Mr. Bell: How would the Senate do this? They cannot keep getting up and down.

Clause 1, section 35, agreed to: Yeas, 146; nays, 66.

The Chairman: Sections 36 and 37 have been carried. On section 38, to be found at page 97, there is an amendment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) negatived: Yeas, 19; nays, 183.

The Chairman: Shall section 38 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 1, section 38, agreed to.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: The question is on section 39. There are two amendments. The section may be found at page 97 of the bill. If the committee agrees, the Chair will put the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

That section 39 of clause 1 be amended by:

(1) deleting in paragraph (a) the word "and" in line 33 at page 97 and substituting therefor the word "or" and

o(2) adding immediately thereafter the following

(iv) land used in farming as defined in this act and to be used for continuing farming and

(3) deleting in paragraph (b) in line 13 at page 98 the words "or (iii)" and substituting therefor "(iii) or (iv)".

Amendment (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived: Yeas, 89; nays, 124.

The Chairman: On section 39 there is a further amendment by the Minister of National Revenue which appears at pages 8935 and 8936 of Hansard.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 39, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 39, as amended, agreed to.

[The Chairman.]

The Chairman: The question is on section 40 which appears at page 99 of the bill. There is an amendment by the Minister of National Revenue appearing at pages 8936 and 8937 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. McGrath: I think the amendment should be read. We do not have time to find the amendments in Hansard.

The Chairman: I did indicate to all hon. members that the amendment to section 40 appears at pages 8936 and 8937 of Hansard.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I draw to the attention of the Chair the fact that there is only one set of Hansard for every two members of the House. When we come to the amendments I think the Chair is obligated to read them.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment to section 40?

Mr. McGrath: Read the amendment.

The Chairman: The hon. member has asked the Chair to read the amendment. The Chair has already indicated twice during the proceedings of the committee that unless the hon. member can indicate some precedent or authority, the Chair does not feel it should read the amendments. The amendments have been in Hansard for some time. However, the Chair has all the time in the world and hon. members can take the time to read the amendments if they wish.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the proposed amendment to section 40?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 40, as amended, agreed to: Yeas, 140; nays, 64.

The Chairman: The question is on section 41 which is to be found at page 102 of the bill. Shall section 41 carry?

Mr. Woolliams: On division.

Clause 1, section 41, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 42 which appears at page 104 of the bill.

• (6:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: In the case of section 41, Mr. Chairman, did you put it down on division?

[English]

The Chairman: Order. The Chair did not hear a dissenting voice. I would ask hon. members to have patience with the Chair because it is difficult to hear dissenting voices from so far away when there are other conversations being carried on in the Committee. If any hon. member wishes to dissent he should rise in his place. I think that would be the best way to do it. I gather from the hon. member for Lotbinière that his group dissented on section 41. The section has been carried but it could be carried on division if the committee wishes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There was an "On division".

The Chairman: I understand it was carried on division. The question is on section 42 which appears at page 104 of the bill. Shall section 42 carry?

Clause 1, section 42, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 43 which appears on page 104. Shall section 43 carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 1, section 43, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 44 which appears at page 104 of the bill. Shall section 44 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 1, section 44, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 45 which appears at page 105 of the bill. Shall section 45 carry?

Clause 1, section 45, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 46. There is an amendment by the Minister of National Revenue which appears at page 8937 of Hansard. The question is on the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 46, as amended, carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 1, section 46, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 47, appearing at page 109 of the bill. There is an amendment by the Minister of National Revenue, appearing at page 8937 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 47, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 48 which appears at page 110 of the bill. There is an amendment by the Minister of National Revenue, appearing at page 8937 and page 8938 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 48, as amended, carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 1, section 48, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 49. There are two amendments thereto. Section 49 appears at page 111 of the bill. The amendment by the Minister of National Revenue appears at page 8938 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: There is also an amendment by the Minister of National Defence to section 49, which appears at page 9158 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 49, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 1, section 50, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 51. First, there is an amendment to section 51 which appears at page 113 of the bill. The amendment by the Minister of National Revenue appears at page 8938 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

Clause 1, section 51, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 52 at page 113. Shall section 52 carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Clause 1, section 52, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 53. There is an amendment thereto by the Minister of National Revenue. The section appears at page 114 of the bill and the amendment appears at page 8938 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 53, as amended, carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 1, section 53, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 54 which appears at page 123 of the bill. There is an amendment thereto by the Minister of National Revenue, appearing at page 8938 and page 8939 of Hansard. Shall the amendment carry?

An hon. Member: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 54 as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause 1, section 54, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 1, section 55, agreed to.

• (6:50 p.m.)

The Chairman: The question is on section 59 which appears at page 137 of the bill. Shall section 59 carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 59, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 64 at page 154 of the bill. There is an amendment thereto by the Minister of National Revenue which appears in Hansard on page 8940. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall section 64, as amended, carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 64, as amended, agreed to.

The Chairman: The question is on section 65 appearing at page 155 of the bill. Shall section 65 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Clause 1, section 65 agreed to: Yeas, 115; nays, 67.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is now on section 66 and on the amendment thereto by the Minister of National Revenue which appears in Hansard at page 8940. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1, section 68, agreed to.

Clause 1, section 71, agreed to.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I believe there were discussions about an hour or so ago as to the possibility of our taking a break for something to eat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair understands that hon. members might have different opinions but they should let the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre make his point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I believe the reason for these discussions was quite clear, namely, that if we carry on until the end of the bill without a break we will swamp the dining-room. We are keeping people here for endless hours and it would be reasonable to have a break of about an hour.

Mr. Baldwin: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I made this suggestion in good faith. If the government does not want to do it, that is fine. When a bully engages in rape, the details are immaterial.

[The Chairman.]

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members know that this can be done only by unanimous consent. There does not seem to be unanimous consent. Therefore, we will proceed with the question on section 73, at page 176 of the bill. There is an amendment to the section by Mr. Gray, which appears in Hansard at page 8941. Shall the amendment carry?

Clause 1, section 123, agreed to: Yeas, 146; nays, 19.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I again invite hon. members to co-operate as much as possible with the Chair and the committee. I hope hon. members will not move around the chamber while votes are being taken.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is very obvious that each time the Chair speaks about order being maintained, he is directing his remarks to this side of the chamber.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis: This is despite the fact that the Minister of Labour walked in during the last vote, which was very obvious to the Chair, and nothing was said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: No respect for the vote.

Mr. McGrath: Grit arrogance.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

• (7:40 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would remind hon. members that it is the duty of the Chair to keep order, and that this can only be done with the co-operation of the committee. There is no intention to point to individual members unless they do something which is completely irregular. I am simply asking for co-operation. I am not directing my comments to one side or the other. Shall section 124 carry?

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before you put the question as to when the bill shall be read the third time may I raise a point of order that I sought to raise when we were in committee of the whole. In view of the established practice under which bills which have been amended substantially are reprinted before third reading, may I ask if arrangements will be made for this bill, which has been substantially amended, to be reprinted before it is called for third reading?

Mr. Speaker: In view of the request of the hon. member, obviously an order will be made to that effect and a reprint of the bill will be available to hon. members before third reading is reached, whenever that is.

It being after six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Thursday, December 9, 1971, at two o'clock p.m.

At 9.12 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

TOY TESTING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S. O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That in view of the decision of various toy manufacturers in Canada to stop having their toys tested by the Toy Testing Council and in view of the cutting off of all funds to this valuable body and the vital consumers' interest therein, that this House do direct the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to meet with the toy manufacturers and to express to them the wish of this House that they continue to have a format whereby their toys are tested, and further, that he request Information Canada to continue printing the toy safety evaluation issued last year, and finally, that this House call on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to meet immediately to consider the entire matter of toy safety standards so that it might be looked into and discussed at this peak toy-buying period.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING BILL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I wish to make a motion under Standing Order 43 in a matter of urgency. The government of Canada has been misleading the people of Canada into false hopes about a family income security plan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: The white paper on income security in 1970 declared a target date of September, 1971. Bill C-264 declared a target date of May, 1972. Since it is obvious that these declarations are ambiguous and misleading I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare be directed to appear before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to state the government's position and intentions with regard to Bill C-264.

An hon. Member: Or resign.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

BROADCASTING

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMMING—NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON LICENSING OF STATIONS—DETERMINATION OF CONTENT—REVOKING OF LICENCES OF PROVINCIAL AGENCIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State who has made statements to the press that he has a mandate from the cabinet to pursue negotiations with the provinces on the subject of licensing broadcasting stations to broadcast educational material. In view of the confusion and vaccilation in the last couple of years on this whole subject, can the minister indicate briefly to the House the specific scope of his mandate from the government in this area?

• (2:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I think, Mr. Speaker, that I can resume it rather briefly.

Some Canadian provinces, especially Alberta, Ontario and Quebec approached us many months ago. The cabinet has studied the matter and has asked me to meet the provincial ministers concerned in order to consider the possibility of making a new arrangement. The cabinet has also stated three conditions which would be set by the federal government, providing an agreement acceptable to the provinces and ourselves would finally be reached.

The first condition is that the authority of the CRTC and the jurisdiction of the federal government in the broadcasting field remain complete. In the second place, the stations which would air educational programs in the provinces would have to comply with the definition of educational broadcasting drawn up, in agreement with the ten provinces, two years ago. The third is that the licences would not be delivered by a provincial government or one of its departments, but as it is done at the federal level, by a body independent of the provincial executive.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: In these negotiations is it contemplated that one of the conditions shall be that the CRTC will be the judge of what is considered to be educational content that might be broadcast by one of these stations licensed under this proposal?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that the CRTC would have no judgment to pass on the quality since the definition of educational television has already been accepted by the provinces. The CRTC would only pass judgment on facts, that is to say, it would merely say whether such and such an educational program is, I say it again, generally different from ordinary broadcasts.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Since these negotiations contemplate the rescinding of the directive issued by the government in June, 1970, I think, which directed that there should be no renewal of these licences to stations which were in fact provincial agencies for educational purposes, is the government prepared to revoke that directive now so that these stations will not have this axe hanging over their heads and bargaining can proceed in good faith?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, we are seeking a solution so that the stations that the Leader of the Opposition is referring to may continue to transmit radio programs; this is indeed in the field of radio only. I do not believe however that it should be through educational TV that we may solve the problem of these radio stations. One of the complications is that they are not really transmitting educational radio programs, but general broadcasting of a cultural nature.

But efforts to find a solution allowing these stations, connected with universities, to keep on broadcasting have not ceased. The CRTC and we ourselves are still trying to find it.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition, of course. I suggest, however, that perhaps we ought to go to the next subject in a moment because we are spending perhaps a bit too long on this subject.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State whether it is contemplated that the CRTC will revoke the licence of any station which is considered to be a provincial agency that is broadcasting matter which, in the judgment of the CRTC, is of a cultural rather than of an educational nature?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the CRTC must make judgments. Licences issued under this new policy would include conditions related to broadcasting and the CRTC would have to ensure that these conditions are met as it is doing in the case of the CBC or any other private general broadcasting station.

[English]

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMMING—REASON FOR ISSUANCE OF STATION LICENCES TO PROVINCIAL AGENCIES RATHER THAN TO PROVINCES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Does the minister feel that a violation of the Broadcasting Act, as we understand it, is avoided by making licences available to autonomous Crown corporations or agencies rather than to the provinces directly, and is that the reason this particular course has been chosen, in order to avoid the problem with the Broadcasting Act as it currently stands?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): If I understand the question I am being asked, Mr. Speaker, the reason for not granting licences if we finally decide to grant same, only to autonomous agencies rather than provincial governments is quite simple. It is because the federal government has never granted itself broadcasting licences but did issue some to the CBC only which has a very autonomous status in relation to the government.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMMING—POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE OF LIMITATIONS BY QUEBEC

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

I would like to know whether he held any discussions with the Quebec Minister of Communications to acquaint him with the limitations he has just indicated to the House. Is there any agreement with the provincial government in this regard? In other words, did the province accept these limitations to which the Secretary of State has just referred and does the minister foresee any agreement between Quebec and the federal government in this respect?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have met the Quebec Minister of Communications three times, as I have met the ministers of two other provinces that are specially interested. We have not come to any final agreement with any of them.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three or four members seeking supplementaries. We have spent nearly ten minutes on one subject. If we follow the same ratio, we will have four questions during the question period. I think we might try to return to this subject in a moment.

WELFARE

REASONS FOR CANCELLATION OF GRANT TO HAMILTON WELFARE RIGHTS ORGANIZATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's action in cancelling a grant to the Hamilton welfare rights organization and in view of the desirability of our hearing directly from the disadvantaged people of this country, can the minister say why this grant was cancelled? Can the minister also say whether there are criteria or standards for these grants that could have the effect of endangering other such grants to similar organizations across the country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the policy with regard to giving grants to low-income people so that they can express their views still holds. I have to make certain decisions with respect to some of these grants. Whether it be Hamilton or anywhere else, where the preoccupation is rhetoric and inflammatory action that contribute to a hardening of attitudes in this country. I feel that in the long run this undermines the over-all objective of rendering useful assistance to the disadvantaged.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): How does the minister square this judgment with the principle of freedom of speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is debate.

Mr. Munro: They can still speak.

MEETING OF MINISTER AND HAMILTON WELFARE RIGHTS ORGANIZATION—SUBJECTS FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister advise whether at his meeting with the Hamilton welfare rights organization on Saturday, he will discuss the need to lay down guidelines in order to allow these groups to attain their objectives, the need for setting up more adequate liaison with the provinces and municipalities involved and the need for a means of appeal if they cannot make progress in dealing with welfare offices rather than cut off these grants unilaterally?

• (2:20 p.m.)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Many of these areas may be subject matters for discussion. I cannot say exactly at this point.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the minister is now setting a precedent in trying to ascertain what can be done in this area and since the municipalities, generally speaking, have not been brought into the picture, is it the minister's intention to see to it that representatives of the Hamilton City Council are present at this meeting in Hamilton on Saturday?

Mr. Munro: I think the hon. member should be aware that not only were the municipal authorities in Hamilton advised at the time of this particular grant but, as I have said on several occasions, it is a matter of policy, in connection with these applications for grants, to consult with the local and provincial authorities.

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps the minister did not understand my question. I am asking him whether in fact he has invited representatives of the Hamilton City Council to sit with him on Saturday when he meets representatives of the welfare rights organization?

Mr. Munro: No, Mr. Speaker. Representatives of the welfare rights organization asked to see me and I said I would see them. If they want other representatives to be at that meeting, that is up to them.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NEW BRUNSWICK—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING IMPROVEMENT OF FRENCH TELEVISION NETWORK

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Has he received from Mr. André Boudreau, general director of CRAN, of Bathurst, New Brunswick, a telegram stating the representations made by various French Canadian organizations in northeastern New Brunswick regarding the establishment of a French television network in that province?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether a study is being made or whether he gave orders to have appropriate action taken concerning the October 18 letter he received from CRAN and the Common Front of northeastern New Brunswick?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, a study is under way and being carried out very intensively. But the second part of the hon. member's question startles me because the Secretary of State cannot give orders to the CBC or the CRTC.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Secretary of State has officially made his position known to CRAN and to the Common Front with regard to that matter?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I acknowledged receipt of their communications and I gave those people the same information I have just given to hon. members, that is that the matter was being taken into consideration and that a statement would be made in the fairly near future.

GRAIN

PROPOSED STATIONING OF SALES PROMOTION OFFICERS IN EUROPE AND ASIA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Has the government given any consideration to the recommendation by the Canada Grains Council that there is an urgent need for market information and development officers to be stationed in European and Asian countries as a promotional force to sell Canadian grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): This and other questions related to the best method of selling grain were considered by the marketing committee of the Canadian Wheat Board and, of course, are constantly under consideration. The board is aware of this most recent recommendation and assures me it is constantly examining its position with respect to the wisdom of having persons in offices abroad.

Mr. Murta: Does the minister recognize, then, the necessity of a third force in the marketplace to promote sales of Canadian grain in countries around the world in addition to the marketing research activities presently carried out by the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Lang: We are encouraging many more forces than simply a third force in our total market development. We are encouraging Canadian companies interested in the export of grain to take a variety of steps to ensure greater access to markets. We are also doing a great deal to encourage associations such as the Canadian Rapeseed Association to play an active role in the marketing of grain.

CONSIDERATION OF CHANGE IN BASIS OF PRICING

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I ask the minister whether, in view of the specific recommendation of the mission set up by the Canada Grains Council, either the Wheat Board or he himself has under consideration the possibility of changing the basis of pricing in relation to both domestic and overseas purchases at the lower St. Lawrence ports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear that the mission referred to by the hon. member was financed by the government as part of its market development program. The question of home and abroad pricing was also the subject of consideration by the Wheat Board's very high-powered marketing committee which recommended no change at the present time. This is not a matter that can be settled for all time, and the Wheat Board has it under constant examination.

Mr. Gleave: Further to the pricing policy of the Canadian Wheat Board, will the minister tell the House whether or not he is asking the Canadian Wheat Board to re-evaluate its pricing methods for markets in Common Market countries and to act on the recommendations of the mission in regard to meeting seasonal changes in pricing methods by the European Economic Community—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member because it seems to me he is making a speech rather than asking a question. I suggest to hon. members we should make an effort to try to shorten questions, and ministers should make an effort to shorten their replies. If we are to have a series of speeches during the question period, I suggest to hon. members that we will not have a very effective period. The hon. member might ask his question at this point.

Mr. Gleave: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I am sorry if I was overly long. Is the minister going to try to meet the recommendations of the mission regarding changes in pricing policies in the Common Market under the levy system, which the mission has said were inadequate?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, many of the comments of the mission in regard to pricing and other selling activities were out of date in the sense that most of the things they recommend have in fact been implemented either as a result of government or Wheat Board action. I am satisfied with the evaluation being given by the Wheat Board which watches pricing from month to month and from place to place; I am sure the Wheat Board is doing a very competent job.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister bring the House up to date on the results of the investigation that was started several weeks ago into the leak of a draft of the Gray report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made a report on this either yesterday or the day before; perhaps the hon. member was not here.

Mr. Stanfield: You said nothing in that report.

Mr. Hees: In view of the fact that I was here and heard the Prime Minister's non-answer, I would ask him whether it is not a fact that the reluctance of the government to make public any information regarding this investigation is due to the fact that the investigation has shown that this leak came from within cabinet ranks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: That is not the fact, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: You had better examine your conscience on that aspect.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—CORRESPONDENCE WITH QUEBEC RESPECTING LEGISLATIVE PRIORITY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Can he tell the House whether the government of Quebec has recently made proposals concerning the family allowances plan and whether that government, in such communications, has waived the legislative priority recently demanded by the Premier of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the issue of legislative primacy is in question at the moment in the discussions with Quebec. Rather, we are discussing the details of our legislation and theirs and how best they can be dovetailed. These discussions are being held at the official level but have not yet concluded.

HOUSING

TORONTO—ENCOURAGEMENT OF INCREASE IN CONSTRUCTION TO PROVIDE JOBS FOR UNEMPLOYED

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In light of the fact that approximately 18 per cent of Toronto's construction workers are unemployed, while the housing crisis and shortages are increasing, is the government working with the province of Ontario and metro Toronto to encourage increased construction activity and, if so, when will a statement be made?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I would say that the federal government is working with the province of Ontario and putting up about 90 per cent of the funds for social housing in Toronto as well as other parts of Ontario. I fail to see much credit given to us by that government for this. I do not think there is a need for a further statement.

Mr. Ryan: Has the government worked out with the province of Ontario and with Toronto specific house construction targets for the year 1972, and is there any immediate program to get the 18 per cent of construction workers in Toronto who are unemployed back to work?

Mr. Andras: Specific budgets were allocated to the government of the province of Ontario earlier in the year and an additional share of the $113 million that was advanced from the first quarter of next year was allocated to Ontario. We would be glad to sit down and give the Ontario government the benefit of our advice as to how this could be translated into housing starts, but we will listen to their suggestions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TORONTO—SUGGESTED DIRECTION OF FEDERAL FINANCING TOWARD LOW-COST HOUSING TO RELIEVE SHORTAGE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a related question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In light of the statement yesterday by the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that there exists a most acute housing shortage in metropolitan Toronto and his assertion that 95 per cent of the families in that area cannot afford the new houses that are being built, will the minister announce a new policy directing the effort of federal financing of housing toward fulfilling the urgent need for low-cost housing?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I do not know what the percentage is but I would estimate that about 80 per cent of federal funds under CMHC are going directly into low-cost housing and the other 20 per cent is going into infrastructure making more housing of that nature possible. This really adds up to the bulk of it now. What the Ontario government does about it is, of course, something that they have to decide.
