Mr. Mazankowski: With all due respect, may I tell the minister that foreclosures are being undertaken. I should like to ask the minister whether, in view of the policy outlined in March indicating an intention to help farm people who want to readjust, any consideration is being given under the gamut of that proposal to assisting these farmers to make that adjustment?

Mr. Olson: That aspect of it no doubt will be taken into account, and indeed has been, but of course that is not related to the other part of the question.

PENITENTIARIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—HIRING OF ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL TO RELIEVE STAFF SHORTAGE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact unemployment is very serious in the lower mainland of British Columbia and in view of the fact the British Columbia penitentiary at New Westminster is reputedly shortstaffed in many of its classifications, is the minister aware of the overtime work being required at that institution from the existing staff and has he any plans to hire more personnel?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have prepared such program. In fact, we shall be recruiting some 100 people within a couple of months.

[English]

Mr. Rose: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite get the minister's reply. Perhaps he has said this already, but were increased staffing plans considered in the introduction of new policies and programs within the correction service?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS BY NATIONAL PRISONERS OF WAR ASSOCIATION FOR SAME ADVANTAGES AS HONG KONG VETERANS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would the minister advise whether he has received representations from the National Prisoners of War Association for consideration of their particular problems in line with the advantages granted to Hong Kong veterans under veterans legislation, and would he advise whether consideration is being given to referring the problem to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have received on several occasions representations from the former prisoners of war and I have discussed this matter with them. At one stage my department reviewed 800 files and we have not discovered sufficient evidence to enact special legislation in their case. However, we have recommended to them that they themselves should apply for medical examinations and if they suffer from a special disability they will receive pensions accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, December 20, consideration in committee of Bill C-260, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Monday, December 20, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration. Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, yesterday I asked the parliamentary secretary or the minister to advise the House whether any study had been made and whether they have received any representations from the electronics industry in this country. I asked the parliamentary secretary if he could inform us whether, as a result of the removal of the 15 per cent excise tax on electronic equipment, there had been any step up in the manufacturing and sale of Canadian equipment because this was the stated reason for the removal of the 15 per cent tax. The removal was not directed towards improving the price position of imported goods in this particular category. I should like to know what conclusions the government has reached and what information they may have gathered up to date.

[Mr. Goyer.]

Mr. Mahoney: The government does not have the results of any survey that it has done. However, the manufacturers of television equipment in Canada released a statement toward the end of October, which I believe was reported in the October 20 issue of the Financial Post, which indicated an upward revision of sales of colour television by them from something in the order of 345,000 to 445,000 sets during the current year. We consider that part of that substantial increase in sales can be attributed to the removal of the excise tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can tell us the degree of Canadian content in those colour television sets, because it is my information that a great proportion of the components of these sets, even though they bear Canadian names, are merely assembled in Canada and do not represent actually any increase in the manufacture in Canada.

Mr. Mahoney: I am afraid that I have no information on that particular point.

Mr. Rowland: I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the government has made any attempt to monitor the effects of the elimination of this tax since June 19 in order to determine whether or not the reduction in price, which could be represented by the removal of the excise tax, has in fact been passed on to the consumer. Have they been monitoring, for example, DBS statistics in that area?

Mr. Mahoney: There was an immediate announcement of price reduction in this area following the removal of the 15 per cent excise tax. It is our understanding that the market forces have resulted in the capacity of the Canadian industry being taxed to the full in recent months and prices seem to have followed the demand upward. However, there are certainly examples of special sales at the retail level that would indicate that in many cases lower prices are available.

Mr. Rowland: Am I to take it then that the removal of the excise tax has not resulted in a reduction in the price of the equipment affected by the removal?

Mr. Mahoney: No, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. member may take it that the DBS surveys that will be followed in this regard since June 18 are not completed as yet. I cannot answer on an official level. However, price reductions were announced, as I indicated, immediately following the tax change. The supply and demand situation seems to have moved prices upward. The manufacturers are operating at a very high level of capacity now, and demand in the Canadian economy has risen considerably for this type of goods in the past half year.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, yesterday we had some discussion on this clause with respect to granting municipalities the same type of sales tax exemptions as are being granted to manufacturers. First of all, can the parliamentary secretary tell me the real purpose in granting this tax exemption? Is it a tax concession to encourage production, or a tax exemption to encourage the removal of pollution? This question must be answered before we can look at the clause in its proper perspective.

Mr. Mahoney: The removal of the excise tax on pollution control equipment used in processing and manufacturing is consistent with the policy of the government to encourage production and manufacturing, and hence employment. It is not specifically an incentive directed at pollution control so much as an incentive to manufacturers and producers to upgrade their facilities and thus have the result of reducing pollution.

Mr. Skoberg: In considering what the government has tried to accomplish in this regard within the past year and a half or two years, we have to look at the over-all structure of the two areas. We must determine whether this incentive will produce a climate in which manufacturers will be encouraged to undertake the type of pollution control that we would all like to see them undertake. I am rather amazed, after reading the correspondence that has been exchanged between the Minister of Finance and the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, that the government has been so little concerned about granting a similar type of concession to municipalities. If we look at this from the point of view that a manufacturer is going to obtain some type of tax concession, then possibly we would argue against it. However, I point out that the relevant part of the clause reads:

—machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers—

It appears, therefore, that manufacturers can import this machinery without paying this tax provided it is used for "detection, measurement, prevention, treatment, reduction of or removal of pollutants."

The Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities tried to elicit information from the government on this matter. I am sure all hon. members have copies of this correspondence in their files. On June 25 last the Federation wrote, and I quote:

Under the present Excise Tax Act, municipalities are granted some specific exemptions for anti-pollution equipment. However, this list of items is limited and there is still much anti-pollution equipment such as incinerators, recycling systems and crushers on which municipalities must pay tax. It is our interpretation that under the terms of the new exemption municipal government will be the only institution paying federal sales tax on anti-pollution equipment.

The reply by the Minister of Finance on July 26 is along the lines of comments made yesterday by the hon. member for Edmonton West when he was speaking on this clause. Here is what the minister wrote, in part:

Were we to extend this exemption, the description of the equipment that would qualify for this exemption would be a complicated question. For example, incinerators, though they may reduce waste, also cause air pollution; regarding crushers, they have no other utility than to facilitate the transportation of wastes.

A further letter from the Federation dated September 15 spelled out in detail why it thought municipalities should be exempted under the provisions of this bill. In particular it asked the minister:

Exactly what are these definitional problems that appear to be so complex for municipalities but which you seemed not to face or were able to resolve in the case of manufacturers and producers?

That is the type of question someone on the government side must answer. If the problems were so complex so far as manufacturers and producers were concerned, how could they be resolved in their case but not in the case of municipalities? There should be no difficulty resolving the same types of problems with respect to municipalities.

In his further reply of October 22, the Minister of Finance tried to deal with this matter of how to distinguish between pollution control machinery that should be exempted and that which should not be exempted. The last paragraph of that letter reads:

You may have in mind the exemption that has been in the law for some years for equipment to carry refuse or waste from production machinery. Neither this exemption nor the exemption announced in June extends to motor vehicles.

It appears that we are simply going round and round the block. Away back on April 22, Mayor Ivan Dent presented a brief from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities to the government, and in that brief commended the government for trying to do something about pollution control. But the position still exists that municipalities which purchase pollution control equipment do not receive the same consideration as manufacturers and producers.

Yesterday the hon. member for Edmonton West, speaking on this problem which was raised by myself and my colleague from Kootenay West, as recorded at page 10,643 of Hansard said:

To say that municipalities and provinces should not have to pay sales tax on machinery or apparatus used in the production of goods is not feasible.

Then, he went on to say:

—I do not think this is the place to do it—

He meant that such an exemption should not be made in this bill. But he failed to explain why municipalities should not be given the same consideration as producers and manufacturers. It seems as though we are just playing with words. Municipalities are a basic ingredient of our democratic society. They have to answer first so far as the public are concerned. They are trying to bring about pollution control, but the government says they are not to receive the same consideration as producers and manufacturers. We also know, Mr. Chairman, that in different areas of the country many apartment with incinerators do not receive consideration, and I am sure other hon. members will have something to say about that. It seems to me that our pollution control measures must be consistent, and we must also be consistent in our treatment of municipalities. Usually this government regards them as fairly credible bodies—especially when they want to foist more education costs on them—but now when it has a chance of doing something for these municipalities the government is found wanting.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I would therefore move:

That clause 4 of Bill C-260 be amended by inserting in line 29 on page 2, after the word "producers", also in line 36 on page 2, after the word "producers", and also in line 6 on page 3, after the word "producers", the following words, "or municipalities".

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary for fuller information regarding clause 4, particularly on the categories of dairy products affected by the bill. I agree with the frist part of the provision repealing old section 20 on pesticides, but I would like him to specify what happens to margarine, dairy products and edible oils, because the government has brought forward an amendment to this clause exempting the products mentioned above from the tax as of January 1, 1972.

[English]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, the products referred to here in addition to margarine and oleomargarine are spreads made from dairy products which do not qualify as butter because of low butter content. All of them all into the category of butter substitutes of various classes. I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member a trade name by which he and I might identify the subject, but it is spreads that do not have the necessary butterfat content to qualify as butter under the appropriate regulations but are nevertheless sold commercially.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I have another question.

Does Canada import or did it import in the last two years several of the products the parliamentary secretary mentioned?

[English]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, this is of course the Excise Tax Act, not the customs tariff, and the products we are talking about, margarine and oleomargarine, as far as I am aware are entirely manufactured in Canada. They are not imported in any significant amount if at all.

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has the amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, and it might be well to put the amendment now as the Chair is prepared to accept it unless there are arguments to the contrary.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, surely an amendment which will create an additional series of exemptions from payment of tax is out of order as upsetting the balance of ways and means decided upon by the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That argument is out of date.

The Chairman: Are there other hon. members who might like to assist the Chair?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to argue the question of acceptability, or whether the motion is in order or out of order, in relation to this particular bill. However, I have some arguments with regard to what has been said about the purpose of the amendment, and its place in the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether my quip reached Hansard when I responded to the parliamentary secretary by saying that his argument was out of date. I hope it did because that is the pith of my submission. The argument that private members cannot move amendments because they upset the balance or ways and means is a form of words that really does not apply any more in these matters.

The Chair has ruled, for example, that an amendment reducing taxes across the board is in order provided that it does not transfer the incidence of the tax to someone else. It has also been ruled that we have the right to oppose a tax, and all this amendment is doing is opposing the imposition of a tax on municipalities when they purchase certain equipment. If it were the imposition of a tax we would be in trouble if a private member tried to move it, but I submit that the rulings made by the Chair in recent weeks are correct and that this amendment is in order and should be put.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, in recent weeks on Bill C-259 we were dealing with rather exceptional circumstances in that the ways and means motion had been supplemented by a particular motion of the House regularizing a variety of proceedings that had occurred before. On Bill C-260, I think we are back to a rather more traditional budgetary measure being handled in the customary manner, and therefore the ways and means motion does indeed govern what is and is not acceptable in this bill from a procedural standpoint. I do not think the various arguments that could be adduced under Bill C-259, whereby basically if the amendment was within the subject matter of the bill it was in order because of the special resolution passed by the House, has any application to this point. We are back to a situation now where the ways and means motion under the Standing Orders of the House must be strictly applied.

The Chairman: I want to thank the hon. parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who assisted the Chair on the procedural acceptability of the amendment. The Chair's first inclination was to accept the amendment, and I may be in error but I am prepared to accept it. I agree with the hon. parliamentary secretary that, of course, the Standing Orders and precedents must be observed. When we were dealing with Bill C-259 I think we did observe them, although there might have been some relaxation in the last hour or two.

The hon. parliamentary secretary has indicated that this amendment would upset the balance of ways and means, but I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the precedent may not be as important now as it was in other years. This is alleviation of taxation; it is not imposition of a new tax and the Chair is prepared to accept it. I shall put the motion of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, which reads:

> That clause 4 of Bill C-260 be amended by inserting in line 29 on page 2, after the word "producers", also in line 36 on page 2, after the word "producers", and also in line 6 on page 3, after the word "producers, the following words, "or municipalities".

Mr. Harding: I wonder if I could ask the parliamentary secretary a question. Is the pipe for storm sewers and sanitary sewers required by municipalities currently exempt from sales tax?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, at some time in the past the amendment in this bill was considered to be an appropriate one. Sometimes I find myself on the side of the hon.

member for Edmonton West, since the party forming the government has to take a middle course between the two opposition parties. I really could not put the argument much better than he put it last night when he advanced the reasons for declining to exempt all municipal purchases of pollution abatement equipment or, for that matter, other equipment from the federal sales tax.

The exemption that we are seeking here recognizes that the cost of pollution abatement is a necessary cost of production. It is consistent with existing exemptions in the bill for production equipment. That is the reason for the exemption. In our thinking we have advanced to the appreciation that the cost of pollution abatement equipment is a proper cost of production, and that is why we want this particular amendment to go forward.

The hon. member for Kootenay West was quite correct. Materials purchased by municipalities for sewage systems, drainage systems and sewage treatment plants are exempt. Of course, that includes a large part of the equipment purchased by municipalities in this area.

The argument presented by the hon. member for Moose Jaw that municipalities will remain the only bodies subject to the payment of sales tax when buying pollution abatement equipment is most fallacious. This provision applies as well to service agencies, transport companies, and so on, and is by no means restricted to municipalities. The exemption here and the exemption that will be brought forward is to apply to production equipment. That is the extent to which the government is prepared to go at this particular point with the amendment to the Act.

I might say that the hon. member's amendment would not be particularly helpful to any municipality unless that municipality happens to be engaged in production. That will be the effect of the amendment if one reads the section as it now is. I really do not feel, therefore, that he would achieve at all what he thought he would by presenting the amendment which has been accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, first, may I commend to the hon. member who moved the amendment the reading at this time of Part XII of Schedule III which deals with municipalities. He is faced with a procedural problem in that this particular part of that schedule is not included in the amending bill and, therefore, he may not move an amendment to it. Part XII of Schedule III exempts the payment by municipalities of tax on culverts, firefighting equipment, and so on. Subparagraph (e) of section 1 reads:

(e) goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems and, for the purposes of this exemption, any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the Minister to be a municipality.

Section 2 says that articles and materials for use exlcusively in the manufacture of the tax exempt goods mentioned in the section I have just referred to are included.

The amendment that the hon. member moved comes under Part XIII of Schedule III. Part XIII is headed, "Production Equipment, Processing Materials and Plans". It deals with that category of industry and not with municipalities. Although I sympathize with what the hon. member is trying to do, I would find it difficult to bring his amendment under this heading. It seems to me that what should have been done to answer the prayer of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities is to amend Part XII of the act. I know Mayor Dent of the city of Edmonton and I know that the city is not in any way engaged in the production of goods. After all, this amendment would not help municipalities in any way. The section, if amended, would read:

(b) machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers or municipalities, for use by them directly in the detection—

The key words come at the end of the paragraph and are, "attributable to the manufacture or production of goods". Those words have not been included for dressing up the subsection. I do not know what municipalities are producing goods and that is where the limitation would come in. The amendment would not help municipalities to deal with other aspects of the pollution for which they are responsible. It seems to me, as I pointed out yesterday, that there is a far better way of giving municipalities direct assistance. We should not force them to buy tax exempt equipment which is irrelevant to their purposes. Actually, under a program of forgivable loans, we ought to give municipalities a real incentive to get into the sewage treatment business. Not only would municipalities gain advantages that way from forgivable loans, but they could improve their employment situation as well as their pollution standards. They would also, by reason of the provisions of Part XII of the act, not have to pay any sales tax whatever on any equipment used in these sewage systems, and the same would apply to equipment used to control air pollution.

I do not know whether the hon. member thinks that the production of electricity is the production of goods. I know that the city of Edmonton could clean up a great deal of its municipal electric production plants. The responsibility there comes under another aspect, and the question of sales tax is not involved. I, myself, cannot support this amendment at this particular time, since its effect will be limited to the production of goods manufactured by municipalities.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this amendment, I am particularly interested in noting that anti-pollution equipment bought or used by municipalities is exempt from the 12 per cent sales tax. That is the point we are trying to put across to the parliamentary secretary and the government. Whether the amendment is in the right place or whether we must add another section is immaterial to the basic argument we are following. The point is this: the municipalities now are hard pressed to find sufficient cash for carrying out pollution control programs, and this is one way we can give them material assistance. We can exempt from sales tax that type of anti-pollution equipment that a particular municipality might require. I am not certain, for example, whether sanitary sewer pipe is exempt from this tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is.

Mr. Harding: The hon. member for Edmonton West suggests that it is exempt. The municipality will not need to pay sales tax on that, and that is good. I believe that this commodity is mentioned in the act. Yet I ask, what about recycling equipment? That has not been mentioned. Any one who has studied environmental problems realizes that if we are ever to get to the very nub of pollution prevention in Canada, we will need to go into the recycling field in an immense way. We must look at the recycling of all kinds of products. We shall find that municipalities will need to take up recycling in their respective fields. Not only will municipalities be involved but provincial governments as well, and some of this recycling might be carried on on a private basis.

The recycling equipment of municipalities should be tax exempt. It must be exempt, and to encourage them to take up this type of anti-pollution work, these exemptions must be included in the bill. I do not see why the government cannot say, "All right, we will stand the bill for a short period and introduce a section that will deal with this problem." It is not only the members of my group who are interested in this matter, Mr. Chairman. All the municipalities from one end of Canada to the other have been pressing the department and the government for relief along the lines we have suggested.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I again urge the parliamentary secretary to hold this section over and have a look at it. If he does not like the amendments we have offered, why not bring in a section that will meet with the approval of his department? I suggest it will meet with the approval of the vast majority of members of this House. They, too, are interested in the war against pollution in Canada. This is one way of fighting it. I again suggest that some encouragement be given to the municipalities by proceeding along the lines we have suggested.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, about clause 4 concerning pollution, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the minister whether or not the government really intends to help municipalities fight pollution.

I should also like to know whether or not, the government is considering any help to industries that have great problems with water pollution, because some of them have had to pay significant fines for violating antipollution rules.

But if municipalities are exempted from the tax on certain materials used in the construction of facilities designed to control pollution, we should also exempt from this tax manufacturers who, by using water, contribute to pollution.

A great number of Canadians are living on lake shores. Some reside there the year round. They are faced with the problem of water pollution because inspectors visit them and condemn all their facilities. They force these citizens to take measures against pollution and this costs thousands of dollars. I ask whether it would not be possible to include in some clause a provision to the effect that citizens residing along lake shores, in camps for instance, be exempt from the tax on building materials, so as to contribute to pollution control.

Provincial governments now send inspectors to visit facilities and they condemn several of these. So, citizens have to spend considerable amounts to fight pollution.

If the government really wants to fight pollution, citizens and corporations should at least be exempted from paying the tax on building materials, if there is no other way to assist them through grants, for instance, which might be too costly. Citizens should be exempted from payment of that tax, particularly major industries which have to spend millions of dollars to fight pollution. I make this request of the minister who said a little while ago that several things would not come under the tax.

I therefore ask whether citizens and corporations I have mentioned will be exempted from payment of the tax on building materials.

[English]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in the bill to eliminate the sales tax currently imposed on construction materials, or is it the intention of the government to introduce such an exemption at the present time. The question of that exemption has been forcibly brought to the attention of the government on numerous occasions by many organizations and associations as well as by members of this House. However, if and when a decision is made on that, it will be announced by the minister in a budget statement.

This particular bill does not embrace that concept. The same situation applies, of course, to the total exemption of purchases by municipalities from sales tax. This is a position that is argued by the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. It has been argued by members of this House. However, a decision in this regard is a matter of a budgetary nature and can only be dealt with in the usual way. This particular bill does not encompass that.

With regard to the concern of the hon. member for Compton in connection with processing and manufacturing industries, yes, clause 4(2) of the bill proposes to exempt and I quote:

> machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them directly in the detection, measurement, prevention, treatment, reduction or removal of pollutants to water, soil or air—

On that point, Mr. Chairman, I am able to assure the hon. member that this particular bill does comply with his requirements.

In speaking to the amendment that is before the House, I should specifically point out to hon. members that they will have a bit of nonsense if they accept the amendment. The amendment the hon. member really wants to make will, I presume, put an additional classification in Part XII of schedule III to the Excise Tax Act. The way clause 1 (b) of Part XIII will read if the amendments are adopted is that the following will be exempt:

> equipment sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers or municipalities for use by them for exhausting dust and noxious fumes produced by their manufacturing or producing operations;

I really do not think that municipalities in Canada are all that widely engaged in manufacturing or producing operations or that the object the hon. member has in mind will be at all served by this bill.

The amendments he has proposed to the ensuing subclauses of clause 1 of Part XIII would, of course, be equally non-sensical. As I have said, the question is something which is constantly brought to the attention of the government. Up to this point, the government has not accepted representations that have been made by or on behalf of municipalities. If and when the government does accept those representations, the Minister of Finance will announce that decision in a budgetary statement.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make my own position clear on this matter, because the effort to exempt as much pollution control equipment as possible from tax and to encourage municipalities, private industry and so forth to continue with pollution control efforts has always been something in which I have been most interested. It is indeed unfortunate, but it is nevertheless a fact we have to face, that the bill before us provides no opportunity to move an amendment along the lines of the one that has been moved.

I have every sympathy in the world with the intent of the amendment to make certain municipal equipment tax free. However, in this case it is not the municipalities which are the manufacturers or producers. It is someone else. Accepting the amendment would not enable us to accomplish the intent which the hon. member desires. My hon. friend from Edmonton West has drawn attention to the difficulty in which we find ourselves. Although the amendment has been accepted by the Chair it would still, if approved, fail to produce any results along the lines we would like to see.

Taxation on equipment of this kind leads to some strange rulings. I would certainly like to see the position cleared up. Not many years ago, I was personally involved in a case concerning fairly large concrete tiles. The department ruled that if the tiles were to be installed horizontally and used for drainage they would be tax exempt, but if they were installed vertically and used for well tiles they would be subject to tax. While I wish we could accomplish what the hon. member has in mind, it does not seem possible to do so by way of this amendment, or even under this bill.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with this clause of the bill, and dealing with provisions to improve the position of those who purchase materials to be used to control or eliminate pollution, I should like to refer to a parallel area of concern.

In addition to the direct attack upon pollution in which some municipalities and companies are engaged, an indirect approach is taking place. Many municipalities which have never done so before are now installing chlorinating facilities, using chlorine to make domestic water safe for use. In the past this has often not been considered necessary, but the growth of population and increasing concern about water purity has led to action on the part of a large number of smaller municipalities. While I realize it is probably not possible to take action at this point along the lines I have in mind, I suggest that when the next major review of the Excise Tax Act takes place the government should consider removing the tax from chlorine, an ingredient which is important to the maintenance of the health of the people. The municipalities most affected would be the smaller municipalities, those which are least able to raise the taxes necessary to provide for programs of the kind I have mentioned. I believe the government should encourage municipalities to take all possible measures for the good health of Canadians, and this is why I recommend strongly that the parliamentary secretary take note of the point I have made and use his best efforts to secure the removal of chlorine as a taxable item when the next revision of the act takes place, provided it is used for the chlorination of water within Canada.

Mr. Rowland: There is no question that in this amendment my hon. friend from Moose Jaw is attempting to exempt municipalities from the incidence of excise tax in respect of anti-pollution equipment. It is also true he will not be able to accomplish everything he has set out to do in the amendment he has laid before the House. He is not able to do so because the government has not placed before us clauses whose amendment could effect that purpose. However, I think the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka gave in too soon.

In addition, it seems to me the parliamentary secretary was a bit out of line when he said the amendment would have the effect of making the clause nonsensical. Municipalities in Europe are going into the recycling of waste material in a big way and municipalities in North America will have to do the same if pollution is to be controlled. I should like to mention developments which are taking place on an experimental basis and which might well place municipalities in the position of becoming manufacturers. It is now possible to take celluloid products and turn them into protein. Municipalities could become involved in this process. It is now possible, on an experimental basis, to change human and animal waste into motive fuels. It may be necessary for municipalities to enter this processing field in an effort to beat their pollution problems.

The amendment before us would at least accomplish one thing. As the municipalities move into the recycling of waste, and turn out products which are useful in the marketplace, the costly facilities they will need for these purposes will be exempt from taxation. This will encourage municipalities to move into such areas of endeavour. As I say, municipalities in Europe have already done so. The amendment would make installations established by municipalities for these purposes exempt from taxation, and thus encourage municipalities to undertake endeavours of this kind.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I know my hon. friend from Moose Jaw realized when drafting his amendment that there would be a real problem in arriving at a suitable wording. Since his amendment had to be kept in order he could not, of course, go beyond the wording of the bill.

The representations which have been made to the government and to all Members of Parliament by the Federation of Mayors and Reeves have been extensive and well thought out. We have all received press releases and briefs from the federation. So far, it seems, the government has chosen not to pay any attention to these representations. It is passing strange that ways can be found to exempt manufacturers and producers from excice tax with respect to equipment used for pollution control, but that similar action cannot be taken when municipalities are concerned. The minister, in his letter, said that providing exemptions for municipalities would be a complicated matter, yet it is not complicated for the manufacturers and producers. That is a little hard not only for the mayors and reeves to swallow but for some of the members of the House to swallow as well.

Further, in his letter dated August 4, the Minister of Finance said that incinerators, though they may reduce waste, also cause air pollution and therefore he did not see how they could be exempted from the excise tax. Now, either the minister did not know or he conveniently forgot, but the president of the association, replying to the minister on August 16, pointed out that we now have the technology to manufacture incinerators that meet pollution control standards. He submitted they should, therefore, be exempt from excise tax. The minister makes a great deal about crushers not being exempt because they have no use other than facilitating the transportation of waste materials. If that argument is logical, then since pumping equipment, like crushers, are an integral part of a solid waste disposal system, why is pumping equipment exempt but not crushers?

These are some of the inconsistencies we see in this bill, some of which the hon. member attempts to solve in his amendment. If the wording of the amendment is not exactly as the parliamentary secretary would like it, he could get his officlals or some of the roosters in the gallery to draft a proper amendment in the next minute or so. We are not particularly wedded to our wording. The mayors and reeves have pointed out that as a result of the bill the government's revenue from manufacturers and producers will be reduced by about $8 million a year. Why cannot the municipalities have an equivalent reduction in their costs?

If the amendment passes, no doubt it would cause some head scratching in the back rooms in terms of interpreting the regulations, but I am sure that problem can be solved. The municipalities have waited a long time for some relief in this area yet the Minister of Finance still finds excuses which I submit are unjustified. Although the parliamentary secretary might be hesitant to make any move that might displease the Minister of Finance, we do not feel the same way. This is another reason why the amendment has been moved. All of the reasons given by the Minister of Finance in his letter to the federation in August have been amply shot down in flames by the federation's reply of August 16.

Today the federation issued a press release criticizing the inadequacies of the government's proposals, both in their budget and in this bill, in regard to exemption from excise tax of pollution control equipment. Every city in Canada has been and is under great pressure to build new sewage disposal systems, all the way from new incinerators to tertiary treatment plants. This pressure will continue, not only from the public sector but also from senior governments, and I say it is incumbent upon the government to accept an amendment that would exempt such equipment from excise tax.

My hon. friend from Selkirk just touched the surface of the problem. It is true that cities and municipalities will be able to manufacture goods and materials from recycling and other methods of handling sewage and waste materials. Although this amendment might make it a little difficult to administer, the parliamentary secretary and his officials appreciate the intent of the amendment and I see no reason for their being unable to express this intent in the form of action. I suggest the Department of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue will experience no difficulty whatsoever on passage of this amendment.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to members on both sides of the committee supporting this amendment but at the same time admitting they have serious difficulty with the wording. I agree this is the case, particularly in view of the fact that under normal circumstances the manufacturing industry has not been primarily concerned with the disposal of waste. I am sure the parliamentary secretary would agree that unless manufacturing plants are provided with pollution control facilities we shall never be able to accomplish effective pollution control in this nation, particularly if we neglect one of the major sources of pollution in a given area, namely pollution resulting from municipal operations themselves. It used to be good enough for a municipality simply to burn its garbage and to dump its sewage into the nearest waterway. Although we are all aware that most industries used to dispose of their waste in this way, they now find it economically advantageous as well as environmentally advantageous to implement some form of pollution control.

It is true, as several of my colleagues have said, that municipalities will be subjected to pollution controls that are greatly different from any previous controls. All kinds of developments are taking place to produce useful byproducts from reclaimed waste, and many of these byproducts will come from fields with which we are not too familiar at the present time. Indeed, it may well be the case that a large segment of municipal workers will be engaged in producing byproducts from sewage and other forms of waste material. I bow to the superior wisdom of all members who were able to foresee many of the technical changes that are going to take place, such as the establishment in municipalities of pollution control methods that had not even been considered a few years ago. As most hon. members know, garbage has been reclaimed in some parts of California. From this reclamation hydrocarbon substances are derived which, when the process has been perfected, will be a valuable asset to the area and which they hope will heat much of the urban area that hitherto had been plagued by this very substance when it was in pollutant form.

It is quite possible, despite the remoteness of the subject today, that municipalities will be manufacturing, that there will be by-products and that the new technical changes involved will bring municipalities a great incentive to eliminate what has been possibly our major pollutant in the nation, municipal waste in all its various forms. I am sure at this late stage in the session, and even at this late hour in the day, the parliamentary secretary will not recommend that this amendment go back to the officials for improvement. I say that not unkindly but because that is not the way the government operates. It would take a long time to think about that. I fail to see the minister being at all concerned with this amendment if it does not apply. However, if the municipality is not in a position to take advantage of this amendment, what difference would it make. It would simply have the effect of cluttering up the act. We have been here long enough to know that a great deal of legislation is cluttered up with things much less valuable than any concession that might be made to pollution control in the municipal field.

I suggest there really is not much basis for objection to this amendment if we presuppose that municipalities will soon be in the manufacturing field. Municipalities will not be in this field in the same way industry is because the pollutants from industry must be recycled or handled some other way. I believe the government is now taking cognizance of this and is making concessions. The municipalities, however, will in fact be using pollutants as the primary source of their material for manufacture. I can see the day, and I suspect it will not be too remote, when the moneys which are being provided by this and other governments will be used to speed up our ability to develop programs and methods to dispose of municipal pollution in a much more efficient way. So I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that if he is right, and this amendment is not applicable to the municipalities today, there really should be no objection to passing it. If there are municipalities in the manufacturing field or which intend to manufacture, I presume from the wastes of the municipality, and in that way provide pollution control in a very important way which would improve the environment of the community, then what is wrong with that.

Although I cannot think of any municipality, and other members have not mentioned any specific municipality, that is in the production field, I suggest there are those of us, including you, Mr. Chairman, who believe this is inevitable because this government has basic environmental control legislation and is also working on the scientific developments that will make possible the improvement of the environment by the elimination of municipal pollution. By following this course we will probably be providing the technical know-how which in the end will result in developments that would make this amendment applicable. I believe the parliamentary secretary would be less than fair if he were to say the government will apply this to manufacturing and industrial corporations but not to the municipalities. All we are asking is that the parliamentary secretary have a little foresight in respect of the elimination of pollutants in the municipal field through technical change and give support to this amendment which he believes will not be effective or necessary at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on this amendment which I find is very justified because, to my mind, it would be perfectly normal for this bill to take the municipalities into account. Indeed, the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities expressed its point of view and as the government attaches great importance to the pollution problem, I feel we would only be proving our good faith toward municipalities by giving them the benefit of an exemption.

Moreover, the wording of the amendment seems to create difficulties. It would be easy for the parliamentary secretary to understand, first of all, the principle of the amendment. I believe all members would agree that municipalities should benefit from some assistance, to the extent provided by this bill, because municipalities are really anxious to fight against pollution.

If we really want to pass a constructive legislation to that effect, I suggest that the government should pay the entire construction costs of sewage treatment facilities for municipalities which are devoid of them as a result of the prohibitive costs of such projects. Since the bill under consideration does not specially deal with those municipal projects, I think that it would be advisable to enable them to enjoy the same advantages as industries. I shall limit myself to these few comments, Mr. Chairman, as such intervention permits me to support without any reservations the principle of the amendment moved by the hon. member. I hope that the parliamentary secretary, with the help of his advisers, will be able to find a formula which will allow municipalities to avail themselves of the maximum assistance. In so doing, the government would prove its good faith regarding the fight against pollution.

I hope that the parliamentary secretary will agree to include the word "municipalities" in the bill, thus permitting municipalities to profit by this legislation. I hope he will say yes to the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities which, in the opinion of all hon. members, is an organization sufficiently serious to be listened to.

I shall therefore limit myself to these few comments. If the government really wants to help municipalities fight against pollution, I think it would be in its greatest interest to enact legislation to grant enough money for the establishment of sewage treatment plants in each Canadian municipality.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word or two in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I am not sure whether or not the parliamentary secretary is aware of the press statement issued by the president of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. The press release, issued an hour or so ago, appeals to the government once again to extend to municipalities the same privileges that are being extended under this bill to manufacturers. I suggest very strongly to the parliamentary secretary that he consider their representation. I think he knows what it is, but in any case I will quote the last part of the press statement which reads:

> Because of the critical importance of pollution problems of all kinds, the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has the obligation to insist that the federal government revise its policy regarding the exemption of municipalities from sales tax on anti-pollution equipment. We are convinced that, in the interest of the objectives subscribed to, Bill C-260 has to be amended to extend to municipalities the same privileges that are given manufacturers and producers.

I want to remind the parliamentary secretary that the municipalities in this country are concerned. I am sure the amount of money that is involved is not great, and I am sure all members of the House can agree in a short period of time to the amendment. I suggest also that it is important that we do all we can to combat the problem of pollution in this country. We know that some pollution in our rivers and lakes comes from the municipalities in the form of raw sewage, and it is about time we did all we can to clean up these types of waste. This provision could be an incentive to the municipalities to purchase anti-pollution equipment. Municipalities are hard pressed for funds at this time, and since we are granting this privilege to the manufacturers and producers, why can we not do the same thing for the municipalities? Why do we have this double standard?

In answering that question, the parliamentary secretary said that this provision is not really to promote the fight against pollution but to increase productivity in this country. I suggest that even though increased production is important it should go together with the reduction of pollution. I urge on behalf of municipalities in my area that the parliamentary secretary accept this amendment, and if it is not acceptable, let us draft one that is so that municipalities can be included among those who are exempted from the excise tax.

Another point made by the hon. member for Selkirk was that if this amendment is accepted it will result in the creation of some jobs in the recycling of waste. I hope that members on the other side of the House will add their support for the amendment that is before us so that municipalities are granted the same privileges as manufacturers in this country.

Mr. Horner: I should like to say a word or two in support of the amendment that is before us now. Some concern has been voiced as to whether or not this is the proper place for an amendment which would exempt the municipalities from the excise tax on machinery used to create a pollution free environment. If I wanted to chastise the government, I would point out that this is one more example of a poorly drafted bill. At first it gives the impression of being drafted satisfactorily, but when we examine it closely we realize that not all aspects of the situation are covered.

Many municipalities across the country are still the biggest polluters of our lakes and rivers. The most important factor is not the amount of money that the government will have to expend, not the fact that every municipality will have to develop recycling machinery and manufacture something from the waste, but some technicality that the government has failed to take into consideration in drafting the bill. The vote on this amendment, which will take place shortly, will be an expression of opinion as to whether or not municipalities should be exempted from excise tax on recycling machinery. If the amendment carries this afternoon, I do not expect any earth shaking events to take place in the municipalities but I do believe that many of them will become more interested in creating a pollution free environment. That is what we as legislators should be concerned with. Every piece of legislation contains regulations which carry out the intent of the legislation. If the amendment is accepted, no doubt the regulations governing the application of the excise tax on recycling machinery could be drafted in such a way as to take into account the fact that the amendment is not in the right place.

Last evening I listened very carefully to the remarks made in the House and I reread the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West with regard to this matter.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Without a doubt he is one of the most knowledgeable members in the House with respect to the legal aspects of the legislation and the proper drafting of bills. His experience in the Chair has contributed a great deal to his knowledge and his insistence that the rules be followed is shown by his statement that this is not the right place for this amendment. It is regrettable that this matter was not considered more thoroughly when the bill was being drafted. However, all we can do at present as legislators is to express our intention that municipalities be encouraged to develop recycling machinery for waste products as quickly as possible. The old system of waste trenches and earth fills is no longer suitable. Very soon major cities will run out of available land and the old system cannot be used for many more years. So, we must encourage municipalities to get into the business of recycling. We must express our intention here that if at some time in the future municipalities purchase machinery for recycling, the excise tax will not be applied to it.

Although it may not be the correct thing to do to vote in favour of an amendment which is not in the correct place, I find myself inclined to vote for the intent of the amendment and I hope that other hon. members will do so also. Once the municipalities find themselves in a position to take advantage of this regulation the government might find itself embarrassed by a poorly placed amendment, but in such a case the government might bring in a further change according to the wishes of the House.

Mr. Harding: I am not trying to hold up the debate on this measure, but I want to point out to the parliamentary secretary that the amendment which we are debating for the removal of the sales tax from municipal anti-pollution equipment does not apply only to municipalities. Just today I received a letter from the British Columbia School Trustees Association, as a result of which I believe the legislation should be amended to give relief to school boards which have jurisdiction over a large number of schools. If a school board constructs over $3,000 worth of equipment in its maintenance and repair shops over a year, it is forced to take out a manufacturer's licence, and pay excise tax on everything over the $3,000. This is utter nonsense. A sum of $3,000 spread over a large number of schools is very little. They are asking the government to change the regulation in order to give them an exemption. Why should any school board have to pay excise tax on cabinets, book shelves, or some such construction that has taken place in the school district? This is sheer nonsense. This is why we are asking the government to make this change.

Some time ago I wrote to the Minister of National Revenue about the matter, and in his reply he wrote:

I am bound to work within the existing framework of the Excise Tax Act as enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

We are now in the process of changing that act. We now have a chance to exempt school boards from excise tax. Will the parliamentary secretary take this into consideration? Will he hold up this clause for a few minutes and take another look at this aspect of it? The government is telling school boards that they are manufacturers and that they must take out a manufacturer's licence. Again I appeal to the minister to use a little common sense.

Let us look at the problem of school boards and the problem of municipalities with respect to anti-pollution equipment. I appeal to the parliamentary secretary to take this step and then let us get on with something else. Hon. members are anxious that something be done. I am quite sure that the majority of government members are also in favour of this.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member why he regards the tax revenues of a school board as being more sacred, if I may put it that way, than the tax revenues of the federal government? It is not as though he was talking about a different set of taxpayers. After all the taxpayers are the taxpayers in each case. Whether the money is levied by the federal government or by the school board, it still has to be paid by the taxpayers.

I cannot understand why he regards himself as being here to lobby for one level of tax jurisdiction as against another. If he wants to make the point that it is easier for the federal government to raise the money than it is for the school board, I do not agree. It is just as easy for a school board, if it is financed on a proper tax base and the provincial government has a just system of taxation. In that case it is just as easy for the $3,000 of needed tax revenue to be raised at one level as at the other. I cannot understand why hon. members should lobby for a tax jurisdiction they do not represent against the interests of the tax jurisdiction that they do represent.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member does not realize that school boards, which may cover a number of municipalities in an area, do not have the same tax base as the federal government.

Mr. Kaplan: Whose fault is that?

Mr. Harding: Through you, Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. member does he think that when a school board has half a dozen men doing maintenance and repair work, such as building cabinets, shelves, cupboards, and things like that which remain in the schools, it should pay a 12 per cent sales tax?

Mr. Kaplan: Sure.

Mr. Harding: Well, I don't. These boards have these men on staff. If they have to move into a school and do a small amount of repair work, or put up shelves or trophy cases, why should they be charged sales tax? They are not selling these products outside the schools. They are not making any profit on them. These things are kept within the school district. The boards are asking for an exemption and, so far as I am concerned, should be given a 100 per cent exemption by the federal government.

Mr. Kaplan: Does the hon. member feel that a business, when it produces something that is used in the business, should not have to pay the same tax? Or does he feel that when a taxpayer produces something which he uses in his own business, and that has value, he should pay a tax on that increase in value? This tax theory is based on a very sound tax principle, and if it were otherwise you would create a disadvantage to conducting business in the most orderly and most economic way. Once that tax applies, it makes it harder for a company or business to put out a job as compared with doing the job itself. So, for the sake of neutrality the law provides that whether it does the job itself or gets a contractor to do it, the excise tax has to be paid. Why should a school board corporation be in any different position? I believe it should be in the same position.

Actually it would be better if taxes were lowered, but that is not the issue here. The issue is that the hon. member insists that it is unfair for taxes to be raised at the municipal or provincial level, and at the same time it is fair to raise taxes at the federal level. I would like him to try to convince me that there is some reason federal taxpayers, who are the same people as provincial and municipal taxpayers, should bear these burdens. I just cannot see it.

Mr. Harding: The hon. member asks whether I think we should treat an individual manufacturer the same as a school board. There is no comparison, Mr. Chairman. His suggestion is utter nonsense. A school board is forced to get revenues from the school district through what I consider to be a very regressive form of taxation, namely, taxation on property. They have a tough time to raise sufficient revenues to keep their operation going. I have here a resolution received from the British Columbia School Trustees Association which supports my point, and I quote:

> The BCSTA supports the principle that all expenditures for construction and operation of public schools are in the public interest, and should accordingly be exempted from all federal and provincial sales taxes.

If my friend does not take that stand we are back in the stone age and that is where he ought to be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has made one good point, that the school boards in some parts of this country are forced to depend on a very regressive tax system. But that is not the fault of this government. I cannot see why they should come to Ottawa and say that because the provinces apply a regressive tax system to school corporations, the federal government has some responsibility to make the laws here more complicated, more exemption-ridden, more full of loopholes for the sake of trying to redress a failing which is entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

After all, there is only one tax that the federal government can apply but the provincial governments cannot, and that is the customs tariff which is not an important source of revenue for the federal government. Apart from that, the provinces have the power to give the school boards the right to impose income tax, sales tax or any kind of tax that the federal government itself uses to raise money. I should like to see the hon. member opposite stiffen his backbone a bit with other levels of government who come asking for exemptions. He should tell them that they have a responsibility to raise money within their own jurisdiction for their own purposes.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, this is the last reply I am going to make. I would like to ask my Liberal friend from Don Valley if he puts hospitals in the same category as school boards. Hospital boards are exempt under the act and hospitals are financed by the same method as school boards but their expenditures are exempt from the excise tax. Hospitals are for use of the general public, and we say that school boards should be in the same category and be exempt too. Where does the hon. member stand on the hospital question? Is he opposed to that as well?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, like my hon. friend I shall refrain from further participation in this debate, and only answer that question by saying that there is a very big difference between the way the hospitals are funded and the way schools are funded. After all, hospitals have no taxing jurisdiction although perhaps they should. School boards have, and it is the responsibility of those levels of government that give school boards taxing jurisdiction and make them responsible for accountability to make sure that they have an adequate source of revenue and are financed in the proper way. I think they would be better off to do that than to find lobbyists in this House who try to argue that shifting money from one type of tax to another is somehow doing something for their constituents.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, in order to make the parliamentary secretary feel a little better I should like to ask if he would consider an additional area in which excise tax could be collected. Would he consider levying an excise tax on all election expenses of candidates of political parties?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to regard that suggestion as being a serious one, but there are a couple of others upon which I would comment. The hon. member for Crowfoot said that the committee should accept this amendment by way of expressing its opinion. I would suggest to the committee that an amendment to a tax bill is a rather unusual way of expressing an opinion. There is machinery in our Standing Orders to allow motions to be presented in the Private Members' hour or to allow supply day resolutions and things of that nature whereby the House can express its opinion without amending a tax bill.

The hon. member for Kootenay West has asked that I hold up the bill for a few seconds, I am afraid that even if I hold it up for many seconds I could not alter the budget speech of June 18, or the ways and means motion on which this bill is based, and my acquiescence with that particular suggestion would serve no useful purpose.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I could understand if in rising to oppose the amendment the parliamentary secretary had made some statement that the government was not in a position to accept it at this time or that the government did not have the imagination to consider it and so he had to oppose it but would give it some thought for the future. This would have been some kind of decision.

I regret that we have had the kind of debate which took place in the past few seconds with the interjection of the hon. member for Don Valley. I have not heard such an archaic argument for a long time. I am surprised at his plea for neutrality. That would have been more impressive if during the course of the tax debate I had heard him argue neutrality when it came to taxation of mining and resource industries. It seems to me he is a great defender of the special privileges enjoyed by the mining and resource industries and is prepared to give them the privilege of paying no tax at all to the federal government. What seems to bother him is that public expenditures might get some kind of break. He does not seem to object to the same thing for private expenditures. I am quite surprised at his attitude.

Let us go back to his argument regarding the taxing powers of provincial governments. I know he has quite a profound knowledge of the tax system, since he was one of the distinguished members of the House of Commons committee which studied it. He knows that there is a distribution of income that the federal government can make but the provincial governments cannot. Funds that are allocated by the federal government have an equalization action to them. It may be that Ontario does not require assistance from other provinces and, therefore, it could make some sense in Ontario to say let the provinces raise the revenue and redistribute it to the cities. But it still does not make any sense for the country as a whole, because many provinces need the redistribution effect that can only come from transfer payments at the federal level. When we argue for certain things at the federal level we are arguing for equality across the country, especially for those provinces not in a strong position or who do not have a strong tax base. The hon. member for Don Valley referred briefly to the regressive nature of municipal taxation. In some cases this and provincial taxation has a profound regressive effect which can only be overcome by assistance from the federal government.

I am disappointed at the hon. member's intervention. I could have understood if he had said "I am a backbencher and would like to support you but I do not want to get into trouble." That would have been a perfectly human kind of statement. Or if he had said "I think the parliamentary secretary who is leading this debate is in trouble and needs my assistance," I could have understood that, but when he tries to argue against the merit of the proposal before this House I think he is on shaky ground. Knowing him as a solid type of fellow, I am surprised that he saw fit to make this kind of intervention.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 4 carry?

Amendment (Mr. Skoberg) negatived: yeas, 21; nays, 52.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 4 carry?

On clause 4—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, there is one—

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Joliette rises on a point of order.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, I really have the feeling that I have not been counted among those in favour of the amendment. The names of 21 members have been listed and, including myself, I counted 22 members. It seems to me that they did not look in my direction.

The Deputy Chairman: The point raised by the hon. member is valid. The clerk of the House has drawn my attention to the fact that he did not list the hon. member among those who supported the amendment. That will be corrected.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to present a further amendment to this clause covering an area of the bill which has been overlooked. The hon. member for Selkirk yesterday made some pertinent remarks concerning an effective way of monitoring those products which are exempt from sales tax, in order to make sure that lower prices resulting from abolition or reduction of sales tax are passed on to purchasers of those products. I think members on both sides of the House will recall with some bitterness what happened when the government removed the tax on drugs. Some drug manufacturers, some wholesalers and some retailers almost immediately after the tax on drugs was reduced or eliminated began raising the price of drugs, the result being that within a matter of weeks or months the consumers of those drugs derived little or no benefit from the fact that certain taxes on those drugs had been removed. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this loophole needs to be corrected.

I wish to move an amendment to clause 4 which, if accepted, would permit the Minister of National Revenue to watch this aspect in an efficient and practical manner. That is to say, while enforcing the Excise Tax Act provisions and while collecting excise taxes, the minister could make sure that lower prices made possible by removing excise tax are passed on to the consumer. In order to try to accomplish what my colleague for Selkirk referred to yesterday, I wish to move:

That Clause 4 of Bill C-260 be amended by inserting therein, immediately after line 38 on page 3, the following additional sub-clause:

(5) In the case of any excise taxes eliminated by the provisions of this section, the Department of National Revenue shall make arrangements for monitoring procedures to ensure that the savings so effected accrue to the purchasers of products so exempted.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words to support the commendable amendment put forward by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. I think there is a compelling need for the kind of scrutiny called for by the amendment. If hon. members will recall some of the events that took place after the levels of excise tax imposed on drugs were changed, they will see the importance of introducing some mechanism for examining any changes in prices of products that may result from excise taxes being dropped or lowered. I well recall that while the excise tax was imposed on drugs, the manufacturers and others connected with the drug industry said that drug prices in Canada were high because of the high level of the excise tax on drugs. They suggested that if the government were to remove the excise tax on drugs, the price of drugs would drop substantially. It was always the excise tax that was the cause of problems connected with the drug industry.

We have heard the same arguments advanced regarding the high cost of construction. It has always been the excise tax on building materials that was to blame and never the price of land, never the speculation and never the interest rates. It was always the excise tax. On the surface, those arguments sound reasonable, because the excise tax represents a cost that is built into the cost of these goods. Yet, what do we find on close examination? Whenever the excise tax is removed, a new argument emerges. The people concerned say, "You see, we cannot drop the price by 10 per cent", and we must assume here that the tax of 10 per cent has been removed. They say, "We cannot possibly drop the price by that amount because, you see, we were about to increase prices by that exact amount. By removing the excise tax, you have enabled us to maintain the same price we charged before."

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Saltsman: It appears that that tax which previously was so horrible, and which was responsible for high prices, is no longer responsible for the high prices which must be charged. The excise tax, once it has been dropped, no longer looms as an important factor in the previous high prices. Very often the chief advantage, after excise taxes are dropped, accrues to the people connected with a particular industry, to the manufacturers and others, and not to the consumer. I think, if we examine the facts, we shall see that this situation has come about over and over again. After all, this matter affects the people of Canada. It is because the taxpayers of Canada are being asked to pay higher taxes in certain fields, namely, higher personal income taxes and perhaps increased corporate taxes, that the government is able to remove the excise tax from certain areas.

This tax has contributed immensely to the national revenues. If taxpayers are being asked to pay increased personal income taxes in order to permit the lowering of certain prices to the consumer, I submit that we should make sure that the lower prices made possible by the elimination or reduction of excise taxes are passed on to the consumer. Until now there has been no evidence to indicate that this has been the case. It should not be necessary for a representative of the government to stand up and say, "Yes, we think this is a worthwhile suggestion and we shall consider it." After all, when tax reductions are not passed on, the government's own plans are frustrated. The government merely suggests that it is serving notice, through the reduction of excise taxes, that it wants price reductions passed on to the consumer. After that the whole thing sort of peters out, and nothing comes of it. I have yet to hear of any minister coming to the House and saying, "I have conducted a thorough investigation in this field and am satisfied that the amount of excise tax which has been taken off a product has been passed on to the consumer." These savings simply get lost in the shuffle.

I would think that a government that was interested in the consumer, and was interested in seeing that the taxes that were foregone resulted in lower prices, would be very pleased to have one of its representatives rise in the House today, if not to support the amendment, at least to say the government was going to ask its members to agree in principle that such a monitoring agency is important. This House should be given the assurance that it will be done. If they are not prepared to give that assurance, we can only assume they really do not care what happens to government revenues, and they are indifferent to the effects that these changes in tariffs have on the economy of the country.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the hon. member's amendment. There is not a member of this House who does not sympathize with the case put forward, the concern that tax reductions are not passed on to the public. This particular industry seems to be especially guilty in this respect. There are one or two aspects of the amendment that give me concern. First, it gives a direction to the Department of National Health and Welfare to undertake a price monitoring activity.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Francis: I am sorry, I misunderstood. I do not have the wording in front of me. In that case, I will amend what I was going to say. It does, however, introduce a price regulation, an examination function of government activity. I do not know how the government ensures that certain price reductions as a result of tax changes are passed on to the consumer in a period of inflation. Certainly the labour cost element, and the hon. member who proposed the motion, supported by sections of organized labour who have refused to co-operate in any attempts at price stabilization in this country in any official sense—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Francis: This is true. The hon. member who proposed the amendment must realize that in a period of inflation there is a major difficulty in trying to bring about price stability in that area. It is not a case of black and white. It is not a case of wicked manufacturers or wicked druggists dispensing at the retail level being solely responsible for gouging the poor, innocent consumer. The Lord knows our drug prices are too high. Canada's record in this regard is not good enough. However, creating a price monitoring agency for various price changes should not be faced piecemeal. It should be faced with an overall responsibility. It will require the co-operation of organized labour as well as other spokesmen in the community to be effective.

I like to think that the hon. member who so ably proposed this amendment this afternoon will go to the spokesmen for organized labour and say that the entire community has to carry the responsibility for price stability and price reductions, not just certain sections of it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, outside of that portion of section 4 which removes the sales tax on margarine products, can the parliamentary secretary advise the procedures that will be followed by manufacturers in availing themselves of the exemption that is now being created for them with respect to equipment they will use in controlling pollution arising out of the production of their goods? Will this be on a drawback system or will they be issued a licence by the Minister of National Revenue which, on presentation, will entitle them to purchase the good tax free? I am concerned that this amendment, which is strictly limited to those items in clause 4 of this bill, will in any event be covered by the procedures of the Department of National Revenue.

If the manufacturer must apply for a drawback, he is going to get the whole benefit of the removal or exemption of the sales tax on the equipment in question. It is not as though they become shelf goods at a price sold by the vendor. I can understand that there are difficulties with regard to drugs or margarine, but I do not know what the supermarkets will do with regard to the difference in pricing that will arise out of the removal of sales tax on margarine. Some part of it they may have kept, and some part they may have passed on to the consumers. However, in the case of manufacturers buying this specific equipment, is their particular exemption in the form of a drawback? Is it obtained through the furnishing of a licence? Do they get the benefit of the removal of all the sales tax which would otherwise be payable on goods?

Mr. Mahoney: If I understand the hon. member correctly, Mr. Chairman, the situation he describes is one that will be covered by a licence. The party selling the goods will sell it to someone who has a licence and certifies it is being used for the appropriate use. Therefore, no tax would be collected and no drawback would be involved.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): To that extent, under that procedure, is it felt that the whole of the reduction in the tax paid price is given to the purchaser of the goods? The amendment states "the savings so effected accrue to the purchasers of products so exempted." In the particular case of these manufacturers who buy this antipollution equipment, are they or are they not getting the whole of the benefit of the reduction as a result of taking off the tax?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, in the case of antipollution equipment, the person buying it from the manufacturer would ordinarily be either a contractor for or the person who would be using it himself in the future. In either case, the excise tax should not be reflected in the purchase price originally because he has a licence and certifies that he is using it for an exempt purpose.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Amendment (Mr. Benjamin) negatived: yeas, 16; nays, 55.

Bill reported.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Hon. Alistair Gillespie (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to a good deal of discussion on aspects of municipal participation in the field of pollution control. The concessions which have been made to industry have been considered by the committee and by the House, and have been praised as being worthwhile. Hon. members have argued that similar consideration should be extended to that other major partner in the pollution field, the municipalities.

The municipalities have asked for concessions in connection with sales tax not only with respect to antipollution equipment but with respect to the materials used for municipal development generally. It is evident that the interests of the municipalities in controlling pollution and protecting the environment coincide with those of the provincial and federal governments, not to speak of the interests of the public as a whole. It has been our opinion that municipalities should be given full relief in respect to all pollution control activities in which they participate. It is true that sales tax is already being waived with respect to the purchase of certain types of equipment. Nevertheless, the municipalities are now entering into other fields, and if they are to succeed, their activities need the same favourable climate as the government is now offering to manufacturers.

In the course of the debate today several hon. members sought to show that industry was in a more favourable taxation position than were the municipalities, that the municipalities were really operating under a system of double taxation; an individual was obliged to pay tax to a municipality which, in turn, had to pay sales tax to the federal government in connection with goods used by the municipality and by the school board.

It may well be that in opening up the subject of sales tax generally, we in this party were handicapped by decisions reached by civil servants to the effect that only certain concessions could be made available at this time. Nevertheless, I submit that the arguments put forward today by a number of hon. members, prompted by representations made by those in the municipal field, are worthy of serious consideration.

On the government side, there appears to be an unwillingness to face the consequences of certain changes which are taking place. Consider, for example, the position of school boards which have amalgamated in order, among other things, to save expense on purchasing and maintenance. The limit of $3,000 on the exemption available to a very small school would certainly not be adequate to reflect the scale of operations of a much larger amalgamated school board. I point out that these particular operations do not interfere with any local industry or prejudice the jobs of local workmen. They are engaged in only to simplify the operation of supply and maintenance. All these arguments have been legitimately put forward, and they are deserving of consideration. If it were not for the Christmas spirit I would certainly consider moving that this question be referred back to the committee for further study. It is unlikely, though, that the parliamentary secretary would give any consideration to changing the legislation at this late date. After all, the bill before us goes back to July, 1971 and its provisions will apply fully in January, 1972. The hon. member would probably argue, with some reason, that there is now no time left in which to make major changes in the Excise Tax Act which would provide for concessions to be made to municipalities, school boards and other agencies.

I make a plea to the minister to consider in the near future making concessions to the municipalities which would enable them to engage fully in the work of pollution control. If there is anything in which young people today are interested collectively it is probably in some method of ending our destruction of the environment. Without a doubt we have gone through more resources in the last 20 years than the whole world had done in all the time which existed prior to that point. Young people today are identifying pollution as one of the major problems they have to face. Ten years ago our children were worried about the atomic bomb. They were saying there was no future for them because eventually the bomb would be dropped and we would all go up in smoke. Our young people do not feel this way today. They feel they have inherited a world that is badly polluted, an environment that has been destroyed. Our urban centres are not what our young people wish to have.

Much of the abuse of the environment stems from our inability to control pollution. Looking at the Ottawa River which flows past the Parliament Buildings we find water that is repulsive to drink. Indeed, it might be medically unsafe. Certainly, it has been medically unsafe at times to swim in it. It is true that some pollution comes from Renfrew and Pembroke which have industrial centres, and some comes from Timiskaming's pulp mill. Almost all of the pollution from the head of Lake Timiskaming, where I live, to the Ottawa River comes from human waste.

It seems to me we should make every concession possible to enable municipalities to purchase and instal pollution control equipment. We have an obligation to put the best brains in the National Research Council to work finding much better ways of handling sewage. In some other countries sewage has been turned into a very valuable commodity. With the technology available in the world today we could provide modern utilities to reclaim a great deal of value from sewage. We could return the water to the river almost pure enough to drink, and that would certainly eliminate pollution in the Ottawa River.

The reason the municipalities do not do this is money. What facilities there are are insufficient. We have put up money to construct lagoons, but in most areas these lagoons do not function properly. As most hon. members know, a lagoon is really a septic tank or pond into which you pump sewage. The water evaporates but eventually the pond fills up with solids and you have to construct another pond. In my particular area we have 37 inches of rain a year. If it were not for the thermal heat units in the area we would be hard pressed to evaporate 37 inches of water. About as much water is added to the lagoon in the form of precipitation as is extracted by evaporation. For six months out of the year the water freezes over, and obviously no evaporation takes place. If there is any runoff in the spring the pond overflows into the river, and the waste comes once again into the Ottawa River system.

The taxpayers have been paying a small fortune for these ponds and for the sewage systems that pipe the effluent into the ponds. Yet I doubt that anyone has done any work on their feasibility for northern Ontario. The idea originated in the southern United States where I imagine about 200 inches of water evaporates every year. Although it is a good idea down there it is not so good when applied to northern Ontario. When people in northern Ontario ask their municipality for clean water, the water resources board of Ontario supplies a unit. I have attended the opening of several of these units, elaborate buildings, the grounds all nicely sodded, flags out front and so on. Water is taken out of some sewage laden lake, processed in the plant, and water sold to people on the street at a higher price than water from spring wells which have been used for 20 to 30 years.

My point is that we have not made sufficient effort to correct the situation. We still hear Members of Parliament saying that there should be a sales tax on that equipment.

Mr. Whelan: There is no sales tax on that sort of thing.

Mr. Peters: Yes, there is. We have just been debating an amendment that would remove this tax from various items.

Mr. Whelan: A sales tax on sewage treatment plants?

Mr. Peters: Yes, and on recycling plants and reclamation plants. Cement sewage pipes are exempt, as are some other pieces of sewage control equipment such as valves, and so on. But this type of equipment is very old. The sort of equipment I am talking about is modern and technically advanced. It not only processes sewage but reclaims what is of value, which is then used for other purposes. In other words, this sewage is recycled and reused, instead of being filtered, certain solids removed and the rest dumped into the river. As long as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) believes that we have done all we can in this field, he is justified in the vote he cast earlier this afternoon which indicated his unwillingness to help municipalities.

Mr. Whelan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: I must admit I do not understand the position he took—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Essex is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is putting words into my mouth which I do not intend to accept. He said that I condoned this sort of thing. In my own municipality I attended the opening of a new sewage plant, as modern a plant as can be built today. Most of the equipment in the plant was tax exempt and always has been tax exempt. I have been instrumental in getting government money to build the plant in my constituency. If anything has been over-emphasized, it is what the hon. member and his party have stated today, namely that this sort of equipment is not tax exempt. Practically all pollution control equipment today is exempt from tax.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether that was a point of order, a question of privilege, or the hon. member's contribution to this debate today. If I would not be out of order, I would be prepared to tell him just what is exempt from the excise tax. There are about 12 items all of which are clearly stated. They are not related to the monitoring devices that are necessary in controlling pollution. They do not have relation to the recycling devices that are available. Nor are they what I consider to be the new advances in technology in the field of pollution control.

An advantage would be provided to the municipalities by the establishment of a plant which would in effect sort out the various nutrients in the sewage, recycle it and obtain some gain thereby. Because this was not understood I can sympathize with the vote of some hon. members. However, I believe this is a matter to which the government should give consideration. It is also a matter which I hope some of the officials of the department will consider. I am well aware of the fact that many of the municipalities that would bother to take advantage of the anti-pollution devices would find advantage in reclaiming those wastes.

I hope to see the day when the municipalities will be in a position to adapt the reclaiming process to automobiles. This has not been considered by the manufacturers. It has not been really considered in any shape or form by any segment of that industry. Old automobiles are becoming a large source of pollution in the municipalities. The municipalities have great difficulty in disposing of this pollutant. I am quite sure that if efforts were made we could find a way to use even this pollutant, which probably more than anything else destroys the aesthetic appearance of the area. Perhaps this objective could be achieved by the recycling process, and if so we might be able to obtain some money from these old wrecks we see lying around the country.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Whelan: I should like to ask the hon. member if he is aware of the fact that the federal government has already invested $10 million in a plant for the purpose of doing what he has been talking about, the recycling of automobile bodies. An amount of $30 million of the taxpayers' money and the money of private individuals has been invested in such a plant. Even with all the brains of Ph.D's and so on it has been found that this will not work. This plant is sitting idle. I look at it through my window every day. But the idea had been to use these wrecks for the production of iron powder. That plant never went into production even though there has been an investment of $30 million. It is said that $5 million more is necessary to make it work. A great amount of money has been spent and they still do not know how to accomplish their purpose. I wondered if the hon. member was aware of this.

Mr. Peters: I am aware of it now. I certainly appreciate the fact that the government has spent this money on this pollutant. If the parliamentary secretary is prepared to move that a sum of money be allocated for this purpose, I would be prepared to support him at this time because I believe this is a very large source of pollution for which a use should be found. It is very interesting to drive down some of the major highways, such as 401 for example, and see under an overpass a car parked with its tires off. Such cars are abandoned and someone has to take them away. They become a pollutant in our environment which is exceedingly difficult to remove.

When I began it was my intention to refer to the fact that the House, in its wisdom, decided in committee not to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) who is very interested in this subject of pollution and the problems the municipalities encounter every time they pay a tax to the government on something that is being made by one of their agencies. I suggest that pollution control is a major element in the costs of the municipalities. Those costs increase as we demand more and more efficient control of our environment. I think the government can make a contribution by removing the taxes the municipalities must pay, and I applaud the government today for allowing industry and manufacturers to be exempt from taxes in respect of pollution control equipment. I hope that other members will see fit to continue our efforts on behalf of those who labour so hard in the municipal field, so the municipalities will have a concession from the federal government and Canada can be made a cleaner place in which to live.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Fisheries—Selkirk fish plant—inquiry as to possible closing; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Youth—Opportunities for Youth Program—writing of evaluation report by private consulting firm—selection of projects for analysis.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie (for the minister of Finance), for the third reading of Bill C-260, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, this particular topic pursued by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) and others has properly been very thoroughly examined. My intervention in this debate will not be lengthy. However, in saying that I must also put forward a point that there has been a great deal of debate all this fall on a number of topics much of which has been repetitive. I feel that, as a member, I am entitled to some time this afternoon to speak on behalf of the municipalities I represent in the Fraser Valley. The hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned the good work the municipal officers and elected officials have done. He also mentioned the massive costs faced by the municipalities because of the extra services they are asked to provide which were not necessary when many municipalities were part of an agrarian society. Now, with greater technology and the movement to major cities the costs have intensified. The taxing power of the municipalities, however, has not kept pace.

In fact, I believe it is fair to say that the more dense the population of any municipality the higher the per capita cost faced by that municipality. I have some familiarity with this having at one time served on a municipal council. With the best will in the world, I think the members of that council were very conscious of the fact, living on the banks of the Fraser and concerned with environmental and sewage problems of that municipality and those surrounding, that they should do something about this problem of antipollution and pollution abatement. The point is, however, that we did not really accomplish this although we did establish a sewer system. Most of the sewage went to its destination in Burrard Inlet or the Fraser River without the benefit of even primary treatment.

So when we are talking about cleaning up our environment we are talking about costs facing cities and municipalities across the country. Of the nine municipalities that I represent in the Lower Fraser I do not know one that is not dumping raw sewage into either the Fraser or Burrard Inlet. We are a little hypocritical about this. When the government appoints, perhaps for appearances only, a new ministry called the ministry of the environment, that looks great. But we are not serious about this, because the government makes this appointment in the hope that perhaps we can clean up our environment and take steps to curtail its constant erosion caused by technology and increased population, and this looks great, but it is only a public relations job if we do not also assist, through taxation and other measures, the various levels of government which can take the steps necessary to clean up the environment.

Last night on CBC there was an excellent documentary at 10 p.m. to 10.30 p.m., I believe. It dealt with the interrelated problems of food chains, the population explosion and pollution. Anybody who watched that program knows that many people are concerned that, if we persist in the expansionist-minded preoccupation with the GNP, technology, crowding, population explosion and all the rest of it, we will prove that Malthus was right and that ultimately we are leading toward the destruction of human life on this planet.

I feel as strongly about the kind of thing we might be doing here to combat pollution as I do about the lunacy of the nuclear arms race, regardless of which country happens to be engaged in it at the moment. If we are really serious about attempting to make the world a more liveable place for perhaps another generation or two, then we most devote considerable funds to our fight against pollution. It makes no sense to me to be encouraging the municipalities, through the Department of the Environment, on the one hand to clean up their own backyards and on the other to deny them federal assistance through tax laws to do it. It is contradictory.

We have done the same thing with the Canada Water Act which, incidentally, was passed approximately two years ago. Not one river basin board has been developed in any province since then; but what is worse, we have done something similar to what we are doing here. We have set up the Canada Water Act and the particular agency to administer the act, without providing one cent of federal funds to assist in the cleaning up of the various river basins so as to achieve decent water standards across Canada. So we are not talking about piddling or insignificant things here. It is not just a matter of whether or not we should give a tax break on some sewer pipe to some municipality, which the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) says is tax free anyway, but we are attempting to reflect the whole concern of our party and the people we represent and, I am sure, members on all sides of the House, about where we are going environmentally.

The parliamentary secretary says, "I agree with you, but why pick on my bill?" We all want to get it over with and go home for Christmas. My reply to him is there may not be too many Christmases if we continue with this kind of lunacy. Every year for the four years I have been here this House has been subjected to these Christmas cliff-hangers. We can plan everything else, but just before Christmas we do not know about the DND planes and whether we will be here between Christmas and New Year. Surely, with this great group of planners, an automated and computerized society and our new committee system, we should be able to organize things so as to have a reasonable foreknowledge of when we are going to start the session and when we are going to end it. These cliff-hangers have gone on long enough.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The parliamentary secretary wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Mahoney: Would the hon. member accept a question? Would he not agree that if it were not for Christmas he would be making the same complaint about Good Friday?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I hope that next time the parliamentary secretary will not raise a question on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: I would tell the parliamentary secretary in reply that I hope this debate will not last until Good Friday. I would also tell him that probably I have a more profound respect for this important religious holiday than he has.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Look at the halo.

Mr. Rose: My next few words are words which usually bring applause. In conclusion—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: —if I may be so bold as to correct the hon. member for Essex, when he alleged inaccurately in speaking to the hon. member for Timiskaming that practically all anti-pollution equipment is tax free, I say to him that if this is the case, why is it that such an august body as the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities as recently as December 23, 1971—which is pretty recent since it is this coming Thursday—has issued a release under that date in which they quote their representations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on the matter of tax exemptions on this kind of equipment. They received a reply which I suppose they consider to be equivocal and evasive—those are my words not theirs—and conclude by saying:

> We are convinced that, in the interest of the objectives subscribed to, Bill C-260 has to be amended to extend to municipalities the same privileges that are given manufacturers and producers.

Obviously they must have some complaint or they would not have gone to the trouble of seeking an amendment to this bill to provide more funds for anti-pollution equipment. I think all they are asking for is equity with manufacturers. For the hon. member to assert that all this equipment is tax free is irrational and inaccurate. I am surprised that he said this.

Mr. Whelan: May I ask the hon. member a question? How can we give a municipality the same concession as is given to industry, because industry can write off any equipment in two years, and municipalities are not in business. I would tell the hon. member that I was a member of the organization to which he referred.

Mr. Rose: I am not prepared for the moment to argue with that kind of smokescreen. Clause 4 (2) (b) reads:

> Machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them directly—

Municipalities want the same right, and that is all we are talking about. They do not have that right at the moment. Regardless of that right, we have lost on this particular occasion. But I think it is important to say these things because it is absolutely hypocritical on the one hand to decide that we want a clean environment and a fine life on this planet for our children, and on the other hand to deny municipalities, with their limited tax base, access to tax free pollution control equipment.

Municipalities do not have the resources that the federal government has. Their money comes from property taxation. I would not like to be responsible for denying them the right to clean-up their urban areas.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in the space of about 15 seconds I would like to reply to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) who talked about the "nonsensical" type of amendment that was introduced. I tell him that we were perfectly aware that we could not move an amendment to a clause that was not before the House.

Last evening, and again this afternoon, we asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to give serious consideration to the representation of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities all across Canada. This is not the time to relegate municipalities to the status of second-class citizens. I repeat, the government should give serious consideration to the federation's representation. I hope this leads to the government introducing an amendment to Bill C-260.

If there has been any nonsense, it has been on the part of the government which failed to accede to the federation's representation. In the spirit of Christmas I hope that the parliamentary secretary will urge on the Minister of Finance the importance of introducing an amendment that will really mean something to Canadian municipalities.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have not previously advised the Clerk that consultations have resulted in a desire to deal now with Bill S-9, the Copyright Act.

COPYRIGHT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RECORDS, PERFORATED ROLLS OR OTHER CONTRIVANCES FOR MECHANICALLY REPRODUCING SOUND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-9, an Act to amend the Copyright Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved:

That Bill S-9, an Act to amend the Copyright Act, be amended by deleting from Clause 1 lines 15 to 23 inclusive and substituting therefor:

"(4) "Copyright" in respect of the contrivances mentioned in the preceding sub-section shall have the meaning ascribed to it by sub-section (1) of section 3 of this Act with the exception of the sole rights to perform the contrivance or any substantial part thereof in public or to communicate the contrivance by radio communication."

[English]

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is a technical one, not substantive. Its purpose is to assure that following the passage of Bill S-9 record producers will be left with the right to protect themselves against record piracy and/or unlawful reproduction and distribution of their products.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) stated in the committee that he wants to protect record producers against this type of piracy, that he wants them to retain all their other rights under copyright except performing rights. There is no disagreement between the minister and myself on substance but we do disagree on the wording of the bill.

After repeated examination of the bill I am convinced that the words in it do not protect the record producers against piracy. The minister and his advisers say that the words in the bill do protect them. Our disagreement is on legal drafting and it is an important disagreement. It is important because if the bill is passed in its present form it will not only take away the record producers' performing rights but also many of the other rights that protect them against record piracy. I shall explain this in greater detail.

Under the Copyright Act, section 4(3), record producers are given the protection of copyright. In order to determine the meaning of copyright for record producers under that section we have to look at the definition section, which is section 3(1). Under that section we find that copyright comprises a package of four more basic rights—the right to produce, the right to reproduce, the right to perform, and the right to publish. This means that no one but the holder of the copyright can produce the work, reproduce the work, perform the work, or publish the work unless the holder of the copyright grants a licence to another person to do these things, or unless royalties are paid to the holder.

These are the rights which a record producer presently holds under the Copyright Act. Now the minister has decided that it is not proper for record producers to have performing rights under the Copyright Act and he introduces this bill to take away that right. But what does he do? Instead of leaving the record producers all their copyright rights under section 3(1) except performing rights, he takes away all their rights under that section in section 1(4) of Bill S-9 a new definition of copyright for records. The definition says that for records copyright will mean the sole right to reproduce.

In other words, if Bill S-9 passes, the only right under copyright retained for record producers will be the right to reproduce. Whereas the record producers had four basic rights under the Copyright Act, under Bill S-9 they will have only one basic right, the right to reproduce, and this despite the fact that the government said it wanted to take away only one right. If we are interested in taking away only one right, the performing right, they should be left with three rights, the right to produce, the right to reproduce, and the right to publish. Why is the government leaving them with only one right? I can say that by taking away the production and publishing rights in addition to the performing right, Bill S-9 seriously handicaps the record producers in protecting themselves against record piracy.

This handicap is confirmed by the provisions in the recent treaty against record piracy which was concluded in Geneva on October 29, 1971. This treaty was signed by Canada. Section 2 of the treaty provides that each signatory state shall protect the record producer against reproduction and importation for distribution. After the passage of Bill S-9 Canadian record producers will have protection against reproduction but not against importation for redistribution. One wonders how the Canadian government can sign a treaty saying one thing and then introduce a bill saying another thing.

Furthermore, in attempting to accomplish the same goal the United States Congress passed a bill, U.S.646, on November 15, 1971, providing protection against reproduction and distribution. Bill S-9 provides protection only against reproduction. To correct this defect in Bill S-9 I have introduced the amendment before the House which would leave the record producers all the rights they presently possess under section 3(1) of the Copyright Act except performing rights and radio broadcasting rights. I have included broadcasting rights because the broadcasting companies are most concerned. My amendment reads:

That Bill S-9, an act to amend the Copyright Act, be amended by deleting from clause 1 lines 15 to 23 inclusive and substituting therefor:

(4) "Copyright" in respect of the contrivances mentioned in the preceding subsection shall have the meaning ascribed to it by subsection (1) of section 3 of this act with the exception of the sole rights to perform the contrivance or any substantial part thereof in public or to communicate the contrivance by radio communication.

I say, let us leave the record producers all the rights they presently have except the right to perform and broadcast. In conclusion, I repeat that my amendment does nothing to change the principal purpose of this bill. It does, however, attempt to protect record producers in Canada against piracy of their works which the minister himself said he wishes to protect. I hope the government and the House will see fit to pass this amendment and grant justice to the record producers of this country.

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-9 before the House was introduced in Parliament over a year ago. Because it is extremely short one would think it would be extremely simple. However, this is not the case and a great deal of parliamentary time and consideration has been given to this conceptually difficult legislation before appearing here for third reading. I want to thank members on all sides of the House for their willingness to deal with this legislation and for the help they provided in committee.

This is a most difficult area of law, perhaps because it deals with rights in respect of intellectual property. At the present time authors and composers of music have, and exercise, the right to extract money from radio and television stations and a whole host of other organizations that use music commercially, as payment for the use of their intellectual works. In 1967, the eight very large, foreign-owned record companies that produce 90 per cent of the records sold in Canada each year claimed the same right. They asked for a fee that would have had the effect of extracting about $4 million per year from the Canadian broadcasting industry.

The government had serious misgivings about this application, for three reasons. First, it was felt that this was wrong in principle, that while authors and composers have no other way of receiving fair remuneration for their work except fees for their public performance, the record industry does very well from the sale of records. Second, the government had referred the whole question of intellectual and industrial property to the Economic Council for review in 1966 and it was reluctant to see a new performing right exercised in the interim. Third, it was felt that the Canadian broadcasting industry, which bears great responsibility for the achievement of national goals in Canada as a matter of public policy, should not be required also to bear these extra costs—needless and unfair extra costs, in my view.

SRL withdrew their 1969 and 1970 tariff of fees but went ahead late last year with a tariff for 1971. The government met this with Bill S-9. Subsequently, the Economic Council reported and recommended the abolition of a performing right in records. Bill S-9 was considered at length by committees of both the Senate and the House of Commons. Every interest has been heard with regard to this legislation and, I might add, heard at length. I am opposed to the amendment which has been proposed.

It was suggested at the last minute that Bill S-9 removed more rights than it purported to do and affected more than merely the performing right in records. This was a matter of great concern, and to be absolutely certain that these allegations were without foundation the officials of the department were instructed to meet with representatives of those opposing the passage of the bill to consider the legal argument they were putting forward. As well, the advice of the Department of Justice was requested. I should add that we have several of the country's leading specialists in this field employed as consultants to the department. They were unanimous in their unequivocal endorsation of Bill S-9 as it presently stands. Furthermore, this position was fully supported by the considered opinion of the law officers of the Department of Justice.

I want to assure the House that Bill S-9 is designed solely to remove the alleged performing right in sound recordings and that the wording used does precisely what it purports to do, and nothing more. Allegations that this legislation, when enacted, would promote infringement of sound recordings have no substance in fact.

Two other points were raised in the Justice Committee and I would like to allude to them. First is the concern expressed by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) regarding the inequitable position of performers. The Copyright Act is now being revised, and I think the minister expressed his concern and his sympathy for the position of the performers and stated quite unequivocally that the point made by Mr. Dodge of the CLC and by the hon. member will be kept in mind during the revision of the act.

This legislation is effective from January 1 this year, and some have argued that this has the taint of retroactivity. I dispute this because the record manufacturers have at all times known, and have been on notice, that the government would not stand idly by should they press their case for a tariff before the Copyright Act revision was before this House. When they did so last year, the government introduced this legislation and the parties affected were clearly aware of the fact that any performing right they had would be removed, effective January 1.

As an example of what might be considered retroactive legislation, a budget speech may not be followed by legislation for several months yet it is from the date of the budget speech that the legislation is made effective. This legislation is no different. Parliament has the power to specify when an act shall come into force, and while the legislation can have no effect until passed, public notice of the date intended for commencement was given so that persons could adjust their affairs if they wished.

Mr. Speaker, this bill received a detailed hearing in the Senate and was considered at length by a committee of this House. Its full implications were considered by the Deputy Minister of Justice and by his officers, as well as by the department's officials and consultants. I commend this legislation to the House.

Mr. McCleave: Six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues in the official opposition have agreed that there shall be one speaker only on Bill S-9. It seems most convenient to make that speech at the report stage, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) having pretty well put the issue before us with his amendment. I hope that I will be allowed to make the whole speech and then have it done with.

I think it will please all members of the House when I say that Canadian talent does reap its own reward and that last year, and I am speaking of the full calendar year, over $5.5 million was paid by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and various stations which make up the Canadian Association of Broadcasters to the artists, performers and composers of Canada. That is how much the Canadian broadcasting industry paid to these people. Clearly, artistic merit in this country is recognized substantially.

The issue that we are concerned about does not involve directly, although it might indirectly, the authors, composers and publishers as such. What it does involve is whether performing rights such as I have mentioned should be extended to the broadcasting or other public performance of recordings. It is this issue which brings Bill S-9 before the House. Is the right to broadcast or play recordings in public a proper right?

It has been argued, Sir, that if I am an automobile dealer and I decide to sell you an automobile and somebody else an automobile for the same price, I cannot, if the other purchaser decides to use that automobile in the taxi business, say to him, "Since you will make extra money out of this automobile which you are to use for commercial purposes I can, therefore, charge you extra for it." That, substantially, is the position the recording companies are asking us to adopt when they ask us to defeat Bill S-9. I say, on my own behalf and on behalf of my associates, that we reject that position of the recording companies. I want that clear on the record. We reject that position and therefore we are fundamentally in agreement with the principles set forth in Bill S-9. Let there be no mistake about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: Later in my speech, which will be remarkably brief, I will point out what I think was the error in the presentation of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. Nevertheless, we owe him a debt since at least he has put the issue before us and has presented in the best possible way one side of the argument. It does not appear that many support this position.

We find ourselves in distinguished company in rejecting the position of the recording industry and its friends. One could go back to someone with whom older parliamentarians in this House served, namely, J. L. Ilsley, one time member for Annapolis-Kings, and subsequently Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. In 1957 he brought in a far reaching report on copyright. He headed a royal commission on copyright. The Ilsley commission, in dealing with an issue similar to the one before us tonight recommended in part:

> The act restricted by the copyright in a sound recording should be the making of a record embodying the record.

In other words, as suggested earlier by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Tolmie), the only right that should be protected is the right to reproduce. I think that is an important argument because, as the mover of the amendment has suggested and as the spate of telegrams which has arrived in the last couple of days has suggested, the piracy that takes place in the reproduction of records can be cured if we reject the principle of Bill S-9. I hope I can show in my speech that this argument is utterly fallacious. In any event, those who agree with Bill S-9 find themselves in good company, not only with the Ilsley Royal Commission on Copyright but with the report of the Economic Council of Canada. I quote a portion of that report which deals with this matter:

> We continue to accept the concept of a performing right in the basic material because this is the only way in which a writer of such materials can get payment related to the use of his work in the market. The record maker on the other hand, in spite of many creative inputs by his staff, is really in the business of selling a physical item such as a disc or tape and it is this activity that should reimburse him.

I think that puts the point very well. I mentioned telegrams. I think it should go on record that counsel for the main opponent of this bill, in a last effort to hold off passage of Bill S-9, telephoned the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). I quote from his telegram:

> —it was prepared not to exercise any of the rights which it presently enjoys under the Canadian Copyright Act pending a complete revision of the said act.

This is their latest position. It is an attempt to hold off passage of Bill S-9. I understand the minister is ill and cannot be here. I take it from the fact the measure was called and we are now debating it that the government has in fact rejected this last-ditch effort of the opponents of the bill. The parliamentary secretary indicates that this is precisely the position.

It does not disturb me very much that such an attempt was turned down. I think we are proceeding on the right course of principle. In my opinion, there is no reason to accept such a request. I do not think the right should have existed in the first place, if in fact it does exist under the present law. I am not prepared to concede that. The issue was never determined in the courts. I think we are bound on the right course. My conscience will not give me a twinge because I support the passage of Bill S-9.

I am sure the parliamentary secretary will take this message to his minister. We have been told over and over again in various committees, particularly the broadcasting committee, when dealing with performing rights and the creative abilities of Canadian artists, that there is desperate need for a new Copyright Act in Canada. The Economic Council of Canada has released its recent study. I hope we can expect some action in regard to the Copyright Act.

I think in a moment or two I will be able to point out that the piracy argument, while a fallacious one with regard to the principle we are studying this evening still deserves some kind of answer. In the Globe and Mail, the second last page of the entertainment section, there is an article from Hollywood about the millions of dollars lost to record pirates. This points out the problem in the American recording industry. One witness who appeared before the justice committee said that as much as 25 per cent of the material sold as records in Canada represented pirate material. These were tapes brought across the American border. Believe it or not, most of our taping is done in the United States. As much as 25 per cent of the Canadian record industry can be said to be based on pirate operations. There is need for enforcement in that field.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce spoke about piratical operations. There is a provision in the Copyright Act to deal with that. It is a question of better enforcement. During the discussion in committee, the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. A. M. Laidlaw, was faced with this argument about pirates. He said, as recorded at page 51 of issue No. 43 of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs:

—that right is derived from the fact that the manufacturer gets the right to produce either from the composer by the assignment of that right, or secondly through compulsory licensing provisions which are set out in section 19 of the act.

The hon. member can look there for the remedies that the recording industry now have and enjoy. The point about piracy was made by myself in an exchange with Mr. Laidlaw. I quote from the following page:

MR. MCCLEAVE: Could I boil it down? It seems to me that the one fact we are faced with here is no matter what SRL has as its interpretation of the law there is no change made whatsoever by what we are being asked to pass. Am I correct in saying no change whatsoever? If they were in trouble before, they will be in trouble in the future, but that is up to a better revision of copyright law. Am I correct in stating it that way?

MR. LAIDLAW: That is correct.

MR. BASFORD: And better enforcement.

That is the problem. It is not to put something new in the law, as suggested by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, but to put bigger teeth in the law, have a better method of enforcement or a higher penalty so that it is worth while tracking down the people who engage in pirate operations. I suspect that what is happening in Canada, with the remarkable amount of high-priced talent engaged on both sides of the issue and some considerable lobbying on both sides, is some sort of trial run for events in much larger markets such as the United States, West Germany and the United Kingdom. I am suspicious when I see counsel, who normally earn $1,000 an hour on enterprises like this, standing around. I do not think they are here for the amount of money that can be gained, even if the recording industry in Canada is successful against the broadcasting industry. The chips on the table are of such a size that we can imagine there is a far greater gain involved.

There is a provision in the bill that would make this law retroactive to January 1, 1971. If the recording industry had a right which it tried to exercise this year, that right would be wiped out by the retroactive provision that we have in this law. My colleagues and I resisted that in the committee. If the House were proceeding at a different time of year I would found my doubts in a motion to strike out that part of the law. However, we are getting near the end of the session and Parliament can only do so much.

I talked this matter over with the recording industry. They are not so concerned about the difference a year will make as they are with winning the whole ball game. They are not going to win the whole ball game, so I do not feel too badly about not putting the issue to the House. The issue of retroactivity was well scouted in the Justice committee. My colleagues and I put forth the best arguments we could. When the matter was put to a vote after several hours, we stood alone; we could not persuade others of the righteousness of our cause.

I know my colleagues would want me to say, in the one speech to be made on this bill on behalf of my party, that in this regard the principle is the same: we are unalterably opposed to the imposition of retroactive provisions which could take a possible existing right and remove it by act of Parliament. We generally approve the principle of the bill and accordingly wish it to become the law of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to say a few words concerning Bill S-9, entitled an Act to amend the Copyright Act. I leafed through the proceedings of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which devoted several meetings to consideration of the bill to amend the Copyright Act, and I was very much impressed by the convincing evidence given to that committee by some organizations and individuals.

I also received many representations from people directly or indirectly affected by Bill S-9, and I came to the conclusion that we should support the bill under study.

The bill is simple, I think. It concerns the removal from the act of the performing rights of record manufacturers or other owners of sound reproduction equipment, as if the record or perforated roll was in itself a musical or artistic work.

Evidence was produced before the Senate committee to the effect that if radio broadcasters, for example, had to pay fees as demanded by the consortium of large record companies, it would cost record producers over $4.5 million a year, of which more than $800,000 would be paid by the CBC alone.

Sound Recording Licences, which groups MCA, RCA, Warner Bros., London, Columbia, Polydor, Capitol and others—all American companies with the exception of two that are German or British—is asking for 2.6 per cent of the gross income of private radio stations, 0.5 per cent from private television stations and 4 cents per capita from the CBC, and that adds up to additional payments of over $4 million.

I must admit that over 75 per cent of that amount would leave the country because those companies are foreign-based and have only branches in Canada and the recordings are only reproductions of the initial recording.

It is true that in Great Britain record manufacturers are protected under the Copyright Act but such is not the case in the United States. Should Canada reject the amending measures under discussion, the majority of record companies which are only branches of American companies from which they obtain the original recordings would benefit in Canada of a right which the American government denies them. We are not as rich as the Americans and we should therefore act accordingly.

In his testimony before the Senate committee, the President of the Baton Broadcasting Ltd., of Ontario, Mr. Goodman, has proved that 90 per cent of all 11-inch records sold in Canada are subject to a per unit royalty of 60 cents that is paid over to the parent company which has delivered the licence to its Canadian branch plant.

Another aspect to be considered is that Bill S-9 does not purport to limit in any way the rights of artists, otherwise I would be one of the first to rise against such a restriction because we have in Canada very talented artists who deserve to be encouraged and whom the government should assist financially to enable them to improve their ability to the benefit of Canada as a whole.

We should emphasize, first of all the testimony of the right hon. J. L. Isley as contained in a brief he submitted in 1957 to the Royal Commission of inquiry on copyright and I quote the following from page 77:

> The act restricted by the copyright in a sound recording should be the making of a record embodying the recording.

• (8:30 p.m.)

> At the present time it would appear that an unauthorized public performance of a recording embodied in a record is an infringement of the copyright in the record. . . . We recommend the abolition of a record manufacturer's performing right and broadcasting right in records or in the recording embodied in the record.

In its Report on Intellectual and Industrial Property the Economic Council stated in January 1971:

> It is presently stated in the Copyright Act that a particular sound recording as such has a 50-year protection against direct copying, just as does a photograph. A major point at issue here is the associated performing right in such a recording whereby a record-maker would have, like the writer of the words and music, a legal claim to collect a fee from public users of his product above and beyond the original sale price of the recording.

I still recognize the principle of the right of performance or of representation concerning the original work since that is the only way the author can obtain remuneration for the use of his work on the market.

However, as concerns the recording producer, even if his staff does valuable and truly creative work, his trade is the sale of a purely material thing, that is a record or a magnetic tape, and he must expect his remuneration from that trade. To say that he also deserves a royalty each time his product is used publicly would mean that the publisher of a book is entitled to a supplement each time the book is read.

This is why I support Bill S-9 now before the House. I consider that the artists whose works are broadcast day in and day out over the radio and in all parts of Canada are enjoying a free and extraordinary publicity which deserves to be recognized by the artists themselves, and I do not see why these same artists would oppose the passing of Bill S-9 which, in a way, protects them against those who sometimes exploit them very dishonestly.

I for one consider that Bill S-9, besides protecting the Canadian radio stations, at the same time provides the Canadian artists with a protection that they did not enjoy before. In fact, they will no longer be exploited by American firms, to the prejudice of the artists and the Canadian people in general.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to give my support to Bill S-9 in the course of this debate because I deem it fair and useful not only to the artists but also to the Canadian radio stations.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, we are considering an amendment put forward by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). Since it was agreed that we would have one spokesman from each party and limit debate on the bill, perhaps I might be permitted to speak briefly to the amendment and later to the main motion.

I should like first of all to say that I am not particularly impressed with the piracy argument that is asserted in telegrams I have been receiving. It seems to me there was considerable discussion of these matters in the committee and that this question was resolved, certainly to my satisfaction if not to the satisfaction of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. He is a lawyer, and if he took the trouble to read section 4 that is being amended it seems to me very little more protection could be offered recording companies than that already provided.

This afternoon the hon. member suggested that the right of reproduction is protected here, though he had some doubt about the right of dissemination—at least, if I understood him correctly. It seems to me that if you control the right of reproduction you also control the right of dissemination because, after all, it is very difficult to disseminate something that has not been reproduced. I do not usually associate the statements of the minister with competence, though of course we always have competent statements from his parliamentary secretary. I can see no reason why any government in its right mind—and from time to time we do ask that question about this government—would put itself in the position of supporting any measure that would invite piracy in this country of intellectual and artistic properties. That argument just does not wash with me.

Mr. Jamieson: Have you really anything to worry about?

Mr. Rose: I do not know that I have, because I have no intellectual or artistic properties to protect at the moment. But I should like to say that I think this whole thing is a red herring, and although I have a great personal regard for the hon. member I regret that I cannot support his amendment. Perhaps enough has been said about that for the moment.

My views about this legislation are well known to anyone who cares to read the minutes of proceedings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which considered this bill for five, six sessions or more. Therefore I shall not go into the legal history of Sound Recording Licences' attempt, after over a quarter of a century's silence, to assert some right under the Copyright Act to levy a performance fee on radio stations in addition to that already paid by radio stations to performing rights societies such as CAPAC and BMI.

As I have said, I shall not go into the history of the matter for those who know the issues involved. Those who do not, probably do not care anyway. However, I must say at the outset that I speak on behalf of my party in direct support of Bill S-9. I regard the move by SRL, a foreign-dominated collection of huge recording companies, as little more than another grab at the public's pocket book. I feel that anyone examining the history of this industry would come to the conclusion that the ethics of this particular group are far from savoury.

SRL has fought a hard fight. It was a battle complete with high-priced legal help and a flurry of telegrams to MPs. Although I hate to say this, I think there has also been a manipulation of performers, and included in this manipulation were the struggling Canadian recording companies. And all this in an effort to support their claim. It seems to me that the local, indigenous recording companies and performers were perhaps forced to accept the benevolence of SRL only because they really had no other alternative. The blame for that, I think, we can lay directly at the door of government—perhaps not this government but historically at Canadian governments. I want to speak about that later.

I think we should examine what is behind this big push by SRL to assert there was some previously existing right under the Copyright Act. Two years ago SRL suddenly decided it wanted to assert this right and to go before the copyright appeal board with their case. Why were the stakes regarded as so high that it warranted such an expensive campaign? I think it is worth thinking about that question. If SRL's performance fee were legitimized in Canada, a foot in the door would be established for making an onslaught on the lucrative and huge market in the United States. It was important to establish that foothold here in line with the pattern of precedence.

Before the committee, SRL claimed that it knew this performance fee was paid in Europe and perhaps in Australia; therefore, logically it should be paid in Canada. If they go to the United States legislators and say this has happened in Europe, in Australia and now in Canada, how can you contradict the logic that it should apply in the United States? Conditions are not at all congruous. There are many state-owned radio stations. As a matter of fact, the situation in Europe does not at all prevail in Canada. I think that is the loophole in their argument.

Nevertheless, the SLR is playing for stakes much larger than their always-amended-downward claims. Of course they want, and need to get, and right now, into the United States market. That is why they are here. That is why they were willing to ask for assistance from various people such as performers and perhaps indigenous record manufacturers. I do not think any of us can buy that argument. The United States Congress, for example, for years has repudiated similar initiatives as those put forward by SRL. That is part of the history.

I think at this point it is important for me to say that while I completely reject the concept of performance rights as a charge on Canadian radio stations by recording companies, radio stations are currently paying fees to certain performing rights societies such as BMI which is owned by United States radio stations, and also CAPAC which is the equivalent of ASCAP in the United States, to the extent of 2.6 per cent of a station's gross revenue. The stations pay that whether they are music stations or top show stations.

I reject the idea of additional performance rights being granted these particular companies, for a variety of reasons. I shall not necessarily reveal these tonight. Certainly we examined a number of these reasons in the committee. I do not believe certain radio stations are paying too much for their principal product. They have music and I do not believe they are paying too much for this. The music they play is their reason for existence in most cases. I do not think their fees to BMI or CAPAC are unnecessarily burdensome. The fees the stations pay to BMI and CAPAC ultimately fall back to the truly creative individuals in the complex chain which ultimately results in the record. The fees paid by the radio stations through CAPAC and BMI go back to the creative people, the publishers and the composers.

A colleague asked me if I would give an illustration of what is BMI and CAPAC. I thought I had said earlier that BMI is a performing rights society owned by American radio stations and that its full name is Broadcast Music Institution. CAPAC is the Canadian Association of Publishers and Composers. In saying these things it should be recognized that the manufacturer of a $6 disc or record, such as Columbia or Capitol, is not rewarded directly by the radio station, but the publisher and composer receive approximately 2 cents each time the record is played. Publishers and composers are not amply rewarded for their creative efforts. I think the main plot of this enterprise, which is described by the council for SLR as a troika, is for the record companies to get more than the people who probably came up with the intellectual property in the first place.

The real "kicker" is that before most songs are released by most major companies represented by SRL, the company insists on obtaining the publishing rights from the composer and thus along with benefiting from the sale of the record for $6 the recording company also gets the publishing rights and therefore receives the one cent from BMI and CAPAC. In addition, I believe it is well recognized that the eight major recording companies represented by SRL are among the most vertically and horizontally integrated companies in the world. They own publishing companies, sheet music companies, broadcasting stations and a network. They control the industry down to the retail level. They can make or break a particular performer. They are interested in areas far removed from the music business. They are exceptionally greedy. They want to grab as much as they can possibly grab from any particular segment of society.

SRL's attempt to defeat Bill S-9 makes me sick. This is the reason, in spite of the fact that I have certain reservations, I shall vote with the government and support, of all people, the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, which also gives me some feelings of discomfort from time to time because while the Canadian Association of Broadcasters was very agile in supporting the government's position as against SRL's performing rights I am quite certain that if certain performing individuals such as actors or singers attempted to establish a performing rights society here in Canada to reward the performers for their particular residual right, there would be almost a revolt or at least a reaction from these same people. CAB is for performers so long as SRL is going to get the action, but I wonder what their reaction would be if the performers approached the radio stations with their own performance group.

I should like to spend a minute or two on my real concern. While I do not, as I have said, support SRL's performance rights, in the words of at least two very famous men I want to make perfectly clear that I do support performing rights as opposed to performance rights. These performance rights have been asserted by various creative people through AFM ACTRA and Actors Equity, who have expressed support for the rejection of Bill S-9. I am also in sympathy with the struggles of our indigenous recording industry. I am not talking about the subsidiaries, but about the idigenous recording industry about which I am sure my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) spoke a moment ago.

I would like to see this indigenous industry flourish as a positive cultural force in our country. I think we should do all we can to assist them in developing the Canadian culture. We spend millions of dollars doing this in other areas. The creative people, through the CLC, appeared before the committee and took a position against the passage of Bill S-9 chiefly because SRL was the only group which recognized the residual rights of performers to benefit from any ongoing success of their intellectual properties.

I think it might be well to briefly underline what happens. If you happen to be the composer of a very successful work that is recorded you can receive benefit through CAPAC copyright for up to 50 years perhaps. If you are a fiddle player on an Anne Murray record you play your recording date; according to the contract it might end up as a $90 session, and from there on you are out in the cold. It seems logical to me that if one participates positively in creating a very successful recording as a performer in the backbenches of a musical group, that performer has a right, because of his efforts to be part of the success of that recording, along with the publisher and the composer. So I support performing rights as opposed to performers' rights as applied to recording companies, especially those which are not Canadian owned.

Why were the performing groups such as ACTRA, the Musicians Union and Actors Equity opposed to Bill S-9? They were opposed because they had years of frustration in dealing with the government in an attempt to have their residual rights recognized as a basic right in our copyright law. As a result of their frustration they used SRL as a vehicle to advance and publicize these claims which have been ignored by the government for years. SRL was merely a court of last resort for the performers and creative people. It is regrettable that this is so. It seems to me that Canadian recording companies and Canadian performers are getting into bed with SRL as the elephant, but all they will get out of it is a peanut. So I do not support their claim, and I regret to have to say this.

The parliamentary secretary, kind, honourable and handsome gentleman that he is, said this afternoon that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) is sympathetic to the economic aspirations of Canadian performers. What good is sympathy? One thing the government has been able to do for these people for years, perhaps above all else, is to give sympathy. That is hardly enough at this point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must do so to remind him that the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mahoney: Say something.

Mr. Rose: I thank kind hon. members in all quarters of the House for allowing me perhaps one or two minutes to say something in conclusion. So I will proceed with the climax of this speech—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: —as expeditiously as possible, and I promise in gratitude that I will not insist on the performing right. I believe it is recognized by the government that we need a complete overhaul of the Copyright Act. I think we need also—in fact, I am very determined about it—to push for a kind of amendment which would result in establishing in Canada once and for all the residual rights of Canadian performers to participate in the ongoing benefits of an artistic property in which they participated. That is crucial. When the copyright was first developed we dealt mainly with the print medium. That was not really airtight. But technological changes since that time have forced us to take a new look at the whole area of artistic and intellectual properties. I am pleased that the government is looking into this matter and I wish them success.

I have a suggestion to make. Let us boost the total charge on radio stations from 2.6 per cent to about 3 per cent. Let us distribute to CAPAC and BMI a grand total of about 2 per cent of the station's gross, which would ultimately flow to publishers and composers. Let us take the 1 per cent, or as it would work out according to the CRTC one-third Canadian content regulation, and through some kind of Canadian performance society distribute that one-third of the gross to Canadian performers and record companies through some formula. I am not hung-up on the particular figures; it is the proportion and the recognition of the rights that concern me. But why not try to develop such an amended formula? Who can quarrel with it?

I do not think stations would quarrel with it if the total required for performance fees with performance rights associations came down slightly or went up slightly. I do not think they can quarrel basically and philosophically with this suggestion. Certainly the Canadian performers would not quarrel with it. They would probably be very pleased because through SRL they would be making an effort to establish what they consider to be a very basic and crucial right for their own economic and cultural benefit, and that is why I am supporting this bill. Who in Canada needs SRL anyway?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Allmand) negatived.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill S-9, to amend the Copyright Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that most of us have received representations from radio stations and other broadcasting outlets concerning this bill. I support the remarks that were made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) this evening and I am pleased that the amendment was turned down.

• (9:00 p.m.)

We have always wanted sufficient funds provided for Canadian performers in order to encourage them to stay in Canada rather than going to the United States for higher wages. We were pleased with the recent decision made by the CBC to retain a particular performer on a salary basis, as a result of which he will remain in Canada and develop his talents here. We have a very favourable record in the development of Canadian talent. One has only to watch American TV shows to see the influence that Canadians have on them. I found it interesting the other night listening to Mr. Olson doing what I did not realize at the beginning was a spoof on the influence of Canadian artists on American culture. He named individuals and stressed the number of Canadians who are participating in American programming. Most of them got their start on Canadian TV but went south of the border because they could earn more money there. It was a very good program.

I believe we have an influence on American cultural affairs far out of proportion to our size. Any effort made to provide greater reward to artists in Canada, to enable them to stay here, is worth while. Therefore, it was with some trepidation that I learned an agency had been formed in Canada to collect certain fees, not to give money to performers participating in the arts here but on behalf of the companies manufacturing records. These companies, under this arrangement, were going to get a rake off every time a record was played on a disc jockey show. Canadian talent is not second rate, but perhaps it suffers from the same fate as that of the prophet who is spurned in his own land. We did not really appreciate Wayne and Shuster half as much when they were doing weekly shows in Canada as we do now when they come to us via an American network with their own special shows.

The CRTC regulation requiring greater use of Canadian talent has been beneficial. I agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West that funds be increased for the purpose of providing artists and performers with a major share of the revenue. If we are going to allow radio stations to be charged a fee every time they play a record, and the revenue is to go to the companies which press records, we may well see some radio stations playing old records on which the copyright has run out after expiration of the seven-year limitation. I agree that the government has taken a proper step in this case to correct what many radio stations consider to be an abuse by record companies which are united with other companies in an agency set up for their self-help rather than for the sake of helping performers, artists, directors and others connected with the industry.

An important factor to remember is that disc jockeys play a large role in the merchandising of new Canadian talent. Records are donated to them by the record companies. The royalty that a performer receives depends on the volume of sales of his record beyond a certain figure. If a disc jockey likes a certain record, plays it repeatedly and it becomes a hit and is bought in the record stores, then the artist and the orchestra which provided the background benefit. Any curtailment on the use of such records will make it more difficult for newcomers to get into the field. I am told that about only one out of every thousand records becomes a hit. Most of the records played by disc jockeys do not find ready acceptance. Disc jockeys play a major role in communities which are served by only one local radio station. In such cases disc jockey shows are less expensive than other types of programs initiated by the local station. This is something which the CRTC will have to supervise closely.

Many of the disc jockey shows are loaded, and in the United States there have been pay-offs and kick-backs from record companies to disc jockeys, encouraging them to push particular records. This is something that must be borne in mind by the CRTC, as well as the time devoted to hot-line radio programs. If a controversy develops on a hot-line show, a station is inclined to devote a lot of time to that type of show to the exclusion of other forms of entertainment. This is particularly so in areas which are dependent on one radio outlet. There has to be a balance in these matters.

I appreciate the speed with which the government acted in this instance, Mr. Speaker. They have passed this legislation in advance of the United States and I know it is well received by radio stations and will make their operations easier and less expensive. The other fact has not been faced, however, and it involves the requests made by organizations representing actors, performers, artists and those connected with the production end of the recording industry. If any moneys are to be taken from the radio stations, obviously they should be directed to the performers.

It seems to me that we have an opportunity to encourage more Canadian talent now that the CRTC broadcasting regulations have been changed. We also have an obligation to provide the necessary funds in order to eliminate competition between the United States and Canada so that it is not mandatory that anyone in this country seeking to rise above the current salary range look to the American market. Our market can be developed and more money provided to radio stations through the industry. I strongly urge the government to give the same speedy consideration to that aspect of the matter as was given to the protection of the radio stations who in my opinion were being victimized by an agency which found that the loopholes in the copyright legislation were almost a form of money.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-261, to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before this bill goes to the committee I would ask if a brief explanation is available. An explanation may have been given in the budget debate but I am not aware of it at the moment.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-261 provides for the implementation, without change, of the ways and means motion relating to the Customs Tariff which was tabled in the House on June 18. The clauses of the bill correspond to and are in the same order as the paragraphs of the ways and means motion.

In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) made mention of the more significant tariff changes which appear in the bill. These included the implementation of two Tariff Board reports without change. One proposed a reduced rate on raw materials used in the petrochemical industry, item 26910-1; the second recommended bringing the duties on polyethylene into line with the rates which apply on most other plastics made in Canada, items 93902-3, 93902-42 and 93902-82. He also referred to a new provision, item 41100-1, which would accord machinery used in sawmills and logging the same tariff relief as is now given to production machinery under the machinery program. Another change of general interest was removal of the duty on heavy fuel oils.

At this time I intend to comment only very briefly on the four clauses of the bill before the House. If hon. members so wish, I will be pleased to provide more detailed comments on individual tariff items of interest to them when we are going through the bill in committee of the whole.

The Customs Tariff contains three schedules. SChedule A to the Customs Tariff enumerates the goods subject to duty and those which enter free of duty. Schedule B provides for drawback of duty on certain products, while schedule C lists the goods which are prohibited importation.

Clause 1 of the bill amends schedule A to the Customs Tariff by deleting a number of existing tariff items and by inserting the tariff items which appear in schedule A to the bill. These changes are largely of a relieving or of a technical nature. They provide mainly for reduced rates of duty on production equipment and materials. They meet representations from associations and individuals.

Clause 2 of the bill deletes several items from schedule B to the Customs Tariff and provides for the insertion of the two items which appear on page 8 of the bill. Clause 3 provides for an amendment to an existing item in the prohibited schedule to the Customs Tariff. The amended wording is shown in schedule C to the bill. Finally, clause 4 is the usual provision for the tariff changes set out in the bill to come into force on a provisional basis on the day following the budget, subject to approval by Parliament.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the parliamentary secretary a question? What is meant by the expression "provides for drawback"? Is this an item which receives a rebate of excise moneys paid in the area of purchase and, if so, for how long a period does it apply?

Mr. Mahoney: A drawback is a refund that one is entitled to claim when goods have been imported under certain circumstances. The duty is paid in the original instance but if the party proves the necessary circumstances he is entitled to a refund.

Mr. Peters: For a year?

Mr. Mahoney: I shall have to look at the bill, Mr. Speaker. I cannot say what time limit, if any, is imposed on the period for making application.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in appropriate circumstances I think we might have some fun tonight. If I were endowed with the skills of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and could write doggerel poetry, we could have a lot of fun looking through the various provisions that come up tonight for consideration in the Customs Tariff. The parliamentary secretary has read to us one of the most catholic, stereotyped statements ever to come out of the Department of Finance with regard to the customs section. I say "catholic" but I apologize and retract the term and say the most stereotyped statement.

Let us look at the various provisions. Some of them are worthy of note because they indicate an honest endeavour on the part of the government to do something, albeit belatedly, with regard to the petrochemical industry which has been in trouble for a long time. I recall my remarks in the budget debate of June in regard to the changes being made in the duties on petrochemical feedstock and other related provisions, and I still think that the government has given this industry a terrible knock on the head. This may be in expiation to some degree, but the proof of the pudding will be in the eating.

In his reply to these remarks I look to the parliamentary secretary to state what the reaction of the petrochemical industry had been to these changes, as it is now six months and three days since the tariffs were lowered. After all, they were effective on the night of June 18.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I return to my original theme. I am very sorry that my colleague from Halifax-East Hants is not here to assist me, because I think these changes would give his skills in doggerel verse unlimited scope. As I look at the first item I wonder, even though I know the government is able to escape payment of customs duties on its own purchases, whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is not trying to show industry and commerce how to decorate offices in the new style. The committee on miscellaneous estimates had something to say about the expenditure of $75,000 for imported tropical plants which were to be used in the new offices of the Minister of Finance. That minister is not bothered by any customs regulations, because the government of Canada can import any type of commodity free of customs duty. When we look at the first item under schedule A, item No 7801-1, what do we see? The item reads:

Palms, ferns, rubber plants (Ficus), cannas, dahlias, paeonias, rhododendrons including azaleas—

Mr. Barnett: In British Columbia we put the accent on the first part of the word, not on the last.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have never been sure how to pronounce that word correctly. I have always it pronounced it "azalea", with the German pronunciation.

An hon. Member: That is not how it is pronounced in British Columbia.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right, that is not how it is pronounced in British Columbia. But in the country that grows these plants in great profusion, Belgium, the word is pronounced as I pronounced it. I have cousins living in a suburb of Antwerp, on Azalea Strasse. I shall stick to my ancestral pronunciation.

An hon. Member: In British Columbia we call them azaleas.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member calls them azaleas his way. That is fine. But why is the change respecting azaleas in there? Is the plant included because it has become a favourite of the Minister of Finance and is to be used for purposes of office decoration? If so, he should be emulated across the country. I have dealt with the first item. The second item will bring me benefits. I have a reputation among my colleagues as being somewhat of a gardener, and I like it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): So for greater clarity may I say that gladiolus bulbs may be imported into the country as corms, duty free. I will take advantage of this item because I love gladiolus and I am grateful for this change. Then we come to item 7804-1, which has been changed. It covers hydrangeas and other pot-grown plants.

Mr. Benjamin: Male or female?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Are we to go into a pot growing campaign for the growing of pot? I don't know. Mr. Speaker, listen to what it says at the end of that item:

All the foregoing imported or purchased in bond in Canada by florists or nurserymen for bona fide forcing—

What interest has the government in bona fide forcing? I know the government tries to force things through the House, but that is not bona fide forcing. What is bona fide forcing with regard to hydrangeas and other pot-grown plants? Those are some of the things we are concerned about in these changes in Bill C-261.

Then I turn to item 7915-1, which covers flowers and foliage, natural, cut, whether or not in designs or bouquets and—listen to this—"whether or not coloured by osmosis, not otherwise provided for." There is a tariff change in regard to that item.

Mr. Benjamin: And it must be put through before Christmas.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The next item I shall deal with is 19947-1. I invite hon. members who know the English language to tell me what "macerated paper pads" are. What does "macerated" mean? I do not know. Whatever it means, macerated paper pads must be terribly important because they are "for use exclusively in the packaging of fresh fruit". They are to be admitted to Canada duty free.

The next item I refer to is 23800-1, rice hulls. I do not know about this. I suppose, since this is such a "hull" of a government, this item appeals to them. In any event, they are to be admitted free of duty. Next I come to something serious. The queries I put to the parliamentary secretary originally were serious. I am referring to the reduction from three-quarters of one cent per gallon to one-third of a cent per gallon. Why the government has to hang on to that one-third of one cent, I do not know. Does it want to help the petrochemical industry?

I see sitting across from me the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) who represents the constituency of Verdun. I am interested in that constituency because I have acquired a daughter-in-law who is in the minister's constituency.

Mr. Benjamin: A daughter-in-law won or lost?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, I think it is a gain for our side. In any event, there are people in Verdun who are very interested in the petrochemical industry, and the minister knows that the petrochemical industry of this country has been dealt some very severe blows in the last 18 months. First, there was a grave difficulty that arose out of the lack of success of our country's negotiators with regard to the reduction in tariff under the Kennedy round affecting the petrochemical industry. This has been hitting them particularly stiffly. It may be said that they were persuaded to go along with this on the basis that there would be changes over five years, yet two years ago or even less the minister's administration decided that they were going to cancel the cuts under the Kennedy

Round, and that caused grave problems within the industry. Then about 18 months ago Canada decided to float its dollar. This immediately caused an 8 per cent increase in the export price of petrochemicals and chemical derivatives from Canada. These commodities are sold in highly competitive world markets.

I see the Minister of Labour before me. Behind him sits the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) and the Minister of State responsible for information in Toronto.

Mr. Stanbury: He is not here.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My city of Edmonton is much concerned about the petrochemical industry; and may I say here that the Liberal member for one constituency in Edmonton in which is situated about 90 per cent of the petrochemical industry of the area has failed to appear in this House since September 6. This is the degree of interest the hon. member shows in the Parliament of Canada and representations made on behalf of his constituents.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stanbury: He is looking after his constituents.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is, like blazes, looking after his constituents. All I say is that this is a measure—

An hon. Member: How do you know he hasn't been sick?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Sick? He is sick in his mind if, as a member of this House, he does not appear here. He looks after his personal business. He says that he refunds part of his salary. He was never elected a Member of Parliament to refund his salary to the treasury in whatever measure he does.

Mr. Mackasey: Be charitable. After all, it is the Christmas season.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I feel as charitable this evening as this bill does in so far as the petrochemical industry is concerned. It gives minute quantities, less than crumbs, to an industry that has had to lay off hundreds of highly skilled people. At least 80 per cent of this industry's production goes to the export markets. The government has draped this industry over a sawhorse and has proceeded to belabour, knock and expose it to the forces and the whims of world markets and world conditions as a sacrificial lamb.

I appeal to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. One of the particular skills which we developed in our western universities was gained by people who today are walking the streets. The minister can shrug his shoulders. Many of my contemporaries at universities of western Canada, including my own University of Alberta, in Edmonton, and many younger than I went into the petrochemical industry as chemical engineers. Others, as we expected, obtained lucrative jobs. Today they are seeking employment. Why? Because this government, in a terribly misguided policy with regard to that industry, which was one of the aces we had up our sleeve, one of the bright hopes for Canada to compete in the world market, cut if off not only at the ankles but at the knees. They have now given it the knife at the throat.

This is the answer, a paltry cutback of petrochemical feedstocks that are imported into this country. As far as the Alberta petrochemical industry is concerned, this is meaningless because we do not import any feedstock. It is domestically produced. For the petrochemical feedstock producers in this country, this does not mean a thing. I would like the Minister of Labour to speak to his colleagues—

Mr. Benjamin: Not tonight.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, not here. I would like them to "get with it" on this tragic situation that faces the petrochemical industry in this country. It does not necessarily employ hundreds of thousands or twenties of thousands of people. However, this industry represents thousands of highly skilled people, including their sales organizations. This government's answer to the competitive situation facing this industry from world forces is to further create difficulties. All I can say is that items 26906-1 and 26910-1, particularly the latter which only goes for a limited period, are frankly of little assistance compared to the problems they are facing.

I now turn to item 41098. This item has its origin in spraying and dusting machines and attachments therefor. It moves over to pruning hooks, pruning shears and dehorning instruments. That is a long way from spraying and dusting machines. Now we are going to admit duty free, electric bird-scaring devices but not including recorders. They have to be bona fide. They do not include recorders or reproducers using magnetic tape as a recording medium.

Mr. Mackasey: We do not want any stuffed bird-scarers.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is an electric bird-scaring device that does not use a tape? You may have some sort of a raucous artificial noise, but you cannot have a bird call or bird-scaring device on a tape.

Mr. Baldwin: Why bother with a device? Just get the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). He will scare away any bird.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I wonder how the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) will interpret this. Some of his colleagues in the cabinet might be substituted for some of these things. Remember this, they are to be used exclusively for scaring birds by producing sounds simulating their natural alarm cries. In this period of an election we can expect all sorts of sounds to come from cabinet ministers. They will not only scare birds; they will scare small children and maiden ladies. Of all things, electric bird-scaring devices are to be admitted duty free into this country.

Mr. Mackasey: You should all have one.

Mr. Benjamin: And this has to be done before Christmas.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, this has to be done before Christmas. I ask the little clutter of three ministers opposite who in Hades made these representations.

Mr. Mackasey: The birdwatchers.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under no circumstances would it have been the birdwatchers, because this would scare the birds.

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, away from the airports.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member has specifically asked, this particular item was requested by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I am sure they will be interested in his remarks.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is fine. But the fact that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture requested it and the parliamentary secretary sententiously informed us of this particular point, I am wondering what on earth is its purpose. After all, if we wanted bird-scaring devices we would just trot out some of the cabinet ministers and parliamentary secretaries. They would even scare the crows from barbed wire fences.

There is one further item which affects the logging industry in British Columbia. The Machinery Advisory Board is now to be given power to advise the cabinet to remit duty on certain types of machinery used for the sawing of lumber and other operations in the logging industry. This is just to allow a little flexibility in particular cases. I would remind hon. members that at the time the Machinery Advisory Board was set up I drew attention to some of the difficulties which could arise through giving the board power to counsel the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to cause an Order in Council to be passed exempting a particular type of machine from duty. This lends itself to a particular type of representation.

I have had experience in the administration of customs duties. I was very privileged to work under a minister who sought to repel every type of personal pressure. He always said this was an area in which the sausage-slicing machine would operate. It would operate first on one slice of the sausage, then on the next and then on the next. If a minister were to allow relaxation in one particular area he could not easily resist further pressures from friends of the government. The taxpayers of this country are extremely adept at smelling out friends of the government. These people appear regularly with their advocates.

Mr. Benjamin: Wait till we get our turn.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, you will have your friends and you will act in the same way. That is why I find your stand on these occasions is even more than hypocritical. It is sanctimonious. I say it is even more than sanctimonious. In any event, I have not heard hon. members of that party from logging constituencies speak on this item. They know what will happen. This will provide some help. It will help an industry which has been hard hit by the government's tax bill. It is going to get crumbs in return.

Then, again, will the parliamentary secretary tell me how many more times we shall be faced with item 44043-1? This item appeared on the list when I was a freshman member of this House and in every budget since then, without fail, it has appeared as an extension. It has to do with certain types of aircraft which are prescribed by weight. The item does not include the engine. Mr. Speaker, no Minister of Finance, and I knew some very well, could ever give me a strict definition to cover this item or satisfactorily explain its appearance year after year.

If the government intends to help those producing small aircraft in this country, why do it on a year to year basis? Why not simply say it intends to protect producers of this type of aircraft, including or not including engines, depending on what the policy might be? This would apply to aircraft not exceeding a certain number of pounds, whatever the weight might be, and then they could leave us alone instead of asking us to approve this extension every blessed budget.

Then we come to item 44210-1:

Rotors, blade diaphragms, spindle discs, shafts and blades, wholly or in chief part of metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported for use by turbine manufacturers in the repair or remanufacture of gas or steam turbines and parts thereof entitled to entry under tariff item 42805-1.

We want an explanation of this item. The definition is a long one and there is no doubt a particular purpose in mind. Does this relate to a particular type of contract for aircraft repair? Does it relate to any defence sharing production agreement? I shall pass over the item which admits duty free the professional productions of artists when valued at not less than $75 each. Every genuine artist would be insulted if his productions were not valued at $75. Then there is reference to original paintings, serigraphs and photographic or photo-mechanical representations, and so on, and an extension of free entry to hand-made appliqués suitable only for use as wall hangings. Are these intended for the office of the Minister of Finance or for some other minister's office? They have to be produced by artists domiciled in Canada but residing temporarily abroad. What is the real reason for which we are asked to make this particular change?

There are two other items to which I should like to draw attention. In this modern day and age, in this modern culture, we shall now be able to import glass beads free of duty if they are hand-made articles. Does the "now generation" have to get special dispensation in order that the bead bands worn across their foreheads are brought in duty free?

The next item is 71115, which is pots or compressed pellets, but not of hash; these are made of peat.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Gilbert: Canadians, for the use of.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a gardener I will benefit from those. These are for use exclusively in growing plants for transplanting purposes, or for protecting plants while growing. We shall have to pay 10 per cent duty on those. The last item I want to mention requires an interpretation. It is item 99208. I apologize to the House for making a little fun of the bill this evening, but this item under schedule C, to which reference is made in clause 3, relates to metallic trading checks in circular form—in other words, trading discs—"unless in any particular case or class of cases exempted from the provisions of this item by a regulation of the Governor in Council". What on earth are we up to here? These metallic trading checks come under certain customs regulations and I suppose I could find them in the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Mackasey: I have one in my hand. It is round and metallic.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Incidentally, I see these round, metallic trading discs are prohibited goods; they cannot be imported. The Minister of Labour should put his away, if he has one, because they are prohibited. However, under this amendment the minister, as a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, is asking us to deliberate on an Order in Council exempting them from this prohibition so they may be allowed in—perhaps in order to legitimize his possession of one. The Minister of Finance is now in the House and perhaps he would advise us why he is introducing this exception, and on the basis of the representations of whom? These metallic trading discs have been prohibited for some time, so why are they being allowed in now under an Order in Council?

My hon. friend from Halifax-East Hants, with his ability to write doggerel poetry, would have been in a far better position to give hon. members an entertaining dissertation this evening. I have gone through a list that I think frankly defies anybody's imagination. Outside of it being a sop to the petrochemical industry—and here the Minister of Finance has a good deal to answer for—and also offering some assistance of a questionable nature to the lumbering industry particularly of British Columbia, the rest of the bill simply adds bits and pieces of no consequence, yet we are being asked to pass it. We require an explanation, Mr. Speaker, either from the Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I do not have too much time this evening and perhaps I can do little more than congratulate my hon. friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for his most interesting examination of the bill. When I first looked at it I thought it was a serious matter, but I have been dissuaded from that view having listened to his remarks. I always suspected that beneath that stern exterior dwelt a western Pagliacci, and we saw a great demonstration of that tonight.

I also thought that perhaps the censor who looked over this bill was like the censor looking at questionable pictures and literature as he carefully rolled over some of the salacious portions of the bill. It seems to me there are some ridiculous aspects to the bill, but I also think there are some serious matters in it and if I may call it ten o'clock I should like to discuss them on another occasion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader whether we will be pursuing this business tomorrow, and whether the Minister of Finance has any more budget bills to be dealt with tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will continue this most interesting debate tomorrow. Following that we will consider the budget bill emanating from the October so-called budget statement. Following that we will consider Bill C-176.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—SELKIRK FISH PLANT—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CLOSING

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on December 15 I asked the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) whether he could shed any light on the rumours that the Selkirk processing plant of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation would be closed. He replied, as reported at page 10491 of Hansard, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the 70-year old fish plant at Selkirk does not meet our standards for inspection. It is being phased out. However, we are hoping to develop new supplies of fish and to have a plant operating at Selkirk in the not too distant future.

I do not mind admitting that I am having a considerable amount of difficulty maintaining any degree of good temper and reasonableness in pursuing this question this evening. The first problem I had to deal with after my election to this House in the spring of 1970 was the location of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation's processing plant, whether it would remain in Selkirk or be located in a suburb of Winnipeg. During the months of May and June, 1970, the Minister of Fisheries and myself engaged in a number of exchanges on the subject in this House.

The question was, I then thought, finally resolved, in a manner not wholly unsatisfactory to myself and the people of the Interlake region but nevertheless in a way we could live with, when the minister on June 25, 1971, made the following statements during his reply to representations that I had made in an adjournment debate. The minister said at that time:

> My own forecast now is that we will have at least two big processing plants in Manitoba. In other words, we will have one at Transcona and continue to have one at Selkirk.

Then he said:

> We believe the plant now operating at Selkirk will be operating at or near capacity for a number of years to come.

Later he said:

> My own forecast is that there will be two plants, an old one and a new one. The old one at Selkirk needs to be rehabilitated and this will take place beginning next year. I also expect employment in Selkirk will probably increase and not decrease in so far as fish processing is concerned.

Imagine, after having heard that kind of statement from the minister on the subject, my reaction, the reaction of the employees of the Freshwater Fish Processing Plant and the reaction of the people of the Interlake when it was announced by the FFMC last week that the Selkirk plant would cease to process fish within the month and close its doors entirely in five months, taking away from Selkirk in the neighbourhood of 150 jobs. It was a reaction of shocked disbelief, succeeded by rage. After the assurances the minister had given us we felt, and justifiably in my opinion, that we had been betrayed.

Just a little more than a year after the minister had assured us that there would be two plants in Manitoba, one in Transcona and one in Selkirk, that the Selkirk plant would be refurbished and that employment in fish processing in Selkirk was more likely to increase than to decrease, it was announced that the plant would be closed. What circumstances have changed in the interim to make the FFMC and the minister change their minds? Local production of fish has not declined. Rather, it has gone up because when the minister made his statement, Lake Winnipeg was completely closed to fishing because of mercury pollution whereas now it is again being fished on a controlled basis. Moreover, at the time the minister made his statement, stocks of fish in Lake Winnipeg had been depleted due to overfishing, whereas now the stocks have had two years to begin a recovery.

When the minister made his statement in June, 1970, the prospect of a lucrative rough fish fishery was just a gleam in his eye, whereas only recently in this House he assured me, when replying to some remarks I had made about the need for an income support program for fishermen, that the investigations of his department into a rough fish fishery were progressing extremely well and held out the prospect of substantial employment in the future.

After looking at these facts one is hard-pressed not to believe that the minister's statement of June, 1970, was not simply designed to slap the lid on some extremely effective pressure being applied by residents of Selkirk and the Interlake. I am not about to suggest that the minister was a knowing party to deception, but I do know that if I was the minister and someone had given me information with which to reply to a parliamentary inquiry, and the reply I gave was afterwards demonstrated to be false, today I would be engaged in some head-hunting.

With that as background I wish to ask three very simple and direct questions to which the employees of the Selkirk processing plant, the citizens of Selkirk and the residents of Manitoba's Interlake are demanding answers. I hope the parliamentary secretary who will reply on behalf of the minister this evening will have the answers ready because they are obvious questions to ask. First, is it the intention of the minister to make the FFMC live up to the undertaking which he gave to me and to this House on June 25, 1970? Second, if he is not prepared to do that, why is he not prepared to do it? Third, if the best the people of Selkirk can now hope for is the new plant alluded to by the minister in his answer to my question on December 15, when will the construction of that plant begin, what will be its function, what will it cost and how many people will it employ?

[Translation]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries has repeatedly stated his position regarding the Selkirk plant. He has, in the past, indicated to the House that his forecast was that the Selkirk plant could remain in operation after completion of the Transcona plant. However, the minister has never made a commitment to the effect that the Selkirk plant would never be closed down.

The operation of a fish processing plant in Selkirk remains possible. It hinges mainly on the development of a coarse fish industry, that is certain species which up to now had not been considered as being marketable.

During the summer of 1971, the federal fisheries service spent $413,000 on a research program directed toward improving the harvesting techniques used for coarse fish and, in the long run, the management of the production potential of Manitoba waters. This program, I might add, has employed 127 fishermen who would otherwise have remained idle. According to the data obtained, the potential of coarse fish seems promising. There remains a good number of problems to overcome particularly in relation to marketing. Research related to harvesting and processing will continue and the marketing aspect will be looked at with care. If all goes well a new plant in Selkirk could become economically feasible.

For now the Selkirk plant must close. With new inspection standards imposed on our American clients by their government, rehabilitation is not economically possible. We must accept that, after some 70 years of existence, that plant has become a victim of obsolescence. The new plant is Transcona takes over. Because the two plants are a mere 30 minutes away from each other by car, all employees of Selkirk have been offered jobs in Transcona. A good number of them have accepted this offer. They have received adequate training in the use of new techniques implemented in Transcona. The training program was carried out at no loss of income for the employees.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the government to date has improved fish processing, worked to put on a sounder base the management of Manitoba's fish resources, researched the possibility of creating a new industry with coarse fish, and protected the jobs of the Selkirk employees as much as possible. The establishment of a new plant in Selkirk will depend on the results of studies relating to the coarse fish industry. These studies are already under way and partly completed.

YOUTH—OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—WRITING OF EVALUATION REPORT BY PRIVATE CONSULTING FIRM—SELECTION OF PROJECT FOR ANALYSIS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on December 9 I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) two questions regarding the evaluation report relating to the Opportunities for Youth program. The first question was:

> In view of the fact that the evaluation report on the Opportunities for Youth program recently tabled in the House was carried out by a departmental task force, would the minister inform the House why the report itself was written by a private consulting firm?

Then I asked the minister the following supplementary question:

> Would the Secretary of State inform the House how the sample of 356 projects analysed in the report was selected by his departmental task force?

I considered the reply that I received at that time from the minister to be inadequate partly because the report itself was long overdue. If you go through Hansard you will find the minister promised that the report would be ready by the beginning or the middle of October. On September 9, for example, he said in answer to a question in the House that in all likelihood the report would be ready at the beginning or the middle of October. On September 30, in answer to a question that I put to him, he said:

I estimated the assessment report on the project would be ready by mid-October, and I do not think there will be any considerable delay.

On November 22, when the report still had not been received, he said in answer to a question:

As for the report, I apologize to the House for the delay in tabling it, but this is a matter of data processing and the task force responsible for producing the report is working very hard at this ... sand was hoping to be able to table this report as soon as possible.

We have had the report since the first part of December and in it we find that the conclusion is a glowing analysis of what happened to the Opportunities for Youth program and that things had gone very well indeed. Another reason I am not satisfied with the answer given by the minister, besides the fact that the report was long overdue, is that I question the validity of the report itself due to the fact that the analysis and evaluation are based on only a sample of all the projects in the country. And the minister said he did not know what kind of sample it was. We do not find anywhere in the report an indication of what sort of sample the evaluation is based upon. We have to know this if we are to know what type of credence to give to this evaluation of the Opportunities for Youth program.

We know that some months ago the department established a task force to evaluate Opportunities for Youth projects across the country, and after a period of several months of work it was decided that its report should be written by an outside consultant group called Systems Research Group Inc. They wrote the report on the basis of the data gathered by the task force established by the Department of the Secretary of State.

I want to know why the government decided to hire this firm after all the research had been done by the department itself. Was it because the task force members could not agree on the conclusions they were receiving from their research? Was this the reason that they called in an outside consultant firm to write the evaluation report itself? I think the long delay in presenting the report to the House lends credence to this possibility, because the report itself could have been written in two or three days once all the data had been gathered. It is only about 25 pages long. I think that an outside group writing a report for a government department should also do all the research and data processing. These are some of the reasons some of us are concerned that an outside group was called in to write the report.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I want to know how the sample of projects was chosen. Nowhere in the report does it say how the 300-odd projects were chosen, whether they constituted a representative sample, a random sample or what have you. The last sentence in the report reads:

In terms of the programs explicit objectives and within its budgetary constraints, OFY appears to have been very successful in the light of information now available.

What do they mean by "in the light of the information now available"? What information? This is what we must know if we are to judge this report on its merits. I think that any firm which had regard for its reputation would include a phrase like "on the basis of the information now available." I ask again, what kind of sample was it? Was it a representative sample, or was it not? You could make a report sound any way you wanted it to, if you carefully selected 300-odd projects out of the entire summer's program. Next year's program, it is hoped, will be announced by January 15, and before the end of this month we are to have a more thorough evaluation report on last year's program.

Many of the ideas in the Opportunities for Youth program are exciting. I hope that before next year's program is introduced we can clear up a few of the questions that I have tried to raise tonight, so that we will have a clear evaluation of last year's program. What type of sample formed the basis of the evaluation? Why was an outside firm brought in to write the report after the data had been gathered by a task force working within the department?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will make my answer very brief. The hon. member has put two questions before the House. In both instances he requested that they be given special consideration during the adjournment debate. The one he has dealt with this evening concerns the reason why an outside group of consultants was chosen to compile the results of the evaluation study of the Opportunities for Youth program, and he also inquired about how the sample was chosen.

His other question, while on the same subject, was directed to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and had to do with whether or not a special committee or a standing committee on youth and youth problems would be established and, if such a committee would not be established, whether the question of youth and youth employment would be referred to one of the standing committees.

Both questions touch on the general matter of the problems of youth, the special problems of the young people of this country and what the government is doing about them. These bear directly on the functions of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), who is responsible for the Opportunities for Youth program. The questions the hon. member has asked are legitimate ones, but at the same time, bearing in mind the length of time and the terms of reference of last year's program, we all know now that some of the difficulties we experienced last year in the Opportunities for Youth program arose as a result of the rather foreshortened time period in which the program was put together.

The hon. member has made reference to the fact that the program for next summer is being prepared now. We think this is an improvement as it will give us an opportunity to get ready in plenty of time, and will also give members of this chamber a full opportunity to ask their questions now rather than being caught as we were last year with the program being rushed into effect before members of the opposition had an opportunity to examine it.

I want to assure the hon. member and others here that through the regular parliamentary devices in committee, the estimates of the Secretary of State as they go to the standing committee when we return after the Christmas break in the ordinary course, in regard to any legislation that would have to be tabled and any other opportunities that hon. members have to put questions to the Secretary of State through oral questions, written questions on the order paper or perhaps through the use of allotted days if the opposition sees fit, we hope hon. members will be reassured.

There will be many opportunities to question the Secretary of State about all these things and the plans that are going to be put into effect for next year's program so we can be sure to have a clearer understanding of it in view of our experience last year. The use of an outside group was hardly necessary and perhaps next year when the evaluation is done, and now that we have gained the experience, we will not need such a group. I conclude by saying that I hope the hon. member will take advantage of all these opportunities to ask questions about this matter as we develop next year's program.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON COMMISSION REPORTS CONCERNING NATIONAL CAPITAL AND VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATIONS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a document which sets out the government's position regarding Book V of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. I should also like to say something about Book V, relating to the national capital, and Book VI, relating to voluntary associations.

All Canadians I am sure agree that the nation's capital should reflect in so far as possible the spirit and aspirations of our country.

The report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism deals with this question as far as language is concerned.

I am pleased that many of the bodies referred to by the royal commission have already been making plans or taken action with regard to language and cultural aspects of the national capital. The city of Ottawa announced its program with regard to bilingualism some months ago; more recently the province of Ontario has announced a plan regarding service to its public in Canada's two official languages; representatives of voluntary organizations, business and educational bodies and private citizens joined forces recently to form the Alliance for the Development of Bilingualism in the Canadian Capital Region for the purpose of co-ordinating activities and exchanging information.

[Translation]

The report which has been tabled sets out more fully the government's position with regard to those of the 17 recommendations addressed to the federal government. Briefly, the government accepts the first recommendation regarding the equality of the two official languages for federal purposes. This has already been formalized in legislation, the Official Languages Act. The government also intends to continue to pursue the direct and positive role which it has been pursuing in the Capital Region, which is the second of the Royal Commission's recommendations.

Recommendations 3 through 6 and Recommendation 14 relate to various services being provided in both languages. The government accepts these recommendations, with the reservation that Recommendation 4 concerning commissionaires, elevator operators, and other personnel dealing with the public should be implemented progressively so as to avoid hardship for unilingual employees.

Recommendations 7 through 13 are addressed to Ontario and Quebec separately or jointly or to local governments in the Capital area.

The recommendations relate to public services in the two languages, the courts and new proposed jurisdictions for various school boards. Obviously these matters fall within the jurisdiction of the provinces or the municipalities concerned. Insofar as provincial and municipal services are concerned, the co-operation of the federal government has been sought and given in certain instances in the past. The government will examine most sympathetically further possibilities of helping in other appropriate ways, if provincial or municipal authorities concerned judge this to be useful.

Recommendation 15 deals with the integration of transport and communications within the Capital area. This question is already the subject of planning between the NCC and various local authorities; the same can be said of Recommendation 16 regarding government buildings to be constructed or rented in the Capital area on both sides of the Ottawa River.

Recommendation 17 proposes the establishment of a specific advisory tripartite agency to be charged with the responsibility for co-ordination of the overall programme for the Capital area, and which it is suggested, with the passage of time, might acquire new functions and stature.

The government considers that, in addition to its role in urban planning, the National Capital Commission is the logical body to co-ordinate, at the federal level, activities to extend bilingual capabilities and services in the National Capital Region. The role of the National Capital Commission will not alter the existing allocation of responsibilities within the federal administration for achieving goals with regard to official languages and cultural development. It will, however, add a new and desirable dimension by giving other levels of government within the National Capital Region a single channel through which to seek assistance and benefit from expertise in the federal sector.

One of the complicating factors in dealing with the National Capital is the multiplicity of jurisdictions involved. In addition to the federal and two provincial governments, local and regional governments, school boards, and other authorities are in themselves very numerous. Two conclusions are inescapable. No single government or authority can by itself build a truly national capital: success depends upon the will of many governments and especially of the people they represent to give themselves to the task of creating a capital worthy of the nation. Secondly, a continuing dialogue must be maintained to assure that energies are channeled in a common direction; that in seeking the goal we are pulling together, not apart. This is the ultimate object of the government's policy outlined above.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

I should now like to turn briefly to the last volume of the royal commission, Book VI relating to voluntary associations. Here the commission, while analysing in depth the many facets of associational life in Canada, makes no formal recommendations. One theme, which runs strongly throughout the whole of the report, is the importance of maintaining good communications between francophone and anglophone branches of Canadian associations and between the general membership of the two major language groups. The commissioners suggested that simultaneous interpretation at annual conferences or conventions would be a useful way to assure more effective communication. I am glad to say, Mr. Speaker, that the government has been operating a modest program of assistance in this area since the beginning of the current fiscal year. We have ascertained that there is, indeed, an active interest among associations with respect to this program. The government is giving continuing consideration to Volume VI of the royal commission report and looking carefully at their observations regarding the trend of developments in this important aspect of Canadian life. Should further programs of co-operation between associations and the government be developed in the area of language, Mr. Speaker, these will be announced.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree that, as the national capital, the Ottawa region should reflect the reality of Canada. For that reason the recommendations of Volume VI of the B and B report must certainly be treated with respect. I am also pleased to see the encouragement that the government is giving to voluntary associations in this area.

I am not going to deal in detail with the government's response to the recommendations concerning the national capital region as provided in the document the Prime Minister just tabled. He was courteous enough to send me a copy of it this morning. In many respects it represents simply a declaration of the obvious. It quite properly notes that several of the recommendations are addressed to other jurisdictions where the only thing the federal government can offer is help and encouragement. The federal government cannot direct in those areas and that, of course, is how it should be under our system of government.

The National Capital Commission of course has a valuable, indeed an essential, role to play in the national capital area. I think one should note in passing that its existence involves some diminution of funds available to the municipal units in the area and that this diminution perhaps impedes those municipal units from making progress as rapidly as they would like to.

I fully agree that co-operation is necessary at all levels of government, although I must say that I hope the episode relating to what I believe is now called the Portage bridge is not an example of the kind of co-operation the federal government intends to display in future in this area.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

As to the recommendation of the Commission on the necessity of promoting in every respect the equality between Anglophones and Francophones in the national capital, we agree with the attitude of the government which proposes to increase its role in that field. However, we stress the importance of constant and close consultations in this regard between the federal government, on the one hand, and the Quebec and Ontario governments on the other, to ensure that neither of those two governments ever feels that its rights are being encroached upon by the decisions concerning the national capital.

Our common goal must be to ensure that the capital region is a reflection of the Canadian reality. That means, of course, recognition of the English and French facts. However, it also involves a recognition of the cultural diversity of our country that goes beyond English and French. There is no recommendation in this volume of the bilingualism and biculturalism report on this subject, but we should not discuss the issue of national unity without re-emphasizing the importance of Canadian pluralism.

We should also not forget that in terms of government action we are discussing bilingualism in an institutional rather than in a personal sense. In Ottawa, as in Canada as a whole, there must be recognition of the fact that the majority of Canadians, whether they are English-speaking or French-speaking, are not bilingual. There must be acceptance of the fact of unilingualism as well, and that applies equally to French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians. The worst way to encourage bilingualism would be to try to enforce it too rigidly. There are areas where individual bilingualism is, in principle, essential. There can be do doubt about that. However, we cannot expect to correct everything overnight. There must be no injustices to older people who grew up in a different era. That, too, would be doing a disservice to the bilingualism it is desired to develop.

What we are working for, and what the commission I am sure was working for in preparing this report, is a country, and in this specific instance a capital region, where the individual Canadian can live in dignity and know that his language and origin will be respected, that he will be respected as an individual. If we remember that and apply it, we shall certainly be helping the cause of national unity.

[Translation]

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity that I have to speak in French in the House. I know that I am not really ready to do so, but I feel that it is a fitting occasion and I will make a try.

We of the New Democratic Party are quite satisfied with the policy of the government which is endeavouring to implement the recommendations appearing in volume V of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism.

We sincerely hope that this policy will alter our national capital, so that it may become truly representative of the bilingual and multicultural facets of our country.

We think that it is exceedingly important that this action be immediately undertaken in order to consolidate the already established bases so that our capital will be truly national.

It is very important that all Canadians, including French-speaking Canadians, feel they are really welcome in the capital.

French-speaking Canadians have had long-standing grievances about the Anglophone character of Ottawa.

We therefore believe it is urgent for the government to make already announced arrangements so that Ottawa can become the capital of all Canadians regardless of their racial origin, language and status.

In short, we claim for each and everyone the inalienable rights that are theirs.

[English]

For too long, Mr. Speaker, too many Canadians have felt themselves to be strangers in their own capital. For too long, for too many Canadians visiting their national capital was almost like visiting a foreign land. The situation was, and is, iniquitous and one of the factors generating tension within the nation. In accepting and implementing recommendations one and two in Book V of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism which deal with the equality of the French and English languages in the federal context and the provision of services in French and English, the government will be going a long way toward removing an ancient and completely justified grievance. I am pleased to see that in his remarks, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) recognized that in attempting to do this we also recognize that a great many people in this capital are not bilingual and that provision must be made for that fact.

We also welcome the suggestion that the federal government, in accordance with the recommendations of the royal commission, will be attempting to foster a greater integration of essential services, such as transportation, on both sides of the Ottawa river, and that there are now also enhanced prospects of a more equitable distribution of new government construction on either side of the river.

For a long time I have been of the opinion that the boundaries of what is to constitute the capital of Canada should be extended beyond the city limits of Ottawa to coincide more directly with the boundaries of the national capital region as established in the National Capital Act of 1959. Such a capital would more closely reflect the make-up of this nation in terms of language, culture and of social organization, since it would include both urban and rural districts, than does our present capital. I am pleased to see that in accepting the recommendations of the royal commission the government is moving some distance in this direction.

The recommendations envisage the establishment of a tripartite committee of the three senior governments in the capital region, the federal government, the government of Ontario and the government of Quebec. Again, this is most welcome. It should mean more co-ordination of effort, less waste and greater equality of condition.

• (2:20 p.m.)

But here I should like to enter two caveats. First, I believe that the municipalities concerned must be represented on the committee in some formal way if many potential difficulties are to be anticipated and misunderstanding is to be avoided. Second, the three senior governments would seem to have equal authority. Given the current political situation in the country, I can see no way around that particular approach, but it worries me because the capital is, after all, the capital of the whole nation and there might be a tendency for the provincial governments to be too strongly influenced by purely local concerns with the result that the national interest might sometimes be lost. As I say, I can offer no concrete suggestions to overcome this potential flaw but I raise the point in the hope that some attention will be devoted to it and some effort made to avoid the pitfalls.

As to the recommendation that federal government policy on the national capital be co-ordinated insofar as possible by one body at the federal level and that the National Capital Commission is the logical body to undertake that task, we in this party are in wholehearted agreement.

Finally, with respect to the Prime Minister's remarks concerning volume six, which deals with voluntary associations, we welcome the undertaking that the government will be giving the report continuing and careful consideration. I hope that in so doing the government will, in considering the French-English aspects of the question, consider seriously as well the value of voluntary associations in developing and defining the multicultural nature of our Canadian society and frame its eventual policies accordingly.

The national capital should be the jewel in the crown of our nation. In order to be so it must reflect the true character of our nation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I have to interrupt the hon. member and I hope he will not mind my doing so. I know that these questions which are brought to the attention of the House from day to day by way of ministerial statements are important, but the rule is there that the comments of hon. members acting as spokesmen for their respective parties should be brief. I have listened to the hon. member with great interest. The statement he is making is of significance. Nevertheless, an effort should be made by hon. members to limit, to some extent at least, the contributions they make during this part of our proceedings.

Mr. Rowland: You anticipated me by about five seconds, Mr. Speaker. I simply wanted to say on behalf of my party that we welcome this additional evidence of further efforts to make the capital more truly reflect the nature of our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, everybody sincerely hopes for a national capital which would really reflect the existence of the various Canadian ethnical groups. However, this ideal capital which we all want requires understanding and co-operation from those living around it.

When we hear people complaining that the capital of Ottawa is not giving them their due, we must ask ourselves if they are ready to make the necessary sacrifices to benefit from it. They are ready to avail themselves of its advantages but are seldom willing to meet their obligations.

The statement of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is quite in order. Regarding bilinguism, we learned through the Commission's reports that French is spoken in Quebec and English in the other provinces. Everyone has known that for a long time.

The Commission's recommendations are far from being clear. Referring to Volume VI, the Prime Minister said and I quote:

[English]

Here the Commission, while analysing in depth the many facets of associational life in Canada, makes no formal recommendations.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe we have the wrong approach to this problem if, for instance, we compel people of 40, 45 and even 50 years of age to learn a second language. To my mind this is abusing the good will of people. The Commission should recommend—and the government should follow suit—that a federal-provincial conference on education be held in order to look into the possibility of teaching the two languages right from the first school year across Canada.

If we took such action, in less than 10 years our country, including its capital, would become bilingual.

We should not attempt the impossible by forcing 40- or 50-year-old citizens to learn French or English. The right hon. Prime Minister did not wait until he was 52 to learn English; that is why he speaks it so well now, because he learned it in his youth, and he knows that. However, the Leader of the Official Opposition has trouble learning French because he started too late. That is a striking example, Mr. Speaker.

If the government suggested that the provinces—since education comes under provincial jurisdiction—finance their departments of education in order to have French and English taught in every school in Canada from the first year, we would not have to say this today: We want a bilingual capital, we want bilingualism, we want goodwill between English-speaking and French-speaking citizens. The whole country would be naturally bilingual, as a result of education.

That is the solution to the problem and that is my recommendation following the right hon. Prime Minister's statement.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROCEDURES IN ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I do so because of recent newspaper articles concerning the bankruptcies of several firms sponsored by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and a letter of reply by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion admitting that his department has paid more than $500,000 in job-creating subsidies to firms which subsequently closed down and another $1,400,000 paid or pledged to companies that have since made substantial lay-offs. In view of the minister's admission in this respect, I would move, with unanimous consent:

That the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be instructed to review DREE procedures and guidelines in accepting applications under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the proposed motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put because there is not unanimity.

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRIES FOR MODERNIZATION OR DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 830—Mr. Valade:

Since 1966, how much money did the federal government allocate to industries in (a) Ontario (b) Quebec for modernization or development?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: ($000s) (a) $101,539; (b) $107,608. These figures include the Defence Industry Productivity Program (DIP), the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology (PAIT), the Industrial Design Assistance Program (IDAP) and the General Adjustment Assistance Program (GAAP).

In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: Grants paid to industries for modernization and expansion, since 1966: (a) $4,014,959; (b) $17,077,691.

FISP OPERATION

Question No. 1,714—Mr. Alexander:

1. What is the anticipated administrative cost regarding the Family Income and Security Plan during its first year of operation?

2. How many people (a) are involved in the processing of Family and Youth Allowance cheques (b) will be involved during the first year of the Family Income Security Plan's operation?

3. What is the breakdown of children of the ages one to seventeen years inclusive for the year 1970?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and Statistics Canada as follows: 1. It is anticipated that the administrative costs for one fiscal year after the program has been established would be approximately $13.5 million or about 1.7 per cent of the $800 million being paid out in FISP benefits.

2. (a) 730; (b) it is anticipated that when the Family Income Security Plan has been fully implemented the number will be about 1,477.

3. The attached table provides a breakdown of the number of children of the ages one to seventeen inclusive as of June 1, 1970.

Estimated breakdown of children of ages one to seventeen years, Canada, as of June 1, 1970

Age	Population

POLLUTION CONTROL—ELK RIVER, B.C.

Question No. 1,783—Mr. Rose:

1. Does the government have a monitoring program for pollution control on the Elk River in British Columbia and, if so, how long has the program been in effect?

2. Will the government make public the nature and degree of the Elk River pollution as well as the source of effluent?

3. Are steps being taken to control pollution on the Elk River to improve the quality of the water?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. No.

2. N/A

3. Yes. The British Columbia Department of Recreation and Conservation, in their capacity as administrators of the Fisheries Act on behalf of the Federal Government, is conducting an environmental protection investigation in the Elk River region at the present time.

WORK FORCE—PERCENTAGE OF WOMEN WORKERS

Question No. 1,910—Mr. Mather:

1. What percentage of the work force are women?

2. What percentage of women workers are (a) single (b) married (c) divorced?

3. What percentage of the voters are women?

4. What percentage of policy-making federal government jobs are held by women?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada, the Chief Electoral Officer and the Treasury Board Secretariat as follows: 1. The labour force survey for September, 1971 showed that 33 per cent of the labour force were women.

2. In September, 1971, the labour force survey showed that among women employees: 32 per cent were single, 59 per cent were married, and 9 per cent had other marital statuses (divorced, widowed, legally separated).

3. No information available.

4. It is not possible to characterize jobs in the federal Public Service as policy-making or not policy-making. However, if the portion of the Public Service in which some contribution is made to policy development is taken as being the employees in the Executive Category, the Scientific and Professional Category, and the Administrative and Foreign Service Category, the percentage of women in this portion of the Public Service is 14.2 per cent.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—ROAD SIGNS

Question No. 1,946—Mr. Robinson:

In view of the bilingual program in Canada, will the government consider the advisability of making all road signs on the Trans-Canada Highway and other federal roads bilingual?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Transport, the National Capital Commission and the Department of Public Works, as follows: At the present time the Federal Government is pursuing a policy of making all road signs on Federal roads bilingual. This policy is being acted on as quickly as practical. The road signs on the Trans-Canada Highway are the responsibility of the province through which the highway passes. All the provinces use the "Manual for Uniform Traffic Control Devices for Canada" as a guide and this manual supports the principles of symbolized and bilingual signs.

All road signs on NCC controlled parkways and driveways in the National Capital Region are bilingual. These signs are updated as required, as for instance when standard symbols replace written signs. As far as highway facilities under the Department of Public Works' jurisdiction are concerned, signing is generally in accordance with the provincial standards in which the facility is located.

TAKE-HOME INFORMATION ON NEW AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 1,964—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to making the provision of take-home information on new automobiles available to the consumer without charge?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No.

NUMBER OF MURDERS

Question No. 1,972—Mr. Woolliams:

1. How many murders were reported in Canada for the years 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971 to date?

2. How many homicides have been reported in Canada of police officers in 1968, 1969, 1970 and 1971 to date?

Questions

3. Has there been an increase in the crime of murder since 1968, having taken into account the increase in population and what is the percentage of this increase?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to starred question No. 1,972, like No. 2,042, is lengthy and would require an undue amount of time to read. Therefore I ask that the replies to these questions be tabled and recorded in Hansard as if they had been read.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The answer referred to above follows.]

Statistics Canada reports that: 1. The number of murders in Canada reported by the police to Statistics Canada for the years 1968 to 1970 follow: 1968, 314; 1969, 342; 1970, 430,; figures for 1971 are not available.

/one incident involves one suspect and forty victims.

2. The number of murders of policemen reported in Canada for the years 1968 to 1970 follow: 1968, 5; 1969, 5; 1970, 3; 1971, not available.

3. The following figures show the percentage increase from one year to the next in the crime of murder, taking into account the increase in the population: From 1968 to 1969, 6.5 per cent; From 1969 to 1970, 23.0 per cent ;

In 1970 one incident involves one suspect and forty victims.

SUBMISSION BY THE TOWN OF TRACADIE TO MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Question No. 2,013—Mr. Coates:

1. Was a submission presented to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion by the Town of Tracadie, New Brunsiwck and, if so (a) on what date was such a submission made (b) what were the names of the persons who met with the Minister (c) what was the result of this meeting?

2. Is the subject of the submission presented by the Town of Tracadie under consideration by the government at the present time and, if so, on what date will a decision be rendered on the recommendations contained in the submission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Yes. (a) September 16, 1971. (b) Mayor Losier; Deputy Mayor Ferguson; Councillors: Laplante, Losier, Robichaud and Saulnier; H. Breau, M.P. (c) It was suggested to the members of the delegation that they might wish to make their submission to the government of the Province of New Brunswick which could then, if it wished, after an assessment of its priorities, pursue the subject under the federal-provincial FRED agreement for Northeast New Brunswick.

2. See answer to 1 (c).

ABORTIONS

Question No. 2,029—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many legal abortions have been performed in Canada during each of the past ten years?

2. How many illegal abortions have been performed in Canada during each of the past ten years?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: 1. Statistics Canada only began compiling information on abortions when the amendment to the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1969 regarding abortions came into force on August 26, 1969. Data prior to this and information for the Northwest Territories are not available. The following table provides the available data.

Period	Reported Number of Therapeutic Abortions in Canada
August 26/69—Dec. 31/69	542
Jan. 1/70—Dec. 31/70	11,200
Jan. 1/71—June 30/71	14,188

2. This information is not available.

HIGHWAY-RAILWAY GRADE CROSSINGS

Question No. 2,033—Mr. Mather:

1. How many deaths in Canada in 1969 and 1970 were attributable to unsafe rail-highway grade crossings?

2. How many crossings exist where train and traffic volume justify improvements?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. In 1969 there were 399 accidents attributable to a number of causes at highway-railway grade crossings which resulted in death to 120 persons and injuries to 519 persons. The figures for 1970 were 384, 103 and 516, respectively.

2. The commission does not maintain a record of which of the over 31,000 highway-railway grade crossings carry train and vehicular traffic sufficient to justify improvements. Rail and highway traffic volume is a consideration which is established subsequent to formal application for crossing improvement, protection or elimination made to the commission by the responsible road authority.

ESKIMO CHILDREN—LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,037—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What program, if any, was devised to assist teachers teaching English to Eskimo children?

2. Do they attend special in-service training courses before beginning teaching English and, if so, for how long and who conducts the courses?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. In the Northwest Territories, special workshops are organized and directed by experts in this field. From these workshops, courses are developed. One of the courses most extensively used is called "Let's begin English." Well qualified teacher consultants provide assistance to teachers who require it and visit schools where help is most urgently needed.

2. Yes. The duration of these courses varies from three days to two weeks. The courses are conducted by specialists in the field of teaching English as a second language. This year's courses for teachers going into the Frobisher and Keewatin regions were conducted by Mr. M. Mallon. In the MacKenzie District, the courses were conducted by Dr. Gloria Dampson.

COST OF CENSUS

Question No. 2,040—Mr. Robinson:

What was the estimated cost of the 1971 Census?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: The cost of the 1971 Census of Canada from the 1967-68 fiscal year up to the end of the 1971-72 fiscal year is estimated at $38,000,000.

,DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE—ENGAGEMENT OF PUBLIC RELATIONS FIRM

Question No. 2,042—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Has the Department of the Secretary of State engaged the services of Break, Pain and Watt, a Toronto public relations firm and, if so (a) from what date (b) what is the term of the contract (c) how much public money is involved in obtaining the services of this firm?

2. What services will be performed by Break, Pain and Watt which cannot be undertaken by Information Canada and the Department's own information division?

[Editor's note: The answer, taken as read, follows:]

1. Yes. (a), (b) and (c). Term of Contracts: (i) Aug. 28, 1970 to Oct. 31, 1970, $19,596.32; (ii) Jan. 4, 1971 to April 2, 1971, $20,420.56; (iii) April 5, 1971 to Oct. 4, 1971, $40,545.93; (iv) June 1, 1971 to Sept. 3, 1971, $5,173.54; (v) Nov. 1, 1971 to Feb. 29, 1972, up to $68,500.00.

2. The services performed under contracts (i), (ii) and (iii) were the planning and development of recommendations for a communications programme for the bilingualism program, the development of implementation studies with respect to some of those recommendations, and the carrying out of certain aspects of the communications program.

The service performed under contract (iv) was the development of a plan for the promotion of Canadian citizenship.

The services performed under contract (v) have been the provision to the Information Services Branch of leadership, administrative direction and implementation support to enable it to meet its immediate and on-going day-to-day work requirements until these duties could be assumed by the new Director of Information Services on December 9. Since his arrival, the services now being performed are the provision of assistance to the new Director and to Information Services in updating its long-range planning forecasts so as to meet future requirements.

COLOMBO PLAN

Question No. 2,052—Mr. Robinson:

What has been accomplished in economic development by the Colombo Plan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The economic growth histories of the Colombo Plan region countries are so diverse that generalizations are not too reliable. Such factors as declines in world prices of traditional exports, drought and political tensions can have a marked effect on individual rates of development. Over the past decade the average increase in GNP for all developing countries has been approximately 5 p. 100. In 1969 nine Colombo Plan countries Ceylon, Korea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Burma, Pakistan, the Philippines and Thailand achieved a real GNP growth rate of 6.9 p. 100. At the same time population in the developing countries has been growing at the rate of 2.5 p.

100 (In the industrialized countries the population growth averaged 1.2 p. 100.)

In general, Canadian assistance has been concentrated on major projects which have a high priority in the development plans of recipient countries and in fields in which Canadian technological experience is of special value. Canada has concentrated on projects such as the construction of nuclear power plants, hydro electric power installations, power transmission lines, transportation facilities as well as the provision of equipment and expertise in the fields of agriculture, forestry, fisheries and education.

EDUCATION—ESKIMO CHILDREN

Question No. 2,053—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In each year since 1958, how many Eskimo children started school at the grade 1 level?

2. How many of the Eskimo children in each school since 1958 finished grades 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11?

3. Is the percentage of Eskimo school children reaching high school substantially lower than the percentage of other Canadian school children reaching high school and, if so, has the government conducted any studies to ascertain the basic reasons for this difference?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. 1968-69, 669; 1969-70, 739; 1970-71, 925.

for previous years see answer to Parliamentary Question No. 1,444 tabled in the House of Commons on April 16, 1969.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO COLOMBO PLAN

Question No. 2,068—Mr. Robinson:

1. What has been Canada's total financial contribution to the Colombo Plan since its inception?

2. How have the funds contributed been utilized?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada's total bilateral financial contribution to the developing countries of the Colombo Plan area since the plan's inception in 1951 until the end of fiscal year 1971/72 was $1,377 million.

2. The funds were utilized in the following manner: Food Aid, $597 million; Grant Aid, 402 million; Development Loans 378 million.

[Mr. Sharp.]

NUMBER OF PERSONS SENTENCED UNDER HABITUAL CRIMINAL SECTIONS OF THE CRIMINAL CODE

Question No. 2,079—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many persons have been sentenced under the Habitual Criminal sections of the Criminal Code and sentenced to preventive detention in each province in the years 1969 and 1970?

2. How many habitual criminals are still in prison after (a) ten years (b) five years?

3. How many of these people (a) have been paroled (b) violated their parole (c) returned to prison (d) received paroles in each of the years 1969 and 1970?

4. Do the inmates serve their original sentence and then serve x-number of years before parole is considered?

5. What special programs are available to these inmates and in what prisons are these programs available in British Columbia?

6. How much time must be spent on these programs before parole is considered for these prisoners?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. 1969: Quebec, 4; Alberta, 1; British Columbia, 3; Total 8. 1970: Quebec, 11.

2. (a) 3; (b) 4.

3. (a) 112 (total to date); (b) 48; (c) 48; (d) 1969—17; 1970—22.

4. No: An inmate who has been declared an habitual criminal serves for an indeterminate period of time in lieu of his original sentence. However, pursuant to Section 694 of the Criminal Code, the inmate's case is reviewed once in every year to determine whether he should be granted parole.

5. All persons serving a term of preventive detention enjoy the same privileges and opportunities to participate in institutional programs, as other types of inmates. In addition, through diagnostic, collaboration between treatment staff and the inmates involved, an individual program is developed to meet the specific needs of the person. These programs take the form of specialized individual treatment consisting of personal counselling and/or group therapy. British Columbia Penitentiary is the only federal correctional institution in British Columbia which provides a group therapy program of this nature.

6. No mandatory term of imprisonment is prescribed, for inmates serving indeterminate sentences, before they are eligible for parole consideration. Each case is reviewed once in every year pursuant to Section 694 of the Criminal Code to determine whether parole should be granted.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 2,081—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the total amount collected in the form of Old Age Security Tax in 1969 and 1970?

2. What amount was paid out in 1969 and 1970 on Old Age Pensions of $75.00 per month?

3. What amount was paid out in supplementary payments in 1969 and 1970?

4. What is the balance of the Old Age Security Fund?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1.

$1,626.1 million	$1,831.0 million

2. The pension was increased to 76.50 effective January 1968; to $78 effective January 1969; and to $79.58 effective January 1970. Total amounts paid were as follows:

1968-69	1969-70

3.

1968-69	1969-70
$244,470,268	$263,478,628

4. $672.3 million as of September 30, 1971.

GULF SHORE HIGHWAY—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Question No. 2,156—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What was the commencement date for construction of the Gulf Shore highway in the Prince Edward Island National Park?

2. What was the total cost of construction for the highway and of subsequent additions or improvement to it?

3. When was it decided that a bridge across the Rustico Harbour would not be erected?

4. What were the reasons for such decision?

5. What expenditure has already been made on research for this bridge?

6. Has a definite decision been made to abandon plans for the erection of this bridge?

7. What alternative plans have been made to overcome the transportation gap which the non-construction of the bridge constitutes?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. April 1956.

2. $2,970,000 plus $480,000 to replace Covehead Bridge in 1963-64.

3. June 1964.

4. Because of difficulties involved in constructing this bridge namely: stabilization of nearly a mile of shifting sand dunes; construction of footings under extremely difficult conditions of tidal action; saline erosion and sand movement; spanning of a considerable breadth of navigable waterway by providing a swing-span bridge; cost of construction and expensive maintenance problem to prevent encroachment of sand dunes and saline erosion of metallic structures.

5. $40,000 for a model study carried out by the National Research Council in 1963.

6. Yes.

7. The provincial government has proposed a causeway that would link North Rustico and Rustico Island. This proposal was turned down for the following reasons: a) It would have significant adverse effects upon the Park; b) A pedestrian/vehicle conflict would result because of the location of such a causeway.

A development concept currently under review includes a parkway proposal which would traverse the inland environment and provide for penetration routes to the shore.

MAINTENANCE COST OF CANADIAN EMBASSIES

Question No. 2,176—Mr. MacRae:

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

1971 CENSUS—KAMOURASKA CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,905—Mr. Dionne:

1. What are the names and addresses of the people who were hired to carry out the 1971 Census in the constituency of Kamouraska?

2. What amount was paid to each for this work?

Return tabled.

NOISE POLLUTION

Question No. 2,016—Mr. Ryan:

Is the government currently studying the problem of noise pollution in urban centres and, if so, how and with what results?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion No. 261?

COPY OF UNITED STATES COMMUNICATION PROPOSING CONSTRUCTION OF PIPELINE FROM ALASKA TO SOUTHERN 48 STATES

Motion No. 261—Mr. Anderson:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the United States communication of 1970 proposing the construction of an oil pipeline from Alaska to the Southern 48 States via Canada, referred to by Mr. James Akins of the United States State Department as quoted on page 10 of the Washington Daily News of 18 October 1971.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unhappily it is not possible to accept the request tabled by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) since no communication of the kind requested exists. The United States has made no formal or specific proposal involving specific Arctic pipeline projects nor has there been any substantive discussion with the United States government on this subject although it was raised briefly at one meeting, between Canadian and United States officials, on the subject of bilateral trade in energy commodities. I therefore, with great regret, ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the motion.

[English]

Mr. Anderson: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On November 18 I placed question No. 2,152 on the order paper. It concerns the Ministry of Transport. Since, if the government gets its way, we will be adjourning until some time in February, I am thwarted in my efforts to get an answer to this very important question which concerns the instrument landing system at the airport at St. John's. Your Honour has said on a number of occasions that the oral question period is not the proper time to ask questions of a local nature. Consequently, in accordance with Your Honour's advice I placed this very important question on the order paper. May I also add that on the same day I wrote the Minister of Transport but I have not had any satisfaction from that source either. I am wondering what other avenue is open to me because my question concerns matters of safety regarding the operation of the airport, and I understand from information I have received today that the instrument landing system is still not working.

Mr. Jerome: I only know that we could scarcely get a subject in which the Minister of Transport is more vitally concerned because he flies in and out of that airport every week, so I know he will be diligent in preparing an answer to the question.

Mr. Baldwin: That is a poor excuse.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INDIAN ASSOCIATION OF ALBERTA—ALLEGED IMPROPER ACCOUNTING FOR FUNDS—REQUEST THAT REPRESENTATIVES BE HEARD BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. When the minister appeared before the standing committee a couple of weeks ago he suggested that the Indian Association of Alberta had not properly accounted for the funds allotted to it. Has the minister now had an opportunity to look into the matter and is he satisfied that the Indian Association of Alberta has properly accounted for all funds given to it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the situation is still the same and we are auditing the books concerned. Obviously some amounts have not been spent for the scheduled purposes. But, as to the other part of these amounts, they are now being investigated by government officials and I did not yet receive a final report on this.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: In view of the minister's answer that he is not yet clear on this matter, would he have objection to representatives of the Indian Association of Alberta appearing before the standing committee in order to give a proper public accounting and to try to clear their name of the allegations that have been made?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the committee is not under my authority.

[English]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Before the House rises, will the minister make a complete detailed statement on the serious financial irresponsibility which he claims exists on the part of the Indian Association of Alberta in its relations with his department, and will he place the entire matter before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible either for the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: In view of the apparent breakdown in communication between the minister and the Indian Association of Alberta and in view of the resignation of Harold Cardinal, the president, I wonder whether the minister would consider taking the same course of action in order that a more effective minister can be placed in this position?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

PRESS, TELEVISION, UNION AND UNIVERSITY CRITICISM OF AUTHORITY—STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's opinion, as expressed in an interview with James Reston of the New York Times released yesterday, that the emergence in contemporary Canada of press, television, union and university criticism of authority is pushing society "toward a breakdown", does he intend to ask that this subject be added to the terms of reference of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons set up to look into measures needed to deal with emergency situations in Canada?

An hon. Member: Author?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will certainly take the member's representation into consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: I repudiate the suggestion that it was a representation. It is a very important question. In view of the profound importance to a free society of the existence of many and diverse centres of criticism, would the Prime Minister either make a statement on motions clarifying his meaning or, failing this, repudiate entirely the implication that he is committed to the restriction of free criticism?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot understand why the hon. member wants the matter referred to a committee in the first place and then says it has no importance.

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In refusing to answer the first question adequately the Prime Minister completely distorted what I had to say in the second.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that that is hardly a point of order.

AGRICULTURE

BRIEF OF QUEBEC HOG PRODUCERS ASSOCIATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that in the last few days he has received a brief from the Quebec Hog Producers Association asking that the federal government or the Department of Agriculture pay part of a grant to compensate for losses by Quebec hog producers, would the minister tell this House if the government intends to grant this request?

• (2:40 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have announced a program that will be initiated under the Agricultural Stabilization Act as soon as we have the figures for 1971.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member for Hillsborough would mind if I allowed the hon. member for Richmond a supplementary. I believe he was waiting for the interpretation.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Would the minister tell us if he intends to implement the recommendation that his department reimburse certain sums that the Quebec hog producers have lost last year?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this will not be done on the basis of losses for individual producers. There will be an average deficiency payment determined and of course it will be paid to all producers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO PAKISTANI REFUGEES WHILE IN INDIA AND AFTER REPATRIATION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is now able to answer my question of a few days ago regarding Canada's aid program with reference to the millions of suffering people in recently war-torn and long-suffering Bangla Desh?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am now in a position to say that, although the situation remains fluid in view of the formal cessation of hostilities, it is now possible to proceed to disburse some of the $18 million which I announced would be available for the relief of Pakistani refugees in India. To help meet these needs both for relief and rehabilitation while they are in India and for a limited period after they are repatriated, a first tranche of $5 million has been decided upon. Two million dollars will be distributed to the United Nations' High Commissioner for Refugees in his capacity as the international focal point for refugee relief, and $3 million will be channelled through Canadian voluntary agencies which are supporting relief programs in India and in East Pakistan.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if the government's attitude is one of encouragement to those many Canadian organizations and individuals which have contributed generously on an individual basis to this area of need?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In order to give tangible evidence of our support we are allocating government funds to those agencies which we hope will encourage them to raise money voluntarily.

BANGLA DESH—POSSIBLE RECOGNITION BY CANADA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he inform the House whether any steps have been taken toward the diplomatic recognition of the new country of Bangla Desh?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the House will agree that until there is evidence of a government being in control in that area it would be unwise to proceed with recognition or an exchange of diplomats.

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE TO PLAN ASSISTANCE IN RECONSTRUCTION IN EAST PAKISTAN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first question, has the minister considered calling a conference of development agencies, both public and voluntary, to plan Canadian assistance in the immense task of reconstruction and will the government consider, without prejudice to the question of formal diplomatic recognition, communicating with the civil authorities of Bangla Desh or East Pakistan with a view to offering Canadian development aid?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it would be well for us to utilize the international agencies available for this purpose. That is the purpose I had in mind when I said that $2 million would be allocated to the High Commissioner for Refugees who is the focal point for distribution of relief. I do not believe we can organize distribution of relief in Canada. It must be done on the spot.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Labelle wanted to put a supplementary to the one put before.

MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND QUEBEC FARMERS' DELEGATION

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask if he has met with a large delegation of farmers from the province of Quebec?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

TIME OF DISTRIBUTION OF EMPLOYEES' DEDUCTION FORMS UNDER NEW BILL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue and has to do with the employees' tax deduction returns that will have to be made once the Governor General has given royal assent to the so-called tax reform bill. When are these returns being sent out to be completed by employees?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, these returns I believe have already been distributed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary because I have some of the forms here headed "TD-1, Rev. 1972." The form deals with claims for personal exemptions, exemptions for single, divorced or separated people and for widows or widowers, exemptions for wholly dependent children, total exemptions, and so on. I am informed that these forms were sent out three weeks ago before Parliament passed the bill. Was this intended as another affront to this institution?

Mr. Gray: Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. The application of these forms would, of course, be subject to the final decision of Parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, how can the minister explain the sending out of returns containing all the amendments provided for in the bill that was then before Parliament three weeks before Parliament dealt with it? Surely we are coming to a state where bureaucracy and autocracy are running this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, this was done so that firms could arrange their affairs in such a way that if and when Parliament gave final approval to the legislation the benefits by way of lower taxes could go into effect immediately in the new year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That frivolous explanation is not accepted. Did the minister have another leak in his department as to what the House of Commons and the Senate were going to do with this bill?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I have to bring to the attention of hon. members who contribute from their seats on the back benches to debate, to the question period or to other proceedings from time to time by way of interruptions that this is not in keeping with the dignity of Parliament. I am not referring to any member in particular, but I think all hon. members would want to exercise self-discipline in this regard and appreciate that this adds nothing to the efficiency of our debates or the dignity of Parliament and the reputation of the institution. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I apologize to the hon. member. A point of order is being raised by an hon. member.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is as a result of your admonition concerning interruptions. Could the House now hear the supplementary question that was asked by the right hon. member?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

PENSIONS

LOWERING OF AGE FOR ESCALATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED ARMED FORCES AND RCMP PERSONNEL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. On November 26 as well as on a number of other occasions I asked the minister what progress is being made in making the necessary arrangements so that retired armed forces and RCMP personnel may get their pensions escalated without having to wait until age 60. The last answer was that an effort was being made to achieve the reconciliation to make this possible. Now that it is Christmas, can the minister report progress on this matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can report progress. I think the hon. gentleman is aware that in order to effect the purpose he is seeking legislation will be required. I think he is as well aware as I am that our legislative calendar is a little crowded.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the government thinks the House can take six or seven weeks off, could we not find time to deal with this matter?

BANKRUPTCY OF CERTAIN QUEBEC FIRMS AFTER RECEIVING GRANTS—CRITERIA FOR EVALUATING APPLICATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the admission by the minister in a letter to Le Soleil that over $500,000 was paid out in grants under the Regional Industrial Incentives Act to firms in Quebec that subsequently went bankrupt, is he prepared to make known to the House the criteria used in evaluating those applications under the Regional Development Incentives Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I trust the minister would not make this statement now. The hon. member has asked a very general question. The minister should indicate whether he would want to make a statement on motions.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am merely rising on a question of privilege. I think that the amount of $500,000 is probably correct in relation to a total of $100 million which have been paid. That is a lot better than an error committed by a certain well known government concerning the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a supplementary question. The minister is obviously very sensitive on this point, and well he should be, in view of the criticisms levelled at the program, especially in the province of Quebec. I would ask him whether in view of the subsequent revelation that over $2 million has been paid out to firms in Quebec that have either gone bankrupt or, subsequent to receiving the grants, have had substantial layoffs, will he explain to the House what the policy was on which he based his decisions in making these grants, and did he refer to well known authorities such as Dun and Bradstreet before making the decisions?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: Again I suggest to the hon. member, particularly in relation to the first part of his question—the latter part was specific—that he is asking a very general question.

[Translation]

Unless the minister wishes to reply briefly, I would point out that this type of information should normally be given on motions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to keep the record straight. Indeed, figures given at random create very grave prejudice. Moreover, those figures being given in this House are given a false interpretation by the member.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: As one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, the minister can clear the air on this matter very simply if he will agree to make a statement on motions tomorrow, in view of the accusations levelled at him in Quebec that his program is patronage ridden in that province.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot on a supplementary.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It deals with the same subject matter that was raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. In the minister's dual capacity as national organizer for the Liberal party and the minister in charge—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: —of grants under DREE—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask a question in those terms. He can ask a question of the minister in his capacity as the minister responsible for a certain part of the administration, but certainly not in his capacity as leader or deputy leader of a party in any province. I am sure the hon. member would like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly accept your suggestion and I will rephrase the question. Could the minister, in his capacity as minister in charge of the making of grants under DREE, assure the House that there is no conflict of interest in granting these moneys and that there are no political bagmen receiving information from his department as to whom to tag for political funds?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: Two million dollars out of $100 million to the Liberal party.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is disgusting.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Prove one case.

Mr. Nowlan: Get up on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The comments I made a moment ago about interruptions from hon. members apply again. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Horner: Resign as national organizer. That is the only way to clear your name.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You resign if you cannot prove what you say.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, get up on a point of privilege, for cripes sake.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Red Deer has the floor.

TRADE

POSSIBLE TEMPORARY REMOVAL OF UNITED STATES IMPORT SURTAX

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the chief United States negotiator to the European Economic Community stated yesterday that approval of the devaluation of the American dollar will not be submitted to Congress until he has a satisfactory trade package agreed to by the EEC, can the minister inform the House whether deletion of the surcharge is a temporary thing and, if so, is Canada exempted from that type of arrangement?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that the surcharge has been lifted.

INCOME TAX

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VALUATION DATE UNDER NEW LEGISLATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell the House whether he expects to be able to announce in Parliament the date of valuation day under the terms of Bill C-259?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Really, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question. I cannot indicate when I am going to announce it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether it will be after he files his substantial amendments to the Income Tax Act next year?

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED LEGAL AID PROGRAM FOR THE YUKON

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact the Minister of Justice is the Attorney General of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and as he has devised a legal aid program for the Yukon but it has not been implemented because the commissioner of that territory has not signed the agreement, I wish to ask why the commissioner has not signed the agreement, and will the minister take immediate steps to have it signed?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we recognize a considerable amount of autonomy for the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories and the Commissioner of the Yukon, and it is up to him to decide when he wants to sign the agreement.

Mr. Gilbert: In the meantime, will the minister direct the police officers in that area not to lay charges against Indians and Eskimos with regard to alcoholism or vagrancy so that they will not feel that discriminatory practices have been perpetrated on them by the police officers?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I might say to the hon. member that the law has to be enforced, but two years ago I gave instructions to the police in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon not to arrest for drunkenness, if possible, but to take the person concerned to his own home.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGY FOR APPLICATION TO INDUSTRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister through whom the Science Council reports to Parliament. In view of the concern expressed some weeks ago by the council about the lack of an industrial strategy in Canada, and in view of the concern indicated in a report published today, I believe based on a study conducted on behalf of the Science Council, about technology in Canada, has the minister developed a strategy in connection with the application of science to industry in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the report that the Leader of the Opposition referred to was released this morning. I had a very preliminary look at it. I think it will make a very useful contribution in helping to answer the basic question: how can we create the conditions for the expansion and development of healthy, growing and viable industries in a world-wide trading system that is more and more dominated by multinational corporations?

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact the minister has had the interim report of the Science Council for several weeks—I assume a man of his diligence has read it many times—can he indicate to the House when we may expect an announcement from him as to an effective and concrete approach to this problem?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any undertaking as to when the hon. gentleman can expect a statement to be made. My advice will be given to my cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Stanfield: Then it will be going down the drain.

• (3:00 p.m.)

FEASIBILITY STUDY OF USE OF NATURAL GAS TO PROPEL AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In view of the statement made recently by the Minister of the Environment, is the government planning to curtail propane gas sales to the United States in order to ensure a supply of clean fuel for future natural gas automobiles? If so, when can we expect an announcement of a feasibility study covering the future use of natural gas in automobiles?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think this question was asked in a slightly different form earlier this week or last week of the Minister of Transport, and he gave us an answer at that time.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF SCIENCE COUNCIL STUDY TO COMMITTEE

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Will the minister refer the Science Council study called "The Multinational Firm, Foreign Directive Investment and Canadian Science policy", to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at the beginning of the next session?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the committees themselves decide the proper time to do this.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—ENTRY OF CANADIAN RAPESEED

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the minister's recent meeting with members of the European Economic Commission, can the minister state what conclusions were drawn from his talks in relation to the acceptability of Canadian rapeseed entering the European Common Market?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to raise this question specifically with representatives of the commission but I have not yet heard what the result may be. I hope it will be favourable.

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTING OF BUTTER BECAUSE OF SHORTAGE—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF PENALTY ON OVER-QUOTA CREAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the shortage of butter in Canada to the extent that it has been necessary recently to import some eight or ten days national supply, would the minister give serious consideration to reducing the penalty of some 30 cents a pound on farm separated cream for over-quota production?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise that the Canadian Dairy Commission does not take any holdback directly on over-quota shipments of cream. This is done on the market share quota. This is being applied, in the case of Ontario, by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board. I recognize there is a problem, but there is also the problem of being equitable between those who have quotas and those who are shipping over the quota. We have to take both things into consideration.

PRICE PAID FOR BUTTER IMPORTED FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him whether or not he knows what price the Canadian government has to pay for American butter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, but I could find out.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED YEAR-ROUND OPERATION OF MEDICAL COLLEGES TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN GRANTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare as a follow-up to questions I have asked the minister on many occasions. In light of the recent statement by the Prime Minister, may I ask whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare is now prepared to give the necessary grants so that medical education can be provided on a year-round basis to help overcome the grave shortage of doctors and relieve unemployment in the student area?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the hon. member before, I believe, that we have some considerable sympathy for this approach.

An hon. Member: You believe?

Mr. Munro: It is primarily an area of provincial responsibility in terms of implementing policies of this kind, and they would have to negotiate such policies with the medical profession and the medical educators. However, we do have the health resources fund now available to the provinces in terms of capital construction for medical education facilities. This fund is available to encourage such development, but I do not know what other leverage the federal government has.

Mr. Rynard: The Prime Minister has indicated that he is in favour of universities operating the year round. I am asking what grants the government is prepared to give to the universities to keep them operating?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, under post-secondary education funds we pay half the operating costs, and under the health resources fund we make moneys available for capital construction, so I do not know what other grants the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Richmond—

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question. Surely, the minister has grasped the fact that the academic year is not a calendar year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is debate.

EFFECT OF JAMES BAY POWER PROJECT ON EXCHANGE RATE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the great concern that the Canadian dollar should not rise too much above the American dollar, is the minister looking at the James Bay project to see what effect the cost of it would have on the Canadian dollar?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, we are not in this regard, Mr. Speaker, and I am pleased to note that the Canadian dollar has moved in the direction that I indicated I thought it would move.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That will be the first time you have been right, if you are.

Mr. Saltsman: Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to discuss this matter with the appropriate officials in the province of Quebec with a view to seeing what effect it would have on the Canadian dollar?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I shall consider the hon. member's suggestion.

PULP AND PAPER—SPECIAL PLANS TO OFFSET EFFECTS OF SHUTDOWNS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): My question is for the right hon. Prime Minister and is a follow-up to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal about the lay-offs at Bathurst, New Brunswick. Is the government in a position today or tomorrow to give some indication of any special plans they might have for this area? I realize there was a statement made when the meeting was held with Premier Hatfield, but is there any reason for optimism for this area before the word is out?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall look into this matter, Mr. Speaker.

SECRETARY OF STATE

AID TO REGINA JUNIOR LIONS BAND TO PARTICIPATE IN TOURNAMENT OF ROSES PARADE

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State on the very important matter I discussed with him a couple of weeks ago. In light of the signal honour which has been accorded to the Regina Junior Lions Band in that they have been invited to participate in the 83rd Tournament of Roses Parade at Pasadena, California, on January 1, can the minister say whether a reasonable grant from one of the travel programs under his jurisdiction has been made to this band in order that they may be able to avail themselves of this wonderful opportunity to help develop good international relations? If not, can the minister indicate whether—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. This kind of question ought not to be asked at this time. If the minister can reply briefly I shall allow it, but we are trying to get through the question period and many members are seeking an opportunity to ask questions. We should try to make the questions brief and also the replies, but the minister can reply briefly.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): As briefly as I can put it, Mr. Speaker, the project was submitted to us. It does not fit the criteria of any one of the travel programs but we are examining whether we can admit it in some other way.

GRAIN

POSSIBLE USE OF UNIT TRAINS TO INCREASE LOADINGS AT WEST COAST TERMINALS

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that maximum monthly loadings at west coast terminals have been in the neighbourhood of 28 millions bushels, and in view of the fact that commitments have been made to load some 37 million bushels in December and the indications are that commitments for January and February will be the same or even more, is the minister giving any consideration to making use of unit hopper car trains to fill the gap?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of maximizing our capacity at Vancouver is receiving consideration. The peak of unloadings apparently results from ships not presenting themselves when they were scheduled. The use of unit trains would not meet this problem. The hold-up is not in the cleaning of the grain or presenting it at the terminals, but rather in the availability of berths at the moment to get the grain on the ships.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that there are just a few minutes left before the end of the question period, and every supplementary asked is of course at the expense of hon. members who are awaiting the opportunity to ask questions. The hon. member for Battle River on a supplementary.

Mr. Downey: In view of the fact that when we check with the exporters they say they can predict the arrival in port of ships within minutes, could the minister in charge of the Wheat Board not attempt to get together with these people so that the public will know what is going on?

Mr. Speaker: That is a representation, of course. The hon. member for Brant.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT FORECASTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister prepared to say whether his department is forecasting a decline or a rise in seasonally adjusted unemployment over the next few months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have very serious doubts about that question.

SECRETARY OF STATE

INQUIRY AS TO GRANT TO FORMER PRIME MINISTER PEARSON TO WRITE MEMOIRS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Has the Canadian government granted moneys to former Prime Minister Lester Pearson to write his memoirs?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question could well be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since this session has almost come to an end and questions put on the order paper may not be answered, could the Secretary of State just answer yes or no?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The rule is very simple. I suggest that that kind of question should be placed on the order paper. The rules indicate that if there is urgency and hon. members are anxious to obtain this kind of information, they can do so by having the matter considered at the time of adjournment.

[Mr. Downey.]

Mr. Trudeau: Raise it at ten o'clock.

Mr. Paproski: On another point of order, Mr. Speaker, if there is to be such a grant, if the Secretary of State is giving money to former prime minister Lester Pearson for this purpose, then I suggest he should give money to two other former Prime Ministers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Wait until next year. The present Prime Minister will then be the former prime minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Save some money for Pierre; as a former prime minister next year, he will need it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REOPENING OF OFFICES TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF CLAIMS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. The minister has indicated to the House that he will be announcing in the House some changes to permit unemployment insurance claims to be paid more quickly. Since in some areas of Canada the service is extremely good whereas in other areas there is quite a bit of difficulty, would the minister consider reopening on a full-time basis some of the offices that were closed formerly?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are reviewing the work load in various areas of Canada. We have opened some offices, as hon. members on both sides of the House know. In view of the representation of the hon. member, I will ask for a full report tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for St. John's West.

AIRPORTS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—OPERABILITY OF INSTRUMENT LANDING SYSTEM

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say what action has been taken by his department to ensure that the instrument landing system is working at St. John's airport?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to give the answer informally, in a sense. As far as I know at the moment, it is working satisfactorily. I will get more details.

GRAIN

USEFULNESS OF UNIT TRAIN IN EXPEDITING SHIPMENTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Battle River. In view of the recent successful trial run utilizing the unit train and inland terminal concept for moving grain to the west coast, could the minister indicate whether this new innovation is being explored and developed and whether it conforms to the recommendations of the committee which was studying the rationalization of grain transportation and handling?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the experiment was no doubt useful for a number of reasons, but a great number of difficulties arise in trying to put any such plan into more common operation. Its more immediate usefulness will become apparent if, indeed, the cleaning facilities are beyond their capacity at either terminal, in which case we might be able to use the cleaning facilities at the inland terminals. At the moment, the cleaning facilities are not the limiting factor.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON RATIONALIZATION OF HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to indicate to the House when the report will be tabled regarding the study with respect to transportation and handling?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot do that. We are planning some further discussions with the provincial authorities before making another move.

POLLUTION

GREAT LAKES—DATE OF SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have negotiations between Canada and the United States on the proposed clean-up of the Great Lakes reached the point where an agreement can be signed before the end of this year? If not, when is the agreement expected to be ready for signature?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer as to the date, but discussions that look toward as early as possible signing of the agreement are proceeding.

FISHERIES

PHASING OUT OF OPERATIONS BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES WITHIN TWELVE MILE LIMIT AND ENCLOSED AREAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the steady decline in the fisheries resources off the coast of Atlantic Canada, when can we expect an announcement from the minister covering the phasing out of fishing operations within our established 12-mile limit and enclosed areas like the Gulf of St. Lawrence by such countries as Denmark, Italy, Spain, Portugal, France and the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, negotiations with a number of these countries are proceeding quite successfully and I would hope that some sort of statement can be made fairly early in the new year. For example, the treaty with Denmark has been initialled ad referendum. It will be coming before the government early in the new year. Therefore I hope that some time early in 1972 we might be able to make an over-all statement.

RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT WITH NORWAY—CONSULTATION WITH MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUESTED TABLING OF DIPLOMATIC NOTES ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH VARIOUS COUNTRIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister say whether an agreement between Norway and Canada was ratified today and can he further say whether that agreement in any way reflected consultations with the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the Norwegian government has ratified. The question of a fishing agreement has not yet come before our government for ratification, but I expect that it will be ratified almost immediately. These negotiations and the treaties that result come from very extensive study by all interests in the Atlantic area as well as, of course, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of External Affairs. I do not think there is any doubt that they are very much in Canada's interest.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is deliberately or otherwise misleading the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat. The hon. member cannot say that a minister or another hon. member is deliberately misleading the House. That is unparliamentary. Even if an hon. member objects to a statement, at no time is he allowed to use unparliamentary language. I have no intention whatever of allowing hon. members, even though it is close to Christmas, to use that kind of language at this time or to display this kind of attitude. It constitutes a disregard of the rules. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question which is in order I will recognize him for that purpose, but I will not recognize him for the purpose of making accusations against other hon. members.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if the rules of the House of Commons prevent me from telling the truth, I can only say to Your Honour—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is intelligent and should recognize that the Chair cannot allow the hon. member to say, "I will not use those words because I am not allowed to tell the truth." The hon. member knows that he cannot use that tactic.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be in order for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to correct the record with regard to the statement he has just made, because the agreement between Canada and Norway was ratified today. I understand that there has been a statement, which is either on record or which has come from the minister's office, indicating that Canada has agreed to permit Norway to violate the territorial seas of Canada under an official agreement. Your Honour, if members are not permitted to refer to public facts, and if ministers such as this minister who does not have a spine at all—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lundrigan: —or any backbone—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he has no right to use this language. I again tell him that he must respect the rules of the House. I hesitate to use the word "rules". Let us say that he must respect the adopted and recognized customs and usages of this House. The hon. member can ask a question without going to these extremes of language and expression. I recognized him for the purpose of a supplementary question, because we had reached the end of the question period. He might ask that question and then we will call orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, certain agreements have been arrived at between the government of Canada and various European countries, and all of them disadvantageously affect the affairs of the Atlantic region. The Secretary of State for External Affairs today indicated that there has not been any official agreement between Canada and Norway. I now ask the minister whether he will be prepared to table the diplomatic notes exchanged between Canada and Norway, Denmark, Spain, Portugal, the United Kingdom, France and Italy, to indicate the extent of the negotiations taking place with these various countries. Further, would he be prepared, Sir, in all sincerity, to discuss this matter with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces before agreements are formalized, in view of the very disadvantageous effects they may have on the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I have tabled the exchanges with Norway. I said at that time that we had not yet ratified, and I do not think we have yet.

An hon. Member: The minister does not think!

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows better than I do, but I do not think the matter of a fishing agreement came before cabinet. As to the agreement with Denmark, it has been negotiated and signed ad referendum by officials. It will be coming before cabinet in January. The agreements with other countries are under discussion. We will be quite prepared to defend them against the charges of the hon. member, and I think my backbone is at least as stiff as his.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As the House is now existing on a day to day basis, possibly the government House leader will indicate if the order of business which he announced last night will continue for this week and next week.

Mr. Benson: And the week after.

Mr. MacEachen: It will be the next order of business, Mr. Speaker. I am not saying the day or the week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for St. Paul's is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Wahn: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With unanimous consent, could we revert to presenting reports in order to present a report from the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence?

Mr. Speaker: This requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is unanimous consent.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT ACT, 1971

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-261, to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, while an examination of this bill would seem to indicate that the changes being made are of a minor nature and not of any great significance, I feel that Bill C-261 is important in reflecting the failure of government policy to solve the problems of Canadian productivity. Instead of doing that, the government has introduced protective measures through a customs tariff change. I wish to refer to items 93902-3, 93902-42 and 93902-82 which deal with increasing the protection on plastics. If we look at some of these items in the bill, it is quite obvious what is happening in Canada. When discussing this matter in his opening remarks, the parliamentary secretary said something about bringing these items into line with other tariff items, but the effect is to increase the protection to an industry which, if it were properly organized, would not require this protection.

If we look at item 26910-1, while it is true the tariff for that particular section of feedstocks is being somewhat reduced from its previous level, nevertheless it seems rather inconsistent and certainly strange that in a country like Canada, with extensive mineral, oil and gas deposits, we should need any kind of protection at all on feedstocks. Some important feedstocks have arrived in the country at a low rate because they are the building blocks or primary materials used in the textile industry and other industries which give us our manufacturing base. To the extent that these raw materials are more expensive than they need be, it makes it more difficult for Canada to compete in the secondary manufacturing industry. Why is this so, Mr. Speaker? Why are we in this position when we have the raw materials? There is certainly an availability of capital. If anything, there has been too much capital poured into this industry rather than too little, yet we find ourselves in the position of requiring considerable protection for the products of the industry.

We have far too many plants serving the domestic market. There is considerable evidence to indicate that this is the case. The reason is that foreign ownership of this industry has, in many ways, aborted the possibility of this industry becoming efficient. Almost every major producer in the United States has established a branch plant in Canada of less than optimum size. This has split the market so badly that none can operate on any kind of an efficient scale.

An article by W. L. Dack in the August 21 edition of the Financial Post, headed "Trouble piles up for petrochemical firms", gives an example of the situation in Canada. I quote from this article:

> For instance, the latest world-scale ethylene plants being built in the U.S. have a capacity of one billion pounds a year. But the entire Canadian ethylene market, which has just about reached that level, is being served by five domestic plants. All have unit costs running an estimated 205-25 per cent higher than those from these plants.
> In the case of polyvinyl chloride monomer—the base material for one of the largest plastics groups—the unit cost of the world-scale plants can drop as much as 35-40 per cent below that of the smaller units.
> "It's obvious that our big expansion splurge in petrochemicals was ill-timed."—

Over the years there has been encouragement given by the Canadian government to bringing investment into Canada without any real concern or thought as to whether that investment would, in fact, benefit the country. The argument was, the more the better. While on the surface it may have appeared we were providing competition by encouraging this multiplicity of plants, that kind of competition has, in fact, been of the worst kind. It has increased our costs away beyond what they should be and has prevented this country from effectively becoming a manufacturing nation on the scale it should be.

The argument is often used that one of the difficulties with our manufacturing industries in Canada is that we do not have access to larger markets, such as the United States for example, and that the problems in the petrochemical industry are related to the access to larger markets. As the article points out and other studies indicate, the Canadian market is more than adequate to have plants of a size and scale compared to the most efficient in the world, but we cannot afford the kind of splintering of the market that has taken place as the result of the numerous foreign owned plants being established in Canada. For over two years, the government has been conducting a study of the petrochemical industry to see what can be done to rationalize the industry. To date, no report has come from the government as to the results of that study.

While this has been going on, the industry is suffering, the consumer is suffering and the Canadian economy is suffering. We think the government has been remiss in trying to cover up its absence of policy by making tariff changes. While we are not opposed to these changes being made now, because we realize the industry does require an element of protection, we would not want to see a continuation of this approach. The government should be trying to face the issue in some more fundamental way. Unless we can eventually arrive at a point at which we can abolish all tariffs and institute free trade, the unity of this country is in jeopardy. For a long time we have heard rumblings of discontent from the west, from the prairie provinces and from British Columbia, directed against the level of tariffs afforded to the manufacturing and processing industries, while western producers must sell their products on a free market without protection. The ties of confederation have been strained considerably over the years because of our failure to make Canadian industry effective to the point at which it would not require tariff protection.

Those industries which remained largely under Canadian ownership were able to effect the transition from small plants to larger and more viable units of production, and to more satisfactory forms of organization suited to the Canadian economic climate, but where industry, particularly manufacturing industry, fell under foreign ownership this process did not take place. Many of the branch plants saw their first interest in serving the parent plant, the multinational corporation, rather than trying to effect re-organization within the Canadian economy.

When we talk about the ill effects of foreign ownership, it is not an emotional thing. It is the result of an analysis of what foreign ownership has done to large segments of the Canadian economy. Instead of increasing the wealth of Canada and improving the ability of this country to compete in international markets, foreign ownership, particularly in the chemical industry, has often led to a much lower standard of living than we have reason to expect. Therefore, while we see no alternative to supporting the tariff changes proposed by the government in the face of the emergency situation confronting the chemical and plastic industries, we believe it is imperative that policies be developed immediately to ensure that this kind of tariff protection is not required and that our industries will be in a position to manage on their own in a free trade world.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Penner in the chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)): I thank the committee for its warm applause.

Shall clause one carry?

On clause 1

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, a number of questions were raised last night by the hon. member for Edmonton West concerning some of the more exotic exemptions. One of the things we are getting into in a big way is the importation of exotic plants from Florida used in substitution for room dividers and in the arrangement of government offices. I note that among these plants are included palms, ferns, rubber plants, cannas, dahlias, paeonias, lilacs—

An hon. Member: You are reading.

Mr. Peters: Yes, and I am mispronouncing some of the names, even when reading. I am not used to speaking about exotic plants. It has been said on several occasions that in some of these cases by establishing a most favoured nation tariff we are eliminating the possibility of some of our own companies producing in this field. My question in relation to the first five items on the schedule attached to clause one is this: how do we arrive at a most favoured nation tariff in relation to these plants; what type of request is made and by whom? I presume these are items which can really be produced in hot houses in our own country.

Mr. Mahoney: The most favoured nation status is one which is achieved by trade negotiations between Canada and other countries and involves the other countries treating Canadian imports in a favourable manner as well. The changes in the customs tariff rates themselves result from representations made by persons interested in importing these particular products.

The whole range of tariff items dealt with in this bill from 7801-1 to 7915-1 includes items which are probably in the same class. They are all horticultural products. The changes are being made because the government has acquiesced in requests made by the Canadian Horticultural Council. The hon. member for Edmonton West made several other points in his very whimsical, lighthearted and humorous speech last night. He intimated that his hon. friend from Halifax-East Hants could probably have done better. I think those of us who listened to the hon. member would be inclined to agree. Be that as it may, he held up to ridicule the various items affecting horticulture which have been proposed in this amending bill following, as I have stated, representations by the Canadian Horticultural Council. I will certainly communicate his views to the Council.

The hon. member asked what macerated paper pads were—item 19947-1. Well, these are pads made of a thick layer of loose, ground up newsprint secured between two sheets of kraft paper, and they are used in the packaging of fruit to prevent it being bruised in transit. This particular tariff change will be of principal benefit to the fruit growers of British Columbia.

The hon. member for Waterloo also inquired why the one-third cent per gallon rate on fractions of petroleum under item 26910-1 was retained. This was the rate recommended by the tariff board. There were objections to a reduction in duty on the part of Canadian refiners. The hon. member for Edmonton West emphasized last night the importance of the petrochemical industry in a neighbouring riding to his. The refining industry is also of considerable importance in the Edmonton district and this is a factor to be borne in mind. In any case this, along with one other change in the bill, is based on recommendations made by the tariff board which the government has accepted without change.

The hon. member for Edmonton West made considerable fun of item 40918-1, being bird scaring devices. He wondered just what the item meant. I can only say that the wording of the tariff describes the devices that will in the future be admitted duty free. The request for this change in the tariff came from the Association of British Columbia Grape Growers, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association and the Ontario Grape Growers Marketing Board. While the hon. member for Edmonton West was unable to take this item seriously, evidently those organizations do regard these particular devices as being of considerable importance to them in the pursuit of their agricultural vocations.

The hon. member also suggested that items 44043-1 and 44047-1 pertaining to aircraft were renewed each year. In fact, they are not renewed each year. Normally they are renewed for two or three year periods. The renewal proposed in the present bill is for three years. The Air Industries Association of Canada asked that these items be retained on a temporary basis.

Parts for the repair or remanufacture of turbines under item 44210-1 was also questioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West. These parts are presently admitted free of duty when they are used for the manufacture in Canada of turbines. Glass beads was another item the hon. member regarded as somewhat hilarious, item 69805-1. It is an odd coincidence, but the request for this particular tariff change was made by the office of the regional resources co-ordinator of the Human Resources Development Authority of the government of the province of Alberta. The principal beneficiary of this particular tariff change will be Indians and Eskimos for the execution of native crafts.

Metallic trading checks, item 99208-1, are subject to regulation by the Governor in Council, and the reason for this is to ensure that imports of these items will be bona fide souvenir or memorial type coins and will not be the kind of token that could be advantageously used in counterfeit fashion in vending machines.

The question of tariff board reports was also raised by the hon. member and he queried their implementation, particularly with regard to tariff item 93902-3, polyethylene resin. It is anticipated that Canadian production of this commodity will increase about 8 per cent during the current year over 1970, while imports have remained at about the same level. These resins are used in the manufacture of film and sheet pipe, and numerous moulded articles, such as containers and electrical fixtures. They are also used as coatings for wire and cable.

Mr. Peters: May I ask whether the tariff on polyethylene is up or down? There is no indication which it is here.

Mr. Mahoney: This represents an increase of 2½ percentage points, from the present rate of 7½ per cent to 10 per cent. This is another recommendation of the tariff board. The main opposition to higher duty for this product came from producers of polyethylene film who do not produce their own polyethylene. Imports of this commodity in millions of pounds increased from 27 million pounds in 1964 to 98 million pounds in 1970, while exports decreased from 55 million pounds in 1964 to 36 million pounds in 1970. The tariff board report indicated that polyethylene prices had declined by about 50 per cent during the decade of the 1960's, and recent data indicate this trend is continuing. I might point out that United States duty on the same material was 1.6 cents per pound plus 12 per cent in 1971. The European Common Market imposes a 16 per cent duty, which will be reduced to 10 per cent in the future.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary has mentioned that European Common Market countries enjoy a lower rate than the 20 per cent in our general tariff. Is the 10 per cent rate available only to those who conclude a tariff agreement with us, and in the absence of such a tariff agreement do we revert to the general tariff? In other words, if we imported this material from one of the European Common Market countries, would the rate be 12 per cent—or whatever the figure is—as opposed to the 20 per cent rate in the general tariff?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the general tariff rate is not of any practical application here, and that for all practical purposes imports of this product come from countries to which the most favoured nation tariff applies. All of the European Common Market countries qualify under the most favoured nation tariff rather than under the general tariff.

One other question that was raised last night by the hon. member for Timiskaming was the length of time it is open to an importer to claim a drawback. I am advised that drawbacks may be claimed at any time up to three years after the date of importation.

I think I have responded to all of the questions posed up to this point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are importing a number of items connected with medicines, insecticides and pesticides.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I see the Acting Chairman is leaving the chair, so may I just say that he has done an admirable job. I know the rump is a considerable distance from the end of this chamber, but I am sure that over the next day or two Liberal members will have an opportunity to get together and make each other's acquaintance.

• (3:50 p.m.)

In referring to the biological products and toxoids found under items 2605-1 and 20610-1, I find that this has been a major problem over the last few years. Certainly it was a major problem in Canada when we introduced legislation to further restrict the number of commodities used as insecticides and pesticides. We were made aware of the fact that many new commodities were available in the United States and in other countries, and that on occasion these were allowed to be imported into Canada in conflict with the restrictions that we have on other products. Some of these commodities are obviously experimental in nature and, I presume, are restricted. However, the people affected are a fairly complex group who are operating almost independently, both in universities and in the research field, and who are fairly remote from the regulations which we make governing, industrial production of the same commodities or of commodities using the same components. I might say that I am reluctant to admit that I do not know how extensive the negotiations are regarding these commodities, but I gather that when we lower the tariff this is done for reasons other than the normal requests sometimes made by individuals who will apply for a permit for a specific commodity. There must be a fairly extensive importation or there would not be a request for this kind of exemption.

Mr. Mahoney: Actually, these two items represent no change in the tariff. They represent a consolidation of previous items. Item 20605-1 brings in an item which used to be 20606-1. They simply represent a consolidation which provides free entry of biological products used to diagnose or treat diseases of man and free entry for the same products used to prevent those diseases. The question of whether they are acceptable for human use in Canada is of course under the jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare and import permits would be required, but those are not related to the Tariff Act. Similarly, on 20610-1 we have a consolidation of two previous items, one dealing with biological products used to diagnose or treat diseases of animals or poultry and the second one for the importation of the same products used to prevent disease. Here again the Health of Animals Division of the Department of Agriculture is concerned with the safety and acceptability of the product, and permits from them would be required in cases where the item is not itself prescribed as being for use in Canada. But that is not something that the Tariff Act tries to control. All of these deal with items that are permitted free entry.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I did not take part in the discussion at the second reading stage of this bill, but I have some questions which I would like to put to the parliamentary secretary in relation to the terms of Schedule "A", item 41100-1 and 41105-1. Item 41100-1 has two parts. The first refers to machines for sawing lumber, up to but not including the operation of planing, and parts thereof, not including equipment for driving the machinery of the saw mill when used exclusively in saw mills.

The next paragraph deals with machines and parts thereof, for use exclusively in logging, such operation to include the removal of the log from stump to skidway, log dump, or common or other carrier. This proviso, which I understand is a new provision in this bill, removes these items from the application of the tariffs listed in the case of importation into Canada of any goods enumerated if the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, considers that it is in the public interest and that the goods are not available from production in Canada by allowing a remission of the duty specified in the item.

I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary why in the existing tariff structure there is an exception in regard to the machinery used in the operation of planing. Also, why is it that no provision is made in this excepting proviso as proposed in the bill for machinery and equipment used in plywood manufacturing plants and particularly particle board plants, all of which are in the nature of an alternative use of the basic forestry products and in many cases, certainly in the coastal area of British Columbia and indeed throughout British Columbia and in some other parts of Canada, are part of an integrated forestry products complex. Why is it that while there is provision for exemption from duty for saw mill and logging equipment, no equivalent provision is made for machinery used in these other forms of converting plants, ones such as I have mentioned, plywood plants and particle board plants?

Mr. Mahoney: The types of products to which the hon. member is referring are subject to tariff items 42700. They are treated in the same way under that item as is proposed for logging equipment under this item. I might say that the combined coverage of the two items 41100-1 and 41105-1 is essentially the same as the two tariff items they replace, and the rates of duty are also the same as previously. The main purpose of the amendment is to provide for remission of duty on the same basis as under the existing machinery tariff remission program on logging and saw mill machinery which is not available from production in Canada. The new item 41100 covers the machinery, including cranes, for which duty remission may be considered. The other item covers trucks and non-mechanical logging equipment which is not covered by the remission program and will continue to be dutiable at 10 per cent British preferential and 12.5 per cent most favoured nation. Logging trucks are already covered by remission programs established for the automotive industry. I might say that these amendments constitute one of the measures proposed in the budget to assist the forestry products industry whose exports and profits have declined in the past year due in part to the unpegging of the Canadian dollar.

Other measures which will be of assistance to the industry include the progressive reduction of the corporate income tax rate from 50 per cent to 46 per cent as provided in Bill C-259, the removal of the sales tax on anti-pollution equipment as provided in Bill C-260 and the temporary duty on heavy fuel oil as provided under tariff 2906-1 of this bill.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to be sure I correctly understood what the parliamentary secretary was telling me. Under the existing tariff law, in another section which is not in this bill, provision is already there for remission of duty on machinery and equipment for plywood plants.

Mr. Mahoney: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This complements the existing machinery tariff remission program for goods classified under customs tariff 42700-1. The majority of equipment used in the forest products industry is covered by that latter item and is already subject to remission. This brings additional equipment into the remission category.

Mr. Barnett: I thank the parliamentary secretary for that explanation. I am still a little bit puzzled about the situation in respect of logging trucks because as I read customs tariff 41100-1 it refers to machines and parts thereof used in the operation of logging from the stump to the log dump. Now, as I understand the parlance commonly used in a logging operation, certainly on the Pacific coast, the logging dump means the place where the logs are dumped into the water from a logging truck. This is why I am a little puzzled by some of the remarks of the parliamentary secretary about logging trucks being covered under the arrangements in respect of automobiles generally.

I am also a little puzzled concerning what is meant in the new part of 41105-1 in reference to self-propelled trucks. I have discussed this with some people actively associated with the industry and have discovered there is some confusion in their minds concerning just how this will work out in practice, particularly in the area with which I am most familiar. I should tell the parliamentary secretary, if it is not already obvious to him, that I do not consider myself an authority on the tariff law. However, I believe it is important to a good many people in the area I represent that we have a clear understanding of exactly how this will apply, at least in respect of the practise of the industry on the Pacific coast.

I was aware of the other items in the budget proposal to which the parliamentary secretary referred, and I recall the minister announcing them as sort of a package with relationship to the unpegging of the dollar. But it would be unfortunate if there were any confusion concerning the intent of this when it comes to a point of decision in respect of the importation of equipment not available to the industry from Canadian manufacturing sources.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the intent of these changes is to try to cover in the forest products industry the same kind of equipment and machinery that comes in under the machinery program. I would refer the hon. member to Order in Council 1971/140 dated January 26, 1971 which is entitled "Order respecting the remission of customs duty on off-highway vehicles, parts and accessories and parts thereof". That is the Order in Council which covers the logging trucks and so on.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there is one other question I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he has the information available. This arises from the fact that we have a parallel industry on the Pacific coast for forest products north and south of the 49th parallel. I should like to know whether or not there are any parallel arrangements in respect of exports to the United States of various kinds of specialized logging or sawmill equipment or machinery which may be manufactured in Canada by Canadian manufacturers. Assuming that some of this equipment would be coming from manufacturers in the United States, is there a quid pro quo so far as specialized items of Canadian manufacture are concerned.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I do not have the United States law on this subject at my fingertips. I will certainly inquire into it and give the hon. member an answer concerning the current situation. I am afraid I cannot answer the question at the present time.

Mr. Barnett: I shall be glad to have that information from the parliamentary secretary, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the remarks that have been made on this particular item affecting equipment used in the forest products industry. I should like to know two things. First, what have we done in terms of percentage. What was it before? Then, I should like to know if Germany, for instance, the source of a large percentage of the sawmill equipment as well as plywood equipment and so on, is under the preferred tariff and how much of a saving this is. Second, I should like to know how the manufacturers go about making a claim for drawback on items of machinery purchased within the last three-year period.

Mr. Mahoney: Well, Mr. Chairman, this, of course, is a remission item so the saving is exactly the percentage of tariff applicable, which in the case of Germany as a most favoured nation would be a saving of 12½ per cent. Remissions are granted upon the importer establishing that a suitable product of Canadian manufacture is not available. So, the application must be accompanied by evidence that the product could not be obtained domestically. Once that is established, the remission amounts to the full amount of duty which would have been imposed which depends on the country of origin.

Mr. Peters: Is the parliamentary secretary indicating that for a preferred nation there would be a 12½ per cent remission of tariff that had been paid? Is this not the amount which still has to be paid? If you were importing now, you would have to pay the 12½ per cent tariff on this if it were in the preferred class or 10 per cent if it were in the British preferential tariff. I do not gather that these are all reductions of that amount but are reductions to that amount.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, this tariff item does not change the rates. The rates are the same. The amendment here simply provides for a remission which did not previously exist.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make an inquiry about item 47825-1 which includes wheelchairs, walkers and other aids to locomotion. I have received a number of complaints concerning the importation from Switzerland of a mobile wheel chair for invalids of a type that is not manufactured anywhere else, but the argument used by the department is that because there are other products available that will assist locomotion, the customs tariff must apply to this import. What is the reason for this? Very few of these wheelchairs will be imported from Switzerland. They are expensive. Why should this stipulation "of a class or kind made in Canada" apply in this case?

It seems to me that we should be prepared to remove this restriction. Because of disability, a person may find that this type of wheelchair suits him better than any other type. I understand the cost of such a wheel chair is $1,200 in Switzerland, and a 15 per cent tariff on top of that is a considerable amount of money. I note that there is no tariff applicable to hearing aids and parts for their repair. I believe the same situation should apply to invalid chairs.

I took up this matter with the officials and they were sympathetic, but they told me their hands were tied by this restriction concerning a class or kind made in Canada. The individual involved told me that he had discovered no suitable wheelchair for his use in Canada, that there were automatic wheelchairs and electric wheelchairs available in Canada but not of the type that he could operate. He had been to Switzerland and discovered a type there that suited him, but he was not able to import it because of the excessive cost to him that the 15 per cent tariff represented. I am sure that such cases seldom come to the attention of the department. Because of the nature of this item, because it has a personal application, there should be an exemption for it. But again this restricting phrase "of a class or kind made in Canada" governs the situation.

I can draw an analogy between this and an operation in a sawmill where people using milling machines are working with chip board. For the plastic veneer that they use in my area they tell me that the only suitable product comes from Germany. They laminate the chip board with it. There is another type of veneer manufactured in the United States, and several other kinds are manufactured in Canada, but there is a considerable difference in the type of product they can turn out using the stuff that they import from Germany. In a non-technical sense, these veneers look very much the same but they do not all perform the same function.

In the 14 years that I have been a member of this House, only one person has approached me seeking a concession with respect to tariff on an invalid chair. I am sure not more than 200 or 300 people throughout the country would be involved in this situation, and a concession should be made.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the question of a wheel chair, and so on, is one that I know would be of considerable personal significance to anyone who had to use one on a regular basis. I am sure there is a tendency to find a favourite brand and stick with it, even though this might get a person in trouble with the "class or kind" provision in the tariff item. Representations on matters of this nature would certainly be most sympathetically heard by the tax policy division of the Department of Finance, which is the appropriate body to approach initially for changes of this nature. The Department of National Revenue, of course, has no alternative but to administer the act as Parliament delivers it.

The imports in this case are not insignificant, as a matter of fact. Imports of these two tariff items, wheel chairs and so on, were almost $500,000 in 1970. Further, there is a fairly considerable industry in Canada.

On the hearing aid item, Mr. Chairman, hearing aids themselves are duty free, and the item here is to extend duty free entry to repair parts, something which has not heretofore existed. Components, and so on, of hearing aids assembled in Canada initially are free. This is to make sure that the duty free status applies to all the requirements of persons using hearing aids.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: I would like to deal with one more item, No. 69200-1 which covers coins or medals for collections. What sort of arrangement do we have with countries around the world that allows us to import these tariff free? I gather from the parliamentary secretary that this is an indication that most other countries have agreed to the same arrangement. The item does not stipulate that a person must be classed as a collector. He could be a purchaser of antiques or of trophies, anything of that nature. What kind of arrangements have been made through negotiations in order to allow entry of these items duty free? I see that this also applies to sculptures, statuary and paintings, if they are worth over $75, and to the production of Canadian artists domiciled abroad who wish to bring back their own works. I am curious to know the rationale for providing this particular exemption, and if it is duplicated in other countries. Is it a fairly general arrangement?

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: It is not necessarily a reciprocal arrangement. It is quite possible that other countries do admit such items duty free. The rationale for it is that the items mentioned are the sort of thing considered to be of cultural or artistic value. If the hon. member examines the existing customs tariff he will note that it refers to collections of coins and/or medals. The Department of National Revenue interpreted that to mean that there must be at least two coins or medals, and the amendment is simply to make sure that it will be interpreted that an individual coin or medal could be imported duty free under the same item. The rationale is simply one of culture and of artistic appreciation. I do not know of any reciprocal arrangements.

Mr. Peters: One last question which affects the whole problem of polyethylene products. In our most favoured nation category I see there is a difference in the percentage between the two types. One is moulding and the other one, I suppose, is sheet material. Is an effort being made in this field to protect or to expand our industry which is a fairly new and growing one?

Mr. Mahoney: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member will note that in item 93902-3, which covers the resin, we are dealing with the raw material itself. Under the new amendment, that will have a 10 per cent duty. Then, we go to moulding compounds, item 93902-42 which in addition to the resin have fillers or colours or some other materials added, and are partially manufactured, so you get to the 12½ per cent level. Again on 93902-82 where you get the polyethylene film and sheet, you are into a fully manufactured item and arrive at a tariff rate of 17½ per cent under the new regime.

Mr. Peters: It should also be pointed out that there are very large increases in the figures for imports given by the parliamentary secretary, from 27 million in 1964 to 98 million. While I am not in favour of increasing the others, Mr. Chairman, I might be in favour of increasing this particular item. Obviously, the 7½ per cent was not curtailing imports and yet our consumption in this country must be in the hundreds of millions. Raising it 2½ per cent may not accomplish what we would like in this field. This is one case where it might be advisable to increase it perhaps 5 per cent in light of the picture since 1964.

Mr. Mahoney: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The figures I gave the hon. member, of course, were pounds of material rather than dollars. I would not want to leave the wrong impression. For example, in 1970 imports of polyethylene resin were $11.3 million. To illustrate the success of the progressive rate, by the time we get to the second item, moulding compounds, imports are down to $1.9 million.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: If I could just ask, Mr. Chairman, whether it is possible to move for an increase in this table. I would be prepared to move a motion to increase the percentage by an additional 2½ per cent, as I think this is an industry that can be, and obviously is being, developed in Canada and which warrants extra support. I presume that if I do move such an amendment it will not throw out the balance of ways and means but it might throw out the negotiations. I hesitate to raise the question because I doubt whether it would be feasible.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member puts you on the spot or goes to the trouble of drafting his motion, I might point out to him that the rates provided in this amendment are the maximum allowed under GATT. Any increase, in addition to having the Chair and the Committee accept an amendment, would involve the hon. member renegotiating the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Mr. Peters: Not before Christmas, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

On clause 2—Schedule B amended.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary can satisfy my curiosity about why fire brick is subject to drawback if it is used in the construction of coke ovens but apparently not for other purposes.

If I want fire brick in a fireplace it is not subject to drawback but if I want to make a coke oven, it is. Is there any reason for this? We have been discussing the question of tile made in Canada. Are we not in a position to produce fire brick for coke ovens in Canada?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, the item here is brick for coke ovens which is of course for use basically in a manufacturing process. So, consistent with the policy under the Tariff Act, where a product is used for manufacturing purposes or processing the tariff is minimized.

Just slightly out of order, Mr. Speaker, but in regard to an earlier question that the hon. member asked about the United States tariff rates on logging equipment, I might say that the current range of United States tariff on importation of logging and sawmill machinery is 6 per cent to 9 per cent and under the implementation of the Kennedy Round on January 1, it will be reduced to a range of 5 per cent to 7 per cent.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

Schedules A, B and C agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When shall the said bill be read the third time?

An hon. Member: By leave, now.

Hon. C. M. Drury (for Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-261, to amend the customs tariff be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to convey my appreciation to the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) for his participation in the debate on this bill. I wish to speak about certain changes that take place from time to time in the customs tariff. These changes are negotiated with other countries and when they are brought before Parliament they are fait accompli; there is no opportunity to change them. Under our present method of operating, changes to those agreements would involve changes to Ways and Means resolutions. It seems to me that hon. members should be in a better position, in cases where these negotiations have taken place, to bring about changes that, in their opinion, are advantageous or desirable in certain fields.

When on former occasions I have suggested that some items ought to be exempt, those exemptions were not granted. Several years later exactly the same kind of exemption as I suggested has been granted, often for the very same kind of product I had in mind. When I made my suggestion, there was no way of implementing it. The difficulty regarding our representations stems from the fact that we are remote from negotiations in which Canada discusses tariff changes say, under GATT, or the most favoured nation tariff. It seems to me that we need to learn something of what goes on in these discussions. At present, we must accept the entire change, or reject it. It is a case of all or nothing, and this leads to frustration. However, I wish to congratulate the parliamentary secretary and the officials assisting him for the splendid job that was done in answering questions that I and other hon. members asked.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1971

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-275, to amend the statute relating to income tax, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to implement the following measures announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his statement to the House of Commons on October 14, 1971: the 7 per cent reduction in corporate income tax; the 3 per cent reduction in individual income tax; and the training on the job program.

The 7 per cent corporate tax reduction and the 3 per cent individual tax reduction will be in effect for the 18 months from July 1, 1971, to December 31, 1972. The training on the job program applies to salaries and wages earned on or after November 1, 1971. The 7 per cent corporate tax reduction has been designed to give Canadian firms greater flexibility in responding to the special difficulties that have confronted them in recent months, and to give them confidence to create sustained growth and job opportunities. It should also aid our corporations in remaining competitive in both domestic and international markets.

The 3 per cent individual tax reduction will also provide an important stimulus to the private sector for sustaining and encouraging increased demand for goods and services. The training on the job program will provide an opportunity for many of our unemployed to acquire more solid skills. That should enable them to take advantage of new employment opportunities. The program should also be of great assistance to employers in preparing for future economic expansion.

The information which has come to hand since the statement that was made in the House on October 14 confirms the growing strength of the Canadian economy. In four consecutive quarters the real value of goods and services produced by Canadians has increased at an annual rate of at least 6 per cent. This rate is substantially in excess of that applying to our long term trend.

The tax reductions proposed in this bill will make an important contribution to this forward thrust of the economy, and that announcement no doubt has already tended to benefit the economy. Their enactment will ensure that the full effect of the tax reductions will be realized in due course, and will result in higher demand, a higher level of investment and a higher level of employment.

The estimated cost of the programs for 1971-1972 is as follows. The cost with regard to the 7 per cent corporate reductions will be, according to estimates, $160 million, of which this bill covers $75 million; for the 3 per cent individual reduction it will be $125 million, of which this bill covers $80 million, and for the training on the job program, $20 million. For the 1972-73 year it is estimated that the corporate reduction will amount to $175 million; the 3 per cent individual reduction will amount to $225 million, and we have no estimate of the exact cost that will be incurred as a result of the enactment of the training on the job program. The costs of the tax reductions covered in this bill are less than those that were quoted on October 14, 1971, since this bill implements the 7 per cent corporate reduction and the 3 per cent individual reduction for 1971 only. Hon. members will appreciate that the 1972 reductions will be incorporated in a later bill which, presumably, will amend our old friend Bill C-259, when that becomes law.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, getting back to one of these income tax debates is like Alice falling down the rabbit hole a second time and discovering all the strange and interesting characters of Wonderland all over again. I will try to cope with this bill as best I can, although I see that the wonderful, wild and woolly characters which have helped the corporations in the past have been at it again in section 5 of this particular measure. Here we have definitions, and definitions within definitions. This is a very attractive area for someone who is interested in semantics. Perhaps we can get down to the fiscal message.

The parliamentary secretary has obviously followed the example of his boss and has become budget happy. His boss has given us three budgets within the year and the parliamentary secretary has brought before us a mini-budget. We also have heard the announcement that this legislation will not apply to 1972 or 1973, something I suspected after looking at the provisions of Bill C-259. It has no saw-off point. It is only concerned with the 1971 taxation year. Obviously, further measures are necessary.

In a technical sense, I should point out to the parliamentary secretary that the notice of ways and means is an offensive motion in the sense that it covers much more than is contained in the measure we are now considering; not less, but more. The first paragraph, paragraph (1), of the December 17 issue of Votes and Proceedings refers to the 1972 and 1973 taxation years. I raise that point as a purist and do not found any substantial objections on it. It is an example of what can happen when legislative purity is cast aside when dealing with income tax legislation.

The parliamentary secretary indicated certain moneys would be pumped back into the economy as a result of the reductions set forth in this particular measure so that the research staffs will have something to do over whatever little holiday we allow ourselves. The research staff of the official opposition has calculated that the savings from these taxes will be in the order of $125 million on personal income taxes, substantially higher than the parliamentary secretary indicated, and $160 million on corporation taxes for a total of $285 million. This is in advance of the figures quoted by the parliamentary secretary. That is merely an indication of the magnitude of the savings, as determined by our own people.

[Mr. Mahoney.]

If the government wanted to pump more money into the economy as a means of overcoming the economic problems being experienced in Canada, it might have paid more heed to one particular area where money available to consumers is used, that is a reduction in the sales and excises taxes. Instead of simply making cuts for the year from personal and corporational income taxes, more would have been achieved if sales and excise taxes could have been reduced. The consumer, particularly the person with a low income, is going to be spending all his money anyway. He is pledged right to the hilt. There is little ability to save when your income is moderate. As was pointed out in the discussion of Bill C-259, that group is always overtaxed. I will not go into that argument again, but in that debate I made the point that the burden of taxation was apt to be in the proportion of 53 to 37, depending on whether you were in the very low or high income bracket. The very poor Canadian shoulders a tax burden in relation to his means of about 50 per cent more than the person in the category of those of us who sit in Parliament.

Some stimulation to the economy might have occurred if the minister had listened to a message we have given over and over again, that is to do something about the tax on building materials.

In dealing with burdens that fall in various areas of the economy, it should be noted that for 1971, of the total income raised by government, personal income tax accounted for 37 per cent or three cents out of every eight raised for the operation of the federal government and corporation income tax bore approximately 17 per cent of the tax burden this year. If the minister was going to go the route of income tax reductions, it might have been wiser to give slightly more in the personal income tax field. I give the parliamentary secretary notice of a technical question I will be raising later. I presume this act will automatically terminate because it only comes into effect for the 1971 taxation-year which is almost over. Perhaps we could have a technical explanation of that so there will not be any difficulties among those who read these acts and wonder what we are doing here.

On behalf of my colleagues and myself, I welcome the provisions relating to the manpower training program set forth in wonderful definitions and subdefinitions in paragraph 5. I pity the poor devil who drafted this bill. It is a complicated task to deal with the taxation law in a very complicated era. While I might chuckle at the drafting of this bill, I think this is important and accordingly welcome.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing like a tax measure to reveal the true nature of a political party. The one before us is a wonderful revelation of the true soul of Canada's Liberal party. That party likes to proclaim that all Canadians are the same. They say there are not rich Canadians, nor average Canadians, nor poor Canadians. We are all really the same. That party says it is interested in employees, but invariably acts in the interest of capital.

As the parliamentary secretary stated, the tax bill we are now considering was first announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in October. I remind hon. members that this proposal was intended to provide stimulation for the Canadian economy and to redress the effects of previous stupid economic policies of the Liberal government, economic policies which have resulted in the highest level of unemployment in this country in a decade.

The proposals before us confirm a recent judgment of the Minister of Finance. I will not reveal its source. It is as follows: "The Minister of Finance is the only man in Canada who has never wavered in his conviction that the rich should be made richer and the poor made poorer."

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member may have noted the publication from which he was quoting, but I missed it. I would appreciate if he would advise from what document he was quoting.

Mr. Broadbent: The document happens to be my notes. The source from which I got the quotation to put in my notes eludes me at this moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: Perhaps it is The Machinist. The NDP research office.

Mr. Broadbent: As a student of philosophy, I have always taken the view on epistomological questions that in terms of truth or falsity the source of a judgment is not important. What is important, and this is what I stress about the quotation is whether or not it is accurate.

An hon. Member: Get on with it.

Mr. Broadbent: Perhaps I should read it to the hon. member in case the parliamentary secretary missed it. "The Minister of Finance is the only man in Canada, who has never wavered in his conviction that the rich should be made richer and the poor made poorer". I would be glad to send that over to the parliamentary secretary. I believe one of the brighter members opposite wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Gibson: The minister of finance of what province?

Mr. Osler: My question is this. Since we are getting such pearls of wisdom from the pen of this unnamed author, could we not be given the benefit of further pearls of wisdom from the same source? Perhaps we could put the whole thing into a book, edited by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Then we might have a book we could sell for charitable purposes, possibly to help widows of Members of Parliament. There have been several examples of successful anonymous authorship in the past. I did not know we were allowed to quote anonymous authors here. But if we do so, we might do so for the benefit of some worthy cause.

Mr. Broadbent: I would be glad to have my speech bound and well illustrated with large print so that the hon. member can comprehend it.

The rest of my speech, if I can get on with it, is intended to show that the present measure is something which only the Liberal party could achieve, a bill which is both unjust and ineffective at the same time. Let me deal with the two most important sections. The first concerns a reduction in income tax by 3 per cent. Let us consider some of the people who will be affected at various income levels. Note with what great generosity the government has treated poor people in Canada. A Canadian worker with a wife and two children earning $4,000 a year will save the grand total of $1.09. That will inject a lot of money into the economy. If a man is earning $5,000 and has two dependents, he will save $4.53. At $6,000 he will receive $8.30; at $7,000, $12.24 and at $9,000, $20.55.

Now, these people are consumers. We are talking about injecting money into the economy. We are talking about increasing demand in order to provide more jobs. It is precisely this category of persons about whom we should be most concerned when we are providing additional spending money. I am thinking of the great bulk of Canadians who earn between $4,000 and $9,000. And it is precisely this group who are getting almost nothing from the bill. However, if you are struggling to get by on $30,000, this across-the-board reduction will net you $152.34, and if you should be eking out an existence on a mere $100,000 you will save $757.70.

The point is clear. In this country, the richer you are the more deeply indebted to the Liberal party you should be, because you will benefit more from tax measures of this kind. It is altogether unjust to apply a 3 per cent tax reduction across-the-board, because it saves the millionaire much more than it saves the poor man.

But leaving equity aside and dealing only with other economic considerations, let us remember that the bill was brought in, according to the Minister of Finance, to stimulate the economy. Who is getting the big share of the money? Is it those who will be spending most of their income or is it those in the upper income group? It is those in the upper income group, precisely the people who, when they get the benefit of their tax reduction, will not go out and spend it. They will not inject money right away into the economy by purchasing more goods and thus helping to create more jobs; they will use this saving of, for example, over $700 for the very rich, for investment purposes. It comes as a wonderful windfall for the rich to get more money to invest and ensure more profits at a later date. The economy is not stimulated at all in the initial period. No increase in consumer demand of any significance is forthcoming from the kind of across-the-board reduction for which the government has provided.

There are, in our view, two alternative approaches which could have been taken. If we were really interested in stimulating a marked early increase in demand we might have provided for a 5 per cent reduction affecting only those with incomes of $9,000 and less. It is these people who spend virtually all their income as they take it in. Another approach would have been to use the money the government proposes to allow the corporations under this bill, $160 million for the fiscal year 1971-72, and give it to everyone in the income bracket between $4,000 and $7,000 by way of a complete tax write-off. I have calculated that this would have required about $108 million for 1971-72. Subtract this sum from the $160 million the government plans to concede to the corporations, and one winds up with a surplus of $52 million for which the government could find some other useful purpose. This would have been effective and meaningful in alleviating poverty. Most families in Canada living on less than $7,000 a year are living in poverty and this would have been very effective for them. At the same time it would have provided a needed stimulus to the economy of the country. It would have been a meaningful method of taxation though it would not be consistent, of course, with the prevailing philosophy of the Liberal party, which is to give disproportionate gains to those in the upper income brackets.

I should like to turn to the second category of "reform," the last word being in quotation marks. I refer to the 7 per cent reduction in corporate taxes. This is even more scandalous, if that is possible, than the across the board 3 per cent reduction in income tax. I wish the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) were in his seat because he made a very fine speech in the House last week, one which, in substance, has been made by members of this party for the past two or three years. It seems that when sinners repent their speeches gets much more attention than when they are made by other people for a number of years.

The 7 per cent reduction in corporate tax is simply a windfall profit for corporations in Canada and has absolutely no connection with increasing the number of jobs for Canadians, which is the stated purpose of this reduction. I should like to know whether the government asked itself if it should provide tax reductions only for those firms that are labour-intensive as opposed to those that are capital-intensive. I would ask the parliamentary secretary whether he thinks that this tax reduction of 7 per cent given to the oil industry of Alberta, an industry that is capital-intensive and which employs very few Canadians, is going to result in any increase in jobs.

The answer to that rhetorical question is obviously no, and it is also no if the same question is asked in relation to many other sectors of the economy. If we are to use a reduction in corporate taxes as an exclusive means of stimulating the economy by increasing employment opportunities, then as anyone with a brain in his head knows you have to distinguish between labour-intensive and capital-intensive industries. It is just that kind of distinction that the government refuses to make.

Quite apart from that distinction, one would have thought that instead of just giving hundreds of millions of dollars to Canadian corporations we would also have included in this particular tax measure the requirement that before these corporations receive a tax benefit of 7 per cent they should be able to show, firstly, that they have expanded their industry by a certain percentage within a given period, and secondly, that such expansion had resulted in the creation of additional jobs. After all, this is what the bill is supposed to be about. It is not supposed to be a bill that simply gives money to corporations; the stated purpose of the bill, as announced by the Minister of Finance in October was to stimulate the economy. Why then does the government not tie tax benefits to action that increases employment? No such provision is contained in this bill.

Once again we are simply squandering public money. As far as the corporate sector of the economy is concerned, we are giving away $160 million in the fiscal year 1971-72. The Liberal party of Canada, as the hon. member for Duvernay eloquently and very adequately documented last week, has been responsible for selling out a good part of the Canadian economy during the past decade. In addition to selling out the economy, the government is selling out to existing corporate owners, whether foreign or domestic, the real financial possibilities that will eliminate the prospect of hundreds of thousands of Canadians ever rising above the poverty level. It would have made much more sense, as I said a minute ago, for the government to have given this $160 million to all taxpayers within the $4,000 to $7,000 income brackets. That at least would have taken a lot of the people off the poverty line. There is no guarantee whatsoever that the corporate sector of the economy will provide more jobs as a result of this particular tax proposal.

I shall not take more any more of the time of the House and want to conclude by briefly summarizing my two points. The claim is made that this reduction of personal income tax in the amount of 3 per cent is both just and provides a stimulus to the economy. In fact, it does neither. Secondly, it is alleged that the 7 per cent across the board corporate tax reduction will provide needed stimulus of the economy and more jobs for Canadians. I suggest it will not do either of these things. In short, my view and the view of the New Democratic Party is that the bill fails to do what it is intended to do. All it achieves is the perpetuation, indeed the aggravation, of existing inequalities.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some apology to my colleagues to my extreme left who obviously want to extend the debate on Bill C-275. I must say that having listened to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) I am hesitant to make any remarks since I am sure he is talking about a different bill from the one before me. I must say as a compliment to him that I have never heard any member stand on his feet for so long to say so little, but with obviously so much dedication to his point of view. I say that to him in the full meaning of the Christmas spirit. I was hoping that my good friend, my esteemed colleague from Saskatoon who is in charge of the Wheat Board and who also represents the unemployed of Canada, would make a few remarks on this bill because I am sure there are many points of view he would like to expound upon in connection with the manpower training program.

I want to point out to the House that this bill enables us to speak about the manpower training program, since from clause 5 on it relates directly to that program. A few days ago the minister issued a press release to the Canadian people on the benevolent results achieved by the manpower training program during the last year. I remember pondering for hours the results of the program and thinking back to my former days as a student when I did a little bit of research. I found it absolutely impossible to draw the same conclusions as the minister did on the basis of my research evidence. But, of course, I do not have the capabilities of the minister and I am not as good at figure skating or stick handling or any of the other acrobatic skills which go with being a minister in the present cabinet. So immediately I put aside my apprehension and deliberately avoided trying to make further comments on these programs to which he was referring.

In this bill we are involved with legalizing the agreement to enable industry to take advantage of a particular program initiated by this government. I am very interested in manpower training and in anything to do with human resource development. I have always been of the opinion that Canada must become involved to a greater extent in the development of the human resources of this nation. I think we are the only major nation in the world which is not involved, through some government department or some form of program, in manpower training. Our neighbours to the south have an office of education. To my knowledge every European country but one has national offices of education, national offices of manpower training and national offices of human resource development.

I do not have the exact information at my fingertips, but in Canada we have 15 or 20 types of programs in which the federal government is involved in one way or another to develop our human resources and our manpower potential. I am always amazed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—I am sure that my noble colleague who will rise to speak when I complete my remarks in a minute will elaborate on this—is so defensive when questions are put to him regarding the need for Canada to become more actively involved in education in co-operation with the provinces. I hope that one day—and this is a personal expression of opinion on my part—Canada will have a national office of manpower development or human resource development, or education so that there might be co-ordinated effort of the provinces together with the federal government with regard to training and education. Today, any politician who brings his family to Ottawa, or anyone who has had the experience of engaging in the mobility of the 1970's, must realize that there is a great need for a co-ordinated effort among the provinces in the field of education. Perhaps my comments are a little more general than the bill entitles me to be, but this is a point that must be developed. I hope that in the not too distant future the provinces can get together with the federal government to develop some kind of major strategy for the development of our human resources, our most valuable resource in Canada.

The bill before us deals with incentives to industry to assist people to acquire particular skills. Two methods are outlined in the bill. One of them is the direct payment method of manpower training under which the federal government will make direct payments to industry to help an individual to acquire a particular skill or trade. This is an industry program. The other method will involve the government in giving a tax incentive to the industries. It is referred to in the bill as the manpower training program tax incentive method. The government will give an incentive to industries to assist people to acquire new skills. What it means is that the federal government will make a partial contribution to the training of an individual. It also encourages the industry to train that individual. The federal government will grant a 60 per cent write-off of the cost to the individual or the company involved if they take part in the program.

This is basically a good concept, and I think it should be extended. My major concern—and this is something to which I referred a few days ago in response to a statement on motions by the minister—is that the program basically caters to the more industrialized parts of the nation. There is nothing wrong with it. We need this kind of program to assist industry in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and so on. But the danger and weakness of the program is that there are tens of thousands of small Canadian communities where individuals cannot be placed in some industry training program. Consequently, this program is very discriminatory because it means that the vast majority of our 22 million Canadians cannot avail themselves of this program. This is a multimillion dollar program which basically caters to a very small segment of the Canadian population. In Canada, most people who enjoy the affluence of Members of Parliament, the affluence of executive assistants, the affluence of ministers and of the well-to-do, do not realize that vast segments of our population have not acquired the technical capability to carry on in this industrial age in 1971. They are not equipped to operate with any degree of competence. Again, I should apologize for not having the statistics at my fingertips.

Mr. Broadbent: Don't worry about the facts, John.

Mr. Lundrigan: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) envies me, I am sure. Right now I am looking at one of my favourite colleagues, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who must certainly envy me. Yesterday he made nine speeches and he is eager for the opportunity to rise and to place on record some of his finer points of view. I will certainly try not to delay that process for more than a few minutes.

In the parts of Canada with which I am more familiar, I know people who grew up in the depression years who were lucky if they had any kind of exposure to formal education. Today, these people cannot take part in any training program; they cannot get into upgrading programs and, if they do, they are faced with very serious restrictions, such as the one which requires a person to be in the labour force for three years before qualifying for any of these training programs. I contend that this regulation is very discriminatory. There are many thousands of young Canadians who have been out of school for a number of years and who have not been able to enter the labour force because of the serious unemployment situation. The end result is that today they are not entitled to take part in some of the manpower training programs because of the very restrictive and discriminatory regulation which requires them to be in the labour force for three consecutive years.

Another regulation which is very discriminatory and about which I and other hon. members of the House are concerned is that an individual can only take part in these programs for 52 weeks. I have seen many examples of this myself, and since my involvement as an observer of the Department of Manpower and Immigration for the last two or three years I have had many occasions to talk with people. I have heard representations from various people in various provinces who are discriminated against because they are only permitted to have 52 weeks of manpower training. Frequently an individual who has taken part in a training program continues to find difficulty in entering the labour force. Consequently, there must be some flexibility to allow young Canadians in particular to avail themselves of more extensive training through these manpower programs.

Another point that I want to make is that the study which was released a couple of days ago by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) was the most inadequate and costly study that I have seen for a long while. This was a study carried out by the minister and by a number of his officials. It was not scientifically based. The conclusions about the training program and the increase in employment opportunities were not valid conclusions. I can tell you for a fact that if any person with scientific or research knowledge analysed this study he would have to toss it in the wastepaper basket because of the conclusions reached. These conclusions were reached without proper foundation. They were not justified on the basis of the information available. The fact is that the study was incomplete and not scientifically conducted. I challenge the minister to look at the report of the Economic Council of Canada and of the Poverty Committee and try, in co-operation with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which now is referred to as Statistics Canada, to conduct a scientific study of the manpower training program and the relevancy of this report.

I have had an opportunity to read in some detail a study conducted by the Fisheries College of St. John's Newfoundland. The Fisheries College is one of the most outstanding institutions in the world in marine affairs. It is an outstanding institution which is growing and developing daily. I believe it has the support of every elected member from the province of Newfoundland. These people did a study of the training and employment opportunities. They concluded, after spending a period of about six months studying the opportunities, that they were concerned with the lack of a positive co-relation between the training program and the opportunities available to these people after completing the program. This certainly points out to me the need for much more research. I know a number of people will say we have had enough research already in various fields. We must revise our manpower training program so that industry, in the broadest context, can bring people into industry and therefore help alleviate the unemployment situation. We must have a training program which is related to job opportunities if we are to have much more employment than we have had as a result of the manpower training program.

There is a matter which I have wanted to raise in the House for a number of days but did not have the opportunity to do so because of the ineffectiveness of the 40 minute question period. As a result, members of Parliament are not able to hold the government accountable for its behaviour. This is especially true in view of the absence of ministers which, so far as I am concerned, is illegal. Back in 1967 a job vacancy survey was started. It was a very forward step. An effort was made to ascertain the various vacancies across Canada, and the type of people presently trained and unemployed, in order to determine how we could integrate our manpower training program, our vocational training program, our adult program and our federal and provincial programs in some way with the needs of industry. That program began at a cost of $3 million to the Canadian taxpayers. There were

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

106 men involved. I should like someone to put a question on the order paper, perhaps I should do it myself, concerning how many people were involved in this program for about three or four years and the salaries they received. The cost was in excess of $3 million, yet the government refuses to make the result of this program public.

Sometime in October as a result of a question placed on the order paper by one of my colleagues, the government said it would have the result of the job vacancy survey released before the end of the year. It is obvious to me that the results have been known for several months. It is also obvious that the results have been suppressed. They are being used by the various government departments but are not being made public for the use of the provinces and of members of the opposition in making speeches on this important subject. We want those results so that we can ascertain where the vacancies are in Canada. The Prime Minister says there are lots of jobs but that the people are too lazy to avail themselves of them. We would like to know what the results of this job vacancy survey were. We would like to know, for example, if it is a fact that in the last three years the number of vacancies in Canadian industry has been cut in half. I say the government of Canada has an obligation to the Canadian people to make that document public immediately.

I am going to raise a point which has not been raised before. I think some of my colleagues to the left will want to ask questions on this subject before they begin their sojourn in their constituencies. I had a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) but I have not had an opportunity to ask it because he has been so preoccupied with answering questions from all my colleagues about the serious situation in the pulp and paper industry. I did not want to floor him with other inquiries. We have asked questions about the long-term unemployed Canadians. We have, of course discovered during the last few days that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which I like to call it, has conducted a very detailed study of people unemployed for periods longer than six months. We have found that this information about people unemployed for longer than six months has been made available to the government. When our competent people in the research office have inquired of DBS they have been refused this type of information.

We want the information. We want to know how many Canadians have been out of work for longer than six months and the effect this had had on the municipalities. DBS, for some reason or other, perhaps because of orders from the government department responsible for the administration of that office, has refused to give this type of information. When we talk about participatory democracy one almost has to be close to the government in power today in order to realize what kind of a statement that is. Personally, I have been involved for only a little while in politics and it is not the sort of thing to which I aspire. I do not aspire to a 35 or 40 year career. However, I have never seen a government which is supposed to be dedicated to working on behalf of the Canadian people and the Canadian workers which is so surreptitious and sneaky. Today, documents are being refused because the government feels it can use them to its own advantage in a sneaky and surreptitious manner. I would like to bring this up in the House in more detail, when people are here to hear about it.

An hon. Member: Do it now.

Mr. Lundrigan: The government of Canada is gypping the Canadian people—

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Lundrigan: —by keeping a document buried in its closets which cost the Canadian people $3 million. The Canadian people paid $3 million to find out where all those jobs are that the Prime Minister talks about.

In 1967, before this Parliament started, the government had instituted this program to determine the manpower opportunities and job vacancies. The government has had that document in its possession for the past six months. This report has been used by various departments for propaganda purposes. It has not been made available to the Canadian people. What kind of participatory democracy are we talking about? The Canadian people will think this is a disgrace, particularly when they learn of the cost of the document.

I will conclude by saying I hope other hon. members will have an opportunity during the few remaining minutes today to refer specifically to the manpower training program. I know what my friend, the young hon. member from Saskatchewan is going to say. He will be talking about the relevancy of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to educational opportunities in Canada. He will be challenging the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) to point out to the Prime Minister the need for some co-ordinated effort by the federal government and the provinces in the area of manpower training and the whole field of educational activity. He is an educator. I recognize him as an intelligent parliamentarian, an active parliamentarian. I will be listening carefully to the recommendations he will be making to the Prime Minister and to the department to try to get some co-ordination of effort between the provinces and the federal government in the area of human resource development.

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, when discussing this budget measure I would like to deal with the taxation situation of prospectors which will drastically change following adoption of the tax reforms. It will drastically change by virtue of the fact that prospectors presently are exempted from taxation when they receive revenue for the sale of mining property. Under the new tax proposals this revenue will be taxable in 1972.

Up to now the revenue that they derived from the sale of property was considered a capital gain. This was recognized in the white paper which said:

> For many years the act has continued a provision which specifically exempts from tax the proceeds received by a prospector or a grubstaker on the sale of a mining property. This provision was intended to make it clear that the government viewed this type of gain as a capital gain which under the existing system would of course be tax-exempt. Under the new proposals capital gains are to be taxed and this exemption would therefore be repealed.

I would like to point out the difficulty that this repeal will create for the prospector who, by virtue of the type of work he does, and the time limit that is applicable to his earnings and revenues, can go for years without making any really worthwhile revenue. I am referring to the capital gain aspect of his livelihood.

The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs recognized this difficulty, and in their 18th report stated:

> We further recommend that taxpayers should be allowed to establish a "bank" of earned depletion as at the start of the system by calculating past exploration and development expenditures less any depletion allowed. There would have to be strict provisions to prevent trafficking in dormant depletion credits.
> This proposal is approved for grubstakers. However, we recommend that prospectors continue to be treated as under the present Act.

Here, the committee made a distinction between grubstakers and prospectors.

When the Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee made its report on the white paper, it also recognized the difficulty that this would entail for the prospector, and stated:

> Your Committee recommends against the implementation of proposals in paragraph 5.45 of the White Paper to withdraw an exemption heretofore enjoyed by prospectors and grubstakers under section 83 of the Income Tax Act.

Finally, in the "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation" it is stated:

> The legislation also provides that no amount will be included in income when individual prospectors and grubstakers sell mining properties to a corporation for shares of that corporation. The individual will be considered to have acquired the shares at no cost and will therefore be taxed on one-half the proceeds of eventual sale of the shares under the normal capital gains rules.

When a prospector receives shares as revenue from the sale of mining property, the tax legislation that will be in effect in 1972 clearly recognizes the capital gain aspect of that type of a revenue. We cannot see how the minister can possibly differentiate between revenue that is cash and revenue that is shares. It seems to me that the capital gain aspect is proved by the fact that there is an increase in value in the capital that is invested. Whether this increase in earnings is paid in money or shares, in peanuts or what-have-you, has nothing to do with it.

Therefore, I would like to make an appeal to the minister and to the government that when they are considering the amendments the minister has promised to introduce early in the new year to the tax reform legislation that will take effect on January 1, 1972, one amendment will deal more fairly with the capital gain aspect of prospectors' earnings. The minister should accept the recommendations of the standing committees of the House and of the Senate, and meet the representations made by prospectors, mining firms and groups all across the country. The fact that there are very few prospectors in Canada should not deter the minister from restoring the situation to what it was, as recommended by the two standing committees.

Finally, I think the minister should recognize the value of the time spent by a prospector in developing properties. An individual prospector who develops a property is not working for anyone else, does not have access to weekly earnings or salary of any sort, and depends on the once-in-a-lifetime sale of that property for his livelihood. I suggest it is time that prospectors be given the relief to which they are entitled.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-275 essentially deals with two different items. It deals with a reduction in income tax for individuals and corporations, and also with certain payments for manpower training. In view of the fact that I gave my notes on manpower training to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), I will now address myself primarily to the tax reductions for individuals and corporations. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate went on at great length about manpower training, and for that reason I will try to stick to the other point. When the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate first started speaking, he said he did not understand the approach of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), but I hope that after hearing me and a couple of other members of this party, he will be enlightened.

On October 14 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) introduced a number of new measures, one of which was a 7 per cent cut back in corporate income tax and the other a 3 per cent cut back in personal income tax. As the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby said, we think the way he is pursuing this tax reduction is unfair, inequitable and regressive. What is before us, Mr. Speaker, is nothing less than a gift to those who have large incomes, and also a gift to corporations. The Minister of Finance is a great big jolly Santa Claus and on his back he has a big bag full of goodies, but only for the richer and more wealthy people in the country. This is the type of society this government has been building. When they talk about the just society they do not refer to the working people, the small businessmen and the farmers, but just the rich people of Canada. That is why I am rising to take part in this debate, and why our party is concerned about Bill C-275 which is just another piece of regressive legislation.

My riding is made up primarily of farming people, working people and small business people. I know most of them realize that the tax system in Canada today works against them and makes their daily lives more difficult. This bill only perpetuates the tax system which was supposed to help them. The reduction in personal income tax is uniform right across the board, a 3 per cent reduction for everyone regardless of income, while the corporation tax is reduced by 7 per cent.

I cannot help thinking of the speech given in this House on December 16 by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) when we see the inequity in the bill before us. He made the comment that in recent years the government has been gaining more revenues from the individual than from the corporations in this country. He said that in 1961-62, 35 per cent of all federal government revenue came from taxes on individuals. Last year, it was 41.4 per cent. Over the last ten years, more government revenue came from individuals than ten years before. Looking at corporations over the same period, we see that they pay less now than they did in 1961-62. According to government figures, in 1961-62 government revenue from corporation taxes was 23½ per cent while last year it was 19½ per cent. This illustrates the inequity of the tax system in this country, an inequity which is perpetuated and accentuated by the bill before us. Certainly the economy needs to be stimulated, but this must not be achieved by giving extra privileges and gifts to those who already enjoy privileges under the existing system. What we should do is give extra privileges to those in the lower and middle income groups and arrange for more government spending. This would generate activity in the economy and a higher employment rate which would benefit everybody. As it is now, we know that the economy works against the great majority of people in Canada.

[Mr. Roy (Timmins).]

Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby quoted some statistics which I think should be emphasized. Bill C-259 reshuffles the income tax rate, and I would like to show how this affects a married taxpayer with two children under 16 years of age who earns $4,000 a year. After passage of the new tax bill, he will pay $73 in income tax. If the bill before us today is passed he will pay 3 per cent less which amounts to $1.09. The man in the same circumstances who earns $30,000 a year will pay $152.34 less and the man earning $100,000 a year will pay $757.70 less. This shows the regressive nature of this tax bill before us today. If you happen to be wealthy, the amount of the reduction will be greater and you will pay less tax to the government. This is not the way to stimulate the economy, nor is it the way to help the average and middle income earner in the country. As I said, the bill synchronizes beautifully with the line of the tax amendment passed by the House in these last weeks.

Now, I should like to spend a few moments pointing out what the tax system does to a number of people in this country. Let us consider the positions of three single men who have no dependents, each earning $10,000 a year after the passage of the tax reform bill and the bill before us. The first man who earns $10,000 through wages or salary is going to be taxed $2,285 per annum. The second man, who earns $10,000 through capital gains is going to be taxed $844 per annum. The third man, who earns $10,000 by dividends from corporations is going to be taxed $193. Is this equity or neutrality in the tax system? I suggest it is not and that we should make a value judgment. If you earn money from capital gains or dividends you are worth more and are taxed at a lesser rate than if you earn money in a factory, on a farm or in a small business. This is the type of inequity on which we based our tax system, and Bill C-275 is just an extension of it which also favours those who have money over those who do not.

Another section of the bill before us today reduces corporate income tax by 7 per cent right across the board. There is no consideration of whether a corporation is large or small, whether it is labour-intensive or capital-intensive, foreign controlled or Canadian controlled or of the type of industry involved. As a result, I believe that this 7 per cent reduction will be nothing more than a "rip off" at the taxpayer's expense. Here again the tax system as it relates to corporations and industry, is inequitable. The hon. member for Duvernay pointed this out quite brilliantly when he spoke in this House earlier in this session.

Statistics published by the Manitoba Department of Finance verify my point. They show the taxes paid on profits and an average of the profits made by certain businesses in this country over the last ten years. As I said, the bill before us has a uniform 7 per cent reduction in income tax for corporations right across the board, regardless of the type of company involved. These figures show that in the last ten years retail merchants paid taxes on 90 per cent of profits; wholesale companies paid taxes on 87 per cent of profits; the construction industry paid taxes on 77 per cent of profits; manufacturers paid taxes on 65 per cent of profits. Then, we get down to the mining companies, and we see that they paid on only 13 per cent of profits. Oil and gas companies have paid taxes on 5.7 per cent of the profits they have made in Canada in the last ten years.

And what do we have before us at present? We have a bill that will reduce corporate income tax by 7 per cent across the board, regardless of whether the company is an oil company, a mining company, or a retail company. I suggest that unplanned, ad hoc policies like these will, in the long run, work against the good of the Canadian economy and against increases in employment. They are not good for Canadians in general. Yet this is the type of planning that has occurred in this country ever since this government took office in 1968. It went on long before that. We need a tax system that is fair and equitable, so that the person who makes $10,000 from stocks and bonds is taxed on the same basis as the man who makes his living by working in a factory. We need a progressive tax system, so that the man making $100,000 pays a proportionately greater amount of his income in tax than the man who makes between $4,000 and $5,000. We will not solve many problems such as unemployment, poverty and those connected with regional development that we talk so much about unless we introduce a more equitable tax system in Canada.

This bill is not taking us in that direction. It is unfair, regressive, and will not stimulate the economy and provide jobs, which is what the minister may want. It is nothing but a handout to the wealthier in Canada; it is nothing but a handout to mining corporations, oil and gas corporations and other corporations which do not need handouts. Many of these corporations do not provide many jobs. For that reason, I appeal to members of the House to thing about this seriously. I appeal to members of the Conservative party not to jump into bed with the government again, but to stand up for the ordinary person of this country, for the average working man, and to speak out against this bill which is regressive and inequitable.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I believe that by now it has become evident to the House that we, over in this corner, are more concerned about the principle of the bill than about the mechanics or the dollars and cents and percentages involved in the tax bill.

An hon. Member: Careful now.

Mrs. MacInnis: We are concerned because this bill involves our whole approach to a more just and fair society. We intend to make this point as we go along. This bill cannot be considered apart from other bills passed by this government. This tax bill must be considered in conjunction with the government's approach to society. That is how we look at it; but that is not the view of the government.

I was quite impressed with certain passages appearing in a transcript of an interview that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) granted to James Reston of the New York Times on December 21 this year. I want to read a passage from this transcript. The entire transcript is exceedingly revealing of the philosophy that is behind the Prime Minister's thinking and, by extension, behind the thinking of the entire government. I do not think there is any secret about whose philosophy is all pervasive in the government ranks. The Prime Minister said:

People will look for the security which this system cannot give and they will try to find it in less free avenues in politics.

So that's my underlying assumption when I look at the world, when I look at the problems which exist elsewhere, and I think in a sense that can explain a lot of the troubles we're having, not only in the sub-continent or Northern Ireland or in the black ghettos or the conflicts in Canada. And from that follows also, I think, the only way of avoiding that increasing gap between the desire, the expectation, and the fulfillment. It's by repeating the truth to the people and getting them to participate in the decision—not in order that it be better, but in order that they realize for themselves that their expectations cannot be fulfilled and that the problem is more difficult of solution than the dreams would reveal. Now, this may not be clear to you.

Unfortunately, it is abundantly clear to many of us in this House, and the Prime Minister's attitude has been revealed to us over a long series of months and through legislation. The Prime Minister is saying to the people: You cannot aspire to a better kind of life than you are now living, and the job of Members of Parliament is to go out among the people and tell them that they cannot have it.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

An hon. Member: Give it to them, Grace.

Mrs. MacInnis: Listen, I do not mind heckling from the other side, but I object to heckling from my own side. It's too noisy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis: We have better hecklers over here. What did the Prime Minister say? Hon. members can read text for themselves, if they wish. He says that the trouble today is that people believe that they can have a better life. Well, they cannot have a better life and it is up to parliamentarians to go out among them and tell them they cannot have a better life. Surely, hon. members realize that this process is going on now. May I quote one more little passage. The Prime Minister said:

You know, in days where the British parliamentary system invented the system of paying the leader of the opposition and calling him Her Majesty's loyal opposition, it was because there wasn't enough press and television and union groups and university groups and so on. But now in a sense everybody is making it his job and it is I'm afraid pushing that society towards a breakdown.

In other words, the opposition is merely a vestigial remnant of parliamentary democracy and should be stopped. Well, it is not going to be stopped.

An hon. Member: You said it; he did not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 23, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McGRATH—STATEMENTS MADE OUTSIDE THE HOUSE BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I might say at the outset that it concerns the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Yesterday, during the question period, I directed a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion concerning his administration of the Regional Development Incentives Act, a duty entrusted to the minister by Parliament. This duty entails the spending of public funds which were voted by this House; and, for disbursing these public funds the minister receives a salary, also voted by this House and paid out of public funds.

My question was put because of allegations made by a Quebec labour organization and the minister's response through a newspaper. Your Honour ruled the question was such that the minister should indicate whether he would make a statement on motions. The minister neither answered my question nor complied with your ruling. Instead, in my opinion, he twice abused the Standing Order on Privilege before Your Honour could intervene to get the floor in order to make what I consider to be abusive and evasive comments.

On a supplementary, the member for Crowfoot asked the minister to assure the House that, in administering these public funds, he was not subject to conflict of interest. The minister at that time refused to seek the floor to give that assurance. Following these proceedings in the House the minister, outside the House, yesterday made a statement to the public media on these proceedings in the House. I do not comment on these vicious allegations, Mr. Speaker, for you have ruled that political argument made outside the House cannot be raised as a question of privilege in the House.

However, there is one allegation that does not fall into this category. It is a statement that, with respect to proceedings in this House, can only be made in this House. The minister demanded that allegations of patronage against him be substantiated or withdrawn. That statement is a commentary on yesterday's proceedings and a demand that the allegations of patronage against him be substantiated or withdrawn. The substantiation or withdrawal of statements made in the House is something that can only be done in the House and, in this case, on the initiative of the minister himself. Under our Standing Order 17(1), the minister should have made that demand yesterday. He did not. He sat mute in his seat. The minister, therefore, in his statement outside the House, reflected on the action of members in this House, for which he had a remedy—if he had a grievance—when he said that the comments or questions by members were a "bunch of lies".

If Your Honour confirms this breach of privilege, I will move, seconded by the member for Peace River:

That the matter of this question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hopefully, the minister will make a statement to clear up this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East has given the notice required under the terms of Standing Order 17. Since receiving this notice the Chair has given serious consideration to several aspects of the matter raised by the hon. member. As the House knows, the duty of the Chair is limited to determining the procedural question whether or not a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been raised. In reaching such a decision the Chair must take into account not only the Standing Order but also long established practice in relation to parliamentary privilege.

An analysis of the hon. member's statement indicates there are two aspects which he wishes the Chair to consider. The first relates to proceedings which took place during the question period yesterday. I have looked at this very closely and I have been unable to determine that there has been a breach of parliamentary privilege on the part of the minister. On this point, I will only comment that according to the long established practice of the House an incomplete or unsatisfactory answer to a question or, indeed, the refusal of a minister to reply to a question cannot be regarded as a breach of parliamentary privilege.

The second aspect of the hon. member's presentation has reference to statements made outside the House by the hon. Minister of Regional Expansion. As the hon. member for St. John's East has pointed out, there are precedents to the effect that such statements cannot found a question of privilege. May I suggest that the Speaker cannot be expected to monitor, or audit, or question or, indeed, to censor the many statements made by hon. members outside the House relating to the conduct of our proceedings. Were it otherwise, the Speaker would be a busy man indeed.

I should also add that in my view the motion proposed by the hon. member is not procedurally acceptable since it merely proposes the reference to a committee of—and I quote his own words—"the matter of this question of privilege". This could hardly be an acceptable motion for debate by the House at this time or by the committee in due course. In the light of these considerations, and taking into account the precedents and practice to which I have referred, I do not think the Chair can rule there is a prima facie case of privilege on which we might spend the rest of the day.

TABLING OF JOB VACANCY SURVEY REPORT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table under Standing Order 41(2), the Job Vacancy Survey Report, in both official languages.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LENGTH OF ADJOURNMENT FOR CHRISTMAS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am really rising on a point of order to indicate to the House that, instead of dealing with either of the motions which have been put on the order paper in my name, I should like to seek consent to make another and a simpler motion. I will read the motion and then I would explain the purpose of it and ask for consent to move it. If consent were given, we could then deal with it. It reads:

That following Royal Assent this day the House shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, December 28, 1971 at two o'clock.

At the moment we are somewhat uncertain as to when it will be possible to complete the remaining item or items of business before the House, so it would be inappropriate for the House at this time to decide the questions contained in the major adjournment motion which is on the order paper. So to avoid premature discussion on that point I will put this simpler motion which would have the effect of adjourning the House today following Royal Assent and bringing us back on Tuesday next.

I have felt a certain amount of anguish in deciding whether to ask the House to come back on Monday or on Tuesday. In view of the transportation difficulties which members from distant points would encounter in returning to the House by two o'clock on Monday, I decided we would probably all be better off if we came back here on Tuesday at two o'clock, and for this reason I make that change. So, if I am given consent, I would move that following Royal Assent this day the House should stand adjourned until two o'clock on Tuesday, December 28, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave of the House to present this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is unanimous consent. I will put the motion which is as follows: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), seconded by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), moves:

That, following the Royal Assent this day, the House shall adjourn and stand adjourned until Tuesday, December 28, 1971, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not have much to say. I start off by pointing out to the minister that the anguish to which he was exposed is nothing like the anguish of the Members of Parliament who have to go long distances home to celebrate Christmas with their families and constituents and then come back here on Monday. His anguish is not now quite as sharp, but it is still very poignant.

With respect to the minister's motion we have, of course, given our consent, but I think it should be made plain that there is an understanding among all parties that when we have completed the study of Bill C-275, which will mean the completion of all the business which the government House Leader indicated the government expected to be completed—with the exception of Bill C-176 which we will discuss later, today—we will then recess until Tuesday. There will be no further discussion in this House today on Bill C-176. I think that is the understanding, and I put it on the record.

Our position on that has been made quite plain in this House and outside this House. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) said quite plainly that the arrangements we have reached, or thought we had reached, which would involve acceptance of an amendment which the government has indicated to us it would like to put forward, plus a further amendment which, in our view, is one which carries forward the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) a year last summer, excluding cattle and cattle products, would put Bill C-176 in a form in which we could accept it.

From our point of view, with that being done, Mr. Speaker, it is our belief that the passage of Bill C-176 would not be overly delayed. There would be some debate, I assume, but not a very lengthy debate. I say this because it may give hon. members some indication of what our position is in the event that we come back next week and have to debate this measure. Our position is clear. We maintain it. We hope the other protagonists in this issue will see the light of reason as we have seen it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As must be obvious, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions within the last couple of hours which have resulted in the request of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) for permission to offer the motion now before the House instead of either of those on the order paper. May I say that we are glad that the debate does not have to take place today on the motion for a recess of seven or eight weeks. We have views about that, in light of the number of times we are told that there is not time in the parliamentary schedule for things that ought to be done, but we can express those views if and when that motion is called next week.

In other words, what we have before us now is simply a motion that would provide that when today's work is done we stand adjourned until two o'clock on Tuesday. I should like to confirm the understanding already indicated by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), namely, that the only government business to be dealt with today is to be Bill C-275. I am in a position to say that, although we have some amendments that we wish to offer, and although there may be some votes, we are prepared to give such consent as may be necessary to enable the House to complete its deliberations on Bill C-275 today. That might be late. If it is achieved early, at least it is clear we will not revert to Bill C-176 today.

We also welcome the Christmas spirit that prompted the President of the Privy Council to suggest we come back on Tuesday rather than on Monday. As he knows, because this was involved in the discussions, we would have preferred this resumption to take place the following week, the first week in January, so that we could give adequate consideration to Bill C-176. We would even be prepared to consider some House order regarding time, provided there was agreement among the parties as to certain amendments that might be accepted.

Although I am suggesting an alternative date for coming back, namely the first Monday or Tuesday in January, I am not suggesting that this motion be delayed. If as a result of the discussion later this afternoon there could be agreement on how we handle Bill C-176, that of course could be dealt with later this afternoon.

Perhaps one can say, although we seemed to have a rather serious impasse, discussions have produced a resolution at least insofar as the Christmas weekend is concerned. We hope the government that has listened to reason regarding this weekend will also listen to reason when we come to the question of the length of the recess at this time of year, and also when we come to the question of what should be done to make Bill C-176 a decent and proper piece of legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, discussions were indeed held among House leaders in order to find a solution concerning the debate on Bill C-176.

The proposal made by the President of the Privy Council a few moments ago would enable members to enjoy a few days' rest next weekend and to consider seriously the debate on Bill C-176 which will be carried on next week in order to find a solution in the interest of Canadian farmers and consumers once the legislation is passed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if you could ascertain from the government side now what would happen in case we did not finish Bill C-176 between Christmas and New Years. In all fairness to members, because their Christmas plans have been disrupted, I think there should be some indication from the government concerning what will happen. I am not speaking particularly for the hon. member for Crowfoot, because we are all of the same opinion on this side. If there is any specific purpose to further debate on Bill C-176 at this time of the year, the government should indicate to members what will happen over the New Year's weekend so that we can make plans accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that it is not within the functions of the Chair to make those inquiries. Perhaps this should be done in the course of the conversations which I gather are to take place during the day.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BANKRUPTCY OF QUEBEC FIRMS RECEIVING GRANTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask leave of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. I do so because I feel it is an urgent matter dealing with suspicions, doubts and public understandings created by articles in the public media concerning bankruptcies and lay-offs at DREE sponsored firms. In this regard, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move the following motion which I think will clear up the matter once and for all. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, for the sake of public understanding and in support of his department's programs, lay on the table of the House information outlining the number of commercial operations financed by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion that have either gone into bankruptcy or laid off personnel, and to clearly establish DREE procedures in this area.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion moved by the hon. member for St. John's East. The Chair must invite hon. members to show whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent and therefore the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—POSSIBLE STUDY BY INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE PRIOR TO PROCLAMATION.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the government did in fact appoint an interdepartmental committee some five months before the October crisis of 1970 to consider the steps to be taken in the event that the War Measures Act was put into force by reason of insurrection.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not think it is reasonable for the Leader of the Opposition to expect an answer to this kind of question. The way in which the government conducts its decision making and policies is certainly something which is private to the government. I do not mind saying that it is true that, as a result of the very disturbed social conditions in the world in 1968 and 1969, after the unrest on campuses across Europe and America as well as Canada, major strife and riots that we had seen in North American and European cities, the government was planning ahead to find ways in which it might meet any such contingencies.

Mr. Stanfield: I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether there were any particular developments in Canada in 1970 which prompted this consideration by the government.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that that question is in order, but the Prime Minister may be allowed to reply. The Leader of the Opposition is asking whether some time ago there were circumstances in the country which might have justified the government taking certain action. I wonder whether this is the kind of question which is in order, but in the Christmas spirit I will not object to the Prime Minister answering the question.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest with all respect that the question is very much in order in view of the public importance of the whole matter at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, that decision must be made by the Chair, and that is my suggestion.

An hon. Member: Where is the Christmas spirit?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—POSSIBLE NEED FOR TIGHTER REGULATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In the light of the apparent leakage to the press of highly sensitive cabinet documents, what action is the government taking to tighten its regulations or otherwise prevent the repetition of such leaks?

• (2:30 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed the last part of the question when the member said "by way of doing" something in particular.

Mr. Brewin: By way of tightening its regulations or otherwise to prevent the repetition of such leaks.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is a very interesting suggestion that we tighten our regulations. The member knows that ministers take an oath of office and officials take an oath of secrecy. In the whole system of administration there are tons of documents circulating all year round, it is really a matter of knowing if somebody is going to break his oath and decide to take decisions upon his own head which can best be arrived at in a democratic way by the government responsible to the people. I cannot see how the member wants us to tighten the regulations if people are going to break the rules.

POSSIBLE COMMITTEE STUDY OF METHODS TO PRESERVE SECRECY OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question. Would the government consider referring to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of this House or some other committee of this House the whole question of the secrecy of cabinet papers and the extent to which it is necessary to change methods to prevent documents that should be kept secret from being exposed to the public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Anyone who knows anything about government realizes that when we want to get free discussion between officials and ministers they should be able to speak their minds with the utmost frankness. There has to be some part of government operations which is conducted in secret. There is no way in which any government will get around that.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE AT NEXT SESSION TO STUDY LEGISLATION TO MEET EMERGENCIES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question Mr. Speaker. In light of the Prime Minister's answer and in light of information contained in the leaked document, would the Prime Minister discuss with the government House leader the possibility of restoring item No. 78 on the order paper at the next session in its existing form so that the government and the country may have the benefit of discussions and inquiry by a committee of this House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will read item No. 78 and perhaps give an answer tomorrow.

An hon. Member: Tomorrow?

Mr. Baldwin: I will phone you at nine o'clock tomorrow morning.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROJECTS FOR MAYOR CENTRES IN CANADA

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the large sums of money being spent by the minister's department on projects in Quebec City where the minister's constituency is located, can he indicate if similar programs are being planned for other major centres in Canada such as Montreal, Regina and similar centres.

Mr. McGrath: Don't forget Halifax!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, no more money is expended in Quebec than anywhere else. I think that we have spent some in Regina, through grants; we spent some in Sept-Îles, in Newfoundland, in New Brunswick—for the construction of a complex—in short we spend money everywhere. I do not think that more money is spent in Quebec than elsewhere.

[English]

POLICY RESPECTING GRANTS—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question. In view of some quarrel with the minister's statement, and in view of the widespread dissatisfaction with the department's programs as well as the fact the department is now reviewing designated regions and special areas, is the minister considering holding a conference with representatives of all the provinces in order to develop a more acceptable approach to the national problem of eliminating regional disparities.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we are in constant contact with the provinces and, as far as I know, no particular province has complained about our regional economic expansion programs. A few hon. members have complained but, apart from that, nobody has ever complained about the way in which we are proceeding.

[English]

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question. Will the minister consider making a statement on motions to explain why his department has made no progress in its job of eliminating regional disparities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that this question is in the form of a statement or allegation and in those terms it is not acceptable.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I admit that there is much worry about the subsidies received by Quebec, but I deplore the fact that some hon. members are not happy to see that Quebec is getting some subsidies even when this is justified, and I would like to congratulate the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that there is no question of privilege there, but rather a question that could be debated.

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DECISIONS ON GRANTS—ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question. The hon. member has twisted the questions of members in the same way the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion does, and he knows there is not an element of truth in his allegation. I should like to ask the minister, since he made a statement outside the House yesterday to the effect that he has no role in the decision-making process regarding grants made under RDIA, who makes these decisions and who has the ultimate responsibility for them?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as usual the premises are false. Yesterday, on television, I did not say that I had no part to play, but that I seldom intervened. This is something entirely different.

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DECISIONS—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF MEMBERS OF OUTSIDE COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A further supplementary. During that television interview the minister just referred to, he mentioned—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask the question?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it was the minister who referred to the television interview, and I can ask a supplementary question in the same vein. I should like to ask the minister if he could tell us who comprises the "outside committee", I think was the term he used, that he mentioned in the television interview yesterday? Who makes decisions under DREE? Could the minister name the members of that outside committee and could he tell us who has responsibility for the final decision?

Mr. Horner: And what role they play in the Liberal organization?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, no committee outside the department makes any decisions on subsidies. I simply stated that a committee made up of persons chosen outside the government supervised the application of the program and the allocation of subsidies. That is entirely different.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we do not spend the whole question period on this very important matter. I appreciate that it is important, but we have been spending a bit of time on it and it has perhaps developed into debate. However, if hon. members feel that we should pursue the matter, I will recognize a few supplementaries.

Mr. McGrath: On a supplementary question, I think the minister has an obligation to name the members of this committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is debate. As I mentioned a moment ago when the matter was raised by way of a question of privilege, the hon. member may be dissatisfied or unhappy but he cannot insist on an answer from the minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ALLEGED MIS-SPENDING OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of what has been revealed, I wonder if he is now prepared to comment and declare policy with regard to the Barbeau commission recommendations on election expenses which might clear up all this misunderstanding?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making an allegation at this time and the question cannot be accepted by the Chair. The Chair is prepared to recognize all supplementaries.

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER REGARDING ROLE OF OTHER MINISTERS IN PARTY ORGANIZATION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My supplementary is also for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and is in regard to a possible conflict of interest. The minister stated that the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce are in the same position as he with regard to their party organizations, as party organizers. Is the minister going to explain what these—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether we should pursue this line of questioning. I would think a majority of hon. members might feel this type of question is not in order.

Mr. Yewchuk: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was a little mixed up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yewchuk: I simply wanted to ask the minister to clarify the position that these various ministers hold in the party in the interests of the public.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate, as I was suggesting a moment ago, that this is hardly the kind of question which can be answered during the question period—perhaps by way of a statement on motions but hardly by way of an answer during the question period.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a question of privilege. I can state it briefly and you can determine whether or not I have. My understanding is that the minister was asked twice in clear language to name the people who are advising, at least, his department on the grants made under the DREE program. We do not have the names and Your Honour has suggested that to pursue this matter would be debate. May I respectfully suggest to Your Honour that one of the purposes of our being here as an opposition is to check administration policies. Another purpose is the examination of administrative follies.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Gibson: Who will check the opposition?

Mr. McCleave: I must defer to my hon. friend from Hamilton-Wentworth, and say again that I love him. The other day, however, his own House leader did not care a hoot for him.

One of our purposes in being here, surely, is to check into administrative spending and place policies under some kind of examination. I think by his refusal to answer the question the minister has established that we, prima facie, have a legitimate question of privilege to raise against the minister, and I so raise it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is a very distinguished member of the bar and a very distinguished member of this House, yet I would hesitate to agree with him. There are many precedents to indicate that hon. members cannot raise by way of question of privilege a minister's failure to reply to a question, a minister's refusal to reply to a question, or the reply of a minister which is not entirely to the satisfaction or not at all to the satisfaction of the hon. member who asked the question. I suggest with great respect to the hon. member and to the House that this is not a matter that can be raised by way of question of privilege.

AMOUNT LOST BY BANKRUPTCIES OF FIRMS IN QUEBEC

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion could inform us whether the $500,000, which he referred to as having been lost through bankruptcies and which he said was not a bad track record, was the total amount lost through bankruptcies, or are other moneys involved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I could check this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: The minister was pretty sure about that on television yesterday. He is not half so smart in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Why does the minister not say inside the House what he said outside the House?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I referred to about $500,000.

Mr. McGrath: The minister suggested that there were other bankruptcies. Why does he not make a statement in the House and be the sort of minister that he is supposed to be?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is about to recognize the hon. member for Huron. I think, after that, hon. members will see that everyone has had the opportunity to ask a supplementary, and that we should go to the next subject.

DESIGNATED AREAS—REASON FOR DESIGNATION OF MONTREAL BUT NOT AREAS IN WESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister why it is that the city of Montreal is a designated area and slow growth areas in western Ontario are not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is time we moved to another area.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SALE OF FIREARMS BY MAIL ORDER—POSSIBLE BREACH OF LAW

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I sent him notice of it. Can he say whether newspaper advertising regarding the sale of revolvers and other firearms by mail order is in conformity with the law and/or public safety?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult for me to give a legal opinion on orders of the day. I have referred the hon. gentleman's question to the appropriate provincial attorney general whose duty it is to enforce the law.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

VIOLENCE IN QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR STRICTER CENSORSHIP OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State.

Since there has unmistakably been renewed violence by young people these last few years, especially in Quebec, and since this phenomenon also coincides with a great slackening of censure of films and plays featuring violence on the CBC network, can the minister tell the House if he intends to take steps in that connection so as to improve the quality of the plays and films shown on television by the CBC.

Mr. Speaker: The minister may reply briefly to that question and it is with such qualification that I recognize him.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, surveillance of films shown in theaters comes under exclusive provincial jurisdiction as the hon. member might know. The control over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation programming is the sole responsibility of the CBC. The hon. member might discuss the matter with the directors when they appear before the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

GRAIN

RAPESEED—POSSIBILITY OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS BY UNITED STATES AND JAPAN—AMOUNT IN STORAGE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in his capacity as reporting for the Wheat Board. It has to do with the rapeseed situation. Since he comes from a constituency which, since the destruction of the Bertha army worm, is known as the land of rape and Bertha control, I want to ask the minister, what are the prospects of securing reductions in the tariffs on rapeseed into the United States and into Japan?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of the tariff on rapeseed entering a variety of countries is a matter of constant examination. In the case of Japan, this was the foremost subject in my conversations with the officials and ministers in Japan. When there is good news to be announced, I will let the House know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the tariff in Japan is 27 cents per bushel. What is the probability of this amount being revised as a result of the negotiations the minister conducted? I ask this in view of the tremendous pile-up of rapeseed in storage in our country today.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, speaking of the pile-up, I can say that deliveries have been coming in from farmers at a slower rate than last year. On the question of the tariff, our objective would be to have that tariff reduced to as low a level as possible. I have in mind a zero figure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that type of generalization will not help the western rapeseed producer. I ask, what are the possibilities of the reduction taking place, and what negotiations are taking place with the United States? Unless these tariffs are reduced the pile-ups will continue and the western farmer will suffer.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to reassure the right hon. gentleman that I am doing everything I can to help the western farmer.

Mr. Baldwin: That's what is worrying us.

Mr. Horner: The minister is helping them leave the farm.

SPORTS

ALLEGED BARRING OF CANADIAN HOCKEY TEAMS FROM PLAYING IN EUROPE

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of the report that two hockey teams from Canada have been barred by "Bunny" Ahearne from playing with certain European teams. The teams in question are the Glenden College Gophers from Toronto and a bantam hockey team from Kamloops.

An hon. Member: Hurrah!

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): This is a serious question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister advise the House of the circumstances surrounding this report and, also, if the teams are being barred from playing with all the European teams which have extended them an invitation.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to look into the circumstances surrounding this particular occurrence, although I question whether it would be very helpful for the boys on the teams concerned if the government were to make representation to Mr. Ahearne.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is checking into that matter, could he also check into the situation of the Ottawa Peewee Hockey Team which is being prevented from playing in Finland over the Christmas season for the same reason?

An hon. Member: You are offside, Bob.

Mr. Munro: Yes, I will.

[Later:]

CONFIRMATION OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR KAMLOOPS BANTAMS TO PLAY AT LAHR AND BADEN

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Really, you know, the importance of this is that these teams have gone over to these European countries at tremendous expense as ambassadors for Canada. My supplementary to the Minister of National Defence is this: can he advise the House whether contingent arrangements to play Canadian teams at Lahr and Baden have been confirmed for the Kamloops Bantam Hockey Team?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): My understanding is that they have been and that the teams will be most welcome at these two Canadian locations.

GRAIN

POSSIBLE LOSS DUE TO CROP UNDER SNOW—PROCEDURE FOR REINSTATEMENT OF QUOTA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, which is similar to the question asked by the hon. member for Marquette about a month ago. He asked the minister to check into the amount of grain that is lying under snow and whether any government policies will apply to the people whose grain is under snow. May I also ask at the same time whether people whose crops are under snow will lose their quotas as a result of the A and B quotas being cancelled?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the Canadian Wheat Board about the latter subject which the other hon. member previously asked about, and they have indicated that it will be their policy to examine especially those cases in which, because of factors beyond the farmer's control, he could not deliver his quota of grain. They will extend the quota in such cases. This will apply specifically to barley under snow with respect to which the quota was terminated on December 10.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask whether these people will have to make specific applications or whether the procedure will be automatic?

Mr. Lang: Of course they will have to make specific applications. The Wheat Board does not know who they are until they apply.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN FREIGHT CHARGES ON IMPORTED FEEDS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It was prepared for the Minister of Transport who was sent a telegram today protesting unprecedented increases in freight charges related to the importation of feed. Since it seems likely we shall adjourn, and the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture is to meet next week, would the Minister of Agriculture confer with the Minister of Transport with a view to making a statement when we come back on Tuesday?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will take the question as notice.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister clarify the statement he made yesterday to the effect that United States complaints with respect to the auto pact safeguards might be justified, by informing the House which of the two safeguards he had in mind?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Perhaps I can send the hon. member a transcript of the whole press conference. If he wants to read it and then ask a question, I will answer his question gladly.

Mr. Broadbent: Since I assume the Prime Minister does not intend to answer, I will ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether the government has yet reached a decision on abandoning either or both of the safeguards in the auto agreement.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not yet reached a decision. But I assumed, when I read the report of the press conference, that the Prime Minister was referring to the two safeguards, the ratio, and the Canadian value added provision. Everybody knows that these have been so outshot by the success of the agreement in Canada that they have no more practical value. The hon. member knows that. Everybody does.

AUTOMOBILES—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF PRODUCTION OF PONTIACS FROM STE. THÉRÈSE TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Can the minister tell the House whether he has received notification from General Motors Corporation of Canada concerning a transfer of production of Pontiacs from Ste. Thérèse to the United States?

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin: (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. My information is that General Motors will be making an announcement sometime in January to that effect. It would, of course, be made known to the public at that time.

DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC WITH RESPECT TO DEFINITION OF "CIVIL SERVANT"—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since a meeting had been scheduled between the Quebec Civil Service Minister and federal officials, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he received an answer from the Quebec Civil Service Minister; if not, does he intend to meet the Quebec minister to reach an agreement on the new Unemployment Insurance Act?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): There has been almost continuous discussion going on at the official level between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the governments of many of the provinces, and I have nothing to add at this moment.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR EXPEDITING APPROVAL OF APPLICATIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that his staff in charge of processing applications in connection with the local initiatives program is working night and day but is still behind in getting some of these projects approved and under way, may I ask whether the hon. gentleman would consider putting additional staff to work, bearing in mind that a deadline has been set? In all fairness, I must commend the minister for the co-operation I have received in connection with a number of projects.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I should like to thank the hon. member for his kind remarks. In part, the heavy work load is due to extra checking in connection with a number of projects following representations by hon. members and others. I am satisfied that the progress made in approving applications has now achieved a very good pace and that approvals will be forthcoming very quickly to the extent of the money available.

POLLUTION

E.B. EDDY PLANT—COST OF REMOVAL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Bearing in mind the statement the minister made outside the House in relation to the affairs of the national capital I should like to ask him whether he will be making a statement inside the House when he has established the cost of taking over, at public expense, the E.B. Eddy plant in Hull as part of an environmental clean-up?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I made no statement on that subject containing any figures. No figures have yet been established, and I did say they had not been established. When they have been, I shall certainly be prepared to consider making a statement in the House.

INCOME TAX

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF NEW REGULATIONS—POSSIBLE CONFUSION RESULTING FROM DELAY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise us whether the income tax regulations necessary following the passage of Bill C-259 will be ready by January 1? How long will those in business and the professions have to wait before they can examine these regulations which govern at least 50 per cent of tax administration?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The regulations have been in preparation but it would, of course, be presumptuous for us to release regulations before the legislation has received Royal Assent, something which presumably will happen today. We are working as fast as we can to get the regulations out as early as possible.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): To the extent that publication of such regulations is delayed after January 1, would the minister agree that considerable confusion will exist in the minds of the public since more than 50 per cent of the administration is governed by regulations?

Mr. Benson: I would not agree with that premise at all. Many of the regulations made in connection with the old act will continue. After all, this is not a new act. It is an act amending an existing act, and many of the regulations will continue.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING STUDY OF APPLICATIONS FOR BENEFITS—MEASURES TO IMPROVE SERVICE

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour.

In view of the increasing number of complaints we are receiving, particularly with the approach of Christmas, and the many unfulfilled requests for unemployment insurance benefits, would the hon. minister tell us what he intends to do to cope with this situation?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): This question comes up daily. There are bound to be some cases of delay among the 600,000 unemployment insurance applications which are processed weekly. When the delay is attributable to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, remedial action is taken immediately. When the delay is the result of the employees' or employers' action, things move slower. But we do have a responsibility, even though it is Christmas time, not to let the plan deteriorate into being a welfare plan, and the claims approved must be legitimate claims.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Would the hon. minister also tell us whether all this trouble is not a result of centralization of the centres? Would he accede to requests for decentralization as a factor of better service to the population?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must take for granted that the hon. minister will consider his question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO PEACEKEEPING FORCE—INITIATIVE TAKEN TO SETTLE PROBLEM

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether as a result of the decision by the Irish government to withdraw its contingent from the United Nations peacekeeping force on Cyprus, Canada has been asked to contribute a larger number of men, and, if so, what attitude the government has taken toward any such request.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have received no such request.

Mr. Macquarrie: Considering the long time during which our forces have been on Cyprus, can the minister advise us whether this country is taking any initiative toward bringing about some meaningful mediation directed to a settlement of this problem?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the House may recall that when I announced the extension for another six months of our participation, I said we were making it quite clear that we hoped our continued participation would not be an excuse for delaying the negotiations. To that extent at least, we are applying pressure for successful negotiations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES BY HAND TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. This is related to one asked earlier, and to which the answer was in the affirmative. I would like to ask the minister whether he can make arrangements with the Unemployment Insurance Commission for a change in its regulations so that in situations where records in unemployment insurance offices indicate that the claims are in order and the computers do not seem to spew out any cheques, the cheques could be issued, authorized by the appropriate authority, by hand, so that people could get their money?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it would be much faster and more appropriate if the hon. gentleman would bring to my attention specific cases so that I could give them my personal attention.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF RENT INCREASES IN 1972—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ACTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. On Friday, December 17, in a reply to a question put by my colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough, the minister stated he had not yet studied the prediction of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada that rents may increase in 1972 by between 5 per cent and 15 per cent but that he would and, if such a prediction seemed correct, he would initiate action with the provinces. Has the minister studied that prediction, and does he believe now that the prediction is serious enough for him to initiate talks with the provinces to avert such rent increases?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister might reply to the first question briefly. The second question, in which the member invites the minister to express an opinion, of course is not in order. I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that there are four minutes left before the end of the question period, and I hope hon. members will try to limit their supplementaries.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the Housing and Urban Development Association has been studied. In our opinion the data on which it was based are somewhat questionable and we do not agree that there will be that kind of increase. But in spite of all that, we are in constant consultation with the provinces in an attempt to keep down increases in housing costs generally.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DEFINITION OF "CIVIL SERVANT"—ACCEPTANCE BY PROVINCES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour with respect to a statement he made the other day on civil servants and the definition of employees. Could the minister advise if the province of Quebec has accepted that definition, and whether he has had any reply from any of the other provinces? In fact can he somewhat assure us that the other provinces feel that the act as it stands now, with its new definition, is acceptable?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that the employees, the civil servants of British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have all been included under the new act, and the fact that they have applied to come under the act indicates that they consider it a very good act.

So far as the provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are concerned they have accepted the plan, and negotiations are taking place on some technical matters. So far as the province of Quebec is concerned, whether it intends to remain outside the plan as of January 1 next is a matter to be determined by that province.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHIEF OF DEFENCE STAFF—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF PERIOD IN OFFICE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to that great friend of the mink ranchers of Canada, the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister indicate whether or not consideration is being given now to the extension, by a year or more, of the period in office of the Chief of the Defence staff?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that would be a Governor in Council decision, and it would have to be announced in due course.

STATISTICS CANADA

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ENGLISH-SPEAKING EMPLOYEES—PROMOTIONS IN IMPORT AND EXPORT TRADE SECTIONS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as the minister responsible for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The question is apropos of the Prime Minister's recent remarks on a harmonious bilingual and bicultural capital. The question deals with complaints I receive daily about discrimination against English-speaking public servants, particularly in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Would the minister undertake a study of the situation there and report on his findings to the House?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alkenbrack: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the minister attempt to find out how it is that the names of persons to be promoted are known to the staffs of the import and export trade sections in the DBS even before promotion boards are held?

Mr. Pepin: I said I would inquire, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED DETERIORATION OF MORALE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question. I, too, have been getting reports of abuses of the provisions of the Official Languages Act in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and of the general deterioration of morals in that department—

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott: —of morale in that department. I would like to ask the minister whether he would undertake a further study of the matter before it gets any worse? Further, would the minister report to the House after his study has been completed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I said I would inquire about the situation with regard to appointments, not of morals.

NATIONAL SECURITY

WAR MEASURES ACT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES PRIOR TO PROCLAMATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a further question about the War Measures Act. I would like to ask him whether there were any discussions with representatives of the provincial governments and the municipal governments, with regard to the invocation of the War

Measures Act or the implications of the War Measures Act prior to the kidnapping of James Cross in 1970?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): None that I can recall, Mr. Speaker. In the previous year when there was a police strike in Montreal, there was a question of assistance by the army but I am quite certain that there was no mention or any discussion of the War Measures Act at that time.

WAR MEASURES ACT—ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING CONSULTATIONS PRIOR TO PROCLAMATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the revelations made by Mr. Bain in his article, is it not a fact that if those allegations are true the explanations that were given by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice of the circumstances under which the War Measures Act was invoked, were stating the very reverse of the truth?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, it is not a fact, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman rises on a point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Certainly this is a matter which concerns the privileges of the House, although hardly of those automatons over there. It is a question of privilege when the House was informed that the only reason the War Measures Act was invoked was the request from the government of Quebec and the municipal government of Montreal, yet now we find that the whole question was studied over a period of time. This House was actually deceived by the answer given.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my intention to recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and then call orders of the day. Hon. members will have to keep their other important questions over Christmas and ask them on Tuesday.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISLEADING DESCRIPTION ON CANS OF MIXED NUTS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in view of the front page story, and the fact that the holiday season includes such festive fare as peanuts and pecans, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs what he intends to do about the findings of the Consumer's Association of Canada that the term "mixed nuts" on cans means nothing because the cans include mostly peanuts?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Speaker: I think that question could also be kept over the Christmas weekend, but in the Christmas spirit the minister might be allowed to reply briefly, and then the Chair will call orders of the day.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been away with the 'flu and have not seen these reports. I will look at them immediately to see if action can be taken.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in view of the importance of the auto pact negotiations, and the fact that I could not hear the correction by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce of his earlier answer. I wonder if the minister could repeat his answer to the House, and in addition assure us that no change in government policy will be announced until we meet again.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated a moment ago, the question period is finished. If hon. members want to pursue it, they have the right to do so if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I said that GM would make an announcement "to that effect". The words "to that effect" might have implied that I was confirming the rumour mentioned by my hon. friend. I got up to state this was not my intention. I meant to say that GM would make an announcement, I am informed, possibly some time in January, as to their intention regarding their plans in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, are we continuing the question period.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will refer to Standing Orders, he will see that it is provided that the question period is to last 40 minutes. The 40 minutes expired four minutes ago, and I was going to call orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Christmas recess is about to begin, and in view of the fact that a number of hon. members have important questions, would it be in order for me to ask if there is consent to continue the question period.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege.

I know that according to the Rules of the House the Chair is free to choose the hon. member it wants to recognize and I accept that. But, as I have risen perhaps 30 or 35 times during the oral question period and because it seems to me that I should ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question that is vital to the Canadian industry—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if hon. members to my right would be agreeable, we would be delighted to hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do so in the hope that during the Christmas recess something might be done about the situation. May I call Your Honour's attention to the fact that the sound system today is working very poorly.

Mr. Speaker: I hope this will be looked into during whatever recess there is, but certainly this will be brought to the attention of the appropriate officials of the House.

Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1971

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Drury (for Minister of Finance) for the second reading and reference to the Committee of the Whole of Bill C-275, to amend the statute law relating to income tax.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, before the Minister of Manpower and Immigration leaves the House I wonder if it would be in order to raise a point which certainly is an important one. Today we had tabled in the House the job vacancy survey—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that Orders of the Day have been called. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and there is no way, unless there should be unanimous consent, that the hon. member can raise this matter. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I understand we are on Bill C-275 and, despite Your Honour's unique capabilities, I am surprised that you would rule out my question of privilege. I am raising a question specifically in respect of Bill C-275 in view of the job vacancy survey tabled in the House today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he has the right, as have other hon. members of the House, to speak on the order of business that is before the Chamber now, but the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway also has her rights in this Chamber and she has been recognized. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I am on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has ruled on the question of privilege of the hon. member. If the hon. member is indicating to the Chair he wishes to speak on the subject now before the House, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has been recognized by the Chair. If the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate can indicate to the Chair that he has a legitimate question of privilege then I will hear him, but to this point he has not so indicated. However, I shall hear him.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if you are not prepared to hear my question of privilege, how can you rule on it? The minister is in the House and is about to leave. A document has been tabled that is directly relevant to Bill C-275 and which makes direct references to the manpower training program. I am sure my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway, who is an outstanding member of this House, would be quite in agreement with my request. I should like to know whether the minister would stay during this period of debate on Bill C-275 and avail himself of the opportunity to make a brief statement on the job vacancy survey to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With respect I suggest the hon. member is making a representation to the minister. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last night I was expressing our repudiation of the government's view of society which is only too clearly reflected in certain sections of the bill now before us. This view of society divides people into "haves" and "have nots" and it is quite obvious from this bill that the government intends to keep it that way. The first part of the bill reflects that intention only too clearly by its tax reduction of 3 per cent for individuals, right across the board without any regard to their income, and 7 per cent for corporations. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if we might have a little more order in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. MacInnis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that some of these caucuses should be held outside, if that would be all right with hon. members. I know we are all getting weary at this time, but at least we want to be able to make ourselves heard.

The first part of this bill embodies the age old "trickle-down" theory or recipe for dealing with difficult times in this country. It follows the idea that what you have to do is to make corporations and business concerns strong, and that by doing so you strengthen the entire economy. In my view this is putting the cart before the horse.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. gentleman who was trying to get the floor a few moments ago, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), who referred in the debate last night to the need for the development of human resources. Yet as he went along not even he could see that this bill is just simply the old idea of backing the industrial and economic resources of the country, completely neglecting the development of human resources which I think is very important. When it is a question of stimulating the economy, I think the government would do well to realize that it has spent a long time trying out the trickle-down recipe which has not worked. It never has worked and will work less well as time goes on.

I think the government would do well to realize that what we have in this country is a group of captive consumers. We have many people whose income is relatively small. They have to spend money as soon as they get it, and we know what they spend it on. They spend it on the bare necessities of living, and do not spend much on the luxury items. So I think the government would be well advised to consider reversing this taxing arrangement and giving the really big tax reductions to the people who need them, namely, to the captive consumers who are bound to spend what they have on the goods and services which the country needs to produce in order to keep the wheels of industry and the services going in this country. These are the people who should be given the tax concessions.

Instead of that, this is another piece of legislation which proposes to give tax reductions to what I will call the uncontrolled corporations as opposed to the captive consumers. Because when this money is handed over to the corporations, either in the form of direct grants or tax reductions, no conditions are attached to it. No attempt is made to evaluate what is done with the money, to find out whether this money stays on the Canadian side of the border or whether or not large amounts of it are siphoned off to other countries, notably our neighbour to the south.

The worst part of this arrangement as embodied in the bill is the fact that the taxpayers, among whom are found many people who can ill afford to do so, have to pay for the care of the casualties of the operations of the big, uncontrolled corporations resulting from our way of doing business, which is that those people who have shall be given more by government concessions, and those people who have little shall have even that little taken away.

The high cost of treating illness, malnutrition, nervous and mental disorders, retardation of various kinds, delinquency and crime results from having a large group of people in our midst who do not have decent homes, proper nutrition, good clothing, decent educational opportunities, health care and the rest of it. These are not frivolous statements at all, and these are the reasons why we are opposed to the earlier clauses in this bill which propose to make larger concessions to and tax reductions for uncontrolled corporations than to captive consumers.

I know that members on all sides may think that we in this corner are not uttering words of sense and wisdom. I would remind hon. members opposite, and particularly those occupying the government benches, that when years ago Canada had a severe depression everyone knew there was a depression. Even the government of the day knew there was a depression, which is more than can be said for some subsequent governments. The trickle down recipe which we now have did not work at that time either. It was only when the president of the United States decided that human conditions and people in the lower income brackets needed looking after, and established programs to care for their needs and built up the economy, that there were the beginnings of a glimmer of hope.

I do not intend to deal any further with the earlier clauses of this bill because spokesmen among my colleagues have dealt with them very thoroughly. I do not think there is any need for me to do more than to say that we do not accept the principles underlying the first part of this bill.

However, I wish to deal with the second part of the bill on which very little has been said today. The second part of the bill has to do with the on the job training program. The government proposes to make available for the winter of 1971-72 the sum of $20 million for this new on the job training program. I want to say right away that we in this party consider that this program is based on a good principle and that it has possibilities. Consequently, we are much more favourably disposed toward it than toward some other programs to which I could make reference.

One principle, which I think is very good, of this on the job training program is that it removes the impediments which we have found in earlier manpower training programs and which we have opposed. These restrictions prevent women in households where there was male support from being able to avail themselves of the programs to the extent of receiving living allowance. This restriction is removed in the new program and the allowance applies both to women and to young people. Under the terms of the old manpower training programs, in order to qualify for training allowances people had to be in the labour force for three consecutive years, and it was found that women in the home and young people were prevented almost entirely from taking advantage of these programs because they were unable to meet this qualification.

To this extent I consider that the on the job training program is an improvement and has possibilities. However, I believe that certain questions must be raised at this point. The principle of giving money to employers to train their employees on the job is not a new one. It has been operating in industry since 1967 under the occupational training for adults act; but so far as members of the House are concerned we do not know very much about the success or otherwise of this program.

I want to ask the minister why there has been no evaluation of this program which has been in operation now for about five years. We want to have answers to a number of questions before we can be sure that the new on the job training program is going to work. We would like to know how many people have been trained since 1967, how many men and women are involved—because obviously there are women who have qualified, not the ones I mentioned but some others—and for what kind of jobs the training has prepared them.

I see the minister moving his hands out in a sort of Kewpie doll salute.

Mr. Lang: It is all available.

Mrs. MacInnis: It may be available but there are questions on the order paper that have not been answered. Perhaps it is available but one would need a prospector's pick and other equipment to dig it out, as well as a burglar's tool bag to be able to get at some of the places where it is kept.

We would also like to know whether any of this training was for part time jobs. As far as women are concerned, even those women who qualify, many part time jobs would be essential to fill their needs. We would like to know whether in this regard statistics are available. By "available" I do not mean in the government books; I mean whether they have been leaked out to ordinary members of parliament so that we can get at them. We want to know whether or not these people are still holding these jobs and how good the training has been, as well as how many people are holding the jobs. Particularly where women and young people are concerned, we do not have the information we would like to have.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I do not think there has been any wholesale or public evaluation of the success of the manpower training program. We know that as far as women are concerned the program has been used to subsidize industries which pay low wages, such as the needle trades, shoe-making and others. In these industries there are a lot of recently arrived immigrants who are pretty well defenseless because they are largely unorganized and do not know the ways of the country. There have even been complaints about these people being replaced by new groups coming along. Sometimes these manpower training programs have been used to subsidize large corporations who would otherwise have trained their own employees. I think these older programs should be evaluated before we are asked to undertake new ones.

I would tell the minister that there are questions on the order paper which are unanswered and to which we would like answers so we can get on with this matter. However, Mr. Speaker, I think we may be able to look with hope to this new program if we can find out what the success or otherwise of the previous one was.

We know that since 1954 women have constituted the fastest growing segment of the labour force every year. Yet they are pretty well regarded by some as a nuisance in the labour force, and it is hoped that when we arrive at some state of so-called normalcy they will disappear. You may think this statement mirrors a superiority complex or even an inferiority complex, but some members opposite do not recognize such a thing as an equality complex. The women of this country are increasingly coming to want the same sort of deal as is available for men. I do not think there was any need for the surprise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the increasing number of women and young people shown in the October unemployment figures: Yet after these five years of manpower training, there are still no special training programs to meet the need of women in the labour force or those who want to get into it.

As I have said on many occasions, since the service sector of our economy is growing the fastest, we should be creating programs to serve it and to train women for the full-time or part-time jobs for which they are especially fitted in the service field. There is no reason why the government, industry or the labour unions should regard jobs as full or all-day occupations. It is just one of the time-honoured shibboleths, one of the stone-age myths, that a job has to be a full-day job. Women are entering the labour force by the thousands, yet many of them need only a half-day job to supplement their husband's low income and they need the other half day at home to look after family needs.

Any on the job training program should consider the new programs that are needed. My own city of Vancouver is as far advanced in meeting this need as any place in Canada. Many organizations there have demonstrated that women can be trained for certain jobs, but they have to convince the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) that the training programs should be carried on under public auspices. As well they must then convince employers that the jobs are necessary.

For instance, we need day care centre aides. I know that the supervisor of a day care centre has to be college trained in modern child psychology, administration etc., but there is also a tremendous need for aides, and these jobs could be filled by older women whose families are grown or young girls who have dropped out of high school. If the on the job training program made training available for such aides, this would be half the battle. There is a tremendous need all across the country for day care centre aides, teachers' aides, social work aides, recreation aides, etc., and it is women and young people who could be trained to fill the need.

The minister has certainly had lots of training in how to be elastic in approach. If he can handle the Wheat Board, manpower and immigration, and the Public Service Staff Relations Board, he has certainly learned to be flexible. He is in a position to understand how the ordinary woman feels when she has to try to divide her time between the job outside the home, look after her children, do the shopping and try to keep her husband quiet in between times.

I know the minister is going to say to me that I am talking about on the job training for employers, and will ask where we are going to get the employers for such things. Well, years and years ago we had the same row about trying to get nurses' aides accepted—nobody wanted to employ them. But we finally managed this. If the present program needs to be amended to achieve this then I suggest that he get the amendment ready, because it is an important point.

If this on the job training program is to be of value to women and young people the minister must consider municipal governments and voluntary organizations as potential employers. There are municipalities which very much want to employ people in these capacities, and I do not know if that is possible under existing legislation. I hope before the debate finishes the minister will answer some of the questions that I have raised. I wonder if he will say whether it will be possible for "employers" to mean municipal bodies, voluntary bodies and co-operatives bodies. I think that ought to be possible.

Since introducing the manpower training program in 1967, the government has had to spend more and more money on it every year. This year it is spending about $330 million, the reason being partly that the government does not like the currently large unemployment figures and prefers to shift people from the ranks of the unemployed to the ranks of those undergoing manpower training. Not enough of this has been done, although I am glad that it has been done.

Mr. Lang: Don't knock the program.

Mrs. MacInnis: I am not knocking it; I am merely laying the groundwork for my next remarks. I merely pointed out why this was happening. Since we are spending so much money on the ordinary manpower training program, I thought it might be sensible to consider spending this $20 million for on the job training on people who, during the last five years, have been cut off from the benefits of manpower training, namely, women and young people. It would be a good idea to give them top priority. We should allow those people who previously were cut off from the benefits of the program because they did not meet the necessary qualifications or criteria to take advantage of the new on the job training scheme. I am not knocking the program. I merely want to show how it can be of greater value.

We should include young people and women in the program for other reasons as well. I suspect that for the Prime Minister, the figures relating to unemployment are mere book entries rather than the tragic human figures for whom there is no room. He suggests that the unemployment figures are swollen because large numbers of young people and women have entered the labour force. If the Prime Minister thinks that—and I will not say just now if I support his view—then I suggest that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) should have an additional reason to consider giving top priority to women and young people in the on the job training program. That would be an excellent idea. Actually, I suspect the Prime Minister is not paying too much attention to what is happening in the unemployment field, otherwise he would realize that young people and women not only have been entering the employment field in greater numbers, but that they will continue trying to enter it. They will not just go away, and no amount of urging that they go back to their homes or to the streets will remove them from the labour force. I suspect that the Prime Minister merely refers to book entries and does not realize that behind these figures lie the tragedies of women and young people who are desperately trying to get a start in life.

The trouble is that when people are unemployed too long and in receipt of social assistance they lose not only the will but the ability to work. If hon. members do not believe that, they should consider what Mr. Paul Hoffman of the United Nations who has been for so long concerned with work in the developing countries said to a number of us at the United Nations last fall. He told us that it is utterly impossible for people who have never been given the chance to earn their own way and attain a decent standard of living to work steadily and be responsible to the community. He said we should not even expect them to do that, and he is dead right. If we do not want more and more people sitting around and drawing social assistance, and then being unwilling and unable to do any kind of work, we will have to find jobs for them now, jobs that they want, before they get into habits of idleness.

I suspect that the Prime Minister has not been looking at the facts as they really are. He has been paying too much attention to some of the early church fathers and to some of the other early historical figures from way back, as is evident from his remarks. I should like to see him coming back to the twentieth century for a while. I did not like hearing the Prime Minister say that people's morals are divided into those of serfs and princes, and that is the end of it.

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mrs. MacInnis: I do not like Canadians being divided into serfs and princes, as they might have been in the time of Machiavelli, Shakespeare—

An hon. Member: Or Trudeau.

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes, or Trudeau. I do not like to think that our Prime Minister belongs back in those times, yet if he keeps on talking that way, I will have no alternative but to think that. I think that the Canadian people, if given half a chance, will work as hard as anybody. Be they men, women or young people, they are entitled to a chance. I believe they are entitled to participate in the training for work program and to employment that will provide them with the income they need to live. I think that the people who are unemployed as well as the crippled and those who are otherwise incapacitated have a right to a guaranteed income which will enable them to keep their sense of decency and self respect.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that I have stuck pretty well to this bill all the way through my remarks. I have been trying to show the minister some possibilities regarding this bill. If he harbours reservations about what this bill will do, he still has the chance to deal with them before this bill becomes law. I submit that if it is necessary to change this legislation in order to make it of value to those in this country who really need it, that should be done.

I hope that the minister can take some time off over Christmas to get rested up and boned up. Perhaps I should not say "boned up"; I was thinking of turkeys. In any event, I hope he is able to rest, so that he may be able to undertake his labours, which will be considerable, in 1972.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? In her remarks the hon. member referred to a certain lack of information. I was surprised, because she referred to certain questions regarding people in training, the results of training programs, and so on. She said there are questions on the order paper about this. I have looked through the questions and have not been able to find such questions as she has referred to, and I wonder if the hon. member could direct my attention to them or, in the alternative, if she finds that there are not such questions on the order paper, whether she could make it clear that my department is very prompt in this regard.

Mrs. MacInnis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is not necessary for me to repeat the very realistic comments of my colleagues. I merely want to make some comments on second reading and perhaps refer to some of the literature that the minister and others have distributed in the last little while.

Yesterday it was clear that the government opposite had no intention of differentiating between labour-intensive industries and capital-intensive industries, although I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) would like to spend more time expounding theories in this area. I submit that the real crux of our remarks lies in this: the government must distinguish between labour-intensive and capital-intensive industries.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) suggested that he could not understand what my colleague from Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was referring to. This may be another case of "let us not confuse the issue with facts". If the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate did not understand what my colleagues was suggesting, then, I suggest, he does not understand the facts of life. May I also suggest that he does not understand the concept of the equality of people. It seems that hon. members opposite are unable to recognize the difference between poverty and wealth; to them, all people are equal.

Not long ago the minister drew attention to the promptness with which his department answered questions placed on the order paper. I wonder why the department is not just as prompt to inform the House of Commons of the contents of the Bryden Committee Report. Why is he not as prompt in supplying information to the House in relation to other studies which have been conducted? They have not been tabled in the House of Commons even though their contents have been leaked to industry and to the public.

The minister should appear in the House more often to answer questions relating to his department. Consider his attendance record back to November 10—I use that date as a convenient point of reference. He should have been present on 19 occasions to answer questions, to make known to members what some of the programs upon which his department is engaged really mean. But we find he was here on only eight occasions. I give the minister due credit for the fact that he was often overseas doing something for the national benefit, but it remains true that questions arise in the House of Commons which should be answered and which can be answered adequately only by the minister who exercises responsibility for the department.

Listening to the observations made by the hon. member who spoke before I rose, one would get the impression that everything connected with this program was going well. As we look at the definitions in the bill on pages two and three we really must ask ourselves what is the purpose of this whole exercise in connection with manpower training programs. Reading the letters which are sent to us we find that many people are failing to obtain the benefits the government would like to suggest are provided by manpower retraining and on-the-job training programs.

I wish to draw attention to one of the real difficulties arising from the present arrangements by quoting a letter which came to me from Saskatchewan. The writer attended a technical institute in his province where the department of manpower sponsors various programs. He writes:

> I am presently enrolled in a Canada Manpower sponsored grade XI course at Saskatchewan Technical Institute in Moose Jaw and should like to proceed to a similar grade XII course. However, a grade XII course is taught in Regina only. Presently there are approximately 20 students who will qualify to fill the one available opening in grade XII in Regina.
> In addition to this there are two other students and myself who cannot qualify for grade XII due to the fact that we spent four months in grade X, five months in grade XI and we are allowed a total of 52 weeks only.
> I would appreciate it, sir, if you could possibly explain the method I could use to further my education through Canada Manpower.
> Because I am a man with a wife and five children, it is my desire to raise my standards through a university degree in journalism and to enter the field of labour relations.
> It is of the utmost importance to me and my family that any possible government assistance not be withheld at this stage.
> Any consideration given to me on this matter will be greatly appreciated.

As to the question raised in this letter I can only say that many representations have been made to the government and to the minister to allow some discretion to local officers when assessing particular situations. Government offices operate only on the basis of regulations. They boast about the number of people taking part in retraining programs but the very people who possibly are in greatest need of two or three extra weeks are unable to obtain consideration because the number of weeks' training is limited by regulation to 52. I suggest the government should consider amending its regulations by order in council to enable further time to be granted in cases where this is desirable. Surely local officers could be given some leeway with respect to cases like the one to which I have just called attention.

Returning to the question of study and analysis, it is a fact that departments themselves invariably set up an internal committee to analyse the effectiveness of their own programs. I would suspect myself that many such committees would produce a subjective report which would suit its own needs, not the type of analysis which would deal frankly with all the realities involved and enable all those who were interested to know exactly what was going on. It is extremely necessary that an objective analysis be made by people outside the department, possibly even by Treasury Board itself. We are aware that the Auditor General expressed certain reservations as to the manner in which public funds had been disbursed in connection with manpower programs. The observations put out on December 16 by the department refer to the results of the manpower training program survey, indicating that of the nearly 70 per cent of former students now working, only 33 per cent had held jobs before entering their courses.

Reference is made in this report to a publication of the Economic Council of Canada. If we look at this latter publication we read at the bottom of page 114 the following statement: "The method employed in the department's present model raises some doubts as to the confidence with which one can attribute benefits to training per se". Surely, this observation should in itself be enough to suggest that an objective analysis should be undertaken by someone other than the departmental minister concerned.

It cannot be suggested that the type of material we have before us is objective in its analysis of these programs. I note that the following appears on the first page of the publication issued on December 16: that of the nearly 70 per cent now working, average pay increased by 13 per cent, or more than $47 a month, as a result of their training. At the same time, may I quote from pages 112 and 113 of the review issued by the Economic Council of Canada:

• (4:00 p.m.)

With respect to training under the Canada Manpower Training Program in the period January through September 1969, the Department has stated that the benefits derived from the program are in the order of two to three dollars for each dollar of expenditure. A further analysis of the data from this period suggests, however, that when account is taken of the work experience of trainees for several years prior to training, the program does not appear to have resulted in improvement in employment. With regard to earnings, average wages of trainees do appear to have increased by approximately 12 per cent.

The figure given here is different from that in the Economic Council Review.

Whether this improvement is entirely attributable to training per se is, however, questionable. The period that elapsed between the measurement of pre-training and post-training was probably about a year. During this period the rate of price increase alone would have reduced the increase in average real wages to a rate of around 8 per cent.

Nevertheless, the government brings forth a document suggesting an increase of 13 per cent, or more than $47 a month. The Economic Council says the figure is 8 per cent. Everybody realizes that wages have gone up, but this was not necessarily because of the training. In this regard it is high time that some of these departments listened to the Economic Council of Canada and assessed the real problems of the situation.

I wish to quote further from the bottom of page 113 of support in the point I am attempting to make:

A further reason for scepticism arises from the use of pre- and post-training earnings comparisons. The crucial question is: What difference did training make to the worker's employment and earnings prospects? Really, then, we want to determine the difference between the worker's experience with, and without, training—which is not the same thing as his experience before and after training. "Before-and-after" is used only as a proxy or indicator of "with-and-without". To use the before-and-after approach, one must make the heroic assumption that "other things remained the same"—that is, that all other things, except training, didn't change. But during the training period it is likely that other things did change, for better or worse, and they would affect the worker's prospects regardless of whether he received training.

This review by the Economic Council of Canada points out clearly that unless an analysis is made by some group other than the department itself we will not have a true report.

Today the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) tabled the job vacancy survey report in the House of Commons. It is ironic that in effect this report cost $3.5 million. What we find out from it is that there are some 30,000 job vacancies available for 500,000 unemployed. How can the manpower department hope to inspire credibility in its job training program and retraining program when this is the net result?

[Mr. Skoberg.]

The 500,000 unemployed wonder just exactly what is going on and whether this is a cruel hoax being played on them by the department. Are people being placed in training institutions simply to get them off the unemployment rolls? Instead of putting money into job-creating programs the department is spending money on upgrading and retraining people. But these people cannot find jobs afterwards. If that is the policy the government is following it deserves to be condemned.

If all the people presently taking part in training programs were shown on the unemployment list, the unemployment rate would jump from 6.6 per cent to 7.9 per cent. This is not something of which anyone can be proud. If the figure of 90,000 trainees taking part in programs every month is correct, then how could the survey tabled today possibly be accurate?

Here I turn to another matter, Mr. Speaker. In the report by the minister on the results of training which he released on December 16 we read the following:

Our finding is that non-response bias, at least so far as it concerns employment experiences, appears to be negligible.

It is my understanding that there was a response of about 59 per cent to the survey taken. When one considers the fact that 41 per cent did not reply, one must wonder if the department could not really find out where the remaining 41 per cent were.

Again we must ask the question whether training and retraining programs are being used to get people off the unemployment rolls. Surely there should be some way of assessing the over-all situation. Why does the government not undertake job-creating programs instead of pouring millions of dollars into a program to take people off the unemployment rolls. These are questions we must ask. The government itself must reassess the situation to determine whether it is putting money into a program that benefits the country as a whole.

Surely the government is aware of the fact that there are real problems. Surely it is aware of the fact that there are people across this country who need to be retrained to an extent that they can be more suitable applicants for job opportunities. But, as we have now seen, there is actually no assessment of whether or not people really are suitable for a certain job after taking part in training programs.

It is not a case of trying to assess the benefits of the program itself, but of trying to determine that people will be treated equally and not on the basis of serfs and masters, which seems to be the basis for this bill. We all agree that the bill is nothing but a stopgap measure, and that the type of program operated under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion can really show no long-term benefits for the country as a whole. Some $330 million has been allocated for that department's 1971-72 program. One wonders how many real job-creating programs could have been undertaken with that amount of money. Even the Economic Council of Canada is questioning the type of program undertaken by the department as well as the department's own assessment of its program.

I am sure that hon. members will offer amendments at committee stage, and these will provide individual members with an opportunity to express themselves in favour of either labour-intensive or capital-intensive industries. Mr. Speaker, how can the provisions of this bill stimulate the economy?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the Chair.

On Clause 2—"Income Tax Act" defined.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, if clause 2 is carried, I am sorry. I was perhaps inadvertent and missed it. I wanted to ask a question of the parliamentary secretary.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sure the House will agree to allow the question even though the clause has been adopted. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for its courtesy. My question arises out of something I mentioned during second reading of the bill. It deals with technicalities and it might be useful to have this on the record for the benefit of those who are trying to fit this piece of tax legislation in with certain others which have gone before. It arises because of the wording of the notice of ways and means motions. There are two notices. The one we are dealing with I gather is strictly confined to what will happen in the taxation year 1971. However, the two notices that were on the Order Paper for December 17 refer to events subsequent to the taxation year 1971. I am not referring to clause 5 of this measure which deals with the manpower training program; I am simply dealing with clauses 2, 3 and 4. I am wondering whether the parliamentary secretary will be saying that in reality there will be another income tax bill to carry on the purpose of that resolution through 1972 and a portion of 1973.

Mr. Mahoney: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is quite correct. The bill before us deals, in so far as the corporate and personal income tax reductions are concerned, with the present Income Tax Act. The 1972 and onward changes of course affect the Income Tax Act as amended by Bill C-259. It was not felt appropriate that amendments to amend the Act as amended by Bill C-259 be brought in until that bill itself was in effect. Accordingly, when we resume sitting in the new year it will be the intention of the government to bring in another bill implementing the balance of the ways and means motion.

Mr. McCleave: I thank the parliamentary secretary for that explanation. Would that be in addition to another measure the Minister of Finance has suggested to us in the final stages of Bill C-259, or would there be one big enterprise in the New Year?

Mr. Mahoney: I really cannot say what procedure will be followed at that point.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, do I understand that we are now discussing clause 3?

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will study clause 3 at this time.

On Clause 3: Additional deduction from tax.

Mr. Broadbent: I will keep my remarks brief, Mr. Chairman. Among the points made earlier today and yesterday it will be recalled that the central objection the New Democratic Party had to clause 3 as it now stands is that it offers a flat rate of tax reduction on personal income right across the board. Two problems arise, in our view. The first is the question of equity, which results in people in some income groups getting substantially more money than those at the lower end of the income scale. Secondly, directly related to that is the fact that one of the intended effects of this whole bill will not be carried out because so little money would be going to that section of the population which spends most of its disposable income. There would be actually little stimulus added to the economy and little input to generate more employment.

Therefore I have an amendment to clause 3 which I intend to move. It is an amendment which would have three effects. First, it would get money where it is needed, and only where it is needed. Second, it would remove the lack of "progressivity", if there is such a word, from existing clause 3. Third, it would offer a substantial injection of money into the economy immediately. I move:

That clause 3 of Bill C-275 be amended by changing the figure "1¼ per cent" in line 16 to "20 per cent", and also by changing the period at the end of line 18 to a comma and adding immediately thereafter the following words: "or $40, whichever is the lesser".

Perhaps I may add just a concluding comment in respect of the amendment. It would involve, in terms of our rough calculation, the same amount of public expenditure as is already envisaged by this bill. What it would do would be to transfer the money from where it is not needed, and in fact where it is uselessly expended, namely, from the corporate sector and the upper section in the income scale, on the one hand, to average and low-income people on the other. This is something that we in the New Democratic Party believe, in terms of justice and terms of economic stimulus, is needed immediately, and I hope the amendment will gain the support of all the members of the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It is the feeling of the Chair that the amendment of the hon. member, at first glance, is acceptable unless hon. members wish to express different points of view and perhaps convince the Chair otherwise. However, I am ready to put the amendment at this time because I consider the amendment to involve a reduction of tax, and this is in order.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my party I want to say we reject the amendment. I should like briefly to explain our reasons.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member speaking on the procedural acceptability of the amendment or on the amendment itself?

Mr. McCleave: I understood your Honour to say you were accepting the amendment and were going to put it.

The Deputy Chairman: If the hon. member wants to discuss the procedural acceptability I will not put the amendment. Otherwise I will put the amendment and give the floor to the hon. member.

It has been moved:

That clause 3 of bill C-275 be amended by changing the figure "1½ per cent" in line 16 to "20 per cent", and also by changing the period at the end of line 18 to a comma and adding immediately thereafter the following words: "or $40, whichever is the lesser".

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I think the hon. member who proposed the amendment should probably be allowed to speak on it first. I did rather jump the gun but I would yield to him.

Mr. Broadbent: Go ahead.

Mr. McCleave: The hon. member invites me to go ahead. As I indicated yesterday in my remarks on second reading, we thought that there was merit in providing a greater reduction in the personal income tax because this money, especially in the hands of the lower income groups, would find its way back into the economy very quickly. I also indicated that about 37 per cent of the gross revenues of the government were obtained from the taxes imposed upon the individual taxpayer in Canada. I think there would have been room for a greater measure of tax relief than that proposed by the minister in his third budget of 1971, presented to us on October 14, but the effect of this amendment would be really spread over a full year and would be a reduction of the personal income tax rate by something in the order of 40 per cent rather than 20 per cent, since the 20 per cent only refers to the half year period.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You have it reversed.

Mr. McCleave: This is my mathematical interpretation of it, and I am sure there are mathematical geniuses in the other party who would be able to correct me if I am wrong. I do not think I am, because 1½ per cent is one half of the 3 per cent mentioned by the Minister of Finance in the budget. Perforce, the 20 per cent must be a half of 40 per cent. I say that this verges on the border of financial irresponsibility, and therefore we must reject it and do.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and I urge the House to accept it. But before I get into my brief submission I might endeavour to correct the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. If I understood him correctly he thought that 20 per cent for six months would be the equivalent of 40 per cent for the full year. Let me point out to him that this amendment calls for 20 per cent for the full year, which would be the equivalent of 40 per cent for six months, just as the minister has told us that he is giving a reduction of 1½ per cent for the full year which works out at 3 per cent for six months.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

My hon. friend says that the amount involved in this is too much for his party to support. I have to say that I have not personally done the arithmetic involved in this since we all have research people around here to do that for us. Those who have done the arithmetic for us tell us that with the $40 ceiling that is in this proposition the total amount rebated to individual taxpayers will be roughly equal to what would have been rebated with the 1½ per cent rate for the year and no limit on the amount that an individual taxpayer can get.

I point out that it is also our intention to vote against the next clause which gives a 7 per cent reduction to corporations. Our point is that what really counts is justice and equity in any tax system, and even though it may seem tedious to our friends opposite to have to listen to us say this time and time again, apparently it is necessary to do so. No matter how much fairness there might be in a tax system—and we contend that there is not a great deal of it in today's tax system—whenever you make reductions on a flat percentage basis of across the board, you give a few cents or a few dollars to those in the lower income brackets, and you give hundreds and thousands of dollars to those in the upper brackets.

We think this is grossly unfair and that it should not be perpetrated again as it is in the clause that is now before us. I am glad that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in the chamber, even if he is involved in a conversation with someone else, because when he was minister of finance he brought in a tax reduction measure. I think the amount of reduction was 20 per cent of the basic tax. But he attached to it a $20 maximum and he was able to stand in his place, to face us and to say: "This is what you people over there want". As a matter of fact, that provision has been in effect for several years since 1966.

The point I am making is that it is not completely foreign to a person such as the present Secretary of State for External Affairs to suggest that when you give a tax reduction on top of a basic tax system the fair thing to do is to provide a maximum so that those in the lower brackets get a decent break and those in the upper brackets do not get a bonanza.

What we are asking in this amendment is that the percentage rates be increased substantially from 1½ per cent to 20 per cent, or from 3 per cent to 40 per cent, whether you are talking about six months or a year. We say that the rate should be increased substantially for those in the lower brackets but that a ceiling should be established beyond which no greater reduction is payable.

The calculations that have been made in connection with this suggest that this would mean that all those with incomes up to around about $12,000 a year would get the full amount of the 20 per cent increase proposed in the amendment, but those in the higher brackets, depending on their status, the number of dependants and so on, would get no more than the $40 suggested in the amendment. We feel very strongly that this is a fair approach. My colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, demonstrated yesterday the complete unfairness of the present proposal by putting on the record the fact that some people would get only $1.09, as opposed to the hundreds and thousands of dollars that others would get. I submit that if the government wants to make any pretense at all of doing things on the basis of fairness and equity it should accept this amendment.

Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs, when minister of finance, brought in a tax reduction exactly along the lines of this amendment, I hope that he will persuade those around him that a little consistency on the part of the government would be in order and that the government should support this amendment. We think that this is one of the most important features of the bill that is now before us. We support the principle of a tax reduction for the reasons that have been stated, but we think it is thoughtless and unfair to say that the government is giving a tax reduction and expect people to be happy about it when it is structured in such a way that those in the lower brackets get so little and those in the upper brackets get so much. That is why we urge the committee to accept this amendment to clause 3.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, it is always tempting to enter into philosophical discussions with members of the NDP of the kind this particular amendment reflects. It is the line of thought we have heard from them throughout second reading debate. However, the government feels that the corporate sector of the economy is of value and that the reduction in tax for the corporate sector is of value to the national economy. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speaking to this amendment and indicating his party's intention to vote against clause 4, because this really presents the package to us as representing their point of view.

Any reduction of taxes for any sector will always be subject to the criticism that it is not enough. Any change in taxes will also always be subject to the criticism that the timing is wrong. These criticisms are trite, tired and old but they will always be with us.

I have listened carefully for the last half day but have not found anything new in what members of the NDP have said. The government must accept responsibility for making the decisions on what tax reductions are appropriate and when they should become effective. As we all know, these tax reductions were announced by the Minister of Finance in October and are effective as of July 1 this year. In combination with many other measures and steps taken by the government during the current year and as early as March, 1970, this has had the effect of putting the Canadian economy back on the move in a very satisfactory fashion. I am quite prepared to defend the government's policies and decisions. Certainly the government cannot accept this amendment nor can it accept the advice of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that clause 4 should be defeated.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mahoney: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the parliamentary secretary's suggestion that what I was putting forward was a philosophical argument, would he say that is what the Secretary of State for External Affairs was doing when he, as minister of finance, proposed a 20 per cent reduction and a $20 maximum?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have no way of reading the mind of the Secretary of State for External Affairs a number of years ago, so I cannot answer that. I did not suggest that the amendment was a philosophical argument; I suggested that it reflected the philosophy we have been hearing from the New Democratic Party, and I think I can stand by that statement. I can conceive of occasions when a tax reduction with a ceiling in terms of dollars would be appropriate, but at this particular time it is not felt to be appropriate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, my colleague the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants has indicated our attitude with regard to this amendment. We have indicated that this tax cut from a personal point of view was somewhat too low, but really it is a question of whether it is too low or whether it is almost wiped out. I would say quite candidly that I think a 40 per cent cut on a six month basis borders on financial irresponsibility. Not only is it the pattern for this year but it will be in effect for 1972 as well because the minister announced that we will have another bill possibly in 1972. There is an indication that there is a $40 limit, which will eliminate all the rich people. The $40 limit is going to take in the carpenters, plumbers, steel workers, and all those people who are now earning $10 plus, unless they have exceedingly large families. When you consider that a married man with two children and an income of $9,000 pays almost $2,500 in tax, you can see where this $40 limit will apply.

There are a tremendous number of people in this country both within and outside organized labour who earn from $13,000 to $15,000. They will be told that they are the elite and should not get the benefit of this tax cut. These people work hard for their wages and salaries. Why should they be hit that much harder for tax? This whole philosophy of taxation indicates that even some of our present progressive income tax system is regressive.

I would say that this amendment would cost the equivalent of the 1½ per cent provision and perhaps more than the corporate reduction. Is the corporate reduction worth nothing? If the government had been prepared to accept this amendment or had proposed one of its own which would have been of greater benefit within the private sector, then we would have been prepared to forgo the corporate sector because of the amount of money that would be put back into the economy. But on the basis of choice, that extra cash in the hands of corporate business is a benefit for them. Of course, the NDP has a blind spot when it comes to corporations. I do not know where and how they think business is carried on in this country. I suppose they say "eliminate corporate business and nationalize everything".

Had this been a somewhat higher tax proposal with regard to individuals, as I say, we would have been quite prepared to forgo the corporate side; but on the basis of the amendment going as high as it does, it is, frankly, financial and fiscal irresponsibility.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, when my friend the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants took his first look at the amendment I think he misunderstood it and was too quick to leap to his feet to say that it was financially irresponsible and to announce his party's opposition to it. I suspect that they are stuck with that at the moment because their financial critic supports that view. May I persuade in my usual kind and friendly fashion the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Peace River and other colleagues of theirs—and this applies particularly to the hon. member for Edmonton West—that it might be a good idea to reconsider this matter. If this amendment were accepted, the reduction in tax for a married man with two children whose taxable income is $4,000, to use the figure used by the hon. member for Edmonton West, would be $40 instead of $1.09. If the man's taxable income is $5,000, his reduction will be $40 instead of $4.53. If he is one of those steel workers mentioned by the financial critic of the official opposition whose taxable income is $9,000, which means that his gross income would probably be around $12,000, his reduction will be $40 instead of $20.55. It seems to me that a man's taxable income would need to be somewhere around $12,000 or $13,000 before he could reach that $40 limit.

Surely that would cover all the low and middle income people, be they steelworkers, clerks, or what have you. At the other end of the scale, the reduction for a person whose taxable income is $30,000 would be $40 instead of $152.34, and the reduction for a man with a $100,000 taxable income would be $40 instead of $757.70. I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that my good friend from Halifax-East Hants would like to reholster his gun, rise to his feet and say that, having had second thoughts, he agrees with our position. Possibly the present misunderstanding is our fault, because we did not initially explain our position adequately. We did not tell the committee what the import of this amendment would be. My colleague for Oshawa-Whitby tried to keep his remarks short, to enable us to get through this stage quickly. I hope, after having had second thoughts, that the members of the official opposition will decide that this amendment is worthwhile after all and that it is not financially irresponsible.

Our research people have advised us that this amendment will not involve any greater financial loss to the treasury than the proposal as it reads at present. I hope my arguments will persuade the people on this side of the House. I also hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will convince his side of the House of the merit of our position, because the point of view that he held a few short years ago coincides exactly with the point of view expressed in this amendment. I do not think the official opposition should object to the amendment; after all, it will provide for our middle and lower income people a substantially greater tax reduction than would be provided by the present bill. At the same time, the cost to the treasury will not be any greater. Surely the parliamentary secretary can tell us why this course is less appropriate now than it was on an earlier occasion.

Mrs. MacInnis: They are financially irresponsible.

Mr. Benjamin: I will leave the matter of corporate tax cuts until we come to clause 4. At present we are dealing with clause 3. Surely, in terms of income tax reductions, our proposal is far more appropriate than the government's proposal in the legislation.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

This amendment would accomplish exactly what the government wants to do, namely to provide money for those in the lower and middle income groups. They are the consumers who would benefit most from this legislation. I am surprised that the government have not used the method we suggest. Have they discussed it? If the Secretary of State for Esternal Affairs would just move over a couple of seats and whisper words of advice in the ear of the parliamentary secretary, I am sure he would have some chance of convincing the parliamentary secretary that the amendment should be accepted. The government at a later date will be glad that the amendment has been accepted, and we shall be happy if the government takes credit for this idea. My main reason in speaking was to point out the advantages of our suggestion to the official opposition in particular. I ask them to think again about the results the amendment would bring, if accepted.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that if I remained silently in my place this afternoon, other hon. members would also show the same restraint and that we might do our duty and complete dealing with this legislation. However, as I sat here and listened to the NDP filling up the pages of Hansard this afternoon with their clap trap, I thought I had better put some of my own clap trap on record, and that is what I intend to do.

That party launched its argument on the false theory that a tax reduction is the key to eliminating poverty in Canada. I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway telling us about conditions of poverty in this country, and everyone concedes that they were valid observations about our society. But I suggest that the idea of tax reductions reaching or even affecting people who live in the conditions she described is wholly unrealistic. You cannot, even by reducing taxes by $40, which is the maximum that that party proposes, hope to alleviate the conditions of poverty that she describes. The elimination of poverty is one of the national priorities of Canada, but it is not to be brought about either by tax reform or tax reduction.

I want to look at the tax reduction package and offer what I understand to be the reasons for it. Let me say why I think the government proposal is the only sensible way to do this.

The purpose of this tax reduction, as I understand it, is to stimulate the economy. We should try to create more jobs in Canada and eliminate some of the uncertainty in this country with regard to our economic future. Tax reductions are, it is thought, one way of doing that, but you cannot eliminate poverty with one piece of legislation.

There are a number of ways of stimulating the economy and creating jobs, and one of them, certainly, is by increasing the purchasing power of Canadians, particularly of Canadians who use a large part of their income for consumption. That is the characteristic of low-income people. Therefore, it was thought important to offer tax reductions to people who would put the money they gain back into the economy. That is being done through this measure.

Mr. Benjamin: That was exactly our point.

Mr. Kaplan: That is right, and that is being done through this piece of legislation.

There is another way of stimulating the economy, creating jobs and reducing economic uncertainty. You can do that, as well, by offering tax reductions to the corporate sector and to Canadians with higher incomes. I find myself very often differing with the hon. member for Edmonton West, so it is a pleasure for me to be able to agree with him and repeat the point he made. Corporate tax reductions will have an important effect. They will give confidence to the business community and increase the profitability of business. They will encourage businessmen, since those businessmen will be possessed of extra liquidity, to make additional investments.

I cannot understand why the NDP has what the hon. member for Edmonton West calls this blind spot. Why does that party not concede what is so obvious to anybody who thinks of these matters? Why does it not concede that a corporate tax reduction will bring a stimulating effect to the economy? The reductions will make the economy move more quickly; they will be instrumental in creating jobs for the very people that party is concerned about and on whose behalf it has advanced the amendment. How can one argue that we will eliminate poverty by giving people a $40 tax rebate? I should like to make one other point which perhaps is relevant to the proposed tax reform package put forward by the government. Corporations are not separate entities; corporations are a conduit. The NDP does not realize that these corporations represent stockholders. The profits they earn belong to Canadians—

• (4:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Kaplan: And United States citizens as well. But the tax reduction accorded to individuals is related to the reduction accorded to corporations. I mention this because it is entirely possible for an individual who runs a business or owns part of a business, and who receives a salary, to arrange the stream of income between himself and his corporation in such a way as to minimize the effects of taxation. If you reduce the tax on corporate income without reducing the tax on individual income, or vice versa, you will find individuals responding by making an individual or corporate decision to alter the flow of income. The aim of tax policy is to establish a greater degree of neutrality between the income which goes to an individual and the income which goes to a corporation. It is necessary to make the system work, and to do so there has to be a comparability of taxation as between individual incomes and corporate incomes.

If members of the NDP would think about it, it would be obvious to them that it would defeat the purpose they themselves have in mind if reductions accorded in individual taxes were exaggerated in relation to those accorded to corporations.

These are some of the reasons why I cannot support the NDP amendment or the arguments upon which the amendment is based.

Mr. Nystrom: First, I wish to correct a false impression given by the hon. member for Don Valley. He suggested our party thought we could cure poverty by reducing taxes by $40 a year. This is far from the truth. He knows we cannot seek to amend this bill except in a limited way. We cannot go beyond the sum of $160 million or so mentioned in these provisions. We are seeking to redistribute this sum so that people in the lower and middle income brackets may receive the benefit of tax reductions, not just the wealthy.

It has been said that maybe this amendment reflects our philosophy on taxation. It does. Our guiding principle with respect to taxation is equity. This is one thing we are trying to achieve. The bill before us is not based on equity, but on the exact opposite. The hon. member for Don Valley told us that a person in receipt of a low income would spend the money. Certainly. But under this bill the man with an income of $4,000 would benefit by a tax reduction of $1.09. He really could not go out and better himself and his family on $1.09.

I was not surprised to hear the spokesmen for the Conservative party, including the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, say that we in this corner were pursuing a policy of financial irresponsibility. What is so irresponsible about trying to institute a tax system based on equity? If this is irresponsibility, it is the type of philosophy I like. It is the people in the lower income brackets who need money and who spend it. These are the people we should be concerned about.

The financial critic for the Conservative party and others across the way are concerned about tax cuts for the corporations. How many more hand-outs do they wish to give to these people? In the last ten years, gas and oil companies have paid tax on only 5.7 per cent of their profits. How much more generosity do these people need? Why does not the average worker or farmer enjoy this kind of concession? All we are asking for is equity, and this is something which the Conservative party and the Liberal party do not wish to give to the ordinary person in Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: Is the hon. member aware that the gas and oil industry have never taken their profits out of the business? They have left them in and they have continued to invest more money, more than has ever been earned. Does he recognize that this incentive to continue investment in Canada is partly a result of the tax system? And who benefits from this economic stimulation? Who benefits from the increased number of jobs being offered in Canada?

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member is 100 per cent correct when he says the tax system is partly responsible for the investment made by the gas and oil companies. But I suggest he should read the speech which was made here a while ago in this chamber by his hon. friend from Duvernay before he talks about tax incentives given to the mining and oil companies. Most of these companies are owned by multi-national corporations with head offices in the United States and elsewhere. Over 98 per cent of them are owned outside this country.

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of private members' business pursuant to Standing Order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it may be we should find out whether the House would be ready to dispense with the private members' hour in the interest of continuing the discussion which has been taking place in the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I always like to have these public explanations made in connection with any thought of dispensing with the private members' hour. Perhaps we could go even further than that and sit between the hours of six and eight, without in any way restricting the right of hon. members to give adequate consideration to this bill.

I say this because a great many hon. members have arrangements to make late tonight. Would there be any indication forthcoming as to the length of time it would take to complete this portion of our business, supposing we were to sit between five and six and again between six and eight? I am not asking for any undertaking, but some indication of what hon. members have in mind might be of help if we are to assess this situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest we take it an hour at a time. The issue at the moment is that of suspending private members' hour. We agree to that, and we can consider the other matter later.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is there unanimous consent to forgo the private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House will now resume the study of Bill C-275, an act to amend the statute law related to income tax, in committee of the whole.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENTS ACT, 1971

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-275, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Drury—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose it was discussing clause 3, on which there is an amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

On clause 3: Additional deduction from tax.

Mr. Nystrom: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, just before we broke for a moment, our amendment is based on one thing, and one thing only, namely equity. We are trying to get more money into the hands of the poor and middle income groups. We realize this is only a part of tax reform, and we realize tax reform is only a part of the fight against poverty. The proposal in our amendment is one of the things we will have to adopt if we are to give a decent break to the lower and middle income groups.

We know that the economic system discriminates against the low and middle income earner. Unless we stop current practices the low or middle income earner will not be free to pursue what he wants economically and socially. The whole capitalistic system accentuates this. It gives rewards to those who make high profits.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Someone said that hard work earns high profits. I know a lot of people in this country who made a lot of money not because they worked hard but because they had a few lucky breaks, or because they had a rich uncle or a rich grandfather. I know many people who are working hard on farms and in factories but who are discriminated against. We are not saying that they should be given special benefits, but we are saying that there should be equity in the tax system; that their income should be taxed on the same basis as someone who is fortunate enough to have a great deal of wealth.

Hon. members do not realize what this bill does. It is giving a $1.09 tax reduction to a married person with two children earning $4,000, and a $202 tax reduction to the man earning $50,000. The poor fellow who is just getting by on $100,000 will have his tax load reduced by $750. That is the type of equity that the Conservative and Liberal parties want. That is the type of equity I do not stand for and that I am fighting against.

Hon. members opposite talk about initiative. This bill gives initiative only to those people who have a lot of money. What about the small guy? Have they ever thought of giving him some initiative so that he could have a chance to enjoy better housing, buy a few more books for his children, and find better opportunities for his family? We would probably have a better and wealthier society in Canada if this were the case, instead of handing out bigger and bigger carrots to foreign corporations and the wealthy.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. member say that if we did those things he mentioned maybe we would have a wealthier society than we have today. I thought the same thing as I listened to the hon. member for Duvernay. As much as hon. members opposite want to attack our tax system, attack the economic policies of this country and attack the extent to which we have been dominated by foreign investments, it still cannot be overlooked that we have the second or third highest standard of living of all the countries in the world. This has not resulted from the implementation of the policies that the NDP have been advocating, and it certainly would not result from following the policies advocated by the hon. member for Duvernay.

When I hear attacks on and challenges to the economic policies and tax system of Canada, I concede that there is a lot wrong with the tax system and a lot of reform is required. But it is important to remember that this is the system which produces one of the highest standards of living in the world.

That is not something that the members of the NDP should write off. They come here claiming to represent the interests of the underprivileged. I do not know where they get that mandate, but they claim to do so. But it is seriously wrong for them not to take into consideration the fact that the tax system and the economic policies of our country have been responsible for giving us our high standard of living.

When they complain about the taxes paid by the oil and gas industry and say they should be higher, and that other sectors of the economy should be paying much higher taxes than they, hon. members opposite may be right; but why do they fail to take into consideration the effect that the policies they recommend would have on the standard of living of Canadians?

Mr. Nystrom: I do consider this effect, Mr. Chairman. But may I point out that we also have the highest unemployment rate of any industrial country in the world, and this is a direct result of the policies we have been following in Canada.

I would like to point out to the hon. member that the standard of living of a large number of Canadians is far from being near the highest in the world. In Sweden the average working person is much better off and has a higher standard of living than the average working person in Canada. Certainly the standard of living is high for a few people in this country, for the select few who are benefiting from the system, but it is not that high for the vast majority of Canadians, certainly not for the 40 per cent of them who are living at or below the poverty line. It is these people I am concerned about, and it is against these people that the tax system works.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak on the amendment other than to make the few introductory comments that I made at the outset, but I cannot refrain from replying to the unmitigated nonsense uttered by the hon. member for Don Valley who specializes in creating little caricatures to attack.

He says the NDP have ignored the effects of the economic policies of the Liberal party for the last 25 years. He says we have not acknowledged that those policies have produced growth beyond that produced in other countries. We have acknowledged this. We have said it over and over again. If he wants to listen now, he can hear it again. We do acknowledge this point. But what economists in this country and elsewhere have said is that we pay a very high price indeed for our kind of economic growth.

There are alternative methods that would not involve selling out ownership of the resources of this country. Sweden, the United States and other countries have developed their economies using policies different from those used by the Liberal party here. I grant the point that we have had good economic growth in the past 25 years, but I do not grant that the methods selected by the Liberal party of Canada were the only ones which could achieve that kind of growth.

The second red herring introduced by the hon. member for Don Valley was his suggestion that we were proposing this kind of amendment in order to overcome poverty. That is rubbish. No one in this party has said that adoption of this amendment would overcome poverty. If they did it would be irresponsible and false. What we have said is that the adoption of our amendment would put money into the hands of the poorer people in a much more significant way than the government is proposing.

It is disgusting that a man making $4,000 a year, who has a wife and two children to support, will benefit to the extent of only $1.09 under the provisions of this bill. We say that instead of that man getting $1.09 he should get $40. That will not fundamentally change the earth; it will not overcome poverty, but it might improve that man's situation.

We are also saying that the government should not introduce this across across-the-board tax reduction that gives millionnaires hundreds and hundreds of dollars when tax reduction could be applied in a much more equitable fashion.

The third myth, of course, is that we are not interested as a party in stimulating the economy and that we do not accept that a 3 per cent reduction will have a good effect in generating growth. Again I say that is garbage. I wish the hon. member for Don Valley would listen to the argument. He gets up and creates red herrings and refers to points which never were made. Why does he not listen to the argument and then reply to it?

Let me deal with the 3 per cent which he said would stimulate the economy across the board. I would be pleased to commend the remarks of several economists to the hon. member because they would say that this is hogwash. We want to get money into the hands of the people who will spend it fast, not into the hands of the upper income people who will reinvest it. We all know this measure is intended to deal with the immediate situation, and our amendment would achieve that. It would give the $160 million to everyone earning $9,000, $10,000 or less. Principally that is where most of the money would go. That would have a stimulating effect on the economy. So much for the nonsense talked by the hon. members.

Finally he said we are opposed to corporations. The brilliant financial critic of the Conservative party made the same point; that is, that the New Democratic Party really is not concerned with corporations. That, too, is garbage. Look at what the party across the way is doing in respect of the automotive industry. I have spoken to management people who are very concerned that this government is going to obliterate the auto industry in this country. If anything, they share the views of the New Democratic Party because they say, in terms of responsible industrial growth in the automotive industry, it is our party that talks sense and not the government party.

The government states that the 7 per cent across the board corporate tax reduction is going retroactively to stimulate the economy. Again I would suggest the hon. member read what our economists say, and not necessarily socialist economists, because they would say this is garbage too. The companies which will get the benefits will not create any jobs at all. They will just make windfall profits. The companies that will benefit are all capital-intensive companies. Our party would say that, if we are to have a sensible taxation policy to stimulate the corporate sector of the economy, by all means consider a 7 per cent tax reduction, but make it conditional on the company expanding and on the expansion not being just capital expansion. A corporation policy that would stimulate the economy would make sense, but not what this government is offering.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on Bill C-275.

I feel our friends of the NDP are pleading a case "hand over fist", that they would insist that the rich pay more taxes in order to give more to the poor. I believe that the poor as well as the rich need to live.

The NDP believe that part of our Canadian institutions—large, medium and small—are managed by people who are "filthy" rich. In fact, these people manage their affairs with money that is borrowed, on which they pay extravagant interest rates to finance companies, and who do not know whether or not they will survive till the next day.

We now see large chain stores setting themselves up while daily small enterprises are going bankrupt. Personally, I feel that the more we dispossess some to give to others, the more we will experience those series of bankruptcies and I am convinced that the New Democrats will have to realize, as many others, that we must not dispossess, in order to give to others.

We should realize that there are sufficient resources for rich and poor alike. We should be aware that we have appreciable surpluses. Indeed, our production this year is estimated at $93 billion and we only distributed part of it worth $54 billion. The remainder is capitalized and instead of using it, of organizing our economic system to distribute it, the NDP and many others wish to distribute scarcity. Capital and money are scarce, especially in our country and throughout the world. They want to distribute that scarcity instead of abundance. There is no scarcity, but abundance exists. We are a little smart and we do not want to go further to find the means required to distribute this wealth. There are great means and they can easily be enumerated.

On Christmas eve, several families will not have received their unemployment insurance benefits because of some misunderstandings. The citizens are in a sad situation. Some eight million Canadian citizens are working, but four millions depend on unemployment insurance benefits. It is not by borrowing money, by investing borrowed funds that we will manage to give employment to all citizens.

The New Democrats would like us to take money from those who already have not enough, who are indebted, overindebted, to give to the others, so that all may be poor, instead of living decently.

There is enough for everybody as overproduction exists. In fact, if we were to put all people to work, we could triple or at the very least double our production, thus boosting the purchasing power of everyone. We could enable all to live decently.

When our production increases, the citizen's income decreases, while the opposite should prevail.

• (5:20 p.m.)

We must organize our economy in such a way as to ensure its balance. If production increases, the standard of living of each individual should increase accordingly, and that is the problem. It is not by taking away from those who already do not have enough to give it to others, that we shall solve this problem.

Mr. Chairman, I say that we will not be able to support this amendment, even though we want to see taxes reduced. Taxes should be transformed into social dividends, national dividends, instead of being placed on the shoulders of the taxpayers who are already overtaxed.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

In this House, Mr. Chairman, for over a month we have been talking about increasing taxes, but we cannot see our way out of the dilemma, except by further increases in taxes and indebtedness, and this further increases the cost of living and puts all the people in an unfavourable situation.

We can certainly remedy that and restore balance in our economy. We could adopt only one tax table for everybody, which would be normal. Instead of rising, taxes should decrease. We could issue new credit to finance all new products and all new developments. Debt credit is established and each time there is an attempt to do something, debts are increased.

Closer scrutiny reveal that large corporations which are supposedly millionnaires are driven to bankruptcy. The New Democrats would like us to tax them and fleece them even more to enable us to give more to those who have nothing. But that does not solve the problem.

Mr. Chairman, we shall vote against the New Democratic Party amendment. I feel that it would be somewhat easier to restore the balance of our economy in 1972 if we would just study the economic situation so that citizens may benefit thereby. If production increases and the earth continues to yield produce, there should be no problems for any citizen.

I see hon. members on the opposite side who find it amusing. Yet I believe that some day, when they become aware of their error and recognize their inability to solve the problem, it will seem less amusing to them and they might, having thought it over, suggest peaceful, honest economic ways and means to ensure a decent life for each individual. There is nothing amusing about unemployment areas, debts, and citizens on the verge of bankruptcy. They are amused when half the world is facing bankruptcy. It will not be so amusing in a few years when communism and socialism prevail and we are no longer masters in our own country.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, after hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby with regard to the arguments presented by the hon. member for Don Valley I realize that my colleague was attempting to reach the intellectual capacity of the hon. member for Don Valley. Unfortunately the latter is not here at the moment but I am sure that some of his colleagues on the other side will pass on my remarks to the hon. member for Don Valley.

I must tell hon. members a little story with regard to the hon. member for Don Valley. Last spring he spoke to a high school in my riding.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Gilbert: Some time later he said to me—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat. I know the hon. member wants to tell us a little story but the Chair would prefer to hear about the amendment, instead of the story that the hon. member has regarding another hon. member.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, the experience is directly related to the amendment before us. After speaking to a high school in my riding, to the Riverdale Collegiate, he told me that he was depressed by the attitude of some of the students. He spoke about the "give up" attitude of the students because of the high unemployment rate that we are experiencing in Canada. He said that many of the students felt they could not get jobs even though they were well trained. This made them feel very depressed, and the hon. member expressed his concern to me.

I just wanted to reach the heart of the hon. member for Don Valley and to tell him that as a result of this bill I will have to go back to the riding of Broadview and tell a working man with an income of $4,000, a wife and three children, that when this bill passes he will receive the princely sum of $1.09. I imagine that the hon. member for Don Valley will be able to go back to his riding and tell the people there who have an income of $30,000 or more that they will receive at least $150 or more. I am sure that after the hon. member for Don Valley had expressed his concern for the working man in Broadview who would only get $1.09, whereas the hon. member's friends would get over $150, he would be persuaded to vote for the amendment.

I am not only relating my remarks to the working men in Broadview; I am relating them to all working people. If the hon. member for Parkdale were here he would probably agree with me, as would some of my Conservative friends, such as the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys in whose constituency there is a high unemployment rate and where wages are depressed. I am sure that they would like to go home and tell the working people in their constituencies that, if the amendment presented by the NDP had passed, they could have at least $40 as a tax credit.

I think the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who stood in his place yesterday and asked the Minister of Justice about guns and how we should register them to protect the public—and I agree with him—would also agree with me that it would be far better to say that the people of Quebec should at least enjoy a minimum benefit of $40, so that the people of Quebec should at least enjoy a minimum benefit of $40, so that they would not have to buy guns or have a revolution, and we would not have to pass another War Measures Act.

I am sure that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who understands the feelings of the people in his riding, realizes how necessary it is to pass this amendment. I could continue by referring to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfew-Carleton, who will be saying on Sunday "Blessed are the poor". If he thinks that the poor are blessed, surely he could give who have an income of $4,000 or less more than $1. I suspect he would want to give them a Christmas charity of a minimum of $40.

I notice that the hon. member for Essex is also present, and I remember the statesmanlike speech that he made.

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I want to tell the hon. member for Broadview that I think I know as much about poverty as he does. When he says that my views and his views are similar and that I have concern for the poor, let me tell him that I was raised on a mother's allowance. I have heard nothing but garbage from his party this afternoon. If we all took part in this debate none of us would get out of here. The hon. member is simply taking advantage of the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Gilbert: I want to assure the hon. member for Essex that I am sure that he has experienced poverty. But I also have experienced poverty.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Intellectual poverty.

Mr. Gilbert: I can say that we could shorten this debate if the government accepted the amendment and were charitable at Christmas time. What I was really going to say about the hon. member for Essex is that he made a statesmanlike speech with regard to credit unions, and I compliment him for it. I remember him saying that it was one of the most major issues that he had ever faced as a Member of Parliament. Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the hon. member that this is a major issue which he must face. The question of poverty in Canada may not be striking, because it only involves $160 million, but it indicates an attitude with regard to the working people.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Essex rises on a point of order, and I hope this time it will be a legitimate point of order.

Mr. Whelan: It is a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I should like to tell the hon. member for Broadview that my concern for the poor is as great as his, and my record of dealing with the poor is as great as his, but I do not think we have to be as vocal as they have been this afternoon to prove it. We have done a lot for the poor since I have been a Member of Parliament. The poor of this country are treated better than those in any country in the world.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: That is a very good point of debate but it is certainly not a point of order.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I appreciate your protection. However, if the hon. member wants to make a speech he can do so, and if his concern is as great as ours he will vote for the amendment. The hon. member for Don Valley said that this tax reform will not eliminate poverty. That is quite true, but this amendment is a step in the right direction. We in the New Democratic Party would go much further than the government has in regard to tax reform; we would bring in other bills to make this a better country for all Canadians.

Mr. Allmand: Why don't you do it in Manitoba and Saskatchewan?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. We should try to debate this matter in the Christmas spirit and display a good sense of humour. This would assist the Chair in properly conducting the debate.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I enjoyed the remarks of hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. I am sure he expresses concern, but I am waiting to see how he votes on this amendment. He certainly presents an attitude of concern to the workers of this country, but we will put him to the real test when the vote is taken.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Don Valley spoke about corporations and their concern about spreading the tax moneys that they might save as a result of the tax decrease of 7 per cent. I would remind him of what we heard in the House yesterday about what corporations are doing with the sales tax allowance which was given on radios, television sets, and so forth. The parliamentary secretary said then that the corporations did not pass the tax allowance on to the consumer and that in fact the price on some of these articles has risen. We had the same result when we granted an excise tax allowance to drug companies—they just put it in their own pockets. I would assume that the same thing will happen to this 7 per cent tax allowance.

I am sure the hon. member for Don Valley will be impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby concerning the intellectual argument. After all, it is when you go to the heart of a man that he changes and I am sure when the hon. member recalls his experience in my riding with working men and the concern he expressed for them he does not want me to go back there and tell them that the government will give $1.09 to a married man with three children who is earning $4,000 a year. When he goes back to his own riding he can tell his friends there who are making $30,000 a year that they will benefit by $150. I am sure the hon. member for Don Valley will be persuaded to support this amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Amendment (Mr. Broadbent) negatived. Yeas, 13; nays, 56.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 3 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Clause 3 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Clause 4 agreed to: Yeas, 53; nays, 13.

On clause 5—Additional deduction for manpower training.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to make a speech, so everybody can relax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, my remarks may be longer if there is interference. At the end of my previous remarks the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said he was surprised to hear that certain questions I had referred to had not been answered. After looking at the order paper, he said he could not find the questions and invited me to tell him where they were to be found. I am sorry he is not present to hear me. I have done as he suggested and I am surprised to find that all the questions have been answered. He was quite right, and I congratulate him for the speed with which his department answered these questions. I have another question and I do not know to whom to direct it. His parliamentary secretary is not present.

Mr. Mahoney: I am here.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I want to know whether the legislation, as now worded, precludes on-the-job training contracts being entered into with municipal bodies, governments or voluntary bodies as employers.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Chairman, I will convey that question to the minister and transmit the answer to the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I will speak for only three or four minutes. I have waited since two o'clock to raise certain questions and I am sorry the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is not here to answer questions concerning clause 5. I had hoped that he would make a four or five-minute speech on the manpower training program, which is under his jurisdiction in one sense, and that he would speak briefly about the survey on job vacancies which was tabled today in the House. We have been waiting for that survey to be tabled for several months and I think it is unfortunate that I have to raise my questions at a quarter to six on the day when we adjourn for the Christmas recess. For this reason I will keep my remarks short and direct a couple of questions to the government. I hope the minister will respond to them.

The document I hold in my hand, which is the survey regarding job vacancies, cost the Canadian taxpayer $3.5 million. This survey, the contract for which was let by the Department of Manpower and Immigration, is a comprehensive document and indicates that there are 38,500 jobs vacancies in Canada today despite the fact that over 500,000 people are unemployed. There are several comments I wish to make. Firstly, these vacancies are a clear and categorical repudiation of the statement the Prime Minister made in Montreal recently. He said that if the Canadian people were to fill the job opportunities available, we would not have unemployment in Canada to the extent existing. He suggested that Canadians do not want to go to work. Mr. Chairman, this survey which has been conducted by professionals in the field indicates that there are only 38,500 job vacancies at a time when about 550,000 of our people are unemployed. I am making a "guesstimate" when I say that about 550,000 of our people are out of work on December 23, 1971. If there are 38,500 jobs available, then somewhere along the line we as Canadians have failed in our efforts to bring together those who are seeking work and job opportunities.

In Canada there are hundreds of manpower offices. We have a multimillion dollar program under the auspices of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, yet there are 38,500 jobs which are not filled. People are not aware of these jobs, or training programs are not being integrated correctly and we are not training people to fill these jobs. In the alternative, these 38,500 vacancies cannot be filled by Canadians. Perhaps Canadians are not qualified to fill them.

I notice that opposite is an hon. member from the Lakehead region who is an educator. He is listening to me. I ask hon. members who have been involved in this field and are as interested in it as I am whether these 38,500 jobs are those that Canadians have been trained to fill. If they are, then I suggest there has been lack of co-ordination of effort as between Manpower officials, Manpower centres and industry, because we are not training people to fill these jobs. If, among our 550,000 unemployed, Canadians cannot be found to fill these jobs, it is obvious that we must retrain our workers. Clearly, the implications are serious for our vocational, technical and operating schools across the country.

I would like to think that since this survey has been in the minister's possession for several months—and I raise a big question mark as to why it has not been tabled before today—the minister has evolved some major strategy for implementing in a practical way the suggestions that flow from this document. I suggest that there are hundreds of inferences that members of the House can draw from this document, some of them relating, for instance, to the total lack of co-ordination of effort that I mentioned a moment ago. The phrase "co-ordination of effort" sounds like an ad hoc, fruity phrase without any meaning. When I talk about lack of co-ordination of effort I mean that there has been a breakdown in co-ordination with regard to manpower programs. This breakdown has serious implications for those programs.

Secondly, there are serious implications for our manpower offices. I say that, even though conceding that officials in the Manpower offices across Canada are working diligently, as dedicated public servants, in trying to bring jobs and the people looking for them together. I suggest, nevertheless, that either because of lack of funding or for other reasons Manpower offices are not fulfilling the responsibilities given to them under the legislation. One must conclude that because 38,500 jobs which are available for Canadians are not at present filled.

The minister's predecessor commissioned this study because it was felt necessary for the government to be in possession of such a survey and because it would give members of the government an idea whether the Immigration Act ought to be amended. The report has serious implications with regard to the immigration policies of the government. I understand that the minister brought before cabinet a bill to amend the Immigration Act but that the idea was vetoed by the Prime Minister. So far as I know, there is no further plan to bring in amendments to the Immigration Act. Nevertheless, this document is prime evidence of the fact that the government must spend some time in this House amending the Immigration Act if the implications of the job vacancy survey are to be met and answered.

I will not take much more time, but by these remarks I give notice of questions we shall raise relating to the Immigration Act, relating to the co-ordination of effort I spoke about, relating to Manpower offices and Manpower personnel, to Manpower training programs, to programs affecting industry and to programs affecting employees of Canada. Our questions will relate particularly to our Manpower offices and to the implications flowing from this report. Those are the matters which we shall pursue in the House and we shall ask the government about them.

The information gathered in this report cost us $3.5 million. The situation, as revealed in the report, has existed for several years. The report has not been made available to Canadians, and we do not know why. We intend to pursue this matter vigorously when the House resumes its business after the Christmas holidays. We hope it will return before February 16, the date that was intimated by the leader of the House.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Clause 5 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-275, to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will be even briefer than I was before because of the many hard hearts and thick heads around here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I know another speech will have no effect on the House unless I elaborate. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

That Bill C-275 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering clause 3 and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering an amendment to clause 3 to increase the deduction therein provided from 1½ per cent to 20 per cent subject to a maximum of $40 for any one taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The question is on the main motion.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

I am sure it would be of interest to hon. members to learn that Mr. Gordon Dubroy, Clerk Assistant of the House of Commons, today reached a milestone in his distinguished career. He has just completed calling the one thousandth division of his career.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members and visitors to our galleries who have had the experience of watching Mr. Dubroy on these occasions have been not only impressed but astonished by his ability every time to perform this very difficult exercise in so flawless a manner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I know all hon. members would want me to express to Mr. Dubroy on their behalf our continuing affection and admiration for his distinguished services to the House of Commons. We wish him many more divisions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a temptation to give Mr. Dubroy a chance for his one thousandth and first time, but we will settle for "On division."

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I heard Mr. Dubroy make one mistake back in 1966. I would not want to mar the evening by having that possibility happen again, so we will dispense with the division.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the House rise until Your Honour calls us after the other place has completed consideration of this bill, when we might wish to reassemble for royal assent.

Mr. Baldwin: I would be agreeable, Mr. Speaker. We will be around for a few minutes yet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House will therefore suspend its sitting until the call of the bells.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 6.18 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

• (7:40 p.m.)

SITTING RESUMED

• (7:50 p.m.)

The House resumed at 7.55 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa, December 23, 1971

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today at 7.55 o'clock p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of the honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (8:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Copyright Act

An act to amend the Customs Tariff

An act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act

An act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act

An act to amend the statute law relating to income tax.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

[Translation]

I have the pleasure of reminding hon. members that if they have a moment before leaving the House to join their families, I shall be most happy to welcome them in Room 16 to wish them and their wives and families a Merry Christmas.

[English]

Mr. Danforth: And a merry Christmas to you, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: When we are back next week I shall have the opportunity to wish hon. members a happy New Year.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will adjourn until two o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday, December 28, 1971.

At 8:10 p.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special order, until 2 p.m. Tuesday, December 28.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 28, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER ON BIRTH OF SON

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, a point of order and a matter concerning the business of the House. In the absence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), on his behalf, on behalf of all members of this party and, I think, all members of the House, as well as all the people of Canada, I extend to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Mrs. Trudeau our very warm and sincere congratulations on their new arrival. We hope that his wife and new baby will be home soon. We wish them joy.

I resisted all kinds of advice as to what to say at this time. I have stayed away from witticisms. However, I am entitled, on a Parliamentary issue, to say to the Prime Minister that he will have joy and happiness. There will be problems, of course, but it will be useless in the debates that may take place from time to time to employ 75C. It just will not work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I suggest that he learn by heart the provisions of Standing Order 13 which contains the procedure when there is a stranger in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy, on behalf of this party, to extend our warmest congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Mrs. Trudeau on the happiness that came to their life Christmas night.

Around this place, one frequently looks for precedents, especially when there is something one must say. I thought, since so much has been made of the fact that only on one previous occasion has a Prime Minister while in office become a father, that I might find something in the records of February 1869, that would be appropriate. Alas, my search was in vain. The House was not sitting in February, 1869. When it did meet in April, nothing was said about the arrival that February of a daughter in the home of the then Prime Minister. This means, Mr. Speaker, that this really is a first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is the first time in the history of Canada that the House of Commons has had the opportunity to extend to a Prime Minister and his wife congratulations on the arrival of their child. We do so with great pleasure and wish them all very real happiness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to extend, in my own name and on behalf of my colleagues of the Social Credit party, most sincere congratulations to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Mrs. Trudeau on the birth of a son, occurring on such a memorable date.

We wish the new baby and the Trudeau family every happiness and success during 1972.

[English]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank members of all parties for the very good wishes that have been expressed on behalf of every member of this House. I want to say that this is certainly the right season for this to happen. The House leader of the Conservative party, by his reference to rule 75C, has said that this is one way in which I could proceed. I hope I will be able to use 75B a bit more often.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: But one way or another, the baby has arrived 'just-in' time to have agreement.

This is one case where I would be able to tell him that I have had advice from people of all parties who have had some experience in the rearing of children and that there will be a multi-party approach to this. Mr. Speaker, I will say this is one area where I am certainly very happy to receive advice from the opposition parties.

[Translation]

And I particularly tell all hon. members that it is a memorable day for me when I am the object of such a warm reception from everyone.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this very memorable day and considering that all parties have offered their good wishes to the Prime Minister, may I, on behalf of my electors of the Joliette riding, offer my very best wishes to the newborn child, to the Prime Minister and to Mrs. Trudeau, as well as to the members of their families.

AIR TRANSPORT

SECURITY MEASURES AGAINST HIJACKING—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. It is a motion which I consider to be of major and pressing importance. On November 18, the Minister of Transport made the following statement in answer to my question on hijacking and the need for improved security measures. As recorded at page 9675 of Hansard for November 18, the minister said:

I do not think it is a breach of secrecy to indicate that detection devices have been installed at a number of airports and that others are on order. As soon as they have been received they will be installed.

This is the purpose of my motion under Standing Order 43 because, notwithstanding what the minister said on November 18, my advice is that no detection devices have been installed at any airports in Canada. This situation calls into question the veracity, and indeed the competence, of the Minister of Transport and the efforts of the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member knows the rules. He cannot take advantage of the Standing Order to make a speech and accusation. He can propose a motion and indicate the urgency for putting the motion. Certainly, the hon. member does not respect the spirit of the rule when he makes a statement such as he has just made.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I was laying the groundwork by pointing out the events related—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot discuss the ruling of the Chair. He should indicate the motion he proposes to put to the House.

Mr. McGrath: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not discussing the ruling, but I think I have the right to lay the groundwork for my motion and that is precisely what I have been attempting to do. I want therefore, to ask unanimous consent—hon. members may indeed laugh, but this is a very serious matter—to move the following motion seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to make a full statement to the House tomorrow spelling out what was done prior to the minister's statement of November 18 and the extent of the use of detection devices and other security programs that will now be employed to prevent air piracy in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INVESTIGATION OF DELAYS IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose the following motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

[Mr. McGrath.]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House do initiate a special investigation of delays in the payment of unemployment insurance benefits to be undertaken by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and further, that this committee do meet immediately to commence this investigation, so that a full report might be made to this House upon its return after the recess.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have listened very closely to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in which he gravely questioned the word of the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) given to this House on November 18. He said, in fact, that the Minister's statement was erroneous and gave the minister until tomorrow to clear his name and set the record straight. I agree with the hon. member for St. John's East that the minister should be given until tomorrow. I, therefore, move:

That until tomorrow, and until the record is set straight, this House should stand adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a seconder for the motion? Will the hon. member kindly put the motion in writing and I will put it to the House.

An hon. Member: Somebody write it for him.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. Downey, moved that this House—the hon. member did not put the motion in the correct form, so with his permission I will use the traditional form which would be "That this House do now adjourn". The hon. member's suggested motion reads, "I move that this House do now stand adjourned until tomorrow". The traditional form is simply "That this House do now adjourn".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more that five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion. (Mr. Horner) which was negatived on the following division.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WARNING FROM OECD REGARDING INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY TO COMBAT—EFFECT ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister but before asking it I would like, as a member of long-standing, to welcome the newest member into the fathers' club, and to tell him there are many of us in this chamber who have had vast experience in bringing up children. We will be happy to pass along to him the benefit of this experience, with or without invitation. We are all experts; all he has to do is just listen.

My question is: In view of the OECD warning that strong inflationary pressures can be expected in Canada in 1972, is the government expecting in the near future to announce new policies to combat inflation during the new year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, we are taking these warnings seriously, and all the more so in that we ourselves are aware of that ever present danger of a recurrent inflationary push, although the past experience of the government in combating inflation has been reasonably successful in terms of the OECD, and we are keeping watch. If anything has to be announced we will announce it in the usual manner.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in making its plans in this regard for next year, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the government has no intention of slowing down the economy and thereby allowing unemployment to remain at 6 per cent or higher?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister concerning the recommendation of the OECD to the effect that Canada should be able to finance most of its investment needs from its own savings. Would the Prime Minister inform the House whether or not it is government policy to restrict foreign capital inflow to Canada through some sort of mechanism?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as one of our new year projects we do have to announce a policy regarding the domestic control of the economic environment, and the hon. member will find the answer to that question when we make that announcement.

PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLL—POSSIBILITY OF IMPOSITION

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the government have price and wage control measures ready to enact, if it decides to do so?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been stating for more than a year that we would look into the possibility of price and wage controls as a contingency measure. They are still there, if we do have to use them. I hope if we ever do, we will have the support of members on both sides of this House.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, do I take it that the Prime Minister is saying yes to my question, and that the government has such measures prepared and ready?

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

REPORT ON CAUSES AND EFFECTS OF INFLATION—DATE OF PUBLICATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the minister advise the House when the report of the Prices and Incomes Commission on its studies into inflation, its causes and effects, will be made available, since the minister assured the House it would be available in the near future?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am advised it will be early in the new year.

TERMINATION DATE—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Could the minister tell the House what is the temporal mandate of the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): What is the temporal what? I am sorry, I don't understand the question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then, perhaps I may rephrase my question. Could the minister tell us in a nutshell whether, in fact, the Prices and Incomes Commission is empowered to carry on for the duration of 1972, and whether it has any broader terms of reference than were originally given?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker. Its terms of reference are spelled out in the various orders in council that appointed and reappointed it. Its present existence continues into the middle of next year.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

RESOURCE INDUSTRIES—MEASURES TO MAKE MORE ATTRACTIVE TO DOMESTIC CAPITAL

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the prediction by OECD that foreign capital will continue to be attracted by the opportunities in our natural resource industries, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not the government intends to take steps that would make our resource industries less attractive to foreign capital and more attractive to domestic capital?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to make them attractive to domestic capital by actions we have already taken, for instance, in the income tax reform. However, we do not see that the resource industries themselves, the resources, will be less attractive to foreign capital, but we hope to make sure that Canadian capital has priority in investments.

AIR TRANSPORT

HIJACKING—ALLEGED FAILURE TO TAKE PREVENTIVE MEASURES AT AIRPORTS—CO-OPERATION WITH AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the promise that additional security measures would be installed at air terminals, and in view of the fact that there are no physical signs evident of such installations, can the minister say why such installations have not been installed since representations to that end were made to him as far back as February, 1971, almost a year ago?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have gone through this exercise on several occasions in the House and it is obvious that my capacity to communicate has been somewhat less than complete. I have indicated before that a number of such devices have been in use from time to time at various airports throughout Canada. The signs concerning security installations refer to personal checking, and when such a sign is in place it does not necessarily mean that both the personal check and the automatic check will be carried out. That is perhaps the reason the hon. member is asking for this explanation.

Mr. Skoberg: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the Minister on November 18 in answer to a question put by the hon. member for St. John's East that such installations were then on order, and in view of his further statement that the department had agreed to pay for them so that the burden of the cost would not be borne by the airlines, and in view of the fact that there is a clear indication that there have not been any installations installed, would the minister say why there has not been better co-operation between his department and the Canadian Airline Pilots Association in this regard, to bring about the security measures that we would expect to be enforced?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, there are a great many hypotheses in that question, if it can be called a question, that I would like to refute. I said on November 18 that additional equipment had been ordered. This, in fact, is the case. I have re-read that answer thoroughly and I am satisfied that each word in it is accurate. Further, I would like to indicate that we have been in constant consultation with the Canadian Airline Pilots Association. If there is anything further that the pilots have to propose by way of specific measures relating to my responsibilities I would be happy to consider them, and implement them if at all possible.

HIJACKING—NUMBER OF PREVENTIVE DEVICES OPERATIVE AT AIRPORTS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PREVENTIVE MEASURES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, in view of the minister's reply on November 18 that devices had been installed at a number of airports, may I ask the minister if these devices are operative, at what dates they were operative, and how many have been installed?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, even if I had that information obviously I would not make it known publicly. I believe the hon. gentleman knows there have been cases where they have been in operation. I would refer the hon. member to the second part of my answer on that date when I replied to one of his colleagues who referred to the fact that these devices were portable. As I say, I do not know the dates on which they were operative at particular airports, but if I can find out and provide this information without risk to the travelling public, I will do so.

Mr. McGrath: As a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman who pulled off the recent successful hijacking said he came to Canada for this purpose because it was easy to do it in Canada, may I ask the minister if in the public interest—

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. McGrath: He is alleged to have said something to that effect, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to stand by the very reliable information that I have on this matter, and I am sure the minister knows it is reliable. I merely want to ask—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please? The hon. member for St. John's East has the floor for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you my authority is as good as the authority that the hon. member has.

Mr. Peters: Sure. You just dreamed it up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member takes second place to nobody when it comes to dreaming things. Because this is a matter of great public importance and urgency may I ask the minister if he would be prepared, in the public interest, to point out exactly what security precautions we are taking at our airports in Canada to prevent hijackings.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, if I were to do that, then the hon. gentleman's comment with regard to hijackers would be exactly right, because I would be inviting them to learn exactly what precautions we are taking. Obviously, the question cannot be dealt with in that way.

Mr. McGrath: Why? Because we are not taking precautions?

Mr. Jamieson: As for the comment regarding the hijacker's alleged statement about this being easy to do in Canada, I hardly think that that stands up, since the last man to try it got hit over the head with a hatchet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INCLUSION OF AIR PIRACY IN EXTRADITION TREATY WITH CUBA

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): I would like to direct a supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Could he tell us if the government intends to undertake negotiations with the Cuban government so as to include air piracy in the extradition treaty concluded with that country?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. These negotiations have been underway now for some time. There has been excellent co-operation on the part of the Cuban government and we hope in the very near future that there will be a treaty of this kind between Canada and Cuba.

Mr. Forrestall: When?

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—CRITERIA—RESULTS OF PROJECTS APPROVED

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could he tell the House if the results of projects undertaken under the local initiatives program satisfactorily meet the government's criteria?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the applications being approved, do of course meet our criteria to the extent that we can determine.

[Translation]

EFFECTS OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a supplementary.

Would he say if now at the end of the year the unemployment rate has decreased or increased?

Mr. Speaker: This is statistical information. The hon. member might put his question on the order paper.

AIR TRANSPORT

HIJACKING—RATIFICATION OF CONVENTIONS—AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to the previous round of questioning regarding air piracy and hijackings. I understand that Canada intends to ratify both The Hague and Montreal conventions on this subject. Since the Canadian ratification of these two conventions depends upon amendments to the Criminal Code which we were promised about one year ago would be brought forward in the immediate future, may I ask the Minister of Justice when these particular amendments or appropriate amendments will be coming forward.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, domestic legislation not only depends on multilateral treaties; it also depends on the ratification of bilateral treaties with the United States, Cuba and other nations. When that treaty picture is completely in place, domestic legislation will be immediately forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East and then the hon. member for Peace River. Later during the question period we may return to this interesting subject.

[Later:]

HIJACKING—MEASURES TO PROTECT CANADIANS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General what security arrangements he is making to protect Canadians from hijacking in Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be proper to comment on that.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[English]

HIJACKING—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LEGISLATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Since the Speech from the Throne 15 months ago announced there was to be legislation with regard to air piracy, will the Minister of Justice table that bill at present, if there was in fact such a bill on that date.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I said on several occasions that domestic and international aspects of the problem have to be dealt with simultaneously. When that has been done, the bill will be forthcoming.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AIR PIRACY—DATE OF COMPLETION OF EXTRADITION TREATIES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the Minister of Justice has indicated that amendments to the Criminal Code are dependent on the successful completion of multilateral and bilateral treaties, can the minister indicate to the House when he expects those treaties to be successfully concluded.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, so far as the treaty between Canada and Cuba is concerned, we expect that it will be forthcoming fairly soon. The second and, I hope, final round will take place very soon. Perhaps I ought to explain to the House that it is quite possible to take legal action under the existing extradition treaty between Cuba and Canada; it does not depend upon any future treaty.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF SAFEGUARDS—CONTINGENCY PLAN TO COUNTER DISC PROGRAM

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with negotiations taking place on the automobile trade pact between Canada and the United States and is based on the statement by the right hon. gentleman that perhaps the United States is justified in asking for some amelioration of the safeguards and the statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the House that perhaps the auto industry does not need such safeguards. May I ask the right hon. gentleman, first, if the automobile industry and the government of Ontario share in this optimism and, second, if he is aware of a contingency plan that can be implemented quickly if the DISC program should prove that jobs will be exported from this country to the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some serious doubts about the legitimacy of the first part of the question. The hon. member asked the Prime Minister whether somebody else shares the views or optimism of the Prime Minister on a certain matter. I am not sure that a question asked in those terms is in order. Perhaps the Prime Minister could reply to the second part of the question, and then the hon. member could ask a supplementary.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before coming to the second part of the question, I want to point out to the hon. member that if he looks at the answer I gave on this subject he will find that I said that the United States might be justified in asking for it and that we might be justified in not giving it. It would depend on what the conditions of the negotiations were. As to the second part of the question about the DISC program, I must say that that program is not related to the negotiations on the auto pact.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO GOVERNMENT AND INDUSTRY ON REMOVAL OF SAFEGUARDS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question on the first part of my previous question. May I ask the right hon. gentleman if the government has conferred with the automobile industry and the government of Ontario with regard to whether the actual outcome of the negotiations would in any way reduce the safeguards affecting the automobile industry.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has talked with the automobile industry in Canada at some length. As far as the Ontario government is concerned, there has been an exchange of correspondence between the two governments. I suggested that the government of Ontario might make their views known to us. There have already been meetings, and I am told that there will be a meeting between the ministers of Ontario and our government again next week.

OIL

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF NATIONAL POLICY IN VIEW OF ACTION TAKEN BY VENEZUELA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I wonder if the minister would indicate, on behalf of the government, that he will be prepared to make a statement to the House regarding the government's assessment of the action of the government of Venezuela in rapidly escalating taxes on oil for export to Canada. In light of the conclusions reached by the government, can he say whether the government will undertake a review of national oil policy, so as to assure a greater share of the Canadian market for Canadian oil?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to assure the hon. member that when the appropriate time comes for a statement to the House, it will be made. Of course, we are attempting to take into consideration all factors in the world in relation to oil and gas in the development of our own policy.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In assessing those conclusions, I wonder whether the minister would look at the effect on the Canadian economy, along with his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, resulting from the major price increase.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that that is a suggestion or a representation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COLD LAKE—FUTURE ARRANGEMENTS OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS FOR CHRISTMAS CELEBRATIONS

Mr. Thomas S. I would like to ask the minister whether members of his department are making preparations to help celebrate next Christmas on the top of the CNR tower or whether the minister has constructive steps in mind to bring about an end to the situation before that time?

• (2:50 p.m.)

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON—POSSIBLE AGREEMENT TO CEASE FISHING—ACTION AGAINST COUNTRIES REFUSING TO FOLLOW INTERNATIONAL CONSERVATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement by the Minister of the Environment on December 24 indicating that the high seas fishing of Atlantic salmon puts into grave question the survival of that fishery, will the minister advise what emergency steps Canada has taken to resolve this crisis?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been in constant discussion with the countries that are involved in the Atlantic salmon fishery. We are continuing these discussions. We are striving, of course, to see an end to high seas fishing of salmon, but we do not have any fleet that could prevent other countries from salmon fishing if they so decide.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question. In view of the action taken by the United States to prohibit fish imports from countries whose fishing operations diminish the effectiveness of international conservation programs, will the minister advise if Canada will be taking like action against these countries?

Mr. Sharp: I will take the suggestion under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

ATLANTIC SALMON—POSSIBLE INCLUSION IN TREATY WITH DENMARK—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question. Can the minister indicate whether the present discussions between Denmark and Canada involving the signing of a treaty have any reference to the present salmon fishing on the high seas? Also, will the minister assume his responsibility and table the documentation with regard to that particular treaty?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the treaty that has been initiated by the officials is that it deals with the phasing out of fishing operations in Canadian waters.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON RESEARCH BY FOREIGN SUBSIDIARIES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I would like to address a question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In light of the conclusion of a recent study of the Science Council of Canada on foreign investment that United States subsidiaries in Canada are restricted in their research and development, what new action is the government taking to require or encourage foreign owned subsidiaries to do more or at least a fair share of their research and development in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition asked a similar question last week, I stated I was studying the report of the Science Council and would be making recommendations to my colleagues in due course.

[Mr. Sharp.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INCREASED BOMBING BY UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the government express its regret at the serious escalation of the United States air strikes in North Viet Nam and the use of a monstrous weapon which is said to kill everything within 3,000 feet?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about the facts. Perhaps the hon. member is clearer than I am about the device that has been described in the newspapers today. In reply to his first question, I can say that we have publicly stated in the past that we condemn any action that may widen the war in Indo-China. I have no hesitation in again saying this with respect to the bombing operations in North Viet Nam.

TRANSPORT

MARITIME PROVINCES—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN CHARGES RESULTING FROM DARLING REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): My question is for the Minister of Transport. The minister has been receiving representations from various groups of individuals with regard to proposed increases and transportation costs in the Maritime Provinces early in the new year. Can the minister inform the House what action he has taken to date with regard to these representations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that offhand I cannot relate the hon. member's question directly to representations. Is the hon. member referring to some railway rate increase? Is this specifically what he is seeking?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to increases in demurrage charges and other things to take effect as a result of the Darling report early in the new year.

Mr. Jamieson: Here again, I have to say there has been no decision with regard to implementation of the Darling report. If any such action is contemplated, it is entirely separate from that. Perhaps the hon. member will be good enough to give me the details and I will look into them if, in fact, they have not been looked into already.

Mr. Coates: For clarification purposes, I wrote the minister and he sent me a reply, which he signed. He indicated that there was a committee in his office which was looking into that. I wonder if he will check into this with the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

DARLING REPORT—IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATION OFFSHORE DRILLING RIGS BE DESIGNATED CANADIAN PORTS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister give consideration to accepting the recommendation of the Darling report which would designate offshore drilling rigs as Canadian ports in an attempt to increase the Canadian labour content in the offshore exploration?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that the objectives the hon. member outlined are in themselves desirable. However, there are many other aspects of the Darling report. The question is whether we can put one part into effect without doing other things which might prove detrimental. That is why we asked for representations from all interested parties. When these are received and have been studied by the department, a policy will be announced in due course.

NEWCASTLE DISEASE—SOURCE OF OUTBREAK

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It is based on a press release of that department last Friday relative to Newcastle disease. Can the minister advise if the original source of the outbreak of Newcastle disease has been discovered and isolated?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice.

AIR TRANSPORT

CHARTER FLIGHTS—REQUEST FOR REFUSAL OF LANDING RIGHTS TO JOINT INTERNATIONAL AIRWAYS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): My question is for the Minister of Transport. It relates to another kind of hijacking. Are the minister, his department, his officials or the Canadian Transport Commission carrying out any investigation into the most recent air charter flight boondoggle, and, if he has not already done so, will he use his authority to prevent Joint International Airways landing rights in Canada until such time as they have reimbursed stranded passengers for funds and inconvenience.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if it is within the authority of either the Ministry of Transport or the government of Canada, I will be more than pleased to look at it in a very sympathetic way. Without having all the details, I am not at all certain whether this is a travel agency. If that is the case, it will come under provincial jurisdiction.

CHARTER FLIGHTS—MEASURES TO PREVENT LOSSES BY PASSENGERS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): A supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the minister inform the House and concerned Canadian citizens what steps, if any, his department will take to prevent such unconscionable operations from being continued in so far as charter flights are concerned?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what legislative authority exists, exists within the Department of Transport.

CHARTER FLIGHTS—ACTION TO PREVENT NEW AIRFARE CONSULTANTS FROM ENGAGING IN BUSINESS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Now that the ball has been thrown back to the Minister of Transport by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, will the minister state whether his department or the Canadian Transport Commission have authority to deal with New Airfare Consultants Incorporated, travel consultants on Yonge Street in Toronto, in a manner which would effectively prevent them from selling charter flights?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I cannot—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt very much whether the question is in order in any event.

CORN—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY ON STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. When representations were made to the minister on behalf of the corn industry with regard to the storage problem in Ontario, he indicated these representations would be considered. Can the minister now indicate whether a decision can be made regarding the storage problem and when may we expect an announcement in the House?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, a decision has not been reached. However, I can say that the government wishes to take some action to achieve the desired end result. The details have not been completely agreed on, but I hope we can make an announcement very soon because I realize some construction should be got under way.

CORN—POSSIBILITY OF USE BY WESTERN DISTILLERIES

Mr. Robert McKinley (Huron): A supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister looking into the possibility of arranging for the transportation of corn at reduced rates by rail from Ontario to the distilleries in the west rather than have them buy their corn from the United States.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we are looking at that suggestion at the moment.

MANPOWER

TRAINING PROGRAM—CRITICISM OF METHOD OF EVALUATING EFFECTIVENESS—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Bearing in mind the report tabled by the minister on December 10 purporting to show that the Canada manpower training program is highly effective, may I ask whether the hon. gentleman is aware of the criticism of the method of evaluation used by his department, as expressed by the Economic Council of Canada in its Eighth Annual Review.

Mr. Speaker: That question is not in order.

Mr. Nystrom: I had a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot ask a supplementary in these circumstances. He might try to rephrase the question. He knows it is not sufficient merely to ask whether a minister is aware of a certain situation.

Mr. Nystrom: Then I will ask the minister whether he will refer the question of the evaluation technique as used by his department to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration or to some other independent body—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: —to determine whether or not it is a proper way to evaluate the department's program.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am perfectly satisfied with the technique being used to evaluate the training program. I note that what the Economic Council did was to note an alternative way of doing the same thing. They did not disagree at all with our technique.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—ACTION TO EXPEDITE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour relating to the intolerable length of time taken to process certain claims for unemployment insurance benefits and to ask him whether he is aware of cases in the Montreal area, affecting the minister's own riding, where the waiting period has been as long as ten weeks. Does the department have a scheme ready to put into operation which would shorten this waiting period? I believe the minister has told us something will be done soon. Why has a statement not been made in this regard?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): The hon. member's question will be conveyed to the minister, who will be in the House tomorrow afternoon. It should be said, however, Mr. Speaker, that delays arise as a result of a number of circumstances. Sometimes they are the fault of the Commission, but many delays result from the inadequacy of records with respect to contributions from employers and employees. There is a great range of difficulties to be overcome in our effort to implement such a widely embracing plan as unemployment insurance today.

Mr. Alexander: I am glad the hon. member is finding out there are problems. Can the parliamentary secretary advise the House whether or not there is a plan ready for operation at this particular time which would expedite the processing of claims? The minister has indicated that there is such a plan. I should like an answer to that specific question. Otherwise, let us have some action tomorrow when the minister is here.

NATIONAL SECURITY

STATUS OF CO-ORDINATING AGENCY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the continuing interest in security matters, I should like to ask whether the hon. gentleman can inform us as to the current status of the co-ordinating agency or security organization which is supposed to augment the R.C.M.P. Has this force taken a formal place in the country's security organization? If not, when will it do so and under what terms of reference?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): I think that this is well known, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member wants to check Hansard, he will find in it all the information that he is looking for. If he wants to get any further information, he should put more specific questions.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF PLAN FOR RATIONALIZATION OF HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Is the minister able to say what position he has taken with regard to tabling or making public the grain handling and transportation studies which I believe he is supervising?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I said a few days ago when this question was last raised in the House, I had in mind further discussion at the official level with some of the interested provincial governments who have the reports and have been studying them. I consider this the next step before any decisions are taken with respect to this study area.

Mr. Burton: Since the contents of the report have been made available to the railway companies and the grain handling companies, does the minister not consider that farmers should have access to this information as well?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is argument. It is debate.

Hon. Otto Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The job vacancy survey which was released the other day is the first firm result of some very important work done by Statistics Canada for my department in an attempt to evaluate the job situation, the job demand situation, in Canada. The results of this work are being used within the department in a variety of ways. PRIVILEGE

MR. MARCEAU—LATE AUGUSTIN BRASSARD, FORMER MEMBER FOR LAPOINTE

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, a man whom many of us admired and esteemed for years in this House has just passed away tragically. The death of Augustin Brassard, who sat here with so much devotion, guilelessness and sincerity, brought back memories and moved the hearts of those who rubbed elbows with this very humane Quebecer whose stature and generosity will never be fully known because that prominent citizen was totally discreet.

Augustin Brassard devoted himself in difficult circumstances, at times to thankless jobs. He was one of those who give without demanding any guarantee whatsoever. The House will surely want to join with me in remembering this late colleague and offering his family our most sincere condolences.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that questions of privilege, even in exceptional circumstances such as this one, cannot be raised without notice. The hon. member could have given notice to the Chair, as required by the Standing Orders.

In any event, I agree that these are very special circumstances.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 29, consideration of Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1, 5 and 22 (Mr. Horner).

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on with the debate! Let joy be unconfined today. We are back here because the government obviously is in some doubt as to the value of the program contained in Bill C-176, which in the last Parliament had a very undignified and unhappy career in the name of Bill C-197.

I want to support the amendments which appear in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I do so in spite of the fact that the government has made a proposal which, if accepted, will go a long distance toward removing the offensive and repugnant features of this bill as it stands today. We have also proposed an additional change, the exclusion of cattle and cattle producer, which we think will take the bill even further and make it still better. It appears to me, however, that we are engaged in debating the bill as it was originally introduced into this House, and reprinted following the committee meeting, so I have to deal with it on that basis.

Despite the fact that there are aspects of this bill which are not attractive to us, we still believe it is a bill with which we could live if it contained the amendments which have been proposed; but we have to proceed on the basis that this may not happen and as if we were dealing with the bill in the form in which it was reprinted.

What is the purpose of the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot? At the time he conceived them—and they are honourably born—we were in a very serious situation with regard to certain actions by some provinces of Canada which were tending toward the balkanization of this country. There was, Mr. Speaker, an action pending in the courts of the province of Quebec with respect to which this government did not have the intestinal fortitude to appear and to make representations and ask to be represented by counsel at that time. We had reason to believe that for political purposes this government was prepared to stand by and allow the benefits of the federal system to go down the drain. That is one of the main reasons why the hon. member for Crowfoot has introduced his amendments.

Mr. Horner: We asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) about it.

Mr. Baldwin: As my friend the hon. member for Crowfoot has said, we asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) on numerous occasions what he was going to do, and we also asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what the government was going to do. As usual we were met with dissimulation, divisiveness and delay—the three "D's" upon which this government is founded, especially at question time.

It is principally for these reasons that the hon. member for Crowfoot has moved the amendments. We all know what happened. At a later stage the province of Manitoba enacted legislation which was challenged. Ultimately it arrived at the Supreme Court of Canada, and as the government could no longer exercise its delaying tactic it was challenged by members of this party to appear at that court and take a position. Up to that time it had shown no indication at all of its constitutional responsibility with regard to this matter.

I do not think it will do us any harm at this time to pause for a moment and look at the situation which could have developed and to look at the situation upon which these amendments were predicated.

The federal structure in a country such as Canada means more than language, geography and national unity; it is a great movement toward permitting the free flow of goods and services and people from one end of the country to the other. Without that this is not—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Baldwin: I see one of the marketable products from Manitoba—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for St. Boniface rising on a point of order?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the hon. member for Peace River is giving us an historical background, or is he speaking to the amendment?

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Ricard: That is up to you to decide.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask you—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we might have one point of order at a time. If the hon. member would allow the Chair, the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface was to suggest that the member who has the floor is not addressing his remarks to the motion. My understanding is that the hon. member was making general introductory remarks, which is quite normal. I do not think that up to this point his remarks were out of order or irrelevant. The hon. member knows, as we all do, what is before the House, namely certain specific motions. The hon. member for Peace River will, I am sure, allude to these motions in the course of his remarks and make them relevant to his remarks.

The hon. member for St. John's East was rising?

Mr. McGrath: Since you have ruled, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to raise my point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: I thank the hon. member for St. Boniface who should himself be on a marketable quota of nil.

The amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot relate specifically to the question of the country as a whole being brought within the confines of this bill, and they aim at trying to prevent the divisiveness which would come about through that part of the bill that divides areas of Canada for the purpose of marketing plans into regions. The amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot are definitely aimed at preventing this.

For this reason, and to lay the foundation for support of these proposals, I say to this House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that anything which could have a divisive or detrimental effect by stopping, easing or preventing the free flow of goods and services and people from one part of this land to the other will result in grave damage being done to our federal structure. Without the amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot the bill could have this particular effect.

Now, of course, it is true that, as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Manitoba reference, to some extent this danger has been averted. When we remember what happened in the United States, which became a tremendously wealthy and progressive country in a very limited time owing to the fact that it had its own common market, and when we see what has happened in countries belonging to the European Common Market and what will doubtless happen in those which are shortly to be brought into the Common Market, we see the benefits which flow from the free movement of goods and services, people and money. While there may be a place for marketing legislation of some kind, it is the responsibility of every member of this House to ensure that legislation of this kind will not have, and cannot have, this divisive, detrimental effect. This is why I and other members of our party support these particular amendments.

I would point out that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada was very welcome in this House and in all parts of Canada. It immediately had some effect in bringing to an end increasing economic divisions between different parts of Canada and the kind of Balkanization which is bound to be dangerous to the survival of our federal structure.

But there is far more than this involved in this particular bill. The case in the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of the Manitoba reference was decided on the simple ground that no provincial legislature has any right to legislate with regard to matters which constitute the regulation of trade and commerce. So far, so good. That has now been established beyond any question of doubt. But we must go beyond that and deal with the danger this legislation in its present form presents.

How did the people who wrote our Constitution attempt to ensure that there would be this freedom of movement within Canada? They did so through section 121 of the British North America Act. Just to refresh our memories I shall read this very short section. It states:

> All articles of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any one of the Provinces shall, from and after the Union, be admitted free into each of the other Provinces.

There have been a number of decisions which do not bear directly on that particular section but which have had some interpretative effect in the minds of judges, both of the Supreme Court of Canada and of the Privy Council when that body had jurisdiction to entertain appeals from Canada. I shall not go into this at this time, but I would point out, through you, Sir, to the members of the House that in the case of Murphy v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, decided by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1958, it was suggested by the judges of the court that Section 121 of the British North America Act applies not only to prevent provinces but also the federal government from dealing with the free flow of goods and property from one part of the country to another.

I want to read to the House part of the judgment of one of the most distinguished judges, a former member of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Rand. As reported at page 638 of 1958 Supreme Court Reports, Mr. Justice Rand made certain comments. The case, which hon. members may recall, was a test case in which Mr. Murphy had attempted to impugn the validity of the provisions of the Wheat Board Act by shipping a small quantity of grain from Manitoba, I believe, into British Columbia. The decision went against him but there were some very interesting comments made at that time. Mr. Justice Rand said:

> The main contention was that the legislation and regulations infringed section 121 of the Act of 1867 . . .

Then he quoted the said section and went on to say:

> Assuming this section to be applicable equally to action by Dominion and province, is the charge exacted as a condition of the shipment an impediment to that free passage for which the section provides? Viewing it in isolation, as a hindrance to interprovincial trade detached from all other aspects, the demand bears the appearance of a violation. Apart from matters of purely local and private concern, this country is one economic unit; . . .

I commend those words to members of the government opposite as something they seem to have forgotten; that is, that this country is one economic unit. One of the main purposes of confederation is precisely that. Mr. Justice Rand continued:

—in freedom of movement its business interests are in an extra-provincial dimension, and, among other things, are deeply involved in trade and commerce between and beyond provinces.

—"Free," in section 121, means without impediment related to the traversing of a provincial boundary.

These words I particularly commend to hon. members.

—If, for example, Parliament—

This is not a province, this is Parliament.

—attempted to equalize the competitive position of a local grower of grain in British Columbia with that of one in Saskatchewan by imposing a charge on the shipment from the latter representing the difference in production costs, its validity would call for critical examination. That result would seem also to follow if Parliament, for the same purpose, purported to fix the price at which grain grown in Saskatchewan could be sold in or for delivery in British Columbia.

When we come to examine this particular bill, in clause 2 we find a definition of "marketing plan" which, in my opinion, could bring a proposal in the form of a plan submitted by Order in Council squarely within the restrictions which according to Mr. Justice Rand might well be unconstitutional just as much for the federal government as for a province. Clause 2(e)(iii) provides that:

(iii) the marketing of the regulated product on a basis that enables the agency that is implementing the plan to fix and determine the quantity, if any, in which the regulated product or any variety, class or grade thereof may be marketed in interprovincial or export trade by each person engaged in such marketing thereof and by all persons so engaged, and the price, time and place at which the regulated product or any variety, class or grade thereof may be so marketed;

I repeat the words "the price, time and place at which the regulated product or any variety, class or grade thereof may be marketed". There is a clear indication contained in this definition of marketing plan that an agency may establish a price and means of sale, which would mean that a product—and I do not care what it is, whether apples, potatoes, chickens or what have you—grown in one province could be marketed under the structure of the marketing plan in some other province with an artificial price gauged by the difference between the cost of production in the two provinces.

I suggest to you, Sir, and through you to members of the House, that in the mind of Mr. Justice Rand this would clearly bring into question and challenge the constitutionality of this plan. It is for this reason that any doubt as to the right of any province to engage in marketing programs which infringe on the federal government's right to deal with trade and commerce by means of regulation is now set completely at rest. There is no right in a provincial government to engage in activities which, in the province of Manitoba, the province of Quebec, the province of Ontario or in any other province, prevent the free flow of trade. That now has been clearly defined.

However, we still have this other consideration to take into account, and it is for this reason that I welcome the amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and debate on this subject. It is not a technical matter which is peculiar only to lawyers. Surely all of us in this House must be very anxious and greatly concerned about the promotion of the freest possible flow of trade between the different parts of Canada. Surely we are interested in seeing that the legislation is not ultra vires, that it is legislation which cannot be challenged.

I suggest that if this bill were passed in its current form we would be authorizing the government to establish by Order in Council an agency with a marketing plan which could very easily involve proposals which would be in violation of the Constitution. Therefore I welcome these amendments and the proposal of the government to take out of the bill all the supply management features, which in my mind would do away with the possibility of this sort of situation arising. We would still include poultry products and eggs.

I would think that if the amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot are defeated, and if the government goes ahead, enacts this bill in its present form in defiance of what I have said, a bill that I am sure a great many constitutionalist lawyers will say is of doubtful validity, and proceeds to establish a marketing plan which flies directly in the face of the statements made by Mr. Justice Rand, then the government will be challenged, the marketing plan will be challenged, and the agency will be challenged. And we in this House will have a great deal of responsibility to bear for allowing passage of legislation of this kind without looking at this very important issue.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I recognize that if this country is going to grow and prosper there is need to provide for an over-all marketing program. But in devising the individual programs, I say that we must exercise the greatest care to ensure that what we do will pass muster as being part of the federal structure leading to greater prosperity, unity, and the cohesion of all parts of Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say how surprised I am that we are back here between Christmas and New Year's discussing this bill, particularly when the Senate Hansard indicates that that chamber is not coming back until the middle of February, although subject to recall in January or later this week. Obviously they are not too concerned about this bill but will be available to deal with it.

This bill has been with us for a long time. It was with us in the form of Bill C-197 several years ago. It has been with us for some time as Bill C-176. I think many hon. members are unfamiliar with it, but in my experience it is the most amended bill I have ever dealt with in Parliament. Last year the committee travelled across the country with the bill and collected a sheaf of amendments. And wherever we went the minister or his representatives kept on saying, "We are going to amend this particular section, or that particular section. We don't intend to implement it as it is; you have to read the amendments in conjunction with the bill." In January, 1972, we will be looking at a new batch of amendments connected with this bill. The amendments now on the order paper are not necessarily the last word on this measure.

It should also be borne in mind that the changes which are being made, including the amendment we are debating, are fundamental to the operation of the family farm. In this connection may I say I was pleased to read in last Saturday's edition of the Ottawa Citizen an article by a writer, Paul Grescoe, entitled "Goodbye to the family farm". This article was particularly interesting in light of the debate on this bill and the amendments, and I would like to quote two or three paragraphs from it. It reads, in part:

Canada—which once brought thousands of immigrants from Europe to farm the land and build the country—is now allowing its family farms to die.

And their death is being officially encouraged by the federal government.

Ottawa wants to ease small, low income farmers off their land. The Financial Times recently explained the government's reasoning: the federal Department of Agriculture believes that Canada can support no more than 150,000 farms, this means that 250,000 farms must go.

That underlines our fear about passing this bill, and that is the reason for the hon. member's amendment. We are interested in those 250,000 farmers. Where do they go? As long ago as six or seven years I saw letters from leaders of the Liberal party indicating it was their intention to eliminate the small family farm, and to turn agriculture in Canada into an economic agribusiness.

With respect to the first amendment dealing with the removal of a number of products, I must ask who is making all the fuss about the products. It is not the little farmer who does not have much say in any marketing structure: it is those who are producing in an agribusiness, and in many cases over-producing.

One of the former speakers who just made a comment is one of those who got into trouble by overproduction in the free enterprise system, who produced until the price went down and until his own friends went out of business. I am told the same thing would have happened to him had he not found an advantageous sale and managed to overcome his difficulties. We have to decide who will be served by this bill.

If 250,000 farmers are moved off the farm the argument will be made that it is because their holdings are uneconomic. As pointed out in this article part of which I quoted, the average income from that class of farm across Canada is $2,800. This is a disgrace because it means we would be paying them welfare in the cities. They are living on farms because they have decided this is a good way of life. They have clean air, fresh vegetables and many of the advantages of a quiet, slow moving life. They live there in dignity and raise their families in dignity. We have moved them into the cities because we cannot keep them in the rural economy. There are no jobs for them in the cities, yet they cannot stay on the farms.

If you move them into the city they will have to live on an income of $4,000, in poverty and with no personal dignity. There is no future for them there. Who will be left on the farms? Kraft will be left on the farms, where it will have control of the cheese industry in this count through its own form of marketing legislation. Kraft is in a position to buy cheese in the area from the wholesaler at 80 cents a pound, which is one cent more than the price of butter in that area. I suggest that that is unreasonable. You can produce twice as much cheese from butterfat as you produce butter; therefore the conclusion is that Kraft has raised the price of that commodity to the consumer in an unreasonable way.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this might be a good point at which to interrupt the hon. member. I confess I am not sure to what extent the remarks he is making now are related to the motion before the House. It may well be that they are. The hon. member has a knowledge of agricultural matters which is second to none, and certainly much greater than mine, and perhaps as he pursues his remarks he will indicate how his comments are related to the motion now before us.

Mr. Peters: I shall be pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the argument is complicated, but the amendment removes from the plan such things as animals, meats, eggs, poultry, wool, maple products, honey and any part of any such product. The producer would have no control over any part of any such commodity as maple, sugar, hams, bacon, cheese or butter, because the bill says "any part of any such product". I presume cheese and butter are by-products of animals, and if we remove these we will only be controlling farm products, meaning any natural products of agriculture. Obviously we are not referring to bacon and pork, and we would not be talking about cheese and butter, because these are by-products of animals or natural products of agriculture. In themselves they are not natural products although they might be referred to as products of the cottage industry.

I singled out the Kraft Company because it is agribusiness at its best. Certainly everybody can use different examples. In the province of Quebec farm representatives are not talking about farmers, they are talking about Granby Co-op. They are talking about the monopoly which that particular organization has now in the province of Quebec. They can go into the broiler industry and can put it completely on the rocks, as they did, or they can go into any of the other fields, because they have a vertically integrated operation which bears no relationship to the family farm.

The point that I am making is that while that may be good business for the Liberal party, while they may believe in agribusiness and in large farms being good and size being the prime requirement—

Mr. Mazankowski: No.

Mr. Peters: My hon. friend says "no". Let me read an article that reveals what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) said about it before he became minister. Eight years ago he hinted at what was to become of the federal government's policy to kill Canada's small farm units. He is now minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, but when he was law professor speaking to graduates of agriculture at the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon he had this to say:

"The family farm is not entitled to subsidy," he said. "Should those living on farms be subsidized by non farmers to bring their economic level to that of non farmers? Clearly not. The farmers are receiving non economic benefits to make up the difference."

The benefits, he suggested, include "independence, fresh air, quiet and privacy and the intimacy of neighbourliness ..."

This is what he is going to give them. They will get independence, free air, quiet, privacy, and the intimacy of neighbourliness where you know all your neighbours well. Lately the minister has not been speaking about those benefits, but the federal government has bluntly informed family farmers that they can no longer expect to be subsidized. The big farm cannot be run economically any longer. My point is that we should not remove these products from clause 2 of the bill.

Earlier today I was asked whether I did not believe that any price increase for the farmer would mean a price increase for the consumer. I say that that is true, that if the farmer receives more money, then obviously the consumer will have to pay a higher price. But I suggest that in the case of agribusiness the farmer may not get one cent more, though the consumer will have to pay a great deal more for his commodity. In the case of milk, which is a natural product which would be left in, if you produce butterfat from it you should be able to produce twice as much cheese from the same amount of butterfat as you produce butter.

However, what happens when agribusiness gets hold of it? There are as yet some butter factories around the country. As a matter of fact, the little butter companies are trying to buy butter from the government. They cannot obtain enough cream in their area to produce butter so they are buying butter from the government, which is stored in the province of Quebec in the city of Montreal. However, they have no control over the cheese industry, which is now big business. If Kraft is getting competition from them it buys them out, and this is true of other companies, including General Foods. They buy out the little producer and the little industry. They have raised the price of cheese until it is higher than the price of butter, although it takes twice as much butterfat to make butter as it does to make cheese. That is what agribusiness does, and the consumer continues to pay more money.

Mr. Mazankowski: Let us hear something original.

Mr. Peters: That is original, and it is a fact that has been stated by many agronomists over a long period of time. This is the first time in my memory that there has been an unreasonable relationship between the price of butter and the price of cheese. The hon. member probably comes from an area which does not produce either butter or cheese, and therefore he is not aware of this fact; but it is a fact, and it seems to me that this is something that even those members who do not come from agricultural producing areas should consider. Although a family farm operated at a very low return, and had the privileges and benefits to which the Minister of Manpower and Immigration referred, namely fresh air, privacy and the friendliness of neighbours, it was also provided with enough money to develop the farming industry of this nation. The family farmer sent his children to school, and some of them are now Members of Parliament. We have been able to develop a social structure in much of Canada that has been under a rural economy.

[Mr. Peters.]

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill carries, the benefits for those in the agribusiness will be bountiful and substantial. If this bill carries, it will suit admirably the purposes of agribusiness in Canada. It will give that industry as much flexibility as people now enjoy when buying an automobile—a Ford, a Chev. or a Chrysler product. There was not much competition in this field, because the price to be paid has been agreed to. When Japanese car exports hit this country, their effect was such that the big three automobile manufacturers went to the Canadian government and got a 15 per cent increase in the tariff protecting them. I do not suggest that was bad. Perhaps that was necessary for the economy of this country. However, I suggest that if four or five big companies can control the automobile business in Canada and set prices, the same could be true of other products. For instance, members from Quebec could cite examples in addition to the two I cited to show that natural maple products might be affected by this bill. In many parts of Ontario as well people enjoy the fruits of the maple tree, so to speak.

Most of us do not eat oats, wheat or the other grain cereals unless they have been processed. It is fairly easy to roll oats; you can do that at home. Nevertheless, even though the "health nuts" may prefer them in the raw state, teeth do decay and it is necessary for some of us to eat processed cereals. There is little relation between the five pound bag of flour that your wife buys in the store and the five pound bag of wheat that was used to manufacture that flour. The price of the flour bears no relation to the price of the wheat, although the flour is produced from the wheat.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I must do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, this is an unexpected privilege that I had not anticipated.

An hon. Member: You can speak now for 24 hours, if you wish.

Mr. Peters: I realize that. May I point out that in establishing this marketing legislation we are doing something that will benefit the entire farming industry. I believe that the Department of Agriculture believes, and believes sincerely, that we cannot have 400,000 farmers in Canada. I also believe that the federal Department of Agriculture does not expect to wait for the normal process of attrition to eliminate 250,000 of our farmers. It wants to hasten the process by legislation.

I have always believed in marketing legislation. My father originally set up in northern Ontario as well as in southern Ontario milk marketing boards. Over the years he negotiated many of the fluid milk marketing contracts in those areas and consequently over a period of time the fluid milk producer in Ontario ranked fairly high in the agricultural industry. When we set up the Canadian Dairy Commission and went into the industrial milk field, and when we said that milk could be taken from the fluid milk field and applied to the industrial milk field, and vice versa, it had taken us 25 years to reach that point. We said that farmers in the seventies will need to buy great bulk tanks. Farmers will need milk boilers and great stanchion barns. All these the farmers will need to meet higher health standards in Canada. The result was that the little farmer owning only five or ten cows did not think that the required $20,000 investment in his operation was worth while; consequently, he went out of business. I know that we said that he only needed to have 480 pounds of butterfat and that this could be secured from the production of two or three good cows. However, the little farmer did not have two or three good cows, or the bulk tank or the barn. Since his cattle was of poor quality, he felt it was necessary for him to go into the production of other commodities.

In the last few years we have attempted to control the production and sale of broilers and poultry. I believe that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will, after an amendment to a certain bill has been proclaimed, be able to exercise control over eggs or poultry products. At least, that is what some think the effect of the legislation will be. I suggest that it is not quite that simple. What will we have done by passing that legislation? We all agree that we cannot force that kind of legislation on a province. We decided that, and it is not true to say that the Supreme Court made that decision. We just have not taken that matter to the Supreme Court for its advice. At any rate, we admit that the provinces will need to make a decision in this field. At the same time, we are sitting here during a period when civil servants who sometimes think they are not well treated are on holiday, and we are discussing this bill. Our specific purpose is to include eggs and poultry in it.

Hearings were held in Ontario to decide whether there should be an egg marketing board set up in Ontario. This was some time ago. After the hearings, a vote was taken, and that vote was overwhelmingly against the establishment of such a board. A number of years later a vote was again taken on this subject, and again the idea of a board was turned down. It was subsequently decided to withdraw this matter from the political arena and establish a commission. Judge Ross was appointed and went around the province. He was in Ottawa about a week ago last Monday and held a hearing. I was not present, but I gather that it was not much different from the hearing that had been held in London, and is similar to the one that will be held in Toronto.

People at all those hearings did not agree on the establishment of boards. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Surely everyone assumes that the guy who is producing eggs will support the establishment of a board controlling them. This sounds fairly reasonable. Why did not those people support such boards? I suggest the reason is that the owners of hens really would vote on a board.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Who owns the hens? A half dozen people own the majority of the hens in Ontario.

An hon. Member: The feed companies.

Mr. Peters: As the hon. member points out, it is the feed companies. They have nothing to do with this. They only have a vertically integrated operation. In many cases the egg producer is being paid on a similar basis to that in the province of Quebec where the producer is paid 10 cents a bird to produce broilers. Everyone knows he is the hired man of the feed company.

We are not talking about the person who peddles his eggs on the street. The person I am talking about is the one who buys his eggs or has a few hens at home, where he and his wife are conducting a small operation and he peddles his eggs around town. He will not be hurt by a board. He can still peddle his eggs, legally or illegally. People can come from town to his farm, if the price is right and buy eggs. The people bothered about a board are those on the small end of the operation.

A person in Ontario stated to the commission that the day a board is created for eggs, someone will be a millionaire because he will have a quota of over $1 million. It will not change anything else. Surely that is not what we want to accomplish, unless we agree with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), the Department of Agriculture and the former law professor from Saskatoon. We are not interested in eliminating the family farms in Canada.

Mr. Olson: Neither are we.

Mr. Peters: I do not see why we should put the farmer off the farm, bring him into the city and put him on welfare. He has a job to do and he does it. It is true, in many cases, that his farm is inefficient. His marketing is inefficient. Why are we aiming to get him off the land at any price?

Mr. Faulkner: That is pure nonsense. Stop inventing the stuff.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says that is pure nonsense. When an NDP government was elected in Manitoba, what was one of the first things it had to do? This government has been going around giving away money. It will give a farmer $50,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Timiskaming can relate his remarks to the amendment before the House. Without being critical, I suggest that maybe he should do so.

Mr. Faulkner: This is pure garbage.

Mr. Peters: What are we asked to do in this amendment? We are dealing with all farm products. We are asked to limit those farm products and to remove by-products of agriculture. I think it is perfectly in order to indicate that the small producers in this country are being eliminated. They will not be able to compete. This clause refers to any natural product of agriculture. Basically, we are talking about produce in its natural state. If this is what is left, I think everyone will agree that agribusiness will be the only form of agricultural production in this country.

There will be a period of transition. The hon. member does not believe that, but the facts speak for themselves. He need only look at the Canadian Dairy Commission to see the results of that act on the western farmers. This was not done because it was necessary, but because we did not put in the necessary limitations. The Minister of Agriculture is now going back to put in some of the limitations that should have already been there.

I am in order to speak about these matters because they bear directly on this amendment. Your Honour even suggested that we take this amendment in conjunction with amendments 5 and 22, which are fairly broad amendments. I am aware of the courtesy of the House in extending my time and I do not intend to take advantage of that, but I must state that we are not only concerned about this bill but about the effects of it.

The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) should look at the record. I heartily recommend to him this article which appeared in the Montreal Star, the Ottawa Citizen, and a number of magazines. I think it is quite factual. It states exactly what would happen to a small farm operation in a small community. I fear that thousands of people across Canada will think we are changing the whole rural game. For this reason, we should give very serious consideration to every amendment to this bill. If this bill is passed, it should be the most considered and advantageous bill possible.

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this bill has received much discussion over the past number of months and I am certainly pleased to have had the opportunity to participate in the debate. This legislation constitutes a very big change in the agricultural industry, one which I feel is most necessary if the agricultural industry is going to survive within the society we live in today.

We must look at the way all other organizations exist. Regardless of what type of work you do, you are organized by your members for the benefit of those who are involved. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) referred to the fact that 250,000 farmers must go. It appears that each time someone is paid to write a report on agriculture, it automatically becomes government policy. It is obvious that the hon. member has not read the small farms development program which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) very recently announced. If, after reading this, he still believes it is the government's plan to remove people from the farms, then I suggest he has the wrong understanding of this legislation. The sole desire of this legislation is to have as many producers as possible operate in an economic unit.

The amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) proposes the removal of beef and veal products from clause 2. In considering this, I have to ask myself several questions. Who is covered in the bill and who is not? How does one qualify? What must one do to take advantage of the bill? We have gone through this many times, Mr. Speaker. Whether you are listed in the bill or not listed is not important. If any commodity group that is organized asks to come within this bill, no government will deny them this opportunity.

We must remember that this is permissive legislation designed for those who choose to use it. How does one qualify to operate under this bill? Most of us are quite familiar with the procedure that must be followed. There must be marketing boards in the provinces which are interested in the program. They in turn must agree to establish a national marketing board. The contents of the legislation are solely for the purpose of their operations once they have established the plan under which they choose to operate. The plan they choose, design and draft themselves is far more important than what is in this present legislation.

These are the controls which are to be imposed on any organization. The producers themselves will decide. Some people say they will not have the opportunity, but I say it is provided in the bill that should any area of Canada which produces a significant amount of the commodity referred to choose not to establish a national marketing plan, there is no way in which a plan can be established. It is obvious they must get agreement before a plan can be presented for approval.

Now I must look at what this bill can do for producers. In discussing agricultural commodities there are two areas of concern. There are those who are producing in a surplus position, and those who are producing not in a surplus position. Those who are producing in a surplus position are definitely asking us to pass this legislation. It is important that these people be organized and have some control over the production of their products, how the product is handled and what price they can get for it. These are the only people who can make those decisions.

As far as a product which is being produced but is not in surplus is concerned, there are quite a few of these but they are diminishing each year. These people have a different area to serve. First, how do they prevent themselves from getting into a surplus position? There are certain areas to which they must give consideration. I refer to such things as market research. There are many areas of market research which in my estimation should be explored in a manner in which they are not being explored today. For example, I have heard there is a potential market for pork in Japan. The federal government, through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has explored this possibility and has been successful in getting some of the barriers removed so that we may ship pork there. A boatload of pork was shipped to Japan to see how the Japanese people liked our product.

Once a market is established, who takes over the job of assuring that we keep this market? I say that once we capture a market and get into the business of supply management a commodity group is the most likely body to handle affairs. I know this is a contentious point because supply management works both ways. Once you establish a market you must guarantee that you will produce sufficient of the product to supply that market, and this is as important as any other control.

There have been requests that import controls be included in this legislation, and that commodity groups should be given a measure of control over imports. It is obvious that if any one commodity group were given control over the import of the product it produced, it would immediately stop that product from coming in, and hon. members know the chain reaction which would then take place.

There are many opportunities for the government to work with commodity groups. This is apparent from some of the actions taken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in the last while. When you are dealing with an organization which speaks for all the producers who are producing that commodity, and you get the same story for them all, it is possible for the government to act. But if you get one answer from one area and another from another area, it is difficult for anyone to establish policy and work for the benefit of that commodity group.

Let me refer to some of the organizations which have sprung up already. There is EXCAN, an organization of people interested in the grain industry. They organized for the purpose of finding new markets, finding better ways of handling grain, and every day you hear favourable comments about the progress these people have made. These are people directly involved in the industry who are engaged in the promotion and sale of their products. In the oilseed industry and the rapeseed industry a tremedous job has been done in establishing a market and providing the product for it. Then there is the work of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association.

Mr. Horner: And the cattle industry.

Mr. Cobbe: And the cattle industry, I agree. But the cattle industry, I hope, will be national.

Mr. Horner: They have a national board.

Mr. Cobbe: We have a national board.

Mr. Horner: A national association.

Mr. Cobbe: We have to set up an association involving everybody who is producing. Then these people can make great strides in the industry. The Palliser Wheat Growers recently worked with the government in providing a unit train which was a tremendous success. This is what people in an industry can do to help their own industry grow.

In considering a proposal to remove beef and veal products from the bill I become concerned because I feel there are a lot of ways in the bill any commodity group could operate without having any supply management. Hon. members are familiar with the proposal which I understand was discussed and agreed to by nine of the ten provincial ministers of agriculture, that being a possibility that beef and veal products be removed from clause 18, which deals with supply management, but be allowed to come within the rest of the bill. I think many people would agree with this. I think the people I have spoken to in the beef industry would do so.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member's speech but he inferred that nine out of ten of the agriculture ministers agreed to exclude cattle from the provisions of clause 18. That was not the agreement according to my understanding and I should not let his assertion go unchallenged. I am certain he knows better, and that the Minister of Agriculture knows better.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order. That is a matter of debate between hon. members.

Mr. Cobbe: On that point, it is my understanding that this was agreed to by nine out of ten ministers. The minister from the province of Manitoba did not agree with this, as he has other ideas of how control should be placed. But those are his opinions. When you get nine out of ten ministers agreeing—

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: To what? What was their agreement?

Mr. Cobbe: —to something which had arisen and something which we have not been able to deal with, I hope the House will consider the possibility of the minister introducing another amendment. I know this requires the unanimous consent of the House, but I think consideration must be given to it. If beef and veal are to be removed from any part of this bill, I think the only part that should be removed from is clause 18. I know there is a problem in establishing who is a producer, who gets a vote and how many votes. These are things over which we do not have control as they are handled by producers and the provincial governments, but I feel that they can resolve these questions and I am confident that they will resolve them.

I would ask hon. members to give very serious consideration to finding an amendment which would permit the removal of beef and veal producers from the supply-management portion of this bill.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): In rising to participate in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I want to go on record as supporting the amendments proposed by my colleague from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I believe that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) outlined in very valid terms some of the reasons why the amendments should be supported, particularly those relating to the movement of goods interprovincially in such a way that we would have an unimpeded flow of agricultural products to all provinces.

We have heard a great deal in this country about unity. Certainly I believe that one of the prime requirements for national unity is the fundamental objective of economic unity. It is of the utmost importance that we have free movement not only of agricultural products but manufactured products as well across interprovincial boundaries.

Another amendment deals with the definition of a farm product as it relates to the objective of this bill. In this area I think we could allay the fears of those who have expressed concern over the fact that this could be coercive legislation if the amendment proposed by my hon. friend were accepted.

Some hon. members opposite have objected to the openendedness of this debate. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that we are dealing with one of the fundamentals of this bill—the definition of farm products and an amendment to a marketing plan. It is in this context that we have to debate these amendments, bearing in mind that the objects of the bill are ostensibly designed to promote an efficient, competitive agricultural industry.

As has been pointed out by other hon. members, this bill has been with us for almost two years. One might ask why we need more amendments. The answer is very simple. This Bill is a classic example of the government's inability to manage effectively its program of legislation. There have been so many examples of this legislative mismanagement that the government should have learned its lesson by now. Even after almost two years this legislation has not gained general acceptance across the country, and one would expect that any sane government would abandon it and make another attempt by introducing a properly drafted well defined measure. The bill is ill-conceived, poorly drafted, was presented to the public full of distortion, complete with misleading facts and grave misrepresentations.

To this point, some 30 amendments have been introduced. This is similar in nature to the grains bill, Bill C-275, which required some 40 amendments before it was half-workable, and to the stabilization bill, Bill C-244, wherein the government displayed its intransigence, its contempt for the law and the Parliament of this country. It is also similar in nature to Bill C-207, the government reorganization bill with its sweeping powers, and to the Auditor General's bill, which was withdrawn. I must also mention Bill C-259, the tax reform bill, which was forced through this House by closure.

The bill before us is no different from the bills I have cited, Mr. Speaker. Because the bill has been around for a long time the majority of producers who will be affected by its contents are becoming more and more alarmed by its implications. In spite of the clear manifestation of non-acceptance across this country, substantiated by the ruling of the Supreme Court, the government continues to pursue this piece of legislation and will probably use every conceivable method to put it through, whether that be by closure, coercion or some other method.

The sad fact about this particular piece of legislation and other pieces of farm legislation is that the government has removed itself completely from the realities of agriculture. The major problem facing farmers today is not overproduction; it is simply that they need a raise in pay. They need to derive more income for their efforts, having invested capital to produce foodstuffs for this country and the export market. They simply need more money in order to eke out a living and survive.

They do not need a union, as was suggested by my hon. friend from Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—and I shall have something to say about that, Mr. Speaker. As cost of production continues to rise even though the method of production is being streamlined and is becoming more efficient, farm incomes are remaining relatively static. This type of situation makes it a haven for the integrator, for corporate monopoly processors, food companies and so on, to take over. They alone will capitalize on this type of environment.

This bill only sets out to simplify the transitional process by expediting the removal of the small farm operation from the land and placing it firmly in the control of monopolistic corporations. If we are to place any credence on the minister's declaration to the National Farmers Union meeting recently in Winnipeg that the small family farm is an asset and a desirable unit, then I suggest immediate steps must be taken to increase the net return to all farmers, not just to a select group of corporate structures.

A look at what has happened in the past few years reveals that the farm products index has risen from a level of 100, as established in 1961, to a level of 113.1 in 1971, a period of ten years. In the past three years the realized net income has been reduced by some 45 or 50 per cent. The cost price squeeze is having a tremendous effect on the life blood of the small farm community. These people will be forced to retire to an enforced retirement program of the sort enunciated by the minister in his small farm development program.

The government's answer to this is simply to help the big operators get bigger and to heck with the small fellow. In this bill, and in the various measures introduced, the concept of more efficiency is advocated. To me more efficiency means the provision of more goods and services at lower prices.

Let us look at what happens in other sectors. I do not have the figures for the whole of Canada, but in Alberta wages and salaries since 1967 have increased by 30 per cent. Correspondingly net income has been reduced by 44 per cent in the farm sector, while the cost of living index has increased something in the area of 13 per cent. At the same time, the commodity index relating to input in the agricultural industry has increased by some 14 per cent. This simply means we must take steps to improve the net income position of our farmers in Canada.

This bill does not set out to do this. There is nothing in the bill to indicate any measure of collective bargaining. There is nothing in this bill to establish a two-price system. Why is there nothing of this nature in the bill if it purports to establish an efficient, competitive and viable farm industry? Surely there should be some provision in this bill which for once allows the producer to dictate to the consumer his suggested selling price.

The bill, rather than putting the squeeze on the producer, should incorporate into its provisions adequate income maintenance and adequate returns for labour and investment. I know the incorporation of a two-price system for wheat involves a political decision, but certainly to ask for a realistic two-price system for a commodity such as wheat would not be asking for the impossible. Why cannot there be a system of protective devices for agriculture such as prevail in the European Common Market countries? It strikes me there should be such devices in this bill. But unlike agricultural policies in the European Common Market, the policies of this government are moving away from protective provisions for the primary producer, while all the other major agricultural producers in other countries are moving in the other direction. This government is asking the primary producer to be efficient, to be viable, to compete in international markets and to purchase his input in a protective Canadian market.

I do not believe it would be asking too much to incorporate some protective devices into our system so that the farmers can realize an adequate income from their effort and investment, something which continues to be increasingly difficult. A number of people have argued that this bill will give farmers the same opportunity to negotiate and to organize as the unions. I see nothing of this sort provided for. I simply say that this bill will strangle the opportunity of young people and old who wish to engage in the business of agricultural production.

The hon. member for Portage (Mr. Cobbe) mentioned that all other occupations and professions are organized.

My friends to the left say that we need unions and that farmers should be unionized. My hon. friend from Fraser Valley West knows that this bill does not set out any provisions for collective bargaining. It will simply strangle the young man's opportunity to become engaged in the agricultural industry. Opportunity will no longer be based upon ability, knowledge, initiative or desire, but rather upon ability to garner the necessary funds to buy out someone who is well established or some corporation.

In other words, the vested interests will be protected and the young farmer will end up paying for his equipment, his facilities and probably a handsome sum for good will. This would seem to me to be a retrograde step in the land of opportunity which I believe Canada still is. I believe there is still opportunity in the agricultural industry, but this bill is a retrograde step.

Furthermore, this bill constitutes, I believe, an inward approach to solving the ills of agriculture by controlling production, creating provincial barriers, and closing out the prospect of deeper penetration of export markets. I believe we must be ever conscious of the very important part the export of our agricultural commodities plays in our world trade. I believe we must be expansionary in our approach.

I think this bill places a damper on the future growth of our export industry. I am not alone in this belief; an editorial in the Country Guide lays this out in very clear terms. In speaking about the effect of the deal which was consummated by the provinces in relation to solving the chicken and egg war, it states:

> The agreement could bring them short-term relief for it may offer one way to bring egg prices back up to survival levels. But it may be little more than a short-term reprieve.

This bill is only ratifying the agreements that were basically reached by the provincial ministers of agriculture in respect of allocation of commodities and so on. The article states:

> But the effects of the agreement extend far beyond the poultry industry.

• (4:40 p.m.)

> The development places all farmers face-to-face with the most urgent issue facing them. Can their industry be one of growth? Dare Canada's farmers search for new and expanding markets in the U.S. and elsewhere in the face of Ottawa's apparent readiness to shut the border to U.S. food products and the likelihood of retaliation?
> The implications for beef and hog producers and others, who might want to share in fast growing consumer markets in other countries, could be devastating.
> It compels them to ask if they, too, must begin to cut back to Canada's domestic needs. Must they begin the retreat from export markets? Or must they commit their time and resources to a life-and-death struggle against politicians who would strangle them with restrictions and controls? The development forces each farmer to ask himself if government has abandoned its ancient role of being a servant of the farmer and set its sights on becoming his master?
> The poultry agreement results from another failure by Ottawa, and by provincial governments as well, to recognize the importance of agriculture and to develop policies which could give farmers an important role in Canada's future.

In that context one might very well ask what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) meant in his speech to the thirty eighth meeting of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture in New Westminster B.C. when, in outlining his agricultural program, he said:

> This means a minimum of government intervention but a maximum of government help.

It would be rather interesting to hear the minister explain the context of this bill and its relation to a statement of that nature.

I and many other speakers who have participated in the long debate on this bill in committee and in the House believe that this measure is part of the over-all program of speeding up the rationalization process of the small farmers. There have been some changes, a new dressing on the cake, you might say. Some titles have been changed; for example a program has been renamed from an adjustment program to a small farm development program, but the content is the same.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Horner: I think the House is prepared to give the hon. member extra time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue if there is unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank hon. members for allowing me to speak for a few minutes more.

I would merely like to place on the record the statements of Mr. Runciman, who is a well known and highly regarded individual, particularly in Canadian farm circles. He speaks of the same fear that we have expressed on so many occasions, that policies have been introduced by this government which have been aimed at speeding up the rationalization process. He states:

> The Canadian government's policies are designed to constantly cut back production and work toward a shortage situation and, if they force farmers out of business in the process, that's to their advantage.
> "The NFU believes milk production in particular should be expanded, not curtailed, because it is a key food around the world."
> Mr. Runciman is concerned with other farm spokesmen about the new federal development program which "regardless of the fine words ... aims to reduce the number of farmers in this country".

He goes on to say that there are programs which could be incorporated:

> Farmers in the Common Market countries receive more than double what Canadian farmers get for their grain, prices which make "your mouth water" Mr. Runciman said.
> "With prices like these stimulating production elsewhere in the world I think Canada would be ill advised if she went ahead and tried to solve world surplus problems with a unilateral program to reduce the number of farmers in this country".

This is the concern which we have continually expressed with regard to this bill. We feel that in the definition of a farm product all commodities should be excluded until such time as plebiscite is held or a significant number of producers of that commodity signify that they want to become party to the marketing plan. I do not believe that this is asking for too much. If this is indeed enabling legislation, it should be left entirely to the producers of those commodities to decide whether they want to become a party to this marketing plan. It is they who should decide what the marketing plan constitutes, whether it would constitute a program of supply management of simply be for promotion and research. In my opinion this would lay the groundwork for this bill to become permissive or enabling legislation, rather than coercive legislation.

With regard to the free movement of agricultural products across provincial boundaries, I believe section 121 of the BNA Act should be upheld; and I believe it is the duty of the federal government to ensure that the ruling of the Supreme Court is asserted. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) simply reflects the decision of the Supreme Court. I believe that if we are to have a bill with which we can live it is mandatory that these amendments be incorporated, and I urge that all hon. members lend their support to them.

In conclusion I would like to indicate that there are a number of people in this country who continue to have, more than ever before, serious reservations about this bill. I would like to read a letter which I received on December 20 from Coronado, Alberta from a gentleman by the name of Kenneth Cleven. I believe that he outlines in a nutshell some of the serious reservations that individual farmers across the country have about this bill. He writes:

Recently we hear alarming reports that Bill C-176 is again up for passage, this time reportedly with production control sections for cattle and hogs deleted. However, one can be quite certain that if this government were given another five year mandate these features would later be added.

That is something that I would doubt.

I am quite certain that any freedom loving farmer who has read this bill would be violently opposed to it. It is one step farther down the road to complete federal government control of our lives and they already have too much.

During World War II, as a member of the Canadian infantry I assisted in liberating European farmers from such a system—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Faulkner: Garbage.

Mr. Mazankowski:

—where inspectors would call to see that quotas were being met. Also, I have a brother-in-law from Norway who farmed under the Nazis. They would go to great lengths, at risk of the death penalty, to evade these quotas, such as by concealing an extra cow behind the hay mow in the barn or raising a few extra pigs back in the woods.

Mr. Faulkner: That is nonsense. I am surprised at you.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am surprised at the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner). He has simply not read the bill and he does not know what it contains. There are many implications in this bill and I am merely placing this letter on the record. It goes on to read:

One can readily see how difficult production controls would be to enforce in Canada, with our vast spaces and rugged terrain. It would require an army of inspectors, to be paid out of our production, and penalties would have to be severe. Canada would degenerate into a police state as far as farmers are concenred.

This gentleman could be a Liberal.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Faulkner: He is certainly not a Liberal. I dissociate myself from him.

Mr. Mazankowski: The letter goes on to read:

Being a former cream shipper I have had some experience with the Dairy Commission. Rigid, impractical rules and regulations laid down by bureaucrats have greatly increased labour requirements and cost of production and driven many farmers out of the industry.

• (4:50 p.m.)

In that connection, we have only to look at the record of the Canadian Dairy Commission to see what has happened. We have had a wholesale extinction of the smaller operators, those with delivery quotas of less than 420 pounds. Small creamery plants were forced to shut down. Now, because of political expediency, the minister has introduced an amendment to his Canadian Dairy Commission proposal reinstating those people who lost their quotas or who fell below their allotted minimum delivery requirement.

We now see the results of the Dairy Commission and their controls, the wholesale closure of cheese plants because of milk shortage, the breaking of contact between producer and cheese manufacturers (which is necessary for making top quality cheddar cheese) because of pooling arrangements, and now a shortage of butter. I expect to see a far greater shortage. There is some justification for government involvement in the dairy industry, being subsidized, but this is not so of cattle and hogs.

We in the cattle industry now have a very efficient marketing system, the law of supply and demand in North America, accurate market information, and producers making their own intelligent decisions. Cattlemen are almost invariably free enterprisers and any imposition of bureaucratic control between us and the market place would cause a mass exodus of worth-while producers from the industry and would result in beef rationing in Canada within a few years, unless our foreign reserves were large enough to import large quantities—

In closing I would urge you to force the government to withdraw this bill and bring in a new one, mentioning only those producers who have requested it. Of course they may use closure, but the voting public of Canada have shown in the past that they do not look kindly on closure.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a real privilege to speak this afternoon in this debate on Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, and in particular on the amendment to which we are now addressing ourselves concerning the proposal that on page 1 at line 14 the clause should end after the word "agriculture".

As you know, Mr. Speaker, farming in Canada is an industry that is represented by many thousands of small producers, producers who could best be described as small businessmen. Unfortunately, as anyone who is interested in the agricultural industry knows or ought to know, the great tragedy that befalls agriculture in this modern day is that there are thousands of individual producers all producing a single product which must be sold to a very small and limited number of purchasers. This results in the fact, of course, that if there is not some semblance of balance between the amount of product produced and the demand for that product, then the income to the producer is forced to swing in exaggerated patterns, in a boom or bust cycle.

The best example of this is the recent case in Prince Edward Island—I think I have my figures correct—where a year or so ago the production of potatoes increased over the previous year by some 5 per cent. This resulted in a decline in income for the potato growers of some 50 per cent.

It amazes me, as a person from the province of Ontario representing an agricultural constituency, to hear members like the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) not so much attack the bill—because I suppose it is to be expected that the opposition would oppose and criticize—but to hear him saying, in essence, that he is against orderly marketing per se and in toto.

This is a an argument with which I heartily disagree. I venture to say that certainly Ontario members of his party, such as the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth), who is held in high regard in this House, must surely disagree with the hon. member for Vegreville. I know that the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McKinley) and others must surely reject categorically this kind of ridiculous conclusion that somehow orderly marketing is going to hurt the farmers. It is disorder in marketing that hurts the farmers, not order.

Marketing which was not orderly, or was somehow organized so that the farmers themselves did not control it, would be something we ought to reject. I would be the first to reject it. That is why in Bill C-176 we have bent over backwards with respect to representation, particularly with respect to the Marketing council that is to be established. I point out that the council's role is to look into the situation as it pertains to any particular commodity and then to recommend to the minister whether or not a marketing agency should be established for that product.

The bill has already been amended in such a way that either the chairman or vice-chairman of the council must be a farmer, and at least 50 per cent of all members of the council must be farmers. Why did we insist on that? We insisted on that to be absolutely sure that no group of bureaucrats, or persons who were somehow removed from the agricultural industry, could in fact direct that industry.

Having done that we went even further to assure that, when the council looked into a certain commodity and how its situation was at any particular time, the council had to be convinced, first of all, that there was a majority of the producers of the commodity in favour of establishing some kind of an agency to promote or to direct the sale of that commodity before any agency would be established.

In discussing the particular amendment before us now we must also take a careful look at clause 17 of the bill on page 11. In order to appreciate properly clause 2(c), which is directly before us at the moment, we have to remember what is in clause 17, which will, of course, absolutely prevent the kind of horror situation, so well described, but wrongly, by the hon. member for Vegreville. This is what clause 17 says:

The Governor in Council may by proclamation establish an agency—

That is, establish an agency after the council decides that this would be a good thing.

—with powers relating to any farm product or farm products the marketing of which in interprovincial and export trade is not regulated pursuant to the Canadian Wheat Board Act—

The hon. member for Timiskaming might take note.

—or the Canadian Dairy Commission Act—

Mark these words, Mr. Speaker.

—where he is satisfied that a majority of the producers of the farm product—

Where are all these horrors and bogeymen hiding in the cupboards and closets, to whom the hon. member for Vegreville referred?

Mr. Horner: Keep on reading.

Mr. McBride: I will.

—or of each of the farm products in Canada is in favour of the establishment of an agency.

Mr. Horner: Keep on reading.

Mr. McBride: I will keep on reading because this will reassure some of the beef producers who have been misled by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association into being stampeded by this bill. Clause 17(2) reads:

The Governor in Council, in order to determine whether a majority of producers of a farm product are in favour of establishing an agency, may—

Mr. Horner: That is the key word. Change "may" to "shall" and we will go along with it.

Mr. McBride:

—may request that each Province carry out a plebiscite of the said producers.

This is because it is a provincial responsibility, something which even members like the hon. member for Crowfoot ought to know. When he starts hollering and pretending that he is representing the interests of the agricultural community I think he ought to know that many of these responsibilities come under provincial jurisdiction; and if he does not know—

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member imputes some suggestion that I ought to know something, or is suggesting that I may have misrepresented certain things. He may not know that this very clause to which he is referring was moved by myself in committee, but I do think it would be far more meaningful if the word "may" were changed to "shall".

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, we are used to the hon. member for Crowfoot. Over the months, as a matter of fact for over two years in the agricultural committee, we heard him throw his tantrums that were supposed to impress the press and show that he alone had the best interests of Canadian agriculture at heart. I submit that if anybody looked at the amendments he moved and at the position he took in committee, a position which is similar to the one he is pursuing today, one would recognize that the fear motivating the hon. member is the fear that, somehow, the agricultural industry might become independent of the control of the huge producer and that the small farmer might obtain some measure of control over his own affairs in Canada. For that reason I am impatient with the chronic complaints that we have heard, with the filibustering we witnessed in connection with Bill C-197 and which is continuing in the discussion of Bill C-176.

Mr. Horner: Nothing could be farther from the truth.

Mr. McBride: Of course, we all know—there is no need for me to point this out to the hon. member for Crowfoot or to any other person in Canada—that this bill requires that at least 50 per cent of the makeup of the council be farmers. The same requirement is to be applied to the marketing agencies that will thereafter come into being. That means that if an agency is set up to market pork, at least 50 per cent of those controlling or making up that agency must be hog producers, and it would only be set up if the majority wanted it in the first place. Perhaps the hon. member and others in Canada have very little confidence in the leadership and judgment displayed by those who produce the various agricultural commodities in this country. Perhaps he and others are afraid of permitting the control of the agricultural industry to fall into the hands of farmers.

I am not so afraid and am prepared and willing to submit two points to this House. First, I submit that it is high time the farmers of this nation had in their hands the legislative tools and equipment to bring the order that they in their wisdom wish to bring to the marketing of their own commodities. That is an elementary right, and it amazes me to see even the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), from whom one expects a reactionary position, standing up in opposition.

Mr. Horner: At least he is a farmer and knows what he is talking about.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is high time for us to be prepared to say to those who are producing any particular product "You know best." It is not for us to determine whether they do know best; that is not a matter for Members of Parliament or for bureaucrats but for the people within the agricultural industry to decide.

The main purpose of this bill is to place control over production and prices of commodities in the hands of farmers, as spelled out in the various clauses of the bill. The bill's purpose is to place into the hands of the producers of a product the control over that product if and when the producers want such powers.

Why are we so afraid to give producers power over their own product? Why are we so afraid, for instance, that if these powers are permitted of producers, the beef producers of Canada might somehow choose a course of action that would not suit a few of the big producers?

If we are not afraid of this, I cannot understand the position that has been taken by organizations such as the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. That group has kept assuring us of its position. They say that the producers of any commodity should not come under this bill if they do not want to come under it. When we say that we are ready to assure them that they have nothing to fear from the bill and that we have amended the bill in a couple of places to take care of their fears, it turns out that they are still unhappy. They say "No; we want to go one step farther. We want no cattle at all to be included in the bill. We want the bill to provide that cattle are specifically excluded."

From that position I can draw only one conclusion, namely that there are those in the livestock and cattle industry in Canada who have a deep and abiding fear that if there were to be a plebiscite on the question of whether a marketing plan should be established for the production of beef, such a plebiscite might carry.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. McBride: Many suggest, "You know, if there were such a plebiscite and it carried, many little producers who do not have much influence at present would obtain as much influence as the big producers." To that I would say yes, that is correct.

Mr. Horner: Perhaps at the end of January, the hon. member will understand what is involved.

Mr. McBride: The time has come for people to stand up in the parliament of Canada and on the platforms of Canada and say they are prepared to fight for the little producers, and not just for the big producers.

An hon. Member: Hogwash.

Mr. McBride: If hon. members are not afraid of the little producer, why are they afraid of this bill? I say to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), who seems to be the spokesman for the association and who is most impatient in his remarks, that if he is not afraid of what the majority believes, he has nothing to fear from this bill.

Mr. Horner: I agree.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McBride: On the other hand, if he is afraid that somehow the majority of the very producers about which I am concerned will not vote the way he wants them to vote, what means has he available? What must one do in such a case, Mr. Speaker? I suggest that one has to do the same thing one must do in the destruction of any democracy: one has to prevent the question from being considered. Do not let the vote come. Do not let beef be included, because "the day might come when the beef producers would want something that I as an individual and a few of my wealthy cronies do not want." I deplore that attitude. I deplore that such a position has been taken in the House.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member on a question of privilege. I wish that hon. members would keep order in the House so that the Chair might follow the speech. There has been so much shouting that it has been almost impossible for the Chair to follow the speech. I recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Again?

Mr. Horner: I mean it. No work will be done before six o'clock unless the hon. member withdraws the remark he made. He imputes that I am working for vested interests, for the wealthy ranchers. I am in no way doing that and I want those remarks withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I did not hear the remark which the hon. member wishes to have withdrawn, because I have been having a hard time hearing what has been said.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege—

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, if I may say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I did not hear or see any matter that could give rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this bill is, of course, to make sure that the agricultural industry—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I well understand the difficulties that you may or may not have been under in hearing the hon. gentleman's remarks, which everybody else heard. I point out that they will show up in Hansard. The hon. member imputed motives to me and suggested that I have been working on behalf of my own vested interests and those of wealthy friends of mine in the cattle industry.

Mr. McGrath: Withdraw.

Mr. Horner: I assure both you, Mr. Speaker, and this House that I live in what I have often referred to as the desert of Alberta. Many families moved out of my neighbourhood in the dirty thirties because they could not make a living in the area. The area I represent consists of small, hard up farms in the dryest part of Alberta, a part in which less than nine inches of rain falls in a year. We grub about for a living.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please—

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, the bill before us this afternoon—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East rises on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I concur in what the hon. member said. I think the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot was well raised. The hon. member who spoke previously had no right to impute motives. That was exactly what he did and it was improper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I will settle the matter by saying that I did not hear or see anything that would give rise to a question of privilege. That is why I will again recognize the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat. I remind hon. members again that the Chair is doing its best. The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege. The Chair heard nothing which might give rise to a question of privilege, but there was trouble hearing what was said as a result of the past few minutes. I wish the hon. member would not take advantage of the member who is presently speaking. The Chair will do its best. As the hon. member knows the rules, he will know that I have already—

• (5:10 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You said that before.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I already said that I did not hear any question of privilege raised.

Mr. Horner: I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. McBride: The bill before us this afternoon is of extreme importance.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this is a point of order.

Mr. McBride: We are used to having a certain amount of obstruction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. Will the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. Horner: Your Honour may or may not have understood the intent of my first question of privilege. I recognize that Your Honour is trying very hard to master the full task of being a Speaker, but I never heard Your Honour ask the hon. member to withdraw those remarks. Naturally, that is your prerogative. If you did ask the hon. member and he has not withdrawn those remarks, then I say to him through Your Honour that he is a cheap s.o.b. that the United Church is welcome and glad to be without.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Mr. Horner: I gave him plenty of opportunities to withdraw that remark. If he wants to indulge in name calling, he will get it right back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Mr. McBride: One of the advantages of being in a debate on a question like this is that the side you are on is clearly demonstrated.

Mr. McIntosh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour made the excuse that you did not hear what the hon. member was saying. By insinuation, you also referred to this side of the House, indicating that we were the cause of Your Honour not hearing what the hon. member said. At the time the statement was made, we all heard it. I agree with the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) that it should be withdrawn. I do not think Your Honour should allow this debate to continue without making the member withdraw what he said. If you did not hear it, it will be reported in Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Mr. McIntosh: Wait until I get through with my question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

Mr. McIntosh: I am rising on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I ask the hon. member to resume his seat. I will repeat what I said before the question of privilege was raised. I was rising to state that there was disorder in the House. I could not follow the hon. member who was speaking. When the Speaker asks for order, he should have the order of the House. I do not see any question of privilege at this time. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, the issue before the House today is one of great concern.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone in the House except Your Honour heard what the hon. member said. I quite naturally believe Your Honour when you say that you did not hear what was said. I wish to make a suggestion. I know the Chair will agree that the rules must be followed and that no hon. member is allowed to impute motives to another member. I suggest that Your Honour wait until six o'clock, examine Hansard, come back at eight o'clock and then make your ruling. I quite agree you cannot make it now if you claim you did not hear it. Naturally, we accept Your Honour's word. I think this matter should be cleared up and I feel this is the way it should be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member did not get my point that I did not hear. I will look at the blues when I receive them, that is for sure.

Mr. McIntosh: You never said that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I may not have said it, but that is what I meant to say. I will read the "blues" at six o'clock. If there is any ruling to be made, it will be done when we resume.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, if my aim was to cause havoc in the House I would have more cause for a question of privilege then does the hon. member. When the hon. member stands up and uses foul language concerning me, it brings dishonour on the House and on the constituents he is supposed to be representing. Surely all members in this House are prepared to follow the advice of Cardinal Leger who reminded us that the facts are also the truth. In this instance, it happens to be that many of us are long since convinced that there must be some interest somewhere. If you do not want to spell it out, you do not have to, but I will spell it out categorically. There is some interest somewhere other than the interest of the small farmers being represented by the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McBride: If he were convinced and wanted to show that he was most concerned about the small farmer in Canada, he would act accordingly. He would not be concerned about blocking the legislation presently before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the House knows that last week and this week I have shown a preparedness to make progress on this legislation; but if Your Honour is going to allow the debate to degenerate into name calling and imputing motives to various members, I can assure Your Honour that the debate will become more difficult as this week and the month of January progresses. Very little progress is apt to be made in the passage of this legislation. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I ask Your Honour to ask the hon. member, for whom I would like to retain some respect, to withdraw the remarks that he imputed to myself and to my actions in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), it is not in order to impute motives. It is as simple as that. It is not a matter of withdrawing words. As hon. members know, there is a distinction between withdrawing words which are unparliamentary—

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asked me to intervene, and I am pleased to do so. What I am pointing out now is that the hon. member who has the floor has no right to impute motives. I am sure he will want to indicate that he is not imputing motives, as the hon. member for Crowfoot pointed out.

We will not make too much progress if we do not limit the debate to the motion before the House. The hon. member said the Speaker's job will become even more difficult. I hope that will not be the case; it is difficult enough. I invite the co-operation of all members, particularly the hon. member who has the floor, in limiting their contributions to what is before us, which is a very specific motion. I ask the hon. member to keep in mind that he has no right to impute motives to hon. members, either on his side or the other side of the House.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, what is before us is Bill C-176. It is an act to establish the national farm products marketing council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not intend to enter into an argument with the hon. member, but from the point of view of procedure, that is not what is before the House. What is before the House at the moment is a motion, not the bill itself. The hon. member has to make an attempt, as all hon. members are required to do, to relate his remarks to that motion. It is extremely difficult for the Chair to determine at all times whether all members are going beyond the four corners of a debate in the consideration of a motion. While I was in the Chair earlier this afternoon, I gained the impression that some of the speeches went somewhat beyond the limitations of the motion before us. I took it upon myself to remind hon. members to limit themselves to what is before us, namely, these motions. I make the same appeal to the hon. member who has the floor at this time.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. McBride: With all respect to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I think that if you look at the blues you will find I was speaking to the motion before us; I was talking about cattle and calves, which are to be removed from the bill by the amendment.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, amendment No. 2 is not up for debate, the amendment dealing with the exclusion of cattle and calves. We are now supposed to be dealing with amendments 1, 5 and 22, which do not mention cattle and calves. I wish to draw this to Your Honour's attention and, perhaps, through you, to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. McBride: I presume the hon. member's purpose is to prevent us from having our say in this debate, and he appears to be doing this quite successfully.

Mr. Horner: You can have that all through January!

Mr. McBride: We are discussing the clause before us—

Mr. Speaker: I hope we may leave that discussion behind us for the time being and try to address ourselves to the substance of the motion.

Mr. McBride: I am almost tempted to rise on a question of privilege and ask whether a man has a right to make a speech without phony points of order and questions of privilege being raised by members opposite with no other purpose than to prevent that speech from being made.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting I have raised phony points of order. I should like Your Honour to clarify what amendments we are dealing with. In my view we are dealing with amendments Nos. 1, 5 and 22. It is amendment No. 2 which deals with the exception of cattle and calves and it is not now before the House. My point of order was not a phony point of order, and if the hon. member insists on saying it is I suppose I should insist on rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. McBride: The committee of this House which was charged with considering the substance of the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) held 66 meetings and arranged for public hearings in Halifax, Quebec City, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton and Vancouver. So a great deal of time was spent in trying to assess whether this bill in its totality was in the interests of Canadian agriculture.

It seems to me the time has now come when we should be prepared to vote for or against the measure and get on with it. There are now plenty of protective devices included in it to make sure that no product can be brought in if the producers of that product do not want it brought in. That is the purpose of the amendment before the House at the moment. It is true that the bill as originally drafted did leave too much room for other than producers to have too much say, but this weakness has now been corrected. The point has been met and we now have before us a far better bill. It aims to set up machinery whereby a product controlled by a marketing agency in a province may be regulated across the country by a federal agency. Its object is to establish a marketing council, of whose members at least 50 per cent, or five out of nine, shall be primary producers.

Critics of the bill have suggested that it might be destructive of the agriculture industry; those were the words of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). But the purpose of the bill, as I see it, is to provide a means whereby the provinces can get together with respect to products about which they are themselves concerned. Whether it be eggs or poultry or turkey or beef or any other of the commodities mentioned, the provinces could get together to work out a plan of marketing which was acceptable to them all.

The provinces already have legislation governing the marketing of certain products, but are unable to apply it on a national basis in the absence of legislation such as we see before us. In effect, as we all ought to know, Bill C-176 is enabling legislation. It does not coerce anyone into doing anything. So I do not understand why we should be so anxious to exclude certain products. If legislation such as this had been in force earlier there is little likelihood that the chicken and egg marketing war would ever have got started.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but apparently his time has expired. As hon. members know, it is difficult to determine at what point the time allotted to him actually ended because there were a number of points of order raised. He could continue, of course, with unanimous consent.

Mr. Hees: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. McBride: I thank all members of the House for the courtesy extended to me, as it was to the hon. member for Vegreville. I shall conclude as rapidly as possible by pointing out that it is a very serious matter, in my opinion, that a large number of producers of beef should be spooked or frightened into believing somehow that regardless of the safeguards which have been provided, regardless of the amendments which have been brought in, there is nothing but evil intent on the part of the government or on the part of people like myself—that we are here, as the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said, to destroy the agriculture industry, that we are holding a reunion to say farewell to the family farm, and a lot of nonsense like that.

As one of my constituents said to me many months ago when this bill first came before parliament, the only freedom Canadian farmers really have today is the freedom to remain poor. If they wish to preserve that freedom, if farmers wish to remain poor in their thousands, as autonomous, separate businessmen, they will continue to place themselves entirely at the mercy of those who buy their products.

It is to the advantage of those who buy agricultural products to keep production chronically out of line with the demand, so that at all times products can be purchased at a much lower price than would otherwise be the case. The farmers I represent have learned from bitter experience that when prices fall, usually as a result of over-production, a farmer has two choices; he can either go out of business or he can work harder and produce more. In effect, he is running faster to go slower, because although he will be working harder and longer he will probably be making less. Farmers are doing this because the government has been too slow, too inept, about bringing in adequate farm legislation. For this, it should be roundly condemned. It seems passing strange that, when we do bring in a bill, hedged around with guarantees for minority groups, regional groups and others, even though I would say it is very likely inadequate, we should get into a two-year filibuster, a bunch of nonsense about forcing small farms out of business, and so on.

All we have to do is block this bill for a few more years and then there will not be any more small farms. They are scarce now. The time has come when more of us ought to be prepared to say in this House and outside that regardless of any group of people in this Parliament, we ought to bring this matter to a vote and arrange things so that we do not discriminate against any product. In other words, no single product should be excluded from the bill, so that any group of producers of any commodity could come under the bill and have the advantages of it.

To allege that democracy is somehow being destroyed and the moral fibre of farmers is destroyed by saying to them, "If you want to improve your lot, we will help" is something that I fail to understand. How the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and others can stand up with straight faces and their supposed concern for agriculture and speak this nonsense is beyond me. They say, in effect, that the government has this bill as one part of a total package, which is to remove all people from rural Canada. This is absolutely not true and the hon. member ought to know that. The day comes when you stand up and say, "We are not here to fight for the big boys; we are here to fight for the little people, the people who are the backbone of agriculture".

Some of the fellows from the Prairies over there leave it to people over here like myself to defend western Canada. Where are the people from Nova Scotia and rural Alberta who should be prepared to get up and say, "I believe in the small farmer enough that I want him to have some legislation." I realize that this bill is inadequate and that it should be stronger, but I am for it. If you want to attack this government it should be attacked solely on the ground of this legislation doing so little to enable farmers to help themselves, instead of being condemned for doing too much. How can you be doing too much when farm incomes in Canada are too low? How can you be going too far when you are saying that you want the benefits to apply across Canada? We will give them to you.

The time has long since come when members of Parliament ought to ask themselves whether it is enough to assure their re-election in a rural riding by telling a bunch of half-truths or even untruths about the terrible situation of agriculture and by attempting to pretend that the difficulties this modern era has brought to agriculture are created by the present government, and that if this government is about to move to alleviate some of those difficulties it has to be stopped, otherwise the farming community might realize that we are trying to help their situation. I think that is the cheapest, most petty and most despicable type of politicking ever perpetrated in Canada. There is far too much of this going on in the rural communities of Canada just for the sake of political gain, to the effect that it is to the advantage of some people to keep the farmers in poverty.

If you want to condemn this bill, why have you not got the courage to say that it is inadequate and that you want more for farmers, not less? Why hold it up for two years? Why be so concerned with beef? Why not leave it to the beef farmers: if they want it, let them have it. If they don't want it, they won't get it. If the farmers of Canada are begging for help, why block it? Why not say, "The time has come when the farmers of Canada need assistance". Why condemn the government for not giving it to them? Why ruin your Christmas recess in order to ensure that somehow the farmers continue to suffer enough that you can continue to create the false impression that it is the government's fault and if only you were in power you would correct the situation? This is unmitigated nonsense, Mr. Speaker, and surely the people ought to recognize it.

I appeal to the House not to emasculate this bill, not to take any commodities out of it. There are safeguards in it to ensure that no commodity will be included unless it wants to be. Let us leave it that way. Let us do something for the farmers, and do it now.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it has been some time since Bill C-176 was last before the House and I must admit I have some ambivalent feelings about seeing it back again today. It is like meeting an old acquaintance who has been away on a long voyage.

Amendments Nos. 1, 5 and 22 have been put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). My purpose today is to speak in favour of these amendments. Basically, what is at stake in discussion of this bill is the question of free trade among provinces. Also at stake is the principle of free enterprise which the farmers of this country have enjoyed ever since Canada in its present form was established. Through Bill C-176 the government hopes to impose a bureaucratic, political solution on the issue of free trade among provinces as well as that of free enterprise in the agricultural industry.

We in this party believe that policies which encourage aggressive and imaginative marketing should be instituted for the benefit of the producer. But we do not believe that Bill C-176 is the kind of imaginative marketing solution for which we are looking. We do believe that the government has a responsibility to set the environment for successful marketing of farm products in the national interest, but placing too much authority in the hands of bureaucrats and vested interests is fraught with danger to the agricultural industry. It is also fraught with danger to the country, since a bill of this nature could well lead to severe balkanization of the country.

There is no question that the bill in its present form is an improvement over the original bill presented some months ago. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) made mention of it, but I think he erred in his statement in trying to claim credit for bringing about the change. The fact is, the country should be thankful to the opposition parties for the changes. But the bill in its present form, although an improvement, is still not what the people of the country want. It still has to be amended and polished and improved to such a degree that it will serve the needs of the producer and not simply the needs of the government. I believe the amendments we are discussing will help to achieve this aim.

At this point I would like to touch briefly on the principle of supply management which this bill proposes. In discussing supply management we must constantly keep in mind the other principle which is basic to agriculture, the principle known as free enterprise economy. In a free enterprise economy, while it is recognized that improved marketing mechanisms at the primary producer level are needed, it is also important that one keeps in mind the fact that market prices as determined by normal demand and supply relationships are an indispensable part of our free enterprise economy. Any legislation, therefore, in this area should augment the free market rather than place artificial restrictions and controls on it.

In the past, marketing boards of certain types have proven to be useful tools for orderly marketing. The Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce sent a brief to the Standing Committee on Agriculture in February, 1971, which suggested that the major functions of marketing boards should be the following:

(a) Product promotion and market development for the purpose of expanding sales potential through creation of new demand, both within Canada and abroad;

• (5:40 p.m.)

(b) Quality standardization and control of produce for purposes of creating new and continued demand;

(c) Collective marketing to give a better balance between the limited number of buyers and the many sellers that normally exist for the raw product. This approach can take three forms:

(i) Single agency marketing with all producers receiving an annual "pooled" price for their products, as differentiated by quality;

(ii) Single agency marketing with each producer receiving market prices for his product as of date of sale;

(iii) Some combination of individual product pricing and overall price pooling;

The final function suggested by the Chamber of Commerce is supply management as an attempt to control the ultimate product output in order to strengthen prices by limiting supply relative to projected market demand. This process depends on such alternatives as restricting the number of producers, limiting the inputs used by the producer or limiting the quantity of output that each producer can sell.

It is recognized from the above points that marketing boards could play an important role in expansion of product promotion, quality standardization and some form of collective marketing. But in the context of the free enterprise economy, supply management, which suggests limiting the inputs used by the producer or limiting the quantity of output by the producer, is a regressive move, inconsistent with the realities of international and interprovincial trade. This kind of supply management in the long run would damage the agricultural industry because it suggests too many controls and a negative approach to increasing produce prices. It would seriously curtail the growth of efficiency within the industry. It would also limit severely the entry of new and possibly more efficient producers into the business of agriculture and at the same time maintain inefficient ones not otherwise able to compete on an economic basis. I think the point concerning possible limitation of entry of new producers is a very important one since it takes away from Canadians the freedom to choose the kind of life's work which they desire.

The various restrictions I am referring to go completely against the grain of the philosophy in which farmers believe. There is no need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a very large segment of our population in Canada is here precisely to get away from too many restrictions, too many controls and too much government. Many people who immigrated to Canada came here because this has been a land, at least until now, where individual initiative, individual ambition and hard work are respected virtues which can only be practised fully in an environment of freedom to make one's own decisions, and freedom from bureaucratic control which has the effect of telling the producer what to do and in so doing would destroy his initiative and his right to make this own decisions.

Since supply management on a national basis requires quota allocations by provinces, regional economic differences would not be taken into account, resulting in decreased efficiency. Such locked-in inefficiencies would result in artificially increased prices which could price us out of international markets and which, at the same time, would require import restrictions to protect our domestic market. Ultimately, the consumer would bear the cost resulting from a reduced supply.

With regard to collective marketing by marketing boards, there is also a danger in that the pooling of prices removes incentives from the individual producer and fails to recognize differences in quality of products. However, it is recognized that by pooling, severe fluctuations in prices which are unforeseen can be prevented in respect of individual producers. The question is, then, is the Canadian economy best served by an industry that resolves its differences and adjusts its resources primarily by political rather than economic processes?

This bill is a good example of the government's assuming omnipotent capabilities to solve problems by technocratic manipulations. It fails to perceive the consequences of the balkanization and retrenching of local interests. It fails to perceive the handicap to young people wishing to enter agriculture because of the capitalization required in supply management. It fails to perceive the fact that politicization of an industry by way of supply management historically leads to misallocation of resources and further inefficiencies, ultimately resulting in lower prices for the farmer for farm produce and higher prices for the consumer. For the small farmer this is a double cut. He gets less for his product but must pay more for his own food.

Of course, the general direction which this government is taking is to remove small producers. This bill provides statutory power to further this kind of adjustment. In other words, it would remove some 200,000 farmers from agriculture. I think we must look to other kinds of solutions to the problem of decreasing farm income. We must look to development rather than to removal from the industry of masses of people and masses of small farms. The effect of this bill would be the greater and greater shrinkage of Canada's agricultural population. I say this would be unproductive and inhumane. Economically, it is retrograde.

In addition, it is certainly impossible to say that Bill C-176 is an anti-poverty weapon. The concept of this bill originally was to control marketing of chickens and eggs. Perhaps that is all it should do. Certainly other producers, particularly cattlemen, have persistently indicated that they want no part of this kind of program since this bill could create a small class of privileged farmers by sacrificing the smaller producer and the young people of rural Canada. It differs from provincial marketing legislation because provincial marketing legislation does not have the dangerous powers which would be given to agencies under this bill.

For these reasons and many others, Mr. Speaker, we must conclude that the bill as it now stands is not in the best interests of the agricultural industry and that these amendments, namely, amendments Nos. 1, 5 and 22 would go a long way toward improving the bill. It has been said that there has been agreement by the provinces that only chickens and eggs should be included. There are dangers in that as well, the same dangers I have already discussed. Chicken and egg production in certain provinces is in the hands of very few individuals. It is natural that these few individuals would want to keep out all other producers and potential producers. That, I think, at best could be described as a selfish interest. However, I would probably be willing to go along with it if other amendments put forward by our party were accepted.

As has been mentioned before, this bill through the formation of marketing boards would restrict free trade of farm products. This poses a danger for the Atlantic and prairie regions. The potential for future and continued prosperity of these have-not areas is absolutely dependent upon their being permitted free and unrestricted access to all markets in Canada as well as outside Canada. With free trade of farm products, efficient production of farm products is assured. Without extensive markets a rationalization of Canadian agriculture is impossible.

The provincial markets of the Prairie and Atlantic provinces can never be large enough to supply the demand necessary to absorb the increased farm output which would result if agriculture were revitalized. Unless farm output is rationalized and unless free access to markets is guaranteed, the income-generating potential of rural Canada will be severely curtailed. With the curtailment of this vital source of growth, the have-not regions of Canada will become more unequal participants in confederation. The very essence of confederation was to guarantee free access to the entire domestic market no matter where the particular product was produced. The effect of the marketing boards will be to protect local producers from outside-the-province competition. Such protection can only be damaging since it forces retaliation by other provinces.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

The result of this balkanization is the complete disintegration of the Canadian economy. Under the guise of efficiency, the Canadian government will strip certain areas of a strong agricultural sector. It will require other areas to attempt to be self-sufficient in respect of farm products. Such an attempt can only lead to higher prices for consumers, inefficient use of resources by the agricultural sector and reduced income for all but a few big farms. Every farming organization and every friend of the farmer should resist the passage of this bill in its present form. If passed, Bill C-176 will mean the end of a dynamic rural community and possibly the end of confederation as we know it today.

I conclude by saying that I think many of the comments made by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) are complete nonsense. He tried to imply that this bill would help small producers and small farmers. I have had a close look at the bill as well as at the many briefs which were presented and I fail to see any facts to substantiate the comments made by the hon. member.

Mr. Mahoney: You don't know anything about it.

Mr. Yewchuk: The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) wants to make it known that he has come back after the recess. We acknowledge that. He agrees that he does not know anything about it. I agree with him on that.

I urge every member of this House to take a serious look at the three amendments before us. If agreed to, they would improve the bill and make it more acceptable to the producers who, after all, are the ones about whom we are most concerned. I think the amendments would create a situation where the government would be in a better position to serve the people, rather than the reverse where the people serve the government.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, it is said that this is the kind of world where you have to run as fast as you can to stay where you are. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) referred to farmers being in a world where they have to run as fast as they can to fall backward. The debate on Bill C-176, the farm marketing legislation, has some Alice in Wonderland qualities about it so I do not think I would be remiss if I quoted from "Alice in Wonderland". If I were a practical politician, a minister of agriculture attempting to put through the House of Commons a bill having to do with chickens and eggs, I would have limited this farm marketing bill to poultry products. Politics is the art of the possible, but for two years we have been trying to solve the impossible.

I cannot support the Conservative amendment because as a farmer I believe in orderly marketing. Although I think this is a poor bill, it is the only one around and we have to put up with it. Certainly as an opposition member on this side of the House I have found it very difficult to do very much with the bill. We have suggested some amendments. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton said that we should be criticizing the government for not having promoted adequate farm legislation sooner. I agree with him in that respect. As a farmer I have been unhappy with the way in which farmers have been ignored and I have been unhappy with the marginal position of farmers in the marketplace. If this marketing bill were to help me or other farmers to obtain a stronger voice in settling this problem, I would be only too happy to support it. I wish it were a better bill, but I do not see how the amendment before us would bring this about.

A lady from the Consumers' Association of Canada complained to me. She said that prices to consumers might increase and we would be in a position to dictate to the consumer. I am not particularly interested in dictating to consumers, but as a producer I would like to be in the same position as anybody else when it comes to setting the price. That is what I am interested in. I would like to see this bill give farmers a bargaining position in setting a fair price for their products. We should give the farmers a good bargaining position. Since this is only a permissive bill, it is logical that farmers should be able to pick up the ball and run with it as they see fit.

To be fair to consumers and to those who process farmers' products, I agree that they need a steady supply of a product if they are to manage it well from the processing or distribution point of view. In order to get a steady price you need a steady supply of a product. This makes me think of the story of a little brown hen which sent her eggs to market only to find out what she was not going to get for them. This type of thing has gone on for too long.

It seems to me that even a poor bill such as this is better than no bill at all. For this reason we support the bill, hoping that it will be amended before we are finished with it. A bill must be applicable and it should have an adequate framework. This bill should provide for small farmers, because they should have the right to market their products and they should have the right to a place in the sun. I am not speaking only in the social sense but in the economic sense as well. I would like to make certain that the smaller farmers have a percentage of the quota so that they will not be frozen out of the market as soon as they are able to produce a product that is needed in the marketplace.

May I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Public Service—Displaying of political posters by employees at home or on personal property; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Industry—Pulp and paper—Problems discussed at conference and type of aid offered; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Grain—Request for tabling of report on rationalization of handling and transportation.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1, 5 and 22 (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, when one starts his speech before the dinner hour one is never quite sure of the stage reached when the House rose, and I am sure people in the public galleries are not aware of what is happening when a member rises to continue a speech.

Before the dinner recess I was referring to the problem of a small farmer who attempts to get an adequate price in the marketplace for his product. It seems reasonable to me that farmers should join hands with their neighbours and use a marketing board, agency or some form of market management body to reach a common solution of their individual problems. I have known many small farmers who tried to solve their marketing problems themselves. One method they used was to attempt to produce more from the same amount of land, cutting costs and having members of their family contribute free labour. However, generally the net effect was a reduced price in the marketplace and the farmer and his family received less than they should for their produce. Well organized sections of society do not do this, so it is not reasonable that farmers should do it.

Speaking as a farmer, I say it is time for farmers to forget individual efforts. The idea that a farmer can raise any number of chickens, hogs, eggs or what-have-you without regard to the marketplace, and later apply for a government subsidy, is ridiculous in this day and age. Farmers must accept some responsibility and organization. Up to date commercial farming does not operate in the same way as subsistence farming used to work. Farmers nowadays have certain costs that must be met. They can operate on a deficit only so long before facing bankruptcy. Farmers must be prepared to meet modern challenges. The farmer himself must manage his farm, his finances, his livestock and field operations. The marketing of produce is generally far removed from his farm. It is handled by somebody else, and on an individual basis the farmer generally gets skinned. This has happened to me, and most farmers have experienced it.

Many grain farmers in western Canada took a trimming until they joined together, formed pools and finally began to operate under the government Wheat Board. Experience in earlier days makes me think of the old farmer who, when grain was on the open market, always seemed to sell his when prices were lowest. At present I know some farmers who seem to sell their livestock only when prices are lowest. It is time they joined together to overcome this problem.

Despite its deficiences, this bill does provide some leadership in the direction of orderly marketing. If farmers do not join together to solve their problems, someone else usually benefits. An example was given this afternoon of the large, integrator feed mill operator who decides to put birds out on contract, with the result that the farmer gets only 10 cents a bird. The farmer gets the short end of the stick. If farmers join together to solve their problems, such things might not happen.

During the dinner hour, Mr. Speaker, I phoned a farmer in my riding who has discussed this matter with me at some length to see if he had changed his opinion and to ask him whether we should proceed with a bill of this nature. Sometimes it is wise to check with the people back home. This farmer is a medium sized hog producer and also raises cattle and grows some grain. He told me that despite the deficiencies in the bill which I had mentioned to him, he would like to see it passed. There is no provincial hog marketing board in Saskatchewan. This farmer is concerned not only about the low prices he gets for his hogs, but he is worried that if the rest of the country organizes he, as a Saskatchewan farmer, might be frozen out of the market. For this reason he wants us to pass this bill.

We live in a changing world where we see multinational corporations running grocery and department stores. If there is a powerful bargaining agent on the side of the consumer, I would like to see the farmer put in the position to talk turkey to such people. I do not intend this as a pun, but certainly a turkey farmer needs to be able to talk turkey to such people and insist on an adequate price for his product.

We would like to see some changes made in the bill. As a western Canadian producer in an area from which we have traditionally moved surplus meat into eastern Canada I would like to see protected our historic rights in that respect. We would like to see a bargaining agency established to work for the farmer. If a forward price is set, the producer has the benefit of knowing what he may get next year for a particular product.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we would like to see adequate appeal provisions inserted in the bill so that if farmers are not satisfied their complaints may be heard. This appeal would not be to the agency but to the Crown. I am not suggesting that there will be problems, but we should be prepared to deal with them if problems arise. I know there are other hon. members who wish to speak on the bill. I have no desire to monopolize the time of the House. In conclusion, I wish to say I am in support of orderly marketing, especially for farm products that are presently in trouble, and we should move right away to do something about it.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, it is with some apprehension that I take part in this debate on a bill to establish marketing agencies for farm products on a national scale. I am convinced all hon. members know to what extent the government wishes to find a solution to the slump in agriculture.

I am also convinced that it is not by adjourning the House, as proposed this afternoon the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), that we will solve the problem of the farmers.

When you received that request, Mr. Speaker, you called in the members, which gave us a chance, through a recorded division, to see to what extent the leaders of the Progressive Conservative party, the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit party are interested in the debate. Indeed, the Canadian people will note tomorrow when reading Hansard that those three leaders were away, but that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was present.

Mr. Speaker, it shows how much we want to help the farming industry, how much we are concerned by its problems and how much the government members wish to approve such a—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been speaking about a vote which took place this afternoon. It is against the rules of the House of Commons to reflect on a vote already taken. Secondly, the vote was on a procedural matter. It was on whether we have representative government in Canada. It was not on Bill C-176. The hon. member has been implying that in essence the vote was connected with Bill C-176.

An hon. Member: You were not here.

Mr. Horner: I was here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have listened closely to the remarks of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy). In my opinion he was not reflecting on the vote. He made an observation about the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) moving the adjournment of the House. In fairness to the hon. member, he did not reflect on the vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Horner: That vote was not on Bill C-176.

Mr. Roy (Laval): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for calling the hon. member to order. I have heard him for two years in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. On the 23rd of March last, I had to listen to him until 8:20 a.m. So, I would like him to let me express my views on this legislation.

Let us get back to the subject. What reasons have made us consider this problem? I would first say that our agriculture is in deficit. I think that at present no farmer is so happy with the situation prevailing on the markets. If one considers the net farm income realized last year, one sees that our Canadian farmers incurred a loss of 10 per cent, and I would not want this legislation to be considered in terms of a competition between Eastern and Western Canada. Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I want to approach this legislation, as all my colleagues have done, that is as a member of the Canadian Parliament, and not as a representative of a specific area of our country.

So, in all objectivity, we shall look into the present situation. There are two alternatives: to keep on producing without taking demand into account or to put some order in the market.

We had surpluses in spite of a 50 per cent decrease in farm labour and a 25 per cent reduction in the number of farms in the last 20 years. Agricultural production has increased by some 50 per cent. This increase has been greater than that of demand. What were the results? Never before have such an abundance and such a variety of food products and prepared foods been available to the Canadian housewife.

In 1957, food expenses represented 23 per cent of the income of families and individuals after taxes. In 1968, the percentage was 19 per cent. While consumer prices have increased by 56 per cent from 1949 to August 1968, prices for agricultural products have only increased by 21 per cent.

So that is what the agricultural problem is all about. It is not a production problem. It is a marketing problem.

Without adding to our technical know-how, without resorting to any new methods, we could increase our livestock by 20 million heads of cattle, as compared to the 6½ million we now have.

The same applies to the dairy industry; we could double our production without necessarily increasing the number of heads. We could simply increase our output per unit a little. The production per unit, with regard to cattle, hogs or farm products, has increased a great deal.

What happens if we increase production regardless of the consumers' needs?

There are direct effects on prices to producers.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the bill establishing national marketing agencies should be considered only from the viewpoint of imposing quotas on poultry products, of solving the chicken and egg war.

The first purpose of the bill is to set things in order, to study farm marketing problems. We should not have in mind to set only poultry production in order. There was really a problem about poultry production and we were very pleased when the federal government granted a $388,000 subsidy for the shipment of production surplus to Japan.

It was a subsidy to the broiler industry of Quebec which was losing $250,000 a week. There is no doubt that the financial assistance of the federal Department of Agriculture helped the agricultural industry.

Now if we are convinced of the importance of orderly marketing of farm products, we must accept—

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my time is limited. I will accept questions when my speech is concluded.

[Translation]

I think that if we are aware of the importance of such a legislation, if we really believe in the farming industry and if we want to help it, we should pass this bill without any amendments.

Further, to show to what extent the government is concerned with the problem of marketing farm products, one has only to refer to Bill C-197. We considered it in committee for seven days. We received briefs from all associations that have been willing to submit their views to the committee on agriculture. The members of this committee travelled across Canada, they visited all the Canadian capitals and examined the briefs that have been submitted.

Then, Bill C-176 was introduced in this House on October 26; two days were spent for the second reading and 37 for consideration in committee. To show you the extent of participation from interested parties and the consideration that the briefs received the committee accepted 36 amendments to try to improve this bill, to make it a realistic bill that meets with the farmers' needs. Then, 52 amendments were rejected, but of these eight are still before us at the report stage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall point out to those who believe this is just a chicken and egg controversy that while we were touring the country a question was directed to the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario. This morning, I was listening to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) stating that there should be free movement of all farm products.

And on January 25 last I addressed to the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario the following question, which I quote from Issue No. 14 of the committee proceedings:

• (8:20 p.m.)

Thank you. I have a question for the minister. Does the minister know that since we started to balkanize the provinces, the Quebec broiler producers or the Quebec poultry meat producers lost $250,000 a week since this situation has developed. As a Quebecker, I think that is the application of the separatism thesis that some people want to develop in Quebec, and I think the reaction was so bad actually in Quebec because it was impossible to find any solution during your negotiations.

To which the minister replied:

First of all, Mr. Roy, if I may, sir, with great respect, I take exception to the comment you made that we started to balkanize because of the broiler situation. I respectfully submit, as I did this morning, that the balkanization of Canada started in 1935 with the implementation of the Wheat Act. It seems strange to me, sir, that it is now being referred to as the balkanization of Canada when we talk about broiler and egg problems in Canada.

I think therefore that the primary objective is not to restrict this bill to broilers and eggs and that the first balkanization policy of the provinces has begun, as the Ontario Minister of Agriculture said, with the establishment by the Conservative government, in 1935, of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, attempts are apparently being made to exclude such products while alleging that this bill is good, but not for us. It is alleged that the Canadian Wheat Board is excluded from the bill; beef will also be excluded and the hon. member for Crowfoot seems to be the protector of small producers. Some members of the opposition are attempting to make political hay by asking: What will happen to the family farm? What is going to happen to our family farms?

In fact, they want to exclude beef and veal, but those same people base their arguments on recommendations or suggestions from a very powerful organization to which they often refer—the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture appeared before the committee. They presented a brief on January 14 and here is the recommendation which they made concerning beef and veal—I quote:

We do regret the proposal to exclude cattle and beef from the legislation—

—which is contrary to some people's wishes. I quote, because opposition members often refer to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Here is what they went on to say:

In doing so, producers marketing cattle for feeding and slaughter are deprived of the opportunities for close and competent examination of the industry through the medium of the Council that the legislation would provide, at once, or in the future. There are a great many producers of cattle represented through this Federation who do not share the views on this issue of the organizations opposing inclusion of these products. It should be stressed that inclusion in the Bill in no way commits the industry to support an acceptance of any marketing plan now or in the future, but exclusion does rule out the possibility of using the Act for useful purposes as may, on examination of the issue, appear.

The hon. member for Crowfoot seems to imply that farm organizations are opposed to the inclusion of beef and veal. He speaks on behalf of big producers at the expense of small ones, which is precisely what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture wanted to point out in the presentation of its brief on January 14, 1971.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. For those who want to have certain categories of producers excluded from it, I will read clause 17 dealing with the establishment of agencies, and I quote:

The Governor in Council may by proclamation establish an agency with powers relating to any farm product or farm products the marketing of which in interprovincial and export trade is not regulated pursuant to the Canadian Wheat Board Act or the Canadian Dairy Commission Act where he is satisfied that a majority of the producers of the farm product or of each of the farm products in Canada is in favour of the establishment of an agency.

That means that if the beef or calf producers do not want to be included in this bill they will not be if they so desire.

I cannot see why we would eliminate a category of producers if we look closely at clause 17.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by making a suggestion. I have tried to draw the attention of this House to a product marketing program and I would like to call the attention of the minister on the report of the Federal Task Force on Agriculture which was established on October 10, 1967. Here is what a newspaper had to say on the subject:

—only 8 per cent of researchers in agriculture are doing research work in the area of economy and marketing.

In other words, only one man-year out of 200 alloted to agricultural research production in Canada applies to the field of marketing. So it is urgent to review this situation.

It seems to me that since our productivity is higher than our potential consumption we should direct more of our research work, of our research personnel toward the marketing of agricultural products.

This, Mr. Speaker, is something I would like to suggest to the minister.

In my view, this bill is most important. We want to deal with the current agricultural slowdown. When UCC officials met on November 1st with Quebec members of the government party, they submitted a brief and advised us as to the extent—

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there is unanimous consent, the hon. member may continue. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to thank all my colleagues for their cooperation and assure them I will be brief.

I was saying that the UCC also tried to have the Quebec members of the government party recognize the situation currently facing hog and laying hen producers. For instance, this brief mentioned, in connection with hogs, that when production cost was $29.50 per 100 lbs, the average selling price was $23.50. For 1,700,000 hogs, the deficit was then $10,200,000.

As for laying hen production, the deficit was $4,860,000.

For turkey production, the deficit was $1,125,000, that is to say an aggregate deficit of $16,285,000, solely for the production of hogs, layers and turkeys in the province of Quebec.

I am convinced that those figures are inconsistent with regard to production costs in Ontario and in the Maritimes.

Throughout 1969-70—I have the statistics here—in the eastern provinces, there was an 8 per cent increase, namely of 278,000 hogs, and in the western provinces, a 32 per cent increase, or about 1 million hogs. A tremendous production increase resulted in price changes at the producers' level and it is for that reason that Quebec producers suffered a loss of about $10,200,000.

We are all aware of the importance of agriculture and it is for this reason that we are looking into the farmers' problem between Christmas and New Year's Day and are trying to find a solution. Bill C-176, to establish marketing agencies will be that solution. All products should be included. If some producers want certain products to be excluded, section 17 will give them satisfaction.

In conclusion, I wish to say that agriculture as much as society needs an agricultural policy to promote economic growth. That is what the government party wants to achieve through the passage of this bill.

[English]

Mr. Horner: I know the hon. member is very desirous of bringing about orderly production and marketing, but does he not agree that this all depends on the price and fair distribution of feed grains?

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, is my dear colleague referring to distribution at the consumption or at the production level?

[English]

Mr. Horner: Production.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the establishment of quotas, as stipulated in the bill now before us, will surely be discussed by each minister and each province and that concensus will be arrived at, as stated in the bill, by the producers themselves. Now, I believe that this answers the question asked by my hon. colleague.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on amendments Nos. 1, 5 and 22 to Bill C-176, a bill designed to introduce the principle of supply management to the production of agricultural products. Let me say I believe, as my party believes, that production should be curtailed only when the majority of the producers of the product concerned clearly indicate that they wish to curtail production.

The majority of producers of eggs and poultry across Canada have said very clearly that they wish the introduction of production control. We therefore believe it is quite satisfactory for the federal government to step in and apply the principle of supply management to the production of these two products. However, I think the majority of producers of other farm products have clearly indicated that they do not wish their products to be so controlled. This being the case, I do not think they should be controlled by the federal government.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is what the bill says.

An hon. Member: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Hees: I believe the federal government should adopt the same policy that was followed by the Conservative government which preceded it. That policy was to encourage farm production by taking effective steps to sell our surplus agricultural products in the export market. The application of this principle had several results. First, it relieved pressure on domestic prices of agricultural products and, second, it ensured that our products were sold in their entirety either in Canada or on the export market, obtaining for Canadian producers the best possible market. Such an aggressive and expansive policy is a very far cry from the negative, restrictionist policy presented in this bill.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I very strongly urge, and our party strongly urges, this government to start to do something constructive along these lines, to start now to organize a massive export trade drive similar to that which was organized by the Conservative government which preceded this government in power. It should endeavour to sell our agricultural surpluses in the export market, gaining for our producers the best possible price and protecting the prices of products sold in the domestic market as well.

This can and must be done, Mr. Speaker. It can be done if this government will simply get off their fat behinds and get to work, instead of sitting back and doing nothing about selling our products around the world. This lethargy is the reason our export trade has increased by a mere 5 per cent over last year. This is a disgraceful performance and something which must be corrected right away.

I see that you feel I should return to the bill, and naturally I shall, Mr. Speaker. In order to make it unnecessary to apply the principle of supply management to products that have not been indicated by the majority of the producers of them that they wish the production of such products to be curtailed, this government must organize a sales drive and go out into the export market and sell our surplus products. This will enable our hard-pressed farmers to receive a fair return for their products and will restore agriculture, at long last, to a healthy and profitable condition.

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we have heard quite an interesting speech by the hon. member, but perhaps he should not be given the responsibility once again of being the minister of industry, trade and commerce—"Sell, no matter at what price or at what cost". But there was very little in his speech pertaining to the legislation with which we are dealing.

Mr. Speaker, having listened with a great deal of interest throughout the day to the arguments put forward by hon. members on the question of orderly marketing and Bill C-176, I suggest that the amendment proposed by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is probably based on the very dismal record of the present government in terms of its handling of agricultural policies over the last 3½ years. One needs only to reflect on the unsuccessful Lift program to see what a failure this government can be when it comes to such things as supply management. We can also look at the operations of the Canadian Dairy Commission to explain the reluctance of some members on this side of the House to blindly accept the proposed legislation.

When the bill was first introduced in this House under another number it read in such a manner as to not merely allow the government to create a situation of orderly marketing but to control marketing in the interests of the government, and to control production. It was not what I would consider orderly marketing. It was through the work of opposition members on the Standing Committee on Agriculture that we have seen some of the improvements in the legislation.

The amendments we are now discussing would become even more redundant, Mr. Speaker, if some other amendments were accepted by the government. I should like to deal with the amendments on the assumption that the bill as it now stands is reasonable. I begin by saying that I was pleased to see that the government changed the requirements for representation on the council. The council is to consist of——three and not more than nine members, at least 50 per cent of whom shall be primary producers—

Possibly that could have been worded to make them almost all primary producers. The government has made some change in that the agencies as well have a majority of primary producers on the board. However, may I suggest that the government consider some additional changes to the agencies. Possibly the agency should be representative of the primary producers in the sense that they are elected by the primary producers affected by the particular agency in question. I would also suggest that the primary producers who become members of the agency have the right to bargain for price supports and subsidies to their programs when they find that prices are inadequate. As the elected representative of the producers, this agency should be allowed to set minimum and maximum prices, assuming that there can be minimum and maximum prices.

The Conservative amendments do not take into consideration that this is permissive legislation which allows the producers themselves to decide whether they wish to come within its terms. I refer to the bill which in section 7(2) provides:

The council, in reporting to the minister under subsection (1), shall not recommend the establishment of an agency in respect of a farm product or farm products or the broadening of the authority of an existing agency by vesting it with powers in relation to a farm product or farm products unless it is satisfied that a majority of the producers of the farm product or of each of the farm products in Canada or in the region of Canada to which the recommendation relates is in favour of such action.

If producers of certain commodities are not inclined toward the concept of orderly marketing, they have the option of deciding among themselves not to become involved. There are other areas of this bill that could be improved in order to make it more workable. There is, for example, the whole question of the establishment of quotas. We have seen the results of the operation of the Canadian Dairy Commission in terms of the quotas that dairy producers received and the amount of production allowed. In light of that experience, the government should consider changing this legislation in order that we may have, in the words of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave):

A marketing plan to the extent that it allocates any production or marketing quota to any area of Canada, shall allocate that quota on the basis of the production from that area in relation to the total production of Canada over a period of five years immediately preceding the effective date of the marketing plan. In allocating additional quotas for anticipated growth of market demand, the marketing agency shall be guided by the principle of comparative advantage of production.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is not to deter a particular area or region from the quotas it deserves. It is, in fact, a matter in which each area is allowed its fair and just share of the quotas under that particular product. There is also the question of the manner in which the farmer may appeal if he is not satisfied with the way the agency is handling his particular quota. The council shall make such inquiries and take such action within its powers as it deems appropriate in relation to any complaints received by it from any person who is directly affected by the operations of an agency and that relate to the operations of such agency.

I believe that particular manner of appeal in this legislation could be strengthened by the use of the amendment suggested by the hon. member from Fraser Valley. There should be every option available to the farmer to appeal to the agencies of the council in terms of the manner in which his particular products are being handled. I believe there should be a tightening of the means of appeal within this legislation.

There is another area which, if improved, would make the amendment suggested by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition somewhat more redundant than it is; that is, if the government would consider the question of promotion in respect of selling farm products, as suggested at page 17 of the bill, to which I should like to refer for a moment, where it states that an agency may "undertake to advertise and promote and do research into new markets for the establishment of greater sales." The hon. member for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition just referred to this. The government is introducing a clause which deals with promotion of farm products and increasing their sale, I suppose especially in the export market. Then at page 19 we find this provision in clause 27:

Subject to subsection (1) of section 28, an agency shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by Parliament.

The only appropriation is a grant from the Minister of Agriculture in order to get the agency started. I suggest to the government that if it wants to improve this legislation so as not to face amendments such as those introduced by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, it should take into consideration the fact that more funds should be available to the agencies in terms of grants from the government in order that those agencies may do the proper kind of research to ensure that all products have an opportunity to be sold in foreign markets.

We in the New Democratic Party, for a considerable length of time in history have been essentially in favour of orderly marketing. We still take this position. I suppose the definition of "orderly marketing" over the years has somewhat changed in terms of its effect upon the primary producer. Some of the changes I have recommended to the government in terms of this legislation would do a better job of ensuring that there is real orderly marketing.

In conclusion, I suggest there are approximately three areas in which this legislation could be improved. First of all, the bill should relate market-sharing quotas to historic production records. It should strengthen the farmer's bargaining power in terms of prices, and it should improve the farmer's appeal procedures. I suppose the dilemma we face in this party in terms of the legislation is that we have a government which is introducing legislation dealing with orderly marketing and we have before us its record in terms of agricultural policies. It is not a question of opposing orderly marketing but of whether or not we can trust the Liberal Party to handle orderly marketing.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the opportunity I have to express my views on this bill which in my opinion is one of the most important ever introduced in the House in the last three years. I think all hon. members will realize that we needed legislation that could alleviate the difficulties agriculture has been facing for many years, that means realistic legislation.

In fact, it seems to me that all hon. members intend to help our farmers as much as possible. Since lack of planning has been deplored, the government prepared Bill C-176. And, having examined this bill long enough, I feel the government probably will do Canadian producers a service.

I believe in the merits of this bill and I do not hesitate to say that ever since I was elected to this House, agricultural groups in my constituency have been in favour of legislation designed to control production. Considering the experience that Canadian producers have had with this policy of supply and demand, which has put the farming community through ups and downs, without ensuring price stability for consumers, I think it is easy enough to recognize that a piece of legislation such as Bill C-176 will prove most beneficial to the people.

Of course, after 18 months, you try to introduce some amendments. Yet I am under the impression that this bill was adequately discussed in committee. At this stage, we could have saved time and legislated seriously, for the benefit of farmers.

Like many others, I promised the farmers I would fight for the interests of those who live in my riding, not for the sake of a few individuals, but for the good of a community. I will ask the government to keep on doing whatever is necessary to offer the farmers the service that Bill C-276 represents.

I say "service", Mr. Speaker, because taking into account the amendments designed to reduce the scope of the bill, we know full well that this bill to establish a national council, which provides adequate representation of agricultural leaders on that council, previous consultations with the representatives of the ten provinces—something we have not witnessed often in this country—to discuss quotas, distribution of national production in terms of each province, and marketing, to the extent where it would be favorable to the majority of the producers of a given commodity, offers the solution to all the problems.

All the worries of the hon. members who object against that legislation are dispelled.

In my opinion, it is clearly defined in page 8 of the bill and I quote:

(2) The Council, in reporting to the Minister under subsection (1), shall not recommend the establishment of an agency in respect of a farm product or farm products or the broadening of the authority of an existing agency by vesting it with powers in relation to a farm product or farm products unless it is satisfied that a majority of the producers of the farm product or of each of the farm products in Canada or in the region of Canada to which the recommendation relates is in favour of such action.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me quite clear. If Bill C-176 is a service made available by the government to farmers who may use it according to their needs, it would indeed be unfortunate if the government would amend the bill and exclude some products, because once again the legislation does not compel farmers to accept quotas. Thus the farmers will be able to take advantage of the legislation if they so desire.

I think that we could not, except through this bill, achieve stability in the interest of the agricultural class, and stability of prices, which is also necessary, cannot be achieved without production control.

The policy of supply and demand that some would like to keep has nonetheless brought about great difficulties and we know too well today overproduction in various fields to believe that this policy is still valid today.

I was listening a short while ago to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) who was talking about the good policy of the Progressive Conservative government when it was in power. I would like to believe that the Progressive Conservative party had an excellent agricultural policy—it would be dishonest for me to claim the contrary—but times have changed and difficulties have not decreased. A new act is also desirable.

The government feels that Bill C-176 could solve the problems now facing the farmers.

Bill C-176, as I was saying, leaves the decision up to the majority. I come back to this because I believe that this paragraph is important. Why exclude some products? When we know very well that some day these categories of producers will perhaps need this legislation which will be there for them to use. Once again, they will be free to use it or not.

Some mention was made of difficulties between provinces. It was given to understand that this would bring about confrontations. On the contrary, without Bill C-176, we have known such difficulties, such trade barriers between the provinces. On the contrary, I think it is wrong to claim that Bill C-176 will bring about these problems.

Worries were also expressed about foreign competition which could be too rough. Having a National Council would prove an ideal way, I think, to make the minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) aware of the need to limit certain imports from time to time, but I also think that the National Council, created in accordance with Bill C-176, would be the best channel to reach the responsible minister.

There was also concern about the disappearance of some small producers, and the same hon. member who said that Bill C-176 was going to drive many into the ground admitted at the same time that for ten years now we have seen thousands of them cease their operations. Yet Bill C-176 was not in force during the last ten years.

So it is foolish, I think, to bring in such an ambiguous argument.

I believe rather that the small producer will one day benefit from the establishment of production quotas and will have the assurance of selling his production at a reasonable price, which will encourage him to pursue his farming career. The big corporation which can only too easily assimilate small producers will have a harder time doing it because small farmers will be guaranteed security.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this will encourage farmers' children to remain in agriculture, thus ensuring them of some stability and security.

I think the objective of Bill C-176 is to give farmers the security workers enjoy today as a result of improved programs. Farmers are also in need of a better farm policy, and I am convinced that Bill C-176 will achieve this goal.

In any case, if we really want to serve the farming community, I believe it is time we stop moving all these amendments.

This bill has been under consideration for months. Our farmers are particularly anxious to see this piece of legislation enacted. We could, in a very short time, solve some of the problems that may arise among farmers who want to live in agreement with all provinces in this country. I believe this bill will bring about what has never been done before, namely to bring to the same table representatives from all provinces, in order to discuss together the problems that affect the whole nation.

It is unthinkable to continue to pass measures at the provincial level, because we all know that compensation will come sooner or later. I believe that the Minister of Agriculture has met on several occasions with provincial ministers of agriculture and that it is no exaggeration to say that most of them agreed that the bill should be introduced with amendments. From the start, it has been changed and reviewed and today there still seems to be opposition to this instrument indispensable to farmers who need stability and security.

I believe that all the objectives which our farmers have at heart will be achieved through Bill C-176. There can be debate and even petty politics about the bill, but I do not feel it is right to delay its passage any further, knowing full well that it is our farmers who will be footing the bill.

Perhaps a more efficient measure could have been imagined, but in the House nobody has proposed such a measure yet. Therefore it seems to me that we should act quickly and at the same time let hon. members express their views. I congratulate all those who take part in this important debate, but I believe that we should also be honest with the farmers. I think we must also be practical and give the agricultural community an instrument that we have not tried yet. We passed a great deal of measures concerning agriculture, but we know the results today. The problems have not disappeared and the causes for concern remain.

I think that Bill C-176 will eliminate a number of these problems and part of this concern. If the government legislates seriously and honestly to improve the condition of the agricultural community, this community will live better and enjoy an income comparable to that of unionized workers.

Mr. Speaker, I close my remarks by calling on hon. members to give serious thought to this bill which will not divide the country but unite Canadian farmers for the benefit of the provinces and for the benefit of all Canadians.

[Mr. La Salle.]

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate and express my support for the very worth-while amendments that we are discussing. If hon. members pass these amendments I believe we will get somewhere. They are important to all the people who are concerned with this bill. In this context I refer to many people who strongly favour marketing bills. In this particular instance I refer to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, who have stated:

> Be it resolved that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool press for producer representation on the marketing council, and majority producer representation on the marketing agencies.

These are some of the things they believe in and that we are seeking. We have a perfect right to do so because these are sound, logical amendments. I recall when Saskatchewan held a plebiscite not many years ago with respect to a marketing bill applicable to livestock. Today I tried to get the exact figures that were recorded in that plebiscite, but failed. I do know that the livestock producers voted overwhelmingly against that bill. I believe they should have that right again and should not be forced by this bill. I would also like to mention the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. This is a sound organization, but its members also feel that the producers of individual commodities should have the right to determine, by way of plebiscite, whether they want an agency to handle the marketing of their produce.

I take strong exception to the speech delivered this afternoon by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride). He said that my colleague, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), was speaking only for big interests and ranchers. I want to tell him that the hon. member for Crowfoot speaks for all his constituents. I shall refer to some statistics for the benefit of the hon. member, statistics which he can pass on to his constituents. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, in a release dated December 22, 1971, stated:

> Average net income of Saskatchewan farmers has dropped to $2,650 from $5,640 between 1969 and 1970, according to the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture.

Possibly the hon. member would go back and tell that to his constituents. Perhaps he would like to go back and tell his constituents more of the truth and let them know some of the things that are taking place. Possibly he would tell them that this country, with its so-called just society, which has experienced an increase in population of less than one million since 1965, today costs twice as much to administer as it did in 1965. Perhaps he would like to tell his constituents some of the truth with respect to what is happening in this just society, instead of criticizing members of the official opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the hon. member for interrupting. I appreciate that his remarks to this point are introductory in nature and that he will be coming to the substance of his speech and turning to the motions which are before us. However, it seems to me that his last remarks were outside the terms of the motions now before the House.

Mr. Cadieu: Mr. Speaker, all of the hon. member's remarks were allowed to go on the record this afternoon when you were not in the chair and I think I should be allowed to place some of the truth on the record so that he can go back and tell his constituents what is taking place. I apologize for straying from the subject of the amendments, but this was allowed this afternoon and I think the people should be told about it.

Mr. McBride: On a point of order—

Mr. Cadieu: He should go back and tell his clergy on Sunday—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members should try not to be personal in debate.

Mr. McBride: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member keeps referring to me, I suggest he check Hansard. He will see that I referred to this amendment and described how the bill would help small farmers.

Mr. Horner: You didn't even know what amendment was up for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) has the floor.

Mr. Cadieu: We will get away from all that, Mr. Speaker, and talk about what is going on and what is in the cabinet's mind. The livestock producers do not want to be included in the provisions of this bill. These are the only amendments that we are pressing and if they were adopted we would be willing to let the bill pass. They are good, sound, sensible amendments. As I have said, the members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool do not believe that producers should have a marketing bill forced on them without first having an opportunity to make their views known in a plebiscite. That is what we are seeking, Mr. Speaker. The livestock men would not have risen up in the way they did if it was not something they did not want. They do not want this bill forced on them. Why should it be forced on them?

We in western Canada brought in the Wheat Board. We are proud of it. That is a great piece of legislation. It gave the people the right to say whether they wanted the board or not. I think cattlemen should be given the same right.

Mr. McBride: They have the right.

Mr. Cadieu: Last spring, when this legislation was introduced, we were continually called to meetings throughout our constituencies and the cattlemen packed the halls and said they did not want this marketing bill.

Mr. McBride: And did you tell them the truth?

Mr. Cadieu: Why force them into it?

Mr. McBride: We are not forcing them.

Mr. Cadieu: Put the bill through in a form which says that producers of an individual commodity who desire to use it, may use its provisions.

Mr. McBride: That is what the bill says.

Mr. Cadieu: That is not what you were talking about this afternoon. You were criticizing the official opposition. I want you to go back and tell your people what is happening. I am sure all hon. members received a particular document on their desks this afternoon. Mr. Speaker, do you know what it would cost the producer of eggs in British Columbia if he wanted to increase his production by a dozen eggs per week? It would cost him $3.85.

Mr. Horner: No, $385.

Mr. Cadieu: Yes, $385—just to produce another dozen eggs.

Mr. McBride: Who wrote this?

Mr. Cadieu: It is all written up here. I am sure you received this document on your desk.

Mr. McBride: Who wrote it up? Hudson?

Mr. Bigg: You've got a big mouth, McBride.

Mr. McBride: Tell us about the wheat pool.

Mr. Cadieu: It is just completely ridiculous that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the government are tying up the House of Commons for a petty, stupid thing. They are trying to be dictators, to force something on the producers that they don't want. Let us take a look at this bill. Let us get down to earth and read the whole bill. I have read it a dozen times. All the livestock producers in my area say they do not want it. And I warn hon. members not to think that all hog producers are in favour of it. Look at the situation in Manitoba. What part of this bill do they want?

Mr. McBride: Tell us about Schreyer.

Mr. Bigg: Shut up, McBride.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I invite hon. members to respect the hon. member for Meadow Lake who has the floor. The Chair would like to hear the hon. member.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Cadieu: The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) has spoken. We are not opposed to Quebec's introducing marketing legislation. They can bring that in; we are not opposing it. We feel they have a right to vote for it, if that is what they want. However, we do not want, and the producers out west do not want, them to tell us that we must accept this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Down with the Social Credit Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McBride: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has implied that this bill is for the benefit of Quebec only and is against the interests of the west. That is categorically untrue.

An hon. Member: That is no point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member has had his turn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat, please. The hon. member is really arguing a point of debate.

Mr. McBride: I am telling the truth.

Mr. Cadieu: Mr. Speaker, I have so much material in front of me that if I were to refer to it all tonight no one else would get a chance to speak. For instance, the British Columbia Beef Cattle Growers' Association has said:

> As cattlemen, our members are greatly concerned and upset with the proposed federal compulsory marketing legislation—presented to the House of Commons as Bill C-176.

In every part of western Canada beef producers are opposed to this bill.

An hon. Member: But the United Church is not!

Mr. Cadieu: If you want to pass marketing legislation that will exempt beef cattle and calves and will give producers adequate representation on boards, then I say that if the people concerned see any future in the legislation I am sure they will come half way to meet you. But why try to shove it down their throats? They do not want it and they are not going to accept it. We will stay here and fight this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieu: We are going to stay right here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: You bet we are.

Mr. Cadieu: And God help you if you people bring in closure to pass this bill. That will be the day, I can tell you.

Mr. Horner: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Meadow Lake should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Nowlan: He was being provoked. The government is employing an agent provocateur.

Mr. Cadieu: Mr. Speaker, when you were kind enough to give me the floor I only wanted to speak to you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieu: I was a bit intrigued by the hon. member's remarks this afternoon and I want to leave him with something he can take back to his constituency so that he can tell the truth about what is going on. No matter to which part of the country I turn, I hear protests against this bill. I have never received any encouragement to support it. We have groups that favour a marketing program such as is involved with our wheat pools but, by hell, the producers do not want this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieu: We hear talk of producer control and a plebiscite. Under a democracy, people should have the right to say whether they will accept the bill or not. We have no grievance against Quebec. We would like them to buy our beef. We want to ship them lots of it and we will give them good beef, too. But we do not want them to tell us that we are going to have a marketing board whether we like it or not.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieu: Mr. Speaker, I could go on in this vein at great length. However, since there are many others who want to speak I will say no more. I hope the minister will pay attention to us and heed our suggestions, and that he will come into this House with an appropriate amendment so that we can all get out of here.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member in favour of the orderly marketing of wheat as through the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Cadieu: Yes, I am very much in favour of it.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Then are we not doing the same thing in this bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) may ask a question but he should not engage in debate. If there is a further question, perhaps the hon. member for Meadow Lake will receive it.

Mr. Cadieu: Mr. Speaker, we have the Wheat Board because we want it. We worked for it and we got it. That is why it is there. But we do not want a large marketing board for cattle, and we are protesting against it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté).

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Richelieu.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Honey): Order. The hon. member for Richelieu has the floor.

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a point of order but simply to express my opinion on this bill which seems to me to be very poorly understood by hon. members opposite. For the last two years I have been wanting to express my opinion in this House on one of the most important pieces of legislation which many seem to consider to be a matter of feelings rather than serious legislation.

Since I seldom rise in this House because I have always considered the Commons as a place where we would try and pass legislation to fulfil our mandates as efficiently as possible, I was very disappointed to hear speeches which seemed to me to have separatist overtones.

• (9:30 p.m.)

There is an aspect of this legislation which does not seem to be understood. A few years ago, the Canadian farmer—I did not say from Quebec or Western Canada or the Maritime Provinces—was asked to try and provide consumers with products at the best possible prices, so that consumers—wherever commodities might be produced or consumed—may pay a normal price. I believe the farmer responded very efficiently with such a production increase that for two years now this government, knowing that the real problem was not a production but a marketing problem, introduced the famous bill C-196.

It may be said that I am not dealing directly with the motion presented by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) whom I would have preferred to see in his seat, for that same amendment was discussed on many occasions during the debate on second reading as well as in the standing committee on agriculture. As I was saying, farmers do recognize marketing as being probably the most effective tool that can be had. When some hon. members suggested this afternoon that we were going to destroy family farming they were merely playing on words for the benefit of the House. I do not think that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) was serious, any more than other hon. members who made suggestions which to me seemed highly illogical. He may have used the wrong expression, for the one means through which family farms can be established or preserved is precisely this marketing board, which will prevent large producers in Eastern as well as Western Canada from preserving a monopoly. The farmers concerned are not producers tied-up with a co-operative, as someone said this afternoon, but producers who live from their farms and who were clever enough to settle close to a big co-operative—and mention was made of the Granby co-operative.

Those same producers should be allowed to take advantage of bill C-176 so that they themselves—not the government, as the hon. member who spoke before me was saying—would establish marketing agencies. It is the farmers themselves who are asking for them and who are voting for this bill designed to establish marketing boards in their province.

There is no point in exaggerating the way it was done during the 38 committee meetings. There was talk of separatism, of Quebec and the West. I do not think this will lead anywhere.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, would the honourable member permit a question?

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Yes, but only when I am through, if I may, as I have had so much to say for so long that I would like to complete my remarks first.

Mr. Beaudoin: Agreed.

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, it will be my pleasure when my time is expired to reply to the honourable member for Richmond, and probably enlighten him.

This afternoon, I noted the concern of the member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) who stated that last March, we wasted time discussing with Quebec and Ontario, and you see that I do not mention western Canada. I also believe that the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) and the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) will do their utmost to convince their colleagues to participate in the discussion. And yet thousands of dollars have been wasted because we had no national marketing agency while the farm production in certain regions was out of all proportion with the consumption of neighbouring cities. We, of the federal government, could admit to ourselves that we are to blame, but I have the privilege of stating that we cannot do that. The opposition could say it because this bill would have been passed two years or at least one and a half years ago had we not been prevented from so doing.

It is now thought that this bill would benefit the production of eggs, broilers and poultry meat. How is it possible that a bill can be said to be beneficial in regard to a farm product produced in one region of the country and not to another produced in another region?

The hon. member who spoke before me wished that a more equitable bill could have been introduced.

This bill, which is national in scope, is actually fairer. It is not an eastern or a western bill because it affects the whole range of farm products and I would not like my hon. colleagues, be they of the opposition or otherwise, to try to exclude a particular product alleging that the farmer does not want it. It is not true.

People from eastern and western Canada have asked us why he have delayed passage of the bill. Representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—which is a national agency—came to us last year, requesting that this bill be passed as quickly as possible. This Federation which groups all agricultural organizations did not request that the bill exclude beef and veal and include only broilers and eggs. It asked that all farm products be included. There are presently two acts and two programs governing these two specific products.

The Canadian Dairy Commission aims at distributing milk at the same price everywhere in the country.

The previous speaker would like Bill C-176 to be similar to the legislation governing the Canadian Wheat Board. Mr. Speaker, I shall reply in the negative. I do not want it. I should even ask this government to withdraw this bill since I do not wish it to have a limited range. I want that bill to apply all across Canada because I am a Canadian.

As a farmer, I am ready to abide by some quotas as concerns some products as eggs and broilers. Therefore, it would be false to say that this bill is to be effective in eastern Canada and not in other parts of Canada. If beef, veal, or pork production is no longer profitable, quotas shall be established not by the government but by the producers, as they recognize that overproduction results in lower prices. If we want a normal price to be maintained, we should be able to abide by some quotas at the consumption level. If we accept to abide by some quotas as concerns eggs and broilers, we should be ready to abide by some quotas also as concerns other commodities. To act otherwise would be very harmful; a second balkanization would occur if this government accepted to have only part of the products under quotas. Then, I would resign, I would oppose the government, whatever its political denomination, because I want the passage of a national legislation.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, I learned just to what extent this bill could be beneficial, because the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) recognized its efficiency during informal conversations in between the meetings of the committee on agriculture. They said that this bill seemed to "smell good" for the farmer. Strangely enough, we do not feel that it will smell good simply for election purposes; we know that this bill will be good for a sector of the Canadian economy. In fact, agriculture represents 35 per cent of the Canadian economy.

We were told that this bill should not be passed, that it would be too advantageous from an electoral point of view. Now, if it were as bad as it was depicted a while ago, I feel a good number of members of the opposition would want it passed, as it would be an excellent means of leading eventually to the downfall of the government. I am convinced that is how things would happen if this bill were really that bad.

But as they know the farmers want this legislation, because it will be truly efficient, they will not let it be passed. And how do they go about it? This afternoon, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) probably remembered what he did last summer, and that disappointed me. Last summer, the principle of democracy—that the majority decides, and that at times the minority has to accept the decision of the majority—was not recognized. So, at the time when we were sitting in committee to discuss section 2—a section that they would change through an amendment concerning natural products—after a tremendous amount of verbiage, nothing remained to be said. Opposition members saw that they could no longer face the majority of the Committee on Agriculture which stuck to its guns. So, two members, the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Mackenzie must remember the two members of the committee on agriculture who retired to the rear of the room and said: You no longer have quorum, and this simply in order to prevent the committee from sitting.

That was deplorable, because members of farm associations had come to Ottawa. There were some from the West, from Quebec and Ontario, and they treated us as children. We were even told: Back home, if we acted like that, we would be taken for ridiculous characters. We were even told that democracy was next to anarchy. What happened in the committee last year seems to be starting all over again here.

I do not want to hold the House too long, so I ask all hon. members to make sure that agriculture will be in a better position tomorrow. Let us not forget that thousands of dollars were lost each week, last fall, in egg production. The same thing might happen with regard to pork or beef. We do not know the future. Production might exceed consumption and then, prices would drop. But some hon. members might not be here after the next election because I imagine they will be defeated if they vote against the legislation. They might have to admit that at the end of 1971, they had the opportunity to solve the real problem, that is the marketing of farm products.

I have been told, before taking part in this debate, that perhaps Bill C-176 would be misunderstood in eastern Canada. This may amuse those who are not from the East, while helping them to understand better the problems of eastern Canada. It has been suggested to me that there might be someone inside the slaughter-houses to take over the overproduction or do something so that this bill will not cure all ills.

I don't believe that by passing this bill we will solve all problems relating to agriculture, but we will at least put in the hands of the producers, who want to control themselves, the marketing of their products, and not have it done by the state, marketing agencies of their own. Afterwards, if conditions are worse, we could perhaps exchange views with producers, but up to now, as politicians, if we can so call ourselves, and as farmers, it is the first such legislation introduced in the House since I have been a member that I urge hon. members to pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Honey): Order. The hon. member for Richmond wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Richelieu has just said that all Canadian producers are demanding that Bill C-176 be passed. I would like to ask him if he knows that recently, a majority of hog producers voted against the establishment of any program dealing with hog production.

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, the hog producers did not vote against the establishment of a hog producers' association. The production per unit was perhaps heavier among large producers who at times try to exercise control and this is what we want to prevent!

Mr. Beaudoin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask my hon. colleague and friend from Richelieu if he knows that those who voted—be they important or not,—were hog producers and that, by a majority vote, they made known that they were against the establishment of a joint program for hog production.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Agreed. I well understand the question and my hon. friend from Richmond, who is from an area where this legislation is eagerly awaited, is right in asking it.

There have been serious problems there. If this bill had been given effect, the egg and poultry producers' association would not have known such difficulties. The beef, egg and poultry producers have formed an association, but as there was no legislation that applied nationally, they have fought amongst themselves, they have dumped their products in one another's region and have had some very difficult problems. They have had money losses because of this lack of national legislation.

When hog producers voted, they were influenced by the fact that broiler production was uneconomical for lack of federal legislation. Hog producers felt that there would be practically no results so long as Bill C-176 had not been passed. So they got confused because of the egg experience and of the opportunity for setting up a hog producers' association, however in the absence of federal legislation they could not be efficient. They did not feel the need for it. That is why we must pass this federal legislation as early as possible. Subsequently, the provincial marketing agencies will integrate and as they have to resort to the federal legislation the marketing problem in Canada will fade away.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would appear we are now entering into a debate between the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) and the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté). I might say that the time allotted to the hon. member for Richelieu has now expired.

Mr. Downey: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I realize the time of the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) has expired, but there is one question we should clear up, in light of the discussion we have heard between the two hon. members on the subject of the family farm. If I might pose a further question to the hon. member for Richelieu—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stanbury: What kind of question of privilege is that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I have indicated, the time of the hon. member for Richelieu has expired. The Chair is, of course, in the hands of hon. members and if they wish to extend the time available to the hon. member they can do so. Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Downey: I note that according to the figures, about 80 per cent of the broiler industry in Quebec is controlled by four outfits—three feed companies and an organization headed by a man called Benoît Beauregard. Was the hon. member referring to the family farms which control 80 per cent of industry in Quebec, namely, the four I have mentioned? I should also like to ask the hon. member this question: Is he, or is he not, a tool of the integrators?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair asked hon. members if they wished to extend the time of the hon. member for Richelieu so that he might accept a question from the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey). With respect, the hon. member for Battle River should have asked a question rather than entered into debate with the hon. member. The hon. member for Richelieu might wish to answer the first question, but with respect to the second part it seemed to the Chair that it was not a proper question.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I must abide by your decision that the second question should not be answered. However, I wish I could have answered it.

As for the first question about the family farm, it was not raised by myself but by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Besides, I had explained myself the gradual elimination of small producers, and a phenomenon which is of concern to him. In fact, on Quebec farms, there remain very few broiler producers. The lack of a national legislation accounts for the breaking up of the family farm and the taking over of big producers. The family farm producers were unable to put up with the ups and downs of production.

The small producers who were unable to support production costs were automatically absorbed by the big producers. The purpose of the bill now under study is to prevent such things in the future.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It does seem to the Chair, with respect, that we are entering into debate and I think it would be unfair to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) if the Chair did not recognize him.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I really thought this was the place for debate, but it may be that the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) will have an opportunity to enter into it later and explore the situation which apparently took place in Quebec and which I thought the Liberal government under Jean Lesage would have straightened out as they straightened out so many other things in that province.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to engage in or try to promote any acrimonious conversation or debate. We are too soon after Christmas for that. There is also the fact that, as we all know, it is almost a standardized way of proceeding in this House for the government to prepare and develop legislation and ideas, present them to the House on a take-it-or-leave-it basis and then sit back and wait for the criticism of the opposition and for changes to be put forward. Almost invariably, the proposals for change are not dealt with on their merits but, rather, on the basis of their source.

Regretfully, we find that governments over the years, this one probably more than any other, tend to automatically reject suggestions from the opposition regardless of merit; tends to reject them out of hand because they come from the wrong source. That, of course, does not lead to a very sensible type of legislation.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that with the type of legislation before us that deals with a group of people in the farming industry, in the agricultural section of our economy—a group of people who probably beyond anybody else in society have not got any large degree of authority over their own income, their methods of operation, their own economic well-being—this is the one time when Parliament should settle down and try to examine what we are doing in a sensible, reasonable and logical way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That was the hope this afternoon and I am sure it was the hope of members of the Liberal party who spoke earlier. One parliamentary secretary—I cannot recall his constituency—approached it in a rational and sensible way, to examine from a very careful point of view what this Parliament of Canada could do that would be best for the farmers of this nation. Regretfully, the speech we heard a moment ago did not have that tone at all but was designed to antagonize, to be acrimonious and not to seek a logical conclusion to anything, but just to be offensive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): This was also the case with the question of my friend from Battle River; it fell within the same category.

An hon. Member: Terrible!

Mr. Horner: Beware lest you fall into the same category.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not come from a farming background and I do not know a great deal about it from the point of view of people who have to farm for a living.

Mr. Forrestall: Where is your colleague? Where is the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave)?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): However, I know a fair amount about the fishing industry and the legislation of the Parliament of Canada in respect to the position of people engaged in it. There is a distinct parallel between farming activity and fishing activity, and from that standpoint I should like to say a few words.

I am sure there is not a farmer in this House who would not agree that the farmer is the one person in this economy who has not very large control over his income. He is trapped on both sides. Somebody else decides what he will pay for machinery, for services, for facilities, for equipment, for fuel and all the other commodities he needs to carry on. He has no authority and no control in that. The decision is made in the farm implement industry, the oil industry, the chemical industry. Whatever the farmer has to buy, someone else dictates what he shall pay for it.

He is in the same position when it comes to selling the commodities he produces. He has no control and no authority over what price he shall receive for them. Early this afternoon we talked about the position of the Kraft company with respect to the cheese industry. This company determines what it will pay to the dairy industry for its product which it turns into a junky kind of cheese.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): My friend says no, but I consider that Kraft makes a junky type of cheese. Taking Kraft just as one company, the farmer does not negotiate a price with it but takes what is offered. It has been indicated that if Kraft does not like a certain number of producers in an area, it buys them out. My friend can shake his head till it drops off, but I am telling the facts. Using that as an example, the farmer generally does not have any degree of authority in setting the price for which he sells his products. He is caught in a cost-price squeeze, and that is what we should be dealing with.

Mr. Horner: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

PUBLIC SERVICE—DISPLAYING OF POLITICAL POSTERS BY EMPLOYEES AT HOME OR ON PERSONAL PROPERTY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on November 26, I asked the government the following question:

Is the government contemplating any changes to the Public Service Employment Act which would make clear that a public servant is not contravening the act when he displays a political poster at his own home or on his own personal property?

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) answered:

Mr. Speaker, this is obviously a question which cannot be answered in one word. I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would give me some of the circumstances.

The question I asked on that date arose out of a question which I had placed on the order paper on October 27, 1971, which read as follows:

Are public servants prohibited from displaying or allowing to be displayed a political poster on their personal property and, if so, under what authority?

The answer given by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) was as follows:

I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows:

Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act provides that: Public servants may attend political meetings and may contribute money for the funds of a candidate for election or money for the funds of a political party. In addition, an employee may seek nomination as a candidate and be a candidate for election in a federal, provincial or territorial election, provided he is granted leave of absence without pay by the Public Service Commission for such purpose.

This section of the act, however, prohibits employees from engaging in any other type of work for, on behalf of or against a candidate for election of a political party.

• (10:00 p.m.)

This answer, I suggest, clearly indicates that it is against the Public Service Employment Act for a public servant in the employ of the Government of Canada to allow a political poster to be displayed at his home. My question on the order paper was placed there in the first place because of some incidents reported during provincial election campaigns this past summer. For instance, I have before me a Post Office circular to its employees which I was given in the city of Edmonton during the Alberta provincial election campaign. Points one and two set out prohibited political activity and permissible political activity. They are directly in line with the answer I was given to the question to which I referred a minute ago. It seems to me there is need for clarification regarding posters because some postal supervisors and others told employees to take down lawn posters from their homes because it was in contravention of the act.

I suggest the answer given to the question I asked maintains that civil servants cannot even say through political posters in or on their own property that they are for Joe Blow or whoever it may be. It might be argued that the erection of a poster is working for or against a candidate. If that is the case, a civil servant is contravening the act if he reveals to anyone who he is going to vote for. This is the logical conclusion which must be drawn if we say revelation of support through one way or another is working for or against a candidate.

This is an infringement of fundamental rights and liberties in Canada. In dealing with the problem I think we have to look at the Public Service Employment Act. I do not have time to quote the relevant subsections 1, 2, 3 in clause 32 which are essentially as I have already referred to them. It seems to me, though, that it would be a very simple matter to extend the provisions of subsection 2 to provide that the display of a poster at one's home, whether inside or outside or on a lawn, is not in contravention of subsection 1 which states that no deputy head and, except as authorized under this section, no employee, shall engage in work for, and so on.

I think it should also be drawn to the attention of the government that there have been cases concerning the display of posters before the courts of Canada. I would in particular draw attention to the case of one Moses McKay and the township of Etobicoke, in the city of Toronto, concerning an incident in the 1962 federal election. This case eventually reached the Supreme Court, who found in its decision that the township was not allowed, under the provisions of the constitution and constitutional law, to prohibit a person from displaying a federal election poster. There is also one very significant quotation in the judgment handed down at that time. I quote from the decision:

If by-law 11737—

The relevant by-law.

—is construed as it has been by the learned justice of the peace and by the Court of Appeal, it does not merely affect, it destroys the right of the appellants to engage in a form of political activity in the federal field which has heretofore been possessed and exercised by electors without question.

I agree there are some differences in circumstances, but nevertheless I think the concern of the justices of the Supreme Court on this matter should be noted in this regard. I should also point out there is already a distinction set out in subsection 3 of the act between the situation of a deputy head of a department and other employees of a department. Both categories can attend a political meeting. They can contribute funds to a candidate of a political party. All employees except the deputy head can apply for leave of absence, which may or may not be granted, at the judgment of the government. The experience to date has been that people in the executive category and personnel administrators have not been granted this leave. I submit that the Public Service Employment Act should be amended to make clear that the display of a poster at an employee's home is not in contravention of the act.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board): Mr. President, I am told that the act is now under study, and if amendments or explanations are to be brought in the area referred to by the hon. member for Regina East, the minister responsible will announce them in due course. The people involved in this study will no doubt take into account the hon. member's comments.

INDUSTRY—PULP AND PAPER—PROBLEMS DISCUSSED AT CONFERENCE AND TYPE OF AID OFFERED

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in spite of my repeated questions in the House over the past four months, for some reason or other I have failed to get any meaningful answers and any recognition of the continuing crisis which exists in Canada's pulp and paper industry. My particular concern revolves around the close-down of a highly productive paper machine in the Bowater organization in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, which resulted in the lay-off of 350 skilled workers and which will affect an additional work force in the woods operations, therefore affecting in total some 1,200 employees.

Mr. Bell: Don't forget Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Mr. Marshall: My hon. friend reminds me of a similar situation at Bathurst, New Brunswick. The Bowater mill is the main industry in a city of some 2,800 citizens, and one does not have to be too intelligent to realize the effect of such a close-down on the economy of the city, the surrounding areas and indeed the whole province of Newfoundland.

Apart from this confined crisis in Newfoundland it is obvious to all that one of the foremost industries in our nation is now in a state of crisis. Almost daily we experience examples of shut-downs in paper mills in almost every province, yet the problem seems to be treated with complacency by the government. There is ample evidence of the seriousness of the situation in the figures disclosed by the Pulp and Paper Association. Let me record some statistics as published in recent issues of newspapers. A decrease in the demand for newsprint outside of North America was experienced for the first time since the Second World War. There was a decrease in the demand in North America for the second consecutive year, producing a world decline in demand in North America, western Europe and other areas. At the same time, capacity is increasing in Canada, in the U.S.A., in western Europe, in the Far East and in other areas, with evidence of a decline in Canadian shipments to overseas markets.

The larger decrease in total Canadian shipments compared with the decrease in world demand is explained by an increase in domestic shipments by U.S. and overseas producers. Canadian newsprint mills operated at 82 per cent of productive capacity compared with 88 per cent just last year. The Canadian increase in capacity was primarily in eastern mills, with a 205,000-ton increase in the Atlantic region and a 162,000-ton increase in Quebec, and this is the area of Canada where unemployment is highest. Yet at the time when these factors are so obvious, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion continues to give regional development incentive grants to establish mills in regions of Canada to create employment opportunities but destroys employment opportunities in eastern regions where unemployment is most severe. At the same time, the government is granting loans to overseas countries to establish mills, thereby destroying needed markets.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) keeps sending trade missions all over the world to explore export markets, yet no mention is ever made of the need to explore markets for paper, which is so vital to the Canadian economy. Many hundreds of highly technical employees of the pulp and paper industry are being placed out of work and yet the government treats with apathy the waste of our experienced work force, ignoring meaningful consultation by labour and manpower departments to assist these members of the work force.

• (10:10 p.m.)

To me, Mr. Speaker, it is a source of frustration and aggravation that one of the three top industries in Canada is seemingly relegated to meaningless concern. It is very difficult for me to understand and reconcile in my mind why those who should be concerned treat the crisis with such seeming apathy. I hope that the parliamentary secretary, whom I know to be a conscientious and responsible member, can give me some answers to clear my frustration and that of thousands of concerned Canadians who are suffering because of the pulp and paper industry crisis.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to provide some answers to the question raised by the hon. member with respect to this difficult matter which has been part of the Canadian pulp and paper industry for many generations. The Canadian pulp and paper industry has always had a problem of trying to reconcile supply and demand in some kind of rational way. The history of the industry has been one of attempts at prorating supply in order to satisfy market demands appropriate to the industry. This has often been difficult.

It is difficult at the present time because of slack markets around the world, particularly in the United States, where the slow growth in the economy has produced a downturn in consumption during the last few months. Industry officials do feel, however, that the bottom of the market has been reached and that there is an upturn taking place at the present time. Nevertheless, there are serious, long-term problems within the industry.

A meeting did take place in Ottawa on December 6 last. It was attended by ten cabinet ministers, which is an indication of the seriousness with which the government considers the problem within the industry. Some of the topics looked at included taxation policy, in response to a request from the industry to compare Canadian taxation with the taxation imposed on other companies around the world, transportation cost problems, pollution abatement cost problems and the effect of regional development incentive programs. Other matters discussed were competition policy and the social obligations that the companies have in front of them in trying to make changes in their industry, modernize it and bring it up to date and at the same time take into consideration the needs of the employees.

As a result, the government agreed to examine many of these problems in conjunction with the industry. It agreed to do a study on taxation as it affects the industry in relation to its competitiveness around the world. The government agreed to study with the industry transportation costs and to undertake a long-range study of a strategy for the development of Canada's pulp and paper industry in relation to the problems it has and the markets it has available to it. I assure the hon. member that the government is considering most seriously the problems that exist in the industry at the present time.

The hon. member made mention of the overseas programs that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has with respect to the promotion of markets for industries. I can assure him that the pulp and paper industry is one of those industries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg).

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON RATIONALIZATION OF HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on November 29 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) when the report on the rationalization of grain handling and transportation would be made available to Members of Parliament and he took the question as notice. On December 9 I asked the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) when this report would be tabled in the House, and I appreciate the fact that the minister is in the House tonight.

Somehow or other the real Mr. Farmer, the practical Mr. Farmer, is supposed to know something. He is supposed to listen only to the educated, to the law professors, to the degreed people. It used to be said by some law professors that all that one required to be a farmer was a strong back and a weak mind, but nowadays to be a successful farmer a fellow needs to have a good head and a sound education to understand the advice handed out to him on all sides by city men and select that which will do him the least damage.

A tremendous responsibility, therefore, rests upon those who have had the privilege of higher education. They must advise on issues where the implications may not be clear. They must guide the people through the complexities of modern technology and explain those complexities. That is partly why I asked the minister my question. I hope he will answer it tonight.

If one looks at the headlines which have appeared across the country this year one will realize why this question concerns the people of Canada and why some of these complexities they are facing are important. One headline reads, "Easier road to retirement." That refers to agriculture. Another reads, "Government may soon control farm output—Olson." That appeared in the Ottawa Citizen. Another headline reads, "Big selling job ahead." The heading over another article reads, "Encourage adjustment of farm units to more efficient sizes." Another article says in part, "The program is aimed at the small farmer who wants to stay in farming, but lacks sufficient acreage to develop a profitable business."

One of the Manitoba pool elevators has said that there is a lack of information regarding the implications of the proposed plan of stabilization. The headline in the Moose Jaw Times-Herald, October 25, says, "Lang wants to bring farm act back into House of Commons." Another headline says, "Either way the farmers lose." Still another headline says, "West becoming disillusioned with Liberals, Conservatives." Another headline says, "Sweeping revisions to agricultural policy sought in Ottawa by provincial ministers." Still another headline says, "New management skills suggested for farms."

I come now to something the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said. He said, as reported:

Perhaps, to be quite candid with you, when you talk of growing disenchantment I must begin by saying that some of my reading of the west is that it is always disenchanted.

We all agree, I think, that in view of the complexities of the agricultural economy today, explanations should be forthcoming. We should discuss thoroughly with the people concerned the matter I have raised tonight. I ask, why would the west not be disenchanted with the government, when it is realized that the plan we are talking about, the one concerning the rationalization and handling of grain transportation, has been in the hands of the railway companies for over two months? It has been in the hands of the various grain handling companies. They have had the opportunity to look at the plan confidentially. I emphasize that. It has been in the hands of those people but has not been made available to Members of Parliament. If Members of Parliament are to be credible and discharge credibly their duty of considering legislation in this House, this plan should be made available to them so they can discuss it with the people who will be directly affected.

The two main steps that are being taken in the agricultural field are branch line rationalization and the step to do with the rationalization of grain handling and transportation. Surely we want to be honest with the people who will be adversely, or possibly beneficially affected by this plan. Surely the government could make this plan available to members of the House. If, perchance, we can get out of this House within the next week or so, each and every one of us representing an agricultural community will be able to go to his constituency, call meetings and explain the plan. We can explain the workings of the plan to the producers who will be affected by it. They will have an opportunity to advise us about it, to discuss it and argue the benefits or otherwise of the plan. I therefore plead with the minister tonight to make this plan available to every Member of Parliament.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) are so smart, and the distortions introduced are so irresponsible that they do not augur well for the role that some hon. members would play in connection with any information being put forward for the good of agriculture.

Mr. Skoberg: Oh, boy! That is a good start.

Mr. Lang: About two years ago we began working on making the existing transportation system work better. We studied the total system so that the facts would be available on the cost of a better system and on the cost of alternatives. We succeeded in making the existing system work better, to the extent that our very great selling efforts which are reaching record proportions each year, and which will set new records this year, are reaching levels which some experts a few months ago felt were impossible to achieve with existing capacity. We think that this is a result of hard work and planning and stems from our interest in looking after the interests of agriculture.

We said all along in our handling and transportation studies that we would try to find the facts, present the facts and leave it to the producers to decide in this matter. We wanted to try to make sure that the producer would be chief beneficiary of any improvements which might be made. In this work we had the tremendous co-operation of the elevator companies, those great co-ops of the Prairies, the other elevator companies and the railways in putting together the facts and figures with which we wanted to work.

We then put the studies as they progressed into the hands of these people to give us back criticisms as part of the further work. We have now put them into the hands of the interested western provinces with the same idea, that we should have meetings, discussions and whatever studies are required so that we will have a more complete picture to present when we have anything to present at all.

• (10:20 p.m.)

We can be sure of one thing. The moment the studies are available to the hon. member who makes these slang remarks, he will either be saying they are incomplete, too complete or three times too complete. My objective has been to simply present the facts and avoid this very kind of conflict. That is why we try to work with the companies and the provinces, to present a balanced picture not only of economic involvement but of all the social problems involved in any changes which might be made. Our object is to avoid conflict and petty politics and to work quietly together for the good of the farmer.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:25 p.m.

The House met at 2 p.m.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST OF DIRECTORS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. It is one based on what I believe to be an urgent and pressing necessity. I do not expect that the House will support unanimously the substance of my motion but I hope hon. members will agree it is one which ought to be considered.

The Financial Post Directory of Directors for 1971 indicates that 19 of 23 directors of the Canada Development Corporation hold the office of president, vice-president or chairman of the board of 39 corporations and also hold among them 93 corporation directorships. In view of the obvious conflict of interest which may arise from this situation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House is of the opinion that the government should consider the introduction of a bill to amend the Canada Development Corporation Act to provide that the directors of the said corporation shall divest themselves of any and all corporation directorships so that they will not be involved in any conflict of interest, and that in the meantime the government should request the said directors to divest themselves of any directorships they now hold.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

MANPOWER

CRITICISM OF TECHNIQUE OF EVALUATING EFFECTIVENESS OF TRAINING PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43. On December 7, and again yesterday, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration stated in the House that the Economic Council of Canada did not disagree with his department's evaluation technique of the Canada Manpower Training Program. Between pages 104 and 133 of its Eighth Annual Review, the Economic Council points out at least four essential deficiencies in the program and found the evaluation technique to be defective in a further four critical areas. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg):

That this House refer the question of performance and evaluation of the Manpower Training Program to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion will not be put.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PROHIBITION OF ENTRY OF BOOKS INTO CANADA

Question No. 1,764—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Were books, pamphlets, etc., prohibited from entering Canada last year under Item 99201-1, Schedule C of the Custom Tariff Act on the grounds that they are of a "treasonable or seditious nature" and, if so, how many?

2. Were books, pamphlets, etc., prohibited from entering Canada last year under Item 99201-1, Schedule C of the Custom Tariff Act on the grounds they they are of an "immoral or indecent character" and, if so, how many?

3. What officials of the Department of National Revenue or what experts outside of the Department make the decisions prohibiting the entry of the above-mentioned items?

4. What procedures have been established for appeals by individuals or organizations who feel that the decisions of the Department are unfair or improper?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as National Revenue, Customs and Excise is concerned: 1. 1970 — two importations.

2. 1970 — 4,461 importations.

3. Decisions can only be made by officials of Customs and Excise. These decisions are first made by senior executives, and they can be appealed to the Deputy Minister. The decision of the Deputy Minister can be appealed to the Courts.

4. Appeal procedures are set out in Sections 46 and 50 of the Customs Act RSC 1970.

COMPLAINTS UNDER THE FEMALE EMPLOYEES EQUAL PAY ACT

Question No. 1,908—Mr. Fairweather:

In respect of the Minister's answer to Question 1,265, at page 5520 of Hansard, May 5, 1971, about complaints by virtue of the

Questions

Female Employees Equal Pay Act (a) on what dates were each of the eighteen complaints made (b) what were the names of the employers against whom complaints were made (c) about how many employees did each complaint cover (d) in whose favour was each complaint resolved (e) have any complaints been filed since July 1, 1971 and, if so (i) how many (ii) against whom (iii) what has been the disposition of each case?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): (a) (i) February 17, 1970, one complaint; (ii) April 8, 1970, five complaints; (iii) June 26, 1970, eight complaints; (iv) December 2, 1970, three complaints; (v) February 15, 1971, one complaint.

(b) This is privileged information.

(c) Each complaint involved one employee.

(d) (i) Not applicable, as the complaint was judged to be outside the purview of the Female Employees Equal Pay Act, and the complainant was so advised; (ii) In favour of the employer. FEDERAL SUPPORT TO THE NATIONAL CANCER INSTITUTE

Question No. 1,976—Mr. Robinson:

1. What has been the total support of the National Cancer Institute from federal sources since 1947?

2. What proportion does this total constitute of the total income of the Institute during that period?

3. What proportion of the total budget of the Institute for 1971-72 is contributed by the government?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Under the various health programs, administered within the Health Insurance and Resources Branch, federal financial support to the National Cancer Institute amounted to more than $4,000,000 for the period 1948-49 to 1970-71.

2. The total income of the Institute for the total period 1948-49 to 1970-71 is not readily available to us.

3. Information on the total budget of the Institute for 1971-72 is not readily available to us. However, an amount of $250,000 is being made available to the Institute for the fiscal year 1971-72.

NATIONAL CANCER INSTITUTE OF CANADA

Question No. 1,978—Mr. Robinson:

1. Have amendments to the terms of reference of the National Health Grants and the Public Health Research Grants been made which reduce the eligibility of the National Cancer Institute of Canada to receive support from these sources?

2. Was there a marked reduction in the rate of growth of the Medical Research Council Budget in the past two years?

3. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare prepared to assure continued growth of the Canadian Cancer Research Program by increasing the size of the annual award to the National Cancer Institute of Canada?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No.

2. From March 1969 to March 1972, the Medical Research Council Budget has gone from $31,215,000 to $36,142,000 which is an increase of 15.8 per cent.

3. Researchers in the field of cancer are encouraged to submit specific proposals for research assistance within the terms of federal programs in this field—namely Medical Research Council, National Health Grant, and Public Health Research Grant.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF RECENT POLICY CONFERENCE OF UKRAINIAN CANADIANS

Question No. 2,000—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Is the government considering the recommendations of the recent policy conference of Ukrainian Canadians that in order to accommodate the multi-cultural nature of the Canadian Confederation all languages spoken in Canada be recognized as Canadian languages?

2. Has a reply been made to the request and, if so, what was the nature of the reply?

3. Has the government also replied to the recommendation that Canadian embassies and immigration offices abroad improve information about the multi-lingual and multi-cultural nature of our society and, if so, what was the nature of the reply?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. The government is aware of the recommendation of the recent policy conference of Ukrainian Canadians. The new policy of multiculturalism recognizes that Canada is a multicultural country, operating within a bilingual framework. While there are two official languages in Canada, the government recognizes all languages as instruments of Canadian cultural expression.

2. No official request was received by the government asking it to consider the recommendation of the conference of Ukrainian Canadians.

3. Information kits on the new government policy of multiculturalism have been distributed through the Department of External Affairs, and Manpower & Immigration, to their offices overseas. The government is considering other measures to publicize its policy of multiculturalism.

ABORTIONS

Question No. 2,025—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of including the opinion of other disciplines as well as a medical opinion when a request is made for an abortion?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In Section 237, subsection (6) f., the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1968-69 with respect to abortion, there is no restriction regarding the inclusion of opinion of disciplines other than medical in the hospital therapeutic abortion committee.

CANADA PENSION PLAN CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 2,039—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the total amount collected for the Canada Pension Plan in 1969 and 1970?

2. What amount was paid out in the years 1969 and 1970?

3. What was the total amount collected for the Canada Pension Plan since its inception?

4. What amount has been loaned to each of the provinces during the total period?

5. What is the total amount credited to the Canada Pension Plan, including all loans as at December 31, 1970?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Since the Canada Pension Plan is a partially funded social insurance plan, contributions received together with interest earned, will exceed benefit payments during the early years of the plan. Full retirement benefits are being reached in stages over a ten year transition period. Survivors benefits did not become payable until the third year of the operation of the plan. Disability benefits did not become payable until the fifth year. Income received by the Fund will come into balance with benefits payments sometime in the 1980's after which the Fund will steadily decline.

CMHC—MORTGAGE INSURANCE

Question No. 2,054—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the amount of mortgage insurance moneys paid to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the form of mortgage insurance in each of the years since the introduction of this scheme?

2. How is this money allocated, by way of reserve or purchase of insurance from outside private agencies?

Questions

3. What was the amount of losses which required payment out of the insurance fund?

4. What reserve still exists?

5. Is the government giving consideration to reducing the present 2 per cent mortgage insurance fee?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Mortgage insurance fees paid to the Mortgage Insurance Fund established under Section 9 of the National Housing Act, have amounted to: 1954. $2,389,850; 1955, $9,237,250; 1956, $9,839,746; 1957, $7,278,911; 1958, $13,816,071; 1959, $13,146,403; 1960, $8,456,279; 1961, $10,970,952; 1962, $11,576,518; 1963, $9,868,797; 1964, $12,063,480; 1965, $13,500,496; 1966, $14,272,850; 1967, $16,491,251; 1968, $14,640,563; 1969, $14,994,782; 1970, $10,710,731; total $193,254,930.

2. This money is allocated by way of reserve.

3. The total amount of claims and legal expenses paid from the Mortgage Insurance Fund, to September 30, 1971, was $90,172,455.

4. The total of the reserves of the Mortgage Insurance Fund, at September 30, 1971, was $302,881,829.

5. The amendments to the National Housing Act, approved in June, 1969, included a provision for a reduction in the mortgage insurance fees charged under Section 5(6) of the Act. The mortgage insurance fees are now calculated as follows: (a) Loans for home-ownership require a fee of 1 per cent of the loan amount if progress advances are required during construction, and 7/8 per cent of the loan amount if the loan is advanced in total upon completion, (b) Loans made for rental housing require a fee of 1 1/4 per cent of the loan amount if progress advances are required during construction, and 1-1/8 per cent of the loan amount if the loan is advanced in total upon completion.

NHA LOANS FOR EXISTING HOUSING AND REHABILITATION OF HOUSING AREAS

Question No. 2,096—Mr. Robinson:

1. To what extent has Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation provided money for guaranteed loans on older homes?

2. Will Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation extend funds for the rehabilitation of housing areas in the Metropolitan Toronto area and elsewhere and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. See following table.

2. In 1970, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved loans totalling $1.5 million under Section 58(40) of the National Housing Act for the purchase and rehabilitation of 200 housing units in the Don Mount and Don Vale area of the City of Toronto. The continuation of this program in 1971 includes loans under Section 15(16) to finance the purchase, repair and/or conversion of existing housing to provide 25 housing units, located in the area bounded by Sherbourne, Parliament, Carlton and Shuter Streets. A Federal contribution of $2.5 million was approved in September, 1971, under Section 24 of the National Housing Act, to assist in the implementation of a pilot rehabilitation project in the Strathcona area of Vancouver. The total cost of the program is estimated at $5 million, with the Province of British Columbia and the City of Vancouver each contributing $1.25 million. Resident property owners of the area, depending on their incomes and required rehabilitation costs, will be eligible to receive grants and/or loans of up to $3,000 each which can be used to repair and rehabilitate their existing homes. The question of extending rehabilitation assistance is a matter which is currently under consideration.

CMHC—APARTMENT BUILDING, 6595 BOYCE STREET, MONTREAL

Question No. 2,112—Mr. Laprise:

1. Does Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation own the apartment building located at 6595 Boyce Street in Montreal and, if so (a) on what date was it acquired (b) how many apartment units are there in the building (c) are the apartments leased exclusively to senior citizens?

2. Were all the stoves and refrigerators replaced in each apartment and, if not, how many were replaced and what was the reason for not replacing all of them?

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation owns the apartment building located at 6595 Boyce Street, Montréal. This building is part of a two-building senior citizen project, the second being located at 6666 Boyce Street. (a) These buildings were acquired in January, 1962, (b) There are 27 apartment units in the first building, and 59 apartment units in the second, (c) The apartments are leased exclusively to senior citizens.

2. All of the stoves and refrigerators were not replaced in each apartment, 70 refrigerators and 83 stoves being replaced during 1971. 16 refrigerators and three stoves were not replaced because tenants in occupancy have preferred to use their own appliances.

PUBLIC SERVICE—FLQ EMPLOYEES

Question No. 2,149—Mr. Robinson:

Were any of the persons charged as being members of the FLQ employees of the Public Service of Canada and, if so, how many?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Information not available.

CMHC HOUSING PROJECT, AMOS, QUEBEC

Question No. 2,157—Mr. Laprise:

Does the government own any housing units for low income families in the city of Amos, Quebec and, if so (a) how many (b) when were they built (c) for what income levels were they intended?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation owns a 96-unit rental housing project in the City of Amos, Québec, although it is not specifically designated for rental to low-income families. (a) (b) 48 of these units were built in 1954-55, and the remaining 48 units were built in 1957-58, these projects being financed under former Section 16 of the National Housing Act for rental to families of low income. CMHC acquired these projects as a result of default under the hypothecs on June 1st, 1959. (c) At the time the loans were made, income limits for continued occupancy were based on an amount equal to six times the rent charged. In accordance with its policy in such cases, CMHC has not imposed any income limits since acquiring the two projects. The present rental rates are $68 per month for three bedroom apartments, and $79 per month for four bedroom apartments.

GRANTS TO THE MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 2,170—Mr. Robinson:

1. During the past two years, has the Medical Research Council commented to the government on restrictions in the growth of the budget for cancer research?

2. Has the Medical Research Council requested an increase in its grant and, if so, is the Minister of National Health and Welfare prepared to advocate the principle of awarding a block grant of one million dollars to this organization?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Medical Research Council has drawn to the attention of the government that additional support for research in the health sciences in Canada could be usefully employed and would be particularly beneficial in a number of important areas including investigations relating to cancer.

2. The Medical Research Council has requested and has received each year an increase in the funds appropriated by Parliament for the support of research in the health sciences.

FOG DISSIPATION AT AIRPORTS

Question No. 2,173—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given, or is a study underway, to measure and evaluate the effectiveness of airborne commercial seeding techniques in dissipating fog at airports?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): A fog dispersal program, by airborne commercial seeding techniques, started at the Vancouver International Airport in October 1970, and continued for a period of four (4) months. Program development, evaluation and documentation were carried out by the members of the Committee which was organized for this purpose. The program was renewed in October 1971 to carry through to December and into 1972 if required. The British Columbia Research Council is involved in the assessment of technique and effectiveness during the current program, along with Department of Transport staff and those of the seven (7) participating airlines.

PRINCE ALBERT NATIONAL PARK—GOLF COURSE

Question No. 2,199—Mr. Burton:

1. What was the total amount of gross receipts from the operation of the golf course at Prince Albert National Park in 1971?

2. What was the total cost of operating the golf course and associated facilities, and what amount of the total cost was for administration and maintenance, respectively?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $61,541.

2. Administration $1,341, Maintenance $21,469, Total Cost $22,810. These figures represent direct costs only for 1971 to date. There is no means of identifying indirect overhead costs such as depreciation on equipment, original investment and a proportionate share of the park administration costs.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE GRANTS

Question No. 2,203—Mr. McGrath:

What was the number of grants and average grant size to companies who prior to receiving a Regional Development Incentives grant employed (a) 25 to 49 persons (b) 50 to 99 persons (c) 100 to 199 persons (d) 200 to 499 persons (e) 500 to 999 persons (f) 1,000 or more?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The requested information is not accumulated or kept by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

LIVESTOCK SHIPPING

Question No. 2,223—Mr. Thomson:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture consulted with the Purebred Livestock Breeders Associations about the problem of shipping small numbers of livestock across Canada?

2. Has the Department of Agriculture investigated the technical shipping problems pertaining to such livestock and, if so, what is its conclusion?

3. Has the Department of Agriculture considered giving a freight subsidy to shippers of purebred livestock?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. and 2. There have been consultations on an informal basis. The problem is related to the minimum charges applicable to a shipment. On rail shipments, significant economies can be achieved by shipping in carload lots.

3. Yes, and freight assistance is provided in the case of the Eastern movement of Western breeding ewes.

Order for Return

KEJIMKUJIK NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 2,282—Mr. Crouse:

Has the government reached a decision for the establishment in Nova Scotia of a section of coastline which will be part of but separate from Kejimkujik National Park and, if so (a) what are the boundaries of the area selected (b) what amount has been set aside for this development (c) on what date will work on this project commence?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No conclusions have been reached on this proposal as discussions with the Province have not been finalized. (a) Not applicable; (b) Not applicable; (c) Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PROSECUTIONS UNDER COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

Question No. 1,859—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In the past year, in how many cases did the government charge and prosecute companies for violations of the Combines Investigation Act, except for cases under section 33(c)?

2. In each case (a) what were the names of the companies involved (b) what were the names of the companies found guilty and what were the penalties imposed by the Court?

3. What were the costs to the government of investigating and prosecuting the above cases, exclusive of the salaries of permanent government employees, but including fees paid to lawyers, court reporters and other officials, travelling expenses for officers of the department, cost of transcripts, etc.?

Return tabled.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might, on a question of privilege, draw the attention of Your Honour and the government to a series of questions, Nos. 1,709, 1,723, 1,724 and 1,727, standing in my name since September and seeking information relating to what was in fact an invasion of privacy in the community of Atlin in northern British Columbia in respect of the activities of customs officers and RCMP. Inasmuch as the people of Atlin were very much concerned about the matter at that time, and are concerned about the answers to the questions advanced on their behalf, I wonder if we might have some indication as to when those answers might be received.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, we will try to answer those questions just as soon as possible.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, my question No. 1,343 has been on the order paper since April 27 and I wonder whether we can have an answer to it during the next session.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I have made a note of this and will look into it.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to look into questions Nos. 1,738, 1,739 and 1,740 which were submitted on September 21 and which ask for very simple statistical information of the; Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and also question No. 2,184 submitted on November 25 which asks a simple, straightforward question on the operations of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I might state that these questions are of the type Your Honour very properly ruled from time to time should be placed on the order paper. It becomes rather difficult when there is such undue delay on the part of the government in answering questions placed on the order paper by members of the House.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, as in the past we often come to a different assessment concerning what is and what is not a simple matter of statistics, but we will check these questions again to see if they cannot be answered at the earliest possible moment.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I ask that all these motions be allowed to stand at this time.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask when we may expect a response to notice of motion for production of papers No. 247 in my name, and which also relates to questions I posed earlier. This motion deals with allegations made by officials of government about smuggling in that part of Canada that borders on Alaska. When might we expect a response to that notice of motion.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, the list of notices of motions which has been transferred for debate, of course, is already considerably longer than any list that could possibly be dealt with during the present session. We are making every effort to determine which of the remaining notices of motions we can respond to in the House, short of transferring them for debate. I will include the hon. member's notice of motion in the list we are considering.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIR TRANSPORT

HIJACKING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PREVENTIVE MEASURES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In the absence of the statement which we hoped the minister would make today, may I ask the minister if he can assure the House that, as a result of the most recent and successful hijacking which took place in Canada, all the necessary security precautions are being put into immediate effect at all airports across the country and if the minister will perhaps reconsider his position and make a statement on this question in order to put the public mind at rest.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, am I to gather that the hon. member's question is addressed to me?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I could rephrase the question.

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker. I heard the question but I did not hear the first part of it. The answer is, of course, yes, precautionary measures have been taken. I think members will be gratified to note that the head of the Pilots Association this morning said he is satisfied we are moving in the right direction. I have considered the possibility of making a statement on motions but have come to the conclusion that it would not be advisable to do so. I am looking at means by which interested members of the House might be apprised, perhaps in camera, of some aspects of the problem.

Mr. Forrestall: When?

Mr. Jamieson: I will do that as quickly as it is possible to arrange it. However, I think hon. members and the House in general will understand that this is not a matter that can be dealt with in detail, in public.

HIJACKING—PROVISION OF SECURITY GUARDS ON PLANES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps in the interests of the deterrent effect that it might have on any potential hijacker, it might be in the public interest if the minister would be a little more frank in his reply. That is a matter of opinion. May I ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might ask his supplementary question.

Mr. McGrath: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary is as follows. Has the minister received any recommendations, and does he propose to act on those recommendations, regarding in-flight security. In other words, are we now considering providing security guards on flights of Canadian aircraft?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. We are not considering it at the moment and would not consider it without further consultation with the Pilots Association at least, that association up to the moment having said that this is not a solution it favours. There was a meeting yesterday with pilots making up part of the Pilots Association along with, as I understand, some international pilots, and as a result there may be coming forward to me some additional recommendations. At the moment they have not arrived. As I understand their position, and it is one with which I agree, they do not favour the idea of having armed guards on board Canadian aircraft.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF EXTRADITING MAN WHO HIJACKED AIRCRAFT TO CUBA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has there been any contact, either through regular diplomatic channels or directly, with the government of Cuba with a view to extraditing the man who hijacked an Air Canada aircraft.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. McGrath: Can that be done either under the present extradition treaty or under some other Canadian law?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. First, I should say that the government of Cuba has been very co-operative with us in the handling of the hijacking incident. They enabled the aircraft to return to Canada without any delay. We expect to receive co-operation from the Cuban government. Consideration is now being given to applying for extradition under the present extradition agreement that we have with Cuba.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AIR PIRACY—CONSULTATIONS WITH ATTORNEY GENERAL OF ONTARIO ON LAYING CHARGES AGAINST HIJACKER

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs collaborating with the provincial attorney general who is responsible for the county of Peel in Ontario, over which the incident took place? Also, have there been conversations with the attorney general of Ontario in connection with the statements that he has publicly made with respect to extradition probabilities.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Perhaps I can answer that question. The office of the Attorney General of Canada has been in touch with the department of the attorney general of Ontario, and conversations have taken place.

Mr. Forrestall: Would the Minister of Justice be kind enough to advise the House whether or not there is a meeting of minds with respect to the public declarations of the officials involved with his administrative people with respect to the laying of charges.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think that the attorney general of Ontario, like any other attorney general, would not make any statements as to whether he will or will not lay charges.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): I have a supplementary question to the one asked the Minister of Transport. Did the Leader of the Opposition leave a forwarding address before leaving on vacation?

Mr. Forrestall: Go to hell.

Mr. Danforth: What a stupid question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: You can't manage the business of the House, so don't ask stupid questions like this one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the House allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to ask a question. He has the floor at present.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST OF DIRECTORS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance. In view of the very large number of corporation directorships held by 19 of the directors of the Canada Development Corporation, will the government consider asking these gentlemen and Mrs. Thur to do as ministers of the Crown have done for many years, namely, divest themselves of these directorships so that there will not be a conflict of interest?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The answer is no. The fact that the gentlemen who are directors of the CDC have directorships in other corporations, and had them before they became directors of CDC, indicates that they are people of first class quality and we want them to direct the CDC. Secondly, we would expect the directors of the CDC to act as directors of all corporations should, namely, where there is a conflict of interest involved they would not get themselves involved in the transaction and would withhold their vote.

Mr. Baldwin: Why did you not ask Hal Banks?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Minister of Finance give consideration to the fact that when these directors are directors of banks and finance companies and large American owned corporations, there is danger of conflict of interest which should be avoided?

Mr. Benson: Of course, there is always a danger of conflict of interest when a person is a director of more than one corporation, but we trust that the people we have chosen as directors of CDC, whom I think are first class, will behave properly and will not get themselves involved in a conflict of interest.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Will the minister explain why there has been no appointment to the CDC from the province of Newfoundland?

Mr. Baldwin: Because there are no Liberals left there.

Mr. Bell: Jim Tucker is in town.

[Later:]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the reply that he gave to the questions asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he would endeavour to persuade corporations in Canada to appoint a much larger number of people to their boards of directors so that we could have a lot more people in this country whom the minister and the government could consider first class—

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question is in order.

AIRPORTS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—OPERABILITY OF INSTRUMENT LANDING SYSTEM

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. On December 22, in reply to a question I put to him regarding the instrument landing system at the Torbay airport at St. John's, the minister expressed some doubts as to whether the system was working and promised to reply later. Could he inform the House whether the system is working?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say specifically because I do not quite understand to what specific instrument landing system the hon. member referred. I am not sure whether he is speaking of new installations or of ones that were in place before, one of which failed. If he is speaking of the one which failed, I may say that I checked personally on December 23 and was told it is now in operation. However, there is additional equipment involved. I am not sure whether it is installed at this moment but I do know that it is in the process of being installed. This is the latest information that I have, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's West on a supplementary, but I would point out that the Chair has been trying to recognize hon. members on questions supplementary to the previous question. The question period may become a bit confused but the hon. member for St. John's West has the floor at the moment, and following that I will recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre who has a supplementary to the previous question.

NUMBER OF LOCATIONS AT WHICH DEVICES HAVE BEEN INSTALLED TO PREVENT HIJACKING

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question again is directed to the Minister of Transport. I should inform him that the system to which I referred was the one which, on February 15, 1970, was promised would be inaugurated. My question is supplementary to the one asked by my colleague from St. John's East. If the minister is unable to name the airports where detection devices have been installed can he tell the House how many airports, the number of airports at which the system has been installed?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I find it difficult without abusing your prerogatives, Mr. Speaker, to find how this is supplementary, but the answer is that I am not prepared to give that information publicly.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ROLE OF ECONOMISTS, STATISTICIANS AND SOCIOLOGISTS IN ADVISING GOVERNMENT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) today handed us a communique to the effect that 1,380 economists, statisticians and sociologists are employed by various federal departments, receiving salaries totalling $23 million, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware of that fact and whether it is these 1,380 officials who advise the government in its decision to fight inflation or deflation, or related to economic conditions prevailing in Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Is the hon. member referring to economists and statisticians employed by the federal government?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, their role is similar to that of all officials, which is to advise the minister to whom they are responsible. This minister must make decisions on the basis of all this expertise and his own knowledge of the country.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that there are 1,380 such persons in the federal departments?

Mr. Speaker: I don't believe this part of the question is in order. The hon. member is merely asking if the Prime Minister is aware that a certain number of civil servants are working in the Public Service. The question, as such, is out of order. Perhaps the hon. member would like to rephrase his question or ask again the second part of it.

Mr. Caouette: I shall ask the second part of the question, Mr. Speaker. Are these the people who advise the government on policies that are followed or that are introduced in the House of Commons?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I suppose so, in various areas. These economists and statisticians are distributed among all government departments. There are some in the Department of Agriculture and certainly in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as well as with the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance. Those people advise the ministers in the manner I described earlier. I definitely see nothing there to make a fuss about.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON AID PROGRAM

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he indicate the use to which the first $5 million of the $18 million aid program which Canada has designated to assist East Pakistan refugees in India has been put, whether he has had any advice from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and also will he say whether the government has decided on the use to which the remaining $13 million will be put? In effect, I ask simply for a progress report with respect to Canada's aid program.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons we only allocated $5 million of the $22 million that is available was to see that the money was properly used for the purpose for which it was appropriated. As I said when I gave an answer just before Christmas, $2 million has been turned over to the High Commissioner for Refugees and the other $3 million to Canadian voluntary agencies. I have not yet had a report since this decision on exactly what is being done with that money by the High Commissioner for Refugees. I understand in general, however, that aid is still getting to the refugees and I am hopeful that will continue to be the case, notwithstanding the rather chaotic conditions that exist.

EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE FOR TRANSPORTATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A supplementary question. Would the minister be kind enough to indicate to the House, if I understand his response correctly, whether any of this money is being used for the repatriation of these people? Have we done anything with respect to transport or is the High Commissioner utilizing any of the Canadian money for assistance in transporting these people back home?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot vouch for the exact use of the $2 million which will form part of the funds at the disposition of the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees. However, I did in my answer indicate that the money would be used not only for relief on the spot but also to help in the repatriation, so we have no objection if some money is used for that purpose.

POLLUTION

PLAN TO DUMP TORONTO GARBAGE IN NORTHERN ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment, but in his absence I would direct it to his parliamentary secretary. What action if any can be taken by the Department of the Environment to prevent the government of Ontario from implementing a plan to transport the garbage of Toronto and dump it in Northern Ontario?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, naturally we are not involved in what would essentially be a provincial action, but we are keeping an eye on it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PLAN TO DUMP TORONTO GARBAGE IN NORTHERN ONTARIO—POSSIBLE CREATION OF NEW PROVINCE

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): A supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I should like to know if the Prime Minister would entertain a serious proposal from responsible representatives in Northern Ontario to initiate talks for the creation of a new province so that we can become something other than the garbage dump for southern Ontario?

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): A supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary. Since much of this material originally comes from Northern Ontario in the shape of pulp and paper and ores, I wonder if the government would not consider supporting this proposition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF EXTRADITING HAL BANKS FROM UNITED STATES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the government has applied to Cuba for the extradition of the man who kidnapped the plane a few days ago, does the government also intend to apply to the United States for the extradition of Hal Banks who committed far more serious and extraditable crimes before fleeing to that country? Could we have an answer?

Since no answer is forthcoming, Mr. Speaker, could I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice? Could the minister inform the House of any good reason why Mr. Hall Banks should not be extradited to this country?

Mr. Bell: Double jeopardy Turner!

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): That is right, double jeopardy. We have advice from the counsel of the United States given to the Attorney General of Ontario and the Attorney General of Canada that the proceedings against Mr. Banks were exhausted. That was said in the House two years ago.

Mr. Hees: And that advice was given to the American government by the Canadian government because we did not want him to come up here and talk, and you know it. You know what he would say if he got here.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What would he say?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): George, why don't you extradite yourself?

HEALTH

CIGARETTES—UNDERTAKING OF INDUSTRY TO PLACE WARNING ON PACKAGES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister indicate at this time whether the cigarette industry is carrying out its undertaking to place a health warning on its products commencing in 1972?

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the hon. member's question correctly, I think the cigarette manufacturers do intend to put a warning on as soon as they can.

An hon. Member: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order please. The hon. member for Oxford.

RESTORATION OF GRANTS FOR CANCER RESEARCH—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister tell the House if he has now made up his mind whether or not he will be restoring grants for cancer research?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I indicated, we are looking into that situation now, Mr. Speaker, to ascertain whether needed help will be given to the cancer research society either from the Medical Research Council or our department. We are looking at it sympathetically.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Since there is a great deal of interest in this matter, would the minister make a statement on motions at the earliest opportunity and tell the House in detail what he intends to do?

Mr. Munro: I shall look into the situation again and see where it stands as of today, Mr. Speaker. I shall be glad to inform the House, but I doubt very much whether it will be necessary to do it by way of motions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will soon be running out of time. Perhaps the Chair for the moment should recognize the hon. member for Simcoe North.

SUGGESTED YEAR-ROUND OPERATION OF MEDICAL COLLEGES TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the increasing urgency in medical manpower and the critical failure in some areas to provide medical care when required, as well as the favourable opinion expressed by the Prime Minister on the possibility of running universities for the 12 calendar months instead of the present academic year, will the minister meet with his counterparts in the provinces and come to some agreement on a program for running medical schools in semesters for a full calendar year instead of the present academic year?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the hon. member several times that we have assisted the provinces in terms of facilities for medical education through the health research fund, that is in terms of shared capital costs and through the post-secondary education fund for operating costs. We have also, through national health grants, assisted many organizations in terms of developing auxiliary health personnel who can do much of the routine work that our doctors do. Through all these techniques, we think we are relieving the medical manpower shortage very considerably. There is no doubt that we need the help and co-operation of the provinces in terms of using these facilities on a year-round basis and co-operating with us in the development of auxiliary health personnel. We think we are getting that. If there is anything more the hon. member would like to see done, he can take it up with his own political sympathizers who are in power in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Take it easy.

Mr. Rynard: May I draw to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare the fact that it was the government of which he was a member that brought in national medicare—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: —and they have responsibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

CANCER RESEARCH—CONSULTATION WITH PEOPLE ENGAGED IN RESEARCH IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is supplementary to the previous one on cancer research. In view of the fact that the American government is spending $1.6 billion on cancer research, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare advise the House what consultation there is between his department and the Americans on the progress they are making?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I cannot answer that question in detail, Mr. Speaker, other than to advise the hon. member that our health officers are in constant liaison with their counterparts through attendance at various conferences in order to keep up with events.

INCOME TAX

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF NEW REGULATIONS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister advise the House how soon, after January 1 next, he is going to have completed the regulations pertaining to the administration of Bill C-259 or is the tax-paying public going to have to experience weeks and possibly months of indecision?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the position today to give the information which the hon. member is seeking. We will certainly attempt to have the regulations available as soon as possible after the act is in force.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government have to wait until a further large batch of amendments are brought in next year by the Minister of Finance before the regulations are in force?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROSPECTS FOR LEGISLATION RESULTING FROM CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): My question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As a result of the information gleaned at the consultation conferences with Indian people a while ago and the decision of the government to bury the so-called white paper on Indian Affairs, is the minister, someone in his department or some draftsman in the Department of Justice, currently drafting amendments to the Indian Act around information they received from the Indian people about those changes that are needed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have consulted with Indians as much as we could in the last three years, and we asked them to make precise recommendations regarding amendments to the Indian Act. Unfortunately, they have come up with very few such recommendations lately. But if they have any to submit, we shall be very happy to examine them and to amend the Indian Act accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): My question is not really supplementary. It is the original question to which the minister did not reply. As a result of those representations that have been made, and this extends over quite a period of time, is the minister, someone in his department or someone in the Department of Justice currently translating these representations into legislative changes to the Indian Act in anticipation of introducing something at the next session?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Following our first discussions with the Indians, many recommendations were made to them which they found unacceptable. With regard to specific problems, such as that of determining who belongs to a given band, I must say that opinions are about equally divided. It is rather difficult for me to decide for them. Still, should they want me to do so, I am quite willing to oblige.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): One further supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I want to ask the minister why he is evading the question.

HARBOURS

HAMILTON—CONFLICT OF INTEREST OF PORT DIRECTORS—LAND SWAP DEALS—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I was taken by surprise, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Transport. I believe the minister is aware of the problems that exist in the city of Hamilton in so far as the city of Hamilton and the Hamilton Harbour Commission are concerned. First, there is the conflict of interest of the port directors and, second, the problem of land swap deals between the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners, Stelco and Dominion Foundaries and Steel. Is the minister in a position to advise the House soon by way of a statement as to his interest and jurisdiction in these two particular controversial problems in order that we can get the thinking of the federal government with regard to these very two important matters that are faced by the city of Hamilton and the citizens of the city of Hamilton at the present time?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I might be able to give the answer to the hon. member now, Mr. Speaker. In so far as the conflict of interest issue is concerned, this has no relationship in so far as the federal government is concerned. He is an appointee of the harbour commission and, as such, must be dealt with by the harbour commission. In so far as the so-called land swap is concerned, the only action that would be required by us is approval of an order in council if all of the other parties agreed and the matter was resolved to the point where an order in council was submitted to us. I can advise the hon. member that no such request for an order in council has been received to date.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question. In view of the fact the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners are not particularly concerned about the use of the land surrounding the harbour, is it the intention of the minister to involve himself with the city of Hamilton vis-à-vis this particular incident before making any decision when it comes to land swaps between the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners and any other industry in the city of Hamilton?

Mr. Jamieson: As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, the question is to some extent hypothetical until such time as the request for an order in council comes forward. In the meantime, we received representations both pro and con regarding this proposal. I will be pleased to take these into account if and when some request for federal action is brought forward, but there has been none as yet.

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING EXEMPTION OF EMPLOYEES OF SCHOOL BOARDS AND HOSPITALS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the new regulations under the Unemployment Insurance Act will come into force in a few days, can the Minister of Labour say whether the personnel employed by school boards and hospitals in the province of Quebec will or will not be subject to them?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, those employed by the school boards or school commissions of the province of Quebec, including school teachers, and those employed in hospitals in the province of Quebec will be treated precisely as these classes of employees are in other provinces and will be covered by the new Unemployment Insurance Act come January 1.

AGRICULTURE

POSITION OF MARITIME USERS OF WESTERN FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. What action is his department taking to meet alleged difficulties of users of western feed grain in the Atlantic provinces who allege that their competitive position is being eroded because the basic price paid for the grain which they receive is higher in most cases than similar grain used for feeding in western Canada and for export?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this question has been brought to my attention by a number of producer groups, not only in the Atlantic provinces, but in the province of Quebec as well. I can advise the hon. member that the Canada Grains Council undertook a survey of this whole matter some five weeks ago, I believe. They require a terminal period of about two months before they will be completing the program. We will be looking at those findings along with other suggested solutions to satisfy this demand.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member in a moment if he will resume his seat. I appreciate that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East also has a supplementary. Hon. members should appreciate that we will soon be running short of time and we will have to reduce the number of supplementaries as much as possible.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN FREIGHT RATES ON IMPORTED FEEDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): In view of the answer just given by the Minister of Agriculture, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture referred to him the question which I asked last Thursday about this particular problem. In view of the fact that on January 5 there will be further increases in the cost of imports of concentrates for feed to all the producers in the Atlantic area, what is the minister or the Canadian Transport Commission going to do about this? Has this question been referred to the minister?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): If this question is related to freight rates, Mr. Speaker, any action which might be taken will come under the Canadian Transport Commission. As I have said repeatedly in this House, until they have taken any action, I am as ignorant as the hon. member, and I mean that in a kindly fashion.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would not abuse—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question. If he is rising on a point of order, I am prepared to recognize him on that basis.

Mr. Nowlan: I can only be kind because this minister needs kindness, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Apart from all his other needs, kindness is the one thing he needs right now. He was not in the House last Thursday when I directed my question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Question.

Mr. Nowlan: My question is coming, and your day is coming, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: After the Speaker called me to order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized on a point of order. He should try to get to the point of order as soon as possible. A number of other hon. members are anxious to ask questions and we shall be running short of time.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, for three days or two days I have sat in my seat. I have not contaminated the Chair with any of my questions. I do not intend to contaminate the chamber with any of my questions during this abortive session of Parliament, which I hope will end soon. But I am not going to sit in my seat and have the Minister of Transport, for whom I have the greatest fondness, suggest by subterfuge that I did not know what I asked about. Today, the minister did not know what I asked about.

Mr. Speaker: This seems to be a debate between the hon. member and the minister as to fact. I really think the point of order should not be pursued. There is not much to be gained by pursuing the point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: I agree. I am not pursuing the point of order. I am trying to ask a supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: There are still four or five minutes left before the end of the question period. The hon. member might ask a supplementary quickly, and then we will move on to subsequent questions.

Mr. Nowlan: I shall be very quick indeed if the hon. member for St. Boniface will shut up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: The only reason the hon. member for St. Boniface is concerned is that St. Boniface is no longer St. Boniface, it is part of Metro Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the hon. member will be reasonable and ask his question. We do have to get on with the business of the question period.

Mr. Nowlan: I am always reasonable, Mr. Speaker. I always have respect for the Chair. I will put my question very briefly and succinctly to the Minister of Transport. Following my question of last Thursday, has the Minister of Agriculture yet referred to the Minister of Transport my question so that he may know what the hell he is answering?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, that was a simple, short and succinct question. Surely, the minister can understand a very succinct and sensible question.

BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY—POSSIBLE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR EXTENSION TO YUKON BOUNDARY

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitancy that I address a question to the Minister of Transport who, I suspect, is not as ignorant as he says he is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Barnett: I should like to ask the minister whether the government has under consideration a proposal to assist financially in the extension of the British Columbia Railway, formerly known as the Pacific Great Eastern, to the British Columbia-Yukon boundary, and, if so, whether he can tell us when it is likely that a government decision will be reached on this matter.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): As I believe the hon. member knows, a detailed study was made by Hedlin Menzies on this subject and delivered to the Province of British Columbia as well as to the railway several months ago. Talks have been proceeding ever since that time, but I would expect that these talks would culminate in some form of tentative proposal early in the new year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS TO SOVIET UNION TO PERMIT MEMBERS OF MINORITY GROUPS TO EMIGRATE

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After listening to all this verbosity, I am glad to be recognized.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Deakon: I should like to direct this question, if I may, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

An hon. Member: Sock it to him.

Mr. Deakon: If you would just keep quiet, I will sock it to him. But I want you to listen.

In view of the numerous requests which I, and, I am sure, many other hon. members, have received from Canadians of Ukrainian and European extraction on behalf of Ukrainians, Poles, Balts and people of other nationalities residing in the Soviet Union, may I ask whether representations have been made to the Soviet Union by the Government of Canada with a view to these nationals being enabled to visit their relatives here, or emigrate to other countries if they so desire?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deakon: Will the government make representations on behalf of these minority groups in the Soviet Union and endeavour to achieve a success similar to that achieved as a result of representations made on behalf of the Jewish community?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am happy to receive this suggestion from the hon. member. As he and other members of the House know, when the Prime Minister was speaking with Mr. Kosygin he did make representations along those lines, particularly urging the reunification of families, and also commending our own general policy which is practiced in Canada and which we urge upon all countries, namely, to provide for the maximum freedom of emigration. If there are any particular individuals whose cases the hon. member or others have in mind, I would be happy to receive details and pass along those representations to the Soviet government.

[Later:]

RESULTS OF REPRESENTATIONS TO PREMIER KOSYGIN CONCERNING VISITORS FROM SOVIET UNION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs has followed up what I understood to be the promise made by Mr. Kosygin when he was in Ottawa that he would speak to the appropriate minister of his own government and expedite the process of enabling visitors, especially family visitors, to go from his country to Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is my understanding that some of these people in respect of whom we did intervene have already left the Soviet Union and have come to Canada. Our ambassador in the Soviet Union is, of course, following up this question from time to time as opportunities present themselves.

WELFARE

INCREASED PROVINCIAL COSTS RESULTING FROM UNEMPLOYMENT—REVISION OF COST-SHARING UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of reports by Statistics Canada on provincial government finance which show that provincial expenditures on social welfare aid to unemployed and unemployables have risen by more than 50 per cent in two years, can the hon. gentleman say what action is being taken with respect to provincial requests for immediate revision of the cost-sharing arrangements under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Our position is that the 50-50 cost-sharing arrangement under the Canada Assistance Plan is a satisfactory one at the present date.

An hon. Member: What a cough! When are you going to quit smoking?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since we have almost reached the end of the question period, perhaps I might try to recognize members who had supplementary questions to ask.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask your permission for the minister to complete his answer to my question.

Mr. Speaker: He had the permission of the Chair, but he appeared to be unable to continue his answer.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF SECURITY GUARDS ON PLANES—POSITION OF AIRLINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My supplementary is in a very serious vein and it is directed to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister not care to correct an earlier reply with respect to a decision not to use in-flight safety precautions because they had not been recommended to him by CALPA?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I do not think that is what I said. If I did make a mistake, I welcome the opportunity afforded me of correcting it. What I said, or meant to say, was that it was a decision of the Government of Canada not to use armed guards on all our airplanes. This decision was made public the best part of a year ago. It had the concurrence at that time of the Canadian Airline Pilots Association. They have not since that time indicated any change of attitude. I said they met yesterday. They are going to make other recommendations which I have not received as yet. Whether those recommendations will involve a change of view on their part, I cannot say.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question in order to clarify this point once and for all.

Could the minister indicate whether, prior to the decision by the government, representations or suggestions had been received from CAPA, that in-flight security arrangements might be considered by the government?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, to the extent that my memory serves me right, and I believe it does, there was a meeting between my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, myself and the chief official of the Canadian Airline Pilots Association, following which there was held a joint press conference at which I believe all three of us confirmed that the same decision had been arrived at during the meeting. That is my recollection.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question may be put in the course of the debate which will resume in a few moments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the widespread delays in unemployment insurance payments across Canada and the minister's promise of prompt investigation into these delays, especially in the New Westminster area, has the minister any good news for those people who have been waiting between six and ten weeks for their claim cheques?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, those are the usual allegations without proof. If the hon. gentleman has any proof that people have been waiting between six and ten weeks, I should be glad to investigate their claims personally.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West and several other members wish to ask questions. We have already gone about five minutes beyond the time of the question period because I felt that hon. members who had been awaiting an opportunity to ask supplementaries should be given that opportunity. I believe we should now call orders of the day.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if he is prepared to receive some correspondence from my office on this point.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might get together with the minister on this supplementary after orders of the day have been called.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize that I am transgressing on the time of the House. In view of the question asked by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, which I think was extremely important, may I say that we are awaiting with great anxiety the statement that the minister intended to make regarding new machinery or new innovations which he has devised for expediting the payment of these claims.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: I was wondering if he would make that statement in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot, five, seven or eight minutes after the question period has expired, seek the floor by way of raising a point of order in order to ask a supplementary. With respect, I suggest to the hon. member that that is not in order. If he has a point of order to raise, of course, it is the duty of the Chair to hear him and rule on the point. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 28, consideration of Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1, 5 and 22 (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Speaker: When we adjourned last evening, I believe the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) had the floor.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think the House should also deal with the impact that inflation has upon the economic position of the farmer. The farmer can do relatively little to protect himself from inflation. Industry has no great difficulty in dealing with inflation; it merely increases prices. Advertising campaigns are aimed at increasing the marketability or effective demand of industrial products. A person working for wages as an industrial worker finds no great difficulty in coping with inflation. Any group of workers organized within a trade union have available to them, under the laws of Canada and of the provinces, collective bargaining rights through which they can extract in wages and fringe benefits some of the income that industry obtains through selling its products. The farmer is not in that enviable position. He cannot protect himself. He can do virtually nothing to advance his position. That is what we ought to be attempting to correct on a national scale.

Some time ago the government took the course of bending every effort to increase industrial production to a maximum. It wanted maximum production of primary resources, maximum production at the manufacturing level, at the secondary industry level and the like. The Department of Manpower and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion spend much money from the public purse in assisting industrial productive capacities in this country to increase.

None of this assistance is available to the farmer. For that reason we must ask ourselves several questions. Does the government intend this? If it does, is this bill part of the policy of the government? Does the government intend, through this bill, to industrialize the agricultural section of the economy? Does the government intend to industrialize farming? Does the government intend to drive the family farmer out of existence? Does it intend to drive the small farmer off the land and into the cities and turn agriculture into an industrial business as opposed to an agricultural business. Those are questions we must ask ourselves.

I am inclined to think, having read this bill and the amendments now before us, and having examined the agricultural policies that the government has enunciated from time to time, that the government intends this and that the bill is part and parcel of that process. At this stage, therefore, we are not dealing principally with marketing boards, which of course can be of tremendous assistance to the farmer; we are actually dealing with the policy orientation of the government. We note, for example, that the cheese industry is now geared to industrial concepts. That industry, which is part of agriculture, is being industrialized.

We note with respect to poultry, hogs and other farm commodities, that the policy direction is toward integration. Under that system the retailer or the feed grain industry will control and dominate the agricultural production sector of the industry. The effect of that, of course, is that the farmer is being moved off the land; he is being moved out of the rural area and into the city. The government is attempting to establish in this country a structure of agriculture which is industrial in concept and not rural or agricultural. A structure like that is not concerned about the individual farm, the individual family, the rural community or the like.

Those are questions to which we should seek answers. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if I may digress for a moment—I do not wish to be out of order but merely to digress—I suggest that we should look at the attitude of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, see what it has said and what has been said to it about rural life, rural family living, and about what happens to rural communities when through the design of industry, through the drive for profits or through the design of government we attempt to reduce the number of people in agriculture and establish, in its place, something akin to a manufacturing type of industry.

• (3:10 p.m.)

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion helped to finance, if in fact it did not finance completely, the operations of a group called the Canadian Council on Rural Development. That council made its third report and review to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) in July of 1970. As I said earlier, whether the department financed the operation of the Canadian Council on Rural Development entirely or to a limited degree is immaterial.

The report of the council was made to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. This third report and its review relates almost entirely to the damage accruing to the rural farm family and to rural communities as a result of the policy decisions of the government. It talks about the movement over the years of people from the farm to the city. It questions, not so much why that movement in itself is valuable or otherwise but talks, rather, in terms of whether the extent of that movement is necessary and helpful. It poses a very real question which this bill and this House should be posing.

Let me quote very briefly from page 10 of this report. This passage is underlined in the report to make it even more significant and to draw it even more to the attention of the government. With regard to the flow of population from the country to the urban areas, the report says this:

> The real question is not so much whether mobility is necessary but how much mobility is equitable, not so much whether there should be a flow of population from rural to urban areas, but how great and how rapid a flow is desirable in social and human terms.

That, I think, is the crux of what a farm policy should take into account, namely, social and human considerations. Obviously, this government's policy in terms of agriculture ignores that concept completely. The report also reached a conclusion, as if this were necessary, because everybody in agriculture, everybody who owns a farm or farms for a living knows it to be the case, but in case the government did not know about it the Canadian Council on Rural Development took the opportunity to draw to the attention of the government this conclusion in respect of the disparities in Canadian incomes:

> The conclusion is unavoidable. The most striking disparities in Canadian incomes are not so much between provinces as between the agricultural sector and the non-agricultural sector, in every part of the country.

Again, this passage is underlined in the report to give it even more impact. I shall not make specific reference to this but the report gives tables and statistics to indicate that in some cases in some areas agricultural income is as low as 27 per cent of the non-agricultural family income. It is almost a quarter of what is generally earned in a province. The report talks about the cost-price squeeze which I mentioned earlier. Another part of the report reads as follows:

> The Canadian farmer, in fact, is trapped in a very similar position to that of the commodity producer in the underdeveloped countries, a position made worse because of inflation.

This report is a document to which I believe the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) should pay great attention and should read even though it was not developed through his department. It talks about the fact that incomes are less in respect of farms, farm families and farm workers than in respect of non-agricultural communities and non-agricultural workers. It talks about the fact that employment possibilities are fewer in rural than in urban areas. It talks about the fact that the level and quality of the standard of living available to farmers and rural communities which are dependent upon agriculture is less than in industrialized areas or urban communities.

It also talks of the fact that health facilities are fewer in the rural communities and that the doctor-population ratio is less. In other words, there are fewer doctors available to the agricultural, rural communities than to the industrialized communities or the cities. It mentions that the availability and quality of educational facilities are less in the rural community for farmers and agricultural people than in cities and industrialized sectors of the economy. It points out that housing is poorer, that health standards are poorer and that sewage facilities, water facilities and the whole range of social amenities available to Canadians as a whole are denied the agricultural and rural communities. These are denied partly because of the industrialized orientation of the government and partly because of the policy decision of the government to reduce the number of farm families and to encourage the exodus of people from rural communities into the cities.

That is a pretty sad commentary. I submit it is the sort of thing that so far has been the reason for the amendments before the House at report stage of this bill. This I believe, has been ignored so far. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has available to it hundreds of millions of dollars to give away to industries and corporations, two-thirds of which are United States-dominated, to develop industry and expand industrial plants, but is doing absolutely nothing in the area of rural life.

I submit that the Department of Agriculture should make a policy decision that it is in the interest of Canada to assist farmers to live comfortably off the land, that it is in the interest of Canada to develop a viable agricultural structure and not an industrialized structure. It should develop a type of structure which would make it worth while for farmers to farm and give them the inner feeling that that is the type of life they should lead.

Even though I am a strong supporter of the concept of marketing boards and agencies to ease the economic ups and downs which exist in respect of prices and production of agricultural products, I am rather sceptical that this bill will in fact do what those of us who support marketing boards hope it will do. I am sceptical because of the attitude of the government toward industrial productivity in this nation and a minimization of agricultural activity. Evidently the emphasis of the government is toward city life and manufacturing plants.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired. He may continue with the consent of the House. Is there such agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as a final paragraph I might say, as I started off, that I do not from my own background in working life have experience as a farmer or of a farming community, as is the case with many members of this House, but I have attempted to draw in my mind, in an attempt to understand what the bill seeks to do, a parallel between the fishing industry with which I am familiar and the farming industry. I submit that there is a parallel, that each is a prime producer, that each is involved in the harvesting of foodstuffs and in the marketing of them to a greater or lesser degree. Each runs into the cost-price squeeze and neither is in a position to deal adequately with inflation. What makes me sceptical about the relationship of the bill to the family farm is the fact that this government has taken similar action with respect to its fisheries policy.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member. There is no limit on the extended time which he is allowed and he can speak much longer if he wishes to do so, but I have some doubts whether at least parts of the speech he is now making are within the terms of the motions before us. It seems to me that the approach of the hon. member is in relation to the principle of the bill itself, rather than to the principle of the motions now before us. In the time remaining at the hon. member's disposal he might relate his remarks to the motions under consideration.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I thought that in the earlier part of the remarks I had followed precisely the scope that was available to hon. members who spoke yesterday when, of course, Your Honour was not in the chair. I was simply trying to follow the tenor of that debate. I admit that speaking about fisheries is somewhat far afield from a national farm products marketing bill and the amendments that are before us.

In summation and in conclusion I was trying to draw a parallel with the fishing industry. This government, without regard to the effect of some of our coastal communities, because of its attitude with respect to fisheries on the west coast has driven some of our coastal communities 95 per cent into the hands of the welfare agencies. There is nothing available to these people as prime producers because the government itself set the course which has driven fishermen out of the fishing industry. That is why I am sceptical and believe that the concept of this bill is designed to drive farmers out of agricultural life and into industrial life. Farmers are having to move into the cities owned by Kraft, by General Foods or by other massive organizations which seem to want to control the agricultural industry.

That is why I am sceptical about the effect this piece of legislation will have on the agricultural community. That is undoubtedly why those who will be affected by it, farmers in various fields of production, are also sceptical about it and are of divided opinion, because some of them can see the day coming when they will be out of business, unable to find employment in industry and on the welfare rolls. Surely that is not what we should be talking about in the House.

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and a privilege to speak on Bill C-176, the national farm products marketing bill. As one who is an active farmer in the constituency of Middlesex, I say at the outset that I have enjoyed the privileges extended under three of the Ontario farm marketing boards. We all recognize that farmers as a general rule are rather independent people who rely on their own resources and initiative to make a "go" of farming. We realize that in the very competitive society in which we live some farmers need legislation to protect them. The well-to-do, prosperous farmers may not need this legislation. The gentleman farmer, the rancher, or the individual who is well established does not need any protection, but I assert that the young farmer, the one who is taking on the burden of debt in order to establish himself as a primary producer of agricultural products, needs some protection in the marketplace.

In my area of Middlesex and in southern Ontario we have 18 different marketing boards, four of which work under the quota system. I am referring to the Ontario Marketing Board, the Flue-cured Tobacco Marketing Board, and the broiler and turkey boards. This quota system, especially under the Ontario Marketing Board and the Flue-cured Tobacco Marketing Board has been advantageous to participating farmers. I think it has been good for industries such as the dairy industry and the tobacco industry to have these marketing boards. Because of their success, because they have been able to control production, they have enjoyed in the marketplace a fair return for their efforts. Therefore they have expanded, have been able to maintain a good level of economic prosperity in the community and have been successful in the eyes of their neighbours.

Within my riding of Middlesex is the riding of the Minister of Agriculture and Food of the province of Ontario. I should like to quote some of his remarks regarding the urgency of this legislation. I maintain that we need some national farm products marketing legislation. He said on January 25:

> How soon can we expect to have national marketing legislation to bring order and stability to the industry? . . .Until a national marketing act has been developed and proclaimed, provinces will be forced to use whatever measures they can develop to protect the interests of their producers. It is possible that voluntary agreements can be established, but our experience has indicated little success by this method.

Those are the words of Hon. William Stewart, Minister of Agriculture and Food of the province of Ontario. He also stated before the provincial legislature on April 15, 1971:

> The government of Ontario is of the opinion that the ultimate solution to the problems of international or interprovincial agriculture trade and supply management must be found at the national level. We believe that Bill C-176, the national marketing bill now before the House of Commons, provides the legislative machinery whereby this national rationalization of production and marketing can be realized.

I am in agreement with his views on this legislation. I believe that many hon. members opposite are also in agreement with the views of the Ontario Minister of Agriculture and Food. I urge the House to give speedy approval to this marketing bill. Due to the nature of the farming industry in Canada and its present organization, we know that many individuals are operating under severe financial stress and strain. They more or less rely on the manufacturer, the consumer or the processor to give them whatever price is going at a given time in the market. This is unfair, because those who are least able to bear the burden receive a lower price than they should for their produce. They do not have the requisite facilities to store their produce long enough to take advantage of higher market prices. Under these circumstances, I urge speedy passage of the bill.

[Mr. Lind.]

• (3:30 p.m.)

Hon. Mr. Stewart, again on April 15, 1971, said:

> I suggest that had the national marketing legislation now before the House of Commons been in effect, in my opinion, the problems we now face across Canada would not have occurred, as far as interprovincial marketing problems are concerned.

We all realize, Mr. Speaker, that from time to time we become very regionally minded. We all love our home areas, our home provinces. We all fight for the good of our constituencies. But we must remember that a national farm marketing bill is only enabling legislation supporting the ten provinces of Canada in order that they may have their fair share of the market place for their products.

Some people say that national farm marketing legislation will balkanize Canada. I maintain that it will not. As a matter of fact, we have lived for years under a type of balkanization due to the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. In 1935 the federal government introduced the Canadian Wheat Board Act which really provided the basis for quotas. It placed restrictions on the movement of grain from one province to another. In essence, there is nothing really new about imposing a type of quota restriction on the movement of products among provinces. This has been going on since 1935.

I believe that the Prairie provinces would not like to do away with the Canadian Wheat Board. They may want to revise the Wheat Board legislation. They might like to reform it a little and bring it up to date. Maybe the board is a little old-fashioned, but the prairie provinces have lived with quotas for years. Quotas could be established under a national farm marketing act upon the advice of a national farm marketing council. I firmly believe that the marketing agencies provided for in the bill would be established only after the results of regional plebiscites had shown that producers in the provinces wanted them.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that Bill C-176 is simply enabling legislation to permit the provinces to set up their own marketing boards within their jurisdictions. I fully support it and urge that it be given speedy passage.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing motions Nos. 1, 5 and 22 and I have no hesitation whatsoever in supporting these amendments. I think it is safe to say that everyone in this chamber believes we should have free trade in agricultural products, and indeed in all other products, between provinces. I go a little further than that. I believe we should have free enterprise for the individual. I believe in this principle so firmly that I think every Canadian has the right to go broke on his own if he wants to, and a lot of them have been doing that.

Coming from the province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, I know a little bit about marketing boards because my province has been a forerunner in the field of marketing legislation. We have a hog marketing board, a poultry marketing board and even an asparagus marketing board. You name it and we've got it in the province of Ontario. We have four boards that deal almost exclusively with livestock, and I think there are 11 others that deal with other commodities. What do these boards do? What are they supposed to do? Are they the panacea that the government suggests they are for the problems facing agriculture at the present time? My first answer is, I think not.

I have noticed a thread running through all the speeches made in this chamber during the last couple of days, with virtually everyone accepting the principle that marketing boards are the answer. No one, so far as I have heard, has taken exception to the activities of marketing boards. No one has stood in his place in this chamber and offered anything in the way of criticism of marketing boards. Apparently we have naïvely accepted the premise that marketing boards are a way of life, and the government has assumed that marketing boards are the cure-all for the ills of agriculture.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that so far no concrete evidence has been put forward to show that marketing boards have in fact improved the situation for the farmer. I am distressed that some members blithely talk in support of this legislation, all-inclusive as it is, and give the impression that they believe all we have to do is pass this bill and farm problems will disappear as if by magic. I suggest that the problem goes much deeper than that. I ask, what do marketing boards do? What are they supposed to do? Have they done what was expected of them? Who has been the recipient of the greatest benefit, the producer or the consumer? I suggest it is the hired help, the bureaucracy that has attached itself to the marketing boards.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: I am not about to try to discredit marketing boards but I hope to differentiate between efficient market sales agencies and what is involved in this bill, compulsory supply management types of agencies. I suggest that the duties of marketing boards are threefold. First, to sell the farmer's product to the best advantage. I think we are all agreed on that. Second, they should standardize quality to give a better balance of supply. Third, they should establish collective marketing where there are many sellers and few buyers. But how have they done? I can speak only of the province of Ontario, but I submit they have not done as well as they might in the selling field because they have not had active governmental support.

In Ontario we have a couple of classic examples of marketing boards and I should like to discuss one which falls in the category of supply management. I am referring to the Flue-cured Tobacco Board. This has the reputation of being a very successful organization, and singlehandedly has been able to cut back the acreage each year for the last three years by about 50 per cent. I am not critical of the board in this respect because they have kept supply and demand in pretty good balance, but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that their problem has been compounded by those confounded plant breeders. These individuals have consistently brought in new, high-yielding varieties of plants which double production. You need only half as many acres to grow tobacco if you are getting twice as much growth per acre. This board has also established an elite, highly capitalized group of tobacco growers with a closed shop in which no young Canadian can aspire to membership unless born into it.

We have heard a lot about opportunities for youth, but how hollow that sounds. If youth wanted to start in agriculture, particularly in the tobacco growing areas, I question very much whether it could be done. A young man could have the best training and expertise in the world but could only get into the tobacco industry if he were born into it. Another thing that is missing in this bill and which has contributed to the success of the Flue-cured Tobacco Board is strict import controls. There is nothing about that in this bill. But on April 14, 1970, when the minister introduced Bill C-197 he made a platitudinous statement to which I shall refer a little later.

Mr. Paproski: Promises, promises.

Mr. Olson: A good thing we keep them, isn't it?

Mr. Bigg: What about $2 wheat, Mr. Richardson?

Mr. McCutcheon: We have examined a supply management type of marketing board, Mr. Speaker. Now let us look at the Hog Marketing Board. Some of these boards have been pretty successful, by which I mean that they have closely followed the prices established by the United States market. If the province of Ontario or the federal government have the temerity to question the actions of a marketing board, there is the stock answer, "Where would we have been without the board?" I should like to put on record a few facts relative to the Hog Marketing Board and other livestock boards in the province of Ontario. Some of the proponents of marketing boards should study their performance.

Ten years ago in the province of Ontario hogs sold at $27.58 on a dressed weight basis. Today they sell at almost $28. In 1961, cattle, which do not come under a marketing board, sold at $21.12 live weight, and today they sell at $34. It is interesting to note that since 1961 the Ontario Hog Marketing Board has collected a few for each hog marketed. Until 1965 or 1966 this was 42 cents, then it went up to 45 cents and to 60 cents, so it has averaged 45 cents per hog marketed in a ten-year period during which time 25,700,000 hogs were marketed. At 45 cents each, this brought the Hog Marketing Board between $11 million and $11½ million of the farmers' money. For this, all the farmers got was a big staff in Toronto. The packers used to send out the cheques, but now that is done by the board.

Mr. Paproski: Shame! How do you like that, McBride?

Mr. McBride: Why don't you say something relevant?

Mr. Paproski: You tell that to your people in Lanark county.

Mr. Bigg: Back in your pulpit!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, since other members keep referring to me, I wonder if they would permit me to ask whether they would refer to the bill rather than condemn marketing boards. No one is arguing for or against them.

We are just arguing to pass a bill whereby producers, if they want, can have this type of organization. The hon. member is saying it should not include hogs. That is fine, but it does not have anything to do with the bill.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, of course, is arguing a point. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) has the floor.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I sat patiently and listened to the inane chatter of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: I had the courtesy not to interrupt even though it was stupid gobbledygook he was putting forth.

Mr. Paproski: The devil's advocate.

Mr. McCutcheon: I wish to quote a few more figures before I get to my main point. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, in 1940 cattle were $6.35 and hogs $11.15. In 1950 cattle were $23.10 and hogs $28.75. In 1960 cattle were $20.87 and hogs $24.14. The member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) said that was underpricing them, without a marketing board. The point is that today cattle are 24 cents, 36 cents and 38 cents a pound.

To return to the comments of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, I ask this question: Why in the name of heaven would any cattleman want to be covered by this bill? That is the point. If that is not relevant, I do not know what is. I mentioned the fact that with supply management and the closed-shop factor there is no opportunity for young people to get into the business. I commend the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for saying that what this government wants to do is industrialize agriculture and get rid of farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: When we talk about supply management we are talking about quotas. The only people who benefit from a quota system are those who get it in the first instance. When the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Lind) goes back to his lumber yard he will want to take this into consideration. From then on it is the cost of production. Last week the commission looking into the problems of egg producers held a meeting in his city. I quote from the transcript what Mr. Littlejohn, a poultry producer, said about supply management at the meeting in London, Ontario:

> This year two tobacco producers that I know well and who both live less than 3 miles from me rented their acreages for the year. The one got $400 per acre and the other $475.

There is an added cost of production. What are you going to say to the consumer who will be faced with an increased cost? The poultry producers have been talking about this quota all over the province of Ontario. The lumber companies, poultry producers and millers have been constructing henhouses as though they were going out of style. Why? They want to get a tremendous quota because they know it is saleable. They are talking about $2 or $3 a hen for a marketable quota.

[Mr. McBride.]

Mr. Paproski: Now we know.

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, now you know. My third point is that nowhere in this bill do we have effective machinery to limit the importation of foreign products. We are being asked to pass another Bill C-259 on good will. The minister said he will be bringing in amendments to the tax bill after it has been tried out on the Canadian people. The government wants to do the same with this bill.

An hon. Member: Experiment.

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, experiment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCutcheon: I feel very humble and grateful that my colleagues have allowed me to continue. I promise I shall not be long. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said in 1970 when introducing Bill C-197 that the situation regarding the marketing of foreign products in Canada makes it at least desirable, if not essential, that we have enabling legislation on the statute books, that is, authority from Parliament for the government to respond from time to time to the requests of a substantial number of producers in this field if they are being hurt by foreign imports.

I mentioned the fact that consumers will very likely have to pay more. I come to my final point. Why all the rush? An inquiry into egg marketing is presently being held in the province of Ontario. Their report will be completed soon. Therefore, I submit it is an affront to the producers of the province of Ontario that at this time we in the House are being asked to ram this bill through.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: Yesterday the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton said that farmers in his area are hard-pressed. He has no corner on this market. I come from one of the supposedly better agricultural areas in the province of Ontario. The farmers in my area are crying the same blues. They are desperate and despondent. They are saying, "Well, let's give it a try." I am reminded of what a world traveller said in 1949 or 1950. He had just returned from China. They had thrown out Chiang Kai-shek and had accepted communism. He said that the people of China had accepted communism because they felt nothing could be worse than what they had. This is the attitude of the agricultural industry in Canada today. They feel nothing could be worse than what they have. They are grasping at straws. I tell them that this bill is certainly no solution.

In conclusion I point out that the government's advice to agriculture over the years does not cause me to have great faith in the bureaucratic decision-making that this bill will substitute for hard-nosed decision-making of the workaday world. A year ago the government said, "Grow barley." Now barley is a glut on the market and growers in southwestern Ontario are facing disaster. It is privately admitted that they were given bad advice and that they should have been growing wheat.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Canada cannot continue to have government by promise. The Minister of Agriculture is asking Canadians to accept this bill on faith. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) did the same thing with respect to Bill C-259. He promised amendments after he had tried out the bill on Canadians. He invoked closure to get his way. Now the Minister of Agriculture is about to try the same thing. Why the rush?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member who has just ended his speech will accept a question, I will recognize the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté).

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): The hon. member said a while ago that in 1962, the price of pork was 27 cents a pound. Does he know that in 1959, the price of pork was $17.80 per hundredweight? I sold some myself. The price went up to $27 per hundredweight afterwards. A lot of farmers gave up because the minimum price was abolished. They gave up hog raising and as a result of the production margin, the price of pork went up in 1962.

[English]

Mr. McCutcheon: I had great difficulty with the translation, but what I did understand was really nothing to answer. I shall be happy to sit down with the hon. gentleman and discuss it. Maybe, despite our different languages, we could get together. I could not understand the question through the babble that came to me. I don't think the hon. member made any sense in the first place, but I will be glad to talk to him.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up very much time in this debate, but as a farmer and as a Member of Parliament representing a farm area I think I should make some comments on the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I ask Your Honour to let me know if I stray too far afield, but I listened yesterday and today to everyone who spoke and it seems to me that they not only covered the whole field but, if I may say so, they covered the whole agricultural plain.

If these amendments were allowed to pass in the form suggested by the hon. member for Crowfoot, it would be like pulling teeth from a watchdog and then training him to bite a chicken thief. It would be like removing one or two legs from a good cutting horse and then expecting him to do the same job of sorting for you. It would be like watering down a drink 90 to 1—your imagination would have to do a lot for you.

I can remember my uncles talking about prohibition days and about a certain farm process; I suppose one could call it that because farm products were used in it. A man engaged in the manufacturing business lived in the area. Every time he made a new batch he had to choose a new name. He liked his brands to have a proper title. My uncles, being of Irish descent, were always available to sample these new brands. Mr. Speaker, these amendments put me in mind of the brand they called "Love in a Canoe"—it was almost water.

Mr. Hees: That's not the way I heard it.

Mr. Paproski: It has been watered down.

Mr. Whelan: Well, this brand was watered down so much that nobody would buy it. And I, for one, will not buy this bill if it is watered down as much as the hon. member would wish. All my farming life I have been associated with marketing boards. Every crop I grow is under the jurisdiction of one board or another. These boards are provincial; if they have any fault, that is it. Their jurisdiction does not extend beyond the Ontario border. If I said they were perfect, I would not be stating the truth. But let me say, as the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) has just said, they are a lot better than nothing. The producers who use them, that is to say, the vast majority, would not be without them.

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent talked about hog producers. They have the right to reject marketing boards in Ontario. They tried it once, maybe twice, but it was always voted back in. This puts me in mind of a great co-op man who is no longer with us, Father Cody of St. Francis Xavier's University in the Maritimes. He was travelling around, spreading his ideas among farmers and on one occasion he was riding on a train in Annapolis Valley listening to a couple of apple brokers conversing in their seats ahead of him. One of them said, "It is clear what these farmers are getting ready to do. They are getting ready to sell their own apples." The other commented, "What right have they to do that? They know nothing about selling apples, nothing about business." At that point Father Cody could stand it no longer. He stuck his head between the two men and asked, "And who in hell do they belong to in the first place? They are the farmers' apples, are they not, and haven't they the right to sell them?"

Mr. Speaker, I never saw anything which comes even close to the propaganda which has been used to try to scare people about the legislation before us, unwarranted, most of it. Anyone who is making these misstatements is either ill-informed or is purposely doing so in order to divide the farmers across this land for his own selfish interests.

As I say, every crop grown on our farm is under the jurisdiction of a marketing board of one kind or another. These boards are all democratically elected. If producers do not like them, they can throw them out. Indeed, meetings are to be held starting next June in each district in connection with one of these boards. The farmers who send their produce to this board can elect whoever they please, and they do so. Every now and again they turf out some of the members, as is the case in this House. And some of them should be turfed out.

Mr. Alexander: Don't get into personalities.

Mr. Whelan: Consider the board which controls the production of vegetables. This board has the right to negotiate prices, it has the right to set all sorts of conditions on sales. The growers have no right to sign contracts until the board announces that it has reached agreement with the processors who will use the crops. There are many big farmers who would not be without such a board. These boards have contributed to the welfare of all farmers and I challenge any hon. member to prove otherwise.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The Wheat Board is a different kind of board again. One cent per bushel goes for running the board and 18 cents, I think, goes toward the marketing of the wheat. The price is set as a result of negotiations in which board representatives take part. That board sells wheat in the world market, although once or twice it has sold wheat in the domestic market. If any of the 19 cents is left over, that money is distributed among the producers. Some say the system is not perfect, but the producers get a lot more than $1.12 per bushel, the price they got before the board was established. The Wheat Board is doing a good job. We are selling a great deal of wheat at this time, and the government has had something to do with that.

The soybean board is a different kind of board. That board negotiates such things as freight rates, although its services in most cases are purely voluntary. I do not think the soybean board is as strong as it should be. As I said, it is a different kind of board but I would not be without it. I would not grow any crop if I were not protected by a board. I would not even grow something which hon. members opposite could use. Many hon. members have heard me talk about the price of corn. I would not even grow sweet corn without a board to protect me. Hon. members opposite could use some sweet corn; it might sweeten them.

Farmers have nothing to fear from the legislation as it is. The fear has been created by other people, and I have good views on why this has been done. Some people have been told, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation will create socialism. My experience is that, on the contrary, it will stop it because it will definitely protect the little producer from being completely gobbled up by the big one. If anyone tries to tell me that a system that lets big monsters literally eat up little guys because they cannot protect themselves can be called a free enterprise system, they will have a hard time convincing me. You cannot convince me that that is a good form of free enterprise.

Really, what some people want is socialism for the rich and privileged few. They are the people who want to divide the wealth among themselves. All this talk about socialism means that the privileged want to divide the wealth among themselves. At least, that is what some want but not all. Some of the best farmers in Ontario that I know are strong supporters of marketing boards and have been for years. And, by the way, Mr. Speaker, I am sure most members of the House of Commons know that the boards I have talked about are all in Ontario and that practically all were started by a Conservative government which, by the way, recently received the largest mandate ever given to any government in Ontario. They are the protectors of free enterprise.

Mr. Ricard: Is that why the hon. member voted for them?

Mr. Whelan: I beg your pardon?

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Ricard: Is that why the hon. member voted Conservative?

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member should be honest. He is scared stiff of the NDP.

Mr. Whelan: The facts speak for themselves. The Ontario government recognized the need. That government knew there was a need for marketing boards. The Ontario Minister of Agriculture, Hon. William A. Stewart, has also recognized the need for national marketing boards. That is what he said before the committee of this House. One should not forget what he said in the election campaign. He did not blame the Liberals in Ottawa for the lack of such national boards. He said that if the farmers of Ontario are in trouble, it is because of "those people in Ottawa." He was charitable to the official opposition. He did not want to blame them; he was too much of a politician. He merely blamed "those people in Ottawa," and everybody took it for granted that it was the Liberals who were holding up the legislation. The record speaks for itself. Unfortunately, the average farmer in Ontario does not read the record; he is much too busy working.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned is designed to help all our farmers to become equal Canadians. It will at least give them the opportunity to become equal partners in our agricultural industry.

Mr. McCleave: Come, now.

Mr. Whelan: I think I know as well as anyone in this House what farmers really want. From the long association I have enjoyed with the farm organizations across Canada, I think I know what most Canadian farmers really want.

Mr. Korchinski: Is that why the hon. member turned Liberal?

Mr. Whelan: I hear hon. members opposite making comments. I have been in the hon. member's part of Canada and I tell him that I think the vast majority of farmers in Saskatchewan are in favour of national marketing legislation. As I said, this legislation will help farmers to become equal Canadians in our economy. It will give them the opportunity to become equal partners in our agricultural industry, if they want to take that step.

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent said, "Do not shove this bill down our throats." We are not shoving anything on anybody. We are making this law available to those who want to use it, that is all. I hear much talk about free enterprise, yet who wants to apply the sort of system that applies to no other industry to agriculture, when one knows the chaos agriculture is in?

Let us talk about the trucking industry. Why do not hon. members on the other side, for example, buy some trucks and start a trucking business? They cannot go into the trucking business because they cannot get a PCV licence. Let people try to walk a dog down the streets without a licence. Why do they not start an airline or a radio station? They cannot go into the radio business without a licence. You can see what happens, yet hon. members insist on talking about free enterprise in agriculture. That is the trouble. Agriculture has been free for everybody.

I see a couple of members of the medical profession in the House. I suppose they know that some doctors have had to turn to agriculture because the medical profession's governing body would not let them practice. Those people, even though qualified, could not get a licence. Even though doctors are badly needed in certain areas of Canada, these people were not allowed to practice.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whelan: If I have time at the end of my speech I will be glad to answer questions.

Mr. Alexander: What about lawyers?

Mr. Whelan: I could name other segments of our society. If real estate brokers are afraid that too many people will enter the real estate field and interfere with their earning $50,000 a year, they withhold licences from new applicants. They are allowed to set the number that will enter the profession. Or let us talk about plumbers and electricians. How many young people have been refused membership as apprentices in the Electrical Workers' Union? I am using these examples merely to show that agriculture is the only part of our society without any controls. Nothing is done to provide for stability in that segment of our society.

I have always argued that our agricultural products know no provincial boundaries. I have said that in many speeches, and I said it even before becoming a Member of Parliament. We know this to be a proven fact, according to a recent Supreme Court ruling. We have seen in the past smart operators moving from province to province to escape producer marketing boards; sometimes they have done that with governmental help. The help came either from the province they were moving to or from the federal government. I do not approve of that. I know, as I am sure every member of this House knows, that such people have only one thing in mind, namely, making more money. They wanted to do that by taking advantage generally of all concerned. First, they wanted to take advantage of the producer; second, they wanted the advantage of cheap labour and, third, they wanted to take advantage of the consumer.

One may ask, how could they take advantage of the consumer? They do so by charging the consumer the price he would be charged if they were paying the regular price for produce and labour in other parts of Canada. I do not think very much of this practice. Although some of these operators have been successful, that is an unscrupulous type of operation and one that this bill can bring to a halt if producers generally want to take advantage of it.

These unscrupulous operators completely destroy any stability in price that a commodity might enjoy. They can do this because they are not strictly regulated. Anyone who know anything about marketing boards will know that such boards bring about a high quality of product. Strict regulations encompass almost everything that the producer produces, the result being a product of high quality. Producers produce a high quality product under national marketing boards or provincial marketing boards. In the processing business in our area, which encompasses practically the whole area, the produce is second to none and the consuming public receives the benefit of it. In other parts of the world it is not of such high quality.

We must also think of some of the things that have been done because of marketing boards across our country. I think particularly of the east coast and what has been done in respect of fish production there. Indeed, I also think of freshwater fish production. These marketing agencies are not without fault, but they are of great benefit to production and producers are in a much better position than ever before. The boards have not cost very much, either.

Some of the comparisons made with fascist and communist countries would be laughable if they were not so wrong. I have visited some of these countries and I have in-laws who come from them. My wife comes from a country with a socialist doctrine. When I visit large farms I like to compare them with the inefficient state farms. I know that in Yugoslavia the independent farmer produces the bulk of the food. We also know that western European countries receive a high price for their products. Hon. members mentioned this fact and suggested that we look at what these countries are doing for their farmers. They did not go further and say that these farmers have had strict marketing boards and that they have had them for a much longer period than Canada. Two examples are Great Britain and New Zealand. Both are democratic countries. They have had marketing boards for years and I understand they were established by other than socialist governments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the hon. member be allowed to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan: I shall not be very much longer, Mr. Speaker. I know many Canadian farmers. I have received many letters from all across Canada. The farmers of this country are in favour of this bill in the ratio of 90 to 1. Some of those who are against it do not know why, but generally speaking have taken this position because someone has told them to do so. After studying the volumes of evidence and the thousands of words, some of which in farm language could be described only as hogwash, of the committee proceedings, I think there should be a time limit on committee proceedings and on every piece of legislation which appears before this House. If legislation is to be dealt with in a democratic fashion, there should be a time limit on it.

This bill should pass without further delay so that the farmers of Canada can take advantage of it if they want to do so. It is not being stuffed down their throats. It is being offered to them if they want to use it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe).

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) rises to ask a question.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, in his speech the hon. member referred to the closed-shop concept. He referred to plumbers and doctors. I do not know whether he mentioned lawyers, but he could have. Does he not agree that they have no closed shop if they have the ability to go to university and acquire the knowledge to become a doctor or a lawyer, or if they have the ability to learn the trade of plumber, but that under this bill one would have to have the money to buy the quota no matter whether or not one had the ability to operate the quota after he had purchased it?

Mr. Whelan: You know better.

Mr. Horner: I do not, and if you do, explain it.

Mr. Whelan: First of all, I have had experience with young people who wanted to go to medical school, who were highly qualified but were not allowed to do so. We know that some lawyers in this country are saying that there are too many lawyers. We know that today one cannot become an apprenticed plumber and work as a plumber because there are too many plumbers. I am saying that every way of life has some control over it. Even when one drives a car down the road he does not drive on the right side because he wants to; he does so because there is some kind of control. Even in this House we are supposed to have some kind of control.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan), who is a very good friend of mine, what he was alluding to when he said that doctors are controlled by licence. Was it the medical school he was referring to?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Compton. There would have to be unanimous consent for the hon. member to ask a question. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whelan: As I understand it, they are provincially licensed. If one should go from one province to another it is necessary to obtain a permit to practise in that province. Also, there has not been an increase in the medical schools and therefore doctors are not turned out like chickens and eggs from a poultry farm so that there would be sufficient doctors for everybody. Then we have the situation in respect of immigrant doctors. Why do we not let these doctors come to Canada and go to work? They must have a licence first.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would support me in respect of what he has said, so that the medical schools might be enlarged and the government would provide the necessary funds to run those medical schools.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems to the Chair that we are wandering a little further than we should. The hon. member for Compton.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would not forgive myself if I did not take part in this complex and socialistic debate on Bill C-176 which proposes that absolute controls be imposed on farmers.

Mr. Speaker, farmers face problems that are particularly difficult, cruel and disappointing. We see today that the results of the so-called reforms in the agricultural field were not very good. Governments, both Liberal and Progressive Conservative, have, in the past, had many ideas to save agriculture.

Farm loans were meant to save agriculture. Three or four other kinds of loans endorsed by both the provincial and the federal governments were devised subsequently. Farmers' unions were also established. Farmers were told: get united, because you are divided, because you do not understand your problems. Get organized with the help of responsible and competent people who will understand your problems and submit them to the legislators who will solve them. That was the solution suggested.

All kinds of solutions were found. Farmers were fooled with so-called solutions and today we are still looking for another solution. Nothing has been found yet.

Never in our history has agriculture been in such a state of stagnation. Agriculture is doomed to failure. Farmers are desperate because they have been ruined under our fine system.

Because they were loyal to the old parties, farmers are now like castaways. They throw up their arms in the air and ask for any kind of life-boat. They are ready to place themselves in any situation now to save agriculture from bankruptcy. The government proposes Bill C-176, telling them how it can control the situation with measures that are even requested by the farmers' union, in the light of studies that have been conducted over the years.

Farmers are surrendering their possessions to an agency that will not even have a sense of responsibility, because they can no longer hold out. They are at the end of their arguments, at the end of the road. They can no longer navigate.

Such is our fine system, that we have favoured for such a long time, and it is the system that the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) asks people to support. The hon. member for Richelieu says: I am a farmer. I know your needs. The only important thing to achieve is the marketing of all your products. That is what will save you.

But we had a lot of saviours in the past. We are still at the same point. We have been saying for 30 years that all these saviours and all these organizations go round in circles without solving anything. Now we have the proof of it and we derive some satisfaction from having warned people 25 or 30 years ago. We told them then that the Farmers Union and the co-operatives would not save them. We told them that they would be saved by money because it would take money to sell their products, because it was necessary to give consumers some purchasing power and because that problem would never be solved as long as we did not find a way to boost the purchasing power of the consumers. Today we are trying to solve the problem through socialization, through the communization of all agricultural property—which is nonsensical.

As a consequence, a considerable number of farmers left their family farms because they were kicked out by the present economic system. They are now living in cities where they are on welfare at the expense of other citizens. And a great number of those remaining will go the same way with the coming into force of Bill C-176—the most infamous bill ever proposed to a nation. We are dragging farmers out by the neck. Whether they like it or not, they will have to follow: financial dictatorship is doing its job, and in order to be faithful to the old parties, we say: Go on accepting all those organizations which control you and strangle you; welcome them with open arms for they are your paradise and your haven.

So, the old parties' puppets like the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) are begging their colleagues to pass this infamous legislation. These same puppets in the past have had the farmers running around in circles, leading them to disaster and stagnation.

This stupid bill intended for spoliation and crucifixion, supported by the then high priests and pharisees, proclaimed, stimulated and justified by the puppets to which I just referred, demanded the condemnation of the saviour, of the just, and his replacement by Barabbas, the thief, the murderer, the bandit, the hypocrite. The same gestures are now being repeated in this House. The high priests and pharisees have won and spilled their venom; they have sown confidence in various puppets and if we want this spoliating legislation before crucifixion, the just should ask his father to forgive them for they know not what they do.

There are so many people, even among farmers, who because they have their heads in the noose because they know of no other solution, are forced to trust their leaders and request such atrocities, like socialism, forsaking their liberty, and losing everything they cherish the most.

And yet we have waged war to save democracy, to save civilization, to save free enterprise, to save true freedom. That was to be the end to depression, misery or insecurity. So long as the earth will bear its fruits each and every individual will be entitled to live in peace, in liberty and in security.

Mr. Speaker, this is why we fought to uphold all those great principles. And we have lost all the battles. This precious Bill C-176 is now robbing us of our most valuable possession—true freedom.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Because we have been faithful to the old parties, we are witnessing the elimination of all our principles through complete control under the disguised reform of Bill C-176.

Following a system of debts, of farm loans and various counter-reforms of financing, this was to save agriculture. Unions, co-operatives, transportation facilities, adequate techniques, agriculture experts, political promises, all this was to save agriculture and to place it on its true pedestal.

In spite of this, farmers are gasping for breath. They cannot even pay the interest on their debts. And yet production is plentiful. They are faced with overproduction. Demand is inadequate, even though many consumers are living on a bare minimum. And even if we have this confounded marketing agency, the consumers' purchasing power will never permit them to buy these products which will remain in the warehouses. Farmers will go bankrupt and their farms will become collective farms. This is what will happen since it is the objective of the magnificent Liberal party, the party of freedom, the party of radiance, the party of sunshine which saved the world.

We are on the verge of bankruptcy and communism, we are on the brink of the worst disaster ever seen in this country. And yet the farmers are opposing this kind of control. It is because they are at the end of their chains. This is why it is said that they are asking themselves for this kind of control or economic suicide. The hon. member for Richelieu stated yesterday that the farmers were asking for it but when you are shipwrecked and about to die, you cling to anything. Farmers have reached this point.

They do not say that it is a system of indebtedness which led our economy to ruin and to bankruptcy. They take care not to say that this disrupts the economy to such a point that the farmers have to bow to the all-powerful state and bring themselves to make their submission. The other businesses will follow suit shortly because they are all in the same situation.

The assets which private citizens have so dearly and so hardly earned in business will be turned over to the financiers. In order to better guarantee farm loans, assets, control, sale, marketing, purchase, the puppets of the system will step in to ensure more effective accounting methods.

The most hard-working, honest and peace-loving people will be under the control of an absolute dictatorship.

They will lose control of their production and their prices, which will be regulated by a board of high-salaried bureaucrats and by a large administration. The farmers will have to be satisfied with leftovers. They will still suffer the loss of their farms, of their assets, which this board will turn into collective farms.

We shall then have socialism, communism and state control, with complete nationalization in a fairly near future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all Canadian producers wish for an economic recovery likely to achieve the purpose of marketing their products on the Canadian market in order to meet the needs of the consumers and to get a fair return for their labour.

They are told to consider problems in a national rather than regional context. Problems in agriculture are always the same, just like in other fields of industry and commerce. People fight to obtain reasonable prices without fleecing the consumer but it always gives opposite results; the consumer gets fleeced more and more.

If consumers are fleeced, Mr. Chairman, it is on account of taxes and the interests with which prices are saddled, that prevent producers from realizing reasonable profits, since prices increased on account of all the above-mentioned.

We are considering amendments to the bill and the bill itself. Primary industry, like all others, has to cope with overproduction and not consumption problems. People do not know what to do with their products.

For Western producers, there is too much grain and too much beef and they embark on other kinds of production like bacon and chicken, but that hampers the Eastern producers' market. In order to get better loan guarantees, we ask for the nationalization of farm products by means of regulations controlling production, sales, price marketing, in short, all the agricultural economy. That causes the Eastern producer to invervene and force the government to establish controlling agencies and penalize Western producers. Shall we find solutions in such proposals or such positions?

Will that prevent prices from going up? Will that enable consumers to consume more? Does that policy recognize that the one who will really control the economy is the one who has the last say, namely the consumer? Do we recognize that production has but one objective, that of meeting peoples' needs? No thought is given to satisfying finance to the detriment of everyone else, everything else.

If agricultural production is to be maintained, as in other sectors, the purchasing power of the consumer must be capable of absorbing even more goods of all sorts. His purchasing power must be supported in proportion with his legitimate needs.

This can be achieved in various ways. First of all, through a compensated discount and through issues of converted credit allowing lower prices. Prices are too high and consumers are therefore prevented from consuming more. This also harms exports.

With regard to the basic industry, agriculture, a discount should be allowed on the purchase of all machinery used in production, on building materials, and products used for transport. This would result in a general lowering of prices, and it would then be easier for the farmers to sell their products. Exports would then also be greatly promoted. Once requirements are met, any surplus should be stored by farmers and their co-operatives for export purposes. The government should use some of it to make gifts, to distribute food for which there is such a great demand in starving countries.

• (4:50 p.m.)

We do not know what to do with production. Yet, two out of four people in the whole world are starving. We do not know what to do. The lands are put to rest. Farmers are paid not to plant. All kinds of formulas are developped to bother farmers, to prevent them from sowing and producing, to force them to quit so as to produce less and not get surplusses because we are too stupid to distribute the surplusses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member may get the unanimous consent to continue his remarks. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for the kindness that they have shown me. I admit that I have a lot to say, but I shall limit my remarks.

To get back to the Board of commodity control and credit to cooperatives, I was saying that this would assist farmers. If they already have all these types of cooperatives and marketing, they do not need other agencies for marketing. What they need, Mr. Speaker, is some guarantee for the consumer of an adequate purchasing power. In this way, farmers would remain the owners of their farms. Unfortunately, the agencies created and dominated by the government will take all the decisions regarding goods to be produced, quantities, quality, categories and classes of products prices to be paid. In this way, we will have an agricultural economy similar to that of the USSR, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. I would point out that all workshops came to the same conclusions during the Congress on Agriculture: they all concluded against state intervention in agriculture most of them restricted themselves to wish for intervention between the provisions of the second and the third paragraph, that is, between average and high intervention.

At the present time, intervention is directed toward level II, but Bill C-176 does away with level II to fall to level IV. The next step will be complete state control of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, if farmers want more security, they will have to give up a certain degree of freedom, with this Bill C-176. If farmers want a guaranteed annual income and investment benefits, they cannot have high benefits. If farmers want state control, they must cater to the needs of the consumers and the taxpayers. If they want a high level of state control, their organizations will have to transfer a considerable amount of their power, initiative and responsibility to the government. That is the purpose of Bill C-176.

It is hard, if not impossible, to reconcile fundamentally opposed choices. In other terms, it is just about impossible to enjoy the privileges of a system without at the same time accepting its drawbacks.

Because of the increasing interdependence of various fields—those, for instance, of commodities, of wheat, of grains, of fodder plants, of cattle—the whole system has to be integrated in a logical way. This is why I feel, Mr. Speaker—I think that hon. members have already understood—that we cannot approve this bill, for we are fighting for freedom. We are fighting for security, true, but also for freedom, and for this reason we will vote against the bill.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Laval is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I listened most religiously to the speech of the créditiste member for Compton, and I would like to ask him whether there is any other means of promoting orderly production. The hon. member said that the problem was one of price and that the price of farm products was too high—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair finds it difficult to allow the hon. member to use the pretence of a question of privilege to ask a question. He could have asked the hon. member for Compton if he would accept a question when he was making his speech but now that the hon. member has concluded his speech and the Chair is about to recognize another hon. member, I do not think that the pretence of a question of privilege could be used to add to what has already been said. I am quite prepared to allow a question with the consent of the House and the hon. member for Compton.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Latulippe: Agreed.

Mr. Roy (Laval): My question is this: are there other alternatives to put some order in production? As a matter of fact, it seems that the producers themselves are calling for this legislation because the prices for agricultural products are too low. They are below the cost of production. I think the hon. member for Compton understands the problem since he objected to new licenses being issued for cable television programs in the city of Compton. He also objected to other furniture manufacturers coming down to the city of Compton to protect his own business. So it seems to me the farmers also have the right to protect their investments—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member may ask a question but he may not make a speech at this time.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the remarks made by the hon. member, I will say to him that we can solve the problem of consumption through consumption. It is consumption which regulates production. So if we want production to work we must organize consumption accordingly. We must have balance between the two.

The hon. member said that I had refused certain things because they would be detrimental to my business. I never said that. I will tell the hon. member that this is a sheer lie.

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled this afternoon to comment on a bill which is also important to the Frontenac riding where 50 per cent of the population are farmers and 50 per cent workers.

I would like to reply to the hon. member for Compton who rightly said that Canadian farmers are now facing a problem. That is why this government is trying to pass a bill that would help all the farmers in Canada. It wants to provide them with a tool which will allour them to get out of their present stagnation. The government does not wish to provide them with a legislation which would serve the interests of some farmers in a particular area or province, but the interests of all the farmers in Canada.

When we hear in our ridings that farmers are in a predicament, it does not—

Mr. Latulippe: Who placed them in that predicament?

Mr. Corriveau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Compton indicates this afternoon that he does not wish to provide the farmers with the tool which they need to overcome their present situation. He takes to task the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) because he is not a farmer; I think that he is probably more of a farmer than many of us.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that I should add that what the government now wants is precisely to put some order in Canadian agriculture, and the only way to do that is to establish a national marketing agency, so that marketing will not remain at the regional or provincial levels. The only way to enable farmers, especially small ones, to keep their farm is to give them the necessary tools to fight those who are trying to achieve agricultural integration.

I do not think that at the present time, farmers can complain about the Canadian Dairy Commission. Indeed, that Commission is operating at the national level and all farmers seem satisfied.

If at the present time, we want to prevent small producers from leaving their farms, all hon. members, especially those of the opposition, must help us to pass Bill C-176. We do not want to create a Santa Claus, as mentioned by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) a while ago, with Bill C-176.

One cannot give right and left. I say to the hon. member for Compton that, if such a thing were possible, I would be the first to go to his place to buy some furniture, and I hope that he would give it to me! When you call on us, you will talk in the same way as you have been doing in the House this afternoon. And you may be sure that, if I visit your riding, I will say the same thing that I have been saying in the House this afternoon, because I am anxious for the farmers of Frontenac County to be able to stay on their farms.

You want us to regress. There was a time when any farmer could go to the village or the city to sell his products, but times have changed and the marketing of agricultural products is no longer the same. Purchasers and consumers no longer want to buy the same products in the same forms, and that is exactly why the government of Canada is presently trying to give the farmers some means of marketing their products.

As the need for marketing services grows between producers and retailers, the role of middleman is filled by brokers, wholesalers and packers. They buy the products from farmers, group them and treat them. That is precisely what we want to give Canadian farmers: the possibility of selling their products, not individually, but in groups, through a system of co-operatives.

A while ago, the hon. member said that co-operatives have not solved any farming problems. On the contrary; to my mind, co-operatives in our areas gave farmers an instrument through which they got rid of their surplus production. The hon. member also said that the farmers do not want Bill C-176. Now, I can say that the Quebec C.F.U. have met us on various occasions. They did so when Bill C-176 was studied in committee, and if the hon. member is honest he will admit that those people want this bill passed, that they are clamoring for it, a complete bill and not part of a bill as the hon. member wants, because such a bill would then apply to a particular area or to a particular product.

It seems to me that at present the C.F.U. and the co-operatives—

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): A man who is about to drown grasps at anything.

Mr. Corriveau: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I urge him to address himself to the Chair, because it is rather difficult for the hon. members to follow an exchange they cannot hear.

Mr. Corriveau: Mr. Speaker, it may be my lack of experience which makes me break the rules. But since I wanted to answer the previous speaker, perhaps I did break the rules and I apologize.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that I have had several opportunities to meet farmers from my riding and they are actually waiting for this famous bill which will allow them to gain recognition throughout Canada, not individually, but collectively and not at the provincial level. We have recently witnessed experiments where the aim was to introduce marketing, to control a certain production at the provincial level, and we have seen what failures have resulted from that. It is precisely through Bill C-176 that we want to solve this problem and try to put some order in the field of agricultural products.

Some are trying perhaps to distract us with products they want excluded from the bill, but I think that should not be done. If we really want to help all producers, all farm products will have to be included in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, such a national marketing agency was created at the federal level. In fact, as I pointed out earlier, it is the Canadian Dairy Commission which looks after the marketing of industrial milk. The Commission has no power whatwoever to regulate production volumes, but it influences production through subsidies aimed at promoting the production of high quality milk and at regulating the quantities required to meet the market demand. It reduces those subsidies when farmers exceed market requirements. Bill C-176 will precisely complement the regulating function of the Canadian Dairy Commission and perhaps that of the Canadian Wheat Board. Mr. Speaker, if we want all farmers to have similar purchasing and selling power, a single marketing is needed and we must pass this Bill C-176 which provides just that.

Once the provincial marketing boards were created, producers discovered a loophole that enabled them to sell their products to another province by going around the provincial marketing board.

To prove the argument I put forward a moment ago, I say that it is impossible to try to create a marketing board only at the provincial level: we must try and create one at the national level. Therefore, the federal government passed a law to solve this problem: the Agricultural Products Marketing Act.

A great many provincial marketing boards used this legislation in the mid sixties. They were well set up in respect of several products, particularly eggs, tobacco and some fruits and vegetables as well as pork.

The hon. Minister has called our attention to the fact that competition is to be had on a different level. Now, individual producers compete for their share of the market and provincial marketing boards are waging a fierce war over eggs and chickens. Now, that is exactly what we want to prevent. The Opposition, seemingly, wants to abandon people to their own fate at the provincial or regional level. This is what we are attempting to control at the national level by enacting legislation applying to all provinces and areas.

May I add that I am pleased to have taken part in the debate on this bill which, in my view, is of vital importance. If we have faith in agriculture and want order to prevail in that field, I fail to see how hon. members in this House can object to a piece of legislation which is really of assistance to all farmers in this land of ours.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I was very glad to hear from my friend, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), that all the farmers in Quebec are not in favour of this type of marketing board or this type of legislation any more than farmers in other parts of the country, because there have been charges that this is just a western fight. Those charges are not true.

In support of the amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) I would like to say that these amendments make the bill less obnoxious. The bill will still not be acceptable while it contains the principle of supply management. The legislation does not specifically point out how more money will be put into the pockets of the farmers. What else are we talking about at the present time? On the other hand, the costs of administration of this type of legislation and paying for production quotas, and so on, which are contained in a bill of this kind will increase production costs.

I am not in any way convinced that spending money on supply management is justified. However, it is necessary to spend money on marketing and research. We do not need this bill in order to do that. A lot has been said in this chamber about producers wanting the bill. I would like to read one of more than 2,000 submissions that I have received from my constituents expressing concern about this legislation. I think I am justified in reading it. It is comparatively mild compared to most of the more than 2,000 submissions that I have received. I might point out to the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) that all the representations were against the bill. It seems that someone is getting at the troops if it is said the farmers of Canada want this bill. I do not think that my constituency is much different from others. This is the letter that I received; it was in no way solicited by myself:

• (5:10 p.m.)

Dear Sir:

Eastside Uniform No. 92 held a meeting April 27 for the purpose of discussing Bill C-176. This meeting passed a resolution stating that they are opposed to government intervention in interprovincial trade and national marketing legislation embodied in Bill C-176. This resolution was passed by a unanimous vote from the well-attended meeting. The members felt that cattle and hogs should be deleted from the legislation, if passed, because of their dependence on interprovincial trade, the western market for cattle and hogs being mainly in eastern Canada.

We are sincerely hoping that you can help defeat this bill which is of so much concern to western agriculture.

Yours sincerely,

It is signed by the secretary of the Eastside Uniform. This is typical of the type of submission I have received.

The hon. member for Essex said, quite correctly, that all the members of the Ontario marketing boards were democratically elected. This is wonderful. But did he remind us that under the terms of Bill C-176, especially as first presented, the members of the national marketing council were not to be elected and would not necessarily be producers; they were to be appointed by Order in Council? It is strange he did not mention this.

In the course of the debate yesterday I heard the bill before us compared with the Wheat Board legislation. But since when was supply management provided for under the Canadian Wheat Board Act? Since when did the Wheat Board tell growers to limit production to a certain number of acres? The Dairy Commissioner has also been referred to on a number of occasions, not by government supporters, it is true. But here we really see a quota system in operation, quotas which have become rigorous and costly. It is true the commission has coped with surplus production and that as a result we are now importing butter. In fact, a lot of the small producers are out of business. I wonder what these small producers have in their thoughts this Christmas season when they hear about supply management. The Dairy Commission has not been very successful in finding markets abroad. It has been extremely successful in limiting production, there is no doubt about that.

The price of hogs has often been mentioned. I am sure the low price is blamed on the lack of supply management. That is a laugh. The blame lies with a government which advised farmers to diversify—to grow less wheat, to plant more barley and to get into hog production. Hog production can be started in a hurry. Overproduction and starvation prices have been the result. I do not think anyone can deny that the type of legislation before us will hasten the decline in the number of farms.

In Europe, and no doubt in many other parts of the world, the number of farms is decreasing at an alarming rate. Has anyone ever stopped to think that perhaps we in this country might do well to increase the numbers of our farmers, or at least to allow good young men to take over some of the present operations? It seems that all legislation nowadays is designed to hasten the decrease in the number of farmers, though in the very near future both Canada and the world could well be faced with serious food shortages. This legislation must be amended or we shall find there is a closed shop in agriculture. You can farm if you have the money, but if you do not have money then no amount of knowledge, ability or experience will enable you to become established.

Supply can be controlled on the basis of legislation of the type before us. Shortages will result and imports will take up the slack; other countries more farsighted than we have been will be happy to supply us at a price. And there is no mention, in this legislation, of dealing with imports in any way. Supply management will be costly. It will control, and thereby reduce, production. It will further reduce the number of farms. I am not yet convinced that it will in any way increase the net income of farmers. It does not attempt to deal with the real difficulty, that of combating ever-increasing production costs, lower returns and the lessening of our ability to compete in world markets.

There is another factor which has not been mentioned so far, though I am sure it will be dealt with, at least by some of my hon. friends. It is this: an increase in the cost of agricultural products will be inevitable, and everyone in this country is a consumer. I think we should be concerned about the effects on consumers of increased costs of foodstuffs.

Speaking of displaced farmers, I think the question should be asked: Where do displaced farmers go when they have lost their farms? No doubt most of them go to already overcrowded cities where, because of circumstances, they probably end up on welfare, thereby aggravating an already serious social problem. Incidentally, yesterday when the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) referred, as reported in Hansard at page 10783, to "a certain clause in the bill which we amended," I think he used the word "we" loosely. He wanted the bill passed in committee as it was; I do not believe he would deny this. He was talking at the time to my hon. friend from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the member who had moved the amendment to which he had referred in the first place, so I think he should have said "you" rather than "we". He was a little confused in his use of personal pronouns.

In conclusion, I believe the record should be set straight. The cattlemen of Canada have made it clear they do not want this type of legislation. Many representatives of other commodity groups have also found the bill unacceptable in the absence of many amendments. It is about time the government listened to these people for a change.

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not enter this debate as an expert on agriculture. Many hon. members who have already spoken from both sides of the House know the industry far better than I do, but I do have a large number of farmers in my constituency—about 25 per cent of my constituency is engaged in agriculture. I have had ample time in which to read the bill and, what is more, I have had time in which to discuss it with the farm groups in my area.

The purpose of my intervention is to place before the House conclusions reached as a result of these talks with people in the constituency of Peterborough. It is very difficult for me, a layman not engaged actively in the agricultural industry, to know where the truth lies. We have heard members of this House claiming to be spokesmen for agricultural groups and presenting the opinions of those they say they represent.

• (5:20 p.m.)

It was abundantly clear from the spectacle in the House that there is no consensus. On one side of the House a member representing a western constituency opposes the bill, saying he is speaking on behalf of the farmers of his area. That speech may be followed by that of a member, also from the west, claiming to support the bill. The same thing applies to Quebec. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) has said that the farmers of Quebec do not support the bill, and then the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) claimed that the Quebec farmers were attempting to foist it on the western farmers. The hon. member for Frontenac in his excellent speech said that Quebec farmers support the bill. It is difficult to know where the truth lies.

Mr. McIntosh: You tell us.

Mr. Faulkner: I intend at least to present the views, as I understand them, of the people I represent. If they disagree with what I say today, they will be at liberty to correct me later.

My second reason for entering this debate is that I was deeply disappointed by some of the contributions made yesterday. I was disappointed for a variety of reasons, because what was said in many cases was far from the truth. In practically all cases those statements were made by members for whom I have some respect. The first contribution I shall deal with is that of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who argued—I am sorry he is not here—that this government was trying to force farmers off the farm. Incidentally, these remarks derived from an article in the Ottawa Citizen of December 24, written by Mr. Paul Grescoe. The bulk of the hon. member's argument derived from that particular article. The brunt of that article is as simple as it is false. It is a clear example of yellow journalism. The article argues that this government and the Department of Agriculture are systematically engaged in a plan of removing the small family farmer from the face of this earth.

Mr. McIntosh: That is what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) says.

Mr. Faulkner: That was the position taken by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Well, was that not the minister's position?

Mr. Faulkner: The article was written on December 24 and the hon. member's contribution was on December 28. I should like to put on record what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said on December 6. The press release was made available to the hon. member for Timiskaming but apparently was not available to Paul Grescoe who is less important in this debate than the hon. member. I am less concerned about him than I am about the hon. member for Timiskaming, for no doubt he will speak again. Perhaps we have seen the final article written by Mr. Grescoe. Let me quote what the minister said.

An hon. Member: Not what Grescoe wrote.

Mr. Faulkner: I will not quote Paul Grescoe; I will not quote what the Citizen said and I will not repeat any rumours being bandied about as to the government's intentions. I want to quote what the Minister of Agriculture said on December 6.

Mr. McIntosh: On what subject, livestock?

Mr. Faulkner: If the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) will listen, he will know exactly what the minister said.

Mr. McIntosh: I know. I heard him say it.

Mr. Faulkner: The minister was talking about the small farms development program. He said:

> What we are proposing is a relatively new approach to tackle a problem that has been plaguing the agricultural industries of the developed nations of the world for several decades—

[Mr. Faulkner.]

> Economic forces have driven thousands of farmers off the land and into the cities and, at the same time, have promoted the evolution of big farms requiring a high level of investment in land, machinery, livestock and buildings.
>
> While there is a need for some farm consolidation to take place, it would be unwise to allow the current trends to result in the domination of agriculture by a handful of giant corporate farms—

Mr. Peters: I agree with that.

Mr. Faulkner: That is what the Minister of Agriculture said. He goes on:

> Unless we develop new and workable programs, there are many farmers in Canada and, indeed, entire rural communities, that will be threatened if this trend should develop further.
> Economic studies and practical experience suggest that the family farm is the best type of farm, and it is in this context that we have developed a comprehensive program to help the small farmers of Canada to develop profitable family farms—

That is the position of this government.

Mr. Chrétien: That is our policy and it is a good policy.

Mr. Faulkner: That is precisely our position, and I have repeated it so that hon. members of this House who might have heard at second-hand the policies of this government would have a chance to be clear in their minds as to the government's policies, in order that they might explain the government's intentions. Hon. members know as well as I do that nothing in the world is easier than sowing suspicion and doubt in the minds of people who do not have access to this chamber.

Mr. McIntosh: Tell us what the minister said about Bill C-176.

Mr. Faulkner: Such people may not be clear as to what the government intends to do.

Mr. Horner: Is the hon. member talking about this bill?

Mr. Faulkner: I now want to turn to other matters. The words I quoted were said on December 6 by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McIntosh: Is the hon. member sure that he does not have remarks about Bill C-259 in his hand?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knight: No, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member entertain a question?

Mr. Faulkner: When I am through, Mr. Speaker, after I have outlined the government's position. That is what the Minister of Agriculture said on December 6. Let me now read from page 3 of the statement to do with the small farms development program as follows:

> When we first announced the outline of this program earlier this year, many people interpreted it as a program to force thousands of farmers off the land, a program to make the rich farmer richer and to force the poor farmer out of business.
> This is not the case.
>
> On the contrary, we intend to help small farmers to develop thriving family farms.
>
> Some misinterpreted our intentions and warned that our program would turn many rural towns and villages into ghost towns.

This is not the case.

On the contrary, as farmers develop profitable farms, rural towns and villages will be rejuvenated.

That, Mr. Speaker, I repeat is the policy of this government. It is the only possible policy that could attract people like myself and the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) as well as others who represent in part or in whole rural constituencies. Anything less would be unacceptable to us, just as it would be unacceptable to spokesmen across the way.

Mr. McIntosh: What did the Minister of Manpower and Immigration say? Get to the point.

Mr. Faulkner: I will cover many points if hon. members will just be patient. I am trying to deal with the points which have been raised. I was also disappointed because of a statement made by an hon. member for whom I have great respect, the hon. member for Meadow Lake. Perhaps his comment was made in the heat of the moment. He indicated, as recorded at page 10800 of Hansard, that somehow this bill was being foisted on western farmers by Quebec farmers.

Mr. McIntosh: That is correct.

Mr. Faulkner: I am prepared to give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. McIntosh: That is correct.

Mr. Faulkner: I see the hon. member for Meadow Lake opposite. I suspect he did not intend to say that. He indicates that my assumption is correct, by nodding his head. He did not intend that at all. I accept that. The hon. member so indicates by nodding his head, although the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek would deny that. He would like to indicate that the hon. member intended it. I want to make clear that a substantial number of farmers from outside Quebec support this bill. I received on May 10 a letter from Mr. Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. In it he said that many farmers of Ontario support Bill C-176.

Mr. McIntosh: Tell us what the Minister of Agriculture of Quebec said.

Mr. Faulkner: I do not think it is necessary to do that. Hon. members from the west have quoted editorials from the Western Producer which support Bill C-176. I wish to read what Gordon Hill, president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said about Bill C-176:

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture, representing approximately 75,000 farmers—

That is not an inconsiderable number.

—continues to strongly support Bill C-176.

We believe the bill will provide farmers with means to extend existing provincial marketing plans to the national level. We see this as necessary for farmers to improve their incomes.

We appreciate the firm stand taken by the Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable H. A. Olson. We find him to be a man of high calibre and integrity—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Faulkner: This is not something from a loyal backbencher; I am simply quoting the remarks of Mr. Gordon Hill. It becomes progressively more interesting as we get into it. I repeat these words:

We find him to be a man of high calibre and integrity, working hard to improve the economic opportunities for Canadian farmers. We will continue to inform our members and member organizations of his dedication on our behalf.

We trust you will continue to support the Minister of Agriculture in his efforts to have Bill C-176 passed into law as soon as possible.

The point I am trying to make is a simple and straightforward one. It has nothing to do with Quebec farmers foisting something on us. I am glad the hon. member for Meadow Lake indicated by a nod that that is not what he intended to suggest. Ontario farmers are behind this bill as well.

There was a third contribution which, thank God, was the briefest contribution yesterday. It came from my friend and neighbour in Ontario, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). I would suggest that he has not read this bill very carefully, because when one reads his remarks one is not very impressed with his grasp of the bill. He disappointed me because he perpetuated the old myth and red herring which we on this side of the House have been trying vainly and laboriously to eradicate from the minds of the farmers, that is, that somehow the marketing plan in this bill will be foisted on them by the government. No hon. member, no matter how bitterly he opposes this bill, can honestly say that that is what is in this bill. There are many sections which allow producers to have a say in this scheme.

I think it was a little less than honest for the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings—granted that he had not read the bill and therefore was confused, but assuming he knew what he was saying—to have said what he said. It was simply to misinform the farmers on important points which we have attempted for some time to make clear. These are some of the things which disappointed me. One reason I wanted to rise today was to try in some small measure to clarify the record.

Today we had an interesting speech, as we usually do, from the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) but, frankly, what he said was that marketing boards were not the final panacea for agriculture. I do not know whether that came as a surprise to his colleagues or whether some of his colleagues feel that some of us on this side of the House think that with Bill C-176 the problems of agriculture are finished. Lest anyone holds that view, let us clear up the matter immediately. No one on this side of the House has said that Bill C-176 is the panacea for agriculture. Anyone who argues that does not know what he is talking about. However, there is a world of difference between recognizing the limitations of this bill and going into a general indictment of marketing in general.

This is where I part company with the hon. member for Lambton-Kent. I think he pointed out some of the defects in marketing boards. Everyone recognizes that some are more effective than others and work more effectively for producers than others. That is a truism, but it does not dismiss the desirability of having marketing boards. I think the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) excellently pointed out some of the strengths of marketing boards. It is on that point that we on this side of the House rest our case. We can provide the legislation, and it is up to the farmers to make it work. The dairy producers and the industrial milk shippers in my area, if the question were put to them concerning whether or not they wanted to get rid of the present system as opposed to what they had before I am sure would vote favourably for the present system.

Now I want to come to the part of the bill which is under discussion. I have supported this bill for a long time. I supported the principle of national marketing boards through three general elections. In the general election of 1968—not that this would interest hon. members opposite—it was the single, most important part of my, if you like, agricultural platform because I have believed for some time this concept is relevant to the problems faced by farmers today. I want to indicate that I am not alone in the constituency of Peterborough in support of this bill. I wish to place on record a letter from the Peterborough County Federation of Agriculture. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent knows some of these people. I am glad to see he is going to stay, because he will want to listen to this since it may influence his rather harsh criticism of this legislation. This is not what the backbenchers say; it is what the farmers of Peterborough say.

An hon. Member: When did you dictate this?

Mr. Faulkner: This is dated May 31, 1971. It reads:

Peterborough County Federation of Agriculture wish me to tell you—

That is me, and through me to you.

—they support Bill C-176 in principle and hope you may pass this enabling marketing legislation as quickly as possible.

The Peterborough County Beef Improvement Association as you know passed the same resolution at their annual meeting earlier this year.

Yours truly,

Clifford H. Johnston.

I think it has required a great deal of effort for those of us on this side who in principle support this bill and who have received resolutions of support for it to sit here and wait patiently for this House to come to some agreement. Why have we waited? We on this side have members who represent western constituencies and these members have told me—this is not the nonsense from the other side of the House—that the western farmers have fears and doubts about the bill. These members have told me that they need time to explain it to the farmers.

We on this side of the House, being sensitive on the question of national unity, not being anxious to press too hard for some of the principles of the bill which we believe are good, and not wanting to jeopardize the balance of opinion across this country, wished to allow sufficient time for the bill to be understood. However, even the most patient backbenchers begin to run out of patience, and I believe the best thing for the farmers in the west and in the east is to get this bill through, dispose of the bogeys foisted on the farmers in the east and in the west and let them see that the bill is no threat to their industry and, in fact, in future will provide them with an opportunity that is presently denied them. That is why I think the bill should be passed quickly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy that has been extended to me. There is one area in which I want to register my disagreement and disappointment. It is not with this House but with the provincial ministers of agriculture. I believe it was a somewhat shortsighted act to request the elimination of the supply management feature.

• (5:40 p.m.)

If the occasion arises where a motion is put and unanimous consent is required to move such an amendment to this Bill, I am prepared to admit it because it is the consensus of the ministers of agriculture and I respect their position. That does not mean that I have to accept the substance. I think it is a shortsighted move. The principle of supply management is not being foisted on the farmers, and if it were I would have grave reservations about putting it in because clearly some producer groups have doubts about it. It was never intended that this should be the case. But there are groups, and there will be more groups in the future, which will want to exercise that option. What we are doing is putting one more step, one more obstacle, to the accomplishment of that goal by requiring commodity groups to come before Parliament to receive approval. I believe it is the consensus of the farmers in my area to have that particular section included, permissive and enabling as it is, so that they could take advantage of it after consensus was reached among the producer groups.

I want to conclude on the note that I regret deeply the decision to take out this section and make it necessary for farmers to come back to Parliament to utilize supply management, because I believe it is the heart of this legislation and it will become even more important to certain producer groups in the future. I think they should have access to it made as easy as possible. I appreciate the courtesy of the House in allowing me extended time and I urge hon. members to support the speedy passage of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair had a previous request from the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). I think it would be preferable if the House gave the hon. member consent to ask his question, if the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) accepts it.

Mr. Knight: I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was charmed by the fact that at least one member of the House still has some sympathy for him. The hon. member suggested that the Minister of Agriculture has a program for the development of small farms. Would he be so kind as to inform me what the definition of a small farm might be, so I can go back to Assiniboia and tell the small farmers there whether or not they will be included in the legislation?

Mr. Faulkner: I am sure the minister will be pleased to provide that definition.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): My question is related to the previous one. The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) read extracts from the press release of the minister of December 6 in which he said, if I recall his words correctly, that the government had a comprehensive program to aid small family farms, or something to that effect. Would the hon. gentleman mind giving us the details, because so far they have been hidden? Would he be prepared to tell the House what the details of this comprehensive program are?

Mr. Faulkner: If I thought that that was directly relevant to my remarks, I would be pleased to do so; but in view of the fact that it is not, and I am bound by the rule of relevancy, I cannot. But I will be pleased to explain it to the hon. gentleman privately, as well as to the other hon. member who raised the same question.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Surely the hon. gentleman cannot have it both ways. He cannot quote from the speech of the minister, hold that up as a reason for support of the bill and then refuse to answer questions about the very quotation he gave from the minister's remarks. He is obviously unable to answer it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Hon. gentlemen may be permitted to ask questions, but I do not think we can allow debate to arise following the comments made by the hon. member for Peterborough. There are other members who wish to take part in the debate. The Chair is ready to recognize the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) and I do not think we should spend too much time on questions unless the House consents to it.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It is the answers that we are worried about, not the questions.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, coming basically from a rural and agricultural section of Canada, I feel it is my duty to take part in the debate on Bill C-176 at this time. I was very interested and listened attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) and I wonder whether some of the frustrations which I noted in his comments do not stem from the fact that when he referred to the confusing speeches made by members of various parties he was really frustrated over the results of the recent elections which indicated to me that Canadian farmers in particular are unhappy with the agricultural policies of this government. When you look at the record of the votes in Peterborough in the last provincial election you find that the Liberal party had only 9 per cent of them. So I can readily understand the hon. member's frustration.

Bill C-176 had its debut originally in the twenty-seventh Parliament, at which time it was referred to as Bill C-197. The fact that we are still debating the proposed legislation two years later is a clear indication to me that the bill is poorly drafted, too controversial, unclear in its direction and too all-encompassing. A further indication of this is the fact that hundreds of letters and dozens of briefs and protests from every area of Canada have been directed to the Standing Committee on Agriculture with suggestions for a large number of amendments.

I commend the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) for introducing the three amendments which were grouped together and which we are debating today, namely, Nos. 1, 5 and 22, which I think are of basic importance. These three amendments do in part try to clear up some of the disagreeable features of this bill of which we and the farmers are now well aware, and thanks to the witnesses whom we have heard and to the research and industry of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, members of the opposition have been able to look very carefully at this bill in view of the experience we have had with the haphazard agricultural legislation produced by this government heretofore.

Let us consider the Dairy Commission program, the quota system and the fact that we are now faced with importing millions of pounds of butter in the next few months to meet our domestic needs. Let us consider the Lift program which was in fact a quota or production control policy which cost the western wheat growers half a billion dollars in loss of production income, a loss that can never be made up. Let us consider the grain stabilization bill, Bill C-244, which turned out to be the worst fiasco in farm legislation yet produced by this government.

The beef and cattle producers of this country have always been the most independent and successful segment of our Canadian agricultural industry and have always refrained from asking for any kind of bureaucratic or government interference in their industry. Little wonder that the Canadian Cattlemen's Association is deeply concerned about the bill and the effects it might have on their industry if it is passed in the present form without some reasonable amendments.

In listening to the debate on this legislation so far, I have found that members on the government side have been carried away by some success on the part of some of the provincial marketing boards, but at the same time have overlooked the many failures of some boards. They seem to think that a national marketing board would work better. What is needed is better government policies in marketing all our exportable products including those from agriculture, rather than a regressive or production control policy.

Let us remember the International Wheat Agreement which was a reasonable, global, orderly marketing policy for our western Canadian wheat. But the Liberal government was an active party in bringing about the demise of this effective agreement in Geneva in 1967. However, in Bill C-176 we are not speaking about global marketing but about so-called orderly marketing within our Canadian boundaries, cluttered up with production controls even to the extent of interprovincial barriers being set up. We have had examples of this with Fedco and the infamous chicken and egg war.

Early in this debate the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) set out a number of constitutional problems that must be avoided if we are to refrain from balkanizing our country. The Manitoba producers kept their sights clear on the same issue and on the pitfalls in this bill. Thank goodness they had the good sense to develop a test case which received a history-making ruling from the Supreme Court of Canada earlier this year, I believe on June 28. I would recommend the various contributions by legal counsel given before the court in that case as valuable reading for members of the Liberal party.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The Progressive Conservative party believes in policies which encourage aggressive, imaginative marketing. Therefore, we support the establishment of marketing boards which give all producers—and all I repeat, all producers—fair access to markets. However, we do not think that Bill C-176 in its present form will do this. We believe the law should set the environment for the marketing of farm products and that such legal framework is acceptable and is the guarantor of the national interest. However, this bill would take the legal framework for the marketing of farm products out of the public arena, beyond the discipline of the BNA Act and the judiciary, and place the rule-making in the hands of bureaucrats and vested interests who essentially will be defensive regarding their own interests in the industry. In other words, this bill in its present form is constructed in such a way that it can lead to severe balkanization.

The amendments we are dealing with, Mr. Speaker, are concerned specifically with the cattle industry. I would point out that the cattle industry makes up about 25 per cent of the total agricultural industry of Canada. Here are some of the pertinent questions that cattlemen pose:

1. Where in the bill is there an inescapable assurance that a nationwide vote open to all producers of a commodity must, not may, be held before the establishment of a national marketing agency for that commodity?

2. Where in the bill are there clearly stated rights of appeal to persons who believe themselves to be aggrieved by the bill?

3. How will the farm products marketing council become "satisfied" that a majority of producers is in favour of the establishment of an agency?

4. How will Bill C-176, if passed, solve the chicken and egg war? Or how will it solve similar incidents in the future?

5. How will provincial quotas for beef be determined if an agency is established?

6. How will Bill C-176 effect improved beef prices if an agency is established?

7. How will Bill C-176 improve prices if importations of like products from the United States and low cost countries are not controlled?

8. What economic research has been conducted to establish that supply management or any of the other provisions of Bill C-176 will prove of benefit to the beef industry?

9. What will the agency and the administrative structure necessary to carry out the intent of Bill C-176 in the beef industry cost, and who will bear that cost?

10. If an agency is established for beef, will interprovincial movement be subject to controls? If not, how will the bill operate?

[Mr. Southam.]

11. Does an Ontario beef producer have a greater right to the Ontario market for beef than a beef producer in Alberta?

12. Why attempt passage of the bill when a Supreme Court ruling on the constitutionality of restrictions to interprovincial movement is imminent?

That question is not pertinent now because I have just referred to the Supreme Court ruling that was handed down.

13. What problems in the beef production and marketing sphere exist now, or are likely to exist in the foreseeable future, that may be resolved by the application of provisions in Bill C-176?

14. Did beef producers seek this bill, and do they now want it applied to their industry? Do individuals or groups have a right to oppose or resist the imposition of legislation upon them when this legislation cannot be demonstrated to be essential to the public interest? Does the government have the right to impose legislation under these conditions?

15. What are the full definitions of "enabling legislation" and of "permissive legislation"?

16. Since the members of the council are deemed to be public servants, are they required to carry out the instructions of the minister or to function in a manner consistent with government policy?

These are very pertinent questions and I believe that similar ones could be asked by other sectors of the agricultural industry. Yesterday I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton when he criticized my colleague, the hon. member for Crowfoot, who introduced these amendments. I listened when he was imputing motives and I was disgusted that a man of the cloth, a man of his position, taking a seat in this House, would make statements that were so far from the truth.

I hold in my hand the front page of a newspaper which in effect consolidates three newspapers, the Carnduff Gazette Post-News, the issue of May 20, 1971, which has a headline reading, "Stockmen strongly opposed to proposed C-176 marketing bill." I wish to quote from it in order to indicate that it is not just one or two big operators in the stock industry who are opposed to this bill. The report in the newspaper reads in part:

> Stock growers, 200 strong from southeastern Saskatchewan, at Alameda on Friday evening, severely criticized the federal government for its efforts to include beef in particular—and pork—in the controversial marketing bill, C-176.
> Twenty-nine points were represented at the meeting: Alameda, Arcola, Antler, Alida, Bienfait, Bellegarde, Big Beaver, Brownlee, Carnduff, Carlyle, Carievale, Estevan, Frobisher, Gainsborough, Glen Ewen, Kisbey, Kennedy, Lampman, Manor, Maryfield, Maple Creek, Northgate, North Portal, Portal, N.D., Oxbow, Redvers, Steelman, Weyburn, Willmar, and Yellow Grass.

This covers a wide area of southeastern Saskatchewan in which stockmen, not big ranchers but people who produce top calibre beef, have registered their strong opposition to this bill. I quote this passage for the benefit of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton because obviously he did not know what he was talking about yesterday. I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association presented a brief to the Standing Committee on Agriculture in connection with this bill earlier this year. I would like to quote a couple of paragraphs from it as follows:

> The Palliser Wheat Growers are deeply concerned with any farm produce legislation in Canada that attempts to assist the producer by abdicating the role of decision making to non-producers—particularly as it relates to the production and marketing of his product.
>
> Whereas we reject the principle of autocratic type marketing legislation in its entirety, we will not deal with specifics within Bill C-176, but instead we wish to spell out the trend of events that may be expected to follow if the bill is enacted.
> We, the wheat growers, see Bill C-176, in its present wide encompassing form, as a monolithic monster, completely devoid of reality, and totally unnecessary in the prairie region, where we as producers of agricultural products must export to survive.

I could continue, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, the House will now adjourn until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 30, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McGRATH—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OUTSIDE HOUSE CONCERNING MEASURES TO PREVENT HIJACKING

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Tuesday and Wednesday of this week during question period, I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) concerning his administration of that section of the Department of Transport which is responsible for protecting the safety of the travelling public, more particularly of those Canadians who travel by air. My questions were put because of information I had received which confirmed my suspicion that anti-hijack detection devices had not been installed at Canadian airports. The information directly contravened a statement made by the Minister of Transport in this House on November 18. When I asked the Minister of Transport in this House on Tuesday and Wednesday to specify the action he had taken to protect the Canadian public in this regard, he replied on both occasions that the matter could not be dealt with in public.

Now, in a story printed in a Montreal newspaper this morning, the Montreal Gazette, the minister is quoted as telling reporters outside the House yesterday that "an additional 20 or 25 devices have arrived or are on the way". This is another example of the increasing tendency of ministers to refuse to answer legitimate questions in this House, but to make statements outside this House on the same day giving the information that was requested in the House.

If Your Honour confirms this breach of privilege I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

> That the matter of this question of privilege in relation to the proper interpretation and to the continuing force and effect of Standing Order 5 be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

My reason for this motion is that under the roster system I am denied the right to examine the minister, who is not in the House today, on information he gave outside the House yesterday which was denied in the House and then made public.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has given the Chair due notice of his intention to raise his stated question of privilege and, in the time available to me, very careful consideration has been given to that matter.

It does seem that the hon. gentleman's question may be broken into two parts. In the first instance, the hon. member refers to statements or utterances made outside the chamber. As the Chair stated on December 23 last, a prima facie question of privilege cannot be founded on a statement outside this chamber. I can find nothing in any authority or practice to support the proposition made in this regard by the hon. member.

Second, the hon. member suggests that when a reply to a question is refused in the House for security reasons it becomes a question of privilege when the same information is given the same day outside the House. That is a very interesting proposition, but I do not think it is founded on any precedent or practice of this House. May I refer the hon. gentleman to sections (3) and (4) of citation 181 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which read as follows:

> (3) A minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer in out of order, no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal. A member can put a question, but has no right to insist upon an answer.
> (4) An answer to a question cannot be insisted upon, if the answer be refused by the minister on the ground of the public interest; nor can the question be replaced on the notice paper. The refusal of a minister to answer on this ground cannot be raised as a matter of privilege.

The hon. gentleman may have a legitimate grievance, but that is not a matter for the consideration of the Chair. It seems to me that such a grievance can be raised in a number of proceedings or by a number of avenues available to hon. members. In particular, it can be raised during supply proceedings, where the House itself will be in a position to deal with the grievance.

I do not think that privilege proceedings should be used to supplant other recognized and more relevant procedures for the resolving of grievances.

MR. KORCHINSKI—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT PRIOR TO PARLIAMENTARY APPROVAL

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a question of privilege. The question of privilege which I raise is one of the greatest importance to all members of this House. It involves the contempt of Parliament displayed by the government in respect of the government's action as revealed in the documents published in the Globe and Mail of today's date and which show that the government has taken and proposes to take action with respect to northern development and the native peoples of the north without securing legislative authorization.

I will therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

> That the subject matter of this question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie has also given the Chair the notice required under the provisions of Standing Order 17(2). After giving the matter serious thought, I have to advise the hon. member that I would find it extremely difficult to agree that we have before us a prima facie case of privilege. Successive Speakers have been required to give a definition of parliamentary privilege. In most instances, the Chair has alluded to the definition given by Sir Erskine May which is to be found at page 42 of the 17th Edition of this author's work on parliamentary practice. The learned author states:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

Parliamentary privilege is also defined as:

The sum of the fundamental rights of the House and of its individual Members as against the prerogatives of the Crown, the authority of the ordinary courts of law—

The question is whether in the circumstances described there has been a prima facie breach of the rights and immunities of members of the House of Commons. I suggest to the hon. member and to the House that essentially the hon. member for Mackenzie is inviting the Chair to determine a question of law in respect of certain administrative actions by the government. I am unable to see how in such circumstances the Chair can be called upon to consider the matter on the basis of breach of parliamentary privilege.

I might add that even if there had been, in the opinion of the Chair, a prima facie case of privilege the hon. member's motion could not have been accepted procedurally because it proposes simply that, and I quote:

the subject matter of this question of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

This, in itself, is an indication that what the hon. member wishes to have considered is the government's administrative actions which could quite properly be considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, while a matter of parliamentary privilege ought to be considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

For these reasons, the Chair is not free to put to the House the motion proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION ORDER ON REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-176

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that the representatives of the several parties have reached an agreement with regard to the proposed allotment of time for the disposition of the report stage and the third reading stage of Bill C-176. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the making of the motion has been preceded by consultations with the parties opposite. It is proposed that when motion No. 1 is before the House again, the government will be moving an amendment to that motion which has been the subject of discussions between the official opposition and the government, and that when the House is considering Motion No. 27 there will also be an amendment submitted by the government which has been the subject of discussions with the New Democratic Party. Also, within this motion, the rights of the Social Credit Party with regard to their wish to participate at certain stages of the debate have been fully protected.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 75A, I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson):

That when the consideration of Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, is resumed in this day's sitting, the House shall first consider motions (1), (5) and (22), including any amendment to be proposed and, then, to any amendment that may be proposed to clause (18) of the bill, and next to motion numbered 27, and any amendment that may be proposed thereto.

At the expiry of 90 minutes, if required, for the discussion of each of the above item or items stated in paragraph (1) of this motion, every question necessary to conclude consideration of the specified item or items shall be forthwith put and any recorded division, if demanded, shall be deferred.

If the items listed in paragraph (1) are concluded prior to 10 p.m., the House will revert to motion numbered (2) and continue to consider other motions in the sequence listed on the Notice Paper.

That during the further consideration of the report stage of the said bill, no member may speak longer than 10 minutes at any time.

At 10:00 p.m., Mr. Speaker shall put forthwith and successively every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the said bill.

After the disposal of the report stage of the said bill, the House shall proceed forthwith to the consideration of the third reading and passage stage of the said bill, and shall continue to sit until proceedings thereon have been concluded, and during such proceedings no member may speak longer than 20 minutes at any time.

Mr. Speaker, I forgot to mention one point, that is that the Minister of Agriculture will be seeking to make an amendment to clause 18 of the bill, the subject of which is well known to members of the House.

Mr. McIntosh: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It arises out of Standing Order 75A which reads in part:

—there is agreement among the representatives of all parties . . . setting forth the terms of such agreed allocation; and every such motion shall be decided forthwith, without debate or amendment.

My question of privilege is to obtain from you, Mr. Speaker, a statement on the position of an independent private member in this House. Has he any status at all under this part of our Standing Order?

Mr. Speaker: The question asked by the hon. member is somewhat hypothetical. I think that if it were asked by the Speaker, perhaps it might have practical implications. If I must rule on the question asked by the hon. member, which I consider to be hypothetical at this point, my understanding is that the Standing Order has been drafted in such a way that the parties recognized as parties in the House would be the ones which would have to be recognized for the purpose of interpreting Standing Order 75A, B and C. I am not sure whether that is the way the Standing Order should have been drafted, but certainly it is drafted in such a way that the Chair must take into account what must be considered by the House, in accordance with the practice and precedents, to be the recognized parties of the House. I appreciate the difficulty where one, three, five or ten independent members of this House are opposed to the motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council. In a way their rights would not be given the same recognition as those of other hon. members who are represented by a representative of the parties as provided by the Standing Order. My answer to the hon. member would be that I have to deal only with the representatives of existing parties as indicated in the Standing Order.

Mr. McIntosh: I now rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do so for the purpose of moving what I call a privileged motion. I move under Standing Order 24, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey):

That Orders of the Day be now read.

I would like to add, "in particular order No. 90", but if that part of my motion takes away from the first part, I will omit it.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. After a brief consideration and consultation, my interpretation and understanding of Standing Order 75 are that it directs that the motion be put forthwith. I would think that the motion proposed by the hon. member, being a superseding motion, would have to be moved while there is a matter under debate by the House, and could not be put by way of a point of order. The hon. member himself indicated that he rose on a point of order. According to the precedents, he cannot move a superseding motion on a point of order. Perhaps later on the hon. member might have some other remedy, but at this point I doubt that his motion is acceptable procedurally.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, while I have been an interested spectator for the last few minutes, I have been wondering about one aspect of the motion which the President of the Privy Council has put. I know it is not debatable, and not amendable. I accept that. However, the hon. gentleman did make a very short statement at the beginning, prior to putting the motion, and I am simply seeking guidance with respect to it. I intend to respond very briefly to that statement, and while we are feeling our way I will put it in the hands of the Chair to cogitate whether I am entitled to do so.

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members want to allow the hon. member for Peace River to make a statement, there is certainly no objection on the part of the Chair. But again the Standing Order is clear. The Chair must be guided by Standing Order 75A which requires that the motion be put without debate. If hon. members allow the hon. member for Peace River to make a statement, I just wonder how the Chair could legitimately and equitably prevent other hon. members from making statements. However, I am in the hands of the House. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed that the hon. member for Peace River has the unanimous consent of the House to make a statement in response to the statement made by the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Baldwin: My comments simply refer to the addenda which the President of the Privy Council produced in regard to the amendment which the Minister of Agriculture was going to move. This was quite correct. I simply want to say that it is our distinct understanding that the minister will attempt to secure, by all means possible, consent to putting before the House the amendment, of which we are aware, but that if he is unsuccessful, if the practices and procedures of the House do not permit this amendment by the Minister of Agriculture, and again I say that we are aware of the contents of it, there will be an undertaking given that at the earliest possible opportunity the government will introduce amending legislation to bring this about. Because we are talking about agreements on which this motion is founded, I did think I was entitled to make this very brief comment.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, first may I confirm the statement of the President of the Privy Council that this motion is before us because the representatives of all of the parties have agreed to it. I might add that the consultations, although very lengthy, have been amicable, and indeed now appear to have been fruitful.

However, on closely reading the text of the motion—and perhaps I should raise this as a point of order—I think there is one point on which we had agreed which has not been included. We agreed not only that the debate on motion No. 1 on clause 18 and on motion No. 27 would be limited to 90 minutes, but that if those were cleared and we had remaining time between that time and ten o'clock, that any other motion would be considered for only 90 minutes. Thus, the whole afternoon or evening would not be spent on one of those motions. It is true that the minister showed us the statement at about five minutes to two, but at that time I did not notice the omission. I believe he will agree with me that our agreement would be reflected more accurately if at the end of paragraph 3 these words were added:

—provided that the consideration of any such motion shall not exceed 90 minutes.

While the minister is noting that, I may say that I thought we also understood that we would use Private Members' hour for this purpose today but maybe it was not intended to put that in the actual agreement but rather to deal with it when five o'clock comes. However, I do think that the point I made a moment ago should be included in the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): I just want to confirm, regarding negotiations which have been held this morning, that we have given our agreement concerning the motion introduced a few minutes ago.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps by consent we might allow the hon. member for Joliette to speak. This, of course, has to be done by consent because I assume we are now hearing statements under the terms of the Standing Order which would allow representatives of parties in opposition to speak in response to a ministerial statement. By consent the hon. member for Joliette; is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interfere with agreements reached this morning by the various parties. However, it was said that all hon. members have been informed by the House leaders of amendments to be introduced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). But I must say that I am not aware of these amendments for some reason, and if unanimous consent was requested, I should like to know about the amendments before letting the House take an unanimous decision concerning this bill.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The point made by the hon. member is well taken, of course, and we will meet that very real problem whenever that kind of amendment is proposed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). If at any point unanimous consent is required, of course, any hon. member can object, including the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. MacEachen: May I say in reply to the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that it is quite agreeable that this change be incorporated at the end of paragraph 3 of the motion as indicated by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The motion, then, would read as follows:

That when the consideration of Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council, is resumed in this day's sitting, the House shall first consider motions (1), (5) and (22), including any amendment to be proposed and, then, to any amendment that may be proposed to clause (18) of the bill, and next to motion numbered (27), and any amendment that may be proposed thereto.

At the expiry of 90 minutes, if required, for the discussion of each of the above item or items stated in paragraph (1) of this motion, every question necessary to conclude consideration of the specified item or items shall be forthwith put and any recorded division, if demanded, shall be deferred.

If the items listed in paragraph 1 above are concluded prior to ten o'clock p.m., the House will revert to motion numbered (2) and continue to consider other motions in the sequence listed on the notice paper, provided that the consideration of any such motion shall not exceed 90 minutes.

That during the further consideration of the report stage of the said bill, no member may speak longer than ten minutes at any time;

At ten o'clock p.m., Mr. Speaker shall put forthwith and successively every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the said bill.

After the disposal of the report stage of the said bill, the House shall proceed forthwith to the consideration of the third reading and passage stage of the said bill, and shall continue to sit until proceedings thereon have been concluded, and during such proceedings no member may speak longer than 20 minutes at any time.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—CHANGE IN HOLDBACK POLICY ON MANUFACTURING MILK AND CREAM

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House of an important change in the Canadian Dairy Commission's holdback policy on payment to shippers of manufacturing milk and cream. This change will further improve the returns of dairy producers.

There has been some question of the necessity of a higher rate of holdback on over-quota deliveries in a situation where butter production this year will be slightly below Canadian requirements.

The Dairy Commission has consulted closely with dairy producer organizations on this. The consensus is that if the supply management system on which the dairy industry is embarked, and which has been of considerable benefit to producers this year, is to work effectively there has to be some significant charge to discourage excess production when appropriate. However, as a special measure in the circumstances of this year the payment programs will be adjusted to allow producers a margin of deliveries in excess of their quotas before the over-quota rate of holdback is applied.

In provinces under market quotas the holdback is made from market payments to producers, based on their market quotas. This applies at present to Ontario, Quebec and, since December 1, to Prince Edward Island. In these, the adjustment will permit a producer to exceed his market quota ten per cent before the over-quota holdback is applied.

Mr. Horner: This is just election bait.

Mr. Olson: Elsewhere, the holdback is made from subsidy payments, based on each producer's subsidy quota.

If all provinces were under market quotas, the national total of the subsidy quotas would be about 70 per cent of the total market quotas. For this reason, there will be a larger allowance for over-quota deliveries where the holdback is made from subsidy payments. The adjustment will permit producers in provinces not under market sharing quotas to exceed their subsidy quotas by 30 per cent before the over-quota rate of holdback is applied.

Mr. Horner: Do not forget the sheep men. They want their subsidy back.

Mr. Olson: This arrangement will apply both to manufacturing milk and cream.

I wish to stress that this is a special arrangement for the dairy year ending next March 31; dairy producers should not interpret this as indicating that a similar arrangement will apply next year.

Mr. Horner: This announcement is being made just for the election. The minister should give the sheep men back their subsidy. They will not vote for the government unless he does.

An hon. Member: This is nothing but election blackmail.

Mr. Horner: Yes. This is election blackmail.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I will not go into the question of whether or not the supply-management concept should be applied to agricultural products. It appears that that concept, as operated under the Dairy Commission and under this minister, has not worked out too well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: It has been an obvious failure.

Mr. McKinley: The statement the minister made today amplifies the statement that was made about three weeks ago in this regard. I submit that if there is to be a supply-management operation in this country, it ought to come under the Canadian Dairy Commission and, as well, under the control of the Canadian dairy producer. It seems to me that much more work must be done in finding markets and the Canadian Dairy Commission ought to explore export markets for dairy products produced in this country.

I know that a great deal of money was deducted from the payments for surplus milk in order that producers could gain the markets that we now enjoy. We acquired those markets by using the producers' own money. At the same time, however, we told them to cut back production. Now we have the markets but we do not have enough product to fill the demand in those markets, and consequently the dairy producers of this country have been losing millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. Horner: Let no more small farmers be driven out of business before the election.

Mr. McKinley: May I also say that our Canadian cheese is selling well. Nevertheless, for a considerable period of time the cheese factories have encountered great difficulties. I know that factories in Ontario, and factories in other provinces as well, are having a difficult time filling the demand for cheese. This has meant losses to farmers. They could have earned extra money from exports. These difficulties, of course, have affected the smaller cheese factories which could not keep up their levels of production.

Mr. Horner: The government wants to take them out of production.

Mr. McKinley: I see that you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker. I am not supposed to speak for a longer time than the minister spoke. Sometimes I think he makes his statements brief so that we must be brief. I suppose he has done so to protect himself, ever since Your Honour's ruling on this matter.

The milk processing plants have been facing difficult times because of the shortage of milk. The markets are there for us, but now we are short of butter. We are away behind in our efforts to meet the demand. I say to the minister that his announcement allowing producers to raise their production levels before over-quota holdbacks are applied has come too late. He should not have waited until an election is almost upon us before making it. That is not the way the people of his department should operate. They should operate in a way that will be of benefit to all producers and make sure that farmers in Canada get as much money for their agricultural products as possible at all times.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we would have appreciated it if, in the statement, there had been an indication of how great the reduction in the holdback is to be. It is generally well known, I presume, that the holdback can run as high as $2.40 per hundred pounds for over-quota deliveries. This has been a serious factor in the expansion of the manufacturing milk industry. Of course, the minister's statement raises two questions. Has the holdback been too high, and is the purpose of the holdback to restrict the amount of manufacturing milk produced? This restriction has been made effective in two ways. First, that has been done by imposing a holdback of $2.40 per hundredweight and, secondly, by eliminating a large number of very small farmers in the country. That is how the supply-management concept has been operated. It is the type of management that will become available under the piece of legislation that we will be discussing later today. All this raises a problem. We must ask whether there is a close enough relationship between levels of production and the needs of the market on a national basis.

For instance, a shortage of milk has developed in Canada. So great is that shortage that we are paying to the United States at present 64.5 cents per pound, plus transport charges, for 10 million pounds of butter. There has not been such a shortage in Canada for many, many years. The shortage is evidence, of course, of the fact that the supply-management program has worked. However, it has worked at considerable cost to the Canadian dairy industry, both through the loss of small farmers and the $2.40 holdback which has been imposed. This has meant that in the area you represent, Mr. Speaker, and in other areas of eastern Canada, a number of cheese factories have had to close as well as other outlets that handle the surplus production of the Canadian dairy industry.

I suggest that the Dairy Commission should assess the present domestic and export markets for dairy products and assess, as well, what the long term needs of both domestic and export markets will be. It seems to me that, as a Christmas present to the country, the minister could, through the Dairy Commission, have allowed a number of young farmers, under suitable conditions and regulations, to make their contribution to the market at this time. It seems to me that the minister had an opportunity for allowing the small farmers to get back into the business. I am pleased to say that the Canadian Dairy Commission has given consideration to this aspect of the business in a pronouncement that it made recently. I suggest that the farmers are waiting to see how much the reduction holdback will be. We, too, will await that announcement with considerable interest.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment very briefly on the statement the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has just made to the House.

We are advised that quotas will be changed by 10 per cent during the winter months, that is, during the season when production is at its lowest point. Still, I am pleased that some producers will benefit from it, although it will certainly not be the greatest number. The minister indicates it will be. He has, I am sure, data that I do not have at the present time. If such is the case, I am very happy that it was decided to do something to allow an increase in that production.

I hope that some day—that is the wish that I make—the Canadian Dairy Commission can somehow act as a thermostat in a house. In a house, a good thermostat works automatically. When it works well, it can maintain the temperature that corresponds to the needs of the household. It is automatic. It must be set properly.

I hope that the Canadian Dairy Commission will one day adjust itself to the situation in order to allow an increase in the winter production, so that the dairy industry may operate year round and not only according to the needs of the market. In this connection, I disagree with the Minister of Agriculture, because I always conceive production in terms of consumption needs. However, since consumption is dependent on purchasing power, it happens at a given time, especially in 1971, that the whole purchasing power of the people and families is considerably decreased and the demand is then lower.

I therefore suggest that we should be ready just the same to maintain a powerful dairy industry which will be in a position not only to satisfy the needs of our domestic market, but also those of the international market.

That is why it will be necessary to hasten to apply a policy which will encourage dairy producers to maintain an organization and, at the same time, to follow closely the data made available to the producers concerned, in order to be able to maintain their operations at the required level.

I am hopeful that, following the establishment of the guaranteed minimum annual income, purchasing power will be in line with the needs of the people and, at that time, the dairy industry will be able to develop, and the family farms that have been ill-treated, at least those that will remain, will be able to continue to survive and also to develop.

INFORMATION

NEED FOR LEGISLATION TO ENSURE RIGHT OF PUBLIC TO KNOW ABOUT GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. Because of the time of the year, and the spirit of co-operation which is being shown today, I believe my motion will commend itself to hon. members, particularly as it is couched in the most amiable and uncontroversial terms.

The urgent and pressing necessity for this motion to be moved is related to the disclosure in the Globe and Mail today that so-called confidential cabinet documents have been revealed. The large number of these leaks and the variety of subjects covered brings into question the need to have legislation defining and clarifying the duty of the government to provide Canadians with information concerning the conduct of public business.

If consent is given—as I assume it will be—I would therefore move:

That the government, at the beginning of the next session, shall introduce legislation regarding freedom of information for the people of Canada, either in the manner set out in Bill C-250 or in such similar form as may be appropriate.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

TRADE

TABLING OF REPORT ON IMPORTATION OF SWEATERS, CARDIGANS AND PULLOVERS

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to lay on the table of the House, in both official languages, a report on an inquiry respecting sweaters, cardigans and pullovers.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMMENDATION OF MINISTER ON MAKING DOCUMENTS AVAILABLE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, and likewise taking into account the publication today of some government documents relating to northern development policy, and living in the same hope as was the hon. member for Peace River, that my motion, being a generous and friendly one, may be accepted by the government, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House commends the government and in particular the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for making available to the public cabinet documents relating to northern development policy and expresses the hope that other cabinet ministers will see the merit and wisdom of such a course of action and thus contribute to a curtailment of unnecessary government secrecy about matters so obviously of value and interest to Canada and its people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I have serious doubts as to the propriety of the motion from a procedural point of view, but rather than spend the rest of the day on a procedural debate as to whether the motion should be accepted by the Chair or not, and without ruling whether it is acceptable or not, I will ask whether there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The question cannot be put.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, one which is of interest to all members of the House.

The Chairman of the Public Service Commission is presently being used willingly as a tool of those in government who seek to subvert the merit system in the service and institute in its place hiring practices based on race, language—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows there have been a number of rulings that Standing Order 43 cannot be used for the purpose of making allegations which, by virtue of the nature of the Standing Order, cannot be answered. The hon. member can indicate why there is urgency, why we should dispense with the notice requirement imposed in the usual course by our Standing Orders, and then state the terms of his proposed motion. He cannot argue, or make allegations or accusations.

Mr. Alkenbrack: With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I am only giving reasons for the motion, as has been done before.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to debate with the hon. member, but he will appreciate that the Chair is placed in a very difficult position. I have suggested on other occasions to hon. members that Standing Order 43 should be used only in special circumstances. Standing Order 43 is there for the exclusive purpose of putting into the hands of individual members of the House an instrument whereby they can dispense with the 48-hour notice period which is ordinarily imposed on the government and others for the protection of the House and of all hon. members. When hon. members think that this protection should not be available in special circumstances, the motion can be put. But the Standing Order should not be used as a vehicle to argue a case, to make submissions or to make allegations which, because of the very nature of the Standing Order, remain on the record and to which no opportunity for a reply is provided.

Mr. Alkenbrack: My remarks will be explanatory, Mr. Speaker. I am coming to the motion itself. The Chairman of the Public Service Commission has in many cases played outright favouritism.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: He has brought the high office of Chairman of the Public Service Commission under a cloud—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Selkirk rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rowland: I rise on a point of order to ask your advice, Mr. Speaker. Is any protection afforded by this House to a public servant against unprincipled attacks upon him to which he has no right of reply?

Mr. Speaker: That is obviously the point the Chair was making a moment ago. I really do not know how we can deal with a situation such as this when an individual from either side of the House, or from any party, seeks to move a motion under Standing Order 43 which contains allegations and accusations against, for example, another hon. member, or a member of the government, or against a civil servant high or low. The motion being under Standing Order 43, there is no possibility of anyone replying. I suppose there is always another side to any story or proposition. I think there is obviously something wrong from a parliamentary standpoint when an hon. member standing in his place makes an accusation which cannot be debated or considered under the terms of the Standing Order. I really have very serious doubts as to whether that can be done.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Alkenbrack: I am coming to my motion, Mr. Speaker. I expect it will be debated very soon. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Code):

That this House do press the government to take steps to remove Mr. John Carson from office as chairman of the Public Service Commission, and to appoint in his place a chairman who will carry out his duties in accordance with the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the motion proposed by the hon. member is a very good indication that the terms of Standing Order 43 should be looked at very closely by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: That committee is comprised of representatives of all parties. It contains very senior members. It is interested in consideration of matters which are important, such as televising our procedure, but, in my view, there are other matters which are even more important such as Standing Order 43. I invite the committee to look at the operation of that Standing Order if it is going to be used in the way it is being used at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bell: I rise on a point of order. May I ask that when this investigation of Standing Order 43 is conducted Your Honour consider the fact that it is now used prevalently because of the absence of ministers under the roster system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope that the committee will consider all aspects, including the representation made by the hon. member.

Mr. Hees: There are no ministers over here yet, but just wait a few months.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not appreciate the Whip of the loyal opposition accusing ministers of not being in the House when they have been in the House quite frequently lately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): While the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party are on holidays, we are dealing with the business of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has the floor. We have reached the period of oral questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to demonstrate that the opposition will ask adequate questions. Hopefully, we will receive adequate replies. My question is for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister able to give any better assurance than he has in the past that the investigations into the source and manner of cabinet leaks has reached the point where he can undertake that there will be no further leaks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I cannot commit the future conduct of any individual. I can re-assert that the government is making an investigation into each one of these leaks. I asked every one of my ministers to look carefully in their department. I told the House last week that with the tons of documents circulating in the government service which are available to so many people, as long as there are crooks and people who condone crooks, this kind of thing will be happening. I do not think the opposition should be complaining.

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—LEGISLATION TO GUARANTEE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In order that we may have some assurance that something will be done to bring an end to these leaks, is the minister prepared to give an undertaking to the House that at the beginning of the next session he will introduce legislation with regard to freedom of information, a matter which he strongly advocated outside the House?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): There will be a lot of priorities for House time next session, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—POSSIBLE CLAIM FOR COPYRIGHT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister seek advice from his colleagues with regard to the Copyright Act so that the government would be prepared to file a claim for copyright against the Globe and Mail when they publish these government documents?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid this would not only be a legal matter, but it would involve a much broader question of social impact. I think the government would have to consider not only the legal aspect of it, but all the other aspects.

CABINET COMMITTEE REPORT ON NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—REASON FOR FAILURE TO PUBLISH

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister say what reason there can be for failing to publish as a white paper or table in the House the cabinet committee report on a policy for northern development in the next decade, so that the public and this Parliament can know and discuss this important policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the public and the opposition want to take cognizance of everything the government is doing when it is establishing goals and so on, we think this would be a very welcome step. You just have to listen to speeches of ministers, statements made by the ministry and the policies we adopt to realize what our general goals are and what objectives this government is trying to pursue. All the time there are documents within cabinet to establish, generally speaking, the goals and objectives of this government. We do not publish all of them. We publish the policy positions and the programs which flow from these objectives. We do have guidelines, and we hope the opposition also have some.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister the reason for keeping secret this particular document which is of such great importance.

Mr. Trudeau: There is no reason, Mr. Speaker. I repeat, this particular document and probably dozens and dozens of other documents are of very great interest. I hope some way will be found to make them known to the Canadian public so that they will know.

An hon. Member: Isn't that lovely?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, isn't that lovely. I am glad I have the support of the lovely member over there.

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question. Since there have been no less than six leaks in the past six weeks, and since it appears the government has got nowhere in its investigation, I ask the Prime Minister whether the RCMP is investigating this very serious matter or is the Prime Minister simply allowing each department to investigate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the traditional way in dealing with this has been followed by the government, that is asking each minister to ensure that there be a complete departmental investigation before calling in the police.

Mr. Hees: As six weeks appears to be a more than adequate time to reach a solution of this matter, will the government now consider putting the RCMP in charge of this investigation?

Mr. Trudeau: I will consider that, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for wanting me to put the police on those who publish leaks.

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—POSSIBILITY OF MAKING GEORGE BAIN A MEMBER OF PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is considering making Mr. George Bain a member of the Privy Council so he will be sworn to secrecy before he discloses all the rest of the documents he seems to have, or does the government prefer it the way it is?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CABINET COMMITTEE REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT POLICY—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS AND NATIVES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Was the July 29 policy framework based on any formal and specific consultation with the territorial governments and the native people of the north, and if not, are talks now going to be held to formulate with them a framework for northern development?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister principally responsible, as well as various other ministers, are in consultation with the responsible authorities in the north when they have any aspects of policy or programs to implement. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is, of course, in constant communication with the authorities in the territorial governments.

CABINET COMMITTEE REPORT ON DEVELOPMENT POLICY—POSSIBLE CHANGES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the House whether or not the cabinet decision made last June on the policy for northern development is still government policy or whether the government has revoked it in the meantime.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not quite sure what policy the member is referring to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harding: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to the disclosure in the newspapers, specifically the Globe and Mail, of a northern policy.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would have to read that paper to be able to answer the member completely, but my understanding and the explanation I received is that it was not a cabinet decision but a memorandum which was reproduced in part in that paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have supplementaries to this question and we will return to this in a moment. In the meantime, however, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—MEASURES TO ESTABLISH PARITY OF PRICES BETWEEN EASTERN AND WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hundreds of Quebec farmers and producers came to Ottawa last week and made representations to the minister regarding the price spread for feed grain between eastern and western Canada. Could the minister tell us if after such representations he will very soon make a statement in the House in that respect?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is generally agreed that the existence of low or distress prices for feed grains in the Prairie provinces is an undesirable thing for many reasons, including the interests of the Prairie grain producers as well as of meat producers all across this country. It is our hope to find solutions to this problem, not by spreading the distress prices further but by trying to eliminate them wherever they exist.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

Does the hon. minister mean that he is in favour of having a difference between feed prices for consumption in the west and feed prices for consumption in the east?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, what I was indicating was that the problem of too low a price for feed grains in the west was a matter of real concern. There has been some recent improvement with the record sales of barley and wheat which have bolstered the prices in the Prairies. This has eased, to some extent, the immediate problem. We feel we should look at the problem, however, more broadly. Some of the solutions lie in the hands of the provinces which have jurisdiction over producer to producer sales in the provinces, and it will be my hope to have consultations with these governments in an effort to find a solution.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Selkirk has a supplementary to the previous question.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SECRECY OF GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has given consideration to creating, at the next session of Parliament, a parliamentary committee of inquiry into the whole question of the secrecy of government documents, modelled on the committee which was established to look into statutory instruments and which produced such good results.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether such a committee of inquiry will be necessary. The principles involved are very simple. Some operations must be conducted in secret if the government is to receive the best possible advice. This is inevitable. There are other subjects which can be made known to the public. As I was saying to the hon. member for Greenwood, there are some memoranda, when they have passed cabinet and been approved, which could very well be made known to the Canadian public, the publication of which would be in their interest as well as the interest of the government.

But what is lacking in the government is not a desire to make a lot of this material public, it is the time required and the ministerial time required to go through this very voluminous material and decide what should be made public and when. I am very hopeful the day will come when Information Canada will be publishing a lot of the very good work which is going on in the government.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONDITIONAL RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS OR PAROLE BOARD

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General, who has always had a good attendance record, and not just lately. May I ask the minister, in connection with the apparent departure of the convicted murderer Yves Geoffroy, who was released from St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary to get married, if the minister or his officials or the National Parole Board have had any consultations on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the question. It is I believe the same question as one asked yesterday by the hon. member for Joliette, although I might say the name sounded a bit different when mentioned by the hon. member for Joliette. The question will be allowed, and if the hon. member for Joliette has a supplementary he may ask it later.

[Mr. Lang.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Geoffroy's wedding was authorized according to regulations of the Penitentiary Service, after consultations with prison authorities, social workers and the institution's chaplain who recommended that permission be granted.

[English]

Mr. Bell: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he was aware that the best man at the wedding was Raymond Denis, an old friend of the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: No, I was not at all, Mr. Speaker, and I do not believe any conclusions can be drawn therefrom.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF BARBER COMMISSION—POSSIBLE ENLARGEMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might direct a question to the Prime Minister. With regard to the commission of inquiry headed by Dr. Barber relating to Indian lands, monies and the like, may I ask whether it is the government's intention to enlarge the scope of that inquiry so that the general classification of aboriginal or hereditary rights of the Indians might be a subject matter included in the terms of reference of the commission.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions between Dr. Barber and the ministry on this. The response generally has been, subject to confirmation by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that the terms of reference as set down in the order in council would not be changed but that Dr. Barber was at liberty to interpret them in the way he wanted in receiving representations from the various Indian groups.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he would indicate whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has been the gentleman dealing with this matter, could make a statement publicly or to the House, depending on whether the House is sitting at that time, outlining the reaction of the native people toward Dr. Barber's commission, whether there have been any groups which have appeared before him to make claims or whether in fact there has been a commission with no sort of activity because of the terms of reference.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly refer the question to the minister and see if there is any statement he can usefully make at this time.

HOUSING

FORECASTS FOR 1972

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Since federal government policy has greatly contributed to stimulating the economy of the building industry in Canada in 1971 and since statistics reveal that the year has been a record one, could the hon. minister indicate in the House whether he foresees a still better year for 1972.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is inviting the minister to express an opinion or make a statement, which should normally be done on motions.

AGRICULTURE

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT—POSITION OF QUEBEC AND MARITIME FARMS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him whether he has any information to give to the House on the specifics of the program for the consolidation of small farms as outlined in his small farms policy announced a few days ago.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The general outline of that program was made available to hon. members several months ago. There may be some amendments or modifications following agreements with the provinces with respect to the administration of the program. I will be having a further meeting with the ministers of agriculture in January when, hopefully, we will have a draft agreement or perhaps even a signed agreement on the division of administrative responsibility. But in so far as the manner in which the program will be applied to individual farmers is concerned, that is pretty well outlined in the document which the hon. member has.

Mr. Horner: Was not the word "adjustment" changed to "development"?

Mr. Murta: Because of the limitations of the small farms policy as broadly outlined by the minister, that is regarding the size of the farms involved in the plan, will the plan for consolidation be directly aimed at Quebec and Maritime farms in the initial phases of the plan?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker; there are small farms in all parts of Canada and those farmers will all have equal access to the program.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—METHOD OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether it is the intention to proceed with the legislation to implement the small farms development program or will the program be undertaken through the existing framework of the policies?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The initial stages will be undertaken under the authority that we already have from Parliament through the passage of the estimates for both this year and last year.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—POSSIBLE PUBLICATION OF POLICY DURING PARLIAMENTARY RECESS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Six weeks ago today the Prime Minister indicated that within a week or ten days there would be some announcement concerning the publication of the government's policy with respect to foreign investment, the publication of the full Gray report plus other supporting studies. Since we have had no word in the meantime as to when we might expect these important documents and policy positions, I wonder if the Prime Minister could indicate whether it is now the plan of the government to publish these matters while Parliament is recessed.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have dealt with this question a few times since my statement six weeks ago. I did indicate the technical difficulty which prevented the material from being ready, and I indicated that most likely it would be ready toward the middle of January. As to the question whether it should be made public at that time or whether we should wait until Parliament reconvenes, we have not given complete consideration to it but I would be thankful for the views of the hon. member on that.

Mr. Baldwin: Will we see it in the Globe and Mail first?

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—EXAMINATION OF POLICY BY COMMITTEE—CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the fact that apparently the proposal is to recess Parliament for a considerable length of time, and in view of the importance of this document, has the government given consideration to allowing a committee of the House to sit and examine these documents? Has there been any consultation with the provinces on these matters or will any machinery be established whereby there can be effective provincial consultation, particularly in view of the recent report to the government of Ontario with some very important supporting material?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is a very constructive suggestion for which I thank the hon. member. Perhaps if the government finds it advisable to publish these documents before the House reconvenes we may arrange to have a group of ministers present at the press conference to be informed of the announcements we will want to make. As to the second part of the question, there has been of course consultation with the provinces, not the least of which was the last federal-provincial meeting of first ministers when the provinces had every opportunity to state their policies on foreign investment in Canada, as well as all opposition parties.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate the fact that we are running short of time. Perhaps if he has a supplementary question which can be answered briefly he could be recognized for that purpose, but we will have to try to move along more quickly.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): My question is for the purpose of clarification. The Prime Minister used the word "ministers". I presume he meant members. In order for them to be present in a formal sense to examine these documents, before the House adjourns this week there will have to be some reference establishing the right of the committee to sit and examine the documents. I wonder if that can be considered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is correct. I did say "ministers" when I meant members. The authority which the hon. member requests is one which I do not think the government can give or deny. These documents will be made public and everyone, including the Globe and Mail, will have the authority to look at them.

TRADE

FARM PRODUCTS—IMPOSITION OF SURCHARGE BY EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—REQUEST FOR STUDY OF IMPACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of a report from Brussels to the effect that farm products outside the European Economic Community countries will be subject to an import surtax as a result of the devaluation of the U.S. dollar, would the minister advise the House whether or not Canadian farm products will be subject to this surtax?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I read these articles only this morning but I would suppose that Canadian agricultural products entering the EEC will be subject to the same levies as farm products entering from anywhere else in the world.

Mr. Nystrom: Will the minister undertake to make a study and estimate the impact of this surtax upon the Canadian agricultural industry?

Mr. Olson: That has already been started.

GRAIN

REGULATIONS TO PROTECT FARMERS WITH CROP STILL IN SWATH AGAINST POSSIBLE LOSS OF QUOTAS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, on December 7 I asked the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board the following question:

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Because of the amount of crop still out in swath in western Canada and particularly in Manitoba, and as this grain will not be combined until spring, and because under the new quota system these farmers will not be able to take advantage of the earlier specified delivery dates, does the government intend to introduce regulations so these farmers will be protected against possible loss of quota under these circumstances?

The minister said he would take the question as notice and report to the House later.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): And I did so.

CANCER RESEARCH—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON GRANTS

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the federal government's policy is to provide grants for cancer research to the National Cancer Institute or only to individual researchers for specific projects?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): We are endeavouring to move toward the objective of giving grants for specific projects. However, in relation to the National Cancer Institute—this gives me an opportunity to answer the question also put by the hon. member for Oxford yesterday—my department has granted $250,000 to that institute.

HALIFAX—OFFICERS LEAVING PHONES OFF THE HOOK

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Minister of Labour and it is one of which I have given him some form of notice. It has to do with reports or charges that UIC officers in Halifax are leaving their phones off the hook. I wonder if he might correct that.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question. It is quite obvious that if any employee of the Unemployment Insurance Commission anywhere in Canada is leaving the phone off the hook intentionally, he will soon be amongst the unemployed. Because of the hon. gentleman's interest in the subject I have asked Bell Telephone to ascertain, through a survey over the weekend or early next week, whether or not we have a sufficient number of telephones in the Halifax office. If more are needed, we shall supply them.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take notice of that question and report to the hon. member later.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that some 1,300 men are now working on the James Bay project and contracts are being issued monthly, will the Prime Minister inform the House when the environmental study on the impact of this project, which affects Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba, will be made public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that both governments are discussing the date of release now, and it is likely to be before the middle of January.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

RELATIONSHIP OF LOSS OF JOBS IN ONTARIO TO INCENTIVE GRANTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the report issued by the Ontario government that in 1971 36 companies shut down or curtailed operations in Ontario costing 4,341 workers their jobs, would the minister inform the House whether his department has made any studies which would establish whether or not those lost jobs in Ontario were directly or indirectly linked to industrial incentive grants given to industries in designated regions?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, each time an application is made to the department, this aspect is taken into consideration so that we make no grant if we believe that this would result in a loss of jobs in another province.

[English]

Mr. Peters: As a supplementary question, would the minister tell the House what is the basis of his contention that jobs created under this program are not affecting jobs elsewhere?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will appreciate that questions such as this are very wide in scope and normally would be answered by way of general statements on motions.

POSSIBLE REPAYMENT OF GRANTS BY INDUSTRIES IN WHICH LAY-OFFS OCCUR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minster of Regional Economic Expansion. Is the government making any attempt to retrieve funds paid out under the regional industrial incentives program to firms that subsequently had substantial lay-offs, and is this matter being reviewed, as I understand that about $1.5 million was paid to firms that subsequently had lay-offs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the government's policy is to recover grants that have been made and not used for the purpose of creating jobs.

I know that we were slow in doing this in a few cases, because there was some hope that the business would start operating again. The government's policy is to do what the hon. member suggests.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT POLICY FOR INDUSTRIES SEEKING PROTECTION FROM FOREIGN IMPORTS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. It is based on the rather interesting document that was tabled today. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary if the government has accepted the recommendation made in this document, and is it now government policy that when an industry seeks redress for cheaper imports from foreign countries the government will not grant such redress if in its opinion an alternative method of manufacturing can be economically employed?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is a question of whether serious injury is found or not, and in this instance the investigation showed there was no serious injury. As a result of that, the government does not intend to take action except to rescind restraint agreements that were drawn up previously.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the minister now ascertained from the CBC if it intends to consolidate its activities in one place in metropolitan Toronto, and if it intends to rent the proposed transmission tower and other facilities in Metro Centre?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I know that the CBC has made representations to the government, and particularly to the Treasury Board, regarding developments of this type. I have no detail on this but as soon as final decisions will be taken I shall be pleased to inform the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, because of the magnitude of these decisions I take it that the approval or disapproval or qualified approval of the government would have to be sought. I would therefore ask the minister if he has signed such approval or qualified approval now, or if he intends to do so shortly?

RUSSIAN NUCLEAR TEST—PROTEST BY CANADA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to ask him whether the Canadian government has sent or will send a protest to Russia over a nuclear test which registered over six points on the Richter scale, similar to protests that it sent to the United States regarding the Amchitka test? Further, in order to prevent my rising to ask a supplementary, may I ask him whether any protests have been received by the Canadian government concerning the Russian test?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has expressed its views very strongly to the Soviet government through ordinary ambassadorial channels, and when Mr. Kosygin was here we also expressed our views strongly. We have made formal protests to the United States about a particular test that was to take place on our doorstep. We also expressed our views for the first time to the Chinese government, after establishing relations with that government. We would have to consider whether it would be useful to protest again to the Soviet Union, since the Russians are familiar with our views.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON RELATIONSHIP OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX TO PROVINCIAL SUCCESSION DUTIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise the House whether the government is considering negotiations with the provinces to see whether there can be any arrangement made with respect to some mutual tax credit as a result of the capital gains tax and the extension by a number of the provinces into the succession duties field, or is Canada definitely to have an extra tax with the capital gains tax?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the capital gains tax is a new tax. Secondly, the federal government has moved out of the death duty field, and the provinces had to enact legislation to get the amount of money they were getting previously if they still wished to have such a tax. That is the kind of legislation I understand the provinces are bringing forward. So, there will be an over-all reduction in death duties if they just raise the amount of moneys they received previously, because the federal government will not be raising the 25 per cent it received previously.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a supplementary question, does the minister now say that the provinces will be raising their succession duty levies or extending into that field in order to maintain the same level of revenues, notwithstanding the fact that they will get their share of the capital gains tax under provincial-dominion agreements now in existence?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is basically a provincial matter. We moved out of the death duties field. Many of the provinces have moved into it. It is simply a provincial matter.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That appears to be a matter of debate between the minister and the hon. member. We have a few minutes left before the end of the question period and we should try to move on.

AGRICULTURE

SHEEP—REQUEST FOR AID TO INDUSTRY—POSSIBLE SUBSIDY

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): One short question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In trying to establish the goals of that department, and one realizes that the Government has received about $12 million from the tariff on woollen goods entering Canada, is the minister prepared to assist the sheep industry with some of the money received by the government from the tariff on wools because the industry is going through a very difficult period?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, assistance has been given to the sheep producers in Canada for the last ten or 15 years, and I am most anxious that they maximize their returns from the production of lamb because there is a greater market for that, which I am convinced is not being exploited in the producers' interest at the moment. We are taking active steps to improve the situation in that direction now.

Some hon. Members: Baa, baa!

Mr. Horner: A supplementary question. The minister suggested that they are taking steps to improve the situation by creating a greater demand for lamb. Does he mean that they are going to come out with a subsidy for the sale of lamb?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is debate again.

HONOURS AND AWARDS

REQUEST FOR EARLY RECOGNITION OF MEN OF "HMCS KOOTENAY"

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister, and I hope he will agree with me that the passage of time has made it a question of urgency. I refer, Mr. Speaker, to the matter of honours awarded by the nation in recognition of heroic acts performed by its people, and specifically to impending awards for bravery to be made to men of Her Majesty's Canadian ship Kootenay, many of whom died performing their duty saving their ship and shipmates from even greater disaster. Could the Prime Minister tell us when these awards will be made or if not, would he use his influence to speed them up as they are now more than two years overdue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the urgency of some action in this matter but I would inform the House that we are trying to deal with the subject in an over-all way by integrating these bravery awards with other awards which are attributed in Canada. This matter has been under consideration by the government for some time, and I hope we will be able to take action in all these regards very early in the new year.

Mr. Lincoln M. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBLE ASSIGNMENT OF BENEFIT CHEQUES TO WELFARE AGENCIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received any reaction, officially or otherwise, from municipalities as a result of the suggestion or proposition advanced on December 20 in this House that municipalities serve, in effect, as credit agencies when UIC payments are delayed?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): As I mentioned in the House, Mr. Speaker, commencing on January 1, and in conformity with the new Unemployment Insurance Act, in cases of hardship resulting not necessarily from delay of unemployment insurance payments but even resulting from the legitimate four week period, an unemployed person can assign the rights to that unemployment insurance cheque to a local welfare agency and receive assistance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. Perhaps we might try to have a few more questions before calling orders of the day. Hon. members will appreciate that even the business before us comes under a time allocation order of the House. Before we call orders of the day, we can have a few more questions without supplementaries.

POSSIBLE LOWERING OF RETIREMENT AGE TO AID UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the over 200,000 unemployed under the age of 25, is the government considering legislation to facilitate voluntary early retirement for Canadian wage and salary earners through a contributory plan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this whole area of early retirement was broached in the government's white paper on income security as a possible thrust for the future, but the government has nothing specific to announce in that particular area at the present time.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST ENGLISH SPEAKING EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Last Thursday the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated that he would study alleged abuses of the function of the Official Languages Act in Statistics Canada. Has this study been undertaken and is a statement on the situation going to be made to the House this week?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the study has been completed and I can report to hon. members that there is no evidence of any discrimination. If the hon. member has more specific instances that he would like to give us we would be very happy to investigate them.

ALLEGED DETRIMENTAL EFFECTS OF ACTIONS OF MR. AHEARNE—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and concerns youth in sport. In view of the dictatorial attitude of Mr. Bunny Ahearne of the International Hockey Federation and the far-reaching control he has, even to children of nine and ten years of age playing minor hockey, and his denial of their free participation in sports, would the minister take the initiative in bringing to the attention of the sports bodies concerned the detrimental effect that Mr. Ahearne's actions are having on our youth with a view to effecting his resignation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, many of the organizations to which the hon. member refers have their own well-known views about Mr. Ahearne and nothing I could say would contribute very much.

[Later:]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is supplementary and refers to the whole attitude toward hockey in Canada. I would ask the minister if he would try to sharpen his skates, take up his hockey stick, and do a little stick-handling so that we can get out of the international penalty box in time for the 1976 olympics?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has any techniques to handle Mr. Ahearne, I would be pleased to listen to them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period but by consent perhaps the hon. member for Assiniboia might ask a question, and then the hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 29, consideration of Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and motions Nos. 1, 5 and 22 (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1, moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). It reads:

That Bill C-176, An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by deleting from subclause (c) of Clause 2 all the words after the word 'agriculture' at line 14, page 1.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the motion that was adopted earlier today, in which there was an indication that there might be a further amendment to Motion No. 1, I now propose to move such an amendment to Motion No. 1, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), in order to make crystal clear, if I may borrow a phrase frequently used by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that no agency will be established under this bill until a majority of producers want such agency for a particular product.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment has circulated underground for a day or two and is now surfacing in the form in which I will propose it. There were consultations between the hon. member for Crowfoot and hon. members on this side of the House, and especially the chairman of the agriculture committee, and it was basically from this inter-party consultation that this amendment was developed. So with that important and considerable parentage, it ought to have free sailing in the House. I will read the amendment, which is as follows:

That Motion No. 1 of Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. McIntosh, be amended by striking therefrom all the words following the word 'deleting' and substituting therefor the following:

'subclause (c) of clause 2 and substituting therefor the following:

'(c) 'farm product' for the purpose of Part I, means any natural product of agriculture and any part of any such product and, for the purpose of the other provisions of this Act, means

(i) eggs, and poultry, and any part of any such product, and

(ii) any other natural product of agriculture and any part of any such product in respect of which the Governor in Council is satisfied, as a result of declarations by provincial governments following plebiscites, or otherwise, that the majority of the producers thereof in Canada is in favour of the establishment of an agency under section 17 with powers relating to that product:

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that there are several distinct parts to the amendment. The first part simply says that every farm product is a natural product of agriculture, or any part thereof, for the purposes of Part I of the bill. You know that Part I of the bill is that part outlining the function of the marketing council, and it runs through from clauses 3 to 16. This bill will provide the opportunity for the council to examine the merits of establishing an agency for any farm product and to conduct research or hold hearings for that purpose. This ensures that what was in the bill will not be removed, which would have been the effect if the motion, as originally drafted, had been approved.

The next distinct part of the amendment sets out the meaning of farm product for the remaining clauses of the bill. Paragraph (i) deals with eggs and poultry products and other such products, without the qualifications we find in paragraph (ii). Paragraph (ii) deals with other natural products of agriculture, with a significant qualification. That qualification provides that such other products of agriculture do not come under those other provisions of the bill unless the governor in council is satisfied that the majority of producers want an agency.

The amendment indicates how the governor in council is to determine the will of the majority. This must be done through provincial declarations following plebiscites, or otherwise. Finally, it should be pointed out that this requirement was not attached to eggs and poultry products because we have been advised by a number of provincial ministers of agriculture and, directly, by poultry producers that they want an agency. That is to say, agreement has been reached, I understand, with the egg producers, formal meetings having been held over a period of months to this end.

I so move that amendment, Mr. Speaker, to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot. I hope that there will be a measure of agreement in the House, because the amendment is the result of considerable discussion and effort in finding a consensus on this particular part of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I ought to put the motion to the House. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), seconded by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), moves—

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, strange things happen underground and I cannot help reflecting on the last two years of work on this bill. I well remember February 25, 1971, when I pleaded with the members of the agricultural committee to change clause 2 and to make it applicable to the poultry industry only. I solemnly promised that I would assist the committee and the minister to get the bill through the House and, in the following week, to get the bill through the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) at that time said, "No, I want clause 2 to include vegetables." I said, "What vegetables?" He said, "Potatoes". I said, "That is strange; so far as I am aware no potato producers have come before the agricultural committee to argue the case for supply management regarding that industry." To convince the committee that I was in a conciliatory mood on February 25, I said that I would be prepared to have included in clause 2 of the bill the poultry industry and the vegetable industry, and the products thereof. The minister said that no, it was not good enough, because he wanted to include all products.

Today the government has come back to the position of spelling out that, except for eggs and poultry, all other commodities are to be governed by boards set up on a voluntary basis. Why could we not have done that right from the beginning? It is regrettable that originally the government did not treat all products alike.

Why should eggs and poultry be excluded from the general provisions of the bill? Why are the members of that industry to have no choice? I claim that the government is interfering with the rights of that industry. Indeed, a commission in Ontario this very day is studying the question whether egg producers in that province want to enter into a supply management scheme. It is trying to determine whether egg producers want quotas, whether in fact they support a marketing bill. Yet this government seeks to override that commission; the national government is saying that eggs need to come under a marketing bill, that the egg producers in Ontario need a marketing bill.

The federal government in this respect is interfering with rights of natural justice. A commission is very much like a court, and a commission is hearing the case of egg producers. Farmers and producers are submitting arguments to that commission at this very time. This government is interfering with a commission in Ontario that, in essence, is constituted like a court.

I am surprised that the NDP members in this House are prepared to go along with this. I suppose they say that these provisions are better than nothing. May I refer to something that was printed in this morning's Globe and Mail. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is reported as saying that his party wants all products to be treated alike, and that is the way it should be. He was referring to the cattle industry, I believe, and the desire of cattlemen to opt out of the provisions of this bill. He said that although he does not like the proposed amendment, his party will go along with it but that they want all products to be treated alike.

He was not being very clear, because this amendment does not treat all products alike. It provides that eggs, poultry and any such products are automatically included. When it comes to the poultry industry, the government knows best. The people who are in difficulty in the poultry industry are the feed manufacturers who have invested large sums of money in various farming families in order to build up big enterprises in egg and broiler production. This bill says, in effect: We know you are in difficulty and we intend to build a great deal of security into your establishments. I say to Your Honour that the Ben Beauregards of this industry will be for ever wealthy after this bill passes. They will be wealthy for as far into the future as I can see, as will their children and their grandchildren, because the government has brought them security. We see the youth of this nation walking the streets and looking for opportunities wherever they may find them. They can go to colleges and universities. They can acquire all the knowledge they please about the poultry industry. But all this will not get them into the industry; to do that they will have to marry a rich widow, or marry into a poultry family. They will need money to get into the industry after this bill has provided for its security.

In British Columbia, if a farmer wants to increase his quota by one dozen extra eggs a week, it costs him $385. Imagine how many years into the future a person would have to sell a dozen eggs a week in order to pay for a quota which cost $385 to secure.

The prices of poultry products to the consumer will rise. Many people have accused me of being motivated during this debate by self-interest. Well, I suppose I should be happy if this were the case because the biggest competitor to the beef industry is the poultry industry, and if prices go up in the poultry industry poultry products will be less competitive with beef. As I say, I suppose I should be happy. But I am not happy because as a legislator here I think I should be creating opportunities for the youth of this nation.

The government is proposing to build a feudal system into the poultry industry. The young people of today may be able to clean out the poultry barns for the Ben Beauregards, or be given jobs as truck drivers, hauling the products to market, as long as they bring the trucks back after they have unloaded the rich lord's products.

I hope the producers of the other products listed in the bill in paragraph (ii) do not express themselves in favour of a system of supply management which would create feudal lords in every other area of agriculture. If they do, those who are not born wealthy or who do not marry into a wealthy family will not be able to pay for the quota which alone will enable them to operate successfully. The others will live in a state of serfdom.

Some time ago I was reading Peter Newman's brilliant book "Renegade in Power". The author referred to people who were "well connected" and "well born", and I did not quite understand what he meant. I scratched my head over that one. How does one get to be well born in the country of Canada? The expression came from the old country, and I learned later that Peter Newman comes from the old country. If this bill passes there will be well born people in this country. They will be well born because they will be born into protected, secure empires. I want no part of that in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: People will no longer have an equal chance in the poultry industry if this bill passes. This will be to the shame of every member of the House. Let them live with it. Let the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) live with it. He will not be in politics long. Today, youth may accept the position. They may do so tomorrow, or next year. But in the years to come they will not accept it; they will not accept what this bill is doing.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I was impressed by the flamboyant rhetoric of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). However, I began to wonder while he was speaking whether or not he was speaking against his own amendment. I thought the amendment had been moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot and seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) and I cannot understand why he should speak so strongly against what appears to be his own idea. He may have an opportunity to explain this to us later on, because I am sure we are going to hear from him again. And again. And again.

What we are dealing with here is a face-saving device which affects at least three of the parties in the House. The hon. member for Crowfoot and his hon. friends have been able through their efforts to secure the removal of the term "cattle and calves" from the bill and substitute a euphemism known as natural products of agriculture. The hon. member for Crowfoot spoke against supply management, yet there is nothing in the amendment which even mentions supply management. This is but a further example of the technique of setting up a straw man. His argument really had no substance, but it was full of sound and, I also noted, contained a good deal of fury.

The legislation before us is called national farm marketing legislation. I am not so sure that it is. It has all the earmarks of national farm marketing legislation but I suspect that in our compromises, our face-saving, we have severely emasculated the bill. I am concerned about this because the party to which I belong has been four square in favour of national marketing legislation for at least a generation. It is disappointing to us that the bill should come to us in its present form. Incidentally, I do not think the minister himself is too displeased with the decision to remove the term "cattle and calves" from the bill because he represents a cattle constituency. But he and other MPs have been subjected for over a year now to a great deal of static from the poultry industry which wants this bill desperately therefore it is essential that we deal with this legislation with the utmost dispatch.

From the point of view of members of our party, there is a subsequent amendment which establishes the historic trading pattern for an "agency" in the poultry business that contemplates market sharing or a quota system. I, personally, am supporting the bill as I am supporting the amendment before us. I therefore will not speak against the amendment with such force as the mover of that amendment.

I support the bill because I represent a constituency having a large poultry industry. In the past year I have received representations which indicate that the people in that industry desperately need this legislation. They need it because the whole industry cries out for relief from the surpluses created in one region and dumped into other regions in Canada. The defence of that practice was that interprovincial trade barriers were developed by various provinces in order to protect their own poultry industries from out of province threats. Broiler surpluses are not usually caused by the individual farm owner, but by a large integrated operation sponsored in most cases by a wealthy feed company that can afford to lose money on their ultimate product, broilers, in order to make money on feed. They do this through a kind of contractual operation in which the farm owner is really the serf of the feed company. He, his wife and children work to produce this product at times for 10 cents a bird.

As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) ably pointed out, I am aware that when we support this bill we may well be serving the big integrated interests as well as the independent poultry producers. As the hon. member suggested, we may well be locking them in to lucrative positions for years.

If any issue in this Parliament were black and white, things would be very simple, but they are not. They are not red either.

Mr. Horner: You have to aim for gold.

Mr. Rose: The difficulty we face in dealing with this issue is that we may serve one interest which we would like to support and at the same time serve another with which we would rather have no part.

In their brief to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on November 22, the provincial ministers took great pains to point out that the independent farm operation is the kind of operation we should be supporting. Independent producers should be getting the benefit of any kind of legislation, subsidy and support, but not the integrated operation or the factory farm operation which needs no help.

I think it is obvious that if we base supply-management quotas on existing production, and if that production or the bulk of it is in the hands of the integrators, supporting this amendment means we are supporting the integrators at the same time. It is not a black and white decision. We take this position on this bill reluctantly for the misgivings I have outlined.

We should be well aware that words of praise for C-176 may come back to haunt us because the bill is not the solution to Canadian agriculture. This is far from the be all and end all to save the particular independent agricultural unit in this country. Bill C-176 may not stop the population drift to the cities. It may not help the marginal operations on which there exist very few opportunities for young people to carve out a career. It may not prevent the drift from an independent, self-reliant family situation in a rural setting to a tenant of the urban high rise.

This bill is very limited in scope. It has an urgency about it because of the state of the poultry industry. That is about as far as we can go. We should also remember that if we pass this amendment and this bill, there are several other steps fraught with danger and barriers to be taken before any kind of marketing agency, or marketing plan resulting from that agency, can become a reality. It will be necessary to have a plebiscite and all ten provinces must agree. If all ten provinces do not agree, constitutionally there is nothing to prevent the province that opts out from insisting on its constitutional rights to ship into the controlled market area. The success of Bill C-176 then really depends on the co-operation of all the provinces if it is to work.

The bill before us was motivated by an attempt on the part of the government to avoid a constitutional crisis created by interprovincial trade barriers. The government dilly-dallied for months rather than assert federal authority against interprovincial trade barriers.

In conclusion, may I remind the hon. member for Crowfoot of one other thing. He is concerned about the trend to bigness in the poultry industry. This trend is not confined to the poultry industry; it also applies to the cattle industry. The greatest objection we have to this particular bill is that cattle are no longer specifically named because of what I regard as an unethical kind of lobby prompted by the big cattle interests.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. Pursuant to the order made earlier today, his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this amendment apparently designed to bring some change to the first draft of the bill, but which, in fact, does not change much.

When the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) moved the amendment, I was hoping that it would be more explicit. In that part of the clause with which the amendment deals, we read:

"farm product", for the purpose of Part I, means any natural product of agriculture and any part of any such product and, for the purpose of the other provisions of this Act,

That means that the words "beef", "veal" and "related products of beef and veal" are kept in the bill. In short, nothing is changed. That shows, however, that the act does not use the words "to require that beef producers", "to require that veal producers" be members of a marketing agency, or does not impose a marketing agency on them.

The amendment also says, and I quote:

—any other natural product of agriculture and any part of any such product in respect of which the Governor in Council is satisfied, as a result of declarations by provincial governments following plebiscites, or otherwise, that the majority of the producers thereof in Canada is in favour of the establishment of an agency under section 17 with powers relating to that product;

The words "or otherwise" are not properly used here. What is meant here, I believe is that, under the terms of the act, a small group of producers who are more active than the others could choose to be governed by a marketing agency even without a plebiscite. In fact, the first amendment proposed by the member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) did say, and I quote:

following plebiscites.

It did not say "or otherwise" or else I misread it. That does not improve the bill right now, I think, and producers are still liable to fall under the jurisdiction of marketing agencies. Should there appear to be a majority, the producer of a certain commodity will have to fall under that jurisdiction.

I will now refer to eggs and poultry. All hon. members know that this bill will not solve the egg and poultry problem because if ever such marketing exists the legislation under consideration will probably curb dumping between provinces since all of them will have to come to an agreement. However, this will not help the small producer. He will have to produce under quotas and the integrated operator will then come into the picture. Normally, the big producer having enough money to buy quotas will purchase his neighbour's operation because he prepares the feeds, the grain himself. He is in position to do it, he has all that is needed to do it. So, he leaves no profit to anyone but himself; he will buy the operation of the small producers who are in a difficult financial position. He will buy quotas of small producers and this way, big producers will be the only ones in business as is the case for instance in the southern part of the United States where there are exceptionally big hatcheries. The same person produces eggs, runs the hatchery, raises chickens and operates the slaughter-house and the supermarket.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say something on this amendment since I represent a riding in which there is a great deal of livestock production. At the same time it is an area of the country that has had a special experience in the field of marketing legislation inasmuch as the B.C. tree fruit industry has come under marketing legislation for a period of 30 or 35 years.

During that time the people in my area of the country have learned a great deal about marketing legislation. The implementation of this legislation has not always been completely successful but it has served to create an orderly condition of marketing which, in general and by and large, has been beneficial to the fruit growers of British Columbia.

I believe it has also been beneficial to the consumers of Canada in that it has placed before them a high quality product offered under the best of conditions. This product has been marketed under attractive conditions all over Canada and around the world because of the ability to arrange orderly marketing in a way in which individual producers could never do.

However, I have been concerned about the inclusion of livestock in this bill because many livestock producers in my area have expressed their concern to me. After studying the provisions of the bill it has become obvious to me that there need be no real concern. I find it very difficult to conceive of a situation in which livestock producers would be forced into some kind of a marketing scheme which they did not want.

There are too many steps and too many procedures along the way which must be followed in order to make it possible for any group of producers in Canada to force their opinions upon all the producers in Canada. When we examine the steps which must be pursued, such as the hearings, the votes, the provincial approval, the approval of the board and parliamentary approval, I believe it is impossible to conceive of all those steps having been gone through with any sizeable number of producers being opposed to inclusion under the provisions of the bill which apply to livestock and other commodities which might at some time in the future come under these provisions.

I am a little concerned that perhaps the steps and the controls are so rigid that when the producers of some commodity are anxious to be brought under the provisions of the bill the proceedings may be so cumbersome that it may be impossible for them to go through all these lengthy proceedings in time to obtain benefits under the bill. So I am satisfied that the livestock producers of Canada and of my region are very amply protected for that reason, and I believe I can in clear conscience support the bill, particularly as it is amended at the present time.

There has been some suggestion during the course of this debate that this bill would not cure all the farm problems in Canada. I would certainly be the first to say that is true. There is no one bill that would cure all the farm problems in Canada. I want to say categorically, however, that I deny the allegation made in this House during the course of this debate that it is a policy of this government to force people off their farms. That has been said over and over again and I want to say that it is not true.

It is the policy of this government to assist the farmers to stay on their farms and to provide some assistance to them if they should be forced because of economic conditions to leave. But through such measures as farm credit insurance, crop insurance and many other forms of assistance and the now recently announced programs of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), an effort has been made to make it possible for these people to stay home. Despite all these programs I am concerned that there are still economic conditions which exist here in Canada and around the world pertaining to agriculture which make it difficult for small farmers to stay on their farms.

I should like to see consideration given at some time in the near future to the possibility of establishing something that we have spoken of from time to time, namely a guaranteed annual income in the field of small farms in Canada. Small farms do represent a valuable social unit. They provide a valuable place in life for people who do not want to be forced to adopt city life. I sympathize with hon. members on all sides of the House who have made statements to the effect that many small farmers, because of economic conditions, are being forced into the cities against their will.

Very often, because of age or lack of training, many of these people who have been involved in farming are forced on to the welfare rolls. For this reason I believe it is reasonable to suggest that in respect of these farmers it would be more economic and socially desirable to provide them with some form of guaranteed annual income. It is far better to keep these people on the farms with a small guaranteed income, plus what they may be able to obtain from their farms, so they can lead the kind of life they want to lead. Perhaps it would not be possible for them to live as well financially as their counterparts in the cities, but they would live as well socially. They would have the satisfaction of leading the kind of life they had been accustomed to rather than having to move to the cities. So I should like to propose to the Minister of Agriculture and to the government that some kind of a guaranteed annual income be considered for people on small farms whose farm units are not economic. Because of the economic benefits available to farmers and people in rural areas from the food they produce, and because other costs may be lower, I suggest these farmers could be aided with a comparatively small amount of financial assistance which would make it possible for them to stay on the farms.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I hesitate to suggest a particular amount but I mention the figure of $3,000 a year as a basic income for them. I suggest that with such assistance many more small farmers of Canada might be able to stay in the rural setting which they like so much. I suggest that this would be a valuable thing for Canada because of the social advantage in having the rural communities in Canada populated by people who want to be there.

I find it possible to support this bill, particularly with the new amendments, in so far as it affects the livestock industry. I am most happy to support it in the way it is amended. I am satisfied that the livestock producers of Canada are protected in the way that they have indicated they want protection. I am satisfied that the livestock producers in my constituency will not be forced into a marketing plan of any kind unless they are clear in their minds that that is what they want, that conditions in the industry at that time indicate to them that it is to their benefit, and they express such opinion clearly to the government of their province, to their own livestock organizations, to their elected representatives in parliament and to the government of Canada.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, according to the announcement this afternoon this debate is rapidly coming to a close.

An hon. Member: Good.

Mr. Korchinski: Somebody said "good". I wish the hon. member would reflect on what this Parliament is passing. The title of the bill is the National Farms Products Marketing Council. I suggest that the title should more properly be "National farm products marketing and farmer control council". What this Parliament will do if and when it passes this bill—and I presume it will pass because of the government majority—is to confine production to a limited few. It will license those who will be in production.

The hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) told us the other day that he has been working on marketing boards and has a quota. That is fine and dandy; but if anybody wanted to get into business once these agencies are set up, he will not have an opportunity to get on a board because the agencies will be set up on the pattern of the Dairy Commission. No one can tell me that the Dairy Commission has not weeded out small farmers, and the denials that have come from members on the other side mean nothing to those who have been put out of business.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made a deathbed repentance. He made an announcement today, as he did several weeks ago in preparation for an election. Before the next election he will tell us that subsidies will be available, but these subsidies will be available only to those people who are still in production.

Mr. Whelan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member said that the marketing boards to which I belong are on quota. This is not so. New producers come on to the marketing board to which I belong and others leave every year. It costs nothing to get in and out of the programs to which I belong.

Mr. Korchinski: The hon. member himself knows that he is under contract. They will not throw the established people out, or is this the intention? What has happened with the Dairy Commission? Hon. members know that in the last five years since 1966 '60,000 quota holders all across Canada have been dropped, 27,000 of them in western Canada.

Why do we protest so vociferously against this legislation? It is because we know what happened under the Dairy Commission. In Saskatchewan 10,000 farmers were dropped, in Alberta 10,000 were dropped, and in Manitoba 7,000. Where will these quotas go? A look at any projection of population trends will reveal that by the year 1980 Ontario's population will increase by one and a half million people. Quebec will have an increase of one million, one hundred thousand and the three prairie provinces will have an increase of only half a million. So where will the quotas go? Do we have a western representative on the Dairy Commission? No. Will we have one? No.

Obviously, the production will go where the population is, and that will cause a big argument. It will be argued: Why not save freight? What will happen is that they will go out of business. They want to get the cattle in. Now hon. members can understand why we protest. We have Lift and other programs, and we have quotas under the Wheat Board. If anybody tells me that we will have a quota which will make us suddenly rich, let me tell him that nobody ever sold grain when the Wheat Board quotas were low.

Farmers protested about this and every member here heard question after question being raised, and, had delegations come to him. Only when quotas were raised and those people could sell their products openly did they cease protesting.

The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) clearly indicated what will happen when this bill passes. If you are born lucky and are in production, that is fine and dandy; but if not, then you will not be able to get a licence, and when you cannot get the licence you cannot get into production. At least with the Wheat Board, if you produce anything over and above the amount it can be sold, but under this bill you will have difficulty selling. Supply management is fine for strawberries in British Columbia. It may be fine for certain products in certain regions. I do not argue that provincial organizations may be able to work well. But when you consider regions such as the Annapolis Valley in Nova Scotia, or the Kootenays in British Columbia, they will not have the same markets. They do not need national organization because they function very well under provincial organization. This does not bother me in Saskatchewan because my crab apples will fall off the trees anyway, or the kids will eat them up; but I will not be in the business of selling. I do not need an organization all across Canada. With a product like cattle which can be produced all across Canada, there is a diversity of interest. Now both cattle raising and grain growing are restricted. There is work in industries in central Canada, but what will we do in the Maritimes or in the Prairies?

Marketing boards are fine. But when it is suggested that this proposal constitutes a marketing board, I say that that is deception. In fact it is a farmer control board. At no time will I be prepared to accept a ruling which comes from a few bureaucrats. There are several ways in which one can go broke very quickly. The first way is to gamble, the second is to spend money on women, and the third is to listen to experts. Gambling is the quickest way, women are the most fun, but listening to experts is the surest way. A group of experts will tell us, as they told us in the case of butter, that they know exactly what will happen. This year we have had to import butter from the United States, although the experts told us that they knew in advance what the requirements would be. Even with all the manipulation and computers that we have in this country, they could not foretell our needs. Nor could they prod people into production. We had to import. There are no import controls so these people could decide to unload their products here, unless this constituted dumping, in which case there is appropriate legislation to control it. This bill will do nothing for these people. All we will have is a constant struggle among the different regions in Canada. There will be litigation before one court or another, depending upon whom the minister selects to serve on the council. What say will a small region have in such a matter? What say will a small island like P.E.I. have, even though it is very much dependent on agriculture? What say will it have in comparison with a region that may include Ontario and Quebec?

I can well understand members from Ontario and Quebec saying that this legislation is fine for them. But it is idle for them to talk at the same time about unity. Surely they cannot be that short-sighted. They should be able to see a little farther than 50 or 100 miles out of Ottawa in either direction. They should be able to see clear to the coast, to the west and to the east.

Hon. members opposite argue that agencies will not be established until plebiscites are held. Let them remember there are the words "or otherwise" which must be considered in this context. This might simply mean the minister receiving a letter requesting the establishment of an agency, as may have been the case with poultry and eggs. If the price of a commodity is too low, the authorities may decide to set up a board, and all they will require is a letter asking them to do so. This does not mean that all farmers will have a chance to express their views.

The Farmers Union in Saskatchewan says it represents farmers. I suppose it represents a certain number of farmers. I know thousands of farmers who do not belong to that or any other union. But supposedly this union is speaking for them, and if it writes to say that it wants an agency established, does this mean that the producers have had an opportunity to express their views?

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) suggests that there is some guarantee with respect to the holding of a plebiscite, but I do not see any such guarantee here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, early in this debate I want to deal briefly with some of the comments that have been made because I believe it is a long time since I have heard such vicious terminological inexactitudes respecting the provisions of this bill, from both the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

The hon. member for Crowfoot said we were cutting the rug out from under the egg producers in Ontario because they are now in the process of deciding whether they want to set up an egg marketing body under provincial enabling legislation that has been on the statute books of Ontario for years and years. Mr. Speaker, passage of this bill does not set up any marketing agency, and those hon. members know it very well. If they want to be the least bit honest they should admit this. This is enabling legislation of the kind which has been on the Ontario statute books for years, and it does not interfere in any way, shape or form with what is taking place there.

I know what the public debate in Ontario has been about, and so does any other hon. member who has taken time to listen. The producers generally are in favour of having a marketing agency, so that they can have some influence on orderly marketing with respect to those products in Ontario, providing that the same marketing system is applied across the country on a national basis. But they are not in favour of setting up a board that will restrict their production and at the same time allow great quantities of the commodity they produce to come into Ontario and not be subject to the same rules. It seems to me it is about time a little bit of honesty was shown by members of the opposition with respect to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Horner: We believe in one Canada, not ten.

Mr. Olson: One point has been made over and over again by the hon. member for Mackenzie. This is with respect to the false allegation that there has been some quota subsidy, or eligibility subsidy quota, transferred from the prairie provinces to other parts of Canada. That is absolutely false.

Mr. Korchinski: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member, but he should wait until the Chair recognizes him. The hon. member for Mackenzie on a point of order.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I should have said on a point of privilege. I did not say that there was any transfer under the Dairy Commission. I said there was a drop in the quota eligibility in the Prairies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears to me that the hon. member for Mackenzie is making an explanatory intervention, and I will hear him for a moment or two.

Mr. Korchinski: What I did say was that there was a drop of 60,000 eligible quotas all across Canada. I said there was a 27 per cent drop in western Canada. I did not say there was a transfer.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the record will show what the hon. member said. A number of producers have dropped out of subsidy quota eligibility, and for a number of reasons. One of the major reasons was because during 1967 and part of 1968, when there were reasonably good returns to grain producers on the Prairies, a lot of farmers dropped out because they fell below the 420 pound minimum. Here again I wish hon. members opposite would state the facts.

The action we took a couple of days ago in reinstating those who continued to ship, even though they had fallen below the minimum quota, in my view is justified. But there are in fact only a very small percentage of those who fell out of the quota eligibility who are still shipping, and of course if they do not go back over the 420 pounds they will not be reinstated.

One of the amusing things about all this is shown in the contradictions in the arguments of hon. members opposite. The hon. member for Crowfoot says that after we set up this system everybody who has a quota will get rich. Then the hon. member for Mackenzie comes along and says that anybody who thinks he will get rich under this scheme has another think coming.

Mr. Korchinski: Anybody who has a small quota.

Mr. Olson: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, this legislation stipulates how agency members will be named. They can be elected or otherwise appointed. It also says that if producers wish to have a plan of supply management they themselves, through their elected or appointed representatives, will decide who gets quotas, will decide the maximums and the minimums of those quotas, and will also decide the rules for new entrants to the quota allocations. This is what the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) pointed out quite clearly. This is the way it operates. In fact, it is operated by the producers.

What is undeniable is the fact that this bill is going to give those producers of commodities who wish to take advantage of its provisions a new influence in the marketing of their products in the market place.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And to hell with the consumer.

Mr. Olson: Hon. members opposite are opposed to farmers having a greater say in the marketing of their products. The farmers across the country are beginning to realize that the kind of action that has been taken has denied them that right to manage their own affairs.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: You did not even have producers on the board; the committee was responsible for that.

Mr. Horner: Now tell us about the plebiscite.

Mr. Olson: I do not want to excite the opposition by pointing out the very, very important and beneficial results that can come from this bill. Let no member in this House forget that we have reached the stage in public debate, not only in this House but all over the country and amongst the provincial governments, where all ten provincial governments agree that this is a good bill, that it is an essential bill and that it ought to have speedy passage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Horner: The hon. minister, I am sure, would like to correct his last remark to the effect that all ten provinces agreed to this bill, that it is a good bill, and that all ten provincial governments of Canada want this bill. Mr. Speaker, they may want a version of it, an amended form of it, but they do not want this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for debate, of course. The hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Olson: It is a point for debate and, as usual, the hon. member for Crowfoot is wrong because the communiqué that was issued following the meeting of ministers referred to the speedy passage of the bill now before Parliament, and that is this bill.

Mr. Horner: Who issued the communiqué?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is your own communiqué.

Mr. Olson: Why don't you call Bill Stewart and ask him if he was there when it was put together? Why don't you ask the minister of agriculture of Alberta if he was there when it was put together? Because he was.

I wish hon. members would be quiet while I finish my speech, Mr. Speaker, as I think I only have three minutes left. It is an important day for the agricultural community in Canada, in my view, when we have all 11 governments and legislators—

Mr. Horner: It is a sin and it should hang heavy on your head.

Mr. Olson: —agree on a bill that will require delegation of authority from both levels of government if it is to operate to the benefit of all farmers in Canada.

Some of the problems that we have encountered over the past weeks and months with respect to getting to this stage will probably be looked back at in wonder from time to time. People will ask what all the fuss was about. I take the word of the hon. member for Crowfoot that the subamendment before us now will satisfy some producers, but I have to remind him that if he read some of the other sections of the bill he would find that the provisions of this particular amendment appear in one or two other places. The provisions were already there.

Mr. Horner: I should know; I put them there in committee.

Mr. Olson: All this, of course, will come home to the farmers and they will realize that this bill could have been passed a long, long time ago. The farmers who want it, who need it and can find some benefit from it will fully realize that the delay that has cost them some money—

Mr. Horner: It is your fault.

Mr. Olson: —could be laid at the doorstep of those people who are responsible—and they are all over on that side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Richmond rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

If the minister agrees, would you allow him to answer a question in order to enlighten me on a few words of the amendment?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would have to ask for the unanimous consent of the House. If there is such consent, if the minister wishes he could respond. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, within the terms of the amendment, could the hon. minister say how he interprets the words:

—any natural product of agriculture—

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not really believe that I should be giving a legal interpretation of any words in the bill at this point.

Mr. Horner: Is it not crystal clear?

Mr. Olson: Yes, it is crystal clear to me. The words, "any natural products of agriculture and any part of any such product" mean the products that are produced in agriculture—any state of being in its natural form, I suppose, before it is processed in any way, whether a little processing or a lot of processing is involved. That is why we use the words "products of agriculture in natural form," plus "any part thereof". This bill was not intended that its provisions were going to follow through all of the products of agriculture in their most refined, processed form. That is why we talk about the natural products of agriculture and any part thereof.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Then, would the hon. minister—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With respect I hope that all hon. members will remember that we are working under a time limitation, an order limiting speeches to ten minutes. I did ask consent for one question but the Chair would hesitate to ask hon. members to consent again since other hon. members are waiting to speak.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up much time speaking on this amendment; I simply wish to move an amendment to the motion already before the House. In passing, however, might I say that I have listened to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) use the term "contradiction". I am not surprised to hear him use this word because he is a past master of contradiction. I refer specifically to the promise he made to the cattlemen of western Canada, both orally and in writing, which he did not keep.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey):

That the motion be amended by adding thereto, immediately following the word "product" at the end thereof, the words "but, for the purpose of any of the provisions of this act, shall not include cattle or calves;

I am quite sure that if his words mean anything the minister will be pleased to have this amendment. I am also quite sure that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Howard), who was concerned about cattle and calves, would be prepared to second, third or fourth it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has the amendment of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) and is prepared to accept it if there are no objections. I think procedurally we can accept it at this point.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that at report stage no amendments are permitted, unless, as in the case here, an order to that effect is passed.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No. Get into your rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I understand it, the Chamber has before it a motion by the hon. member for Crowfoot, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, which has been amended by an amendment in the name of the President of the Privy Council, seconded by the Minister of Finance. We now have a proposed subamendment, moved by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River. In these circumstances it is my understanding that no notice is required.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I was out of the Chamber for just a moment but I am sure Your Honour would realize that this proposed amendment is a sub-amendment to an amendment, which of course is not permissible.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, no! Come on!

Mr. Peters: You are not that dumb. You have been here for a couple of years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, let us not take too much time on this. The motion presented by the hon. member for Crowfoot is not an amendment, it is a motion. The proposition presented by the President of the Privy Council is an amendment to that motion. This, therefore, is a subamendment, and I suggest it is quite proper under the provisions of Standing Order 75(8). I am opposed to its substance but I think we must agree that it is in order to move both an amendment and a subamendment to a motion that has been proposed at the report stage, provided, of course, that it meets the rule of relevancy, as I believe it does.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I rise briefly on the point of order and say that there is no substance to the proposition of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). We have just finished the tax reform bill and we all know that in connection with that bill there were amendments to amendments to amendments to amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The point of order was raised by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). The Chair agrees with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We have before us a motion in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot, and an amendment in the name of the President of the Privy Council. So that we now have before us for consideration an amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. In the opinion of the Chair that is quite in order. If there are other observations—not on this point I might add, since it seems to me that the point is clear—I will be glad to entertain them. Otherwise I will put to the House the amendment of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am not in favour of the amendment, although I think it clarifies the situation that has developed. I am surprised that the minister, at this late date, should mount such a vehement attack—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. There are only a few minutes left for dealing with the substance of the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. If there are other points of order to be raised, I will hear them. I suggest that the hon. member should not argue the substance of the subamendment until the Chair has put it to the House.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I thought you had put it to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect, the Chair has not yet put it. The Chair was inviting hon. members to make their comments as to the procedural acceptability of the proposed subamendment. If there are no other comments I will put the subamendment. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) moves:

That the amendment be amended by adding thereto, immediately following the word "product" at the end thereof, the words "but, for the purpose of any of the provisions of this act, shall not include cattle or calves;"

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the amendment. I am surprised that the minister has been able to add a new dimension to the debate on this bill by remarks of such force and vindictiveness which have been aimed at members of this House who have been seized of this bill for a long time and have made a considerable contribution to the bill. It should be remembered that initially producers were not even considered when the government thought of establishing marketing boards. The valuable changes contained in the bill have been brought about by members of this House.

The amendment introduced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is different only in that eggs and poultry and products of eggs and poultry are not included in the general provisions of the bill. That means that the producers of those commodities do not need to hold a plebiscite before the establishment of a board governing them.

In other words, this government is trying to establish such boards without giving to the producers concerned any of the protection that is available to any other producers who may wish to establish boards governing their commodities. We support the amendment, just as we supported the original clause, because all agricultural products and derivatives thereof are to be included, with the exceptions I have just mentioned. We have always been in favour of that, just as we have always been in favour of the protection which is to be given to producers.

Although the amendment does not spell this out, the farmers in a province must vote on whether they want a marketing agency and, before a nationwide agency is set up, the farmers collectively in the country in favour of such agency must be in the majority. Each province has taken steps for determining whether the majority of farmers producing any commodity are in favour of establishing a board and, eventually, an agency that will operate on a national basis. In this case the government is flying in the face of what is happening in Ontario. The minister was only partly right in saying that egg and poultry farmers in Ontario want a national board before they will vote for a provincial board. I suggest that is not correct and the minister knows that is not correct.

The minister is well aware that considerable time has elapsed since the government first asked farmers whether they wanted an egg marketing board. That happened a long time ago. At that time I do not think the farmers were in the least interested in such a board. Ontario egg producers were not interested in what happened in the rest of Canada because, at that time, Ontario was not much more than self-sufficient. It is only recently, when Ontario has been supplying the bulk of eggs in eastern Ontario, and particularly in Quebec, that this has become a major problem.

I am surprised that the minister who agreed in committee that protections were necessary should come before the House and support an amendment which eliminates the right of egg producers to determine whether or not a national agency shall represent them. The provisions of the clause we are considering, and of clause 18, will be put into effect without instructions for setting up an agency coming from the farmers themselves. In other words, the government will be establishing a national egg and poultry marketing agency. I think the minister was considerably less than correct when he suggested that all the ministers of agriculture of the provinces are in favour of the bill. The communiqué they put out said that they were in favour of this bill only if a number of amendments were made to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: They suggested amendments, and the minister knows that. The minister has been dishonest about their position on a number of occasions.

Mr. Horner: He has misled the House.

Mr. Peters: That shocks me. The minister did not need to say that to get this bill through. He did not need to be dishonest. He ought to be willing to indicate forthrightly what the actual situation is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being five o'clock, p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed in today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the House might not wish to suspend private members' hour. There is only so much time left to finish discussion of the report stage of Bill C-176. Many amendments are to be dealt with and many members wish to speak.

On the other hand, I think I can say that if private members' hour is taken up with considering the private bill that is at the top of the list, there may be considerable debate on it. I think, all told, it might be better if we were to forgo private members' hour and use the time for the further consideration of Bill C-176.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, from the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I take it that the next hour would be unproductive if we proceeded with private members' business. Therefore I will consent to that hour being used for the consideration of government orders.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): You never know. Perhaps the hon. member should try.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Am I to conclude that there is unanimous consent to forgo private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I presume that the source of the statement the minister made was the statement on the development of Canadian agriculture, submitted by the provincial ministers of agriculture to "Hon. H. A. Olson", on November 22, 1971.

Mr. Olson: That is not it. The source is the communiqué from the provincial ministers of agriculture.

Mr. Peters: Yes. As I say, that was the source.

Mr. Olson: That was not the source the hon. member referred to.

Mr. Peters: I presume that the source is the communiqué I referred to. The general outline on page 11 begins by saying:

• (5:00 p.m.)

Bill C-176 in its present form is unacceptable to the provinces although the principle of orderly marketing and market sharing is acceptable to all.

The minister may give his interpretation of what he would like things to be, but he should also tell us what the facts are. We visited a number of the provinces and found that many of them were opposed to this type of legislation. Quebec, in particular, was opposed to it, on the same grounds as those on which I originally opposed the bill, and still am opposed to it. Quebec saw no reason why it should set up a multitude of boards. Why, it asked, should not the federal government set up the boards, and then Quebec participate?

This is enabling legislation intended to get Bill Stewart's 38 boards into operation in Ontario where he is in a heck of a lot of trouble. This does not mean I am opposed to marketing legislation. It only means that there is controversy in this field and that the minister is being less than honest if he does not present to the House the facts as they are. I suggest he owes the House an explanation.

Mr. Olson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Timiskaming has not stated the fact in saying my point was based on the document from which he read. It was based on a communiqué issued at the conclusion of the agriculture ministers meeting, a document which I am prepared to read or to lay on the table again. I would refer the hon. member to the second paragraph on page two, where it says there was agreement that the legislation was necessary to provide a legal framework for a co-ordinating agency, and that speedy passage of Bill C-176 should be secured.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: There is no question that the ministers of agriculture agreed in accordance with the statement the minister has just read. They are well aware that there is a constitutional problem which means that enabling legislation must be passed to provide for the operation of all the networks of boards in all the provinces. This is what the minister just said. But it is not really what he said earlier. What he said earlier was that they had agreed to Bill C-176. There is no relationship between the statement made in the brief and the statement made in the communiqué.

I understand—I may be wrong—that the minister said the ministers of agriculture had agreed to Bill C-176. That is not the case, according to the document which I read.

I am not only taking the position outlined in this brief; I am well aware from firsthand knowledge, having listened to all the ministers of all the provinces several times on this subject, that there were grave misgivings about certain clauses of this bill. My interest is the reasoning behind the first part of this amendment before us. I see no legitimate reason why eggs and poultry should have been accorded different treatment from the other commodities. We are all now familiar with the special arrangements under which producers have a right to vote. But under this proposal we would be eliminating the right of plebiscite or determination—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Douglas Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, since March 17, 1970, when the predecessor to Bill C-176 was first introduced to Parliament, right across Canada millions of words, hundreds of representations and dozens of amendments have been offered by farmers, farm organizations, political spokesmen, consumer interests and other concerned associations on this subject matter.

The Standing Committee on Agriculture has met and heard many producer groups here in Ottawa and has travelled the nation to seek and receive letters, briefs and other points of view on this intended farm products marketing agencies act. This process of discussion and debate has been long and lively, and those taking part have both supported and, in some instances, opposed the concept of establishing national marketing agencies.

As a member of the Agriculture Committee, I have had an opportunity to participate more fully than most in the deliberations on this proposed legislation. Although it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, for me at this point in time to offer original comment, I do wish to dwell briefly on two points which to me have become abundantly clear in my assessment of this bill. First, there is no doubt in my mind that a significant majority of Canadian farmers see a real need for a national and rational approach to marketing their products. They consider Bill C-176 in its proposed form to be the answer, and thus urge its expeditious passage. Their position is apparently supported by nine of the ten provincial ministers of agriculture, who also have recorded their hope that parliament will deal favourably with this bill as soon as possible. It is therefore generally felt that primary producers should have the opportunity to organize for more orderly marketing of their products.

The second point on which I am clear is that, without exception, to my knowledge, and for reasons real or imagined, the beef producers in my riding, and admittedly a great number elsewhere, do not wish to be included in the provisions of this bill.

I therefore feel I have a dual responsibility in this matter. Recognizing that this bill has general, and in some cases strong, support and that in certain quarters there is a genuine need and desire for this type of enabling legislation, I must urge upon members that this bill pass with dispatch, for I do subscribe to its basic principles.

On the other hand, I feel personally a duty to those of my constituents, the beef producers, who in great numbers have informed me that they wanted no part of this bill. I attempted to explain to them that there was no way whatsoever in which they, as producers of this particular commodity, could be affected by the bill's provisions unless and until they themselves chose to establish a national marketing plan and accordingly voted themselves in. Nevertheless having, as I said, a responsibility to listen to and be guided by the wishes of the beef growers of my area, I was prepared—as I did at the committee stage—to exercise my franchise in this House in support of any amendments which would exempt beef cattle products from the bill.

Alternatively, I was prepared to press, as I have been doing, for any acceptable proposal which would effectively attain this objective. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have such a proposal before us now. I am pleased therefore that this government has seen fit to put forward its amendment which removes any specific reference to cattle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to order made this day the time allotted to the consideration of Motions nos. 1, 5 and 22 have now expired.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed to the amendment to the amendment will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to the order previously adopted, the division stands deferred on the subamendment, and automatically on the amendment as well as on the main motion.

[Mr. Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay).]

The next question is on motion No. 5. It is moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner):

That Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by deleting paragraph (ii) of subclause (g) of clause 2 at page 3.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion no. 5 (Mr. Horner) negatived.

The next question is on motion No. 22. It is moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner):

That Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended

(a) by adding to subparagraph (ii) paragraph (a) of subclause (1) of clause 18 the word "such" after the word "any" at line 13, page 12 and by deleting from the subparagraph all the words after the word "proclamation" at line 14; and

(b) by adding to subparagraph (ii) paragraph (a) of subclause (2) of clause 18 the word "such" after the word "any" at line 6, page 13 and by deleting from the subparagraph all the words after the word "proclamation" at line 7.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

Accordingly, motion No. 22 is negatived on division.

Motion No. 22 (Mr. Horner) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to the order previously adopted the House will now proceed to the consideration of clause 18 of the bill.

On clause 18: Contents of proclamation:

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion amending clause 18 of Bill C-176. I agreed with the provincial ministers of agriculture that this motion ought to be put forward. I move:

That clause 18 of Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding, immediately after line 38 on page 13 thereof, the following subsection:

"Limitation (3) A proclamation referred to in subsection (1) or (2) that designates a farm product other than eggs or poultry or any part of eggs or poultry shall not set out as a term of the marketing plan that an agency is empowered to implement any term that would enable the agency to fix and determine the quantity in which any regulated product could be marketed in interprovincial or export trade by persons engaged in such marketing thereof."

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion (Mr. Olson) agreed to.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear you ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that we are now placed in difficulty. The unanimity to which the hon. member refers and to which I referred originally was to put the motion. I would not want the hon. member to be placed in a difficult position. I think everything is being done by consent and by agreement between parties. When the hon. member earlier brought to the attention of the Chair that he proposed to make a motion and referred to this particular proposed amendment to clause 18, the Chair indicated to the hon. member in question and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that, in order to be able to propose a motion, unanimous consent would be required. That is why I hesitated before putting the motion and looked in the direction of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), expecting that he or other members would indicate they were not willing to give their unanimous consent. That would be my interpretation of the rules and interpretation of the situation.

We have now reached the position where I have put the motion without objection from the hon. member or from the hon. member for Joliette. I am open to comments from hon. members who might assist the Chair in this difficulty.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, on any occasion that I can remember when unanimous consent of the House was required the Speaker usually asked if there was unanimous consent. If Your Honour did ask it on this occasion, I missed it. That is my point.

Mr. Speaker: The point is well taken. I indicated to the hon. member that my understanding was that there might not be unanimous consent. The matter having been raised previously today, I expected that if anyone did not wish to give his consent, that would be indicated to the Chair. I assume the hon. member for Joliette is in the same situation, that he is not prepared to give unanimous consent to this motion.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, are we still debating the matter of unanimous consent on the motion moved by the hon. member for—

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty that the Chair is facing at this time is that the minister moved an amendment to clause 18 of Bill C-176. Prior to that, it had been suggested to me that neither the hon. member for Joliette nor the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) would give consent to this motion or this amendment moved by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). I did not hear any objection at the time I was going to put the motion, and I wonder if the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple has indicated that he was not ready to give his consent in order that the motion be put to the House. Actually, I wondered if the hon. member for Joliette had any representations to make on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is an amendment moved by the Minister of Agriculture. Since he was kind enough to send me the text of his amendment, I shall certainly agree with him.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In equity and justice I really do not think the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) and the House would want the motion be put again. It was understood that there should be unanimous consent and there was unanimous consent. I do not see how the motion could be put formally to the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the point that has been raised is an important one. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) did ask for consent, the motion was put and it was carried. It was only at that point that the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) raised his point. Now, it often happens that a proceeding takes place and the member may not be alert to what is occurring. However, it seems to me that the House by a voice vote carried this amendment. It was put to the House and up until the point at which it had been carried there had been no objection raised, even though at the very moment the minister got on his feet he said he was asking for unanimous consent to put his motion.

Mr. Horner: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker, I realize and recognize the dilemma you are in. I understood the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to say that he realized he would have to have unanimous consent to put this motion. He did not really ask for it. I, along with the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh)—and Hansard, of course, will bear out exactly what was said—listened to Your Honour to hear whether or not Your Honour posed the question "Is there unanimous consent for the minister to put his amendment?", and I did not hear it. Although I favour this amendment I realize the dilemma you are in, and I appreciate the graciousness of your decision to acknowledge that the question was not asked.

This is an amendment which all agricultural ministers want. It is an amendment that the Minister of Agriculture wants. It is an amendment which the government wants, and I would assume that if we cannot accept it here it could be placed in the bill tomorrow by the Senate. That august body in the other place could well handle this chore, I believe.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, if it will help you or the House, in view of the fact that there was a misunderstanding I will accept the fact that I was trapped in this regard and I will allow your ruling to stand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member. He was trapped with the Chair. We were trapped together. Certainly I appreciate the hon. member's decision to agree with the position of the Chair and his understanding of the difficulty in which the Chair was placed. I apologize to the hon. member if I placed him in that difficulty. I attempted to explain the situation a moment ago. The hon. member knows I did not do anything to try to place him in an embarrassing position. That being the case it is assumed that the question has been put and has been carried on division.

The next question is on motion No. 27. It is moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

—That Bill C-176, An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding the following immediately after the heading "General" at page 18:

"24. A marketing plan to the extent that it allocates any production or marketing quota to any area of Canada, shall allocate that quota on the basis of the production from that area in relation to the total production of Canada over a period of five years immediately preceding the effective date of the marketing plan. In allocating additional quotas for anticipated growth of market demand, the marketing agency shall be guided by the principle of comparative advantage of production."

and by renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is understood that there is to be an amendment to this motion which will be proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). Therefore I shall take only a minute or so to place the motion before the House. In other words, the time for the debate on the whole proposition would more appropriately come after the government's amendment has been moved.

[Mr. Horner.]

The purpose of this amendment is to include what we regard as a very desirable provision in Bill C-176. If this amendment, is carried, as I hope and I believe it will be, it would provide that before any marketing agency which is established under this legislation can set up supply management plans or set quotas it must consider the distribution of production over the preceding five years. In other words, the purpose of this amendment is to have regard to historic rights, particularly of the prairie provinces, and we feel that this amendment has been worded in such a way that it protects those rights without taking away rights from any other section of the country.

We also feel that with an amendment such as this something can be done to offset the kind of dangers which arose when the provinces set up their own provincial limitations on the import of produce from other parts of Canada. All told we think this is a very desirable addition to the bill. It would write in a new clause 24 in the terms outlined in the amendment and succeeding clauses would be renumbered accordingly. Therefore I have pleasure in submitting the motion for the consideration of the House.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has mentioned that it was proposed I would move an amendment to this particular motion which is in the name of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). The amendment I would propose would accept in large part the motion as it is but would attempt in the last sentence to change the wording, with the purpose of providing the marketing board or the marketing council or the marketing agency with some flexibility in allocating the future growth of market demand.

Therefore I move, seconded by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson):

That Motion No. 27 by Mr. Gleave be amended

(a) by striking out the words "after the heading General" and by substituting therefor the words "before the heading General"

(b) by striking out the words "be guided by" and by substituting therefor the word "consider"; and

(c) by striking out "and by renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly" and by substituting therefor the words "and by renumbering subsequent clauses and correcting cross-references accordingly".

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion. Is there agreement?

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this amendment submitted originally by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), who is now enjoying sunnier climes, I hope, I would like to say how much the agreement with the other parties in the House has meant to us. I am certain this will be a very valuable provision for producers in what I call prairie Canada. Most of them call it western Canada, but I who consider myself to be from the true west regard the three provinces as prairie Canada rather than using the larger, generic term "western Canada."

I say at the outset that I am almost speechless because some of the things that I was going to say in support of this amendment have already been uttered capably and eloquently by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who obviously had the opportunity to study my press release on the subject.

In any event, I think we can be comforted by the fact that this amendment has substantial support all across Canada. The evidence which I cite is contained in the submission to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) by the provincial ministers on November 22 of this year. The reasoning behind this amendment is to recognize the historic rights and trading patterns of particular producers in certain parts of the country, particularly in prairie Canada, because I think that if we are moving to a new style of agriculture and a new marketing plan it is important that an adjustment period be allowed. The motion indicates that this period be five years, to give the traditional producers an opportunity to adjust to any changes that may take place in the particular trading patterns within our country. From that point of view it is extremely important.

I mentioned a moment ago that I was supported in this contention by the brief which the provincial ministers supplied to the Minister of Agriculture. On page 3 of their submission, under the heading "Constraints affecting Canadian agriculture" they make the following point:

> There is a real possibility that multinational corporations will place plants in large market areas (e.g. the European Economic Community) and these plants could process foreign produce which would displace Canadian farm produce from markets that were developed by Canada.

If you substitute the words "central Canada" for "the European Economic Community," and the words "western Canadian producers" for "Canadian farm produce," you can see the fears upon which this amendment is based. There is no doubt that certain factory farm operations which can be readily expanded have a tendency in North America to move very close to centres of concentration of large population. The information which we received on the tour of the Standing Committee on Agriculture was that the fear was that if the situation were to occur where food production took place next to large centres of population, there would be very little opportunity for the prairie provinces to retain their population and to develop the variety of approaches to their economy which they are seeking. From that point of view I think this motion is worthy of support.

Further on in the ministers' brief, at page 5, paragraph (d), they say:

> in the event of a sharing of markets, the position established by the producers who presently supply them should be respected;

This, again, is covered in the amendment to clause 24 and, hopefully, with the new wording that we have, the crucial sentence is that in the allocation of additional quotas for anticipated growth of market demand, the marketing agency shall be guided by the principle of comparative advantage of production. This protects those historic market areas which want one and the same thing as the comparative advantage area. Therefore, I think this is another point in favour of the motion.

Further on in the brief the ministers make a point about vertical integration. At page 6 of their brief, paragraph 11, they state:

> The provinces are opposed to any extension of vertical integration by non-farm corporations and will attempt to reduce the amount that presently exists. Government programs in agricultural marketing, rural development and farm credit have to be designated to allow the maximum development of the family type farm.

The problem that we encountered in the poultry and egg industries is that by and large surpluses have been created by vertically integrated corporations which have moved into the traditional areas formerly occupied by independent, family farm producers. On page 8 of the brief the ministers go on to say:

> Although comparative advantage, properly defined, must be recognized—

That is a little stronger than the present amendment which says "to consider".

> —it need not be accepted as the sole criterion for agricultural production.

Perhaps this weakens the case, but it makes it more reasonable. There is no particular formula in this amendment. When the Manitoba government presented its brief in Winnipeg, it suggested that half the growth in the areas of growing population and growing consumption should be allocated to the historic areas, but this amendment does not tie down the board or the agency that tightly. In any event, I am pleased to speak in support of the amendment. I hope it passes as speedily as possible.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very long. The motion is a good one, but I think some of the arguments which the hon. member put forward are unnecessary because, as he pointed out, there are other provisions in the bill which complement this motion. I want to see Canadians share in the production of their foodstuffs. People who have taken part in food production should have their rights protected. Those who administer this act will be doing an important job, and as Members of Parliament we will make representations to them if we see them getting out of line.

I come from central Canada, the part of the country that some people seem scared of, central Ontario, which produces nearly one-third of the agricultural production of the nation, and I can say that I do not mistrust the eastern farmers, the western farmers or the farmers of British Columbia. I believe that British Columbia farmers have much the same problems as we have in eastern and central Canada. Farmers in the Fraser Valley produce many of the commodities that we produce in central Ontario.

This bill will provide some protection to producers. The recent surplus in egg, poultry and hog production was created by only 2 per cent overproduction. Such a thing cannot happen in cattle production because overproduction in that industry would take longer to develop than is the case with poultry. I think that what the hon. member is seeking through his amendment is worth while.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, at this point in time this is an acceptable amendment, but I do not go along with the concept of supply management. I have a great many fears with regard to quota allotment and the whole concept of supply management. In this connection I wish to quote a few sentences from last week's Country Guide:

There's no room in the merchandising scheme, he says, for "supply management", the philosophy that better prices can be obtained by artificially limiting supply. "Supply management doesn't solve the agricultural problem because it is a flight away from the mass markets of the world. It dooms us to be content with a shrinking share of the market at prices that become increasingly vulnerable with time."

Those are the words of an agricultural economist. It is an improvement to have the averaging provision that will be provided by adoption of the amendment, but I think it should be a moving average that will escalate to take care of increased demand and increased population.

Mr. Speaker, dealing with turkey quotas in the province of Ontario I wish to quote as follows from a letter which indicates some of the problems encountered during the establishment of quotas:

—turkey growers were allowed to set their basic quota on the highest number of turkeys that they grew in any one of three years, namely, 1966, 1967 and 1968.

Growers who grew turkeys in 1966 and have not grown turkeys since then naturally voted for the quota plan, in hope that some day it would have a monetary value. The grower who might have grown 80,000 turkeys in 1966, and 20,000 in 1967, and 20,000 in 1968, voted for the quota system because he would be allowed to set up his quota on the basis of the highest production year, 1966, even though he figured that he would never grow 80,000 turkeys again.

The net result was that they ended up with an unrealistic production of turkeys in relation to market demand. We must look at the allotment of quotas carefully. One of my great fears is that when you establish quotas with respect to a new product you immediately move into the realm of the allotment of quotas, which can fall into either one of two areas, a political allotment or the establishment of a purchase price for quotas. I can give no better example of this than that of the tobacco industry in Ontario, which is an entirely closed shop. A man can send his son to school and if the son has ability he can become a teacher, a doctor or a lawyer. But if he wants to become a tobacco farmer he finds that this is a closed shop unless he has the money to buy into it. This is a major problem with respect to the establishment of quotas and supply management. It cuts down on opportunities for young people.

We must look at the people who represent an industry and who are asking for the introduction of the supply management concept. For example, we must look at the poultry industry. I know that poultry producers have asked to come under this plan. In many cases those who seek the introduction of this concept actually own or control their own quotas. Let me give the example of turkey production. National turkey production in Canada is about 200 million pounds per year. In Ontario there are 50 growers who produce 78 million pounds, and one producer grows approximately 13 million pounds of the 90 million pounds provincial quota. He is one of the directors of the turkey board. That industry is lobbying in Ottawa to come under this plan. There is a list here that I could give which includes Purina and Canada Packers. I do not intend to vote for supply management in any way, shape or form, but I do say that this amendment is an improvement on what is in the bill.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of the amendment which was placed before the House by my colleague from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). It represents an acceptable approach to marketing plans. I think that some of the provisions we are enacting must be developed within the framework of changes and adjustments that are taking place within Canadian society. The fact is that in recent years we have experienced significant shifts in the pattern of Canadian population distribution. Certain parts of Canada, particularly Ontario, the lower St. Lawrence region and the immediate Vancouver area have become rapid-growth regions. We have not experienced the same degree of population growth in the prairie provinces and the maritime provinces.

The point with regard to production quotas, marketing plans and supply management is that if the entire increase, or a greater proportion of an increase in the marketing quota, or an allocation of new production quotas, is given to an area which is experiencing large population growth, this in fact will contribute to an extension of regional disparities both in terms of income distribution in Canada and also in terms of the rate of economic growth in the different regions. I think it is important that we have some protection for those areas of Canada which are not experiencing the same degree of population growth and, in some cases, economic growth as other parts of Canada.

It seems to me that the motion presented by my colleague from Saskatoon-Biggar will provide a significant degree of protection for some parts of Canada which are most suitable for certain types of agricultural production where the factor of comparative cost and management will come into play if it is allowed to do so. I think it is important that we have this provision in the bill, to be in line and consistent with other national objectives which we must work for at the present time. This amendment is also important if we as a nation are to get off on the right foot in starting marketing plans and are to make use of the concept of supply management.

I think that to accept the principle of supply management is perfectly consistent, in the concept of orderly marketing, with the development and use of marketing boards. That does not necessarily mean that any plan put forward within the framework of the concept of supply management is acceptable. In many cases a particular plan is not acceptable even though the principle may be. A good example is the grain income stabilization plan which was debated in this House. I think most members were prepared to accept the principle of stabilization of grain income in the prairie provinces but objected to the particular plan placed before them for approval.

The same thing applies here. We must have a sound approach to a particular type of plan if it is to be workable and acceptable to the farmers of Canada. It must take into account wider objectives than are at present envisaged. It is fine to introduce the concept of supply management which has as its objective bringing production into line with market demand, but if this is done in such a way as to result in widespread dislocation in the agricultural industry then we have a difficult situation. This approach will not be acceptable to farmers and in the long run will be doomed to failure.

One of the reasons many people in farming have been fearful of what is taking place, and of some of the features of this bill, is the recent experience of the House in regard to the supply management principle. An example is Operation Lift which operated in a harsh and brutal fashion toward many farmers in western Canada. It had the limited objective of reducing grain production in the prairie provinces. By itself, that objective has some merit, but the way the plan was imposed upon farmers brought a great deal of hardship in many cases. Farmers were forced to go along with the plan if they were to have any grain quota for the particular year. I suggest this was a misuse of the power given to the Canadian Wheat Board by the Canadian Wheat Board Act. This experience soured many farmers on the concept of supply management.

The experience with the Canadian Dairy Commission, and particularly the way in which subsidies for grain producers affected farmers in some parts of Canada, is another example. In my own province of Saskatchewan many farmers had their grain subsidy cut off with no hope of being able to get back into production regardless of the circumstances, and with no hope of qualifying for subsidy in the future even though they had good reason for withdrawing from grain production for a period of time. The result is that the grain quota allocated to the province of Saskatchewan dropped from 15 million pounds in 1967 to about 9 million pounds in the current year. This is a direct result of the policies of the Canadian Dairy Commission and of the supply management concept they were using.

The concept of supply management can, I think, be perfectly consistent with the principle of orderly marketing, but it depends on the way it is carried out and upon the acceptance of a wider set of objectives than the limited objective of relating production to immediate market demand.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the motion moved by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) for Mr. Gleave, seconded by Mr. Burton.

I invited comments from hon. members a short while ago to ascertain whether hon. members wanted to participate in this debate. If there are hon. members who want to participate in the debate on the amendment to the motion, this would have to be done after the dinner hour. For the moment, I believe the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) rises on a point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

MOTION AUTHORIZING STANDING COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING RECESS AND TRAVEL OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to tell the House that I have had discussions with members of other parties with respect to terms of reference that might be given by the House to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. This matter has been pending for some time and I thought now might be a good time, if I had consent, to ask that this motion be carried so that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization would be able to do some work during the recess.

Mr. Speaker: Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization be authorized to consider the Standing Orders of the House and procedure in both the House and in its committees with special regard to all the matters that Mr. Speaker has suggested during the twenty-eighth Parliament may require the consideration of the said committee, and to report to the House its views on any facets thereof that may require reform and to recommend what manner of reform may be required;

And that, during its consideration of the aforementioned matters and of the question of broadcasting of the House, the said committee shall be authorized to adjourn from place to place outside Canada provided that such adjournment from place to place shall not take place when the House is sitting;

And that the necessary staff shall accompany the committee.

I may add, Mr. Speaker, that I do not foresee that the Caribbean countries will provide any valuable experience to the committee in reaching their conclusions.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES BILL

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL MARKETING COUNCIL AND AGENCIES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, motion No. 27 (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre, for Mr. Gleave) and the amendment thereto of Mr. MacEachen.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, just before the six o'clock adjournment we were speaking to the amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We were talking basically about quota allocations and where they should be applied once the national marketing legislation has been established.

In the few minutes at my disposal tonight I want to show why western Canada thinks it is important for quota allocations to be spread representatively across Canada. As hon. members of the House may know, western Canada produces much of Canada's agricultural produce. Unfortunately, however, we ourselves do not have the population to sustain that production and in the result we depend on exports mainly to central Canada and to world markets. We export a great deal of our agricultural produce. For example, in 1965 western Canada exported 61 per cent of its beef and veal production. In 1969 that figure had moved down slightly to 53 per cent.

Let us consider pork, a commodity which could come under marketing legislation—in the next year or so. In 1965 about 42 per cent of western Canada's pork was exported. By 1970 that figure had increased to 62 per cent. The same holds true for chickens and hens and for egg production. Western Canada produced about 50 per cent of those commodities for export. By 1969 we had produced 59 per cent of the same commodities for export. The same sort of statistics hold true for butter and honey, although to a somewhat lesser degree. Clearly, in devising any marketing scheme this government must be very careful in the allocation of quotas. It must be especially careful if western Canada is to enjoy a viable agricultural industry and if it is to produce the cheapest possible products for Canadians.

On February 2, 1971, the Carman District Farm Business Association presented a brief to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. The farmers in that association make up a good many of the farmers of southern Manitoba, the part of the province from which I come. At one time I was a member of the association. They presented a brief to the committee when it was travelling through Manitoba. One or two sections of that brief are significant if one is to understand the total picture with which we are dealing tonight. With regard to the production of poultry and eggs, the association says in its brief:

> Where supply management is unavoidable the allocation of quotas assumes major importance. Farmers have seldom been specific on the techniques of quota allocation. Quota allocation will vary with the commodity and the agency.

The brief says that these minimum guidelines should be spelled out in any legislation that comes before the House of Commons. It then goes on to say that the initial allocation of quotas should reflect the status quo within the country. I think this is important. When we talk about quota allocations we must remember that producers must remain in production. Not only that, they must be given the chance to expand production. Talking about quotas, the brief goes on to say:

> They should in no sense be regarded as provincial quotas. They should be prorated to actual producers on a national basis. It is difficult to suggest how the initial allocation of quotas can fairly represent both the asset structure and production variations due to weather, disease, etc. Rapidly changing technology and market demands suggest that an average of the past five years' production record would be a reasonable compromise. Special consideration should be given where new facilities have not come into full production at the time of inception of a marketing agency.

That is precisely what the amendment deals with. For the most part I completely agree with its aims. The farmers of western Canada need some basis from which to work, as do farmers all across Canada. That basis should be the quota allocations. I think the minister said that for the most part this amendment would strengthen that position.

We have been talking, too, a great deal about the supply management concept in marketing legislation. It is at this point very hard not to talk about supply management when discussing Bill C-176. We have been talking about marketing legislation for almost three years. We started with Bill C-197, on which I did not have the privilege of speaking, but with respect to Bill C-176 I was able to sit on and travel with the committee to a great extent. So since we are now talking mainly about production control—price control, if you like—and quotas in association with supply management of poultry and eggs, I would like to put on record some of my feelings of hesitation with respect to the supply management concept which we have had to accept at least in part.

All through our negotiations and throughout our tour across Canada last winter, the issue most bluntly put by most agricultural organizations was whether certain commodity producers would be able to survive in western Canada, British Columbia, the Maritimes or, more particularly, eastern Canada as represented by Ontario and Quebec. The question is simply, who is going to continue in the agricultural business? What producers in western Canada are afraid of, and I believe this has been echoed in speeches made by other members from western Canada, is that the weight of political opinion will result in marketing quotas loaded in favour of eastern Canada if this legislation is passed in its present form. This is a very real and legitimate fear, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Murta: Hon. members opposite say no. I hope they are right. But this is a genuine fear which has evolved out of discussions and the exercises we have been going through during the last three years or so, so far as western Canada is concerned. Every time we talk about quotas, Mr. Speaker, we have to talk about supply management because without supply management, or a form of it, we would not be looking at this type of quota allocation. I have heard hon. members on the other side discussing supply management, but for my part at least I think they ignore the need for imaginative marketing programs in their efforts to impose this legislation on farmers. Experience has shown that many marketing boards of the kind hon. members opposite seek to establish—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I probably will not take the full ten minutes I am allowed, but I would like to express my disappointment that the government has not accepted the original wording of the amendment of my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). I am not a professor of English, but let us look at the intent of the original suggestion of the hon. member. He said in his motion:

In allocating additional quotas for anticipated growth of market demand, the marketing agency shall be guided by the principle of comparative advantage of production.

Now we find in the amendment introduced by the government a change in the words "be guided by" to "shall consider". Mr. Speaker, maybe we are playing with words, and maybe we are not. As I look at the situation I begin to wonder whether or not there is not a trade-off between the rich provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. It bothers me when I see people playing with words, which is what happens when we get into the back rooms of the House of Commons and talk of trade-offs. When talking about a trade-off it is easy to play with words.

Motion No. 27 as originally introduced by my hon. friend from Saskatoon-Biggar was satisfactory and I wonder now what is not satisfactory about it. As I look at the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) opposite, I begin to wonder whether somebody has been playing with words in this particular amendment. As I look at the words "shall consider", I think of what those words would mean to me were I talking about labour negotiations, Mr. Speaker. They would mean absolutely nothing. "We shall consider" could well mean that we shall not necessarily implement that which we are considering.

As we talk to members from all parties in the House of Commons we realize that considerable time was taken up by the various caucuses of the House playing with words and trying to distinguish whether "shall consider" would be better terminology, as far as this amendment is concerned, than "shall be guided by". The original words "shall be guided by", in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, meant shall be guided by the historical rights that we have known for the last five years. Now the wording has been changed to "shall consider" what have been the historic rights of the producers across this nation for the last five years, and I am inclined to believe that the words we have today are not what was intended in so far as this amendment was concerned.

As we look at the population growth across Canada I become all the more certain that the words we have before us today should not be in this amendment. When we consider the type of producers we have across Canada, as we look at the type of control we have in the two main provinces—the population-growth provinces of Ontario and Quebec—and the increased population growth we are seeing in British Columbia, I begin to wonder whether the words we have now, "shall consider", will really serve the purpose which was intended. When we in Canada introduce legislation which should mean something to all of Canada, to all the agricultural producers across this land, then we should not be playing with words. Either we accept an amendment or we do not accept it. In the case before us now, I fear that we may be accepting words in an amendment which may not be in the best interests of Canadian agricultural producers insofar as all their historic rights are concerned.

I wonder, sometimes, about a government which will introduce legislation, such as the Minister of Agriculture is introducing here, when even he himself hesitates to approve certain amendments because they may not be to the liking of his particular constituency. As we see the elimination of the original intent of some of the amendments to Bill C-176, I become very firm in my belief that as far as the government is concerned this bill means absolutely nothing to the agricultural producers of the nation and will mean nothing to the individuals who will be affected.

• (8:20 p.m.)

It is understandable that many Members of Parliament from Ontario and Quebec are here to protect the vested interests of their particular province. As far as I am concerned, I was not elected to represent only the constituency of Moose Jaw but to represent the Canadian agricultural economy as a whole. I do not stand here to suggest that what is happening tonight is in the best interests of the agricultural producers, because it is not. Agricultural producers across Canada will realize that what this government has foisted upon them will do them no good whatsoever. It will be good for the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and possibly British Columbia in the future.

We are here to represent the smallest and largest producers in Canada. We are not here to protect vested interests wherever they may arise. Members of Parliament should know that they are here to protect the agricultural economy of Canada and not to protect only the vested interests of their particular provinces or constituencies. They should be interested in one nation. I shall find it very difficult to support a bill that has been subjected to the type of erosion to which this bill has been subjected. If we are asked to allow this type of tradeoff at the expense of the agricultural economy, it is high time we stood up and said exactly what we think. As far as I am concerned, I am for the agricultural economy of Canada, all ten provinces. I am not here to represent any vested interest.

When we look at this bill and amendments such as the one introduced by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, we must consider whether historic rights will really mean anything in the future. I can only suggest that the people of this country have been taken by a government that is insensitive to the agricultural problems across this land.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Horner: Is the 90 minutes up, Mr. Speaker? If not, I would like to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Has the hon. member already spoken on the amendment?

Mr. Horner: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I will not be very long, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the former speaker. There are two aspects of this amendment, the theme of which should be dealt with. Much of the debate of the agricultural committee centred around the concept of allowing regions which have a comparative advantage to continue to have that advantage. This is the only way we can maintain a national, efficient agricultural industry as suggested in one clause of the bill. If this is what is intended, this amendment should be accepted and some changes should be made.

The amendment deals with the question of "over a period of five years immediately preceding the effective date of the marketing plan". I think it would be far better if it were over a period of five years immediately preceding the establishment of changes in quotas. This would allow a moving five-year period and a far slower change in the quota system. As I understand this amendment, after the effective date of the marketing plan the last five years can be looked at and adjustments made accordingly. After first establishing the quotas, they no longer have to look at the previous five years. I do not think this is right.

Members of this House and officials of the Department of Agriculture have long been guided by the price stabilization theme. The minister and this government have abused it. In their wisdom, they have not tried to keep up the prices of agricultural products. That is their decision and they must account to the voters for it at the next election. In that bill there is a moving ten-year period in which agricultural products are priced accordingly at an 80 per cent minimum. In most cases the government has accepted the 80 per cent minimum and has gone no further.

I see the minister slapping his desk, indicating approval. The theme of that bill is a moving ten-year period and it sets an 80 per cent minimum. In setting prices for commodities, the cost of production should be taken into consideration. This bill was debated long before the present government assumed office. They probably do not remember the debate that centred around the cost of production figure that was written into that bill. Therefore, they pay no heed to it. It is regrettable that they do not.

In any event, we should have a moving five-year period in which changes in quota patterns would develop. I do not know why this government is so afraid. They think the agencies will be guided by the principle of comparative advantages of historic marketing patterns. That is why they want to change these words to "shall consider". This definitely weakens the amendment. It makes the amendment hardly worth spending 90 minutes on when our time is so severely rationed. We have to deal with 30 amendments before ten o'clock. I can think of many amendments more worthy of spending 90 minutes on than an amendment that changes the words "be guided by" to "shall consider". It is regrettable that the government has done this. It destroys the best part of the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments on this amendment. I think that we worry too much about the allocation of production quotas, which will be done in due course. We seem to forget that after all there will be a negotiation at the provincial level and that the production quotas will be established with the approval of the provinces.

[Mr. Horner.]

I would like to refer to the remarks made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) who fears that some members might be tempted to express a provincial point of view. I would be dishonest if I were to say that I do not stand up for the interests of Quebec. Of course, my first duty is to work for my province and I concede to all hon. members that this is also their first duty. I do not consider it honest to claim that one stands up for the interests of Canada by forgetting at the same time to stand up for the interests of one's own province.

Working in the interest of my province is also working in the interest of Canada.

I should not like to dwell further on the matter, nor should I want to miss the opportunity to express my hope that the bill will have favourable results for my province. The province of Quebec, as indeed any other province, can benefit from the bill because of the co-operation and co-ordination between all Canadian provinces it involves.

The concrete results of the legislation are based on co-ordination and on the negotiations which can take place around one table. The purpose of Bill C-176 is to unite, for once, the ten provinces in the setting up of production quotas. Such discussions and negotiations will eventually achieve a control of production, advantageous for both small and medium producers who are now experiencing difficulties.

It is therefore wrong to claim that small producers will suffer hardship as a result of these production quotas. Quite the contrary, when these quotas will be guaranteed to them, they will have the certainty of selling their products ar normal prices and this, I believe, justifies hopes of better times.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the amendment to motion No. 27. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) to motion No. 27 agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is now on motion No. 27 as amended. Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion No. 27 (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre, for Mr. Gleave) as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to the grouping made on April 27 last, the House will now proceed to the consideration of motions Nos. 2 and 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Motion No. 2 reads as follows:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding the following to subclause (c) of clause 2 at line 17, page 1:

"except cattle and calves and products of beef and veal".

Motion No. 3 reads:

"except hogs and pork products".

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, we are dealing with motions Nos. 2 and 3 together. I do not want particularly to cause a vote or to take up very much time, but I believe an explanation is necessary. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) has already moved a subamendment to motion No. 1 which suggests that cattle and calves should be exempt from the provisions of this bill. I shall not ask for a roll-call vote on motions Nos. 2 and 3, but now that the House has seen fit to limit this bill so that the supply management aspect of it applies only to the poultry industry I see no purpose in the bill applying to the cattle industry.

Some might say that the cattle industry, the hog industry and all other industries can organize national organizations, and that the national organizations can concern themselves with research into producing better products and better marketing facilities. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association is a national body. It has a check-off in four of the ten provinces, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Ontario. An amount of ten cents a head, or part of it, for every head of livestock sold in those four provinces goes toward the maintenance of the Canadian Cattleman's Association as a national body. Any other association can join and enjoy the check-off privileges.

An hon. Member: Is that a privilege?

Mr. Horner: Yes, it is in respect of such a worth-while body. The Cattlemen's Association has done a great deal of work with the Canadian Department of Agriculture in trying to bring about a better system of marketing. This association has involved itself deeply in the marketing of its product. If cattle and calves were included in this bill, this would give food for thought to those who are opposed to the Cattlemen's Association, which is now established, in respect of setting up another national organization.

With two national organizations there could be a dispute concerning where the check-off money should go. In fact, the Cattlemen's Association, which has done so much good work in market research and research generally, would probably end up in a dispute as to which organization the check-off should go. This would probably destroy the Cattlemen's Association and it might take five or six years to get another one back on the road.

There is no need for cattle to come under the provisions of the bill. At the present time cattle are not included in the provisions of the bill, because an application can be made to have cattle come under the provisions of the bill but this will never happen. This is not the case in respect of the hog industry. This industry does not have a national organization. There are provincial organizations and provincial check-offs for some of the provincial organizations, but there is not a national check-off similar to that in respect of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association.

With that clarification in respect of some of the negotiations of a week or so ago, most hon. members realize there is no purpose in cattle being included and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek might as well be accepted. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) promised a long time ago that he would take cattle and calves out of the provisions of the bill. He has not demonstrated clearly that he really wants cattle and calves excluded from the provisions of the bill.

This amendment and the amendment moved this afternoon give the minister a clearcut opportunity to vote in respect of his earlier intention of allowing cattle and calves to be removed from the provisions of the bill. Without saying any more, I am prepared to not call for a roll-call vote in respect of motions Nos. 2 and 3, and if the House wishes we might proceed to another group of amendments.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to these amendments relative to the exclusion of cattle and hogs from the provisions of the bill, I should mention that there is great concern even on the part of people who have accepted the concept of provisions being included in the bill by means of a national plebescite. Let us look at the provincial figures. I have the figures for the last census, namely, 1966. The farmers who raise cattle, hogs and sheep are grouped together in this listing. In Ontario there are 28,809; in Alberta, 20,418. Dairy farmers are listed separately. There are 21,000 of them in Ontario, which would leave a net balance of about 7,000 beef or hog men. In Alberta, if you subtract 2,000 there are about 18,000 left.

The fear that these people have with regard to a plebiscite is that a plebiscite of the majority of producers in other sections of Canada, other than those where the bulk of beef or hogs is raised, by virtue of the number of producers could very well bring the other portions of Canada under the Sections of the act. I think it is very important when we look at this bill that we identify who shall be classified as a producer. I do not know how we will do that under any concept of supply management, because all the dairy farmer of Ontario or Quebec has to do is keep back his steer calves, feed them out, and he is a bona fide beef producer just as much as the man in the west who does nothing else for his livelihood but raise cattle. He also is a bona fide meat producer.

This is the kind of problem and concern that is worrying people and brings members such as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) to their feet wanting the specific exclusion of cattle and calves. They realize that if it comes right down to the people who are actually raising beef, numerically speaking in any plebiscite they would be at a disadvantage. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a question that has always haunted beef and hog men. I am referring to how a national plebiscite could be conducted. I will quote an excerpt from the Farm and Country magazine of December 21 to illustrate what goes on and how areas of Canada can divide up the market on an equitable basis. It reads as follows:

> Some of Ontario's broiler chicken farmers are a little restless. They fear that too much may be given Quebec in current market sharing negotiations. Several have voiced an opinion that the two provinces should serve their own markets. Thus, Ontario with a population of 7 million and Quebec with a population of 6 million would produce a formula split of 7 to 6.
>
> But there has to be some give and take. Currently Quebec has been asking for 39 per cent of the national market, with 35 per cent for Ontario—the two provinces have 74 per cent of Canada's output. "We couldn't get our producers to accept this," says Ontario broiler board manager John Janzen. "It would mean giving Quebec part of the Toronto market".
> However, Jansen adds, Ontario chicken growers might accept a 50-50 split. "But there's been a lot of reluctance." A 50-50 split means that Ontario and Quebec each would have 37 per cent of the national market. In effect, this arrangement would give Quebec more than 500,000 consumers living in Ontario—what is known as the Ottawa market.

Here we have two provinces in Canada arguing over how they are going to split up their percentage of the national market. In effect, we have a situation where the two provinces have 74 per cent of the national broiler market with something like 59 per cent of the population. I say that anybody who does not live in one of the more densely populated areas of Canada, who lives in an area where there is considerable production, will live in constant fear of being brought into the ambit of this act against his will.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it can be considered unusual for an urban dweller to say something on this bill and in particular on the amendments brought forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Throughout this debate I have been concerned about one thing. I have heard much about the producer, but it seems to me that no one has paid much attention to the consumer. It seems to me that we should be able to give some assistance to the consumer and assure him that costs will not rise. Throughout all the briefs, the underlying theme seems to have been that costs to the consumer will rise. I was very impressed with the brief of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce and I would like to quote parts of it.

Mr. Rose: You were impressed? I thought it was disastrous.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, I was. This brief is dated February, 1971. In it we find the following statement:

> The Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce is fully cognizant of the need for an improved marketing mechanism at the basic producer level while at the same time taking note of the fact that any legislation affecting this segment of the economy will have substantial implications for the intermediate stages of processing and distribution as well as for the ultimate consumer.
>
> While recognizing the need for an improved marketing mechanism at the primary producer level, the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce wishes at this time to re-emphasize the fact that market prices, as determined by normal demand and supply relationships, are an indispensable part of our free enterprise economy. Legislation in this area should be designed to augment the free market rather than circumvent it through artificial restrictions and controls.

[Mr. Downey.]

It seems very strange to me, when I look at clause 22 of the bill—and perhaps I will be corrected if I am wrong—to find that only one paragraph of the clause refers to the rights of the consumer. I refer you to the clauses entitled "Objects" and "Powers". Clause 22 (b) provides:

> to have due regard to the interests of producers and consumers of the regulated product or products.

In my view this is only a pious declaration of an intention on the part of the government because it does not spell anything out and it does not protect the consumer. The consumer is not represented. Supply management seems to have been mentioned very often in this debate, and it is not accepted by many people because it hampers free trade among provinces. So far as international markets are concerned, we will be shafted and in the long run it will add to the costs of the producer which will certainly be passed on to the consumer. I should like to put on record that when we deal with legislation such as this, in the long run we must be concerned about what will happen to the consumer. This provision will mean a hidden tax. The consumer will have to pay more for his goods.

It pleases me to note that after some deliberation and consideration the government was able to come upon a solution which allowed the vast majority of producers, except those who in the long run will be able to do as they see fit through enabling legislation, to take advantage of the act. I think there should be more debate on the ultimate cost to the consumer arising from passage of this bill. We would be well advised to think of that aspect of the matter.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is generally known that I have always had a great deal of respect for members of the House of Commons who have spoken on agricultural marketing, grain bills, and other agricultural legislation. I have always been amazed at how many experts on agriculture there are in the House, but less impressed with the amount of expertise.

We have just heard from the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), a notable lawyer and a very fine fellow. I am sure that when he got out of college and was given a piece of scroll which said, "You are now a lawyer," he did not go downtown and put up a sign, saying he was open for business as a lawyer. No, Mr. Speaker, he went to the legal profession and they welcomed him and told him to listen to them. They told him "When we have decided you are ready, you can go and put up your shingle and say that you are a lawyer, that in our opinion you are prepared to function, to operate, and to charge fees." They call that being admitted to the bar.

The farmer is a little bit better off than that, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that in every industry in Canada, in the United States, and in fact in most of the countries of the world a type of supply management is exercised. You will not find the automative industry building cars without a market. The minute those people realize the potential of the market is drying up they stop building cars. As a matter of fact they have the industry so well organized that they do not even make a car any more until you buy the thing. Yet people expect the agricultural industry to produce and produce.

If it is a perishable product that is produced then that is just too bad. People will say, "Lower the price way below the cost of production, and hopefully somebody will buy it." From my experience in the perishable products industry I can tell you that people do not always buy. And when they don't, apples go in the dump, baby chickens go in the ash can, and eggs are turned into some kind of egg solid. In other words, the farmer is supposed to say to the world, "I have produced this product. How much will you give me for it?"

I would like to be able to go into the office of the hon. member for Hamilton West in the morning and say to him: "I have two houses that I wish to convey today. I have looked at the market price, and the market price for conveying appears to be $87.50 per house. I want this done by two o'clock this afternoon. If you don't get it done by two o'clock this afternoon I shall take my business somewhere else." Just imagine trying to do that sort of thing.

I am not opposing the system by which the legal profession works. I think it is a very fine system. I think it serves their industry. They discipline themselves. They say to certain members of the bar, "You are not doing the right thing. We, the members of the bar, shall discipline you because you are doing the wrong thing."

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that we are still on amendments Nos. 2 and 3. The hon. member is making what I would call a third reading speech. Doesn't he want to stay here until midnight? He is the one who is keeping us here so late.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The point raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot is well taken. On the other hand, with the limited time available for debate, the Chair generally has given a little leeway to hon. members if only for the purpose of preventing too much time being spent on points of order.

Mr. Horner: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, we have from now until ten o'clock to deal with about 20 or 25 amendments, and then we will start to vote on them. The hon. member should deal with this amendment and make his third reading speech later.

Mr. Pringle: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the advice of the hon. member. I have never made a speech in this House when the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has not stood up and helped me out. As a relatively new member I appreciate this. He and I sit on the same side of the House, although I am a government member, and I can assure him that I will certainly return the favour.

I was merely responding to statements made by the hon. member for Hamilton West. Whether we are going to eliminate cattle and calves, or eliminate potatoes, the point I would like to make is that this is not new legislation. This is not something that has never been tried. This is not something that is suddenly foisted upon the agricultural producers of Canada. This is simply enabling legislation to assist people involved in the industry, if you like in cattle production, or potato production, or in any other type of agricultural production, to create within their commodity groups a national organization.

For many years we have had provincial marketing boards. My province of British Columbia has been a leader in planned production, in orderly production and orderly marketing. It is a province which has probably been more successful in all types of agriculture than any other province, and its farmers get their money from the market place instead of from the taxpayers, unlike farmers in a lot of other areas. I think we should be concerned to provide this opportunity to all segments of the industry, including those people engaged in the cattle business.

I have never ceased to be amazed at the little knowledge which the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. member for Crowfoot have displayed with regard to present day marketing boards. I do not believe they have ever actually attended a marketing board meeting. I am not sure they know who the marketing board people are, that they can call the presidents by name; and here I refer to the egg, turkey and butter boards. I do not think they have investigated and discovered what is a contemporary marketing board.

This bill is simply enabling legislation that is being made available to all commodity groups in Canada. The bill makes it very plain that it is not intended to be forced on anybody.

Another point which I wish to make, and make forcefully, is that this is a producers' bill, not a bureaucrats' bill. The producers of Canada—

• (9:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin).

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): I wish to make a few comments, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment before us, which was proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) concerning cattle and calves.

I think it is necessary first to know who wishes cattle and calves to be included in the bill. We all received a letter dated April 15, 1971, which read as follows:

To all members of the House of Commons, Ottawa, Canada.

First, let me remind you that the Canadian Cattlemen's Association is the national organization representing beef producers throughout Canada. Beef producers are also represented by strong provincial associations affiliated with the national organization.

As to the question to which I am going to refer, I can state positively that it received unanimous agreement from the various provincial organizations and from the Canadian Cattlemen's Association.

The purpose of this letter is to state our position concerning Bill C-176, an act to establish national marketing agencies for farm products, the approval of which we believe is impending.

The intent of this bill, as you will understand, is to allow the enactment of laws to vest the federal government with vast powers regarding the production and marketing of all farm products, except milk and wheat which are already regulated.

It is for strong reasons of principle and sound economic management that beef producers rejected Bill C-176 and asked that their product, steers and calves, namely beef and veal, be exempted from the bill. As responsible Canadian citizens we repudiate the bill as a whole but we have no mandate to speak on behalf of producers of other farm products.

Following our appeal concerning such an exemption, we were given written assurances by the Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. H. A. Olson, that our product would be exempted. However, in spite of three separate appearances before the standing committee on agriculture, the majority of committee members forced the inclusion of our product in this bill.

Our position can be briefly summed up as follows.

When a proposed legislation affects some sector of our society while it was not sought nor wished for by that sector, when it cannot be proven that the proposed legislation is essential to the general interest of society, we consider that government has no right to impose such a legislation to such a sector.

If you agree with this proposition, we suggest that you should admit that the beef industry is entitled to exemption from Bill C-176. We have challenged the supporters of this legislation and the members of the Committee on Agriculture to show us how general interest will be served by the inclusion of our product, and they could not take up the challenge. We have explained that we were not seeking nor wishing for such a legislation. Therefore, we suggest that our right to an exemption from this legislation is evident for all those who care for justice; therefore, we call upon you to support our claim for exemption from this legislation.

The beef producers are still strongly attached to democratic principles allowing popular participation in the working out of a legislation and representative government. Although our efforts aimed at exemption obtained consensus among beef producers and their representative bodies throughout Canada, up to now our appeals have not been listened to.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that such a letter is self-explanatory. The associations of cattle breeders in no way want this legislation to apply to them; they do not even want to hear about it. I believe that the House has no right to force upon a group of producers a legislation which they do not want.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Speaking briefly to this particular motion, Mr. Speaker, while I agree in general terms with my colleague from Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), I must emphasize that there is no truth in the rumour that we are actually relatives.

In speaking for my party I should like to say that we do not support the motion advanced by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I can understand why he and the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) feel strongly about this motion, since they represent ridings in which the cattle industry is prominent.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) might be similarly affected by this, but while he did agree, under some kind of pressure of which I know nothing, to withdraw particular reference to cattle and calves prior to the second set of committee hearings on the bill, I think it should be pointed out that it was not he who put cattle and calves back in the bill but rather the committee. It is only fair to state this. I notice the minister smiles. He has not smiled a great deal lately so I do not mind his smiling now.

I can understand the position of the hon. member for Crowfoot and the hon. member for Battle River; they are concerned because the cattle business is an important industry in their ridings. However, Mr. Speaker, I really could not understand the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I do not know why he was taking part in this debate at all. The hon. member for Crowfoot scowls at me now but it was he who complained bitterly about the time being taken up on this particular motion on the grounds that we wished to get to some other amendments before ten o'clock. I should like to point out to him that three Conservative members spoke—

Mr. Alexander: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Alexander: I think the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) believes that he has the wherewithal to become involved in a debate such as this. I should like to advise the hon. member that we who have been elected to sit in this hallowed Chamber have every right to discuss any matter that comes before us as parliamentarians. He may think I know very little about agriculture, but I certainly know that when my wife goes to the grocery store to buy foodstuff she is very concerned about prices. All I am trying to do—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West has the floor on a question of privilege. It seems to the Chair that if he has such a question he should state it very briefly.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member, being a gentleman, should withdraw the remarks that he made questioning my right to take part in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: I will not insist, but I should like a ruling from the Chair to the effect that whenever a member feels the urge—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: —to become involved in a debate in this House, he should be allowed to do so. Qualifications or brilliance are not required; the only requirement is sincerity. I hope the hon. member who has the floor will offer an apology and will, in his usual charitable way, withdraw the unkind remarks he directed at the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, as usual, when the hon. member for Hamilton West rises to make any point or ask a question, his remarks go on for hours.

Mr. Alexander: Withdraw!

Mr. Rose: I am usually persuaded by his remarks. Therefore if I have said anything to offend the hon. member certainly I will be pleased to withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Alexander: That was close, but not quite good enough.

An hon. Member: Take advantage of that, Rose.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And a happy New Year to both of you.

Mr. Rose: I would ask the hon. member for Hamilton West if he does not feel that farmers should be given the same right to protection in the market-place as any other group of citizens. If he does not feel that, he should go back to his riding and tell that to the steelworkers union.

An hon. Member: And the lawyers.

Mr. Rose: Should farmers not have the same rights as lawyers, doctors, dentists and others?

Mr. Horner: That is hogwash. There is no foundation for that statement. The hon. member is wasting time.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) suggests this is hogwash. So far as I know, he has not spoken in defence of the producers of swine. I think anybody who knows as much about hogwash as he does would be up defending the hog producers. Instead, there he sits in his place, picking his teeth.

To get back to the point, much has been made of this business of withdrawing cattle and calves from the bill. Certainly the terms "cattle and calves" has been removed from the bill. I think that was a moral victory or at least, it was a verbal victory and perhaps a euphemistic victory for the hon. member for Crowfoot. If cattle and calves are not included among natural farm products, what are they? So cattle and calves are included in the bill, despite the efforts of the hon. member for Crowfoot, whose efforts I admire. He is a dogged man and doughty—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: He is a dogged fighter.

Mr. Horner: If the hon. member were a little more doughty he would go a long way, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it quite clear that members of my party do not support motion No. 2 put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot. If there is to be a marketing act in Canada covering natural products, it should be all-inclusive. That is why we are pleased to support the minister's amendment which included all natural farm products.

Mr. Horner: Why are you supporting the motion now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are not.

Mr. Horner: I am speaking of the subamendment moved by the minister. Why are you people supporting it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I think you should call for order. In the words of the hon. member's leader, a leader who is not here tonight—

Mr. Horner: Where is your leader? Answer that one.

Mr. Rose: —I want—

Mr. Horner: Where is your leader?

An hon. Member: Where is Alfie?

Mr. Horner: Withdraw that last remark.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you, Rose.

An hon. Member: Where is your leader?

Mr. Mahoney: They don't know where he is, but they know who he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose).

Mr. Rose: I was going to ask hon. members on my right who are making catcalls—

Mr. Forrestall: Where is Alfie?

Mr. Rose: —if they would be kind enough to put them in sequence so that the Hansard reporter can get them all down.

Mr. Forrestall: Where is Alfie?

An hon. Member: Where is David?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, where is David?

Mr. Rose: I would suggest to you—

An hon. Member: There are three NDP members in the House.

Mr. Forrestall: Where are the rest? I see five NDP members in the chamber.

An hon. Member: Who are they?

Mr. Forrestall: I beg your pardon. There are only four and a half.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, at long last I am pleased to be convinced that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) can actually count. He has demonstrated his ability tonight.

Mr. Skoberg: He has not got it right yet.

Mr. Forrestall: Where is Alfie?

Mr. Rose: If we are to have a comprehensive agricultural marketing bill, a national marketing bill, I think it will be necessary to include in it all the products of agriculture. Therefore, we cannot support the amendment that is before us. It appears, on the one hand, to judge from what we learned in Edmonton hearings, that the cattle producers say they want no government interference. They want a continental market. On the other hand, they want tariff protection against Australian and New Zealand beef and they want the cheapest leased land they can get for their product. It seems to me that there is a basic inconsistency in this. So I suggest that the House should not accept this amendment. I think, in view of the agreement that has been entered into and the subamendment that has been moved to clause 2, motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot is redundant.

Mr. Forrestall: Where is Alfie?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, we have been discussing this question for months. I would also like to oppose this amendment. I submit that this bill should include all farm products, and I cannot refrain from objecting officially to an amendment aiming at excluding veal and beef.

The honourable member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) mentioned earlier that in certain provinces existing organizations do not feel the need for national legislation. When will it be understood that Bill C-176 leaves producers entirely free? These organizations will always be able to operate under this legislation if they so desire.

Now, obviously if these beef and veal producers were satisfied with current results, they would not have asked the federal government to pass legislation concerning their production. One never knows if those organizations will continue to work as well but this Bill C-176 is available to all categories of producers producing a certain item. So I wonder why there is still obstruction or discussion about the fact that in Bill C-176 some words were taken out of clause 2. As far as I am concerned it is a matter of interpretation. The fact remains that by virtue of the wording of the amendment introduced by the minister it is clear that beef and calf can still be subject to quotas if the majority of the producers involved so asked.

I appreciated the remark made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) when he spoke of consumers and protection of the consumers. I think this bill is also aimed at protecting the consumers. In fact, we know quite well that the policy of supply and demand that prevailed up to now brought ups and downs to our producers. Overproduction would result in inadequate prices whereas underproduction would bring about an increase in those same prices. The consumer has always been subjected to those ups and downs and has never experienced any stability or assurance. Orderly production will allow the setting of reasonable prices for producers. It is imperative that the consumer should permit the producer to obtain such reasonable prices. Briefly speaking, the consumer will be protected inasmuch as the farming industry in Canada will be sound and healthy. It is a protection for the consumer to have legislation which will allow all producers in Canada to earn adequate income.

I was both surprised and disappointed at the argument brought forth by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) when he said he was in favour of excluding cattle and calves. I fail to understand how an hon. member, especially and Easterner, could favour such an exclusion. Of course, I would have wished that the honourable member for Richmond would have been in favour of the inclusion in this bill of all farm products while obviously he did not understand this amendment, since it is very clear. Should it be said once again that most of the producers will always be free to be governed by bill C-176?

I am coming back to what I said a couple of days ago that Bill C-176, under this amendment as all the others, is only providing a service that will be useful to the farming community.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that motion No. 3 was not formally put to the chamber. It might be well to put it now, before I put the question on motion No. 2. Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. Hees, moves:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products be amended by adding the following to subclause (c) of clause 2 at line 17, page one: "except hogs and pork products".

The question is on motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Horner) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Horner) negatived.

Mr. Olson: I should like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There are two very minor and inconsequential housekeeping amendments to which I should like to refer. One would change the number five to the number seven. The other relates to the Revised Statutes of Canada. I would be prepared to move them and to give a very brief explanation, if the House would give me consent to do so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Horner: To my knowledge, these two amendments were not on the bargaining table, and they should have been if the minister wanted them. Since they were not on the bargaining table I do not give consent now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is a rule in the book that when legislation is passed it is supposed to make sense and hold together. I do not have the exact wording, but there is such a rule. The Minister of Agriculture did show these two amendments to some of us. One of them is intended to change the number of a section of another act to which reference is made. If this change is not made, the legislation we pass will be incorrect in that it will refer to the wrong section.

The other has reference to the Revised Statutes of Canada. The change has to be made because the Revised Statutes for 1970 have been proclaimed since this bill was drawn up. It seems to me that these amendments ought to be allowed in the interest of drawing up a bill that makes sense.

Mr. Horner: On the point of order, may I say that the proposed amendment dealing with the Revised Statutes of Canada is one which deals with Revised Statutes which came into force on July 15. Where has the minister been since July 15? I have no sympathy with him and I must withhold consent.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Very intelligent.

Mr. Paproski: You keep your mouth shut.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I would prefer to keep my mouth shut rather than make a statement like that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Chair has to make a determination on the basis of Standing Order 75(7). I will read it, and then ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he could give the Chair notice of the amendments. The Chair has no notice of the amendments at present, but if the minister would give notice I would be in a position to make a ruling.

Section (7) of Standing Order 75 states:

An amendment in relation to form only in a government bill may be proposed by a Minister of the Crown without notice, but debate thereon may not be extended to the provisions of the clause or clauses to be amended.

There is a note following the section which I will also read:

The purpose of the section is to facilitate the incorporation into a bill of amendments of a strictly consequential nature flowing from the acceptance of other amendments. No waiver of notice would be permitted in relation to any amendment which would change the intent of the bill, no matter how slightly, beyond the effect of the initial amendment.

If the Minister of Agriculture would give notice of the amendments he proposes, the Chair would be prepared to make a ruling on the basis of the Standing Order I have quoted.

Mr. Horner: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the House proposed a motion, a time allocation motion, which stated the House could take 90 minutes to discuss amendments Nos. 1, 5 and 22, 90 minutes to discuss amendment 18 and 90 minutes in debating amendment No. 27; and that in the remaining time between now and ten o'clock hon. members would deal with the other 25 amendments. No mention was made of these two amendments which the minister now proposes. We are spending ten minutes now dealing with amendments which are new to us. I regret very much that an amendment that has been necessary since July 15 should be brought forward at this point, without a word having been said about them previously, although negotiations have been going on for two weeks. I regret very much having to put back in the farthest corner of my mind the suspicions that lurk there following actions such as this.

Mr. Olson: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that these two amendments do fall into the category you mentioned. One is intended to substitute a seven for a five, because the reference number in the Aeronautics Act has been changed. The reference is to exactly the same clause in that act, but it now has a different number.

As far as the other change is concerned, we hoped to delete clause 39, which was for the purpose of co-ordinating this bill with the Revised Statutes of Canada. As far as I am concerned, clause 39 no longer serves any useful purpose.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think this is an important point. The concern of the Chair, and I shall have to make a ruling, is that the amendments can only be accepted with the unanimous consent of the House. I read previously Standing Order 75(7). The explanatory note was obviously put there for the guidance of the Chair and hon. members. I will read it again:

The purpose of the section is to facilitate the incorporation into a bill of amendments of a strictly consequential nature flowing from the acceptance of other amendments.

That is probably the point on which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) may founder. Unless hon. members or the minister can convince me that the amendments which the minister proposes flow from the acceptance of other amendments at this stage, I must rule they can only be proposed with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I will bring them in at the next session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The House now has before it for consideration motion No. 4. The motion, moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), is as follows:

That Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended

(a) by deleting from subclause (e) of clause 2 the words "regulation and control" at lines 6 and 7, page 2; and

(b) by deleting paragraph (iii) of subclause (e) of clause 2 at page 2 and by relettering subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Horner) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House now has for consideration motions Nos. 6, 7 and 8. These motions are grouped together for the purpose of debate. Motion No. 6, moved by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Moore), is as follows:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by deleting from subclause (1) of clause 3 the words "at least fifty per cent" at line 5, page 4 and substituting therefor the words "a majority".

Motion No. 7, moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), is as follows:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by deleting from subclause (1) of clause 3 the words "pleasure" at line 8, page 4 and substituting the following:

"good behaviour for a term not exceeding 7 years but may be removed for cause by the Governor in Council at any time."

Motion No. 8, moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), is as follows:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding the following as subclause (2) to clause 3 immediately after line 8 at page 4;

"(2) The Governor in Council shall be able to re-appoint council members who have served their full 7-year term."

and by renumbering subsequent subclauses accordingly.

The question is on motion No. 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Motion No. 6 needs very little explanation in view of the fact the bill only concerns producers. If producers are going to control their own marketing agency, they must have a majority of members on that agency. That is all my amendment seeks. That is the only explanation I need give, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As hon. members know, these three motions are grouped for the purpose of debate. If hon. members wish to speak to the other motions, they should do so at this time.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I wish to speak to motion No. 7, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief. Most major statutes have the phrase "good behaviour" in them with regard to appointments. The National Transportation Act and the CRTC Act come to mind. When the committee dealt with this question I pointed out what I consider to be four major acts of Parliament. I refer to the National Transportationn Act, the act which controls television, radio and the media, and the Canadian Wheat Board Act. There are two or three others. They all spell out that appointments are made by the governor in council to hold office on "good behaviour."

Clause 3 of this bill states that members of the council will be appointed by the governor in council to hold office during pleasure. We in this House have witnessed the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) from time to time. We understand very well what the words "during pleasure" mean. They mean during the minister's pleasure. If the minister does not like the fellow, or if he is not doing what the minister wants, he goes.

I do not believe a council should work for a government. It should work for the producers and the good of Canada. The council should not necessarily be the tool of the minister responsible for reporting its actions to the House of Commons. Therefore, I ask all members of this House to accept the amendment which changes the words "pleasure" to "good behaviour". If a man is doing his job, even though it is not to the minister's pleasure, if it is for the good of the country and the producers and the marketing of the product concerned, he should be allowed to keep that job.

I will be requesting a recorded vote on this question because, Mr. Speaker, as I have suggested, four major acts of Parliament already have the words "good behaviour" in them.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I think this amendment is worthy of support by all members of the House. There was considerable discussion in the committee as to how our various acts operate. Because we made changes in this act in relation to members of the council being, in the majority, producer representatives, it is very important that they have a definite period of time. With respect to a number of government agencies people are appointed at pleasure. They have been moved when they have become unpopular with the government of the day. It is almost like the case of a roads commissioner. A change in government means a change in the roads commissioner, not because he did not do a good job but because "at pleasure" in the legal sense usually means that he moves. He may have done a good job, but he was on the wrong side of the fence.

There should be in a council as much continuity as possible. Provided a person behaves himself, seven years will serve much better than "at pleasure", which indicates an appointment for a political purpose and one not necessarily in the interests of continuity and impartiality. Now that we have made the change and put producers on the council, I think most members would agree that some freedom should be given to them. Really they operate their own business. They operate on behalf of the other producers who join them, and seven years seems to be a reasonable length of time.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendments before us would certainly tend to guarantee certain rights to the producers.

It is proposed, first of all, to alter amendment No. 6 by deleting the words "at least 50 per cent" and substituting therefor the words "a majority". I think we should all agree that if marketing agencies are established, it is for the purpose of marketing farm products. Under the circumstances, however, I think that a majority of producers should control these organizations.

With regard to amendment No. 7, I will say that it would be quite reasonable for the minister or the Governor in council to have the right, under this bill, to remove a member of the board who does not discharge his duties adequately, because it would not be in the best interests of the producers to have on the board a member without good behaviour. This bill should therefore provide for dismissal of anybody who does not carry out his duties satisfactorily.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Moore) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is now on Motion No. 7. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with the relevant standing order the division will be deferred until later this day.

The next question is on Motion No. 8. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the said motion please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Horner) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The chamber has before it now the consideration of Motion No. 9. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) moves:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding the following to subclause (1) of clause 6 immediately after line 17, page 5:

"(a) to submit to the minister, at the commencement of each production year, a list of prices which shall be paid for a regulated product for that year, such prices to be compensatory for the cost of production of such product;"

and by relettering subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity and am grateful to the House for having dealt with the previous amendments in such haste so that I might utter at least a few words in support of this particular motion. I moved this motion in the committee after having had the assistance of various law officers of the House of Commons who advised me that it was in order. Later during the committee proceedings I was advised by the chairman that my motion was not in order. After bringing it to the House I now find apparently that it is now in order.

I am grateful to have this opportunity to speak to my motion because I believe it is germane to the whole bill. I believe the hon. member for Kootenay-West (Mr. Harding) mentioned that lawyers, doctors, plumbers and so on have a closed shop organization. They know precisely what they will get as a result of their negotiations. Whenever a union in this country negotiates it does so from the position that the members know next year precisely what they will get. If the producers of this country are to be regulated to the point where they will not be in a position to produce any more and are told so by a council, then they must have a price which is compensatory in respect of the cost of production.

It seems to me that we cannot have it both ways. If the producers are expected at any particular time to produce cheap food, and if a cheap food policy is to be incorporated in this bill, then all the small producers will suffer. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) made quite an issue about there being some big people who will make fortunes out of this bill and I pointed out that there will also be people who will go broke. This is true. The people who have the quotas, the haves, will get richer and the have-nots will get poorer. The have-nots will be expected to produce and to produce at a price which is not economically feasible. They do not have any negotiators working on their behalf.

Mention is always made of the people who are the leaders in every community. They are the big fellows who come forward. They are the people who have made a success in a certain area and therefore are considered able to make a success of endeavours in another area. Because they are the people who have the lower cost of production it is considered that they are the people who should do the negotiating.

• (9:50 p.m.)

That does not necessarily follow. There are many smaller producers who will not have bargaining power. We are told that General Motors cuts down its production when it does not have a market. However, when they bring out their 1972 models they also set the price.

I believe that a producer who is expected to put in a crop in the spring should also know what he will get for it. He does not, because many factors are involved, such as weather and other conditions which he cannot predict. He should also take into account that he is producing a commodity that is necessary but which will be regulated on the basis of the requirements of this country, which is a narrow way of looking at it. But it should be possible for that producer to know where he will financially be at the end of the year. He should be able to sit down with pen and paper and calculate how he is going to meet his expenses. If the whole principle of supply management is at all valid, which I doubt very much, that is how it should be.

I am always looking for greater efficiency on my farm. We are always struggling hard, looking for short cuts and economy. There are certain fixed expenses which cannot be avoided. I would like the House at this stage to take into account all the factors which enter into the cost of production. This amendment deserves consideration by members on both sides of the House.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I would like to support this amendment and to indicate that while there is considerable difficulty in establishing a guaranteed forward price for a commodity, if we are going to have marketing agencies that are successful and that will produce what farmers expect of them—which is a fair price for a commodity having regard to the cost of production—prices will have to be negotiated by the farmer himself.

It is quite true that when the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) speaks of an annual forward price he is referring to a commodity which can be calculated on that basis. I think the minister will find that there are other commodities which fit into a production cycle, and the guaranteed price will be based on that cycle rather than annually.

Everyone agrees, I believe, that unless a forward price can be established there is little opportunity for the ordinary farmer to continue production of that commodity. It is true that when the feed companies are vertically integrated they can lose on the production of broilers and at the same time make considerable money in processing and converting their feed into broiler production. If they do not make anything on the broilers, they make it up on the feed, or vice-versa. So long as production is vertically integrated it will be very difficult for large producers to establish what will be a reasonable forward price.

It is for this reason that some of the farm organizations in Canada are asking that they be allowed to negotiate. The hon. member for Mackenzie pointed out that no union would start their work for the year, whether that be the contract year or some other designated time, until they knew how much they would get paid, which price would be negotiated. Obviously the farmers should be in a position to do the same thing.

The farmers union has suggested that they should bargain on behalf of the farmers across Canada, and other organizations have said that they are the people who should bargain for the farmers. I do not think it is enough to leave it to the agency to decide what the price will be on a day to day or month to month basis; but if the operation is successful, some forward guaranteed price will have to be established which will take into consideration the cost of production and profit. Anything less will mean, as it has in the past, that if the marketplace is the deciding factor the big ones will get bigger and the small ones will disappear from the scene. The Liberal government will then have accomplished one of its major aims, namely to get rid of the small farms across Canada.

I believe that negotiations will produce a guaranteed price on behalf of the individual. This is a collective operation on the marketplace, and anything less will be unsatisfactory so far as the small producers of any given commodity are concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I think that amendment No. 9 meets a need which is becoming more and more obvious—as is clearly demonstrated, for instance, in the case of the Canadian Dairy Commission. Around the beginning of March, all industrial milk producers ask themselves questions and put pressure on members of Parliament and on the Minister of Agriculture in order to know, as early as April 1, what is the minimum price they will receive for the current year.

As I see it, producers would be best to manage their production according to the minimum prices which they expect to receive. So, if the policy which has been applied has improved the situation, it should, I feel, be applied to marketing boards. And I think the substance of the amendment is very appropriate. It reads as follows:

—a list of prices which shall be paid for a regulated product for that year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the question is to be put in just a few seconds. Maybe the hon. member would end his remarks within 10 or 15 seconds.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will do so within 10 seconds. This allows one to end a sentence better. I was quoting:

—such prices to be compensatory for the cost of production of such product;

So the cost of production should be taken into account in order to give producers a chance to make reasonable profits.

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock, in accordance with the order made earlier this day it is my duty to interrupt the debate and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-176. The Chair proposes to put first the motions which have not yet been put to the House so that we may determine which will be subject to a formal division.

The question will first be put on Motion No. 9. Mr. Korchinski moves Motion No. 9 as follows:

That Bill C-176, An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding the following to subclause (1) of Clause 6 immediately after line 17, page 5:

"(a) to submit to the Minister, at the commencement of each production year, a list of prices which shall be paid for a regulated product for that year, such prices to be compensatory for the cost of production of such product;"

and by relettering subsequent paragraphs accordingly.—

All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: The division will be deferred according to the Standing Order.

The question is on motion No. 10. Mr. Horner moves Motion No. 10 as follows:

That Bill C-176, An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by deleting from paragraph (a) of subclause (1) of Clause 6 the words "efficient and competitive" at line 22, page 5 and substituting the word "viable" therefor.

All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

"to the end that the economic and social viability of farm communities in Canada shall be enhanced and improved".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: The division will be deferred.

Mr. Murta moves motion No. 12 as follows:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by inserting "(a)" in subclause (2) of clause 6 after the word "shall" at line 32, page 5 and by adding immediately after line 40 the following:

"(b) interpret and construe the provisions of this section upon the principle that, having due regard to the establishment and operation of agencies under this act and to constitutional requirements, implementation of a marketing plan or regulation of a farm product must not be of such a nature as, directly or indirectly, to

(i) affect prejudicially any comparative advantage inherent in the location where a farm product is grown, produced or marketed, or

(ii) constitute an undue obstacle or restriction to the interchange of a farm product between a province or region of Canada where no agency in relation to such product is established and any point elsewhere in Canada or to import or export trade in a farm product between such a province or region of Canada and any point outside Canada."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

"APPEALS

37. (1) Where any person deems himself aggrieved by any order, direction or decision of an agency he may appeal to the agency by serving upon the agency a written notice of appeal.

(2) Where any person deems himself aggrieved by,

(a) any decision of an agency on an appeal under subsection (1); or

(b) any order, direction or decision made by the council, he may appeal to the council by serving upon the council written notice of the appeal.

(3) Every notice under subsection (1) or (2) shall contain a statement of the matter being appealed and the name and address of the person making the appeal.

(4) Upon receipt of a notice under paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the council shall forthwith notify the agency and the agency shall forthwith provide the council with all relevant documents and other material, of any kind whatsoever, in its possession.

(5) In any appeal under subsection (1) or (2), the council or the agency, as the case may be, shall within seven days after the notice referred to in subsection (1) or (2) is received, serve notice upon the person making the appeal of the date, time and place at which the appeal will be heard.

(6) The council or the agency, as the case may be, shall hear any appeal under subsection (1) or (2) within thirty days after the notice of appeal is received but the council or the agency may adjourn the hearing from time to time for such reasonable period or periods of time as the council or the agency deems just.

(7) At any hearing under this section, the person making the appeal has the right to attend and make representations and to adduce evidence respecting the appeal either by himself or through counsel.

(8) At any hearing of an appeal under paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the agency has the right to attend and make representations and to adduce evidence respecting the appeal either by its officers or members or any of them or through counsel.

(9) Upon an appeal to the council under paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the council may, by order, direct the agency to take such action as the agency is authorized to take under this act and as the council deems proper, and for this purpose the council may substitute its opinion for that of the agency.

(10) The council or the agency, as the case may be, shall within ten days after the hearing is completed, serve notice upon the person making the appeal of its decision.

(11) A proceeding that is in substantial compliance with this section, is not open to objection on the ground that it is not in strict compliance therewith.

(12) Where a notice is served under this section, it may be served personally or,

(a) Where the notice is served on the council or an agency, by mailing the notice to the address of the council or agency, as the case may be, at its usual business address; or

(b) Where the notice is served on a person making an appeal, by mailing the notice to the address shown in his notice of appeal.

(13) After the council or an agency has decided an appeal under this section, the council or agency may reopen the hearing on its own motion and make a new decision, and the procedure for an appeal under this section applies to the rehearing."

and by renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: The division will be deferred. The question is now on motion No. 30. I might mention that there is some doubt as to the procedural acceptability of this motion. I do not think we should at this point embark upon a procedural discussion as to whether the motion should or should not be put. I am sure hon. members want me to put the question.

Mr. Downey moves motion No. 30 as follows:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding the following immediately after clause 38 at line 43, page 23:

"Consequential amendment

39. Section 5 of the Export and Import Permits Act is amended by adding the following subsection:

'(2) Where at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council on a report of the Minister of Agriculture made pursuant to an inquiry by the National Farm Products Marketing Council in the fulfilment of its duties that a natural product of agriculture of any kind is being imported or is likely to be imported into Canada at such price, in such quantity and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to Canadian producers of a like or directly competitive regulated product within the meaning of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, any product of the same kind may, by order of the Governor in Council, be included on the Import Control List in order to limit the importation of such product to the extent and for the period that, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, is necessary to prevent or remedy the injury.'" and by renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 30 (Mr. Downey) negatived.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first question is on motion No. 1. Motion No. 1, moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), reads as follows:

Division

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by deleting from subclause (c) of clause 2 all the words after the word 'agriculture' at line 14, page 1.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) moved an amendment to motion No. 1 as follows:

That Motion No. 1 of Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. McIntosh, be amended by striking therefrom all the words following the word "deleting" and substituting therefor the following:

"subclause (c) of clause 2 and substituting therefor the following:

"(c) "farm product" for the purpose of Part I, means any natural product of agriculture and any part of any such product and, for the purpose of the other provisions of this act, means

(i) eggs, and poultry, and any part of any such product, and

(ii) any other natural product of agriculture and any part of any such product in respect of which the Governor in Council is satisfied, as a result of declarations by provincial governments following plebiscites, or otherwise, that the majority of the producers thereof in Canada is in favour of the establishment of an agency under section 17 with powers relating to that product;

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), moved an amendment to the said proposed amendment as follows:

That the amendment be amended by adding thereto, immediately following the word 'product' at the end thereof, the words 'but, for the purpose of any of the provisions of this act, shall not include cattle or calves;'

The question is on the subamendment.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. McIntosh) which was negatived on the following division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The House will now proceed to motion No. 29. Mr. Rose moved:

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be amended by adding thereto immediately after line 34, page 23, the following:

"38. (1) Where any person, with the agreement of any five other persons, deems himself aggrieved by an order, direction, or decision of an agency, he may appeal to the agency by serving notice to the agency a written notice of appeal.

(2) Where any persons deem themselves, aggrieved by,

(a) any decision of an agency on an appeal under subsection (1); or

(b) any order, direction or decision made by the council, they may appeal to the council by serving upon the council written notice of the appeal.

(3) Every notice under subsection (1) or (2) shall contain a statement of the matter being appealed and the names and addresses of the persons making the appeal.

(4) Upon receipt of a notice under paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the council shall forthwith notify the agency and the agency shall forthwith provide the Council all the relevant documents and other material, of any kind whatsoever, in its possession.

(5) In any appeal under subsection (1) or (2), the council or the agency, as the case may be, shall within seven days after the notice referred to in subsection (1) or (2) is received, serve notice upon the persons making the appeal of the date, time and place at which the appeal will be heard.

(6) The council or the agency, as the case may be, shall hear any appeal under subsection (1) or (2), within thirty days after the notice of appeal is received but the council or agency may adjourn a hearing from time to time for such reasonable period or periods of time as the council or agency deems just.

(7) At any hearing under this section the persons making the appeal have the right to attend and make representations and to adduce evidence respecting the appeal either by himself or through counsel.

(8) At any hearing of an appeal under paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the agency has the right to attend and make representations and to adduce evidence respecting the appeal either by its officers or members or any of them or through counsel.

(9) Upon an appeal to the council under paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the council may, by order, direct the agency to take such action as the agency is authorized to take under this act and as the council deems proper, and for this purpose the council may substitute its opinion for that of the agency.

(10) The council or the agency, as the case may be, shall within ten days after the hearing is completed, serve notice upon the persons making the appeal of its decision.

(11) A proceeding that is in substantial compliance with this section, is not open to objection on the ground that it is not in strict compliance therewith.

(12) Where a notice is served under this section it may be served personally or,

(a) where the notice is served on the council or an agency, by mailing the notice to the address of the council or agency, as the case may be, at its usual business address; or

(b) where the notice is served on the person making an appeal, by mailing the notice to the addresses shown in the notice of appeal.

(13) After the council or an agency has decided an appeal under this section, the council or agency may reopen the hearing on its own motion and make a new decision, and the procedure for an appeal under this section applies to the rehearing."

and by renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Gibson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not vote because I was paired with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who is vacationing in Guadeloupe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: That was cheap. You are without honour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. We do not know whether the hon. member is here or not. We do not miss him.

Mr. Benson: What! You do not miss your own leader?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-176, to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

An hon. Member: By leave, now.

Mr. Olson moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, is the minister about to speak? I take it that he is not. Considerable effort has been made on all sides of the House to pass this bill—

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) has the floor. If hon. members want to conduct conversations or conferences, perhaps they might do so behind the curtains.

Mr. Danforth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have almost passed a bill which will be of major importance to the entire agricultural community of Canada. I sincerely believe that members on all sides of the House have made an honest effort to provide as good a bill as possible to meet the interests of agriculture. Unfortunately, I am not convinced that it will bring about the results for which all hon. members of the House sincerely hope.

We have been considering this bill for two years and in our positions on it we have travelled almost full circle. When the government first introduced the bill they were prepared to accept it as it was and pass it. Because the opposition dared to criticize some aspects of the bill, we were charged, after some ten hours of debate, with filibustering.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Danforth: We were charged with obstructing a measure that would help the agricultural community of this nation immeasurably. Mr. Speaker, the minister assured us when he brought in this bill that he had the full co-operation of all farm leaders for this type of measure. He suggested that he enjoyed the blessing and full co-operation of all ministers of agriculture across this country.

Mr. Faulkner: Where do you stand?

Mr. Danforth: He suggested that there was unanimous agreement and support for this type of legislation. Yet, after we dared to criticize some aspect of this measure and it was proposed that the bill should go to committee, the government began to lose credibility. We discovered that there was not unanimous agreement and support for the provisions of the original bill. Farm organization after farm organization and commodity group after commodity group came before the committee and said, "No, we cannot accept the bill in its present form. There must be amendments."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: That happened after we had been assured that the bill was entirely acceptable and that the farming community unanimously supported this type of legislation. And what happened? When the committee travelled across this country we found that the ministers of agriculture of the provinces were not in full accord; they did not all support the bill. After receiving assurances in this House that the ministers favoured the bill, we found that it just was not so.

An hon. Member: Are you supporting it or not?

Mr. Danforth: You are going to find out. I am not going to support this bill. I cannot support it because it will not help the farming community, and I will explain why.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: We were assured that all commodity groups had been canvassed and that they supported this measure.

Mr. Faulkner: What are you against now, Harold?

Mr. Danforth: When the cattlemen of this country voiced their objections, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) assured them that if they did not like the measure they would not be included within it. Only a few weeks later, when the committee was conducting its examination, it turned out that the government was not prepared to stand behind its own assurances. That is when we began to lose faith in the assurances of the government and that is when the government lost even more credibility.

The government brought this bill in two years ago. In one of the opening speeches we in the opposition said that this bill was not what it ought to be because there was no provision for producer representation on the agencies. The opposition proposed amendments and now there is producer representation on the agencies.

An hon. Member: Then vote for the bill.

Mr. Danforth: We did not like the supply management aspects of the bill, and you will find that those supply management aspects have been removed from it. In the original bill there was no provision for appeal procedures; appeals were to be diverted to the minister. Now that position has been amended and appeal procedures are available.

Mr. Faulkner: But you still oppose the bill, do you not?

Mr. Danforth: Even more so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: You want nothing, Harold.

Mr. Faulkner: You are making it worse and worse.

An hon. Member: The Tory party favours the big farmers.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair finds it difficult to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Danforth: I do not mind the interjections of hon. members opposite. Throughout the history of farming it has been the man without knowledge of agriculture who has tried to tell the producer what to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Men like the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) and the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride).

• (11:40 p.m.)

Mr. Danforth: Every time there has been government intervention in the marketing field, chaos has resulted. The government intervened in the affairs of the sugar beet industry of Ontario with supply management, and we no longer have a sugar beet industry. The government held up the National Dairy Council as a model when it introduced this bill. It is the model they asked us to accept. What has happened? So many dairymen have been forced out of business by the operations of the Council that we have moved from a position of over-supply to a position of under-supply.

I cannot support this bill and hon. members opposite are no doubt curious to know why I cannot do so. It is because the entire principle upon which this bill is based is fundamentally wrong. The whole principle of this bill supposes supply management, which means that the government cannot sell the products of agriculture and therefore intends to control production through regulation. Not only that, but in every instance where those responsible for provincial marketing schemes have tried desperately to ensure strong markets the government has allowed products to come in indiscriminately from other countries to take advantage of markets developed by the boards.

Yesterday in the House my hon. friend from Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) showed how some of these marketing schemes were not operating to the advantage of farmers generally. He spoke from experience, because here in Ontario we probably have more experience of marketing agencies and schemes than other provinces. We know that marketing control is not the answer to all agricultural problems and that it never will be.

I can understand why some hon. members opposite want this type of bill. I know the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) well and I respect him. I can understand why he would want it. Everything he produces comes under a marketing agency and a bill like this is perfect for a man in a comfortable pew, because any competition to his production will be stopped by government regulation.

Mr. Faulkner: That is not what Bill Stewart says.

Mr. Danforth: They say this bill will help the little man, but nothing could be further from the truth. In the actual operation of any type of supply management based on quotas the little man cannot survive economically on the quota allotted to him. In the second place, the only man who can buy that quota is a man who is already well established. So the man with the large quota gets greater production and the small man goes into oblivion. Hon. members opposite are building up monopolies by the very legislation they are asking us to pass tonight. It will not help, it will hinder.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Danforth: Those who say nonsense ought to have sat on marketing boards, as I have. They ought to have directed marketing agencies as I have.

No matter in what form Parliament passes this legislation, it will not and cannot work. It will be impossible to administer, and I will tell the House why. Though the government is asking us to pass legislation which is national in scope, it is not really national. It cannot force the provinces to give up their powers to the central government. Therefore any province can opt out with respect to any commodity, and when this happens that is the end of a national marketing agency.

The second reason the legislation will not work is that the government has not tied into this bill any means of controlling imports. It is all very well to say that imports can be controlled by another department. But if the ten provinces are not tied into a marketing scheme, imports into a province taking part in the scheme cannot legally be controlled. If imports are allowed into any region, this marketing act will not and cannot work. Members of the government would not listen to the opposition when we put this proposition to them. They preferred to rush into the formulation of legislation which will not work.

Right from the outset we suggested a certain course of action to the government. The poultry producers were actually the designers of this principle the government has adopted. If hon. gentlemen opposite had set a scheme up for the poultry industry there would have been no opposition from this side of the House. If the people who produce the commodity want this, they should have it. If this had been done, if our advice had been taken, the legislation would have been passed. It is the government which must take the blame for the delinquency of this legislation, not the opposition. If the government had taken our advice and provided for supply management in the poultry industry, and if it had worked, if it had solved the problem, the other commodity groups would be beating at the doors of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) asking them to bring in similar legislation. But they declined to do this. They wanted to bring in an all-encompassing bill. Mr. Speaker, there is no agronomist in this country who believes it is possible to make an all-encompassing bill work when there is such diversity in regions, jurisdictions and commodities as there is in Canada.

An hon. Member: You are being negative now. Try to be positive.

Mr. Danforth: You talk about my being negative. I am trying to suggest to hon. members opposite that this is not a red letter day for farmers: it is the beginning of the greatest disaster the farm economy of Canada has ever experienced. It is the beginning of the end for thousands and thousands of farmers. If this bill goes forward the small farmer, God help him, has not got a chance.

• (11:50 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: That means you guys from Quebec. Remember that. You are going to get it in the ear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I invite hon. members to co-operate with the Chair and the House and let the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) complete his remarks.

Mr. Danforth: There is one other point hon. gentlemen of the government have completely missed. It is this. Whenever quotas are established by regulation, they immediately obtain a capital value. When these quotas obtain a capital value, the cost of production of every unit increases to the extent of that capital value. There are only two places this increase can come from, the profit margin of the farmer whom the government is trying to help, or the consumer of whom the government is the champion. An added tax will be placed on every unit of either one or both of these segments of society.

The government is not going to help either the agriculturist or the consumer. We can foretell what is going to happen. As soon as the government finds that the cost of an item of food is affecting the index, it will allow in imports to offset that increase. What will happen is the quota to the farmer will be reduced by the amount of the import. We will find that the agricultural economy in Canada will be travelling in an ever smaller and smaller circle until it is completely garrotted.

Mr. Faulkner: What about the industrial milk shippers?

Mr. Danforth: We know about them. The hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner) asked about industrial milk shippers. I will tell him. Under this government, the industrial milk shippers in our area have been reduced from 440 to 72. That is what happened.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: The only ones left are those who had a nice comfortable quota to start with. This gave them the money to buy out the man who had a small quota, one who was trying to start. He just could not make it. That is what happened.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but according to the order accepted previously today his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Some hon. members suggest that the hon. member for Kent-Essex be allowed to complete his remarks. That can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my thanks for the courtesy of all members of the House in allowing me to continue. I shall not transgress on Your Honour's patience. I conclude by saying that I do not impute motives to any member of this House. I am sure every member has tried to bring a bill out of this House which would help agriculture. This is a complicated measure and hon. members on the government side did not understand its implications. We in the opposition must show our displeasure, disfavour and feelings by voting against this bill which will spell doom to the agricultural industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) started off by saying we have passed a bill which is of major importance to Canadian agriculture. Then he alleged provincial marketing boards were not the answer. We never said they were. He then contradicted himself by stating that the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) is sitting pretty; all his crops are protected by provincial marketing boards. The hon. member for Kent-Essex could enjoy the same protection. He knows full well they are voluntary. Years ago, the opposition used the same argument in opposing the Canadian Wheat Board. The hon. member for Kent-Essex is running in the same circles tonight; he stated we had the Wheat Board.

Bill C-176 will establish a national farm products marketing council, will authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products and will allow producers to participate in national farm marketing if they so desire. Farmers have been demanding this legislation for years.

I have never listened to a debate where the issues involved were so completely misunderstood by members opposite. They prefer to forget that a majority of the producers of a particular commodity have to agree to be placed under this marketing legislation. The Standing Committee on Agriculture held 83 hearings on this bill and its predecessor, heard 301 witnesses and sat for 211 hours. I well remember the long examinations carried out by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) during the all-night session when he was unable to elicit any evidence which would support these amendments. I doubt if any hon. members opposite sent the transcript of that 11-hour committee meeting home to their constituents with an accompanying letter stating, "Look what I have done for agriculture".

The first speaker on Tuesday afternoon, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said that the bill——could have a divisive or detrimental effect by stopping, easing or preventing the free flow of goods and services and people from one part of this land to the other—

He also stated:

—that in the case of Murphy v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, decided by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1958, it was suggested by the judges of the court that section 121 of the British North America Act applies not only to prevent provinces but also the federal government from dealing with the full flow of goods and property from one part of the country to another.

I suggest that the hon. member has misapprehended the rationale of the case. It is true that Mr. Justice Rand did say, at page 638, "this country is one economic unit", but he went on to say:

When the exaction is looked at in its true character, as an incident in the administration of a comprehensive extraprovincial marketing scheme, with its necessity of realizing its object in the returns to producers for all production except for local purposes, interference with the free current of trade across provincial lines disappears.

The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) also misread the case when he said that what is at stake in discussion of this bill is the question of free trade among the provinces. The Murphy case did not set out any such conclusion. It was an appeal by the appellant Murphy who bought grain in Manitoba for the purpose of shipping it to British Columbia in defiance of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and he lost his appeal. This case is not an authority for the proposition enunciated by hon. members. I suggest that hon. members are criticizing the bill not for what it is but for what it is not.

• (midnight)

The hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) was very critical of marketing boards in the province of Ontario yesterday afternoon. He said in this House that:

—so far no concrete evidence has been put forward to show that marketing boards have in fact improved the situation for the farmer.

I differ with the hon. member and say that for many years facts show that there has been widespread support for marketing boards in the province of Ontario. Such statements lead me to the conclusion that the hon. member is unfamiliar with the history of marketing boards in the province of Ontario.

For example, when the Farm Products Marketing Act of Ontario was first passed in 1937, it had certain deficiencies. As the year passed it has been amended to become a useful piece of legislation. Bill C-176 may not be perfect, as is usually the case with any piece of legislation when it is first drafted. However, it is a good start. I believe commodity groups can proceed to establish national marketing boards under the act and as the years pass these will progressively change and develop as agriculture develops.

In Ontario there are now 19 boards formed under the Farm Products Marketing Act and the Milk Act. I suggest that the consensus would be that the lot of the farmer has improved as a result of the implementation of the provincial marketing boards. Whatever the imperfections of these boards may be, they represent the highest common measure of agreement in the farm community. The advantage of the boards is manifest. The only marketing board that has been abandoned is the Ontario onion producers marketing board, and obviously the Ontario sugar beet marketing board when the only sugar manufacturer in Ontario closed its factory.

Organized marketing in the province of Ontario is well established. The total output of agricultural products in Ontario this year is in excess of $1,300 million and it is most significant that approximately 60 per cent of this agricultural output went through marketing boards. Any time a new marketing plan comes into existence or a major change is made the farm products marketing board of Ontario conducts an expression of opinion among the producers whereby a majority of two-thirds of those voting must be in favour.

We are told by hon. members opposite that farmers are opposed to regulation. If that is so how is it that the farmers have not taken opposition to the 19 farm marketing boards which are in operation at the present time in the province of Ontario? I suppose there is nobody in this House who would be bold enough to go to the farmers and advocate the abolition of these marketing boards. Take, for instance, the Ontario milk marketing board. It buys all the milk in Ontario from the farmers and resells it to the processors. It fixes quotas and prices. It is a full marketing agency. It has complete control of the milk from the time it is picked up by the milk transporters until it is delivered to the dairies

The Board has rationalized transport and has substantially increased the price to producers from what it was before the board came into operation. The Ontario broiler chicken producers marketing board allots marketing quotas to producers and sets the live price of broiler chickens each week. The Ontario turkey marketing board allots marketing quotas. The Ontario pork producers marketing board, formerly the Ontario hog producers marketing board, has authority to set the price of pork but actually uses a very sophisticated teletype auction system which ensures that the small producer with 20 hogs to sell has the same chance on the market as the large producer. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent suggested that it was an indictment against the hog producers marketing board that the price of pork rose little in the years he chose in relation to the rise in the price of cattle. The hon. member failed to explain that the real reason for today's pork prices is a supply one resulting from surplus grain, and that the same situation exists in the United States where there is no pork producers marketing board.

Perhaps the best illustration is the Ontario flue-cured tobacco growers marketing board which originated in 1957. The board acts on behalf of all flue-cured tobacco growers in Ontario to market and control supply. It sets production quotas each year which is a type of supply management. The board sits down with the trade and establishes how much product is needed and allocates the acreage required to produce that amount of product. On the whole, the system has worked well, has protected the small farmer and ensured his survival. Without such controlled marketing, the small tobacco farmer would have been swallowed up and would have disappeared.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) should have examined the record of this board before making such bold assertions in this House on Tuesday as "goodbye to the family farm" and also that "we are not interested in eliminating the family farms in Canada". So too might the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) have re-examined the statements he made such as the following:

—this bill will strangle the opportunity of young people and old who wish to engage in the business of agricultural production—

—the government's answer to this is simply to help the big operators get bigger and to heck with the small fellow.

The Ontario flue-cured tobacco grower's marketing board is effective because all Ontario flue-cured tobacco is controlled and marketed by the board. It has been extremely successful when compared to commodities which are not regulated by marketing boards. The board is even more effective because 95 per cent of Canada's tobacco is grown in Ontario. If this were not so, a national marketing scheme with supply management to stabilize prices paid to the producers would be necessary.

This is well illustrated by the recent situation with broiler chickens. When the total Canadian market was oversupplied prices fell to loss levels. As a result of this experience broiler producers across Canada are now negotiating to establish market sharing agreements among the provinces. Not all commodities are as fortunate as tobacco in having almost all its product concentrated in one area. In the case of tobacco the provincial marketing board is sufficient to do the job. In other cases, with crops grown throughout the nation, national marketing legislation is necessary because the authority of a provincial board extends only within the province.

Since the Ontario flue-cured tobacco growers marketing board was established there have been great advances in the technology of growing tobacco. Yields per acre have more than doubled, from 1,100 pounds per acre to 2,400 pounds per acre, and the necessity to run a two-year crop rotation has disappeared. It is now possible to grow tobacco continuously on the same land. It was inevitable, therefore, in this situation, with a fairly constant market demand, that acreage allotment would have to be reduced. The important point, however, is not the acreage allotment, but the total amount of tobacco sold off each farm and the price received for this tobacco, for this determines the farmer's income. The premise of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent that a cut in acreage somehow establishes the failure of the board is incorrect and his conclusion does not apply.

I cannot agree that Bill C-176 should be amended so that a group wishing to come under national marketing legislation would have to wait until a bill is passed in this House. With all due respect to this House, our parliamentary procedure is such that a group might have to wait a very long time for such legislation to be passed, particularly if this bill is any example. I do not want the producers of this country to go through a procedure like this every time they want to become part of a national marketing program. If the commodities are set out in the bill, Parliament cannot be blamed for holding up the farmers' demands.

As I have already pointed out, marketing plans in Ontario have been very effective in regulating the marketing of farm products within Ontario. A national marketing act is essential to enable a similar system of farm marketing to operate successfully in interprovincial trade. It is plain that today there is less chance for the survival of the rugged individual. The purpose of this bill is to provide the machinery for the farmer to regulate his own industry through the medium of national marketing if he so desires. Bill C-176 will not obstruct the free flow of goods across this country: it will give every farmer an equal opportunity to get the price that the market can supply, and a better chance to sell his product at a price which will bring him a reasonable return.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): It is often the case in Parliament, not only with regard to agriculture but in many other fields, that there is considerable delay between the time when something is necessary, desirable and useful to a segment of the population and the time when legislation is brought forward. This delay often creates a considerable dilemma for those who are committed to a particular philosophy.

Those of us who were in the CCF and are now in the NDP have been always committed to the idea of national marketing legislation. We have also been committed to two or three other fairly basic philosophies, one of which is that the central government should be as strong as possible and that if necessary we should push the provincial authorities in all fields. In fact, a socialist government means a fairly high degree of centralization. Most of the members of the CCF who came from a rural background in the early days were committed to what they considered to be the family farm unit and the free enterprise system which existed within that unit.

Most of the complaints that have been made about this legislation are all true. It is too broad, it is not specific enough, and it allows intervention by the provinces, government agencies and all kinds of civil service bodies before it reaches down to the producers. If we had had this bill 20 years ago we would be talking in my area about something like 2,000 farmers. It is true that it is not a large area, but there were 2,000 farmers who were able to make a living off the land and live in that rural economy.

Today, the small farmers who could have participated in the marketing legislation and who would have been able to avail themselves of this legislation, as they did of the co-op movement, are greatly reduced in number. Only one-fifth of that number is left. There are only some 400 farmers in the area and some of them are as wealthy and productive as farmers in any part of the province of Ontario. We have a viable dairy industry. This has been brought about to some extent by the advent of the milk marketing legislation in the province with which my family has been connected for many years.

Twenty years ago when there was no marketing legislation the farmers got together and decided that this is what they would like, that this is what they expected to get out of it. But what is happening today? We have a piece of legislation which most members do not understand and which I do not understand. We have supply management in this bill, and we are making an exception for eggs by saying that the proclamation will take place when the bill is given royal assent. When the small farmers in my area or any other area of Canada—this is particularly true of the province of Quebec, and I am surprised that the Quebec members do not realize it—first became aware of the need for this legislation they discussed what they could get out of it, what they had to put into it, what the market in the area was and what transportation could be provided. They could then make a decision which would be best for all of them.

That is not the way it is done today. I am sure that in the province of Quebec there are thousands of hog producers. We went to see one hog producer who has 5,000 sows. They produce six or eight litters of pigs every day, but that farmer does not raise the pigs. Under any type of marketing legislation which we might have under a provincial or national plan we will find that the votes will depend entirely on the size of the operation. The little farmer who used to sit around the box-stove in a rural store and make decisions as to how he and other farmers should co-operate does not exist any longer. The fellow who has 5,000 sows farrowing every six months is the one who makes the decisions, not the farmer who has two or three sows.

The party to which I have the honour of belonging has been in a real dilemma since we started discussing this legislation. We firmly believe that there should be a federal marketing legislation. This legislation can be directed at industry rather than agribusiness. It should be possible, if there is a motive to do so, to draft marketing legislation which can work for the individual farmers. But I suggest that in many areas we are 20 years too late and that this legislation will do nothing in most commodity areas but eliminate all the small farmers and small farm organizations.

There is a member here who has been doing a lot of talking from his seat in the last few days. I have made inquiries about what kind of farmers he has in his constituency and I found that his farmers work in a factory. They live on the farm but they drive 30 or 40 miles to the industries surrounding their communities. That is the kind of farmer he has been talking about. He does not need marketing legislation to put them off the farms; they have done this already by themselves.

I am sure that there will be people interested in operating this legislation. I am sure Mr. Stewart will be very happy tonight. This, of course, amuses me because it appears that the Conservatives are not in tune with Mr. Stewart, and Liberals on the other side, particularly the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Stafford), and others, seem to have the ear of the minister of agriculture of the province of Ontario. He has problems with these boards. He even has problems in the dairy industry where we have a national marketing agency. He has difficulties because a board is already set up, as it is in Quebec and other provinces. Neither Ontario nor Quebec want to lose the board because they have people running it, but they are almost at the stage at which they could pool their operations with the Canadian Dairy Commission. This would save a lot of money and eventually some of it would trickle down to the producers. However, there will be fewer and fewer small producers. There will be fewer opportunities for farmers in the Canadian agricultural industry.

• (12:20 a.m.)

We look at this legislation from a nostalgic point of view. For years we have been committed to the idea of marketing legislation, but we have also been committed to the retention of the rural agricultural economy, of a way of life, of social conditions that have existed in a large portion of this country. And we have been unhappy to see the displacement that has taken place through normal attrition. Many of us are of the opinion that this attrition will now take place at a faster rate.

In other countries, farmers themselves—not the cows, not the hens and not the pigs—have done the initial negotiating for the commodities in which they are interested. They have been able to establish a bargaining position ir countries that have a central government. But I believe our federal government has the necessary power as a result of the Manitoba court case and other cases. We do have the power to establish central marketing in Canada. We must allow farmers to have a voice in the decision of agencies, not on the basis of the units those farmers represent or of the shares they hold but on the basis that they are members of a rural economy engaged in a particular industry. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That Bill C-176 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for the purpose of reconsidering clause 23 thereof.

Mr. Perrault: You are a bunch of reactionaries.

Mr. Peters: An hon. gentleman over there says we are a bunch of revolutionaries.

An hon. Member: "Reactionaries."

Mr. Peters: Oh, reactionaries. The difference is only one of degree. In his area, where there are a lot of working-class people, he does not object to them organizing on the basis of one man, one vote. But I presume when the vote is taken on this amendment he will support the idea that chickens should vote and that, for example, the man in Ontario who owns 500,000 hens will be able to have 500,-000 votes against the guy across the road who has only 10,000 hens. I am sure he will vote that way, because he is a Liberal.

I suggest that the idea of allowing the farmer to negotiate a forward price is a revolutionary step. However, this whole bill is out of date by many, many years and I see no safeguards being provided on behalf of farmers just because they are farmers. I hope hon. members will agree that this clause should be returned to the committee so that consideration can be given to the principle of allowing a farmer to seek the establishment of a forward price which will take into consideration his needs, his costs of production and his ability in conjunction with his neighbours and friends to negotiate the price of the commodity on which their very existence depends.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the calm of night, I should like to make a few brief comments on Bill C-176 to make my colleagues up and at the same time to analyze the bill very seriously and to ask the government, and particularly the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to consider certain weaknesses in the bill.

In my opinion, these weaknesses will bring about economic divisions which will require court decisions for the National Marketing Council will not have enough authority to decide on contentious issues that will inevitably arise between the marketing agencies in the various provinces.

The first objective of this bill should be to enable Canadian producers to get better organized in order to market their production in an orderly way in Canada, so as to ensure an equitable income for themselves, without removing from the consumer the privilege of choosing the product that suits him best.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is always the same in agriculture. I wonder if a solution will ever be found to do justice to farmers but, in any event, I should like to quote an excerpt from the report of the 18th Conference of IFAP held in Paris in 1971. The analysis of this report will reveal that what goes on here also happens elsewhere because it is still called "agriculture" elsewhere. Everything remains to be done. From time to time, some would like to alter the situation, improve it, so that those who live off agriculture might have some security. Now, here is what we find in that report:

> The key problems agriculture now faces are the following: ensuring better income and a higher standard of living for farmers; achieving more balance between supply and demand; improving the methods of distributing food products; adapting agrarian structures; and achieving a positive and more rational use of the resources.

This is a worthwhile aim indeed. Most of the organizations which represent the farmers of the world must stress the seriousness of the financial crisis now facing the farmers.

I go on with the quotation:

> Since the Tokyo Conference, the gap between the incomes of farmers and of other professionals has tended generally to widen, in spite of the efforts made in certain countries to adjust supply to demand and in spite of an improved market balance of the main basic products.

• (12:30 a.m.)

In my opinion, it means that the countries which have attempted to adjust production to demand regardless of the consequences for the producers concerned, have met with failure.

I continue to quote:

> For 2 years, the cost of essential commodities for farmers has often been increasing much more quickly than at the end of the sixties. The higher prices were not enough to offset increased costs. In some countries, the problems facing many groups of producers are not as much due to inflation as to other factors—for example, an inadequate access to markets. At all events, the absolute value of farming incomes has either decreased or has not increased enough to offset the general trend of currency depreciation. It follows that, in real terms, the farmers have not succeeded in securing an appreciable share of the benefits due to their increased productivity.

Which means that, while production has increased, we have not succeeded in doing justice to this category of workers, even when trying to impose systems which, at first glance, seemed promising. The same applies to our country. I continue to quote:

> That is surely the basic reason why, in many countries, the farm community, usually the sector having the most respect for the law and the most stable—

And I believe that it will be recognized that the rural population has an innate respect for the law. These very stable people endeavour to maintain freedom and order in our society. So, these rural communities have, and I continue to quote:

> resorted to certain forms of protest in order to make themselves heard. One cannot but regret the need for such forms of action, but often enough they have represented the only way of fighting the people's—and even the government's—indifference and apathy.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the same thing is happening in Canada. A few days ago, a demonstration was held here by a large delegation of producers from Quebec who came here to meet the Minister of Agriculture Mr. Olson), who is the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, and to make representations for equality of opportunity in the food industry in order to be able to produce at a cost comparable to that prevailing in other Canadian regions. And these people who came here to give their sincere support to their members left without getting much satisfaction. They wanted to use that sort of pressure in order to have their rights acknowledged and to try and obtain justice.

To be really fair towards all areas of Canada, the government will have to assure the eastern producers that they will be able to get their grain supplies at the same price as western producers, so that their production costs will not be higher, thus allowing them to make about as much profit as is made in other parts of the country.

I consider this as a necessary first step if we really want Bill C-176 finally to bring favourable results. But we shall have to make a good start by providing all Canadian producers with equal opportunities.

In my opinion, the marketing of grain at uniform prices throughout Canada would be instrumental in achieving better conditions for the establishment and operation of marketing agencies, failing which conflicts of interest would arise between economic areas. This point has been raised many times during the debate by hon. members representing various regions of Canada who did so, I believe, quite sincerely in order to press the government to bring forward likely to promote better understanding and achieving equal economic opportunities throughout the land.

If such action is not taken, marketing conflicts will continue to emerge even after Bill C-176 has been passed. There will still be pilgrimages of Eastern farmers to Ottawa to make representations to the government, seeking to obtain fair treatment, even though such representations, according to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard), are tantamount to intimidation manœuvers which the government does not fear.

After parading on several occasions in recent years before federal ministers and various officials and failing to convince ministers of the validity of producers' grievances, the leaders of producers' unions and farmers' organizations then decided, as I was just saying, to make massive representations. Those people have to spend money—of which they have too little as it is—in order to come and make representations; but in face of need, in face of their leaders' insistence on their taking the trouble to travel in order to try and make their point, they still accept to make this sacrifice. In other words, they go back thinking that the ministers listened to them but were not determined to act upon their valid grievances. Each of them then goes home thinking that the federal government does not act and is not fair to them.

For this reason we see groups which aim at regionalizing Canada spring up across the country, be it in eastern, western, or central Canada. Having promoted this concept, they still fail to improve the situation. So we see separatist movements being born everywhere, and I am afraid that unless the situation is improved at the roots—at the economic level—far from improving, it will go on worsening.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of all those situations, I am extremely upset and I appeal to all hon. members. I am aware that my appeal may mean nothing, but in any event allow me to express at least one wish, as this is the last day of the year and I think we are going to use it properly. At the rate at which we are going we will be fit to start the year 1972 on the right foot. Anyway, here is my wish: even if Liberal members boast about exerting pressure within their party, the fact remains that they fail to bring about many changes in this government's grain policy. In fact, if I may refer to a government member who said that he barks very loud inside his party, a producer once said quite rightly that he could not bark any farther than the leash which restrained him. I thought it was a marvelous remark, Mr. Speaker.

• (12:40 a.m.)

If we take into account the events that for several years have taken place in this House, we find that such comments have been very often made. This is why I suggest that the institution wherein we are gathered tonight is a very special place for the people's representatives because they can express opinions and make effective representations.

Finally, I believe that the proceedings in the House of Commons and the official positions that are defined are the best means of exerting pressure, and I think that when the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) met with the producers of Quebec last week and apologized for leaving the delegation, he rightly stated that he had been elected to the House of Commons to work and that it was his duty to be there. I also agree with this opinion of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

I still believe that Parliament is the most suitable public place for an elected representative to effectively defend the people's interests be they at the farm producers' or the Canadian consumers' levels.

The bill—and it is an important aspect—should provide that when it is necessary for Canada to import a designated farm product, this product be marketed by marketing agencies as would be a farm product produced in Canada. This procedure is not new because it is already implemented in regard to alcoholic beverages. We all know that imported alcoholic beverages are marketed in Canada through provincial liquor boards and nobody complains. This would not entail any reprisals against any country because they would be domestic boards, and that has nothing to do with external policy.

The minister already said that there are other bodies responsible for issuing import permits. I admit it but that is beside the point. We have to include in the bill a provision to the effect that when a farm product is imported with a permit that product be marketed through marketing agencies in that category. I think we will have very serious problems and producers in Canada will have to fight competition on the domestic market if importers sometimes unknown to the public try above all to make money even if it should be detrimental to the producers in Canada.

A moment ago the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) emphasized this and he was right when he said that producers in Canada will sometimes have to suffer from price setting which will not in fact take into account the production cost because of uncontrolled imports which could bring about a decrease in the prices which should benefit the producers in Canada. Such a policy would not be advantageous to farm producers in Canada.

This is why I ask that any imported natural farm product be subject to the same marketing rules which apply to Canadian products, and I do so because clause 3 of this bill is seriously deficient. In fact, although it says that the majority of the members of the National Marketing Council will be primary producers, the fact still remains that they will be designated by the government. So they will be political appointees and I blame the government for not allowing the farm organizations concerned to designate their representatives to this council, and I think that this might place agriculture under the dependence of the federal government.

This is why earlier, through an amendment at the report stage, if I may point this out, Mr. Speaker, an appeal was made to the government for the officers that will manage these agencies to be mostly farmers and producers, so that they will have this additional protection which they absolutely need.

Clause 19 leaves the government entirely free to appoint the members of marketing agencies. Again, I fear that those directly concerned, that is, the producers, will not have an opportunity to control the marketing of their own production. If I had had time, I should have liked to deal with the question of quotas. In any case, this question was analyzed rather at length and everyone expressed his opinion on that subject.

I think I must conclude, Mr. Speaker, by proposing a motion that I consider reasonable. Perhaps I will be accused of delaying adoption of this bill. They will say that I want the bill referred to the Committee on Agriculture so that its adoption takes even more time, but that is not the question. I do this because under the Standing Orders I did not have the opportunity to move a motion at the report stage. Under those circumstances one must accept the procedure and I have an opportunity on third reading. Here is my motion.

Seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) I move:

That Bill C-176 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to amend clause 2(c) of the said bill in order to include any imported natural product of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to have to advise the hon. member that since an amendment motion has already been introduced, his motion cannot be accepted at this moment. However the hon. member may have the opportunity, later on during the debate which has barely started, of presenting his amendment motion.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the House of Commons is living a rather historic moment this evening in that we have gathered here in Ottawa, this week, quite an impressive number of members from right across Canada. In view of the time of the year, between Christmas and New Year's, I believe this is a precedent, since we have worked exclusively for Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, with this bill which we all hope will become law tomorrow, we are for the first time introducing into our Canadian statutes a great principle which will be recognized nationally; this, I feel, is a new start for the Canadian agricultural industry.

Of course, this legislation is not perfect, as it has been mentioned. Indeed no legislation is perfect. However, it is a beginning and I am confident that this government or the following ones will amend it, when experience has shown that it is necessary to do so.

During the lengthy debate on this bill, we had the opportunity to hear all kinds of views, proposals, assumptions and suspicions to the effect that the government wanted to destroy the small farms and control Canadian agriculture. Indeed, this was stated a while ago by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. However, I find it curious that a bill which is so bad has practically been approved by a member of the opposition who is precisely one of those who have been leading the debate against that bill for almost 18 months. Indeed, on April 27, 1971, when we undertook consideration of that bill, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) said, as can be found on page 5294 of Hansard, and I quote:

• (12:50 a.m.)

As I understand it, this is basically enabling legislation or, at the utmost, permissive legislation. Nobody will be involved unless he wishes to be. This is enabling legislation which will encompass no part of the agricultural industry unless it really wants to be encompassed.

How come, Mr. Speaker, that this official spokesman for the opposition has been able to claim all through the debate, which lasted 18 months, that this legislation is a yoke, a threat to Canadian agriculture, while he himself, if he is an expert as he claims to be—and I think that he really knows agriculture—made, on April 27, the statement that I have just quoted?

Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic party has also moved an amendment asking that consideration of the bill be postponed or that the bill be referred back to the committee for further study.

Mr. Speaker, I have personally attended every meeting of the committee and there have been many. I am not ready to support such a proposal, because nothing would be gained by referring the bill back to the committee. At any rate, the present session will end in a few hours. Obviously, the motion of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is completely out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that this is a permissive measure, which means that the bill authorizes groups of producers to make use of delegated federal and provincial powers to market their products. Some say that this will mark the end of the small farms. It is possible that some small farms will disappear, as thousands have disappeared over the years but not because of that bill. They will disappear for many other reasons, just as all kinds of industries and undertakings disappear and others are born every day, every month.

This bill will strengthen the whole Canadian agriculture. As for those who fear for it the detrimental effect of imports, let me reassure them and tell them that marketing agencies are the best tools to honestly control imports since imported products will be put on the market in provinces where there will be such agencies and that an imported product will have to go through that kind of agency before being put on the market if such product is controlled in the province in question. So, there is no reason for fear in that sector.

As for those who are making all kinds of interpretations regarding this bill, I will answer them that some people said that the government had retreated, that it had accepted compromises, it was said that this was bad legislation, that we had to accept scores of amendments. On the one hand, when we introduce a bill, we are told: If you do not accept amendments, you are obstinate. On the other hand, when we agree to amendments, we are accused of bringing in bad legislation and of not knowing whether we are coming or going.

People will have to make up their minds one of these days and know what they want. Or the government will present unalterable bills and then we, government members, will not agree because we want to have the right to discuss and amend proposals when we feel it is necessary. And this is precisely what has been done in the case of several other bills that were passed.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced the measure before us is good. It is the best that we could pass in the circumstances.

It is my personal conviction that producers now facing marketing problems of eggs, poultry and related products will almost immediately avail themselves of the benefits of the legislation.

As far as other products are concerned, the legislation will be available to producers who want to resort to it, since it will be included in our statutes as of tomorrow.

The legislation has been described as "permissive" and it will be up to producers, and to them only, to determine whether or not they want to avail themselves of it. The decision will be that of a majority of producers, as is specified in several places in the bill and again today in an amendment to clause 2, which eliminates the designation of products while effectively excluding no products. Products will come under the bill as and when required by the producers. The bill is at their disposal and I am convinced that it is good. Of course it will not solve all problems. Nobody thinks that. It is a tool to solve our problems.

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) mentioned earlier the representation made by the farmers last week in Ottawa and the fact that, as parliamentary secretary to the minister, I have stated that these pressure groups could not intimidate us. Such groups do not intimidate us. When groups come to make objective representations and express themselves respectfully, there is no problem and they are welcome. But when individuals, members of a group, use language which I do not tolerate and do not use, I have a right to object to their using such language, and that is what I said to one or two individuals in that group. And I am not afraid to take such a stand.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) was speaking yesterday on behalf of his party—I presume that such was the case—when he stated as recorded on page 10833 of Hansard and I quote:

—And a great number of those remaining will go the same way with the coming into force of Bill C-176—the most infamous bill ever proposed to a nation. We are dragging farmers out by the neck. Whether they like it or not, they will have to follow, (it is) dictatorship.

I completely disagree with this statement of the member for Compton. There is absolutely no dictatorship but true democracy, since they will decide themselves, through a democratic vote, whether to use this legislation. It is not an infamous legislation, but one that was requested by the farming associations over the last 30 years, and unanimously by the people of the Quebec C.F.U.

If they claim to represent the farming people, the Social Crediters were entirely mistaken in taking their present position with regard to Bill C-176. I think the farmers will know who are their true friends in Ottawa. They are not necessarily those who are barking, as the hon. member for Bellechasse said earlier. It is not by barking that results are achieved, but through sustained work done here by scores of hon. members in committee and in the cabinet, in co-operation with the ministers. Those are the ones who do the work in the background, not some brilliant demagogic work intended to make the head-lines, but some constantly constructive work. That is what we are trying to do and what we will continue to do, whatever may say those who are trying to degrade us here in this House.

Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see the end of this long debate tonight and in concluding my remarks, I should like to thank sincerely all the members who have helped us in every way, especially those from the government party who supported us during the numerous committee sittings. I want to thank them because it was not easy and I know it. I want to thank, for their presence, the 115 government members who were here tonight.

When they hear that the leaders of the opposition parties would not even come here tonight to take part in this debate and vote on this bill, the farmers will know which members are really concerned about the agricultural community.

In concluding, I wish 1972 will be a year of prosperity for the farmers and for the Canadian people generally.

[English]

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing the culmination of a debate which has lasted for years. It was a disappointment to us to find that after Bill C-197 in its original form had died on the order paper following major criticisms by producers across the country, instead of remodelling the measure on the lines requested by the producers, the minister saw fit to bring it back in substantially the same form. This led to the controversy which has taken place and to the changes for which we have fought so hard and so wearily in the months since Bill C-176 was brought down.

I do not think anybody in the country is against marketing boards as such. My concept, and I think the concept held by most producers, is that of producers banded together to negotiate on the best possible basis, to research the world to find markets for their products and bargain on the most advantageous terms. This is my concept, and I think the concept of the majority of those in this House as well as all the producers of the country, with regard to marketing boards. The hang-up comes from the supply management aspect. Supply management cannot help but be inward looking. It is a withdrawal from the markets of the world.

• (1:00 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Downey: It has to be inward looking. Supply management in any country, Canada in particular, cannot work without import controls. We all know that to the degree we depend on export we cannot have import control because we will ruin our total export base. This is the bind we are in.

Supply management becomes impractical when you look at it in terms of designated quotas and this type of thing. This is where we run into trouble. Maybe we should look at the motives of those that seek supply management.

In response to the remarks made by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) said this afternoon: "You do not know anything about marketing boards. You do not know a member of one of those boards. You do not know what they are like at all."

I want to read a profile of an individual who is pushing quotas and supply management in this province and a profile of an individual who presented evidence at the egg inquiry in Ontario. I will not name the gentleman. He has been chairman of the egg board. He is or has been a director of many of the poultry organizations in the country. This is the way his record reads. He is the biggest Purina feed dealer west of Toronto. He owns a turkey hatchery and a turkey processing plant. He has about 50 per cent of the Ontario quota, which amounts to about 7 per cent of the Canadian turkey quota. He has over 100,000 hens, a broiler quota and 500 head of beef cattle. At the time he was going around Ontario campaigning for quotas and supply management, he had buildings under construction in order to increase his quota. I have pictures of those buildings under construction. When this was brought to the attention of the court, he backed off and stopped building. That is a portfolio of one gentleman seeking supply management in this country.

I have another portfolio of an individual who appeared before the present egg inquiry in Ontario. This lady was only two weeks out of hospital after having a baby. She has seven or eight children. She told how they scraped and saved in order to keep their family going. Yet they stayed in business against the large integrators. I quote one small section from her brief:

> In the proposed marketing plan the producer-grader is assured of being able to continue his present operations. However, in the same plan it also clearly states that the board shall have control of all eggs. I haven't been able to obtain from any board director quotas at any meeting I have attended or a clear direction as to the board's intention. Therefore, we cannot help but be apprehensive when we see what happened to producer-graders in Quebec under Fedco.
> It is only logical that if producer-graders are allowed to continue under the proposed plan, they will become very quickly a thorn in the side of the board. They can undersell, and, most important, they have quality and the personal touch many people appreciate. Once again referring to Fedco, it was not only the price differential that caused the black marketing of eggs, it was quality. Droves of Quebeckers came to Ontario seeking fresh eggs and what did Quebec become but literally a police state; raiding stores, stopping and searching trucks and even individual cars. Democracy?

That is what one person has to say about supply management. She went on to talk about the fact that the farmer feeder can still compete against the large integrators. This was borne out in the evidence time and again at the egg inquiry in Ontario.

It is the large integrator who is worried about what is happening. He wants to maintain the price with supply management. We run into cases where people tie themselves up in order to increase their quotas to feed companies and integrated operations of this type. Even though they are producers of grain and have grain on their farms, their contract which enables them to borrow the money to carry on states that they must go to the mill to buy their feed. They cannot use their own feed. In effect, they cannot function as farmer feeders any longer because of this credit requirement. It is these people who depend on the integrators. It is the integrators who are pushing the concept of supply management.

On top of that, we still have inherent in Bill C-176 the clause that relates to anyone involved with the bill not being liable to prosecution under the anti-combines act. What value is the competition act to the small producer looking after himself in a situation where he is competing against the integrator? The fact is that in many cases quotas represent a great deal of money. I and others have spoken of what happened with the tobacco situation in southern Ontario. We have the same situation here with regard to the egg quotas where quotas are worth $3 a bird.

I have people on my list who have 250,000 or 300,000 birds. A quota is worth over $1 million to these people. We are trading in very large figures here. This is what is happening today with the concept of supply management.

There are various other factors that enter into this bill which have been well covered today. I was disappointed when I listened to the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Stafford). I hesitate to mention this when the member is not in the chamber, but he spoke of the success of the Ontario hog board and how it set price. He spoke of oversupply and of the great things that boards like this do.

This country is the next door neighbour of the United States. How much of the total hog production do we have? Is it 5 per cent, 7 per cent? I think it is around 7 per cent. Whether we produce or do not produce, they will come in and fill the gap. It means nothing if we reduce our stocks or capacity to produce, because somebody else will just step in and fill the gap.

• (1:10 a.m.)

We depend a great deal on the supports they have in the United States in respect of their agricultural commodities. It is true this might work against us in respect of horticultural crops, but in respect of grain and oilseed crops all the production in the United States which has support on crops works to our advantage, because it maintains the price at a certain level below the border and the benefits flow over to us. So we cannot afford to think about import controls even though import controls would be inherent in any successful supply management situation.

I shall not go any further than that; I know the hour is late. It seems rather in keeping with the way the government has conducted itself on this bill that it sees fit to bring in third reading on such a bill some time after 11 o'clock at night the day before New Year's. The minister had the opportunity at the time Bill C-197 died on the Order Paper, as he did when Bill C-176 was introduced in this House, to make all these changes we have been talking about over the months, instead of making them at this time and place. I think it does the minister very little credit to have this situation develop at this point in time.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House now for four years and I do not think there has ever been an occasion so auspicious as this night when, at 15 minutes after one o'clock in the morning, we are in the middle of a debate on third reading of a major farm marketing bill which will do a great deal to improve agriculture in Canada.

As a person who has been heavily involved in agriculture, and in the dairy industry primarily, as one who has spent many late hours on problems involving cows calving or general farm work, who has had the privilege to attend the same institution as the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) as an agricultural representative in Eastern Ontario in the very historic counties of Prescott and Glengarry, as a person involved in dairy farming, as one involved in the agricultural industry as a professional agriculturalist, as a graduate in animal husbandry from the Ontario Agricultural College, and as one who has worked more in agriculture than many members far older than myself in this House, I have never had an opportunity to work into the small hours of the morning doing something that is more rewarding and beneficial for farmers than taking part in this decision-making process in the House of Commons which brings into fruition this marketing bill.

Let me assure the hon. member for Kent-Essex, a man whose personal integrity I respect very much, that surely he will be fair enough to recognize that no one on this side has ever said—at least, I have never heard it said by anyone on this side—that this bill would be a panacea and solve all agriculture's problems. It will provide the framework under which the provinces or groups of agricultural producers could, if and when they wanted, get together to direct the marketing of their own products. No one says that somehow this would solve all the agricultural problems in Canada in total. Obviously this is not so.

If the hon. member were here—he may have been—when I had the privilege of addressing this House on Tuesday he would know I was one of the members who pointed out with all the emphasis at my disposal that we must be doing more than just passing this single, admittedly limited, bill. I am one of those who has been very critical and very impatient with some members of the opposition who have attempted to hold up the bill which, as the hon. member for Kent-Essex has correctly pointed out, is only a very modest step in the direction of improving the situation in the agricultural industry in Canada, and therefore one which I cannot see deserves any opposition at all. It should have gone through long since.

One reason for my entering the debate tonight is to make sure that the remarks that are on the record in my name from Tuesday are reiterated especially for the benefit of producers of beef in order—to use the phrase of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—to make it crystal-clear that never at any time was there any possibility of the beef producers being forced into a bill which they did not want.

In other words, there have always been since this bill came before the House at the report stage, and long since as the amendments came before the committee, adequate and complete assurances that no commodity group would be brought in until that commodity group wanted to be brought in.

I think this bill lent itself to being the victim of scare tactics because it was possible to say to people that somehow there is a massive scheme afoot, as the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) implied, to create a kind of total supply management situation in Canada and thereby place under a bureaucracy the determination of how much or how great a quantity of any agricultural product could be produced and marketed in Canada. This simply is not the case, it has never been the case, nor could it be the case. Surely every member in this House familiar with the agricultural industry or with how our country is made up and governed knows that many of these responsibilities and authorities are within the provincial realm.

Such members would know, therefore, that the federal government could not accomplish this kind of act even if it wanted to do so. The truth is that the federal government never wanted to and never intended to. Certainly the bill never indicated that the government intended to impose any kind of supply management on any group of producers.

[Mr. McBride.]

Another point which should be emphasized is the simple fact that in Canada we have thousands of producers producing products for a very small number of purchasers. This results in the simple situation that if the producers over-produce their product—and since we have very good farmers in Canada and good technology in agriculture we will automatically over-produce in respect of almost every agricultural product—they will find that there is a greater supply than demand. This can result in one of two things. It can result in chronically depressed prices with a downward spiral on income for farmers, which could be helped by the government, in some kind of autocratic, dictatorial sense, nationalizing the agricultural industry out of sympathy for the desperation of the farm community.

• (1:20 a.m.)

By way of an aside I would remind the House that I have really hardworking farmers who when I go out to talk to them say that the time has come when there is no hope of ever getting agricultural producers together, and the day has long since passed when there should be nationalization of agriculture. My response is that I do not favour it and the government in power in Canada today does not favour it either.

This leaves us with only one alternative, which is that we encourage farmers—that is not a good way to run human beings because some do not encourage very well, some will always oppose and some will block what you want to accomplish—but we must encourage farmers to bring some order to the marketing of their products themselves. That is the sum and substance, the aim and purpose of the bill before the House tonight. We want to encourage farmers to organize themselves so that they are not always the victims of the few purchasers; so that they do not always need to suffer because they know how to farm better. The situation in agriculture in Canada today is that farmers are suffering more because they are doing their job better. That suffering must stop, and the purpose of this bill is to give one more, as the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) says, inadequate, limited and imperfect but at least one more tool that can be used if the people of Canada who are farmers want to use it to attempt to accomplish what one member said could not be accomplished, in other words, some sort of rational co-ordination of agriculture across this nation.

Some people say, for instance, that Canada is a country that cannot be governed. One speaker earlier in this debate suggested that you cannot have any kind of marketing plan in Canada because of the diversity of regions and areas, and that it is hopeless to assume that some order can be brought to the marketing of a product in Canada. I am not so pessimistic. I do not believe that it is hopeless to have co-operation in this nation. I am not convinced that the people of Newfoundland, of P.E.I. and of Nova Scotia are interested only in their own provinces.

I hope that what I say in this House does not give any hon. member a foundation to believe that I am working only for eastern Ontario, and I speak of eastern Ontario because it is such a huge province that we tend to be a bit regional even within the province of Ontario. Surely the time has come when those of us in any region of Canada must be concerned about the national good, and in this case the national good of the agricultural community.

I believe firmly that if there were legislative machinery whereby the provinces or commodity groups were encouraged to sit around a table to discuss their differences which are so real, so deep and almost impenetrable in some instances but which they could at least confront, we could at least make some progress. None of us, and certainly not myself, would disagree with the hon. member for Kent-Essex when he says that there will be mammoth problems in implementing this bill. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would agree with him on that. Nobody has minimized the difficulties of governing this country or of establishing national schemes of any type. It is no different in agriculture. But surely the hon. member for Kent-Essex would have to recognize that if we took the logic of his argument one step further than he took it, one would have to argue against such institutions as the Canadian Wheat Board because one would have to say that any attempt to plan or to bring together producers is a hopeless endeavour in the first place. But even he agrees that the Canadian Wheat Board is of vital importance to grain farmers.

The other point that the hon. member made and which I thought was a very good one concerns imports. It seems to me that this bill will be a great aid in attempting to do something more about imports of agricultural products into Canada, because the producers of any commodity will have an opportunity for the first time in Canadian history, if they are smart enough to take advantage of it, to get together and come before the Minister of Agriculture and other officials of the government officially and say that they are speaking for the hog, or egg, or beef producers, as the case may be and the minister will know that that is correct. They do speak for a commodity.

The problem in agriculture is that farmers have always been divided amongst themselves and while one group was working for one goal, another group was working for another and often opposite goal. So this bill will also encourage the hammering out of differences within the agricultural community. Producers will then speak with one voice. I ask the hon. member for Kent-Essex whether he does not think that any minister—and let us for a moment not be partisan or political about this—to whom representation is made by a commodity group would find that the fact that they are speaking with one voice would bring far better results than any representations that could be made in any other way. I think that one of the best things that could happen in Canada, if we are to take seriously the threat to Canadian agriculture from imports into Canada, would be for every commodity group to set up an agency, for the purpose of dealing with the import of their commodities into the country, if for no other reason.

I have been convinced for a long time that this bill had within it plenty of guards to prevent anybody from being forced to do what they did not want to do. Therefore I have been somewhat critical of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and of other organizations which in my view continually say to us that we are telling them lies, we are not telling them the truth when we say that they have an escape-hatch, that we are not in any way forcing them under this bill.

I will go one step further and say that I have resented that attitude on the part of that organization and I have said so publicly both inside and outside the House. I have felt that their concerns were met, that they were provided for. Yet the organization has insisted that more should be done. But the main concern that I have had about this bill is that when you come to discuss the idea of whether you are going to have the big or the small producer, the big or the small farmer, the fact remains that in any collection of opinion or in any plebiscite that may be held, the small people, just like the poor people in any culture, will outnumber the rich, and the little farmers will outnumber the big farmers. So the vote will inevitably be more in favour of the small producer than of the large producer.

For that reason I cannot understand why members like the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), whom I respect as an individual though I do not always hold his opinions in high regard, keeps reiterating, as do others like him such as the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) who is just as bad on this point, that somehow this legislation will be hurting the small producers and helping the big producers—because he knows, or should know, that there are many more small producers of any commodity, if we get this legislation through soon and into effect before the situation which exists in Canada results in all small producers being obliterated, who could easily form the majority. And the majority which will be the smaller farmers will always control the decision. Therefore, this bill can greatly assist small farmers. Given that situation, I reiterate what I said on Tuesday, that there is nothing to fear in this legislation. The fact that certain organizations have continued, for political gain or other reason, to insist that somehow—

• (1:30 a.m.)

Mr. Paproski: Come off it.

Mr. McBride: The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) may or may not know anything about dairy farming, when he condemns the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, I do. I know a hell of a lot more than you do. I know the difference between a cow and a bull—and all you are giving us is a bunch of bull!

Mr. McBride: We are certainly hearing some bull over there now. The fact remains that without the Canadian Dairy Commission the dairy industry would be in desperate straits today; for instance, in as bad a position as the egg industry and the hog industry were experiencing. I find it difficult to believe that people like the hon. member for Edmonton Centre can imply, by statements like the one he just made, that somehow the Canadian Dairy Commission, and going further, the Canadian Wheat Board, are not working for the benefit of Canadian agriculture. Just because you have some individuals who have a grievance against the institution, or against how the act is administered in a certain case, does not mean that in the overwhelming majority of cases it is not of benefit to the farmers.

Mr. Paproski: What has happened to butter?

Mr. McBride: Surely the hon. member ought to know that when you produce milk you get a lot more powdered milk from your production than you do butter, and if you produce more powdered milk than you can sell on world markets, that results in losses for farmers. If the hon. member wants to stockpile powdered milk, like we saw a few years ago at Granby, Quebec—

Mr. Paproski: That is poor marketing.

Mr. McBride: It would be poor marketing if we dumped it on world markets at depressed prices. The hon. member ought to know that the major portion of the $130 million that goes to the Canadian Dairy Commission is going into the dairymen's pockets now, and that the average dairy farmer is better off than he ever was previously. The hon. member is displaying his lack of knowledge.

When I heard the hon. member for Kent-Essex say he was going to vote against the bill on third reading, it startled me to realize that what he was really saying was that he wanted a position in agriculture whereby the big man can become bigger and the small man could be squeezed out. Where there is no control then we will overproduce and overproduce and prices will have to be deflated. Jungle law will exist in Canadian agriculture and farmers like those I represent in eastern Ontario, where there are many marginal farms, will be the first to be squeezed out of the industry.

Farmers do not get a pink slip to notify them that they are laid off. They are simply starved out economically, which is the cruellest way to be laid off from any type of employment. If that is what the official opposition want, it is not what I want, and I am very grateful that it is not what the government wants. That's the reason this is a valuable bill for Canadian agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am neither a farmer nor the son of a farmer, but I am encouraged to participate in this debate, something which I had anticipated with some trepidation, by having been here tonight and heard a lawyer from London, a school teacher from Peterborough and a preacher from the Ottawa Valley. I have not seen anything like it since Hon. Paul Martin made his famous soybean speech in the House a few years ago.

I come from a province that is agriculturally deficient, yet there is concern in Newfoundland over this bill. I hope to set out the reasons for this concern, and to set out the reasons why I am concerned. Among other things, I am concerned about the propensity of the government to add to an already growing bureaucracy. That is precisely what this bill will do with the supply management concept. It will create a greater bureaucracy. It will restrict competition. It will prevent young people from entering the agricultural industry, and in my province where we are hoping to build up an agricultural industry, that is cause for concern. What is of even more concern is that the bill will eventually mean increases in food prices to the consumers. That is something which should be of concern to all members of the House.

While recognizing the need for improved marketing mechanisms at the primary producer level, in my view supply management as proposed in this bill is not the answer. Supply management will only create quotas on a national basis and as a result these quotas will ignore the need for competition because those who have them will have an economic advantage. The result will be a monopoly that will greatly affect the over-all efficiency of agriculture. Not only am I concerned about the prospect of a growing bureaucracy; I am also concerned because the bill violates the letter and the spirit of the BNA Act. I intend to state arguments to prove that fact. Section 121 of the BNA Act provides:

> All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall, from and after the Union, be admitted free into each of the other provinces.

This is one of the fundamental aspects of confederation; it is the sheet anchor of confederation. If confederation is to mean anything in this country, it has to mean a common market for all Canadians. Without this very important provision of the BNA Act Canada would not be a country as we know it. Instead, it would be an association of balkanized states. That is one of the things which this bill will bring into being. Clause 31 of the bill, which deals with federal-provincial agreements on marketing agencies, will provide an opting-out formula for the provinces. There is already an indication that Newfoundland will not be a party to such an agreement.

We have an egg marketing board in Newfoundland. Although we may be agriculturally deficient in most areas, we do produce a surplus of eggs. One of the reasons we produce a surplus of eggs is that we have large egg producers. One of the largest producers of eggs is the present caretaker Premier of Newfoundland, and someone suggests that there are a few rotten eggs in that basket. I would like to ask the minister, what will be the legal position of an egg marketing board in Newfoundland, which has already been declared ultra vires of the constitution by the Supreme Court of Canada, if this clause of the bill comes into effect? Under clause 31, if the province of Newfoundland decides to opt out or stay in, does that mean that it is still denied access to the greater Canadian market in the area of egg production? That is precisely what it means. It means that this bill will not protect the people of Newfoundland from the illegal egg cartel which exists in the province today.

• (1:40 a.m.)

I remember directing questions to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in this House regarding the legality of the egg marketing board and he answered, "Why doesn't the hon. member encourage his colleagues to pass Bill C-176?" Now I find that at this late hour we are going to pass Bill C-176 with that escape clause, because that is what clause 31 is: it is an escape clause which will permit provinces such as Newfoundland to violate the constitution of this country with illegal marketing boards which will deny our people access to the greater Canadian markets. It is outright violation of our constitutional rights as a province of Canada. What will be the effect of that, Mr. Speaker?

I do not expect to touch the hearts of hon. members opposite because if I did this bill would not be going out of here in its present form. The province of Newfoundland has the unique distinction of having the highest per capita cost of living in the country and the lowest per capita income. It means that the people of Newfoundland will continue to pay an inflated price for eggs which is established by an illegal cartel which resists the ordinary laws of supply and demand and keeps prices up by dumping eggs. The people of Newfoundland, the consumers, will have to pay for this escape clause, clause 31 of the bill, notwithstanding the assurances the minister gave me in this House when I raised the matter at the time of the establishment of the Newfoundland Egg Marketing Board a few months ago.

I hope that the minister will address himself to that argument, because as I read clause 31 that is precisely the result and the effect of it. It will mean that provinces which do not decide to be a part of the marketing council to be established by this legislation will be able to continue operating their own illegal marketing cartels notwithstanding the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada and notwithstanding section 121 of the British North America Act.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a sad day for Canada when we allow the constitution of the country to be violated by legislation passed by this House.

Mr. Olson: Boy, is he ever mixed up.

Mr. McGrath: I should like to ask the minister what the position of the marketing boards already established in the provinces will be if this bill passes in its present form. For example, if they decide to opt out and not be a part of the over-all marketing council, will that then represent de facto recognition by the government of the right to exist of that provincial marketing board? If that is the case, then this bill violates the law of the country. It violates the constitution and denies the provinces free access to the common market that is Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I know that there is nothing that I nor anybody else can say that will change this bill at this late hour. The government will have its way. But that does not take away from us our responsibility, indeed our right, to lay these arguments on the record because there is concern across the country. This country is much more than the two provinces of Quebec and Ontario. The country must be a common market if it is to be anything.

I am concerned with this bill. I think it is unfortunate that not enough arguments have been addressed to the effect that it will have on production in Canada and the effect that it will have on the consumer. I was examining the records and I was rather disappointed at the small input by consumer groups when the bill was before committee. I believe the various consumer associations are concerned, but I do not believe that they realized the full impact of the bill. I think one consumer group appeared before the committee but I do not think they fully realized that this bill would permit removal of the protection afforded consumers and producers by the constitution of the country, by the various judicial decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada and the provincial courts of the land—an assurance of free access to the markets of Canada, which is the best assurance we have of keeping down prices to the consumer. I believe that instead of having access to the free market that is Canada we will now have a bureaucracy that will be able to dictate prices of produce, restrict the flow of trade and halt the ordinary laws of supply and demand which would govern the price for the consumer in this country.

In view of the late hour, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it might be as well if we all decided to cash it in and sing "Auld Lang Syne" because this is New Year's Eve. I am glad to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his place tonight: he has to get used to late nights from now on. As the father of six, I can speak with authority on that subject. Perhaps it might be as well to close debate with "Auld Lang Syne," not only on this bill which has been before the House for the last two years but for the free market that was Canada.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): At this late hour, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take too long. As a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture since 1968 when we were first elected, I feel it my duty and obligation to say something about this bill which has taken so long to culminate—we hope—at this very late hour. When the last speaker was suggesting that we sing "Auld Lang Syne" I could not help doubting whether even the Tories would want to sing it for such a speech as he gave.

An hon. Member: He meant "Old Arthur Lang".

Mr. Whicher: My dear friend, you are a perfect example of why we should legislate birth control. With an example such as you, we should make it retroactive. You do not bother me at all, because I am used to professionals and you are not one of those. If it comes to a battle of wits, you haven't even half a chance.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of the agricultural committee for the last three years. In this respect I want to compliment members of the Conservative party, and particularly the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). In my opinion he has done much to bring this bill to culmination.

An hon. Member: That is the kiss of death.

Mr. Whicher: I think that he has represented the farmers of Canada along with government members, members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Social Credit party from Quebec. The time had come when we all realized that something had to be done for the agricultural industry of Canada.

• (1:50 a.m.)

No matter whether high school teachers in Newfoundland or Toronto, engineers in Montreal, politicians in Ottawa, Toronto or St. John's or nurses think they are at the low end of the totem pole, the people who get the thin end of the wedge are those in agriculture in this dear Canada of ours. I remember 17 or 18 years ago, when I first got into politics, thinking that even if it were the last thing I would do, I would try to improve the condition of the people in my area involved in agriculture.

Mr. Bigg: What took you so long?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I say to you with bowed head, those people are worse off now than when I started.

An hon. Member: Because you were elected.

Mr. Gibson: Why don't hon. members on the other side let their members speak? He is a better speaker than many members on that side.

An hon. Member: Be quiet.

An hon. Member: Hoot, hoot!

Mr. Whicher: I did not hear my hon. friend from Newfoundland. I think he is emphasizing that we should have had birth control before he was born.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friend from Newfoundland does not realize that although he does not agree with me, many people in his party do agree with me and would, if they could, say what I am saying. My friend from Newfoundland is in the wrong.

Mr. McGrath: Is the hon. member talking about birth control, or this bill?

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member is in the wrong league. He is in the international league, and I do not think he will be back here after the next one begins.

Let me return to the agricultural industry. I pay my compliments to the members of the official opposition who in my opinion have done an excellent job in making Canada aware that the agricultural industry is not getting a fair shake in this country. I listened especially carefully to the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). He was the official speaker for the Conservative party and he said that this bill is no good. But he did not present any alternative. He did not say, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is for this bill. He did not say that the Farmers Union is for this bill. He did not say that the little producers of Canada are for this bill and that we, as Liberals, are going to give them this bill tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. This is the second time in 14 years that I have risen on a question of privilege in this House, and I do so now because of misrepresentations. The speaker who just preceded me indicated that I did not say that the Federation of Agriculture supported this bill and that I did not say the Farmers Union supported this bill. The hon. member did not say that both those groups when they appeared before the committee said that they would support this bill only if their suggested amendments to it were accepted.

Mr. Olson: That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Whicher: Let me tell my friends on the other side who are listening to me that I agree with what the hon. member said. The Farmers Union and the federation said that they would not accept the bill unless there were amendments and, Mr. Speaker, we have given them amendments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: And, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend did not say tonight that the Ontario Minister of Agriculture, Hon. W. A. Stewart, now supports this bill. He did not say where that minister stands on this bill, because that minister believes we should have put it through one year ago, not tonight.

Mr. Danforth: But he still has his reservations about it.

[Mr. Gibson.]

Mr. Whicher: The agricultural industry of Canada—I say this with bowed head—has not had a fair chance. And I say with bowed head that they have been asking for national marketing legislation for many years.

Mr. Bigg: You people have been in power for seven years. Why did you not introduce it sooner?

Mr. Basford: Why didn't Dief do something about it?

Mr. Paproski: Just wait until the competition bill comes up. You will be next.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the help from the other side but I do not want you to think I need it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Perhaps because we have reached a late hour, hon. members want to make their speeches at the same time. I think the hon. member who has the floor should be allowed to speak.

Mr. Whicher: The farmers of Canada asked for an amendment that would give them the opportunity to run their own show. Actually, the Conservative party helped in this regard. They were helped by government members, because they could not have done it on their own. Under our democratic constitution, the government had a majority of members on the committee and we agreed that farmers should represent at least 50 per cent of the people running these agencies.

Mr. Bigg: Why not 51 per cent?

Mr. Whicher: Well, if the board consists of three members, and the requirement is for at least 50 per cent to be farmers, that means that two of those members will be farmers. It means that six out of nine members will be farmers on a nine-man board. Clearly, more than 51 per cent of the representatives in those cases will be farmers.

Mr. Bigg: Why not take a six-man board?

Mr. Whicher: Because there are not to be six at any time.

Mr. Bigg: How do you know?

Mr. Whicher: I know, and it is obvious that you do not know. My advice to my friends, because they are my friends, is that they should keep quiet. They are getting into difficulties. They are digging their own graves. Actually, they are jumping in. In any event, we have given the agricultural industry the right to run its own show.

Mr. Bigg: You have had seven years to finish the job.

Mr. Whicher: It will not take me more than three minutes to finish with you, my friend. The point is, we have given agriculture something it has asked for. I say to my friends on the government benches, many of whom come from great cities like Toronto and Montreal and many of whom may not be familiar with this bill, that once and for all we will give the agricultural industry of this country a chance to run its own show. We are to give the industry, agencies and councils, or whatever you want to call them, that will be comparable to the great unions running organized labour in this country. I am not like my friend from Newfoundland. I do not fear higher consumer prices. The farmers, regardless of prices that will be charged—prices within reason, that is—are to get a fair shake. For once they will get a fair return for their hard work in producing our food.

One of my hon. friends said tonight that he was afraid this bill does not control imports. May I say, because I want to be fair, that I am also a bit leary about that point. I feel that for the sake of the agricultural industry in Canada, just as we control, for example, the importation of textiles coming into Canada, sooner or later we have to take a stand to make sure that our farmers, whether wheat farmers from Saskatchewan or dairy farmers from Quebec, get a fair deal. I think we should to some extent control imports of agricultural products.

• (2:00 a.m.)

Mr. Bigg: Then why not put it in the bill?

Mr. Whicher: We do not put it in the bill because there are other bills which cover it. It is so obvious. I have all the answers, but I am worried about your questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: I simply say this, in conclusion. It has taken a long time to give the agricultural industry the things it has requested. We are doing so here and now, not just the government members but those to my left too, despite all the opposition they have put up. All of us are involved. I see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) here tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: He is doing his best for those in the agricultural industry. I have heard the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) say on numerous occasions that farmers should be given a better deal. But where is he tonight when we are fighting for the agricultural industry? Somebody told me where he might be. I have no idea. Somebody suggested he might be in Malta. The British are supposedly moving out of there, and somebody else is moving in. I do not know what the hon. member for York South is doing, but one thing I do know: he is not looking after the farmers of Canada.

Then again, I note the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is not here. I say this very respectfully because I think he is a fine gentleman. The other night I sat by my television set all by myself and heard him condemn the government for letting Parliament go away for six weeks instead of looking after the business of the country. I ask this question with all respect: Where is he tonight when the agricultural industry is demanding his attention?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: In case the hon. member for York South thinks we need him here, in case the Leader of the Opposition thinks we need him here, I want to tell them this: the members of the government side are here and we are here to look after the farmers.

For too long have we let them down, and I include myself in that category. For too long have the Tories, the Grits and the social democrats let them down. But we are not going to let them down any more, starting tonight. I look around here at the front benches. There are more on the front benches of the rump than there are on the front benches of the rest of the parties. Very soon this debate will be ending. Very shortly the farmers of Canada will have the opportunity of getting something for which they have been asking for years and which they should have received earlier. Regretfully, they were not given it in the past. But, proudly, I tell Your Honour that as of tonight, because of the actions of the present government, they will get something which for the first time in history will give them an opportunity to go forth together with the other economic forces of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, even though it is late, it is a pleasure for me to rise and speak on this bill which to me is of extreme importance.

First of all, I should like to say that I was very happy indeed to sit on the Committee on Agriculture since I was elected to the House. I may indeed have been the only member to sit in two capacities on that committee.

I should add also that Bill C-176 had some bearing on a decision I had to make at one point. Concerned about respecting my commitments toward my electors, particularly the farmers, I had to make a decision because I believed and still believe in the value of this bill which was introduced some 18 months ago.

I do not wish to miss the opportunity of taking part in this debate, because as several other members I am clearly under the impression that I have things to say. The work in committee has indeed enabled me to understand the legislation better and I had realized for a long time that agriculture needed some governmental solutions.

A lot has been said about this legislation and since the beginning of the debate many serious charges have been laid by both sides of the House. I would like just the same to congratulate those who took part in the discussion, as well in committee as during the report stage and on third reading.

For several, the legislation is the source of much concern. Anyway, I think that the bill will be valuable inasmuch as it is applied by the responsible persons, the producers and different provincial authorities.

• (2:10 a.m.)

Amendments have been brought forward, some of which were very sensible. Others were not so brilliant. To say that the bill is, in any way, perfect would probably be exaggerated, because a perfect bill would be something like a miracle, and I do not think that anyone in this House could have proposed a miraculous solution. But between doing nothing and contributing something which seems interesting and most valid, one had to bring out a bill truly inspired by the difficulties which agriculture is facing in this country.

It has been regretted that this bill does not provide more money for farmers. I think that the marketing agencies will be able to establish a certain relationship with decent prices, which is what farmers are still expecting.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) was saying, yesterday, that in the name of liberty, he was going to vote against the bill. I still fail to understand how one can make such statements. In the name of freedom, it seems to me that it has been proved for a long time already that this legislation guaranteed this freedom to this group of producers.

Furthermore, some suggest that the legislation could be helpful to trusts. In my view, nothing more than these marketing agencies can bring such trusts to heel. There is always the fear that some small producers will disappear. In fact, some take pleasure in saying, again and again, that, in the last ten years, thousands of farmers have gone out of business, and one sees also that trusts have been established, because of the lack of marketing agencies, as a result of which production has not been well-planned, while this legislation appears to ensure the opposite.

So, it is difficult to understand the arguments put forward by some hon. members who are determined not to see the good effects of this legislation. Surely they could see how the legislation works.

Yet, it is clear that changes were necessary and the government has decided to bring them in.

I was, like many others, quite impressed by the comments of the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). I think that he has been able, as usual, to express his opinion quite judiciously and I was left with a good impression. Besides, I know that he is competent enough to give valuable advice to hon. members.

I would also like to deal with imports which apparently have been a problem for quite a while. It is clear that the government has the responsability, especially at certain times of the year, to put a limit on imports. But we will have legislation based on marketing agencies as a National Council to administer these agencies. It appears to me that this legislation is more valuable than all the agencies we have known to restrict imports which at certain times of the year are quite a problem.

That fear and those imports that are too often responsible for the difficulties of several categories of producers should gradually disappear as a result of the establishment of a national council, and of a provincial agency well structured by a national policy.

I should like also to recognize that the bill seems to ensure there will be no infringement on provincial jurisdictions, contrary to some opinions that have been expressed in the House. It seems quite clear that the provinces will have the opportunity to sit at the same table. They will have the responsibility of distributing production.

Earlier I heard an hon. member from Newfoundland say that this province produced more eggs than it consumed. I am sure that the provinces will get together and accept to some extent that Newfoundland be allowed to keep on distributing its surplus in other provinces, the same as Quebec and Ontario presently have the possibility of exporting their surpluses to other provinces.

In view of the past experience of Quebec and Ontario, where it was realized there were difficulties, it seems those marketing agencies headed by a national Council should bring us some security and make us more optimistic than some have shown to be to this day.

Of course there must be agreement to ensure that negotiations between provinces and good faith of all those involved will always be necessary.

[Mr. La Salle.]

It is inconceivable that the government will have settled everything through this legislation. Our farmers will always have to show some creativity and good faith and I believe that such good faith to all intents and purposes will bring about fruitful negotiations beneficial to the whole country.

Nor do I admit, as was suggested yesterday, that up to a certain point the province of Quebec sought to impose its demands. It is stupid to claim such a thing and as a representative of the province of Quebec, I, along with members from other provinces indeed have long dreamt of nation-wide negotiations for the purpose of more equitable distribution in the interest of all producers.

Do I need to repeat that this legislation becomes a tool, a service to producers who, in all freedom, will be able to use it properly.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that changes and progress demand a minimum of efficiency. We are preoccupied with the disappearance of a number of small producers. I think it is equally important for the government to do all it possibly can in order to ensure the continuity of family farms.

I think that those marketing boards will allow for the continuity of family farms, for, as well as providing a livelihood for family heads, they may encourage a farmer's son to go on living on a farm, as it has been clear for too long that the reason our farmers' children chose not to follow on their fathers' steps was that they knew the problems which their fathers were faced with—and the proposed legislation is certainly going to increase the chance of safeguarding family farms.

We must not think that it is going to protect all small producers. I think that progress demands a degree of efficiency. Whether we like it or not, I think that progress is a natural phenomenon which cannot be escaped. There again, the establishment of those marketing boards will allow a grouping of a number of middle producers to survive and to stand up to those monopolies or cartels against which they are at present completely helpless.

There was some talk about an amendment aimed at establishing a reasonable price. It is of course desirable that, inasmuch as possible, the government be able to establish reasonable prices which would generate hope and enable farmers to meet their commitments.

I was saying that the farmer should be more creative than ever and the government and provincial authorities should be more open minded and more understanding than ever in regard to the implementation of such a bill. Negotiations will not be reduced and large organizations will have to multiply if we were to seriously establish these marketing agencies.

I shall ask leave, Mr. Speaker, and express once again the confidence I place in hon. members who have participated in this debate. The effects of such a legislation will anyway equal the honesty displayed by all members and by those who will be entrusted with the management of this National Council and who will endeavour to meet the provincial authorities and various organizations in order to establish offices for each commodity.

On behalf of Canadian farmers, I would like that the responsible people in this House and the members demonstrate, in the coming year and in regard to our debates, the realistic approach which the public is so eagerly awaiting. May 1972 bring upon us the objectivity and sincerity that are so much desired so that our laws take into account reality as well as difficulties and that they may continually improve the present situation of agriculture.

I will restrict myself to those few comments, in repeating that I support this bill and I would rather see the government introduce a bill than limit myself to expressing criticism without offering a better alternative.

As far as the arguments which were put forward are concerned, I said that some of them were good. The government has accepted a number of them. I am not convinced that a better solution than the government's has been submitted by other parties. In those circumstances, I prefer to support a bill which attempts to bring about better conditions and allow farmers to regroup and receive through those agencies more adequate incomes and thus providing some hope for the future of farming in this country.

[English]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the exchange that took place a few minutes ago between the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) with regard to the stand of the farm organizations in respect of this bill and some of the changes which they proposed. I took note of the comment of the hon. member for Bruce to the effect that in fact the government had adopted the changes requested by the farm organizations. I would have to go along with him to some degree because I think it must be acknowledged that some of the changes requested by the farm organizations have been adopted. However, I should like to draw to his attention that there is before us at this very moment a motion to refer the bill back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for the purpose of making a change which was requested by a major farm organization and which was not included in the amended bill.

I refer to the motion moved by my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) to refer the bill back to the committee so that a change could be made in order to give farm organizations and farmers a voice in setting prices that would give them some bargaining power in dealing with the board and marketing agencies which might be established under the bill. This change, however, was not adopted by the government. I would commend to hon. members that we give favourable consideration to this amendment because I think it constitutes a very important feature of this legislation. I believe its importance should not for a moment be underrated. It is for this reason I wanted to take part in the debate.

I certainly favour the amendment proposed by my colleague. It seems to me common sense that we should make adequate provision for the voice of the farmers, not only in the establishment of a plan for marketing agencies or in giving farmers a voice in terms of one or more members on a board, agency or directorate but also in giving them some say in the day-to-day operations of the plan—because it is not in the structure of the plan that we run into hang-ups and problems, but in connection with the operations the agency carries on from day to day, week to week and month to month. Farmers must have more say in respect of agencies which have a critical and important effect on their livelihood and well-being.

For this reason I would hope the House, even at this late hour, would agree to make this change because I feel it would be in the best interest of agriculture. I feel it would be in the best interest of the successful operation of this bill when enacted into law. Therefore, I hope the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) and other members of the House will give it favourable consideration. When we take a look at this matter, I think we must take into account the history of marketing boards. I think it is known that members of the New Democratic Party and members of the CCF which succeeded the New Democratic Party long argued for the principle of marketing and marketing boards in order to deal with agricultural products and the many problems that arise in connection therewith. This idea emerged during a stage of Canada's history when farming was for the most part conducted on an independent basis and when our farmers could be said to be the only group in our society which operated with a classical free enterprise voice.

That was a classical case and the only such case in our history for a long period of time. In fact, they represented a true definition of what constituted an independent entrepreneur operation on a private basis. In other words, one operator or even a combination of operators could not significantly by themselves influence the structure of the market and the operations of the market. Within the framework of this situation, why were marketing boards proposed? Why was the marketing board idea brought forward? I suggest there were three basic reasons for this. One was in order to give the farmer and the agricultural industry as such some bargaining power in the marketplace, and to give them some marketing power in relation to their relations with the balance of the economy.

Second, it was for the purpose of introducing a greater measure of stability in the agricultural industry in order to iron out some of the severe fluctuations which had a detrimental effect on the industry. Third, it would have the effect of introducing a greater measure of internal equity within the industry so there would be fair and equal treatment for all farmers who were dealing with one product, or group of products, and there would not be a continuation of the situation where one farmer would get a break and another farmer, often for reasons completely beyond his control, had to take a poor market situation because he had no other choice.

Down through all the years when this need was pretty obvious to many people and when farm organizations were asking for the adoption of this idea, what was the Liberal party doing? We found that by and large it was rejecting the idea. Some members put the idea forward, I suppose sincerely, but for the most part the members of the Liberal party rejected the principle of orderly marketing and marketing boards during the years when it could have been of great value to the farmers of the country.

During the time when they could have done something through this particular method of handling affairs, changes were taking place within the industry. We saw the introduction of vertical integration; we saw the integrators move into the picture. This began to play a significant role in many areas of agricultural production. The processors came on the scene and began to take part in the picture. They began to make arrangements with others to get into production and to make market arrangements. Along with them we had the agribusiness getting into the processing business in a large way. During these years fundamental changes have taken place in the agricultural industry, and the passage of this bill will not stop that process.

Now we find that the Liberal party has made an eleventh-hour conversion, or possibly a five-minutes-to-twelve p.m. conversion. I noted with interest the remarks of the hon. member for Bruce and I commend him for his sincerity and frankness in owing up to some of the past sins of omission and commission of the Liberal party in not having taken action in this field before now. I commend him for his frankness and for placing his cards on the table in that regard. But then he said to the House, "Look at what the Liberal party is doing now. Even the Prime Minister is here tonight".

It is very nice to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) here tonight. It is quite a change when the Prime Minister comes to the House in the dying hours of the debate to see what is going on. He might learn something. Possibly he might avoid some of the mistakes and comments he has made with respect to agriculture. Maybe he will not make any more such statements as, "Why should we sell wheat for the farmers?" I hope he learns something about agricultural affairs by being present in the House tonight. I do not think the Prime Minister has been conspicuous by his attendance at any time during this debate.

I am proud of the record of the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) on agricultural affairs. He has spoken on this subject on many occasions in the House, and I am prepared to place his record alongside that of the Prime Minister at any time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Perrault: How are things in the Mediterranean?

Mr. Burton: He has said more to help solve agricultural problems than any member across the floor tonight. I also note that the Progressive Conservative party has found itself in serious difficulty over this bill. They seem to be hung-up on a number of features of the bill. I suppose one might say that their big beef is that they want to take cattle out of the bill. Some of their members wanted to see the bill scrapped altogether and others were reluctantly going along with it.

In dealing with the bill and the amendment before us I think we have to take into account the situation that we are facing in the agricultural industry and in the rural communities of Canada where real fears exist with respect to this legislation. Why are there such fears? I suggest it is because there is a fear on the part of independent farmers, who have been able to survive, that this legislation will help the integrators and the agribusiness more than it will help the small, independent farmer. It will leave the independent farmer out in the cold.

I am not passing judgment as to whether those fears are are entirely well-founded. I think there is justification for the fears and I think only experience will prove the validity of some of the claims been made in this regard. I think we must recognize that there is this problem with respect to the reaction of the farm community in this respect.

I suggest that some of the concerns that exist apply particularly to the concept of supply management which has been discussed already this evening. As I indicated during an earlier stage of the debate on this bill, most of us in the House will agree that so far as the principle of supply management is concerned, it is certainly acceptable. It is possible that the acceptance of that principle can be of benefit to farmers and to the agricultural industry. It is consistent with the principle of orderly marketing and with the idea of establishing marketing boards.

But we have to do more than that. We have to do more than simply go along with principles. We have to devise a plan and an approach that will work. That is where the difficulty arises. We have to devise a plan that will help farmers. We have to make sure that to the extent that supply management is used it will be based on wider objectives than those of simply restricting production or relating it to immediate market demand. This idea must be developed within the framework of a total look at rural society, if it is to serve a useful purpose. We must look at the whole picture, at the well-being of farmers and their total situation.

One of the reasons for the fears of the rural community with respect to supply management, however commendable the principle might be, has been the experience of farmers in some parts of Canada with limited application of the concept of supply management over the past couple of years. I make particular reference to two programs as they affected my own province of Saskatchewan. First of all, I refer to Operation Lift, the infamous program where large amounts of public money were spent in a way which, I suggest, had only a minimal effect on the stated objective of reducing wheat production. I suggest that the effect of the stated objectives when the plan was announced was minimal. In effect, the use of the funds was such that they did not go to farmers who most needed them. I suggest, as well, that it was directly in conflict with the principles of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. This plan made use of the quota system to force farmers to go along with the plan which has been devised by the federal government. Farmers are very leery of what else may be in store for them as a result of their experience with Operation Lift.

I might also refer to the operations of the Dairy Commission. Here I will restrict my comments to the effect on the province of Saskatchewan where the major area of concern has to do with the effect of the program on cream production. In contrast with some other parts of Canada, a significant portion of the dairy production in Saskatchewan has always been concentrated on the production of cream for shipment to creameries and other such plants. In 1967, prior to the introduction of the Dairy Commission plan, there were some 23,000 cream shippers and producers in the province of Saskatchewan. At that time all of them were theoretically eligible for a quota subsidy.

Through the plan that was developed by the Canadian Dairy Commission, many of these farmers found that they were simply shut off from any possibility of ever being able to take advantage of the subsidies offered by the Canadian Dairy Commission. Thus, the number of cream producers was cut down sharply at a time when there was already a severe reduction of farm income in Saskatchewan. In fact, the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture reports today that, rather than there being 23,000 cream producers in the province there are only 15,000, and of those 7,500 are eligible for any form of subsidy as a result of the particular plan brought in by the Canadian Dairy Commission.

At the same time, we had a recent announcement by the Minister of Agriculture that he was going to back up payments to March 31, 1970. If I can use an agricultural term at this late hour, this is like closing the barn door after the horse is stolen. This will not improve the situation for dairy producers and cream shippers in Saskatchewan. Their experience with the dairy subsidy will make them very leery of what is in store for them in the future under the supply management proposals in this bill. These are some of the fears that exist. Farmers hope that this situation will not occur. I would ask hon. members to consider this seriously.

If the marketing boards established once this bill is passed are to succeed, the farmers must have some say in the determination of marketing plans and in the operation of the boards. There must be some degree of farm bargaining power. Farmers must have a voice, not only in the plans but in the day-to-day operations of the agencies and boards. For this reason the bill must be changed so that workable plans can be produced that will have some chance of success.

For these reasons I commend the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming. There is one further point with which I would like to deal, and it is in reference to a comment made by the hon. member for Bruce. He said these marketing boards were being set up so that farmers could run their own affairs and could do things for themselves in terms of an organized plan. This is a very commendable idea, but I suggest it comes too late in the game to have any hope of success.

If marketing plans, boards or agencies are introduced as a result of this legislation, they will require a significant and adequate degree of public support in the marketplace if they are to benefit farmers. This was one of the issues under debate on the grain stabilization bill. It was an important question, acknowledged by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I did not see that minister here during the debate. He admitted that one of the important questions concerned the amount of money that the federal government was going to put into the plan and would be available for the grains industry.

Mr. Francis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, have not the hon. member's 20 minutes expired?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has just expired. The Chair was about to point out this fact.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a bad bill, and when passed—as I presume it will be this morning—it will represent a major step toward the complete socialization of the agricultural industry. To my hon. friends in the NDP I wish to say that in so far as they are socialists they are merely pikers compared with the government. There is a further difference. The NDP members have their theories but they will never have the responsibility for enforcing them. Members on the government benches just do not know any better, Mr. Speaker.

I predict that after this bill is passed many government members will regret their support of it, particularly members who represent agricultural ridings, just as they now regret their support of the official languages bill that was passed in this House a couple of years ago. I understand that there are several members from the city of Ottawa who now repent that they supported it. I predict the same thing will happen to members opposite who represent agricultural areas.

Further, Mr. Speaker, just like the official languages bill, I suggest that this bill is unconstitutional. It is contrary to the provisions of section 121 of the BNA Act. In this respect I agree with the statements made tonight by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I would like to substantiate further our contention that it is contrary to the provisions of section 121 of the BNA Act by quoting two or three statements made in this debate by our House leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), when he said:

> I would point out that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada was very welcome in this House and in all parts of Canada. It immediately had some effect in bringing to an end increasing economic divisions between different parts of Canada and the kind of Balkanization which is bound to be dangerous to the survival of our federal structure.
> But there is far more than this involved in this particular bill. The case in the Supreme Court of Canada in respect of the Manitoba reference was decided on the simple ground that no provincial legislature has any right to legislate with regard to matters which constitute the regulation of trade and commerce- ... That has now been established beyond any question of doubt. But we must go beyond that and deal with the danger this legislation in its present form presents.
>
> How did the people who wrote our constitution attempt to ensure that there would be this freedom of movement within Canada? They did so through section 121 of the British North America Act. Just to refresh our memories I shall read this very short section. It states:
> "All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall, from and after the Union, be admitted free into each of the other provinces."

This may not mean very much to government members because this is not the first time that they have forced unconstitutional legislation through this Parliament. I recommend to my constituents, particularly livestock dealers, that if they run into trouble with this bill they should take their case to the Supreme Court of Canada. I only hope they do not have the same trouble that a former very high member of the bench is having in trying to take his case on the official languages bill to the Supreme Court because of the obstruction of the government. The hon. member for Peace River went on to say:

> —by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1958, it was suggested by the judges of the court that section 121 of the British North America Act applies not only to prevent provinces but also the federal government from dealing with the free flow of goods and property from one part of the country to another.

That is exactly what is being delegated to a council if this bill is passed. We now know that the Canadian public is asking, why was it necessary to have this unusual sitting of Parliament between Christmas and the new year to debate this issue? This is an unusual sitting of the House of Commons. In the history of our Parliament since confederation I do not know if this has ever happened before. Why is it necessary? I think maybe this time we should let the cat completely out of the bag and give the reason.

• (2.50 a.m.)

Mr. Mahoney: Where is your leader?

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, the real reason was revealed in the remarks of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) when he spoke on this bill on Tuesday, December 28, as reported at page 10799 of Hansard, and in remarks of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Faulkner), whom I do not see here tonight, when he spoke yesterday as reported at pages 10837 and 10839 of Hansard.

When the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) was speaking on Tuesday, he said:

> We are not opposed to Quebec's introducing marketing legislation. They can bring that in; we are not opposing it. We feel they have a right to vote for it, if that is what they want. However, we do not want, and the producers out west do not want, them to tell us that we must accept this bill.

This is referring to Bill C-176. At those remarks the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton rose and said:

> On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has implied that this bill is for the benefit of Quebec only and is against the interests of the west. That is categorically untrue.

The hon. member for Meadow Lake never implied that, but that is why we are sitting here today. The member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton let the cat out of the bag, as did the hon. member for Peterborough at page 10837 of Hansard when he said, in part:

> —and then the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) claimed that the Quebec farmers were attempting to foist it on the western farmers.

He made no such claim, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mahoney: Read a little more.

Mr. McIntosh: I will tell you a little more in a few moments. At page 10839 he said:

> —somehow this bill was being foisted on western farmers by Quebec farmers.

Further on he said:

> It has nothing to do with Quebec farmers foisting something on us.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we are sitting here today. In a few moments I wish to document some facts to support my contention. We now know the source and the reason for the pressure put on the minister to pass Bill C-176 at this time without the exclusion of cattle and calves which the minister himself promised to livestock men. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was elected as leader of the Liberal party, and subsequently as the Prime Minister of Canada, there was much rejoicing in certain parts of the country. The statement was made time and time again that he would put Quebec in its place. Little did the people realize at that time, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister meant "first place"—and that is precisely what he is doing.

Statements have been made by members of the government during the last couple of days that must not go unchallenged. They sounded very familiar after hearing the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) when he first introduced this measure under the title of Bill C-197. He said many times that members of the opposition were not telling the truth about the bill, and that there was no sustained opposition to it. Similar remarks were made by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Côté) as reported at page 10801 of Hansard. These remarks must not go unchallenged either. He said:

> It is not an eastern or a western bill because it affects the whole range of farm products and I would not like my hon. colleagues, be they of the opposition or otherwise, to try to exclude a particular product alleging that the farmer does not want it. It is not true.

I have in my files, Mr. Speaker, a petition of 14 pages of names sent to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Agriculture protesting the implications of Bill C-176. I am sure that every member of this House knows the number of coupons the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture received protesting this bill. I think the record should be put straight. The minister is aware that with very few exceptions the cattle and calf people are not in favour of the bill.

The real motive behind the introduction of Bill C-176 is to further appease the demands of the province of Quebec who have been allowed to opt out of other measures which apply to the rest of Canada—the Canada Pension Plan, the medicare plan and, I understand, the UIC bill which the minister is going to put before the House. Apparently they consider that their nurses, school teachers, and so on, are civil servants.

Mr. Mackasey: No.

Mr. McIntosh: Wait till the bill passes.

Mr. Mackasey: The bill has passed.

Mr. McIntosh: It does not make any difference, Mr. Speaker, because the same thing has been admitted by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) with regard to grants given to that province—40 per cent of all grants given by this government go to the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: You are prejudiced.

Mr. McIntosh: I may be prejudiced, but these are the facts. One must assume that an election is in the offing and that the government intends to use all its efforts to pass the marketing bill as one of the issues in its election campaign in Quebec in an attempt to hold the seats it now has in that province. Many Canadians are asking why, if the province of Quebec is so insistent that cattle and calves be included in the bill when the province produces only 15 per cent of their own requirements. The answer to that question is spelled out by the Minister of Agriculture for Quebec, who said:

> Quebec would be interested in the bill only if it included all products.

The exclusion of cattle and veal would take away from Quebec one of Quebec's main negotiating tools in the eventual distribution of product quotas, because Quebec is in a shortage position in this particular area

Quebec cannot give such marketing agencies any authority unless there is control of production.

Time and time again I have heard the minister say there is no control of production in this bill. Everybody knows it except the minister. The Minister of Agriculture for Quebec also said:

If you are going to sell in Quebec, then you will produce—or offer for sale—according to Quebec's dictates.

Quebec's main negotiating tool is the distribution of production quotas.

• (3:00 a.m.)

On the other side of the coin we can ask this question, Why do those engaged in the cattle industry want to be excluded from the provisions of this bill. I am sure that many members on the other side of the House do not know why the cattlemen want to be excluded from the bill. They do not know how great a percentage the cattlemen and calf breeders are of our agricultural industry. Traditionally, cattlemen have opposed the philosophy and principle of controlled marketing and production quotas. Ever since they have been organized they have opposed that principle.

Many people are not aware that the cattle industry represents almost a quarter of the total farm production of Canada. It is the single, most important facet of Canadian agriculture. The beef producing industry is, by a substantial margin, the largest single segment of the Canadian agricultural economy and surpasses both the wheat and dairy product parts of that economy. The Canadian beef industry is completely free of special subsidies, and in the present troubled agricultural economy suffers fewer problems than most other sectors of the industry.

In view of the successful record of the cattle industry, one questions the motives of this government in attempting to control this industry. Those are the two sides of the coin. This bill is before the House now because of the dictates of the government of Quebec which have influenced our Minister of Agriculture. That minister is trying to impose this bill on a segment of agriculture that has never needed it and does not want it. I say that this will be a major step towards socializing the whole industry. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey):

That Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, be not now read a third time but be referred back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture with an instruction to amend paragraph (c) of clause 2 of the said bill by adding thereto, immediately following the word 'product' at the end thereof, the words 'but, for the purpose of any of the provisions of this act, shall not include cattle or calves;'

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I say with respect to the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) that there is now an amendment before the House, and unless hon. members can convince the Chair that we should receive another amendment I feel that we cannot receive this amendment. I recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney).

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, my objection is probably superfluous now. I was wondering if it would not be desirable for the hon. member seconding the motion to be in the House when the motion is proposed.

Mr. Forrestall: Come off it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As I indicated, there is an amendment before the House in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). It is seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). The House is considering that amendment, and until it is disposed of I suggest we cannot deal with another amendment.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I say as emphatically as I can that I cannot support the bill and will vote against it on third reading. The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) cited a number of reasons why I and other members of my party cannot support the bill. I concur wholeheartedly with his remarks and do not intend to repeat what many have said this evening.

I want to elaborate on one or two points dealing with the bill to which I took particular exception. I object particularly to a point, consistently made throughout this debate, to the effect that the bill will help stimulate small farm enterprises. That was just a lot of garble from the other side of the House. Hon. members opposite tried to leave the impression that this bill will be the salvation of the small family farm.

I am disappointed because hon. members opposite failed to accept one or two amendments that we proposed this evening. One amendment, if accepted, would make sure that the council would be dedicated to the preservation and enhancement of the economic and social viability of the family farm and the farm community. To the extent that this government has supposedly focused its efforts on helping the small family farm unit, one would think that hon. members opposite would welcome our amendment. For if this bill represents indeed their new approach and outlook on the subject of farm policy, the amendment would certainly be consistent with their over-all approach.

There has been developing for the past few years a situation which in my opinion is most undesirable. A trend is developing in this country which is resulting in the depopulation of rural areas. This affects not only those who are engaged in farming but also, and equally, the rural farm communities which depend largely on surrounding areas for support. Many say that present developments are inevitable, that they are the product of our times and life-style and are a form of progress. To my mind, this development represents a retrograde step in the development of Canadian society and a retrograde step in the development of the kind of life that Canadians want, be they in urban or rural Canada.

I say that, firstly, because many in this country still are desirous of maintaining and sustaining a healthy and viable life in a rural community. They want to live in a rural community. However, many programs and policies which have been developed have deprived many people of that privilege. We are still experiencing a mass exodus of people from the country to the city. This is adding to the difficulties of our cities, difficulties involving overcrowding, pollution and unemployment. More important, though, these people are being forced into a life-style they are not prepared to accept. The result is a degree of frustration and anger of unparallelled proportion. We know that because many farmers find it difficult to make a living on the farm, they are apprehensive. Indeed, many face the prospect of foreclosure by mortgage companies and farm credit corporations. In his press release concerning the small farms development program, of December 6, 1971, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said in part:

Economic studies and practical experience suggest that the family farm is the best type of farm, and it is in this context that we have developed a comprehensive program to help the small farmers of Canada to develop profitable family farms—

If that is a pledge and a reaffirmation of the idea that we must develop strong family farm units, then certainly I submit that we should include in this bill a categorical declaration that we are dedicated to that idea and that the council should be dedicated to reaching that objective.

• (3:10 a.m.)

I do not believe this bill will assist small farm units very much. Presumably this is why hon. members oppposite decided to reject the amendment which was proposed, an amendment which would have made a simple addition to the duties and powers of the council, whereby the council would advise the minister on all matters to the end that the economic and social viability of farm communities in Canada should be enhanced and improved. But nothing has been done to direct attention toward the need to preserve the rural environment and economy.

This was the situation in which I proposed an amendment designed to obtain this objective. If adopted, it would have had the effect of rounding out the bill and would have given formal expression to the concept of preserving and enhancing the rural life-style. The bill before us will not assist in the development of viable family farm enterprises. I believe it is designed to help the big operator. The small operator will be vulnerable to the integrator and the corporate structure. I believe the bill will produce a locked-in effect: those with vested interests will find their interests preserved. It will increase capital requirements.

I note the following in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce newsletter for November-December, 1971. In 1969, capital investment in Canadian farming amounted to some $23 billion. By 1980, total investment in the industry is expected to amount to $55 billion. Much of this increase arises out of new capital considerations to which attention must be paid by those wishing to engage in farming. I quote as follows from the bank newsletter:

This situation is the result of the growing trend toward the introduction of production quotas in agriculture as a means of allocating the right to supply a portion of the market. In some cases the quota right is tied directly to the farm assets themselves and its work is reflected in the value of such assets. In other instances the quota had a separate value in itself and may be traded independently of farm assets.

The right to produce milk for human consumption in Ontario provides an example of the latter and necessitates the possession of a group one pool quota which trades at about $21 per pound at the present time in southern Ontario. Hence, except under certain conditions and with certain limitations whereby existing industrial milk and cream producers can obtain the quota without payment, the purchase or establishment of a dairy farm capable of supplying a daily quota of 1,000 pounds of milk would involve an additional investment of $21,000 over and above the cost of land, buildings, equipment and livestock.

The bill before us will encourage the type of development to which I have just referred. Capital outlays will be increased as we improve our technology and production methods, in addition to the added burden of quota costs. This, too, will increase costs but along with this there is a corresponding increase in productivity. I believe this bill will make it more difficult for new people to become established because of the amount of money involved. Ability or desire will not be a factor but, rather, it will depend on the amount of money they are able to put into the business.

Supporters of the government tell us they are doing all this for the sake of orderly marketing. But what better example of orderly marketing could one single out than the marketing of beef and beef products? This is simply because the beef market has been free of government intervention, free of restriction or impediment. It has been established in the free marketplace. Cattlemen want to keep it that way. This is why they want no part of the bill we are considering.

The government says it is dedicated to preserving the family farm, but I am sure the bill is patterned on the basis of the same philosophy as that which led to the abolition of the unit quota system in relation to the delivery of grain in western Canada. This system was the salvation of the small farmer but it has been abolished by a government which acts greatly to the detriment of the viability of the small farm. This bill reflects the same philosophy as that which led to the destruction of the small creameries as a result of the discriminatory actions of the Dairy Commission. Its inspiration is similar to that behind Operation Lift in which less than 50 per cent of the farmers, and in particular the small farmers in Alberta, were not able to participate, or the small farm adjustment program now renamed the small farm development program, though the contents of the program are basically the same—it is a program of consolidation and adjustment designed to do away with the small farm operator.

Farm operators will be burdened with yet another cost under the terms of this bill since the agencies will have power to impose levies. This will only increase further the cost of production, though we know that farm income has declined drastically over the last three years and this trend will continue if we accept the forecasts emanating from the Outlook Conference held in Ottawa some time ago.

Government policy as manifested in the programs I have mentioned has added to the deterioration of our rural areas and of our rural life-style. This has resulted in many of our small communities dying and rural communities becoming ghost towns. If the government is determined to reverse this trend it should put some teeth into legislation such as we have before us. This would reaffirm that it was serious in its expressions of concern about the need to preserve, develop and enhance the small family farm and rural communities generally. There should not be one piece of legislation designed for agriculture which did not include this principle.

There are other amendments which I feel should have been accepted, for example, amendment No. 23 proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot which, again, affirms the principle to which I have referred, namely, that the efforts of the council should be designed to pay due regard to promoting the greatest opportunity for the largest number of producers to acquire a standard of living comparable with organized segments of society.

• (3:20 a.m.)

A government which claims to be committed to assisting the small family farm unit, if it were dedicated and seriously committed to that objective would have no objection to accepting an amendment of that nature or the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), which reads:

—to submit to the minister, at the commencement of each production year, a list of prices which shall be paid for a regulated product for that year, such prices to be compensatory for the cost of production of such product;

If this bill is indeed going to help the small farmer and assist the producer, what is wrong with accepting an amendment of that nature? There are many others. There are amendments such as those which would provide adequate provisions for appeal. We have asked for safeguards in many clauses. These have been refused. As far as I am concerned, there is far too much discretion left to the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: There were many shortcomings in this bill when it was introduced. There are still many shortcomings as it stands this evening. Many of the refinements that have been incorporated into the bill were a result of pressure by the opposition. I agree with the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who stated that the opposition party did a fantastic job in trying to patch up a piece of legislation that was ill-conceived and ill-advised.

The bill was presented in a distorted way. It was to have been a producers' bill. In the first instance it turned out to be a bureaucrats' bill. We attempted to change that. In the original instance the producer was not even mentioned in the bill. The producer was only mentioned in the clause dealing with penalties. This was to be a perfect bill, brought in after much consultation and penetrative study. Yet we have had to incorporate something like 30 or 35 amendments. Instead of being a perfect bill, we received a bill that set out to make agriculture nothing more than a public utility based on the philosophy of a cheap food policy. This was to have been enabling legislation, yet the submissions of the United Grain Growers, the Cattlemen's Association and the Palliser Wheat Growers Association called it a monolithic monster. They did not agree this was enabling legislation.

The Saskatchewan Hog Producers Association said that by their interpretation this is not permissive legislation. It invests unlimited powers in an act which may or may not represent the producers. On that basis they said they must voice opposition to the bill. The cattlemen said this bill represents a very severe erosion of the rights of producers to control their own destiny within the larger laws of society of Canada. The Cattlemen's Association is an independent group. They said it is their right to shape the future of their own destiny. The Palliser Wheat Growers Association said that the bill was completely devoid of reality and totally unnecessary in the prairie region where exports are an absolute necessity—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Those of us who were interested just heard an excellent speech by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). What he had to say was very important with regard to the bill before the House. Because of the importance of the debate on this bill I ask Your Honour, with great respect, to implement the provisions of Standing Order 12(3) and ask members opposite to please maintain a little decorum.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle).

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I promise hon. members I will be very brief. I wish to make two very important observations. First, marketing boards—not those that may be formed in the future but existing boards in Saskatchewan and Alberta and, in fact, marketing boards representing growers in the constituency of Vegreville—for some reason or another have telephoned me. I do not know why they do not have confidence in their own member. I was telephoned today and asked for assurance that this bill would be passed shortly because they will be having a meeting in Winnipeg in the very near future. As a matter of fact—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I want to hear the speech of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle). I ask Your Honour to enforce the provisions of Standing Order 12(3) and ask members opposite to pay respectful attention at least to one of their own members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This is the second time the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has raised this point of order. The Chair has considerable sympathy for the hon. member. I do not want to be critical of members on either side of the House, but hon. members who want to make a contribution to the debate deserve the courtesy of a hearing.

Mr. Pringle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I make this point because the very people I am talking about are small family farmers who are represented by successful, existing marketing boards operationg with head offices in Regina and Edmonton. They require Bill C-176 on an emergency basis so that they will be able to join with other marketing boards across the nation and arrange a co-ordinating program which they have ready and with which they want to proceed. Apparently the members from Saskatchewan and the member for Alberta are not interested in working with their own people and their own marketing board.

These farmers presently operate under provincial legislation. They have been successful in maintaining family farms and have effectively stopped the proliferation of vertical integration in both provinces. I ask the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) whether he really knows there is a group of integrated medical doctors in Saskatchewan. Does he know anything about these people who are presently endeavouring to take over the turkey industry to the detriment of family farms? If these people had not been bailed out of a particular program they would be creating a problem now. I would suggest that the hon. members opposite should talk to the small farmers in Saskatchewan who require this.

I would suggest to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) that he should speak to the people in his area who have been operating for many years successful marketing boards and who are asking for a co-ordinated operation such as would become effective through Bill C-176.

I said I would be brief, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say one more thing. The hon. member quoted a letter from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. Let me tell this hon. gentleman that I operated in the city of Edmonton for a number of years and I can recall, before there were marketing boards, a time when the very farmers I am talking about could not even go into a bank. Now they can go into the Canadian Bank of Commerce to borrow money because of the viability of the industry created by the operation of the provincial marketing boards. So I say that if these members from Saskatchewan and Alberta have really any concern for the small family farm, for heaven's sake they should learn a little about what is going on. If they would do that, they would realize that what they say is nothing more than hogwash. This is not inclusive legislation; it is exclusive legislation. The cattlemen will have to fight to come under the provisions of the bill if they want to do so. However, for the benefit of the people who want to operate in that way, I say the sooner this bill passes the better, because these people would tell these members opposite a few things about the benefits of marketing boards for the agricultural producers of Canada.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson).

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) if he is trying to indicate that the turkey producers are being goosed.

Mr. Pringle: All I can say is that the last time I was in Edmonton there was on the streetcar a goose who is a person.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Pringle.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Crowfoot.

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker, there is a stranger in the press gallery.

An hon. Member: There is a stranger in the House.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I readily admit I have not been in the House of Commons for the past couple of hours. I have been resting and therefore perhaps do not appreciate all the noise previous speakers have engendered. I might just say that the interchange between the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Danson) and the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) which I have just witnessed convinces me that very few members of this House of Commons really know what a turkey saddle involves.

An hon. Member: Your leader does not know.

Mr. Horner: But the—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Let him speak.

Mr. Forrestall: Joe, if you have something to say, come in here and say it and do not stand out there like an idiot.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege I should like to bring to your attention the fact that there is no one in the front bench of the loyal opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: They do not have any front bench.

An hon. Member: Move up, Jack.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I think hon. members should give more co-operation to the Chair and should be fair enough to let the hon. member for Crowfoot make his speech.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I feel like somebody who has arrived late at a New Year's party and realizes that no matter what he says or does, he cannot catch up with the others in what they are involved in doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: What I was referring to with regard to the turkey saddle exchange was merely an expression quite well used in the turkey industry which very few people realize. I used that expression only to exemplify beyond a shadow of doubt that few Members of Parliament from the very beginning of the famous Bill C-176 knew anything about it and here, at the climax and end of the debate, one can still use the same expression. And well do I know the member for Fraser Valley East knows what I mean. I can still use that same expression and very few members know what it means.

Mr. Pringle: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner: When I am through speaking, Mr. Speaker. I have only 20 minutes. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East has on many occasions deferred my questions until he was through, and I extend to him the same courtesy which he has extended to me on those occasions. I only wish to show to you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the House, the difficulty of Members of Parliament from time to time in attempting to point out the many serious implications of this bill on the producer, on life, on the provinces and on unity in this country of ours. The hon. member for Crowfoot has been—

An hon. Member: Who is he.

Mr. Horner: —often acclaimed, often discredited and often mocked. His motives have often been misinterpreted as those of a man who was self-motivated and has been working for a few of his cronies. I have gone through all my files in search of something that could perhaps explain what motivated the hon. member for Crowfoot to launch a bitter fight against this bill.

• (3:40 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: If the House wishes to outshout me, let me tell hon. members that I am known in the Crowfoot constituency as a moderate man, not prepared to outshout anybody and always prepared to listen. At this time I would like to read into the record a poem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McBride: Not at this hour.

Mr. Horner: I know the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) has little patience. Nevertheless, I would like to read this poem into the record. Perhaps it might explain to hon. members what motivates the member for Crowfoot and in his desire to serve his constituency and Canada. The poem is entitled, "When Stockmen Congregate" and it reads:

The stockmen held a meeting
To discuss the pro's and Con's
Of all the bovine species
From buffaloes to fawns
They dealt with Brucellosis
And Blackleg met its fate
Most anything can heppen
When the cow-men congregate.
They came with spurs a-jingling
And big ten gallon hats
From hills and plains and valleys,
From river brakes and flats
They felt all but forgotten
By the boys who Legislate
And the air got rather humid
When the cow-men congregate.
With freight rate soaring upward
And machinery on the ike
One industry gets settled and
Up comes another strike
With all this vicious circle
They wonder at their fate
You hear some rangeland parlance
When the cow-men congregate.
In the halls of Legislation,
Where the laws of man are made
We need a few old cow-hands
Courageous, unafraid
Who rear up on their haunches
In caucus or debate
And tell the world their troubles
When the M.P.'s congregate.

That poem was written in 1953.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Horner: By none other than a person by the name of "Ferg" James, of Hanna, Alberta. If anybody wants a copy of it, I suggest that they subscribe to Hansard tomorrow. There are a few other things that I want to put on the record tonight.

An hon. Member: Not another poem.

Mr. Horner: Many people have suggested, and some newspapers have proclaimed, that this is a great victory for the government, that they have all they wanted. It is a long time since Bill C-197 was introduced to the House of Commons. Not too many people have read it recently, and in fact before C-197 went out of existence the Queen's Printer stopped printing it and the Minister of Agriculture stopped producing it. We could not get it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Because they were so ashamed of it.

Mr. Horner: Now I would like to speak of the real changes that were made in the agricultural committee. Reference was made to the two years of sittings of the committee.

Mr. McBride: Why don't you rhyme, Jack?

Mr. Paproski: Where is your minister?

Mr. McBride: We have four in the front benches. Where are yours?

Mr. Horner: I want to announce the number of changes that were made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: If all this catcalling and hollering goes on, I would like to have it deducted from the time allotted to me, Mr. Speaker. I do not care what the hour is right now. I once remember speaking at 7.30 in the morning, not of my desire but at their request. If I cannot have order, I will sit down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure that some hon. members, as well as the Chair, are interested in listening to the remarks of the hon. member. I think he should be permitted to complete his remarks.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) had entered this House at the beginning of the debate with his mind as open as his mouth, he might well have learned something and he might well have been more knowledgeable than he is now.

Mr. Schumacher: You are scared of television, are you not?

Mr. Horner: Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, of the major changes that were made in the committee. First, we had a bill called C-197, which became C-176, which is to appoint a council at the wish of the minister or the governor in council. We saw this happen in the task force report on agriculture. There were nine members of the commission, four of whom reported for eastern Canada and knew nothing of agriculture, two of whom were from Ontario and knew nothing of agriculture, two of whom were from Quebec and knew little of agriculture, and one was a person by the name of Clair Gibson from Manitoba, a university professor who while his thinking was warped perhaps did know something about agriculture. What are the facts? The first amendment accepted by the agricultural committee is this, that the council will be composed of from three to nine members, 50 per cent of whom must be producers. It is pretty hard to divide nine into two, or to divide three by two. I do not know how they will do this, but I think that five of the nine members should be producers. That is what we asked for in June when this bill was first brought forward.

An hon. Member: Speak louder.

Mr. Horner: I can easily outshoot or outshout any member in the House, but when it comes to a bunch of jackals, how can one outshout or outshoot them? I will take on any one of them, or the whole bunch of them, in either contest, shooting or shouting, if that is what the House of Commons has become embroiled in. Is it an outshouting match or an outshooting match? Which do they want? Which are you going to request, Mr. Speaker, from your prominent position in the House of Commons? Will it be outshooting or outshouting? I believe that you should request a little decorum in this House.

• (3:50 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: I will take them on either way, but I grew up in a family that believed in democracy and freedom of speech. I would like to think that in this particular place one could have freedom of speech no matter what the hour of the day, and I hope I am in no way casting reflections on your ability to occupy the seat that you do, Mr. Speaker. I am not saying anything that should particularly offend anyone over there, but apparently at this hour they are sensitive about this bill. As I said, I can talk until 7.30 in the morning.

Some hon. Members: Carry on, Jack.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should mention that if this debate continues until tomorrow it will be January 1, 1972, and this session will have lasted for three calendar years, mainly because of the administrative incompetence of the government.

An hon. Member: And obstruction from your party.

Mr. Baldwin: And if it does last until 1972, it will be because hon. gentlemen opposite are not providing the courtesy of allowing members of our party to speak.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order so that what I say now will not be deducted from my 20 minutes. I have not interrupted anybody in the House of Commons for the last three hours.

An hon. Member: That's garbage.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe it is your responsibility to impose the Standing Orders on the House, and there is Standing Order 12(3) which says that a member has a right to speak without interruption. I suggest to Your Honour that you should impose that Standing Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure hon. members on both sides are aware that the Chair cannot apply the rules of the House unless it gets the co-operation of hon. members. I am asking the co-operation of hon. members on both sides of the House. Unless the Chair gets this co-operation, whether for one speaker or another, it will be impossible to be fair to everybody. I hope that all hon. members who seek the floor to give an expression of opinion in this debate will have the opportunity to do so and be heard.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East—

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of hon. members to the fact that I personally know the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). When he asks that hon. members listen, he is right, for he has never caused the committee or the House to waste a single second.

I would therefore ask hon. members to listen to the hon. member for Crowfoot, for I know that he has interesting things to say.

[English]

Mr. McBride: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that as recorded at pages 10783, 10784, 10785 and page 10786 of Hansard I was prevented from making a speech by the same hon. member on Tuesday of this week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is not here to judge the past actions of hon. members but is presiding over the debate which is taking place at this time. I think at this late hour, and because of the importance of the debate, hon. members should co-operate with the present occupant of the chair and allow the hon. member for Crowfoot and any other hon. member who is interested in participating in the debate to express his opinions on this legislation.

Mr. Horner: According to my timing, Mr. Speaker, I have used about five minutes of my allotted 20 minutes, and before I reach the end of my 20 minutes I am prepared to move that this House do now adjourn. That would precipitate a vote. All I am asking is to be heard for 15 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Louder!

Mr. Horner: I think they should at least give me some kind of attentive hearing. If they cannot give me that, then I ask them to step out behind the curtain and have a smoke. But for heaven's sake, let us keep some decorum in this House, or adjourn it and come back next year to deal with this bill. I have had enough of this guck.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair invites the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) to co-operate with me. I think hon. members are not being fair to themselves or to the House if all the time they invite in one way or another others to provoke them. We will not make progress in this debate unless we get some good will from everybody. The Chair asks that hon. members abide by the rules of the House; that is all I can do.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I had read out one of the major amendments which the committee achieved, dealing with the composition of the council of three to nine members, 50 per cent of whom must be producers. I thought this was a major achievement of the committee. The second major amendment that the committee achieved was to stipulate that the chairman or vice-chairman of the council must be a producer. That was not written into the old bill, C-197, or into this one, C-176.

The third major amendment that the committee achieved was to stipulate that there be regional representation on the council. The committee travelled all across Canada. We went to Nova Scotia, to Halifax, to Quebec City, to Toronto, to Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton and Vancouver. At every one of those locations we heard representations that the council should have regional representation on it. I am grateful to the committee for finally supporting an amendment to that effect, stipulating that a third of the appointees should come from western Canada, a third from the central provinces, and the remaining third from the Atlantic provinces. I thought this was a major breakthrough, and it allayed a lot of the anxieties expressed at the eastern and western extremities of the country.

Another major amendment which the committee achieved changed the original proposal in the bill that the governor in council could establish an agency when a significant number of producers in a region requested that a national agency be set up. This was changed to read that a majority of producers in a region would have to request an agency before one could be established. The bill as now amended states that before an agency can be set up there must be a majority of producers across Canada in favour of setting up such an agency, and that a plebiscite may be taken by the council in order to satisfy itself that a majority is in favour of a national agency.

• (4:00 a.m.)

This is one of the most significant amendments that the committee established, and that after months of heated argument. The other major amendment achieved by the committee was that an agency will consist of not more than 12 members and that the majority may be producers who will be elected, and that agency members may elect a chairman and vice-chairman. It follows that if it is the general desire to have a producer as chairman or vice-chairman, it can be achieved.

Naturally, I was not satisfied with all the work of the committee but I should like to say a word of appreciation for the chairman of the agricultural committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Sometimes the chairman and I had violent arguments such as the one which took place on March 12, 1971. Mr. Speaker, sometimes you witness arguments in this chamber, but I am sure you have not witnessed the heat and venom expressed in the agricultural committee. However, the chairman withstood it all and came through with flying colours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: He did a tremendous job. We could not have reached the conclusions that we have today without the understanding and conciliatory attitude of the chairman. While I do not like to hand out bouquets to any member on the opposite side of the House, Mr. Speaker, on this occasion I cannot help doing it. I understand the difficulties he had, and I appreciate his work.

Mr. Speaker, you are apparently anxious to rise and limit my time, but I want to caution you that I was interrupted on many occasions. I do not feel that I have had 20 minutes, and I should like to continue for another five minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time expired at four o'clock and he was given an extra five minutes to take into account the points of order, interruptions and questions of privilege. It is always difficult, without a stop-watch, to determine exactly what time has been taken up. Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed another five minutes, which would give him an additional ten minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner: There is one other quotation I would like to put on the record. We now have an agricultural bill in which supply management is limited to poultry and poultry products unless the other producers want to be included. On February 25, 1971, I made the following suggestion to the committee, as reported at page 44 of the committee proceedings:

Mr. Chairman, just before we get into the depth of the committee's studies, I would like just to put forward a suggestion to the committee. Here again the suggestion being one which I think would facilitate the passage of this bill through the House. In fact I can foresee this bill being passed by this committee today. I just throw this out as a suggestion. I would be prepared to withdraw my subamendment if the mover would be prepared to withdraw his amendment and that clause 2(c) be changed to read:

'farm product' means any natural product of poultry and any product derived therefrom.

I went on to say:

If that definition were accepted, we on this side particularly could see a situation where we would be through with this bill today and it could go back to the House. We could deal with it early next week. It could become law, as far as we are concerned, before the end of next week. I just throw that out as a suggestion to you, Mr. Chairman, to show some degree of a spirit of co-operation to facilitate the passage of this bill.

I said that in all seriousness. The minister, who was a witness before the committee, said at page 25:45:

Mr. Chairman, there are other groups representing other commodities—and a most outstanding other example that comes to mind is the potato industry—who have been seeking ways and means for a long while to have an orderly marketing of their product and to have a co-operative effort set up between the provinces to put that in place.

He continued on page 25:46 as follows:

What would happen as a result of Mr. Horner's suggestion, if the bill was amended that way, would be that we could deal with a crisis situation such as the broilers and eggs at the present time; but I have to say this, and I say it with all the kindness that I can muster, that I have heard on many occasions, members of the opposition, including Mr. Horner, accuse the government of not dealing with problems until they get to a crisis situation.

The minister went on to say that he wanted potatoes to be included in the bill. We have heard nothing about the potato industry today. I said at page 25:47:

Mr. Chairman, and correct me if I am wrong, I could be wrong, but did we have any potato producers appear before the committee?

I was in a conciliatory mood. The fact of the matter is that I was agreeable to including vegetables in the bill. I recommended that clause 2(c) be amended to read:

(c) 'farm product' means any natural product of poultry or turkeys, and vegetables and any product derived therefrom.

I suggested that that amendment would include within it potatoes. I will not read everything I said because my time is limited. I said that I would move that amendment so that clause 2(c) would apply to the poultry and vegetable industries and products thereof. The minister said no, he wanted everything included in the bill.

I hope hon. members of the House realize that this bill does not really apply to any commodity except to eggs and poultry. If the egg and poultry producers want to come under the law, they must so signify. If they want supply management provisions to apply to them, the government of the day—and I do not think it will be the government opposite—will have to come forward with an amendment. It will need to introduce another bill which will say that the supply management concept shall apply to the product of that industry. So in closing I want to say that in the climax of this debate the members of the opposition have made most constructive suggestions and moved constructive amendments to this bill. It was only through heated, long-winded and very detailed debate that we were able to accomplish what the country wanted with regard to this bill dealing with the marketing of agricultural products.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I cannot shoot or shout as well as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), but I will do my best for a few minutes. It seems strange that not long ago the stabilization bill was before this House, and now we are considering Bill C-176. The official opposition has tried to be all things to all people and the hon. member for Crowfoot, in particular, is trying to take the credit for what has been accomplished. The hon. member suggests that through his efforts the bill will do exactly what he wants. It is only proper to say that an amendment brought forward by my colleague for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), which was not accepted, spelled out that any natural, agricultural product ought to be included in the bill. Surely the hon. member for Crowfoot should realize, even though he was not in the House when the amendment was moved, that he should not crow about what this bill accomplishes. He was not alone in suggesting what should be included in the bill.

• (4:10 a.m.)

I also noted that a short while ago the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) mentioned the fact that he was in the chicken industry in Edmonton, and I would like to tell the House that my parents happened to buy chickens from Pringle Hatcheries in the city of Edmonton and as I look at the bill now and realize that the hon. member is also involved with Maple Leaf Feeds at this time I am wondering whether this bill is designed to protect the individual producers or whether it is to protect Canadian Packers, Maple Leaf or Ralston Purina. These are the areas of concern we should have, Mr. Speaker. These are the areas which we should examine to determine whether or not the bill the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has brought in is really intended to protect the producers, or whether it is in reality intended to protect the large corporations.

A short while ago the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) referred to the absence of some hon. members from the House. I do not see him in his place now, but I would suggest—

Some hon. Members: He is there.

Mr. Skoberg: Oh, yes, I see he is in his seat, Mr. Speaker. He is in his stall. The hon. member suggested that unless the various leaders of the parties were in their places in the House, it meant very little. I would like to respond to him by saying that we in this party are able to delegate authority without any problem whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Skoberg: And as I looked across and saw the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his place for a few short moments, it reminded me of the tokenism which is so evident in this bill. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this bill is straight tokenism and means very little to the agricultural producers.

I also understand that the Prime Minister pretty well took the whip to his people, and as we look across the chamber tonight we note that this is probably the only reason that many of the hon. members on that side are here tonight. It is a clear indication that unless the Prime Minister himself is present he cannot rely on too many of his members to be in their places to defend the policy which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has brought forward. It is also clear that the minister himself is not all that confident in so far as this legislation is concerned.

I am particularly interested to note that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) is with us at this time, at 4.15 in the morning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: I am very confident that the amendment introduced by my colleague from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), with regard to the type of bargaining which should go on with respect to products, is something with which the Minister of Labour should be fully familiar. It seems to me he knows a little about industrial democracy, he knows a considerable amount about collective bargaining and he knows well that individuals who are affected by any type of legislation, collective agreement or any managerial prerogative should have the opportunity to express themselves as to the type of changes which may come about or which may, in the future, be either to the detriment or benefit of that particular class.

I am equally confident that if the Minister of Labour were to have his way he would be only too pleased to stand in his place and support the amendment which is now before the House, because it is really collective bargaining. I can well understand some of the people opposite who ask, "Who will be the collective bargaining agent representing the producer?" This is obviously a situation in which they are trying to cloud the issue, because that is something that would be resolved by the producers. They themselves would determine who that collective bargaining agent would be. Surely, when we do come to a vote on the amendment and ask the committee to take another look at this clause, the Minister of Labour will want to support the principle of collective bargaining. Surely before then the Minister of Labour would like to rise in his place and defend the principle of collective bargaining. Actually, this is all the amendment means. If the minister were really concerned about the kind of representation and changes being made to the betterment of the producer, this amendment would be accepted.

The main factor to consider in this bill is whether it provides for proper marketing or for the manipulation of production. The crux of the matter is whether the large corporations are going to manipulate production in this country. Members on all sides of the House are really concerned about the small producer. When I look at the token amendments that have been offered, I wonder whether the producer will really be protected from manipulation. This is one area we should be greatly concerned about.

This bill does not offer anything. It gives an illusion. That illusion is anyone's guess. We will be creating a false impression for the people of Canada if we say that the debate being carried on at this time of the morning will result in any betterment for the producer. The Canadian farmers have been sold out by the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues by this bill. There is nothing in it that can be of any benefit to them. The real issue at stake revolves around the provision that there be something in the bill to give the farmer and the producer some bargaining power. The amendment moved by my colleague would do something along this line.

I was amazed when the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) said that the National Farmers Union was in complete agreement with this bill. I understand a news release has been issued by the president of the National Farmers Union in Saskatoon which spells out that they are not in agreement with it. I suggest that the hon. member for Bruce look at the press headlines tomorrow. He will then see whether the National Farmers Union has agreed to this bill.

We are trying to do something that will be agreeable to all producers in this country. The hon. member for Crowfoot suggested that he had received what he wanted. I believe the Minister of Agriculture would like to have seen the bill pass in its original form. In that particular text it would have included all commodities in the agricultural field.

When this bill comes to a vote we will realize that we must include some form of bargaining for the producers. My colleague stated this evening that every chicken, pig and cow has a vote. If the ball is tossed to the smaller producers, it will not be in existence very long. It will be a sorry day when everyone in Canada realizes that, after the other place looks at it, we have passed a "nothing" piece of legislation. The people expected more, after two years of debate and all the horse-trading. They expected something that would include all commodities, not to end up with the situation we now have.

• (4:20 a.m.)

Surely the Minister of Labour would like to stand up and tell us about his experience with management over the years he has been Minister of Labour, and about his experience in the field of proper representation for people who are affected by adverse legislation. Surely he would like to explain to the House how he believes in industrial democracy, and how he would in this particular case plead that the producers have a real say in the bargaining process. It is only by the adoption of the amendment and referred back to the committee that the hon. member for Timiskaming has suggested in his motion that this can come about.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I realize you are very cosy in your chair and I would very much like to be in similar circumstances. However, the former speaker simply begged someone to make a few comments in reply to those he uttered. He mentioned that it is the official opposition which has straddled the fence. Let me tell my friend from Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) that if anyone has been straddling the fence it has been the member himself, because over the years I have always heard members of the New Democratic Party preach about the need for a national marketing board and so on. Yet at this particular time, when they have an opportunity to vote on that very issue, he suggests that we had better go back to the committee and study the bill all over again. If what we should have is a national marketing board, they have it and will have to live with it. Let me tell that hon. member and the NDP that for years they have sold the people on the idea, and as a matter of fact have sold it so well that they have sold it to the Liberal party.

Mr. Skoberg: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I believe the member now speaking has misinterpreted the motion that is before the House. It is a motion to refer one portion of the bill back to the committee. There has been no suggestion that the whole bill be referred back, but merely the part that was under discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The point raised is merely an argument or a point of debate. I think the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I accept the member's explanation. Now I know that he stands four-square in favour of this stupid bill. Neither I nor my party are in favour of this stupid bill which would in no way solve any of the problems in which people engaged in the agricultural industry find themselves. For God's sake, what is the Farm Credit Corporation all about? Has it not been promoting the enlargement of farms, and so on? How can one promote greater efficiency and at the same time restrict production? How can one restrict production and obtain the same amount of return?

The member who spoke did not want a net return which would be compensatory to the cost of production. He has to explain it somehow to his people, and I would like to have his explanation so that I can carry it through to the next election. I want to know the stand of the NDP. I should like to hear it now and have it on the record so that I can carry it, not only to my constituency but to every other constituency. Every NDP'er in this country stands four-square for control. This is true. I know for a fact that in Saskatchewan they did not want people to control their own land. At least the former Liberal government in Saskatchewan allowed the people an opportunity to buy up some of the land. It gave them 20 or 30 years to buy up that land.

However, this was not part of the NDP philosophy, and that is why they do not want this to go through, because it will implement some of their stupid philosophy and they know it will not work. I cannot quite understand why the government was so insistent on trying to get it through. Now that we are so close to the vote I do not understand why they insisted on this type of legislation which has always been part of the NDP philosophy, because it means dictatorship, it means control.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Shame!

Mr. Korchinski: I agree with you fully, because it is not going to work. There is no way in which you can restrict production and at the same time increase production. You can control production, but you will not be able to control the cost of production and there is nothing in the bill that would suggest that this is possible. Only one thing can happen, the small farmer will be drowned out and that will be "b.s." for him, if that is what you suggest. There is no way in which any man can survive under this type of legislation.

I am wondering why the NDP are beginning to stall. It must be because they are afraid. This is the result of a push that they have given to the Liberal government, and the Liberal government has swallowed it because they thought this would be the salvation. There is a left-wing element over there. Today I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) an interesting question the implications of which were perhaps not understood by many members. I asked him whether we did or did not make a protest to Russia. Another factor is that the left-wing element in this country will protest to the United States but will not protest to Russia.

These protest groups, vociferous as they are, will work in one direction but not in another. So they have sucked in this government to the point where the Gallup poll shows that they got sucked down the drain. If you expect that the people are stupid, blind or naïve, then continue in that direction. I suggest that the two parties might as well form a coalition. The party to my left are really Liberals in a hurry, but they will speed up the destruction of the Liberals. I say to the government, listen to them, keep listening to them. All these years the official opposition has been instrumental in bringing about greater changes in the bill. Every member who sat on that committee knows that we did it with sincerity. Government members fought us as sincerely as we fought them, and government members on the committee were changed when necessary in order to fight for a particular clause that we were seeking to amend. Now hon. members opposite find themselves in this situation. Are they going to listen to this type of suggestion from the NDP?

• (4:30 a.m.)

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Korchinski: Then I am quite prepared to see you go down the drain. I have no reservations at all about that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If you know a better drain, go to it.

Mr. Korchinski: An hon. member said that farm unions have requested this type of bill. At one time I used to belong to a farm union group. I did my darndest to cultivate it.

An hon. Member: In the Palliser triangle?

Mr. Korchinski: No, we are away off the Palliser triangle. We grow Christmas trees in my constituency. We tried our darndest because we were small farmers. We were struggling to exist. And do you know something, Mr. Speaker? Because of the fact that we have to struggle for existence, if we take on another job to help out, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) will say that we cannot deduct our farm expenses any longer for income tax purposes. This is another problem that we should discuss with the government.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) says that farm unions have advocated this kind of legislation. I know that the NDP have advocated it. I know that there was a request for an egg board in Saskatchewan and it was turned down. The farmers knew what was right for them and what was not right. They did not think a simple bureaucracy was the answer for them. I do not think it is the answer for them. This bill will not solve anyone's problem. If a producer has a quota he will be in a good position. If he does not have a quota, then it will be too bad for him. This bill, I repeat, will not solve the farmer's problems. Certainly all farmers want to become more efficient and increase their production. To this end they buy fertilizer, introduce new strains, grow new vegetables and do everything they possibly can.

This bill will not guarantee prices for farmers' produce. I suggest that the NDP is deceiving the House and the country by throwing out red carrots.

An hon. Member: In the sunset?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Korchinski: Well, a red herring. If the government accepts the solution to their problems such as is offered by the New Democratic Party, then let them ponder whether this country needs this type of advice.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, once again, on this night which is the last in 1971 and during which I feel all the hon. members worked eagerly, I thank you for having allowed me to deal with Bill C-176 entitled "An Act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products".

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-197 was discussed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would invite the hon. members to allow the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) to continue his speech.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-197 was debated and given the six months' hoist. The government then introduced Bill C-176 which is an exact copy of Bill C-197.

Having the honour of being a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I can assure the House that we had all sorts of experiences: endless discussions, trips throughout Canada, never-ending sittings, speeches and briefs, some interesting, others much less so. I even went to Washington with some of my colleagues for a week of study, in order to meet American officials or the Undersecretary of Agriculture.

I am convinced that we have met the representatives of over a hundred organizations of farm producers in Canada. For two years, they explained to us personally what they thought of the bill. We have received as many if not more briefs written by individuals or organizations which could not appear before the Committee on Agriculture.

So much has been said that I think that we have discussed for at least 10 full minutes each important word appearing in some 25 pages of the bill on marketing of farm products.

My good friend the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and many others have moved dozens of amendments which, for the most part, were acceptable.

To my knowledge, the government accepted at least 32 amendments and refused the others.

For my part, whether in committee of the whole or at the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I believe that I have pointed out to my colleagues all aspects of the bill that seemed suspect to me or at least difficult to apply.

• (5:10 a.m.)

In my opinion, this bill ought to provide a control of imports, if we really wish to help the agricultural class, because Bill C-176 does not provide the National Council and marketing agencies with the required tools to regulate imported products in the same way as Canadian production.

If we want this legislation to be efficient, I think we must take into account the agricultural production of our neighbours, as well as their future import and export problems. Canadian producers' associations will have to attempt to enable their members to supply a product of similar or, if possible, better quality. They will have to produce at competitive prices and perhaps at cost prices lower than those of their competitors, namely American producers or those from any other friendly country, whether they import our commodities or export theirs to Canada.

During the study week on agriculture, which I had the honour to attend with some colleagues in Washington, between November 28 and December 5, 1971, we heard several lecturers, all of whom were American civil servants and real experts in that field. One of them, who submitted a brief, I now remember: he was Mr. Ioanes, Under-Secretary of Agriculture in the United States. Mr. Ioanes had just returned from a trip around the world ans was talking about his forecasts in the agricultural field. He told us, in reply to one of my questions, that Canadian beef would sell at a good price as long as the United States would import beef and veal from Canada, but that it was always possible that the United States would reduce the volume and value of Canadian imports, because that country was already supporting American producers through all kinds of subsidies totalling $3.5 billion a year. He added that it would not be fair to make too much competition to American producers by importing too many similar farm products in Canada.

Mr. Ioanes also said that in future American producers would arrange to have cattle ready for slaughtering at an earlier age. So the only horned beasts of two years and a half and over in the fattening stations will be breeding cows, which will mean a higher productive capacity.

In the United States, there are now in Texas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Colorado, California and Mississipi alone about 152,000 fattening stations. Almost all have been built since 1960. But the under secretary for Agriculture foresees that beef production will increase by at least 5 per cent in 1972 and that the rise will continue in the future.

Mr. Speaker, in the United States this year, 75 per cent of slaughtered calves came from those fattening stations. A very high percentage of beef producers are landless and I believe the same situation will prevail in Canada by the 80's.

Canadian producers will be increasingly specialized and, like those in the United States, will produce ever larger quantities and consistantly improved quality products. It is therefore essential that Bill C-176 provide free movement of all agricultural products between Canadian provinces: feed grains as well as beef, veal, hogs, poultry, eggs, etc. so that production costs are practically the same throughout Canada.

Mr. Ioanes has told us that the Federation of American Agricultural Co-operatives has called on the U.S. government to pass legislation on the marketing of farm products as early as possible, including control of imports and exports. I consider that in view of their climate, which permits large grain crops and their immense production capacity in all fields of agriculture, Bill C-176 should also include provisions whereby imported farm products are also subject to quantity and quality controls by the National Council and the marketing agencies to be created.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Mr. Speaker, I have personally held seminars where I have had the opportunity of meeting almost all the farmers in my riding and discussed with them the long and short term effects of this bill. I believe therefore that my constituents and all those who read the reports of the standing committee on agriculture—and God knows how many pages they contained—and Hansard, know my position.

I can also state that it has been unchanged since I first took part in the debate on Bill C-197. The more I discuss it, the more I hold on to my opinion which is shared by others.

Mr. Speaker, I would call your attention to the fact that in the first speech I made in this House on the then Bill C-197 which is now Bill C-176, I expressed some misgivings because it did not provide any means of control on imports and exports.

I was saying a few moments ago that we have visited all the Canadian capitals to hear the briefs that were submitted. I shall give you a summary of the results obtained. We have been to Washington, Quebec City, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton and Vancouver and have had the opportunity of meeting the spokesmen of 78 producer associations representing more than 90 per cent of Canadian producers. Of these 78 associations, 4 were undecided in respect of the bill, 31 were against and 43 were in favor. It should be noted that with some exceptions, all the associations which have replied affirmatively maintained their position provided amendments were introduced to the bill.

I think the same situation prevails among most members concerned with this subject. There is a fundamental difference between the government outlook and mine and that of many of my colleagues.

In my mind, the essence of the bill can be summed up in the four paragraphs appearing at pages 558 to 560 of a document entitled "Proceedings of the Canadian Agricultural Congress". That convention was held in Ottawa from March 24 to 27, 1969. If I may, I should like to call the attention of my colleagues to recommendations Nos. 104, 105, 115 and 116. I quote:

104—In this stage, which is simply a logical progression from Stage III, governmental control increases to the point where agriculture operates as centrally regulated monopoly. Government planners decide the types and amounts of production, regulate selling, set prices and rationalize marketing channels.

105—In return for submitting to a high degree of regulation the farmer gains almost total security in wages and rates of return on investment which are set by government organizations or appointed commissions as in the case of other public utilities. Although this would entail a high degree of regulation, the farmers would still retain ownership of land and resources and exercise a managerial function in regard to operating aspects that did not come under direct government control.

115—The relationships of government, farmers, and farm organizations in either system is somewhat ambiguous and in practice, authority and responsibility are not clear.

This is still the farmers speaking.

I continue to quote:

Both systems seem to result in much confusion as to objectives, policies, and programs. Examination of the trade-offs indicates the following generalizations:

116—If farmers want additional security they must give up a certain amount of freedom.

That is the part I do not like, Mr. Speaker.

The quotation goes on:

If farmers want a guaranteed annual wage and return on investment they cannot have high profits.

This is exactly what Mr. Ioanes said in Washington in the month of November.

And further on:

If farmers want government control, they must serve consumers and taxpayers.

That is obvious! It goes on to say in the final paragraph:

If farmers want a high degree of government control, farm organizations will have to give up a large degree of their potential power, initiative and responsibility to government.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this is not what is required by the farmers in my constituency. As I pointed out earlier, I have met almost all the farmers of the Richmond constituency and they object to the bill being passed in its present form. I have received hundreds of letters of protest of which several dozens come from my constituency. I would like to draw the attention of the House to one of them which summarizes rather well my constituents' views. It was sent by the Ferme Manasan Limitée, Aberdeen-Angus Enregistrés, Danville, Quebec and I quote:

Dear Mr. Beaudoin,

Needless to tell you that I have been quite disappointed to see your committee insisting on beef being included in Bill C-176. I cannot understand why your committee caused its members to waste so much time and spent so much money to travel throughout Canada to hear the "people's voice" and finally take no account of unanimous requests about the products involved.

If this is the modus operandi of politicians who believe they have been directed to protect the people against their own foolishness, it is easy to understand why the producers have little confidence in the committee's statement to the effect that agencies be created only at the producers' request.

To increase our fears, as Quebec beef producers, our minister says that he is insisting on beef being included so that he may use this as a tool in negotiations with the other provinces. Surely, you have enough imagination to see in what position this would put us.

Beef cattle producers are now setting up a provincial association which will start operating on May 17 next, and then it will be possible for us to speak with one voice, without having to submit to the censorship of our elected representatives.

And I must add, let us hope that it is not too late—

Sincerely yours,

Robert Laberge

Mr. Speaker, this letter is self-explanatory. I believe that the majority of Quebec farmers share to some extent the views of Mr. Laberge, of Danville, one of the most specialized producers in my constituency. For my part, I believe in free enterprise. I have worked hard all my life, and sometimes in difficult conditions, in order to remain my own boss. By far I prefer the individual freedom enjoyed by our farmers to a promise of uncertain and vague stability that could be the lot of some of them, especially the bigger ones, and the sure death of the small producers.

In principle, I have much greater admiration for the wild horse, free to eat what it wants, than the thin plug which eats whatever it is given and is obliged to haul a cart led by a driver who does not know where he is going.

I believe that many of our agricultural producers do not realize that the government control wagon will be very hard to pull for a great number of them.

I admit that for certain classes of producers, such as poultry and hog producers, this bill can be acceptable, because it amounts to a lesser evil than a catastrophy, but the exception proves the rule!

In conclusion, I want to tell the House that this is my position and it will not change. I think I have fulfilled my duty as concerns this bill, and if the majority of us has not yet been informed of what will happen if this bill is passed in its present version, we shall remember it in five years from now if on account of this legislation, we have to take special measures to help the small farmers who will have moved to the cities and will be state pensioners, living on welfare benefits. Thank God, I will not be responsible for that because I shall vote against the bill in its present version. With your permission Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) the following motion:

That Bill C-176 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, with instruction to amend clause 2(c) of the said bill in order to include any imported natural product of agriculture.

• (5:20 a.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The House has before it for consideration the amendment. It seems to the Chair that the referral back of the clause may be in order and the Chair could accept it. However, I have some concern about the direction that is given in the motion.

I wonder if the mover of the motion would consider deleting the instruction that is given in the motion, which the Chair could then accept. I have to admit some difficulty in dealing with the other official language, with which I am not very familiar, but it would seem to me that if the mover of the amendment were to delete the last part, and if members were to give me their indulgence, it would be acceptable to the Chair if it is acceptable to the hon. member who proposed the motion—

[Translation]

—in order to include any imported natural product of agriculture.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that unless there are other objections, the Chair would be prepared to accept the amendment. I now have an English translation which assists me in considering the amendment. With the indulgence of hon. members, and using the English translation, perhaps I could suggest that if there were a change that this be referred back to the committee on agriculture with a suggestion that it be amended, it would be acceptable to the Chair. If the hon. member is prepared to accept the amendment in that way, that would be acceptable to the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your remark. I believe the last three words are precisely the substantial part of my motion. In fact, we want above all to mention in this motion the natural products of agriculture that are imported.

If you want the clause to be referred back to the committee for study, we are ready to withdraw our amendment. We are ready to withdraw the part that seems ambiguous to you from the point of view of procedure, except however the last three words of the amendment.

Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is before the House.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to rise at this point to support the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin). I assure Your Honour and the House that I intend to be brief. This subject matter has received wide and full discussion in the committee and it is one of the reasons why I was prompted to file motion No. 14, which has already been voted upon, which in essence suggested that there should be an amendment to clause 7 which I suggested should be lettered subclause (h). It would then have read:

• (5:30 a.m.)

—shall study the effects of imports on the price quantity of products grown in Canada and make recommendations to the minister—

The success of the application of supply management really depends upon the amount of the product coming onto the market. The experts who believe that the application of supply management domestically within Canada can regulate production to the degree that they can control the amount of a product coming on the market, and thereby provide greater stability within the industry, fail to take into consideration the important part that imports can play.

I notice that the Minister of Agriculture is still in his seat and he can correct me on this if I am wrong, but I recall that there was a loose arrangement or agreement made with regard to the egg market, egg supply and distribution within Canada, about four months ago. Provinces tentatively agreed to produce so many eggs and sell so many eggs in other provinces. According to an article which I read in the Magazine Country Guide, the minister accepted responsibility for controlling imports of eggs into the country so that this arrangement could have some chance of success. However, I understand that since that time the arrangement has broken apart. I do not think it has been successful.

But to bring the significance of this to the attention of the House I must refer back to Bill C-215 respecting the Textile and Clothing Board, and in particular to clause 9. That bill was basically designed to set up a board to regulate the clothing and textile industry. It is a highly vulnerable industry, in fact something like the egg and poultry industry to which the supply management concept of Bill C-176 will apply. Clause 9 of Bill C-215 provides:

The board, with respect to the importation of any textile and clothing goods,

(a) may, on its own initiative, or on receipt by the board of a notice of complaint filed pursuant to section 8, or

(b) shall, on receipt of a written request from the minister, conduct an inquiry in order to determine whether the textile and clothing goods that are the subject of the inquiry are being imported at such prices, in such quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to the production in Canada of any textile and clothing goods.

This is basically what I sought through amendment No. 14, and basically this is what the hon. member for Richmond seeks now. He recognizes that the poultry industry is in a very vulnerable position in the sense that the slightest influx of eggs or poultry from outside the country would upset things greatly. This is why the minister acted four months ago with respect to the importation of eggs, and why we have a tariff on broiler chickens coming into Canada of something like 5½ cents to 6 cents a pound.

Under the present bill, supply management applies solely to the poultry industry, and I wholeheartedly support the suggestion put forward in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Richmond. We must give the council set up under this bill power to inquire into the importation of poultry products to Canada and the effect which such importation has on the concept of supply management.

I defy anyone in this chamber to quote any professor, economist or other authority who says supply management will work in any country or any region of a country without due regard being paid to the effect of imports. Anybody who knows anything about this subject knows it is an economic truth that supply management will not work unless due consideration is given to the effect of imports. Take the example of hog production. I know I am getting away from the poultry industry, but the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) made some caustic remarks about my attitude to the hog industry and said I had not spoken once about it tonight. He also made some very derogatory remarks about the cattle industry and how it had lobbied with some irregularity—

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Unethical.

Mr. Horner: —irregular manner. This is certainly false. He also said that I had not spoken—

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my name is being bandied about by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and I would like to assist him since he seems to have difficulty in pronouncing "irregularity" or "irregular." What I actually said was that I felt pressures by the large cattle interests were unethical.

Mr. Horner: I always appreciate such assistance. The hon. member and I worked closely in the committee and I have no trouble recalling his exact words about the unethical manner adopted by some cattlemen. After he made that remark I went to see him behind the curtains, to see if he really meant it. I asked him what he meant and he replied, "Oh, those newspaper ads!" I asked him, "Did the cattlemen publish those newspaper ads?" He replied, "I don't know whether they did or not, I think they did." I do not have absolute knowledge of how those ads got into the papers, but I do know more about them than the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there were hog men who paid for those ads, and poultry men, and there might have been a few cattlemen. Why accuse only the cattlemen of being unethical? I think he is prejudiced against them, and his prejudices are showing this evening.

• (5:40 a.m.)

Let us suppose that supply management could raise the price of pork in Canada today. In 1970 we provided 19 per cent of the pork imported by the United States, but 35 per cent of their imports come from Denmark. If we increase our price we only create a bigger market for the Danish pork farmers. This is the retrograde step that supply management will effect unless we control our borders.

Mr. Speaker, I know the hour is late.

An hon. Member: It is early—early in the morning.

Mr. Horner: I should like to tell hon. members that I have to catch a plane at 7.50 a.m. so I will not be speaking much longer. Mr. Speaker, supply management is wrong and it cannot work unless we pay close attention to imports. We are only fooling ourselves and the poultry industry if we pass this bill without referring it back to committee. I would hope that the committee would implement a section in the bill similar to clause 9 of Bill C-215, the textile bill. These products share a vulnerability with regard to imports.

In spite of the desires of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), this bill will not serve any useful purpose for the poultry industry if they disregard the effects of imports. This government pretends to pay attention to agriculture but has not solved any of its problems. I hope that some government in Canada, some day will put its mind to solving these problems.

Unless the government accepts the suggestion of the hon. member for Richmond this bill is only window dressing. Part of my riding is in Calgary and I do not neglect that part, but I still care, perhaps too much for this modern society, about agriculture. This bill does not solve any problems but just touches upon them superficially. For these reasons I shall gladly vote against the bill because it is not an answer; it is merely a cover-up by this government for its neglect since it has taken office.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, at various points in the progress of this bill through the House my colleagues have tried to get me to participate in the debate. Now that we are apparently prepared to see the old year out and the new year in with the continuous companionship we have had in this House, I suppose I might be permitted to say a few words. I might discuss the oyster farmers in my constituency or the three farmers who were brought into the debate a while ago, but I shall try to confine my remarks to the amendment before us. I am not going to attempt to compete with the thunderous oratory of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) or the frenzied hysteria of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

An hon. Member: Give us your own brand of nonsense.

Mr. Barnett: I have agricultural producers in my constituency and so I try to maintain some acquaintance with the progress of agricultural legislation through the House. I support the principle of the amendment before us and I agree with the hon. member for Crowfoot that the considerations involved in this amendment are vital to the success of a national marketing scheme of any kind in this country. Sooner or later the principle will have to be incorporated in the operation of farm marketing in Canada if the claims made for the approach in this bill by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) are to bear fruit.

I do not intend to deal with the matter extensively, but I feel that the issue contained in this amendment is of great concern to many agricultural producers in the province of British Columbia. At the B.C. Federation of Agriculture's thirty-eighth annual conference, the president, Mr. R. A. Blair, put the blame on "low-priced imports and international trade that does not take place on a fair and equitable basis". He said:

Tree fruits suffered another year of low prices, potato growers didn't even recover costs of production—

From correspondence I have received from potato growers in my constituency, I know that this has been a bad year for them. He went on to say:

• (5:50 a.m.)

—strawberry growers were forced to take a big price cut and poultry groups found their income levels being eroded away.

President Blair then said that his fellow farmers favour international trade and understand that trade is a two-way street. The next part of his report says:

What we cannot understand, and cannot accept, is that the mechanism of trade should be 'greased' with agricultural products.

We are tired of being told that agricultural products from Mexico must be given unencumbered entry into Canada or Mexicans won't buy our wood products . . . that we must continue to accept agricultural products from countries which erect artificial barriers against ours . . . and that we cannot impose a surtax of US fire-sale priced goods because they might retaliate against us.

According to my knowledge of the agricultural situation in British Columbia, that is a fair statement of a position which has been worsening increasingly for many years. It has been recounted in this House on more than one occasion that at one time there was a viable canning industry on the lower mainland of the province. It was purchased by American interests and phased out, and now American canned goods are coming in bearing the label of genuine and well known Canadian brands. The labels are put on after the cans reach Canada, yet the small print says, "Produce of the USA". This has been repeated in other parts of Canada. I was told, on visiting the Niagara peninsula, that the same kind of thing has happened there.

This amendment has raised an important and vital point that we must consider when considering the future welfare of the farm producers of Canada and the establishment of a viable, equitable and orderly marketing system across this country. I took those few minutes, Mr. Speaker, to enjoy celebrating what will be, hopefully, a happy New Year.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak for long. I want to put two facts on the record in speaking in support of the amendment moved by my friends to my left. The government believes that when a commodity is under a quota it can, under this bill, curb the importation into Canada of that commodity. It thinks the legislation can do that in cases where the import is sold in Canada at prices lower than those charged in the country of origin. In theory, such goods would be dumped in this country. I wish to cite two examples to show how such a provision in the law is being contravened legally. Great hardships are being worked on producers. The government is placing great reliance on the present law, but I wish to show that the statute in question will not solve the problem that my friends to my left have brought to the attention of the House.

I cite an example that affected me personally. At one time we were in the celery business, and when we had to compete against American celery brought into Canada we laid a charge. We said that the American celery was being dumped here, and we felt that we were on safe ground. Nevertheless, Californian growers were obtaining in California the same price that their celery was fetching in Canada. Why was that, Mr. Speaker? Their freight costs from California to Toronto, plus the cost of containers, were less than our freight costs from Chatham to Toronto. Therefore, it was not a question of dumping but of freighting that we had to examine.

My second illustration involves tomatoes. Not long ago we faced a problem involving canned tomatoes, an important commodity in southwestern Ontario. Those tomatoes were being landed in our eastern ports at sale prices which were lower than those our processors had to pay for the empty containers themselves. There was a real problem in that connection. I cite these two examples to show why this type of study with regard to this bill is so important.

We are dealing with supply management.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Danforth: I cannot understand why this government thinks it can introduce, under any bill, the concept of supply management when in 1963 Mr. Freeman, then the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, with the full backing of the U.S. government, of the United States commodity groups and of the U.S. treasury, brought in supply management. That lasted three years only, because he found that it was absolutely impossible to administer supply management. It was the most impractical step that the United States Department of Agriculture had ever taken. He found, as we shall find when we impose a quota on any agricultural commodity, that to survive farmers will grow something else. They will grow a commodity not under quota. When there is a surplus of that and a quota is put on, they will produce a third product.

So the program will be impossible to administer when we have put quotas on every commodity produced by agriculture. I do not see how this government can accomplish something that the United States government almost eight years ago confessed was impossible of accomplishment and impossible to administer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I support this amendment and the suggestion to refer the bill back to committee. I want to add something that I do not think has been said. When a board has to make a decision regarding the domestic consumption and export potential of any given commodity, it will find that most commodities are being imported at a certain price. The example of the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) concerning celery could be repeated for other vegetables such as lettuce. The Americans claim they do not dump lettuce in Canada. Their production is three or four weeks ahead of ours, and their peak production of lettuce coincides with our initial production.

Any government-established agency which could control total export and domestic production using supply management and other tools available to it would have to be in a position to make recommendations, probably in a very direct manner. Under the arrangements now existing, producers ask the government to place a restriction on certain imports and perhaps four or five weeks later restrictions are applied. The government, for its part, will need to exercise some overriding control beyond the power of the board.

I presume we have given the Dairy Commission the kind of control I have mentioned and that the commission exercises it in an organized way. The commission assesses the potential in the export market and in the domestic market and has imported directly in the last few years. It seems that the estimate made by the board has not placed us in a surplus position. I am using examples which are national in scope. I imagine the Wheat Board is armed with regulations which prohibit the importation of grain. There may be some arrangement under which, if we were short of wheat, particularly of seed for example, importation could be authorized. I am sure such a decision would be made by the board itself and not by virtue of tariff arrangements. The point I wish to make is that this question should be referred back for further consideration. It is not all black and it is not all white.

Mr. Major: Two more years!

Mr. Peters: Well, we have been waiting for this for a long time. I am sure the hon. member could mention a number of commodities whose production is not controlled and where imports are a major factor. Wine has been mentioned as an example, with particular reference to Quebec. The province of Quebec has established a Liquor Control Board. If an individual wishes to import wine from France he would find, if he made inquiries, that he is not allowed to do so because it is the board in Quebec which decides in what circumstances alcoholic beverages can be imported. The hon. member shakes his head. Maybe somebody, in some circumstances, can import directly. I suppose there is some importation from St. Pierre and Miquelon. But in the main the board which controls distribution also wishes to have some say as to what is imported in that field.

If the government does not see fit to accept the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) it will still be obliged to give consideration to the idea behind it. Even in the field of eggs and poultry the problem raised is an immediate one. I am told that if the duty on eggs were to drop by a cent and a half, there would in a very short time be no egg producers in business in the province of Ontario. The industry is operated almost entirely behind a tariff preference of 1½ cents per dozen. If we gave four or five major companies the right to decide what could be imported, being competent businessmen they would no doubt say, "Let us raise the tariff some more, and the price is bound to go up still further." So the prospect of competition would not keep prices down at all.

The threat of importation is a deciding factor where prices are concerned. Whether the government accepts this amendment or not, it will not be able to avoid considering some type of control, whether indirect, based on a recommendation from the agency to the government, or more directly by a direction to the agency to regulate importation.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, since it is 6.10 a.m., I have no intention of delaying the House. I think however that this amendment is very important.

I have always been very much concerned about these imports that glut the market in Canada, and I shall not accept that the bill be referred to the committee, but on the other hand, it is very difficult to support this amendment. I think that most producers definitely need this bill, and it would be very difficult for me to support this amendment. However, before it is put to the vote, I should like the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to tell the House what will be the responsibility of the Marketing Council with respect to imports.

I certainly hope the marketing agency will have the necessary power to prevent the oversupply in our Canadian markets we have witnessed for a long time. An explanation on the part of the Minister of Agriculture could help me make up my mind about the amendment; but, in any event, the bill is of such importance that surely I could not agree to support the amendment, in view of the fact that the farmers expect its passage.

I would very much appreciate the Minister of Agriculture giving us his point of view on the potential advent on our markets of imported products and on the powers of the marketing agency with regard to those imports.

I trust the Minister of Agriculture will be able to enlighten us before the question is put.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the minister would accept the invitation of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), but I would still like, for no more than two minutes, and while supporting the motion of my hon. colleague from Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), to explain once more than objectives which we are pursuing.

We do not want to control the import of farm products at all. This is not the point. What we want is for import licences which will be granted to compel importers to subject imported farm products to the same control as Canadian farm products.

Yesterday, I think—we can now say yesterday indeed!—my hon. colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) gave a striking example in this connection concerning the import of wines and spirits.

We want the same thing in regard to imported farm products. We are not trying to prevent or limit imports of farm products, but we do not want imported farm products to come and invade Canadian markets at lower prices.

If imported farm products are not subject to the same regulations as Canadian farm products, this act will be void and useless. If the amendment which we are proposing is passed it will protect consumers as well as producers. We know that until now some importers have had no qualins about importing certain agricultural products at the time when Canadian production was ready to be delivered on the consumer market.

That is why we want the bill to be referred back to the committee. We do not want the committee to consider the whole bill, but only one particular clause to amend it so that it be more efficient. Having read the minutes of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I know that this suggestion has been made to the committee and to the government.

Since the minister did not react to that request we want the bill to be referred back to the committee so that it may consider that point which is very important for the producers as well as—

Mr. Corriveau: You never did attend the sittings of the committee and you never will.

Mr. Laprise: I would like to tell the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) that I was not a member of that committee and that is why I did not attend the sittings of the committee. However I have read the minutes of its proceedings in order to be informed.

If the hon. member for Frontenac carries out his duties as well as I have done until now, he will not need to give me any advice.

Mr. Corriveau: You did not even vote tonight.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Frontenac blames me for not voting on the amendments submitted at the report stage. He is giving me the opportunity to justify my action. I did not vote because, in my view, Bill C-176, as introduced by the Liberal party, is the most anti-agriculture legislative proposal ever submitted until now—

Mr. Corriveau: That is an excellent statement.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, that is why I did not vote to amend a bill that was bad initially.

I support my colleague from Richmond who asked that the bill be referred back to the Committee, so that consideration be given to the very specific proposal regarding the control of imports, in order to protect both the farmers and the Canadian consumers.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments about the remarks of my very good friend, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I listened with a great deal of interest to what he said. I agree with him. That is the extent of the remarks I would like to make about what he said. I was very much impressed by the force of the remarks of the mover of the amendment, the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), as well as the remarks of the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) about the effect that might flow from not having a provision of this sort in the bill.

While listening, I noticed that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who sometimes is not as attentive as at other times while in the House, in this particular instance on this subject matter was completely attentive. He was all eyes and ears. He listened to what every member said. Obviously, from the look on his face, I thought he was favourably impressed. Inasmuch as he had been invited to speak by two hon. members, although on one occasion he walked out, I expected that before this matter came to a vote the minister would inform the House of the position of the government on this particular question and not leave the matter without any government comment.

Because of the value this matter may be to farmers, I thought that if the minister did not say anything he was giving tacit and silent consent to the arguments without refusing to accept them. I hope the minister will make a few comments fully endorsing the proposition that has been put forward. If he has any reason why he cannot accept them, because of experience or otherwise, I hope he will let the House know where he stands.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my reason for rising to take part in this debate is very simple. I want it to be recorded that it is 6.20 a.m. This is an agriculture bill. I am a fisherman, and I am in the House at 6.20 a.m.

An hon. Member: Good for you, John.

Mr. Lundrigan: Take your time. I also want to send out a few copies of Hansard. When a fisheries bill is before the House, we want members from all parts of Canada to give us the same support as members from eastern Canada have given this agriculture bill. My friend who is with me this evening, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) and other hon. members will want to take part in the debate as it continues. I hope we will not be here all night.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin).

• (6:20 a.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin, seconded by Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse) moved the following amendment:

That Bill C-176 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for further consideration of section 2(c).

[English]

All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

• (6:30 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

• (6:40 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Benson, moves that the House do now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock today—in just a few hours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 6.42 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 31, 1971

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is standing in my name an adjournment motion covering the adjournment of the session. I thought it might be more clearcut, in view of the events that have happened since I put this motion on the order paper, to move another motion. If I had consent I would do it and allow it to be the basis for discussion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I gather that in effect the minister is seeking leave to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I may surprise him by saying we are going to consent, but we hope he will remember that and return the favour some time.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council has been good enough to show to some of us the terms of his substitute motion. While we may have something to say about the substance of it, the essence of it is the same as the one on the order paper and we have no objection to the minister being allowed to present the substitute motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, when the House adjourns at the conclusion of this day's sitting, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on or the giving of Royal Assent to Bill C-176, An Act to Establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products.

That, after the giving of Royal Assent to the said bill or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until February 16, 1972, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Mr. Speaker, if I may say a word or two with regard to the adjournment motion itself, the motion provides that when the House finally adjourns, so to speak, it will stand adjourned until February 16, 1972. However, we are aware that the other place is at the present time dealing with Bill C-176,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It may have finished with it by now.

Mr. MacEachen: —and we are not certain as to when the other place will complete its deliberations on this bill. Really, therefore, the first paragraph of the motion provides for that contingency and permits Your Honour to summon the House for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to Bill C-176 or any other proceeding that may be required as a result of the deliberations in the other place. If the other place should complete the consideration of the bill today, we would have Royal Assent today and following that Royal Assent we would stand adjourned until February 16, 1972. The motion provides that the Speaker may summon us for Royal Assent whenever it may occur, today, Monday or on another date.

• (11:10 a.m.)

If I may make another comment with respect to the time that is provided in the motion for an adjournment period, this session of Parliament has been the third longest in history.

Mr. Bell: We did not break a record, then.

Mr. MacEachen: As of December 31, 1971, the number of sittings in this session was 242. It may still go into three calendar years, but we are not certain. If that is the case, it will be the first session since 1940-41-42 to straddle three calendar years. Perhaps we will avoid that record breaking second first, so to speak.

I have looked over the results of this session and I believe hon. members can be satisfied that a substantial amount of government business has been completed. We have completed 58 government bills in this session. As I look over the list—I am sure that my memory is somewhat like that of other hon. members—I revived in my own mind the variety and the importance of the legislation that has gone through the House, including the Canada Shipping Act, the Investment Companies Act, the Tax Review Board Act, the Co-operative Associations Act, the Packaging and Labelling Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Veterans Pensions and Allowances Act, the Regional Development Inventives Act amendment, the Canada Development Corporation Act, the Textile and Clothing Board Act, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act amendment, the Pilotage Act amendment, and so on.

It has been a very heavy session, and it may be of interest to note that three of the bills that came before the House occupied a total of 87 days. We know that the tax reform legislation itself was before the House for 50 days, the government organization bill was before the House for 23 days, and the Public Order Act was before the House for 14 days. I regret somewhat that that large number of days was spent, for example, on the Government Organization Act and on the Public Order Act. I feel, however, that probably the 50 days spent on the tax reform legislation was justified in view of its size and importance.

Aside and apart from the rather long period spent on these two other bills, government organization and public order, the House did proceed with dispatch to complete its consideration of public bills. I might mention that probably the reason so much time was spent on these two latter bills, namely government organization and public order, was that for the first time the House had in a long time the luxury of dealing with bills in the Committee of the Whole. It seems that the Committee of the Whole was so attractive to hon. members that they left it only with reluctance and after a long period of debate. The activity in committees was substantial as well. Studies were conducted by the various committees of such matters as unemployment insurance, election expenses, security in the galleries, environmental pollution, the constitution, the broadcasting of Parliament, foreign policy, and the financial structure of the CNR.

I make these preliminary observations in order to remind the House that hon. members have laboured for a long period of time and, it seems to me, have laboured productively, painstakingly, and with considerable results.

It should also be mentioned that the House was recalled in September, which had not been according to original planning. It was felt that that month might be devoted to government planning and preparations for a future session. But in view of the desire of the government to complete and to provide additional time for consideration of the tax reform legislation, it was decided to recall the House in September. This ought to be kept in mind in considering the time provided for in the motion for the adjournment period.

Yesterday I was asked to go out in the corridor and reply to questions asked by newsmen as to the length of the adjournment period. I was asked why we had put on the notice paper a provision for a holiday of six weeks. Of course, I take exception to that description of what is involved in this motion. Hon. members know perfectly well that after this long period of activity, and at times very strenuous activity, and particularly strenuous in the last six weeks, it is reasonable for hon. members to be entitled, like other human beings, to take time off to recover their energies, their strength and their spirit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: And I hope that, without apology, hon. members will take advantage of the time available for that very purpose. But that is not the only purpose. Hon. members are not only persons who must sit in the House of Commons in Ottawa. They are, in addition to that, representatives of the people of Canada. Each of us in this House is not a bureaucrat, is not someone who occupies a desk in Ottawa, but a person who is elected in a constituency, with electors who want to have some close contact with their members of Parliament.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I know in my own case, Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat exploited because I have been pinioned to this desk in this House of Commons for weeks and months, and have been able to go to my constituency only on week ends. I look forward to spending a part of this period working in my constituency, and renewing my knowledge of and association with the problems and the people of that distinguished riding of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso.

But in addition to that, the government will be commencing its program of meetings in mid-January, and it will continue its regular activities in committees of cabinet, and in cabinet itself, in preparation for the next session, in planning for the legislative program, in preparing the Speech from the Throne, and in examining the problems and the policies that are obviously the responsibility of government at the present time. Therefore, Your Honour, I feel that this motion, understood in the proper context, in the context as I have explained it, is reasonable and ought to commend itself to the House and to the people of Canada.

For my own part, before I sit down, I would like to thank the opposition House leaders, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) for the great amount of time they have put into the work of this session of Parliament. Much of the work that was done, especially on the two bills that we have just completed, was invisible but it was work that required the co-operation of all parties in the House and that resulted in the completion of these bills on a reasonable schedule.

• (11:20 a.m.)

I thank hon. members also for seeing the Business of the House through until about seven o'clock this morning and coming back so fit and fresh and so numerous—especially on this side of the House.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that everyone in the House has enjoyed listening to and watching the gymnastics of the government House leader but it is clear that he just sprained his wrist by patting himself and the government on the back for the great job they claim to have done during the session.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: So that there will be no misunderstanding, government members will note that I said "claim" they have done. Actually, they have done a lousy job and we all know it. Let's have no fooling around about that.

In the self-congratulatory oration that we have just listened to, the government House leader claims that Parliament has put through a record amount of business. He seems to forget that just about two weeks ago this government claimed that because the opposition had held up the progress of the business for so many weeks, the government could not get ahead with anything so they had to impose closure. Mr. Speaker, they cannot have it both ways. What we are discussing today is a proposal for this House to be adjourned for seven weeks.

An hon. Member: Six.

Mr. Hees: It is exactly seven weeks if you want to get out your calendar and count the days. That is about as accurate as any of you birds have ever been in this session.

It would be perfectly satisfactory for this House to adjourn for seven weeks if the matters for which this government and Parliament are responsible were in satisfactory condition. But, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you and the public of Canada, and I can assure this government, that these matters are not close to being in satisfactory condition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, we in the opposition feel that we were sent here to do a job.

An hon. Member: Where are they then?

Mr. Hees: In the summer we had a recess of no less than ten weeks and we became well rested.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, but it will be difficult for any of us to hear the hon. member as there are too many interruptions. He should be allowed to make his speech.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't bother me at all. This rabble gets into the act all the time. It is all very enjoyable and does not bother me a bit.

This government adjourned Parliament for ten weeks this past summer. We became well rested. We went to our constituencies and worked, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) knows. He came down to visit my constituency, and we had a most charming day at the Picton fair, as he will remember. We have received a generous pay raise from the people of Canada for the work we do here, and we feel that the two and a half months holiday we had this past summer, plus a normal three-week holiday for Christmas, plus the usual 12 days we get off at Eastertime would be adequate holidays for any Member of Parliament or any member of the government; and, having been a member of a government as well as a Member of Parliament, I speak with some experience.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may we have order, please?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member said a moment ago that interruptions do not bother him. They might bother me. Perhaps the hon. member might be given a chance to continue his speech.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, believe in decorum. What are the matters that this Parliament and government should be dealing with after we have had a three week recess and come back here on about January 21 instead of February 16? The most important matter that this government and Parliament should deal with is the question of unemployment, which has been on the shoulders of this government for several years now. We have heard assurances from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the Prime Minister month after month, for the past 12 months at least or longer, to the effect that unemployment will immediately begin a downward trend. As you know and I know, Mr. Speaker, this trend simply has not developed. Unemployment now, for this time of year, is at an unprecedented level. Approximately 6.7 per cent of the work force, or 550,000 Canadians, are unemployed. What is more, there is every indication that as this year unfolds, because this government has not acted in a progressive and practical way to solve this problem, unemployment will stay as high as it is or even get higher in the months ahead.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hees: That is a disgraceful situation for any government to admit to. Unfortunately, this government must admit to it.

Mr. Bell: That holds true for most people, except for the Prime Minister's staff. That staff remains large.

Mr. Hees: You might ask, Mr. Speaker, why does Parliament have to come back? Why should we not leave the government here, for the next several weeks, and let it try to work out this situation. The answer is, they have been trying to work out this thing for several years and have come up with absolutely no answers at all. Unemployment has continued rising and the government has brought out weak excuses month after month. None of them hold water. More and more unemployed are added to the rolls, and so the sorry story goes. It is therefore necessary for the members of the opposition to be back here, telling the ministers of this government what they should do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: And where will you be?

Mr. Hees: You just bring us back here on January 21, and you will see where we will be. You will hear what you must do about unemployment, because we will tell you. We will put practical programs before you for you to undertake, because you people do not seem to understand what you must do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Let us take a look at this matter of unemployment; I will tell you what the opposition would do to force unemployment down if we were the government. First, Mr. Speaker, we must ask, what causes unemployment?

Mr. Bell: Liberals do.

Mr. Hees: Unemployment is caused when the production of goods in Canada is not at the level it should be. And what causes production to fall? It is the lack of sales of goods. Those are simple things to remember. What do we need to do to increase employment? We must increase selling Canadian goods. It is as simple as that. That is what must be done. We must sell more Canadian goods, and I am going to tell you how to do that.

• (11:30 a.m.)

There are two things needed to increase the sale of Canadian products. First, you need an expanded sales effort. Second, you need a first-class program to increase productivity in this country, to lower costs, lower selling prices, make our products more competitive against foreign products selling in the Canadian market and against Canadian products selling abroad. What has this government done to bring about an improvement in trade in those fields? It is a very simple answer, Mr. Speaker. This government has done absolutely nothing.

I am going to tell you why it is very clear the government has done absolutely nothing. As a start, they only have to look at the export figures for 1971. They will see that our exports for this year have increased by a mere and disgraceful 5 per cent. That is all. In order for our export industries to carry their load of providing the additional jobs that our rapidly growing work force needs each year, exports in this country must increase by an absolute minimum of 10 per cent a year. That is the absolute minimum. If they are not increasing by that amount, they are not producing the jobs that the people who should be employed in those industries should be getting year by year. It is as simple as that.

The most important part of our exports, of course, are the exports of fully manufactured goods. The breakdown between our manufacturers of unprocessed products, semiprocessed products and fully processed products is not available. It is in the process of being produced at the present time. Last year our increase of fully manufactured products was a very small percentage of the whole total. Of the increase of 15 per cent overall last year, the increase of unprocessed products was 31.8 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. I suggest to him that although I appreciate what he is attempting to do, the intent of his speech is obvious, obvious to the Chair in any event. He must make an effort to relate his remarks to the motion before the House which is a motion to adjourn the House. I know it is possible to relate an adjournment motion perhaps to a trade situation, if the hon. member wants to call it that. We cannot have a general debate on unemployment, a general debate on trade, and a general debate on every single subject of general interest. I think hon. members have a responsibility to make an effort to relate their remarks specifically and clearly to the motion before us.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Naturally, I quite agree with what you say. I was simply trying to give this government something to go on in the next seven weeks when they are not going to have the benefit of our advice in Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I am prepared, either here in my place or by going to talk to any of them, to outline exactly what should be done and what will work from a practical point of view. I quite agree that perhaps this is not the time to say it. I have given enough indication of the problems of fighting unemployment that face this government, problems that have not been faced by this government that need to be dealt with in the next seven weeks. I do not think there is any question about that.

There is also the question of preparing a program to fight inflation if inflation should start to rise even more rapidly than at the present time. This government has no program to combat inflation. Last time, their program was a joke. Management and labour laughed at it. The government brought in guidelines with no teeth in them. Management and labour laughed and nothing was done. The program was a complete failure.

It is obvious that in bringing in this motion for a seven week adjournment, all this Prime Minister and this cabinet want to do is get the opposition off their backs. The Prime Minister has a great disregard and disrespect for Parliament. He does not like us. He does not want us here. We are nobodies. We are troublesome to him. We bring him into the House each day and make him answer embarrassing questions. He does not like that.

It was interesting hearing the account of what the government had done during the past three and a half months. Everything was mentioned except what the government has done to solve the case of the leaks of six cabinet documents in six weeks and all they are going to do in the future. We look forward to hearing about that when we return. Sending us, people who are paid to come here, work and to do a job in Parliament, away for seven weeks—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: I will answer your question later, George. We are paid to do a job in Parliament. We should be back here on January 21 advising the government, debating with the government and seeing that the government does its job, not pushed aside as the nobodies which the Prime Minister considers us to be, allowing him and his colleagues to be simply rid of us and away from all this embarrassing questioning.

When we do meet on February 16, you can imagine what kind of a program the government will have. There will be more of the vague generalities and the ideas away up on cloud nine that never come down to earth and never get into practical form. That is the only thing we will see. This country deserves an awful lot better than that. I ask the government to reconsider. Have some conscience about your duty to the country. Call us back in three weeks and we will show you what this country needs to put it on its feet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may be deemed to yet have the floor. He will allow the hon. member to ask a question. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member's speech with some care. When he was referring to the duty of hon. members to be here this morning—

Mr. Hees: Not this morning.

Mr. McIlraith: Was the hon. member referring to the 11 out of 12 of the frontbenchers in his party who are absent this morning or was he referring to his leader who has been away during all the important stages of the debate on the Farm Marketing Bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the hon. member asked that question because you can see that members opposite have suddenly become proud of their improved attendance in the House. Do you know what brought that about? It was the day we licked them in a vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: We beat them 44 to 42. It was only as a result of rubbing their noses in it that the Prime Minister and his cohorts are sitting here. They are so excited about this new attendance they want everybody to know about it. The hon. member asked why some of our members are not here this morning. The answer is the mismanagement of the operations of this House. This House was supposed to be adjourned last night to allow our members to make plane reservations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The government should bring us back on the 21st, but it does not have the guts to do that. Bring us back and we will tell you what to do. We will put you in your place and we will get this country moving. Any more questions?

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It is always a great pleasure to listen to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). After listening to him this morning, I really consider him to be one of the most progressive and enlightened members of this House—now that he is in opposition. I am sure we all wish he would have been as forceful and dramatic and interesting when he was Minister of Transport—

Some hon. Members: He was.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): —and when he was Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hees: That was the only time your riding ever had anything done for it by Transport, and you know that damned well. I even put up with the hon. member's company for a full day in his riding to get something done for him.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It is difficult for me to hear those pearls of wisdom. But he was saying, in effect, "those were the days". The night of the long knives, I think it was called, when the hon. member was so unkind to the person who at that time held the office of Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I assume the hon. member's remarks have been introductory. He should give some thought to addressing himself to the motion before the House.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I have every intention of doing so. I was a little diverted at the outset. We have listened to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) give a recitation of the government's accomplishments, and the thought crossed my mind, knowing that the hon. gentleman is a modest and humble sort, that he left out a few things which ought to be placed alongside that record. Some of them Parliament learned about by accident and had no hand in developing or shaping. I am thinking in terms of the establishment of a secret police force in the office of the Solicitor General, one of the accomplishments which the President of the Privy Council might have added to his list. I think, also, of the leakage of the Gray report, such a worth while document to make public, and the fact that so far no one has been able to find out who was responsible for drawing the attention of the general public to the more valuable parts of the report which was being kept secret by the government. The hon. gentleman might have listed the fact that the government eventually got around to making payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. There are many things of that sort he might have included; I do not wish to discuss them at great length.

Tomorrow sees the commencement of January, and of another year, too. This is appropriate. It may help us to understand how it is that the government can play both sides, take two courses and get the best of two worlds. January, Mr. Speaker, was named after one of the ancient gods of Rome called Janus. He was a god with two faces—he could see what had already happened and also, what lay ahead. It is because the government has two faces that it is able to say the things it does and get away with it. Surely, what we have heard this morning from the President of the Privy Council is not what we have been listening to from the government for so long, namely, that it could not get business through this House, that there was obstruction, that there was filibustering, that closure had to be brought in to get something done. It is because the government has two faces that it is able to say these things and get away with it. The arguments used about the obstruction, about delay, about putting blocks in the way of what the government was proposing to do in the public interest were proven false and phony by the President of the Privy Council himself when he talked about the substantial amount of government business which had passed through Parliament. I wonder whether he was, in fact, leaking the speech which the Governor General usually makes at the close of a session of Parliament.

I wish to take a few moments in which to indicate why I believe the government is phony and insincere in its attempt to deal with the problems confronting the Canadian people. In doing so, I propose to draw up a list somewhat similar to that which the President of the Privy Council read out, a list of items which the government obviously considered to be of extreme importance when it placed them upon the order paper but which have not been dealt with. There are quite a number of these items ranging over three pages. I shall not mention them all, because some of them are minor and technical, but I shall call attention to those measures which were considered to be of real importance by the government. If hon. gentlemen opposite really had any concern about the public business they would see that Parliament was brought back long before February 16 in order that it could deal with items which the government only a few months ago said were important.

Look at item No. 41, the report stage of an important piece of legislation relating to the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, a subject which has been examined at great length by the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The bill has been reported to the House and a number of amendments proposed in an attempt to make government legislation better than it was originally. This item has been on the order paper for a long period but it has now been thrust aside by the government, not considered to be of any great value at this stage. Another item is the order providing for the resumption of the debate on the report of the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution. The chairman of that committee, as we know, attempted to have this report adopted, its members having unanimously expressed concern with regard to oil tanker routes off the west coast, but this attempt was scuttled by the very President of the Privy Council who today lauded the government's achievements. This is another matter which was trust aside as of no value.

Then again, ever since June there has been on the order paper the report stage of a bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, another measure of concern and interest to western agriculture. This, too, has been pushed aside. Valuable as it might be to agriculturists in western Canada and to the public generally, the government seeks to sweep it under the rug. One might well ask about the position of Bill C-244 relating to grain stabilization which the government considered such a valuable piece of legislation and then subsequently withdrew. What about this? Is the government not prepared to present that measure again to the House? Is it not concerned about western agriculture? This relates to a field of government policy which only a few months ago was considered to be so valuable. Now, it is of no concern whatever.

A very important question about which much has been said, both in terms of white papers and the like, is the extremely important bill pertaining to the promotion of the sale of cigarettes, a matter concerning the health of everyone in this nation and a matter which the government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) as long ago as June 10 said was so important that it should be placed on the order paper at that time for consideration. Now, there is no time for that. Certainly, these are matters which could be dealt with if we met in the middle of January instead of in the middle of February. These are matters which are very important to the health and well being of the people of this nation. There are the amendments to the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act which have also been considered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to be so important that he placed them on the order paper at the end of June. Now, there is no attempt whatsoever to proceed with them or to consider that they are worthwhile and valuable amendments. We want to know why that cannot be done, say, in the middle of January. It may be that the Minister of Justice is losing his influence in the cabinet. It may be that his position has been relegated to a less prominent one, so that he is unable to have his way in getting the valuable things he thinks should be done before the House and before cabinet.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey), of course, has had the amendments to the Federal Labour Code relating to collective bargaining on the order paper since June 28. At the time of introduction, there was great fanfare about this being a most important piece of legislation. Now, why can it not be dealt with in the middle of January instead of in the middle of February? Does the Minister of Labour not have any influence with his colleagues from Quebec or with the Prime Minister? He shakes his head. Obviously, either he has no influence or no interest in proceeding with this particular matter. Surely, that is one item which could have been proceeded with around the middle of January instead of being pushed aside. Perhaps the Minister of Labour, having made such a fantastic mess out of the operations of the unemployment insurance commission, is not interested in appearing before Parliament to try to tell the general public how that mess can be straightened out, apart from saying occasionally that he has Bell Telephone tapping the poles to see whether or not they are being used to the fullest possible extent. But that is an important matter. If the Prime Minister who apparently runs the show had any interest in it he would have Parliament back in operation again by the middle of January in order to deal with these matters.

There is the act spuriously called one to promote competition in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), which was of such great concern and interest and such a valuable piece of legislation that it, too, had to be set down for second reading on June 29, six months ago. We have heard nothing about that since that time. It may be of course, as we know, that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been sucked in by the business community and is going to write the legislation to suit the Canadian Manufacturers Association rather than the general public, but that is speculation on my part. There is the matter of family allowance payments about which there had been some great concern just a few weeks ago which now is of no interest to the government. There is the matter of the readjustment of representation in this House, the question of the promised day of debate on abortion and the matter of election expenses which has been hanging fire for the last six or eight years, a subject matter which the government said was so important a couple of years ago that it would not let the committee on Privileges and Elections deal with it because the government wanted to deal with it as a special item. That, too, has been buried, pushed aside and ignored.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think I might simply say that so far as this government is concerned, in indicating its interest in the public welfare of Canada, the fact that it has now decided it wants to embark on a seven-week vacation to do whatever it feels desirable in order to get out of the way of Parliament, indicates that it is as phony as the proverbial three-dollar bill.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be somewhat briefer than the two hon. members who spoke before me. First, I would like to express my feelings on this December 31, 1971. I think it is utterly stupid that I should have to speak today, considering the list of records which the minister enumerated a while ago. Among these, it seems that he forgot to mention some very distressful events, including the now famous War Measures Act. Mr. Speaker, I wish I did not feel sad at the end of this year 1971, on the very eve of 1972. However, I think the minister carefully avoided recalling extremely sad events which took place in the course of the session ending today.

There are no indications in what the minister said that would prompt us to look forward to necessary changes, the most important which of, in my opinion, would be to have the Standing Orders of the House in step with a Prime Minister who is believed to be young and with it. As a matter of fact, among the changes to be made would be the removal of this stupidity whereby no one knows when sessions begin and end. For several years, I have noticed that in Quebec's provincial legislature—now the National Assembly—as well as in the House of Commons, every succeeding government has been using this little game of blackmail to have bills adopted in a hurry whether they be as monstrous as Bill C-259 or as important for the future of the country as Bill C-176.

• (12 noon)

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this little game, this questionable tradition still being observed by the government in 1971, is, as I said before, stupid and foolish. And I hope that with the beginning of a new year this badly needed reform of our parliamentary system will be brought about. I also hope that definite dates will be set for the opening and adjournment of sessions and that we will no longer see this ridiculous trick to which governments have resorted up to now. And the dates could be known if there were more rational organization. We would not be witnessing the woeful sight of all those empty benches and the tense faces of hon. members who sat until seven o'clock this morning.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of any assertion to the effect that such a state of things is normal, I repeat that it is absolutely not so. If the government program had included such elementary reforms as methodical ordering and organizing of sessions, if the government knows exactly how long it should take to deal with each bill to be passed during a session, why are we not informed right from the beginning of the session of the order of introduction of bills. It is an elementary reform. And this is a just society! Let us start out by having a just Parliament!

How ridiculous it was, Mr. Speaker, to see all those votes being railroaded through last night. The government voting machine was operating to capacity.

How many government members knew what they were voting for? How many realized that by supporting some of the amendments proposed for Bill C-176 they were voting against this country's farmers? It was not even beneficial, from an electoral point of view, to vote against some of yesterday's amendments. Nevertheless, it was done. Government members as a whole are a voting machine.

We were expecting much better. If the government members are satisfied—I repeat here the views of the people of my riding, views which are shared, I am sure, by all Quebecers and even all Canadians—I would say that when we met our constituents during the Christmas holiday while the Prime Minister was welcoming his Messiah, while we were in our families, our constituents told us: It is crazy, it is stupid! Why do you have to sit between Christmas and New Year?

Why do they make us do that, Mr. Speaker? Because we know very well that in the eyes of the public the opposition is always responsible for delays. The opposition never but never fails to delay the work of the House. And once again, the Prime Minister, the government, the cabinet are playing the game. Mr. Speaker, it is intellectual abuse to act this way to make the population believe that the opposition delays the work. And the government tells the public: Since it is evident that the House will not reconvene until February 16 and that we will have elections in April, the opposition has forced us to impose the gag and to sit on December 31.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if we had a really efficient parliamentary organization, such a situation would not happen and the first measure that could give us that just society which the right hon. Prime Minister is boasting about is the one I just mentioned. He would have shown by this that he was not in favour of partisan politics, and that he put all hon. members on an equal footing whether it was the member for Champlain or for Mount Royal.

All here are equal. By eliminating political partisanship from Parliament, we would witness the real dawn of the advent of the just society since, as representatives of the whole population of this country, we are called upon to realize the parliamentary reforms which are essential if we are to perform well. Therefore I blame the Government for having failed to do it.

What does that mean? Once again the "tax machine" has been set in action. It is always the same thing, Mr. Speaker! In spite of our efforts, our explanations, the truly positive solutions we offered, nothing can be done; the only solution is the "tax machine", and all the laws that have been passed, not to say forced through, all lead to fiscal reform. To what purpose? For the purpose of taxing in order to get an extra billion dollars or two.

Mr. Speaker, many things should have been done, and they were not. Some things were done, and they should never have been done.

Now, since this was a turning point in this session and since it will probably be the main point that will stay in history, I come back to the famous war measures. Upon their passage, the government had us believe in an apprehended insurrection, which was untrue! The government got carried away in order to make some political hay. History, Mr. Speaker, will have its revenge on that!

Another reform omitted by the minister in his "honour list", Mr. Speaker, is that of the Senate. What are we doing here this morning?—We are waiting. What are we waiting for?—We are waiting for the hon. gentlemen in the other place to send the bill back to us, such as it was referred to them, since nothing will be changed in it. This ridiculous waiting prevents us from being with our families on New Year's Eve. What are we waiting for? What changes do the senators want to make in Bill C-176?—We know! It is a ritual, always the same one. We are waiting, and we expect the people to think that this is serious.

Mr. Speaker, I object to such procedures. Normally, I had no intention of coming back to Ottawa this week because I wanted none of this stupidity but I told myself: I must go and tell them that this is stupid because maybe no one ever thought of doing it.

Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting since 1968 for the Messiah and the coming of the just society and what do we get? Justin!

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Cafik: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since we are imbued with the yuletide spirit, I wonder if it might be fair to allow the opposition to vote twice, in view of their small numbers.

Mr. McGrath: What are you talking about?

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, let it be recorded that almost 50 Liberals are absent and did not take part in the vote.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Regina East rising on a point of order?

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I know that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) wants to rise to move a motion dealing with the suspension of sitting. I wonder if he would mind delaying moving his motion until the next item on the order paper has been called, in order that I might introduce a bill standing in my name on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DISPLAY OF POLITICAL SIGNS AT RESIDENCE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-277, to amend the Public Service Employment Act (political partisanship).

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, the Public Service Employment Act prohibits federal civil servants from taking part in most political activities. However, it is made clear that they have the right to attend political meetings, contribute funds to candidates or parties and apply for leave to run for nomination as a candidate. My bill would extend these rights to include the right to erect posters or signs at one's place of residence.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the sitting be suspended this day until the call of the Chair.

I have in mind that Royal Assent is possible later this day—

Mr. McGrath: They would not dare.

Mr. MacEachen: —and I am making this suggestion, which Your Honour might put in proper form so that it will be possible for us to reassemble, in the event that there is Royal Assent.

Mr. Speaker: The proper procedure would be to inquire if there is agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Mr. Speaker: The sitting of the House will stand suspended until the call of the bells.

I might indicate to hon. members that if they care to join the Speaker in room 16, I will be delighted to extend to them my welcome.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted, publicly in the House, on behalf of my party to wish Your Honour a very Happy New Year and to say how much we have enjoyed participating under your wise and intelligent leadership, a leadership exercised despite the problems you have had to overcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may we of this party join most heartily in this wish to you and Madame Lamoureux, and we extend it also to all members of the House.

• (12:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I extend to Your Honour our best wishes for a Happy New Year and congratulate you for you have shown skill and equity in presiding over House proceedings.

I also wish to take this opportunity to wish a Happy New Year to all our colleagues in the House.

[English]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I add my remarks of joy, and say that I am satisfied because at last the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has taken a positive and constructive initiative this morning. May I add my good wishes to his.

[Translation]

The time has come, Mr. Speaker, to wish you a Happy New Year and as we French Canadians say "le paradis à la fin de vos jours". I think you will have earned it after the hell we put you through several times during the session now coming to an end.

I should like also, on behalf of all my colleagues in the Liberal party, to wish a Happy New Year to all hon. members.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their very kind comments, which I appreciate most sincerely. May I extend to hon. members my best wishes for a happy, prosperous and successful new year. I extend this wish to every member individually, and I thank each member individually for the kindness shown to the Chair at all times. The job of the Speaker is not always easy.

[Translation]

I wish to thank my colleagues for their kindness and all the good things they have said about me. May the New Year bring them joy, health and happiness. I invite them anew to come and give a bit more tangible expression to the mood we are in now.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 12.44 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

• (6:45 p.m.)

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 6.49 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being after five o'clock p.m., and pursuant to the order adopted this day, this House stands adjourned until it appears that the House should meet for the purpose of giving royal assent to Bill C-176 or that other circumstances under the provisions of the order made earlier this day dictate that the House should meet.

At 6.50 p.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 12, 1972

The House met at 11 a.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-176, an act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products, without any amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (11:10 a.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

An act to establish the National Farm Products Marketing Council and to authorize the establishment of national marketing agencies for farm products.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made Friday, December 31, 1971, this House stands adjourned until February 16, 1972, at 2 p.m.

At 11.21 a.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 16, 1972.

The House met at 2 p.m.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, February 14, 1972

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Gerald Fauteux, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, February 16, for the purpose of proroguing the third session of the twenty-eighth parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

Pursuant to the message just read, the arrival can be expected momentarily of the messenger from the other place. It is my understanding that the practice of our parliament is that when the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod arrives he is to be admitted immediately. At the same time I should advise hon. members that I have received several notices relating to questions of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In particular, a notice has been received from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and the hon. member for Peace River sent me a notice on the same matter.

I would suggest that to the extent that time is available the hon. members might be allowed to state briefly what the question is. In view of the fact that the notice from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was received first, unless there is agreement between the two hon. members I would have to recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre first. However, I gather that the hon. member for Peace River has been chosen to speak first on this matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN, MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—RIGHT OF HOUSE TO DEAL WITH ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS AND QUESTIONS BEFORE PROROGATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is to uphold the dignity of this House, of myself, of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and of all other members of the House, that we reject the attempt by the government to defraud members of the House of their traditional rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: This constitutes a contempt of the House. In order to show our protest I want to call to Your honour's attention the presence of strangers in the House and I ask you to put the question forthwith that strangers be ordered to withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Ring the bells.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege, notice of which I sent to Your Honour yesterday, is substantially the same as that raised by the hon. member for Peace River.

This is an ordinary sitting day in the third session of the twenty-eighth parliament. It is a Wednesday on which normally questions on the order paper would be answered. There are scores, if not hundreds, of questions on the order paper for which I am sure the government has answers ready which should be given today, before they disappear from the order paper.

There is also the fact that a special committee of this House and the other place has been meeting while the House has been in recess and it is our understanding that it has a report ready to table. If we go ahead with prorogation without the calling of routine proceedings it will not be possible for the report to be tabled and, indeed, that committee will be dissolved as a result of prorogation. Any suggestion that this can be corrected by going through the proceeding of setting up the committee again in another session is, I suggest, an affront to parliament. We are here in session and there are many matters of substance on which hon. members have questions that should be asked. There are statements which should be made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that the government is hiding behind the royal prerogative because it is afraid to face the music.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter before the Chair at the moment is whether a motion should be put as suggested by the hon. member for Peace River. Obviously the Chair has no motion. According to the Standing Order the Chair has the power to order the withdrawal of strangers, that is, of all people in the galleries, which would include members behind the Chair. I suggest to hon. members that this might be an exercise in futility. This would be done, of course, without putting a motion and without a vote. Hon. members must realize that the Chair has the power simply to order at this point that strangers withdraw from the chamber. I suggest to hon. members that it would not be proper for the Chair to take this initiative at this stage.

I did bring to the attention of hon. members right at the start of our proceedings this afternoon that it is a long established practice, both in this chamber and in Westminster, that when a summons, manifested by a knock on the door, comes to us from the other place it is the duty of the Chair to admit the messenger and to ascertainwhat the message is that he carries from the other place.

Mr. Baldwin: On that point, Mr. Speaker, at Westminster this practice has now been changed because of affronts of this kind. Now a written statement is given on royal assent. May I conclude by saying that in view of this fact I urge that the Speaker take note of this particular issue and seek advice on whether or not the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod should come into this chamber without the consent of the chamber.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without entering into a debate with hon. members, may I say that since the notices of this question were received I have studied the precedents very closely and I could not find a single precedent which would justify the Chair, on behalf of hon. members, refusing admission to the chamber to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as the messenger on behalf of His Excellency's representative. We will admit the messenger.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

Whereupon the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the third session of the twenty-eighth parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The third session of the twenty-eighth Parliament was opened on October 8, 1970. The 496 days that have elapsed since that time represents the longest period in history to pass between the opening and the prorogation of a session of the Parliament of Canada. During this period, the Senate has held 138 sittings, more than in any other session, and the House of Commons has held 244. You have enacted much important legislation and approved many government actions of great significance for Canadians.

During this session, Canada was honoured by the visit of Her Majesty the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh and Princess Anne, all of whom participated in the celebrations of the Centenary of the Province of British Columbia.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The session began at a time when the peace and order of the nation was threatened. You approved actions to deal with these dangers and as a result the use of violence to attain unlawful objectives was discouraged and the rule of law maintained.

In the sphere of external relations, the Government has continued its policy of seeking new friends while strengthening relations with old ones. Canada exchanged ambassadors with the People's Republic of China and voted at the United Nations to install the Peking Government in the China seat. The Prime Minister visited the Soviet Union and in return the Soviet Premier visited Canada. The Prime Minister and his colleagues received the Presidents of Yugoslavia, Nauru and Niger; the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom, Ceylon, Ghana, Malaysia, Fiji, Senegal, and Israel; the Foreign Ministers of France, Ireland, Roumania, Trinidad and Tobago, and Poland; and the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Prime Minister visited the United States and the President of the United States has indicated that he will visit Ottawa this year.

Consistent with Canada's desire for closer relations with the countries of Latin America and with its determination to assume a more positive role in the Western Hemisphere, the Government applied for, and was accorded Permanent Observer status within the Organization of American States.

Aware of the significance for the world as a whole and for Canada in particular of the enlargement of the European Economic Community, Ministers have had frequent consultations with the European Economic Commission, the Government of the United Kingdom and the governments of member countries. The Prime Minister and his colleagues also received the President of the European Economic Commission.

The Government signed a Protocol on Consultations with the Soviet Union and entered into agreements for scientific and technological exchanges with Belgium, the Federal German Republic and the Soviet Union.

In furtherance of the priority Canadians have accorded to disarmament and arms control in the maintenance of world security, the Government has continued to take a leading part in the work of the Committee of the Conference on Disarmament, particularly in the efforts to reach a comprehensive Test Ban that would prohibit the testing of nuclear devices in the atmosphere, the oceans and underground.

To assist the developing nations of the world you have increased the total aid budget. In the recent tragic events in India and Pakistan, the Government moved quickly and effectively to bring humanitarian relief to the refugees in India and to assist in the rehabilitation of the war torn area.

Conscious of the need to explain to Canadians the changes taking place in defence policy and in defence planning for the future, the Government tabled in the House of Commons a White Paper on Defence.

In the past year, the growth rate of Canada's real Gross National Product has exceeded that of any industrialized country in the world. The rate, too, at which Canadians entered the work force surpassed that of all industrial nations. It is a matter of continuing concern to the Government that the rapid increase in the labour force has left many Canadians without work notwithstanding the impressive increase in the number of jobs created. The rise in output and in employment has been attained, however, without jeopardizing Canada's unmatched achievements in the area of price stability.

You have had to deal with some unusually difficult economic problems including a major crisis of the international monetary system. You passed the Employment Support Act to assist companies adversely affected by the temporary import surtax of the United States. In order to ensure continuing expansion of the economy, increasing employment and decreasing unemployment, the Government invoked a series of measures including a reduction of individual and corporate income taxes. To meet the special requirements of certain segments of our population, stimulate employment and encourage initiatives at the local level, Opportunities for Youth and Local Initiatives Programs were implemented.

To assist further the development of Canadian industry, you have approved the Textile and Clothing Board Act, and you have amended the Export Development Act, the Anti-Dumping Act and the Canadian New Zealand Trade Agreement Act.

You approved amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the Small Business Loans Act to facilitate, by means of a government guarantee, the provision of term credit by the chartered banks and other designated lenders to farmers, small businessmen and fishermen.

To assist the orderly conduct of business you have passed the Investment Companies Act and the Co-operative Associations Act.

Consistent with the Government's policy of encouraging the economic development of the less prosperous parts of Canada, you have amended the Regional Development Incentives Act.

To help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed corporations in the private sector and to provide Canadians with greater opportunities to participate and to invest in the economic development of Canada, you have approved the creation of a Canada Development Corporation.

Much of the time of this session has been occupied by the question of taxes. You have approved eight Acts affecting all manner of taxation in Canada and affecting some international tax agreements. The approval of one of these Acts resulted in the complete revision of the Canadian system of taxation and in a more equitable distribution of the tax burden amongst all Canadians.

You have also responded to the needs of Canadians for improved social services. You have provided more adequate income support for older citizens of modest means by amending the Old Age Security Act. You have made better provision for those who served their nation in time of war by amending the Veterans Pensions and Allowances Act, the Civilian War Pensions Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act. You have provided workers with better employment conditions by approving amendments to the Labour (Standards) Code and you have given working Canadians improved income protection by amending the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act.

Aware of the increased protection required by the Canadian consumer, you enacted the Packaging and Labelling Act and amendments to the Weights and Measures Act.

Your respect for the principle of equality before the law and your desire to protect Canadians in their dealings with the law caused you to enact the Bail Reform Act.

To protect the cultural diversity of Canada and to encourage Canadians of all cultural inheritances to contribute of their values and traditions to our society, the Government established a policy of multiculturalism.

During this session you have addressed yourselves to the concerns of the agricultural community. you have considered the problems of the marketing of agricultural products and you have passed the Farm Products Marketing Council Act. Appreciative of the particular problems of prairie farmers, you have revised the Grain Act and you have amended the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. You have passed the Crop Insurance Act. Farmers have also benefitted from the introduction of a two price system for wheat.

Your deep concern for the preservation of the environment for present and future generations of Canadians has led you to establish a Department of the Environment. To combat pollution you have amended the Canada Shipping Act. You have also passed the Clean Air Act and the Weather Modification Information Act. Recognizing that all nations must act in concert if the earth's vital resources and environment are to be preserved, Canada has continued its efforts to gain international agreement that will result in better protection of the interests of coastal states and in measures that will safeguard the quality of the environment.

In order that government respond more quickly and more sensitively to the needs and aspirations of Canadians in the seventies, you approved a measure establishing the Ministries of State. To enchance the quality of our urban life and to meet the new and immense challenges of technology, you have enacted measures which have resulted in the creation of Ministries of State for Urban Affairs and for Science and Technology.

As further evidence of your desire to adapt our legal and governmental institutions to the contemporary needs of our society, you have amended the Judges Act and the Senate and House of Commons Act and you have passed the Federal Court Act. You have approved the Statutory Instruments Act and to supervise its implementation you have established a Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments.

During this session, both Houses of Parliament have permitted their Committees to continue the important task of reviewing Government policy and administration.

A number of other significant initiatives and items of legislation were approved in this third session of the twenty-eighth Parliament. The laws which you have enacted and the Policies which you have undertaken are amongst the most important in our history. Though we have accomplished much, we have yet much to do. The pace of legislative reform and innovation must continue rapidly if we are to meet the challenges of the future. By applying ourselves to this task with energy and imagination, together we will make a lasting contribution to the strength, justness and prosperity of Canadian society.

Members of the House of Commons

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the previous and in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons,

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

This concluded the third session of the twenty-eighth parliament.
