Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It arises out of events that have happened in the last 24 hours as a consequence of which India has refused to permit Canadian aircraft to remove Canadians. Does he not think, under all the circumstances and in particular the tremendous contribution made by Canada to India to assist in connection with the refugee problem, that this kind of highhanded action on the part of the Indian government calls for bringing to the attention of the Indian government the gross unfairness of the directions in this connection that have been issued by that government are totally inconsistent with our Commonwealth relationship?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is true, as I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, that we have made some unsuccessful attempts to obtain clearance for the Canadian Hercules which was standing by in Thailand and which tried to evacuate foreign personnel and even perhaps some Canadian missionaries from Dacca. So far we have failed to obtain this clearance. I repeat what the minister said; we are not trying to escalate the matter yet. We are trying in every way to obtain this clearance in the east.

I might add that we have obtained clearance in the west. This very morning we obtained from the Indian government clearance, which, incidentally, we had already received from the governments of Iran, Afghanistan and Pakistan, to have a Canadian Armed Forces Boeing 707 land in Karachi to evacuate some Canadian personnel and foreign nationals from Karachi. We have not yet had another clearance, but we are hopeful of getting it, to have the same type of aircraft land in Islamabad to evacuate people from that area.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This seems like a contemptuous attitude on the part of the Indian government. I am wondering what possible excuse that government can have to treat in this way a member of the Commonwealth which has done so much for India when at the same time India is prepared to have United Nations aircraft go in. In the course of conversations with the representative of the Indian government, what fatuous excuses are given as to why Canada is treated in this way?

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the Prime Minister what excuses were given for this conduct which it is difficult to describe as other than comtemptuous? What explanation is given?

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously no excuse is being asked or, so far as I know, is being given except the one of the very confused situation there and that there are measures of war between two peoples in that part of the country. I repeat that our posture at this time is to ask for clearance and to do everything we can to get it. We will save any arguments on the merits of delays for some other occasion.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister and it is not with respect to any expressions or comments from India. Can the Prime Minister tell us why Pan American was able to evacuate U.S. nationals, BOAC to remove British subjects, Air France to remove Swiss and New Zealand nationals, Lufthansa to remove Germans, but Canada cannot remove Canadians? What excuse or reasonable explanation does the Prime Minister have for the families of Canadian nationals who are still there with respect to our failure to remove our own people?

Mr. Trudeau: It depends to what particular airfield the hon. member is referring. I have said a moment ago—

Mr. Forrestall: Islamabad.

Mr. Trudeau: —that we have had clearance from India for airfields in West Pakistan, in which part of the country Islamabad is, as the hon. member might know.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has said that the Canadian government has now received clearance from the Indian government to land in West Pakistan to pick up approximately 300 Canadians who are still there. Can the Prime Minister say when the Canadian aircraft will go in to pick up these people in view of this clearance?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My information was that the clearance was obtained this morning and that the aircraft will go in later today, this evening.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question in respect of East Pakistan where the situation is very acute. Are there Canadian nationals there seeking evacuation and what plans has the government made for their evacuation?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: As I said a moment ago, the Canadian Hercules which is trying to land in Dacca would do so for the purpose of evacuating foreign personnel but also any Canadians who might want to leave. I am informed that there are perhaps several dozen Canadian missionaries in that area, but our information at this time is that they are not requesting to leave and that they are staying there. However, the aircraft will be there. We are in daily communication with New Delhi and Islamabad through our High Commissioners and we have done everything we could in both countries to inform Canadians of the danger zones and of the precautions that they should be taking in moving in particular from the northwestern part of India, the border areas. We are informing them as well of the security and evacuation methods which we are prepared to take.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact there are said to be some 270 Canadians in Karachi alone, can the Prime Minister indicate to us what arrangements are being made to get them out with one Boeing 707 and whether he has any explanation at all as to the confusion surrounding the attempts to get Canadians out when they were led to understand that the British would take them out and the British said they had no instructions to take them out?

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as to the exact number of Canadians who could be fitted into this one flight I am not in a position to say. I do know Canadians have departed by other means on their own, some by sea and some by air, and therefore I have no way of knowing if this figure given by the Leader of the Opposition is the current figure. I repeat that we have had two aircraft on standby. As recently as a few days ago the situation appeared to have deteriorated very seriously. We did send two Boeings as a matter of fact to Teheran and if they have to make two trips I am sure they will have the authority to do that.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ADDITIONAL MEASURES TO DEAL WITH RISING COST OF LIVING

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that during the life of the Prices and Incomes Commission the cost of living has gone up considerably, as emphasized by the figures released today, and in view of the fact that the commission has cost $3½ million to date with six months still to go, what other initiatives has the minister in mind for dealing with the rising cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a general statement. I would not think this should be done at this time.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he will make a general statement at the beginning of next week?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question relates to the financial policies of the government which have been announced in various budget statements by the Minister of Finance. If there are changes in policies they will be announced in the usual way in the House.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—SUGGESTED MODIFICATION OF WEEKLY REMUNERATION CEILING

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning the Local Initiatives Program.

Considering that under this program the maximum wages for any worker are $100 a week, while in the province of Quebec we have an arbitration committee which prescribes a salary much higher than $100 a week, would the minister instruct the municipalities and organizations concerned as to how they can include those extra wages in project estimates, in order to avoid the problem which arose in connection with the previous winter works program in the province of Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the rule is that the maximum grant which can be made is up to an average of $100 per man-week involved in the program. It is quite possible for individuals to be paid more than that within the program either because there is balancing with lower pay for other individuals or because funds are obtained from other sources than from the grant itself.

ACTION TO EXPEDITE PROCESSING OF CLAIMS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour similar to one asked yesterday by my colleague from Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. I have had a telegram from Mr. Monroe, the mayor of Glace Bay, asking me to inquire whether the minister's department can expedite matters with regard to unemployment insurance payments in order to ease the burden placed on the welfare rolls.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for the question because it provides me with an opportunity to apologize to the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington for my rudeness of my answer yesterday. Had I not been rude I might have been able to explain more precisely the steps we have taken to alleviate this particular problem. Beginning on the first of January it will be possible for people who are in financial embarrassment as a result of delay in their unemployment insurance cheques, not necessarily caused by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, to voluntarily assign these cheques to the welfare office so they may receive immediate assistance.

With regard to the specific question of Glace Bay, we have received such a telegram and have arranged for the regional director, Mr. George Foster, to meet with the mayor of Glace Bay at 2 o'clock in the afternoon on December 14.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, this takes me back to an issue this House and the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs have dealt with. I understood the minister to say that as of January 1 it would be possible to voluntarily assign UIC benefit cheques. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the House to the fact that the Unemployment Insurance Act is being violated in that section 58 does not permit the assigning of unemployment insurance cheques by anyone to any other person. This was contained in the old act and it is also contained in the new act, so we have a conflicting statement by the minister.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, as is the hon. gentleman, I am interested in the welfare of the people for whom he has just made a case, and I can assure him that under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act such a voluntary assignment is quite legal.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will recognize the hon. member, of course. He seeks the floor on a point of order and he has the right to be recognized. At the same time, this is debate between the hon. member and the minister rather than a point of order. This having been said, I will recognize the hon. member and remind him at the same time that we are running short of time so perhaps his point of order might be stated briefly.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order can be substantiated by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which in its final reported quoted that section of the act. There is no doubt that the same section is contained in the new Unemployment Insurance Act, so I have the backing of your own members.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister is rising on the point of order I have to draw his attention again to the fact that we are running short of time. The minister's reply should be brief.

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not question the judgment of the hon. gentleman because usually he wants to be fair, but I am wondering whether he would be satisfied if I rescinded the measure I have just mentioned so that we might resolve this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF OFFICE HOURS TO PROVIDE BENEFITS BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Would he have the office hours of the unemployment insurance offices extended so that more people might receive their benefits prior to Christmas?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, most people receive their unemployment insurance benefits by mail and I do not think extending the hours will be necessary. However, if there is any delay because of lack of personnel we would be glad to hire as many casuals as are needed in the interval.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SEABROOKS FROSTED FOODS LIMITED—SUGGESTED FORGIVENESS OF PART OF LOAN TO PERMIT PAYMENT OF OTHER DEBTS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion of which I have already given him notice. This question is urgent because bankruptcy proceedings I believe are under way. With regard to the fully secured loan of some $82,000 made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the now bankrupt Seabrooks Frosted Foods Limited operation in New Annan, Prince Edward Island, has consideration been given to forgiving sufficient of this loan to allow debts owing to local farmers, truckers and so on to be paid in full?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question, Mr. Speaker. Having considered the matter carefully, we came to the conclusion that, in view of the large number of creditors and the small amount involved, it would really not have been worth it to come before Parliament to distribute again the amount we had already granted.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—WRITING OF EVALUATION REPORT BY PRIVATE CONSULTING FIRM—SELECTION OF PROJECTS FOR ANALYSIS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the evaluation report on the Opportunities for Youth Program recently tabled in the House was carried out by a departmental task force, would the minister inform the House why the report itself was written by a private consulting firm?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, those who have been carrying on the study since the beginning of the program will themselves publish—and if the hon. member has read the introduction to the report, he will know that it says so in it—before the end of the month another report or a more thorough analysis. However, since it was necessary to give as soon as possible to the House and to the government an outline of the performance, we hired that firm which could do it more quickly than the evaluation committee which has already undertaken a longer operation.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Would the Secretary of State inform the House how the sample of 356 projects analysed in the report was selected by his departmental task force?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: It is matter of detail, Mr. Speaker. I could send the answer later to the hon. member, but I cannot recall it for the moment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON—DISCUSSION OF INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT AND FLOOR PRICE ON WHEAT

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. It is a repeat of the question I put to the right hon. gentleman yesterday. Last Wednesday I asked if he would place on his agenda for his duscussions with President Nixon the suggestion that the United States should cooperate with Canada in reactivating the International Grains Arrangement and, more particularly, the placing of a substantial floor price under wheat. Can the Prime Minister advise the House if he acted on this suggestion and, if so, what was the President's response?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I acted in the sense that I considered that, and there was no possibility of putting it on what the hon. gentleman calls the agenda. I reported to the House what subjects we did talk about, and there were very few subjects about which we talked in any great detail.

COMBINES

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN PROSECUTION OF IRVING CASE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the minister hold up the Irving prosecutions in New Brunswick until this whole matter is clarified by the new competition bill?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Without passing the buck, Mr. Speaker, answering on the progress of prosecutions is the responsibility of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. Bell: May I rephrase the question and address it to the Minister of Justice. Would he consider holding up the Irving prosecutions in view of the mess that has been created by the delay in proceeding with the competition bill?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Bell: No, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member can ask a question but I thought he was making an argument. It sounded that way to the Chair. If he asks the question directly of the Minister of Justice the minister can reply.

Mr. Bell: Will the Minister of Justice undertake to delay the Irving prosecutions in New Brunswick, his summer home?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have a duty to enforce a statute that is valid under this Parliament.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Why does the minister permit Southam and Thomson to go ahead with their monopoly acquisitions when he is prosecuting Irving for the very same thing in New Brunswick?

Mr. Basford: A good question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period but the Chair would like to be allowed to recognize the hon. member for Dauphin. I wanted to recognize him yesterday. Other hon. members who are seeking an opportunity to ask questions today were recognized yesterday, but that is not so in his case.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE CONTINUED INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY INSTABILITY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister give any indication to the House whether or not the recent erratic currency realignment swings appear to have been completed, or does he anticipate further international currency instability?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have no comment, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED STUDY OF REGULATION OF DOMESTIC FEED GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Does the government intend to set up a committee, task force or commission to study and make recommendations relating to the regulation of feed grain prices on the domestic market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this matter of course was referred, in part at least, to the agricultural committee last year. The question is now under active examination by a number of provincial Ministers of Agriculture, and the Wheat Board and ourselves and we are co-operating in these examinations.

DRUGS

POSSIBLE RESTRICTION ON METHADONE TO ALLOW USE ONLY IN MEDICAL CLINICS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the urgent fight against heroin and other hard drugs, and the galloping increase in the use of methadone which is being used as a substitute for hard drugs in medical treatment, and by drug pushers, and because of the fact that this drug is itself addictive, are any restrictions being placed on this drug allowing its use only in treatment given in clinics?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As the hon. member may be aware, Mr. Speaker, we had a conference in the latter part of last week of all the health people from the provinces, working both for governmental agencies and in the private area, to discuss the over-all problem of heroin, and methadone as part of that problem. We are now assessing the conclusions, if you like, resulting from the views that were expressed at that conference as well as the recent study conducted jointly by the Canadian Medical Association and my own department relative to methadone. We expect to formulate our conclusions on the basis of these two reports very shortly and I would hope, after consulting with some of my colleagues in other departments, to make recommendations to the government. I might add that this will also be a subject for discussion at the forthcoming health ministers' conference.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon on a last supplementary.

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL REPORT OF LEDAIN COMMISSION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of his previously stated anticipation that the final report of the LeDain commission would be tabled before the end of this year, can he now state whether that anticipation will come true and, if not, when the final report will be tabled?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): If the hon. member would be kind enough to ask me that question early next week, I expect to meet the chairman shortly to find out how matters are coming along.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON RATIONALIZATION OF HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Further to the question I asked the Minister of Agriculture on November 29 concerning the tabling of the report on the rationalization of grain handling and transportation, which he took as notice, would the minister say whether or not this report will be tabled in the House so that all of us can have a look at it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are taking steps progressively in regard to this report and have made copies of the report available to the interested provincial governments. I cannot at this point predict when we may be able to take the next step.

Mr. Skoberg: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member on a question of privilege and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Skoberg: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that hon. members represent thousands of people across this nation, and in view of the fact that copies of this report have been made available to the railway companies, wheat pools and other interested parties, surely we as elected Members of Parliament should have access to the report so that we can truly represent the people who sent us here for better or for worse.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's representation is noted. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government House leader about the business for this week and next week. In particular, could he advise the House what business we will be engaged in while the other place is considering Bill C-259, and does he have any indication from his colleague, the government leader in the other place, as to the length of time that bill may be debated there in spite of the alleged assurances given by the Minister of Finance that there will be substantial amendments moved next year?

Mr. Benson: I have not given such assurances.

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we will call third reading of Bill C-259 and continue with that bill next week. While that bill is in the Senate, and before plans can be made to terminate this part of the session, I would like to have Bill C-176, the marketing bill, and the budget bills dealt with. In addition, there are Bill S-9, the Northern Canada Power Commission bill and the Canadian Wheat Board bill which are at report stage and which it would be good to have passed.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the minister answer the last part of my question? Has he any indication as to the number of weeks the other place will be engaged in debating Bill C-259?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker—well, I am not going to get involved in that controversy.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has a supplementary to the point of order.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, can the President of the Privy Council give an indication to the House when second reading of Bill C-264 will be proceeded with in view of the concern of many Canadians as well as the hope that we will be able to increase family allowance benefits by May 1, 1972?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. member is referring to the family income security plan—not this session but it will be on the agenda for next session.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the tax reform bill has been rammed through Parliament, is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to resign before Christmas as a Christmas present to the Liberal party or is he going to wait until the new year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie on a point of order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, my point of order concerns a matter of procedure.

I should like to point out to the House that on November 25 I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs when a complete report would be made to the House on the "Abeille" housing project. The minister indicated that he would soon advise the House of the results of that investigation.

Now, when a minister agrees to table a report and does not do so within a reasonable time limit we have to ask him about it during the oral question period and that procedure, which is normal and in order, deprives us from the opportunity of asking other more pertinent questions. To my mind, this is detrimental to hon. members. Ministers who agree to table reports should do so without our having to renew our requests.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, further to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River, I should like to ask the government House leader whether he can say when we may expect to receive the new edition of Bill C-259, as passed last night?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont on a point of order. Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Egmont. I believe the hon. member for Abitibi did not receive a reply to his question. I am not sure whether I am authorized to refer to the matter raised by the hon. member, but I believe that question was asked last night by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Translation]

Last night, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked this question. The Chair then indicated that the bill would be in the hands of hon. members tomorrow, before the House at 11 o'clock.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR TOY TESTING COUNCIL

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon I attempted to gain the unanimous consent of the House to refer to a very important matter, the suspension of support for the Toy Testing Council. Unfortunately, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was not here at that time and I was not able to catch Your Honour's eye during the question period with regard to this important matter. The difficulty arises, Mr. Speaker, because of the infrequent attendance of ministers and the immediacy of the problem. I wonder if we could be permitted to hear what action the minister has in mind or if he is taking some action on this question at this peak period for the buying of toys?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer the question, but we should proceed to orders of the day. The hon. member for York South has been very patient, and I believe he has an important statement for the House. The minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the hon. member's question.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): It is a matter of real regret to me also, Mr. Speaker, that because of some action by the Canadian toy manufacturers the Toy Testing Council is not able to issue the publication it normally does and the report it normally makes. I indicated to the council some time ago that if they could find a source of publication I would be happy to assist them with a financial grant to do so. That is still the position, and I hope by next Christmas there will be such arrangements. My officials and I have been working very closely with Mr. Lawrence and the Toy Testing Council to ensure that a testing program is carried out to provide better information.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Lotbinière rising on a point of order?

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Last night you assured the House that Bill C-259 as amended would be printed and available to members by Friday morning.

Mr. Speaker, we welcome that assurance. Technically speaking, this means that in less than 24 hours this bill of over 700 pages, including amendments, will have been completely reprinted. There is only one alternative: either the reprints were ready before the House completed its study, or the Printing Bureau has the best equipment money can buy.

In view of the danger of Parliament's action being anticipated by the Printing Bureau, could I, as a Member of Parliament, get a written certification from the Printing Bureau that the reprinting of the bill was not undertaken before it was agreed to by the committee of the whole—

Mr. Speaker: This is obviously not a point of order. This is rather a very simple question which the hon. member can put to the interested minister in due course. It is as simple as that.

[English]

Order, please. Again I bring to the attention of hon. members that we should call orders of the day. We have members who are prepared to make their contribution on the business for today. We are operating again today on a limitation of time, and we should try to get on with the consideration of that item as soon as possible. We have already gone more than 20 minutes beyond the end of the question period on points of order. I think we should make an effort. I appreciate that these matters which were brought up were all important, but we should try to reach orders of the day as quickly as possible. For the moment, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to invite you to make a ruling on the technical aspect of the parliamentary question of procedure I just raised in order to speed up progress during the oral question period and spare hon. members the obligation of asking again a minister to table the report as promised. Since that minister is in the House, I wonder if the could not say when he will bring in the inquiry's findings on the "Abeille" project—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising on the same point of order. Here again, this question could be directed to the minister. I want to point out to hon. members that they are simply prolonging the oral question period when they pretend to rise on points or order. I think it would be better to wait at the next question period for such information.

I realize the merit of the hon. member's question and I shall try to co-operate in that respect.

[English]

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time because of the remark made by the Minister of Labour with respect to assignment of unemployment insurance benefits. To support my contention in this matter, I quote from the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of May 13, 1971 which at page 5 reads as follows:

> 4. Your Committee notes the following facts:
> (b) that Section 58 of the Unemployment Insurance Act provides that "Benefits are not capable of being assigned, charged, attached, anticipated or given as security and any transaction purporting to assign, charge, attach, anticipate or give as security any benefits is void, except that any amounts payable under this Act by any person and required to be credited to the Fund may be recovered out of any benefits payable to that person, without prejudice to any other mode of recovery."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should co-operate with other hon. members of the House and indicate as quickly as possible what his point of order is. The Chair is in a difficult position. I have to recognize an hon. member who seeks the floor on a point of order, but the hon. member should indicate why he is entitled to seek the floor at this time. We should be calling orders of the day. On the point of order, I should like to know what Standing Order of the House has been violated. It seems to me that this is a point of debate rather than a point of order. If there is a valid point of order, the hon. member should indicate it as soon as possible for the benefit of the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I was about to continue and refer to the fact that the Interpretation Act further supports my contention which is that the minister has misled the House. On this matter the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs supports my contention, if I may continue the quotation:

> —the Interpretation Act provides that an Act of Parliament and each part thereof shall be interpreted according to its true spirit, intent and meaning and section 11 of that act provides that every enactment shall be deemed remedial and shall be given such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects; applying these provisions, it appears that section 58 of the Unemployment Insurance Act means that an unemployment insurance benefit is so personal to a recipient that it cannot be alienated from him by himself or any other person.

I suggest that this would also apply to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I refuse to recognize the minister on this point. This is simply a question of debate and has nothing to do with a point of order. I call orders of the day.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from the implication and, indeed, allegation that I misled the House. I could clarify this in three or four minutes. That would save much time on subsequent occasions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister thinks he has a legitimate question of privilege, I must listen to him. I suggest to him, as I suggested to the hon. member, that this is clearly unfair to hon. members waiting for orders of the day to be called who wish to participate in the debate. I put it to hon. members that we are operating today under a time limit. This is the last day of opposition business and I am sure that tonight, when we reach the closing hour, some hon. members will protest because there has not been time to consider the estimates which, according to the notices received, are to be questioned. Other hon. members will protest that they have not had an opportunity to participate in the debate which should be beginning now.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It should have begun 20 minutes ago.

Mr. Speaker: I must recognize the minister's right to rise on a question of privilege. However, I suggest again that this is not entirely fair to other hon. members.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that it is unfair to the House and particularly to opposition members. May I remind the House, however, that I did not raise the point of order, nor did I make any references to which anybody could take personal objection. I consider that this is a question of privilege inasmuch as the hon. member has suggested I misled the House. I wish to clarify the matter, and that is why I maintain that this is a point of privilege. One must be consistent. The hon. member, in good faith, got up today and pleaded the case of people who, for one reason or another, were not in possession of their unemployment insurance cheques. It is obvious that if the cheques had been in their possession, there would not have been a complaint.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister. We could go on for days debating the point at issue between the minister and the hon. member. I am sure it is a matter of importance. I have no doubt of its importance although I really do not see how it can involve a question of privilege for the minister any more than it could involve a point of order for the hon. member.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, referring to the question of privilege, I have been accused of misleading the House. I am saying that I have not misled the House. I refer the hon. gentleman, and others in this House, to section 48(2) of the new act, which provides for the right to assign cheques to any welfare office, government agency or municipality. That was hardly misleading the House.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED NECESSITY OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FOREIGN OWNERSHIP TO REGAIN CONTROL OF THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

> This House calls on the government to institute without delay policies and programs designed to arrest further expansion of foreign control of Canada's economy and to regain control by the Canadian people of our natural resources and manufacturing and service industries in order to assure our country's independence and jobs for Canadian workers and to enable Canadians to shape their own national identity and social values.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I placed the motion which you have just read on the order paper for two reasons. The first one relates to the fatuous statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) after his return from Washington last Monday. It seemed clear to us that he came back from Washington with empty hands.

Mr. Gibson: Not at all.

Mr. Lewis: In a desperate search to justify the trip which he may have made reluctantly, he tried to inflate a simple and natural remark by the President of the United States into nothing less than a breakthrough for Canada. Mr. Nixon was kind enough to say that he recognized Canada's right to be independent in all spheres. What else one would have expected him to say I do not know. That, as I gathered from the Prime Minister, should be sufficient to remove all our worries and to guarantee our independence for all time. We can all relax now. The President of the United States assured our Prime Minister that he does not intend to treat Canada like a colony. We need have no more worries. President Nixon spoke. The Prime Minister heard it. No doubt they shook hands on it and that is, to use the Prime Minister's adjective, fantastic. I say, what fatuous nonsense.

The second reason for placing the present motion before the House is the failure of the government to announce its policy on foreign investment and the numerous indications showing that when it does announce it, the policy will be without teeth and without the capacity for regaining control of Canada's economy over the years ahead. For years concerned Canadians have been waiting for government policy and action to check and reverse the increasing foreign control of our economy. Since Walter Gordon's days in 1963, Liberal governments have been fumbling helplessly for such a policy. They have been fumbling because they have not been serious about the subject. Their traditional continentalism, their anxiety not to interfere with the power of their corporate friends and their doctrinaire reliance on outmoded private enterprise shibboleths have rendered them incapable of protecting Canada's independence. That is why they have thrashed about without result.

For some two years, Mr. Speaker, the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) has been charged with the job of developing recommendations on policy. The other day the Prime Minister suggested that the government has finally reached four firm decisions but that he would not announce them until he was able to publish some of the studies on which these decisions are based. It is impossible for me, Sir, to understand the delay in announcing the policy.

Let us look at the history of this matter, Mr. Speaker. At first it was suggested that the studies were papers for the eyes of the cabinet only. Then, one of those papers, a preliminary one apparently, found its way to the Canadian Forum. This was followed by the leak of a cabinet document containing a decision on principle. Following that, we were told that the government would be prepared to consider what studies to publish, if any. Now, the publication of these studies has become so important and crucial that the announcement of a policy is to be delayed until that publication takes place. I cannot help saying that strange and tortuous indeed are the workings of the collective mind of this government.

I want to make clear on behalf of our party that we are desperately concerned about the future of our country and the continuing erosion of our effective independence by the massive foreign control of our economy, and about the distortions which that control has created in our industrial development. We are concerned about this not for any reason of arid nationalism but for very concrete reasons affecting Canadian jobs and the shape not only of our economic destiny but of our national identity and culture as well. Having travelled across Canada, it is my observation that a new Canadian awakening is taking shape. Canadians are increasingly realizing that every aspect of their lives, economic, cultural and even recreational, is invaded by foreign domination. Increasingly, they find it difficult to see how we can build a real sense of Canadian identity so long as we remain a minor dependency of our powerful and overwhelming neighbour.

I also want to make it clear that no sensible person in Canada can fail to realize that we must maintain close and friendly relations with the United States. Geography, history and language make that unavoidable as well as desirable. I maintain, and our party maintains, that a friendship founded in equality is honourable and productive. However, a relationship based on the timidity of a satellite is humiliating and sterile.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The New Democratic Party wants to see a policy of continuing friendship with the people of the United States and with the government of that country, as with the governments of all countries, but not at the expense of our losing the capacity effectively to shape our own economic and social destiny and our own social values in a distinct society. The fact is the huge size of foreign equity in the Canadian economy and the large areas of control by multinational corporations present modern Canadian nationalism with immense problems.

I want to make clear at the very start that we appreciate the existence of these problems. We know that the changes we are seeking cannot be achieved overnight. We know it will require years to rid Canada of its dangerous economic dependency. It is precisely for this reason that we condemn the failure of Liberal and Conservative governments over the years to even make a start. The fact is that our governments have not only failed to make a start, they have allowed the foreign controlled sector of the economy to increase every year. They have not only permitted accelerating take-over and expansion of foreign take-over and control, but they continue to invite it. The problem has grown in size every year and the government of Canada carries the major responsibility for the resulting difficulties.

Before I go any further, I want to put on record that our party believes that a policy of foreign ownership must be implemented without delay. I also want to put on record that for such a policy to be effective, it must at least contain the following elements if we are to tackle the problem with imagination and determination.

First, we urge that a screening or control agency be established without delay which will at least have the powers suggested in the study published in the Canadian Forum, namely the power to obtain all relevant information to investigate particular industries or practices, to limit take-overs and the further expansion of foreign ownership and control. Unless the agency has these powers, particularly the power to limit further foreign expansion in Canada, it will be a toothless and useless exercise.

Second, we urge that we require a revamped Canada Development Corporation totally different from the distortion that the government produced. The Canadian economy in general, and the provinces in particular, must have an alternative source of investment capital. That can be provided most effectively by a Canada Development Corporation directly under the control and management of the government and responsible through a minister to Parliament. To be really effective, the corporation will require massive investment funds which in our view can be drawn only from the reserves of financial and other corporations as well as other voluntary investment by individual Canadians.

Third, we urge that the Canada Development Corporation must have the authority and the duty to act as an instrument of government planning and development policy and to invest in new industrial development as well as to buy into existing multinational corporations.

Fourth, it must also have the power to invest heavily in research and development, either directly or in partnership with private corporations, in order to encourage new initiatives in this field and develop a Canadian technology so that our dependence on multinational corporations for technological known-how is reduced and eventually limited.

Fifth, the Canada Development Corporation should have the authority and duty to expand the public sector of the economy, either through Crown corporations or through consortium arrangements with private concerns.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: This, I suggest, is obviously the most reliable road to Canadian economic independence. It will not only enable us to develop new sectors of the economy under Canadian control, but also to introduce Canadian ownership and control in resource and manufacturing industries now largely under foreign control. Merely to indicate the powers that we believe the Canada Development Corporation should have is to underline the ineffectiveness and the inadequacy of the kind of corporation that is now on the statute books, one which worries, as it does, about getting into its hands existing Crown corporations rather than worrying about buying into multinational corporations now controlling Canada's economy.

Six, we must introduce a new industrial strategy containing a program of rationalization and specialization in the Canadian manufacturing industry, designed both to meet more of our domestic demand, and thus rely less on imports, and to change our trade pattern away from one predominant market, the market of the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Seven, we urge something that was proposed three years ago in the Watkins report. We urge the immediate establishment of a government export trade agency with real power to ensure that all corporations in Canada promote trade in accordance with Canadian laws and policies and do not, as subsidiary corporations have in the past, submit to foreign laws and foreign policies.

Eight, in co-operation with the provinces, we must establish standards of resource planning and development and require a great deal more processing of raw materials in Canada instead of shipping not only the materials but also jobs out of this country.

Nine, it is essential to increase public investment in our resource industries, either through public ownership or joint participation with private corporations and, indeed, through both. This is the most, if not the only, effective way of regaining control of our energy and mineral resources which are now mainly in the hands of multinational corporations and world cartels. The government tax bill which is before us continues the tax concessions to the multinational corporations to encourage them still further to gobble up our natural resources, particularly in the field of energy resources.

Ten, and finally, we must implement a policy regarding plant shutdowns in this country, a policy that will require full disclosure of facts before the shutdown is authorized and will enable the government to take-over plants threatened with a shutdown if the operation is economically sound and socially useful for society and the workers in Canada.

I have summarized some of our proposals because we all expect a statement of policy by the government in the near future. I wanted to indicate now the concrete steps which our party believes are essential if we are serious about developing Canadian independence and ensuring the future prosperity of our people. I urge that we rid our minds of what I believe to be a number of myths. It is usually suggested that we need foreign investment because we haven't enough in Canada. This is clearly wrong as has been shown statistically many times. For the last number of years there has not been a shortage of investment capital in this country. The failure has been in the lack of planning and direction. In any case, foreign ownership costs Canada well over a billion dollars annually in interest, dividends, management and licence fees, development and other charges, so that net benefit is, on occasion, a negative quantity.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Canadian businessmen have also developed the habit of a strange kind of self-denigration by suggesting that they do not have the spirit of entrepreneural adventure. I do not believe this. Their willingness to invite multinational corporations is not due to any lack of capacity; it is due primarily to a desire to make a fast buck by chumming up with the powerful at the expense of Canada's destiny. Through the years Canada has produced tycoons of considerable strength. I may not agree with them but I admire their achievements. We could have more of them. In any case, I reject the notion that a people which has built Canada from wilderness and rock is incapable of generating the capacities to build its own economic future. We have lacked only the will, not the resources, whether financial, material or human.

Our failure is also due, in my opinion, to our exclusive reliance on private corporations to develop our economy.

We have permitted wealth to be concentrated in a few hands, most of them foreign hands, and our social and economic structure to remain unchanged. Our values continue to be shaped by the selfish goals of the powerful, rather than by the sensitivity and needs of our people. We shall not overcome our problem if we continue to rely on private corporate goals motivated primarily to maximize profits and power. We can take charge of our economic destiny only if we are prepared to challenge private corporate power, to increase the power of ordinary Canadians to plan their society collectively, with a new industrial structure designed to satisfy the needs of Canadians, and, indeed, the needs of people throughout the world.

Present American policies have underlined the dangers in our present position. Our party has warned about them for years, but they have now become real in the life of Canada and its people. The American surtax and, even more, other protectionist policies like the tax incentives and DISC programs will affect not only our trade but the jobs of Canadians. American multinational corporations may well find it more profitable to take advantage of the immense tax exemptions promised in the United States and transfer the operation of subsidiaries to that country, thus shutting down or reducing operations in Canada with the loss not only of jobs but of essential economic activity.

The government study published by the Canadian Forum emphasizes that foreign ownership and control of our economy means that our social and economic purposes are set by multinational enterprises in boardrooms outside Canada rather than by Canadians. It is natural that people should be concerned about any fundamental changes in the economic pattern and in the industrial strategy of the country. I accept it as natural that they should fear the possibility of dislocation and possible loss of jobs. I want to say to the people of Canada that we see no reason for these fears if, and only if, the essential changes in the control of our economy are carefully planned and if governments, both federal and provincial, take the responsibility which is theirs to assure job security for the Canadian people. This is a responsibility which the federal government has abandoned and betrayed during the past two years by deliberately slowing down the economy and creating massive unemployment crisis—

Mr. Gibson: Nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: —from which we shall not be able to emerge for two years at least.

I notice that today the Ontario government released the report of a task force composed of civil servants on the question of foreign ownership. I also note from a press report that the Premier of the province refuses to state a policy until the federal government has done so. This is another example of the lack of seriousness with which governments of this country have treated and are treating the basic problem of Canada's economic independence. The provincial government waits for the federal government. The federal government points to provincial anxieties as a reason for its inaction or inadequate action. In the meantime, the loss of our economic sovereignty continues unchecked and the threat to Canadian political, social and international independence becomes daily more dangerous.

My colleagues and I believe passionately that the overriding goal of a modern democratic society must be to eliminate every form of exploitation, to eliminate as far as possible inequalities between regions, and inequalities between groups within each region.

Mr. Gibson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the hon. member would have the patience to wait until I have finished, when I shall be glad to listen to a question which I am sure will be relevant as well as earth-shaking.

Our objective must surely be an egalitarian society in which every individual has an equal opportunity to share in a rich and varied life and to develop his talents to the full. Only in such a society, a society in which human equality is the overriding consideration, can the worth and dignity of the human being receive full recognition and respect. I say that a society in which one out of every four or five lives in poverty, a society in which hundreds of thousands are forced into idleness, a society in which the difference in income and living standards between regions and among groups, remains intolerable, is an unjust society and that speeches about the worth and dignity of the individual in these circumstances sound just as hollow as in fact they are.

I say to you, Sir, that we cannot talk seriously about a just society as long as we continue to rely primarily on the benevolence of corporations whose purpose is not first and foremost the common good and whose activities are frequently in conflict with the aspirations and needs of ordinary people. We must drop our old-fashioned, doctrinaire ideas about our society and recognize the need for increasing public participation, the need for increasing collective effort to achieve desirable national goals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: We cannot speak seriously of a new and more humane society if we fail to gain control of our own economic and social destiny. These are the reasons a democratic socialist party like ours believes that the question of foreign ownership and control is crucial to the people of Canada. I suggest to you that Canada is already fighting for its very life. Any further delay is to betray our people.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I put it this strongly because of my profound faith in our country. Canada, perhaps more than any other country, has the resources, financial, physical and human, to satisfy the anxious search of mankind for new social structures from which poverty and want, inequality and waste, may eventually be eliminated. I have a deep faith in the capacity of our ordinary people, in their political strength and in their belief in their country. All they need is courageous and imaginative leadership. The time is later than we think. But it is still not too late. We commend to the House and to the people of Canada the program that I have, I am sure inadequately, tried to outline.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, to ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can ask a question only if he has the permission of the hon. member for York South. I should immediately point out to hon. members that we will again be running short of time if we prolong the time allocated to hon. members by asking questions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I say before the question is asked that I will only answer questions if I am still within the 30 minutes allotted to me. I do not intend to go beyond my time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has 120 seconds or so left before his time expires.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member why he failed, in his speech, to point out that this government introduced and had passed almost at the beginning of this part of the session the employment support bill that provided $80 million to protect Canadian jobs.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I always find that this hon. member, if I may say so not too unkindly, needs to ask questions more than most because his facts are usually wrong. The short answer to the hon. member's question is that we opposed the bill to which he refers. I called it, on behalf of my party, "inadequate tokenism". It has not done the job and will not do the job. In any case, it is irrelevant to the question we are debating today, which is probably the reason the hon. member rose to ask the question.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question regarding the manifesto that he has just delivered and which is silent on this point. Have he or his party given any thought to the difficult political question of whether a provincial government should have any real say in a decision not to permit foreign investment to be made within its provincial borders? I would be interested to have the hon. member's views on that matter.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact my statement was not silent on this. In relation to natural resources, I specifically referred to the need for co-operation with the provinces. I know perfectly well that many of the areas involved in the discussion also come under provincial jurisdiction, and I would certainly underline the need for some consultative machinery between the federal government and the provincial governments regarding the implementation of a policy that is effective. But I want to emphasize that if the hon. member is suggesting, as Liberals have suggested throughout the ages, that the constitutional divisions of power should be used as an excuse for remaining quiet and letting Canada's economic independence continue to be eroded, then I throw that suggestion back in the hon. member's charming face.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this debate. The motion urges the government to stop expansion of foreign control over the Canadian economy in the interests of Canadian independence and Canadian jobs, as well as the recovery of control over our country. I thought the motion itself was a little vague with regard to the question of whether any foreign investment was to be permitted, but my impression from listening to the hon. member is that the sponsor of the resolution really wishes us to halt foreign investment in Canada.

I want to emphasize today that foreign investment has, of course, been important to us in our past, given our lack of an accumulation of savings. I want to emphasize, too, that foreign investment is still important. It has been important in central Canada in the past in stimulating the economic growth of the region. It is important today to large parts of western and northern Canada in terms of the development of natural resources.

I would warn this Parliament that there is concern in the west and in the north, as well as in the east, about the possibility that policies of this government or of this Parliament could interfere with the natural development of those parts of Canada, particularly with the natural resource industries. I emphasize that if we are going to discuss policies in this Parliament related to increasing the strength of our nation, we had better talk about policies that really strengthen our national feeling rather than policies that tend to divide this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: I mentioned the north and the west but there are also people in the east, and not only in my own province of Nova Scotia, who would be very upset at any attempt on the part of this government to impose ground rules that would prevent the benefits which would accrue from foreign investment and foreign enterprise from coming to what are still, in relevant terms at least, the "have-not" provinces in Confederation.

I ask my friends to my left whether this resolution, and the statements accompanying it, envisage that foreign enterprise now actively exploring and developing offshore oil and gas off the cost of Nova Scotia should be taken over by the government, should be stopped, or should be discouraged. I think these are points which should be clarified by the sponsors of the resolution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The resolution before us refers to the independence of Canada. We in this party who are the direct political descendants of those who brought about Confederation will not take a back seat to anybody in our determination to preserve this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But there is no simplistic answer to this question. It may be that to the leader of the NDP and his friends the solution is to be found in public ownership and control. That is a simple concept alright. My hon. friend spoke about myths. One of the myths that prevailed in the nineteenth Century and in the early part of this century in some circles was that public ownership and controls constituted some kind of magic formula. But in the past half century at least, too many countries have experienced too many incredible difficulties in their unsuccessful attempts to prove the correctness of that formula.

It is not only the foreign corporations that have been laying off people. In terms of public ownership, what has been going on in the Polymer Corporation is not exactly an example to private enterprise in this country.

Mr. Olson: There is Deuterium of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister mentions Deuterium. Perhaps it is an example.

Mr. Olson: A bad example.

Mr. Stanfield: But it was this government that insisted that the majority control of that corporation be retained in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Any more questions?

Mr. Stanfield: A man with all the minister's troubles deserves the opportunity to shovel a little of them off on somebody else.

We need more Canadian enterprise and more Canadian ownership, and we should certainly consider actively a program to encourage Canadian ownership and enterprise in many forms. This certainly must play a part in any effective program. This government's action in ramming through this House the massive tax bill by closure, much of which is irrelevant to the present difficulties, is not a part of any sensible formula to increase Canadian participation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Certainly, the heavy emphasis in my friend's resolution and in his speech was on the question of ownership. I do not deny that the question of ownership can be relevant and, in certain sectors, very important. We have maintained this in the past and we maintain it today. There are obvious sectors, such as finance, insurance and communications, and there may well be others, where it is important to keep a close watch and where we should be prepared to move. I do not rule out a screening process, for example, for new investment of the kind that would bring about some distortion in our economic priorities in this country. We should be willing to consider these possibilities. But first of all let us be clear as to what our priorities are. Quite apart from that, what we should not be doing and what we must not do, under the guise of creating some sort of screen to preserve our nationhood and on the pretext of saving Canadian independence, is to create new bureaucratic monstrosities with arbitrary powers over the economy which would destroy, not simply economic freedom but economic growth and development in this country.

Let us not forget that there are other aspects of the independence and autonomy of our country which are at least as relevant to us as is the ownership of property. There is trade. In a country that achieves 25 per cent of its gross national product through external trade—over 80 per cent of our manufactured goods go to one country, the United States—surely the concentration of trade in this way is just as important in relation to the autonomy and independence of our country as is any concentration of ownership. The official policy of the government has been multilateralism, but in fact what has developed has been a continental trading pattern. That has been the real Liberal policy. In view of the degree of interdependence that has developed between Canada and the United States we need guidelines to govern our behaviour. I am not minimizing the importance of trying to diversify our trade with the European Economic Community, for example, but one must be realistic and recognize the importance of the U.S. market at this stage in time. Therefore, if we are going to maintain a position of comfort in our economy, we must recognize the importance of establishing meaningful guidelines which would govern the behaviour of Washington and Ottawa toward each other. I cannot stress this too much.

Mr. Gibson: How unfortunate.

Mr. Stanfield: I have only 20 minutes. I will talk with the hon. member tomorrow.

Mr. Gibson: I am just interested.

Mr. Stanfield: The obvious uncertainty created by the Nixon announcement of August 15 was deeply disturbing to me. I say we can do all we want about foreign ownership in this country—I am not minimizing its importance or the importance of encouraging more Canadian ownership—but we will continue to depend on the decisions being taken unilaterally in Washington because of the degree of interdependence of our economies unless we establish meaningful guidelines to govern the behaviour of our two economies. We need the market. We cannot develop a modern technological industry without markets. We cannot retreat into some form of protectionism either through tariffs or through public ownership. We need jobs and we want our country to be in the mainstream of the economic life of this world, not a weak country retiring into economic backwaters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The sad truth is that the government is lacking in any strategy of economic development. I could develop this aspect at some length but my time is very limited. We have had piecemeal efforts at tax reform, at curing economic disparity, at a competition act, and now, from what we hear, the government has made up its mind about a foreign investment policy, all without any regard to any over-all strategy of economic development. We have had it with regard to taxation; now, apparently we will have it with regard to foreign ownership. I am sure that since the government has made up its mind, anything I say here today will have very little effect. However, there are some things I want to say in any event.

I expect that the government will go off half-cocked once again, not for lack of time but because of its failure to develop any general economic strategy, the need for which was emphasized even by those who wrote what was described as the leaked Gray report. They recognized that to have an effective or meaningful screening process with regard to foreign development there had to be a government strategy of development which this screening process was supposed to implement. But what the authors of that report overlooked was that the very machinery that might be established can only be significant, intelligible and intelligent if it is related to some decisions on priorities and decisions that have been taken with regard to an industrial strategy which we do not have at all. Nobody need take my word for this. The Science Council of Canada has made it very clear that this government has no industrial strategy.

I recognize that in certain areas in particular, foreign ownership may be a problem. That is not the most basic problem with which we are faced. The most basic problem is the lack of any sort of strategy for economic development. This government has failed in many fields, but certainly in this. What we need is a strategy, not only because it will enable us to develop our priorities in terms of industry but because we need something that will enable us to use industry in the broadest sense of the term, including services, farming and natural resources. It is only by setting such priorities that we shall be able to look intelligently at the matter of foreign investment and see what degree of distortion is in fact taking place in relation to the kind of strategy we want to achieve. We should see what steps should be taken in respect of foreign investment to fit it into our own priorities in Canada. Then, when the government of this country brings down a policy with regard to foreign investment, it must at the same time clearly indicate to this House its strategy with regard to economic development.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We have one.

Mr. Stanfield: You have one! I am prepared to wait and see. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) says they have one. I challenge him to describe it. I do not believe he has one because the only meaningful economic strategy in this country cannot be worked out by one level of government. It has to be worked out by the federal government in concert with business, agriculture, labour and the provinces because it is meaningless otherwise. A strategy of economic development worked out on high by the federal government, the supergroup or whoever tries to do it, will not mean a thing unless it carries with it the support of the provinces. I say it will not mean anything practical unless it is worked out in conjunction with those actually engaged in industry, both on the management and labour sides in this country.

How, for example, are you going to have any meaningful strategy with regard to the processing of raw materials to which my hon. friend referred, unless it is worked out in conjunction with the provinces. There is no indication at all that this is taking place. The main thing we have to remember in debating this whole issue is that talking about nationalism is one thing and practising it effectively is something else. We must remember that nationalism and poverty are uneasy mixers. We are determined to keep Canada independent, but the only independence which can mean anything is one based on a reasonable degree of economic prosperity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Without economic growth, without investment, without enterprise, independence can only be an illusion. You do not achieve independence by talking about it or by looking at it, but by making hard decisions. So far as the government is concerned, you do not achieve it by discouraging people at the rate the government has been doing it. The government has failed miserably in giving encouragement. It has failed to produce any strategy. We in our party have adopted a positive approach designed to restore confidence and build up the country.

Let us examine the role of foreign investment in the context of a meaningful strategy of economic development to develop our country and to develop its independence. Speaking for myself and for my colleagues, we shall not allow ourselves to be hypnotized by a slogan or by simplistic answers. We need an industrial strategy and we shall in all probability continue to need foreign investment. Our challenge is to reconcile these two goals. We must choose our priorities and we must choose the means to attain them. We cannot do this by means of such a resolution as is before the House, and certainly cannot do it by the negative and secretive attitude of the present government. Neither of these extremes can inspire any confidence, and that is what is lacking most in this country at the present time. It is not by the pursuance of irrelevant subjects such as the tax bill and the Competition Act that confidence can be attained and yet, that is all the present government seems to be capable of producing.

I welcome this debate today. We welcome the opportunity to point out again the bankruptcy of the government in terms of the lack of any effective approach to the development of this country. We welcome the occasion to point out again the need to look to new horizons in terms of trade, in terms of our relationships with other countries and in terms of long-term economic strategy. That may be the best we can hope for from this debate, but there will be other debates coming, both in this House and outside, and we shall be ready for both.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we in the opposition are very happy with the motion moved by the New Democratic Party because it gives us the opportunity of restating our confidence in Canada's potentialities and in our international policy, especially with regard to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, while the diplomatic war deliberately carried out by this government with our neighbours to the south goes on in order to justify other diplomatic manoeuvres with the communist world, American control of Canadian resources continues to grow. In this connection, this week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), following a meeting of barely two hours with President Nixon, stated that both countries had agreed that each one was free to choose its political and economic destinies, while respecting the other.

In short, the right hon. Prime Minister went and asked Mr. Nixon if Canada was a country separate from the United States. Mr. Nixon replied: Yes, of course. That does not mean anything. Those are the terms with which the Prime Minister is content. But facts are the extreme opposite of the political strategy of the Liberal party that keeps on handing out Canada to Americans for a dish of lentils. But we know it is the federal government that has jurisdiction over foreign investments.

Our relationships are characterized by the interdependence of our two countries in culture, technology, finance, trade and tourism in one word in everything.

The present legitimate concerns of the Canadian people which is more than ever determined to attain its independence in North America are deeply rooted in history and in the struggle waged by Canada to carve its own future in spite of the large difference between the size and the power of the two countries.

Mr. Speaker, the concerns of Canadians, which are shared by the Social Credit Party of Canada, are linked first of all to recent social and economic events which are today more acute and alarming. My time being limited, I shall only mention them. They are: the profound influence of American culture on Canada's and Quebec's way of life, the extent to which our industries and resources are controlled by Americans, the attraction that the United States offer for Canadian scientists, engineers and professionals who are unable to exercise their talents in their country, the numerical superiority of American teachers in Canadian universities and the predominantly American content of radio and television programs.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, Canadians and Americans should consider these phenomena in the light of their respective history and national aspirations. It was obviously not necessary for the right hon. Prime Minister to go to Washington to acquaint himself of the fact that we are two distinct nations. We must therefore not only take into account the factors which tend to unite our two countries, but also and increasingly so, those past and present factors which tend to separate and divide them.

In fact, it is urgent for Canada to find and attain its own national identity, not only by words of mouth, but in fact.

For the most part, these problems result from the disparity of our respective powers in practically all areas.

In most of their transactions the United States are in a better position to promote or to jeopardize Canadian interests than Canada is to influence American prosperity and security. Canadians are more aware of this situation than the Americans. The recent 10 per cent American surtax on imports is a fair example of those conflicting interests.

Faced with this situation, which is not new, the previous governments, in the pay of almighty finance, have constantly kowtowed and each time we could have orderly and logically imposed ourselves as Canadians and with legitimate national proudness, we hurried to exchanged our natural resources against a handful of peanuts.

What did we do with our iron? We gave it away. We begged the Americans to carry it home so they would employ their own labour, process our products and subsequently sell them back here.

Mr. Béchard: Quebec does that.

Mr. Fortin: My hon. friend from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine says that Quebec does that. I would point out to him that, to my knowledge, the province of Quebec is still a part of Canada and that if Quebec is doing it, it does not make it more sensible.

What did we do with our timber? What did we do with our timber rights? We leased them for 99 years.

What did we do with our oil?

What did we do with our marine resources?

We are giving them away and, as certain NDP members do, we blame the Americans for it.

We in this party say that the blame rests on former governments which, in the pay of high finance, went running on all fours before these people and begged them to develop our country so as to get votes and then put the blame on the Americans.

We in the Social Credit Party, want to be more honest than that.

So as to prove what I am saying, I shall quote an article from the October 24, 1971 edition of the newspaper Dimanche-Matin, entitled "Mr. Massé is asking the USA oil industry to develop our resources".

That happened in New Orleans. And he is not better than the others. He is not different from them, simply more of the same.

The article was as follows:

Proximity of the markets, co-operation from the Quebec government and recent oil discoveries in Nova Scotia were factors that obviously interested officials of the southern United States oil industry when Quebec Natural Resources Minister Gilles Massé invited them to come and explore for oil fields and develop our oil resources.

Leading a delegation that spent last week in Louisiana, Mr. Massé, accompanied—

After a detailed account we are told that Mr. Massé would extend numerous privileges to the Americans so as to enable them to discover oil in this country, as if Canadians were unable to discover their own natural resources. They go to the United States and say: With the promise of generous tax privileges, and other things, we invite you to come and discover our resources, to take them and develop them; meanwhile, we work in those mines, we develop our resources and nothing is left to us. We are even not wise enough to demand royalties for those natural resources, royalties that would be payable to the government of this country or of the province and that would make it possible to redistribute to the people who own them at least a part of those natural resources. Then, they will blame the Americans.

But in fact, the Americans are filling a vacuum that Canadians refuse to fill because they say they are unable to do it or because their hands are tied. Either Canadians do not possess enough competence to develop their country or they do not have the resources necessary to do it. We think the reason is not that the Canadians are unable to do it but rather that their governments are tied down by the world of finance and prefer to sell out Canada on a long term basis on the pretext of bringing in foreign capital and thus creating jobs.

The governments live from day to day and that is their most serious problem and most serious fault. They prefer to sell out Canada to foreign interests on the pretext of giving its population three meals a day. It would be so simple to hand out Canada to the Canadians without throwing anybody out but by giving Canada the monetary and financial mechanisms to finance that production.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Fortin: No. All you have to do is rise and speak. Your turn will come.

Mr. Béchard: Be a bit more polite. I asked you if you would accept a question.

Mr. Fortin: No. I refuse to be interrupted by this stupid man. I am only allowed 20 minutes.

Mr. Béchard: I asked you very politely.

Mr. Fortin: I will give you another example to show—

Mr. Béchard: You lack manners.

Mr. Fortin: —how stupid people are in that administration.

Yesterday, on December 8, in the newspaper Le Devoir one could read:

James Bay, an error advantageous to Nebraska.

National Resources Minister Gilles Massé confirmed yesterday that a $20 million public works contract had been awarded to an American firm rather than to Montreal-based Simard-Beaudry because of a "technical error" on the part of the latter.

How perfectly ridiculous to see such things and the United States get $20 million worth of Canadian and Quebec taxes because of a simple "technical error" on the part of a stupid government official. Then people will say, it is the Americans' fault.

In the light of those facts—the federal government is just as responsible as the provincial governments—we can only add that they are hiding behind technical details or legal difficulties to say: We cannot develop our country or we cannot give those contracts to someone from Canada or the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that maladministration is involved and no wonder we have reached that point. In the report of the Task Force on the Structure of Canadian Industry, published in January 1968, the following can be found on page 127,

An attempt has been made to collect detailed financial data on 570 of the 606 separate companies, the excluded companies being mostly financial corporations. These 570 companies had 46 per cent of the assets of all fully tabulated companies in 1964, 35 per cent of the sales, 53 per cent of the taxable income, paid 67 per cent of the dividends and accounted for 51 per cent of the net internal cash flow.

These large companies are a very dominant factor in three sectors of the Canadian economy—mining, quarrying and oil wells,—

These are three sectors where our governments, federal and provincial, instead of availing themselves of the necessary mechanisms to develop our resources for the benefit of the Canadian people, went to the United States and begged our neighbours to come and have them developed on our behalf.

Mr. Speaker, one can recall also that a cabinet minister, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), once said publicly that the American influence in those three sectors was too great. He wanted to protest and, then, the Liberal party threw him out. Whom is the Liberal government serving?

Recently we heard about the life insurance company La Prévoyance which was in the process of being taken over by Americans. On this side of the House somebody asked the government what it intended to do. The answer was that the problem was of a technical and legal nature and that intervention was impossible.

Again recently we learned that Retail Credit of Atlanta, Georgia, had undertaken to buy all the offices of that company located in Montreal, Winnipeg, Toronto, Vancouver and Regina. We asked the government what it proposed to do, but we got no answer. I phoned the office of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but no answer there either.

This is the situation, Mr. Speaker. And yet, when a liberal or conservative government is brought to power, the first thing it does is to take a yearly trip to Washington or to Wall Street in New York. What for? To obtain funds in order to support provinces, municipalities, school boards and the whole public sector.

We suggest that the Bank of Canada become the main source of funds for the public sector, for provinces, for municipalities, for school boards so that there may be a great flow of Canadian capital, which in turn will be invested in the private sector in order to stimulate our economy.

The reason we have to obtain American capital in order to develop the public sector, which is the most costly—as can be seen when we read the annual reports and balance sheets of municipalities and school boards—is that there is a lack of Canadian capital. Most municipalities in Quebec spend 40 per cent of their budget on public debt payments. As for the federal government, 14 cents out of each tax dollars goes towards paying the interest on the public debt. Therefore the lack of capital in Canada is not surprising since most of the capital available here for developing our country and our natural resources is used to service the public debt.

That is why we are trapped in a vise, stuck in a vicious circle where Canadian capital gets lost and becomes nonproductive; the best we can do is repay the money borrowed in foreign countries where we simply could have asked the Bank of Canada to invest money.

Mr. Speaker, there is more to it than blaming the Americans for lending us money.

If Americans have faith in our natural resources, if they believe in Canada to the extent of heavily investing in it, why should Canadians not also have faith in their country and avail themselves of financial mechanisms to ensure its development through the Bank of Canada? Why should Canadians not have faith in their country, if Americans do?

Mr. Speaker, that is the language Canada's Social Credit uses. We shall not solve our problems by putting the blame on Americans, but by giving Canadians the opportunity to develop their country, by inculcating them with national pride, by making them realize that Canada belongs to them, as do the country's natural resources and that it is up to them, not to foreigners or neighbours, to develop their country.

Mr. Speaker, some provinces under Social Credit administrations for a long time have required the payment of fees to the Crown on resources extracted from their subsoil; in this way they were able to levy large sums of money which were redistributed as social security allowances or some other allowances, to the benefit of the people. Thus the provincial governments were able to reduce personal taxes while increasing the purchasing power of the people.

This is, Mr. Speaker, an intelligent way to administer a province. What is being done in other provinces? They beg the people from other countries to come and develop our own country. In this connection, I would refer my colleagues to the two articles I mentioned earlier. That is as true of the former provincial Ministers of Natural Resources as it is of their federal counterparts.

Mr. Speaker, we should stop begging for financial permission to develop our country each time a new federal government comes to power.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are in a position to give themselves the financial permission to develop their country—however paradoxical this may seem for some hon. members opposite—though the Bank of Canada.

In conclusion, I wonder how is it that the successive governments for over 30 years have dealt with everything, have made inquiries on everything, have discussed everything in order to solve their problems but have never thought of going to the Bank of Canada.

Reforms have been undertaken in all fields and at all times to find solutions which have been but poultices on wooden legs. However, no one ever dares tackle the Bank of Canada, not to destroy it, but to put it at the service of Canadians, by granting interest free loans to the provinces, municipalities and the federal government, in order to build what we need, so that people will not be so heavily taxed and to reduce our indebtness toward the Americans.

What difference is there, Mr. Speaker, between $10, $100 or $1,000 coming from either Washington or New York, and the same amounts coming from the Bank of Canada? The big difference is the following: This debate would not be taking place now if we used the Bank of Canada, because Canadians would hold the mortgage on their own investments and thus, Canada would belong to them.

This is why we will continue to fight to convince government members to accept that great idea of keeping Canada for Canadians, not through revolution, arms or force, but by maintaining order and justice, respecting our neighbours and continuing to co-operate with them.

The Social Credit Party of Canada is not anti-American. We advocate a policy of good understanding, of exchanges at all levels, of constant co-operation but not at the expense of Canadians.

Our friendship has cost us up to now more than what we have received in return, so much so that in the financial and economic fields, the so-called profitable dialogue between both countries is falling on deaf ears and while Canada is satisfied with speaking, the United States take advantage of everything which we do not put to use. Our governments, Tory and Grit, wanted it that way.

We are happy, Mr. Speaker, that the United States should show an interest in us, but we want Canada to equip itself with efficient financial and monetary mechanisms. Our country should adopt a policy for the development of its natural resources that can give Canada back to the Canadians without necessarily generating sterile diplomatic wars.

[English]

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to have the opportunity of being the first speaker from the government benches to answer to the motion moved by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). May I preface my remarks by saying that I am sure there are no Canadians who are not somewhat perturbed by the infiltration of American capital, and indeed American control, of the many industrial enterprises that are the economic bulwark of the nation. However, Mr. Speaker, I think we must be realistic in the appreciation of such a subject and realize that such investment is absolutely vital to us as a country and as Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: The facts of life are that approximately 210 million people live immediately to the south of our border who speak one of our official languages and, in my opinion, live our way of life. They have been friendly on practically every occasion, certainly since World War I. That they have made mistakes is undeniable; that they think firstly of their own country is equally true, but that they have done more to aid the whole world than any other nation in history simply cannot be denied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Whicher: What other country in the world knocks nations such as Germany and Japan to the ground, and then builds them up again so that those same nations are now the economic envy of the whole world. Mr. Speaker, billions and billions of dollars have been given by the taxpayers of the United States, who range from the industrialists of New York City to the cotton growers of Mississippi, for the benefit of this old world; and when I say world, I indirectly include our own nation.

Mr. Skoberg: What state are you from?

An hon. Member: Missouri.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, three months ago my wife and I had the opportunity of visiting a great little Quebec city, Seven Islands, or Sept Îles as it is known in Quebec, at the mouth of the St. Lawrence. Just over 20 years ago there were a few small houses in that locality. Today it is a city of 22,000 people, a modern city with wide streets, sewage disposal plants, new schools, new hospitals and the highest paid salaried workers in the whole province of Quebec. The Americans, Mr. Speaker, spent over $1 billion developing this city. Every single dollar was American but every single employee was a Canadian, with the exception of two or three senior American officials who were there to look after this huge investment. Mr. Speaker, since that time the Americans have paid Canadian taxes, have obeyed Canadian laws, have employed Canadian people and turned the houses that they financed back to Canadians at a very reasonable price.

Mr. Skoberg: Hurrah.

Mr. Whicher: My next statement about this situation will be obvious. If it were not for American capital, there would be no Sept Îles, as we know it today. This is what the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is against. He and his party can deny this in any way they see fit, but it is he who is more anti-American than any political leader on the horizon in Canada at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: And yet the very party that he heads gets more financial support from unions controlled absolutely by Americans than any other political party in Canada, bar none.

The hon. member for York South and his colleagues in the House passionately believe certain things. I wonder how passionately his supporters outside the House, known as the Waffle group, support him on what he said in the House this afternoon. I wonder if the premiers newly elected to lead the western provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba passionately believe what the Leader of the NDP said this afternoon. I wonder if they are against American dollars in the same way as he is. May I tell you that the first pilgrimage Premier Schreyer made was not to that great city, Montreal, to get money, was not to that great Canadian financial centre, Toronto, but was to the cauldrons of New York City. He went just like a pilgrim going to Mecca. And when he came back he had a bank account of American dollars and the waved the Star Spangled Banner just as every other Canadian has done who has gone to New York for some of that money. And, Mr. Speaker, what was the speech that he made to the industrialists and moneyed people of New York City? He said, "We are not socialists; do not believe the nonsense the Lewises are feeding the people of Canada. We are free enterprisers."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: He said, "Because we are free enterprisers, I know you will give us money." And they gave him money, Mr. Speaker, and he was very happy to get it. The only thing I want to say here is this: such money does not always breed industry. When our American friends see the word socialist applied to any particular provincial government, they shy away from that province as if it had the plague.

Let us look at some of the statements the Leader of the NDP has made, not just today, but in the past few days. When the Prime Minister came back from Washington and made his statement in the House of Commons, the NDP leader accused the Americans of raping us. Actually, he went even further and said that the rape was by invitation and by consent. Mr. Speaker, that statement is probable the only sexy thing about the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Skoberg: You are misquoting.

Mr. Whicher: Some of his stupid statements are probably the only sexy thing about him. It has not been my opportunity to have the great education and legal training that the Leader of the NDP has had; it has not been my opportunity to have a great many certificates on the wall emphasizing what a great scholar I am.

An hon. Member: That's obvious.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Mr. Whicher: It has not been my opportunity to come from a great city like Toronto. I come from a little town, Mr. Speaker; but I come before you, proudly, and with a degree of common sense on this particular subject that has not been shown this afternoon by the hon. member for York South.

Let us look at the realities of the situation in which we find ourselves. The leader of a responsible political party in Canada is condemning our greatest friends.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: He is condemning our greatest market and condemning our greatest source of capital. No wonder the people of Canada have relegated him to be the leader of a very small political party that is smaller than the rump of the Liberal party. I ask, Mr. Speaker, what kind of leadership would we have if this man, who had the audacity to bring forward this motion this afternoon, should ever happen to become prime minister of Canada? How would he get along with the President of the United States?

Mr. Skoberg: At least we would know where we stood.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member says, at least we would know where we stand. We would wind up on our fanny; that's where we would be.

Mr. Skoberg: You know where you stand.

Mr. Whicher: The leader of the NDP practically invited us to declare war on the United States, just as he invited us to declare war on Nigeria when the Biafran situation was discussed here in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whicher: No responsible Canadian can excuse his continuing attacks on our greatest friends. That does not mean that our American friends are always right. That does not mean we should not be the architects of our own destiny. It does mean, however, that we, as Canadians, despite the many faults of the Americans, should appreciate the Americans and be happy that it is the Americans who control the country to the south of us. Indeed, we should get down on our knees and thank God that it is the United States that is next to us instead of a couple of other countries that shall not be mentioned this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: The anti-Americanism that has been emphasized chiefly by the Leader of the New Democratic Party of Canada must cease. Day after day, hour after hour, this man and his party have criticized the Americans because of their experiments with atomic weapons. Every single member of the House of Commons is against these experiments. I venture to say that 98 per cent of the people are against the use of such weapons. However, we are against all experiments involving atomic weapons, including those carried out by France, China and Russia. That is something that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has not said, has not emphasized. One wonders, and I say this most sincerely, just where his friends live.

This talk of the rape of Canada, and the rape of Canadian industry, is such nonsense. Let us look at what actually happens. We will say that an American wants to buy a certain Canadian business or a piece of land owned by a Canadian. One would think, from the criticism that has been heard here this afternoon, that he comes here and seizes it. On the contrary, he finds the Canadian who wants to sell and pays him good money for the purchase.

Mr. Skoberg: Good money!

Mr. Whicher: Good money that the seller wishes to accept in exchange for his property. Is this rape by these horrible Americans? I would say it is plain, ordinary business. And business, Mr. Speaker, has done more to give the Americans the highest standard of living in the world and more to give the Canadian people the second highest living standard than any other single factor. Certainly, it was not the socialism of England or the socialism of Russia that gave those people the few refrigerators and bathrooms that they now enjoy. It was because of socialism that they had so few of these amenities.

Mr. Skoberg: Hurrah!

Mr. Whicher: It is those same forces of socialism that today, in Sweden, permit a 10 per cent inflation rate, that have permitted a general strike in that country and that have forced the present government of Sweden to bring in a back to work order.

Mr. Skoberg: Tell us about their unemployment level.

Mr. Whicher: You will be unemployed after the next election. That does not mean, of course, that we should not attempt to own as much of Canada as our economic resources will allow. This does not mean that we should not attempt to own, as Canadians, our gas industry, our oil industry, our petrochemical industry and many more industries that American money and know-how have taken over. I ask most sincerely, Mr. Speaker, where these industries in Canada would be now if it were not for our American friends. There simply would not be any. There would not be any Sept Iles. There would not be the standard of living that we now have in Canada. Indeed, there would not be the employment that American investment has created. In short, we would have been damn fools to turn down this money.

We would have been equally as foolish to have allowed the Americans to make their own laws, which they do not do. They obey ours. We would have been foolish indeed if we had not insisted that they employ Canadian labour, which they do. We would have been foolish if we had not forced them to pay Canadian taxes, which they do. The crux of the situation is the big stick we hold that can be used if it is necessary. What happens if the department of highways wants to build a highway through your farm today? That department expropriates the land for the common good of all citizens. We can do exactly the same to any American industry that does not play ball with our laws and our way of living. Please God, this will never happen. If it does, let it never happen as the leaders of the New Democratic Party in the province of New Brunswick have suggested, namely the seizing of these properties without compensation. What a despicable thought!

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to use that degree of sweet reasonableness and common sense which will allow us to control our economic future as much as possible. Under no conditions must we make enemies of our greatest friends. Let us remember that the Americans have not just bought, Canadians have sold and have been well paid.

An hon. Member: It is known as prostitution.

Mr. Whicher: Perhaps we should cease selling. Perhaps through such agencies as the Canada Development Corporation we can control our own destiny. I appreciate the fact that the destiny of the inhabitants of Sept Iles and scores of other areas in Canada is better controlled by American money than no money at all. In fact, if that money had not been invested in that area, no one would even be living there.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I dare get to my feet, being a mere member of the New Democratic Party, after all the previous tirade. I am tempted to reply, but my time is limited. I want to make a few points that will have a direct bearing and some relationship to the issue before this House. Before doing so, I cannot refrain from making a few observations on the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) this afternoon.

What we heard, perhaps politely put, was "Bob, the Tory" revealing himself. First, we heard the disparaging comments about the suggestion that some public enterprise in this country might indeed be beneficial. He referred to his concern about the Atlantic and other provinces which might be deprived of the advantages accruing from foreign investment. I remind the Leader of the Opposition that, after nearly a century of almost exclusive emphasis on private enterprise, the Atlantic provinces are not exactly one of the richest regions in Canada. The steel industry in his province was notoriously known throughout the steel industry, both in this country and abroad, for losing money annually. After it was brought within public ownership, it made a profit for the first time in many years and is still making a profit. I further remind the Leader of the Opposition that the New Democratic Party never argued we should cut off all sources of investment capital. We have argued that when it comes in, it should be on a minority shareholder basis. Above and beyond that, we have argued for a meaningful Canada Development Corporation that would provide investment capital, not only in the Atlantic provinces and other poor regions, but in many places in this country.

Finally, there was the unjust and inaccurate description of our party's position, and that of the leader of our party, which he stated this afternoon with regard to public ownership. The Leader of the Opposition raised the old shibboleth of 19th century socialism. He said we know what that has led to in certain parts of the world. He said that it has not been very efficient and has not achieved all the wonders its believers thought it would. That is a distortion of what we are arguing for at this time in this Parliament and throughout the country. We have never argued at the provincial and federal levels of this party for anything other than a mixed economy at this time. It is to create a caricature to suggest that all we want is public ownership and cite a lot of misleading examples to show that it has run into certain difficulties here and in other parts of the world. We are now talking about a mixed economy. We have ideas. In terms of emphasis in this debate and at other times, we stress that we need more public involvement, not less. We do not want the total absence of all private enterprise in the economy.

I would like to take up the challenge of what should be done with one of the major sectors of the economy in terms of private enterprise at this time. I refer to the automotive industry. The automotive industry in Canada is one of the most prosperous. It is our leading source of exports at this time. However, it is in great difficulty because the government of Canada has not made its position known. It has left a great deal of uncertainty about the safeguards in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement. It is my firm belief, and indeed the belief of all those informed in the industry, that the government is about to give up the safeguards of the pact, but they have stated no policy. Not only are the workers concerned, but I know from personal conversations with leading managerial people in this country that they are concerned about what is going to be done with Canada's automotive industry.

The Liberal party has no policy now in terms of the automotive industry on this continent. If it has, it has certainly not revealed it. I have checked the record for the past year in terms of speeches made and questions asked in this House. I have found that the Tory party has no policy at all. It tries to come down on both sides of every issue, both with regard to automotive trade and everything else. They raise serious questions and then suggest that the government is not doing what should be done in the national interest. However, they make no concrete proposals whatsoever about what should take place in this very important industry, particularly in the province of Ontario. In the time remaining to me, I wish to deal with that industry and simultaneously with the important question of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement. I will do this in terms of three myths that have been created. They have developed in part because of the deliberate failure of this government to shatter them.

The first myth is that the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement commits Canada and the United States to free trade. Over a period of years we are supposed to take down all the trade barriers and, so the story goes, have an open door to a free market. However, Senator Long, the CBC and the Toronto Star claim that Canada has reneged. They claim that we have not upheld our end of the promise and involved ourselves in the free trade program to which we were committed in 1965. This government has not come out and said that is a lot of hooey, which it is. The Canada-U.S. automotive agreement does not commit us to free trade. The government of Canada should make this clear. The people of Canada should know that is not the case. I will come back later to the importance of why it should not be a free trade agreement.

The other myth that has been allowed to develop in Canada, allowed by this government and not challenged by the media, is that the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement has been of fantastic benefit to Canada. The impression has been created that this is a colossally successful enterprise for Canada, and incidentally one having only marginal value for the United States, if indeed it is not a great handicap to the United States. Only two weeks ago, Premier Davis of Ontario said the auto pact had created 32,000 new jobs. That is a lot of hooey, as I shall show later.

The third myth is related to the other two. It is that after six years of automotive development in Canada, the renovation of our plants, the stimulation of new production techniques, we are now able to stand on our own feet without relying on safeguards in the pact. Has the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) denied this? Of course, he has not. Has the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) denied it? Of course, he has not. Has anyone in the government denied it? No. The fact is that we cannot commit ourselves to a policy of abandoning all these safeguards nor can we contemplate doing so in the future, and the government should say so.

I should like to give my reasons for suggesting these are myths, I should then like to propose some positive courses of action we ought to take and, indeed, must take if manufacturers are to be satisfied and if the people of Canada who work in the industry are to be satisfied. First, as to the so-called blessings for Canada. The pact came into being in 1965 because for many years we had been running a deficit on trade in automobiles and parts amounting to hundreds of millions annually. Something had to be done about this in Canada's interests, and so the pact came into being. One of the alternatives which was considered at that time, or one which should have been considered by the government, I do not know whether it was, was to rationalize our industry in the same way as the Swedes, the British, the Germans and the Japanese have done. We might have streamlined the industry, leaving only one or two firms, and possibly using an agency such as the Canada Development Corporation to ensure Canadian majority control. That would have been a viable alternative solution.

The other solution, the one recommended by Professor Bladen the one-man Royal Commission set up to consider this subject in 1960, advised streamlining on a continental basis with safeguards to protect both manufacturers and workers in Canada. This solution was accepted. It was accepted by the American manufacturers because it gave them a leading role to play in the industry in terms of future expansion in Canada. They were happy with it then, and they are happy with it now. There is no evidence to suggest that manufacturers on either side of the border are upset about the present situation. Indeed, most Americans outside the treasury department, including those who are members of legislative bodies, are happy about the pact.

What has been the effect of the pact upon Canada? Well, it has not provided 32,000 jobs since 1965, as Mr. Davis suggested, but only 13,000. Thirteen thousand jobs in six years is not a miraculous accomplishment. It is not exactly the second coming in economic terms. In that period, the market in Canada has grown. We might have expected a growth of employment in the industry anyway; it would have come about with the pact or without it.

Here are some figures with regard to employment and production in the industry. In 1965, we were responsible for about 4 per cent of the total production in North America and consuming around 7.5 per cent of automotive products. We are still producing much less than we are consuming in Canada in terms of North American automobiles. At the present time we are producing about 5.5 per cent of the product and still consuming about 7.5 per cent. According to my calculations, if we got what was due to us in fairness and equity—and the Pact states in its preamble that there is to be fair and equitable production on both sides—instead of the 82,000 people who are now employed in the industry we would be entitled to employ approximately 114,800, an increase of 32,000.

I am saying that in terms of the employment of Canadian workers in this industry we are not yet employing the number of workers in Canada we would be entitled to employ if we were producing as much as we are consuming. My contention, therefore, is that instead of giving up the safeguards under the agreement we should be seeking to strengthen those safeguards. What is needed as a basic minimum is a commitment by the automobile producers of North America to produce in Canada, that is, employ workers, up to a level which would ensure we were producing at least the share of the North American market which we are consuming. This is the kind of policy the government should be pursuing. I would suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that instead of getting up every day to ask broad, general questions, coming down on both sides of every issue every time, he should put forward concrete proposals along the lines I have indicated if he is interested in the Canadian economy and in Canadian workers.

I am about to conclude my observations on the automotive industry. I apologize to the hon. members who know something of this issue for being so brief, but the time allotted to us is limited. There is another important question which must receive consideration by the government. It is: what is to be the future role of the supply of automotive parts in Canada. This section of the industry is presently of importance to more than 100 communities in Ontario alone; they depend for their livelihood on this sector of the industry. Right now, over 30,000 Canadians in 100 communities are not protected by the automotive agreement because automobile manufacturers are meeting Canadian added value requirements out of their own production and plant facilities. In addition to the 100 per cent CVA requirement for the industry as a whole, we need a further requirement which would make it mandatory for the assemblers of automobiles to meet their CVA requirement by getting at least 50 per cent of the CVA share from independent parts producers in Canada. I think it is essential to preserve the jobs we already have, and also to expand the number of jobs in the industry in order to meet in a rational and just way our increasing population needs.

I add that I am not simply making a protectionist argument in the traditional sense. We must have the one requirement or safeguard we need to protect the automotive industry in Canada in general since it is totally foreign owned and acquired. That is the gut purpose, if you like, of one of the original safeguards. We also need the related safeguard in order to ensure that we in Canada maintain facilities in this country to produce parts or components for automobiles. If this facility is not protected, and especially if the government, as I am sure it will, gives up the safeguards for two years, you can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that instead of people in Kitchener, Hespeler, Galt, Oshawa, Oakville and countless other Ontario communities producing automobile parts, these jobs will go to the United States.

We need to protect the parts industry in Canada in the sense that we are almost an integrated market in terms of tariff policy in North America. We are not talking about protection in the old narrow, chauvinistic and technically irrational sense. My point is that we must protect the industry in the event that the automotive pact itself collapses in the next year or two. If the United States decides it is in its interests to repeal the pact, it can do so, as we know, by giving one year's notice. What is going to happen to the Canadian automotive industry if at that time we no longer have a parts industry in Canada? If that is the situation then no longer will we have an automotive industry of our own.

Therefore, I conclude with the following point. The leader of my party spoke very eloquently this afternoon about the need for more control of the Canadian economy and the development of manufacturing industries. He argued that this required an expanding use of public funds as well as a viable private sector. My final point is that the government has completely failed to make the private automobile sector viable on a continuing basis. The Conservative party has offered nothing at all in terms of constructive suggestions. It is the New Democratic Party alone which has a viable, creative and imaginative automobile policy for this country.

Mr. Kaplan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Broadbent: Certainly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. That will be very difficult unless the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the House since his time has now expired. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of fairness to my fellow members that I prefer not to cut into their time.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the way in which this motion is phrased. It is obviously phrased by a man of far greater education and learning than I, and I mean that quite sincerely, but it does present to me a technical difficulty. The government of Canada is asked, without further delay, to frame programs which, among other things, would regain control of our natural resources. To me that seems to be a provincial responsibility and presents a genuine dilemma. How does one sitting here in Ottawa control natural resources when governments in various provinces do what they like with their natural resources and encourage others to exploit them? I enter that one small caveat; otherwise, I think it is an interesting, though somewhat provocative, motion.

The speech of the leader of the New Democratic Party I found interesting and more or less to the point. The second speaker from that party made a perfectly legitimate plea with regard to a problem in the hon. member's own area, indeed in Ontario generally, but his speech did not have the broad range his leader's speech had. I hope that other members from that party who follow will get back to the broader, national plane because there are several points that should be developed.

I should like to have one point clarified by one of the members who speaks later from that party. We often refer to Carter and say that a buck is a buck is a buck. I should like to know if a buck is not a buck when it is a United States buck. I have in my hand an impassioned plea that was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in the form of a letter dated in April, 1970, in the middle of the province of Manitoba's centennial year, which he addressed to the Bristol Aerospace workers in Winnipeg. In this letter the hon. member said that although he did not like involving himself in these things he felt he should recommend that they take certain action in a dispute involving two unions that were vying with each other in a forthcoming election. The hon. member said he had followed the dispute with interest and went on to say this:

> The policy of the restraint which the Trudeau Government has prescribed as a way of dealing with inflation, has been taken by employers as a directive to hold the line on wages.

That is a political statement, one that the hon. member has a right to make; I could argue with him about it but I will not. That is his view of action taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country. Then, he went on to say this:

> Under these conditions it seems obvious to me that workers would be wise to belong to large, strong unions . . . which have the financial resources to help any of their members unfortunate enough to be involved in a strike . . .
> For these reasons I have no hesitation in joining with the members and officers of the International Association of Machinists and with officers of unions affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress and the Manitoba Federation of Labour, in urging you to support and vote for the I.A.M.—

Now, I do not give a damn which union Bristol has in its plant; that is entirely a matter for the workers in the plant to decide. The point I want to make is that this hon. member, whose party is so violently opposed to United States capital, United States corporations and United States investment in Canada, urges these workers to vote for a United States union solely because they are going to have to fight the Prime Minister of Canada and the policies of the government that are endorsed by this parliament.

Mr. Orlikow: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Osler: I find it difficult to reconcile the presence, on the one hand—

Mr. Orlikow: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not have before me the letter I wrote from which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is quoting, but if he is going to quote from my letter I wish he would quote all of the relevant parts. One of the relevant parts indicates—

Mr. Francis: Why don't you make your own speech?

Mr. Osler: Is that a point of order?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, it is a point of order because the hon. member is misquoting me. The point of my letter was to urge people to belong to large unions, whether they be national or international, which is not what the hon. member is leading people to believe I said.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Osler: I suppose it was not a point of order, Mr. Speaker, so you are not ruling on it. However, I would be quite happy to table this letter if anybody wants to go through the procedure of allowing me to do so. There is nothing secret about the document. It was distributed to hundreds of workers and I received one copy.

Mr. Orlikow: Read the whole thing.

Mr. Osler: I do not want to take the time to read the whole thing. The point is that the document reads as follows:

> For these reasons I have no hesitation in joining with the members and officers of the International Association of Machinists and with officers of unions affiliated with the Canadian Labour Congress and the Manitoba Federation of Labour, in urging you to support and vote for the I.A.M. in any representation vote which may be held.

So, I am not wrong. The document urges union members to follow this line. I am not quarrelling with the fact that he can do this. All I am saying is that it seems very inconsistent of a member of his party to take that line when the party is so definitely against the use of American capital for other purposes.

Mr. Broadbent: Why don't you listen to somebody for a change?

Mr. Osler: I will quote directly from the Canadian Aerospace Worker. The workers were not taken in by this plea. In fact, they did not vote for this international union. It reads:

> Not long ago, Dave Orlikow, NDP Member of Parliament for Winnipeg North, saw fit, to use the taxpayers government stationery—

To which I do not object.

> —to send a letter to the workers at Bristol Aerospace. From this letter it is obvious that he is being used as a pawn, at the hands of the Washington based Machinists Union. What a tragedy—
> While the NDP as a political party has been supported by workers of unions generally, large or small, local, national, and international, it now becomes abundantly clear that Mr. Orlikow at least is not at all interested in the small, the local, or the Canadian Unions.

Mr. Gibson: Shame.

Mr. Osler: It strikes me as very ambivalent that he should be a member of the same party as his leader who feels so strongly and passionately about the rape of this country. As somebody has said, if there is consent there is no rape. Surely, he does not like what is going on, and yet, by God, he uses public stationery to advocate it. I presume he mailed it at public expense, and he has a perfect right to do so. So there is an ambiguity there which I hope somebody will clarify before this party lets the subject die and descends into local issues like the one which the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has brought up.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke very well and constructively, I thought. He said that we needed an industrial strategy. In his view this is probably a legitimate statement, and it was echoed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I would disagree with the statement because I think we are not as bankrupt as he would make us believe. But I would also point out to him, and to the people of Canada, that it is very easy to say we need an industrial strategy, just as easy as for your wife to say she needs a new fur hat or something. However, to adjust to the emergency situation into which Canada and the rest of the world have come in the post war era and to establish a new strategy, is not something that is accomplished by dreaming. Talking about this is far easier than doing anything about it. People are trying to do something about it.

As a matter of fact one of the greatest criticisms is this whispering campaign that goes on about the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) cosying up to this country or that country or travelling to some other country. What do you think he is trying to do but develop a new strategy for trade?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Osler: It is not as easily done as one might think it is, especially when he is sabotaged and all his backers are sabotaged by people who go around whispering that all he is doing is having fun. Anyone who has been in business or in politics knows that it is no damn fun flying for a five or ten day visit to a country as vast as is Russia and doing it in an official way. It is no fun going to India and Malaysia for ten days on an official visit. Anybody who has been on business trips and compares them with pleasure trips knows that.

Mr. Nielsen: I will take some of that.

Mr. Osler: A man on an official trip cannot stay up all night, drink, and do a lot of other things, because he knows he has work to do the next morning. He cannot be like an ordinary man.

Mr. Lewis: Move a motion of sympathy for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Osler: Very well, I wish you would move it; but I do not think he needs any sympathy. He is doing all right.

Mr. Broadbent: He is getting all the sympathy from you.

Mr. Osler: My point was that it is easy for the Leader of the Opposition to talk about a new industrial strategy, but surely he must know, as the former Premier of Nova Scotia, that to talk of such a thing and to make it effective are two different things. The Industrial Estates Limited has had its successes and its failures. It has been a very human organization. It has tried. I do not think it has tried as successfully as has the Canadian government, nor has it had as good results, but results are not all that easy to obtain.

As against this illusory, terrible ogre which has been brought up by the NDP and as against the gallant, dashing, knightly calls for a new strategy, what are the facts? It seems to me that the facts are very interesting. We may not have a new strategy but Canada and Australia are the only two countries of any major significance in the industrial world which lack a domestic market or its equivalent of at least 100 million people, and Canada, in spite of this drawback, has not done too badly. I am not sure how Australia has done. Last year we exported $16.9 billion worth of goods and we imported $13.9 billion. Relative to the United States, we achieved a surplus in trade of $3 billion. It is to our success that the Americans have been objecting because they were hurt by it since they had an imbalance in other areas. We may not have a strategy, but that is a good substitute for one.

Mr. Broadbent: Let us hear some facts.

Mr. Osler: The problem is that Canada's total exports of goods and services amount to 25 per cent of our gross national product, whereas in the United States they are only 5.3 per cent. So, the Americans are not as concerned with our problems as we are with theirs. We may not have a policy, but 50 per cent of all the goods produced in Canada are exported and 40 per cent of these exports are finished goods, whereas 10 years ago only 12 per cent were finished goods. This is progress in the direction of the creation of jobs when we do our own finishing in Canada. It is illusory to say we have lost control of the situation and that jobs are being lost. We are frightened that if Mr. Nixon continues with his present policy it is certain that jobs in this country will be lost. But talking of the past, and of the record today, it is stupid and untrue to say that we have lost control of the situation because the situation is improving. The amount of manufactured goods we have exported has increased from 12 per cent to 40 per cent in 10 years.

We realize that the fact the United States is our largest market makes us vulnerable, but we continue to try through GATT to work for free trade and to expand in worldwide trade. We abhor tendencies toward the formation of trade blocs, abnormalities in currency values, U.S. economic measures against Canada and the world, but we abhor those against Canada and the world because we want a freer trade world; we want the United States to remain in that freer trade world with us and we want to remain in that freer trade world with the U.S. There is no way in which we who share this North American continent can separate from each other. Belligerent talk will not do it. Malevolent predictions that the United States are raising absolute Cain with us will not do it. We have to live together. In trade, Canada and the U.S. have exchanged last year the $19 billion worth of goods that I spoke about, which is 65 per cent of Canada's total exports. It is possible that that can be redirected to a certain extent, and we are trying to do that.

Certainly the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had little or no success when 10 or 12 years ago he tried to do the same thing. Perhaps under the present climate and world conditions we will have more success. However, the fact remains that anybody who ignores the fact that 65 per cent of our exports go to the United States, and that we are terribly dependent on that market, is not facing reality. We know that 72 per cent of Canada's imports come from the United States. That should make us very important in the eyes of the United States. But this 72 per cent of our imports, of course, is only 20 per cent of United States exports. So, the United States does not feel as strongly about our trade relationship as we do. Nevertheless, United States sales to Canada are very significant.

I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) have managed to get the message home. I believe President Nixon realizes, both from the point of view of trade and political stability, that he has to be sure his policies in no way hurt us unduly.

Each American bought $50 worth of Canada's goods last year. Every single American is a good customer. We each bought $500 worth of their goods. Every Canadian, to an American, is a very good customer. Thus, we are inseparable. There is no way we can be separated. This is the reality. Belligerent attitudes of undue nationalism will not solve problems because they are not part of this reality.

In reality we are together on this continent. There is no way for us to be anything else. Canada's external trade surplus was achieved in spite of the high value of the Canadian dollar last year and in spite of the serious increase in the volume of imports. This trade surplus is in the order of about $500 million in favour of Canada, which is another reason we have to think of the United States as being a good friend. In addition, the United States market is a finished and semi-finished market for our agricultural produce. This must become greatly expanded in the view of western Canada. We have to find new markets for our products and ways in which to finish new products so that workers can find jobs which are no longer available on the farms. We must find ways to bring these finished or semi-finished products to markets. What is better than the highly populated Pacific rim of the United States along the coast and what is wrong with carrying it on to Japan, China and Malaysia in that way? Without the springboard of the southwestern United States and its large markets, we could not begin to develop economies of scale in respect of the refinishing of agricultural products to allow us to compete in these other world markets. This is another reason, particularly in respect of western Canada, that we must treat the United States as our best friend and as our best trading customer.

Quebec and the Maritimes have similar problems with which I am not familiar, but I have heard from members of these areas that they are very concerned about the health and wealth of the United States because it is a good market for them. It is not all a one-way street.

The fact remains that we do need capital. Capital is mobile and capital can come from anywhere. If too much comes from the United States it causes anxiety and imbalances in our industrial structure. But surely it is up to us as Canadians, and especially as Canadian politicians, to decide what ground rules we want to make and what laws we want to operate under. That is not something to blame the United States for and is not a reason to drive away investment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this important debate today. This is the second time within a few weeks that the general subject of the relations between the United States and Canada, and in particular the economic relations and the independence of our own country, has been raised as a matter of debate by opposition parties. I think this points up again, regardless of differences which may exist between hon. members, the rising importance there is in this question. It is certainly not a new question. Indeed, apart from the continual question of the relationship between English and French-speaking persons of this country, it is difficult to find a subject which goes further back into our history than the relations between those who live in the northern half of the North American continent and those who live in the southern half.

In 1971 a new sense of urgency arose. I think the initial guns were fired on August 15 when President Nixon announced a number of economic measures which were taken, not with specific direction toward Canada but because of the internal and external problems faced by the United States, of a nature which had a major impact on Canadians. Certainly, I for one have had to reflect again on the intimate relationship which exists between Canada and the United States. It is a cliché used so often it is like a smooth stone found on the beach to say no two nations have the kind of intimate relationship which exists between Canada and the United States. By the nature of that relationship, similar only I suppose to the marriage relationship, there are bound to be elements both of love and hate. In the last few months we have seen ample evidence of both. On Tuesday of this week, at the same moment the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made his report to the Commons on his recent talks with President Nixon, outside this building a group of people were protesting the sellout, if you like, or loss of Canadian sovereignty to the United States.

Canadians have lived for a long time with this ambivalent attitude. This may be one of the principal problems we have to deal with. When you live with a continuing problem like this day after day, year after year, and century after century, you tend to think the problem never really changes, that the factors are essentially the same and that how you feel and react to what our country or the United States does is really not of very much consequence because somehow the relationship will go on forever through good times and bad, as the marriage oath has it, in sickness and in health, for rich or for poor, and so on.

An hon. Member: I never heard of "and so on".

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): "And so on" is a new revised version I have added. In respect of a marriage between Canada and the United States, it is important to reflect on the fact that a marriage can be dissolved not just by death, but by divorce or separation, and that there can be difficult and almost intractable human problems. I think it is wrong for us to assume that all factors remain the same and that nothing changes. Life essentially is dynamic. It is not static. There are a number of factors that are quite new and which make it very important that we examine these questions specifically.

If we consider some of the events of the past few months, the sale of a major national press, Ryerson Press, which prints many of our text books, to an American interest, the loss of control of major oil companies, the earlier inroads made by American banking institutions into the Canadian scene, even more recently the controversy surrounding the leaked Gray report, the almost immediate visit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Washington and his comments on the discovery of a new understanding on the part of President Nixon about the nature and the authenticity of the Canadian nation, and only yesterday the release of a document on foreign ownership by the government of Ontario, it must be obvious that there is tremendous interest in this question.

Yet we are told by the Gallup poll released today that when people were asked what they thought would be the overriding issue in the next federal election, overwhelmingly they said it would be unemployment. American ownership was not even in second or third place. It was down in an almost imperceptible percentage position. Only a few people replying to the survey said they thought American ownership, American investment, would be a critical problem. Even the report released yesterday by the government of Ontario has warned us to think carefully about the promotion and exploitation of our natural resources, about allowing for greater foreign inroads into our natural resource sector to the discrimination of secondary manufacturing in Canada and said that this could create extensive unemployment.

I would say one of the problems with which political leaders, provincially and federally, have failed to grapple is the relationship that may well exist between either cyclical unemployment or increasing unemployment and inattention to the question of domestic priorities for the Canadian economy. If it is in fact true, Mr. Speaker, that we have inadvertently ignored some important questions in terms of the way in which we control investment activity in this country, and that this has discriminated against employment, we have misled the Canadian public on two counts.

We have to be circumspect about further American involvement in our resource industries. We must begin now—in fact, now is very late and possibly too late in some sectors—to define those areas wherein it is in the Canadian interest to discourage further American involvement and prohibit continued American monopoly. We have to define these areas and in some cases proceed to a process of rectification almost regardless of the cost.

These will not be popular words to certain segments of Canadian society but I feel they must be said if we are to protect the over-all standard of living that seems to be uppermost in the minds of many. I think it is fair to say that in our willingness and desire to achieve a standard of living equal to that of the United States we have often taken a shortsighted approach to the development of our economy and particularly to the development and utilization of our natural resources. This, again, is part of the Canadian ambivalence.

We cannot live so close to our neighbours and absorb as much of their culture as we do, from the moment we open our eyes in the morning until we close them in slumber at night, without experiencing a desire to achieve a standard of living equal to that of the Americans. And if the price of that standard of living is some loss of control over sectors of our economy, in the past we have not considered that cost to be too great. It appears that if we suffer loss of control over our natural resources we may also suffer a loss in our standard of living and so will have gained the worst of all possible worlds.

It seems to me that we must be extremely careful to examine where our present economic policies, our present taxation proposals and our present regulations, both federal and provincial, are leading us. It is obvious that we have not looked very carefully into this question. Indeed, one of the real problems for us in examining this question is the lack of trust that has existed in the federal government in exercising jurisdiction in these matters. If there is anything that the present government can be blamed for, it is its lack of trust in the Canadian people regarding this issue. The government has succeeded in the last few months in fogging-up or, if I may say so, "Graying-up" the key points that are involved in this area to the extent it is becoming increasingly difficult for Canadians to see the essentials of the issue in order that a reasonable and sane analysis might be made.

Even though cabinet ministers have resigned on much these same issues, to date the government has been unresponsive to these important questions. One of the fascinating things to indicate the dilemma presently facing us was the immediate reac ion of provincial Premiers following publication of the Gray report. It was fascinating to watch four Premiers from different parts of the country indicate the horror with which they viewed the suggestions in that report in terms of the adoption of a screening agency and such kinds of bureaucratic intervention that might take place on the part of the federal government. This said as much to me about the deteriorating situation with regard to confidence between the federal and provincial governments as it did about the nature of the problem itself.

It is understandable that the governments of the provinces become uneasy when federal initiatives appear to threaten their own efforts at bringing development to their jurisdictions. We can understand all too well the anxiety of the poorer provinces—I may say in passing that I represent one of those poorer provinces—that are faced with continuing uncertainty by foreign investors who through their investments might succeed in aiding the development and economic expansion of those provinces. That is an anxiety that must be dealt with by any group wishing to deal in a realistic sense with this problem.

In the first instance we will require an integrated approach that will have more to it than inflated rhetoric or nationalistic fervour. It requires more than leaked reports and unilateral policy positions. It requires, in the first instance, that there be the fullest possible consultation. Indeed, I think the word "consultation" for this government is too weak because in effect it means a telegram sent at some strange hour of the day. The government calls that consultation and then proceeds to do exactly what it had decided in the first instance.

That is not what we mean by consultation. Consultation must allow for a continuous interchange and exchange of views and the establishment of goals and priorities on which there is a consensus within the country. It is interesting that Premier Davis, in releasing the report on foreign ownership in Ontario yesterday, suggested that the government of Ontario would not move until there was some clear direction from the federal government.

Second, Mr. Speaker, there would have to be some form of agreement by the provinces—

Mr. Kaplan: Do you agree with that?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I do.

Mr. Kaplan: Why?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Because we are talking about a federal system, not a unitary system as is sometimes conceived by members of the government. If they are not prepared to recognize that we are in a federal system, this will have a very serious effect on the important question of economic self-determination. We must deal with the anxiety of the provinces, and that can only be dealt with in terms of ongoing federal-provincial development of national criteria on foreign investment and national economic goals.

I agree with my leader when he suggests that we must have an industrial strategy which takes into account the realistic economic situation of this country. We will not get that until there is consensus as to goals. Perhaps it points up the way in which the government has failed to grapple with this question when we consider what kind of priority it has given to the elaboration of goals in regard to regional disparity. Unless we take these issues seriously, none of the provinces should be asked to take this government seriously when it talks about a strategy for foreign investment and Canadian economic determination.

Mr. Kaplan: It is not a unitary system. The provinces also have a responsibility to put forward a policy.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am glad that some members on the other side are beginning to see what is involved in a federal system. I hope the hon. member will say that in his caucus.

Another thing to be taken into account is the dramatic change in the direction of activity of the United States economy. It is too soon to predict with accuracy the course on which the United States is launched, but it is obvious that they have taken a firm hand in the direction in which they wish their economy to go. This will have a continuing impact upon us and will call upon us to make new decisions with regard to our economic situation.

I would remind hon. members that the decisions being taken by the United States are not only because of individual or short-term problems concerning abnormally high unemployment or rising inflation, but they are also related to the changing nature of the American economic structure. This has changed very dramatically in the area of natural resources. It is only in the last decade or so that the United States has had to rapidly increase its importation of natural resources in order to meet consumer and industrial demands. We must pay attention to this matter because of our own situation, sitting as we do on the northern part of this continent with tremendous untapped natural resources.

It would be very easy for us in this decade to enter into attractive, short-term options which would make a variety of natural resources available to the Americans to satisfy their needs. However, we might discover in the latter part of the decade or early in the next that the requirements of the American economy would make it necessary for them to exercise the kind of choices and controls that would be completely unpalatable to the effective working of our economy short of a full economic and political union with the United States. In spite of the ambivalence that all Canadians feel with regard to the United States, I doubt whether there are many who would look forward with pleasure to an eventual and total absorption into that nation.

What is our task, then? Surely, our task for the moment is to consider in the widest possible way and with the greatest possible public discussion what our goals should be. We have talked about this in vague generalities in the past. I think the time has arrived when we should be specific.

Mr. Kaplan: Have you any ideas?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I had the opportunity, and I hope we will have a further opportunity, to discuss this. I think in the short time that is available I can do little but set forth something to which I hope members on the opposite side will respond favourably. We must establish machinery for consultation that will work both ways. It must be identifiable machinery for the establishment of these goals which will involve provincial administration, which will involve key sectors of our economy such as industry, labour and the growing academic communities so there can be the fullest possible input in the discussion.

There must also be consultation beyond our borders. Sometimes I think we live in a kind of fool's world where we allow ourselves to be caught out because of lack of information of what is happening beyond our borders. Obviously, we must have machinery to receive information and for consultation in Washington and in the European countries where there is increasing economic activity.

There is also a need for comprehensive industrial planning. This includes an approach which will recognize that there are certain sectors of our economy that are crucial to our own development and the maintenance of economic independence. I think we have to begin the experiment and explore the possibility for diversifying our trade pattern which at the moment is extremely bilateral with the Americans, as well as diversifying the investment pattern and also enlarging it within this country. In many instances the main banking institutions in this country are more favourably disposed to large multinational American corporations than to Canadian business enterprise.

We must consider what steps can be taken to encourage Canadian participation in the investment in and development of industries in this country. Our industry is less efficient than it is capable of being, and does not use the industrial structures available. We must look to the development of our own technology and management expertise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, this debate on the subject of American control and foreign policy arises from the motion which reads:

> This House calls on the government to institute without delay policies and programs designed to arrest further expansion of foreign control of Canada's economy and to regain control by the Canadian people of our natural resources and manufacturing and service industries in order to assure our country's independence and jobs for Canadian workers and to enable Canadians to shape their own national identity and social values.

This motion was moved by the leader of the New Democratic Party and is the subject of this debate. I shall deal with his speech later in my speech. First, I shall try to be constructive with the knowledge that I have, some of which was gained in the Canadian-American study conducted by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. We heard many witnesses from all walks of life who had investigated this problem. They were both Canadian and American. I believe that study was useful and the report has received the serious attention of this government.

What are the problems, Mr. Speaker? Any Canadian government seeking to formulate a policy on foreign investment faces the difficult problem of finding a balanced position. On the one hand it must consider the continued need in Canada of the new technology and highly skilled entrepreneurial technique which has traditionally accompanied United States investment in Canada. There is also the need to supplement the small Canadian domestic market with foreign markets, which accompanies United States investment in many cases, in order to permit economies of scale in Canadian production. Of concern is the integrated financial market between the two countries in which there is a large, two-way flow of capital and also the interdependence of the two countries in trade.

At the same time there are the following, additional complications to be kept in mind: (a) the provincial desire to promote regional development which leads the provinces to compete with each other in granting concessions to foreign investment bidders, and (b) the geographical and social proximity of Canada to the U.S. which makes unacceptable a markedly inferior standard of living for Canadians.

The government will be mindful of the advantages of U.S. investment, namely, the large capital inflows available for Canadian resource and industrial development, the advanced technology, the highly developed managerial skills, production techniques, financial and marketing skills which usually accompany U.S. investment, the resulting expansion of employment, the possibilities for increased exports due to access to expanded or new markets, the stimulus, at times only, to competition and the capacity of the multinational firms to develop economies of scale in production which may be impossible for Canada to develop indigenously in some cases.

There are also increasingly evident disadvantages connected with U.S. investment to be considered, particularly disadvantages related to the extraterritorial application, through Canadian subsidiaries, of U.S. laws and policies dealing with control of exports, anti-trust regulations and balance of payments, disadvantages associated with the leverage and manipulating power of huge multinational corporations and disadvantages related to the high concentration of U.S. ownership in key resource and manufacturing industries, with the attendant fears that important decisions made by such U.S. companies which have interests extending far beyond Canada may not be in Canada's best interests. These would include decisions regarding purchases, sales, research, processing, production, pricing and export sales.

With these considerations in mind, the government has open to it the following possible lines of policy and could use a mixture of both. First, there are restrictive policy possibilities. As in several countries, a government foreign investment agency could be established to regulate to a greater or lesser degree foreign investment. Second, there are positive policy possibilities. A bill to create the Canada Development Corporation was passed recently. The corporation is expected to be a leader in positive and imaginative government policies to increase Canadian control of the economy. It is intended to be a new and major source of equity capital for large-scale industrial and resource development, to help finance new Canadian-owned projects and to play a leadership role in organizing small, potentially uneconomic Canadian companies into larger, more viable enterprises through mergers or rationalization schemes. This is particularly likely to be applied in sectors of manufacturing where technology dictates economies of scale beyond the scope of the small firm or of the Canadian market.

It may enter into joint venture schemes. It will probably try to provide an attractive alternative to entice back to Canada extensive Canadian investment, both institutional and private, in the U.S. and will eventually offer its shares widely to the Canadian people. However, the corporation will not become a buy-back agency solely to protect Canadian companies from sales to foreign buyers. If those who keep knocking the Canadian Development Corporation will stop playing politics with it and give us their best ideas on the subject, the corporation will work.

The government could also introduce a whole range of incentives for companies to increase Canadian equity participation or Canadian personnel or to follow other of the government's guiding principles. As was suggested in the government white paper on taxation, capital gains on U.S. investment could be subjected to heavier taxation than capital gains or Canadian investments. Legislation could be enacted that would countervail the effect of the extraterritorial application of U.S. laws; for example, those relating to the U.S. anti-trust laws which may inhibit necessary rationalization schemes of Canadian industry. We must undertake research in technology and scientific development, expand our economy and make efforts to produce those things that are produced in foreign lands. All this is within our capability. We are a young, strong country. We have the will to do it, and with the help of the good Lord we will do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, the government could introduce policies in other areas which would help to stimulate industrial development, strengthen competition and improve Canadian technological and managerial skills. These are policies which might tend to reduce the Canadian industrial dependence on foreigners. Measures could be adopted which would provide incentives for Canadian firms to expand their operations and investments abroad in order to capture new markets for Canadian exports. Also, the government could initiate talks with European countries which face similar problems regarding the extraterritorial application of U.S. laws and powers of the U.S.-based, multi national corporations with a view to possible concerted multilateral action.

Having said that, I believe that the government acted with courage and initiative in approaching the gigantic problems created by the United States. What did the government do? Immediately, as soon as it was aware of the difficulty, the government introduced the Employment Support Bill which in the short run will protect many jobs in Canadian industries. This was done without panic, with deliberately planned initiative. The step was taken promptly and was well thought-out. The measure appears to be working well, in this interim period, to alleviate some of the uncertainty that has been brought on by the American decision.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will meet again at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), representing the Official Opposition, droaned through a long list of pessimistic, dull, unimaginative, fairly critical statements I was reminded of the day I came to this place in 1968. One of the things I told myself was that we must be optimistic if we are to succeed, for an atmosphere of pessimism has to a certain extent permeated Canada in the past few months.

Mr. Alexander: Guess why?

Mr. Gibson: I believe part of the reason is the irresponsible conduct of leaders and members of the opposition parties. Some concrete examples of these forms of pessimism which are damaging the Canadian economy are statements given by party leaders over television bemoaning the economy, the actions of the government and the activities of cabinet members who work hard with their representatives at meetings, in their constituencies and in this great House of Commons.

Day after day we are treated to pathetic, insipid criticism of a banal type which does not behoove any Canadian Member of Parliament. I respectfully submit that the role of a Member of Parliament is not to run down his country, particularly when the United States of America has put great pressure on the men who hold the reins of office in Canada be they federal, provincial or municipal. The hour has come for Canadians of every political stripe and colour to band together, use collectively their brains and initiatives in order to work out a solid policy of co-operation with the United States and bring this country back to the "good neighbour" policy of Mackenzie King and Roosevelt. That can be done, Mr. Speaker, and it shall be done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Stanfield—excuse me Mr. Speaker; I apologize for naming him.

An hon. Member: That is not a good name.

Mr. Gibson: To sum up his speech, the Leader of the Opposition suggested that we have guidelines. We have guidelines but they are not working well enough. I may be a backbencher in this party but I am not satisfied that everything is milk and honey in our economic relations and policies. We will build a policy. We will do it with the help of Canadians of all parties. In this debate some useful suggestions have come from across the floor.

Mr. Mahoney: Name one.

Mr. Gibson: The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who is a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence—and has studied Canadian-American relations, made many useful suggestions in his speech. There was some scholarship and initiative in his speech.

I do not intend to refer to all the other speakers, but the Leader of the Opposition failed to be really constructive. He delivered his speech carefully but monotonously. It was a monotonous, pedagogic, trite speech, one you might have heard from Mr. Graydon, Mr. Hanson, Mr. Drew, Mr. Bracken and all the other unsuccessful opposition leaders of the Conservative party. I speak from direct observation. When I was 16 years old, I sat in the gallery. My father was a member of this chamber. I remember hearing the same old doom and gloom being preached to the government of that day.

This government will lead the country back to a successful, sound economy. Who are the unselfish bureaucrats who will replace the business leaders? That is what the Leader of the Opposition asked. That is a ridiculous generality. It is a trite, outdated, antiquated sentence which should be struck from all government or opposition speeches. Let us get down to practical analysis as was done by the hon. member for York South in the part of his speech when he was serious.

An hon. Member: He is alright, then?

Mr. Gibson: Yes, on certain aspects, because he did face the problem of export credit and some kind of control commission to screen capital when he complained of lack of strategy and development guidelines. The speech of the Leader of the Opposition added up to a string of undefined guidelines floating uncertainly in the air like a rudderless Tory party to the tune of many dangling participles and split infinitives, signifying nothing.

In the other part of his speech the hon. member for York South displayed a callous indifference to the likelihood of success of the Canada Development Corporation. Despite his cynicism displayed in a dull and unimaginative way, he ended by trotting out the same recommendations as were made by the largely Liberal-drafted external affairs committee report. If there was anything new in what he said, it was renewed arrogance mingled with humorous hot air. He should move over and make way for a new vigorous leader, perhaps his son.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: In the event his party's ideas are always as unimaginative, there will always be great hopes for gains by Liberal supporters contesting NDP seats. No new ideas are being advanced by members of the opposition except as earlier referred to, whereas members of the Liberal party have shown imagination, courage, firmness and a desire to succeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gibson: The hon. member for York South merely repeated many of the conclusions of earlier trite speeches.

[Translation]

I would now like to express my feelings in my second language.

Mr. Alexander: Try German!

Mr. Gibson: No, that is not possible. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we in the Liberal party can speak both languages, contrary to the members of the opposition, and that we shall continue, with these hon. members, to make progress.

[English]

I am sorry the hon. member for York South has not been here while I was speaking. The hon. member's speech was a bitter, frustrated, partisan, NDP speech. It was delivered by a frustrated member annoyed by the misguided wafflers in his party, the impractical visionaries and inexperienced professors, most of whom have never suffered the agonies of unemployment and who cannot themselves be dismissed from their secure university positions due to monopolistic rules governing the teaching profession. I resent the stagnation that comes from many parts of this House and I encourage all members to come forward as some have done in this debate with constructive, positive suggestions to make Canada a great, strong country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should check for dangling participles before or after I have spoken.

There comes a point in any discussion of the necessity for Canada to maintain its political and economic independence when someone must pose the question: why do we wish to maintain political and economic independence? An attempt must be made to answer that question.

I think that the inarticulated major premise of any argument for Canadian political and economic independence is that there are some aspects of the Canadian culture which are unique and different. They are valuable and worthy of preservation, partly because of their unique quality. If that is not part of the thinking behind calls for economic and political independence there would seem to be precious little reason for pursuing those goals.

Human awareness of a situation is seldom, if ever, contemporaneous with the birth of that situation. There is a time lag between the creation of a new reality and a human perception of awareness of that reality. Thus, while Canadians were busily disentangling themselves from Britain whose power was on the wane another and very real danger to the continued existence, not to mention the flourishing of, a distinct Canadian identity, crept up on us. Donald Creighton, writing in MacLeans Magazine of November, 1971, describes the new threat in the following words:

> The truth is that Canadians, in accepting American capital, American management and American technology, have unwittingly received the spirit that animates all three. They have not only become subjects of the American continental empire, but they have also become converts to its characteristic philosophy of life, to what might legitimately be called its religion. The central doctrine of this religion is a belief that progress is the only good in life and that progress means a liberation of man for the progressive conquest of nature by technology.

Professor Creighton went on to say:

> This new doctrine (the doctrine of continual economic growth) has captured the minds of Canadians, just as it has those of every other people in the western world. To achieve economic growth, they are prepared to sacrifice their independence, pillage their natural resources, contaminate their environment and endure all the hideous evils of modern industrialization and urbanization. The American empire is taking over the birthright of Canadians; and its imperial religion has taken over their minds.

What is this new religion, as Professor Creighton calls it, replacing? What have we got to lose? Tolerance is one thing. Tolerance is a peculiarly Canadian virtue—a virtue and a vice, I suppose. Peter Newman made one of the best stabs at describing what is unique in Canada in the same edition of MacLeans in which is to be found Dr. Creighton's article. He said:

> What we tend to say when we are exhorting our countrymen to stand up for Canada is that we need as a people to be more energetic in tackling our trade problems, to develop a stronger technology, to be less timid in our patriotism, more aggressive in pushing our own point of view—to be, in other words, more like the Americans.
> But surely, what we have that is ours, the quality that makes us special as a nation, is almost antithetical to all of these admonitions. It's what Creighton himself calls our "inherited Canadian belief in an ordered peaceful society and a gentle and simple way of life! The Canadian character, by definition, displays a reticence, a disdain for xenophobia, a dislike of bombast, and a genuine desire to let each other be. In part, it comes out of being small, out of not having to be first, out of being able to encompass the indigenous in very different cultures of the regions without having to savage them in the name of some monolithic concept called Pan-Canadianism. There is something very special about a man from the outports, say, that may seem very strange to a man from the Peace River country. He is a Newfoundlander and he is a Canadian, but he can be both.

• (8:20 p.m.)

It is that which stands in danger of being lost. Realizing the fact that it stands in danger of being lost is perhaps the first step to preserving it.

To see that it stands in danger, we need only look around us. American-inspired fads and fashions, techniques of production and modes of consumption, standards of living, economic, social and religious ideologies and philosophies of life generally have become increasingly popular in Canada. It is probably safe to say that most Canadians eat much the same kinds of food, wear the same kinds of clothes and live in the same type of house or apartment as do Americans. Our respective educational systems teach much the same subjects, use similar techniques and attempt to inculcate much the same values. English-speaking Canadians and Americans read much the same books, magazines and comic strips, watch the same movies and television programs, respond to the same type of advertising and buy the same kinds and brands of automobiles, household appliances, clothes, packaged goods, cosmetics and patent medicines. They participate in the same types of sports and other recreational activities. They join branches of the same lodges, fraternal societies, service clubs, scientific, trade or professional associations. But in all of this similarity there is one hitch for those of us interested in preserving what is unique in this country: all of the similarities are American oriented, American initiated and American dominated.

This process has gone so far that many Canadians have come to think that making the effort to remain Canadian constitutes a sacrifice. They believe that instead of gaining something in strengthening our ability to be ourselves, we would be losing something. This is the most insidious thing about the situation in which we now find ourselves.

The manner in which our thinking is directed is both subtle and direct. Take as an example our social organizations. As I have said, historically Canadians have organized and joined branches of the same lodges, fraternal associations, service clubs, trade, scientific and professional associations as Americans. The presence of a large number of American social organizations, whether formal or informal, in Canada may well serve to reintroduce or reinforce American values which are already being presented to Canadians through the media of communications which are also American dominated. That may or may not be considered a threat to Canada. However, these social organizations, by acting as informal lobby groups for American interests or by determining the direction of social research, do conflict with Canadian cultural, social and political goals.

I mentioned a moment ago that the influence of the American media is exceptionally profound. Through the various communications media Canadians are made constantly aware of American social problems and America's reform tradition. Social issues which may or may not have originated in America are often popularized first by the United States. Due to the extent to which American technology, people, ideas and methods of operation are already present in the Canadian social structure, Canadians tend to absorb the popularized version—which is

American—of social issues in such a way that it tends to affect our ability to deal with similar social problems which become apparent in our own society. We accept the package deal. The reform element often adopts the style, the jargon and the literature of the American reform element. The rest of the Canadian population often acts on the judgments made about the similar American situation.

All of this process tends to ignore the fact that Canadian social institutions and Canadian social problems are often difficult clearly to define; in fact, the American influence makes their definition even more difficult. It also tends to ignore that Canadian social institutions tend to operate and respond in a different manner from American institutions and to respond to situations in a different fashion from their American counterparts.

Thus, through the American influence we may well be misdefining our social problems and misdirecting our efforts to correct them because both the statement of the problem and the structuring of the solutions are based upon experiences alien to our own in fact, but which seem to be our own because of the presence of the American thinking pattern in our media. We are perceiving our own country in a very confused manner and are not able adequately to deal with our problems because of this confused perspective.

Let us look at the situation in Canada with respect to our culture and the things that affect our culture. Of the 20 top television programs, only three are Canadian. Only 5 per cent of the book publishing industry is Canadian owned. Only about 20 per cent of text books found in Canadian schools are Canadian in origin. Forty-nine per cent of professors at Canadian universities are of foreign extraction. Only three out of 16 National Hockey League teams are located in Canada. Many of our outstanding artists and dramatists must leave this country to find employment and challenges that are commensurate with their abilities. Hume Cronyn, William Shatner, Lorne Greene, Donald Sutherland, Norman Jewison, Rich Little, Paul Anka, Douglas Raine and a legion of others have left Canada in order to find a suitable outlet which did not exist here, for their talents.

This fact has produced some ridiculous situations which, if they were not so painful, would be laughable. For example, in today's Globe and Mail it is noted in Blaik Kirby's column that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has purchased from New York a new dramatic anthology for its next summer's programming. This program was made by Canadian stars with supporting players from Toronto. Some of the plays are written by Canadians. It was produced by CFTO in Toronto, yet our national broadcasting system had to purchase it from a United States company.

Having said that, I do not want to leave the impression that nothing has been done to preserve Canadian culture, because that is not correct. For example, the Massey commission gave rise to the Canada Council which has done excellent work in fostering the dramatic arts and the fine arts in Canada. A few years ago an attempt was made to assist Canadian periodical publications through changes in the Income Tax Act which quite deliberately discouraged Canadian advertisers from placing their ads in United States periodicals. However, the only thing wrong with that was that two of the most popular United States periodicals in Canada, Time and Reader's Digest, were excluded from the provisions of the Income Tax Act, so that the purpose of the changes was defeated in the end. This part of the Income Tax Act must be changed and the exclusion of Time and Reader's Digest dropped. This will do more to encourage Canadian publications.

In the field of radio and television the CRTC has been taking bold and imaginative steps to increase Canadian content. It is a measure of how far down the road toward integration with the United States we have gone that most of the efforts have been met with screams of protest from special interest groups and the public alike. But if I may be permitted an aside at this point, not all of these protests lack justification. In its endeavour to ensure that the Canadian electronic media remain Canadian both in ownership and in content, the CRTC has not really looked beyond the nationality of the owners and actors who are employed. It has done very little to ensure that the distinctive character of Canada is reflected in our electronic media.

Thus, Winnipegers can perhaps quite justifiably scream about the potential dangers of suggested changes to the Income Tax Act for a local American television station because in all likelihood if the American television station is forced to close, and if the CRTC's anticipation that more money will be available for the production of Canadian television is realized, production facilities will probably be centred in eastern Canada. The actors will have to move to eastern Canada and once again the Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and the Prairies will be left out in the cold. Therefore, it would seem that in our attempts to solve the problem of cultural assimilation we must make sure that the solutions we propose will have the effect of accurately reflecting Canadian realities, the regional nature of this country, and we must ensure that the insensitivity of American capital to the nature of this country is not simply replaced by equally insensitive central Canadian capital.

A beginning has also been made in the film industry with the creation of the Canadian Film Corporation to ensure Canadian content in the area of popular culture. The Canadian Film Corporation has sponsored some films which have received deserved wide acclaim. It has also produced some real dogs. But I think the idea of the Canadian Film Corporation should be expanded and perhaps the corporation should start producing films specifically for showing on television since movies on television have a high audience appeal. The only major fault with the Canadian Film Corporation is that perhaps it is not adequately funded.

I think we are unduly sensitive about producing the odd bad film. Every nation in the world with a film industry produces more bad ones than good ones, and I do not know why Canadians should expect to be any different. That is not to say that criticism is not legitimate. It is. And the more criticism, the better the end product. But the critics should remember that experimentation is the essence of creativity and experiments have, by their very nature, a high failure rate.

I would be very much remiss if I did not mention, in the context of the Canadian film industry, the contribution of the National film Board. I know that every member of the House is acquainted with the excellent work of that body and I need not go into detail. What is distressing to me is that when this government felt the need some three years ago to cut back on government expenditures, one of the first places to feel the axe was the National Film Board. This would seem to me to be a drastic mix up in priorities.

There is less reason for optimism in other facets of the Canadian culture. Our book publishing industry is 95 per cent foreign owned. In the last two years we have seen the sale of major Canadian publishing houses such as W.J. Gage Limited and Ryerson Press. We have seen the threat of the sale of McLelland and Stewart prevented, perhaps only temporarily, by the action of the Ontario government. We have seen the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) holding conferences with Canadian book publishers in order to hear their suggestions for improvements. We have heard statements from the minister that action must be taken, but no action has been taken.

We need to ensure that the decisions about what we are to read are made by Canadians with a Canadian point of view, attempting to meet Canadian needs, rather than by Americans. We must immediately embark upon a five-point program. First, we must establish a Canadian book development corporation which would operate similarly to the Canadian Film Corporation. It would provide loans for the publication of books in the expectation that any profits derived therefrom would be shared by the corporation. Moreover, those loans should not necessarily relate to a single book but, perhaps, to a group of books so that the losses sustained by some would be covered by the profits of others. This would be necessary in order to assure adequate diversity in the kind of books published.

Second, the federal government should provide long-term, low interest loans to Canadian book publishing houses through institutions such as the Industrial Development Bank. Third, funds should be made available by the Humanities Research Council and the Canada Council for the publication of scholarly and artistic works by Canadians. Fourth, a Canadian-owned book distribution system should be established in competition with those systems which already operate in Canada but which are American owned. Fifth, there should be efforts made by the government to get Canadian publishers to co-operate in the establishment of a Canadian book publishing house in the United States which would potentially increase the volume of sales of Canadian books. The need for such measures is well documented.

I have been informed, in answers to questions placed on the order paper, that in 1968, when W. J. Gage Company was still Canadian owned, 22 Canadian companies supplied textbooks to Canadian schools and provided only 40.3 per cent of the total textbooks employed by the schools. Since then, W. J. Gage and Ryerson have been sold to American interests, so the percentage of Canadian textbooks being supplied to Canadian schools by Canadian publishers is now probably down to about 20 per cent.

In the universities the situation is worse. A survey prepared by Mr. Rod McDermitt and Mr. Art Skolenski entitled "The Textbook Racket" points out that 80 per cent of all library and 92 per cent of all university bookstore purchases are books not published in Canada, that only 17 per cent of all post-secondary textbook sales are from domestic publishers and roughly half of this number are published on the basis of adapted rights, and that therefore less than 10 per cent of all university texts are of Canadian origin.

As schools and universities move into machine teaching the situation is likely to become even worse. Most of the material used in machine teaching is prepared in the United States. The results of this domination of our publishing industry by U.S. publishing firms is one of the major factors producing the kind of situation recently revealed in a survey conducted by York University in which it was disclosed that Canadian students identify more closely with American presidents than they do with Canadian prime ministers.

I have much more to say on this subject of culture. I wanted to deal with sports, for example, but I see I do not have the time. I would like to conclude with this final thought, that economic, political and cultural independence are closely linked and interrelated. If we are to have any one of the three we must also have the other two. That fact must never be forgotten by the government in its efforts to meet the situation. I hope with that thought in mind the government will get down to work and present us with the policies and the legislation we require to keep this country ours.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are debating today is a timely one, even though it was debated two weeks ago, because the problem of foreign ownership is so much in the public mind today. It was said that one of the prime reasons for which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went to the United States last Monday was to inform the President that there would be new restrictions placed on foreign investment in Canada, meaning in our case American investment in Canada. Indeed, the newspaper pundits have been suggesting that this is a carefully planned move on the part of the Prime Minister, because they point up the following event. On June 18 the government introduced a tax bill which incorporated major reforms in the field of tax advantages for Canadian businesses and tax disadvantages for United States-owned businesses operating in Canada. It contained other provisions to force Canadian pension funds and certain additional passive investors in this country to invest less in stocks listed on U.S. exchanges and more in Canadian equities. Then on June 29 the competition act was introduced in the House of Commons, containing major innovations in the field of regulating the activities of foreign firms entering the Canadian market through takeovers and similar devices.

Finally, on June 30, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation was given royal assent but has not yet been proclaimed. The major, unstated purpose of the CDC is to give Canadian vendors of major profitable enterprises an alternative buyer. In the past it has been stated that only the United States has been able to acquire them. There is no doubt that the brunt of Canadian policy to curb foreign takeovers will fall most heavily on U.S. firms which have the greatest propensity to invest in Canada. There is no doubt that if there is a change in the Canadian receptivity to U.S. direct ownership capital, this could precipitate retaliatory action by the United States. This would mean cutting off or limiting access to the United States bond markets or borrowing by Canadian provinces and municipalities.

Canada, as usual, in dealing with the United States does not want the United States to curb trade or to shut-out borrowing by our provincial governments in the American market. So it seems, from the answers given in the House by the Prime Minister, that he went to Washington to inform the Americans that he is about to make a significant announcement as to what Canada will do in the matter of foreign investment. Therefore, it seems likely that in the near future we can expect a significant announcement by the Prime Minister with regard to the value of keeping out foreign investment in particular areas.

The ill-fated Gray report which was leaked has been deliberately designed so that its main arm and its main weapon against foreign investment is the so-called screening agency. And we no doubt are to be shortly treated to an announcement by the government that such an agency will be set up. It seems doubtful that such an agency will be able to act in a fundamental way to safeguard our national interest. It will act only to safeguard the regional interests of Canada, and the area to be safeguarded in Canada by the screening agency is, of course, central Canada. That a better method of dealing with foreign investment must be devised, in view of what has been an ad hoc basis of this government's intervention, can readily be seen.

There is the former Dennison Mines case, where the government intervened at the last minute to prevent the sale of uranium resources. There is the Home Oil case, where at the last minute the intervention of the government prevented the sale of a Canadian company to a United States company on very doubtful grounds. Then, again, the government allowed the sale of a Canadian oil company to BP Supertest, presumably on the basis that this was an English company and not a United States company and therefore more desirable in respect of foreign capital.

In the recent action of the National Energy Board in barring the export of natural gas to the United States we have a further example of how our ad hoc system of dealing with foreign investment is being brought about. The price of natural gas has risen because of its pollution-free qualities. Since 1959, about $100 million has been expended by American gas companies in finding reserves in Alberta. The Alberta energy board had okayed the export of natural gas and felt the reserves would be adequate, but the National Energy Board, acting in some divine manner, reversed this decision and did not allow the export of natural gas. In appearing before the miscellaneous estimates committee, representatives of the National Energy Board revealed that their prime reason for doing so was that two plants in industry were experiencing difficulty operating in high pollution areas in Ontario, that it would probably be necessary to change to a less pollutant type fuel and that these hydro plants would have to be protected.

Even the National Energy Board admitted that the use of natural gas in hydro plants would almost certainly be short lived because coal is a much cheaper fuel and it is only a matter of the time and money, mostly time, necessary to allow the thermo generating plants to get in a position to use coal as a pollution-free fuel. So the decision of the National Energy Board was made not to export gas. This was a political decision made with a minimum of political effort.

These decisions of the government to move on an ad hoc basis were made easy from a political point of view. They discriminated against western Canada, which the present government feels it is entitled to do at any time. They discriminated in the field of natural resources, the non-renewable resources which are such an emotional issue and which everyone has a vague fear some day will be used up. The general feeling is that we should conserve these resources for our own use. We perhaps forget that we sometimes use other people's resources, which we think is quite all right.

In any discussion as to limiting foreign capital in Canada we could well consider Mexican experiences. It was been widely suggested that Mexico has maintained political independence at low economic cost. Mexico's policy of expelling foreign equity investment from certain industries has been achieved largely by foreign borrowing, due to inadequate internal capital sources. Thus, dependence on foreign financing remains, although with greater emphasis on foreign debt financing. At the same time, the country's ability to service this debt has been undermined by inadequate export earnings, resulting partly from a declining world demand for Mexico's traditional raw materials and partly as a result of its protectionist policies which have not stimulated manufactured exports. As the balance of payments situation has deteriorated, Mexico has been forced into further foreign borrowing both equity and debt. In this sense, the Mexican strategy has backfired and the country as a result of its policies is being driven back into the arms of the foreign investor.

Mr. Speaker, the one way that Canadians can retain control of their economic affairs, unless they live in a regimented society, is by their own economic efforts. The government has been making the suggestion that we can limit foreign investment in a manner that is beneficial to us, with the assumption that all investment whether Canadian or foreign will go where the government directs for the public good. In effect, this is what the National Energy Board did in the recent refusal to allow the export of natural gas. Having first implied that gas exports would be available to foreign capital and allowing the investment to occur, the National Energy Board will not now allow the export of gas. Presumably this is for the public good. But whether this money would have been invested had it been known that gas would not be allowed to be exported is doubtful. Perhaps this is the reason one-third of the drilling rigs are now idle. If Canadians are to have economic independence and maintain the standard of living they fully expect, will publicly demand and will receive, unless we enter a police state this will require a high level of economic activity.

If we are to adopt a new economic strategy that will lead to some predetermined objective, we must face up to the much more fundamental question of what type of economic structure we want in this country, and the choice seems to be between whether we want more and more of our goods and services to be produced by the government or whether we want a great amount of our economic activity to be in the private sector. It has been variously estimated that about 47 per cent of the gross national income is being taken up by the three levels of the government. This is still growing rapidly and will likely do so for some time.

Canada in the last 25 years has been fairly successful in achieving reasonably full employment, relatively stable prices, viability in the balance of payments and a more equitable distribution of income among regions. In this, although we followed inconsistent policies we were aided in the post-war period by the great movement toward freer and more international trade which accounts for about 25 per cent of the Canadian gross national product. Second, during much of this time Canada was able to maintain its exchange rate at below that which the market dictated. This stimulated economic activity. Third, during most of the time since the last war we have been able to import large amounts of capital to finance plant and equipment expansion and we have had a very special economic relationship with the United States.

Now all four of these basic factors that have worked so much in our favour have changed. There is no guarantee that international trade will expand, and there are signs that we may be entering a period of protectionism and trade restriction. We will not be able to maintain an artificial exchange rate for the dollar and, whether or not Canada takes any action, there will be much less inflow of capital to finance domestic expansion. We are entering a period of new economic relationship with the United States. It would seem very likely that what the Prime Minister considered his great breakthrough in Washington was really only a Mutt and Jeff statement. He received sympathetic understanding from the President but a rap on the skull from the President's officials.

Mr. Connally is not likely to be one who discriminates amongst his enemies, and Canada and its contribution to the United States deficit must reasonably be considered in this category. But, with this change in the international situation, will not Canadians still want a reasonably high standard of living, with relatively full employment and fairly stable prices?

I was most interested in the speech of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) in which he discussed the auto pact and its history. He pointed out that in 1965 the option open to the auto industry was integration as we have presently, with a wide variety of models, or one or two models with the Canadian auto industry going it alone. When we consider the latter course, with the Canadian auto industry going it alone, we must ask ourselves whether Canadians would be willing to accept the choice of only one or two auto models, and we should remember that the production of even a couple of models would have to be carried out under protection. I do not know if we can do this under present government policies that are consistently phasing out the private sector and replacing it with the government sector.

In the process of passing Bill C-259 we witnessed a significant step in the direction of diminishing activity in the private sector. Today the Globe and Mail reported that there was 40 per cent less staking of mining claims in Ontario during the first nine months of 1971 as compared with 1970. In Alberta, one-third of the oil rigs are idle. There is almost certain to be diminishing activity in the private sector in the near future.

The emphasis in the new tax bill, decreasing by at least 50 per cent the value of the small business vis-à-vis tax, will not encourage the starting of new companies and their growth. The imposition of a capital gains tax, especially on long-term capital gains, is certainly not a good proposal at a time when Canada needs the best investment climate it can provide for its citizens. The taxing of international income of Canadian companies at a time when the Americans, under DISC, are reassessing their tax in this respect seems a particularly foolhardy move.

Canada is the only nation of a highly industrialized type—this was vividly pointed out in a recent survey by the Economic Council of Canada—that does not have tariff access to a market of at least 100 million people. The government keeps pointing out that Canada has the fastest growing labour force in the world and will continue in this situation for a decade. Surely, if Great Britain, with its 55 million highly industrialized population, felt it necessary to join the Common Market we must take a long, hard look at our trading relations with the United States. The present is not the time to be dampening private initiative with a restrictive competition act, with changes in the labour code that will prevent innovation and technological change, all of which must surely hamper industrial management in its attempt to meet competition.

Much has been said to the effect that we should have a highly developed manufacturing industry, but in fact only the Americans can afford to buy our high-priced manufactured products. All indications show that if we are unable to sell in the American market we will have to produce much more cheaply than we are now doing. The western grain farmer has learned this lesson to his sorrow. He is now selling grain in the markets of the world at a price below that which he got in the 1940s and with little indication of future improvement.

The best way for Canada to maintain its competitive position and its economic independence in the world is through the ability of its citizens to sustain the private sector in a healthy manner. Only this will allow the creation of the wealth that will benefit the community. The restrictive measures introduced by the government will only result in the production of less wealth for the country as a whole.

We must live on the North American continent, Mr. Speaker, and we must be a neighbour of the United States. We should be at least thankful that we are not a neighbour of the Soviet Union, something which the Poles and the Czechs have experienced to their sorrow. Just today a newspaper item reports a massive build-up of Soviet naval forces in the North Atlantic and the Mediterranean. Surely no one in Canada believes those forces are there for our protection. As a nation we may not have all the things we want, but in our neighbour we have much for which to be thankful.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the issue of foreign investment in Canada is obviously an important one for Canadians generally and for the government. Therefore, I listened carefully to the remarks of the leader of the NDP and the leader of the Official Opposition earlier today. I was very curious to see if, after calling on the government to state its policy on foreign investment and criticizing it for failing to do so, they themselves had clear cut, definite policies of their own to put forward on this vital issue. I think it is clear, after listening to their speeches, that they do not seem to have such policies as yet. Although, Mr. Speaker, I will admit that the leader of the NDP at least made a sincere effort to appear to be saying something definite on this matter. But I submit that even he, in spite of his efforts, was in reality no less vague and contradictory than the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The leader of the NDP admitted, and I think this is quite a change from what he and his party have been saying over the past few weeks, that we must maintain close and friendly relations with the United States. I think these were his exact words. But then he complained when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) held what were very useful and important discussions with the President of the United States for that very purpose. The Leader of the NDP went on—this may be a switch also—to praise Canadian entrepreneurs, lauded the ability of Canadian tycoons and said we should have more of them. But then he said that they were selfish, that they were out for a fast buck and should be replaced by public investment and public corporations. However, I noticed that one of the NDP speakers just a few moments ago was complaining that one of the public corporations he favours so much, the CBC, has just spent a lot of money buying American TV programs.

At one point the leader of the NDP called for policies to be developed and implemented with provincial co-operation, but a few moments later he complained that the federal government may want to see what provincial reaction may be to its policy proposals on foreign investment. I do not think he was able to answer completely the question of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) when that hon. member asked whether he thought a provincial government should have a real say in a decision not to permit foreign investment to be made within its borders.

Mr. Skoberg: Where were you?

Mr. Gray: I was in the House, and if I could allude to something to which we are not supposed to allude until it is in printed form, we could check the accuracy of my remarks on this point. He complained about the degree of foreign control of the economy but I think the evidence indicates that the NDP, on the few occasions it has gained political power, has been quite active in seeking foreign capital. The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) gave the example of what the Premier of Manitoba did. And if I am not mistaken, when the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was Premier of Saskatchewan its legislature passed legislation offering incentives to new ventures without any regard to whether they were Canadian or foreign.

I sympathize with the leader of the NDP because of the difficult task he has of satisfying the various wings of his party. There are the Wafflers, there is the Quebec wing with its separatist tendencies, and there is the so-called moderate wing. He attempted in his speech to balance the demands of these groups and I think we will all give him full marks for a good try, but I do not think the balancing act really succeeded.

The Leader of the Official Opposition might argue that he should be excused for his own vagueness and generalities since he is awaiting the result of voting on policy resolutions presented to his recent party convention. Perhaps once the results are available he will be able to be more definite. However, he may already have some feeling about the way the voting may turn out since in his remarks he said he does not rule out a screening process, although I recall that the press reported him a few weeks ago as being definitely against it.

The leader of the opposition has quite correctly pointed out that foreign investment has been important to us in our past, given our lack of an accumulation of savings. But it has been pointed out by others in this debate that this situation has changed considerably in recent years. Also, there has been growing concern in Canada in recent years about the growth of foreign investment here and the implications of this on Canada life. Contrary to what has been suggested by the leader of the NDP, Liberal governments, since 1963 particularly, have in fact taken a number of important steps in the area of foreign investment policy.

An hon. Member: That must be the Gray report.

Mr. Gray: The Liberal government led by Prime Minister Pearson legislated with regard to banks, federally incorporated trust, loan and life insurance companies. It was also responsible for measures dealing with newspapers, magazines, radio and television broadcasting. The present government has continued these efforts, Mr. Speaker. It has acted to ensure a Canadian presence in the uranium industry and the oil producing industry.

The investment companies act contains a provision to help maintain a Canadian presence in the sales/finance industry. The revised Canada Corporations Act now provides for greater disclosure of the activities of federally incorporated firms above a certain minimum size, including foreign subsidiaries. This is the kind of action for which the leader of the NDP was calling.

Mr. Speaker, the tax bill before us contains incentives for Canadians to invest in Canada. There are the proposals on the investment of Canadian pension funds, proposals allowing the deductibility of interest on money borrowed for the purpose of acquiring a Canadian firm. There is the proposal for special tax concessions for Canadian-controlled small businesses, and the more general tax credit incentive to Canadians to invest in Canada rather than abroad.

The competition bill introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) earlier this session contains provisions aimed at minimizing the extraterritorial impact of foreign legislation and decrees on Canadian business and trade and the Canadian competitive environment. It also includes a proposal which would ensure that international mergers should be reconciled with a reasonably competitive environment in Canada.

The Canada Development Corporation is now in operation, and in spite of critical comments from the other side of the House I am convinced that it will play an important and successful role in creating and strengthening profitable Canadian business activity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: At the same time, Mr. Speaker, over the past months efforts have been made within the government to determine what further policies on foreign investment of a more comprehensive nature may be required to take into account present and future trends.

Mr. Paproski: I will let you bring in the Gray report tonight.

Mr. Gray: I will send over another book and see if you can tear it. The Prime Minister has said that the government would be announcing its position on this matter when it publishes further background material. It is aiming to do so at an early date as it feels it is important that the statement of policy and this material should be presented at the same time to assist in developing a public understanding of its position and to assist the discussion that I am sure there will be on it across the country. While I am therefore not able to indicate this evening what the government's position will be, I think I can make some general comment about various aspects of the issues before us.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, I think it can be said that domestically the total volume of savings generated within the Canadian economy has now reached a level which is by and large adequate to finance a fairly rapid rate of economic growth. In other words, in the aggregate we appear to have adequate savings in Canada, though this does not mean that sufficient capital is always available for particular needs and application. Secondly, internationally, recent years have seen a continued rapid growth of the multinational enterprise with all the challenges it poses for smaller business concerns and for national governments. These are merely illustrations of the kinds of factors which I believe must be taken into account in the development of policy.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, a growing feeling on the part of many Canadians that this high level of foreign control of economic activity poses problems for the performance of our economy and for our ability to decide on our economic priorities and our ability to implement them, as well as problems for the development of a distinctive Canadian culture and identity. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has suggested can be the case, foreign investors can create problems for Canadian industrial priorities. Let me make two points about what some consider to be the economic problems caused by foreign investment here. Firstly, these kinds of problems are likely to be only in part attributable to foreign investment. Such investment has in many cases come in to fill gaps that have existed on the economic scene—gaps in technology, management or capital market. Therefore, there is a role for general policies in the creation of an economic climate to encourage further efficient industrial activity, high levels of production and high standards of living.

Secondly, it would be incorrect to ignore the benefits that Canada has derived from foreign investment over the years in terms of economic growth, development of some of the outlying regions, access to relatively cheaper technology, access to foreign markets, and so on. These considerations suggest some of the elements that could form part of a foreign investment policy which would not involve Canadians paying an economic price in terms of their standard of living. In the first instance, I submit there is a place for measures to support and encourage Canadian entrepreneurship and Canadian abilities to undertake more of our own industrial development. I refer here to further measures to support innovation, technological development and greater efficiency in capital markets.

There is also a role for policies aimed at improving the general economic environment to help in the further development of sound industrial structure, with strong internationally competitive firms whether they are Canadian or foreign controlled. I think there is also a place for other measures pertaining to foreign investment. These measures must be flexibile, recognizing Canada's continuing need for foreign investment in some areas and the fact that both costs and benefits are involved and associated with it.

I should also like to point out to hon. members that a Canadian policy which seeks to ensure that foreign investment plays its part in the achievement of Canadian objectives would not isolate Canada in the international community. After all, other successful western industrialized countries have had comprehensive policies in this field for many years.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, the government has been working to develop a more comprehensive policy on the role of foreign investment in the Canadian economy. I look forward to this policy being announced shortly. I am confident that it will be consistent with the desire of Canadians to have at one and the same time continued economic growth and the ability to make fundamental decisions with regard to their destiny as a nation.

Mr. Skoberg: May I ask a question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Skoberg: Yes, Your Honour, if the minister would permit a question.

Mr. Gray: Yes, I will.

Mr. Skoberg: I wonder if the minister would read me what he said. I had a hard time getting it down in shorthand.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I referred to my notes to no greater extent than did the hon. member for York South. I gather that our glasses have the same strength, because I held my notes in about the same position as he did.

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Lewis: That is the only valid statement the minister has made this evening.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, even though we may differ sometimes with our good friends of the New Democratic Party because of our divergent views, I must say that I give my unqualified support to the motion submitted by the opposition as introduced by the hon. member of York South (Mr. Lewis).

It is obvious, in fact, that the present government is playing a double game. On the one hand, it hints to the Canadian people that it would welcome an independent economy mostly controlled by Canadians. On the other hand, it asks, begs or even insists that Americans invest in Canada.

I would like to attempt to show that these contradictory practices stem from the false principles on which our present economic system is based. Yes, in trying to render the financial system unshakable and immutable, we show contradiction and ridicule.

The motion before us is therefore very appropriate. We must come up with policies and programs designed to restrain increasing foreign control over the Canadian economy by foreigners, for it is urgent.

We are really and truly at the mercy of foreign control and to a large degree, at the mercy of the American giant.

On September 29 last, the hon. Minister of Industry and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) was explaining, during the symposium of contemporary Canada in Houston, Texas, Canada's economical dimension in the North American context. He said and I quote:

> Every American bought for $50 of Canadian products in 1970 while during the same year every Canadian spent $500 on American products; this gives a per capita ratio of 10 to 1. If the Canadian economy is not prosperous, we are not able to buy all those products from your country.

Of course if we are not prosperous, we cannot buy for $500 of American products per head. But why do we have to buy? Why buy when those products are available in our country? Why buy when we can manufacture those products ourselves? In short, why base our own prosperity on that of the United States?

The whole speech of the minister, during that symposium, reflected the sickly timidity of the complex-riddled person, of the sheep that would all of a sudden like to be a lion. And I quote excerpts from the conclusion drawn by the minister on that occasion:

> It seems the United States are moving in the direction of a policy of self-sufficiency and this country considers it would be more advantageous for it to import our raw materials and energy resources but at the same time to inhibit the development of our secondary industries we would be forced to reconsider very seriously the whole of our relations with the United States. In that case, we would have to reassess entirely our industrial and trade policies. It would no doubt be a "reassessment that would break our hearts"! However, I can assure you that we could not in any way drop the high priority that we have given and that we will continue to give to the manufacturing and processing sectors of our economy which are essential to an increase in employment in Canada.

It can be seen here how difficult it is to escape the erroneous basic principles of our economic system. We are wearing blinders which prevent us from looking at other solutions that are so very simple.

When will we stop thinking of terms of foreign interests. When will we decide to change what needs to be changed, the economic system? We are so locked up in this foolish system that we forget elementary notions of mathematics and logics.

Mr. Speaker, it is true, as the motion indicates, that we lack policies and programs to give back to Canadians the control over their natural resources and their goods and service industries in order to ensure the independence of our country. Why? Because none of those who have been called upon to govern this country, the right hon. Prime Minister included, have had the courage and the strength to introduce the required changes. The recent Nixon-Trudeau meeting as points out Claude Lemelin in Le Devoir of this morning can open the door to a solution which we are all wishing for. I quote an excerpt from Claude Lemelin's column in Le Devoir of this morning:

> One century of common life under the shade of the United States and their "manifest destiny", almost half a century of economic dependence on that ever growing power, the precariousness of their national identity, the frailty of their political unity have overburdened the Canadian people—whatever their language or their locality—with a serious inferiority complex coupled with deep intellectual alienation. How could they conquer that resulting collective feeling of helplessness which, for instance, threw the provincial premiers into a panic weeks ago when the Gray report leak dropped a hint of possible federal control over foreign investments?
> No doubt, not very dignified was the decision made by the Prime Minister of Canada, in order to ever so slightly lighten that psychological mortgage, to go ask the American People: "Are you going to swallow us? Are you going to retaliate if we withdraw from your jaws?" However, taking into account once more the Canadian context, such canvassing could well have a liberating and disalienating effect on Canadian public opinion.

Mr. Speaker, this journalist is convinced the situation can be corrected. But I would emphasize that if we truly want to bring about changes we must first reinforce the weak foundation. If we want employment for Canadian labour, if we want to let Canadians themselves create their national identity and social values, we must endeavour to find the true answers to the following questions: Do we have the required natural resources? Do we have enough products? Can we produce or manufacture ourselves what we need? Do we have the required manpower?

Mr. Speaker, answering these questions is finding the solution.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Let Canadian industry have the exclusive opportunity, up to a certain point, of manufacturing all the products required by 23 million Canadians, let the farmers feed those same 23 million Canadians, in other words let us make here without foreign participation everything physically feasible by making it financially possible and this will be the beginning of a genuine solution to those problems we are all concerned about.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) rose in this all-day debate and spoke for 15 minutes.

An hon. Member: You mean he read for 15 minutes.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) may suggest that he delivered an excellent speech, but I wish I had heard something excellent in it. I listened very carefully, as we all have listened on this side of the House and as the people throughout the country have been listening, to hear this government come forward with some sort of policy. We expected to hear about it from the only minister of the Crown who has participated in this major debate. The government has brought forward absolutely nothing.

What did the Minister of National Revenue say? He chided the opposition. He chided the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for not coming forward with a constructive policy. He gave grudging credit to the leader of the NDP, but he said we are all waiting for something to come out of the resolutions put forward at our annual meeting, which gives you some idea of this government's thinking. That simply emphasizes what we have been saying all along—the people over there do not know what government is all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: They are responsible for formulating policies. Did we hear about any tonight? We heard nothing at all. We heard the Minister of National Revenue say that the government had taken a number of steps in order to curtail foreign investment in this country. Immediately there came to mind the Reader's Digest situation mentioned by some hon. members to my left.

The minister also said that he cannot indicate what the government's position will be. That is what this motion is all about. It is criticizing the government for failure to come forth with some kind of industrial strategy for this country. He talked about economic growth. He told us that everything is rosy and everything is fine. He said this in the face of unemployment figures that are staggering, and in face of an announcement today that the cost of living index has risen by 4 per cent. He asked us to believe that everything is rosy. He gives these piddling examples as illustrations of how everything is going so well.

The minister talked about protection of our culture and our Canadian identity. One can almost use a southern accent and say, "With this government, we over on this side have nothing to fear about our culture and identity and we do not intend to be assimilated by those rascals down south." That is the size of it. There is a paranoid, almost pathological preoccupation with something they are trying to make political hay out of over there. They are trying to erect a great big bogeyman, as are the New Democratic Party members to my left. This great bogeyman of the United States is about to come here, clutch us to his bosom, suffocate all our Canadian identity and culture and squeeze us dry.

The minister also talked about Canadian entrepreneurship. I will tell him, as well as my friends to the left, what will bring about Canadian entrepreneurship. It is not more controls, suffocating tax measures, competition acts, investment incentive acts and new labour codes which insert government management into private management control; it is incentives that will bring about entrepreneurship.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: A free enterprise society will die without incentives. I still do not know why the members to my left are there. They should be on the other side. They are one of a kind. It is incentives that will bring this about, not more controls, more government bureaucrats, boards, commissions and the civil service beating the back of individual enterprise in this country and restricting freedom at every turn.

The leader of the New Democratic Party and other members of that party said that we are trying to straddle both sides of the fence in respect of this policy. I have not seen a finer example than that demonstrated today. When they speak they say, "Oh, friendship is very necessary. We must keep the United States as our friends. But if they do not behave themselves we are going to bring down the guillotine and shut off this flow of private investment." Their answer is not incentives, free enterprise and individual freedom; it is state control and absolute socialism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: They want American money. They say their money is welcome, but only if it is going to be controlled by the government. Members opposite are not very far off that same philosophy, having regard to the kind of inventory of legislation we have seen since this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. We have seen the Gray report and its suffocating recommendations, if indeed what we read—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member opposite applauds. That only confirms my belief he should be on my left or those on the left should be over with him. The new tax bill completely inhibits mining productivity in this country, now our second largest industry. We see foreign ownership clauses springing into every bit of legislation coming from this government. We see such invidious pieces of legislation as the investment incentives act which is nothing more nor less than the complete socialism of investment in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: We see the Canada Development Corporation being set up, ostensibly to promote more Canadian ownership but in reality a vehicle to permit this government to nationalize everything in this country. We see the competition act and the labour code, which I have already mentioned. These are just a few of the things this government is doing. If the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) is a responsible minister and was levelling with the House when he was speaking about what the government had done to encourage foreign ownership, he would have dealt with this question. He cannot justify what he has said unless it is on the basis of supporting the motion that the NDP have advanced and which caused this debate. There have been all kinds of criticisms but nothing constructive.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

The leader of the New Democratic Party said that he is all for a screening agency. He would like to see the one recommended in the Gray report that was leaked, but he would like it to go a lot further. In fact, what he would like to see in the Gray report is absolute control in a bureaucratic monstrosity set up by the government for the purpose of saying when, where, how, how much and in what manner any capital that comes into this country can be invested.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I again hear "Hear, hear" from the other side. Naturally, it is their legislation. It is the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) who is saying that. I can see his whole department being taken over by the Canada Development Corporation, so he should not be saying "Hear, hear" too quickly. He may be out of a job.

The leader of the New Democratic Party also wants to see a revamped Canada Development Corporation. He wants to see it with power to buy into the multinational corporations. We hear so much about these multinational corporations that Canadians generally must now be having nightmares every time multinational corporations are spoken about. They see a great octopus crunching down on us with the tentacles of the great multinational corporation squeezing the very lifeblood out of Canada. What is all the talk about? Multinational corporations have assisted Canada to get where it is today. If it were not for the multinational corporations that come forward with all the risk capital being poured into this country, particularly in the north, there would not be any development in the north.

I know their views, Mr. Speaker. Their leader has stated them on previous occasions in this House. He is now entering the chamber. I hope he will contradict me if I misquote him. He would like to see the resources of the north put into deep freeze until we need them. Those are his words. That is what he wants. That is not my idea of national development or regional development. It is not my idea of the various parts of Canada making a contribution to the over-all fabric of this country.

Mr. Lewis: How many natives are employed in your development in the north?

Mr. Nielsen: Only a few. The leader of the NDP should not direct this inferential criticism at me. It is the people over there who are responsible for conditions under which these people are able to work. It is their failure.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: You are developing the north for the south.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not look upon national development in such a narrow way. I come from a part of the country where there are relatively few people. In fact, my colleague from the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) and I together represent over 40 per cent of Canada. That 40 per cent has a contribution to make, and it will not be able to make it if we put the resources of that part of the country into deep freeze. No development either of the North or elsewhere is possible without foreign investment capital.

Mr. Lewis: Boloney!

Mr. Nielsen: The leader of the NDP says "Boloney". I can assure him that if he enunciates that policy in the North his party might as well not run a candidate there because they would not have a snowball's chance in Hades of success. The hon. member and I share common ground in one respect. He says more government initiative is needed in research and development. But there is one thing he did not put on the record. It is that private enterprise puts eight times as much capital into research and development as does the government. So the government is sadly lacking in that area.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member had done his homework he would need no explanation. The mover of the motion says the Canada Development Corporation has a duty to expand and develop the public sector of the economy. This is nothing more or less than saying that what we really want to use the CDC for is to nationalize all development in Canada.

Mr. Skoberg: Why don't you read the speech?

Mr. Nielsen: Today's Hansard is not out yet. I will tomorrow. The second member of the NDP who spoke says we need a mixed economy at the present time. He added that qualification. What he was really saying was this: private enterprise is all right for the time being, but if by any remote quirk of circumstances we should find ourselves in power, then it will be quickly eliminated until we reach the Simon Pure, socialistic state. Talk about hypocrisy! Talk about straddling both sides of the fence!

They cannot have it both ways. They cannot say they are in favour of private enterprise and at the same time tell us they want to nationalize it. They go on the hustings and tell all the farmers and all the monkey-wrenchers and all the so-called little men, "We are all for you. We shall redistribute the wealth of the country. You will become rich." But all they are looking for is power. All they are looking for, as a matter of fact, is to get re-elected, if the truth were known. I have let my leader lay down the policy of our party and I think he made a most comprehensive and appropriate statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Consider the ten points the leader of the NDP trotted forth in his motion. He says there ought to be a government export trading agency. In other words, more control. It is like the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) when he introduced the minerals legislation for the Northwest Territories; he wanted to be able to determine when, whether and, if so, what volume of minerals could be exported. More state control, more state intervention.

Members to my left say they want standards of resource planning and development. Standards set by whom? By the government. More bureaucrats, more control. If they had their way everybody would be getting a government cheque, everybody would be employed by the government and told when to work and how much to work, when to go to bed, when to breathe and when to sleep. But that is not my idea of enterprise in this country. It is time we got back to good old, solid Canadianism, Canadian free enterprise, Canadian initiative and Canadian incentive. We shall not get it if we listen to the half-baked philosophy which comes from my left, and we shall not get it from a government whose feet are directed solidly upon the road to socialism. We shall only get it if we increase opportunities for initiative in this country.

The mover of the motion wants to see an increase in public investment in the resource industries. What else is that except nationalization? I want someone over there to tell me if I am wrong. More public investment in the resource industries means only one thing—control of those industries by the state. The hon. member criticizes the tax concessions which have made the mining industry the second largest in the country. What is wrong with concessions which stimulate incentive and increase investment in the country? The hon. member favours planned shutdowns and the control of management decisions. He talks about myths. He says it is a myth that Canada needs foreign investment. He says businessmen do not believe they have the entrepreneurial skills which made this country what it is. I have not heard them say they lack these skills. Of course they have these skills, but they will lose them rapidly if the government pursues the road it is presently following and continues the kind of stifling and suffocating legislation which is halting the growth of the country.

He says there must be co-operation with the provinces. You bet your tiddly there must be co-operation with the provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Steven Otto (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, there are about three minutes left before the division bells are due to ring and I want to see whether in that time I can get the House to face the real problem.

I have heard it said that this whole problem is connected with America, that it is an American problem. I have heard it said that the Americans are lovely people. It doesn't really affect the issue much. The fact is that our ills arise from corporate control. This mechanism, which was devised to allow people to build an enterprise, has grown so big and powerful as to become almost a Frankenstein. The government and this nation has a purpose in mind, which is of course the interests of the people of Canada. Similarly, the United States has its purpose in mind. But the only purpose a corporation can have in mind is to make money. Profit must be, and always has been, the main and only purpose of corporate structures.

What our real problem is is not anti-Americanism or Canadian control of our own economy. The United States is having the same trouble with its corporate structures as we are. United States multinational corporations have invested in Europe and elsewhere, taken advantage of production facilities in Taiwan and other countries, and have brought goods back to the United States. This cannot be the fault of the people of the United States or the government of the United States. If hon. gentlemen opposite regard IBM, Minneapolis Honeywell, and other large corporations as an adjunct of the United States government, surely they must say that Seagrams is an adjunct of our government, and I do not think they can say that.

So we must face what is the real issue here. To bypass the issue by saying that it does not exist, as did the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), is not the way to tackle the problem. The problem is vast, and it is vast because it has created in Canada the situation where the growth, its distribution and direction, of our life style is no longer within the control of our elected representatives but is really under the control of corporate structures that have served their purpose. Let us not deny that there was a reason for this. There is always a good reason for a corporate structure. But to say that free enterprise must go on in perpetuity is no answer to the problem.

I see my time is just about finished, so I am unable to deal with the other aspects I wanted to mention. But let me say this. If I have gotten across to the members of this House that we should not be anti-American, then I have done a lot. It is easy for a politician to be anti-something. I agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that it is easy to say that Americans are our enemies, but this will not do the nation any good.

Mr. Lewis: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Otto: In all his comments—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section (10) of Standing Order 58, to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply before the House, including any bill or bills based thereon.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the same situation applies as applied last evening when I missed 29 votes. I would have voted this evening with my party but I was paired with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order arises from the same situation as the one on which I based my point of order last week, Sir, when you admonished members on the government side for moving about during a vote. I draw attention to the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) left his seat during the vote.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, first of all I want to protest against the lack of decorum in the House tonight.

Some hon. Members: Stupid!

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would point out to the hon. member that the committee has just begun sitting. If there was disorder in the House, that should not be discussed in committee.

Mr. Fortin: I wonder if the committee can do its work as "he who leads the House" has just torn to shreds his copy of the bill. Is it still in order to study it if it is not good anymore?

An hon. Member: Sit down, stupid!

An hon. Member: Stupid!

An hon. Member: He does not even have a sense of humour.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GIBSON—REFERENCE IN DEBATE TO LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION'S NAME

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On page 10332 of yesterday's Hansard in the second column, on the right-hand side, there is this statement by an hon. member: "That is not a good name." I respectfully disassociate myself from that statement. If I had heard it I would have rebutted it immediately. The name of the Leader of the Opposition is a good name.

MR. BALDWIN—AVAILABILITY OF REPRINTED INCOME TAX BILL

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that, with the arrival on our desks of the newly reprinted Bill C-259, I want to pay our respects to the staff for the job they did in having it reprinted. I only wish it were in a better cause, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I trust that when the hon. member mentioned staff he was including the employees of the printing bureau.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, naturally.

AIRPORTS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF MUNICIPAL AIRPORTS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that my ministry proposes on a permanent basis to double its annual program in the field of providing assistance for the construction and operation of municipal airports, beginning in the next fiscal year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: The present $1 million annual allocation will be increased to $2 million and this increase will allow us to provide assistance to eligible applicants who, because of lack of funds, would not have been able to expect federal assistance for some time. Indeed, because the present demand is so great it is the intent of the government to ask Parliament to appropriate an additional $1 million for the next fiscal year which will, in effect, triple the program for that year only to $3 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Under the new policy, airports will be grouped into two main categories—national and community. This will more properly reflect the responsibility for their operation and development.

The level of assistance provided to the airports within these groupings will be determined basically by an airport traffic demand index which will measure the relative importance of airports on the basis of passenger flow, cargo and mail handled, rather than by the previous system of simply using the number of aircraft movements at an airport.

Airports in the national category will be classified as primary, secondary, Arctic or satellite airports. Community airports will be classified as feeder, local industrial, intermediate local, small local or remote according to their traffic index.

The present increase from $1 million to $2 million, and hopefully and additional increase of $1 million in funds for 1972-73 for this program, will make it possible to aid a greater number of airports deserving assistance than was previously feasible. In the long run, it will be a benefit to both municipalities and the aviation industry. It is also felt that the implementation of this new policy of assistance will encourage municipalities to continue the operation of national secondary airports. It will also encourage greater participation of others in the financing of airports and this will be in keeping with the ministry's objective that the cost of such facilities should be borne, to the greatest extent practicable, by the users and other direct beneficiaries of these facilities.

I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that based on the assumption that all the members of the House are interested in transportation matters, particularly in their own constituencies, I have instructed my officials to ensure that all Members of Parliament are to be provided immediately with a fact sheet which explains, in some detail, the various aspects of this new program.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his courtesy in providing us with a copy of his statement and the fact sheet we are to receive. Three thoughts immediately come to mind as a result of this statement.

First, there should be a review in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications of the role Air Canada is playing with regard to the development of airport policy. I say this because we have heard that several abandonments are proposed by Air Canada, and one wonders whether Air Canada is playing the abandonment game learned from big brother, the Canadian National Railways. We also have to tie in the role of Canadian Pacific, the regional carriers and the local carriers as a result of this stepped-up policy dealing with municipal airports.

The second thought is that this action in some measure should satisfy the desire of small communities to be part of the aviation age, especially those, if you will pardon the expression, being jettisoned by the railroads. The meeting in Wingham this past summer should prove to the minister the point I make there.

The final thought that comes to mind as a result of this morning's statement is that there should be more research and development into short-flight aircraft, STOL aircraft and air buses, not only in relation to what the minister has outlined this morning but in relation to the development of more municipal airports as such and putting the smaller communities of Canada on the air map.

There is also an unexpected side benefit which should flow from this policy. I have often spoken about the problems that are arising in Canada with the development of the megalopolis between Montreal and Milwaukee, an area of the continent that will soon—within decades—have a greater population density than the area between Boston and Washington. I say "soon" because that is a word the government will recognize. There is a need for small airports and aircraft that are able to land in a very short space within that region.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, we in our party also wish to thank the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) for supplying us with the statement he has made this morning. He is to be congratulated on this announcement.

At the same time, all members recognize the financial problems of municipal governments in providing mass transportation movement in so far as air traffic and other forms of transportation are concerned. The hon. member who just spoke indicated some of the concerns in the Boston area. I had the opportunity of being with him less than two weeks ago when we personally contacted and had interviews with some of the transportation people in the United States in an exchange of views arranged through the Speaker's office. The type of problems they have can be considered analogous to the problems here.

There is no question that the new policy announced today will and should be of benefit to many of the smaller communities. One question we must ask is whether seaplane bases are included. Seaplane bases are an important part of our transportation system. We must also ask whether the communities will be consulted. Because of a lack of funds the definition of eligible applicants must be clarified. We will need clarification of the classification of the various problems with regard to some Public Service employees.

We also have to find out whether this action is part of an over-all mass transportation plan which takes into consideration all the modes of transportation that we have today. Many small communities are in the position of not being able to attract industry because, fortunately or unfortunately, industry does gravitate to those areas where good transportation is available. This is the situation in Canada and in North America today. Many industries gravitate to areas where there is good transportation while other areas which are really in need of industry cannot obtain it.

I notice that on the second page of his statement the minister talks about an increase from $1 million to $2 million and, hopefully, an additional increase of $1 million in funds for 1972-73 to support this program. We must ask again whether there is some significance attached to the year, 1972-73.

We welcome the announcement made today. We are glad that local municipalities are now to have an opportunity to participate in bringing about some of the development of which they have been sorely in need. The need for financial assistance to small communities is one of which we are all aware. I trust we shall not spend our entire time talking in terms of air transportation but that we shall direct our attention also to securing an entirely integrated transport system for the benefit of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) for the very appropriate statement he made today, and congratulate him for having doubled grants in order to hasten the implementation of the financial assistance program concerning the construction and operation of national and community airports.

I add further that municipalities will be the first to benefit by the measure. Needless to say that the assistance was absolutely necessary. I congratulate at the minister for having realized that and taken action.

In my area of Lotbinière, it happened this week that municipalities such as Plessisville, Princeville, Victoriaville, Arthabaska, Warwick and Daveluyville got together, precisely to put under way the program the minister announced today, with the co-operation and support of the Department of Transport.

I want to congratulate the minister for putting at the disposal of the municipalities the funds necessary to stimulate regional development and thus obtain the infrastructure essential for their industrialization and development.

In concluding my remarks, I want to thank the Minister of Transport for his kindness and fast action when he is asked information on projects undertaken in various constituencies. He is one of the best in providing us with answers quickly and he does it as objectively and honestly as possible. He is to be congratulated for that.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF UNITED STATES AND OTHER COUNTRIES ON LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I do so having regard to the optimism he expressed about world currency adjustments being worked out in December or January and recognizing, of course, the right of any country to set the value of its own currency asserted by the Minister of Finance. Has Canada received any assurance from the United States that the United States will not insist upon a further upward valuation of the Canadian dollar in relation to the United States dollar as part of the general adjustment which the United States is seeking in the valuation of other currencies in relation to the United States dollar?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I cannot speak in any detail with respect to the meetings the Minister of Finance had with Secretary Connally, but as to the over-all position taken by the United States government I should not like to say they have committed themselves not to expect, or hope for, or ask for, an upward valuation of the Canadian dollar. As is normal with these meetings, I feel quite free to say publicly what the Canadian position was. As the Minister of Finance has repeatedly said, our position is that we do not want to have the Canadian dollar valued upwards in exchange for anything. As far as the United States position is concerned, I should not like to speak with any authority and say what they are committed to.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I asked the question in view of the optimism expressed by the Prime Minister. Along the same line may I ask him whether Canada has received any assurances from countries other than the United States that are associated, for example, with the International Monetary Fund that they accept the view that has been put forward by the Minister of Finance that a further upward valuation of the Canadian dollar ought not to be required as part of any general realignment, in view of the fact that an upward movement of the Canadian dollar has already taken place during the past year? Have other countries that will be involved in this general settlement accepted the Canadian position?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid my answer to this question about other countries must be along the same lines as my answer about the United States position. The position summed up by the Leader of the Opposition is the position we have taken. Our upward revaluation began much earlier, in June, 1970, long before the Nixon measures, and therefore our position is that the other countries should not press Canada to take its dollar to any specific higher value.

Here again, as in the case of the United States, I cannot in any way commit other governments to an acceptance of the Canadian position. We have pressed it and we hope that they have understood our arguments with sympathy. We feel that some have responded or reacted more sympathetically than others, but I cannot say with any firmness that any other country will do such and so, any more than we would want any other country to say publicly what Canada should do when all this is over.

RELATIONSHIP OF POSSIBLE CANADIAN DOLLAR REVALUATION TO DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON AUTO PACT AND OTHER IRRITANTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am simply trying to find what ground the Prime Minister might have had for his optimism. May I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether the government or the minister himself has received from or made any proposal to his United States counterpart to the effect that the auto pact and/or other subjects of United States irritation would be modified in return for an agreement or understanding between the two countries as to an acceptable rate of exchange between the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar? For example, has an agreement been suggested that the Canadian dollar be permitted to remain at 2 per cent below the United States dollar, as suggested yesterday by an adviser to the United States President?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what Mr. Rinfret's relationship is to the United States government. In one paper I'm told he is referred to as an adviser to the Canadian government. He has no such status. He was present at the dinner the other night in Washington; that is the extent of my knowlege of the gentleman. He is a very imaginative economist. The answer to the question is that there is no relationship whatsoever between our discussions on the auto pact and currency realignment with the United States dollar or any other currency.

POST OFFICE

DISCUSSION BY MINISTER OF VANDERBERG REPORT WITH LETTER CARRIERS—ADJUDICATOR'S DECISION ON CASUALS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General and arises out of the press conference held yesterday announcing the study by Professor Vanderberg. May I ask the minister whether he was invited by the letter carriers to discuss the report with them prior to the press conference yesterday? If so, did he accept? If not, will the minister now assure the House that he will meet with the union to discuss this report?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): The Union of Postal Workers has not invited me to discuss the brief. The first I heard about it was when it was handed in at my office yesterday morning prior to the press conference.

[English]

Mr. Rose: In view of the allegation contained in the report that the Post Office violated certain parts of the collective agreement, will the minister make a statement on motions clearly outlining government policy regarding the attitude of postal management to the relevant clauses of the agreement, which was attacked by Professor Vanderberg, and as well outline in his statement the attitude of postal management to the decision of the adjudicator, Mr. Arthurs, regarding casuals?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, concerning Mr. Arthurs' decision, I believe that he had a meeting yesterday with the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, concerning the report, I do not want to challenge the integrity of the professor. He himself said he was a layman in that field and I believe he could have produced a much more objective report if he had met my officials before preparing it.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Postmaster General's recent statement of commitment to the consultative process and the continuing decline in the morale of the postal employees, will he meet with the union officials to consider the brief during this period of pre-Christmas euphoria in a sincere effort to improve mutual understanding prior to the negotiations for a new agreement which get under way next year?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, we are always prepared to meet with union representatives to discuss any subject. I can say that, in the last 12 months, we have had discussions with representatives of the Union of Postal Workers more than 40 times and on more than 50 subjects, not including the meetings that were held at the level of deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and of the minister himself.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the Postmaster General's remarks that he will meet to discuss this specific brief, which is an attempt to build a bridge over troubled waters?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, should I be asked for a meeting to discuss this report, it would be advisable that I myself have made a thorough study of it beforehand. I will certainly let the Union know what we think of this report and of the errors to be found in it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that there are a number of hon. members who wish to ask supplementaries on this subject. We will return to it later; for the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Richmond.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED FURTHER PURCHASE OF TURKEYS BY GOVERNMENT TO ELIMINATE SURPLUS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that the last time the government bought turkeys to alleviate hunger in various countries their purchase did much to eliminate surpluses of that product in Canada, can the minister tell us whether the government intend to make further purchases in order to assist the producers' association which again this year is experiencing surpluses?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there has been a significant improvement in the returns to producers from the sale of turkeys since we introduced this program. We do not have any current plans for an addition to that program.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Agriculture advise us with respect to the parts of Canada from which these turkeys were purchased?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give all the details respecting that. I do not have them with me now but I would be very happy to supply them.

Mr. Speaker: Before going to the next question the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South who has indicated he has a supplementary to the previous question.

POST OFFICE

CONSULTATION WITH UNIONS ON TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE IN ACCORDANCE WITH LABOUR STANDARDS BILL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. In view of the problems that have existed in the Post Office for some years in respect of labour relations, and in view of what I am sure is the very earnest attempt he is making to improve the morale of employees, will he give consideration to making the introduction of technological change in the Post Office at least subject to the requirements suggested in the bill to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code so that there may be discussions with the unions concerned before automation is introduced by management?

• (11:30 a.m.)

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we must say in the first place that in a department such as mine with over 50,000 employees, there will always be some problems. We have to try in the public interest to settle them as soon as possible, but there will always be some.

As for automation and mechanization at the Post Office Department, clause 31.05 of the last collective agreement provided that 90 days after the signature of the agreement, a committee made up of labour representatives and officials of the department would be organized. We have asked the labour representatives to come and meet us in order to establish that committee as soon as possible, but we have never obtained any answer in that connection.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize one last supplementary by the hon. member for York South. Then we will have to go to the next question. I will recognize immediately thereafter the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, following up on the question and answer, may I ask the Postmaster General whether, in view of all the problems involved in such a large labour force, he would reconsider the notion that every post office has to be automated, for example, in a province like Newfoundland where the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is trying to create jobs and where the post office automation reduces the number of jobs very considerably?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. minister rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I must point out that this is one of the erroneous assertions which are contained in the report made by the director involved. Automating all post offices is certainly out of question.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe we are getting into the realm of debate at this point. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

POLLUTION

PREVENTION OF DUMPING OF HUMAN WASTE INTO WELLAND CANAL BY FOREIGN SHIPS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of a report released yesterday by the Niagara regional health unit concerning the dumping of human waste into the Welland Canal by foreign ships, does the government propose to take any action to prevent such discharges?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Very definitely, yes. I thank the hon. member for giving me notice because I can tell him I spoke to our officials on this matter and no recent incidents have been reported to them. If such incidents can be verified there exist strict laws against this type of pollution. If anyone has evidence of such incidents I would be grateful if they would pass it along to me. I am told there may be one on the way.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding there are at present no regulations of the department which prevent the dumping of human sewage into Canadian waters. Does the minister intend to proceed with the passing of regulations under the Canada Shipping Act in order to eliminate such discharges?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member would agree, when he speaks about Canadian waters, that this excludes the canal. We do have very strict regulations, with regard to the canal sections of the waterways. However, there are no regulations for the Great Lakes themselves. We are examining this in the hope that we can put regulations into effect.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. On November 29 the minister told me in the House that the government was advising nationals in both East and West Pakistan to be prepared to move. Can he indicate when the Canadian government first took practical steps to remove nationals from East and West Pakistan and can he further indicate how many Canadians are known to be in Dacca and Islamabad and what the plans and prospects are for their safe evacuation?

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the movement to send planes into Islamabad and Karachi airports was taken two or three days ago. Preparations were made. Canadian nationals were told orally approximately two weeks ago that it might be wise for them to prepare to leave. There are figures available concerning the number removed last night from Karachi which I could give to the hon. gentleman. There were 241 passengers including 65 Canadians, 59 Germans, 31 Americans, 18 Netherlanders and 15 British.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, on this very important matter I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he can advise what steps are being taken in respect of Canadian nationals in Dacca where the situation is very serious, and how many Canadians are still in the Karachi, West Pakistan area and when will they be evacuated?

Mr. St. Pierre: In respect of Dacca, as the hon. gentleman knows, there have been two attempts to send a Canadian Hercules aircraft there under United Nations auspices. Both attempts have been turned back, the second time by gunfire which exploded near the Canadian aircraft over the Bay of Bengal. It is hoped that arrangements will be made for this plane to land safely and remove a few Canadians. There are approximately 40 in East Pakistan. Many are missionaries. The latest information we have is that many do not wish to be removed but some Canadians do wish to be removed from Dacca. It is also hoped that the Canadian Air Force 707 will be able to proceed safely to Islamabad to remove Canadians there. I do not have the number of Canadians in Islamabad, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE CONCESSIONS REGARDING CANADIAN SAFEGUARDS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister indicated in answer to a previous question by my leader that there was no relationship in dealing with the auto pact and the Canadian currency problem. Since it is known that there were negotiations on the auto pact while the governmental representatives were in Washington, will the minister now indicate if concessions were not indeed made with regard to the Canadian safeguards, or will we have to wait for a government announcement after the conclusion of the meetings of the ten Ministers of Finance?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think in all honesty I can say that, no conclusions having been reached, no concessions have been made. I said very frankly the other day that the automobile agreement was part of the discussions with the United States. I said we were trying to find a balanced package of irritants and that this negotiation was still going on, but it is not related to the removal of the surcharge, nor is it related to the evaluation of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Danforth: Since the minister has continually maintained to the House that there have been continuing discussions between United States officials and Canadian officials on this very important matter, can the minister indicate when in his opinion a conclusion will be reached concerning this specific problem that is of interest to so many workers in this country?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I could not say because this conversation is going on now. When the conclusion is reached I shall announce it in the proper way and I will defend it also.

DISCUSSION OF OTHER IRRITANTS IN NEGOTIATIONS ON CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister has spoken on a number of occasions about a balanced package of irritants. Would it be more correct to say now that there are two separate packages of irritants, one being currency levels and that sort of thing. If there are two packages of irritants, what irritants are included in the same package as the auto pact and are being discussed within the limits of that pact?

[Mr. St. Pierre.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if one wanted to be terribly clever one could suggest there are indeed three areas. There is the package of international negotiations, in which the Minister of Finance is deeply involved, having to do with currency and trade matters in general. There is a more restricted discussion on irritants between Canada and the United States on so-called irritants. I indicated the other day quite simply what some of the irritants were. The main United States and the main Canadian irritants are well known. Third, there is the discussion of the automobile agreement which is outside the second package I have indicated. All these things will be brought together sooner or later and will be announced in the proper manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind hon. members that we seem to be engaging in a debate on some of these questions. The questions and the answers are long and if we continue in this way we will spend most of the question period in mini-debates. I suggest that perhaps we should try to limit the length of the questions and answers.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not want a lecture in philosophy or anything of that sort from the minister. I just want to know from him whether the auto pact is completely distinct from these other irritants of which the minister has spoken. Is there no other irritant that is being discussed in the context of or in association with the auto pact?

Mr. Pepin: I think it is the hon. member who is being the philosopher this morning. To me the number of packages is not too important. It is well known that the main U.S. irritants are the automobile agreement, the defence-sharing agreement and the tourist allowances. This is well known; it is all over the press it is no secret. It is known also that we, Canadians also have a number of irritants. They have to do with—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the minister. It seems to me that day after day we have the same questions and the same answers which take up so much of the question period.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO OFFICIALS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): My supplementary question will be short and it follows the course of the questioning of the Leader of the Opposition. Because of the interest of the province of Ontario, can the minister advise whether officials and representatives of that province will be taken into the minister's confidence continually, particularly before any definite decision is reached, in order that the minister may have the wisdom of the province of Ontario on this very important matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, we have the wisdom of the government of Ontario through the premier of Ontario who sent a telegram which, incidentally, was misquoted by the hon. member on one occasion in the House, and I have also had a phone call with Mr. Grossman, the Minister of Industry. One of his officials also met one of my officials to discuss this subject in depth a few days ago. So the contact is very intimate on this matter between the government of Ontario and the federal government of Canada.

METRO CENTRE DEVELOPMENT, TORONTO—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO WORK WITH PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES—STUDY OF TRANSPORTATION NEEDS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the importance of the billion-dollar Metro Centre development project initiated by the railways and in light of the federal government's concern with certain aspects of the problem such as transportation, housing and pollution, has the government set up a federal intergovernmental committee to work with the local authorities and with the provincial government in respect of the problems arising out of this development?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am not sure that I could call it a formal working party, either intergovernmental or interdepartmental, but I can assure the hon. member that in so far as the transportation aspects of the project are concerned we have been consulting constantly with parties to the project. In addition, we are prepared to discuss our role with any group that may wish to do so.

Mr. Brewin: Has the minister or his department undertaken, either themselves or through a consultant, a study of the transportation needs of the Toronto centre region, and when is it expected that the study will be completed?

Mr. Jamieson: I would guess—and this is just a guess—that there are at least six such studies under federal auspices under way at present, each one relating to a different aspect of metropolitan Toronto transportation. Perhaps the most recent one, which will give the hon. member an example, is the co-operative effort with the provincial and municipal governments with regard to a more effective utilization of existing railway lines into the city for commuter traffic.

SUDBURY—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF NEW TERMINAL BUILDING

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Following the minister's statement this morning regarding financial assistance to municipally operated airports, I would like to refer to a question I asked in September regarding the construction of a new terminal building at Sudbury. Can the minister tell us whether his department is prepared to offer financial assistance or to call tenders for the construction of such a terminal in Sudbury?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that if we start asking questions about the construction of terminals in too many cities across the country we will get into trouble. The minister may reply briefly, but I see other members to my left who are anxious to ask similar questions and we will probably spend the rest of the question period in deciding whether terminal buildings will be constructed.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in these circumstances, and because the hon. member did ask for this information before, may I say that this actual project does not come completely within the announcement I made this morning. It was already scheduled before, but this will help the municipality and my estimate is that tenders will be called in 1972.

ACQUISITION OF MUNICIPAL FACILITIES BY DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question regarding the statement made by the minister concerning assistance to municipalities. Does the statement include any effort on the part of the Department of Transport to take over airports in municipalities, because I think the minister's statement really involved peanuts in terms of money, and I am wondering whether in fact there is any room—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may attempt to reply briefly to the hon. member's statement.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): If the hon. gentleman has in mind Hamilton airport, it is in a different category. We are talking with them all the time and I am sure we will be giving considerably more than peanuts in that case as in many others.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BUTTER—MEASURES TO PREVENT IMPORT AND TO INCREASE PRODUCERS' QUOTAS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since Canada is now purchasing butter from the United States and our dairy producers have to pay a fine when they exceed their production quotas, could the minister say whether his department is considering any measures in order to remedy this situation?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago there were discussions between the Canadian Dairy Commission and the milk marketing authorities in those provinces which have market-sharing quotas to see if we could achieve greater Canadian production.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): May I ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Would the Minister of Agriculture be prepared to recommend to the Canadian Dairy Commission that it increase eligible quotas for dairy producers?

Mr. Olson: That is one possibility that we are considering, Mr. Speaker.

MEASURES TO KEEP LOBBIES CONSTANTLY OPEN FOR BOXHOLDERS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): My question is for the Postmaster General. What action is the department planning in order to have 24-hour service resumed, and has the department considered installing cameras in lobbies to eliminate vandalism?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question is for the Minister of Transport or some other minister to whom it may pertain. In view of experiments in various parts of Canada with liquefied natural gas as automobile fuel in an attempt to cut down environmental pollution, can the minister say whether or not his department is involved in any of these experiments and, if not, is it considering any type of assistance to experiments in this area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I think that all I can do, with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, would be to say yes, we are involved in these experiments through the transport development agency. If my hon. friend would like to see the tomes that have been written on the subject I would be very glad to make them available to him.

TOBACCO—PROSPECT OF SALES TO CHINA AND JAPAN FOLLOWING MISSION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact the minister sent a representative of his department with a trade mission from the Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board to China and Japan in an effort to sell tobacco, has that representative reported to his department and, if so, what are the prospects of a market in that area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The information I have, Mr. Speaker, is that this promotional effort is continuing and there are no concrete results to be announced yet.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): In pursuing this matter further is the minister arranging a meeting now or soon with representatives of the marketing board in order to follow up any possible ways of promoting the sale of Canadian tobacco in the Orient?

Mr. Pepin: If the hon. member has in mind a meeting between the minister and the group, I might say that I have had a number of these in the past. I am not aware that the group has requested one now but if they have I shall do my best to meet them.

Does the government intend to intervene in this case to support the traditional treaty rights of the Indians and to oppose the existing judgment of the appellate division of Alberta? Does the government also intend to help finance the costs of the Indian who is appealing?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this matter has not been brought to my attention. I will make inquiries and give the hon. member a reply next week.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON PAVING OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the most important but rather neglected Minister of Public Works.

An hon. Member: Senator Laing.

An hon. Member: Governor Laing.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister advise the House on the progress being made in the negotiations going on with officials of the United States with respect to the paving of the Alaska highway and, if those negotiations are not making progress, is the Canadian government considering lowering the amount they have proposed as the share to be contributed by the United States in the cost-sharing proposal?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have had two meetings with our American counterparts. As I have reported to the House already, although I think probably when the hon. member was not here—

Mr. Mahoney: That is not hard to do.

Mr. Laing: —the second meeting was not very helpful to us. I think a report is being made to the President of the United States on which he might make an announcement before the end of this month. I think the term "paving of the Alaska highway" is incorrect; we are talking about improvement of the Alaska highway. We are still hopeful that the Americans will accept part of the burden they are placing upon us, because 70 per cent of the traffic is theirs.

PROVISION OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR BUILDING OF AIRSTRIPS IN REMOTE AREAS

What program or policy does he intend to implement to provide aid for the building of airstrips in remote or rural parts of Canada where municipalities do not exist? I am thinking of an announcement the minister made in Newfoundland at an economic conference in which he indicated that such aid would be forthcoming to help build airstrips and I should like to know what policy he intends to implement?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman gets the criteria on sharing which I think will be in the mail boxes of all members today or distributed in some way, I think he will see that this situation has been covered and that these airstrips will come under the classification of remote airstrips and we will be able to help with them.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): An agenda has not been set out for this meeting, Mr. Speaker, but this type of representation has been made to Britain and to the European members of the Common Market on various occasions by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure Prime Minister Heath and myself will be talking about Britain's entry into the Common Market and so on. Mr. Barnett: Was there any indication with regard to the pipeline—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Baldwin: This is the second book of Ben.

Mr. Benson: —in moving third reading of this bill, I would like to pay tribute and say thanks to several persons: first of all, to members of all parties who were in the House Wednesday evening and who went without dinner to vote on the clauses and subclauses of this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: I could not have held my dinner down.

Mr. Benson: Secondly, may I thank all members of all parties who served on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and worked during the hot summer of 1970 turning out its report. The recommendations in that report formed the basis for the contents of Bill C-259.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: Thirdly, I wish to thank those hon. members of this House, except the Tory members, who spent the summer of 1971 getting an understanding of this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: That is rank discrimination.

Mr. Paproski: The minister had better not say that in the next election campaign.

Mr. Alexander: Just wait until the Senate is through with you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Next, Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the members of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce who submitted a comprehensive report in the fall of 1970. About 50 of the measures contained in the legislation are the same or similar to the recommendations of that committee. That committee has also held hearings this fall while the bill has been in the committee of the whole in this House, and it has issued two reports which will be given serious study by the government. Next, I pay tribute to the government House leader and the House leaders of other parties who in September worked out a reasonable way for debating this lengthy and complex bill during the committee stage.

Mr. Baldwin: Up to a point.

Mr. Benson: Next, I pay tribute to those public servants in the Departments of Finance, National Revenue and Justice who over the past several years have worked long into the night and on weekends to bring about tax reform. Finally,—

Mr. Paproski: Is this the minister's swan song?

Mr. Benson: Finally, I pay tribute to my parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) who has been the pilot for this bill in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: I had hoped to spend more time than I have in the House during the committee stage of the bill but the events of August made this impossible. I am fortunate that there has been such a steady hand around to rely upon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: I should also like to pay tribute to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont), the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: Is this a mutual admiration society?

Mr. Benson: And I should like to pay tribute to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) and send him over a pair of scissors.

Mr. Baldwin: He might think that they have come from a member of an execution squad.

Mr. Benson: I should like at this time, Mr. Speaker, to deal at some length with the proposal put forward by the Progressive Conservative party in a press release issued on November 14 to split the tax bill. The Conservative party's behaviour on tax reform from the beginning has been such that one might be forgiven for not taking such a proposal seriously. Hon. members will recall that when the white paper on tax reform was published, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) raced across the country saying the government was planning to ram its contents through Parliament.

Mr. Aiken: Well, it did.

Mr. Benson: He also said that I should not be believed when I said repeatedly that there would be changes. The Conservative party declined to vote either for or against the report on tax reform prepared by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are a liar. You are wrong. That is not so. I will tell you what happened.

Mr. Benson: You abstained. The hon. member's party refused to vote for or against.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is hot air.

Mr. Benson: At the same time, the Leader of the Opposition gloated about the Commons report and claimed victory over the government. Last February 18 he said:

> That committee adopted about 80 per cent of the criticisms I had been making. There are still defects in the House of Commons report, but the concern now, of course, is how much of that report the Government will accept.

That is the report upon which the Conservative party did not vote. They took no part in the voting.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This debate will take a lot longer if you go on like that.

Mr. Benson: In other words, only a few months ago the Leader of the Opposition was not worried about the things he is claiming to be worried about today. He was worried about whether the government would adopt the Commons report.

As hon. members know, the government adopted the House of Commons report and went further. At the time of the budget debate in June, the Leader of the Opposition said:

> We accept these changes and in association with others accept a considerable proportion of credit for having brought forward the suggestions and for having brought about the changes.

These are the changes upon which the Conservative party did not vote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Paproski: What choice did we have?

Mr. Benson: Now, the Leader of the Opposition is asking that the bill be split. He is asking, in effect, that the portions of tax reform on which the most time and effort were expended be postponed indefinitely. So, perhaps one might be pardoned for taking the latest proposal with a grain of salt. Nevertheless, I did examine the proposal put forward in the Conservative press release of November 24. That proposal was reflected in the amendment moved here on Wednesday afternoon last.

The first question I asked myself was, what is to be achieved by that suggestion? Would it simply mean more debate? Would it make it likely that major portions of the unproclaimed parts of the bill would be voted down when a resolution was moved to implement them?

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, of course we are delighted to hear this.

Mr. Benson: That is fine.

Mr. Baldwin: We wish we could have heard the minister earlier on this subject. The minister has been around this place long enough, and he has been in cabinet long enough, to know that he cannot comment on the decision that the House has taken, a wrong decision in this case.

Mr. Benson: I am not commenting on the decision; I was commenting on a proposition. I asked myself, Mr. Speaker, as I said whether it would simply mean more debate and whether it would be likely that major portions of the unproclaimed parts of the bill would be voted down when a resolution was moved to implement them. Also, would it mean that there would be further amendments to the major portion of the bill that was unproclaimed. Well, it would not mean more debate now, for the press release says that if the bill were split, Parliament could turn to other matters.

The proposal calls for more federal-provincial consultation. I doubt, Mr. Speaker, whether there has ever been an issue on which there has been more intergovernmental consultation.

Mr. Baldwin: Abortive consultation.

Mr. Benson: It was a principal item on the agenda of several meetings of ministers of finance and first ministers and was discussed thoroughly on each occasion. The provinces had a profound effect on the legislation.

Mr. Baldwin: That is not what they say. According to them, that is not correct.

Mr. Benson: It is doubtful if eleven governments could agree on everything in a bill of this size, no matter how often they were to meet.

Mr. Baldwin: That is not correct.

Mr. Benson: But the provinces are sufficiently satisfied to renew the tax collection agreements.

Mr. Aiken: What else could they do?

Mr. Benson: The federal government has been responsive to the problems that the provinces will have in adapting to the new system, and responsive to their requests for change in the future. For instance, we have offered to collect death duties for a three year period for those provinces wishing to join in a common scheme. We extended the revenue guarantee from three to five years.

Mr. Baldwin: You made it too expensive to die.

Mr. Benson: We did that to remove the uneasiness felt by some provinces. They felt that they might suffer financially. On the question of tax credits, we have promised to consider positively any schemes the provinces wish to put forward. The press release also says that a delay would allow Parliament and the government to consider more fully the relevance of so-called "questionable sections" in the present Canadian economic context. This presumably refers to those parts of the bill dealing with international income. As hon. members know, the bulk of these provisions do not come into effect until 1976, and none of the important changes come into effect until 1973. Therefore, there is plenty of time to make changes if circumstances warrant.

I should also say that following the announcement of measures to deal with the U.S. economic problems in August, the government did re-examine this bill. It decided that as a long-term tax reform, this measure is appropriate. If particular actions by the United States warrant specific actions, this government will not hesitate to take them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: The Conservative party also thinks that splitting this measure would provide an opportunity to clarify the legislation. I think that adoption of the Conservative proposal would actually frustrate the process of clarifying the bill. The only way the imperfections in this legislation will come to light is through the actual experience of taxpayers and their advisers reading and using the new act in relation to particular transactions and situations.

They will not have time to do this if we thrust upon the business community what the Conservative party is proposing. If part of the bill were suspended for several months into 1972, many taxpayers, particularly in the business community, would simply not know how to behave. They would not know whether there are further amendments coming which could reach back and affect transactions taking place between January 1 and the date of the tabling of an amendment. They would not know

By the end of this coming January, there will be about 15,000 corporations which will have completed their 1972 fiscal years, and by the end of this coming February this number will be close to 30,000. Would these companies report their income on the old or the new system if the Conservative proposal were adopted? Similarly, there are thousands of partnerships with year-ends ending early in 1972 which would face the same problem.

During the so-called hiatus period, difficult problems of administration and compliance could arise. For example, would it be open to taxpayers to assert that they have no "liability" in respect of a transaction or an event because the bill has not been put into effect. Of course, this could have arisen on a small scale many times when budgets were announced and the legislation was not approved until months later. But the difference here is that the country has never faced a budget proposal of such an order of magnitude. Every taxpayer is affected, and every section of the existing act is affected.

I will provide the House with specific examples of the kind of uncertainty that would arise had the particular amendment proposed by the Conservative party passed. How does one deal with interest paid by a corporation to purchase shares of a corporation during the hiatus period? Has a taxpayer who has disposed of capital property during the hiatus period realized a capital gain subject to tax? Under which rules does a corporation operate during the hiatus period with regard to its surplus accounts, that is, the old or the new rules relating to corporate distributions? With regard to taxpayers making payments to non-residents, for example, withholding tax, which rules apply? Under Bill C-259 there are a number of transactions, particularly in the corporate sector, which require that forms or elections be filed with the Department of National Revenue. If the bill is not proclaimed, the forms will not be available and, therefore, how can a corporation conduct its business?

I think that these examples should be more than sufficient to illustrate the confusion that we would rain down upon the business community. To create this kind of confusion in present economic circumstances would not only be irresponsible but dangerous to the Canadian economy, particularly at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: Last spring the Leader of the Opposition spoke of the uncertainty that was present in the business community because the tax legislation had not been produced. I believe that the June budget was welcomed, not just for its contents but because finally businessmen would know where they stood.

The national accounts for the third quarter show that real GNP, corrected for price factors, advanced at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 6.6 per cent in the third quarter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: This compares to the United States where the figure was 3.9 per cent. Our economy is growing. But we have the fastest growing labour force in the western world and unemployment is still too high. I do not want to thrust upon the business community a proposal like this that would divert their attention from the most important job at hand, creating job opportunities for Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: There are a number of areas that the government is actively studying at this time, and I want to take this opportunity to give the House some indication of our present thinking. As I have said on a number of previous occasions, there will undoubtedly be a number of important amendments introduced next year and I think it only fair that people should be aware of the general direction of our planning.

Mr. Baldwin: Does the Senate have a copy of that?

Mr. Benson: If they read Hansard. I have had numerous representations concerning the deemed realization of a capital gain on the gift or bequest of property other than cash to charities and other tax exempt organizations such as museums and art galleries. I am concerned and sympathetic about this issue, but it raises two problems.

First is the possible abuse of the tax system similar to that experienced in the United States for many years. Ultimately the U.S. treasury was forced to enact complicated anti-avoidance legislation in 1969 to curtail the abuses by charitable organizations. I would not like to see a comparable situation develop in Canada. Second is the problem of equity as it relates to the taxpayer who wishes to transfer property as opposed to the taxpayer making a cash gift. The former individual is transferring "tax paid" cash; the latter is avoiding his potential capital gains tax liability.

Inasmuch as capital gains will accrue slowly after the start of the new system, I believe that we have some time to look further at this problem and at ways to permit tax free gifts to tax exempt organizations, and yet to avoid the U.S. experience. I am hopeful that we will soon find an answer to this problem. Many members of employees' profit sharing plans are troubled by the proposed treatment of distributions of property in specie, where such property has an accrued gain. Under the proposed rules, the capital gain is deemed to be realized. It has been argued that in the case of an employee's profit sharing plan, there should be a tax free "roll-out" of accrued but unrealized capital gains.

I am in general agreement with this suggestion, but in previous attempts to deal with this problem we have encountered severe administrative problems. However, I am confident that we will be able to solve the administrative problems early next year. Again, I believe that the situation can stand over until next year because of the slow maturation of capital gains.

There are two points in relation to a deferred profit sharing plan which we are examining closely and I expect to be able to propose amendments early next year. First, amounts standing to the credit of an employee on January 1, 1972, as opposed to amounts vested, should be eligible for averaging under Section 36 of the old act, and I believe that they should and will be in the future. Second, an employee who takes advantage of the Section 36 averaging under the former act should not be precluded from taking advantage of the new forms of averaging in respect of current contributions. As the bill now reads, if a taxpayer who is leaving the country and is therefore subject to deemed realization of his capital property elects to defer payment until he actually disposes of his property, he is subject to tax in the year of disposal on his world income as if he were a resident in Canada. I hope we shall be able to work out a different rule with less harsh consequences next year.

As I said in the House on October 13, we have received a number of representations relating to the passive income provisions—that is foreign accrual property income—and it is clear that some changes in this area should be made before the provisions take effect. They start in 1973 and go on to 1976. I said at that time:

However, we have concluded that it would be premature to introduce changes at this time before all the representations have been received and given the study they require.

There are two particular points I wish to make about this matter. First, we are re-examining the de minimis rule which at present excludes only $500 of income, and we hope to develop a more appropriate rule. Second, many taxpayers have expressed concern that rental income, interest income and capital gains on property used in connection with an active business will be subject to the foreign accrual property income rules. The bill is quite clear on this point, namely, that such income will not be treated as foreign accrual property income if it is earned in connection with the carrying on of an active business. I want to reassure the House on this point. Frankly, people are misreading the bill in this connection and those who urge that the term "active business income" be precisely defined are arguing against their own best interests. If the term is defined, it is bound to be defined narrowly. As it now stands, there is room for the taxpayer to argue about specific factual situations.

Finally, I want to refer to the many representations I have received in connection with a relaxation of the rules relating to roll-overs and corporate reorganizations. This is a very complex area, and I have instructed my department to carefully review the proposed rules under Bill C-259 to see if they can be extended without undue prejudice to the system as a whole. I am hopeful that early next year we will have some positive steps to recommend to the House in this area, after we have had a general study of the matter and have seen the present rules in operation.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have achieved a good deal from the decade-long debate on tax reform. For example, there are increased exemptions and improved deductions for wage and salary earners and retired persons. For the first time we will have a capital gains tax. The taxation of corporations and their shareholders has been improved. We have retained substantial incentives for the mining and petroleum industries but directed the incentives toward benefitting Canadians more. There are improvements in the taxation of business and property income. There is, I believe, a general consensus in the country that this represents a good reform. This was reflected by the voting here on Wednesday evening. Out of 293 potential votes, there were only 29 standing votes and on most of these there was at least one opposition party voting with the government. On only six votes was the government standing alone.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Benson: We will now have one of the best tax systems in the western world. As soon as everybody starts working within it, we can make it even better.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, one would hope that the minister might remain so that he could hear some comments on what I would call the most fatuous speech we have ever heard. One would be tempted to reply in kind, but I would say that all the hon. gentleman's preliminary remarks with regard to the conclusions of the finance committee in 1970 were deliberately wrong.

Mr. Gibson: Oh, come on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If he wishes also to include during that time the wholesale platooning through the committee of Liberal backbenchers who had attended very few sittings and who were assigned to vote, and who voted upon the recommendations of the committee—we could point them out—

Mr. Mahoney: Read the record.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We could do that. We could go through the record and see who were the ones who were on the committee and who were not. I say this, too, as far as this so-called highlighting—

Mr. Gibson: It was highlighting.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Hamilton Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) usually makes those noises from that great vacuum which exists between his ears.

An hon. Member: Ear, ear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He not only makes them against the rules, but he—

Mr. Gibson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gibson: It ill becomes the hon. member to make the statement he did. He has nothing from the neck up.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We have always understood the great contribution made to our debates by that hon. member.

I will say this for the edification of the minister who likes to highlight this business of the final vote in the committee. Let him recall that all the opposition members associated with me on the finance committee in connection with that report came from distant parts of the country. The final vote came toward the end of the week when they had to be in their constituencies.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Alright; this is fine. The minister lives in central Canada, and only central Canadians from the Liberal party were on the committee.

Mr. Benson: The Liberals stayed but the hon. member did not vote.

Mr. Baldwin: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, we all know that the government members are here because the Prime Minister told them to be here.

An hon. Member: What did Stanfield tell you?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Edmonton West should be allowed to make his speech. Some of his remarks may be objected to by other members, but those members can take the floor later during the debate and make their views known.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will just tell the minister that if he had known there were so many central Canadian members taking part in the final vote, members who had no other interest but to be at that final vote, he would also have known that the members of our group were catching aircraft at the noon hour on that very day.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Alright; all those catcalls come from members across the way who sit in their comfortable pews.

Mr. Francis: We are in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, yes. That remark comes from the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). If you wish to avoid these situations, you will have to arrange the flight times of communicating flights out of Ottawa. Don't start talking about the difficulties of travel to people who come from the far reaches of the country.

Mr. Mahoney: You were there.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I abstained because I knew very well that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) would say that we all voted in favour of the blessed report. There are lots of things in the report I do not like, and in using my right to abstain I exercised the same right as other hon. members who voted either yes or no. I exercised a far wiser option than those members who came into the committee simply because they were asked to and voted on something they knew nothing about. They were the blessed sheep who were trotted in here. The final part of the committee hearings was a travesty.

If the minister wants to get into this kind of debate, then we will answer him in kind. So far as his interpretation of the amendment that I put forward last Wednesday is concerned, which was, as indicated earlier, the subject matter of discussion between the House leaders, the minister has given a deliberate distortion of its effect. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) knows the interpretation to be put upon it. There is no such thing as an effective date of January 1, 1972. On the other hand, all these so-called difficulties that were trotted out by the Minister of Finance arise simply from his failure to read and to understand the amendment. The effective date in law can only mean the date of the proclamation, not January 1, 1972. It is only the minister's insistence on January 1, 1972 that makes him say what he said.

Mr. Gibson: Next point.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I hope that the hon. member is going to have something to say in this debate, too. The minister insists that in its vote on Wednesday night the committee of the whole gave approval to much of the bill. There is no way that we were going to insist on a standing vote on every clause. The minister should include all those clauses on which "on division" was called, all those on which there had been prior votes. There were some 130-odd sections that had been called prior thereto, and some of the votes on those had been on division. The minister's words result from the glibness of some speech writer who thought that he was going to make some sort of political hay out of a voting situation the other night that was unparalleled in the history of this House. If the opposition had insisted on a standing vote on each clause on which there was to be a division, the committee would have been here until three o'clock in the morning.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We are not saying that it would have hurt government members any more than it would have hurt members of the opposition. The point is that it is traditional to call "on division" as an indication of opposition.

The minister tried to give the impression that there were only 29 occasions during this evening when there was a formal division, that on six of those occasions the opposition were together, and that this shows that the bill had the uniform approval of the committee of the whole. As a matter of fact, the minister has not got the support of the country in rejecting the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on clause 1. The great majority of newspapers that back the Liberal party are opposed to the minister's position.

Mr. Haidasz: They are Conservative editorial writers.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, they are newspapers that normally support the Liberal party; yet each and every one of them condemned the government for using the guillotine. They also insist that there should have been a division of the bill. The minister should see the amount of mail I am getting now from people who insist even yet that the bill be divided, but not in the sort of bogus way the minister has suggested.

Let me read the motion so we can see what its effect will be. It is not January 1, 1972 that is to be the effective date; the effective date is the date of the proclamation.

Mr. Benson: It is the date of the tax changes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister reminds me of a former Secretary of State, the lady member from Niagara Falls, and of the attitude she took when she presented the first version of the Canada Pension Plan. It was the most perfect plan in the world and anyone who criticized it was foolish. As a matter of fact, to use her own term, they were stupid. Nevertheless, the plan went through four revisions. The same can be said of this tax bill. The white paper was lauded by the minister as representing the ultimate in forward, progressive tax thinking.

Mr. Drury: That is just what this bill is.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) should have heard the speeches which the minister made in various parts of the country. I saw him on television declare that this white paper was going to produce the greatest tax system in the world, with all these provisions in regard to integration, the taxing of Canadian corporations, and so on. The greatest benefit to mankind was to be the absolute neutrality of the tax system. Various government members sat around in a claque singing hosannas to the Minister of Finance. Then, the white paper ran into difficulties and all was changed. I was surprised to hear the Minister of State in charge of scientific affairs (Mr. Gillespie), for one, say that this was a great tax proposal.

Mr. Gibson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am talking about the white paper, not the bill. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) was another one who said the same thing. When the final committee report came out, how they clutched it to their breasts.

Mr. Gibson: We had an open mind about it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If they had an open mind, then the hon. member has a closed one. It was almost pathetic to see this reversal of attitude on the part of government members. They had been opposing other members, and even witnesses, who were criticizing the white paper. Some of them were quite openly hostile to such witnesses. It was great to see their performance, and then this complete reversal. As soon as the government spoke, why, there was a great change. It was almost like what happened at Pentecost when the Apostles were touched with a flame, with the spirit. My, Mr. Speaker, how those members were converted, and how this thing then became so good.

And the same has happened again, Mr. Speaker. Every time there has been a change made to Bill C-259 we have had nothing but a clacking of desks, and so forth, as though a new miracle were being performed. That happened even this morning with the penultimate, in fact not only penultimate but the after-the-post-mortem changes announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). Frankly, Mr. Speaker, they are a cheap bribe to the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) will only take time to read some of the Senate committee recommendations, he will see that the changes announced this morning are what I call a cheap bribe. They are tossing the senators a few crumbs. We will see what the Senate's attitude is going to be. Senators have told me, "This is one time we are going to stand." I hope that they will demonstrate how and where they stand with regard to their recommendations. This will either prove their credibility or otherwise. Here I am talking about Liberal Senators who comprised the majority on the Senate Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, and who drafted its recommendations.

The Senate Committee did a good job. I heard from the public, which is more than the Minister of Finance did, and more than members of our committee or of our House did. It heard from the public in detail in regard to the bill. I openly invite Senators to stand by their recommendations. We will see just how much weight those gentlemen carry with the Minister of Finance and his colleagues. It seems to me there is a great potential here. They will either do a service to the country, or a great disservice to themselves and the country. Senators are up against the crunch, and we will have to see if they knuckle down because there is the prospect of a Christmas vacation, or because of what I call these cheap bribes offered with regard to a few paltry provisions in the bill.

One of the reasons we were dissatisfied and voted against the bill was the complete inability of any member in the opposition to get definitive answers on many of the points that they raised. The representatives of the government just sat there and hunkered down. Certainly, once the guillotine was introduced no definitive answers were given to any of the legitimate representations made by opposition members on points raised by the public with them through letters, telegrams and phone calls.

There was no serious examination of the effect of certain sections. I will give a classic example of what I am talking about. I refer to my objections to the effect in law of section 239(2), and the effect in law of section 221(2) with regard to the retroactive effect of regulations. Government members all voted for this, and there was no answer to my objections. I know that the Liberal caucus was divided on this matter. Many members told me that they had not realized the implications of the bill until I had mentioned the effect of these sections. None of them realized, and still do not appear to realize, that under section 243 there cannot be any suspension of a sentence. All must go to jail if they are sentenced to jail. No judge at any time can suspend sentence.

But a judge can suspend sentence for armed robbery in appropriate cases. A judge can suspend sentence for indecent assault in appropriate cases. Sentences can be suspended all the way through the Criminal Code, but for any offence under the Income Tax Act, if the authorities choose to proceed by way of indictment and a person is convicted the judge has no option but to sentence him to jail. If any members opposite realized the salutory effect of a conviction and sentence to imprisonment, with the sentence suspended, they would also realize that section 243 is barbarous. It belongs to a past age.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, we heard the great hosannas sung by government members in support of the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) and the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Turner) when they introduced amendments to the law concerning bail and the wiping out of records. Those government members and their hosannas are hollow and hypocritical if they maintain that posture and yet vote for section 243. But, Mr. Speaker, they voted for it, not knowing what on earth it was all about. One of my colleagues says they didn't even read it.

A judge will not have power to suspend sentence. Yet there are supposed to be great, enlightened reforms in this bill. Did we get any answers on that subject? None at all. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance just hunkered down on Wednesday when he returned to the House, and we could not get any answers from his replacement. Then, they wonder why we react in this way.

We got no answers with regard to the attitude of the provinces at the very last meeting between the federal government and the provinces. Mr. Speaker, eight provinces have entered into agreements, expiring in 1972, with regard to the collection of taxes on a common basis. But the Minister of Finance deliberately omitted reference to the province of Ontario and to the province of Quebec with regard to corporation tax and with regard to a personal income tax in the province of Quebec. Those two provinces account for two-thirds of the taxpayers in Canada, yet the federal government says to them, "Amend your legislation right now; conform!" As I have pointed out time and time again this is supreme arrogance on the part of the federal government which has only joint jurisdiction in the field of income tax. The provinces have equal jurisdiction with it.

I see that the parliamentary secretary is making notes. I hope he will reply and tell us what advice is going to be given to corporations in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec with regard to their differing systems. Of course, he may only be signing Christmas cards.

Mr. Lewis: That is what he is doing. It is the right time of the year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about representations from the resource industries; what answer has been given to them? The answer is, tough luck boys, you are going to take it. My colleagues intend to develop this aspect to a much greater extent. One of the areas of concern in this House related to the elimination of the basic herd concept. The debate was merely adjourned in order to pass on to something else, I suppose because the heat was becoming uncomfortable. We saw the restoration and retention of the basic herd concept after the Liberal caucus got its lashes last Thursday following their defeat in the House. The basic herd trooped in here. They stood up and voted, no matter what the vote was on. They voted straightforwardly. One hon. member, however, when it came to the question of prospectors and grubstakers, one of the members from northern Ontario, had the courage to stand by the conviction he expressed at previous meetings of the Committee on Finance in this regard. He voted against the proposal. I would have liked to have seen a few others have the courage of their convictions in respect of that particular point.

The questions about the basic herd concept have not been answered. Perhaps we will get some answers in respect of this and some explanation why the government insists on completely misunderstanding the concept of agriculture in this country. Perhaps the government will explain why it insists on the elimination of this principle which is fundamental to the operation of a farm, as well as its insistence that farm land which continues to be used for farm purposes shall be subject to capital gains tax. We moved amendments. They were voted down against a solid opposition stand in favour of exempting land which continued to be used for farm purposes. This displays an urban orientation, an urbanized philosophy in complete disregard of a very important segment of the Canadian population and a very important segment of the Canadian economy. But, oh no, these farmers are to be put through the tax wringer. The screw is to be applied that much harder. We can say the same thing about corporations. More money is to be taken from the corporations but their revenues are not to be increased. Yet, they will have to compete on an equal basis against even tougher competition from abroad.

Bill C-259 was prepared and conceived in rather different conditions. Economic conditions in the world, and as they would affect Canada, were not in existence when Bill C-259 was conceived. There was no idea that Britain would vote to enter the European Common Market. There was no idea that Britain would get into the Common Market. This will affect Canada in the future. I invite the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to put his mind to the effect this taxation and the legislation his colleague is going to bring in, the Competition Act, will have on the input by his department in encouraging Canadian business. We have the left hand moving one way and the left hand just pulling it back.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have your hands mixed up.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): One hand going forward and the left hand pulling it back. They are all left-handed. On the basis of what I have said, I am going to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith).

That Bill C-259, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, be not now read a third time but be referred back to Committee of the Whole with an instruction that the committee has power to so amend the bill as to affirm that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada and to this end to consider, in particular, the advisability of amending sections 29 and 39 as set forth in clause 1 of the bill, together with related or consequential provisions, in such manner as to continue recognition of a farmer's basic herd as a capital asset and to permit land, together with any other capital property, which is used by a person in a farming activity to be transferred by him, either during his lifetime or on his death, without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions of the bill where the transferee uses such land and property to continue farming within the meaning of this act.

I have put forward versions of this amendment in English and in French.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to examine the amendment that is being proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and to make the argument concerning its regularity after I have examined it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

Mr. Francis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the motion it was seconded by the hon. member for Perth. I do not think a member who is not in the House can second a motion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member was in the House. Shall we say, if it affects the sensibilities of the hon. member for Ottawa West, that I will have the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka second it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair would also like to consider the amendment. It being one o'clock I now leave the chair. The House will meet again at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Just before the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) moved an amendment, and it is my intention at this time, following the request of the government House Leader who wanted to look at this amendment during the lunch hour, to read the amendment to the House for the benefit of hon. members from whom I will invite comments as to the procedural acceptability of the amendment.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before the recess, I have some reservations about the regularity of this amendment, especially that part of the amendment which asks that the bill be referred back to the committee of the whole with an instruction that the committee have power to so amend the bill as to affirm that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada. I believe that it might be appropriate for the hon. member to ask that the bill be referred back to the committee of the whole with the request that the committee consider the advisability of amending sections 29 and 39 as set forth in clause 1 of the bill, but it seems to me that the insertion of the general principles that are contained in the present amendment goes beyond what is possible at the third reading stage.

There are a number of references in the fourth edition of Beauchesne which bear directly on this point, especially citations 415 and 418. At the bottom of page 287, the last paragraph of citation 415 reads as follows:

(4) On the third reading of a bill, an amendment to refer back to the committee of the whole must not tend to change the principle approved on the second reading.

The second sentence of citation 418 on the next page reads:

All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

It seems to me that an amendment which asks the House to make a decision on the special position of agriculture is dealing with a matter which is not contained explicitly within the provisions of the bill. It may be, and certainly is, a totally desirable objective, but the place to have that principle asserted is not in an amendment at this stage of the bill.

So I would suggest that while it is possible to refer the bill back to the committee of the whole on third reading to reconsider or examine certain aspects of the bill, and certain clauses, and to reconsider any particular subsection, I believe that in this particular part of the amendment there is an assertion of a principle which goes beyond what is possible on the third reading stage.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons for the amendment being in order. First, may I cite to Your Honour the fact that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) offered the amendment but there are other equally valid reasons. To deal with the point raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), I would point out that it is possible for reasoned amendments to be offered on third reading. I am not suggesting that this is a reasoned amendment, but if we are inhibited from suggesting that there is a principle involved—if it can ever be said that there is a principle in a tax bill to start with—then it is competent for hon. members seeking to amend to come within the grounds of a reasoned amendment.

In May's 17th edition, at page 571, the author deals with the various types of amendments which may be moved on third reading. He refers to putting off third reading through the use of a reasoned amendment against the bill now being read a third time. At page 572, he goes on to say:

As the debate on the third reading should be confined to the contents of the bill, reasoned amendments which raise matters not included in the provisions of the bill are not permissible.

That is the rule in Beauchesne which has been enlarged and is cited by my friend. Here, we have a bill affecting great numbers of people of various classes throughout this country. There was proof of this when the House leaders got together to try and arrange an orderly discussion of this bill. The subject matter was divided into clauses dealing with various groups and classes relating to one specific area, one particular group in the community who would be affected. There was no other way available to us.

The operative parts of the amendment read:

—with an instruction that the committee have power to so amend the bill as to affirm that farmers occupy a special position—

And it goes on:

—and to this end to consider, in particular, the advisability of amending sections 29 and 39—

As a basis for the review which the amendment asks the committee to engage in, there has been inserted the need to amend sections 29 and 39. But there is a certain purpose behind that, Mr. Speaker. If the government House leader, representing the government view, finds it offensive that the committee should have regard for the fact that farmers "occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada" then, with reluctance, I would be prepared to delete that part. What the House is saying to the committee is this: "Because in our view, and it should be your view, farmers do occupy a special position you should therefore review clauses 29 and 39 in the hope that they may be amended to make the special position of the farmers more solidly fixed through this legislation". If it is a matter of curing any defects, I think we might be able to eliminate those words but I think it would be unfair and improper to eliminate those which are not the operative words but which would come within the proposition of a reasoned amendment.

As to the rest of it, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a tax bill and a tax bill has no principle. This tax bill, however, has even less principle, and I firmly reject my desire to make a long speech about that, but will say that within the special meaning assigned by the rules of this House to principles, there is no principle involved. This act is entitled:

An act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act.

Then, we go through most of the Income Tax Act, which is an amending act 707 pages long.

Mr. Lewis: It is 739.

Mr. Baldwin: All right, it is 739; I accept the reasoned amendment of my friend, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). We discover that it deals with almost every conceivable activity of society in Canada. The committee very seriously dealt with the bill according to groups and classes as had been suggested by the House leaders. What we are asking now is that we try to keep our debate on third reading in general conformity with what was done in committee. My friends to the left could ask that the bill be sent back to committee so that it could deal with special clauses and we could ask for the same thing. But surely, it would be idle to do so. We have taken the two clauses which have a special relationship to the agricultural industry in our opinion and have asked that the committee reconsider these, then report back to the House with recommendations. That is the classic and recognized manner in which, on third reading, this bill can be sent back to the committee.

I conclude on this note, Mr. Speaker, that when we consider the ramifications of this bill and the extent to which our Standing Orders and the precedents and practices under them were adjusted to meet the extraordinary circumstances of this bill, I do not believe that the President of the Privy Council had his heart in this objection. I think he realized, as I do, that we are now engaged in a debate which may and probably will last for some days. If there is to be an orderly and intelligent debate, then we must follow the pattern laid down in committee of the whole. This may call for some flexibility in the manner in which the Chair examines amendments from time to time in so far as Standing Orders and precedents are concerned. Without that freedom and flexibility in dealing with a bill of this kind, and unless we are able to take a particular clause or section and say that we will refer it back to the committee for review, possible alteration or recommendation, the House may need to consider this bill for a long time.

Answering those who say that some of these things may have been discussed, I say, yes. Nevertheless, this is a particular method which has been devised in the mother of parliaments and accepted here. We shall be able to obtain recorded votes on areas that have been voted on in committee. Hon. members of the House will be able to have their names entered in the records of the House to indicate their position on any one of these subject areas. I am sure that hon. members on the other side of the House would, for different reasons, also like to be recorded as being in favour of certain parts of the bill which we might, incidentally, challenge in this particular procedure. If that is not done the opportunity for members of this House to embark on fair, full and informed discussion may be impaired, seriously inhibited, and almost crippled. If the opportunity for hon. members to be counted in a recorded division of the House on this type of amendment is not to be made available, and if this type of amendment is not found acceptable, then I say we are in a very poor position so far as future debate on third reading is concerned.

Before sitting down, may I make another comment. If members on the government side feel unhappy about the words in the motion, "farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada," let me say, and although my friend from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is not here I think I will have his consent, that I would be quite happy to take those words out of the motion. I think I have made our position quite clear on it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, speaking on this suggested amendment or change in the motion, certainly, I would waive any procedural objections in view of what my hon. friend has said about proceeding with this bill in committee of the whole. If we were to delete, following the words, "that the committee have power to so amend" the words "the bill as to affirm that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada and to this end to consider, in particular, the advisability of amending," the motion would read in part, "that the committee have power to so amend sections 29 and 39," and so on. That would focus the debate on these two clauses and would not put hon. members in the position that if they voted against changes in sections 29 and 39 or voted against the proposition that there be a reference back to consider sections 29 and 39, they would at the same time be voting against a declaration that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada. That is exactly what we would be forced to do if the amendment were put in its present form. That is a declaration of principle which we would support if it stood on its own, in a separate place. However, since it has been put in here and because of its effect on this clause, we would have to vote against the clause as a whole. If my hon. friend will do as he suggests, I will certainly waive any procedural objection.

Mr. Baldwin: I will do that. However, the President of the Privy Council could move to exclude those words from this declaration.

Mr. MacEachen: No, thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Before recognizing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I will try to be clear about what words are to be deleted. If the hon. member for Peace River and his party agree to delete certain words, I am sure that this will limit the procedural debate.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, if the President of the Privy Council feels that the words in question are the words which debar him from accepting this motion as one which it is desirable to debate I will, although with great reluctance, ask for those words to be deleted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, enough has been said, and enough agreement has been reached, to make it unnecessary for me to enter into the argument. If I had spoken earlier, I would have suggested something along the line of the solution that seems to have emerged. Now that there is discussion over the precise words in the amendment that are to be deleted, may I, for simplicity's sake, suggest that we begin at the end of line 5 of the typewritten text in English and delete the words, "to so" and so on. Incidentally, that would enable us to get rid of the split infinitive.

An hon. Member: Purist.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that we delete the words, "to so amend the bill as to affirm that farmers occupy a special position in the economic structure of Canada and to this end." Let us take out that phrase, even though it is a good one and we like it. However, we are now thinking procedurally.

Mr. Baldwin: I will remember that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That part of the amendment would then read, "with an instruction that the committee have power to consider, in particular, the advisability of amending sections 29 and 39", and so on. That way we would not need to take out a word here and there and put in some other words somewhere else. I hope that that is in line with the sense of what the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) have been saying.

While I am on my feet, may I say that we find nothing procedurally offensive in the motion before us, although for procedural purposes it will be better if that deletion is made. But may I make it clear that although we do not object procedurally to the amendment, there is something at the end of it which we want to qualify and, when our turn comes, we shall move an amendment to the amendment. My main purpose in rising was to suggest to my fellow House leaders the words that might be deleted.

Mr. Baldwin: If the Chair has looked at the amendment, perhaps it is acceptable. The hon. member for Edmonton West is not here, as I said, and I am sure that he would be as sad as any parent whose child is emasculated if he were here. However, what is left will still be an effective vehicle for debating this particular area. We could still carry on some discussion and, hopefully, divide the House, which might be in favour of this issue.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the solution suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and wish to say again that I have no objection whatever to the substance of those words being deleted. This is purely a procedural move. That must be clearly understood, despite the delicacy of the comments made by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Baldwin: We will remember this. The minister is against the farmers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I thank hon. members for expressing their opinion on this motion.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

The agreement that has been reached really makes it much easier for the Chair to accept the motion, and I have no alternative but to put the motion at this time. I wonder, however, if I should not ask the consent of the House to make the correction to the motion for, although the motion was not moved before one o'clock, it was read. Is it agreed that the correction suggested by the hon. members who participated in the procedural debate shall be made and incorporated in the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) moves as follows:

That Bill C-259, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that Act, be not now read a third time but be referred back to Committee of the Whole with an instruction that the Committee have power to consider, in particular, the advisability of amending sections 29 and 39 as set forth in clause 1 of the Bill, together with related or consequential provisions, in such manner as to continue recognition of a farmer's basic herd as a capital asset and to permit land, together with any other capital property, which is used by a person in a farming activity to be transferred by him, either during his lifetime or on his death, without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions of the Bill where the transferee uses such land and property to continue farming within the meaning of this Act.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, today as I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when he was making his comments on the introduction of third reading of Bill C-259, I did so with a good deal of amusement at the front the Minister of Finance was trying to put up. He was trying to make out "Well, we have come through that battle. We crossed over those hurdles. Now, we are in the final stage of the battle and pretty soon the fight will be all over." You could almost hear the sigh of relief with respect to the over-all situation being uttered when the minister was making his remarks. I suppose he is justified in issuing a sigh of relief when he has a weapon such as rule 75C to get him over some of the hurdles he has encountered in dealing with the massive document now before us.

Some of the minister's comments on the votes taken last Wednesday night were nothing short of fatuous. The Minister of Finance attempted to make out that there were only a limited number of standing votes that had to be decided by the committee on Wednesday night. He tried to suggest this was some kind of justification for the government's decision to invoke rule 75C to close off the committee stage of debate. This completely begs the issue.

Many sections of the bill deal with mechanical aspects of the tax system. They are consequential upon the basic decisions which are involved. I will give one example. We in this party took a stand on the policy with regard to the question of capital gains. This is contained in section 38. Numerous sections following section 38 of clause 1 deal with the mechanics of taxing capital gains and with some of the consequences that flow from a decision to impose a form of taxation on capital gains. The members of this party saw little to quarrel with in connection with the mechanics involved and some of the consequential features. Therefore, there was not much to argue about. Our main argument had to do with the basic inadequacy of the prime proposal, namely to tax capital gains at only a 50 per cent rate.

What we have before us at the present time is not tax reform, as has been suggested by the Minister of Finance. We have had a good deal of tidying up of various features. Some anomalies have been removed. There are some inequities in particular parts of the act which have in fact been corrected. We acknowledge this. However, the government has failed to come to grips with the basic issues of taxation which had to be dealt with in considering this legislation.

There is one part of the bill with which this party is quite happy. I refer to the changes that were introduced respecting taxation of co-operatives and credit unions. As was indicated in the committee stage, we are very happy with these provisions. We are happy that at last the government saw fit to bring in these changes after a great many representations from the co-operative movement and credit union movement, after considerable debate in this House and representations from all parties. We in the New Democratic Party made it clear we would battle until the necessary changes and reforms to this particular part of the taxation bill were brought about. We were happy to see that members of the other two opposition parties joined in this fight. I give credit to those members who did so. In fairness, it must also be said that some credit is due to those government members who took a stand on this particular issue. Here I include the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and backbenchers such as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) and the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). Just where some of the other members stood on this issue is not quite clear. They were ready to join the parade once the battle was over, but they were not in evidence at the time of the battle. I want to give credit where credit is due. It is a credit to the House of Commons and all concerned that changes were made to this particular part of the bill.

I now come back to the bill as a whole. In looking at the situation at this stage, the beginning of third reading debate, after the lengthy consideration that has been given to the white paper, the study by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and the previous consideration which has been given to the bill, it can be said in summing up that the result lays to rest two basic elements of Liberal dogma and propaganda as they were put forth in the last election and as they have been loudly trumpeted since that time.

The first contention was that the government was going to work toward a just society. This was a favourite phrase in the 1968 election. I suggest that Bill C-259 leaves the just society in ruins. When we ask where is the principle of equity in Bill C-259, we find that it is really a distant and far removed principle in the application of this bill. If the just society was to mean anything, the principle of equity had to be paramount and a first consideration in this tax legislation. This was not the case.

Why did the cabinet give in? I have to assume that they were sincere in their assertions in 1968. They were sincere in many of their assertions since that time, but somewhere along the line the government buckled in to every major pressure by corporate interests in this country. I am even more disappointed with the Liberal backbenchers. They strongly maintained in 1968 that they were going to follow through in building this just society. Where were they when the crunch came? Their views were expressed in large part by the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. This reflected the views of most government backbenchers. It is clear from this report that they decided to give first place to the principle of economic growth as opposed to the principle of equity. The NDP members on the committee, of course, disassociated themselves from that stand. They issued a minority report which took a different approach. Here again, I place one exception on the record; it has to do with the stand which was eventually taken concerning the taxation of co-operatives and credit unions.

The consequence of this legislation, assuming it is enacted, will be a great deal of public disillusionment. This can be expected once the act is in effect. The Canadian people will then see just what a sham Liberal propaganda has been, how hollow are the claims that this is a great tax reform measure. The Canadian people will realize that what they are getting is the same old system, the same old concessions to vested interests and corporate interests.

There is a second basic underlying point which is worth comment. It is that the Liberals' concept of participatory democracy, their pretense that they were practicing this principle, has proved to be hollow indeed. When considering the tax changes which were approved we have to ask ourselves the question: who appeared before the committee? Who was heard? Who got the most attentive hearing? It can be said, and I think fairly, that no one was barred from making a presentation or appearing before the committee. But the situation which developed illustrated one of the basic flaws in the structure of our society, that is to say, it is the rich and powerful who are in a position to influence the course of affairs. It is they who can influence legislation, influence the terms of the deal which will finally be approved, but the little guy is too often left out in the cold. This was certainly the case during the consideration of these tax changes. The government can in no way claim that the process involving the white paper and the committee hearings was a real exercise in participatory democracy.

I should like to deal, now, with the position taken by the official opposition, the Progressive Conservative party. They certainly made a lot of noise during this debate. I suggest they have also created a lot of confusion. When I say this I also acknowledge freely and fully that many valid points were raised by individual members of that party. With some of these views we agreed. Others, we did not agree with. I do not wish to question the sincerity with which many of these arguments were advanced by members of the official opposition during the consideration of the white paper and in subsequent debates, but it also has to be said that there were some phony positions taken by the official opposition. I shall refer to two.

The first was the position taken on the question of splitting the bill and the second was the contention that no one understands what is in the bill. I believe the proposition that the bill should be split up was completely unworkable. It was impracticable. In our party we are opposing the bill because of its inequitable basis, because we feel it is an iniquitous piece of legislation. We could not, however, approve a proposal which simply suggested we should split the bill and allow one part to come into effect immediately and another part to take effect later after a resolution of the House of Commons.

As for the assertion that no one understands the bill, I cannot accept it. I agree that there are many points which have yet to be cleared up, areas of doubt which affect many people throughout the country. I had occasion to take up one such point with the Minister of Finance last week when I happened to see him. It concerned the situation which automobile salesmen will face; income will, in fact, be imputed to them, and this is likely to give rise to real difficulties for them. The Minister of Finance acknowledged that this was so and told me he would have something to say about this aspect later on, when he would try to deal with the difficulties which had been foreseen. Nevertheless, the basic issues involved in this legislation are clear and they can be understood by the Canadian people. Those who assert that no one understands the bill, or can possibly understand the bill, are doing a disservice to the people of this country and are not helping to bring about any form of equitable tax system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Burton: Again, I acknowledge the validity of some of the arguments which were put forward by members of the official opposition. I appreciate the stand taken by a number of Conservative members with regard to the proposal to tax co-operatives and credit unions. It is true there is some confusion when it comes to ascertaining just where the Conservative party stands on this subject, particularly having regard to the remarks made last September by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). But there were other members of the Conservative party who made comments during the debate which were very much in conflict with those expressed by the official spokesman for their party.

Then again, in dealing with some of the farm issues which arose during consideration of the bill, members of the Conservative party put forward valid arguments. A number of technical points were put forward for consideration and the arguments used with respect to them were often well-founded. In any case, they were justified in raising them. But I should like to ask this question: where was the main thrust of the Tory party's attack? I think it is quite clear the Tory party did not like the idea of a capital gains tax. If I am wrong, let us hear them say so. They did not want the concessions to the corporations or to the mining industry, or to the resource industry generally, or to the oil and gas companies, to be changed. If anything, they wished to see even greater concessions made in this direction than are made at the present time.

They did agree, however, with one proposal in the bill when they left no doubt as to their support of the provision to repeal the Estate Tax Act. All this indicates opposition to anything which might bring about a redistribution of wealth in Canada, or affect the centres from which economic power is exercised and controlled. As I said earlier, some of the technical points raised by members of the Official Opposition were valid enough, but a good many were of concern only to corporations and those in receipt of high incomes.

By its stand in the House of Commons, the Tory party demonstrated that it stood firmly against any change which would bring about a redistribution of income and wealth resulting in any meaningful shift in the exercise of economic power. I should like to make clear some of the New Democratic Party's basic objections to this bill. I should like to enumerate eight basic objections to the bill before the House at the third reading stage.

First, we object to the continuation of the special privileges given to corporations. A general look at the picture reveals that a lot of tinkering and agonizing was done about setting up a system based on the principle of integration, but now we are left with the same old dividend tax credit which has been increased from 20 per cent to 33 per cent. True, there have been some adjustments and changes made and perhaps the difference is not as wide as it may seem, but no basic change has been made in the method by which the government treats the corporations of this country. The special privileges these corporations have enjoyed for a long time are untouched. Similarly, we see that the capital cost allowance structure is left much as it is at the present time.

The second basic objection that we have has to do with the special concessions for the mining industry and for some of the resource industries, such as oil, gas and so on. We feel that these proposals are iniquitous, that they have the effect of distorting the economy and result in the type of development of Canada's economy that is not in the best interests of the nation as a whole. We suggest that they have the effect of helping foreign corporations who already have a high degree of control over the Canadian economy. We suggest that a continuation of this policy brings with it a greater level of unemployment for Canadians, and that it is contrary to the claim made in support of this type of concession in the past that it helps to create jobs for Canadians. If a different emphasis were placed on Canada's development, I suggest we would find a happier economic situation than we have today.

We also have to keep in mind that one of the principles contained in the Carter report was the establishment of a neutral tax system. The report opted for the principle of neutrality. That was thoroughly in keeping with a classical capitalist concept, that the tax system should be structured in such a way that in itself, and by itself, it did not influence the course of economic affairs. It is clear that the government has not opted for this principle of neutrality since it has continued the special concessions for the mining and resource industries. Once having made the decision not to stay with the principle of neutrality, the question was the extent to which we were going to weight the tax system. I suggest the evidence is clear that the decision the government has made to continue the special concessions for mining industries is a decision that is not in the best interests of Canada and will result in unemployment, misery and hardship for many thousands of Canadians.

The third basic objection that we have to this legislation is that it eliminates the taxation of inherited wealth. We are thoroughly in opposition to this principle. We feel it is absolutely essential, if we are to have any sort of just society at all, to tax inherited wealth. We also feel that this is an area that can best be handled and dealt with by the federal government rather than the provinces. The question remains as to just how inherited wealth is taxed and what sort of system should be set up. This question is a debatable one. We have to deal with conflicts that may arise with other elements of the tax system, and deal with these conflicts on their merits. But we feel on principle there must be some form of taxation of inherited wealth, and on this the New Democratic Party takes a firm stand. We feel the government of Canada, and all those who support them including members of the official opposition, are doing a disservice to the Canadian people by repealing the Estate Tax Act.

Four, we feel the provisions brought forward by the government to tax capital gains are inadequate. This was an area where the gap in our tax system was just too glaring to be overlooked. The government simply could not bypass it, so they threw in a half capital gains tax. I suggest this will still distort the economy since it allows for profit taking through capital gains.

Five, I suggest that the tax system proposed by Bill C-259 discriminates against working people in Canada. I cite two examples. First of all, there is the limiting of employment expenses to $150, while at the same time many other people have no limit on expenses. It is a case of no holds barred for businessmen and corporations when it comes to claiming expenses associated with their employment and with earning a living. But as far as the workers are concerned, those on a wage are held to a limit of $150. Similarly with child care expenses. Here again a limitation is placed upon expenses which I suggest will work a hardship, even though some improvement in the situation has been made by the government.

The sixth objection that we have to the tax system is that it discriminates against the lower income groups. It is true there has been some increase in the basic exemptions, but I suggest the changes are minimal. They are the very least that the government can get away with. These are the crumbs that the government has thrown to the people of Canada to make them forget the gigantic concessions that are given to other sectors of the Canadian economy.

The proposed tax exemptions will be of greater benefit to people in the upper income brackets than to those who are near the basic exemption level. This is why this party proposed a tax credits system to replace the present exemptions. It is true that the starting point of such a tax system can be set at any point and bring about the same result, but I suggest that a tax credits system would have brought about more flexibility and made it possible to introduce changes in the future that would be more equitable and of more assistance to the great bulk of the Canadian population. We also object to the top limits that are placed on the rate schedule and to the fact that it starts off at too high a rate for those people in the lower income brackets. We feel that this part of the bill is also unacceptable and, of course, we moved some amendments in this particular regard during the committee stage.

Seven, we feel there are a variety of special concessions in the bill that are given injustifiably to various sectors of the Canadian economy. In particular, there are the provisions dealing with advertising. No limit is placed on the deduction of advertising and other selling costs in carrying on a business. This is a concession of particular value to the large business interests of this country and gives them a greater advantage than small businesses. I feel this concession is unjustified and adds to the cost of living and of doing business in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: It also distorts values.

Mr. Burton: It distorts values, as my leader quite correctly says. In addition to that I point to the fact that while there is a provision in the bill which has the effect of restricting the deductibility of advertising expenses in periodicals to Canadian magazines and publications, there is a special exemption for Time magazine and Reader's Digest which certainly are not Canadian. This is a special exemption to two powerful interest groups, and we feel it is thoroughly unjustified.

Eighth, I suggest that the bill discriminates against farmers. This matter has been dealt with at some length in the committee. The government proposes to do away with the basic herd concept, and we feel this is not justified. We recognize that there are some problems in dealing with the basic herd concept and that changes are needed, but to do away with the concept which enables a farmer to take a portion of his cattle herd into his capital assets, without providing some substitute, is not justified. As I say, it discriminates against farmers. It shows lack of understanding by the government of what farming is all about.

There is a similar problem with respect to capital gains tax as it affects farmers. Special recognition is needed of the way in which such a tax will affect farmers. There must be recognition of the special requirements of farming and agriculture. There are many aspects of this subject that I could go into at length, but I will deal with just one small element. The fact that a farmer contributes his unpaid labour toward the capital improvements he makes on his farm presents the situation in which he does not receive any compensation for that unpaid labour until he sells his assets. This presents a special situation that needs to be taken into account.

Because the bill fails to correct the basic inadequacies and deficiencies of the tax system, we in the NDP intend to oppose it on third reading unless some of the motions for referral back to committee which may be moved during the course of this debate result in overcoming the problems that I have outlined. But on the basis of the attitude taken by the government I do not see this happening before the conclusion of debate on third reading.

Earlier today an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) which was the subject of procedural discussion and which has now been ruled in order. It deals with two basic problems in the bill concerning farmers, first the problem of the basic herd and, second, the problem of capital gains on farmland. As

I indicated, we are sympathetic to the proposal to make changes in the bill which take into account the problems which farmers will face as a consequence of the legislation. But there is one aspect of the amendment as proposed, concerning the way in which capital gains on farmlands will work, that gives us concern. Our concern is about the part of the amendment which reads:

—to permit land, together with any other capital property, which is used by a person in a farming activity to be transferred by him, either during his lifetime or on his death, without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions of the bill where the transferee uses such land and property to continue farming within the meaning of this act.

We feel this still leaves the problem which was suggested during committee consideration, in that it may lend itself to greater speculation by non-farmers or by people who really do not make the major portion of their living from farming. It may lend itself to greater speculative activity in farming, and the door is still open for corporations which are not bona fide farmers to engage in farming activities and to take advantage of this provision. Thus, we would like to move an amendment to the amendment which would have the effect of making clear just what persons we are referring to who could take advantage of the proposal put forward by the official opposition. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson):

That the amendment be amended by deleting the words "in a" where they appear between the word "person" and the words "farming activity" and by substituting therefor the following words:

The latter part of the amendment would then read as follows:

—and to permit land, together with any other capital property, which is used by a person who is a bona fide farmer and whose principal source of income is from farming activity to be transferred by him, either during his lifetime or on his death—

We feel this is essential if the amendment is to be adequate. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that while we in the NDP feel there has been some tidying up of various provisions in the legislation and there are some things with which we can agree, or at least feel are steps in the right direction, in terms of the basic issues involved—and I have enumerated eight basic questions—we feel that the government's response to the need for tax reform has been totally inadequate and in many cases totally absent. For these reasons we cannot support the bill on third reading.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member for Shefford please contain his impatience. We are as anxious to hear him as he is to speak, but we must now consider the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton).

[English]

The amendment appears to be in order and can be put to the House. It is moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), seconded by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson):

[Mr. Burton.]

That the amendment be amended by deleting the words "in a" where they appear between the word "person" and the words "farming activity" and by substituting therefor the following words:

"who is a bona fide farmer and whose principal source of income is from"

The main amendment, and I will not read it completely, would then read:

—which is used by a person who is a bona fide farmer and whose principal source of income is from farming activity to be transferred by him, either during his lifetime or on his death—

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, we are at the third reading stage of this important bill on which I had the opportunity to express our views in this House.

Two years ago at least we had been given the white paper. Now that the second reading motion and amendments have been bulldozed through, we begin the last stage of this important bill.

Some people like the bill, some don't. It pleases the people who claim to be socialists and take more away from the individual in order to give the proceeds of taxes to the state. That is why we can realize that there are members who, like the previous speaker, think that this bill does not go far enough in certain fields, and should push socialism even more. In that respect, he is not far from the ruling party which is identifying itself more and more with the socialist philosophy.

This bill is a disappointment to Canadians as a whole, to people with initiative, to those who believe in private enterprise, that is the builders, the labourers, the large number of Canadian citizens who have developed their country.

This bill brings about general disappointment, and we are most unhappy that it will drastically change the economic structure of our country.

As some people have already mentioned, in particular the hon. member who had the floor before me, this bill would redistribute income among our citizens, that is tax those who still have income, in order to let the state have it and dispose of it according to legislation it might introduce.

We of the Social Credit party, are not in favour of the redistribution of income, and this on principle, for we do not believe that social injustice or economic problems can be solved through redistribution of income in Canada. We recommend distribution of overproduction resulting through increased purchasing power. Therefore the Social Credit party proposes a set of principles to redistribute wealth, but without taking anything away from those who have money.

This bill sanctions the principle which the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) put forward some ten years ago, when he declared himself totally in favour of socialist measures. For instance, when he wrote in Cité Libre that more should be taken from the individual in the form of taxation it was a recognition of the individual's right to own property since he must pay taxes to the state. And if communist members happened to be in the House today, how would they vote? Would they be for or against this bill?

We just have to consider their principles or refer to countries which experienced them or which are still living under a communist regime. We just have to go through Karl Marx's manifesto to find that the first two foes which must be destroyed before setting up a communist system are capital and profit.

Now, which two elements are most affected by Bill C-259? Capital and profit. By all means available to them the designers of this socialist project that—is Bill C-259—have directed their attacks against income and capital.

Doubtless if communists members could vote here they would forthwith vote with the government because this principle is 100 per cent in line with the principle of elimination of capital and profit.

This is why we feel confused when this government is trying to make us believe that this will spell relief for some 700,000 taxpayers who can no longer afford paying taxes. However, under this bill a single person earning $3,900 per year will have to pay even more taxes than before.

In fact, the bill is quite in agreement with Karl Marx's doctrine and with the socialist principles which tend to destroy capital, initiative and profit.

I understand that some Liberal members who might still believe in free enterprise but who actually aim at its destruction by legislation might find it unpleasant to be part of a steamrolling process to implement such a socialist measure.

Mr. Speaker, middle class income earners will have to pay more taxes. Small corporations will also be affected together with professionals who will be taxed in future, not on the actual amount of fees received, but on income, that is on accounts receivable. They would have to pay taxes therefore on amounts not yet received. The young professional will certainly be affected, having run into debts to open his practice, and at the same time paying taxes on outstanding income.

Entertainment expenses will not be deductible as such. I know there were abuses in this area. Large companies had luxury yachts and residences in the south. Cutting down those expenses in such a drastic way and restricting the use of credit cards and contributions to social clubs and so on will do considerable harm to the Canadian industry.

A lot has been said against the taxpayer being forced to keep a complete file on all his assets. On valuation day the taxpayer will have to figure out the market value of all property valued at more than $500, and this includes cars, houses, cottages, boats, investments. Everything will have to be there. If he makes a profit on a sale, he will be taxed on the gains realized. A new valuation of his assets will have to be done every five years.

Of course this would mean a lot more work for chartered accountants. But I shall come back to this a little later. From now on, chartered accountants will no longer be specialists or management consultants but public servants who will have to spend their time fighting with other public servants here in Ottawa to have their clients' records accepted.

Under the new valuation, capital gains on investments which still appear on the balance sheet, that is on assets which have not been sold, will be taxable. Perhaps shares will have to be sold to pay that tax and thus majority stockholders of businesses might stand to loose control.

The capital gains tax is contested in many circles and for many reasons. Some people do not accept the principle. Others denounce the fact that the benefits on the sale of assets is taxed at 50 per cent in some cases and at 25 per cent in others. They say this is discrimination. This capital gains tax would yield additional revenues of approximately $450 million for the state. Once capital gains are taxed in Canada, we will see the economic growth of the country decrease by as much.

One of the recommendations of the bill now become law is also very unfair. I am speaking of the provision whereby the taxpayer must pay tax on non-realized capital gains and whereby shareholders must sell their shares at a loss and often lose control over their business.

Small businesses, and there are many of in Canada, will see their taxes go up. Indeed, the progressive cancellation of the preferential tax on the $35,000 profit will harm countless small enterprises in Canada. That new burden will be heavy and will also harm the self-financing of private enterprise and companies.

The amendment moved by the official opposition is also aimed at reducing taxes on capital gains on cattle, on farmers' basic herd and I quote:

—as to continue recognition of a farmer's basic herd as a capital asset and to permit land, together with any other capital property, which is used by a person in a farming activity to be transferred by him, either during his lifetime or on his death, without being subject to capital gain treatment—

Mr. Speaker, we know very well that quite often the basic herds are built up through the assistance of the wife and sons who work without pay and who are the main factors of the increased value of the basic herd. However, the government will automatically tax their assessment of the herd or the capital gain before the wife or sons are paid for their services.

This is why we entirely approve the amendment presented by the Progressive Conservative Party and we regret that the government has not taken into account, in this case as in others, the representations coming from all sources. If there is a bill in Canada which has given rise to dissatisfaction and protests, it is the one now under consideration. However, the government did not accept those recommendations.

On November 1, 1971, the Canadian Cattlemen's Association made a submission to the government echoing the ideas set forth in the amendment proposed by the official opposition. And on page 10 of that submission, we can see why the Canadian Cattlemen's Association made those recommendations:

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

The Breeding Herd as a Capital Asset.

A matter of particular concern is the proposal to phase out the basic herd provision and to no longer recognize a breeding herd as a capital asset. We believe this to be a most serious error but one that is understandable on the basis that the basic herd provisions have not heretofore been codified in the statutes. We believe that the tax authorities have erroneously assumed that the basic herd provision has been nothing more than an arbitrary concession to farmers, a concession that they believe is timely now to discontinue. We most emphatically disagree.

It is evident that the purpose of the basic herd has either been misunderstood or not understood at all; for the stated justification for phasing out the provision on the basis that the introduction of a capital gains tax reduces the need for the basic herd provision is invalid and misses the main point and purpose for which the basic herd provision was originally established.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if only the government had taken care to read the recommendations which have been made by people concerned! But no, it seems that they did not listen to anyone, at least judging from the content of the amendments which have been introduced. They showed little regard for the recommendations which have been coming from all sides. And we could even see that the bill was reprinted before the debate on the motion for third reading. This is an unspeakable insult to democracy and to the Canadian Parliament.

This morning, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) seemed to imply that no member of the opposition had either understodd the bill or considered it. Perhaps several persons did not understand the bill, including certain members on the government side.

In my view, those who are in a better position than any others to understand the proposal and study it are those who, in the future, will have the largest number of income tax returns to fill or of balance sheets to prepare, that is the chartered accountants.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I shall read the editorial of the November issue of the journal published by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) told us yesterday that we had not understood the bill at all.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): That is true.

Mr. Rondeau: He is a chartered accountant.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): It is true, you have not understood anything.

Mr. Rondeau: The hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Noël) said that we had not understood anything about the bill. I would suggest to him that he repeat that to his colleagues. They are the ones who should be more familiar with taxation and legislation. Now, according to the Liberals, they have not understood the bill. It seems the Liberals are the only ones to be blessed with the Holy Ghost's inspiration permitting them to understand taxation.

The editorial in the journal of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants reads as follows:

ON THE BRINK OF FISCAL DISASTER

If the government intended to take taxpayers by surprise they seem to have succeeded. Our participation in the CICA course on tax reform has left us flabbergasted. Let us say first that the course was very well introduced: excellent lecturers who were quite sharp and often witty; showing of graphs and unremitting attention on the part of the participants. On the whole, those responsible for organizing the course on such short notice (they sometimes had to work around the clock) did an excellent job. But the meanders of the legislation make one get vestige—

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): —vertigo.

Mr. Rondeau: —vertigo. The hon. member for Laurier does not know what "vertigo" means but in the future his company will learn about fiscal "vestige", and I quote:

Even if it has often been said, it should be recalled that first impressions of relative simplicity have been replaced by incredulity as experts dig more deeply into the legislation. Moreover, complexity is not so much in connection with large corporations or international matters, aspects the public traditionnally links with complexity. For instance, the provisions of the bill relating to small businesses are strewn with snares. Chartered accountants who serve small businessmen, like those who serve the more important ones, must absorb in record time a mass of information, at least if present plans are to become effective on the scheduled date.

We can be sure that with this government, these plans will "become effective on the scheduled date", with a steamroller. I continue the quotation:

It might very well be that the computing and the special forms, once they are well understood—

This is pure speculation—

—will be easily established, but the real difficulty is to plan one's own business in terms of the laws that will be promulgated, and to understand in depth the fiscal incidence of all eventualities before the letter.

If all chartered accountants engaged in supplying tax advice, whether employed by industry or practicing their profession within a chartered accountant's firm, should drop everything and dedicate themselves entirely to a depth study of the new legislation and accompanying regulations, it is a moot point whether that would be enough to supply all taxpayers with prior advice.

And the hon. member for Laurier seeks to convince us that he is smarter than all the members of the Chartered Accountants Association who state that even on a full-time basis they are unable to supply prior advice.

It has long been an established legal fact (with the exception of the Department of National Revenue as concerns the difference between tax evasion and tax avoidance) that taxpayers are entitled to organize their own affairs in such a way as to reduce their fiscal load to a minimum. The revenue officials should respect that principle all the more as between June 18 and December 31, 1971 there is not enough time to assimilate—

The hon. member for Laurier is more clever than that; he is more clever than all the chartered accountants of Canada.

—the legislation and to take appropriate measures.

—I would rather trust the Chartered Accountants Association than a single accountant who has to follow the steam-roller.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): I am a chartered accountant!

The time limit is even more hindering if one considers the technical changes which have been made. If the tax reform is introduced in good faith—and we are prepared to believe it is—proclamation of the act should be deferred until people have had time to grasp the meaning of it and to act accordingly.

Chartered accountants suggest that passage of the bill be deferred in order to give people time to grasp the meaning of it and to "act accordingly". But the government is not interested in grasping the meaning of it. In fact, all they are interested in is getting into the taxpayers' pockets, and this cannot wait.

There are many people who maintain that such delay would have farm more serious consequences for the country than are likely to affect those who are not ready for this change. If this is the government's view, then a moratorium should be applied on the strict implementation of rules in order to give everybody a chance to become familiar with them. Parliament should demand that the Department of National Revenue be lenient for, say, a year, especially as regards implementation of punitive measures. Even if this suggestion raises the bogeyman of the minister's discretionary power, there is no doubt that equity demands that account be taken of the circumstances in which people whose affairs cannot be arranged before the act comes into force find themselves.

And the last paragraph is quite important, Mr. Speaker. It reads as follows:

Without wanting to be cynical, let us suggest in concluding that all members of Parliament should take the CICA's course on tax reform before passing the tax reform bill.

Mr. Speaker, that was the subject of the editirial published by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants in November 1971 and this is why, with all these protests and recommendations from experts, it would have been wise for the government not to be in such a hurry to pick our pockets and to make a mess of our fiscal and economic system.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the speeches today. I think many members have given us food for thought and have presented the views of their parties on this bill in a very emphatic way. I should particularly like to compliment the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), who unfortunately is not in the House at the moment. I think he made an excellent case for his party, one with which I do not agree but nevertheless he did it well. However, he ended by saying that he and his party could not agree with and would not support the bill now before us. I wish to direct my remarks to this point because in my opinion Canada cannot benefit if many of the aims of the bill are eliminated.

It is an undeniable fact, Mr. Speaker, that since confederation Canada has had in power more Liberal governments than governments of any other party, and the reason is simply that they have brought the greatest good to the greatest number of people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: With respect, I suggest to the hon. member for Regina East and to members of other parties who say they will not vote for this bill that they are denying the people of Canada something that perhaps should have been given to them many years ago but for the first time in history is being given to them by this government which was elected 3½ years ago.

The hon. member for Regina East had eight or nine objections to the bill and gave them as reasons why his party will not support it. He did not give one reason why they should support it, and I suggest that there are many. He says that this bill is against Canada and against the Canadian taxpayer. In all sincerity I ask him and hon. members to my immediate left, what about the 750,000 people who, for the first time in history, next year will not have to submit a tax form to the Department of National Revenue? Is this discrimination against them?

Mr. Danforth: They will be back on.

Mr. Whicher: My friend says that they will be back on. They will only be back on if Canada has the misfortune to allow the people to my left to form the next government. As things stand at the moment they will not be back on, Mr. Speaker. The government has said that every old age pensioner in Canada with means in excess of $80 a month will from now on not have to file an income tax return. There are 1,700,000 old age pensioners in Canada and over one million have benefits in addition to the $80 a month. Neither they nor, where it applies, their wives will have to file an income tax return, starting next year. I suggest this benefits not only the old age pensioner but the whole of Canada.

My hon. friend from Regina East and members of the Créditiste and Conservative parties have forgotten about these people. They have also forgotten about small business. My friends in the Conservative Party day after day cry, "What is going to happen to people who in the past have made $35,000 a year?" Because they are incorporated they are now paying tax of 21 per cent and, according to the white paper, will in future be in the same category as International Nickel, the Royal Bank of Canada and Canadian Pacific Railway. They cried and said, "You terrible people are going to tax the little man in the shoe store, the little dairy operator, the little incorporated farmer, the same as Canadian Pacific Railway, if he happens to have made $35,000 in a year." This is what happened, Mr. Speaker. Not only did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his wisdom make changes to proposals contained in the white paper on tax reform; he gave the incorporated, small businessmen a fair deal and changed the amount from $35,000 to $50,000.

An hon. Member: After a million letters of protest.

Mr. Whicher: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) went across this country from Newfoundland to Victoria and said it is simply not fair for small businesses to pay tax at 50 cents on the dollar which the big corporations in Canada pay. The fact is that they will not pay the same rate of tax as the big corporations. They will not begin paying those rates at $36,000. The profit figure has been increased to $50,000. If my friends to the left are fair they will admit to the people of Canada, as will some of our newspaper friends who in my opinion have sold a very dismal picture to Canadians, that there are many good points in this bill. Our newspaper friends in particular seem to have forgotten the good points; they have tried to sell points that may be bad.

The fact is, and perhaps I am exaggerating slightly, that old age pensioners who get an allowance on top of their $80 will not have to pay tax under the provisions of this bill. Small corporations or family corporations which formerly paid the full rate of tax after reaching the $35,000 level of profit will not pay that tax until they have reached $50,000 net profit each and every year.

My hon. friend from Regina East spoke of too little in the way of allowances being given to parents. Perhaps the government has not been as generous as it should be in this area. As I remember, if the wife is working and the family must pay for a baby sitter or child care, the allowance available will be $500 per child, up to a maximum of $2,000 per family. We know that this is not enough. I ask, how much was it in the Diefenbaker years? It was not one five-cent piece. To be fair, let me ask, what was it in the Pearson years? The allowance was not one five-cent piece. How much will it be in the Trudeau years? The allowance will be $500 per child, for a maximum of $2,000 per family. This situation is a lot better than it was. My friends are not fair when they suggest that these are simply a few peanuts being rolled across the table for the good of the people of Canada. These peanuts spell dollars and cents and the parents of Canada will appreciate them.

My hon. friend also suggested that we are not doing enough for the workmen of Canada. Let me remind him that they are entitled to deduct $150 per year to help pay for clothing and other expenses connected with work. My hon. friend mentioned the aged. I agree that they are not being paid enough. They were not getting enough money 25 years ago when the old age pensioners of Canada received only $40 a month. That was not enough, although it was given to them by a Liberal government. I submit, however, that we have done a reasonable job in bringing up the level from $40 to $167.50 a month, I think it is, for single people in certain cases and to $260 a month for a married couple. We have come a long way in this area and we have come a long way in granting deductions to people who work in factories and elsewhere. But this is only a beginning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, who started it?

Some hon. Members: We did.

Mr. Whicher: The Minister of Finance started it, with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In this way we are just beginning to implement what the Prime Minister has described as the just society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: I heard the hon. member for Regina East, to whom I have already referred and who tried to present his opinions in a realistic fashion, kick about the fact that capital gains will not be taxed at the same rate as income. He suggested that anyone earning $5,000 through a capital gain should be taxed in the same way as the man who makes $5,000 from his work. There are many who will agree with him. If a person makes money on the stock market, that is money he gets. There is no difference between that money and the money he gets through working as a plumber, electrician, farmer, politician or what-have-you. However, the fact is that this time last year not one nickel by way of capital gains tax was being charged against anybody in Canada, not even against people who might have made half a million dollars on the stock market. I therefore say that this is a step in the right direction. We took the first step; it was not taken by any previous government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: My hon. friend from Regina East, who unfortunately is not here now—he was kind enough to tell me that he had to leave and I appreciate his telling me—criticized the government because, as he alleges, under this legislation we have been giving special privileges to corporations and are taxing the little people too much. Let me set him straight. In Canada there are many people who do not pay any tax. As a result of this bill—and this cannot be denied—three-quarters of a million extra people will not pay taxes. So you cannot tell me that we are not giving consideration to little people.

Let us look at the situation for a minute. As a free enterpriser I am sick and tired of hearing people blaming the corporations for this and that. They only blame the corporations because corporations do not have a vote. Only people can vote. On the other hand, corporations make a great deal of money in Canada and elsewhere in the world. They pay great amounts of tax. This is one thing I want to impress on all members of the House: corporations in Canada pay more taxes than corporations in any other country. Therefore, it is simply not fair when my NDP friends suggest that we have given special privileges and concessions to corporations in Canada. They pay tax of 52 cents on every dollar, Mr. Speaker.

Although my friends to the left may talk about the banking interests and the interests of companies like International Nickel, Canadian Pacific Railway and other multinational corporations in Canada, I remind them that 52 cents of every dollar they make goes either to the department of revenue in the province of Ontario or to the Department of National Revenue in Ottawa. I think that for once someone should stand up and say that corporations are paying their way in Canada, more so than in the United States and even more so than they did under the former socialist government in England. When that government was in power a few years ago, the corporate tax was 35 per cent. In England they paid 35 cents on every dollar earned, whereas in Canada they pay 52 cents. Certainly that is so in Ontario.

My hon. friends complained about concessions to the mining industry. I am not a professional in the fields of mining, gas and oil and there is much about these industries that I do not know. However, I do know one thing. Even if a mine employs only a few people, it is better for the economy of Canada if that mine is open rather than closed. I suggest that many mines, oil wells and gas wells are operating in Canada as a result of sensible concessions given to them which enable them to employ Canadian labour. Their workers eat Canadian wheat, pay Canadian taxes and enjoy the Canadian way of life.

The hon. member said other things. For example, he is against taxing inherited wealth. I admit this caused me some concern. On the other hand, in the past few years many Canadians have left this country because of our succession duties and estate taxes. I am worried about firms such as the T. Eaton Company. In my opinion this firm belongs to a great Canadian family. They have done a wonderful job in Canada and have made a great deal of money. Their great financial resources are primarily in stores situated right across Canada. They employ more Canadian labour than any other company with the exception of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

What would happen if the head of this great corporation should die? What would happen if they were stuck with even a 25 per cent succession duty? Obviously, the Department of National Revenue would not take the goods in the T. Eaton stores. They would demand hard cash. How would they get this cash? I suggest that after you reach a certain peak that cash has to come by selling-out. How do you sell-out, Mr. Speaker? We talked about this yesterday. In many instances you have to sell to American interests in order to pay inheritance taxes. For this reason I am very pleased that we have taken at least one step to eliminate this huge tax. It is not just Eaton's who will not in future pay inheritance taxes on succession duties. The Canadian farmer will not have to pay any estate tax. This is one of the examples my friends to the left have given us for the past two years when talking about farmers, family farms, and so on.

How can a father leave a family farm to a son when he has to pay succession duties and so on? He will now have to pay a capital gains tax. I suggest hon. members to my left do not fully appreciate the feeling of free enterprise in the Canadian agricultural industry. They are quite willing to pay a capital gains tax. You do not pay unless you are going to make money. Every hon. member to my left would be glad to pay $25,000 in capital gains tax tomorrow morning because they would know perfectly well that if they were paying $25,000 they would be making $100,000. What kind of nonsense is it when they say they are against all taxes such as this? This type of tax is imposed in every western country. The farmers of western Canada will accept their responsibility, the same as everybody else.

I could go on about these things, but I remind hon. members to my left that when they vote against this bill, as they undoubtedly will, they will be voting against increased exemptions. Every member to my left has said, if not in this House then in letters to constituents, that the exemptions are not high enough and the Liberal government has only paltry feelings for the poor of this country when it raises the exemption from $1,000 to $1,500. I say to them that $1,500 is a lot better than $1,000 or $1,200. This government has taken the initiative to bring this about.

When these members vote against the bill they will be voting against increased exemptions and a capital gains tax that is in every other western country. In my opinion it should have been introduced in this country many years ago. Ninety-eight per cent of the people are for a capital gains tax. When my friends to the left vote against it they will be insulting the intelligence of almost every Canadian. When members vote against this bill they will be voting against exemptions for parents. This should have taken place many years ago. It is being started by the government and is embodied in this bill. It deserves our support. Members who vote against the bill will be voting against exemptions for workers, plumbers, electricians, members of the United Automobile Workers, thousands of workers for the New Democratic Party, farmers, clergymen, teachers and, in fact, everyone else. These people are to be allowed only $150 a year but it is much better than nothing.

In conclusion, I emphasize the fact that we started the old age pension at $40 a month. This was started by a Liberal government. I agree that $40 a month was not enough and neither is $137.50 for a single person and $260 for a married couple. Over the years we have increased these benefits and in the future we will increase them. I urge all hon. members to forget about their party loyalty in this regard and, for once, vote for the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH ENVIRONMENTAL CONTROL COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. Tom H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved that Bill C-49, respecting environmental control, be read the second time and referred to the Special Committee on Environmental Pollution.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in October we observed Canadian Environment Week for the first time. Scarcely more than one year ago it was just a dream of many active and aware citizens of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta who saw the potential of such a week and the impact which could be created by focusing the environmental concerns of the total population of this country within a specific timeframe. That dream became a reality on March 30 of this year when Bill C-25 received royal assent. The credit for the passage of Bill C-25 lies not with me but with all the members of this House and of the Senate.

Last March, Mr. Speaker, when we passed Bill C-25, we gave the lie to the detractors of this chamber who claim that we are always putting petty, partisan disagreements ahead of the needs of this country. I reject such charges, Mr. Speaker, for in the consideration of Bill C-25 the House of Commons put aside party labels, put aside personal differences in a spirit of co-operation which demonstrated clearly that the struggle against pollution is one of the priority concerns of members from every corner of this House. In that same spirit of co-operation, and as part of that same anti-pollution struggle, I ask the House to give favourable consideration to the bill before us this afternoon.

Bill C-49 seeks to establish an Environmental Control Council of Canada which would have the responsibility of recommending minimum anti-pollution standards and generally advising on the methods and means of improving Canada's environment. Hon. members will note that this bill closely resembles the Economic Council of Canada Act which was passed in 1963. This resemblance is intentional. I feel that there is need for an independent council to provide the kind of advice in environmental terms that the Economic Council does in economic terms. The environmental council, like the Economic Council, would be non-governmental in nature. The latest annual report of the Economic Council of Canada contains a section describing the origin of the council. Within it is the following statement:

—there was also a growing awareness that efforts to deal with these problems on an ad hoc basis, with attention focussed mainly on short-term considerations, could result in the continuation, recurrence or perhaps even intensification, of some of these problems in the future.

The problems referred to are, of course, economic but I suggest that a similar danger exists today with respect to environmental problems and that the same statement could express the basis for the establishment of an Environmental Control Council of Canada.

As a planning body, the Economic Council has set out an average growth-path for the Canadian economy which it regards as a feasible and desirable target at which to aim. It uses this target growth-path as a means of judging current economic performance. Similarly, the environmental control council would develop long-range plans to improve the quality of the environment. It would advise and recommend to the government minimum standards for air, water and land quality in order, in the words of the bill, "that Canada may enjoy a high and consistent rate of pollution free air, water and land." Among other things, the guidelines and projections of the environmental council would be valuable as benchmarks against which to measure our progress in the war against pollution.

The primary function of the Economic Council is in the field of research. The need for reliable knowledge and intensive study into the area of economics was felt by many persons, in particular senior economic policymakers and administrators. The council has more than adequately supplied this need. Likewise, research into the complex problems of environmental management and control would be a primary role of the environmental control council.

The urgent need for research to discover solutions to our pollution problems cannot be disputed. No restrictions would be placed upon the council's power to initiate whatever research projects it deemed necessary. The environmental council would study how technological change may affect Canada's environment as a whole. It would be in a position to initiate discussions with labour, management and consumers aimed at exploring in depth the consequences of and cures for industrial pollution.

The Economic Council of Canada has become an instrument of public information and instruction. Its annual review, which receives extensive coverage by the mass media, serves to broaden the understanding by Canadians of the greater economic issues facing our country. This is good because it must be recognized that economic policy cannot be far in advance of general public understanding. Thus, the positive role of instructor adopted by the Economic Council has played an important part in raising the level of understanding of those of us who are not economists.

In similar manner, Mr. Speaker, the environmental control council, providing accurate, unbiased and therefore credible information on the present and future state of our environment, could be of immense service. As in the realm of economics, before progressive environmental legislation can be enacted we as a people must be fully informed and aware of the situation in order that we may appreciate, accept and support necessary antipollution controls.

In my view there is always a place for independent evaluation of existing governmental policies and practices. An over-all view is necessary because of the natural tendency of those who have been involved in the creation and administration of policy to lose the ability to assess objectively the effectiveness of those policies. They tend to become blind to the need for new departures. The Economic Council has sought to satisfy such a need in the area of economic policy. An environmental council would do the same in the field of ecology. Being independent, the environmental council would be in a position to freely criticize government policy, should this be necessary, and bring new views concerning general or particular policies and programs to the attention of those who must bear the ultimate political responsibility for them.

Indeed, under the terms of this bill the council would be required to seek maximum consultation with both senior levels of government. Too often in the past, technical difficulties over governmental jurisdictions have hindered the implementation of environmental control legislation. It would be my hope that the council would help to replace this tunnel-vision with a bridge of co-operation.

The time has come, Mr. Speaker, to establish an environmental council in Canada. In fact, the time is overdue. Over a year has passed since I introduced this bill. During that time a number of individuals and organizations have called for the establishment of such a council. Among these have been the Conference on Ecology and Responsibility, the Canadian Wildlife Federation and the Science Council of Canada. Unfortunately, the only positive step to date has been the announcement of the pending appointment of an environmental advisory council to brief the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis). As the bulletin of the Canadian Wildlife Federation points out, no matter what merits this private advisory council might possess, "it would be no substitute for an independent environmental council studying issues much broader than the responsibilities of any one department of government and reporting publicly on its findings and recommendations."

In recommending to the government the creation of an environmental council, the Science Council of Canada in its report "This land is their land" has this to say:

A major step in planning for the future would be the creation of a non-political organization sponsored by the government which would have, as its basic role, the provision to the public of facts about their environment upon which they may base adequate value judgments. The cost of sacrificing even immediate material welfare for a quality environment may not be high, but if it is, Canadians deserve to have the facts and a chance to make their choice—

An independent Crown corporation, with a directorate representative of environmental interests and a small professional staff, is suggested. A suitable name for such an organization might be an Environmental Council of Canada. It would conduct and publish studies and forecasts of environmental problems in Canada, and make analytical reviews of environmental questions which are the subject of public interest. It should strive to become a major source of informed opinion on environmental problems.

The council should be a valuable adviser to government. Ideally, it should stimulate particular ministries to an appreciation of the interrelationship between resource uses and the necessity for considering problems in a larger context; it should draw attention to gaps in the support for environmentally-oriented research; it should provide the inspiration and leverage for new kinds of activities in government departments.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-49 fits the description given by the Science Council, that the need for an Environmental Control Council of Canada has been demonstrated and that the time to act is now. Bill C-49 is not perfect. Neither was Bill C-25, yet we were able to hammer out the problems in committee and come up with a bill which was a credit to the people of Canada. We have done it before, we can do it again. Let us send the bill to committee and get to work.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who introduced this bill suggested that at times it is possible for the members of this House to set aside political and partisan considerations and work together. I believe there is one subject on which this is possible, and that is pollution control. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that I give this particular bill my absolute support; the idea behind it is a good one.

One of the reasons I feel bound to support the bill is that I proposed a similar bill some time ago. It did not have the same title. In my bill I referred to the environmental council of Canada, but it is so close to the hon. member's idea that the difference in name is inconsequential. At that time, September of 1970, when I made a report to the spokesman of our party on environmental matters I felt that one of the things that was missing in pollution control structures in Canada was the very type of body the hon. member is proposing in his bill. No one is here to accuse anybody else in regard to who stole whose ideas. Ideas often develop concurrently and I think it is to the credit of all hon. members that they do.

There is no doubt that all hon. members of the House are concerned with environmental pollution and how to meet it. But the structures for doing so has been one of the problems on which we have fallen short in the past. All the ideas that from time to time have been suggested have been handed around from one department to another. We now have a department that concerns itself primarily with environmental matters, a government department that is merely concerned with co-ordination as such. What is missing from this structure at the moment is the establishment of some type of independent body that can come to conclusions, similar to the way the Economic Council of Canada operates. Such a structure, I think, is good and would be very useful in the present set-up.

I have to voice some reservation though, not about the bill but about the way pollution control is carried out. A pollution control council, a governmental body, does not necessarily mean that we will move ahead in this regard. An environmental control council or an environmental council of Canada would help and advise, but we cannot take any pride in setting up another body of government because in some cases governmental bodies can hold us back just as much as they can move us ahead. For example, if there is too much red tape or if there are too many bodies that concern themselves with pollution control, this can hold us back. I do not suggest that this bill would hold us back rather than move us forward. The problem at the moment is that despite the fact that we have had during the last two years several bills dealing with pollution control that have begun to set up structures to meet the problem, we have not yet moved ahead to the point where I feel the government is giving priority to dealing with pollution control over and above the mere setting up of pollution control structures.

We now have a Department of the Environment. We have a Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) and we have a deputy minister of the environment. I believe that the minister and the deputy minister, as well as the members of the House, are concerned about environmental control and would not hesitate to use what powers they have. The problem is that no money is being provided. I can think of half a dozen areas where pollution control ideas have been put forward but the money to put them into effect has not been forthcoming. At the moment there is a great need for a broadly expanded system of air pollution monitoring in Canada. There has been a monitoring system set up under the general supervision of the Department of the Environment which has carried on the work formerly done by the Department of National Health and Welfare and by some provincial organizations.

We have an across-Canada structure, but it is still very deficient in scope and falls far short of what we actually need. So do the standards. We have not yet set up sufficient national standards in order to determine whether or not our air is being polluted, in what areas and in what manner. Here at least is one area in which money could be used to good purpose. I asked the Minister of the Environment about this particular problem on at least two occasions and he informed me that there are a couple of additional monitoring stations being built. However, these are merely an attempt to keep pace with the rate at which pollution generally has been increasing.

So while I support entirely the hon. member's proposition that we set up an environmental council, whether it be called an environmental control council or something similar, these structures in themselves do not move us necessarily forward in the field of pollution control; they merely give us the ability to act. In order to carry out that action we need money and the will to take initiative. To illustrate even further the non-partisan or non-political approach that there seems to be to environmental questions, the national meeting of the Progressive Conservative party, held this week in Ottawa, adopted a resolution which is also very close to the provisions in the bill the hon. member has introduced. In a paper entitled "A program for pollution control," under the heading "Government structures" it is stated:

The first requirement of an effective national program of pollution control is complete and accurate information about the extent of the present deterioration of the environment in all parts of Canada. In addition, a comprehensive inventory of the natural resources of Canada is required, and quality standards for each major resource should be established.

Then, after stating the National Research Council has been doing valuable work in this area and setting out what is further required, the paper reads in part:

Associated with the action force should be an Environmental Council of Canada similar in composition and purpose to the Science Council of Canada, to advise the Canadian government and Parliament and the Canadian public about particular environmental matters and to recommend on a continuing basis both specific short-term and long-term measures for pollution abatement. The council should be composed of private citizens and members of groups outside of government, and might involve citizens' anti-pollution groups, the universities, industry, labour and conservation bodies.

This sounds so close to the speech made by the hon. member who has sponsored this bill that I wonder where he got his wording. The proposals are identical, and I am inclined to think that whoever speaks next for the NDP will take a similar approach to the problem. The idea that has been put forward seems to have the unanimous support of the House. That is about all I want to say on the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Still lacking in the government is any appearance of giving pollution control a national priority. I admit that the Department of the Environment has been established. There have been amendments to the Shipping Act which are helpful. The Canada Water Act, which was not worth very much, was enacted and there has been other legislation brought forward. The structures are appearing, but the will to act has not yet come forward.

The government has been absorbed in economic problems. It has been absorbed in the massive tax bill that we are presently discussing. It has been absorbed in so many other things that the Department of the Environment and environmental matters seem to have been neglected. I will not say they are completely ignored because I am sure the Minister of the Environment is sincere in his efforts. Yet to my mind we have not yet seen any exhibition of a feeling that the government is taking the lead. Rather, the government has exhibited a feeling of holding the fort in case of being accused of doing nothing.

We have switched structures around and made different people responsible for different things. We have brought in legislation that appears to be beneficial but we are still dragging our feet on so many things. We passed the Shipping Act months ago but the regulations under it have still not been promulgated. I admit that they pose a problem. At the time it seemed to me, and it still seems to me, that the government rushed the bill through in order to give the appearance of being concerned, without knowing what regulations it would adopt. The implementation of the bill has been ineffective, as a result, and in fact has been found to be impractical in some cases.

I support the idea of a council, if it will help, but I ask that the government give some leadership in its priorities, that it show us that it really means what it says when it utters the same cliches as everybody else, that we have to do something about pollution in Canada. We have not seen this yet. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that this bill if implemented will add one more structure, it might be a structure that would prod the government in the same manner as the Economic Council of Canada. If it will do that, if it will be one more voice that will keep prodding and prodding for action on pollution control and will keep on presenting ideas, then I certainly support it.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise in this debate on a subject as lofty as pollution control. I commend the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Goode) for introducing his bill. The opportunity of speaking on a subject like pollution control is always a welcome one for any of us here because it is like motherhood, everyone is in favour of it, although these days I do not know if the analogy is good because there are so many people who are trying to downgrade even motherhood, what with the doing away of innocent babes in the wombs of mothers, and so on, that is advocated. In the result, I wonder if motherhood is still the lofty thing it used to be. In any event, in the case of pollution certainly it is on everyone's lips and we are all in favour of controlling pollution.

Although I have a great deal of respect and admiration for my colleague, I am afraid I cannot agree with the details of the bill. I think I understand what he is trying to do with it and I commend him for that, but I think that establishing a council for environmental control is not the answer. We are establishing all kinds of councils. We have more bureaucracy than we need in this country, and the more groups we establish, I think the less effective we are likely to be.

As it is now, we have a federal Department of the Environment which has many people working on this problem. We have a department of the environment in each of the provinces. We have the council of resource and environmental ministers which meets periodically and discusses these matters. Therefore there is co-operation and co-ordination among the provinces. Also, we have a number of citizens' groups which have been dealing with the subject.

First, Mr. Speaker, I believe pollution control is not a question of one government or another but must be a co-operative venture among all levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal. Further, I believe that it has to be on a worldwide scale, not only in one country. Therefore I was glad to have the opportunity of assisting at a conference in Bonn a few months ago with the parliamentary secretary to the minister where we discussed the question of pollution.

I wonder if the public, which is very concerned about pollution, is always fully aware of the actual situation. Unfortunately, some things are exaggerated in this regard. Once in a while the imagination of the public is caught up in such a thing as pollution, so we must have great, dramatic stories brought forth. There is no denying that pollution is one of the most important problems in the modern world. However, if we are to analyse the problem properly I do not think we can be emotional about it because emotionalism in this case will cloud the over-all picture.

In my part of the country, northern Ontario, we have seen the question of pollution being overdone. We have had programs on the CBC which discussed pollution in northwestern Ontario, for example, where pulp and paper mills were accused of being dreadful culprits, and chemical plants were polluting rivers and lakes. According to the way it was described, if anyone in northern Ontario were to eat a fish pulled out of a river or lake up there, that person would be sure to die of mercury poisoning.

This is the kind of attitude taken and the kind of feeling left in the minds of viewers.

I wonder whether it really helps when we go to that extreme. Certainly in northern Ontario our whole economy is dependent upon industries such as pulp and paper. The contribution of these companies to the development of the north is tremendous. I believe they have done everything they can to keep up with the times and try to correct the faults which exist in their plants regarding pollution of lakes, rivers and the air. The expansion and modernization of these plants and their efforts to control pollution effectively cost a great deal of money.

In this case I believe there should be help from government if they are to succeed. There are many old mills in northern Ontario, unlike the situation in western Canada. This poses a real problem. I think at this point the federal government has not done a great deal in a tangible way to help the pulp and paper industry generally. In the past few days, if I remember correctly, I read a news report which stated that the federal government will take new measures in order to help the pulp and paper industry. This is very good news, particularly for the people of northern Ontario who are so dependent on this industry. I would support any move that would allow these companies to go ahead and put in the changes necessary to clean up the pollution created in the lakes and in the air.

I believe the forest products industry in Canada is one of the most important of all our industries. It is time the federal government examined this industry and helped it in any way possible. In my constituency there is the Abitibi Paper Company and the Spruce Falls Pulp and Paper Company. These people have spent a great deal of money over the past few years in an effort to put in pollution-abatement equipment. In the past ten years the Abitibi Paper Company has spent nearly $18 million in its pollution-abatement policy. This I believe is significant. When a company spends that kind of money, particularly when the market is the way it is these days, I believe it should expect some help from the government.

One subject of pollution which interests me particularly is that of recycling. I have spent a considerable amount of time examining this question, especially the recycling of garbage. I believe there should be more research by the government in this respect. I think there should be more co-ordination among governments. I notice that in Canadian universities in the past number of years a major study has been made of this subject. Governments of other countries are undertaking similar studies, but there does not seem to be any co-ordination. In other words, there is duplication and triplication of effort. If anything is to be done at the forthcoming meeting at Stockholm in June, it seems to me there should be a desire on the part of the nations of the world to get together in their research so that we do not have the same kind of research going on in various countries.

I think one of the main causes of pollution is the ever-growing amount of refuse, or garbage if you like, both domestic and industrial. Eventually, refuse disposal systems will have to be based on the principle of recycling; that is to say, we will have to imitate nature and re-use everything that we now throw away. On earth we have our own thin envelope of soil, water and air. We have plants and animals and an environment that is constantly being reshaped and renewed by nature. It is an endless cycle of birth, growth, death and decay. It is constantly renewing itself by means of its carbon atoms, its oxygen, its nitrogen and its phosphorous compounds. There is no such thing as waste in this cycle; the natural earthly scheme is a process of self-cleansing.

It is up to man to imitate this cycling nature, but as our numbers grow we thoughtlessly sow the seeds of our own destruction by defiling the world we live in. Advancements in technology are not to blame, but human indifference is; and we seem to continue to ignore the fact that in the end we shall have to pay for our shortsightedness. With careful study and better management we should be able to add to the quality of our environment. We can stop downgrading our resources and instead put the accent on renewability. This will mean taking a broader approach to industrial development, town planning and the use of leisure time.

This business of pollution needs monitoring on a worldwide scale. We need co-ordination among all levels of government in our country, but there also must be co-operation among the nations of the world if we are to succeed. Pollutants are no respecters of man-made boundaries. They travel across continents with the winds. They are flushed into the sea and go to the other end of the world. They can be discharged in central Canada and found in whales in Hudson Bay.

If we can keep our pollutants to ourselves and everyone else does likewise, we will serve the best interests of mankind. Our fight against pollution is twofold. We must clean up the present mess, of course, and we must prevent further pollution. We have to keep our poisons, and so on, inside our own fences. However, I do not believe the answer is to form another council. If there is anything we do not need it is more bureaucracy. I think the problem is well before us and is well understood.

The governments of the world are coming more and more to realize the importance of the problem and to work together toward its solution. We have pollution conferences here and there. A conference of worldwide interest is the one to be held in Stockholm in June, to which Canada undoubtedly will be making an important contribution.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-49 before us this afternoon is an interesting piece of legislation. I can say at the outset that our group has every intention of endorsing the principle of the legislation, which is the setting up of an environmental council. I must say, however, I was rather amused by the opening remarks of the sponsor of the bill. He spoke about the groups in this House uniting on this subject and foregoing partisanship when we consider the need for this council.

I would like to ask the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, where he was many months ago when a motion to establish an environmental council was first moved by our group in this House. It was moved in the committee where discussion took place. I cannot recall the sponsor of this legislation giving the members of our group any support in our drive to have an environmental council of Canada set up along the very lines which he is suggesting in the legislation we are debating. It seems to me that this partisanship should have been considered many months ago when the basic issue was before the committee and the House. The government should have been pressured at that time to bring in legislation to establish such a council.

There is no doubt that an independent environmental council would be a tremendous asset so far as environmental problems in Canada are concerned, and I disagree with the previous speaker who said that we do not need this type of council. We do need it desperately, for the following reasons. We have the Economic Council of Canada. I know that on many occasions the government has been extremely unhappy with the reports that council has put out to the public. It is supposed to be a council divorced from government, a council that will examine very closely every aspect of the economic activity of this nation and then put them in a report to let Canadians know where, in the opinion of the council, we should be going and where the government is getting off the track.

Just as we have a council in the economic field, we need one in the environmental field. The same type of individual is needed, people who will carry out a close scrutiny of all the problems of pollution of the environment which affect our nation. Then, without any political pressure at all, they would give a report to the Canadian nation which would give us guidance as to where we should be going and what we should be doing, and which would suggest methods of meeting the increasing environmental problems which are causing so much distress not only in Canada but all over the world. I appeal to the government seriously to consider this suggestion in the bill. It is a suggestion that has been made on numerous occasions in the House, namely, to set up a council such as this—because if any nation in the world needs guidance in environmental problems, it is ours.

I should like briefly to point out several fields where I believe we are deficient in dealing with pollution and environmental problems so far as our nation is concerned. We have to a great degree fragmented our approach to the pollution problem. We have divided the authority for pollution problems among a number of departments. It is true that we have set up a co-ordinating committee, but in the past we have found that it has not been working. Too many departments ignore the over-all need for environmental protection, and as a consequence the regulations and laws which were laid down many years ago have not been enforced by the various departments, for a variety of reasons. For example, someone in charge of shipping is faced with a problem dealing with the environment. If the action necessary to deal with the pollution problem would upset the economic aspect of shipping, there is a tendency for the department to forget all about it. The same thing applies to fisheries and forestry, to the mining industry and to other departments. This is why an over-all environmental council is desperately needed. It is needed to give Canada a broad picture of what our environmental problems are, how we should deal with them and what changes we should make interdepartmentally to achieve the goal which, I presume, would be outlined by this council.

I would point out very briefly two or three of the major aspects of the environmental problem which I feel have been almost totally neglected by this government. We talk of dealing with pollution problems and environmental problems in a piecemeal method, yet there is no doubt that there are three factors which we cannot separate. One of them is the development of natural resources. Another is population and pollution. They are intertwined; you cannot separate them. For example, what have we done about population and our urban problems? It has been pointed out by experts in every field that we are getting into more and more trouble so far as urban development is concerned. This is part of the population problem facing our nation. Next to nothing is being done by this government or by any individual in it in this respect. We are not getting the guidance or the direction that is needed. We are just going along, hoping that these problems will solve themselves eventually.

Mr. Corbin: How can you say that?

Mr. Harding: If you do not know that and you are interested in this problem, then I want to tell you that very little has been given to the House in the way of direction to solve these problems.

Mr. Corbin: We have done more than any government in 100 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: Let me tell the hon. member that more pollution and more environmental problems are facing us than have faced any government in the past 100 years. I have no hesitation in saying that there are all kinds of pollution problems facing us, such as mine effluent flowing into rivers, and nothing is being done to rectify it by the department concerned. I can give the House all kinds of examples. The point I am making is that this council could point out to the government and to the departments concerned that, for example, things are going wrong in the north or in some other section of Canada, and it could suggest changes.

The government is trying to give a false impression to the Canadian people, namely, that we are really driving on all these issues while in reality we are only touching the top and moving very gradually, and not too effectively, in our efforts to clean them up. No one is saying that all these steps should be taken at once.

My friend, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), spoke about national standards. We do not have them in Canada. This should be another objective of the council. We do not want pollution havens in British Columbia, in Newfoundland or in any other province of Canada. Unless we adopt national standards, this will happen. We need an unbiased council to point out these things to the government and to urge governments at the provincial level to get together and prepare a program which would solve most of the jurisdictional and other problems which face us in this field.

I do not want to talk out this bill. As I indicated before, our party is in favour of the principle of setting up an environmental control council. We would like to see it completely divorced from the government, and independent. This is the only way we will get a real alternative to the approaches of the various political parties and the government of the day. We desperately need this, Mr. Speaker.

I shall now resume my seat, but as the sponsor of the bill indicated in his opening remarks I hope we will see the House unified on this problem, without any more partisanship. This is a good idea, and the bill could be passed by the House this afternoon and sent to committee. However, I am afraid that it will be axed by the hon. friends of the sponsor. I hope this will not happen, but we shall see in the next ten minutes.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I hoped that the hon. member who just spoke would not again come up with the old party line of partisan politics which creeps into every speech and address they make. Some members may be opposed to this measure, but not just because they are Liberals. In fact the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) and I do not believe that this is a good idea. I do not think it is a particularly good idea just now. Surely this points up our personal point of view on this bill, not the political one.

I talked to the sponsor of the bill earlier. He assured me that there was a typographical error in clause 11 and that it was his intention to make a change. I assume this will be done when the bill gets to committee. Clause 11 deals with organization. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a group of people who print bills and say automatically that head offices shall be in the city of Ottawa. As expressed to me, the hon. member's intention was that the head office of this particular council should be located in Burnaby. Because the amendment was not made I would like to advance an argument on behalf of Sarnia. It is a beautiful community with a miniscule amount of pollution and it has successfully combated most of its big problems. It is approachable by land, sea and air.

An hon. Member: By sea?

Mr. Cullen: The Seaway. I would welcome the hon. member to Sarnia, as he welcomed me to Cape Breton. But he did not tell me that he had arranged a hurricane this summer so that I could not make the trip. However, I will make it next year.

Mr. Speaker, Sarnia, Burnaby or even Edmonton could serve as the headquarters of this council. In Sarnia we have not only the provincial-federal jurisdictional problem but also the international problem of America-Canada. I am happy to say that this problem is being recognized and just this week we learned from the Department of Transport that studies are being carried on by American and Canadian authorities on the problem of the Great Lakes. This type of council could look into that problem.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) indicated that as far as shipping is concerned we have good law with which to curb pollution, but such law is not effective if the guilty parties cannot be established. At the moment these studies are attempting to establish who dumped bilgewater into the Great Lakes and destroyed the beautiful beaches of Lake Huron.

I am opposed to this council at the moment because I think the Department of the Environment should be given an opportunity to prove that it means what it says. The government has indicated that this minister has the responsibility of looking after the environment in Canada so far as federal jurisdiction and power are concerned. It is my submission that if the council suggested in the hon. member's bill is appointed, it will dilute the power of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), but what is more important—and I think the opposition should be aware of this—is that it will dilute his responsibility for the environment.

I do not think a true analogy can be drawn between this council and the Economic Council. In this area, if someone raised the question I think the minister could say, "This is something that should be studied by the environmental council, and they have not had an opportunity to do that because they have been working in another area". That would give him an opportunity to avoid his responsibility.

I agree with the hon. member for Cochrane who has said that we have too many structures. We know where the water and air and land is polluted, and we know where there is too much noise. We do not need another council to point to that kind of pollution. Mr. Speaker, I would worry about the appointment of a council such as this. Aside from diluting the power of the minister, it would go a long way toward diluting his responsibility.

I am surprised that the opposition would support the establishment of such a council at a time when the government has accepted its responsibility. I was also surprised when the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka said that the government had not shown leadership. He can only say that because he does not acknowledge or recognize the wonderful actions taken by this government. There was an interjection by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Corbin) that this government has done more to counter pollution than any government in the past 100 years.

It is very easy to say that the clean water bill is there but it does not do anything, and that the clean air bill is there but nothing has been done. When the Conservatives were in power I do not think they had heard of pollution other than was exemplified in some of the speeches made in this House, which I read in the newspapers when I was an ordinary citizen of this country.

I am opposed to the council being established at this time, Mr. Speaker. I think when the minister has seen to his responsibility, if we then get into areas which are more sophisticated as far as policy is concerned we might need an environmental council such as is suggested by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Goode) in his bill. By then we would have the expertise gained from several years of trying to solve the problem and could form an environmental council composed of individuals with sophistication and knowledge of the problem.

Mr. Paproski: And form a new government.

Mr. Cullen: It will only be a new Liberal government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour assigned for the consideration of private members' business has expired. This House stands adjourned until Monday, December 13, at two o'clock p.m.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NOTICE OF TIME ALLOCATION MOTION FOR THIRD READING STAGE OF INCOME TAX BILL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that it has not been possible for the representatives of the several parties in the House to reach an agreement under Standing Order 75A, nor has it been possible under Standing Order 75B, with regard to an allocation of time to the third reading stage of Bill C-259, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act.

I am therefore giving notice of my intention to propose at the next sitting of the House a motion under Standing Order 75C that debate at the third reading stage of the bill conclude on Friday, which will provide an additional three days after tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour, of course, held on this point of order the last time this unfortunate action was announced that you are bound by the statement of the minister and we cannot go behind it. That is a precedent and of course we accept it. However, because of what I said before I think I am entitled to state on a point of order that, while I knew of the discussions which were being held as to the question of time allocation, I did not participate in them. Without the safeguards provided by the proposed amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), which view was unfortunately not shared by other parties, it was the position of this party that we could not agree to a limitation within the time mentioned by the minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL MEETING AND CONVERSATIONS WITH EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMISSION AND CERTAIN FOREIGN MINISTERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the course of three days in Brussels last week I attended the December ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic Council, continued our conversations with the European Economic Commission and had meetings with the French Foreign Minister, Mr. Schumann, and the Acting Foreign Minister of Greece, Mr. Palamas.

Western Europe, with Britain on the threshold of the community and already being drawn into its councils, is the scene of some of the most dynamic developments in the world today. The negotiations for the enlargement and deepening of the community in their final stage are paralleled by East-West negotiations over the status of Berlin, and by promising moves toward a modus vivendi between the Federal German Republic and the German Democratic Republic. These developments, taken together, are bringing about a Europe more soundly based economically and with a healthier and saner political climate.

Progress on Berlin is the most dramatic of these developments. Since the Second World War, Berlin has been a focus of the East-West confrontation and unsettled relations between the Federal and Democratic Republics of Germany a major stumbling-block in the search for détente.

Without the active support of NATO, Chancellor Brandt would have been unable to negotiate, on a basis of equality, the treaties with the U.S.S.R. and Poland, nor could the Federal Republic, acting alone, have any real hope of reaching a modus vivendi with the German Democratic Republic.

It is against this background of forward movement in Central Europe that the NATO meeting should be seen. The two major preoccupations of the alliance, and I believe of the Soviet Union and the countries of the Warsaw Pact, are the holding of a conference on security and co-operation in Europe and the negotiation of mutual and balanced force reductions, usually referred to by the acronym MBFR.

On the conference, ministers reaffirmed the position they adopted at the June meeting, that NATO countries are ready to enter upon multilateral preparations for a conference when a satisfactory conclusion of the Berlin talks has been reached. Meanwhile, they agreed to keep in touch with the Finnish government which has offered Helsinki as a site for conversations on this subject. Two of the stages needed for a Berlin settlement have been concluded. The Soviet Union has made conclusion of the final stage contingent upon ratification of the Warsaw and Moscow treaties. This may be expected within the next few months.

What is important, however, is the process set in motion by the conference concept. The conference, whenever it is held, and whatever its outcome, is only one element of a wider negotiating process. The substantial gains I have noted in Central Europe have their foundation in the realistic "Ostpolitik" of Chancellor Brandt. But I wonder whether they would have been achieved had the conference idea not been accepted in principle and had NATO not made of the Berlin element an essential pre-condition for a conference. It is not unusual in diplomacy that movement toward a certain goal, in this case the conference, itself results in the resolution of long-standing problems. Similarly, it may well be that the conference will set in train further movement toward easing of tensions.

On MBFR, the alliance noted with regret the lack of a Soviet response to the offer to send an explorer, in the person of Mr. Brosio, former Secretary-General of NATO, to Moscow. This was a proposal made by Canada at the June meeting. In the course of the past ten days both Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Kosygin have renewed expressions of Soviet interest in force reductions but confined themselves to generalities. If the Soviets would receive the explorer, progress would be made positively and quickly toward substantive negotiations. That they have not done so, I believe, reflects the fact that the Soviets and their friends have not yet worked out either their procedural or their substantive position on MBFR and are having real difficulty in deciding how to respond.

The alliance is not making negotiations on MBFR a precondition to the holding of a conference, but ministers noted that if a conference was to address itself effectively to the problems of security in Europe it should deal in a suitable manner with measures to reduce the military confrontation.

Ministers took note of the strains imposed upon the alliance by continuing monetary and trading problems affecting member nations. At Canada's suggestion, it was agreed that these problems should be kept under continuing review.

My discussions with Mr. Malfatti, President of the European Economic Commission, Mr. Mansholt, Vice-President, and other senior officials came at a particularly apposite time, on the eve of the Council of Ministers' consideration of United States proposals for resolution of the monetary and trading problems now facing us. I told Mr. Malfatti, as I had told Mr. Rogers in Washington a week earlier, that Canada is willing to make its contribution to a general settlement but does not regard bilateral negotiation of the removal of the surcharge as either feasible or desirable.

I stressed to the commission Canada's interest in eventual movement toward freer trade and expressed the hope that once current difficulties are overcome the commission would show willingness to move further in this direction. I also took up with the commission specific problems of access to the Common Market for Canadian agricultural and forest products, in particular, rapeseed.

I am glad to be able to report that I found that attitudes to Canada have become more realistic in the past year. The commission now has a much clearer concept of Canada's identity and its position in the trading world. There is no longer a tendency to lump Canada with the United States. This changed attitude is a direct result of the frequent and frank exchanges we have had with the commission and with the ministers who make up the council. These we will continue, and I again stressed to Mr. Malfatti and his colleagues our wish to have consultation with the community put upon a more systematic basis. This is not an easy matter, since consultation at the ministerial level such as we have with our other major trading partners, like the United States and Japan, involves the Council of Ministers, consisting today of foreign ministers of six countries, soon to be ten. Until this final goal can be achieved we are working toward regular consultation with the commission and pursuing our interests in bilateral consultations with ministers of the member nations of the community. The setting up of consultative machinery was also the principal issue I discussed with the French Foreign Minister, Mr. Schumann.

My conversation with Mr. Schumann was one of a continuing series in which we discussed many aspects of our shared interests and particularly our responsibilities as major Francophone countries.

While I left Canada intending ro meet Mr. Palamas, Acting Foreign Minister of Greece, as it happened the meeting took place at his request. He wished to urge upon me the need for a continuing Canadian contribution to the United Nations force on Cyprus. I explained the Canadian position, that we will maintain our forces in Cyprus only so long as we believe that their presence can contribute to the reaching of a settlement and not just to allow the parties to the dispute to put off a settlement indefinitely.

I expressed to Mr. Palamas the deep concern many Canadians feel about the situation in Greece. Mr. Palamas assured me of his government's firm intention to implement the constitution progressively and restore democracy in due course. I urged upon him the need for the Greek government, if it sets store by the opinion of others, to act in accordance with its words. Elections, I suggested, would go far in this direction. I can tell the House that Mr. Palamas was left in no doubt of the depth and strength of Canada's concern for democracy in Greece.

I should now like to table the communiqué issued after the meeting of the North Atlantic Alliance, and suggest, if the House agrees, that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for his statement and his usual courtesy in making it available to the opposition spokesmen at something earlier than the last minute. It would be easy to say that the statement was innocuous or vacuous but I will resist the temptation and compliment him rather on its realistic moderation. It compares most favourably with the starry-eyed "look what I found" statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) after his return from Washington via Damascus.

However, I cannot refrain from commending the minister—and I have been watching this for a good many years—for what strikes me to be a changed attitude toward NATO. In 1968 and later it looked as though the present government would throw NATO into the ashcan of discard. Of all the errors of anticipation and execution of the present government, the one which I feared most was a reassertion of the Mackenzie King doctrine of isolationism. I might be tempted to make political capital out of an apparent change of emphasis and direction, but I will not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macquarrie: But I will tell the minister, if Liberal backbenchers will allow me, that my colleagues and I, rather than talking about last minute conversions, will support in every way any effort to make NATO a more viable and effective international organization.

I do wish that the minister had told us a little more about his conversations with officials of the European Economic Community. For example, I should like to know what progress was made in the very important area of penetration of markets that might very well be closed to us. I agree wholeheartedly with what the minister said about the situation in reference to Berlin, or at least as I understand what he said. I think we must stick by Chancellor Brandt who in this day and age is showing himself to be a very realistic, dedicated and sound statesman.

I would also tell the minister that he is quite right in suggesting that without the support of the multinational organization of NATO Chancellor Brandt would not have been able to move as far as he already has in the very important development of détente with East Germany. Whatever lies ahead, if that man, his people and his government can find a modus vivendi with East Germany, who are we in Canada to look askance at such a hopeful development? I think that NATO's involvement in this and its support of and co-operation with Chancellor Brandt are of tremendous importance.

The minister might have told us a bit more about his discussions with Mr. Schumann, the Foreign Minister of France. Sometimes there have been interesting developments between Canadian and French statesmen, not all of which were reported. The minister might have been a little bit more forthcoming on that but the fact that they talked is something that we put down in the positive column.

I noted too his reference in his statement to Japan. This is most important because there is a tremendous community of interest between Japan and Canada today. I believe this should be studied, furthered and developed. I hope that in all the activities in the field of summitry a move will be made to invite the Emperor of Japan to this country so that we may be able to discuss in fuller detail the great community of interests existing between our two countries.

I agree with what the minister said about Cyprus. We must work for a political settlement there. It is very depressing that year follows year and we still have a group of military people in Cyprus. Canada is doing at least as much as and indeed a great deal more than others in maintaining a peacekeeping group there, but the lack of progress toward a political settlement is depressing and disheartening. I think it is not enough merely to have military or paramilitary groups there maintaining a most uneasy status quo. We must move toward conciliation or mediation of this problem; otherwise, it seems to me that the whole United Nations operation is facetious, ill-advised and not the kind to which we should lend our great support.

The minister also referred to his discussions with Mr. Palamas of Greece. We are all terribly disturbed by what has taken place in Greece and what has taken place for a long time in Portugal, but being a realist—and a conservative has to be a realist—I am often puzzled about what we can do under these circumstances. Do we go about the world and apply some unique diplomatic litmus test whereby we register those who are totally democratic and suitable to ourselves and expel all those who do not measure up to that standard, or do we withdraw? Are there any nations in the Commonwealth which are not totally democratic? Are there any nations in the United Nations which are not totally democratic by our standards? Indeed, if we carry our self-righteousness too far, I wonder what we do about a provincial premier who refuses to pay attention to how the voters vote. So we cannot carry that too far. I have always tried to be a man of détente, a man of peace, a reasoned and reasonable internationalist, but I would say that in the long run we have to underscore again the realities of the situation.

I am depressed by something the minister touched upon very lightly, the fact that the explorer, that very distinguished statesman, the former Secretary General of NATO, Dr. Manlio Brosio, has not yet been received by the nations of the Warsaw Pact. Until he has received a welcome there, how can we be realistic in our anticipation of an early move toward the détente which we all welcome? I am glad the minister mentioned the rebuff which Mr. Brosio is receiving. I hope that those who make a profession of a desire for détente from east to west will quickly move to accept that great statesman so that in a realistic and sensible way those of us who believe in NATO—and I hope Canada will continue to belong to NATO for a long time—may move toward a concentration upon the real problems of Europe and take firmer and fuller steps toward a more peaceful Europe and a more agreeable and sensible relationship among all the peoples of that great continent.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we in this party are naturally gratified that the forward moves on which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has reported in regard to Europe, and which we have long advocated, now seem to be coming to fruition. I refer to the proposed European security conference and to the proposal for a mutual balanced force reductions in Europe.

I think the best news we have had in the international world recently has been the progress in regard to Berlin. In my view progress on Berlin—and I do not differ from the minister in this regard—is the key to normal and peaceful relations in Europe and, indeed, through Europe so far as Europe is concerned in the world. Unless there is a total dismantling of the massive confrontation of tactical nuclear weapons which still exists, there can be no real peace in the heart of Europe. I welcome the fact that in his statement the minister paid tribute to the Chancellor of West Germany, Mr. Brandt, because I believe his policy of Ostpolitik has opened the door to sanity in the relations between the European powers. I pay tribute to him myself for this development.

I noticed that one thing seems to have been omitted from the statement. It is my understanding from reading some of the press that the nations which comprise the North Atlantic Council have indicated that instead of reducing their budgets for arms they in fact intend to increase them. If this is so I hope Canada has no part in that particular decision because if anything is clear it is that we must reduce and not increase the mad momentum of armament which exists at the present time.

I am glad also to note that the Secretary of State for External Affairs engaged in consultation on trade matters with the leaders of the European Economic Community. This would seem to be of vital importance to Canada's interests. I was interested to note that the minister had conversations with the Acting Foreign Minister of Greece. Naturally I was pleased to note that the minister made clear to him that so far as Canadians are concerned there is a deep and strong concern for democracy in Greece. I would have been more impressed had the minister told us that Canada has joined with other countries in NATO where the matter should be raised, countries such as Denmark and Norway, in saying that the activities, attitudes and policies of the military dictatorship in Greece and the policies of the dictatorship in Portugal are diametrically opposed to and inconsistent with the basic principles that NATO is supposed to defend. I would have thought that was the place, not in private conversation, to raise the issue of democracy in Greece and indeed in Portugal.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN DAIRY SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce a change in the policy of dairy subsidy payments which will be of particular importance to smaller cream producers. The change will apply to shippers who held a subsidy eligibility quota at any time since 1967 but whose eligibility for subsidy was later withdrawn because they delivered less than 420 pounds of butterfat in a year. It will permit people in this category to again become eligible for subsidy if they deliver 420 pounds or more in this or a subsequent year. The new arrangement will start in the present dairy year. Those whose quotas were withdrawn previously and who deliver 420 pounds or more between April 1, 1971, and March 31, 1972, will be paid subsidy on their deliveries during the year, up to their quotas.

If a shipper's quota was withdrawn in 1969 or in a later year, his reinstated quota will be the same as that which he held at the time it was withdrawn. If his quota was withdrawn in 1968, his quota will be for the amount of his deliveries in the 1966-67 year or 420 pounds, whichever is the greater.

The payment for this year will be made at the end of the year, but for next year they will be reinstated for the regular subsidy payments on their monthly deliveries.

The same procedure will follow in subsequent years. If those involved have deliveries of less than 420 pounds this year but reach that figure in the 1972-73 year, they will be reinstated at the end of that year.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the statement made today by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) that the subsidy eligibility quota will be returned to producers, all I can say is that the subsidy eligibility quota should never have been withdrawn from them in the first place. I can well remember that the Minister of Agriculture was so advised by members of the Official Opposition at that time. I have to say that the operation of the Canadian Dairy Commission under the guidance of this minister has certainly left a great deal to be desired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Bell: You have milked your last cow.

An hon. Member: Off to the Senate.

Mr. McKinley: We can remember that a year or two ago a great deal of money was deducted from payments to producers, and it cost producers a great deal to sell on world markets. We have gained access to world markets but in the meantime the policies of the Canadian Dairy Commission have so curtailed production in this country that we can no longer fill those world markets.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McKinley: I believe that new advisers are needed in the Canadian Dairy Commission as well as in the Department of Agriculture. In order to make a good job of filling world markets and in order to regulate production, plans must be made four or five years ahead. This government has been unable to do that so far as grain or milk or almost anything else that you can name is concerned. So we would like to see some improvement in that regard.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister and those responsible have some method of adequately notifying the shippers in the various categories to which the minister has referred. I may tell the minister—and I think he knows it—that since this policy has been in effect in western Canada and in Saskatchewan in particular those of us who represent farmers in that area have had to deal with farmers whose eligibility quotas and therefore their payments have been cut off. I may tell the minister that only last week I was still receiving representations from farmers in that area. Perhaps if a real effort is made the minister's department will be able to correct some—I stress the word "some"—of the hardships they have imposed on the small farmers in Saskatchewan and indeed in Manitoba and Alberta. It may be that they will so reorganize their affairs as to allow the dairy industry to produce in sufficient quantities to serve the needs of the nation.

It seems strange to me that the department has managed dairy affairs in Canada so badly that, according to information received in answer to questions put in the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, we will be importing ten million pounds of butter from the United States at considerable cost. Even at this stage we are purchasing butter from the United States and paying import duty and freight charges. At the same time we are depriving our own producers of the right to earn a livelihood by means of milking cows and shipping cream. I think this indicates a very bad situation.

I cannot overemphasize the hardship that has been inflicted on our people. Yet we are being asked to approve supply management policies of the government in the face of this kind of management. We have been asked also to approve a grain stabilization program and to approve supply management programs under Bill C-176. We in the opposition must make a judgment on the basis of the record of the government, and the record is not good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: The minister may smile, but the people who telephone me and who spoke to me in Saskatchewan are not smiling. They are under considerable financial stress; they do not regard the situation as funny, and neither do I. So I say that better than this must be done to avoid running short of protein and butter at a time when there are unfed and undernourished people in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I remember the discussions we had in the Standing Committee on Agriculture on the subject the minister mentioned in his statement.

Several members then defended dairy producers, but in vain. Those producers are found in all parts of the country. In fact, they are the ones who operate what we call small family farms and who still have the right to survive today. If we want to avoid getting the majority of the rural population on welfare, we must give those who still have plenty of spunk a chance to earn as much as possible. Canada as a whole will benefit from it and this is still the best formula: that all Canadians profit from individual efforts.

By again granting subsidy payments to small dairy producers in our country the government is taking a step forward, I think. It had lost ground, but now it is making a headway. I hope that we are going to keep on going in the right direction because the minister in his statement of last week recognized the real usefulness of the family farm when millions were approved for its survival.

As a farmer, I believe that the best help is first to let the farmer do his share by giving him easier access to markets for the sale of his products and guaranteeing him prices corresponding to present costs, having regard to the cost of production so that he may make a reasonable profit.

I hope that the current improvement of the dairy market will encourage the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to grant benefits to other groups of dairy producers, in order to remove as much as possible the penalization for overproduction.

As a result of increased demand for dairy products on the international market, I hope—and this is what I am asking the Minister of Agriculture to do—that appreciable improvements will be brought while there is still enough time, as far as quotas are concerned, so that production may normally increase to meet market needs and prevent Canadians from having to import dairy products. This could easily happen and, in my opinion, the minister is conscious of the fact. It is surely on account of that danger that he decided to make some improvements. I am very pleased and I hope that policy will be extended to other groups of producers so that they may enjoy all possible benefits.

To provide answers to parts 2 and 3 of this question would entail costly expenditures and the hiring of additional staff to undertake the large amount of work involved in obtaining the detailed information relating to almost 8,000 contracts, covering a period of nearly five years, much of which must be extracted from the records of various of our offices outside of Ottawa. In addition to being costly, as mentioned above, this review would also involve officers already fully engaged in those components of the Government's Special Employment Plan which are the specific responsibilities of this Department.

EDUCATION—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR TEACHING OF FRENCH IN ONTARIO ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS

Question No. 2,100—Mr. Kaplan:

What assurances did the federal government obtain that money allocated by it for the teaching of French in Ontario elementary schools would in fact be so used?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): When the federal and provincial governments made arrangements for the program of co-operation for the development of bilingualism in education, they agreed that the objectives of the program were to ensure that, insofar as it is feasible, Canadians have the opportunity to educate their children in the official language of their choice, and children have the opportunity to learn, as a second language, the other official language of their country. In keeping with these objectives, grants made under the program are keyed to performance: that is, they are calculated according to the number of students and the amount of time involved in studying in the minority language and learning the second language. (In Ontario, French is considered to be both the minority language and the second language for purposes of this program.) It should be noted as well that the federal and provincial governments have agreed to re-examine the grant formula after eighteen months of operation.

However, it is understood CVL recently acquired new commercial business and is in the process of rehiring. The firm also indicated it will respond to our tender.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

ALLEGED MIS-SPENDING OF FUNDS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the allegations made in a recent study by the Quebec Federation of Labour that the many millions of dollars of public funds spent by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have been channelled away from economically depressed areas, have not resulted in a net increase in jobs, and that the department has failed to inform the public about the true impact on jobs of its industrial incentives grants across Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East has given the Chair due notice of his intention to request leave to propose the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing the matter stated by him to the House.

In a preliminary way I might say to the hon. member that in my opinion the provisions of Standing Order 26 were never intended to be used as a vehicle for the purpose of airing statements or allegations made outside the House by organizations or people who are not answerable or responsible in any way to this chamber.

It seems to me that the statement made by the hon. member essentially contains a charge of maladministration or of inefficiency in relation to certain programs carried out by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Without passing any comment on the substance of the allegation attributed to the Quebec Federation of Labour, it must be said that the House has established not only supply proceedings but also standing committees for the purpose of reviewing the operations of the programs of the several departments of government.

It is my opinion that it would be a grave error to permit the use of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of overriding the well established procedures of this House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES PROPOSALS TO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET RESPECTING MONETARY AND TRADE PROBLEMS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question arising out of his reference to his having met Mr. Malfatti on the eve of the Council of Ministers' consideration of American proposals for resolution of the monetary and trading problems now facing us. Could the minister indicate very briefly and succinctly what those American proposals are?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would not be for me to reveal what proposals have been made by the United States to the Common Market. I can say, however, that it was a very long list and that the Common Market was rather surprised at the extent of the concessions that the United States wanted from Europe. The European Common Market, like ourselves, is rather uncertain as to the objectives of the United States.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it still the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that although the European Economic Commission has received a list of items, a list of proposals from the United States, Canada has received no such list, no such indication of proposals from the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that has been the position of the government. I have listened to my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, say that the proposals from the United States that have been under discussion have been in the newspapers. They are very well known. A great deal of publicity has been given to them.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what is the proposal of the United States to Canada with regard to the solution of the monetary and trading problems facing it, and particularly what is the proposal with regard to monetary problems?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was not referring particularly to the monetary problems when I was referring to the statements made by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If I had been I would have referred, of course, to the statements made by the Minister of Finance who has made it quite plain that Canada believes that the present policy of the Canadian government of having a floating exchange rate meets all the requirements.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that he discussed the question of multilateral negotiations, can he tell the House what contribution it was indicated to him Canada would be expected to make toward such a multilateral solution? What contribution did the EEC indicate it might expect from Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I did not suggest to the European Common Market what their policy should be in relation to the requests of the United States. Neither did Mr. Malfatti presume to offer me advice.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET THREAT OF UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the President of the United States has signed the bill concerning the DISC plan and the situation is not hypothetical any more, would the Prime Minister inform the House what steps the government intends to take to deal with this threat to the Canadian economy as it exists now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member must have noticed, the DISC plan was finally adopted in a form different from the original proposal. We are now looking at the possible effect of the modified DISC plan and we will see in what way we might have to adjust any contingency plans to meet any effect of the modified DISC plan.

Mr. Burton: Can the Prime Minister indicate to the House when the government will be in a position to announce such contingency plans?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we will want to announce them when we judge the time, in terms of its effect on the Canadian economy, has arrived at which we must announce them.

ESTIMATE OF EFFECTS OF UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES, BUSINESS AND LABOUR

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, has the government made any estimate of the effect that the DISC program, now that it has been adopted, will have on the Canadian economy, as the government has obviously been studying the various propositions that have been put forward and must have some idea of the effect that these proposals, one of which has been adopted, will have on our economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated last week that the effects of the DISC plan would be very varied according to the various hypotheses under which it would be applied. Now that they appear to have cut the effect of the operating aspect of DISC in half, it will probably have half that effect.

Mr. Hees: Has the government been in consultation with representatives of the provinces, business and labour to work out with them the most effective measures that could be adopted by this country to counteract these DISC measures?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the House knows that we have had meetings with the provinces, business and labour in recent weeks, and we discussed the American measures and their effect on Canada. However, these sectors of the economy do not have to work out their proposals in as concrete and effective a way as the federal government does. Therefore we have been seeking suggestions from them, but I cannot say that they were extremely precise.

UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION—POSSIBLE SHIFTING OF PRODUCTION TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know if the government intends to canvass the multinational corporations situated in Canada in order to ascertain their intentions regarding the DISC proposal and if there is to be a possible shifting of production from Canada to the United States? Has the government any intentions in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to defer to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who, personally and through his department, has been having consultations with various sectors of industry. I will refer the hon. member's question to him.

EFFECTS OF UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION ON AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the decision of the United States to proceed with restrictive trade action under the DISC program, can the minister inform the House whether his department is studying these proposals for their possible effect on export of United States agricultural products to Canada and on our sales to them as well as the over-all effect on trade in farm products between the two countries?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, about all I can say at this time in replying to that question is yes, we are very concerned about this and are watching it very closely. Of course, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has the primary responsibility in this area.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if I understood him correctly, that discussions had been undertaken in regard to the effects of the tariff on rapeseed going into the United States, are discussions still going on in regard to this particular product?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member misunderstood the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He was talking about rapeseed, among other commodities, going to the European Economic Community and not the United States.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION REGARDING ADDITIONAL GOVERNMENT POWER—INQUIRY AS TO POLICY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was enunciating government policy when he said at Saskatoon, as indicated in a news report, that the government must exercise additional power or more control over Parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, he was perhaps thinking of the motion that the leader of the House was talking to a moment ago.

Mr. Baldwin: Was he also speaking about exercising more control over Parliament, and did he have in mind the Senate as well?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I think he had in mind getting rid of some of the useless backbenchers in the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: A Merry Christmas to you, too.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question on the matter of the Senate and on the exercising of control. Does the Prime Minister approve of the Minister of Finance having had a meeting with the Senate Finance Committee behind closed doors?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, surely the Senate can conduct its business in its own way. If the hon. member wants to have influence there, he must apply at the right door.

Mr. Baldwin: Will any more bribes be offered?

MANPOWER

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

As the maximum weekly wages are $100 according to the standards adopted by the department, as the decree of the Quebec construction committee prescribes a much higher salary, as allowances are paid persons taking training courses, in view of unemployment insurance, and as it has become very difficult for the municipalities to comply with the standards, will the minister announce in the near future a change in the maximum weekly wages of $100 which are not sufficient to ensure the worker his livelihood?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter, of course, is that certain salaries in many parts of the country exceed the $100 a week which is the maximum of the grant that can be paid under our local initiatives program. But this is simply an average and it is the maximum which we can grant. That does not exclude the payment of more to specific people within the program. The figure was set at that level in order to try to encourage the creation of the maximum number of jobs, particularly for those with lower skills, and it is doing just that. The flow of applications from people who are obviously able to meet the criteria is such that I see no need to make any change.

WELFARE

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN TO EXPLAIN PROGRAMS—ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does he propose to undertake an advertising campaign to explain national welfare programs and problems, and why does he feel such a campaign is necessary at this time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to mount such a program which will be more extensive than the one we have at present. I do not find anything unusual in this. I thought that one of the functions of the information services of government departments was to explain government policies to people of Canada. That is what we intend to do in this case.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary and perhaps related question. What assistance does the minister propose to give to the municipalities which will have an extremely heavy administrative burden placed upon them this winter in administering welfare under the Canada Assistance Plan as a consequence of the critically high unemployment in this country?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of the information program will be to make the Canadian people generally and thereby, of course, the municipalities, aware of the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan. I am afraid it is true even to this day that the awareness is not as complete as it should be. As a result of the program, I would think that municipalities could apply to the provinces for projects such as work activity projects that must be submitted to the federal government through the provinces in order to create the needed stimulus for employment that the opposition as well as the government desires.

CANCELLATION OF GRANT TO HAMILTON WELFARE RIGHTS ORGANIZATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House if he is planning to cut off any additional groups of applicants for welfare simply because they are too outspoken in their demands?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had examined the reasons for the discontinuance of this particular grant he would not have made such an inane statement.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I asked a simple question. Can the minister not answer yes or no?

Mr. Munro: At the moment we do not intend to cut off any further grants. That is at the moment. Some are under review.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the continued publicity and the general public concern about the cutting off of a $35,000 grant to a poor peoples' group in Hamilton, will the minister now tell the House the true story behind this whole thing?

HUMAN RIGHTS

RATIFICATION OF CONVENTIONS BY CANADA

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On Friday, December 10, the anniversary of human rights day, the Prime Minister issued a statement having to do with the submission of a brief by the Human Rights League and the B'Nai B'rith Association, particularly in connection with three important documents that were voted for by Canada in 1966 having to do with human and civil rights. Since there has been a long period of consultation with the provinces over these documents leading toward eventual ratification and signing, could the Prime Minister indicate when we might expect to see some final action taken in this regard? Could he also indicate the procedures that will be taken? In view of the federal nature of the country, our approach might perhaps need to be a little different from the approach other countries might take.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the facts of the matter are that, since Canada voted for these conventions there has been consultation with the provinces and we have asked them to say to what degree they can support the federal government's signature and ratification of the two covenants. Some provinces agreed to go along with the federal government. Other provinces did not agree. We have continued the consultations. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has arranged to have ministers of provincial governments responsible for human rights attend United Nations sessions. We have tried in various other ways to convince the provinces of the importance of permitting Canada, as a federal country, to proceed with signature and ratification of these covenants. The Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote again last month to all provinces to see if they would hasten their acceptance of this procedure. As the House knows, there have been changes of governments in some provinces. Perhaps we will have more success this time around. I will gladly ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to report to the House in due course.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It might be helpful if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could very shortly make a statement on motions indicating in some detail at least the major objections that have been raised on the part of the provinces, and indicating what procedures might be taken by the federal government in order to achieve the generally desired aim of ratifying and signing these important documents.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it was not a question of objections in all cases. In some cases they asked for further explanations. In other cases they did not answer. I believe in some cases some provinces refused to concur. As I said, some of these provincial governments may have changed their minds or may have changed themselves. That is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs has renewed his correspondence with them. I do not believe it will be possible at this time to make a statement in any detail about the position of these various provinces. I merely urge that any interested parties put pressure on the provinces rather than on the federal government at this time.

IMMIGRATION

ROOSEVELT DOUGLAS—POSSIBLE SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS WHILE APPEAL PENDING—PROPRIETY OF PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister instruct his officials to suspend the deportation proceedings pending against one Roosevelt Douglas, who has entered an appeal from his conviction to the Quebec Court of Appeal and has posted $14,000 bail that he will be available at the hearing of the appeal, at least until his appeal has been heard so that this man shall not be actually denied his right of appeal?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I think the proposition that deportation proceedings should be suspended is perhaps an impractical one. However, I can assure the hon. member that in my view deportation proceedings should in no way interfere with this man's ability to appear in connection with his appeal.

Mr. Brewin: Has the minister taken advice from his colleague, the Minister of Justice, as to the propriety of deporting a person who has an appeal pending in the courts in relation to the very offence which is the basis for deportation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I may have to discuss this question with the hon. member. I believe there is a bit of confusion between us as to which appeal we are talking about. I will be glad to take the matter up with him.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a provocative supplementary question. When will this government cease to use the word "Liberal" to describe itself when situations like this are allowed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POWER

ALLEGED MINISTERIAL PREFERENCE FOR NUCLEAR POWER TO GENERATE ELECTRICITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON JAMES BAY PROJECT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. On page 9 of a speech made by the Minister of the Environment on December 9 he expressed strong preference for the use of the nuclear power to generate electricity. In other words, if there is an alternative, do not dam water to create hydro power. If this is now current government policy, what is the government's policy on the James Bay project? Is the government now against the James Bay project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister was stating an opinion which is shared by a great many people. I do not think he was stating a constitutional doctrine whereby the federal government would tell provinces what they must do to generate energy. I think he was trying to create a climate of understanding for the future.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDRO ELECTRIC PROJECT—APPLICATION UNDER NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Will the Prime Minister advise if the province of Quebec has yet applied under the Navigable Waters Protection Act or any other federal authority for requisite permission and filed the necessary plans in connection with this project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I doubt it, Mr. Speaker, but I will make inquiries.

MINAS BASIN TIDAL POWER—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Will the Prime Minister indicate whether on the basis of this policy or this statement by the Minister of the Environment the thinking of the government is such as to include further negotiations with the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with regard to the development of Minas Basin tidal power?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this is under the jurisdiction of the minister. The question should more properly be addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

FINANCE

SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN PROGRAM—CO-OPERATION OF ONTARIO TO EXPEDITE MUNICIPAL APPLICATIONS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): In the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct this question to his parliamentary secretary. Is it the intention of the Department of Finance to ask the province of Ontario to make a decision urgently regarding municipal use of the $160 million federal-provincial employment loan program?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario is well aware of the necessity of their co-ordinating the grants to permit the municipalities in this province to participate in the program. We hope they will soon take some action to permit the municipalities to enjoy the benefits of the program, but the particular program to which the hon. member was referring does provide for provinces to apply for moneys from the federal government direct for their own purposes, as well as for purposes of lending to municipalities.

Mr. Cafik: Is there anything within the criteria of this program prohibiting the province of Ontario from using this money for its own purposes and thereby not allowing it to be used by the municipalities which so desperately need it?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, the money must go through the province to the municipalities.

CORN—USE OF EASTERN TERMINAL ELEVATOR SPACE TO STORE SURPLUS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the minister alleged that one of the principal reasons for low corn prices in Ontario this year was the lack of storage facilities and the market glut during harvest time, will the minister indicate if he has endeavoured to persuade the eastern livestock and feed grain agency to move this surplus into the space that is available in the terminal elevators in eastern Canada, or is this space held exclusively for the movement of western feed grains?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can check into the exact dates. Every year, of course, there is some allocation and reservation of space just prior to the closing of the seaway. I believe that early in the season there was no lack of space and no prohibition against that corn moving in there because of the space being reserved.

NEWFOUNDLAND—POSSIBLE MESSAGE TO LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR CONCERNING ADVISERS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is for the Secretary of State in his normal role as the traditional conduit of communication between the executives of the dominion government and the provincial governments. Since the government of Canada constitutionally has responsibility for the peace, order and good government of the country, has the minister conveyed to the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland the message that that hon. gentleman's advisers have lost the confidence of the House of Assembly in that province and that certain actions normally and constitutionally must result therefrom?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

MINI-TYPE SUBMARINE—ALLEGED CANCELLATION OF EXPORT PERMIT ISSUED TO INTERNATIONAL HYDRODYNAMICS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): In the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will address my question to his parliamentary secretary. Is it true that an export permit for International hydrodynamics of Vancouver to export a mini-type submarine to the Soviet Union has been cancelled? If so, can he say why this cancellation has been made?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The form of the question is somewhat defective. In any event, the parliamentary secretary might be allowed to reply on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the government is well aware of the importance of this subject to the country and to the company concerned. Normally, the department answers in the House on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. I will be glad to convey the question to the minister and undertake that a full answer will be provided tomorrow.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TOWARD SETTLEMENT OF UNITED STATES DIFFICULTIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid any possible misunderstanding I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what the government has in mind by a general settlement as opposed to bilateral negotiation in connection with the United States surcharge. Can the Secretary of State indicate the kind of general settlement toward which Canada is prepared to make a contribution as alluded to in the statement he made to the House earlier this afternoon?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, the United States has been faced with a very serious balance of payments problem and therefore took certain actions in order to defend its position. They have been discussing ways of getting out of this difficulty with various countries, particularly with Japan, the European Commission and certain other European countries such as Great Britain, as well as with ourselves. Each of us has been asked to make a contribution toward the solution of this problem in order that the United States may once again resume its posture of multilateralism, get rid of the restrictions it has placed on trade in order to deal with the balance of payments problem to which I have referred, and generally to resume the movement toward freer trade which is so much in our interests.

Mr. Stanfield: Might I ask the hon. gentleman specifically what contribution Canada has been asked to make toward this general settlement?

Mr. Sharp: There have been two kinds of discussions going on, one dealing with currencies. In this respect, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, the Minister of Finance has taken the view that by floating its currency some time ago Canada has already complied with the requirement the United States laid down. The United States has also been asking for certain changes to be made in the trading policies of various countries. Certain requests, which are now under discussion, have been made to us. We are looking at these matters. The Europeans are looking at another group. The Japanese are looking at another. I hope we shall all be able to agree, and that the United States will once again be able to resume its normal posture.

In view of United States Secretary of State Laird's recent offer of electronic and other sophisticated equipment to NATO countries to counter the build-up of Soviet armed forces in the North Atlantic and the Mediterranean, may I ask whether the President of the United States made the same offer to Canada during the general discussion which took place on this subject as outlined by the right hon. gentleman last week?

Mr. McIntosh: The offer of sophisticated electronic and related equipment as offered to other NATO countries.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS—ALLEGED RIGHT TO SEIZE GRAIN IN LIEU OF OVERDUE PAYMENTS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of reported demands by the Farm Credit Corporation for repayment of overdue loans, accompanied by the statement that the corporation has the right to seize grain, and in view of offers made by producers to deliver grain to the Saskatoon office of the Farm Credit Corporation, can the minister say whether space has now been made available for the acceptance of grain in lieu of overdue payments to the Farm Credit Corporation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): There are no foreclosures being made on loans in Saskatchewan—I checked this a few days ago—unless they are more than four years in arrears. The FCC is not in a position to accept grain. The corporation made the loans in cash and expects repayment in cash.

Mr. Skoberg: Would the minister accept a letter I have on file indicating exactly the opposite of what he has just told us?

In view of the continuing dissatisfaction expressed by labour groups and working people generally about delay in processing applications to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, often resulting in difficulties for municipalities who find themselves obliged to make welfare payments, will the minister undertake to bring in new procedures to expedite payment of unemployment benefits?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Despite the fact that we are processing over 98 per cent of the claims on time, within a week or ten days I shall be announcing procedures which I believe will help to alleviate the situation further. These will take effect about the middle of January and will permit us to pay claims at least a full week sooner than the law obliges us to do.

Since the European Economic Community and the United Kingdom comprise the largest cash market for imported grain in the world, has Canada established a permanent market intelligence service in those countries to help sell Canadian grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Our market intelligence service is already established in a number of countries all over the world. It includes the trade commission offices which perform a very valuable service. The Canadian Wheat Board itself has permanent representatives in London.

Mr. Murta: I should like to ask the minister whether there is to be any positive move in the near future to establish marketing information and promotion posts on a permanent basis in the countries I have mentioned?

Mr. Lang: I have indicated that these are already established, so I do not know how I can answer that.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—TIME OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to tell the House when we may expect the government's policy on foreign ownership to be tabled or brought to our attention in some appropriate manner?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have had no report from the Minister of National Revenue since I last mentioned this matter to the House.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Some weeks ago when I asked the Prime Minister the same question the right hon. gentleman indicated that within a week or ten days he would let the House know when a statement might be expected. Since he has now had an opportunity to meet with President Nixon and with the government of Ontario, can he tell us whether he is likely to be in a position to make a statement in the House before Parliament adjourns for the Christmas recess or before the end of the year?

Mr. Trudeau: That is the essence of the matter. On the last occasion I said in the House that I had discussed this matter with the Minister of National Revenue but it was not certain then that the editing, translation and publishing would be completed before Christmas. I do not know whether it will be published while the House is still in session or whether we shall wait for the new session; it would depend on the time at which the House leaders can agree to terminate this present part of the session and when we shall be sitting again.

In light of the alarming reports of the extent of heroin use in Canada and reports of pending government initiatives in combating heroin, can the minister inform the House when the Le Dain report will be made public?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I cannot, Mr. Speaker, other than to say that the chairman indicated to me that it will be several months before he will have the entire report ready.

Mr. Yewchuk: Is the minister considering presenting legislation in the next session before the report on the non-medical use of drugs is tabled?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, no specific legislation is in mind at the moment, though that situation could change. REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ALLEVIATE IN CERTAIN AREAS OF QUEBEC

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the very high levels of unemployment and the serious threat of further massive lay-offs this winter in Shawinigan, Trois-Rivières and other communities in that part of Quebec, what steps is the government taking to alleviate this situation so that these people will not have to leave their homes in order to try to find employment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the government announced not long ago certain measures to increase the employment level. I further believe that a distinction should after all, be made between the general policy of the government in the economic field and the activity of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which, of course, can be affected by the general policy, but which has so far been very effective.

[English]

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ALLEGATIONS BY QUEBEC FEDERATION OF LABOUR CONCERNING USE OF DEPARTMENTAL FUNDS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In view of the revelations made by the Quebec Federation of Labour that the industrial development strategy of the department channels public funds away from the most depressed areas, among a number of other charges, would the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion be willing to make a statement on motions at the earliest possible date dealing with the various points that have been raised?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Quebec Federation of Labour, in this regard, is at best political propaganda because it has no founding, either at the economic level or as concerns the carrying out of our programs.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ANALYSIS OF PROJECTS

Mr.John Burton (Regina East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider tabling his own or the department's analysis of the impact of these projects so that we might give them adequate consideration?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langlier): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wanted to do his duty he could see every month that the funds of the department are expended in underdeveloped areas, and not in the big cities.

[English]

Mr. Burton: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Regina East is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I have read every monthly report the minister has published and they fail to shed one ray of light on what the department is doing.

GRAIN

CORN—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT ON CONSTRUCTION OF STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that time is so important and representations have been made to the government regarding increased write-offs on construction of storage space for grain, particularly corn, would the minister say when an announcement can be expected in this regard?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the exact date that an announcement will be made, but I can tell the hon. member that we are working on the matter very actively and that I hope it will be soon.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Friday, December 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 10363) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Burton (p. 10370).

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was sorry not to be in the House on Friday when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) spoke on the third reading of the tax bill.

Mr. Mahoney: Where were you?

Mr. Ricard: None of your business.

Mr. Stanfield: I am happy to see hon. members opposite taking a great interest in my whereabouts; that is very encouraging. I understand that I missed an interesting performance in this House. At least one commentator, whose report I read over the weekend, accused the Minister of Finance of indulging in a certain amount of bullying. With all due respect, I would disagree with that commentator having now read the minister's speech. The minister may have felt that he was being tough and ruthless but, after all, if you are going to be that you must have something more going for you than just a parliamentary majority. You have to have some arguments as well; you must have at least a little logic on your side. If you do not have that on your side, then all the bluster in the world will not help you very much.

This is why, being as charitable as I can, I would describe the minister's performance really as an exercise in desperation. He spent, of course, very little time praising the bill, and I do not criticize him for that.

An hon. Member: Are you going to tear it up too?

Mr. Stanfield: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the physical damage that this bill can do is one of its least dangers. I really did not expect the minister to spend very much time defending a bill of this sort. Rather he took it upon himself to attack the critics of the bill. Instead of upholding the government, he undertook to denounce the opposition. That surely is as clear an indication as any that this bill is being foisted upon the House and the Canadian public, not because of any intrinsic merit but rather because of its political significance.

I thought the minister felt constrained to make a rather bitter speech on Friday because it seemed to him to be the natural thing to do under the circumstances—to lash out in all directions. He was speaking not so much as Minister of Finance of Canada as he was as defender of the political image of his party. As a taxpayer, I might be rather upset at the attitude displayed by the Minister of Finance on Friday. But as the Leader of the Opposition in this House, I cannot complain at all. On the contrary, I ought to welcome the minister's attacks because they show more clearly than anything else that this bill is being pushed through now not because of any economic, human or social need, but because the government needs a political face-saving device, and this bill is it. This government feels the need to prove to its supporters and to its backbenchers that after a long series of failures it can get something through this House, and this is the way it is doing it. It does not matter that by the admission of its sponsor the bill is in a very unfinished state. He recognizes and admits that it will be subject to many more amendments.

It does not matter, Mr. Speaker, that much of this bill is a mystery. Their attitude is to push the bill through and let the taxpayer figure it out. That may be a rather sick attitude but when you are determined to make a political point, as this government obviously is, that is a secondary matter. Sir, what is going on now in this House, the proceedings that are being followed and the bill which will come out eventually, is not a defeat for the opposition but a defeat for the Canadian people and the Canadian people will not forget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says that the bill could not be split for purposes of proclamation because this might cause some confusion for the people charged with the administration of the tax law. I concede that, Mr. Speaker; I concede, too, that it might cause some uncertainty in the minds of the taxpayers but what about the confusion that most of this bill is going to engender among the taxpayers of Canada? What about the confusion and uncertainty that this government has already caused? I do not want to add unnecessarily to the burden of any civil servants, but if I must choose between doing that and foisting on the public a bill as confused, as complex as this one presently is, then I have no difficulty making the choice.

Early in the year the Minister of Finance said and I quote, "Tax reform will come into effect on January 1, 1972, no matter what".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

An hon. Member: When did he say that?

Mr. Stanfield: I am quoting the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Mahoney: A headline in the Financial Post.

An hon. Member: That is from Colin Brown.

Mr. Stanfield: Don't get too excited now, boys. All the minister did was forecast exactly what hon. gentlemen opposite were going to do eventually—put it through, come what may. The minister referred to some comments that I made earlier in the year about the necessity of getting rid of uncertainty in order to restore some confidence in the economy and that was right, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there was a need to restore confidence.

If the hon. gentleman opposite wants a pulpit he can have one in a few minutes.

An hon. Member: He lost that.

Mr. Osler: Give us the source.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, there is no question about the importance of removing uncertainty as far as the economy is concerned. There is no doubt about that at all. But it is going a little far when the Minister of Finance introduces a bill which hardly anybody in the country understands, pretends that he has removed the uncertainty, and then says I have no right to complain about that uncertainty because he is insisting that the bill go into effect on January 1 next.

Mr. Osler: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre rises on a point of order.

Mr. Osler: It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that having had a quotation repeated over and over again, the House is entitled to the source.

Mr. Perrault: You have to withdraw it unless you do.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Just because the boss is in the House and you want a promotion—

Mr. Stanfield: In a speech on Friday last, the minister made much of the fact that we on this side of the House had agreed that the legislation before us is not as bad as the original white paper on tax reform. That is true, but it is praising this bill with very faint praise. Certainly, we cheered on this side of the House when the government retreated from the white paper, but I must say that neither we nor hon. gentlemen opposite expected the white paper to be replaced by this. What we have to remember is that evidently the same people who drew up the white paper were involved in drafting this bill. Given their ideas, as exemplified in the white paper, I do not blame them personally at all but their involvement in the present bill surely makes it all the more urgent that those of us with other ideas should examine this bill as closely as we can, clause by clause, to make sure that the proposals that have been pushed out by the front door do not get in through the back door.

Mr. Forrestall: That is what is happening.

Mr. Stanfield: We fought the white paper from the start, Mr. Speaker. We are fighting this bill in part for the same reasons, but in part because not one of those members over there who are making so much noise right now and nobody in this House, understands what is in this bill. Indeed, few people, if any, in the whole country understand this bill. We are fighting it because it is a confusing piece of legislation which, far from clearing up the tax jungle, only makes it deeper and darker than before. We are fighting it, too, because in many cases it is unjust. It is true that the government made some eleventh hour changes with regard to co-operatives and credit unions, but would those have been made if the bill had not been fought by the opposition parties? When the government House leader announced his intention to impose closure he also announced that amendments to this bill would be introduced.

There are still other injustices, Sir, such as the injustices to farmers which the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West is intended to correct. There are also injustices to small businessmen and others. We are fighting this bill because regardless of how the minister preens, there has been no agreement or understanding with the provinces on how the Canadian taxpayer is going to be taxed by both levels of government. There is still confusion on how the provincial structures will fit in with the proposed federal structure, if I may refer to this bill in such a euphemistic way. The province of Ontario has its own corporate income tax, and the province of Quebec has its own corporate and personal income tax, while the province of Nova Scotia has a collection agreement and has gone along with federal taxation.

Mr. Mahoney: So has Ontario.

Mr. Stanfield: So has Ontario with regard to personal income tax but not with regard to corporation tax, Mr. Speaker. We are being asked to allow this government to run this bill through the House with no assurance at all—

An hon. Member: After three months.

Mr. Stanfield: —on what the Canadian taxpayer will have to face. While this may be personally satisfactory to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, it is not satisfactory to me nor will it be satisfactory to the Canadian taxpayer.

Mr. Baldwin: Nor to his constituents.

Mr. Stanfield: There is still confusion as to estate taxes and succession duties. I think it is agreed that if we are to have a capital gains tax, there must be adjustments in estate taxes and succession duties. The Minister of Finance has simply left this to the provinces. There has been no understanding reached concerning what the government is to have in the way of succession duties on top of the capital gains tax proposed in this bill. Yet, that does not slow down this government at all in its effort to ram this bill through the House, again leaving the taxpayers confused and in a tax jungle.

• (3:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Read the bill. You never read it.

Mr. Forrestall: Read the Magna Carter over again.

Mr. Osler: How long would you wait for the provinces to agree?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks how long I would wait. If I were the Minister of Finance of this country and wanted to introduce a capital gains tax, recognizing that the capital gains tax and the succession duties were to be integrated, I would at least try to achieve that result and would not use closure to force it through the House.

Furthermore we oppose this bill because much of it is at best irrelevant to the current problems in Canada. While the government has been taking up the time of the House in past months, what has it outlined to curb unemployment and straighten out our trade relations with other countries?

Mr. Hees: Nothing.

Mr. Stanfield: That is right. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings correctly said "nothing". Judging from the performance of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) when he was questioned about the attitude of Canada toward working out a solution of the so-called surtax problem, the government has not only not done anything but apparently is not very much aware of what is going on. While the government is taking the time of this House week after week after week with this bill, what does it have to say about a strategy for economic development which is so crucial to our country? Once again the answer is clear—nothing positive. We are fighting the bill because the best thing that can be said about it is that much of it is irrelevant to our current Canadian political priorities and economic priorities.

I am afraid that much worse than that will have to be said about the bill. It will constitute a dangerous curb on Canadian initiative and on the incentives which stimulate economic growth. We are continuing to oppose the bill on third reading because we have heard nothing during the debate so far that would make us change our minds about the serious drawbacks in it. On the contrary, the political act in which the government has indulged in bringing in closure has convinced me more than ever that we were right to insist upon debating this bill thoroughly and are right now, since the debate has been cut off or limited, in opposing the bill, particularly since the government and its supporters insist on ramming through a bill which not one of them even pretends to understand. As will be clear, I do not always agree with hon. members opposite, but I must say that the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) seemed to express our attitude pretty well over the weekend—at least as he was reported in the press. I say that advisedly because I do not want to attribute something to him that the press may or may not have reported accurately.

When the hon. member for York North says that this bill is not tax reform at all, I believe we all agree. When he was reported to have said that there is no way in which you can have a reasonable tax payment if you do not know what your economic goals are, I agree with that, too. Then he went on to say that the government has no economic goals—that statement is attributed to him by the press—and that it was supplying piecemeal tax legislation, a piecemeal approach to the Competition Act and presumably a piecemeal attack on the problem of foreign ownership. I agree. This is what we have been attempting to tell the government for months. I wonder how many government supporters feel the same way.

Mr. McBride: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition referred to the hon. member for York North, I wonder whether he intended to refer to the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Roberts).

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, there are so many hon. members disagreeing with the government these days that it is difficult to keep them straight. I will be happy to accept the correction of the hon. member for Lanark. I think it was the hon. member for York Simcoe. I thank the hon. member for his helpful correction. I will be happy to receive any correction from him at any time that is helpful. I submit that the point is made very effectively by the hon. member to whom I have referred.

An hon. Member: Why don't you quote Hees?

Mr. Hees: He has.

Mr. Stanfield: If you do not know what your economic goals and your economic strategy are, then you do not have an effective tax reform. I wonder how many other members do not support the government and agree with the hon. member for York-Simcoe. If some hon. members do, I think they should have the courage to tell this House and the Canadian people what they think of this legislation. On behalf of the Canadian people, and on behalf of the Canadian economy, I ask and indeed I challenge them to do so without any further delay.

One of the most incredible things about this legislation is that even while it was being jammed down our throats and the throats of the Canadian people, the government blandly announced it intended to make even more changes. Part of the reason for this, of course was to head off the Senate at the pass. I suppose the minister is secretly conferring with the Senate now, but that is for them to deal with and not me. Sure, there are going to be lots more amendments to this bill. More were announced or indicated, as I say, even after the minister introduced the discussion on thrid reading of the bill, following the use of closure at the committee stage and the indication that closure would be used at the third reading stage. How much further can the government go in showing its contempt for its own supporters in the House, and how much further can the government go in showing its contempt for the law itself?

Of course, there will be many more amendments to this bill but the Minister of Finance in defending himself says we will not know how much this bill needs to be changed until we try it out on the Canadian people. Can you imagine that! The Minister of Finance Justifies pressing ahead with the bill, with all the amendments that have had to be made, despite the fact that nobody understands many of the provisions of the bill. He justifies it on the basis that we will not know what amendments need be made until we try it out on the Canadian people. Well, sir, there you have the Minister of Finance unintentionally summing up the government's whole attitude toward the Canadian taxpayer who is to be a guinea pig to be used as the government may see fit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The government has charged those of us in the official opposition with practising obstructionism. The minister carefully excluded us, the Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament, from the fulsome thanks he gave to just about anybody else within a ten miles radius of his voice last Friday. I may say that I was grateful to the minister for excluding us from his praise, because I would have been embarrassed if he had graced us in any way. But I must say that since we played some part in forcing the government to back away from much of the original white paper, I do not think that was any mean contribution that we made to tax reform in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: They seem to be rather excited, Mr. Speaker. If they were a little less excited about what I am saying, and a little more excited about treating the Canadian taxpayers carefully, they would be a little more justified in remaining the government of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I can certainly do without the thanks of the Minister of Finance. I certainly prefer to have the thanks of Canadian people when the Canadian people realize how we fought against the birth of this monstrosity which, apparently, will occur on January 1.

Mr. Olson: Are you against the tax cuts, also?

Mr. Stanfield: Well, well. There is my friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), back in the House.

Mr. Forrestall: He is leaving us shortly. Don't be hard on him.

Mr. Danforth: He does not know any more about taxes than about agriculture.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Finance has no justification for rising in the House and talking about obstructionism in connection with a bill—

Mr. Mahoney: He really got to you.

Mr. Stanfield: —to which 97 amendments were introduced on October 22; on October 29, 28 more amendments were introduced, and on November 16, 8 more amendments were introduced, some of them amendments to previous amendments. Then, the government House leader gave notice of further amendments when he introduced notice of closure. When the Minister of Finance made a speech on Friday, he indicated half a dozen areas in which further amendments will be needed. Yes, we have the absurdity of the Minister of Finance charging obstructionism under these circumstances. When one considers how much worse the bill would be than it is today if the government had not been forced to consider some of these matters, I think that the time has been very well spent indeed. The only thing we are trying to obstruct is the government's mad haste to put through, for strictly political reasons, a measure that in its totality can only hurt much of the Canadian economy and further confuse and complicate the lives of millions of Canadian taxpayers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We made it clear from the start—and I speak now through you, Sir, to the wide open ears of the Minister of Agriculture—that we welcomed parts of the bill such as, for example, the improved exemptions and assistance for the aged. I can take the minister through quite a list of things that we would be prepared to pass very quickly.

Mr. Baldwin: We suggested it first a year ago.

Mr. Hees: We have been pressing and pressing for it.

Mr. Stanfield: What we want is something quite different from the aims of the present government. What we want is to have reform recognize the importance of the spirit of initiative and that this be the main source of economic growth in the country. What we want from tax reform is clear recognition that a prosperous and growing economy is, in the last analysis, the only way to ensure social justice. It will not ensure social justice by itself but it is a necessary foundation for social justice. The greatest social priority in Canada today is jobs. Nobody doubts that, following the statements contained in the report of the Economic Council of Canada. May I say to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) that the greatest achievement of the government he supports has been the creation of massive unemployment.

Mr. Ricard: Your Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) even said it took courage to do that.

Mr. Stanfield: According to the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, the unemployment shown by the statistics is just imaginary, and the only trouble is that there are too many people looking for work.

What we want from tax reform is, among other things, the recognition that some social traditions, one of them being the family farm, should be protected and not destroyed.

Mr. Ricard: We have been telling you that for years.

Mr. Stanfield: What we want from tax reform is something that takes account of the priorities that we shall be setting ourselves as a country in the coming years, including the development of an industrial strategy, which we do not have, which the government does not have, and which the government does not know how to develop. That is what we want from tax reform. The trouble with this government is that someone programmed it back in 1968 in accordance with what someone deemed to be the priorities in 1968. The government has been on the same program ever since, and this has resulted in disaster to the country and in the government being completely unable to respond to the difficulties and the priorities that have faced this country.

Mr. Osler: You said we did not have a program.

Mr. Stanfield: The government had a disastrous program. A minute ago I gave the government credit for creating massive unemployment. That was part of its program. Because of the importance of tax reform being related to the goals of the country, we remain opposed to a measure that is described as a tax reform bill, the only result of which is to complicate things. We will continue to ask the government to split the bill, and we ask members of all parties to support this request. We have asked, and continue to ask, that the bill be amended so as to take into consideration the problems of the farmers in this country. Therefore I ask members of all parties to support the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Sir, let me simply say in closing that what we are up against is a question of whether we are going to implement a tax policy which is designed to encourage the people of this country to meet the economic priorities of this country or whether, on the other hand, the people who drafted this monstrosity are going to have the personsal satisfaction of seeing it rammed through this House with disastrous consequences to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which worked very hard studying the white paper on fiscal reform and preparing recommendations, I am pleased to participate in the debate and to congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who availed himself of several of the committee's recommendations when drafting Bill C-259. I was proud to be on that committee, although its members had to sacrifice a whole summer for the benefit of all Canadians.

Friday, when I was in the House, we heard the remarks of representatives of the three opposition parties, namely the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

The speech of the hon. member for Shefford was, in my opinion—I regret that he is not here—vacuous and insipid.

In case I might have misunderstood his speech, I read it again this morning, but unfortunately it leaves no room for doubt. Allow me to explain.

The speech was in two parts. In the first part, the hon. member for Shefford gave us the same old story, and in some cases misinterpreted the bill before us. In the second part, he quoted the editorial of the November 1971 issue of the journal of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants entitled "On the brink of fiscal disaster". And I noticed on page 10,372 of Hansard that the hon. member for Shefford attacked me personally—I quote:

I would rather trust the Chartered Accountants Association than a single accountant who has to follow the steam-roller.

Now, if by "single accountant" the hon. member for Sheffort means an accountant who is a member of an association, I have no objection to his saying so. However, If he wants to imply that I lack ability, I will reply to him, a weak minded, that he lacks the good sense to be able to determine if a chartered accountant is competent or not.

He pointed out the last paragraph of an editorial that suggests that hon. members take the course given by the CICA on tax reform. Well, CICA members—and I commend them for it—came here to give a full day's course to hon. members and that, at their own expense. I do not recall having seen a single Creditiste member attend this course. Where were they? How interested are they in this bill? How can they understand it, since they don't even go to the official information sources, which is not a partisan source.

This morning in the Montreal Journal I read that Creditistes sent a letter to the editor, Mr. Jacques Guay. A biology professor of the d'Iberville polyvalent school in Rouyn, said this:

> You say loud and clear what many people think of Caouetteism, specially us in the north who are stuck with such a cave-man. You take sides with a good many of us who do not dare attack the "fuhrer" for fear of reprisals. You know that in small towns, everybody knows everything; our Réal has informers everywhere, his own little Gestapo.

Mr. Robert Gobeil, on de Maisonneuve Street, Montreal, has this to say:

> Mr. Caouette said that in Canada we are free to write anything but should he ever become Prime Minister—we would surely have our own little Pravda, because a reactionary party such as his, that advocates the death penalty as a deterrent against crime, would be forced to abolish the freedom of speech to remain in power—

There are other quotations. I do not think they are very relevant, but nonetheless I wanted to point out to Creditistes that they do not have the monopoly of truth in the province of Quebec and that in the next election, of course, they will have trouble getting one or two members elected.

Recently, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) made a speech at the conference of the Canadian Tax Foundation and explained the steps taken by the department for the application of the new bill. He especially mentioned that the administration had been reorganized within the department itself, that an advisory tax committee had been created, that two new publications had been started: the information circular and the interpretation bulletin. Further on, in a spirit of open-mindedness he said, as recorded on page 14 of his speech, and I quote:

> Therefore, in order to facilitate a smooth transition to the new rules, we have decided to agree to all requests received by the department to have a current fiscal year period end in 1971, provided they are made before December 31, 1971.

The CICA editorial dealt precisely with the problem which might arise should the department be unable to grant a longer period to accountants, to tax advisers, to all those closely interested in the question so that they may have time to digest the new complexities of the bill and to advise their clients. Especially as far as undistributed income on hand existing at the end of the fiscal year 1971 is concerned, it would seem that profit derived during a fiscal year prior to December 31, 1971 would not be taken into account in the undistributed income for a differed tax payment of only 15 per cent. If that is the case the department could, at this moment, give accountants and tax experts some more time to determine whether they should advise their customers to alter their fiscal year. At present, it takes quite a while to review the records and it seems to me that perhaps it would be advisable to allow some more time.

Of course there would be another possibility: one could perhaps interpret a section of the bill in such a way that the amount of profits accrued up to December 31, 1971 would be spread on a daily basis, even if the fiscal year differs from the calendar year, as they do for income tax purposes. If the present situation continues, if there is no rectification, there could be discrimination against small businesses which do not have, on a daily basis, the services of advisers to tell them what they should do in the future in the light of the changes proposed in the bill.

The member for Regina East defined quite well the philosophy of his party, with which we cannot agree. I noticed that he attacked the parties of the opposition, especially the Progressive Conservative party. I therefore told myself that as the parties of the opposition cannot agree, it is a good thing that a time limit has been set for the debate, otherwise it would have gone on indefinitely.

A limit has also been set for third reading of the bill. This should be done more often. The people of Canada have the right to expect us to do something here in Parliament. But, when there is an abundance of speeches, as was the case with Bill C-176, we do not produce. So, since we have that tool at our disposal, we should use it more often, as does the British Parliament besides.

Obviously, I am against the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina East, not because it clarifies a point contained in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West, but because the hon. member supports the principle that the bill should be referred back to the committee of the whole. If that amendment were adopted, chaos would prevail in this country, because businessmen have made plans taking into account the bill now under study and the tax experts, who have been working on it since July 15 or thereabouts, have spent a lot of money to understand the full scope of the proposal. Therefore, as the people expect it, this bill should come into force on January 1, 1972, as expected.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Will the province of Quebec be ready?

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): The hon. member for Edmonton West often refers to the co-operation of provinces and especially of Quebec. I have already answered a point which he had raised in that connection.

Now, perhaps there is fact of which he is unaware and I would like to let him know that for over three weeks, the Department of National Revenue has been giving courses to Quebec tax inspectors. Those people have been sent to Ottawa to study the effects of the bill and to make recommendations to the provincial authorities, if necessary.

I had the opportunity of meeting three of those provincial tax inspectors in my office Wednesday night after the committee of the whole had completed consideration of the bill. They told me that they had undertaken their third week of the course and that chartered accountants of other provinces were also attending them.

I think that it is an example of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. Moreover, I cannot see at all why it is suggested that there has been no co-operation between the provinces.

Indeed, the Minister of Finance has declared in his speech that he has approached several times his provincial counterparts in order to discuss Bill C-259.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the hon. member assure me that Quebec Finance Department officials can exert enough influence on that province's government to persuade them to amend their corporate income tax legislation so that some common basis may be found to the provincial and federal legislations?

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, if the provincial authorities would delegate their representatives to Ottawa to consider the effects of Bill C-259, I am convinced that they will be provided with some authority and will later on submit reports on the studies they have made. These reports would pave the way for the amendment of Quebec's tax legislation in the same manner as the report of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs has helped to prepare Bill C-259.

I do not, of course, understand the arguments of political opponents who object to this bill when more than one million taxpayers will be struck off the tax rolls as from January 1, 1972 and another five million will pay reduced taxes. I fail to understand how they will be able to explain that to six million Canadians.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are very far from the truth.

[English]

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, since I am one of those useless backbenchers the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mentioned during the question period, I do not know whether I should take part in the debate on this tax bill. However, I take comfort from knowing that I count for something. I come from a part of the country where everyone is considered to be important. I share that feeling. Therefore, the Prime Minister's statement did not bother me too much. Perhaps on the other side of the House my view of the importance of the backbencher is not shared by hon. members. If hon. members on that side think that the backbencher is not considered to be important, they should do something about it.

Mr. Benjamin: Especially since they know they will soon be on the opposition side of the House.

Mr. Thomson: Of course, the Prime Minister may have expressed his feeling about backbenchers on his own side of the House. He does not have to worry about them very much.

One of my reasons for wanting to speak on this bill, and I will only talk about two items, is that I represent, hopefully, the common people, the average men of my constituency. As I said earlier, the average man of Canada is important. I should like to convey to the parliamentary secretary some of the fears of average men. Some of them are afraid of some parts of the bill. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and others in the House have already dealt fully with the over-all picture. Speaking as a farmer, I suggest that farmers are concerned, as is logical, about how tax changes with regard to basic herds will affect them. Of course, I am talking about basic herds of cattle. Being a farmer, I know something about the concept of the basic herd. I tried at one time to establish a basic herd, but I never did. It was so difficult that I gave it up. Nevertheless, the principles involved here are important, because most farmers establish their basic herds when they are young and their earning power is not high. They scrimp and save money from their small incomes to establish this basic asset. Later, when they wish to dispose of this herd, they are a bit richer. Hopefully, their income position has improved by that time. Therefore, when they sell these cattle, they must pay income tax at a much higher rate than they would have paid if the herd had been sold previously. Logically, I say, that is unfair.

That is how I feel, and I hope the parliamentary secretary will recognize this particular problem. I do not suggest that the solution is easy, and I do not suggest that the basic herd concept, as such, should necessarily be retained. However, I think we should recognize the principle that the basic herd is, in a sense, a depreciable asset, or that it can be established as a depreciable asset. We have failed to impress this on the government and, by allowing things to continue as at present, inequities will be created. I suggest, in logic, that the government should again look at this part of the bill.

Secondly, I want to talk briefly about the capital gains tax, and especially how that tax may apply to a farm when a father passes it on to his son. Of course, if a man makes a large capital gain, he should pay tax on it. In principle, I do not object to this. However, if the capital value of a farm or of a company remains constant over the years, and if the farm or the company stays the same size, it should not be valued on the basis of a different or larger size. That is what we are concerned about. If the value of a farm goes up as a result of inflation, but the size of the farm or real income do not increase, it is not logical that a man should have to pay a capital gains tax, particularly when a farm goes from father to son or follows any such line of succession. In addition to talking about farms, we should be talking about small businesses as well.

I advance this argument for another reason. A large company has a different way of raising capital. Let me give an example of this. If a man's business expands from one department store to five or six, he can sell shares in the market or obtain his capital in some other fashion. This course is not open at the present time to farmers and small businessmen. If there were some practical method of arriving at capital value when turning over a business or farm from father to son, there would be less concern.

I wish to deal with one other point. The experience of farmers in connection with how the act has been administered, particularly with regard to death duties, has not always been good. They sometimes feel put upon because of the values established by the departmental officials. I am not necessarily concerned about how the act is drawn, but how it will be administered. There are at least opportunities for problems to develop in this area. If the bill is passed in its present form, we will have to look carefully at the way it is administered in the future. An example of the type of administration to which I am referring concerns a man who died and left four houses in a small prairie town. The tax people came from Saskatoon and placed a value on these houses similar to the values in Saskatoon. To prove that these houses were not worth that much money, the heirs tried to sell them but could not even obtain a bid on the houses. In spite of this, the tax people insisted this was the value on which death duties would be paid. There has been some inequity in the administration of this particular law in the past. The officials did not use the market value because the people could not sell these houses at the values which had been placed upon them. Logically, the heirs should not have to pay the tax on that valuation, but that was the basis used. When we talk about capital gains, and what might happen when turning over a family farm from father to son, we are concerned because of the way in which the present law has been administered.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this is the third reading stage of this famous bill and I believe it is my duty to speak on this occasion and to emphasize once more the inconsequence shown by this government in forcing the House to accept this badly worded, badly drafted and confused bill. In fact, this is a bill about which we still wonder to what degree it is going to be unfair to the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to say that one million Canadians will be exempted from income tax; it is a way of altering the real basic problems that this bill tries to solve. We must know what is meant by one million Canadians being taken off the rolls, which seems what the government is counting on in this bill.

Canadian families with a $2,500 or $3,000 yearly income and having three, four or five children are not paying any tax at the present time. When it is definitely established that these people are not paying any tax, I do not believe one can state that one million Canadians will be exempted from income tax. It is not true and I think it is intellectually dishonest to count on that. All the more so as another class of people, certain wage-earners, will derive so little benefit from this bill that I am wondering once more to what extent some people honestly count on such an argument, for most of the people who will get a tax decrease will save only $15, $20, $25 per year. Is it worth emphasizing so much that a few thousand persons will pay $15 less in tax this year?

Why not talk instead about the additional billion dollars that the government will collect under this new bill? You do not hear too much about this but in the final analysis this bill is simply the concrete and actual result of a series of mathematical acrobatics to go deeper in the pockets of the Canadian taxpayer. This is the kind of reform we are presently considering. So we have all the reasons in the world to oppose it.

First, we are opposed to the manner in which the government is trying to ram the bill through the House by a set date. Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely irrational. Here we are considering a bill of 732 pages when the usual bill might go up to 40 or 50 pages. This voluminous bill is equivalent to 25 or 30 normal bills. Since when is it against the rules to take the time required to study 10, 15, 20, 25 or 30 bills? It is not because there are innumerable issues in a single bill that we should consider it with great speed, thoughtlessly and in great haste. Again, when the government is actually trying to convince the people of Canada that its action is appropriate because the time of the House is being taken up to debate such a bill, it is being dishonest. The whole population should be told what it is all about.

When a bill calls for so many changes on top of being so badly drafted and conceived it is quite normal to take the time necessary to bring in the required corrections. We have irrefutable proof of this— what would have actually happened to the clauses on co-ops, caisses populaires and credit unions if the opposition had not opposed vigourously those clauses dealing with taxation of caisses populaires? Did we not succeeded in making the government understand and, at last, agree to amend these sections so as to make them more in line with the economic realities which those financial institutions represent?

This is a glaring example which shows that a study was required and that opposition action was becoming essential and the proof that we were right to insist on having other sections amended. If we have so much insisted on having them amended also, or on having their coming into force deferred, it is because we knew we were right. It is not because we are told that, from now on, we shall have one or two days to discuss this bill that we must agree with the government. To agree we were right in such a manner would be to show weakness and I think that this government is not showing strength but weakness. Because it cannot adequately defend its bill it would rather impose it. I think this is how the government is acting.

The dishonesty shown by the government not only in preventing hon. members from further discussion of this bill but—and this is the most terrible thing—in forcing the Canadian people to fight their way through this maze of sections on income tax is one way of laughing at them.

As indicated by the amendment under discussion, we must see in this bill the extraordinary difficulties that certain segments of our society, including our farmers, will meet from all sides. And when you are aware of their special situation and of the difficulties they are faced with, I feel that imposing on them new methods for computing their taxes amounts to moving backwards, to putting a spoke in the wheels of this country's agriculture, in other words to regressing, a policy which the government shall regret sooner or later.

Because the minister says that this bill has to come into force for the government to see how it works and how to amend it later, there is no need for us to pass it. His alleged guarantee will not convince us, nor the Canadian people, that this legislation is good.

Mr. Speaker, such arguments are seldom heard. In brief, the minister is telling us: we do not know exactly if this legislation is good; we think it is; in any case, if we put it into force, we shall see. I do not believe that a legislation should be based on such premises. I think that the reasoning behind it should rather be the following: Let us enact on January 1, 1972 all those clauses of the legislation which carry some unanimity, especially those which benefit mostly the small wage earner even if, as I said earlier, that this is merely playing upon words. Anyway, let us apply the clauses whose consequences we know for sure and avoid submitting many Canadians to huge fiscal problems.

I believe that the opposition is quite right in denouncing the way the government is proceeding.

Yesterday, I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mention that his government could not act the same way as its predecessor—that is Mr. Pearson's government, which had to allow the opposition acting as it fancied—and that he himself, with his own government, was ready to assume his responsibilities according to parliamentary laws. This is another way of bluffing and having people believe that Standing Order 75C is quite commonplace and can be applied without fuss.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, the government forgets to indicate that it is far more important to know exactly what to think of this tax reform. It seems to me that in order to conceal the drawbacks and shortcomings as well as the adverse effects of the bill before us, the government is trying to draw the attention of Canadians to the rule of closure rather than to the substance of the bill itself. This is a means for them to divert attention and to avoid facing their responsibilities.

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), and all other members of the government ought to explain to taxpayers what filing an income tax return will mean in the future. The sponsor of this bill should indicate what a capital gain is, and how much extra it will cost wage earners and small businesses. But they are very careful not to say anything about this. Instead, they try to play politics, as was shown earlier by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc), who, because the three parties of the opposition do not agree on all sections, assumes that he is right.

Who has ever heard such a thing, Mr. Speaker. People have elected members of the Social Credit, the New Democratic and the Progressive Conservative parties because they thought that was the right thing to do. They did not elect us, saying: Get along with the members of the Progressive Conservative party or the members of the New Democratic Party. That is not necessarily the mandate we were given. To say that the government is right because all the opposition members do not agree on some sections of the bill amounts in my opinion to an attempt to alter the course of the debate. In fact they try to bluff all Canadians by saying: In spite of the opposition we offer you something which is good.

Mr. Speaker, would this measure be opposed if it were such a good one? It is opposed because one knows that basically the Canadian people will have to bear the consequences of the fiscal reform. We therefore assume our responsibilities and say here what our fellow citizens in our respective electoral districts want us to say. It is well known that the majority of the people do not want irresponsible tax increases. They are quite prepared to pay their share but they want to know exactly where they stand. It is therefore a mistake to aggravate them with the sections of a bill which not only makes nothing clear but definitely will impoverish everyone.

If the purpose is to stimulate the country's economic development, that is the wrong way to go about it and it is therefore our duty to oppose the unsuitable provisions of the bill.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give my wholehearted support to the amendment proposed by my colleague which is designed, as a last stand attempt, to bring to the attention of the government the fact that some of the provisions of the tax bill now before the House are going to create, in our opinion, real hardship for the Canadian people. As a result of the vote last week in this House, and in view of the tenor of the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on Friday last, my feelings for Parliament are at their lowest ebb since I became a member some 14 years ago. I was not proud of my part in those proceedings, and I think that history will, in the main, show that our actions last week did a disfavour to the people of Canada.

In his speech, instead of trying to defend the government's stand on this bill the minister attempted, in what I consider to be a very derogatory manner, to ridicule the actions of opposition parties, and particularly of the party of which I am a member. I think this was grossly unfair of him. Indeed, he misrepresented the situation. The minister alluded to the fact that on only six occasions did the opposition members vote against government proposals—and this in face of clause after clause after clause being passed on division. As I say, the minister deliberately tried to mislead the people of Canada.

By using closure, the government has brought to a conclusion the committee stage of debate on this bill. The government has vigorously sought to portray to the Canadian people that there was a deliberate plan on the part of all opposition parties to oppose passage of this measure. I think that the record should show, and should show quite clearly, that there are very few individuals in Canada who, despite their expert knowledge, could read comprehensibly the bill before the House in the total amount of time that the bill has been debated in this chamber.

Mr. Benson: Fifty days.

Mr. Danforth: The minister says we have debated the bill for 50 days, but he does not say on how many of those days we debated it for only two hours or even less. For the minister to suggest that this was the actual amount of time devoted to a measure of this magnitude is a misrepresentation, and he has been grossly unfair to the people he seeks to represent.

Mr. Olson: Tell us about the six and eight hour days.

Mr. Danforth: We on this side, in order to fulfil our obligations, have tried to gain some understanding of the measure before us. Many of us have sought outside advice. We have talked to chartered accountants and have attended seminars held by lawyers whose business it is to deal with tax measures. Never in one single instance have these people taken the attitude that they understand fully the implications of this bill. We have been debating a measure some 707 pages in length. Is it not rather sad, Mr. Speaker, that owing to the action of this government which forced us to vote on the measure, over 400 pages of the bill were not even dealt with in the committee stage? I think the situation is preposterous and is not what the people of this country expect by way of government action.

In the opinion of most Canadians, tax reform should be designed to distribute the tax burden more equitably among all citizens in order not to create any specific hardship. In this way, everyone would pay his fair share, and perhaps the tax base might even be lowered rather than raised. Even a cursory reading of the bill indicates that it does not comply in any way with the common conception of tax reform. The bill is designed to extract more taxes, not less, from the people of Canada. The very nature of the bill, with all its rules and regulations, will complicate the tax system of this country even more. Even the tax consultants will throw up their hands at the thought of this new tax measure. The government has forced it through Parliament, and "forced" is the only word I can use. In addition to this, it has had to bring in some amendments of its own, an indication that the government itself finds the bill far from complete. This is why Parliament has fallen to such a disgusting low.

All segments of the economy have begged the government to slow down the processing of the bill through this House. The provinces have asked for it, the business community has asked for it, chartered accountants and lawyers have asked for it, international corporations have asked for it but this government is determined to put it through to meet the deadline of January 1, 1972 set by the Minister of Finance. Mr. Speaker, I cannot comprehend why this government would feel that the personal reputation of one member of the government who made a forecast should be placed above the welfare of thousands of Canadian citizens. That just does not make any sense.

Mr. Osler: What you say is nonsense.

Mr. Danforth: In his speech on third reading, the minister stated that there would be further amendments after this bill goes through. He carefully enunciated amendments which would be considered, but the banking committee of the other place has taken exception to those sections which are to be amended. Was this done in an attempt to help the people of Canada or was it a deliberate attempt to influence the further consideration of this bill? The government did not hesitate to impose closure in this House, so why would it hesitate to tinker with the other place? I feel this is exactly what is going on.

[Mr. Danforth.]

In stating that this bill would have to be proclaimed before the full effects of it can be known, the minister is making guinea pigs of the people of Canada as my leader pointed out. It is the trial and error method, but unfortunately the livelihood of many thousands of Canadians is involved. We cannot afford to tinker with the economic climate of Canada today. Too many businesses have been forced to close, too many farmers have left the land, too many big industries have decided not to expand and too many industries have left the country in disgust. Now, we have before us the bland assurance of this government that all will be well if the opposition will just desist and let them ram this measure through Parliament.

Mr. Osler: You don't know the difference between a ram and a turtle.

Mr. Danforth: The people of Canada do not understand this bill, Mr. Speaker, nor do all Members of Parliament but the people of Canada thoroughly understand the actions of this government. This has been proven by the tenor of debate in this House these last two or three days. It is an indication of the political climate of the country.

I have always loved the United States and its actions, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting to note that the members on my left, for whom I have the greatest respect, have now directed their attacks not at the government which they know, as a result of having their ear to the ground, will not be back, but at this party which they feel will be their chief antagonists when we go to the country.

Mr. Mahoney: My God! This must be the cartoon hour!

Mr. Danforth: It is interesting that some of the back benchers and parliamentary secretaries opposite have taken an active part in this debate. I think they realize that this will be their last Parliament and their last chance to be on the record.

Mr. McGrath: You will go down in history as the only one who had to bring in closure to get your bill through.

Mr. Danforth: In spite of the propaganda, in spite of the assurances of this government, in spite of their lack of intimate knowledge of parliamentary procedure, the people of this country still think for themselves. When you travel among the people of this country, Mr. Speaker, you learn that they are not fooled by the blandness of this government when it says that a million or so people will be taken off the tax rolls. They know that as long as this bill is in effect in its entirety they will be back on the rolls. They know that inflation will eat the few crumbs this government is giving as tax deductions. The little man in the grocery store, in the service station, the shoe clerk, and the fellow in the factory realize that the government have made changes in this bill and they realize why this was done. They know that they cannot win tax cuts for themselves as they speak only with one voice, but they know also that when the credit unions and co-operatives brought many voices together and indicated that they represented a large number of voters, the government listened and made changes. This is power politics, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: That doesn't sound like dictatorship.

Mr. Danforth: This does not help the little fellow, the man that tax reform was supposed to help.

It is strange, Mr. Speaker, that when we voted on matters pertaining to agriculture, such as the recaptured depreciation, the elimination of the basic herd, the imposition of a capital gains tax, government members who represent farming communities voted for those changes. But they cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. They must either go back to their constituents and admit that they do not understand this bill or that they voted anti-agriculture on those measures. It is as simple as that. Their actions show where they stand. I think many of them voted for the government measure because they did not understand what it meant. If these provisions are implemented in their present form, Mr. Speaker, they will destroy many of the sound and substantial businesses in the country. The government is going to extract more money, but the feeling in the country today is that taxes are about as high as they dare go.

My leader was quite correct when he intimated that there will be further trouble if we get into the realm of capital gains and still have estate taxes in the provincial field. No small business or farm can survive this double taxation. The margin of profit in agriculture today is so small that it cannot bear this extra burden. It will be impossible to hand a farm from one generation to another under the provisions in the proposed tax bill. It just is not possible and there is no incentive if the economic climate of agriculture continues to decline under this government.

The bill becomes more and more complicated, Mr. Speaker. The minister said we debated it for 50 days but I would challenge that. Taking him at his word, however, that time, included the committee stage of this bill. The treasurer of the province of Ontario, as well as his staff, indicated that after an intensive study of four months, the provincial experts were unable to comprehend many of the complicated provisions contained in this bill. Yet, this government would lead us to believe that in this period of time members of this Parliament should thoroughly understand the ramifications of the bill and put it through. It is this to which the people object. The people expect reasoned action by any government, and they fail to see it in this situation. Surely, the people of Canada are entitled to the opportunity to earn a fair living without the government embarking on a deliberate policy or creating unemployment, the opportunity to amass some savings without the government devising ways and means of extracting the greater portion from them, the opportunity to engage in a business without government interference and regulation to a degree that the administrative work becomes burdensome, the opportunity to retire with enough money on which to live comfortably without government action making this entirely impossible, and the opportunity to provide something for their heirs without the government entirely destroying the results of their work.

I resent very much an attitude on the part of any member of this House which indicates that one generation has no right to pass on wealth to the next generation. I think this is a retrograde step. I think this is one of the greatest incentives people engaged in work have. They should have the opportunity to establish a plateau on which their children can start out far beyond that on which their parents, because of circumstances, were forced to start. This is the greatest incentive there is, but even this seems to be removed under this new tax bill. One has only to read this bill to believe the government has absolutely no feeling for the common people.

It is interesting to note that members in this House stood up and said that the opposition party was opposed to this bill and therefore was opposed to relief for the low-income people, was opposed to the fact that older citizens would get a little break, that some categories would have a little rebate on their taxes and that some of the workers would have a little allowance for their tools and travelling expenses. They told us that if we voted against this bill this was the position we would be taking. This is the program followed by members of this government. They always try to wrap up a few goodies in any measure which they feel should be foisted on the people of Canada. This method is as old as the hills. Many grandmothers used castor oil in sugar to cleanse the systems of their children and grandchildren, but the castor oil in this bill is designed to cleanse the ills contained in it. We can come to only one conclusion, and that is that this bill was the product of a government which wanted to close all possible loopholes that might be utilized by Canadians to survive in the economic climate of Canada.

I pointed out once before, and do so again in supporting the amendment of my colleague, that farming as a business cannot be classified in the same way as other businesses in this country. I am not speaking of the capital gains tax. I am speaking about the basic herd, and the tax paid by farmers themselves, because under the present economic climate farmers cannot pass on any additional costs. Any increased taxation of farmers means even less net profit from the farm operation. If a company selling trucks, tractors or anything a farmer buys, suffers an increase in tax, the company adds the additional cost to the product it sells. If one farm commodity in Canada should have an additional cost added to it, this government would open the door to foreign imports so that the cost of living would not increase, thus adversely affecting their monthly reports.

So, I point out that I would have no hesitation at all in supporting the amendment my colleague has moved in a last desperate attempt to save the farmers of our nation. The government will not benefit by the action it is taking in respect of the farmers. The amount of tax it will collect through this action, which will put the farmers and their sons and daughters off the land, is a small pittance compared to the amount of money it now spends to keep them on the farm. I fail to see, therefore, why the government is taking this action. Does the government not care for the individual farmer? Does it want to shift the money to the other side? The government has spent $100 million in the west to support the farmers. It spent perhaps $200 million in Canada on agricultural subsidy programs, and with the grants and other aids to agriculture it probably has spent perhaps an extra billion dollars. Yet the government is going to put the farmers off the land because of the tax measure, and the amount it will collect will be a pittance compared to the other sums.

Is it the intention of the government to get rid of the farmers and the small businessmen? This bill is designed to broaden the tax base. It certainly does not bring about more equity because it is designed to extract more per individual and not less. The implementation of the bill unfortunately will prove this. So far as I am concerned, my feelings for Parliament have reached a new low because we have a so-called reform bill brought in by this government which I submit is a humiliation to the people because many of its clauses were never discussed or debated and yet were put through because a certain cabinet minister decided that on January 1, 1972, this measure should be proclaimed. In addition, I resent very much the fact that the Minister of Finance stood in his place and ridiculed my leader for his attempt to divide this bill. He said this was impractical, impossible and not plausible. We did not suggest this without a great deal of thought. We consulted the foremost tax and legal people in this country. Yet this minister, who has never yet made one accurate economic forecast, in order to leave Parliament with one accurate forecast insisted on closure to fulfil his forecast that this bill would be passed by January 1, 1972. I think this is ridiculous.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mrs. McCleave)—Canadian foreign aid program—shipment of goods through Canadian brokers; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis)—External Affairs—fisheries treaty with Norway—request for opportunity to discuss terms; the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Regional Economic Expansion—suggested resignation of minister.

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, and the amendment of Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) (p. 10363) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Burton (p. 10370).

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to again bring a few things to the attention of the government. One wonders how effective it will be since we are operating under a time allocation motion. It is rather like playing the game of hide and seek, ready or not we will be caught. This is the sort of game the government is playing. The time has been called, the decisions have been made.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Some of the questions that were raised in committee, particularly those which applied to the farm sector, have not been answered. I asked some questions with regard to how the valuation of land would be established, and back came the answer: fair market value. What is it? The fact of the matter is that they do not know. Not too long ago the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) brought forward an adjustment program under which he said that land would be transferred at 90 per cent of the fair market value. The minister is shaking his head, yet this is what is said in the document. Did he not read it?

Mr. Danforth: He has not read it.

Mr. Olson: What you are saying is not correct.

Mr. Gleave: I do not know how one arrives at 90 per cent of the market value because it drops when you assess it.

Mr. Olson: I will be happy to explain that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gleave: Yes, the minister will be explaining it but not in the House; it will be to the country.

Mr. Olson: That is what I was doing last week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Burton: That is whistling in the dark.

Mr. Gleave: I think it was my colleague, the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) who pointed out that in many cases when the government is attempting to establish the actual market value of the land, at least in western Canada with which I am familiar, they will be working on marginal value. They will not be working on full value but on the value of odd quarter sections. I do not expect that the government will accept what I say. I have here in my hand the report of a chartered accountant of reputable standing in Saskatoon. Here is what he says with regard to this matter:

> farm land—fair market value may be difficult to establish at this time because of the relatively few sales of farm property in most localities in the past two or three years.

He is pointing out the difficulty that might occur when you start establishing the market value of a farm property. So, according to the government, market value is all they are prepared to use. They are not prepared to use the assessment of the actual productive value of that asset which they were asked to include, to they will proceed with this one method which has been described to them as quite unreliable, and which may very well work an injustice on the farmers themselves when assessing capital gain. Nonetheless, the government is prepared to proceed, and has refused to accept the opinions of those in the House who make their living off farms and who have some personal knowledge of this. I expect also that they will refuse to accept what I have quoted to them from a letter from an accountant who has spent a great deal of his time filing returns and working on matters related to farms. Here is his advice to farmers:

> If you have knowledge of any farm land in your area which has been sold the last year or two, and which is comparable to your land in quality, make a note of the legal description of the property, and the parties involved in the transaction.

In other words, he is saying to the farmers: if you want to protect yourselves against the very real possibility of injury as a result of this legislation, go out and find any property that is transferred in your area, make a note of it, keep a record, try to find out at what value it was transferred, and have that in your pocket at some future time when the authorities come to you and say "you have made this much as a capital gain". This is the advice that comes from this accountant. Let us follow on. Here is what he said about farm equipment:

I would suggest that you appoint an equipment dealer, well versed in valuing machinery to appraise your equipment and give you a certified list of the equipment and fair market value of each machine on valuation day.

This is list should be kept safety and I would like to make a copy of it for retention in my files.

The dealer could certify the list as follows: "I have examined on this date the equipment listed below, and in my opinion, based on my experience as a dealer in such equipment, the fair market value at this date is as follows:

This will involve considerable work for the dealer and I expect that he will charge an appraisal fee.

This is the kind of advice that people who are experienced and knowledgeable in income tax law are giving to their clients and yet, on the other hand, the government ignores it altogether.

Let us follow on. He said:

livestock . . . a farmer who has a basic herd, or who intends to make application for one, should document market value of the basic herd class of animals on valuation day . . . animals which have a special value and these are included in a basic herd, you should consider obtaining an appraisal by an independent livestock broker or dealer.

Again this is advice to farmers regarding the handling of livestock. Then, he refers to shares in your farming company, and he describes gift and estate taxes. He says the federal government has indicated that it will vacate the estate and gift tax field on December 31, 1971. He goes on to say:

There are many uncertainties in this area and I hesitate to comment at this time.

This is what we are being asked to accept without question and, if we vote in favour of this bill, to defend our position in the country. If we vote against it, then, as the previous speaker said, there is a little sugar coated pill in the exemptions which, of course, the government members will be quick to charge we are denying the people in the country. Surely, it is the responsibility of the government, if they wish to levy a capital gains tax, to see that that capital gains tax is levied in such a way that it does not do injury to those who have to pay the tax, and that it does not cause undue expense to those who have to establish their financial position in respect of the tax. My chief complaint at this point is that those responsible for drawing up the act have not concerned themselves with the fact that it inflicts hardship on those who have to pay the tax. Reliable accountants assure me that we will find ourselves arguing with officials in the income tax department who themselves will not be sure of the limits within which they are operating. Mr. Speaker, if they are not sure of those limits, then how about the ordinary farmer or businessman trying to survive in the tax jungle that this bill will create?

I am satisfied that the bill will create a tax jungle. And, Mr. Speaker, the money collected in capital gains tax off farms will show the worthlessness of putting that provision in the bill. It will force a change in the method of buying, selling and transferring farm machinery. By some means or another the farmer and machinery agent will have to avoid fictitious capital gains, or unreal capital gains, that is to say, those which do not really put any money in your pocket. This capital gains tax provision will also make it more difficult for land to be transferred from generation to generation. The amendment seeks to deal with that problem, and for that reason deserves our consideration. It is a practical, workable approach to the way in which we make a living from the land.

I can find very little to recommend the government's action in this case, and even less to recommend in the haste with which the bill is being forced through the House or in the manner in which the government is clobbering those who seek to bring some reason into the bill.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by my colleague from Edmonton West. I believe it is a good and necessary amendment. Even though we are operating under the shadow of closure, I hope the government may be persuaded to let the amendment pass and allow the agricultural sections of the legislation to be referred back to committee for study in some depth.

I would like to talk mainly on the two sections that are under debate today, section 29 and section 39, which deal with the basic herd and with the capital gains tax as applied to farmers. But before doing so, I would like to voice my criticism of the way in which this tax legislation has been handled in the past few days. Since the government announced its intention to use closure, it is not down the throats of the opposition or of Parliament that it is ramming its new tax program. It is down the throats of the Canadian taxpayers, of the Canadian nation as a whole. It is down the throats of the great majority of taxpayers who cannot even begin to understand the implications of the new taxes, and many of whom are violently opposed to having these provisions enforced before their meaning is made clear.

It is a preposterous proceeding that is taking place in the House of Commons at the present time. What is the purpose of closure, either in the old or in the new form? It is to put an end to obstructive and repetitious debate which continues after the issues have been clarified for the country. The problem in this case is not obstruction. Instead, the House has been struggling with a bill of some 700 pages, involving hundreds of propositions, the intent of which is not merely to change taxes but to alter the whole tax system. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has complicated the debate by tossing in well over 100 amendments. How can the ordinary tax-paying citizen be expected to understand all of this when tax experts are complaining bitterly that many of the sections are incomprehensible to them?

Stanfield) to divide the legislation into two parts. Under his proposal the new personal rates could have taken effect in January, and the more complicated package of changes involving tax on capital gains and new provisions affecting business could have been deferred until the early part of 1972 following closer scrutiny by the House. This would not have forced the Minister of Finance to abandon his total objectives. He would simply have had to take two bites at the cherry instead of one. If he had then encountered opposition to the new rate proposals, closure would have been legitimate. Issues would have been clear. But the government would have none of that suggestion.

The country is to have the whole bill whether it likes it or not; whether people understand it or not, they are to have it by closure. The people most affected will not be the critics in Parliament but the ordinary tax-paying citizens. It is the Canadian taxpayer whose rights are being trampled on. The taxpayer has heard debate about general principles. He has heard re-assuring statements from ministers to the effect that "valuation won't hurt you even if you don't understand it." But his tax will not be decided by references to generalities or ministerial speeches. It will be determined by the letter of the law which Parliament was examining in committee. That examination has now been curtailed, and in fact this debate is being curtailed while the country is in a fog about the entire business of tax reform. Over and over again within the last few days, when sections dealing with agriculture were being examined by the committee, it was said that the people involved in drafting the legislation, and the people who will be involved in administering it, simply do not understand Canadian agriculture. I think that in good measure this is true.

We have seen a number of pieces of agricultural legislation come before this House within the past few months. They either tried to lock the farmer into a position which he was not willing to accept, or to provide him with a form of government control, and the establishment of quotas, all of which he was not ready to accept. To me this adds up to one basic conclusion, that the people drafting legislation have not taken the time to look into agricultural problems closely enough to determine what the industry really needs, and so bring in legislation for the benefit of that industry.

We went through the process of trying to introduce amendments to the stabilization bill, a bill which was finally thrown out of the House by the government. Those amendments were proposed by the official opposition and also by agricultural organizations all across Canada. For the most part they were good, sound amendments. Granted, Mr. Speaker, there were some that would have involved large expenditures of money, but there were others which could have been incorporated in the legislation for the good of agriculture. Yet they were not given a second thought by the government.

I believe that the farming community across Canada is sick and tired of the present Liberal government, sick and tired because it has not introduced anything in the way of meaningful agricultural legislation for over a period of a good many months. The agricultural industry is in serious trouble in Canada. This is something that should be stressed by rural members every time they get an opportunity. It is in serious trouble not only in the west but in all parts of Canada from the Maritimes to British Columbia.

An analysis of the trend of cash receipts from the sale of livestock and animal products over the period of the last 20 years indicates an average increase of just under $70 million a year, or about 3.5 per cent. This compares with the average rate of crops of just under $40 million, or slightly less than 3 per cent per year. On the other hand, operating expenses and depreciation charges have been increasing at a rate far greater than either of these two components. This average rate has been about $115 million per year, or just under 5 per cent. A continuation of this trend will lead to a gradual worsening of the farm income situation in Canada.

At the Outlook conference that was completed a few weeks ago in Ottawa it was noted that the repayment of $75 million of cash advances from earlier years is exerting a negative effect on the level of prairie cash receipts this year. In other words, the conference noted that although the movement of grain this year has been at a good level, the money for the most part has not been put back into the pockets of farmers. Increases in expenditures for farm production have eroded the impact of higher levels of prairie grain marketings on realized net incomes, as the Outlook conference went on to say. On the Prairies it is forecast that realized net income will be $621 million in 1971, compared with $494 million in 1970 and $505 million in 1969. The income projected for 1972 is to be only $500 million, which is the same level as in 1969, which was a very depressed year. Surely this cannot give much ground for optimism for farmers or others engaged in the agricultural business.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that unless we bring in agricultural policies which will reverse this trend drastically, unless we being in new agricultural policies, agriculture as we know it today may in a few years be non-existent. I say this only to demonstrate that the two items on which we are speaking today, those relating to the basic herd and to the capital gains tax, especially as that tax applies to the transfer of farms, are very critical areas to consider in the legislation and in the total picture of agriculture.

Speaking further on the capital gains tax, I believe that if a father in any way is hampered from passing on his farm to a son or daughter, the recipient of the farm will be restricted greatly in the matter of returns. Considering the low net return on moneys invested in agriculture today, the son or daughter may never actually pay for that farm. In a good many cases we are looking at farms that are capitalized to the extent of between $50,000, $100,000 or even more. The portion of that money which must be paid out in tax will seriously undermine the effective earning power of that farm. Also, there is always the estate tax to consider. This to me represents a clear form of double taxation.

It has long been recognized that the ratio of investment to return in agriculture, as I mentioned before, is extremely high. Not only is this a characteristic of agriculture, but the problem is further compounded by the high-risk factor associated with the uncertainties of climate and markets. Producers must contend with those risks. Indeed, the low returns of agriculture are evident from the fact that banks are reluctant to extend long-term credit to farmers. Hence, there is need for the government-administered Farm Credit Corporation. Thus, it is obvious that in a high cost, moderate risk and low return industry the effects of capital gains would be more disruptive and burdensome than in the case of a low investment, higher return business. I am thinking, for example, of the sort of business that is carried on by members of some other professions.

We will be looking at a situation in which the business of farming will be treated in the same way as any other business, without recognition of the fact that there is something unique about farming and that we must work toward preserving that life style and and that way of life. Farmers, owing to the very nature of farming, are unable to accumulate the resources needed to pay capital gains tax. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that measures such as those we are considering make little sense at this particular time in Canada's history. To the extent that it is desirable to encourage and retain family farms for social as well as economic reasons, appropriate tax provisions should be made.

The measure of the government's failure to appreciate fully the sociological implications of the effects of the proposed legislation is shown by the fact that the pride and independence of the family farm and small family business have been completely ignored. The farmer's desire to protect his family farm has been ignored completely. In this regard the proposed legislation is better suited to the impersonal world of the giant corporation and multinational which is owned impersonally by many than to the values implicit in the family farm operation.

The Senate committee on banking and commerce, in its preliminary report on proposed tax reform legislation expressed concern about the pressures that have increasingly led to a profound change in the nature and use of farmland. The committee recommended:

—that consideration be given to extending the roll-over provisions to permit land together with any other capital property which is used by an individual in a farming activity to be transferred, either during lifetime or on death, to lineal ascendants or descendants without being subject to capital gains treatment under the deemed realization provisions. This exemption should only be available in those circumstances where the transferee or transferees continue to carry on the farming activities.

I believe that under this tax legislation we should not tax one segment of the economy at levels which it cannot meet. The fact that farmers have been able to stay in business is proof of their ingenuity. I suggest that we should apply here some of that ingenuity shown by the farming community and devise a tax structure that will enable both the Canadian public and the farmers to get a fair return from the agricultural industry. At the same time we must maintain the well-being of the rural economy and the level of food production which the nation requires. Maintaining the rural economy at a satisfactory level is an important consideration.

Just a week or so ago I returned from a trip to the United States. I heard agricultural problems and questions discussed at some length. The Americans, basically, are facing the same kind of problem that we are experiencing. There, farmers are leaving the land, large corporations are moving in to take their place and the entire agricultural industry from the standpoint of the farmer is just not attractive enough to bring young people into it. I believe that we in Canada must try to tackle the problem. One of the first ways of doing that would be through a fair taxation system which would apply especially to those involved in agriculture.

If I may speak about the basic herd concept, Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the provisions relating to the basic herd are passed as proposed, every farmer engaged in a cow-calf operation in Canada will be adversely affected. So far as I can judge, under the proposed legislation the basic herd concept is being phased out for no valid reason. The Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in its report published on November 4, 1971, said:

Your committee is not aware of any reason for not continuing to recognize a permanent herd for what it is, namely, a capital asset.

Your committee recommends that provision be made in the proposed legislation for the continued recognition of a farmer's permanent herd as a 'basic herd' and, therefore, as a capital asset.

The House of Commons committee report on the white paper proposals said that since taxation was recommended with regard to the basic capital asset it was necessary to retain the basic herd concept. Under the transitional rules, basic herds which have already been established will continue to be treated as capital assets to the extent that those accrued at the commencement of the new system will not be subject to tax. There can therefore be little point in treating gains occurring thereafter in the same manner as profits on the sale of inventory or stock in trade.

The farmer wishing to acquire a herd or major addition to an existing herd takes money out of his capital. This is only natural. To go on an accrual basis with annual evaluation of the herd is often impractical, and if the farmer is on a cash basis for accounting he will experience a number of years of losses which will not be fully compensated by the averaging provisions. The failure of the government to treat this unique capital asset of the farmer's animals as a form of capital, subject to the same rules as taxation capital can, therefore, be regarded as wholly discriminatory.

I believe the farmer should be permitted to add to his basic herd by putting income into the cost of animals that he has. A young farmer should be permitted to establish a basic herd and to have that expense regarded as his capital investment. This will be a definite advantage to any young farmer interested in raising a cow-calf herd in which he will make the greatest portion of his living. If the present tax proposal is unmodified, the farmer will realize the proceeds of sales as income immediately on disposal of his herd. Farmers who wish to build their herd year by year, reporting the cost of the transitions as income as they do now, will not under the proposed changes be able to enlarge their capital base in animals. It does not take a genius to realize what could happen to the cattle industry if this legislation were adopted.

As I have mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, there is a strong social case to be made for the government's not creating difficulties for families who wish to continue farming. It will be extremely disruptive to a farm business if capital gains must be realized by the family and withdrawn from the farm. A young man just starting up in farming could very well have to sell a portion of the farm he has acquired in order to pay capital gains tax. No tax reform legislation should have the effect of locking a farmer or any other person into a business or a way of life simply because he cannot afford to relinquish that business. Farmers can incorporate, but the taxation system should not force them into incorporation.

The concepts that are embedded in the tax legislation will to a great extend jeopardize the present form of our family farms. The application of a capital gains tax must not be permitted to lead to loss of ownership of family farm operations, nor must the capital gains provisions be permitted to introduce unnecessary rigidity and lack of inflexibility in the capital reorganization of a farm business. To conclude, I urge that the government give serious consideration to the proposed amendments that we are debating. If as members we find our time in the House of Commons is to be spent in a meaningful way, the tax legislation as it pertains to farms must be given greater study.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to participate this afternoon, but the speeches ground out by the Conservative research people have run down. Maybe over the supper hour they will have an opportunity to prepare a few more. I was very impressed with the presentation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when opening the third reading debate on this bill. He firmly planted his feet on the ground and then, tweaking the opposition with the impish grin we have come to know so well, putting his tongue in cheek, he proceeded to tick off the opposition about the fact that they abstained when the committee report came up for a vote. Rather than dealing with the specifics of the bill, the opposition's financial critic defended the actions of the Conservative members of that committee. He talked about the poor members who had to catch airplanes and were not available for the vote. That is too bad, but their responsibility is to the committee and the House of Commons prior to going home to their constituents.

The result of the tongue-in-cheek comments of the Minister of Finance indicated the kind of overreaction we have come to expect from members of the official opposition. It scares me to think there is even a slight possibility that they will be in government. If they react in this way then, being the government party with the kind of criticism to which it is subjected they will not be able to stand the heat in the kitchen.

At this time it is appropriate to compliment the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I concede to the financial critic of the opposition that I do not understand every section of this bill. However, I have come to believe that the parliamentary secretary obviously does understand them. There was not a section of the bill with which he was unfamiliar or on which he did not give an answer. It may not have been the answer the NDP or the official opposition were looking for, but he certainly understood the section. In the cool and efficient manner that we came to know in the many weeks of debate he showed that he knew the bill inside out, backwards and forwards.

As a member who practised law before coming to this House, I do not think there is any more complicated legislation than tax legislation, be it income tax, succession duties or estate taxes. It has to be complicated. We find lawyers of the Canadian Bar Association and accountants complaining that the legislation is complicated. Theh know full well that when an individual is going to be taxed, it must come within the four corners of the tax bill. Unless it is covered in the tax bill, the individual citizen is not subject to that kind of taxation.

Based on the decisions made on the old tax bill, the department, government and committee told us this bill would plug some of the obvious loopholes. In that way it is complicated and lengthy. When the time comes to put the bill into operation there will be all kinds of assistance available to the taxpayer. I am not referring primarily to lawyers and chartered accountants, but the kind of assistance we have come to know and expect from the Department of National Revenue. There are brochures and pamphlets to explain what seems to be a complicated piece of legislation. It is very easy to understand when put into such a document or form, but extremely difficult to put down in a piece of legislation.

Reference has been made to the fact that we have imposed a time allocation. The opposition likes to use words like "guillotine" and "closure". I do not think that anyone can win that semantic argument. It does not matter. The time comes when government must take its responsibility. I am proud this government took its responsibility. I support the action taken by the government. There comes a time when debate must end. We must make a decision. The government that introduces the bill must stand or fall by the legislation that it brings forward. It is not up to the opposition to impose their own form of filibuster or closure by debating ad nauseam sections that they do not like or feel should be changed.

There comes a time when the government must decide whether to make amendments, and it certainly showed its flexibility in this area, or to stand by the section, pass it and accept responsibility therefor. Nothing is to be gained from debate that goes on interminably with no decision being reached. I support the government and its time allocation. I think that rules 75A, 75B and 75C are good. These are the kind of rules that will save the House of Commons, not destroy it.

A cry has gone up from opposition members that there is no tax reform in this bill. Yet we have provided for a capital gains tax; we have provided that in addition to the increased exemptions which are to be allowed, people aged 65 and over will benefit by a further $650 exemption. He must also recognize the assistance given to working mothers who may now receive deductions in respect to child care expenses to the extent of $500 a year, or a maximum of $2,000 a year for a family. Acknowledgement is made, at last, of the fact that the workingman needs the tools of his trade. I agree that $150 is not enough, but it is $150 more than has been allowed by any government previously in office.

We have heard a good deal said about the estate tax. There is no estate tax. I think that arguments in this area should now be addressed to provincial legislatures because the tax has been abandoned by the federal government. I welcome the amendments which have been made. I do not object to them. I see a desirable flexibility in this kind of approach. Indeed, I hope the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is correct in his prediction that many more amendments will be brought down in the new year. I hope the government will continue to react to situations in which changes are required, especially when it appears that inequity has arisen.

The government has proven the flexibility of its approach by the changes which were made after the white paper was introduced, the changes which it brought about as a result of representations from individual taxpayers, and the amendments introduced following representations in this House. I have in mind primarily in that respect the new provisions regarding credit unions. I think the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) had a great deal to do with this. He certainly put forward a good argument. The ears of the government were open and I give the Minister of Finance credit for listening to a good case on behalf of the credit unions and co-operatives.

I do not think the Canadian people are very impressed by the scare tactics adopted by the opposition, by predictions that small farmers will be forced to leave the land and that businessmen will be unable to operate. I believe that when the time comes for them to submit their tax returns and they see the refunds they will get, they will discount the scare tactics employed by spokesmen for the opposition parties.

Mr. Baldwin: I have news for you.

An hon. Member: Bad news. It usually is.

Mr. Cullen: I am aware of the opinion held by opposition parties. I have considered the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I think it is a great step backward rather than forward. The reforms put forward in this legislation will make the tax system more equitable than it ever has been. The bill has been debated ad nauseam. Its contents have been before us since 1962. Surely this is not the time to talk about splitting the bill, taking a giant step backward, as the hon. member for Edmonton West would have us do. let us, rather, as my hon. friend the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) said, get on with the job.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary two questions. The first relates to the basic herd provision. As I understand this legislation, when a farmer disposes of his herd the only recourse open to him under averaging, assuming he is not using the accrued income system or has not previously owned a basic herd, would be the general average under the five-year averaging provision. if the legislation were in effect now, for example, and a farmer's last averaging block was 1966-1970 and he were to dispose of his herd in 1971, this year, he would be obliged to pay the full income tax in this year, assuming he did not own a basic herd previously or was not on an accrual basis. He would have to pay full tax as though he has earned $30,000 in the one year. I believe there would be no forward averaging provision open to him. I leave that question with the parliamentary secretary.

My second question is: In buying forward-averaging annuities, as farmers and others will be able to do, as capital gains it is mentioned you can buy them through registered provincial companies. However, there is no assurance that these retirement or forward-averaging annuities would not be discounted by the companies dealing in them. There is no provision for this, to my knowledge. I raise this question on the assumption that there may be so much money available to annuity companies that they would not be able to take it up. As a matter of interest, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary what these forward-averaging annuity companies may invest in. It seems to me they are largely involved in buying government bonds, so in effect this is a system whereby the government will have the use of their money until such time as it is recovered in taxation from the net income of the recipient. There is nothing in this bill which helps the farming community.

May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for dinner I was speaking of the effect this tax bill will have on the farming industry. I see nothing in the bill but provisions to make agriculture more difficult to finance and more difficult for farmers to carry on farming. I base this statement on the fact that practically none of the provisions of Bill C-259 materially improves the income of farmers.

The only farmers who might derive some help from the bill are the low income farmers, since the new income tax exemptions will be more generous than they were. However, since the government is intending to phase out the small, marginal farmers I cannot see how these so-called goodies in the form of increased exemptions will be of particular value to them.

There are three or four sections of the bill that bear upon the agricultural industry. One of them is the introduction of the capital gains tax on farmlands. Another is the phasing out of straight line depreciation on farm machinery. A third is the basic herd concept, which at the moment applies only to cattle but could embrace other livestock such as pigs, animals used for fur farming, and other branches of the industry requiring the build-up of a substantial number of animals over a period of years. From what has been said in this House, it does not require great thought to come to the conclusion that the agricultural industry is in a serious position. It is in a state of great flux and nothing this tax bill does assists the situation.

In its release dated November 30, 1970, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture revealed some figures on farm income published for the annual agricultural outlook conference by the Canadian government. These figures show that in 1959, $610 million, or just over 10 per cent of the $5.4 billion total food bill, was paid to Canadian farmers. In the year 1971 the amount was $440 million, showing a decrease of 6 per cent in a food bill of $7 billion. In other words, Canadian farmers received two-thirds the amount they received 12 years ago. In terms of constant value dollars, this represents about half the amount.

This fantastic situation has been created by the steady improvement in farm productivity over the years, which means fewer and fewer farmers producing more and more goods. In addition, there has been a chronically low level of returns in agriculture, and 1971 was an especially bad year for farmers. While the number of farmers has decreased, the capital investment made by farmers has risen. This is why I think the provisions of this bill are important.

I cannot help but feel that Bill C-259 is going to increase the exodus from the land of small farmers. I am not one of those who contend that the small farmer is necessary to the economy. If a farmer cannot make a reasonable living from the land, then it might be better for him to become involved in some other occupation that provides him with a better living. I travelled around my riding recently and found many farmers with considerable capitalization voicing the opinion that people on welfare were as well off as they were. At first glance one wondered how this could be, but a study of their financial situation revealed that although these farmers might have invested a lot of money in livestock, machinery and so on, they have very little consumer or spending money of their own. I think it is important to recognize this fact.

Another sector of agriculture that is depressed as far as level of income is concerned is the grain producer. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) suggested that we had exported a great quantity of grain in the last crop year. However, he neglected to mention that the grain was sold at record low prices. When the farmer receives 60 cents a bushel for barley, having received 75 cents for it in the late thirties, it is easy to see that in this day of high prices and high cost of farming the grain producers cannot be said to have things rosy.

The phasing out of straight line machinery depreciation will not be of benefit to the farmers and will increase their cost of capitalization. Thus, our grain producers will become less efficient than they have been in the past. We have to compete with United States farmers, and the United States has just introduced the DISC proposal designed to assist their producers. While it may not be directly applicable to agriculture, the United States is going all out to help U.S. producers. Since we compete with U.S. farmers, I suggest the phasing out of straight line depreciation on farm machinery is just one more measure that means farmers will be less efficient than they were. Being efficient is the only way they can stay alive economically. The straight line depreciation on machinery allowed the farmer to use good machinery. This was reflected in production and helped to make Canadian grain competitive in world markets.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

The other place has indicated that they do not favour the phasing out of the basic herd concept. If we consider the case of a livestock producer who has built up a herd over 20 years or so, who has not been on the accrual basis or had a previous basic herd, we find that if he should dispose of the herd he will be liable for income tax on the sale as though it had all been earned in one year. If he sold his herd for $50,000 he would be liable for about $20,000 tax in that year. If he could not take advantage of averaging then he would have to sell the herd in five year lots in order to take advantage of personal income tax.

The government should consider this whole question because it applies to fur farmers, swine herds or any herd that takes a while to build. Some sort of averaging should be available to these farmers. Under the present provisions many people who sell the whole herd in one year will be assessed for income tax in that year. It may be a good thing for the farmer to sell off the herd over a period of five years or longer in order to gain a tax advantage. If a herd is sold for $100,000, the income tax for that year would be nearly $50,000, whereas if it is sold over five years the income tax would amount to about $20,000. The government has been deficient in this area and I think they should bring in regulations to ease this situation.

The transfer of land from one generation to another will be made very difficult by imposition of the deemed realization at death and the capital gains tax. The treasurer of Ontario, Hon. W. D'Arcy McKeough, in his submissions to the meeting of the Ministers of Finance on November 1 and 2 said:

> Following the significant strengthening of federal estate and gift taxes in 1968, it became apparent, to Ontario at least, that imposition of capital gains tax on top of existing death taxes would amount to confiscatory taxation of wealth.

This was because the capital gains tax would not mature for some time and as it and death taxes came together it would be very severe. He continued:

> We were pleased that Bill C-259 recognized the interdependence of these two forms of taxing capital and the need to reduce death taxes upon introduction of a capital gains tax. However, the complete reversal by the federal government from a severe gift and estate tax regime in 1968 to total withdrawal in 1972 seems unreasonable.

The problem of a capital gains tax on farmers is an especially severe one. The farmer, as any small businessman or person holding property locked into capital gain, will find the payment of that tax a severe strain. An hon. member from the government side mentioned before the supper hour that there will be no estate tax. But, Mr. Speaker, tonight the Ontario government announced an estate tax and at the weekend the Premier of Manitoba said that they were considering it.

Last year, Manitoba's share of the estate tax was $3 million. If this tax is to be collected it will have to be substantial in order to be worth the bother. Unless the provinces and the federal government dovetail their arrangements on these taxes we will find ourselves in an almost impossible situation. The imposition of a capital gains tax as well as a provincial estate tax will make the transfer of land from one generation to another terribly complicated.

Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that I do not see any way in which this legislation will help the agricultural community to carry on. I am afraid it will encourage people to leave the land. Bill C-259 could be responsible for speeding the exodus.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I was going to make some comments to support the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but I am sure the eloquent words we have just heard from the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) have impressed all members of the House except, of course, my friends opposite who are beyond all reason in regard to this bill.

Mr. McBride: Try some reason on us.

Mr. Baldwin: I see we are going to hear from our noisy friends opposite.

Mr. Paproski: There is the basic herd right there, Murray McBride. He has milked his last cow in Lanark.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. gentleman really should not be here. Today is only December 13; he is 18 days too early. The mechanical noisemakers do not arrive until December 31. To get down to facts, Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about the subamendment offered by my friends in the New Democratic Party. We are going to support it, but we have some reservations. As usual, hon. gentlemen to my left who are long on zeal and short on logic, did not think it through. There are dangers inherent in this subamendment. For example, as I construe the subamendment, it will rule out several cases which the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Edmonton West would cover, for example, a farmer with a quarter or half section of land.

Today I had a letter from a farmer in my area who writes that because of inclement weather conditions in the last three or four years he has had a very small crop, with practically no net return and a very small gross return. The only way he is able to maintain his family is by driving a school bus. As I read the amendment offered by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), it would not cover this man. But he would be caught by the amendment in the form moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West. Because of the subamendment of the New Democratic Party, he might well be pushed out of the picture.

The same thing might apply to a widow engaged in school teaching who lives on a farm which she has inherited from her husband. She might not get, under the NDP subamendment, the benefit my hon. friend from Edmonton West envisages in his amendment. So while we support the subamendment, we do so with reservations. Unlike the government, we believe in doing the greatest good for the greatest number of people. Anybody who would vote for this bill without an amendment would not deserve to sit in this House of Commons.

Having made those comments on where we stand on the amendment, I have a few remarks to make. I hope the House will be permitted to divide on this question. I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is here. We know he has been a busy little minister in the Senate today, doing his utmost to persuade them. I shall not talk about the means he exercised. It is a black day in this country when the Minister of Finance goes to the other place and pursues the line he took here last Friday and attempts to persuade the other place to put this bill through in a limited time. The minister pretends innocence. He knows very well what he said here last Friday and he knows very well why he went to the other place in an attempt to persuade them in what one hon. senator said was Christmas closure.

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Baldwin: I am ashamed of the conduct of the Minister of Finance; I really am. However, I shall not pursue this. It is beyond words, Mr. Speaker. Let us reflect on the circumstances under which this vote will be taken, I hope in a short time, and subsequent votes on this bill. We feel this debate should be continued for a reasonable period of time to permit the examination of those parts of the bill which have failed to secure the adequate discussion that we as representatives of the people should have before a bill of this nature is passed. We know why we are not getting it. Today in the House I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a very simple and very innocent question.

An hon. Member: It would be simple.

Mr. Baldwin: I always ask a simple question of a simple man. I asked the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) was enunciating government policy when he said in Saskatoon that the government must exercise additional power, or more control or more power over Parliament. I want to point out that at that time the minister was sitting in his place and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is by no means reluctant to get up and speak if he thinks he has been misquoted. He sat in his place and never challenged my statement, so I think we may take it that in Saskatoon when addressing some 900 of the faithful he said that in his view the government must exercise more power and more authority over Parliament.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Baldwin: We hear "Right" from over there. Obviously, this is what government backbenchers want. I point out to them and to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), from whom I believe better things should come, that before long they will be sitting over here. It will not take long. At least the ragged remnants of them will be over here. They will be screaming at that time. When we stand up for the rights of Parliament we are standing up for all hon. members, not only ourselves but hon. members opposite as well. They do not have the sense to recognize that. However, getting back to the Prime Minister, as usual he distorted things and tried to pass the question off. He said: "Mr. Speaker, he was perhaps thinking of the motion that the leader of the House was talking to a moment ago."

That motion the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) was talking to was a motion for closure. Closure is never far from the mind of the Prime Minister or any hon. member opposite. They want to govern by closure, by guillotine, by choking us off. I asked the Prime Minister a supplementary question: "Was he also speaking about exercising more control over Parliament, and did he have in mind the Senate as well?"

I am sorry the Minister of Finance has fled from his seat. The Prime Minister answered: "No, Mr. Speaker. I think he had in mind getting rid of some of the useless backbenchers in the opposition parties."

That is the view of the Prime Minister—get rid of the opposition parties and get rid of the backbenchers; they are nobodies. That is the way the government likes to govern, by eliminating the opposition. It is a shameful sight to see the Prime Minister of this country making comments of this kind about the House of Commons. To show that this is not just a flash in the pan, the Prime Minister was in Montreal over the weekend and made a speech there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I usually oppose the slaughter of seals, but when I hear all this howling opposite I am inclined to change my mind. What did the Prime Minister say? I shall not quote. I shall only repeat what an article said:

> Trudeau said the opposition parties called his government arrogant when it tightened up parliamentary rules, but weak and incapable of governing when its bills were debated for weeks in the House of Commons.

The fact of the matter is that both these come together. When you find a government that is weak and incompetent, it is arrogant. It is like an incompetent person who becomes a bully in order to get his way in the world in which he lives. That is the situation of this government. The government has imposed closure. It has brought about by closure the implementation of rule 75C, because it is weak, because it is incompetent and because it cannot operate a parliamentary government in the way it should. That is why this government has exercised its arrogant and stupid action of imposing closure. The Prime Minister has his priorities reversed because the government has been arrogant.

This goes hand in hand with the statement of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in Saskatoon, the statement of the Prime Minister that he must be master of the House of Commons and that members of the opposition parties are nothings, the statements of the Prime Minister in Montreal and in this House of Commons, and what the government has done in respect of this bill in imposing closure each week for two successive weeks, as well as the action of the Minister of Finance in finagling his way into the Senate to get this bill through at an early date.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: Shame on him.

Mr. Baldwin: The Minister of Finance knows that I am speaking the truth. What are the facts? When the guillotine fell last week there were more than 200 clauses and subclauses in this legislative monstrosity on which the question had not been put and which had not been discussed. That is the question which we had to face when for 3½ hours—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —this House had to sit here, subjected to the discipline of the guillotine, to have questions put on more than 200 clauses and subclauses in this bill, which had not been discussed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Baldwin: This is one of the darkest chapters in the parliamentary history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friends opposite are behaving in exactly the same way as their predecessors behaved in 1956.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I might take this opportunity to invite hon. members to allow the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to continue his speech. If hon. members want to contest some of the things that are said, I am sure that the House has all the time and they may rise to speak later.

Mr. Baldwin: I thank you for your protection, Mr. Speaker. I just want to follow on what my friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), said, that there will be a parallel to the pipeline debate, that next year the electors of this country will treat this government the way they treated the Liberal government in 1957. At the next election the brazen conduct of this government will not be disregarded.

This is a government which with utmost contempt and disregard for Parliament has fought for the passage of this measure, not understood and not considered, its implications far beyond the intelligence of the minister and his colleagues and certainly beyond the comprehension of the taxpayers of this country. Every taxpayer of this country will require at his side a tax expert in view of the intricacy of this bill. What did we ask? A simple request, an honest and realistic request, that this bill be divided, that part of the bill which we thought was reasonable on matters for which this party, other opposition parties as well as a few members of the government, have been pressing be passed and the rest of the bill not be implemented until a reasonable length of time had elapsed to permit there to be some comprehension of the bill.

Mr. Benson: It simply means you never read it.

Mr. Baldwin: The Minister of Finance said it was not administratively possible. I repeat what I said in the House last week, that any group of people comprising the minister and his advisers who had the deviousness to incorporate between the four corners of one bill the monstrosities which are envisaged in this bill should have no difficulty at all in making those administrative and legislative changes which would have permitted delay of those parts of the bill which we suggested should be delayed until some time next year. It was only an excuse.

What is involved is the prestige of this government. There is no question about it. They lost the bill dealing with the Auditor General; they lost Bill C-244, they lost Bill C-176 and they lost one or two other measures. There are on the order paper a number of legislative items which will expire when the session expires, and the government said that they dare not, cannot and must not allow this session to pass without this bill going through. That is the only reason the government put it through.

Mr. Benson: It is the only reason for your action.

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Speaker. The minister said last Friday that there would be a large number of amendments, and I am sure he repeated that in the Senate today. I have not had a chance to read what he told the Senate, but I would be inclined to believe that the minister said there would be a large number of amendments. I see the minister making notes. I would be glad if he would stand up and say that he does not intend to bring in a large number of amendments next year. He knows that he will be doing so.

Mr. Stanfield: He has no idea what he is going to do.

Mr. Baldwin: A shocking admission of ineptitude! There has been a suggestion to the Senate that they should cease and desist from any challenge to this legislation and from making any proposals for change. That is what the minister is trying to persuade the Senate to do. The minister can shake his head until he is blue in the face but he, I and other members in the House know.

How dare the minister and the government act in this way at this time? It is a shocking and a shameful thing. So far as we are concerned, if we could have got other parties to go along with this we would have been quite prepared to put forward a time limit which would have allowed for reasonable debate and discussion of all particular areas which in our view needed further clarification and further delay—

An hon. Member: How much time?

Mr. Baldwin: —and to consider over 200 clauses and subclauses which have never been considered.

Mr. Benson: It is your fault.

Mr. Stanfield: There would not be enough time for the minister to understand the bill.

Mr. Ricard: You would not understand anything after five years.

Mr. Baldwin: To paraphrase Thoreau, after this bill is passed the taxpayers of this country will live lives of quiet desperation. I should like to end on the note that this bill, together with some of the other bills with which the government has threatened the country, shows what their point of view is. I suggest to this House and to the country that a society designed to present its members with adequate opportunity to achieve identity, stimulation and security will survive the trials of group selection.

What we must have is a provision which will enable the maximum development of all members of the society. A society which fails in this psychological test is not the kind of society we want, but it is the kind of society which the government is offering the people of Canada. Mr. Speaker, we reject it and I suggest, through you, to the House and to the people of Canada that in the next election the people of Canada will also reject it.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. McBride) rising for the purpose of asking a question? The hon. member can ask a question if the hon. member who had the floor would allow it.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McBride: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder, before the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) resumes his seat, if he would be kind enough to give a ball-park figure as to the amount of time he had in mind. I ask the question in all seriousness, assuming that he would be responsible when he said that if we had had more time to debate the bill we would have done a better job. How much time had the hon. member in mind, in terms of weeks or months?

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, my first retort is, why the devil didn't the hon. member ask this question before closure was imposed?

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering Bill C-259, the short title of which is: "An act to amend the Income Tax Act". Looking in all directions, we can see that our friends are very anxiously and impatiently waiting for the guillotine to fall.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in 1971, when there are signs of improvement in every area, it is regrettable and painful that a government supported by the force of the majority should feel compelled to resort to the guillotine.

Those who have promised Canadians to bring about the just society are so weak that they are forced to tell opposition members who seek to protect the people by all possible means, that they have only one defensive weapon which is to silence the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I have keenly followed the question. Indeed, I have read numerous publications issued by workers and farmers, the Canadian Bar Association, accountants, industrialists, teachers, co-operatives, and manufacturing associations. Nowhere did I find a favourable comment or an appreciative remark for Bill C-259. All these publications have been clearly hostile to and have entirely disapproved Bill C-259.

Far from being an improvement Bill C-259 tends to confuse the average citizen. The taxpayer who until now could complete his income tax return all by himself will be unable to get past the first page of his return and our hon. friends opposite, the Liberals, are trying to convince the population that this is an improvement.

We of the Progressive Conservative party have always said that more generous personal exemptions should be granted by the government to small and middle class taxpayers.

The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who will soon be the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada started his fight with the introduction of the white paper. Our hon. friends opposite mocked him; they went to radio and television stations and to newspapers and said, "Stanfield is preaching in the wilderness". By using all sorts of sketches attempts were made to try and persuade the population that the leader of the opposition did not know what he was talking about. A few months later, our hon. friends opposite with the minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) leading the way had to recognize that there was ground to lead the campaign in favour of the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if we were right in our opposition to the white paper we are surely right in our opposition to Bill C-259 since this bill can bring nothing but malediction.

Once more, under the leadership of my hon. leader, we asked the government not to deprive ordinary citizens of the exemptions they are entitled to and, for that purpose, we urged that the bill be divided into two parts. But the Liberal members cannot possibly feel the nation's pulse—estranged from the people as they have been for a long time now—and do not want to listen to reason.

A few months ago, my hon. friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) maintained that one needed courage to create unemployment. The Liberals keep on creating distress among the people since they refuse to recognize their rights and privileges.

How can one believe that Bil C-259 reflects the people's desires when the Minister of Finance himself told the Canadian people that, whether they like it or not, the bill would become law on January 1, 1972? How can one believe that he was right when he himself introduced, after some time, about 100 amendments to the bill and later on amendments to those amendments, while saying that when this monstrosity becomes effective, it will still need improvements? How can we believe that the Minister of Finance and such back-benchers as the member for Bonaventure, who are doing their utmost to have this legislation passed, are well-disposed towards the population—

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine on a point of order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, who claims to know Quebec inside out, should also know hon. members' constituencies. The Bonaventure constituency should properly be called Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, what a point of order! I would like to ask immediately the member for Bonaventure and Gaspé what part of this monstrosity is going to improve the farmers' and the small industrialists' lot, which part of the bill he will support whole heartedly since he is blind and more devoted to his party than to his country? How is this bill bringing some relief to the small employee who will keep on being taxed? How will this bill bring any improvement to the Canadians? The minister and all the Liberals will keep on praising their leader—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see them applauding because only a few years ago they called him a stupid ass. Are they going to keep on applauding? Mr. Speaker, when a majority government has to use a gag to prevent those who defend the people from speaking, the time has come to worry and to raise one's voice.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Question.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not intend to become partisan on the issue that is before us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: We are discussing Bill C-259. When the white paper on tax reform was proposed in this House on November 7, 1969, I decided that the issue of tax reform would probably be the most important single issue on which I would ever have to cast a ballot for or against as a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is breaking my heart.

Mr. Cafik: I decided to do something positive about this, namely, to set up a riding tax committee of a non-partisan nature to study this matter, so that I could make a decision, not based on partisan considerations but on what I felt was in the best national interests of the people of this country. This tax committee consisted of approximately 20 members, a number of whom were certainly from outside my party, some of whom were from outside my riding and two of whom had worked with the Carter commission when this subject was being studied.

We studied this white paper for almost one year. Following our studies as a committee, I took this problem, along with recommendations that we had tentatively arrived at, to the people of my riding. We called a series of meetings from one end of the riding to the other. My riding is not as big as some; it is roughly 100 miles long and embraces 17 municipalities. I had meetings convened in each area. Some meetings were attended by large groups; others, in the southern area of the riding were not so well attended. None the less, we presented to the people the proposals of the white paper as well as our committee position. As a consequence of the reaction to these proposals presented by the committee, we adjusted our position a little. We did so as a result of the input by the people of the riding who did not belong to the select committee.

On November 10, 1970, our committee met with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) as a group. We presented a report to him in which we made 21 recommendations for basic changes. Some of those recommendations paralleled those which had been made by the standing committee of the House of Commons, although other recommendations were totally different. For instance, our committee was totally opposed to the principle of integration whereas the parliamentary committee was not. We liked the principle in theory but we could see no possible way of implementing it in practice.

Mr. Forrestall: How are you going to vote?

Mr. Cafik: Of the 21 proposals we made, and I will not go into details at the moment, 15 were accepted by the government in whole or in part and six were rejected.

Mr. Forrestall: How are you going to vote?

Mr. Cafik: On June 30, when the new proposals were tabled in the House of Commons, our committee met again. We decided that we had to look at the whole thing again. We again convened a series of meetings in my riding at which we discussed these tax proposals. We came forward with a number of recommendations. It was understood at that time that the government would be proposing a series of amendments. We of the committee were concerned, as I was in my capacity as a Member of Parliament, about that particular proposition. I understood that the amendments would be tabled one at a time as the various clauses were being dealt with.

Our committee, myself included, made recommendations to the minister and persuaded him, as did many others, that this was an unwholesome thing to do, that it was unfair to Members of Parliament and that these amendments should be tabled at the earliest possible moment. I am happy to say that this was actually done in cases where it could be done.

The second thing that was decided was that in view of the complexity of this bill and the difficulty that many individuals and even experts would face in interpreting it, it was necessary—

Mr. Alexander: You are stealing our lines.

Mr. Cafik: Long before the hon. member thought of them, we had proposed them. These ideas came from the work of our own committee.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is just repeating them.

Mr. Cafik: I put forward a proposition that none of you guys put forward, and you want to talk about stealing lines!

Mr. Alexander: Refer to us as hon. members, please.

Mr. Cafik: I proposed, Mr. Speaker, that the government should commit itself to bringing forward interpretative regulations.

Mr. Forrestall: What does that mean?

Mr. Cafik: These were to be put forward within two years following passage of the act.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Cafik: Interpretative regulations, as I understand the term in relation to this particular act, would simply interpret every section of the act. An interpretative regulation would accompany every section of the act and give examples as to how in law the section would apply.

An. hon. Member: But the bill is over 700 pages long.

Mr. Cafik: There might be more than 700 pages involved. Anybody wanting to interpret this act could do so if he did not mind doing a little reading.

Mr. Paproski: Why did the hon. member not say that to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)?

Mr. Cafik: I did.

Mr. Paproski: And what did he say?

Mr. Forrestall: "Go home," that's what he said.

Mr. Alexander: What did he say?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, tell us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could a little order. I will carry on and if at the end of my few remarks hon. members wish to ask questions, perhaps I will answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is trying to make a speech.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members to my left are making it difficult for the Chair to listen to the speech being made. In all justice and fairness I think the hon. member should be permitted to make his speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: In addition to proposing that set of interpretative regulations we felt, since it would take a long time to implement such a scheme, that a system of advance rulings ought to be set up immediately on passage of the act. These, we suggested, should have the force of law and give legal interpretations up until such time as the regulations themselves were tabled in the House.

Mr. Alexander: And what did the minister say to that?

Mr. Cafik: I am pleased about one thing. At least we have set up a system of advance rulings.

Mr. Forrestall: Where?

Mr. Cafik: I am still hopeful that the government will agree to establish interpretative regulations. Frankly, I wish that the government had agreed to this. I am still hopeful that they will be established.

Mr. Alexander: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Cafik: That has been done in other countries. Since this tax act is so complicated and difficult to interpret, it seems to me that interpretative regulations are absolutely necessary.

An hon. Member: You should be in the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I see the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) rising to ask a question. He may ask it if he has the permission of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to entertain questions after I have finished. If the hon. member will make a note of his question, perhaps he can ask it then. In that committee—I am talking about the second stage of that committee's life, or phase two, so to speak—we spent a great deal of time talking about the possible date of implementation of this act.

We also discussed the advisability of splitting the bill. This is something that other hon. members have suggested. We wondered whether the government, by splitting the bill, ought to pass the goodies and forget the rest for the time being. In any event, our committee, which certainly was not partisan, agreed that it was absolutely essential to pass this bill as quickly as possible in order to end much of the confusion created among the business community right across the country as a result of the participatory approach that had been adopted with the white paper. Our committee felt that the bill should not be split. We felt it was essential to get it through as quickly as possible in order to end the confusion that presently exists.

Another point I would like to mention is that although our committee never made any recommendations in this regard, I certainly made recommendations. This is in connection with the tax measures for co-operatives and credit unions. I know many other members did the same. I am delighted that the government has seen fit to put forward an amendment in which there is now a 15 per cent patronage dividend withholding tax on patronage dividends on $100 or more on individual items. Frankly, I think this meets the majority of the objections that have been put forward by co-operatives and credit unions. I was very concerned about their anxiety over this section, particularly because of my involvement in the credit union movement. I thank the government for the amendment they put forward.

Mr. Forrestall: Where you here on second reading?

Mr. Cafik: Someone asked where I was on second reading. I was certainly around here.

Mr. Forrestall: We did not hear from you then.

Mr. Cafik: I felt a little more confidence in what the government would do than perhaps some others. I think in this case—

Mr. Forrestall: Oh!

Mr. Cafik: In closing—

Mr. Forrestall: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: —I want to talk about one point that has been made repeatedly. That is the charge that the government has invoked closure on this bill and this is a bad thing. The House leader of the official opposition used the term "closure" in the debate tonight. As a House leader, I am sure he knows the rules as well or better than most of us. He knows it is a time allocation, not closure.

Mr. Forrestall: Shame.

Mr. Cafik: Rule 75C is a time allocation. Frankly, I have been advocating the use of 75C for some time, not only on this bill but on some others. I am here to defend that.

Mr. Ricard: Why delay it? Do it now.

Mr. Cafik: Governments have a responsibility to govern. I believe it is essential that we program the time of this House so that we get the maximum benefit possible for the people of Canada without excessive delays. I do not think that is unreasonable. I do not think rule 75C should be used to stifle debate but to do what it is designed to do, namely, limit debate without being excessive. In a democracy we have to assume our responsibility of coming to a point where we can in fact make decisions. I have no objection to the use of rule 75C. I recommend that the precedent in this case be used in many cases in the future. I have been here three years. I have heard a lot of debate which I felt went on much longer than the public interest demanded in just plain discussion.

Mr. Forrestall: What you are saying tonight—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Forrestall: —is not you speaking.

Mr. Speaker: Can we have order. Hon. members should know that when one hon. member has the floor, he should be allowed to speak. There is no justification and no excuse—

Mr. Forrestall: That is just so much—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will not allow the hon. member for Ontario to make a speech, he should let the Chair make comments and bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) has the floor.

Mr. Cafik: Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the interruptions. I am sure that those on my tax committee in my constituency who belong to the Conservative Party, and there are a number, would find it difficult to understand how we can treat this kind of problem in such a totally partisan way. I am not proud of that fact and I am sure they would not be proud of it either. I believe the people of Canada are pleased and fortunate that we are willing to take a decision, difficult as it may be, to force this matter to a vote so that Canadians can have the advantages which this tax proposal offers them, particularly those in the low income groups who need it most.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise only for the purpose of asking a question. I am very impressed with the hon. member's appreciation of the role of the opposition. After hearing from the champion of democracy I want to ask him one question. He continuously referred to his idea, or that of his committee, about bringing in interpretative regulations. As I understand it, he had some discussion with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). We are all anxious to hear the answer regarding this submission by the member and his committee. I am surprised he did not give us any indication of the minister's thinking in this regard, because the member thought it was such a great idea. I hope he can elaborate and help us to understand what occurred.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very fair question and deserves an answer. When I spoke with the Minister of Finance about the need to set up interpretative regulations, we discussed the matter for some time. He indicated the government would be bringing forward these advance rulings and this might well serve the purpose I had in mind. Frankly, I did not entirely agree. We discussed the matter further. He indicated something to me which I already knew, that it was an extremely difficult task to bring down interpretative regulations for such a large act, certainly if it was simultaneously tabling it in the House.

I am convinced that the matter is not entirely forgotten. I think it is worth while. I look forward to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) perhaps bringing forward those regulations at a future date. If the hon. member thinks it is a good idea, I am sure with pressure from him, myself and other members, this might become a reality.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the subamendment. All those in favour of the subamendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that are left this evening I shall at least be able to present the amendment to the motion for third reading which we would like the House to consider, and by hearing the amendment tonight hon. members will have an opportunity to think about it.

It is clear that this bill has occasioned debate in a good many areas. It has done so with respect to the things that are in it and the things that are not in it, with respect to its complexities and its incomprehensibility and also with respect to the manner in which it is being put to Parliament. In my view, sir, when the debate is all over, if there is one issue that will be of concern to the largest number of Canadians it is the fact that after 22 years, when the present government got around to doing something about the exemption levels in the Income Tax Act, all it could do was to raise those levels to $1,500 single and $2,850 married.

Considering the fact that it was in 1949 that the present levels of $1,000 single and $2,000 married were set, we feel, and I believe the people of Canada agree with us, that it is an insult for the government to raise the levels by only the amounts indicated in this bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is also our view that this was an excellent time for the government to deal with the matter that is usually covered by adjusting the exemption levels by using the technique of a tax credit. When we were in committee of the whole dealing with clause 1 of the bill I presented an amendment which was accepted by the Chair and voted upon but which at that time was defeated by a vote of 64 to 42.

It is my hope that with the larger attendance that we get in the House, and with members having had an opportunity to think the matter over, the result might be different. It has been indicated from the Chair that to try to amend this bill to raise the exemption levels would be out of order, but it was also indicated to us when we were in committee of the whole that we could seek to amend it by reducing any rate of tax, provided we made such a reduction across the board. That is why I proposed in committee of the whole that the rate on the first $500 of taxable income be reduced from 17 per cent to 2 per cent and that a corresponding reduction of $75 be made in each of the brackets from the first one up to the top.

I propose to ask the House to vote for a motion that would instruct the committee of the whole to reconsider this proposition. Therefore, I should now like to move my amendment if Your Honour would permit me to do so. I would be happy to continue my remarks when we return to the bill tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should really wait until the end of his remarks before making his motion. He might want to indicate what his motion would be, but he might find himself in procedural difficulty. The hon. member might indicate his motion and resume his remarks tomorrow. The hon. member has another 30 seconds before adjournment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am quite happy to do it that way, Mr. Speaker. At the end of my remarks I shall move:

That Bill C-259 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed new section 117(1) as set out in clause 1 on pages 313 and 314, and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering the changing of the figure "17%" in line 33 on page 313 to "2%" and consequentially reducing the amount at the beginning of each of the paragraphs (b) to (m), both inclusive, on page 314, by $75.

Sir, I see it is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN FOREIGN AID PROGRAM—SHIPMENT OF GOODS THROUGH CANADIAN BROKERS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago this House gave approval to a supplementary estimate with regard to the Canadian International Development Agency for the sum of $22 million, thus bringing up to $215 million the amount of money that this country would make available to that agency.

I think all Canadians can take satisfaction from the fact that over the past decade there has been a steady climb in the amount of money that we are making available for international aid. Some of the $215 million is comprised of economic assistance which includes the provision of commodities, equipment and food, and some of the CIDA program consists of international emergency relief. I am told on what I regard as very reliable authority that any commodity shipments under CIDA are arranged through New York brokers, and that in turn usually means that they go forth on foreign ships. I am enough of a Canadian patriot to imagine that somewhere in this world people who need Canadian assistance would prefer to see that assistance coming to them in a ship that sails under the Canadian flag. Hence my question at the end of November, and a further exchange on December 6, in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) replied:

The policy of permitting Canadian funds to be used for ocean shipping is relatively new and to date has only been applied to a few countries. However, in so far as gifts or grants are concerned, the policy is to pass all work possible to Canadian brokers or Canadian forwarders. Further, where the schedules, rates and availability of Canadian-owned shipping companies permit, contracts are awarded to such shipping companies.

It may come as a fearful shock and surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, situated as you are in the city of Cornwall and able to watch the traffic going by your door, so to speak, to learn that Canada has really only two foreign-going freighters at present under the Canadian flag. One is the Federal Hudson and the other is the Global Envoy. Another vessel which can possibly qualify is the Cabatern, which is a clean oil tanker.

The Federal Hudson is now used by the Canadian National system as a car ferry. The Global Envoy is tied up for lack of work at Sorel, Quebec, although I understand it is one of the best equipped ships of its kind registered under the Canadian flag. The Cabatern, the clean oil tanker, is tied up in Toronto with nothing in sight, so that the Canadian foreign-going merchant marine, such as it is, is a somewhat small thing and a somewhat idle thing at the present time. Furthermore, my sources say that they know of no Canadian brokers handling these foreign aid shipments, they know of no Canadian ships carrying them and they would like the government to identify both the brokers and the

It may be noted that we have got out of the carrying business and that our merchant fleet, such as it was during the war, has now shrunk very considerably. So we are not a maritime-minded nation at all although we have one of the longest coastlines in the world. We are rapidly getting out of the manufacturing business and leaving that to other countries. But we are not hewers of wood and carriers of water. The people to whom I have talked about these CIDA shipments are asking exactly what have we become?

I hope that whoever replies will provide some identification of the brokers, some identification of the Canadian ships and the CIDA cargoes that are being carried to other countries. I give notice that I will follow this matter up, since it seems to me to be something that anybody with an ounce of Canadian nationalism in him can develop, when the CIDA estimates come before the external affairs committee next year.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, I must say that Canadian policy, with regard to contracts awarded for the shipment of goods provided under the Canadian foreign aid program is regulated by a set of criteria established by CIDA. The standards apply to the procedure of payment for ocean shipping and insurance. Ocean shipping and insurance are contracted through Canadian brokers and forwarders. The shipment is made from Canadian ports.

In view of the limited number of Canadian ships registered in the Canadian merchant marine, it is very often impossible to use a Canadian ship for the shipment of those goods. The Canadian broker then makes arrangements to ship the supplies on any ship available, whatever its nationality. Therefore, I can only assert once again that shipments are made through Canadian brokers and on Canadian ships when the latter are available. In any case, the primary concern is to ensure delivery of the supplies in accordance with the time limit set for the execution of the project and to meet priority requirements of recipient countries.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—FISHERIES TREATY WITH NORWAY—REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS TERMS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Canada-Norway fishing and sealing agreements which were signed on July 15 of this year and tabled in the House of Commons on December 2, because someone other than the Canadian government had made them public have caused and will continue to cause much concern. I am glad that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) is in his place tonight to answer some questions. Members of Parliament from Canada's east coast appear to be upset because the agreement will permit Norway to take seals within Canadian territorial waters three miles from land.

Mr. McGrath: Shame.

Mrs. MacInnis: These members, and no doubt some other members across Canada, approve the annual seal slaughter. Their main concern is to keep a monopoly of it in this country. My concern is quite different. Along with a growing number of people, not only in Canada but throughout the world, I want to see this wholesale massacre eliminated. To the extent that this Canada-Norway agreement will protect the seal stocks of the Atlantic, as the Minister of the Environment claims it will, I think the agreement is a forward step.

Before I may be sure of that, I have a number of questions that I wish to ask. That is why I pressed the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to say whether or not the government will give us an opportunity to debate the terms of the agreement in Parliament before it is ratified. From his reply I have gathered that we will not get this chance. Therefore, I must ask a few questions tonight. The rest will have to wait for a later occasion.

Is the Minister of the Environment satisfied that this agreement will save the harp seal population from extinction? I have seen estimates showing that the number of harp seals in the gulf and in the front were cut sharply from 3¼ million in 1950 to 1½ million in 1970, a reduction of over 50 per cent in 20 years. At least one marine biologist has warned that the species will be extinct in 12 years' time if the present rate of kill is maintained. What is to prevent the harp seal going the same route as the now extinct sea otter, the passenger pigeon or any one of the other 66 gravely endangered species listed by the Canadian Wildlife Federation?

The Canadian Wildlife Federation is a non-profit organization and therefore capable of a judgment uncoloured by the desire to kill these creatures for monetary gain. Is the name of its representative among those of the Canadian delegates to the Canada-Norway negotiations which took place in Ottawa last April and which led to the fishing agreement in July? It is not. Eight of the twelve names are those of federal government departmental officials. The ninth comes from the Fisheries Council of Canada, an industry-oriented organization. The tenth is a director of a Canadian subsidiary of a New York fur importing company. Between them, parent and subsidiary take Canadian seal skins or products to Norway and the United States. The last two names represent a sealing vessel firm operating out of Halifax, one of these men, I am told, being the Norwegian consul for the port of Halifax.

In view of such heavy representation of sealing interests on the body which negotiated the Canada-Norway agreement, is it any wonder that people have misgivings about the value of that agreement as a conservation measure? Similar questions arise in the memo issued last May by the World Federation for the Protection of Animals, the headquarters of which are in Zurich, Switzerland. The memo was sent to the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries and was on the subject of seal killing. It emphasized that the harp seal appears to be in grave danger of not surviving just at the time when its value to the regional ecology is being established. If a greatly reduced quota for seal killing is introduced, the viability of commercial sealing will be threatened in any case. The memo concludes:

> Sealing has not been justified on statistical, commercial, ecological nor any other grounds—Sealing only produces products for which synthetic alternatives are available—It has clearly become an unacceptable anachronism and should be ended.

I repeat, this is the opinion of an international body, the World Federation for the Protection of Animals, with headquarters at Zurich, Switzerland. I conclude by again expressing my conviction that a debate on this whole matter in Parliament is long overdue. Not only the citizens of Canada but people all over the world are concerned about protecting the ecology and the wildlife that makes human life possible.

This matter has many facets. I have touched on only one this evening. There are others, perhaps on the east coast of Canada, that are also interesting. Members who represent that area should have a right to bring out the facts in this matter. We should air all angles of this subject before it is finally settled. This is a matter of great concern to Canadians. I see no reason why we should not have an opportunity to give it a very thorough investigation before this treaty is finally ratified.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this is a big country. It is populated by people who make their living in very different ways. People on the east coast, particularly on the Labrador and northeastern coast of Newfoundland, earn their livelihood by fishing and occasionally by sealing. To them, the seal problem, if I may call it that, is a matter of whether they are going to eat well. To people on Canada's west coast it is another spectacle which appears over television, something about which they would like to know a great deal more and something which they are genuinely concerned about. I refer to the possible extinction of a species. They are not directly concerned with sealing as a source of livelihood. For many people on the east coast it provides up to half their income. This is a matter of real concern to them, rather than curiosity or alarm, as is the case with many well-meaning people in other parts of Canada.

Ninety per cent of the correspondence relative to seals comes from foreign countries with a high standard of living. Of the letters that come from Canadian sources, 80 per cent come from Toronto, Vancouver and to a lesser extent Montreal. Very few letters come from the Atlantic region. Nearly all of the latter say that the seal hunt should be continued. Last year we received 1,000 letters from Canadians. Only 2 per cent of those letters came from areas which are heavily dependent on sealing.

Our main concern, where we are considering this hunt which is essential to the Eskimo people, native Indian people and to others living in outport areas, is whether the seal herds will become extinct as a result of hunting. A special committee was set up under Dr. Keith Ronald of Guelph University. It is nammed by international experts. This committee will be reporting to us within the next few weeks. It is taking an objective look at the whole situation, not only in respect to the animal populations, but also as to the cruelty or otherwise of the hunt. When this report is received, it will be published. We will all have an opportunity to debate it.

With regard to the Canada-Norway agreement, it applies in the North-Atlantic, not in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. We are referring essentielly to those seals which are often found outside of Canadian waters. It is necessary to have an agreement with Norway to assure that the total herd is protected. That is the main reason for the Canada-Norway agreement. I believe there should be a debate on this subject. We will shortly have a lot more information from international experts. Meanwhile, I expect the Canada-Norway agreement to work because we will all be relying on international experts to protect the seal herd from extinction.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—SUGGESTED RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on December 8 I directed a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), one of a series of questions I have been putting to the minister lately. It was prompted by the November unemployment figures released by Statistics Canada and it had to do with the growing rate of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces and the failure of the government's regional development policies to have any marked effect.

Out of a sense of frustration, and because of my failure and the failure of other hon. members to get worth-while answers or information from the minister, I suggested that the hon. gentleman give consideration to resigning because it appears his policies are not working.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps there is no better way of summing up the situation than to quote the Prime Minister of Quebec, as reported on November 20 by Canadian Press, without doubt the most reliable press agency in Canada. The Prime minister of Quebec is reported as saying:

> Regional disparities . . . have not yet been affected by federal policies after three and one-half years of power. The gaps are still the same, even if there has been slight progress in the case of Quebec.

As I say, what prompted my latest question were the new employment figures. I think it would be worth while to place them on record because they show a continuing and serious escalation. As a matter of fact, a pattern has been developing over the last five years, a period during which regional development policies are suppored to have been taking effect. In the case of the Atlantic provinces as a whole, the figure for November was 9.7 per cent, seasonally adjusted, as rate opposed to 7.6 per cent for the previous year.

The figures break down as follows. The rate for Newfoundland was 11.4 per cent as opposed to 9.1 per cent for the previous year. In Prince Edward Island it was 7.5 per cent as compared with 5.6 per cent for the previous year. In Nova Scotia it was 7.4 per cent as compared with 4.9 per cent. In New Brunswick it was 6.5 per cent as against 6.2 per cent. Newfoundland, with the highest rate of 11.4 per cent, and Prince Edward Island with the second highest rate of 7.5 per cent, are two of the provinces to which substantial sums have been directed under the regional economic expansion policy. The total number of unemployed in the Atlantic provinces stands at 54,000 as compared with 42,000 last year. Increases of this order continue right down the line on the basis of the provincial breakdown.

Is it any wonder we are frustrated? We are frustrated because we are supposed to be witnessing the effects of a regional development policy and our efforts to get meaningful answers from the minister have failed. We are frustrated in our efforts to get the minister to address himself to the fact that despite the pumping of substantial sums of federal money under the regional development program into the four Atlantic provinces, the rate of unemployment continues to increase.

Meanwhile, there has been criticism from the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, the Atlantic Development Council, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and economists in the area. I can think of nobody across the country who has had a kind word to say about the way in which the government is going about this program of trying to end regional disparity.

The best we can get from the minister at any time criticism is levelled at the program, or any time the minister attempts to address himself to these criticisms, is veiled threats to withdraw the program. I do not think that is good enough. If the program is worth while, it must stand the examination of critics. It must also be able to withstand the constructive criticism that can only help the program.

The Evening Telegram for October 14, 1971, carried a press despatch, again a Canadian Press despatch, headlined "Government prepared to withdraw DREE, Marchand tells critics" and in a direct quotation reports the minister as saying:

> But if it is established that our whole program is not serving any useful purpose, of course well withdraw it.

The minister made a similar statement a few months previous to this in Charlottetown when he met with the premiers of the three maritime provinces. I maintain that the minister should be addressing himself to this problem and responding and reacting to the constructive criticism that have been levelled at the program both in this House and across the country. Cynical though the minister is, he knows we all want this program to work. It must work. It is our only hope. In the Atlantic provinces it is the only program we have; consequently, we want to try to improve it.

This is why we direct constructive criticism at the minister. However, we are frustrated in our attempts because the minister refuses to answer questions in this House. He also refuses to respond to the recommendations made by his own agencies, agencies that have been empowered by Parliament under statute to advise the minister. I think now of the Atlantic Development Council and the Canadian Rural Development Council. Both these agencies have made constructive criticisms of the program, yet the minister has refused to make any policy statement on the recommendations that have been made. I believe that in light of this evidence the minister either has to respond by making a statement in this House or he has no alternative but to offer his resignation.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said three times in his speech that there was secrecy in this department. A little like the kink in "Alice", he seems to believe that because he says something three times it must be true. It was also notable that he offered not one single example in his speech of a situation where he was refused information or knowledge. In fact, this department is as forthcoming as any other in providing the information members want to receive about this program.

The hon. member indicated that over the past five years there have been the difficulties to which he referred regarding employment rates. He seems to belong to that school of thought that believes in using magic as one approach to solving a problem. I would remind him that these problems have developed over the course of well over 100 years. Yet he seems to think that within the short space of the 2½ years during which this department has been operating it should be able to resolve the problems to which he refers.

The department is under no illusion that these objectives can be accomplished overnight. The deep-rooted problems of decades cannot be swept away in one or two years. The minister has emphasized over and over again that it will take at least 15 years before the programs which were put in place in 1969 will have brought the slow-growth regions to the point at which they are ready to take off into self-sustaining growth.

Consequently, criticisms of the department which assert that our programs have little or no impact on regional disparities are simply misdirected. Such criticisms accuse us of not having achieved in 2½ years—or, as the hon. member would have it, five years; this department has been in existence for only 2½ years—what we always said would take up to 15 years to accomplish. Moreover, by clamouring for dramatic results long before such results can reasonably be expected, the critics are doing a great disservice to regional policy in this country. They are tending to undermine programs which have barely had a chance to get properly off the ground. I would be delighted to receive from the hon. member some constructive suggestions about how to improve the programs of the department. In the various encounters that we have had on the "late show" I have not heard one constructive suggestion coming from the hon. member regarding how these programs can be improved.

Moreover, the available data do not support the contention that departmental programs are having no effect on regional disparities. In fact, there are already encouraging signs that our programs are beginning to bite even though these signs are necessarily tentative at this point of time. No matter what criterion one examines, whether it be investment, growth in manufacturing, employment, income differentials, the unemployment gap or labour force participation rates, there are unmistakable indications that the Atlantic region is in a healthier position at the beginning of the seventies than at any time in the post-war period. One would expect the hon. member to welcome this and try to give us an indication of how the programs can be improved. I hope that reasonably soon he will take the opportunity of doing just that.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

APPENDIX

FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL MINISTERIAL MEETING

For immediate release
10th December, 1971.

1. The North Atlantic Council met in Ministerial Session in Brussels on 9th and 10th December, 1971. Foreign and Defence Ministers were present.

2. Ministers stressed that their governments would continue to pursue their long-standing objectives of achieving, through a genuine relaxation of tensions, a just and lasting peace and stability in Europe. They recalled that since the creation of the Alliance over twenty years ago the treaty area has been free of armed conflict and that under existing international conditions the North Atlantic Treaty remains indispensable for the security of member States.

3. Ministers examined the international situation and expressed their deep concern over the tragic events in Southern Asia. It is their fervent hope that hostilities between India and Pakistan will give way to an early and peaceful solution of all aspects of the conflict.

4. Turning to developments in and around Europe, including the Mediterranean, Ministers reviewed the status of the various initiatives undertaken or supported by the Allies and assessed the results of the numerous bilateral contacts between the Allies and other European states.

5. Ministers noted the effects which continuing difficulties in trade and monetary policy could have, among other things, on the state of the Alliance. They were encouraged by the various efforts underway in other fora to remedy these difficulties in the economic sphere. The Ministers decided to keep this matter under continuing review.

6. Ministers took note with satisfaction of the signature, on 3rd September, 1971, of the Quadripartite Agreement on Berlin. They also noted that the German arrangements to implement and supplement the Quadripartite Agreement now appear to be nearing completion, and that, once these arrangements have been concluded, the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States would be prepared to sign forthwith the final Quadripartite Protocol which would bring the complete Berlin Agreement into effect. Ministers expressed the hope that this would soon be achieved.

7. Ministers viewed this emerging Agreement as an important and encouraging development. Once completed and in effect, the Agreement should bring about practical improvements, while maintaining the Quadripartite status of Berlin and the rights and responsibilities of France, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union with regard to Berlin and Germany as a whole. Specifically, Ministers noted that movement of civilian persons and goods between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Western Sectors of Berlin will then be unimpeded, and that the residents of the Western Sectors will be able to visit East Berlin and the GDR. Ministers also welcomed the assurance in the Quadripartite Agreement that the ties between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Western Sectors of Berlin will be maintained and developed.

8. Ministers considered that achievement of the Berlin Agreement would also demonstrate that, with a constructive attitude on all sides, it should be possible to reach reasonable solutions between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic which take into account the special situation in Germany. Ministers took the view that this example would encourage progress on other problems in Europe.

9. Ministers recalled that at their meeting in Lisbon they declared their readiness to undertake multilateral conversations intended to lead to a Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe as soon as the negotiations on Berlin had reached a successful conclusion. In the light of the encouraging developments referred to above they affirmed their readiness to initiate such conversations on this basis as soon as possible.

10. In this perspective, they propose to intensify their preparations and their bilateral contacts with other interested parties.

11. Ministers also took note of the invitation of the Finnish Government to the effect that heads of mission of the countries concerned accredited in Helsinki should undertake multilateral conversations. They stated that their Governments appreciated this initiative and that they will keep in touch with the Finnish Government in order to consult on this matter.

12. Ministers considered that a Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe should not serve to perpetuate the post-war division of Europe but rather should contribute to reconciliation and co-operation between the participating states by initiating a process of reducing the barriers that still exist. Therefore, Ministers reaffirmed that the Conference should address in a concrete manner the underlying causes of tension in Europe and the basic principles which should govern relations among states irrespective of political and social systems.

13. Ministers took note of the report of the Council in Permanent Session concerning a Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. This report examined four areas of discussion at such a conference: (A) Questions of Security, including Principles Governing Relations between States and certain military aspects of security; (B) Freer Movement of People, Information and Ideas, and Cultural Relations; (C) Co-operation in the Fields of Economics, Applied Science and Technology, and Pure Science; and (D) Co-operation to Improve the Human Environment. Ministers requested the Council in Permanent Session to continue these studies with a view to facilitating a constructive discussion of these subjects at the negotiations.

14. Ministers representing countries which participate in the NATO integrated defence programme reaffirmed their longstanding belief that a mutual and balanced reduction of forces in Central Europe which preserves the legitimate security interests of all concerned would maintain security and enhance stability in Europe, make an important contribution to the easing of tension and improve East-West relations generally.

15. These Ministers reviewed the developments with respect to mutual and balanced force reductions since their last meeting in Lisbon. They reaffirmed the decisions taken at the meeting of Deputy Foreign Ministers and High Officials on 5th and 6th October, 1971, to propose exploratory talks with the Soviet Government and other interested governments and to charge Mr. Brosio with this mission on the basis of a substantive mandate. They expressed their thanks to Mr. Brosio for accepting.

16. These Ministers noted with regret that the Soviet Government has so far failed to respond to the Allied initiative in this important area of East-West relations in which that Government had earlier expressed an interest. Noting statements by Soviet leaders to the effect that they hoped East-West talks on force reductions in Europe would begin as soon as possible, these Ministers hope that Mr. Brosio will soon be able to go to Moscow. The interested Allied Governments continue to believe that prior explorations of this question are essential in preparation for eventual multilateral negotiations.

17. These Ministers emphasized the importance they attach to measures which would reduce the dangers of military confrontation and thus enhance security in Europe. They noted that a Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe should deal with these aspects in a suitable manner.

18. Ministers noted a report on further studies conducted within NATO on mutual and balanced force reductions since the Lisbon Meeting. They instructed the Permanent Representatives to continue this work.

19. Ministers welcomed the fact that the negotiations between the US and USSR on strategic arms limitations have resulted in concrete agreements to reduce the risk of accidental nuclear war and to improve communication arrangements between the two governments. Satisfaction was expressed for the close Alliance consultation which has been conducted throughout the course of the Strategic Arms Limitations talks. Ministers expressed the hope that these negotiations will soon lead to agreements which would curb the competition in strategic arms and strengthen international peace and security.

20. Ministers reaffirmed their determination to promote progress in disarmament and arms control and reviewed recent developments in these fields. They expressed satisfaction at the measures envisaged to prohibit the development, production and stockpiling of bacteriological (biological) and toxin weapons and their destruction. They hoped that all States will adopt similar measures. Ministers also expressed the hope that headway could be made towards reaching an agreement on the controlled prohibition of chemical weapons. Ministers representing countries which participate in the NATO integrated defence programme noted with interest the efforts being undertaken to find effective means for the verification of an eventual agreement on a comprehensive test ban.

21. Ministers took note of a report on the situation in the Mediterranean prepared on their instructions by the Council in Permanent Session. They reaffirmed their concern about the course of events in this area, while expressing their hope that a peaceful solution would be found in the Eastern Mediterranean. In the light of the conclusions of the report before them, they instructed the Council in Permanent Session to continue consultations on this subject and to follow the evolution of the various aspects of the situation in order to report thereon at their next meeting.

22. Ministers were pleased by the new achievements of the Committee on the Challenges of Modern Society (CCMS) in its studies, especially in the fields of air and water pollution, and by the initiation of a project on the application of modern technology to health care.

23. The Spring Ministerial Meeting of the Council will be held in Bonn on 30th and 31st May, 1972.

24. Ministers requested the Foreign Minister of Belgium to transmit the text of the preceding paragraphs on their behalf through diplomatic channels to all other interested parties, including neutral and non-aligned governments.

25. Ministers of the countries participating in NATO's integrated defence programme met as the Defence Planning Committee.

26. In the light of the considerations outlined in the preceding paragraphs, they emphasised that NATO's efforts to achieve sufficient defence capabilities and the striving for détente are not incompatible but complementary, and that sufficient and credible defence is a necessary corollary to realistic negotiations on security and co-operation in Europe. In the same context and as a fundamental principle, these Ministers reaffirmed the well-known position of the Alliance that its overall military capability should not be reduced except as part of a pattern of mutual force reductions balanced in scope and timing.

27. These Ministers discussed mutual and balanced force reductions (MBFR) and reaffirmed their intent to continue their close involvement in the development of common allied positions.

28. They noted the growth of Soviet military efforts in recent years and the indications that the Soviet Union continues to strengthen both its strategic nuclear and its conventional forces, especially naval forces. They therefore agreed on the need for continued and systematic improvement of NATO's conventional forces and for the maintenance of adequate and modern tactical and strategic nuclear forces in order to ensure that the deterrent remains effective at all levels, and in order to avoid weakening the basis of NATO's search for détente.

29. They discussed a follow-up report to the Alliance Defence Study for the Seventies (the AD 70 Study). They welcomed the progress being made by members in improving Alliance defences. In particular they noted with satisfaction the further specific and important efforts announced on 7th December by those European member countries which participated in the European Defence Improvement Programme, and recognised the emphasis which these European member countries are placing on modernising the equipment of their forces, land, sea and air, along AD 70 lines. They also welcomed the substantial improvements to their conventional forces planned by the United States, and they noted with satisfaction the enhanced United States contribution to NATO's strategic deterrent which will result from the deployment of the POSEIDON weapon system. They heard with appreciation the reaffirmation by the United States Secretary of Defense that, given a similar approach by the other Allies, the United States would maintain and improve their own forces in Europe and would not reduce them except in the context of reciprocal East-West action.

30. They endorsed the priority areas which were proposed to them for the further implementation of the AD 70 recommendations. Within these areas they identified for early action certain fields such as additional anti-tank weapons and modern tanks; advanced electronic equipment for certain combat aircraft; improved all-weather strike, attack and reconnaissance air forces; improved air defences and aircraft protection; better maritime surveillance and anti-submarine forces; more maritime patrol aircraft and seaborne missile systems; the replacement of over-age ships; the strengthening and modernisation of local and reinforcement forces on the Northern and South-Eastern Flanks; and larger ammunition stocks for land and air forces.

31. They recognised the global nature of the Soviet maritime capability, and in particular the deployments and activities of the Soviet fleets in the Atlantic and in the Mediterranean. In their discussion they reaffirmed the need for appropriate Allied measures, and reviewed progress.

32. They noted the force commitments undertaken by member nations for the year 1972 and they adopted a five-year NATO Force Plan for the period 1972-1976, including many AD 70 implementation measures.

33. They concluded that the aim within NATO should be to allocate to defence purposes, where this is within the economic capability of countries, a stable and possibly larger proportion of their growing national wealth, in order to maintain an adequate deterrent and defensive capability.

34. The Defence Ministers comprising the Nuclear Defence Affairs Committee (Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States) also convened to examine reports on the activity of the Nuclear Planning Group during the past year and on its projected work.

35. The next Ministerial meeting of the Defence Planning Committee will be held in the Spring of 1972.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBERTS—INACCURATE REPORTS OF SPEECH—CORRECTION TO "HANSARD"

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the Opposition referred to reports of my speech last week at Thunder Bay. These reports are inaccurate, but I will correct them in the normal way later on in the course of debate.

I am rather concerned, however, about Hansard for yesterday, page 10430, where the comment is ascribed to me, with reference to the hon. member for St. John's East, that he was "a little like the kink in 'Alice'".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: What I said was, "a little like the king in 'Alice'". I do not believe that the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: You are the Mad Hatter.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TIME ALLOCATION MOTION FOR THIRD READING STAGE OF INCOME TAX BILL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the notice given yesterday I move, seconded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson):

That the time provided for the consideration of government business in the sittings of Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the 15th, 16th and 17th of December, 1971, be allotted for the further consideration and disposal of the third reading and passage stage of Bill C-259, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that Act, and of amendments proposed thereto; and

That at 3:45 p.m. in the sitting of Friday, December 17, 1971, any proceeding then before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order, and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the third reading and passage stage of the said bill and of any amendment thereto, shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House of Commons completed its 46th day spent in consideration of Bill C-259. If the motion I am proposing today is carried and put into effect, on Friday next the House will have devoted the equivalent of 50 parliamentary days to this bill in all its stages— second reading, Committee of the Whole and third reading. By making available that considerable amount of time it has been possible for members of the House to examine all issues involved in the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nonsense!

Mr. MacEachen: The general comment is made that insufficient study has been given to the bill. Yet no precise proposals have been made as to what additional time would be justified and what unexplored aspects of the bill require further discussion.

The request to the House to pass the first time allocation motion was made by the government after the bill had been before the House for 39 days and when it was prepared to take responsibility for the implications of such a course of action. In the circumstances, we had reached a number of conclusions. We were of the opinion that spokesmen for opposition parties and members of the House generally had had sufficient opportunity to express their views on all areas of the bill, that public opinion would feel that the House of Commons was not being asked precipitately to make up its mind on the bill, that there were no areas of discussion remaining to which public attention had not been drawn, or which demanded further consideration, and that the House itself would not feel any genuine outrage that it was being treated in an unfair way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: At no point did I feel it was the responsibility of opposition parties to take the initiative in bringing about time allocation. Such an outcome is not even contemplated under our Standing Orders.

However, the situation today is much clearer than it was on December 2, the day when the first motion was moved. First of all, members of opposition parties are not solid in their opposition to the government's action. For example, the experienced member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has stated that the opposition has been given a fair show and it is necessary for the government to govern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: He went on to say: "I would do the same thing if I were in the government's shoes". The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has said that the government has a right to govern and then to be judged by the people. The Leader of the Opposition in the other place a week ago today made a suggestion to the government leader in the other place as follows:

I suggest to the hon. leader that he should persuade the government to impose closure in such a manner as to permit the Senate to deal with the bill at the beginning of next week.

That was on Monday of this week. We also know from subsequent experience that no new issues were raised in Committee of the Whole and that the committee, quite properly, spent its time discussing issues that had already been exhaustively examined. We know too that today editorial opinion in the country is divided. If one were to reach a judgment it would be that probably editorial opinion is slightly in favour of the action taken by the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Finally, it is also clear that the public has not been roused to any state of indignation. In fact, it is my feeling that the public in general supports the action of the government in bringing this debate to a conclusion. As the amount and complexity of legislation increases, we are also conscious that time is not unlimited, that every day spent on the tax bill is a day that cannot be used to clear other legislation on the order paper now awaiting our attention.

In the sessions between 1960 and 1968 Parliament sat an average of 142 days. During the first two sessions of this Parliament we sat an average of 176 days, and this, Mr. Speaker, is the 231st day of this session. Whereas in the previous period Parliament enacted an average of 46 public bills per session, during the first two sessions of this Parliament we enacted 65 bills per session.

It is apparent that the pace of public business requires a different attitude in the House of Commons and that this requires the House to change its procedures in order to cope with the accelerating pace of public business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: What is crystal clear from these facts is that if Parliament is to meet the requirements of today—

Mr. Stanfield: The government must produce sensible legislation.

Mr. MacEachen: —it must become more willing rather than less willing to accept reasonable organization of its business through time allocation procedures. Political parties in the House must adapt as well to the accelerating pace of public business.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: In his speech last week the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) candidly revealed to the House that his party lost almost two months in commencing its study of Bill C-259. That is regrettable, Mr. Speaker, but the House of Commons cannot be expected to delay reaching decisions in order to accommodate an inalert opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The public expects the government to try to get its legislation through the House. The public not only expects the government to try, the public expects the government to succeed. In this connection may I put on the record an apt quotation—

Mr. Nowlan: Is this the minister's valedictory speech?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: It sure has. He has expired.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we have heard, in the remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) the greatest misapplication, misinterpretation and, frankly, misrepresentation to the House of statistics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We have heard false statistics and even falser conclusions. I will not dignify his remarks with further comment because they were not worthy of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Baldwin: Did you get that, buster?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We have seen today a further demonstration of that spirit of the sun god that in history made a man say, "l'état, c'est moi". This whole philosophy pervades the attitude of hon. members opposite. Of course, few if any of them sat here when Standing Order 33 was used previously. If this government had had the guts and the moral courage it would have said it was going to use closure and have used it; instead, the government uses the term, "allocation of time".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All we hear from the backbenchers on the other side is just frustration stemming from their inability to participate in this debate—

An hon. Member: You are not speaking for us.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —their inability to speak coherently and intelligently about the provisions of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not one of them has demonstrated that he can do so, at least not from what we have heard so far.

Mr. Stanfield: And the minister stayed out of the House.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the government had used Standing Order 33 it would have been bad enough, as it was on the previous occasion. But a week or ten days ago when Section 75C was used in the House some 200 clauses of the bill had not been considered. Here the President of the Privy Council was totally wrong. He knows very well that the government had no plan whatsoever for the debate in Committee of the Whole and that it was an opposition proposal which dealt with major subject areas.

Nothing has been done yet about the transitional clauses starting from clause 3 onward. Not one word was said about those clauses. Not one word was uttered by the government as to when they would be discussed. The proposals as to time came always from the opposition. The areas of discussion were known. Allocation of time, if I may say so, was to be traded off against the interests of particular taxpayers. This is shameful. Yet we get the assertion that every area of the bill was considered. Not one clause beyond clause 3 which had to deal with the repeal of estate tax was considered—nothing beyond that. I defy the President of the Privy Council to say one of them was considered. Not one of the transitional rules was dealt with.

Many of the transitional rules are different from the previous act. The penalties are different. Some of the penalties provided for any offence prior to the coming into force of this new act are even more barbarous than the previous ones. Honourable members sit back in amazement. They do not even know what is in those clauses.

Mr. Dinsdale: Nor care.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And they do not care, as my colleague says. It is unfortunate. These people represent government, big government dispensing largesse to the taxpayers of this country. Who are the taxpayers of this country? They are to be the victims of this monumental abortion. If the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) wants to talk about abortion, here is one right here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is what these people think. The taxpayers of this country are to have foisted on them the provisions of this particular document. Who are the taxpayers? They are the people who put the government in office. Yet they would trample upon their necks and say to them that they are lucky peasants to be under this regime that is dispensing so much largesse. Their figures are totally wrong. They misrepresent the facts as to the reduction of taxes. They do not say they are going to tax unemployment insurance benefits and training allowances to raise more revenues. They do not say that they are going to raise the revenue of the people to bring them into higher tax brackets. What they give with the one hand they take away with the other. All these figures quoted about the number of taxpayers waiting breathlessly for the benefits of the new act are hollow mockery. The government is being totally dishonest with regard to the Canadian public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In this instance the government imposed closure after one day's debate on third reading. We got notice that the government had made up its mind to do this for administrative reasons and administrative reasons only and because of their own misreading of amendments put forward by the opposition with regard to splitting the bill that had been supported by the majority of major newspapers in this country. I do not know what newspapers the President of the Privy Council has been reading but they certainly do not represent the majority in this country. The government is trying to dragoon the Senate, and it will be very interesting to see how that body behaves after the visit yesterday from the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What kind of bribery, what kind of threats were used on the Senate in suggesting that they should deal with this bill in a matter of a few hours? Is debate on the bill to be finished by the end of this week? We say that never has there been such a shameful performance as that of this government in imposing closure on a most important document which will affect the whole of the Canadian economy. Government members sit back and smile as though they are not to be affected by it. Of course they are.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon there was a whistling noise in the sound reinforcement system.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Martians are landing. Even the elements are disturbed, Mr. Speaker. Of course it might be that spirits from the outer world have come down to shout their protests.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps that of Mackenzie King.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As has been suggested, perhaps the spirit of Mackenzie King, although I suppose members over there would deny the existence of the reign of that right hon. gentleman.

This has been a shameful performance. I hope that the Canadian public who are to be the victims of this act will recognize who imposed it upon them, who forbade and prevented the provinces from negotiating the necessary agreements. The Minister of Finance knows that the provinces have not replied to him with regard to death duties. Many amendments to the act have not yet been received, and the whole thing is in total disarray.

The motion presented by the President of the Privy Council is wholly motivated by the disarray and ineptitude of this government in bringing forward a bill of this kind under these conditions.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on December 2 I gave three reasons for our opposing the motion made on that occasion to close the debate on Bill C-259 at the Committee of the Whole stage. Those three reasons still apply today, but I have three more. First, to move closure under Rule 75C at this stage is a violation of the purpose of third reading. Second, I agree with an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune—I have seen similar comment in other newspapers as well—that what the government is doing is showing its contempt for Parliament and contempt for the parliamentary process.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Third, closing off debate in this way by unilateral action on the part of the government is an admission of absolute failure to find a sensible way to plan and allocate the time of the parliamentary year. Every time this is done we put off the day when such a sensible plan will be achieved.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that my first reason today for opposing this measure is that introducing closure at this stage is a violation of the purpose of third reading. I hold in my hand the Journals for the session of 1968-69 and I am looking at page 433 which contains a portion of the third report of the Special Committee on Procedure of the House which had been tabled that day. That report annotated the procedural changes that were made in that session and gave the views of the Special Committee on Procedure. The paragraph to which I wish to draw attention represents the thinking and the wording of the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) who was then the government House leader. This was agreed to unanimously by the committee but I emphasize—the minister was in the House a few minutes ago and I wish he were here now—that the thinking and the wording were given to us by the government itself. I quote from the report:

> The motion for third reading would read:
> "That this bill be now read a third time and passed."
> This wording will indicate clearly and unambiguously that the final and most crucial decision relating to the passage of a bill would be taken at the third reading.

Later in that same paragraph I read:

> We wish to emphasize that the third reading should always be the decisive stage and that in the case of a highly controversial bill it could be a most crucial debating stage.

All of the talk about what happened on second reading and in Committee of the Whole is not now relevant. If these words mean anything they mean that we are now at the most crucial stage of the debate on Bill C-259. Yet, the House having had only one day of debate at the third reading stage, the government gave notice of closure under 75C. That is a complete violation of the purpose of third reading which we agreed to in 1968. If there is any willingness on the other side to have some integrity about these things, I submit that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) ought now to stand in his place and ask for withdrawal of his motion.

The second point I seek to make today, Mr. Speaker, is found in the words I have read in a number of newspaper editorials, that pushing this bill through in this way is contempt of Parliament and of the parliamentary process. As the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pointed out, in Committee of the Whole we had literally no discussion on most of the clauses of the bill. We spent a lot of time discussing clause 1 with its hundreds of pages. We spent an hour or two on clause 2. But the other 74 clauses of Bill C-259 were not discussed for one second in the House of Commons. To ask parliament now to put this measure through its final, crucial, decisive stage under closure, I submit is precisely what some of the editorial writers are saying; it is contempt of Parliament.

Mr. Lewis: Contempt of the people.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And, as my leader suggests, contempt of the people. That is what the Canadian people are feeling. I am getting this reaction in newspaper editorials and in letters. Questions are put to me, "Isn't there something you can do? Can't you stop this? Does the government, simply because it has a majority, have the right to lord it over Parliament in this way?" I have to answer that it used closure in 1969 to put through rule 75C and now it is using the closure that is part of 75C to put through this bill despite the fact that most of it has not been discussed, as I have already pointed out.

Not having had the opportunity to deal with the bill as it should have been dealt with in Committee of the Whole stage, there would normally be an opportunity on third reading to move a number of amendments for reference back to the committee to discuss some of these points. We in our party have about ten such amendments that we would like to move. I am getting one of them in today. We hope we will get in a second, but I am not sure we will. The other parties have amendments they would like to move, but with closure falling on Friday there is not a chance in the world of getting the various phases of the bill reconsidered at third reading. In fact, the word "reconsidered" is hardly correct because most of them have not been considered at all.

I submit that we have here a case of utter disregard of the rights of parliament and utter disregard of the rights of the Canadian people for the government to impose this rule at this time. As I say, had there been a couple of weeks debate on third reading there might have been some justification for it. But there had only been one day's debate. Let no member on the other side start to tell me about the 30 or 40 days we had prior to that, because in their own words this is the crucial stage. I am glad to see the Minister of National Defence coming back into the House, perhaps to take a bow, because the words were his. This is a crucial stage, and the opportunity to have the kind of debate that is alluded to at page 433 of the Journals for 1968-69 has been denied.

The third thing I want to say is that in my view this Parliament, with the work load it has, and with the way that work load will increase, does have to find some way to plan and allocate its time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But it has to be done in a way that involves agreement, and it has to be done in a way that apportions the time within any period of allocated time so that all of the time will not be spent on one clause and none of it on the rest. But every time the government uses the closure device, uses the big stick, it is admitting it has not been able to solve that problem. It is not the solution of any problem for the bully, for the one with the big stick, just to say, "This is the end of it." Every time this happens, every time the guillotine falls, we not only suffer in Parliament at that very moment, but we are putting off the chance of a sensible solution to this problem of the allocation of time.

So, Sir, for these three reasons that I have produced today, in addition to the three that I put forward on December 2, I urge that this motion be defeated. It violates the purpose of third reading. It is a case of open contempt of Parliament. And it is an admission on the part of the government that it has completely failed to plan the business of the House in any sensible or organized way.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who today invoked Standing Order 75C to close the debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-259 is also impinging upon parliamentary freedom. In my opinion, it is a way of tampering with people's freedom.

In fact, why are we against Bill C-259 and the imposition of Rule 75C? Simply because nobody in Canada agrees on that famous Bill C-259. We realize there is confusion everywhere, even on the government side. The former Minister of Communications and the former Minister of National Defence do not agree with the government on Bill C-259. A few moments ago, some hon. members applauded the government's decision to apply Standing Order 75C, without knowing why.

On the other hand, it we consult economists about Bill C-259, we find that those who belong to the Liberal party do not agree at all with those who belong to the Progressive Conservative party and that the latter do not share the opinions of their colleagues in the New Democratic Party. So, there is confusion among economists, and some even claim that Bill C-259 will make things worse instead of improving them.

Even chartered accountants do not agree too much among themselves. One of them, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) expressed in the House yesterday opinions that were completely contrary to those held by the others. As a matter of fact, he attacks everyone without proposing any useful solution.

With regard to the different social classes, the minister referred with pleasure a moment ago to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), who is a lawyer and who suggests that the government should insist upon a vote on Bill C-259. But the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is also a lawyer and his opinions are the very opposite of those of the hon. member for Greenwood. So there is confusion among lawyers as well. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) supported the decision of the government to apply Standing Order 75C and the minister stated that even editorials are divided. Parliamentary reporters do not agree. Some are in favour of the bill, others are discrediting it, but all are uncertain.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, we cannot support Bill C-259 which is a kind of bible 730 pages long which nobody understands. Indeed, even the minister does not understand it. However, they want us to pass it so that they may tackle the Canadian taxpayers who are working to build the country.

When I refer to economists, for example, I do not hesitate to state quite frankly that the economists who advise us are our people who work in Canada and contribute to its development but do not try to crush it or rob it blind.

We talk about farmers, miners from Noranda, Canadair workers, Montreal and Trois-Rivières wage earners, in short about all the working classes in our society, including small storekeepers who will pay the piper and go broke as a result of the enactment of Bill C-259. Those are the economists we have. We speak sensibly on their behalf and we request that the government be more understanding.

Because the President of the Privy Council has invoked Standing order 75C, we say he interferes with the rights of parliamentarians. If the vote were free, if we were not asked to vote like sheep, if the members, government and others alike, were entirely free to vote according to the interests of the citizens they represent, then closure would not have to be invoked, nor would we be asked to study confusing bills.

It is all very well to say: We are levying a new tax because the people are rich, as the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was pleased to say over CKAC in Montreal. It is all very well to say to the people: You earn enough, that is why you are being taxed, when everyone, including the Prime Minister, knows that they have not enough money already. But in order to sound funny on radio, one can always tell them: You are rich, that is why we are passing bills to tax you more. That is exactly what the government means by introducing Bill C-259.

In any event, the government takes the responsibility for applying Standing Order 75C. It has the majority. The Prime Minister was saying on the same station that thanks to the majority that it holds, the government is solid. They have solidity, indeed, but only to impose additional taxes. They are solid enough to impose new taxes on the middle class of our society through a bill which will be favourable to the rich without assisting the poor all that much and which to a certain extent, will siphon off a considerable part of the income of the middle classes so that we will end up some day in Canada with a situation where people will be either rich or poor.

That is exactly the purpose behind Bill C-259. The government is taking the responsibility for foisting this bill upon the people of Canada, and that despite the suggestions put forward by the opposition. Although the government says that we will have debated this bill for 50 days, we don't even have the right to make it understand the least little change that should be made and applied for sound economic, social and political policies in Canada. That should be done not by funny speeches delivered over radio or television but through legislation respectful of the human being, of personal initiative and of private enterprise across the country.

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that questions will be asked on the other side of the House about whether my colleague has requested that I speak today because he is getting to the bottom of the barrel over here.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no!

Mr. Laing: My defence to that—

Mr. Stanfield: There is no need for any defence.

Mr. Laing: —and my confidence stem from the fact that the barrel has been emptied several times on the other side.

Mr. Stanfield: You can do better than that.

Mr. Laing: I came to this House for the first time in 1949, Mr. Speaker. In those days there was no thought of closure; it was not mentioned. There was a session once a year; the habit was to gather in January and we always hoped to get out of here before the heat of July. There was a tacit agreement among all parties in those days that matters would be debated but that decisions would be taken.

I remember that the late Angus MacInnis, who I think might be called one of the better parliamentarians of this generation, remarked in one impassioned speech that people say of us that all we do is come here and talk. Mr. MacInnis said, "My God, that is what they sent us to do—they sent us to come here and talk." That is one aspect of this Parliament. But surely the talking must be to a purpose and surely decisions must be taken so that the executive of this Parliament, which is the government of Canada, can process those things it wants to put into effect and which it thinks at that time are in the public interest and which in succeeding years it will submit to the public to determine whether they want to renew its mandate or whether they want someone else to run their business.

An hon. Member: See what you have been missing, Pierre.

Mr. Laing: In the years following 1962 when the right hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan sought a majority government here and failed and Mr. Pearson in two successive tries failed, there was a growing feeling in Canada that Parliament was not adequately serving the requirements of the Canadian people. I heard this widely discussed. People were yearning for a government with a majority.

Mr. Baldwin: Now they wish they had not.

Mr. Laing: They wanted things discussed and after that they wanted things done.

An hon. Member: But you have not done anything yet.

Mr. Laing: When the history of this century is written, the darkest pages—

Mr. Alkenbrack: Christmas 1971!

Mr. Laing: —will record the accession to power of dictators and military leaders. They came to power because they convinced their people that democracy had decayed and died; otherwise they would not have succeeded.

I think the people of Canada today want an adequate discussion of this bill and other bills and then they want decisions to be taken. I know this is not a good day for a novitiate like I am to speak in this House because there is a lot of air turbulence. You cannot stay strapped and speak in this House. Among other things, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said that the government is trying to foist this bill on the people just to try to save its face. If he is confident that he is right in that statement, he should support the passage of the bill at once because if he thinks the government is making a mistake he can go to the public on this measure.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: I have some concern for the people of Canada. That is why.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Laing: The government stands behind this bill and its passage and will meet the Leader of the Opposition on the hustings when that time comes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Laing: The Leader of the Opposition has used some very strong language and a great number of adjectives. One is supreme: The bill is incomprehensible.

Mr. Stanfield: Nobody questions that.

Mr. Laing: The Leader of the Opposition did not find the bill totally incomprehensible. He found those parts of the bill that give additional payments to the people of the country were very fine indeed. They were readable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: What is wrong with that? That is being positive.

Mr. Laing: That is being selective.

Mr. Stanfield: Nobody has any difficulty understanding that part of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: It stimulates the economy.

Mr. Laing: I suggest that the intelligence of the Leader of the Opposition is exceeded by his sensitiveness to public opinion. No government has any money of its own.

Mr. Caouette: Why not?

Mr. Laing: We tax and we distribute the money according to objectives and policies in the public good. That is the responsibility of government. I think it was Micawber who said that happiness can only come when income is equal to outgo. Apparently the Leader of the Opposition has not yet learned that responsibility or that happiness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Laing: I would gather that the present occupant of the high office the Leader of the Opposition once had in Nova Scotia would be of the opinion today that while in Nova Scotia he had failed to read Charles Dickens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh,oh!

Mr. Laing: I think an adequate amount of time must be given to this question. It has been under study in this country for ten years at very considerable expense to the taxpayers of Canada. Committees have gone from one side of the country to the other and invited the people to make their submissions. Submissions have been made here. My desk is piled three feet high with submissions made in regard to this matter.

Mr. Woolliams: You have not read any of them.

Mr. Laing: I do not want to argue with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). I know he has a wide reputation as being the second best debater on that side of the House. All the others are first.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Laing: I think a great deal of time has been offered to the opposition to debate this bill. Yesterday I heard the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) speaking on the bill. He did not say one single word about the bill. He should have been speaking on the motion today because all he was doing yesterday was condemning us for what he termed closure. He had no intention at all of paying attention to any part of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: No, no.

Mr. Laing: That has happened in a great number of cases. I do not want to be unfair to members opposite. There was a good debate on agricultural matters and a good debate on the matter of co-operatives. Apart from those, no attention has been paid to any part of this bill in the 44 or 47 days so far.

It is my opinion that the people of Canada will support this government very strongly indeed for the action it has taken to come to a decision now in respect of this matter. If there are industries in Canada which suffer as the result of putting this bill through, they will be heard. Amendments will be made.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Why not do it now?

Mr. Laing: Is the hon. member ready at this time to tell me how the bill should be amended? I do not think he suggested any amendments to the bill.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My interjection was made because the minister is admitting that amendments are necessary. Why not make them before we pass the bill?

Mr. Laing: I am about through, Mr. Speaker. If the economy of the country demands amendments in respect of taxes, any sensible, honest, good government will make those amendments from time to time. I think the people of Canada will support this government for taking action on this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), the member for Vancouver South, treated us to a mild but quite irrelevant history of his career in Ottawa. He said that the bill is comprehensible to him. If this is so, he joins a select company, about as select a company as he will be with when he soon joins the other place.

Mr. Stanfield: There are far more in the Senate who understand this bill.

Mr. Fairweather: I was disappointed with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). He is usually a convincing debater. Today we were treated to a rather shallow apologia because the government in all its years has made no serious effort to reform the rules of Parliament and bring in any workable system of allocation of time. The House leader said that the government now weighs editorials before it proceeds with motions to allocate time. It is a pity the government did not weigh this bill. It is also a curious way to find out how the people feel about this legislation.

The President of the Privy Council also spoke of an inalert opposition, forgetting of course that it was the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who made the concerted and oft-time lonely attack on the white paper which resulted in many worth-while changes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Do not put your trust in princes is an admonition which should be in the forefront of our minds as we wrestle with the bill which is the subject of the minister's motion. We are being treated to a curious phenomenom in parliamentary life with the Senate being softened up by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The minister said: Pass the bill and I will give you some goodies at the next session, all the while stifling any attempt to secure amendments in this place.

• (3:00 p.m.)

It seems curious that though we are to debate third reading under the restriction of an allocation of time motion the Senate is given an undertaking that the bill will be amended at the next session. Surely this is one of the cruder attempts at a quid pro quo. It emphasizes the point that the full implications of the bill are not yet understood, not only by this Parliament, with the exception of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), but by the government itself. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Roberts) said last weekend, this bill is not tax reform. And as my own leader has suggested, it is a bill conceived in the 'sixties, whereas the dilemma confronting the government is that it finds itself facing the problems of the 'seventies.

I wonder whether supporters of the government ever bother to read the words of their erstwhile great leader, Sir Wilfred Laurier, who said during the navy debate in 1913:

> Sir, these rules are to be swept away, they are to be ridden over roughshod, they are to be put aside, and we are to have the gag substituted for them. And what is the pretence? The pretence is that there has been obstruction in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for York-Simcoe rising on a point of order?

Mr. Roberts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. If the hon. member had been in the House earlier he would have heard me deny that those remarks attributed to me were reported correctly.

Mr. Fairweather: As a matter of fact, I was in the House when the hon. member made his protest. And I was present when he said that this bill is not tax reform.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have this morning been in touch with the organizers of the conference. They assure me that the remarks attributed to me were not said.

Mr. Fairweather: I know the Prime Minister is uneasy when his parliamentary secretaries go about the country. But I recognize the rule. I respect the Speaker. The hon. member has said he did not say those words and I accept that statement. The reservations will be for others, not for me. In any case, many parliamentary secretaries have gone on record as saying in this House that the bill does not meet the needs of tax reform. After all, one man's obstruction is another man's analysis; one man's filibuster is another man's argument. I could put it in another way and say that one man's Laurier is another man's Trudeau.

We are faced with a bill dropped on the people of Canada as a sort of hogmanay present on January 1. When the gift is opened and the fancy paper cleared away, together with the puffery which has gone into the press releases, people will find that what is supposed to be tax reform is not tax reform at all. The gift cannot consist of a game of skill, because no comprehensible rules accompany it. It cannot be a household amenity because the provisions for the transfer of property are in every way restrictive. What it is, is a 1968 tax bill upon which full depreciation has been calculated. And it has very little trade-in value.

An important point was made in an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of July 24, 1969, in relation to the very issue we are debating today. It had to do with the allocation of time rule which was so clumsily drafted and which was accepted only after debate had been cut off. The editorial writer certainly possessed good forecasting ability. He wrote:

> The only real review that any proposed legislation is likely to receive will come not from the majority in Parliament but from the minority. This point was well made a few years ago by a committee of the Canadian Bar Association. "Under democratic institutions," said the committee, "the people accept to be governed by majority decisions, but on condition that the laws should be discussed in the open, traversed by the criticisms of the opposition and be the result of a free and enlightened decision by Parliament."

We have not been able to pursue that because of the restrictions placed upon us by the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benson: Fifty days.

Mr. Yves Forest (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, a little over two years ago, following a report of the Special Committee on Procedure and Organization, our Standing Orders were changed by the House and now provide for a new procedure whereby debates may be limited either through inter-party agreement, or, failing that, through a motion brought before the House by a minister.

While the change of procedure did not receive unanimous support at that time, it was almost unanimously recognized that no modern Parliament claiming to be efficient and functional can hold indefinite and obviously unduly long debate on any subject, however controversial or complicated. It was also recognized that when a certain time has elapsed, during which all views, ideas and suggestions have been aired and rehashed, a final decision must be reached and the voice of the majority of the people's representatives must be heard.

Besides, it has long been recognized in almost all legislatures of the free world, and particularly in Westminster, where the mother of Parliaments sits, that nowadays the time of the House or the legislature can no longer be wasted in repetitive debate with the sole purpose of delaying the making of a decision or of upsetting the government's legislative program.

It is about time that we in Canada show the same political maturity and that the official opposition particularly should stop living in the past. Circumstances have changed and this kind of strategy does not get public approval any more. Anyway, in this case, it is a long shot indeed.

The population of Canada now thinks that there has been enough talking and that time has come to make a decision and to go on to other things, other priorities.

Mr. Speaker, after all the members of the opposition had to expect that those sections of the Standing Orders would be applied some day. They are applied for the first time with respect to a bill and it seems to me that there could not have been a better opportunity, a more obvious situation for invoking Standing Order 75C in order to limit in a very sensible way debate on Bill C-259, which has been before the Commons about 50 days on second reading, in the committee on the whole and now on the motion on third reading which will allow at least five or five and a half days of debate. And all that considering that no agreement could be reached with the opposition parties which disagree and have assumed different attitudes. By the way, some members of those parties voted with the government on December 2.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that the definite text of the bill was tabled in the House only last June, that this text was long, complicated and hard to understand and that numerous amendments had been made to it in the course of preparation. But the major changes, that is those relating to capital gains, corporate income and income of co-operatives, have been debated and studied for years, following the Carter report, the white paper and comprehensive studies by committees of both Chambers. As a matter of fact, everything has been said and repeated on all aspects of the subject, and this many times.

Obviously, if the bill is to become law on January 1 next, as the government has announced a long time ago, and in order to dispel the uncertainty, an end had to be put to this systematic obstruction, the obvious object of which was simply to prevent the House from making a decision. Besides, the Montreal Star of December 3, 1971, said that it was significant that the efforts of several Conservative members were not aimed at improving the situation of low-income people, but at obstructing approval of provisions forcing some corporations and richer Canadians to pay a more equitable part of taxes.

It says also that the country would have been faced with a longer period of waiting and uncertainty and of course that could but have ill effects on the economy.

Mr. Speaker, an editorial of the Toronto Daily Star of December 2 followed the same line of thought.

Today people ask us to take less time on discussions and to proceed with the study of important legislation such as bills on agriculture and the family income security system and expect those who have been elected to govern do just that, once there have been more than sufficient opportunity, such as in the present case, of debating the matter, however complex it is.

In forcing the government to invoke Standing Order 75C to limit the debate in a more than reasonable way, the opposition did not get the support of the public or the press, at least not in my province, even if generally speaking, in such cases, there is a tendency to blame the government.

For instance, a well-known member of the press gallery, Mr. Charles Lynch, supporting the government, wrote in the Gazette of last December 2, and I quote:

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

In the matter of the tax reforms, the government is not telling Parliament to go to hell—it is denying the right of opposition parties to tell the government to go to hell.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for years now a tax reform has been demanded, and since the government had the courage to bring it in, it was to be foreseen that any legislation to amend the tax structure would give rise to controversy, because if millions of taxpayers will pay less or no tax, others will be charged more. However, the government has accepted responsibility for such a bill. It has laid it before the House and everybody who wished to be heard was able to do so.

Besides, this reform is not indefeasible and like any important bill of general application it could be amended in the light of experience and of rulings made regarding its interpretation.

Mr. Speaker, after a few more days of general discussion at the third reading stage, it will be in the interest of the country and of Parliament to put it to a vote.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, having been accused by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) of being the second best debater in the House after all my other colleagues, I must answer that I felt that he flattered me but at the same time left himself in a hole. If I am the second best debater after all my other colleagues, I suggest that even if the hon. member is an egotist he must be third best to me, and if his colleagues are better than he is he must be fourth to them.

Today we have seen the House leader for the government on the defensive. We have heard him quote figures which were a distortion of the worst kind. To me this is an infamous day for Parliament, a day of infamy for Canada, particularly for a new country where freedom should flourish, a country that is healthy and fresh. We find that the government, by implementing this kind of closure, is turning back the chronometer of freedom, the kind of freedom on which our traditions were built, a thousand years in order to prove the omnipotence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He is able to enforce closure by his own omnipotence and by use of what I would call his basic herd—and we have heard a lot lately about the basic herd. He claims that he and they were given a mandate to do any infamous thing, even to the point of implementing an incomprehensible tax bill. On television the Prime Minister said: "I have the right to govern for five years and I can do anything in that time. Under the mandate that the people gave me I can implement a bill that has 707 pages, which has had 135 amendments, and ram it through by the method of closure".

Mr. Trudeau: When did I say that?

Mr. Woolliams: After today we have a half day on Wednesday, a day on Thursday and a half day on Friday. As pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), third reading under the new rules is the most important part of the debate on any bill that comes before the House.

Mr. Gibson: The public have had this one for three years.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me answer that immediately. They have been talking about tax reform for ten years, but let me just deal with that. We had a chance to study the white paper. When it was put into legislation, even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said, if I may quote his words, that the white paper was changed when the government brought forward its legislation.

If we had been given the opportunity we could have studied the bill, its 707 pages and 76 clauses, in a standing committee of the House of Commons. Experts could have been called to give information and knowledge to parliamentarians who would then have been able to debate the bill with knowledge and vote on it with knowledge. But closure is used to force through an incomprehensible tax bill containing 76 clauses and 707 pages, along with 135 amendments. The government is thrusting this tax measure upon Parliament and upon the people, creating a new tax system that is so incomprehensible that even our best tax experts in Canada have been denied the right to question or to determine what this monster contains.

This tax system will change our whole basic philosophy in Canada upon which freedom rests. It matters not, says the government; get it through Parliament. It does not matter whether we understand it; just get it through, force it through the Senate. We heard the swan song this afternoon of the hon. member for Vancouver South who was singing himself all the way to the other place.

First, the government brought forth the monstrous white paper. It was changed. These changes, unexplained, were then drafted into legislation. What should have taken place is that we should have had a study made by a standing committee, as I said. But this is the kind of democracy that we have under the present Prime Minister. What does it matter that this bill is ambiguous? What does it matter if no one can understand it?

However, that is not the definition of the Trudeau democracy. Over the weekend he has coined a new phrase or, rather, he has used an old phrase and given it a new meaning. His democracy is "buster's democracy". It is buster's way; it is buster's method; it is buster's muzzling of Parliament; and it is buster's way of indirectly muzzling even the Senate. The Prime Minister has said: "You have asked for tax reform and, buster, you have got it. You asked for closure under rule 76C and, buster, you have got it". That is what is called "buster's democracy".

Parliament did not ask for rule 75C; it was forced upon Parliament by closure. And, buster, this institution got it. The public did not ask for 707 pages of a tax measure or for the amendments. But buster's democracy forced it upon the people. That is what they call "buster's democracy", the old blockbuster.

On December 8, following the first closure motion, this institution went through the farcical and mechanical process of voting on the 76 clauses of the bill. I think the Minister of Finance will agree with me on that. I quote the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who said: "What a farce to spend four hours the other night voting on sections when I would say 90 per cent—being kind—of Members of Parliament did not know what the sections contained or what they were voting on". Members of Parliament did not know what the sections of the bill contained or what they were voting on. The basic herd opposite supported the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and voted for the bill. That is what you could call "buster" democracy.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: The government does not understand the bill. I know it does not.

Mr. Benson: I think the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is heckling.

Mr. Woolliams: No one understands what was voted for. Not even the Minister of Finance and all his experts comprehended the many changes that were introduced, and 90 per cent or more of the members of this House were forced to go through this mechanical procedure in Committee of the Whole without knowing what they were voting for or what the ramifications of the tax measure would be. When Parliament voted in favour of this measure the other day, it behaved in the worst possible way. I have never seen Parliament behave worse. The members voted for a measure they did not know about. Now the bill is to be sent to the Senate. The other place will have a chance to debate the bill for a day or two and then get on with the job of putting its rubber stamp on it.

Mr. McGrath: What an insult to the Senate.

Mr. Woolliams: This is legislation through ignorance and by ignorance and goes against all the principles of jurisprudence. After all, ignorance of the law is no defence. However, that seems to mean nothing to this government.

What we are doing today is not democratic; it is not even parliamentary. The Prime Minister and those who support him personify ignorance of the law. They have created nothing but contempt for this institution and now they threaten to create further contempt for the other place. The other place has been told what to do, how long to do it in and when to do it. It is to do it regardless of whether or not this monstrous tax system makes sense. I submit that this bill will completely destroy our economy and our way of life.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate was created to protect minorities and to guard against errors made in this place. It is to scrutinize bills passed by this place and, when mistakes are discovered, to send them back here for consideration. If one looks at history one will see that when the Income Tax Act was first introduced the Senate made many changes. The bill was sent back to this place and the changes were concurred in. What chance will the Senate have in a day and a half to study adequately this monstrous bill?

Mr. McGrath: The government has put a gun to the head of the Senate.

Mr. Woolliams: It would have been more honest if the government had brought in a single bill repealing the former Income Tax Act and then said: We have the right to enact new tax laws by order in council. At least that course would have been more honest. The government would have said to Parliament, if it had brought in such a measure: We do not want you to know what the law is, we intend to enact it in secret, we are bringing in a bill that will give us that right. The present system appears to be democratic but this is merely an illusion. The government appears to be saying: Look, you had a chance to vote on the different sections of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House. Would it not have been more honest, as I said, to bring in one bill to repeal the old Income Tax Act and then bring in an additional bill which would have given the government the right to impose taxes through Order in Council? That procedure would at least have been more honest. As it is, nobody understands this complex bill and what it will do.

Mr. Trudeau: Come on, buster. You can do better than that.

Mr. Woolliams: This is a day of infamy by reason of the procedure now being followed on the third reading stage of this bill. This is the second time that the guillotine is to be used. This constitutes the implementation of a form of totalitarianism which, through subtle methods, attempts to enforce the will of a few against the will of Parliament. If Parliament is to make decisions, it must make intelligent decisions based on the decisions of individuals. The few hours' debate in Committee of the Whole the other night when the guillotine was imposed was nothing but a mockery, a mockery of this institution, a mockery of freedom and a mockery of freedom of speech.

Mr. McGrath: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Trudeau: Take him away. Take him out.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in his contribution to the debate today the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) mentioned me. He was quite right in saying that I supported the government on the motion to end debate on the committee stage. I did not do so because I approved of Bill C-259; quite the reverse is the truth. It is my opinion that, as a result of that bill, we will wind up with a tax system which will still be grossly unfair and which will bear much too heavily on the lower and middle income groups.

On that occasion, Mr. Speaker, and I am speaking of when the first motion was introduced, the debate in committee had already lasted some 30 days. I received the assurance of my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) who had taken an active part in the committee stage discussions as well as in all other stages when Bill C-259 was before the House, that the opposition had had ample opportunity to present its main points during the debate. It was his view, and I accepted it, that further debate on that particular stage would be repetitive.

The value of that debate, of course, was fully illustrated by the withdrawal by the Minister of Finance of the provisions respecting the taxing of co-operatives and credit unions. I think that was a credit to parliamentary procedure, inasmuch as public opinion, largely aroused by the opposition, I believe, and supported by some members of the government party, produced substantial and beneficial changes in the bill. I wanted to make it clear then and I want to make it clear now that I do not oppose in principle the limitation of the time of debates, even if you want to describe this limitation by the harsher expression, closure.

I believe that the conduct of parliamentary business and, indeed, the welfare of democracy sometimes require the government to use its majority to terminate a debate that has gone on long enough. It should, of course, do everything in its power to work out a consensus with the parties. That is the best policy and I hope it will be adopted when possible. I think that closure to end debate in committee of the whole was justified. On another occasion, that of the flag debate, closure was justified because that debate had dragged on day after day and nothing new was being said or could be said. Therefore I voted in favour of closure then and I would do so again in the same circumstances. I may have been wrong, but I certainly was not irrational when I supported the government in the proposal to terminate debate in Committee of the Whole.

Let me make it clear that I take a different view of the present motion. The most important and, indeed, the crucial phase of debate under our present practice is that phase we embark on during the third reading stage. I do not think it is enough to confine that debate to four days. Indeed, I think that this limitation deprives the opposition of some of its basic rights, among them being the right to present to the public alternative policies by way of a series of reasoned amendments. I think this right is being taken away by the motion that is now before the House and therefore I think the rights of the opposition in that respect are being circumscribed. This, in my opinion, is in no way a justified, useful or valid application of the rule regarding allocation of time. In my opinion that rule is being abused. This motion constitutes an abuse of the rules of this House. It is an abuse of the legislative rights of the opposition. I speak for my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo, who shared my opinion in the previous debate, when I say that we cannot and will not support the motion.

May I summarize the position I take. The issue, in my view, should not be whether closure is always wrong or always right. The issue ought to be whether it is justified by the circumstances, whether it is necessary in the interests of parliamentary rights and whether or not it is being used to abuse and curtail the rights of minorities. On this occasion it is my view that closure is being used to curtail unreasonably and unjustly the rights of minorities. I therefore oppose the motion.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, if anything can demonstrate the sad condition into which this Parliament has fallen, it has to be these two debates on allocation of time motions. It seems that the only time we have had a substantial number of members in the House listening to debate and the only time we have had debate we could listen to have been occasions of procedural motions. This would seem to be an indication of the failure of the opposition to make the House of Commons a meaningful place for debate to which the country would listen.

We have had a number of rather unfounded charges slipping through the House of Commons of late. The most notable was by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and is to be found at page 10078 of Hansard for Thursday, December 2, 1971. He said:

> The bill—
> Bill C-259.
> —was not distributed to our principal financial critic until two or three days before the House reconvened, and the rest of us did not receive a printed copy of the bill until after the House had resumed.

Now, what are the facts? The facts are that on July 12 the bill was distributed to all members of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I repeat for the benefit of hon. members opposite that on July 12 the bill was distributed to all members of the House.

Mr. Baldwin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker I did not get it on July 12. I did not get it until after the House had assembled. The member must take my word on that.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the information I have—and I have done some research on this—is that the bill was distributed to all members of the House of Commons and Senate on July 12.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, we heard this sort of thing a minute ago. Is the hon. member questioning the word of the hon. member for Peace River or is he prepared to accept the word of the hon. member for Peace River?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his statement and the hon. member for Peace River has made his statement. If the Leader of the Opposition is asking whether the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is questioning the word of the hon. member for Peace River, this is debate.

Mr. Reid: I want to make quite clear that the bill was distributed on July 12 and that a number of copies were distributed to hon. members. I went to the trouble of checking when my bill came. I am certainly not known as a government financial muscle man and I assumed the bill must have been made available to members of the opposition at the same time. I can understand why the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) might not be able to find his copy because he is not as adequately served by staff as some hon. members opposite such as the leaders of the opposition parties. I cannot understand how the Leader of the Opposition, who has sufficient staff, could lose the bills in his office. I can see them going around tippy-toe trying to find a hiding spot for a bill of this size.

If members of the Conservative party were not prepared for the debate on second reading and on the Committee of the Whole stage, after having had the whole summer, they certainly were alone in this because every lawyer and every chartered accountant I know had access to the bill and was working on it. I am surprised that the lawyers, accountants and supporters of the Conservative party did not make copies available to them, or that copies were not obtained from the distribution office or from the government.

Another matter which should be dealt with is the question of who did all the talking on the second reading and Committee of the Whole stages. Who was unprepared? The hon. member for Edmonton West, who I think has a very good grasp of the principles of the bill, spoke 40 times. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) spoke 16 times and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) spoke 12 times. I did not bother counting the contributions the House leader for the Tory Party made because he never spoke once on the bill.

What we are debating is the question of how much time is enough time to pass legislation. During the past year we have had three examples of legislation going through the Committee of the Whole. We had the government reorganization bill, the Emergency War Measures Act and this bill. What about the results in each case? Each case took at least a month of the time of the House of Commons. In the case of the government reorganization bill two amendments were forced by the opposition. One made the Minister of the Environment the Minister of Fisheries, and the other required that when a Minister of State is appointed there is to be a two-hour debate in the House of Commons. I do not know whether the opposition feels that after six weeks of debate these are significant amendments. I think they are a waste of time.

We must also look at what transpired in respect of the War Measures Act. Not one amendment was accepted. This was another waste of time. The bill should have been sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs instead of taking up the time of the House in Committee of the Whole.

What has happened is that the role of Parliament has changed. The only thing that has not changed is the opposition members. This same old party has remained as it has been in the last 50 years. The members are condemning themselves forever to staying in the opposition because they do not understand how Canadian society in the 'sixties and 'seventies works and why they will not win the next election. The House of Commons is a forum for debate. The question to decide is how long shall a debate continue, how long should the debate go on, given the quality of debate we get. I suggest that any member opposite who reads the debates on the Committee of the Whole stage and discovers how many speeches in point of fact were directed to the clauses under discussion will find that very little of the debate was really germane or to the point.

An hon. Member: What are you speaking about?

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. Reid: I am speaking of the allocation of time motion. At least I am on the point. Then the question is, when shall a decision be taken? I thought the comments made by the House leader of the New Democratic Party were particularly well taken. In effect he said that this Parliament has been a failure as it had been unable to allocate its time in any meaningful way, any sensible way or in any way in which the Canadian public could take at least a simple sense of pride. The point is that once we get on a piece of legislation there is no way to bring debate to a conclusion unless the opposition determines it. Whether or not a debate comes to a conclusion has nothing at all to do with whether an amendment of substance is accepted, as witness the two cases I gave before of the government reorganization bill and the Emergency War Measures Act. There must be some mechanism for bringing a debate to a conclusion. The sooner we work out in this chamber an allocation of time, the less we will have to go through uncomfortable scenes of this nature.

I point out to the House leader of the Conservative Party that there is power within Standing Order 75B, according to some readings of it, for the three opposition parties to determine when the debate should close. If there was any other motive on the other side except an attempt to extend the debate indefinitely they certainly would have been able to come to an agreement with the government under rule 75B which would have had the effect of concluding debate in a reasonable time. The reason we are implementing 75C is that there is no agreement between parties opposite and the government. So we have a failure of Members of Parliament and particularly the parties of this Parliament.

We have a responsible system of government. A responsible system of government implies that parties will take positions, will debate and then reach a conclusion. We were sent here to talk, certainly, but the other half of the equation, that we are also sent here to take decisions, should not be forgotten.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, some of us have listened with considerable interest to the Fascist-tinged philosophy of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) who just sat down. Clearly he has not the slightest comprehension of the purpose of Parliament or of the parliamentary process, but many of us assume that his ideas are exactly those of many members of the government party who sit not only at the back but on the front benches. His strange reference to the debate in committee being irrelevant seemed to me at least to be a reflection on Your Honour as it is my understanding that debate in this chamber, in committee stage or at any other stage, is required to be relevant. But that means nothing to the hon. member.

It is very interesting that the hon. member who has just taken his seat brought up the question of when closure should be applied. That is a good question. Clearly one time it should be instituted is in the case of a national emergency. I do not think there would be any argument about that; a debate in such circumstances is something we would have to forgo, as indeed members of any Canadian parliament should. But in this case we are not confronted with any national emergency so far as the tax bill is concerned, so that excuse is clearly out.

The next reason for closure in any form is when debate is unnecessarily prolonged and obstructive. It is said that the government has the right to get its business through. We have heard that, and I do not think anybody would disagree with that. But when a debate should be brought to a conclusion is not a matter of fact but a matter of opinion depending on the circumstances of the case. Earlier in the debate this afternoon the government House leader said that we have debated this matter for 46 days. This was a debate on a bill which is the largest, most massive and most all-pervading piece of legislation that has ever been presented to any Canadian parliament. It consists of 705 pages and it affects directly every single person in this country in one way or another. Nothing could be more complex, and since Parliament commenced discussion in September hundreds of amendments have been made. The full content of this enormous bill was not known until last Tuesday after closure had been introduced.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nesbitt: Since everybody has been quoted here today, let me quote from a letter I received. On November 17—I hope I will get time for the interruptions from the government side.

Mr. Baldwin: Squeaking kewpie dolls.

Mr. Nesbitt: On November 17 I received a letter from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) in reply to a request I made to the minister asking for clarification of certain of the proposed tax measures affecting credit unions. I asked what the effect of the proposals would be. The minister replied, and his letter is not written in confidence or restricted in any way:

> Unfortunately, it is not possible for my department to compute the tax that would be payable under the tax reform proposals, as the proposed changes are not yet fully known. In particular, the amount of reserves that will be allowed for tax purposes is not yet known. Officials of the Department of Finance may, however, be able to give you an idea of the comparative tax liabilities under the two systems.

That letter was written on November 17 long after the debate was well under way and apparently the government did not know. So it is ridiculous to say that the bill was known to Members of Parliament either on September 1 or June 30 or on July 12. I certainly never received my copy of the bill, nor was it brought to my attention in any way, until I returned here after Parliament was recalled. I do not know how the government members managed to obtain their copies so early. There must have been some kind of preference as we have seen before. I am sure the Minister of Communications (Mr. Stanbury) knows all about that. I am not a wearer of the "Purple" as is the Minister of Communications but I suppose it is "Purple" second class. However, perhaps the minister realized that.

The government has three firsts on this bill: the first time in history that closure has ever been used to bring in a tax bill, the first time that such an enormous piece of legislation has been presented to Parliament, and the first time closure has been invoked before all the contents of the bill were known to Parliament.

Mr. Baldwin: How about the first time we have had such a Minister of Finance?

Mr. Nesbitt: That goes without saying. The government says that 46 days of discussion of the bill is enough. No chartered accountant—and I defy the minister or any of his colleagues to bring forth a genuine chartered accountant who is not in some way attached to the government retinue—will agree that anybody in Canada understands the bill. The bill is clearly a creation of the civil service. As one of the government's supporters in the press gallery said the other morning over the CBC a couple of days ago, it is an honest attempt by the civil service to reform the tax system.

I doubt very much that the minister himself can answer all the questions on the bill. I remember the time when the white paper was first presented and we were in the railway committee room asking the minister questions on it. As I recall, the minister was able to answer a few of the questions but most of them he referred to Mr. Bryce, the deputy minister. That is what happened. I doubt very much that the minister can answer some of the questions now. For instance, I have one right here. This is what we are talking about, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was not in the railway committee room when the white paper was presented.

Mr. Nesbitt: I distinctly remember asking the Minister of Finance a question to which he replied that he was not familiar with that part of the bill and that Mr. Bryce could answer the question.

Mr. Benson: I was not there.

Mr. Nesbitt: The minister must have a very short memory; if his memory fails that badly it is good evidence that he should not be Minister of Finance.

I believe the minister is one of those who have said that this bill is so readily understandable that anybody on the street can read it and understand it. There are hundreds of unintelligible sections in the bill but a typical one is section 192(10). I would like to have the minister stand up in the House and explain this one to us. We did not get a chance to ask him questions on it on account of closure. It reads as follows:

> The assumption is made that the amount of the earnings for the control period that was available for payment of dividends of each corporation, other than the control corporation, control of which was acquired by the controlling corporation by virtue of its acquisition of control of the controlled corporation, were computed as if each corporation that controlled the chain corporation, at the time the controlling corporation acquired control of the controlled corporation, had acquired control of the chain corporation at that time.

Here is something that can be safely said to be just as clear as mud. Is it the kind of thing that anybody could read and understand?

Finally, we should ask ourselves why closure is necessary. We discussed when closure should be invoked and when it should not and how much time we should allow for the discussion of the parts of the bill that have not yet been discussed. But why closure? Who will be hurt if the bill is not made law by the first of the year? What difference will it make if it is delayed a day, a week, a month or even a year as most provinces want? Who will be hurt? The answer is, only the egos of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, nothing else, and that is just about it. I know one can see members over there "laughing and scratching" about our complaints concerning the bill being pushed through by closure just the same as the Liberal members did in the pipeline debate. Nothing has changed, only the faces. They all laughed and said that the public think it is great. It is strange that some of the members as well as the Minister of Finance have pretty short memories. Look at what happened to the government of that day under the Right Hon. C. D. Howe. Mr. Howe had little regard for the parliamentary process but had a good deal of ability in many other ways, which is more than can be said for this outfit. The same thing happened—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the most glaring error this government is making is to believe that the Canadian Parliament is a tool that it can manipulate as it wishes if it is in its own interest.

Mr. Speaker, some may find these words rather harsh, but I say very frankly they are fundamentally true. On account of the opposition's frustration, Canadians are presently living a very sad moment, namely the downfall of a government which replaces dynamism, efficiency and imagination in its bills by force and haste to have them passed in order to avoid too much criticism. In short, the quicker the tax reform bill is passed, the less time people will have to say what they think about it, and the quicker they will have to swallow it.

Some government members spoke on the motion under Standing Order 75C this afternoon, but not one succeeded in raising a point which would have prompted me to support the motion.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the opposition are charged—the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Forest) did so a while ago—with filibustering. As a result of the alleged filibuster by the opposition, the government goes to the other extreme—provided there is such a filibuster—and is taking a drastic step, closure.

It would perhaps be appropriate, Mr. Speaker, to ask ourselves what a filibuster is. In my opinion, even if my knowledge on the matter is quite limited, a filibuster is a kind of voluntary and excessive delay of House proceedings to the extent that any progress is practically impossible. A filibuster means to me that nothing works in Parliament and that the loss of time or lack of progress are not in the interests of Parliament, the government or the people.

On the basis of the definition, what is happening in the House? Is there a filibuster?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

If it were proved to me that I or anyone else have been filibustering, I would agree with invoking closure because I do believe in Parliament and the efficiency of the member's role.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. There has been no filibustering in this House since the start of this debate. There have been many speeches, at times useless, such as we heard this afternoon. You seemed impatient, Mr. Speaker, and, believe me, I shared your impatience.

But, when we start a job, be it a tax reform bill, a bill on invoking the war measures act, a bill on the reorganization of the government or any other bill, what is its evolution, what are the various stages, outside those provided for by the procedure?

First of all, this bill came to hon. members for a preliminary study. Then, according to the procedure, there are different stages. Once the bill has been analysed and examined closely, members of all parties are called upon to move amendments. Once all this has been done time has come for adoption of the bill. One thinks about carrying the bill only after the members have had time to study, to examine closely, to analyse and to try to improve it by amendments.

However, since we began to discuss this bill the government did not accept any amendment from the opposition. Last week we moved an amendment in favour of small income people. In any event, it is for those people that the members of the Social Credit Party are in this House. The purpose of our amendment was to give workers, farmers and small income people generally the same rights as professionals enjoy, that is, that they be allowed to deduct part of the cost of their equipment, as the latter is absolutely essential to them if they are to make a living.

What happened, Mr. Speaker? Because of an archaic, ridiculous procedure, the vote taken in committee of the whole was a bingo. Because of this procedure, some government members voted against the proposals. Then they turn around and tell us that Créditiste and other opposition members accomplish a useless task, that they filibuster and waste everybody's time. Our main duty as members, what we are paid for, is to see to it that bills serve the best interest of Canadians. This is why we moved an amendment.

Today, closure is brought in, and we are told: You have no right to move an amendment, you are delaying business of the House.

Mr. Speaker, either we believe in Parliament, or we do not. If we do have faith in Parliament, we shall accept positive amendments coming from either side of the House.

As for me, I am interested in considering any amendment coming from the government and I have examined with interest those brought forward by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). But why should the opposition demonstrate such an honest and objective attitude towards what emanates from the government whereas government members consider whatever comes from the opposition to be wrong. Why? Because the government has no faith in Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, the government consider that closure is the best way for them to avoid debate and improve their bills.

However, they have resorted to Standing Order 75C, denying us any amendments, complaining when we speak, when we carry out our duty imposing closure on the debate in committee of the whole. The government is now imposing closure at the third reading stage. We shall have three and a half days at the most to study 790 pages and propose amendments, if that is ever possible.

Once closure has been imposed in the House of Commons, the government will do the same in the Senate and tell them: Do what you will, this bill must be passed but by the 1st of January. This means that senators will not be able to propose any amendment, for if they do the bill will have to be referred back to the House of Commons. And then, it is impossible, from a technical point of view, for this bill to be passed by New Year's. In other words, the government will befoisting upon the Senate the same bill that they will have rammed through the House of Commons. So, what is the Senate? A useless institution, as I believe it is! If the government have faith in it, as they told the Senate, let them prove it to us and stop fooling it. Otherwise, they admit that we are right.

The Minister of Finance told senators the other day: Pass this bill before Christmas and I promise that afterwards you will be allowed to bring amendments to it. Why not, then, propose amendments right now? What urgency is there to pass this legislation before New Year's? In any case, there is not enough time until then to achieve the just society.

In short, the government has lost control of the situation in taking a wrong decision in the first place, that is in bringing in this overly thick, complicated and exhaustive legislation. They want us to discuss a 790-page bill as we would discuss a 12-page one. There is a big difference between the two. It is impossible to spend so little time on such a bulky bill. Today the government is held down by its first decision. This is why it finds itself compelled to sink deeper every day into the repercussion of this bad decision. It invoked closure on the debate at the stage of the committee of the whole and has done it again today. Tomorrow, it will drop the guillotine in the Senate and say: Now we have the just society.

I think that Canadian democracy as we experience it now in Parliament is in danger because the government thinks Parliament and the Senate are its servants, whereas we say Parliament and the Senate should be at the service of the Canadian people. It is not the same thing, Mr. Speaker. There is a great difference.

If at least a reform of Parliament was under consideration so that the government could not be defeated by any other means but a non confidence motion, each member, of whatever party, could express himself and vote freely according to his conscience without fear of defeating the government. We would then be interested in agreeing on time limits, since government members would be doing the same work as opposition members. However, I understand why closure provisions are invoked: government members envy us because we are able to do our work while they are prevented to do theirs on account of their being gagged all year long.

[English]

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important debates in the history of the Canadian House of Commons. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of this debate the majority of the House of Commons will demonstrate that they can govern Canada and that they shall govern Canada.

The subject of the motion is whether or not the majority of the Members of Parliament can place a time limit on debate. If the fate of government legislation is left to the whims of opposition members at this important time in our history, then we shall all be actors in the slow but gradual decay of Parliament. The House of Commons will no longer represent a forum for public debate but will flounder and disintegrate as an anachronistic tower of Babel, scorned by the Canadian people.

Mr. Peters: At least you had a better speech writer than the last one.

Mr. Gibson: As time goes on Parliament will at last be conscious of the clock. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) might bear that in mind. At last the House of Commons has climbed to the same high level of debate as is practised in the House of Commons at Westminster. In the Mother of Parliaments there are opposition leaders skilled in the cut and thrust of debate. The Conservative House leader might well study the rules of Parliament as I am sure he knows very well that in Westminster a time allocation rule goes into effect as regularly as Big Ben on the hourly note. The really shallow hypocrisy of this debate should be disclosed to the Canadian people.

I urge members of the opposition to support this motion as do all other parliamentarians in the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, in the Inter-Parliamentary Union and throughout all western democratic institutions, or they will find themselves within that narrow band of dissident minorities who are not moving with the times. I plead for removal of obstruction and delay in debate. I attack outdated rules of antiquity. I plead the case for efficiency in this House, not gamesmanship. I support a system of planned debate based on reasonable time limits—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Does that include reading speeches?

Mr. Gibson: —not repetitive irrelevant criticism. I advocate a system of debate which is structured to improve the law, not calculated to fill up pages of Hansard with repetition. I seek fair play in the great chamber, the House of Commons, this chamber which is the greatest assembly of Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the hon. member tell me whether that is his speech?

Mr. Gibson: Yes, I swear on a stack of Bibles that I wrote every word of it. Without reform how can we proceed to pass urgently needed legislation?

Mr. Paproski: Those are not Bibles; those are tax bills.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, our pledge to the people was to legislate, not to procrastinate; to govern, not to hedge; to act, not to evade. For these reasons I urge speedy passage of the tax reform bill. Democracy means rule by a majority of votes, not obstruction by a minority of votes.

If one examines the records of the provincial legislatures from coast to coast in Canada today one finds that no provincial assembly tolerates filibuster and delay which have the effect of hindering democratic, legislative progress. However, Mr. Speaker, because of antiquated procedural practices, not all of which are the fault of the opposition, the legislative process in the House of Commons sometimes grinds to a halt. The opposition obstructs, be it Conservative, NDP or Créditiste or even Liberal. The rules have not provided proper time limits for debate in the past. At last we have passed a reasonable rule creating limitation of debate.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that fundamentally we will all have made a great contribution to the advancement of Canadian parliamentary democracy by supporting this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 4.09 o'clock p.m., the two hours provided for consideration of the motion now before the House under Standing Order 75C have now expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the said Standing Order it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ANALYSIS OF PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43 concerning a matter that was raised in the House of Commons yesterday in connection with a study that was made of the impact of regional development grants and regional development incentive grants, with particular reference to the province of Quebec. May I just say during my preliminary remarks that I sent notice of the fact that I was going to introduce this motion to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), to the government House leader and to the other House leaders in order that all parties would have an opportunity to consider this matter before I raised it in this House.

There were nine fundamental criticisms raised of the regional development program in this study which I feel deserve consideration by all members of the House. Therefore, I move:

That the subject matter of a special study of the programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion by the Quebec Federation of Labour be referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development for study and report thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Regina East under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous agreement. The hon. member's motion cannot be put.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RONDEAU—ALLEGED ABSENCE OF CRÉDITISTE MEMBERS FROM STUDY SESSION CONDUCTED BY CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS ON BILL C-259

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

According to the second paragraph of the left hand side column on page 10406 of yesterday's Hansard, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) had this to say, and I quote:

Well, CICA members—and I commend them for it—came here to give a full day's course to hon. members and that, at their own expense. I do not recall having seen a single Créditiste member attend this course. Where were they? How interested are they in this bill? How can they understand it, since they don't even go to the official information sources—

This statement, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely false and misleading unless the hon. member for Laurier has deliberately misinformed the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a matter of debate between the hon. member for Shefford and the hon. member who, in his opinion, has made the statement to which he refers.

The hon. member for Shefford wishes to rise in accordance with a standing order allowing him to raise the question of privilege. The hon. member should know that he must give notice to the Chair to that effect and having received none, I do not think, under the circumstances, that he can rise on a question of privilege.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—CANADIAN POLICY IN VIEW OF ALLEGED INTENTION OF UNITED STATES TO DEVALUE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question arising out of the upward movement of the Canadian dollar from 92½ cents since it was unpegged to something over par now with the U.S. dollar. Is it the policy of the right hon. gentleman's government to allow the Canadian dollar to float freely and cleanly in relationship to the U.S. dollar and other world currencies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government propose to take any measures at all to prevent the Canadian dollar from moving significantly above par with the United States dollar? I ask this question particularly in view of the declared intention of the United States government to devalue the United States dollar and the consequential upward pressures that this will put upon the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I take it that we would not need to take any particular measures. If the United States did devalue its dollar, it is likely that our free float would move downwards.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Might I ask the right hon. gentleman to consult with the Minister of Finance or with somebody, such as the President of the Treasury Board, to straighten him out on what the effect would be on the Canadian dollar of a devaluation of the United States dollar, because it would be precisely the opposite of what the right hon. gentleman said.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a question. The Leader of the Opposition is suggesting consultations between ministers and I would not think that that is a proper supplementary. The Leader of the Opposition might wish to rephrase his question.

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY TO ASSIST INDUSTRIES PREJUDICIALLY AFFECTED BY UPWARD MOVEMENT OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Then might I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has any policy to put into effect to assist the industries that are being prejudicially affected by the upward movement of the Canadian dollar, particularly in view of the very distinct possibility that this will continue in light of developments. Has the right hon. gentleman a policy to put into effect, or is he prepared to let these policies go down the drain, as they have during the past year or so?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for York South.

ALLEGED INTENTION OF UNITED STATES TO DEVALUE DOLLAR—DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question on the same subject. In view of the report from the Azores that the President of the United States and the President of France have issued a communiqué saying that the intention is to have the United States dollar devalued and other currencies revalued upwards, may I ask the Prime Minister whether this subject was discussed during the Prime Minister's meeting with President Nixon and also whether the government has had any official information about this decision by the President of the United States and the President of France?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this subject was discussed, but this particular announcement, which is not a decision, was not discussed by us.

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—ALLEGED SUGGESTION BY UNITED STATES TO REVALUE UPWARDS—CANADIAN REACTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A further supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether in the discussions, or in the information that he has from the Minister of Finance, there was a request by the United States that the Canadian dollar be revalued upwards as well as other currencies relative to the United States dollar? If so, is the government prepared to accept this suggestion by the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this was put to all members of the Group of Ten, including Canada, by the United States representatives. Our position has always been that we would have a free float.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the view of the Prime Minister and his government that if all currencies other than that of the United States are revalued upwards relative to the U.S. dollar, Canada's currency will not be revalued upwards?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the position of Canada and we have explained it many times. A year and a half ago or more, in June 1970, we did have this upward movement of the Canadian dollar when we unpegged the dollar. The hon. member might remember that.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will allow one last supplementary on this subject and then recognize the hon. member for Regina East. We must try to make progress.

Mr. Hees: I was not referring to what has gone on so far, Mr. Speaker. I am asking the Prime Minister as of today, following this announcement, whether if all other currencies are revalued upwards the Prime Minister believes that Canada's currency would not be revalued upward but would remain stationary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that in those terms the hon. member's supplementary question is hypothetical. I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West in a moment. I think we should try to complete the first round of questioning, and I will return to him immediately thereafter.

U.S. DISC LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON IMPACT ON CANADIAN ECONOMY—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could the minister inform the House and the Canadian public of any estimate he has of the probable impact of the DISC act on the Canadian economy and, specifically, could he give information as to what sectors of our economy and what products will be most affected. Also, if necessary, would he be prepared to make a statement on motions on this subject at the earliest possible time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is such a general question requiring a wide-ranging reply that normally it should be replied to by way of a statement on motions. If the minister wants to indicate whether such a statement will be made, that would be in order. He should not make that statement now.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if the government has completed its studies of the DISC act, as approved by the President of the United States. Has the government assessed what the impact will be for Canada and can the minister say what action the Canadian government is to take to deal with the problems arising from that act?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and I have said on a number of occasions how difficult it will be to assess the effect of the DISC program on the Canadian economy, because it is impossible to isolate the DISC plan from all other factors such as currency valuation, the surcharge, cost of production, etc. We are monitoring the situation. We suspect that in certain industries DISC will not be used and we know that there is a possibility that it will be used in others. It is impossible to give the sort of black and white answer for which the hon. member is looking.

Mr. Burton: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform the House when the government will be in a position to announce policies to deal with this situation and, particularly, when it will be in a position to announce contingency action for dealing with the immediate impact that may result from this act?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, that is a better question, if I may say so. Then I may say that the government, looking at the totality of the economic situation between Canada and the United States will announce its contingency action in the course.

EXEMPTION BY QUEBEC OF PROVINCIAL CIVIL SERVANTS—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I shall put my question to his parliamentary secretary.

Is he in a position to tell us whether or not the Quebec government has taken a decision about the contributions of certain categories of employees of that province to the unemployment insurance fund?

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is not in the House today. I will advise him of the question and make sure that an appropriate reply is prepared for tomorrow afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie wish to ask a supplementary?

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

In the absence of the Minister of Labour, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if, following the decision taken by the government of the province of Quebec to exclude from the Unemployment Insurance Act CEGEP and hospital employees which the Quebec government considers to be provincial civil servants, it is his intention to nullify that decision by enacting special regulations. In other words, what are the intentions of the federal government in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there will be no special regulations. The act is known to this House for it was passed by this House. The government intends to announce very soon the regulations under this act. They are clear and known to everyone, including the government of the province of Quebec.

POSSIBLE REVALUATION OF UNITED STATES DOLLAR—ACTION OF GOVERNMENT WITH REGARD TO CANADIAN CURRENCY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to the subject of international finance. Would the Prime Minister tell the House, if the United States were to indicate to Canada that the United States dollar is to go back to a revised base, whether Canada's currency is to be pegged. How does the Prime Minister envisage the continued floating of our dollar, which is outside the terms of the International Monetary Fund?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have had a floating dollar and this has not detracted from our membership in the International Monetary Fund. It has been our position—and it will be even more important to adopt it if the Americans devalue their dollar—that it is impossible for anyone to state with precision where the Canadian dollar ought to be fixed. That is why we have relied on market forces to set the level of this floating dollar at whatever rate is judged to be the right one by the international money markets.

MINI-TYPE SUBMARINE—CANCELLATION OF EXPORT PERMIT ISSUED TO INTERNATIONAL HYDRODYNAMICS—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and arises from a press release issued this morning which indicated that, for security reasons, the export permit of a B.C. firm has been lifted. Can the minister tell the House, first of all, what security risks exist now that were not present at the time of the issuing of the permit?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, new information was gathered. The decision was made to cancel the permit in question.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House if any discussions have taken place between the officials of his department or officials of the Department of National Defence and corresponding United States government officials respecting the sale of this mini-sub? If so, what was the nature of these talks? Also, was the decision to lift the export permit based on these discussions?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, indeed, such conversations do take place between the Canadian government and the American government on occasions of this kind, as is normal between two allies. However, the decision was made strictly for Canadian security reasons.

Mr. Baldwin: No doubt that is what the Prime Minister told the President in Washington.

NATURAL GAS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF BOARD DECISION IN VIEW OF DISCOVERIES BY PANARCTIC

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of announced discoveries by Panarctic oil of natural gas in the Ellef-Ringnes Islands of the Northwest Territories, is the Prime Minister willing to intercede on behalf of Alberta producers and ask the National Energy Board to review applications which were recently turned down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is suggesting that the government should intervene with the National Energy Board, I have suggested previously that the law does not permit us to do so in such circumstances.

Mr. Horner: I think the law certainly does.

GAS AND OIL—ALLEGED INTENTION OF ALBERTA TO FORCE PRICE INCREASES—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to resist the upward forcing of the price of gas and oil, to prevent Canadian domestic prices from reaching the level of prices in the United States market. Does this accord with the objectives of the Alberta government and producers in Alberta?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not so much a question of the government resisting as determining what is in the interests of the Canadian public. If such a measure were contemplated by the Alberta government, it must realize, of course, that it would be the consumer in Quebec and Ontario who would pay for additional subsidies to the Alberta people. I am not sure those consumers would be happy to do so.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about Saskatchewan potash? You let them get away with it.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBLE PROSECUTION OF PROFESSOR VANDERBERG FOR ALLEGED FALSE STATEMENTS—POSITION OF POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. [Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Barrière did not give any press conference or make any public statement in this connection.

As for taking legal action against Mr. Vanderberg I can see no reason for doing so.

SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PROFESSOR VANDERBERG, UNIONS AND POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Postmaster General consider meeting with Professor Vanderberg and representatives of the postal unions to discuss the alleged charges, so that there might be an amicable understanding on the matter instead of the possible legal action.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if they want to meet with me, I would have no objection at all.

NEWFOUNDLAND—POSSIBLE ADVICE TO LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR WITH REGARD TO SITUATION FOLLOWING ELECTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister advised the Prime Minister to request the Governor General to have the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland summon the House of Assembly of that province into session?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that this question cannot be asked in those terms of the minister. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase the question or ask another question of the minister. The hon. member, I am sure, knows that in those terms the question cannot be answered.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I will then direct my question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received advice from the Minister of Transport or from his own advisers or federal law officers to have the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland, who was appointed by the Governor in Council, call the House of Assembly into session so that the parliamentary situation in Newfoundland can be properly resolved.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward Hastings. Perhaps the Chair might recognize the hon. member for St. John's East and then the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. As His Excellency's principal adviser, has the Prime Minister been called upon to give advice regarding the constitutional situation in Newfoundland?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have not been called upon to do that, Mr. Speaker, neither by the Minister of Transport nor by His Excellency or by the Queen. But if the opposition is advancing the interesting constitutional theory that I should be telling the Lieutenant-Governor of a province what he should be doing, I will apply this to Newfoundland in the coming months.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that this question cannot be asked.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, May I ask a supplementary. I will rephrase my question. Is the purpose of this whole exercise to make the Prime Minister out as a tough guy instead of the dilettante dabbler in social issues the country has known him as. Answer that one.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I am not absolutely sure. My impression was that it was general.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part I said I had assumed it was general. The thought expressed by my hon. friend just now is one which caught me by suprise. Let me repeat, I assumed, and still do, that DISC is universal in application. Hon. Robert L. Has the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce asked how the United States administration would regard the adoption by Canada of a program comparable to the DISC program applying to companies exporting from Canada to all other countries? Has the minister sought to ascertain whether this would be regarded as a matter to which the United States would raise objection.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my philosophy on that is very simple. We consider the DISC legislation to be against the principles and regulations of the GATT arrangements. The Minister of Finance on a number of occasions has said that Canada would have to take counter measures. What exactly these counter measures would be will be made known in due course. Whether it would be aiming at DISC specifically or whether we would react to the totality of the economic situation between Canada and the United States caused by President Nixon's measures is something which will be made known in due course.

PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—BASIS OF ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture of which I have given him notice. With regard to the plan the minister announced some days ago concerning assistance to small farms, could the minister say how the amount of money available from the federal treasury will be divided between the provinces or apportioned to provinces and specifically whether the funds available will be enough to replace entirely a related program which is now being carried on under the auspices of the government of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any attempt will be made to allocate money by provinces or by any other geographical areas, because we want the benefits of this program to be essentially applicable on a uniform basis to all people in the same economic position in all parts of Canada. Specifically, with regard to the FRED program in Prince Edward Island, I do not believe we intend to withdraw that program or the facilities that are available there. So, the question of replacing the money does not arise.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I cannot answer that question precisely because, of course, we do have the records of those small producers who have continued to ship, and the processors or the dairies have continued to send the records of their deliveries. However, it may be that it will be necessary for applications to be made, but I would like to reply in more detail to the hon. member in a day or two.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the minister how soon he anticipates a decision will be made, and whether he has made an estimate of the amount of money involved.

Mr. Olson: The payments for this year to any small cream shipper reinstated during this dairy year will be made at the end of the dairy year, but they will be made for the whole of the shipments that were delivered since April 1, 1971. I do not have the exact figure of the estimated cost.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would say that this was done many weeks ago. I had indicated to the Conservative party that if their convention had come up with any bright resolutions we might have reconsidered our policy, but we find there is no need to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that the government has definitely reached a decision on this subject, will the Prime Minister stop hiding behind the suggestion that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question, that is a suggestion.

Mr. Lewis: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that very soon we will be running short of time. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, it should be asked in proper form and as quickly as possible.

Mr. Lewis: I will be glad to ask it in proper form if the Prime Minister will answer in proper form. In view of the fact that months ago the Prime Minister undertook to make an announcement of policy on this issue as soon as the government had made a decision on it, will he now make that announcement in view of the fact that the decision has been reached and not wait for publication of studies which can come after the policy has been announced?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we will be running out of time in a few moments. The Prime Minister might answer the question, but we will have to reduce the number of supplementary questions.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP has made a suggestion. It is one way of proceeding. This government believes that it is important to state the government's policy and at the same time to have available the background documents on which this policy was based, in order that there may be an informed public discussion of it. This is a subject which has provoked a great deal of emotional debate in all parties, and we think that it would be right for the Canadian public to have the facts at the same time as they have the government's policy decision. The hon. member may not agree with that, but that is the government's position.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Some progress has been made, but certainly not enough and we must continue to press for the complete cessation of high sea fishing for salmon.

STATUS OF AGREEMENT WITH DENMARK—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Has the Minister of Fisheries or the Department of External Affairs concluded an agreement with Denmark, and would he be prepared to table the results of that agreement in the House?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): An agreement for the phasing out of Danish fishermen from the Gulf of St. Lawrence and other Canadian waters and the tagging of our fisheries lines has been under discussion during the past summer. I am not quite sure of the precise status of that agreement. I do not think it has been ratified by Denmark as yet, but it will be tabled very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: Again I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that we will be running short of time. The original question was asked by the hon. member for South Shore. One supplementary question was asked by another hon. member and another hon. member wishes to ask a further supplementary question. Obviously, a number of hon. members will not have the opportunity to ask their questions if we have too many supplementary questions. However, I will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

REPORTING OF FISH TAGGED BY CANADA—CO-OPERATION OF DENMARK

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to ask my supplementary question because this is a serious matter. I should like to ask the minister whether the Danes are co-operating with Canada in reporting any fish that were tagged in Canadian waters which were caught off Greenland by the Danes?

Mr. Davis: There is some co-operation.

POST OFFICE

INQUIRY AS TO CONTENT OF MINISTERS' LETTER TO CERTAIN PRIVATE POSTAL DELIVERY TRUCKING COMPANIES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

I should like to ask him whether he could inform the House of the contents of the letter he sent to several private trucking companies, engaged in mail delivery under contracts with the federal government, and what was the purpose of such a letter? Could he tell us whether he is trying to acquire those private companies so as to make a Crown corporation out of the Post Office Department?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I did not send any letter to any contractor.

MILLHAVEN—CONTRACT WITH VILLAGE OF BATH TO SUPPLY WATER

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General of which I have given him notice. Will he please expedite the settlement of the contract between the village of Bath and his department, for supplying water service to Millhaven prison?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a representation rather than a question, and he can assume that the minister has received the representation. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could I not get a yes or no answer from the minister as this is very important to the municipality?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, a firm offer is being completed and will be made to the authorities of Bath in a few days.

TRADE

ALLEGED DISCREPANCY BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES STATISTICS—FIGURES USED IN DISCUSSION OF AUTO PACT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the statement made by the newly created Canada-U.S. Trade Statistics Committee that they are still trying to resolve a $1 billion Canada-U.S. trade statistics discrepancy for 1970, can the minister inform the House whether talks on the auto pact have been proceeding on an agreement of the trade figures involved?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is known that there is an important discrepancy between Canadian statistics on trade and American statistics and, as is also known, an effort is being made to reconcile these views. I understand some kind of understanding has been reached on general philosophy and objectives which gives me hope that some degree of reconciliation will take place in the coming months. The present discussions on the automobile pact are taking place on the basis of available statistics. They have their's; we have our's, and this is one reason we do not agree entirely.

U.S. DISC LEGISLATION—POSSIBLE RESPONSE BY BRANCH PLANTS IN CANADA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with reference to the DISC program. Since the chief purpose of that program would seem to be the encouragement of corporations operating outside the United States to shift production to the United States, has the minister met with any officers of the branch plants of American corporations in Canada to see whether they intend to respond to the directives under the DISC program?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have met with some Canadian presidents and directors of international companies. I do not think I am in a position this afternoon to report on what they told me.

Mr. Saltsman: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the seriousness of the situation and the great interest in the question, can the minister indicate when he will be in a position to report to the House?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I really do not know if I can contact every president of an international company in Canada and ask him to swear on a stack of Bibles that his parent company will not use the DISC program—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR TRANSPORT

CUSTOMS CLEARANCE OF AIRCRAFT LEAVING AIRPORTS NOT SERVED BY OFFICIALS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF DEPARTMENTAL POLICY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister advise the House whether he intends to review the policy of his department under which aircraft are allowed to leave Canadian air fields which are not served by customs officials when the aircraft are destined to fly to some field inside the United States without some check as to their contents, or would he explain just how these aircraft get customs clearance before they leave?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the complexity of that question I am not exactly sure of what specific example the hon. member has in mind. Perhaps I can consult him later.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—DECISION ON CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FACILITY

Mr. Lincoln M. If not, when can we expect any decision with respect to the second international airport?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we certainly have not abandoned any plans for a so-called second international airport in Toronto. As to the date upon which we might be able to say something further, I think the hon. gentleman knows from previous answers I have given that this is a complex matter on which we are progressing in consultation with the government of Ontario, but neither side is ready to make a statement.

Mr. Alexander: One short supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that we have just about reached the end of the question period. I will try to recognize two or three other members before calling Orders of the Day.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General but since he has just left the chamber I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Has the minister or his department investigated allegations that visiting rights were denied to members of the Black United Front but were permitted to white friends of the Black Front who wished to visit inmates of the federal penitentiary at Dorchester last weekend and, if so, with what result?

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION FORECLOSURES—POSSIBLE ASSISTANCE UNDER SMALL FARMS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It arises out of the relatively large number of foreclosures being undertaken by the Farm Credit Corporation in the province of Alberta. Could he advise the House if any assistance will be provided to those individuals who are affected, and face the prospect of being forced off their land, under the provisions of the new development program being undertaken by the Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the provincial departments of agriculture?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we do not envisage any assistance of that nature under the Small Farms Development Program, but I can advise you that there are no foreclosures being proceeded with unless the arrears were outstanding for at least four years, and in many cases these accounts have been in arrears for many more years than that.

Mr. Mazankowski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in order that the minister may not mislead the House I would like to advise that in answers to questions on the order paper the minister has indicated to the House that there are indeed some 85 foreclosures being commenced in the province of Alberta. I would like that to be clearly placed on the record.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that does not change the validity of my reply.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement by the Minister of Fisheries today that an agreement is to be consummated between Denmark and Canada, and in view of the fact that it has not been brought before the Canadian Parliament, I would like you to ask for unanimous consent to return to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that that might be done tomorrow.

Mr. Lundrigan: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I will inquire if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that that was not a point of order at all. I wish to point out to hon. members that we are getting into a position where, every day when we reach the end of the question period, many members still rise to ask questions. The rules are clear. When the time has expired the Chair has to call orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, a few days ago there was an agreement consummated between Norway and Canada which has caused a lot of concern in the Atlantic provinces. At the present time there are negotiations going on between Denmark and Canada, between Spain and Canada, between Portugal and Canada, between France and Canada, and between the United Kingdom and Canada, and all these agreements are being made without any reference to the Parliament of Canada. I feel, and I think many hon. members feel that this is by-passing Parliament and is not giving an opportunity to Canadian parliamentarians to pass judgment. In Norway the agreement had to be ratified by the parliament of that country. I feel that if the Canadian government is going to continue in this way there will have to be a tremendous amount of opposition mounted from this side of the House.

the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—Airports; the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett)—Shipping—maintenance of service on west coast of Vancouver Island.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, December 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that I had last evening just before ten o'clock, I pointed out that in my contribution to the third reading of Bill C-259 I wanted to concentrate on what I regard as the biggest disappointment in this massive piece of legislation. I refer to the fact that the exemption levels have been raised only to $1,500 a year for a single taxpayer and only to $2,850 a year for a married taxpayer. I also indicated last evening that at the end of my remarks this afternoon I would move an amendment asking the House to vote for the reference back to the Committee of the Whole House of this bill so that consideration might be given to correcting this major disappointment.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of other things about the bill which in my view are wrong and disappointing and I should like to talk about them. I am not yielding to that temptation, however, other than to mention them. I would have liked to talk about the inadequacy of the $150 employment expense deduction made available to workers, and likewise about the inadequacy of the child care cost deduction. I would have liked to make reference to the failure of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to make effective for the year 1971 all of the improvements that he has made respecting senior citizens. I would have liked to talk of the action being taken with respect to capital gains, particularly the discrimination that exists in this bill between those who earn their income by hard work, whether manual, mental or otherwise and those whose income derives from capital gains. On the one hand, the income is fully taxable but if it is a capital gain it is taxable only to the extent of 50 per cent. I would have liked also to talk about the increase in the dividend tax credit from 20 per cent to 33-1/3 per cent which is another case of discrimination in favour of the "haves" and against the "have nots". I would also have liked to mention our objection to the disappearance of the federal government from the estate tax field. If that were not enough to show why we have to vote against this bill we could have called the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) as a witness and pointed out that this bill completely fails to deal with the basic problem we face in this country, namely that of developing labour intensive industry so that our nation will not be just a hewer of wood and drawer of water.

In other words, there is so much that is wrong with this bill, apart from its complexities and the monstrous size of it, and the way the government is putting it through Parliament, that any of us who believe in tax reform and in a rational and progressive approach to taxation have no option but to vote against it. I have already indicated that I am turning aside the temptation to talk about that list of subjects because I think the biggest disappointment of all is the way in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has dealt with the question of exemption levels. I submit that this is of concern to more Canadians than any other phase of the bill. I submit that all the talk about what the government has done for low income people fades into nothing when one realizes that the government is still going to impose taxation on incomes at the low levels prescribed in this bill.

When I was speaking for the four or five minutes I had last evening, I repeated a statement I have made before, a statement that has been made in the course of this debate perhaps dozens of times but which I think has to be modified. Last night I said that the present exemption levels of $1,000 single and $2,000 married were set in 1949, 22 years ago. For the government, after a lapse of 22 years, to raise those exemption levels only to $1,500 single and $2,850 married was both inadequate and an insult to the Canadian people. It is correct that in 1949, 22 years ago, the levels were set at the present figures of $1,000 single and $2,000 married, but I realized after I said that last night that there is a history behind 1949 which one should review and I have done that today. In other words, I have checked my memory by going to the history books, including Hansard and the Journals and so on. I should like to remind the House that when the exemption levels were set at $1,000 single and $2,000 married in 1949 it was only a case of restoring the levels to those figures from the lower figures that had been put into effect mainly during the years of World War II.

The figures of $1,000 single and $2,000 married were first introduced in the year 1933, 38 years ago. Between 1933 and 1949 those levels were lowered; in fact, they got down as low as $660 single and $1,200 married during the Ilsley days. All that happened in 1949 was that the figures set in 1933 were again put into the act. When we compare the proposed levels of $1,500 and $2,850 with the present levels of $1,000 and $1,500 we make a mistake if all we say is that it has taken 22 years to make this change—it is actually 38 years since the Income Tax Act had exemption levels of $1,000 single and $2,000 married written into it.

I invite hon. members to go back even a little further in history. They will discover that in the late 1920's when the Liberals were in power the rates they set were even higher. In the late 1920s the rates were $1,200 single and $2,400 married. It was in 1933 that Mr. Rhodes, who was the Minister of Finance in the Bennett government, because of the difficulties of the depression, lowered them to $1,000 and $2,000. Take either of these benchmarks that you want, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative $1,000 and $2,000 of 1933 or the Liberal $1,200 and $2,400 of the late 1920s, and I submit that the present Minister of Finance is literally doing nothing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —when he proposes to this House today exemptions of $1,500 single and $2,850 married. The $1,500 exemption is $300 more than the $1,200 in the late 1920s; the $2,850 exemption is $450 more than the $2,400 of the late 1920s. But in that period of time the cost of living has risen between two and three times. The value of the dollar, in terms of purchasing power, is less than half what it was. As for government budgets and the gross national product, we have gone to the moon compared with the situation in those days. I say to the Minister of Finance—

• (5:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: $5 billion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says "$5 billion." I believe the gross national product in 1933 was $3 billion. Today it is more than $90 billion. In the face of that, the genial Minister of Finance, whom one of his colleagues described as having an impish smile, has asked us to think that he is doing something for the low income people, the ordinary working people of Canada, because he now so magnanimously and generously is raising the exemption levels to $1,500 single and $2,850 married. I submit that compared with the increases in the cost of living—

Mr. Benson: How about comparing it with any other country in the world?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not a member of the Parliament of any other country. I am a member of the Parliament of Canada. I represent Canadian people. I want justice for the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad to see the Minister of Finance applauding that statement. Instead of patting his desk, I wish he would pat the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) where it would encourage him to do something in terms of justice.

We have had to point out that some of the increases given to old age pensioners are really decreases because of the rise in the cost of living. In light of the increase in the cost of living, the increased affluence in the country, the gross national product and the budgets of all our governments, these figures of $1,500 single and $2,850 married are a reduction. It puts the taxpayers of today in a relatively worse position than the taxpayers in the Bennett days of 1933 when $1,000 and $2,000 were applicable, or in the Liberal days of the 1920s when the deductions were $1,200 and $2,400.

Mr. Mahoney: What about the old age pensions of the 1920s?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, yes. My friend is indulging in a recital of the things we fought for in the past 40 or 50 years. He knows that in light of today's gross national product and our affluence we have not begun to give our senior people their rightful share of what is being produced today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I welcome the fact that during the course of this debate many members have referred to the 1949 date, 22 years ago, when the last change was made in the exemption levels. However, I invite members on this side and members opposite to consider the bit of history I have given this afternoon, for in fact the comparison that should be made is not with 1949 but with 1933 or, better still, with the late 1920s. It was then that the Liberals were in power. In terms of what was the case then, literally nothing has been done. I will correct that: something has been done—the position of the low paid workers has been made relatively worse.

Don't tell me that other things have improved such as pensions, allowances, and so on. Of course there are things for people who retire today that were not available in the time of my father and my grandfather. Society has moved on. Progress has been made. The whole purpose and aim of a movement such as ours is to see to it that the improvements society makes are shared by the people. We want to ensure that those improvements get back to the people who helped make them possible. This tax bill does not do that.

Hon. members on the Liberal side like to speak about the number of people taken off the tax rolls and the number of people being granted reductions in the taxes they pay. This all sounds good until you look at it in comparative terms. In comparative terms, this government and the genial minister with his impish smile are doing harm to the Canadian people. They are failing to give them what is their right. There is no place in this massive 739-page tax bill—now larger than when it was before the committee of the whole—where this betrayal of the rights of the ordinary people of this country is better demonstrated than in what it has done with regard to the income tax exemption levels. It would have been more honest if the minister had left them where they were.

The exemptions have been raised by a few paltry hundred dollars. The minister is saying to the people of Canada, "look what we have done for you." That is a form of political dishonesty. That is why we are voting against this bill. As a package, it is not good enough. This particular area demonstrates its shortcomings and inadequacies. It is because of our primary concern about the position of the lower income people, as reflected in this talk about the exemption levels, that I am concentrating on this issue this afternoon. It is for that reason I am moving an amendment of which I gave notice last night.

As hon. members are aware, it has been made clear to us that we cannot move an amendment to raise the exemption levels. We have been told that this is a matter of government policy. It has the effect of altering the tax structure and putting the incidence, somewhere else than the government chose to put it. Several times in committee of the whole it was made clear that we cannot do that, but that it is in order for a private member to move for certain rates of taxation to be reduced, provided one makes that reduction general and right across the board. Far from the restriction being a difficult one for us, we welcome it. Rather than raising the exemption levels, which always has the effect of giving a bonanza to those at the top in return for not much more than a banana peel to those at the bottom—

Mr. Hees: That's not bad, Stan.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —we prefer the system of tax credits. I may in passing allude to some of the other matters I referred to earlier. I mentioned the matter of giving something to workers for their employment expenses. This would be better covered by a tax credit than a $150 exemption. The same applies to child care expenses, and so on. In the case of income tax, rather than a higher exemption level, which would give a bonanza to those at the top, we would like to see—I hope I am not talking so loudly Your Honour cannot hear what other hon. members are saying. We feel that instead of raising exemption levels it would be better to provide as much as possible by way of tax credits to those in the lower brackets.

• (5:40 p.m.)

As Your Honour is aware, when we were in committee of the whole on clause 1, I moved that certain changes be made in section 117(1). The amendment I moved on November 1 was accepted by the Chair as procedurally in order and it was put to a vote on November 2. Quite a few members were present. The vote was 64 to 42 against my amendment. But one would hope that with the ringing of the bells there would be a larger attendance than that, and since this is such an important issue we are sure that members would like to have their names on record in Hansard. That is one reason for my making my motion again at third reading. Do they stand for doing nothing better than in 1933, or in the late twenties, or do they want to take some action which really begins to improve the position of the low income people of this country?

The amendment I propose to move in a moment or two would affect the rate of taxation which applies to the first $500 of taxable income. The tax would be reduced from 17 per cent to 2 per cent. Then something else would be done which is consequential in nature. The result would be that on the first $500 of taxable income the taxpayer would pay only 2 per cent, which is $10, instead of the present $85. This would mean that a single person whose income is $2,000 would pay only $10.

Mr. Langlois: That is terrible. A whole $10! Why not nothing?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is typical of the Liberals. They are charging these people $85. They know that under the rules we cannot move to wipe the charge out altogether. We can only reduce it so they think it is a big joke when we suggest that these people pay only $10. I say that is typical of their attitude toward low income people. They have no sympathies, no heart.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At the same time, my amendment would reduce the tax paid by those in each of the other brackets, all the way up to the top, by the same amount, that is, by $75. In other words, the saving through my amendment to the millionaire would be precisely the same, $75, as it would be to the person in the first income bracket. That is the way a tax credit works as opposed to the exemption level system. The exemption level system gives more to those at the top and little or nothing to those at the bottom. The same would happen if we used the tax credit system for child care costs, and so on.

My amendment, Mr. Speaker, would thus do two things. On the one hand it would improve the situation of the low income people. It would for all practical purposes put the exemption level at $2,000 for a single person which is the least it ought to be today. The other thing would be to introduce the tax credit system as a means of improving our tax law. The government knows the tax credit system is workable. It does it for those who receive dividends from Canadian corporations. There is no problem there.

I say to the credit of the Minister of Finance—and I have to give him credit once in a while—that in one of the clauses of the bill which is so close to the back that we never got anywhere near it there is a provision saying that in this year, 1971, people whose taxable income is $500 or less will pay no income tax. So he has provided what in effect is a tax credit. If a single person had an income above $1,000 in the year 1971, then by the rules in the book he would be called upon to pay a tax on the first $500 above that level. But the provision in this particular case would wipe out that obligation altogether. So the minister knows it can be done; he knows the technique. In this case he is doing it because it is the only way to solve a problem, and it applies only once, to the year 1971. But the principle is so good, so fair, that it ought to be started on a permanent basis in our income tax law.

This is why I am happy to move my amendment this afternoon. It provides relief to those who need it, to those whose income is slightly over the level the minister has set, and it establishes the principle of dealing with this problem by way of the tax credit system. I hope hon. members will think seriously about it. There was good support for this amendment in committee of the whole on this side of the House on November 2. Surely some Liberals have done a little thinking about this legislation in the weeks that have gone by since November 2. Surely they have read the newspapers, received some mail, chatted among themselves about a just society and that kind of thing. May one hope that as a result of this they can take a different view when a recorded vote is called on the amendment I shall shortly be moving?

I have tried to show that there are many shortcomings in this bill. The total package is extremely disappointing to those of us who believe in tax reform and a progressive system of taxation, leaving us with no choice but to vote against the bill as a whole. This we shall do at 3.45 p.m. this coming Friday under the rule which has been imposed on us today. But if we cannot get all the other changes made, if we cannot secure the massive improvement we would like, I hope the House will seriously consider this one crucial matter.

It is not good enough in 1971 for Liberals to be talking magnanimously about exemption levels of $1,500 and $2,850 when in the late twenties the exemption levels were $1,200 and $2,400. The Minister of Finance had better quit making that speech if he has any capacity for being embarrassed at all. In comparative terms, he has not done anything. I am sorry; I have to correct that statement again. He has done something; he has made things relatively worse for the low income people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hon. members over there moan and say "Oh!" If they do not want to pay attention to what I have said, they can go and read history for themselves. The facts I have given this afternoon can be ascertained by anyone who goes to the library and searches through the records. The hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) is making an interjection of some kind. I do not get what he is saying but I recognize the timber of his voice.

An hon. Member: And the timber in his head.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, I would not say that. One of the most disappointing things is to hear the minister go around boasting about these changes in exemption levels when in comparative terms he has done nothing.

Mr. Sulatycky: Play the record over again.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member across the way, one of the parliamentary secretaries, wants me to play the record over again. When one scores at all, the true nature of what it is to be a Liberal comes out. He just likes controlling the levers of power. He likes running the show. But as for concern about the ordinary people of this country, he just isn't interested at all.

To give this House the opportunity to vote for a reconsideration of this whole question of taxing incomes in the range of just $500 above $1,500 and just $500 above $2,850, I present the amendment that I read to the House last night. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands:

That Bill C-259 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed new section 117(1) as set out in clause 1 on pages 313 and 314, and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering the changing of the figure "17%" in line 33 on page 313 to "2%" and consequentially reducing the amount at the beginning of each of the paragraphs (b) to (m), both inclusive, on page 314, by $75.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The advance notice given by the hon. member has given the Chair ample time to examine his motion as to its procedural acceptability. I will put the motion at this time as accepted procedurally. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), moves:

That Bill C-259 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed new section 117(1) as set out in clause 1 on pages 313 and 314, and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering the changing of the figure "17%" in line 33 on page 313 to "2%" and consequentially reducing the amount at the beginning of each of the paragraphs (b) to (m), both inclusive, on page 314, by $75.

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Peters: Tell us what you really said at Thunder Bay, John.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Roberts: —the pleasure I have in following the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is somewhat diminished by the recognition that he has once again returned to that pure claim for moral sanctity that so often decorates his addresses to this House. He leaves no stone unturned in his desire to assure us all that only he and his party really care for the poor and distressed of this country.

Mr. Lewis: Now, cut that out.

Mr. Roberts: I wish to assure him that those on this side of the House do not in any way yield to him in our desire to improve conditions in this country.

Mr. Lewis: Do something about it, then.

Mr. Roberts: I had not intended originally to take part in this debate. It had seemed to me that in terms of redundancy and repetition the debate had gone on long enough. If it were considered, as the official opposition contend, that there was not enough time to discuss many more things of importance, then it is surely remarkable that those hon. members have not taken the opportunity during the time they have spent debating the bill in this House to present their own ideas on the bill, rather than continuing with their indecision, their obstruction, their little games of parliamentary procedure, hiding behind the curtains and rushing in with great fanfare, threatening to shred the bill to pieces. These are the actions more of publicity hounds than of parliamentarians trying to present a considered view.

I had not considered it necessary to take part in this debate because, as a member of the committee on finance, I did spend two years considering tax reform. During those two years I had ample opportunity to present my own ideas on where we should go in terms of tax reform. I did so, and the final Commons committee report was very close to what I felt should be presented to this House.

Mr. Hees: You are a very modest fellow, John.

Mr. Roberts: At least I am slightly more modest than the hon. member, whose view is that last year he had one fault—he was modest. This year he is perfect. However, I have some difficulty in taking the hon. member seriously. I am always afraid that, like some aged Rudy Vallee, the hon. member is about to break into a buck and wing across the House.

Mr. Hees: That was a dandy one, John.

Mr. Roberts: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I felt that I had had the opportunity of presenting my ideas about tax reform, and my support for the committee report was well known. However, yesterday in this House the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) challenged me, and members who think as I do, to rise and to place their views before the House. I welcome that challenge. The remarks of the Leader of the Opposition yesterday were based upon a report of a speech of mine which he had read in a newspaper, the Globe and Mail I believe. I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his recognition during the course of his speech that it might very well be the case that the report on which he was basing his remarks was a distorted report. That is in fact the case.

I must say that when I read the newspaper report I too was concerned, for I feared that exactly the kind of misinterpretation that was placed upon my remarks in this House yesterday might be the one that would normally spring from such a report. I was particularly perturbed when I found the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), a man for whom I have enormous respect, had misinterpreted the remarks I believe I made in Thunder Bay. Had I given cause, in what I had said, for these misconstructions of my thought? As a result of my concern I checked with the organizers of the conference, who assured me that there was indeed much distortion of what I actually said. I do not have a written text of my remarks, but there is a tape which the organizing committee has. I have been told that the remark on tax reform attributed to me was not made. If by some slip of the tongue I did make the remark quoted, then I will certainly correct it in the House.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned for the dinner recess I had been saying that to the best of my recollection the remark that had been attributed to me was not one that I had made. I made every effort to find out from the organizers of the conference whether I had made such a remark and they assured me that there was great distortion in the report. I regret that, because at the conference this past weekend I made a speech which I thought was extremely interesting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: And I am dismayed to find that not one of the interesting things I said was reported in the press. I am reassured by knowing that if I had actually launched the vicious attack against the government, as alleged, no doubt other newspapers would have also reported my remarks.

I said this weekend that I thought it was important for us to develop instruments of government, precise instruments for planning, which would enable us to look at government legislation, proposals and programs in light of a coherent economic policy on the basis of how the Canadian economy should look at the end of this decade. I mentioned several areas where I thought this could be done and several elements that might be part of such a policy. I mentioned unemployment policy, productivity policy and resource policy. I mentioned social welfare and its cost. I wanted social costs to be considered and an assessment of them to be a factor in this decision-making process.

I referred hardly at all to tax reform, except to cite it as one example of an instrument which should be used or which should be a means of reaching these objectives. I referred to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), my friend even though he belongs to another political party. I described the two years we had spent on the tax committee. I explained that in the deliberations of the committee it was difficult for us to move as effectively and fast as I would like to move without some overriding conception of what our industrial policy should be. I admitted that these were difficulties for the committee.

In my view, these difficulties were overcome. At the end of two years we arrived at a policy on tax reform which I wholly supported. That was in the Commons committee report. It is because the government's proposed tax reform measure embodies so much of the Commons committee report that I am happy to support the government's measure. I admit—as do, I think, all members on this side of the House—that the tax reform proposals are not absolutely, purely and truly perfect.

An hon. Member: I do not think that.

Mr. Roberts: Most of us think that, with the exception of some of my colleagues on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: We have a varied group over here, Mr. Speaker, and we harbour a variety of views of all colours, like a bank of 1,000 flowers. Essentially, the important things which have been done in the government's tax proposals are these: first, there has been a shifting in the basic exemption levels, a raising of the exemptions which shifts the burden of taxation away from those with lower incomes. That I support. Half the capital gains are to be included in the tax base. This is a great improvement. There is also, to my mind, a more equitable treatment of resource industries. If hon. members of the House are interested in following in detail my views on these points, they will do well to refer to the deliberations of the committee.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that the tax proposals of the government are not perfect. However, the Leader of the Opposition elaborated what seems to me to be an extraordinary doctrine, namely, that if legislation is not absolutely and purely perfect it should not be proceeded with. I think that is the sort of argument he tried to make in his speech yesterday. He suggested that after ten years of discussing tax reform, going back to the original Carter commission discussions, and ten years of opportunity to present views, we have not had enough time. This is a little like that famous historian, Lord Acton, who was so greatly concerned about researching his book that he compiled material which became so voluminous that he could not get around to writing the book.

The Leader of the Opposition seems to say that if we have not gone into everything in every way, if we do not know everything about everything, then we cannot legislate. He calls that research; it is, more properly, delay, hesitation and indecision. He suggested that legislation must be absolutely perfect before it is passed by this House. I ask, is that a sensible principle to follow? Is that a criterion that we could apply, for instance, even in private life? Suppose Henry Ford has said, "I have a great idea for a production line to produce cars but I have not got it absolutely perfect; therefore, we are not going to produce cars. We will need to do more and more research on this. "Or imagine the president of an underwear company saying, "Should we have buttons or zippers?"

Mr. Ricard: What kind of comparison is that?

Mr. Roberts: "Should we make long legs or short legs?"

Mr. Ricard: That is childish.

Mr. Roberts: "Should we make short arms or long arms?"

Mr. Ricard: Childish, childish.

Mr. Roberts: "We shall need to research and determine whether a market"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I think the parliamentary secretary should be allowed to make his speech.

An hon. Member: This no speech.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why—

Mr. Ricard: These are very silly remarks.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why hon. members should be so exercised about underwear.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member is talking absolute nonsense, that is why.

Mr. Roberts: "If something itches, they scratches."

• (8:10 p.m.)

You might say the same thing, I suppose, about choosing a wife. You might say that you like a woman very much but that she could be an inch or so taller, or that her nose is too long and that you are not going to get married until you find the 100 per cent perfect wife.

I suggest that we do not act that way in private life or in government. I do not believe the Leader of the Opposition, when he was Premier of Nova Scotia, acted in such a way and would not do something until he was absolutely sure that what he planned to do was 100 per cent perfect. Maybe that is how he did operate and that may explain the difficulties the province was in when he left.

The Leader of the Opposition seems to adopt the principle that the best is the enemy of the good. I suggest there is another approach to this legislation, and that is that we should be sure it is better than what we have at the present time. This I think we can be sure of. After ten years of debate and discussion, the tax proposals the government has brought in, even if not 100 per cent perfect are certainly an enormous improvement over the system we have at the present time. There is the old Chinese proverb that the longest journey starts with a single step. We still have a journey to go in respect of tax reform, but the measures of this government are an enormous and giant step forward and should be supported.

There is only one other argument the Leader of the Opposition advanced. He repeatedly stated that no member of the House understands this legislation. I do not believe that is true. I think there are members, at least on this side of the House, who understand it. The temptation is to say that the Leader of the Opposition, in saying that no one understands it, is speaking only for himself. But I ask, for just a moment's reflection, how does the Leader of the Opposition know that no one understands it? Has he carried on a survey, or has he cross-examined members on this side of the House? How has he arrived at the certainty that no one on this side understands the legislation?

I suggest that a rational explanation of his statement is that it is speculation on his part which really springs from political expediency. He believes it would be popular to say that, knowing that he has not researched that statement, and therefore he says it and keeps on repeating it. Even if it were true that no one in this House understands all the complexities of this legislation, I suggest that is not the relevant consideration. Because I suggest that the bulk of hon. members on this side of the House certainly understand the legislation as it applies to the interests of their constituents. In those areas of tax reform which are of vital concern to the people they represent, I suggest members have informed themselves of the implications of the government's proposals and that therefore collectively the House has a very good view of the collective importance of these measures.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to say a great deal more about the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. I was frankly puzzled that with his mellifluous oratory he had attacked on the basis of a few words of mine which were misconstrued in a newspaper report.

Mr. McGrath: You put your foot in it, and you know it.

Mr. Roberts: I had not really accepted the view expressed by many of my colleagues that the opposition was obstructing this legislation. I thought it was sheer, normal dithering on their part. But after looking at the comments of the Leader of the Opposition I have come to the conclusion that there is another explanation for their failure to present much in the way of a view on tax reform, with the exception of two areas where I confess they have expressed views of some importance to the House. I refer to co-operatives and the basic herd.

The official opposition has a paucity of views on tax reform. Unlike the New Democratic Party, the official opposition abstained from expressing any views on tax reform at the end of the Commons committee stage. The NDP presented its views on tax reform. I salute the NDP for what it did. I do not agree with the details of their suggestions or their approach, but at least they had the gumption to say where they stand on tax reform. The official opposition does not even have that gumption. I suspect this stems from the fact that they do not know where they stand on tax reform.

Sure, they are for the easy things. They are all in favour of tax cuts and the things everybody is in favour of. They are in favour of motherhood. But they are not prepared to come to grips with the question of where we are going to find the tax revenue to pay for these things. They are prepared to give things away but they do not say where we are to get the money to pay for them. They do not have a clear view of where they want to go. That is the real tragedy of this debate and of this situation. It is not that a limitation of time has been imposed or that we have had a long and tedious debate. The real tragedy is the abdication of responsibility on the part of the official opposition to give a clear indication of where it stands in respect of tax reform.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, in his speech the member who spoke before me did the best he could to apologize to the House for what he said in Thunder Bay, Ontario, yesterday; in any event, his assertion was false. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we have to take his word for it in view of the Standing Orders of this House. But when newspapers report that he said such and such, and when we can check his comments by listening to tapes, I say that, in reciting his mea culpa tonight, in trying to convince his party colleagues not to be afraid, and claiming that it was not what he said, he merely wants to reingratiate himself with his leader, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I admire that hon. member very much, but in trying to build an argument by humiliating the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who has loyally tried to fight against a bill which in his mind is not acceptable to the Canadian people, I say the hon. member has shown unforgivable weakness.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not believe that in my remarks I referred to the insincerity of the Leader of the Opposition. If I did do that in inadvertence, I certainly withdraw it.

Mr. Nesbitt: It was not in inadvertence.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I take note of the hon. member's apologies that will be transmitted to the leader of the official opposition in proper time and place.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak tonight to give my wholehearted support to the honest and loyal fight our party led against the bill now before us. Government members do not seem to be aware that when the opposition makes suggestions to the House or criticizes a legislative measure, it does so because it represents 50 per cent of the Canadian population.

Contrary to what the previous speaker said, the opposition, particularly the official opposition, feels it has accomplished its duty. It took its responsibilities, particularly in a difficult fight, at a time when we had to be concerned with the overall economic activity of Canadians.

I would like to thank the leader of the official opposition who did not hesitate to step forward and lead the charge against the white paper introduced by the Minister of Finance. He has not worked in vain because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), immediately after meeting with Canadian businessmen to explain to them the whole impact of the bill before us, agreed that some provisions had to be withdrawn and some suggestions and advice given by the leader of the opposition could be accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I know it is not easy to administer the federal Department of Finance.

In fact, when the Prime Minister appoints an hon. member as Minister of Finance he is more or less sending him to the stake. While opposition members sometimes speak harsh words to the Minister of Finance, these are primarily addressed to the government, which has called upon him to bring forward the bill we are now considering.

We are entitled to make suggestions. And when the hon. member who spoke before me said our party has no fiscal policy he should just peruse Hansard and read there all the amendments and suggestions we submitted during the debate in an effort to improve the legislation the Minister of Finance has introduced in the House.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Saint-Boniface): That's a good one.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. Boniface often makes comments. I hold him in high esteem because he is a French-Canadian from the West, but we would like him to rise when he speaks. Let him make a good speech and we will listen to him. If he makes sense, we shall applaud him.

Mr. Chairman, I readily admit that the majority in this House has the right to govern and may go as far as applying Standing Order 75C in order to force a bill through. But I object to the manner in which the government has applied that Standing Order if 200 clauses of the bill and 100 amendments moved by the government are set aside, if we do not have time to look fully into them, and the government merely says: Since the bill must come into force on January 1st, we must apply Standing Order 75C, bring out the steam-roller and try to muzzle the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, such is the government's responsibility. The people will decide whether it was logical for the government to ask the opposition to adopt this bill when 200 sections have not been studied in committee of the whole nor have the 100 amendments that the government wanted to propose. The people will have to judge the actions of the government when they are called upon to express their views on its policies.

Why this haste, Mr. Speaker, to put the Act into force on January 1? Does the Minister of Finance need money in a hurry? Is he following the orders of his officials who have given him this deadline of January 1? At any rate I cannot accept that the Minister of Finance should go to the other place and tell the senators: We shall send you the bill, study it quickly and have faith in me; we shall bring in amendments later.

This means that the legislative proposal of the Minister of Finance is not perfect, and that is why we were asking the government to give us more time to study it.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition rightly denounced yesterday some aspects of the bill stating that the government was creating a tax jungle. It is so true, as I said a moment ago, that the Minister of Finance will be unable, as I will be myself, to file his own income tax return next year, this tax maze being full of inconsistencies and interpretation problems.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) said that he had asked the Minister of Finance to draw up interpretation clauses in the bill. It is a fine suggestion, Mr. Speaker. Even the government members do not understand the bill, since they ask the minister to draw up interpretation clauses so that the bill may be understood more easily, not only by hon. members but also by all the people.

Mr. Speaker, the great losers, with the passage of this bill, are the provinces. It is not only the opposition which has been gagged by the application of Standing Order 75C, but also the provinces which came here for the federal-provincial conference asking the Minister of Finance to postpone the implementation of this bill. This postponement was meant to try and reconcile the provincial tax structures with the federal ones which are now being put to us. This was a very legitimate request aimed at coordinating the priorities of the provinces and the requirements of the federal government in the field of taxation. There again, the Minister of Finance said no to the provinces. This bill had to be implemented by the 1st of January.

Mr. Speaker, above all one should consider the harmful consequences this bill will have for the middle classes. One should also consider the disastrous effects this bill will have on small businesses. We know that the rate of assessment will be raised considerably for the small businessmen and the small tradesmen; we know also that the benefits of the small businessmen and the small tradesmen are reinvested in order to create more jobs. However this new kind of taxation means plain death for the small businessmen and the small tradesmen. Heaven knows—and my colleagues from Quebec may confirm it—the small businessmen and the small tradesmen represent a power in Quebec. If a bill takes away even more money from them the tradesmen will not be able to use it to develop, to improve their enterprise and to create additional ones.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that this party, which is the official opposition party, will support the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). And I think that by moving this amendment, the hon. member is working towards a lowering of the poverty line.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the description of poverty given in the Senate report on poverty, which says:

> The over-all poverty rate is approximately 25 per cent; one Canadian in four is a member of a family unit whose income is below the poverty line.
> Over half of all low-income families live in either Quebec or Ontario.
> Nearly two thirds, or 63 per cent, of low-income family heads are members of the labour force. More than a quarter (27 per cent) of all low-income family heads are 65 years of age or older.

Mr. Speaker, I believe a Quebec member should rise in his place and speak in the House in order to protect low-income Canadians, especially those in his province, since according to statistics, French Canadians are the poorest people in Quebec. In the Montreal area, French Canadians draw the smallest salaries. They come just before the Italians; all others are better paid than them. The amendment moved tonight tends to ease the burden of the average wage-earner. All Quebec members should support that amendment that tends to help the average people in Quebec which still live in extreme poverty.

Mr. Speaker, we must give those have-not people hope for a better life. But where do we find such hope in this bill? Some may say that a million Canadian people will not pay taxes anymore, that exemptions will be $1,500 for single persons and $2,850 for married people! This is a farce, Mr. Speaker! How can one expect single persons or married people with extremely low incomes to survive? They do not live, they merely exist. The middle-income people are overtaxed. All my colleagues from Quebec know that. Let us look at the salaries paid in the Quebec plants. The workers are often given a five-inch long cheque, but once deductions are made there is but an inch and a half left.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): What does the difference go?

Mr. Asselin: It is being used to pay the taxes of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, a wage-earner with four children, who earns between $5,000 and $6,000 a year cannot possibly live decently, considering especially that the cost of living has steadily increased over the last two or three years. As for the average plant worker, his tax is withheld, so there is no possible loophole for him.

Corporations and other public agencies can find loopholes. Indeed, chartered accountants and tax lawyers have informed us that they have already spotted about one hundred loopholes which will enable large corporations to pay less in taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that this whole bill is worthless. I am more realistic than that. But I suggest that the government has, in many areas, taken back what he has given. Do you need instances of that? Here they are: Unemployment insurance benefits have been raised, but the recipients will have to pay tax thereon.

Grants are given for retraining, but they will be subject to taxation.

Scholarships are granted to postgraduate students, but even these will be taxed at a certain level.

Our party has never stopped to fight for the farmers and yet, this bill does not spare them. We have had to wage a desperate battle in order that co-operatives and credit unions could keep the vested interest of which they had been deprived by the minister.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is to the effect that the rate applicable to the first $500 of taxable income be reduced from 17 to 2 per cent and it proposes a reduction of $75 at all levels.

For once, Mr. Speaker, I agree with a socialist member of this House. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said that 22 years ago he had spoken on an amendment similar to the one he moved tonight. The initiative he showed tonight is a true attempt to reduce the heavy tax burden, as he said a while ago, of the middle class citizen who cannot pay any more taxes.

If an average wage-earner gets between $5,000 and $6,000 a year and spends $80 to feed his family, without mentioning the cost of clothes and leisure, municipal and school taxes, he cannot pay more taxes.

I fail to see why this House should not vote in favour of the amendment now before us.

Mr. Speaker, as I said a while ago, we have supported this amendment at the committee stage and we will support it on third reading because I think the present exemption system is already outdated. It would be better to try and establish a credit system which would give more justice to the Canadians who still want to work.

Those were roughly the objectives mentioned in the Senate report on poverty. I would like to read again for the information of my colleagues the beginning of the chapter where they define the part that should be played by the government in its fight against poverty.

"Fight against poverty" was a very nice slogan when the government under the Rt. Hon. Mr. Pearson put it forward during the 1963 election campaign. Everybody was happy. People said, at least we are going to have a government that will fight poverty. And we are still waiting for the beneficial effects of that fight against poverty.

And after that they have burked the fight against poverty by saying that once they are in power they will set up a just society in Canada.

Surely this bill will not bring about this just society promised by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau).

And for the information of my colleagues opposite who still do not know what kind of action the government should undertake to control poverty, I will quote an extract from the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty in Canada:

> Economic growth has had little effect on the nature and dimensions of poverty in Canada. Our failure to achieve full employment and our acceptance of policy choices which increase unemployment contribute directly to the spread and perpetuation of poverty. While the economic system, by itself, can never eliminate poverty, a healthy and expanding economy provides the environment essential to a comprehensive attack on poverty.

These are the objectives any responsible government should have in mind when it undertakes to fight poverty.

Therefore, I wish our friends opposite would give up politicking for the time being. Of course, I admit that party discipline is important. I have met with the same situation when I was a minister of the Crown and this is the reason whenever I am given the opportunity to speak on our current parliamentary system I contend that it needs to be amended so that hon. members may vote as often as possible according to their own conscience and not necessarily to support their party.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Are you looking forward to a republic?

Mr. Asselin: What did you say?

Mr. Gibson: I asked a very honest question.

Mr. Asselin: Is that for you a republic?

Mr. Speaker, I therefore say that we should study this amendment very carefully. I should ask honourable members especially those from Quebec who are still sincere and who wish to help the middle class, to vote in favour of the amendment now before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that the minister of Finance is not here tonight, because I should have liked, in closing, to wish him . . .

An hon. Member: He is here.

Mr. Asselin: My eyes deceive me. Where is he? In closing, may I express the hope that the minister of Finance, when he is called upon to share the tranquillity of the Senate—which is not going to be the case soon for his parliamentary secretary, who is now nodding in the affirmative—and is free from political worries, will regret having fathered this tax monster, which, in my opinion, in many respects will never serve the interests of the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we appear to be in the closing stages of a very long and detailed debate. It may be said that Parliament and the people of Canada have talked about tax reform for almost ten years, certainly officially. The conversations, the meetings, the discussions and dialogues began in earnest on August 27, 1962, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) announced with great personal pride the appointment of a hand-picked Royal Commission on Taxation. To the thunder of Conservative approval, he said on that occasion:

> I am pleased that Mr. Carter has agreed to undertake this most important and onerous task, possessing as he does a unique knowledge of the Canadian tax structure.

The Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, were delighted with this appointment.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How do you know? You were not here.

Mr. Perrault: They said, together with the other parties in the House of Commons, that we badly required tax reform and a greater degree of equity in the tax structure. The need, we were told, was beyond dispute. Since then, no subject has been considered so exhaustively and in such minute detail as has been the future form of taxation in this country. Following the Carter report came the white paper in 1969. We all recall those days.

An hon. Member: Yes, a nightmare.

Mr. Perrault: When the white paper was published, instead of investing time in the House of Commons advancing counter proposals and ideas in this proper forum, the leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition mounted his white charger, like Mr. Clean, and went from coast to coast. What did he say? He raced across the country saying, "The government is planning to ram the contents of the white paper through Parliament and I warn you, my friends, my fellow Canadians, that the government should not be believed when the Minister of Finance says repeatedly that there will be changes." He said this despite the fact that when the white paper was brought to the floor of the House of Commons one of the first comments of the minister was, "I invite proposals and suggestions even from the other side of the House because we want a sound system of taxation in this country".

But there continued the distortion of the intent and purpose of this government. A coast to coast gallop spread confusion wherever he went saying, "I will defend this country against what they are trying to ram through". Suddenly, the scenario was changed because the Minister of Finance, true to his words, invited submissions from every part of the land. The government received 211 submissions along with 1,093 other representations and innumerable letters from members of the government and a few from the opposition as well. The committee held 146 meetings, the committee reported, recommended changes and amendments were proposed and many accepted. Then there has been more debate on the resultant bill before us.

Despite this unparallelled democratic process, charges are made of muzzling free speech in some of the badly-informed editorials in the newspapers and by the shrill voice of dissent from the other side of the House. These accusations are simply preposterous. Some of the opposition members are men of real ability who must be embarrassed to have to give voice to such charges on the advice of some of the public relations men of the Conservative party.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We heard this nonsense in the pipeline debate.

Mr. Perrault: They know that at some point governments must govern and at some point debates must be brought to a conclusion. Mr. Speaker, this is what I mean—and I am not going to quote from speeches made by former or present members of this government or great Liberals of the past; I am going to quote the spokesmen for the official opposition. The hon. Davie Fulton, who was a distinguished Minister of Justice in this House for many years, appeared at the Couchiching Conference in 1964 representing the Conservative Party, and he said:

> But no matter what mathematical disposition has been arrived at by the voters, Parliament has the duty to get on with the business of the country; and the government has the right and responsibility to govern, so long as it enjoys the confidence of Parliament, or at any rate unless and until Parliament accepts the responsibility of defeating it—

He went on to say:

> Having been provided first with an improved system of transacting the business of the House and the country, and second with the means and the opportunity to do their jobs more effectively, members can then accept as the framework within which to operate the disciplines and self-restraints inherent in the following—

• (8:50 p.m.)

I again emphasize that it was the official spokesman for the official opposition who said:

> An important restraint which members should impose upon themselves is to accept as a matter of routine an "allocation of time" system as it operates in the United Kingdom Parliament, by which representatives of each party meet in advance to decide how many days will be spent on each major matter of government legislation. In the unusual circumstance where it is not possible to obtain agreement, the government itself takes responsibility for—and there is a note upon—a motion for allocation of time on the matter in question.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert, speaking in this House on July 21, 1960, as recorded at page 6672 of Hansard, said:

> I see no reason why that debate should not be reduced so far as the number of days is concerned. Immediately, I suggest that the opposition will say that they are being throttled.

That was said by the former leader of the Conservative party. In a great speech, he went on to say:

> I am not taking the United Kingdom Parliament as an example for our Parliament, but it is the mother of Parliaments, and I am going to refer to some of the things which could be done. I think there is no reason why that debate should not be reduced so far as the number of days is concerned.

Mr. Nesbitt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely sorry to interrupt the hon. member. It is my impression we are discussing third reading of the tax bill and are not engaged in debate on the closure motion moved this afternoon. It is not relevant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that an effort must be made by hon. members to make speeches which from near and far refer to the amendment before the House. I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). He is quite right; what we are debating now is third reading of this bill. I must say that having listened to the debate on third reading I have a suspicion that a number of members on both sides of the House have strayed from time to time from either the amendment before the House or the general principle of the bill.

I agree with the hon. member that an effort should be made by hon. members not to revive the debate which took place during the two hours which preceded the vote on the motion under Standing Order 75C. There is no point in further discussing this issue. We should make an effort to concentrate on the bill which is before us on third reading and, more particularly, the amendments which are before us from time to time.

Mr. Perrault: With Your Honour's indulgence, may I point out to the House that last night the House leader of the official opposition spoke purportedly on third reading, but he spoke entirely on the subject of closure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: Earlier in this debate there were frequent references to closure and the alleged attempt of this government to restrict free discussion.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Perrault: I am not willing to remain silent when these kinds of charges are bandied about as is being done frequently in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: I suggest, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do not mean to interrupt the hon. member. I want to be exact with my submissions. It is my understanding that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has a motion before the House. Listening to members opposite, I am surprised that it has not been touched on at all this evening. With due respect to all hon.

members, I would remind them that the motion we are supposed to be debating at this time reads as follows. I may be quoting it imprecisely because I am referring to the motion as it was read last night.

That Bill C-259 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed new section 117(1) as set out in clause 1 on pages 313 and 314, and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering the changing of the figure "17%" in line 33 on page 313 to "2%" and consequentially reducing the amount at the beginning of each of the paragraphs (b) to (m), both inclusive, on page 314, by $75.

That is the motion.

Some hon. Members: En français.

Mr. Alexander: I hear some hon. members saying, "En français." I remind hon. members that this is a bilingual country. If I choose to speak in English, I think that should be accepted without remarks from the other side.

Mr. Speaker: I agree with the hon. member in principle, but yesterday when we commenced debate on third reading of this bill an amendment was moved. It had to do with farming problems. Some speeches made after that amendment was moved made very few references, if any, to the amendment. It may be that hon. members who at that time took part in the debate on third reading should have tried to limit themselves to the amendment before the House. I repeat that that is a rule of the House. Debate should be relevant.

It is difficult for the Chair to ask hon. members to respect this rule when some of the senior members on both sides of the House do not necessarily do what they should and follow this rule in practice. I invite hon. members to bear this in mind and to get to the point and refer to the amendment which is before us. It may be that the remarks being made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) are merely introductory and he will eventually reach the gist of his speech. I hope this point will be reached very soon.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Let's talk about tax credits.

Mr. Perrault: If I did not know the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) better, I would say he is terrified of parliamentary democracy. He talks about freedom of speech. I know him better than ever to accuse him of that.

Mr. Alexander: Explain.

Mr. Perrault: I am talking directly about this motion to refer the bill back to committee. I do not think it should be referred back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: I am citing specific instances where great Conservatives of the past have spoken out in support of the efforts of the government to expedite the passage of legislation in this House. If words of their former leaders terrify them, there is little hope for them.

Mr. Nesbitt: Louder and funnier.

Mr. Perrault: In a reference essentially to the business of referring back, Churchill said on November 29, 1944:

Do not suppose that you can strengthen parliament by wearying it, and in keeping it in almost continuous session. If you want to reduce the power of parliament, let it sit every day in the year, one-fifth part filled, and then you will find it will be the laughing stock of the nation,—

These quotations suggest that this proposal to refer back is unsound. I remind the distinguished member from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who advanced this resolution of his words in 1964 when, in a moment of great candour, he said:

Parliamentarians start with a notion that freedom of speech somehow means freedom to talk forever. Cutting off debate is felt to be a denial of a basic, democratic right. But the fact is that we do this in many ways in Parliament. The forty minute limit or the thirty minute limit or the twenty minute rule that we have are denials of unlimited free speech.

In the same address he said:

The amount of business is increasing so much that I think, that we have to think more in terms of getting things done, and I think that this can be done without interfering with freedom of speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I said it again this afternoon.

Mr. Perrault: I hope members will consider these remarks to be relevant to the present resolution.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where were you this afternoon? I said it then.

Mr. Perrault: I hope members will admit there is relevancy here. There is a special quality of fantasy about the charges levelled by the opposition. The attempts of the opposition are like a sailboat in a becalmed sea desperately seeking any breeze which they hope may carry them to the haven of government.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is a lot of wind over there.

Mr. Perrault: What is the name of the game? The opposition sees a political opportunity in the issue of tax reform. Some of their members are abroad in the land spreading confusion and misunderstanding everywhere. In the House their efforts to bring forth the kind of amendments which would make this even sounder legislation have been sporadic, disconnected and halfhearted. How else can one explain the failure of the opposition to provide viable alternative proposals?

• (9:00 p.m.)

The resolution which is under debate is a small one designed to harry and delay. It does not go to the basic substance of this tax reform measure. Is it because some members of the opposition are seeking political support from those who want no reform at all, from those who cling to the status quo, those who say, "Change anything as long as it does not affect us"?

Together with other members of the finance committee I spent most of the summer of 1970 listening to representations from dozens of interests across this land. Some of them were along the lines of the amendment before us. Many of them were excellent. Many of them are reflected in the tax reform bill. To listen to the hundreds who brought forward their ideas was to be convinced that there is simply no consensus as to what constitutes an equitable system of taxation. I might say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) encouraged the finance committee to obtain the very best expert advice from all parts of the country with respect to the area covered by this resolution as well as others. It was not long before we realized that there were profound differences of opinion among these experts as to what might best be done.

It may be said without contradiction that taxation is such a complex and controversial subject that even to achieve absolute agreement among members of any one party in this House would be utterly impossible. All parties profess to urge tax reform but there is not even agreement among government members, or members of the NDP, members of the Conservative party or of the Créditistes as to what might constitute the soundest system.

The violent statements of the official opposition today are in total variance with the posture of that party in 1962 when the Carter commission was conceived by them. In those years they rushed around the country claiming they would introduce major changes in the Canadian tax law. But what a difference a decade makes. Today they deny any paternity of the infant they fathered in 1962. They disown any connection with it. The words "Carter commission" are X-rated by every Tory Primrose Club in Canada today.

These are the concerns some of us feel today; the rabid tax reformers of 1962 now want only tax reductions accompanied by no other discernible or definable changes. They do not want anything at all which might cause any section of the electorate to be unhappy or dismayed. They want all the tax reductions, but they are content to leave to the never-never land of the future the possibility that provincial and federal governments may require revenue. They want more debate, preferably so much debate that it will extend beyond the next election. They want to refer this measure back for months and months of renewed discussion, though we have been waiting more than long enough for constructive counter proposals to those which have been advanced.

I recall the classic reply of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he was asked for alternative ideas. He said; "That is not our job. It is up to you to provide ideas." Mr. Speaker, in 1971 a responsible opposition demands something more than an attitude of that kind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Perrault: The fact of the matter is that should we accept this resolution or other mere ploys advanced by the opposition, we could debate this measure for another month or another year and not come any closer to agreement. After months of study, discussion and deliberation, after months of hearing witnesses, the opposition party which today urges delay, when faced with the moment of truth in the finance committee—and I was there—when the question was for or against, adopted a position of neutrality. Not yes or no, but a position of "dynamic" abstention. Yet the Leader of the Opposition and other members of his party almost took credit for the Commons report when it was produced. They claimed a victory over the government. On February 18 the Leader of the Opposition said:

The committee adopted 80 per cent of the criticisms I had been making. There are still defects in the House of Commons report but the concern now, of course, is how much of that report the government will accept.

An immense amount was accepted from that report. In June, the leader of the Conservative party said he and his supporters accepted those changes and in association with others accepted a considerable portion of the credit for having brought forward suggestions which brought about those changes. It is incredible, the tortuous twisting and the contradictions engaged in by the Leader of the Opposition.

The government and the minister are now being attacked on the ground that too many amendments have been made because, apparently, too many ideas contained in the Commons report have been accepted. They say the bill is incomprehensible. If they had spent more time examining the measure and less in galloping across the country on their alleged political crusade, they might have arrived at a better comprehension of what it contains. Imagine the screams of outrage which would have arisen from opposition benches if the government had announced that it had taken an inflexible position and intended to proceed without considering reasonable proposals for change. The message is clear. The tactic is: Play for time. Suggest nothing which would indicate a desire for serious tax reform. Hit the hustings and attempt to destroy confidence in Parliament and in the Prime Minister.

In a noon attack on the government in Vancouver on Monday, November 15, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)—in passing I note that a McMaster University report says he has one of the worst attendance records in this House—

An hon. Member: What about the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)?

Mr. Perrault: —told his audience about alleged efforts to impose new rules on the House of Commons. This tactic is part of the political game which is being played in Canada today. I quote from his speech as sent down by his office:

> What then is there left to protect the supremacy of Parliament against this one-man despotism? The effectiveness of the opposition has been drastically weakened by a series of rules changes, again deliberately brought about by the leader of a government motivated by a lust for power.

Surely a party which aspires to govern this country should be at least capable of being candid and truthful with the people. One of the first measures taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he took office was to provide—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member is getting further and further away, if possible, from the amendment before us. I am prepared to recognize that the rule of relevancy has not been followed too closely during this debate either on second reading, in committee or since we began third reading.

One hon. member has drawn attention to the fact that yesterday and today we heard speeches which really had nothing at all to do with the amendment before the House. I suggest that an effort should be made by all hon. members to relate the speeches they make to the amendment before us. I am not sure that those who succeed the hon. member will remember what I am saying now and will limit their contributions in the way suggested, but it seems to me that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) is not referring to the bill itself even in a general way. He should direct his remarks to the bill at least, and preferably to the amendment before us.

Mr. Perrault: The point I was attempting to make—perhaps inadequately—was that the charge has been made here that there has not been freedom of speech in this House to discuss this measure adequately. May I simply say that as hon. members know the rules changes were the result of consultation with the other parties. Almost all of them were agreed to by the other parties in the House. I will leave it at that. I simply do not think it enhances the reputation of the House to make the kind of charge which has been made by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

We are told that if we do not refer the bill back, our action will be tantamount to closure. Are arguments advanced in this vein to be taken seriously? If the official opposition had been successful in negotiating with the other parties in this House a sensible allocation of time, there would be no need for the government unilaterally to have to accept its responsibility to schedule time for this debate. When the opposition members parade around the country telling terror stories about alleged political repression, let them also tell Canadians that the rules changes almost without exception were adopted by all members of this House after years of procrastination.

On the subject of referring the bill back, the argument is advanced that we need more time for discussion and debate. We have talked about this subject for years in this House. There have been oceans of political bafflegab about the need for rule changes, the need to schedule time, the need to end the alleged legislative paralysis. Let opposition members tell the people of Canada about the actions of this government and the present Prime Minister to bring Canadian parliamentary rules more in line with the needs of the country and with the rules of enlightened parliamentary democracies in other parts of the world. Let them explain how they are spending the $200,000 granted to the opposition parties by the government to do the proper research so that parliamentary democracy can blossom. For years while in opposition the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert had been saying that the opposition needed this kind of research money, but it took this government that is now accused of dictatorship to introduce the necessary legislation.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a point of order. My point of order refers to the ruling made by Mr. Speaker just prior to his leaving the chair, at which time he drew the hon. member's attention to the fact that he was not discussing the matter now before the House. The hon. member's reference to the attendance of members on this side of the House was made without reference to the hon. member from Edmonton on his side of the House. He has also referred to the $200,000 spent by the Leader of the Opposition, but failed to mention the more than $1 million spent by the Prime Minister's office. If such points are covered in the legislation before us, then the Chair is in for a rough ride if we all follow the hon. member's example.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member has drawn to the Chair's attention that the parliamentary secretary was perhaps ranging a little outside the scope of the amendment now before the House. I would invite the hon. member to confine his remarks to the motion, as amended, now before the House.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there must be validity in some of the remarks I am making this evening to cause so much unhappiness on the other side of the House. When the House leader of the official opposition was totally irrelevant last night there was not one single demand on this side that he return to a precise discussion of the bill on third reading. The attitude toward democracy exhibited by the official opposition is an interesting one.

As we come to a vote on this important measure it seems to me that the main enemy perhaps is not the confusion that is alleged by our opponents but, after ten years of speculation and conjecture, the real enemy may be uncertainty. I receive more and more letters from people all over the country saying, "Whatever you are going to do, please do it". This climate of uncertainty is the real enemy. Business can live with certainty but not with uncertainty. The professions and the working people of this country can live with certainty but not with uncertainty. The hon. member's amendment would simply add to the uncertainty already existing in Canada.

Together with many other members of this House, I welcome the announcement of the Minister of Finance that further improvements are under consideration. Any good amendment, regardless of source, should be given consideration. Whether amendments originate from this or from the other side of the House—as hopefully they will—they should be given the same consideration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is one before the House now.

Mr. Perrault: One which is being considered and is found to be wanting. If this new tax measure suggests undue and unfair hardship for any section of this nation—and no tax measure in the world ever goes through any Parliament or legislature without amendment; interestingly enough, members of the opposition have cited no examples of uncomplicated tax changes from Great Britain, the United States or Europe where tax legislation is just as complicated—then let us act as soon as we can to introduce the appropriate changes. As I say, no tax bill has ever proceeded without change, often extensive change, and opposition critics are aware of this fact. Even the existing tax legislation has been changed year after year. The regulations have been changed. The opposition knows this, yet attempts to create the illusion that unless the government brings in a tax reform package which requires no change or amendment, it is deficient. Indeed, it is the sign of good tax policy and tax philosophy when a government is flexible and willing to change and to adapt its legislation to the needs of the people.

Surely, our goal in Canada must be social equity, but it must also be a system of taxation that will encourage the economic development of this country. And just as surely, no member can, in conscience, vote against provisions such as the following: personal exemptions that are raised to $1,500 from $1,000 for single persons, and to $2,850 from $2,000 for married persons—indeed, we hope they will be even further raised; we are not saying those levels are the ultimate—child care expenses that are deductible up to $500 per child under 14, with a maximum of $2,000 per family; an employment expense deduction of 3 per cent of employment income, up to $150 a year, with no receipts needed; all taxpayers with married exemption and income solely from wages and salaries will pay less tax than at present; taxpayers with single exemption and employment income only will pay less tax on incomes under $8,000 and above this level the tax increase will not exceed $78 a year; all taxpayers age 65 and over will receive a special exemption of $650; the guaranteed income supplement will be exempt from tax; moving expenses will be deductible for taxpayers changing jobs; employer-paid living expenses for jobs at distant work sites will be made tax free to more taxpayers.

In addition to this, the limit on deductible donations to charities will be increased to 20 per cent of income, from 10 per cent. The standard deduction for medical expenses and charitable donations remains at $100. And the list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker. Surely the mover of this amendment is not suggesting that we should refer back a measure which will confer these and other benefits on such a wide section of the Canadian population. The bill does not represent perfection. The Minister of Finance has already said that certain changes are inevitable and has indicated areas where changes may be expected. Surely the members of this House can exhibit more courage, after ten years of discussion and dialogue, than to seriously entertain the proposal now before the House.

Many of us disagreed with certain of the proposals set forth in the original white paper; certainly I disagreed with many of them. Several of these problem areas are, however, problems no longer because of amendments that have been made.

Let us hope that Canadian tax reform is not going to be confined solely to the federal jurisdiction. As one who has served in a provincial legislature, I assure all hon. members that changes are required urgently as well, at other levels. After all, it is the people who pay the taxes and we must at all levels try to move this money around as equitably as possible. Therefore, let us hope that other reforms will be forthcoming in other jurisdictions.

One group in society that the present bill assists, at least in part, is the senior citizens. These older people in society are the first and tragic victims of rising costs and rising taxes. I have yet to hear any adequate defence of the present method of financing education. Senior citizens who earned their living when a dollar bought a dollar's worth of goods, older people who raised and educated their families, now must pay a totally unreasonable education tax if they wish to retain ownership of their small homes. That applies in almost every province of this land.

An hon. Member: But not in Ontario.

Mr. Perrault: At least we can express the hope that while we should aim for a more equitable tax system at the federal level, at the provincial and municipal levels there will be a fairer distribution of some of the inequitable burdens involving social welfare and educational costs especially. Our continuing philosophy as Canadians should be one which seeks the best system of taxation and a fair system—indeed, a system of taxation at all levels which, hopefully, will become a model for the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak to the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Throughout the debate on Bill C-259, we, Créditistes, did not say much, although we had much to say. We realized it seemed almost useless to move amendments or to criticize the bill. We knew it was useless to try to have those amendments passed, because the government has the majority and had decided to go ahead against any and all valid suggestions.

And so, the government introduced Bill C-259, which is an extremely complex bill. I would say, right at the outset, that this so-called tax reform is anything but a reform, and that it it will probably lead to economic chaos the like of which we have never known.

Our economic system is in pretty bad shape at the present time and the enactment of Bill C-259 will make it harder because the citizens will be increasingly dispossessed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for St. Boniface is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order.

I would like to ask the hon. member for Compton, following his comments, whether he is willing to make some suggestions. He has just mentioned that they would not be considered. I would like to ask him to make some so that we may consider them.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. The hon. member is interrupting debate, and that should not be permitted. Let the hon. member resume his seat. We are accustomed to his interruptions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Sit in your seat, Joe.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) has the right to raise a point of order. The Chair has the responsibility to decide whether it is a point of order. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe).

Mr. Ricard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, would you rule on the point of order that the hon. member raised? Was it in order, or was it not?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I implied that it was not a point of order. I also said that if the hon. member had a point of order, I would so indicate. The Chair felt the hon. member had not raised a point of order and recognized the hon. member for Compton.

Mr. McGrath: All he does is interrupt people.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I know that many government members are annoyed with me, but I take my responsibilities and say what I believe to be the truth. I will make my whole speech accordingly.

I said earlier that the present system is still worse than the previous one. The taxes will drain the people dry and the number of welfare recipients will go up. The taxpayers have had their fill and they will be increasingly burdened and deprived, and the gap between the rich and the poor will be further widened.

We are strenuously object to this attitude, and we want to reassert that a lasting fiscal review should alleviate the entire tax burden. The greatest problem now is an already unduly high tax rate. This system has been subject to steady pressures during the past decades, because an excessive growth of public expenditures had to be checked.

In 1952, the expenditures of all governments amounted to 26 per cent of the gross national product. This percentage has increased steadily and public expenditures now account for 40 per cent of the gross national product. Should this trend persist, all the benefits of tax reform will disappear because there will be further tax increases, like the capital gains tax. We cannot stress sufficiently the need for a program of expenditures as well as for tax reform.

Nothing was considered with regard to an expenditure program which would allow Canadians to know where they are going. No, taxes are imposed. The intention is to tax capital gains, when, to a large extent, it is capital itself that will be taxed.

So, even if the tax system most efficiently creates and maintains equality between people, families and companies that make up the population of Canada and participate in its economic life either in production, consumption or capitalization, we have to realize that it is not in a mess of 707 pages of legal texts and over 2,400 codified paragraphs that we shall succeed in straightening out the affairs of the state. It is as if we were looking for a needle in a haystack.

Still I want to congratulate our courageous Finance Minister (Mr. Benson) who is beginning to show signs of weariness after so many preliminary pieces of work.

In the last ten years, even the Canadian Chamber of Commerce complained about the indecipherable complication of a great number of often contradictory details of the income tax legislation.

Mr. Speaker, even though I sit on the opposition side and belong to a political party whose name is Social Credit, I very definitely consider all legislation from the center of today's world and the economic life of 1971-72 in Canada as it is now, haphazardly led by a Liberal majority government. With a realistic awareness of the situation of Canadians, strictly from an economic viewpoint, I should like to see much more effective and manageable and also more practical economic reforms and adjustments emerge from our parliamentary work.

When I think of the famous Carter report all 2,600 pages of it, when I think of the royal commission of inquiry on taxation reform that cost us more than $3.6 million, when I think of the many briefs submitted by most of our large groups of learned people, experts, economists, capitalists, trustees, financiers, manufacturers, national and international bankers, when I think of this voluminous undecipherable paper stack accumulated by joint committees on this matter, when I think of the "condensed" form of the famous White paper which has been under numerous attacks and purges imposed by the bureaucracy of governments or pressure groups or intermediaries, when I think that we still have to go through 707 pages of a new bill, page by page, paragraph by paragraph, I feel that this legislation will finally be passed much more out of exhaustion than ability and satisfaction from all participants and responsible people at all levels.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on finance, trade and economic affairs received more than 3,000 briefs among which there were some from Ontario and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, truly outstanding briefs which were hardly taken into account in the drafting of this bill. And when all the briefs had been considered, the Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs produced its report which the government almost totally rejected, subsequently appointing an independent, highly-paid board to prepare another report, coming up with the notorious 707-page bill now before us.

Why go to so much trouble for such poor results? I don't believe we are that stupid. We all feel confined in the hermetic frame-work of old tax, economic and political structures. We long to change things to meet the needs of the people. Yet we want to retain them in order to satisfy the producers who benefit by the established structures which obviously can only increase the widening gap between the rich becoming richer and the poor becoming poorer. All the evil comes about because of the pretence of changing things to please the people, while allowing the same structures to go on having the same effects, in order to please the known or unknown people who control the established system.

I am not suggesting that we change the established system. No, that would just make things worse. Under present circumstances, it is not the system which needs changing. It has at least one merit, which is to preserve with strength and continuity the unbalanced planning which we are accustomed to. This is the good side of a strategic bourgeois pragmatism. Well planned imbalance is still better than complete chaos, civil war, revolution, and the destruction of those things in the system which are still good, positive, constructive, and profitable.

It is not the system of a planned imbalance which we must destroy. This system guides planning towards a national equilibrium between all citizens, all families and all companies which make up the whole economic life of Canada. This is one of the answers.

The conservative members have found some wonderful answers. They have made nice speeches, but I might say that nobody has really put forward other solutions than those proposed by the government. All this cannot happen by itself. Tax reform can and must play a formidable part, provided only that at the high administrative and departmental levels they redirect the economic planning of our nation to meet the needs of the consumers and to remunerate at the same time equitably and fully the labour and the capital of Canadian producers.

Instead of increasing taxes that would have been another of the possible solutions to put forward. It is certainly possible to find other practical solutions to administer the country and to balance the budget.

In trying to balance the economy by this ominous bill, we will take away from Canadians the main purchasing power they need as we increase taxes and impose taxes on capital. We will deprive many Canadian taxpayers of the necessities of life, and we should consider that, Mr. Speaker.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Those are the guidelines put as simply as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the general idea behind the economic direction should be reviewed in a completely different context from the monetary, economic and political mechanism. Until we grapple with those economic, political and monetary elements, the situation will never change. The present system can only bring more serious economic imbalance, more dissatisfaction among the population and an increase in the number of poor people.

All those facts are practically ignored or at least inadequately taken account of by those responsible for the economy both at the management and legislative levels.

I will not try to meet the set requirements. There is rejoicing about the success of banks, large financial, industrial, business and agricultural companies as well as large public, business, agricultural and semi-public corporations or public utilities such as hydros, railways, television, radio, etc. This perfect mixture of private enterprise and government enterprise leaves the population in complete confusion with no sign of hope for a solution simply because all those responsible for management are university graduates who are well known and conditioned to continue the requirements set in a system that is more than 40 years old.

So it is nobody's fault. Everybody abides by the law, even and above all presidents and directors of the largest banks and companies. If we talk to them about exclusive privileges that are granted to them by the government, either through administrative practices or in the form of reserves or tax exemptions, they answer bluntly, what would you do in our place? We are simply taking advantage of the laws passed by government. We are very anxious to obey existing laws. Who would find fault with that?

Mr. Speaker, we know that existing laws protect high finance and enable many high officials and large institutions of the land to pay almost no taxes because they can avail themselves of special legislation and special taxes; they are authorized to build up all sorts of reserves and are quite happy with the present system.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

The orders are well obeyed by university graduates who impose their will on governments and who subsequently administer banks and corporations according to the law.

Mr. Speaker, nobody is responsible for the present inflation, unemployment, poverty or economic imbalance. All this uneasiness results from protracted subservience to economic doctrines which were useful 40 years ago, and which still accommodate the scientists, the wealthy and the powerful masters of the established system, but are of no benefit to the people.

Bill C-259 does not take into account those economic facts.

We try to promote production and capitalization while comsumption is jeopardized for over 60 per cent of our population. We try to retrain workers and even technicians, once again to promote production, whereas consumption is ailing.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the cabinet members and to the chairmen of our powerful banks and corporations that nothing is lost. Everything is in good working order and will work even better as soon as production, consumption and capitalization will be balanced at the individual, family and social levels. Many members forget this.

Since 1960, several royal commissions, several task forces made up of experts, several Senate or House committees, several White Papers, many official reports of the Economic Council of Canada, all prepared by the highest economic authorities in Canada, with the help of experts of foreign countries, have set forth all the aspects of the economic life in Canada, in particular the alleged causes of inflation, unemployment and poverty.

Inflation, unemployment and poverty are three distinct results of the same economic ill that can be called the national economic imbalance. And the more we shall implement Bill C-259, the more we shall experience that great imbalance which will unfortunately lead our people to adopt impractical solutions.

Why can't all those experts meeting together find the causes of the economic imbalance, propose solutions that would restore the economic balance? Why can't they agree on a single point?

The reason is a very simple one. All learned men, all experts, all economists, all directors of great institutions follow the same instructions laid down by the great universities of Europe or the United States, by university professors throughout the national or provincial universities, in all countries of the third world.

To all proposals that go against that universal general order, legislators have but one clear and precise answer, always the same, expressed in different ways, which may be summed up thus: After all, once in power, people must act according to what they learned at university.

Our legislators remain faithful to the economic dogmas of the past, dogmas that have been successful in their day but that are no longer applicable in the current situation which is different. Pragmatic people are no longer the fashion and they only perpetuate and protect the old dogmas, the old doctrines which are not adapted to modern times.

Instead of giving one's confidence to pragmatic people, we need thinkers who can keep pace with the realities of an economic world forever progressing. Production is carried out with modern methods, but distribution is done with old-fashioned ones, when it should be carried out in a modern way.

The greater the production, the lesser the consumption. The greater the capitalization, the lesser the distribution. And that is another problem that all citizens and all hon. members should take into consideration.

In the search for profit, for capital, for power, for domination, one forgets that it is for man that one produces, that it is man that must benefit from production and even from capitalization.

Powerful and manageable systems and organizations as well as monetary, economic and political machinery were set up. They produced $90 billion in 1971 which could fulfil everyone's needs while guaranteeing sufficient capital and all necessary investments. But they prefer to bury useless and cumbersome billions of dollars which create inflation and should be used as a purchasing power for people without any income so that every family may enjoy a decent standard of living and all citizens wishing to contribute to the national production may find work.

Without reducing any of the personal income, salary, interests, capital or dividends of those companies listed on the stock market, we could draw from hidden reserves which are neither declared nor taxed on consumption in order to insure a right to live for dependent citizens without work or capital in each and every home in Canada.

If we wanted to open our eyes, we could lower the cost of living, and allow Canadians to increase their income as our national production would rise. Today, our national production goes up and the income of most Canadians goes down. Our total corporate interests are showing a mere $6 billion of taxable profits as assigned to dividends and undistributed benefits—according to their public reports—but they manage to build up huge depreciation reserves and capital funds, to some extent with the blessing of our governments, the total of which might reach $24 billion for 1971.

Those tangible, inconspicuous or secret reserves, concealed in obscure annual reports by the people, not even by chartered accountants and experts, can be used to guarantee the security of the social national capital.

Why not put more emphasis on the vital human right of the family? Why could we not respect the rights and prerogatives of the human being? Why are we unable to resolve the unemployment problem which is getting worse every day? As a matter of fact, as we increase taxes of all kinds, more unemployment is being created, more citizens are dispossessed, destitute, discouraged for they can no longer cope with our present economic system which should enable them to enjoy a social life, a respectable life in a country bursting with wealth which we are not even able to distribute. There is no poverty in this country, there is undistributed riches. Since we live in an affluent society, let us organize the distribution of wealth. Therefore, this bill should contain the principle of distribution of this wealth to secure an income, a stable economy for everyone.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to the debate on the amendment which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) proposed to the tax reform bill. In a few days this bill will become the law of the country, with all the benefits it will bring to many taxpayers through reduced taxes. One of the sidelights of this debate has been the fact that the rule respecting time allocation has been invoked. This principle—

Mr. Alexander: Closure, you mean.

Mr. Foster: The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) keeps using the wrong word. He has not thoroughly read the rule book or he would know that the phrase is "time allocation." This principle was adopted in July 1969, but has not been used until now. That is regrettable because, I believe, like many of the younger members who came here first in 1968, we should be moving toward handling the work of the House in a more orderly fashion. It seems to me that unless we find a system to do this using rules 75A, 75B or 75C or some other parliamentary device, we will continue to waste a lot of time and this House will rapidly become more irrelevant.

Members are in the House for much of the year, 10 or 11 months, and spend a shorter and shorter period of time in their ridings, taking weekend flying trips which most of us have learned to live with over the last few years. If we could adopt a system of programming our work, we might be able to spend one week in every eight in our constituencies. If we were to do this, we could better reflect the wishes of our constituents.

I compliment the three or four members of the official opposition who are in the chamber tonight. They are here at great personal sacrifice. The position of the opposition parties on this bill has been most interesting. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would like to split the bill, taking all the goodies now, all the tax cuts which are proposed, and leaving all the other parts of the bill to be implemented at a later date. But he has never specified exactly when. That must be one of the most unworkable proposals ever made. It is like the man who says, "Well, I'll take my pay cheque but I won't bother paying any of my bills." The administrative complications of this proposal would make the tax jungle of the 1930s look like a formal garden by comparison.

The Leader of the Opposition says that he does not understand the tax bill. We will go along with that. We are inclined to agree that he does not understand it. After all, Mr. Speaker, he could not remember when he got a copy of the bill. He thought it came in just a couple of days before Parliament opened on September 7, when in fact the bill was distributed to every member of the House on July 12.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rise not only to question the hon. member's ability to count but to remind him that the tax bill now before the House was delivered from the Queen's Printer only within the last week. Therefore, his assessment as to when this bill became available is wrong. Further, he might pay attention to what was said by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to the effect that this bill is not yet complete. With the bribery that is going on in the other place and the legislation that will be brought forward in the new year, he doesn't know what he is talking about.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

RESEARCH—FARM MACHINERY—ASSISTANCE TO PRAIRIE PROVINCES IN ESTABLISHING TESTING CENTRE

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, a short while ago I raised a question with the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie) asking if he would use his influence with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to carry out some research and development with respect to farm machinery. He replied that he would look into the matter. Since I wanted to make sure that he would, I arranged to debate the matter on the "late show."

The Barber report suggests several things, but I shall begin by quoting something that is fact in this regard:

> The commission was also asked to examine "the present and prospective competitive position of the Canadian agricultural machinery industry in Canadian and export markets" and to recommend "measures that could contribute to the expansion of efficient production of agricultural machinery." At the present time the Canadian share of farm machinery manufacturing in North America, about 7 to 8 per cent, is well below Canada's proportion of the region's farm machinery sales, around 12 per cent.

It is my basic contention that something should be done about that problem. To use the words of the Barber report at page 11—

• (10:00 p.m.)

> The basic proposal being made is for a comparatively small (compared to such a body as the National Research Council) but highly expert research and evaluation unit controlled by a semi-independent governing board. The unit would have its own program of research designed to improve farm machinery. In addition it would be responsible for a greatly expanded program of research grants to Canadian universities. This would ensure a continuing flow of farm machinery technology suited to the needs of Canadian farms.

Then on page 12 we find this passage:

> Thus the expanded program of research into farm machinery technology recommended above should give a valuable stimulus to the growth of farm machinery production in Canada. Small independent firms will benefit from the flow of new ideas generated by this research and from the availability of a larger number of qualified agricultural engineers in government research stations and at universities. The larger firms would be encouraged to locate more of their own research in Canada because of the much more favourable milieu that had been created for farm machinery research. And this should lead, in time, to an expansion in their manufacturing output in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the argument has been that the innovative process has been carried out frequently by small manufacturing firms. The reason I suggest an approach of this nature is that often these people cannot afford the cost entailed. I should like to read from the report again, page 147, as follows:

> The company that fails to improve its products at frequent intervals may find its marker share declining sharply . . .
> Changes in market share have often been very large within a few years. While not conclusive, these changes strongly support the view that product improvement is an extremely important competitive factor in the industry.

In his report, Professor Barber puts forward arguments in support of his point of view, and since that time he has also done this in Saskatchewan. The prairie governments are presently looking at such a testing agency. My suggestion to the Minister of State for Science and Technology is that he should also look at this testing agency in view of Professor Barber's comments and recommendations on this problem. We should consider, too, that this royal commission was an agency of the Liberal government, which must have been concerned or it would not have spent the money.

If a testing unit is not the best thing, then I suggest it is up to the present government and the minister, and perhaps also to the Minister of Agriculture, to suggest something better. I contacted a company in regard to a testing agency and they said that depending on the circumstances they could probably use such an agency in testing their machinery.

I am not suggesting that this should be a heavy-handed, bureaucratic type of organization which would say no to everything that a modern, innovated company might offer in the way of new ideas for manufacturing farm machinery. I do suggest that if such an agency is established it should be bright, imaginative, innovative and have a modern approach to developing a better farm machinery industry in Canada.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, let me say by way of introduction how pleased I am to be able to respond to the bright and innovative hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) who has impressed me over the years with his interest in research and development. He has played an active part before the estimates committee on more than one occasion. I can remember some perceptive questioning to the National Research Council and it may have been, as well, to the Science Council of Canada.

I am very much aware of his interest in research and development matters. I am also very much aware of his interest in agricultural matters. It is therefore no great surprise to me that he should couple his interest in research and development with that in agriculture and, in particular, the Barber commission report. I listened very carefully to his statements and references to pages 11 and 12 of the report and to page 147 in respect of development. I share many, if not all, of those sentiments.

In answering the specific question of whether the Minister of State for Science and Technology might recommend to the provincial premiers, either individually or collectively, some form of government assistance to a research or test facility, I have to report to him, as did the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard) on an earlier occasion, that we have not yet received any request from the provincial premiers, individually or collectively, or through any agency that they might designate with respect to the question. On October 26, 1971, as recorded in Hansard, the parliamentary secretary said:

> As to the question raised concerning assistance from the federal government, I must say that up to now we have received no requests from provincial governments concerning present programs.

That is the same information that I have obtained as a result of my recent research on this question. Should the provincial premiers, again individually or collectively, or some agency of theirs make a request to us in this connection, we would be very pleased to give it consideration.

AIRPORTS—COMPLETION OF NEW TERMINAL AT TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—DECISION ON SITE OF NEW FACILITY

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, on December 3 I raised the question of the much needed additional facilities at Toronto International Airport. The air travelling public, I am sure, welcomed the minister's reply that extra workers have been hired on the job and that the pace of construction will be increased so that the second terminal in Toronto will be ready for use in April and fully completed by next June. However, we are still awaiting the long overdue announcement of the federal government's decision on the site of a second airport for Toronto and the neighbouring region. We understand and commend the federal government's efforts to consult the Ontario government, but we cannot condone unnecessary delay and indecision with respect to a second airport to serve the greater Toronto metropolitan area.

Tonight I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), through his parliamentary secretary who is in the House, to tell us who or what is causing this intolerable indecision. I am not exaggerating when I say that today Toronto needs better facilities for international air traffic. This means a federal airports' policy which also takes into account the needs and interests of the people of greater Toronto and their neighbours.

I would strongly emphasize that increased international landing rights in Toronto for certain airlines is an urgent matter. The present policy of restricting landing rights in Toronto to only a few international airlines not only causes inconvenience and loss of precious time to many travellers but also additional expense due to extra landings and transfers. Furthermore, many international travellers from the cosmopolitan Toronto area must now transfer at New York due to lack of landing rights at Toronto. In view of these factors I urge the federal government to grant international landing rights in Toronto for such airlines as Alitalia, Lufthansa, SAS, KLM, LOT, Czecho-Slovak and other airlines whose passengers wish to fly into or out of Toronto.

To accommodate the extra flights, facilities at the present Toronto airport must be further improved and a second airport to accommodate future traffic must be built without further delay. Statistics available from the Board of Trade of metropolitan Toronto show that in recent years Toronto airport has recorded between 30 per cent and 40 per cent more domestic and international passengers arriving and departing on scheduled flights than Montreal International Airport and that the gap between the two has been widening. I therefore urge that the Minister of Transport satisfy the needs of the travelling public and contribute to the growth of Canadian tourism and trade by extending landing rights for certain international airline carriers in a spirit of understanding and good will.

In conclusion, I think the parliamentary secretary should tell us tonight when an announcement will be made about the site and plans for a second airport to serve the Toronto area. Who, or what, is delaying this announcement, and why has it not been decided to extend landing rights at Toronto to meet the requests and satisfy the needs of those of the public who travel by air?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply briefly to the questions raised by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). I realize how important these matters are to him and to members from southern Ontario. The subjects of the location of the new international airport for Toronto and region and the construction schedule of terminal II at Malton have been raised on numerous occasions in the House. On the first item, hon. members are aware of the ongoing discussions between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and his officials and his counterpart in Ontario and provincial representatives. The matter is a complex one, but progress is being made.

With respect to terminal II, work will now proceed at an accelerated rate. The minister informed the hon. member as to the new contractual arrangements that have been entered into with the contractor. This will have the effect of not only ensuring that the schedule will be met on time but that more workers will be hired during the winter months. The Minister of Transport informed the hon. member from Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) on November 10 that the first module is expected to be completed by April 30, and the remaining two by June 30.

The hon. member for Parkdale also mentioned a number of items tonight which I shall be pleased to bring to the minister's attention.

SHIPPING—MAINTENANCE OF SERVICE ON WEST COAST OF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, since I first learned of the decision to withdraw subsidies to coastal shipping services on the west coast of Vancouver Island, effective December 31, I have been pressing the matter with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and the Canadian Transport Commission. I did not consider an answer given to me by the Minister of Transport on November 30 a satisfactory one so I put the question down as an item for the adjournment debate.

On December 8 I again raised this matter in a question to the minister and received from him the reply that the Canadian Transport Commission had agreed to an extension of the subsidies to the two shipping firms involved for a period of six months from the December 31 deadline. For this answer I wish to thank the minister and, through him, the Canadian Transport Commission. This extension at least gives a breathing spell to the people involved who were facing the prospect of imminent withdrawal of the only practicable means of having essential supplies delivered to their communities. Hopefully, it also means there will be an opportunity for rational public discussion of the whole complex question of transportation for people and goods to and from the communities scattered along Vancouver Island's rugged west coast.

There are, I feel, certain facts related to what I can only term as this near disaster which should be brought out at this point. First of all, I want to make it clear that existing transportation by any and all of the means now available is unsatisfactory, or costly, or both. Second, in-camera communications between the federal government, the provincial government and those engaged in the transportation business about something which so vitally affects the lives and the future of so many citizens is simply not good enough. On matters of this kind, people simply should not be left in the dark. Nor should it be left so the people's elected representative hears about it more or less accidentally at the eleventh hour.

At this point I am not seeking to lay the blame on any particular quarter. I recognize that the water transport committee of the CTC has not the kind of statutory mandate to require public notice and to order public hearings, as has the railway transport committee in connection with proposed changes in railway services. I have argued this point many times on the floor of this House; I have introduced amending bills, but to no avail. The people on the Pacific coast dependent on water transport have continued to be left at the mercy of what operating firms conceive to be an economic opportunity for themselves, or to the good graces of what the water transport committee or the provincial authorities decided in private were necessary subsidies.

The third point I would like to make is that constitutionally, under the British North America Act, the federal responsibility is for transportation which is interprovincial. Transportation which is entirely within a province is a provincial government responsibility. This does not, however, gainsay the fact that historically, for reasons many of which may now be lost in the mist of time, the federal government has accepted a responsibility for support of transportation services, particularly with reference to shipping services which are intraprovincial. This is certainly true with respect to the west coast of Vancouver Island where continuous support of this kind has been provided going back beyond the memory of most people now living; certainly back to the days of the good ship Maquinna whose name is still a byword among old-timers on the west coast. Abrupt withdrawal of such support without any public notice is, in my view, unjustifiable.

The fourth point I would like to make to try to keep the record straight is that the proposal of the federal authorities, which was to have taken effect on December 31 and which I understand was made known to the government of the province about a year ago, provided for an increase in the total amount which the federal government would commit to the support of water transportation on the British Columbia coast, with the proviso that it was all to be concentrated on improving and expanding the services to the northern coast and the Queen Charlotte Islands. This, of course, is cold comfort to the people on Vancouver Island who, as matters stood on December 8, were being left completely stranded with neither federal nor provincial governments prepared to accept any responsibility.

I am happy that in the face of this situation the minister and the Canadian Transport Commission were prepared to listen to the cold, hard facts which I and some of my constituents presented to them without any histrionics or shouting and agreed to a six months' reprieve. This to me is an example of a sensible argument being sensibly listened to. The results would indicate that in this case at least it was more effective than wild and irresponsible shouting.

If the minister of municipal affairs for British Columbia was correctly quoted in the press as saying, "There will be no operating federal subsidies whatsoever on the west coast, but on the east coast they will continue", he was making a wild and irresponsible statement, not in accordance with the facts, about which he must or should have known as a minister of the provincial government. The pedalling of this sort of irresponsible propaganda, which seems to issue in an almost endless stream from this minister's mouth, does nothing to help solve the problems of the Canadian people, either local or national.

I hope the British Columbia minister more immediately responsible for dealing with transportation matters will not take the same line during the next six months, but will be prepared to discuss rationally the whole complex question of adequate transportation, at reasonable cost, for the people who dwell in the communities along Vancouver Island's west coast.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the interest the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has in subsidies to transportation services on Vancouver Island.

Last November 30th, as can be seen on page 10,004 of Hansard, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni asked the hon. Minister of Transport the same question concerning subsidies to coastal ship services in Canada, with particular reference to the service on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

In his reply, the Minister of Transport explained that it might be possible to remedy the situation described by the hon. member through an extension of the service, if the hon. member's description of the situation was accurate.

However, the minister pointed out that the decision rested entirely with the CTC.

In answer to a second question asked by the hon. member on December 8 on the same subject, the Minister told him about the successful outcome of his intervention with the Canadian Transport Commission and about the fact that the Commission and agreed to extent the subsidies for a period of six months.

I believe discussions are now in progress between the Transport Commission and the owners of the ferry service with a view to reaching a satisfactory solution in the interest of all concerned.

I trust this information will prove satisfactory to the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.23 p.m.

MR. RONDEAU—ALLEGED ABSENCE OF CRÉDITISTE MEMBERS FROM STUDY SESSION CONDUCTED BY CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, as recorded at page 10,406 of this Monday's Hansard, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) made the following statement:

> . . . CICA members . . . came here to give a full day's course to hon. members and that, at their own expense. I do not recall having seen a single Créditiste member attend this course. Where were they? . . . How can they understand (the bill), if they don't even go to the official information sources . . .

Mr. Speaker, I myself had been delegated by my colleagues to attend the course given by chartered accountants. The statement of the hon. member for Laurier is totally erroneous and untrue. Either the hon. member for Laurier has willfully mislead the House, or else he was asleep during the courses given by the CICA because I was there myself. I was sitting near the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) and the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron); the hon. member for Laurier was also sitting near me. Obviously, his memory has failed him and, besides, his mind must have been somewhere else.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

GOVERNOR GENERAL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONTINUANCE IN OFFICE UNTIL SPRING OF 1973

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been to see the Governor General and I should like to make an announcement. I should like to announce that Her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to approve the continuance in office of the Right Honourable Roland Michener as Governor General of Canada until the spring of 1973, and that the Governor General has indicated his willingness to remain in office for this period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The Canadian people fully appreciate the dedicated and distinguished manner in which the right hon. Mr. Michener has carried out the high responsibilities of his office, so ably assisted by Mrs. Michener, and I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that they will welcome Her Majesty's approval of the Governor General's continuance in office.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HAWKESBURY AIRPORT

Question No. 1,819—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Does the CNR intend to use their powers of expropriation to build a spur line through Hawkesbury Airport in Ontario?

2. Will the proposed spur line diminish the safety of operations at the Hawkesbury Airport by reducing the normal landing and take-off area?

3. Has consideration been given to relocating the spur line so that a minimum loss of property now utilized by aircraft will result?

4. What responsibility does the Minister of Transport have to grant protection to an airport which his Ministry licensed as a public facility, against encroachment by industry?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Yes.

3. Yes.

The Department of Transport advises as follows: 2. The spur line will have no adverse affect on light aircraft operations at this airport.

4. The Department of Transport licences an airport when it meets the required standards. If these licencing standards are not met as a result of an encroachment of any kind, the licence is withdrawn or restricted. For privately owned airports any dispute concerning encroachment remains a matter between the two parties concerned. In the case of Department of Transport airports these matters are settled by direct negotiation.

REGINA DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

Question No. 1,987—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government make public the feasibility study and operations plan for the Regina demonstration project as completed by Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The work undertaken by Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company as part of the Regina demonstration project has been published, and is available in limited quantity from the Transportation Development Agency. A summary report has also been prepared by the project Steering Committee, and copies are available from Regina Transit System or from the Transportation Development Agency.

Questions

PENITENTIARIES—PROFESSIONAL STAFF

Question No. 2,046—Mr. Orlikow:

How many of the psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians and dentists, employed by the government work full time at the penitentiaries and, of those who work part time, how many hours per week does each work in the penitentiaries?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): By the Department of the Solicitor General:

Specialists	Number employed full time	Number employed part time	Hours/week part time employees
Psychologists	28	0	Nil
Psychiatrists	5	2	15 (all categories)
Physicians	10	1	15
Dentists	4	4	15 (all categories)

N.B.—In addition, the following specialists work on contract, on a "fee per visit" basis:

DEVELOPMENT LOAN TO TURKEY

Question No. 2,047—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has a five million dollar development loan been advanced to Turkey and, if so, is it being spent under the framework of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development?

2. What is the repayment arrangement?

3. What is the interest rate on the loan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. A five million dollar development loan was pledged to Turkey in 1969 by Canada as a member of the OECD aid consortium for Turkey. It is not being spent under the framework of OECD, though that Organization is kept fully informed of developments regarding the planned utilization of the funds.

2. Repayment in 30 years, with an initial grace period of seven years.

3. The interest rate is three per cent.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—COLLECTION OF OVERPAYMENTS

Question No. 2,065—Mr. Hales:

1. Does the Unemployment Insurance Commission have a collection department for outstanding debts or overpayment to claimants?

2. What is the total amount of these receivables?

3. What were the amounts for each of the years 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1970?

4. What are the amounts outstanding that fall into the following classifications (a) 1-2 months (b) 3-6 months (c) 6-12 months (d) 1 year (e) 2 years (f) 3 years (g) 4 years (h) 5 years?

5. What means are used to collect these debts?

6. Is an accounts receivable balance system used?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): 1. The Unemployment Insurance Commission has a collection section in each district office with responsibility for collection of overpayments of benefits to claimants.

2. The total amount of receivables relating to overpayment of benefits to claimants at March 31, 1971, was $5,687,199.

3. Amounts for previous years

Fiscal Year	Overpayment Receivables

6. A system for recording of the balance for each account receivable is maintained.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Department of the Solicitor General, the Department of Justice and Statistics Canada do not have at its disposal any records which would indicate whether or not an accused person was under the influence of a drug during the commission of any of the offences referred to in Question number 2,075 above.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Since December 1967, 20 convicted criminals have had their death sentence commuted to life imprisonment and none of these has been paroled to date. This figure includes 17 who had been convicted and sentenced to death prior to December 29, 1967.

N.B. The figure for 1968 reflects the fact that after the change in the law restricting the cases in which murder was punishable by death, the sentences of those whose offence would not have been capital under the new legislation were all committed to life imprisonment.

AMOS, QUEBEC—ALTERATIONS TO INDIAN RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,162—Mr. Laprise:

Does the government intend to make any improvements or alterations to the residence for Indians in the city of Amos, Quebec, and, if so, on what date and of what nature?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): There are no immediate plans for any major alterations to the Amos Student Residence. During the past year alterations and major repairs were made to the water system and, at present, the inside of the residence is being painted.

STUDY OF FINANCIAL METHODS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT

Question No. 2,198—Mr. Mather:

Did the Bank of Canada send a representative to British Columbia to study the financial methods of the British Columbia Government and, if so, is he still in British Columbia and has he made reports to the Bank of Canada?

Hon. E.J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In view of the increasing importance of Vancouver as a financial centre, the Securities Department of the Bank of Canada appointed a Vancouver representative in March, 1968, and has maintained a representative there since that time. The Vancouver representative is in constant touch with developments in financial markets in his area and in the course of his duties maintains close contact with the banking, investment and business communities and with provincial and municipal officials. The Bank of Canada Agent in Vancouver also has broad contacts with the local community and Bank of Canada officers from Ottawa make periodic visits to keep abreast of developments in the area.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 253 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary is it the pleasure of the House that this motion be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INCOME TAX

PROVINCIAL INTENTIONS RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF ACTS TO CONFORM WITH FEDERAL BILL—SUCCESSION DUTIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, now that we are nearing the end of the proposed limitation on the discussion of Bill C-259, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance how many provinces have not yet indicated an intention to amend their income tax legislation, both personal income tax and corporation income tax, so as to conform with Bill C-259?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that all have but I would like to check. I would like to take the question as notice. I believe that most or all of them have so indicated.

Mr. Stanfield: Have the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec indicated their intention to amend their corporation income tax to conform with the provisions of Bill C-259?

Mr. Benson: I will have to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker. The indication I received was that the province of Quebec would be acting along the same lines with regard to their Corporate income tax. The province of Ontario had some reservations. I really have not got the latest information with me. I will get it and supply it to my hon. friend.

Mr. Stanfield: I would have thought the Minister of Finance would know this before trying to ram the bill through the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the Minister of Finance whether the model or proposed succession duty act, under which the minister has agreed to co-operate with the provinces in the collection of succession duties, has been prepared? Is it being prepared in consultation with the provinces and it has been sent to the provinces?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this is a matter for the provinces. The federal government is moving out of the death duties area and the gift tax area. There have been consultations between some of our officials and provincial officials trying to assist them in developing a standard act. However, this is a matter entirely for the provinces. We cannot tell them what they should put in their acts.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE PEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR IN LIGHT OF PROSPECTIVE DEVALUATION OF U.S. DOLLAR—PROTECTION OF EXPORT INDUSTRIES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question arising out of the apparent decision of the President of the United States and the President of France for the Americans to devalue their dollar and the expectation that other currencies will be revalued upward. I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether at the meeting of the Group of Ten which is due to take place in a few days the government of Canada will have a policy of agreeing to some kind of pegging of the Canadian dollar at some level?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. We have indicated that our policy is that the Canadian dollar shall continue to float.

Mr. Lewis: I then ask the Minister of Finance whether his advisors are able to assure him, if such assurance is possible for anyone to give, that the Canadian dollar will not stay at its present level after the United States dollar has been devalued so that the exporting industries in Canada will not be put at an even greater disadvantage?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar has been floating freely for some 18 or 19 months now with the Canadian government intervening only to clear up market irregularities in the dollar. It should represent a fair value for the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the United States dollar. If the United States dollar moves downward, presumably the Canadian dollar would follow, but market forces must determine where the Canadian dollar will be without intervention from the Canadian government.

Mr. Lewis: Do the minister and his advisors have some kind of contingency plan in case the minister's hopes are not fulfilled and the Canadian dollar is kept at a higher level than he hopes it will be, with very serious consequences to parts of Canadian industry?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, our policy has been to allow the Canadian dollar to float freely, to have what is called a clean float. We intend to continue that policy.

POSSIBLE CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO SOLUTION OF U.S. CURRENCY PROBLEMS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question arising out of the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House a few days ago when he referred to Canada being willing to make a contribution toward a general solution of United States currency problems. Can the minister indicate the nature of the general contribution Canada is prepared to make?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he said trade rather than currency.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I suppose this is really a question of privilege arising out of the response of the Minister of Finance to my question in which he said that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had advised him that he had referred only to the solution of trade problems. If reference is made to page 10384 of Hansard one will find what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said last Monday. It reads as follows:

> My discussions with Mr. Malfatti, president of the European Economic Commission, Mr. Mansholt, vice-president, and other senior officials came at a particularly apposite time, on the eve of the Council of Ministers' consideration of United States proposals for resolution of the monetary and trading problems now facing us.

In view of the confusion in the mind of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs knew what he was talking about when he made that statement?

Mr. Benson: I would like to say that at all times the Secretary of State for External Affairs knows what he is talking about, much more so than the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—REFUNDS ANNOUNCED BY MINISTER—DATE OF MAILING OF CHEQUES TO QUEBEC PRODUCERS BOARD

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the announcement regarding the repayment of 16 cents per hundredweight to manufacturing milk producers, could the minister advise the House if such refunds will soon be mailed to the Office des producteurs du Québec?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what is meant by the 7 cents. Some time ago I announced there would be a refund of from 20 cents to 10 cents on the hold-back on manufacturing milk and, indeed, from 26 cents to 10 cents on that portion collected prior to June, I believe. Some of these cheques I think ought to be ready soon, but I will check on the exact date when they will be mailed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISPOSITION OF MONEY TO ASSIST EAST PAKISTANI REFUGEES IN INDIA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he indicate today the present state of the recently announced $18 million contribution toward assisting Pakistani refugees in India? Can he indicate how much of this has actually been turned over, to what authorities and in what precise form?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take notice of the question. I might add, however, that the policy of the Canadian government continues unchanged. It is our intention to make that money available to help the refugees. Needless to say, a complication arises when the refugees return to their homes, but this is a question which we will have to discuss as the situation develops.

[Later:]

Mr. Macquarrie: My supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In consideration of the clearly immense problems which will follow the cessation of hostilities, can the minister advise whether consideration is being given to stockpiling foodstuffs and materials in the area nearby and whether in particular the government is emulating the government of the United States in acquiring vast quantities of processed potatoes for distribution in this very worthy cause?

An hon. Member: Potatoes from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government is following these developments very closely. As I said in reply to the earlier question, the situation is now changing. We may not have as many refugees in India as we had in the past but we will have new complications arising out of the declared policy of India to recognize the new state of Bangla Desh, which is not Canadian policy at present; so we have complications arising out of that.

I can add that, as the hon. member knows, we had made provision for help in the form of food to East Pakistan. It was impossible to deliver this food which has now been diverted and I hope it can be moved in to help. We may have to do other things as well. I am sure the hon. member would agree that the Canadian government should do everything possible to help in this humanitarian effort.

INDIA-PAKISTAN WAR—BRITISH RESOLUTION IN SECURITY COUNCIL CALLING FOR CEASEFIRE—CANADIAN POSITION ON RIGHT OF EAST PAKISTAN TO CHOOSE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is related, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the House whether or not the British government is proposing a compromise resolution in the Security Council which calls for a ceasefire in the India-Pakistan war but realistically recognizes the fact that the people of East Pakistan should have the right to choose independence if they so desire and that the withdrawal of Indian forces from East Pakistan is dependent on this recognition?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I cannot vouch for all the contents of this resolution but I can confirm that a resolution has been put forward in the Security Council, rather along the lines we had originally proposed when the matter was before the General Assembly but which unfortunately could not be adopted at that time. We believe that something much more realistic than what was approved in the General Assembly is appropriate.

Mr. Brewin: Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs go so far as to agree with the resolution that the people of East Pakistan should have the right to choose independence if they so desire?

Mr. Sharp: I have not seen the terms of this resolution and I would hesitate to give an answer. As the hon. gentleman knows, the problem between self-determination and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other states is an unsettled problem.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO INCREASE INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTIVITY AND PROVIDE JOBS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement in the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada, which as the minister knows was produced recently, that "industrial productivity in Canada must increase considerably if the economy is to produce the jobs needed by the rapidly growing work force", is it the intention of the government to bring about this increase in productivity by offering tax incentives to industries, or does it intend to use some other means?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have already used tax incentives, and there has been an increase in productivity in Canada in the past year, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Hees: On a supplementary, if the minister will examine the figures he will see the increase has not been nearly satisfactory—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would ask a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary and not to engage in debate. Perhaps he would ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: The minister has to be set right, Mr. Speaker. As a supplementary question, is it the firm conviction of the minister that it is always better to do nothing and simply rely on providence?

Mr. Speaker: That again is not a supplementary but debate. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

TRADE

MINI-TYPE SUBMARINE—CANCELLATION OF EXPORT PERMIT ISSUED TO INTERNATIONAL HYDRODYNAMICS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind the statement made in the House yesterday by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the effect that Canada's security was the sole reason for our about-face in cancelling the export permit for the baby submarine being made in Vancouver for sale to Russia, despite the fact he indicated that some consultation had taken place between Canada and the United States, does the minister know that American components were used in the construction of this submarine? Second, does he know that, so far as defence elements are concerned, this baby vessel can only be used if connected to a mother ship?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is hardly in order. The member is asking whether the minister knows certain information. The question in those terms cannot be accepted.

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANT TO BRING WRITERS FROM EUROPEAN COUNTRIES TO INSTRUCT CANADIANS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who I believe reports for the Canada Council. I base my question on information from the Canadian Authors' Association having to do with a grant by the Canada Council of $100,000 to bring in writers and scholars from five European countries at salaries of up to $1,000 per month to tell Canadians how to write. Of the 39 who have been designated, 34 are from France and the others are from West Germany, Belgium and Italy. None are from the United Kingdom, none from the United States, and none from Canada. Will the minister look into this matter and ascertain the basis on which this huge amount of money has been expended, and whether consideration was given to our authors in Canada, even to the members of the Press Gallery here—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —who know how to write and do not have to have foreigners come here to tell Canadians how to write?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire and get all the answers to the questions that the right hon. member has just put, including another one, that is whether, as usual, he has not grossly simplified this action by the Canada Council.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, of course the hon. gentleman does not know what is going on. I direct his attention to the Canadian Authors' Association report, Toronto branch, in its bulletin of December, 1971. I am surprised that the minister, with that omniscience he has about everything, has not seen it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont.

YOUTH

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT—EVALUATION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS BY VOLUNTARY AGENCIES—OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCUSSION—POSSIBLE CONFERENCE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. It relates to the publication last evening of the report by the Canadian Council for Social Development on its evaluation of the Opportunities for Youth and other summer youth programs funded by the federal government. In view of the number of reports being submitted by voluntary agencies, including some very important ones, what steps is the minister taking to provide an opportunity for some discussion and dialogue, and is consideration being given to holding a conference perhaps similar to the one scheduled a year ago but unfortunately cancelled because of lack of support from the government?

• (2:30 p.m.)

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I think that last year's conference which the hon. member is referring to had been cancelled for several reasons, Mr. Speaker, and not only the one he mentioned.

It is obvious that the widest possible discussion on last year's program and the forms that the employment program for youth should take next summer must be favoured. We have received some proposals, timid, I must say, calling for a conference to be held at the national level and this is a suggestion that we are going to consider.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I wonder if the Minister can give any indication whether proposals will be favourably received with regard to such a conference and, in particular, with regard to some of the recommendations that have been consistently made? Has a secretariat now been organized to begin planning for next summer with a view particularly to decentralizing the program into the various regions of the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: To the hon. member's last two questions, Mr. Speaker, I can give an affirmative answer. There is an active secretariat and decentralization plans have been drawn up.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBLE CONFLICT BETWEEN REGULATIONS UNDER ACT AND NATIONAL REVENUE REGULATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour as a result of some very peculiar circumstances recently revealed by the Real Estate Association of Canada. Has the Department of National Revenue drafted a set of regulations contrary to those drafted by the minister's department and, if so, can the minister inform the House which set of regulations takes precedence?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not unaware of the representations of this particular group which would prefer to be included under the coverage of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. As a result of their brief I have asked my officials to meet with the Department of National Revenue in order to make certain that if there is any ambiguity or contradiction in the regulations it will be clarified immediately.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer but what I am trying to ascertain is whether the Department of National Revenue, because of its position with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, is also drafting regulations or has drafted regulations contrary to the regulations being drafted by the minister's department. If that is so, I should like to know which regulations take precedence and which department in fact sets policy for the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, we set policy for the Unemployment Insurance Act. From January 1 next the Department of National Revenue will have the responsibility of collecting the weekly contributions of employees on behalf of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. There may be some confusion as to what an "employee" is. It is not a question of precedence; it is a question of making sure that the regulations are uniform.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Alexander: One further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Joliette will bear with the Chair for a moment. I will allow the hon. member for Hamilton West a second supplementary and then go to the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am still asking the minister a very simple question and for some reason or other he is debating the matter. I should like to know whether the Department of National Revenue is preparing regulations which are contrary to regulations being prepared by the minister's department. That is a simple question. Is there any co-ordination between these two departments or are two sets of regulations being drafted at the same time, each unknown to the other department?

Mr. Mackasey: I said in answer to the original question that I had asked my officials to make sure that, even unintentionally, regulations of the Department of National Revenue were not in some way contradictory to those of my department. I want to remove this confusion and make sure that the regulations are uniform.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

EXEMPTION DECREED BY QUEBEC FOR SCHOOL BOARD AND HOSPITAL EMPLOYEES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

Considering that the minister in charge of Quebec civil servants stated yesterday that his government had took it upon itself to define the exception provided in section 3(3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act so that Quebec school board and hospital employees would be covered, and that the decision was taken because the federal legislation did not provide a clear definition, would the minister tell us if he intends to make that legislation more specific?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, several provinces have asked me to clarify section 3(2)(e) of the act with reference to "excepted employees". The minister in Quebec responsible for the civil service, in the absence of regulations, has included school teachers and hospital workers as civil servants. In order to remove any ambiguity and confusion the Governor in Council at my suggestion has amended the unemployment insurance regulations, in particular section 49(2), to clarify in the clearest possible terms those classes of employees to be included in the provincial option—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the minister has replied to the question asked by the hon. member. Unless he wishes to revert to motions, I do not think the explanation should be pursued further.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette on a question of privilege.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, as my question is of the utmost importance, not only for Quebec which pointed out the vagueness of the federal act yesterday, but also for all the other provinces, I wonder, as you mentioned yourself, whether we should revert to motions and the House would agree to allow the minister to explain exactly where we stand with regard to this act.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that we revert to motions for the purpose of allowing the minister to make a statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Is the hon. member for Joliette rising on a supplementary?

Mr. La Salle: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the minister whether employees of school boards and hospitals in Quebec will not be subject to the new Unemployment Insurance Act.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the regulations, particularly in section 49(2), now read as follows:

For greater certainty, employment in Canada by Her Majesty in right of a province, for the purposes of subsection (I), only includes employment in Canada of employees who are appointed and remunerated under the Public Service Act or Civil Service Act of a province—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member asking the question and to the minister giving the reply that this is not in accordance with the spirit of the question period. We have already had two long answers to two long questions and we only have limited time at our disposal. We should go on. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF COUNCIL FOR APPLIED SOCIAL RESEARCH

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Hees: Hey, buster!

Mr. Paproski: In light of the fact that there are some five million Canadians living in poverty and approximately $7 billion is spent annually in health and welfare services, is the government going to set up a council for applied social research as urged by the Senate report on poverty and, if so, when will a statement be made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall confer with the Minister of National Health and Welfare on this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: In light of the fact that the social development council only received $995,000 in the 1970-71 budget to monitor and research that $7 billion, can the Prime Minister assure the House that far greater funds will be made available next year and, if so, will a statement be made shortly?

Mr. Speaker: While the matter is being considered—the hon. member, of course, is making a suggestion and he has to assume that it will be considered.

Mr. Paproski: One further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton Centre but I bring to the attention of hon. members that if we have two or three supplementaries on every question—

An hon. Member: And no answers.

Mr. Speaker: —whether there are answers or not, certainly there is no point in hon. members rising by the twenties or thirties hoping to participate in the question period as there is less than 15 minutes left before we call orders of the day. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre on a further supplementary.

Mr. Paproski: Is the Prime Minister aware that the social development council estimates that of the $7 billion only 9 per cent was spent specifically for financial assistance and services for the very poorest in our population?

Mr. Speaker: That is argument and not a question. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

ELECTIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION ON CANDIDATES' EXPENSES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): My question is directed to the President of the Privy Council. In answer to a question of mine last September 22 concerning legislation to implement the report of the Special Committee on Election Expenses the minister said that the objective of the government was to have legislation passed in this Parliament. May I ask the government House leader if that legislation is being prepared or is now ready? If it is ready, could members have the advantage of looking at it over the Christmas and New Year recess and could he assure the House that it will be presented to parliament early in the next session?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure my hon. friend that we have been working on the recommendations of the parliamentary committee and we are continuing the study of election expenses. The problem here is in fitting this important piece of legislation into the over-all legislative program. That is now under consideration and we will be reaching a decision soon as to what the legislative program for the next session of Parliament will be.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader if he will consider consulting with the House leaders of the other parties with a view to obtaining agreement in advance for rapid action on any legislation that the government will bring in?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his representation.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM ON EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Since a joint committee of members of the American Senate and Congress are preparing a bill on the marketing of farm products and the marketing and prices of Canadian farm products will certainly be affected, can the hon. minister tell us whether, when drafting Bill C-176 on the marketing of Canadian farm products, his department or the government has taken these facts into consideration in order to prevent adverse effects for Canadian exporters and producers?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

BARRING OF CANADIAN HOCKEY TEAMS BY BUNNY AHEARNE FROM PARTICIPATION IN GAMES IN EUROPE

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of a story that appeared today which said that Mr. Bunny Ahearne is barring certain Canadian teams from participating in tournaments in Europe, even though these teams were invited by certain countries. I would ask the minister to find out if any bylaws are being broken and to see if any way can be found for these teams to participate in these games in which they were invited to participate.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to look into the situation.

Mr. Paproski: Look into the NHL as well.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the so-called czar of European hockey, Bunny Ahearne, is using intimidation on host clubs in Europe, would the minister use his good offices and take this matter up with the Dutch embassy and the Belgium embassy in order that these clubs may meet their obligations to the Kamloops club?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, that suggestion is worthy of consideration. However, I would say that past experience with Bunny Ahearne would indicate that I do not have that much influence with him.

GRANT TO SPORT PARTICIPATION CANADA— INVESTIGATION OF ABUSES IN AMATEUR HOCKEY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, will the minister advise the House whether the government has made a grant of $350,000 to Sport Participation Canada, as indicated in the press? Will he also advise whether there is an agreement with the provinces to establish a committee to look into abuses prevalent in amateur hockey?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I may deal with the latter question first, yes, the provinces have agreed with the federal government to have their officials meet with our own over the course of the next four or five weeks to make recommendations as to what joint action can be taken to deal constructively with many of these abuses in hockey.

As to the hon. member's first question, yes, we have made an initial grant to this body, which is made up principally of people from the private area, to enable them to raise funds from private sources, to call on the private sector and, through the resources of the media, to stimulate motivation for the holding of Canadian sports events.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister agree to make any further announcements of such importance in the House in order to give members of the opposition an opportunity to respond?

CANADA LABOUR CODE

SURVEY OF HOW OTHER NATIONS DEAL WITH TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE BEFORE DRAFTING OF BILL

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Labour. Did the minister undertake any type of survey on how other nations handle technological change through the collective bargaining process before Bill C-253 was drafted. If so, was the bill patterned in any way on the experience of any other nation or nations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have studied the labour laws and codes of all other industrialized nations. In the United States, for instance, we have found that a collective agreement can be opened on any issue at any time if there is normal advance notice. In Canada it is just the opposite.

FISHERIES

MEASURES TO RESTORE SWORDFISHING INDUSTRY IN LIGHT OF CONCLUSION RESPECTING PRESENT LEVELS OF MERCURY IN FOOD

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries. In view of the statement made by Great Britain's Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food that he has accepted the conclusion of several advisory groups that there is no evidence of harm to health from present levels of mercury in food for the average consumer, will the minister step up his own research on mercury in swordfish and renew negotiations with the United States Food and Drug Directorate in the hope that the swordfishing industry may be restored in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, there is no prohibition on the export of swordfish to countries that do not have limits on mercury. The question of levels on this continent is a matter for the food and drug administrations in Canada and the U.S.A.

SELKIRK FISH PLANT-INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CLOSING

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Yesterday he took as notice my question regarding the possibility of the closing of the Selkirk fish plant, which would be contrary to the undertaking he gave previously to this House. I wonder whether he can answer that question now?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the 70-year old fish plant at Selkirk does not meet our standards for inspection. It is being phased out. However, we are hoping to develop new supplies of fish and to have a plant operating at Selkirk in the not too distant future.

Mr. Rowland: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. On June 25, 1970, as recorded at page 8618 of Hansard, the minister said among other things:

My own forecast is that there will be two plants, an old one and a new one. The old one at Selkirk needs to be rehabilitated and this will take place beginning next year. I also expect employment in Selkirk will probably increase and not decrease in so far as fish processing is concerned.

I submit that that definite undertaking has been entirely contravened by what the minister has told the House today. If you think that I have a prima facie case of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would move that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not have a prima facie case and he may not move the motion.

POST OFFICE

PURCHASE OFFERS TO MAIL TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES—INTEGRATION OF EMPLOYEES INTO DEPARTMENT

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the Postmaster General a question of which I have given him notice and I think he will be in a position to answer.

Can he tell the House whether officials of his department have been authorized to make purchase proposals to private transport companies now under contract to haul mail? Can he say what offers have been made and what are the intentions of the department in this connection?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, purchase proposals were made to some contractors for their equipment and trucks. This is further to the statement I made in this House on November 23 concerning integration of postal services in 19 large urban centers in the country.

Mr. Valade: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Would the minister tell us whether there is a guarantee under these offers that all staff will be integrated into the corporation which is to be established?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I said in my statement of November 23 that all permanent employees of those contractors would be integrated into the postal service.

BROADCASTING

LACK OF SUNDAY CHURCH SERVICES ON RADIO IN TORONTO

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. I asked him three weeks ago whether he was aware of the secular censorship of Sunday church services on radio, particularly in the Toronto area. These broadcasts in many cases are the only means by which our senior citizens, the disabled, the crippled, the blind and those confined to hospitals or homes can participate in religious services of their choice. At that time the minister replied that he would look into this matter and let me know about it. We have now less than two weeks to go before Christmas and a lot of spiritual music is being performed. Can he make a report today?

• (2:50 p.m.)

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I promised to the hon. member, I have submitted that question to both the CBC and the CRTC. Unfortunately, I did not yet get an answer from either.

SPECIAL LOANS TO EXHIBITIONS—EXTENSION OF PROGRAM TO INCLUDE CLASS C FAIRS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the limited nature of the recently announced $10 million loan program for exhibition buildings in that those loans are available only with respect to class A and class B fairs, will the minister consider extending this program so that other communities, smaller communities holding class C fairs, for instance, may be able to take advantage of the loan program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply briefly, if he wishes, but I would suggest to the hon. member that this is a question which should normally be placed on the order paper. I am not aware that such fairs take place at this time of year. If there is no immediate urgency, I would think the question ought to be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, it can be considered at the time of adjournment.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PURCHASE OF MINI-SUBMARINE BY GOVERNMENT—REPAYMENT OF MONEY ADVANCED BY RUSSIA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is addressed to the Minister of Supply and Services, Mr. Speaker. It relates to an announcement made yesterday at a press conference by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the government of Canada was prepared to buy a mini-submarine being constructed in British Columbia. Can the minister now tell us when an offer is to be made to the company concerned and what is to happen with respect to the 30 per cent of the $2 million price paid to the company by the U.S.S.R.?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): The government has agreed to purchase the submarine. I will make inquiries as to the details of the repayment to the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Forrestall: Can the minister tell us whether action to lift the sales permit was taken only in light of the fact that it was being sold to Russia? Were any other countries involved? Can the minister also tell us which department will be using this mini-submarine?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The second part of the question should be placed on the order paper. The minister might reply briefly to the first part. We are just about out of time. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. Is the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East rising on a point of order?

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that the minister was in the process of rising to respond to the first part of the question.

Mr. Speaker: I did not notice the minister rising. If he wishes to reply to the first part of the question, the answer should be given quickly.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, you ruled part of the question out of order and I do not know what the first part of the question was.

Mr. Forrestall: When will the offer be made to purchase the submarine? As of this morning it had not been made to the company involved.

[Mr. Foster.]

Mr. Richardson: The initial payment has already been made to the company. The date of the final payment has not yet been determined.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXEMPTION BY QUEBEC OF PROVINCIAL CIVIL SERVANTS—POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, I asked his parliamentary secretary if he was in a position to say whether the Quebec government had taken a decision about the contributions of some categories of employees of that province to the unemployment insurance fund. The parliamentary secretary replied that the minister could answer today. Would the minister now be ready to make this effort?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Here we face the same difficulty as we did with respect to a previous question. I am hoping that at the end of the question period I may be permitted to revert to motions and deal with the question asked by the hon. member for Joliette and the question which has just been raised.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have, in fact, reached the end of the question period. I apologize to hon. members, including some hon. members on the front bench to my left, who have not had an opportunity to put their questions. I have tried to recognize some hon. members in the other rows and I will try to give others who might have been recognized an opportunity tomorrow to ask their questions. There is a request by the Minister of Labour that by unanimous consent we revert to motions to allow him to make the statement to which he has referred. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Before we do that, I recognize the hon. member for Sainte-Marie who wishes to raise a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege at this time because I waited until the question period was over so that I would not delay hon. members who wanted to put questions.

My question of privilege deals with an answer the Prime Minister gave me yesterday when I put a question to him in connection with the problem raised during the question period, and I quote, from page 10453 of Hansard, what he said:

> No, Mr. Speaker, there will be no special regulation. The act is known to this House for it was passed by this House. The government intends to announce very soon the regulations under this act. They are clear and known to everyone, including the government of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, this contradicts the comments made by the Minister of Labour a while ago to the effect that the act contains some ambiguities and that he had to clarify the situation.

I maintain that the Prime Minister gave a false and incorrect answer yesterday and that the minister is again attempting to clarify the problem and enable the province of Quebec to take its own responsibilities. In my opinion, the minister should have been invited to make such a statement at the beginning of—not after—the oral question period.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the right hon. Prime Minister who is entitled, if he so wishes, to reply to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, but I am prepared to allow the Prime Minister to do so.

I would, however, remind hon. members that to question an answer given by a minister during the question period does not constitute a question of privilege.

I refer hon. members to Citation 181 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition. I could invoke this citation every day when hon. members rise on a question of privilege in order to question an answer that was given to them. I suggest that what is taking place now is a debate between two hon. members, and the question should not be referred to the Chair under cover of a question of parliamentary privilege.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been endeavouring to catch Your Honour's eye for the past half hour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: I have not had the privilege of asking a question since last Friday and I have an important question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He has now departed and he will not be here tomorrow. I do not know how to handle the matter. It involves a question of vital importance to institutions in national parks such as the Banff School of Fine Arts. Perhaps I could have Your Honour's permission to present it as notice to the minister.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say, speaking very honestly, that I am always a bit surprised when I hear hon. members say they have not had an opportunity to ask a very important question on a very important matter. During the question period hon. members are given an opportunity to ask questions, but the purpose of the question period is to seek information. I sincerely feel there must be other ways for members to seek information than to ask a question during the 40 minutes allowed them for the question period. The Chair is in the hands of hon. members. We can continue the question period for a longer time by unanimous consent of the House. Otherwise, when the question period has ended the Chair has no other alternative but to call orders of the day. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to ask his question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. However, I will tell the hon. member that he caught the Speaker's eye. I shall certainly make it my duty to see that he is recognized at the first opportunity and given priority over other members.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister raises a question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: I would not want to complicate your task, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite understand your ruling. I understood that you allowed me to comment on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member, even though it was not well founded.

I just want to say, if you do not want to allow me to give further explanations, that we are prepared to revert to motions, provided the opposition agrees, to enable the Minister of Labour to read these regulations which—as I was saying yesterday—are clear for everyone. However, the minister must be allowed to move them.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: We have just had an example of what this government is doing to the rules of this House. I refer once again to the deliberate absence of ministers from the House which removes the urgency from important questions many hon. members on this side wish to put. I also refer to the answer the Prime Minister has just given in response to a question of privilege brought up previously. According to the rules of this House, it is too late now for him to speak to the same question in that he allowed time to elapse and there have been two points of order in between.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Of course I am not going to become involved in this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there was not unanimous consent for the Minister of Labour to revert to motions to make a statement—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or was there?

Mr. Speaker: There was not at that point. However, I am at the service of the House and I will inquire again whether there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I object. A few moments ago, when you asked whether there was unanimous agreement, some government members refused to give their consent. I do not see why we should now give ours.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, the House is not unanimous.

[English]

There is not unanimous consent. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on this point, I should like most humbly to point out that my hon. colleague from Abitibi raised the point before the hon. member for Sainte-Marie and that consequently, according to the Standing Orders, his question should have been put before that of the hon. member for Sainte-Marie. Since attempts made so far to obtain unanimous consent were not in keeping with the Standing Orders and since we insist on obtaining this information we would most humbly ask you to call for unanimous consent again.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I asked, hardly ten seconds ago, I believe, whether there was unanimous consent. The hon. member cannot logically be suggesting that I spend the whole afternoon calling for unanimous consent. I have done so twice. I will make a third attempt.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if, as you have ruled, there was not unanimous consent to revert to motions so that the minister could make a statement, I wonder whether there would be unanimous consent to revert to motions so that the minister could at least lay on the table the Order in Council that he was seeking to read?

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to table the document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As recorded on page 10453 of Hansard yesterday, my colleague from Abitibi asked that question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour and the latter assured my colleague and the House that the minister would have the appropriate answer prepared for today. This can be done in one way or another, either on motions or by merely providing the answer. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have taken 10 or 15 minutes of the valuable time of the House to ask whether there was unanimous consent about the matter raised by the member for Lotbinière for the third or fourth time. There is no unanimous consent.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to think at this time, in view of the importance of the statement that the minister wishes to make—I say this with all humility and respect to you—perhaps we could get unanimous consent for the minister to give the statement, primarily because—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Alexander: You keep your big mouth shut.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest very kindly to the hon. member for Hamilton West that we have had a number of members suggest that we revert to motions. For this we must have unanimous consent, and each time the Chair has inquired whether there was such consent there has not been unanimity. May we have order, please? I am wondering whether it is conducive to the decorum of the House to continue for a good part of the afternoon by inquiring every two minutes or so, on the initiative of different members, whether there is unanimous consent. I think that is an abuse of the process of this House.

Mr. Alexander: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this matter I would hope there would be some interest in what is going to happen on January 1. The minister has a very important statement to make, that is of vital interest not only to the members of this House but also to the people of Canada who will be taking advantage of this legislation. If we are going to be responsible here and do our duty, I hope that unanimous consent will be given so that we in the opposition parties will have an opportunity to reply to the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know as well as I do that there has not been unanimous consent. I know which members refused their consent, but I think it would be unfair on my part to suggest who they were. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I shall again inquire whether there is unanimous consent, but I suggest to hon. members it is somewhat ridiculous for hon. members to continue along this line. In a spirit of co-operation with hon. members, because I am here to act on their behalf, I shall inquire once again whether there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Since this is a very important matter, I think the record should show that it was the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, who refused unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think the record should also show I am not the one who has been complaining there has not been enough time to debate the tax bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (p. 10464).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to get back to the work of the House on Bill C-259, the tax reform bill. We were debating the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) last evening before ten o'clock. Last evening I was commenting on the fact that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) indicated he really does not understand the bill. I think there is general agreement, at least on this side of the House, that he does not understand the bill. This shows we can get agreement on this side. Many people in Canada understand the effects of this bill. They understand them very well. There will be one million people in this country who will be taken off the tax rolls on January 1 when this bill is proclaimed. They understand the effects of this bill. There are 4.7 million taxpayers in this country who will pay less tax. They understand the effects of the bill well. There are 800,000 working mothers, one in 10 of our work force, who will be able to claim child care allowances when this bill comes into effect. There are provisions for moving allowances, employment allowances and increased exemptions for our old age pensioners. They understand the effects of the bill.

There are increased exemptions from $1,000 to $1,500 for single taxpayers and from $2,000 to $2,850 for married couples. All taxpayers having married status will pay less and all taxpayers having single status who earn up to $8,000 a year will pay less. What the people of this country cannot understand is why the opposition wants to talk this bill to death and wants to continue the debate beyond the end of the year without passing those provisions which would benefit many of our taxpayers. The Leader of the Opposition said that many of his Tory friends who like the old act do not understand the bill. It is curious that these tycoons of the Tory party are willing to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on newspaper advertisements, such as we have seen during the past few months, to oppose the passage of this bill. I guarantee that anyone who spends the kind of money that the Tory friends have spent during the past couple of months understands the bill. Some of these people understand that the tax-free ride they have had is over.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: I do not think the Leader of the Opposition is fair to many members in his party when he lumps them in with himself by saying that no one understands the bill. Many members of his party, such as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), have spoken well, forcibly, knowledgeably and many times. From observing the activities of the opposition, it seems clear that there is no unity of purpose in their opposition to this bill. The tax bill is a package reform measure designed to bring greater equity into the tax system. To split this legislation as suggested by the Progressive Conservative party would have deferred this feature, perhaps indefinitely.

Some 46 full debating days have been devoted to the bill. It has been widely discussed among businessmen and the public, so surely it is well understood by now. Furthermore, let us not forget that we have seen nine years, four Parliaments and three Prime Ministers since the Carter royal commission began its studies of the tax system in Canada. Arguments have been posed to the effect that provincial governments and the business community would need at least a year before they could prepare for the tax changes but I ask you, how can anybody adjust to these changes until they are actually made; until they exist as law, until they are experienced.

Surely there can be no doubt that this legislation is in the public interest. The government has repeatedly and emphatically pointed out that it is prepared to take full responsibility for this bill. The government has indicated that there are several areas which are being actively studied and which will require further action in future years. In particular, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has mentioned the representation concerning the deemed realization of a capital gain on gift or bequest of property other than cash to charities and other exempt organizations. He has pointed out that capital gains will accrue very slowly after the start of the new system and that amendments made within a year should be quite satisfactory in that regard.

I am especially interested in this matter because I have received representations from several groups and organizations. I believe a change will be needed in the future. However, when we look at the mess that has developed in the United States, and I understand that a bill one-fifth the thickness of Bill C-259 was required to correct the unfair advantage people took of the capital gains provision in that country, we must move cautiously. No organization is going to be affected by this for at least the first year or so. When we make a change in this regard, we should do it carefully in order to avoid the pitfalls which have developed in the United States. The minister also indicated that the deferred profit-sharing plan and passive income provisions will require further action in the future. What we are saying is that to amend the entire Income Tax Act is an on going process, although this bill represents the most massive change that has ever taken place in our income tax law.

Let us concentrate on the measures which are going to have a much more immediate and pronounced effect on the Canadian people. Members are well aware that with this legislation one million low income persons will be taken off the tax rolls and that 4.7 million more Canadians will have their taxes reduced. Focusing on the individual aspects, we see increased exemption for single persons from $1,000 to $1,500 and for married persons from $2,000 to $2,850. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians 65 and over will get tax relief through the new $650 exemption and removal of the guaranteed income supplement from taxation. There are now 1.7 million old age pensioners in Canada and a substantial number of those will pay less tax because of the provisions of this bill. Among the many advantages to the individual, is the $500 deduction for child care expenses and the deduction of up to 3 per cent of income for employment expenses. This child care benefit is not limited to low income families only, but will be available to any family if the wife chooses to work either to supplement the family income or to pursue a career.

Deductions for medical expenses will be broadened to include care in institutions for the physically or mentally handicapped and equipment or devices prescribed by a doctor. In respect of deductible gifts to charity, the allowance is to be increased from 10 per cent to 20 per cent of the taxpayer's income. One of the government's objectives in this tax reform bill was to make a serious attempt to recognize the growing mobility of Canadians and their changing patterns of daily life. The expense of moving from one job to another or the expenses of a student, upon graduating from university, in moving from the college to a new job will be deductible under this bill. These moving expenses will include a wide range of costs including travel, transport or storage of household goods, the cost of meals and lodging for 15 days or less, and the cost of cancelling a lease or selling a home.

Let us now look at some of the more controversial issues in Bill C-259. What about the concessions given to co-ops, credit unions and caisses populaires? The government has actively communicated with these institutions and has come up with a satisfactory approach to their problems. The capital employed concept has been abandoned and co-operatives will no longer be taxed on income from business with members, which is distributed to members in the form of patronage refunds. The limit of deductibility from patronage dividends therefore has been removed. In its place, the government has proposed a 15 per cent withholding tax on patronage dividends in excess of $100 paid to a member in any year. This tax of course would be refundable to the extent that it exceeded a taxpayer's tax liability.

This new approach will have the following results. Recipients of patronage dividends will be treated as before. If the patronage dividend relates to the recipient's business, it will be included in his income for tax purposes. In other circumstances, it will not be taxed. The withholding of tax by the co-operative will permit the government to administer the system efficiently and yet obtain the appropriate result depending on the character of the patronage dividend in the hands of the recipient. This change will provide substantial relief to co-operatives concerned about their treatment under the new act.

In 1970, there were 2,469 co-operatives in Canada constituting a total membership of 1,690,000. I am sure all hon. members on all sides of the House have received many representations from the local co-operatives in their constituencies. The government has introduced an amendment, the effect of which will be to tax the income of a credit union or caisse populaire at the rate of 25 per cent so long as the reserves in excess of those allowed against income do not exceed 5 per cent of deposits and share capital. This will be accomplished by an adjustment of the small business deduction. This special right to use an effective corporate tax rate of 25 per cent might not in itself be sufficient for small credit unions or caisses populaires which would need a reserve in excess of 5 per cent for financial stability. Accordingly, the small business deduction available to other corporations will continue to apply so that a credit union or caisse populaire can build up $300,000 of reserves out of income taxed at 25 per cent whether or not such reserves exceed 5 per cent of deposits and share capital. The government believes that in this way credit unions and caisses populaires will be able to obtain the appropriate entitlement to the small business deduction, and thereby enjoy the benefit of a 25 per cent rate of tax on an appropriate amount of income. This amendment will affect 5,655,902 members in 4,417 credit unions across Canada.

On the subject of capital gain, surely it is clear that such a tax is needed both because it is fair that a levy should be placed on this income and because the extra revenue will be needed to offset the loss of income from tax reductions in the lower income brackets. However, any gain realized by a taxpayer in selling his home and any gain realized on an item of personal property valued under $1,000 will be exempt. It does not seem too much to ask an individual or a corporation to include one half of capital gains in his income to be taxed at the respective rate, considering all the logical exemptions and concessions which have been made in this regard along with the provision for capital loss deduction. This tax is in effect in every other major western country, and the majority of Canadian people have already expressed their affirmative support on the issue.

Another area of major concern in this bill is the mining industry. We in Canada are well aware of the major contribution that is made by this industry to our national economy. Although the kinds of incentives which have existed in the past are to be changed in the new bill, there are still incentives to ensure that this industry will continue to make its full contribution to our economy. We only have to look back to 1945 and compare the value of the mining industry at that time, when the output was some $500 million as compared with 1970 when it was $5.8 billion, to realize the growth that has taken place. It is expected that this industry will continue to grow and will double in the next ten years. This industry accounts for one-third of Canada's merchandized exports and this takes on added significance because the Canadian economy as a whole is greatly dependent on export trade, as we have learned during these past several months when the United States government imposed a 10 per cent surcharge. Fortunately, this surcharge was not directed primarily at our mineral industry which accounts for 7 per cent of the gross national product.

The proposals which are made in this bill are to continue the automatic percentage depletion allowance until 1976 and then replace it by an earned depletion system. This is done with a view to encouraging companies to continue mining exploration and development. The present three-year tax exemption for new mines will be withdrawn under this bill after 1973, but will be replaced by a system of fast write-offs on assets related to new mines, for example, mining buildings, machinery, equipment and town site facilities. It is also proposed that a federal tax on mining profits be reduced to 25 per cent from the present 40 per cent in 1977 to allow for provincial mining taxes.

Small business will continue to receive special incentives with a low corporation tax of 25 per cent on their first $50,000 of profit. This will be available to Canadian controlled corporations to assist them to grow and create more jobs in our economy. This is actually a $15,000 increase in the allowance on a reduced tax rate from the present tax law of $35,000. Most small businessmen that I have talked with believe that this provision is a most reasonable one.

So, I believe that the course before us this week is to approve this bill in its present form after these many months of continuing debate. The bill represents a balanced attempt to reform our tax system. It provides a capital gains tax at a reduced rate to close many loopholes in the existing tax law and provides a stimulus and incentives to our industries to grow fast enough to produce the 1.4 million jobs that we will require between now and 1975 for our young people entering the labour market. And most of all, it makes provision to give added exemptions to our old age pensioners whom we must provide for in the best possible way.

This bill has reached this stage following one of the most immense consultative processes that has ever been carried out in Canada, from the Royal Commission on Taxation, the Carter Commission, the white paper, further consultations with provincial governments, business, industry and ordinary citizens, to parliamentary committees, one of them travelling across the country. During the past summer our tax experts throughout Canada have had a full two months to study the legislation in detail, and there has been three months of parliamentary debate. The time has come for this Parliament to make a decision and for the representatives of the people of Canada to stand in their place for or against this bill. I intend to stand in my place for the bill.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in the debate, particularly because of the motion that was submitted by my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). However, what concerns me is that I have heard it said time and time again by members on the other side regarding our involvement in this debate that they do not appreciate the role of the opposition on this important matter. I have said continually that it seems to me that members on the other side believe they are the masters of this House and that we are supposed to do as they say. Lately, we have been called the useless backbenchers. It would be well for the members on the other side to be reminded of our role, particularly when it comes to a bill of this magnitude, a bill that supposedly sets the course of Canada's destiny and economic growth. I say "supposedly" because we find that the bill is full of imperfections, and it is our role to give constructive criticism.

Members on the other side have asked on several occasions why we do not submit something and why we do not give them the benefit of our ideas. We know as well as they do that every time we attempt to be constructive with our amendments we are treated with disdain and disregard. This happens not only in the House but in committee of the whole and happened as well in the committee which studied these provisions. I take a very dim view of that, and I resent it when members on the other side tell us continually that we are not submitting reasoned amendments. We are doing so. The government, in its wisdom, believes that we are incompetent and that all of the wisdom in the House is on the other side. Our role is also to make the government behave, and that is becoming extremely difficult these days when we see the arrogance and flippancy coming from the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: What is very important, particularly with respect to this bill, is that we are the watchdogs of the people's interests, and I have said this on a number of occasions. This is our mandate, this is what we have to do. It is not a case of filibustering, it is an attempt to shed light, an attempt to be constructive and an attempt to give the House the benefit of our wisdom. I always say that this is done for the Canadian people, not for myself, not for my party, not for the opposition and not for the Liberals. It would be well for members on the other side to read Sir Kenneth Wheare on the role of the opposition. I was pleased to note that the hon. member who just preceded me was at least relevant. Yesterday we heard the maniacal ravings of several members whose comments were meaningless and irrelevant. They spoke just to berate the opposition and to harass us, and they were supported by asinine interjections from their gleeful but immature supporters.

I am interested in the motion put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre because it affects some five million people. This is where the action is. This is what the Senate Committee on Poverty is all about—five million people who are worried about the steady decrease in the value of the dollar. They are concerned about the cost of living which is continually rising, and all of this when we have a gross national product of $90 billion. Sometimes I wonder why we continue this debate because we have been told—and this is becoming a classical joke around here—that some lawyers would like this bill to be passed immediately because they have found some 145 loopholes in it.

I am interested in the proposal made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre because what he is really talking about is taxing wealth. In his submissions he tried to impress the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) as well as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) himself and all his colleagues on the other side that what we are doing right now is living in the 1920's because, as was pointed out so admirably yesterday—and it was the first time that I heard this brought to the attention of the House—in the late 1920's the exemption for single persons was $1,200 and for married people it was $2,400. Here we are on December 15, 1971 and the exemptions for single persons amount to $1,500 and for married people they are $2,850. What progress is that? It is ridiculous. It is utter nonsense. That is why I believe that there is great merit in the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The motion of the hon. member amends section 117 (1) which, in effect, says that a person who has a taxable income of $500 will pay 17 per cent. What I find so attractive in the motion is that it would take $75 off a person's tax; in other words, he would be paying $10 in tax. Then, it is stated throughout paragraphs (b) to (m) that $75 will be taken off the immediate figure relating to the tax payable in the first instance without the percentage. What it really means is a $75 across the board decrease in taxes. What is important is that it affects those who are most in need. This is why I find this system more attractive than the system which the parliamentary secretary praises so highly, that is the deductions system.

Deductions, with all their merit, do not improve the position of those in the lower income brackets. The parliamentary secretary is interested in the scheme because, if I read Hansard correctly, he says that Carter himself would have liked a system of deductions together with a tax credit scheme. If I am wrong, the parliamentary secretary will correct me, but let him check Hansard. Even Carter found merit in the system. This is why I am interested in this motion. It is a legitimate, sincere attempt to alleviate the suffering of some 5 million people who, because of numerous factors and I do not need to repeat them, are living on or below the poverty line. It would give them some relief. It would also stimulate the economy because of the amount of tax cut involved. But more than that, it is a fair method to approach this very controversial subject. You have it right across the board.

We are legislators, Mr. Speaker, and we are human. Some people may not really believe that we are human. Although perfection is rarely a human quality, one would expect that when a government introduced legislation of the magnitude of this bill, breaking new ground, the bill would be about as perfect as possible. Mr. Speaker, this monstrosity is far from perfect, as the government well knows. This fact is proven by the several amendments it has produced for our consideration and, what is even more astounding, by the announcements that amendments affecting vital portions of it are to be brought in after the bill is passed. This is where I take issue with the government. The government tells us, "Pass the bill and restore confidence in the economy." I ask myself how is this possible? If the minister is going to introduce significant amendments subsequent to the passage of the bill, how in heaven's name can any one know how to face the future? Yet the government has the unmitigated gall to continue to tell us to pass the bill, and that everything will be all right. As my hon. friend from Kent-Essex says, "Pass now and change later." This is a ridiculous approach.

In its arrogance, the government introduced closure. I don't care if anyone wants to call it time allocation. I think that is the wrong expression. It is closure, plain and simple. So far as I am concerned, we did not have the opportunity to discuss this bill in the way that it should have been discussed. We know that a vast number of sections have not been perused by Members of Parliament. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) smiling—

Mr. Mahoney: Why don't you talk about them instead of bellyaching?

Mr. Alexander: —in his usual, genial way. But after that I am afraid I will have to continue to tell him to please be respectful when the hon. member for Hamilton West is speaking. That is as nice a way as I can put it, without having to tell him to shut his mouth, as I did earlier. This was a disgraceful statement for me to make and I apologize for being carried away.

At a time when we should be dealing with legislation that would ensure economic growth, full employment, confidence in the economy, and appreciation of the United States' position regarding its domestic problems, we are called upon to deal with a bill that seemingly ignores all of these things. Such an attitude, which is dangerous and irresponsible, is not acceptable on this side of the House because, primarily, the Canadian people expect and demand more maturity. Such an attitude borders on insanity, and raises doubts about the ability of the government to deal with a matter of such magnitude. The Minister of Finance has urged that we push this bill through because at least many of the sections will not come into effect until 1976. He has also said that none of the important changes come into effect until 1973. Then I ask, what the heck is all the rush about? If many of these sections do not come into force until 1976, and if none of the important changes come into effect until 1973, why all the rush? It is political expediency. That is the reason.

Why not accept the sensible, responsible and reasonable alternative put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), which would solve the problem? Members of the government contend that confidence cannot be built up in the economy if the whole nation is going to be hung up wondering what the government is going to do. Their philosophy is trial by error. They say, "Let us try it. If it is an error, we will fix it up." Mr. Speaker, that is no good. As the Leader of the Opposition said, we need time to study and debate the more incomprehensible sections of this monstrosity of imperfection. I would like to emphasize that the bill is a monstrosity of imperfection, and to realize that one only needed to listen to the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) read one little subclause which took him about three minutes to read. I doubt if any member of the House understood it as he was reading it, or would be able to understand it even after studying it for an hour or two hours. It is no wonder that tax lawyers say they have already discovered 141 loopholes in the bill. And, Mr. Speaker, they have just started to study it. Why the rush?

Mr. Kaplan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Alexander: There will be no questions from that side and no answers from this side because of the irresponsible attitude you people took this afternoon.

Mr. Mahoney: We want to discuss the bill. We haven't much time, Let's talk about the bill.

Mr. Alexander: You are testing my patience. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has a loveable character, but he is testing my patience.

Mr. Crouse: There is a little too much arrogance from that quarter.

Mr. Alexander: This bill is beyond the immediate mental digestive system not only of Members of Parliament but also of tax accountants, lawyers, businessmen, and all those whom the bill directly affects, namely, the Canadian people. But the government is determined to ram the bill down our throats in the same manner as Christmas turkeys are being force fed for the holiday table. It is a shame, Mr. Speaker.

What could happen if the manufacturers of airplanes and motor vehicles accepted this imperfection theory? We owe them undying gratitude for the fact they do not take that view. What would happen if they hurried something into production knowing it was imperfect? Such an attitude is unacceptable, dangerous and irresponsible. Yet that is the attitude the government wants opposition parties to accept. The government wants us to pass something that is imperfect, something that is dangerous, something that is unknown, the end result of which is beyond anyone's comprehension. Then the government says, "When we have tested it out on the Canadian people"—it is a terrible thing to use the Canadian people as guinea pigs—"we will see just what we can do in order to alleviate their suffering." The government says, "Damn the consequences; pass the bill; let the Canadian people be the guinea pigs."

The other day the Minister of Finance said:

> The only way imperfections in this legislation will come to light is through the actual experience of taxpayers and their advisers reading and using the new act in relation to particular transactions and situations.

That is a terrible thing to tell the Canadian people. I know we are not perfect because we are human but, as I said earlier, the Canadian people expect the government to bring in something more nearly perfect than this. The proof is in the pudding. I forget how many amendments the government has already introduced. I think there were 135, and members opposite can check me if I am wrong. How many more amendments will we get in January? How many more amendments will the other place bring in, if, in fact, it is allowed to bring in any? What nonsense is this, Mr. Speaker? The government says we do not have to be concerned about many of these sections until 1976, and that we do not have to be bothered with many of the important ones until 1973. The theme of my presentation this afternoon is to ask why the rush, Mr. Speaker?

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Haidasz: Lower the taxes as of January 1, 1972.

Mr. Alexander: If the Liberal government were really concerned about the deleterious effects of poverty, they would not have removed the cost of living escalator clause from the Old Age Security Act last winter. They would have inserted an escalator clause in such legislation as unemployment insurance and FISP, and they would have made allowances for an inflationary upswing to be reflected in personal tax exemptions. The government profits by inflation; poor people lose. At no time has the Liberal government seriously tried to right that imbalance and they are not doing it now. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is trying to correct that imbalance. The government says something about getting the bill passed so that we can give the poor people a break. If a man on the poverty line gets an $8 break that does not help much when he is facing inflation and the high cost of living with the reduced value of the dollar. But the government goes around spreading that false propaganda.

Reuben Baetz pointed out to the annual meeting of the Canadian Council on Social Development recently that:

> An unfair taxation system can give to the poor with one hand through transfer payments, and take away from their already inadequate income with the other.

The present tax reform bill does not remove the unfairness to which Mr. Baetz refers. I like this amendment because it shows some credible movement by the opposition to correct the situation. We still have people being forced to pay tax on incomes well below the generally accepted standards. If we are going to beat this problem of poverty, surely we have to be more credible than this government is attempting to be. What progress is there in having exemptions of $1,500 single and $2,850 married in 1971 when we had the same thing in 1920? It is a retrograde step. The renegade report on poverty has said that 54 per cent of the income of poor people goes in payment of taxes, direct and indirect. When social security contributions are included it becomes 60 per cent of income. By comparison, those with incomes over $10,000 pay only between 37 and 38 per cent of their income in those same taxes. The tax reform bill does not even begin to remedy these anomalies.

There are a lot of good things in this bill but the government wants to railroad it through. They have talked about 50 days of debate but surely, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have to answer for this imperfect piece of legislation in another five or six months. I do not understand the rush when at the same time the United States is injuriously affecting us by the monetary policy to which we do not have the answer.

Mr. Gillespie: Slow down.

Mr. Alexander: That is the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie). It is amazing how these ministers suddenly become experts. Something tells me that when the plug is pulled a lot of my friends over there will not be back.

Mr. Lefebvre: Don't look at me!

Mr. Alexander: Your greatest contribution has already been made. These basic exemptions which are raised from $1,000 to $1,500 for a single person and to $2,850 for a married couple do absolutely nothing for the taxpayer.

An hon. Member: Speak up, I can't hear you.

Mr. Alexander: Let me read the balance of this, Mr. Speaker. I only have three or four minutes left and in this way I will be able to put my remarks on the record. These exemptions will not even give the poor the same benefits from personal income tax exemptions that they had in 1949, for inflation has eroded more than the extra dollars they have been granted as tax exemptions in the intervening years. If the personal exemptions had been increased solely to match the increase in the consumer price index since 1969, personal exemptions would now stand at over $1,700 for a single person and more than $3,400 for a married couple. Through these changed exemptions, then, the position of the poor will not even be restored to its 1949 state, let alone be improved.

The erosion of the benefits of personal income tax exemptions through inflation has been pointed out frequently. I have often listened to members of the government and I quote the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) who on June 22, 1971 said:

> —the government has done everything it can in the way of tax reform with respect to poverty—What we have done is to assure that virtually no one who can be described as being in a condition of poverty has to pay income tax.

It does not take much knowledge of poverty in Canada to realize that these claims are completely erroneous. The income tax exemptions that are to become effective in 1972 do not even reach the Economic Council of Canada's poverty line for 1969. To see this, it is only necessary to turn to Table 5 of the Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation: a family of four with an income of less than $4,420 is just under the 1969 poverty line, yet a family of four with an income of just $4,000 in 1972 will pay $73 in tax. Now, we are talking about poor people. The new exemption levels are also below many social assistance standards.

I could go on and on but I shall conclude by saying that we all want tax reform which does not stifle a person's initiative and does not stifle economic growth. In this bill we do not have it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has proposed a motion that would give some credible alternative with which to attack poverty—perhaps a person with a taxable income would pay $10 on $5,000 rather than $85. Surely, all men with sincerity and concern in their hearts can support this as I do not have any hesitation in supporting the motion of my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

CANADA

15 December 1971

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable W. F. Spence, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 15th day of December, at 5:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir, Your obedient servant,

Louis Fremont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

[English]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) p. 10464.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, there should not be anyone in this House who is not prepared to accept the amendment introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It was a pleasure to listen to the speech of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), and I think the points he made were of concern to everyone in this country. I am sure that everybody is concerned about reducing the burden of taxation of low income Canadians. In many cases it appears that this government is only interested in saying "Merry Christmas" to them and forgetting about the consequences which may flow from the measure. I think it would like to regard low income Canadians as invisible citizens, so that it would not have to recognize their problems.

Yesterday was a banner day in the House of Commons. The hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Roberts) stood in his place and cried about the type of reporting carried on by the various newspapers across the country. The Globe and Mail for December 13 carries this report about what the hon. member for York Simcoe said at Thunder Bay:

> Mr. Roberts recalled the long wrangle over tax reform that culminated last week in passage of the new tax legislation under closure, and said that it does not represent real tax reform at all. He said the Government has no concept of what sort of economy or industrial base it wants 10 years from now, and without that larger picture, real reform is not possible.
> He said the same thing applies to the Competition Act and the development of policy on foreign investment.

I think that journalists should investigate to ascertain if these statements appearing in the Globe and Mail were actually uttered. Were these statements appearing under the by-line of Globe and Mail reporter, John Slinger, actually made at Thunder Bay, because I cannot disagree with the hon. member opposite in any way. I was surprised yesterday to see the hon. member stand up in the House and cry for about 15 minutes over something that was reported in the press. As a rule, when people spend that much time crying over something appearing in the press, there is more truth than fiction in the press report. It was most unfortunate seeing the hon. member crying and the blood running all over the nice green carpet. Somewhere, somebody must have gored him. Possibly he is a little worried about his present position as parliamentary secretary.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would mean, if accepted, that people with taxable incomes of $500 would pay about $10 in income tax, as opposed to the $85 that they will pay under the government's proposal. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) will be reasonable. If this amendment is accepted, many people in his constituency will be affected. If the House accepts this amendment, we shall not need to debate it any further and we could move on to more important items. Perhaps the government will wish to introduce some more amendments. If the parliamentary secretary will announce that the government will accept this amendment, we could dispose of this item and go on to debate something else.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: He is going to accept; he is going to accept.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance rises on a point of order.

Mr. Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would like to indicate the additional amendment he has in mind that would be more important than the one before the House now involving a half million dollar revenue reduction.

Mr. Skoberg: Are the many thousands of people in Canada who would be affected not important? Remember, the government would be doing this just before Christmas. We, on this side of the House, think that the amendment, if accepted, would bring about true reductions in the taxes of taxpayers. This would be a progressive measure. The income tax law would become more progressive. People earning lower incomes would pay less tax, no matter which way you look at it.

I admit that there are certain areas the parliamentary secretary is prepared to look at; I give him due credit for that, and for looking at one area which I shall mention shortly. However, unless he gives consideration to people who most urgently need it, he will be merely playing the big money game. So far, little consideration has been given in this taxation proposal to some people. I am sure that there is no need for me to expand further on the points which have been ably made by my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre as well as by other members who have spoken about this type of tax reform. Many of us agree that the present system really will not bring about tax reform. We suggest that laws and regulations must be framed to protect the individual, and our aim should be to bring about equity in taxation. The parliamentary secretary believes in playing with words and figures, as if that will bring about equity in taxation. Many of us do not think it will bring about reform.

An hon. member yesterday or the day before talked about the need for interpretive regulations. Yesterday, as well, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that a decision on foreign ownership was in the making or available, and that the government would introduce a policy in this regard. If the cabinet has made such a decision, it certainly has not been made public. We heard hon. members opposite talking about interpretive regulations. They would be, so to speak, the rules of the game, because without such interpretive regulations the vast number of pages of the bill before us would mean absolutely nothing. So far as I am aware, those interpretive regulations have not been introduced.

If one looks at the transcript of the hearings of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee of the other place, one will see that over there they have been able to get to the Minister of Finance so to speak and do a little horse-trading. If the people of Canada had realized that this type of horse-trading had taken place, possibly they would have asked the other place to give consideration to special items that the people may wish to see passed. According to the transcript of the December 13 hearing of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee of the other place, the Minister of Finance, after squirming somewhat, finally had to admit that the government contemplated bringing in further amendments after the beginning of the new year and that these would meet some of the concerns of certain people. However, on examining more closely the December 13 transcript, I wonder whether any really worth-while and meaningful debate has gone on in the other place on this subject. Have the concerns of people on the subject of tax reform really been considered? Also, it will be interesting to see whether the debate in the other place after Friday lasts one day, or perhaps two days. Really, this is just a variation of the old horse-trading game. The minister is playing Russian roulette. He is holding a revolver, and one chamber is loaded. I think he is wondering whether he should pull the trigger and risk firing the gun. It will be strange to see what happens over there.

I agree that we can accept many parts of this bill. Naturally, there have been improvements in many areas. Nevertheless, the people I have heard from and people who have written letters still think that the public has not been adequately informed of the nature of the bill. Many do not know of the adverse effects it will have upon the individual, upon groups and on corporations. Since the government has decided to use closure, the public will never know the truth about the bill until it is too late. A credible government knows that it must be concerned about the public. The people ought to have the opportunity of knowing what the bill is all about and, in particular, what the amendments to the bill are all about. These amendments go to the very guts of the bill. Unfortunately, the public has not been adequately informed about the effects of many areas of this bill.

The people ought to have been informed, but they have not been. At the very time when this nation could be and should be one of the richest nations in the world, and when it is in a position to provide for decent living standards for all in Canada, the government has refused to recognize that basic exemptions ought to be increased and that the tax credit system ought to be adopted. My colleague from Winnipeg North Centre spoke on this yesterday. The average taxpayer is chiefly concerned about certain real, practical problems, and these are the areas to which I should like to refer briefly this afternoon. It is in this connection, I believe, that the government should have acknowledged there was a reasonable basis to the arguments put forward from this side of the House and that there was certainly room for improvement. For example, the bill still allows for only $150 or 3 per cent of a taxpayer's aggregate income with respect to tools used in the course of employment, and so on. Naturally, I shall not attempt to discuss the various sections in detail on third reading. But surely the government could have raised the allowance to $500 at least. We all know that $150 is a mere token. At one time I thought we had succeeded in getting through to the parliamentary secretary—that we had been able to impress on him the importance of making the allowance $500 instead of the measly token figure which has been adopted.

I would be remiss if I did not congratulate the parliamentary secretary and those responsible in the department for amending the bill so as to make better provision for certain railway employees whose work takes them away from their homes or home terminals. Those affected will be very pleased to know that this amendment has been brought in and accepted, particularly since they have not enjoyed the benefit of any remission of taxation in this area whereas other people in similar situations have. The point has been a most contentious one for many years and again I congratulate the minister, the parliamentary secretary and his officials for bringing in this amendment, at least.

We sought to impress upon the government that there were still many people who did not receive the benefits of tax exemptions to which they are really entitled. They include carpenters, repair men and virtually all those who are obliged to travel long distances to obtain or retain employment. Whatever may have been the case in the past, the fact is that today a great many people have no choice but to travel long distances to obtain employment or keep the employment they have, due to seniority clauses and so on. The parliamentary secretary suggested that the collective bargaining approach might be used to place these people in a more equitable position. He said the fact that people lived miles outside a city and had to drive long distances to work did not mean their transportation costs should be allowed as deductible expenses. The hon. gentleman failed to realize that today large numbers of people have no idea how long a particular job will last. They cannot rely upon employment being available to them at the same place week after week. Does he consider that they should pack up and move every time they obtain new employment so as to be near their place of work? The whole subject of the mobility of labour, and mobility grants under certain conditions, would need to be re-examined. We in this party suggested that the type of transportation costs to which I have referred should be allowable for deduction, certain safeguards having been provided. And I am sure regulations could be devised so as to prevent a misuse of this concession, though I recognize this must be one of the aspects about which the government is concerned.

When we are considering the subject of allowable expenses, we ought not to overlook the important part played by individual taxation offices across Canada. The trouble is there is no set standard as far as these offices are concerned. To support this contention I need do no more than quote briefly from a letter which my hon. friend from Temiskaming (Mr. Peters) has received from Capreol. The letter points out that in the Capreol area a flat arbitrary maximum allowable rate of $1.75 per meal has been set by the local taxation office. This rate per meal has been in effect for several years without regard to the substantial increase which has taken place in the cost of living. The writer of this letter goes on to say:

> It is an established fact that the total increased cost of living in the north with respect to housing, fuel, food, clothing, etc. is greater than it is elsewhere. This total extra cost is reflected in the price of food purchases and restaurant meals at away from home terminals. Merchants and restaurateurs in the north of necessity base their prices on these total higher costs, not merely on the higher food prices.

The situation would not be so bad were it not for the fact that the Department of National Revenue invariably uses a double standard when assessing allowable deductions for meals. Invariably one rate is set for business people or executive types and another for the men in overalls. I am pleased to note that provision is now being made for exemptions of this type affecting broader classes of taxpayers. However, the fact remains that it is necessary to bring the district taxation offices into the picture, instructing them to set a basic rate which is at least an acceptable one, and abandon the double standard which they have been using in the past.

Another point on which a good deal of concern has been expressed relates to severance pay and its treatment by taxation officers. I raised this matter in the House, and the parliamentary secretary was good enough to acknowledge it, as reported at page 9217 of Hansard. He said, and rightly so:

Ordinarily severance pay is regarded as income under the Income Tax Act, and as such should be included in the computation of income. I am aware that in certain cases special regulations or legislation have been passed, but under the general income tax law this is regarded as income from an employment and is therefore included as taxable income in the year in which it was received.

There is probably no room for argument as to the interpretation which the parliamentary secretary placed on this section of the act. At the same time, he did admit that certain regulations have been passed which take care of certain of the difficulties which arise in its administration. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he let the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) know that thousands of people across this land today are being subjected to the worst type of discrimination as far as severance pay is concerned. They are people who have built up some type of nest egg, whether as a result of negotiation or as a matter of arrangement between themselves and their employers, in the belief that it would provide them with funds for retraining, if that should become necessary, or at least for enabling them to live until they can get back again into employment. Unfortunately, the parliamentary secretary may not be able to convince the minister that severance pay should not be regarded as earnings—that it should be considered, really, not as a deferred wage, but as a pension. Right now, people are using up their severance pay before they can draw one nickel in unemployment insurance benefit. Many go for a year or more without the benefit of the unemployment insurance payments to which they are really entitled.

I should like to conclude by saying all of us in this corner of the House believe that the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre is a realistic one. It is not an idealistic proposal, but a realistic effort to bring about a needed reform. Tax credits can be used to the benefit of the people of this nation. They can be used in such a way as to ensure a more equitable distribution of wealth, a more equitable system of taxation. I believe that if the government would really live up to what it believed to be right, deep down, and not merely listen to what the economists say, they would accept the amendment, because it is a just one, intended to bring about genuine reform instead of merely following the old rhetoric we have heard so often.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is a most happy occasion for me to participate in the debate with such a genial audience across the way. I am happy to take part in the discussion in this final stage as we enter third reading, partly because, as a member of the finance committee, I have been involved in this exercise right from the beginning. I should like formally to record my views with respect to two members who served on the committee, two members that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) singled out when he introduced the debate on third reading. He referred to the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont), who was chairman of our committee, a man whose patience, judgment, stamina, and above all good sense, carried us through a difficult, complicated and lengthy process. The other member he singled out was his own parliamentary secretary—not unnaturally—the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney).

• (4:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member for Calgary South, as those of us who have participated in this debate since September will recognize, has carried this difficult, complicated bill through the House with considerable ability. What I should like to deal with in my remarks this evening are some of the things that are being said by members of the opposition. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) presented what has become or is becoming one of the major tactical positions taken by the opposition. The question he posed was: Why the rush?

In dealing with this question, I should like briefly to review some of the tactics opposition critics have used over the course of this lengthy process, one which started in this House of Commons over two years ago. For those who want to carry it back beyond that period outside of Parliament, it was nine years ago when the Carter commission was formed. However, I want to deal in my remarks only with the process as it relates to the House of Commons itself. I think we should recognize the tactics of the opposition for what they are. They have changed a number of times over the course of this two-year process, and it might be worth examining and considering them, and perhaps exposing them for what they are. The first tactic seemed to be, as I reflected on the record and consulted my notes, one of confusing the public, of suggesting that the white paper was a bill. The tactic was to get people to write in saying "Withdraw the bill". They were speaking of the white paper as if it were a bill.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), perhaps inadvertently, contributed to my mind to this particular suspicion. He said "Withdraw the white paper". At the same time I am happy to note that his chief financial critic, who was a hard working member of the committee, was not so taken in: he recognized that the white paper was a white paper, and that the process of white paper discussion was to put it out to the public and to listen to the views of the public and of others. But the initial basic ploy was to suggest that this was the fixed position of the government on tax reform, that in effect it was a draft bill that was unlikely to be changed in any important detail.

That was the position of the Conservative opposition for most of early 1970 and mid-1970. Then the tactic changed, perhaps partly because of the leadership given by their chief financial critic, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He recognized the white paper as a process—perhaps not immediately; he was a little slow on the uptake, but he was very fast for the chief financial critic. It seemed to me that he then started to push the idea that the government was going to try to ram this thing through. Getting away from the confusion tactic we now get to the ramming through tactic. His leader picked this one up, and I think one might say that his leader has preempted the ram. I think we might describe it as the Stanfield ram.

I shall have more to say about the Stanfield ram, but over and over again we have been hearing this expression about the government trying to ram things through. I remember the hon. member for Edmonton West saying on one occasion to the committee, when the committee decided that it was time to bring its hearings to some sort of orderly close, that we were trying to ram things through. The hon. member will remember that we started our meetings early in the year. The Minister of Finance appeared before the committee, as I recall it, on January 15. He again started to accuse the committee of ramming something through when we decided that the public hearings before the committee should terminate early in July.

Mr. Danforth: When the government decided, not the committee.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The message came through.

Mr. Gillespie: That was the tactic, but it was a false tactic. Let us look at the record for a moment. I know many hon. members have made this point, but I think it is worth making again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I hesitate to interrupt the minister, mainly because I should have said this while the hon. member for Moose Jaw was speaking, but I think I should invite hon. members who are participating or who will participate in the debate to read the remarks in Hansard of Mr. Speaker while he was in the Chair yesterday, as reported at pages 10470, 10471, 10472 and 10473, at which time he invited hon. members to confine their remarks as closely as possible to the amendment that is before the House at this time.

I am sure all hon. members will agree with me when I say that the rule of relevancy has not been closely applied by the Chair either in the House or in committee during this debate. But we have now reached third reading, having already had a two hour general debate on the motion. An amendment has been voted on and there is now before the House another amendment. If hon. members are going to reopen the general debate on the bill every time an amendment is moved, this will make it very difficult for the Chair to apply the rule of relevancy. Since I did not bring this point to the attention of other members when they went beyond the scope of the bill the Chair does not want to be unfair to the minister, but I do think that my remarks should be taken as an invitation to be relevant.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, in your own inimitable way you have put the point gently and forcefully and I, of course respect your direction in this regard. Because I had not fully developed my remarks, perhaps I might have led you to believe that I was not keeping to the point. Let me hasten to add that I am very much concerned with the amendment and with the position taken by the opposition, as summed up in the words of the hon. member for Hamilton West—"Why the rush?" What I want to try to do is to deal with that because it does bear directly on the question whether this bill should be referred back to committee of the whole House or rather should be finally dealt with on third reading. Therefore, may I just continue to highlight very briefly the record. I mentioned that the hon. member for Edmonton West stated we were trying to ram things through in 1970.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

• (4.30 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: Irrelevant, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillespie: No, it is not. He found difficulty in coming to terms with the committee report. He did not know whether to vote for it or not. He decided not to. He rushed to a press conference in Victoria and said this was all a sham. Those are his words. He said that the government had made up its mind. That was over a year ago.

Mr. Paproski: Those are falsehoods.

Mr. Gillespie: They are not. They are on the record. The point I am trying to make is that throughout this whole debate the opposition tactic has been that "the government is trying to railroad this through. Give us more time. Let's go back and look at it in detail". I hope to expose some of the transparency of this position in some of my later remarks.

The budget debate last June took place some eight months after the committee filed its report in the House. There had been considerable time taken by various interests throughout the nation to put their points to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). When we got into the debate, we saw the opposition again reveal its dilemma. They were not sure whether they should react favourably to the bill that was presented to the House in June and take credit for the changes in it or whether they should criticize it. Those of us who were sitting on this side of the House that day well remember the consternation on the faces of members opposite. They wondered what they should do and how they should react. The summer recess definitely saved them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gillespie: So much did they take shelter in the summer recess that some of them even forgot to look at the bill. Some even suggested they did not receive the bill on July 12.

Mr. Danforth: That is correct; only the government members received it then.

Mr. Gillespie: Check the record. It was delivered to the offices of your leader and your research staff on July 12. The truth hurts.

Mr. Paproski: If the shoe fits, you know what.

Mr. Gillespie: When they saw the bill last June, the changes effected in it and saw the influence which the committee had on the bill, they worried because the participatory process was being legitimatized. Participation is not part of the character of the official opposition. It is not part of their tradition. The participatory process is not a part of their tradition.

Mr. Paproski: You tell that to the people in the next election.

Mr. Gillespie: I am delighted to see members opposite show some interest in my remarks. They have come to life.

Mr. Paproski: Who wrote this stuff? Was it you, Hoot?

Mr. Gillespie: The details of the bill were made clear in June of last year, over six months ago. The bill was published and distributed on July 12.

Mr. Danforth: To the government members.

Mr. Gillespie: What did the Conservative members say when they came back in September? They said we were going to ram it through. The Stanfield ram came out to lead the flock.

Mr. Paproski: That is great stuff. We will use that in the next election.

Mr. Gillespie: You might need it. You may need more than that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is rehearsing as a straight man for tonight.

Mr. Gillespie: What about this debate? By Friday we will have spent over 50 days of parliamentary time and yet we are accused of ramming it through. We spent 12 days on second reading and 32 days in committee of the whole and they want to send it back to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gillespie: That does not include the six days we spent on the budget debate last June. I think this brief review of the record shows the opposition tactics for what they are. They have been aimed at trying to embarrass this government, to build up some concern, to avoid the substance of the bill and to suggest that the government is ramming it through with undue haste.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Gillespie: According to the tacticians opposite, that is bound to create concern. The tacticians opposite also hope to cover up the disagreements within their own party.

Mr. Paproski: Irrelevant, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillespie: How do you feel about the capital gains tax?

Mr. Paproski: Who?

Mr. Gillespie: You. This man is behind his leader. His leader supports the principles of the capital gains tax.

Mr. Paproski: You are right.

Mr. Gillespie: All members of the Conservative party do not support it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gillespie: Are you telling me that they all support it? The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) asked, why the rush? He demonstrated more stamina by speaking for 20 minutes than he did perceptiveness. He is known for his persuasive powers, but they did not come through this afternoon. Nor have the persuasive powers come through from the other side because, Mr. Speaker, the tactic has been wrong. The tactic too often has been cynical. It has been aimed at creating uncertainty rather than diminishing it. A week ago, when the Leader of the Opposition brought forth his spit proclamation—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Spit it out.

Mr. Gillespie: —split proclamation amendment. The split personality of the opposition has bothered me. He said, as recorded at page 10,272 of Hansard:

> I agree that what I am proposing will involve some uncertainty in the business world and among taxpayers as to what will eventually be worked out and adopted as a long-range tax plan for this country.

Mr. Béchard: Who said that?

Mr. Gillespie: That was a statement by the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Danforth: I challenge the hon. member to read it in context.

Mr. Gillespie: I read it. He acknowledged there will be uncertainty until this bill is passed. He then went on to say his particular provision would create uncertainty.

Mr. Mahoney: Irresponsible.

Mr. Gillespie: On Wednesday, December 8, at 3.25 p.m., the Leader of the Opposition moved his split-the-bill amendment. It was a complicated idea, Mr. Speaker. One of the things he wanted this House to do was keep the federal government in the estate tax field. This was quite clear to those who have read the record. What did he do at 8.25 p.m.? He stood up and voted that estate taxes be eliminated as a federal responsibility.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Who did that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Again I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I hesitate because I should have done it before when previous speakers were talking. Of course I admit that the minister did not have time to follow my advice in respect of reading what Mr. Speaker said yesterday about the rules of relevancy. The minister, however, is really placing the Chair in a very embarrassing position because other speakers will come along and ask for lenience. Then, it will be impossible to apply the rules of relevancy. At this time the debate is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and is related only to personal income tax. I do not wish to be unfair, but I do not think the minister has said one word about the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Sit down big mouth.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, concerning the remarks you have just made in respect of the ruling of Mr. Speaker yesterday, it is true that the amendment now before us refers to personal income tax and exemptions, but the motion is a motion to refer the entire bill back. The motion to refer the entire bill back would affect every single section of the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Come on.

Mr. Danforth: Come on.

Mr. Deachman: What we are arguing, Mr. Speaker, is the question of whether the whole bill should stay before us, including that section.

Mr. Paproski: You are only a whip. What do you want to do, take over the Chair?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the point made by the chief government whip, who now sets himself up as an aspiring arbiter of the rules, I suggest this hon. member should know better. It is elementary that a motion of referral back with a direction to reconsider a particular clause contains a limitation on the committee of the whole to consider the clause in question only and nothing else. The whole thing is a referral back with that particular question to be considered. The hon. member does not know the form of a third reading motion. If he wished to understand the procedure, all he would have to do would be to study the rules. Then, he would learn just what is meant by this procedure. I would certainly help and assist him in any way. This is an invitation to the minister to reconsider section 117. That is the sole purpose of the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Paproski: How do you like that, Deak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I do not wish to become involved in a debate with hon. members on the rules. However, I might be permitted to say that the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman) might be relevant in his mind, but I should point out to him that the Chair has another interpretation of the rules of the House. I might return at this time to the paragraph the hon. member did not have time to read from the remarks of Mr. Speaker yesterday. As recorded at page 10471 of Hansard Mr. Speaker said:

> I agree with the hon. member in principle, but yesterday when we commenced debate on third reading of this bill an amendment was moved. It had to do with farming problems. Some speeches made after that amendment was moved made very few references, if any, to the amendment. It may be that hon. members who at that time took part in the debate on third reading should have tried to limit themselves to the amendment before the House. I repeat that that is a rule of the House. Debate should be relevant.

This might also be relevant:

> It is difficult for the Chair to ask hon. members to respect this rule when some of the senior members on both sides of the House do not necessarily do what they should and follow this rule in practice. I invite hon. members to bear this in mind and to get to the point and refer to the amendment which is before us.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I apologize if I have appeared to take liberties with the interpretation you have placed on this. I have been concerned—and this is the main thrust of my remarks—that we should proceed to the conclusion of this debate on the amendment which asks that the bill be referred back. Tax credits and higher exemptions are things which concern me. I was going to lead up to this in my final remarks. What I was attempting to show was that the tactics with regard to the criticism of the bill have been tactics rather than things of substance.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You were not here. How would you know.

Mr. Gillespie: That is an interesting statement from the chief financial critic who has come to life again. I think one thing we should consider in this connection is the myth which I believe has been perpetrated, I suspect inadvertently but with the best intentions. The myth is that everybody can be a tax expert. Any member of this House who was a member of the House of Commons finance committee would know that this is patently untrue. I know the hon. member for Edmonton West would recognize this. This is one of the reasons the finance committee sought the advice of as many experts as it could obtain. It had before it something like 15 experts, professional consultants, economists, lawyers and accountants. One thing which came through very clearly in our discussions I believe was that there were some persons in the field of tax law, particularly international law, who had been practising for 20 years who did not feel they knew all the answers even after 20 years.

Mr. Danforth: But the government does in 50 days.

Mr. Gillespie: Yet hon. members opposite suggest that everybody in this House can be an expert, and that all they have to do is listen carefully to a general statement and then find the answer to a specific provision.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But they tell us it is the law.

Mr. Gillespie: I have listened to and have read many of the comments concerning the area of tax credit versus higher tax exemptions. I am satisfied that the proposals in this bill are the right ones, they are very significant improvements as far as our tax laws are concerned. Hon. members opposite will recognize that when a million taxpayers are removed from the tax rolls, the changes have to be significant.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: You have no choice.

Mr. Gillespie: They will recognize that when, nearly five million Canadians are going to pay lower taxes, those exemption levels have to be significant.

Mr. Paproski: Shame on you.

Mr. Gillespie: I think that the time has come to proceed to third reading, to dispose of the amendment before us, and to recognize that this House of Commons can consider, can debate, but the decision must be taken by the government. This government was elected to take decisions. Hon. members opposite were not elected to take decisions. Their role is to consider, to suggest and, where they see appropriate, to delay, but not to obstruct. Their role is to illuminate but not to obstruct. Our responsibility as the government is to bring this debate and this issue to a close decisively, but at the same time to provide sufficient opportunity for members opposite to have their say.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Paproski: By applying closure.

Mr. Gillespie: I suggest that after two years of parliamentary concern with this matter, after the House of Commons Committee has seen nearly a thousand briefs—

An hon. Member: But not on this bill.

Mr. Gillespie: —and has travelled from coast to coast, after having had this bill before us for six months and after having spent the equivalent of 50 days of parliamentary time, the time has come to dispose of this amendment, to vote it down, and to decide on the new bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That speech will never get you a promotion.

Mr. Gibson: We do not need a promotion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it would seem that private discussions are now over.

We are now debating Bill C-259 on tax reform at the third reading stage. In my opinion, and in the opinion of many people we have approached, this is the most badly drafted bill ever presented to this House. So much so that the minister himself has had to bring a host of corrections and amendments even before the committee of the whole stage.

This bill has been so badly drafted the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has had to promise the Senate that amendments will be proposed early in the next session. Even though the bill is not passed, the minister already recognized that amendments were required.

So, Mr. Speaker, how could accountants, lawyers, businessmen and individuals understand this bill?

Under the previous legislation, many people had difficulty getting the abatements they were entitled to or were penalized because they did not fully understand the legislation. I say that if this bill in its present wording goes through and remains in force for at least the next ten years, the Canadian taxpayers will run into almost insuperable difficulties.

We are now considering an amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to refer the bill back to the committee of the whole House for the purpose of improving a part of the bill concerning the taxpayer who always was the most neglected in public administration, the labourer. That can apply also to other workers.

I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is right when he asks for a thorough examination of that section of the bill in order to bring corrections where necessary and we approve of that. However, we of the Social Credit Party believe that the scope of the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre is not wide enough and we intend to move and amendment to another section of the bill that also concerns the Canadians workers, so as to allow more equitable deductions for their expenses.

I shall speak about that later on, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying that the bill was very complex and that its drafting has been slipshod. I am not the only one to think so.

I have before me a brief submitted by the Canadian Association of Pulp and Paper Manufacturers in which, at the very beginning, they have this to say regarding Bill C-259. I quote:

> Its wording is very difficult and it is full of new concepts and definitions.

In short, Mr. Speaker, it is for all practical purposes a new legislation which the government will have to implement and the Canadian taxpayer to put up with. Tax experts will have to study it for several months before they can understand its effects and discover all the implications of its numerous sections.

Tax experts themselves—and not "fiscal experts" as they were referred to by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) a few days ago—will have to spend several months studying and understanding every aspect of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comparison between this bill and the Unemployment Insurance bill passed some time ago and which has been considerably amended since then.

When that bill was passed, Mr. Speaker, high officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission encountered difficulty in understanding it and were unable to explain its implications.

• (5:00 p.m.)

It was necessary in all stages as the problem arose for Unemployment Insurance Commission officials to give their opinion and try to interpret this act. Several months after its implementation those officials admit that they are far from understanding fully the act which is a great deal less voluminous than Bill C-259.

So the accountants who will be called upon to help taxpayers, and businessmen, fill out their income tax returns will have, in the very first month following the implementation of this act, to start preparing their income tax returns for spring of 1972. How will they be able to come out of it?

It has been reported—and the Senate already knows about it—that income tax return forms for fiscal year 1971 are already available when the new act has not been even passed, and this allegation has yet to be denied.

Mr. Speaker, I think we were right in our opposition to the guillotine and we do not accept the accusations laid by the government to the effect that the opposition deliberately delayed the study of this bill.

I continue quoting from the brief submitted by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Producers Association:

> It is difficult to imagine how members of Parliament with their many other responsibilities can appreciate the effects of the proposed reforms in the few weeks they will have to study it.

Now, these businessmen are worrying about the way hon. members can, in a few weeks only, digest all the aspects of this new legislation.

In the committee of the whole, when the closure rule was applied, hon. members realized that most clauses of this bill had not even been considered.

We are faced with a high-gear implementation that we cannot accept without protest, and my colleague from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) was right in saying a few days ago that Bill C-259 should normally have been divided in ten parts. Since we devoted a good many days to the study of such a huge bill, nobody can blame us.

Mr. Speaker, as early as 1964, when the tax reform was under way, people worried about its results. An editorial written by Maurice Huot in Le Droit of Ottawa reported as follows:

> Say what you will, but the only way for a taxpayer to know whether his country, his province or his municipality is well managed is to figure out how much he pays out in taxes of all kinds. Even if attempts are made to lull him to sleep with high sounding words and empty slogans fed from public platforms in times of election, the fact remains that as long as the man on the street is being taxed hand over fist he will be right in having doubts about the efficient administration of the elected.

Mr. Speaker, as early as 1964, people worried about the effects of this tax reform which is about to be implemented.

Canadians in all walks of life are over burdened by taxes and levies of every description and they cannot bear them anymore. The present changes in the tax legislation are only meant to boost government revenue. It has been stated in studies made elsewhere that this reform will bring from $600 million to $1 billion more to the government. Who will bear the costs? The Canadian taxpayer or consumer, because taxes are always levied on workers.

For example, the capital gains tax which is supposed to be imposed on corporations will ultimately be paid by consumers under the form of increased prices which will worsen the inflationary pressure. A company can operate or survive if it succeeds in including in the price of its products all its costs, otherwise it goes bankrupt. If some cost is not included in prices the business becomes poorer and eventually goes under.

It is impossible to effectively tax a producer of the capitalist type, because his existence as a producer depends on his ability to pass on to the consumer all costs arising from the production in his firm.

Firms will tend to inflate their costs in proportion to the additional taxes that this government will inflict upon them.

It is unthinkable to believe that an unfair system will be improved by measures which will make it still more unfair.

Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one to think this way. In an editorial, on Quebec television, this was stated on November 13, 1969:

> To aim at fair taxation is all right—to achieve it is, however, another thing. If you admit, at the beginning, that any direct or indirect tax increases the normal cost of goods and services, it is still as always the consumer who will foot the bill. In the end, the real taxpayer is the consumer.

And the program editor added:

> —the investor may prefer to by-pass the investments that are more hazardous, but also more productive, and limit himself to those offering better dividends or interest. One can imagine the effect of such a reaction on the creation of new industries.

Mr. Speaker, the government's decision to tax capital gains will not only bring the small and medium-sized industry to the brink of bankruptcy, but it will also prevent the creation of new industries.

This legislation, besides making the consumer foot the bill, will result in increased unemployment and will allow big trusts to operate in a way still more detrimental to small and medium enterprise. That is what we cannot accept, that is why we are fighting the legislation at this time.

Taxation is theft when it is imposed on taxpayers who do not have enough money to purchase the requisites for a decent way of living, when these exist abundantly in Canada.

The individual is taxed to the utmost on every kind of pretext that can be brought up. The legislation apparently gives him a sop by way of a very slight increase in the basic exemption on his income, whereas the exemption is not even equivalent to what it was in 1949.

Mr. Speaker, it is just on such a point that the government will attempt to sensitize the people during the next electoral campaign, which I expect will be launched at the beginning of 1972. But the government will forget to make the people understand, or remind them, that eventually the surplus the government will bring in through this tax reform will come from the consumer.

Taxes are highway robbery as long as there are unsold goods, unemployed hands, idle productive capacities through lack of sale of these goods induced by the severely curtailed purchasing power of the taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, I say that there must be a tax system, not to finance government budgets but to levy taxes only where there is too much money. The present tax system exists in order to finance the government's budget and the levies are made where there is not even enough money. And families and individuals lose the purchasing power they must have to lead a decent life.

In other areas, studies are being made to find out what is wrong, where are the poor and how many they are in Canada. We do not seem to realize that the main cause of poverty in Canada is our tax system which is not only wrong but helps take money from those who have not enough of it already. That made former Manitoba Conservative Premier John Bracken say in 1942 that our tax system is conceived so as to take money from the poor to give it to the rich. Mr. Bracken explained that buyers of government bonds are not necessarily poor; they are big corporations, people who amassed large amounts of savings, people who have capital. But those who pay taxes enabling the government to pay interests to bond holders are the workers, the little people.

It is stealing to levy taxes at the present time when they lessen the purchasing power, cause an accumulation of products and deprive the population just like inflation. Taxes should simply withdraw surplus money in circulation while there are not enough products. When money, is scarce, taxes are no solution. Instead the purchasing power should be expanded by means of dividends or a compensated discount which would bring back prices to the real cost of production.

This is what we want, what we are offering in order to face the voracity of the government which keeps on levying ever higher taxes on individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to revert to what I said earlier concerning section 8 of Bill C-259 which provides for a deduction of $150 or 3 per cent of the income, up to that amount for taxpayers with transport or equipment expenses. We raised that question on second reading as well as during the debate in the committee of the whole. We moved an amendment on this, because it seemed to my colleagues and to myself that this section had not been looked at closely enough. That is why I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the amendment be amended by replacing the period by a coma and by adding the following: "and that in addition it reconsider subparagraph (a) of paragraph (1) of subsection 8 of clause 1 in order to allow taxpayers to deduct from their income all employment expenses supported by evidence."

Mr. Speaker, the reason for this subamendment is to bring the necessary corrections to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, so that all Canadian taxpayers may be allowed to claim their working expenses, provided they enclose receipts, in the same way as other classes of society are allowed to do at present. If people such as commercial travellers, insurance agents, accountants, doctors, and lawyers can claim all their working expenses, we have every reason to believe that it is only fair that all Canadian taxpayers who have to face fairly high, and continually increasing, expenses should be allowed to claim all their working expenses, provided, of course, they enclose receipts. I think that in all fairness the House should pass this subamendment, as well as the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, so that the committee of the whole may have an opportunity to give further consideration to those two sections, in order to have an equitable system for all Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has moved an amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I have some doubts about whether the subamendment is acceptable. I say this in a preliminary way only, because I would be prepared to hear hon. members who may wish to assist the Chair. It seems to me, however, that the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred back for consideration the proposed new section 117(1) as set out in clause 1 of the bill at pages 313 and 314. As hon. members know that section deals with a proposal to reduce, if I may use the expression, the "across the board" rate of taxation. The hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), who has proposed the subamendment, would refer back to committee of the whole an entirely different section of the bill which deals with another matter. I have some doubts about the acceptability of this and if hon. members would care to assist me I should be pleased to hear them.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the subamendment moved by my friend, the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise), is supplementary to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which implicitly aims at giving the committee an opportunity of studying the reduction of tax rates and I quote:

—and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering the changing of the figure "17 per cent" in line 33 on page 313 to "2 per cent" and consequentially reducing the amount at the beginning of each of the paragraphs . . . by $75.

Mr. Speaker, the principle which is implicit in the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is the reduction of income tax, not only for a single category of taxpayers, but for all Canadian taxpayers. To be in order, and in accordance with the decision rendered by the Chair recently, this amendment should not refer to a single group of taxpayers, but to all of them.

The subamendment moved by the hon. member for Abitibi is to the same effect, i.e. that we propose, when the committee of the whole considers the section referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that it consider at the same time section 8 relating specifically to deductible items and the basic deductions for personal income tax.

The two motions aim equally at reducing taxes for all Canadian taxpayers. The only implicit difference between the subamendment and the amendment is that the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre provides exact figures and replaces "17 per cent" by "2 per cent", which results in a $75 reduction. The aim pursued by my friend the hon. member for Abitibi is the following and I quote:

—to allow taxpayers to deduct from their income all employment expenses supported by evidence.

Therefore, if the committee were to accept this proposal to include it in the bill this would mean that all Canadian taxpayers could deduct from their incomes certain amounts of money that they had to spend in order to finance the purchase of equipment necessary to their work.

Therefore, all taxpayers taking advantage of the proposal made by the hon. member for Abitibi will automatically enjoy a tax deduction, which would have the same effect as that of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

That is why my colleague, the hon. member for Abitibi has chosen to move his sub-amendment at this time. If we give the committee of the whole the right to reduce the taxes of all Canadian taxpayers—we agree on that—why not give it at the same time the possibility to reduce the taxes of all taxpayers by saying that all taxpayers may deduct from their incomes all expenses related to their work as long as they produce proof to that effect?

In this amendment we could have talked about the percentage that is equivalent to $150 but this is precisely what we are against. In section 8(1) the government talks about a maximum amount of $150 or 3 per cent of the income. This amendment would have the effect of doing away with the provision saying that it will be $150 or 3 per cent, and this would have the same results as that seeked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In fact, his amendment is on general income whereas ours is on related expenses.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this sub-amendment does not involve just one class of workers but also the professional, the poor, the low income people, the average citizens and all the taxpayers ,and because it is aimed directly at reducing taxes for all taxpayers if the committee should accept it, I humbly submit that it is in order.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to speak at this point. I should like to do that later. May I ask the hon. member a question. I wonder if he realizes that the question Your Honour was raising, if I understood Your Honour correctly, had to do not so much with the substance of the proposed subamendment, but rather you were wondering if it is relevant to the amendment. I will have something to say on that point. Perhaps the hon. member would like to speak on that aspect as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for reminding me of this particular point which I just mentioned earlier, but in my opinion this sub-amendment is obviously desirable since it would permit taxpayers to claim part of the expenses incurred in producing the income mentioned by the member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The amendment presented by the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre, as my colleague for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) has said, is aimed at producing a net income. In effect, the amendment of the member for Winnipeg North Centre reads partly as follows, and I quote:

. . . and in particular for the purpose of reconsidering the changing of the figure "17 per cent in line 33 on page 313 to "2 per cent" and consequentially reducing the amount at the beginning of each of the paragraphs . . .

And then he lists them.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wanted the net income of the taxpayer to be considered and reduced by $75. Our amendment concerns precisely the situation prevailing before the net income is established, and is designed to determine what is that net income. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre presumes that the computation of the tax has been done and that, on the whole, the tax rate is being reduced in order that the reduction may amount to $75. We are saying that the gross income should be taken into consideration and include larger employment expenses, in order to allow larger deductions, after which is obtained the net income to which applies the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

In my opinion the sub-amendment is closely related to the amendment, since both directly affect the taxpayer's income, regardless of his situation. One allows the other to better determine the gross income so as to obtain the net income. In the end, if the amendment and the sub-amendment are passed, the taxpayer will be allowed a tax reduction thanks to the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, because the deduction of expenses relating to the taxpayer's employment will have been accepted, as was suggested by the hon. member for Abitibi.

I believe Mr. Speaker, this is a further reason for ruling this amendment in order.

[English]

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the hon. member has not provided us with a copy of the amendment in either official language. This makes it difficult to contribute to this debate on the acceptability of this amendment. May I suggest that the Chair may wish to take this question under advisement and if, tomorrow, there is still a disposition to argue the procedural matter, we could do that when the bill is called. I regret that, so far, I am not in a position to contribute to the debate. In fairness, I think we should be given the opportunity to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I should like to apologize to the hon. parliamentary secretary, but my colleague from Abitibi had ten copies of the sub-amendment a moment ago, which he gave to the House employee who usually distributes them to the members.

I can see that the parliamentary secretary now has in his hand a copy of the sub-amendment. Perhaps he could make some comments and say whether he agrees to it.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to indicate that the Chair has no doubt about the ruling that should be made. If other hon. members wish to contribute to the debate, I will hear them, although I am quite prepared to rule at this point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the way you said that must have sounded a bit ominous to my friends.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Deputy Speaker said he is prepared to rule. Perhaps I should not try to read his mind. I thought he would give a negative ruling. May I also, in this connection, support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) that the decision might be delayed.

I wish to make a particular point to Your Honour. I see difficulties with this subamendment procedurally. As for its substance, I like it, although I think a tax credit would have been better. Procedurally, however, I see difficulties. One of the difficulties I see, and I suspect this concerns Your Honour, stems from the fact that the amendment which I moved calls for a reference back to deal with a specific section, namely, section 117(1) as set out in clause 1 of the bill. The proposed subamendment deals with a different section altogether, section 8(1)(a), although this, too, is in clause 1 of the bill. I certainly foresee difficulty in that respect. As for the substance of the subamendment, I think the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has made a good case. In other words, if it were being presented by itself as a new amendment on third reading calling for reference back, I think there is a good chance that Your Honour would find it in order.

The point I wish to make is a very practical one and takes into account the situation in which we find ourselves. I would remind you, Sir, that it happened that Your Honour, Mr. Deputy Speaker, was in the chair a week ago this afternoon when we were under closure. Certain amendments had been moved and Your Honour felt it would not be fair for the time of the committee to be taken up by procedural arguments but, rather, that without establishing precedents, certain amendments which had been put forward that day should be allowed.

The point I wish to make is that again we are under closure. At the moment, we are debating an amendment in my name. Presumably, a vote on that amendment will come soon, but one cannot be sure of that. I know that if our amendment is voted on and disposed of in one way or another we have others we should like to move. Hon. members in the official opposition have made no secret of the fact that they, too, have other amendments they would like to move. I do not see any opportunity for hon. members of the Social Credit party to get in even one amendment to the motion for third reading before this debate is closed off on Friday. I wonder whether Your Honour might not take these circumstances into consideration and give some thought to the possibility of allowing this subamendment, even though it is on a separate subject, so that hon. members in the fourth party in the House might have a chance of a vote on a matter which they feel is important.

I wish to say quite candidly that I am asking for something which is procedurally irregular. But this is an irregular week. We are having to operate under conditions which are not normal. Normally, on third reading of a bill such as this, we could put forward 75 different amendments proposing reference back to reconsider one after another of the clauses. But in the present circumstances we shall not have an opportunity to do that. Accordingly, I ask whether Your Honour might not consider making a ruling in the spirit in which you made rulings last Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. McCleave: I think this suggestion carries with it a measure of airness, Mr. Speaker. Though I may be next in line, and may be the one who is to be gored by this impromptu speech I am making now, I would support what has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as a reasonable suggestion in the interests of all parties in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I indicated I was prepared to make a ruling on the procedural point raised concerning the acceptability of the proposed subamendment. I shall make such a ruling, now. But first, I wish to refer to the very reasonable and lucid argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which has just been ably supported by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave).

Hon. members who put forward arguments of this kind really place the Chair in a difficult position. I say this because, after all, it is not the Chair which has decided that the House of Commons shall operate in the circumstances in which we are operating today. It is hon. members who determine that we shall operate under a time limitation. So, while I understand and am very much moved, by the appeal put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, I do feel that if I were to base my ruling on that sort of agreement abuses could arise in the futurs. I have concluded, therefore, that I have to rule in accordance with the prececents binding the Chair.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned the situation which arose a week ago today when we were operating under a time allocation order. I think there was some difference, there. As I recall it, the time available between the end of the question period and the time at which the votes were to be taken, amounted to an hour and a half, or, maybe, two hours. I do not recall the number of amendments which were submitted, but their number was considerable. As the hon. member has said, I took some responsibility in my initial ruling as chairman of the committee, and I think that ruling was followed by my colleagues with respect to subsequent amendments. I felt that in this unusual situation, and in order that hon. members might have an opportunity to express their views on the amendments, they might be allowed in those circumstances. Indeed, there was no time in which to give much study to the procedural aspect. On this occasion, however, there are two more days of debate left. I feel there is considerable difference between the two situations and I would not want the Chair to be placed in the position of finding this argument placed before it whenever a motion has been agreed to of the kind under which we are presently operating.

The other point is this. It is really in the hands of hon. members, not in the hands of the Chair, as to when the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is dealt with. When it has been dealt with it will be open to other hon. members to make amendments to the main motion. It seems to me that this is a matter for regulation between hon. members, particularly those to the left of the chair, to determine which hon. members should have the opportunity to propose further amendments.

I say at once that if the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Abitibi had been proposed as an amendment to the main motion there would be no hesitation in my mind about accepting it. If I were in the chair, and if that subamendment were proposed as an amendment to the main motion, I would accept it. But the Chair has responsibilities from a procedural standpoint. What the hon. member for Abitibi is asking the Chair to accept is a very reasonable amendment, but he is dealing with another section of clause one.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has argued very persuasively that as far as the question of relevance is concerned the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the proposed subamendment both reduce the tax load falling upon the taxpayer. I have no difficulty in agreeing with that contention. The difficulty is that when an hon. member proposes a subamendment he is under the constraint that he must not enlarge on, or differ in substance from, the amendment he is purporting to further amend. The amendment now before the House in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre deals with a specific section in clause one and it would have the effect of reducing a tax right across the board.

In passing, I would think that if, for example, the hon. member had proposed a subamendment to that amendment by changing 2 per cent to 3 per cent, or 1 per cent, it might well be in order. But what the Chair has before it is a proposal which would change a different section dealing with employment expenses reductions. I cannot find that it is relevant to the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. With regret, I shall have to rule on the basis of the precedents by which I must be guided and I am unable to put the proposed subamendment to the House.

Mr. Allan B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): This debate, Mr. Speaker, has been a very long one. Understandably, some members have played a more prominent role throughout its length than others. Last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) mentioned the outstanding work of some members of the House, particularly of his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) who has played such an important role in piloting this legislation. I have not yet heard another hon. member mentioned, one who deserves a great deal of complimenting for his efforts in this debate right from its very beginning, an hon. member who has carried out a very difficult task exceedingly well. I refer to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who has been spokesman in this debate for the Conservative party.

• (5.40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sulatycky: Indeed, sometimes it appeared that he was the only one in that party who took any real interest in this bill. Throughout the debate he displayed a very reasonable and responsible attitude. I have been very impressed by his performance and his reputation, to my mind at least, has gone very high. I want to compliment him on his efforts and to express my admiration to him. It is not easy, as the hon. member for Edmonton West was called upon to do, to oppose good and beneficial legislation, as he has in this case. That is a very difficult task, but I compliment him for having done it very well.

In the few minutes that I have I want to outline what I propose to say later on in my speech. I want to emphasize just how many benefits this legislation confers upon the Canadian people. This legislation will benefit those people who most deserve to benefit, who most deserve a tax break. By implementing this legislation, we will bring greater fairness to our tax laws, something that they have lacked for many years. Indeed, a degree of fairness has been lacking from the very beginning of our income tax system, a degree of fairness that I hope will be achieved and that I believe will be achieved with the implementation of this legislation.

I cannot help but comment upon the attitude displayed to this legislation by opposition parties, how one speaks for special interests and privileged groups, and how another does not have the guts to speak for anyone. Let me make it plain for whom I want to speak today. I want to speak for those citizens, the ordinary average working

Canadians in my riding and elsewhere, who have been carrying more than their fair share of the tax load for far too long. For them this bill will bring very welcome relief. Even the official opposition know that this bill is a giant step forward in the interests of the average Canadian.

The first official reaction of the official opposition was an indication of just how good they thought this bill was for the Canadian people. All hon. members will remember that when the terms of this bill were first enunciated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) went running out to the TV cameras and the press as fast as he could to say that the thing was so good the government was going to call an election right away.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He was wrong, wasn't he?

Mr. Sulatycky: He was wrong about the election but not about how good this legislation is. This reaction of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings reflected about as much commonsense as the latest reaction of the Conservative party to this bill. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has stated: "Yes, reduce taxes for most of the people, but in doing so you should not make up the difference by imposing higher taxes on our friends in the privileged classes and in big business". That is something I cannot accept. There will be an election, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has predicted. It will come in due course, and I predict that when it does come the Conservative party will be out across Canada trying to cover up the benefits that this legislation has brought the Canadian people. Because they will not want the Canadian people to give credit to the Liberal party, credit that the Liberal party deserves, for implementing this legislation after ten years of debate on tax reform.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): If they have no more than they have in the House at the moment there will not be very many here.

Mr. Sulatycky: The very good things, the positive aspects, of this legislation have been enumerated very often and should not need repeating. However, I want to repeat them and to list them, in order that I can focus attention on the great importance of this bill to the average Canadian, the working man, the older citizen and the average taxpayer of Canada.

It has been said—and my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party and many members of the Conservative party will agree—that the only taxpayer who pays his fair share of taxes is the worker, the employee whose income tax is deducted before he sees his pay cheque. He is the one for whom the Income Tax Act provides no loopholes, for whom it contains no provisions enabling him to escape his full share of tax liability. There are other categories of taxpayers who have found loopholes and for whom special provisions have been passed to enable them to escape the full and sometimes onerous burden of income tax.

This bill will go a long way towards straightening out the inequities that have existed up to now. The most important effect of the bill is that beginning on January 1, 1972, a little more than two weeks from now, there will be tax reductions for every married wage earner in Canada; every single wage earner who earns under $8,000 a year will also pay less tax. This means that hundreds of thousands of people who heretofore have had to pay income tax will be removed from the tax rolls completely, and that several million more will have their taxes reduced significantly. Beginning next month all these people will find a few more dollars on their take-home pay cheque each pay day.

I take a great deal of pride and satisfaction from the fact that it is this government, the government that I support, that is bringing this about. This is a government concerned about fair treatment for all, a government concerned about social justice, a government concerned about all the people of Canada, not just a select few. I might also add it is a government that is willing to take and accept its responsibilities. When the time comes to vote on a particular issue, when the public is convinced the issue is a just one, this government brings the issue to a vote.

Another aspect of this bill that gives me a great deal of satisfaction is the benefits that will accrue as a result of the bill to our senior citizens. No single group will benefit as much as they. Comparatively speaking, they will get the greatest benefits of all. With the passage of this bill, the majority of Canadian citizens over 65 years of age will not be required to pay any income tax at all, and that is as it should be. These people who have been making their contribution to this country during their productive lifetime, through their hard work and payment of taxes, should not be required to pay income tax in their retirement years.

I have stated generally what I believe the effects of the legislation will be on the average Canadian, and I now want to look at some of the details of the legislation. I know these matters have been mentioned before, but perhaps they have not been mentioned often enough. First, and this is very important, personal exemptions will be raised to $1,500 from $1,000 for single persons and to $2,850 from $2,000 for married persons. In addition, a new innovation in the income tax system in this country will be the deductibility of child care expenses up to $500 for every child under 14 years to a maximum of $2,000 per family. I am sure everyone in this House is aware of the many thousands of working couples. One member of the family, either of the two spouses, will be able to claim baby sitting expenses of $500 per annum for each child up to a maximum of $2,000. This has not been available before. It has been a great inequity in our income tax system.

The payments made to a baby sitter, day care centre or some other individual or institution for looking after children of people who are required to work could not be deducted as an expense, although it was as legitimate an expense in the process of earning income as almost any expense that could be claimed by business people in this country in their business operations. I welcome that as a very important step forward. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An act respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEW REGULATION DEFINING EMPLOYMENT IN CANADA BY HER MAJESTY IN RIGHT OF A PROVINCE

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, since the passage of Bill C-229 last June, an act respecting the Unemployment Insurance Act, we have been formulating within the Unemployment Insurance Commission regulations that are needed in conjunction with the new act, particularly because of the widening of the coverage to almost universality in this country. There has been some confusion at the provincial level, as indicated in conversations with several of the provinces, as to precisely what employment under Her Majesty in right of a province means, although this terminology had been used in the old act for many years.

In order to remove the ambiguity or concern as to precisely what is meant I felt it would be in the best interests of everyone that the pertinent section of the regulations which will be shortly published in the Canada Gazette, as to what is and what is not a civil servant should be made available immediately.

The proposed regulation reads as follows:

2. For greater certainty, employment in Canada by Her Majesty in right of a province, for the purposes of subsection (1), only includes employment in Canada of employees who are appointed and remunerated under the Public Service Act or Civil Service Act of a province or who are employed in Canada by a corporation, commission or other body that is for all purposes an agent of Her Majesty in right of the province.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to state for the purpose of the record that this act as presently administered is in an awful mess. We find that the minister is now bringing before us an interpretation of a section of the act in respect of which we on this side of the House had some problems during our earlier deliberations on the bill. I remember repeatedly asking the minister, on behalf of this party, whether the province of Quebec and the other provinces were in fact satisfied with the bill, and we were continually reminded, and indeed chastised by the minister, that the bill was in order and that the provinces were willing to accept it as it stood. I understand that the province of Quebec is not now going to pay into this fund some $20 million. I wonder whether in fact the fund is actuarially sound.

I am very concerned about the whole act. We as members are continually being asked about the payment of claims for benefits to which people are entitled. This is not a hand-out. These people are entitled to their money. They have paid their premiums and accordingly should be able to obtain their benefits in due time.

The minister and his staff continually told us in the past that they would lengthen the waiting period to two weeks and there would be no great inconvenience. Things have not changed one bit. People are sick and tired, having paid their premiums, of having to wait six, seven, eight or nine weeks before getting their money.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: There is something else which should concern us. Yesterday I posed a question to the minister concerning the lack of co-ordination between his department and the Department of National Revenue when drawing up regulations. Apparently regulations are being drawn up by the Department of Labour which are contrary to those being established by the Department of National Revenue. Co-ordination must be improved. I suggest the minister should spend more time on this aspect of the legislation and stake his political future on the workability of the Unemployment Insurance Act rather than concern himself about technological changes which will probably not be discussed until some time next year. We might then have an Unemployment Insurance Act which would be credible, viable, and more useful to all concerned.

I trust the minister will make every effort to ensure that these people who have paid money into the fund will be treated with respect and dignity and that their claims will be expedited as quickly as possible. This is what the act is all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that the regulation read to us by the Minister of Labour clarifies the situation, we welcome it. I suspect that it does clarify the situation, at least with respect to teachers in most of the provinces of Canada. I believe there is one province, though, the province of New Brunswick, where there was a different situation before the act was passed. We understood this when we were dealing with the bill in committee. But I repeat that insofar as this regulation would seem to clarify the situation with respect to teachers in the other nine provinces, we welcome it.

Nevertheless, a point has to be made—I assure Your Honour that it is closely related—with respect to the provision in the act which says that in the case of employees of provincial governments they are either all in or all out. I think this was a mistake. We opposed that provision when we were dealing with this legislation. I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the regulation he has now tabled may have the effect of complicating that situation. He has now said that employees of certain boards, commissions and crown corporations will be defined as provincial civil servants. That is fine in the provinces which decide to bring the civil servants in, but in those provinces that decide to leave civil servants out they are excluded from unemployment insurance coverage. So I suggest it may be necessary to take this regulation back to the drafting board and have a further look at it. The minister shakes his head. I always enjoy the movements of the minister's head, whether they are lateral or vertical. But I remind him we were assured in the committee that all this had been attended to. Yet it became necessary for the minister to clarify this point today.

I submit that still further consideration has to be given to the position of provincial employees generally. Speaking as one who believes that unemployment insurance coverage should be universal, I hope the minister will do everything he can to achieve that purpose, one which he said, when he brought in the bill, was his purpose also.

May I endorse what was said by the hon. member for Hamilton West about the unfortunate delays which are taking place. I know that the minister and the Unemployment Insurance Commission officials like to tell us that they are dealing with millions of people and that the number of delays represents only a small percentage, but a small percentage in this instance involves quite a few people. The number from whom we hear is very large and I think that something has to be done to speed up the handling of unemployment insurance claims.

The only other remark I should like to make is one that we in this group feel is extremely important. I hope the minister will come before the House within a few days with a new or clarified definition of income for the purposes of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is our experience that it is the way in which income is being defined that is the most serious fault in the administration of this act. Many hundreds, perhaps thousands of workers, are being denied benefits to which they feel they are entitled because certain income is regarded as income for the purposes of the act. I hope that the tabling of this regulation today is a forecast of another one regarding the definition of income which will be tabled in a few days.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, this is a case where we might say that all things come to him who waits. We have just heard a statement that could have been made yesterday, if the House had so allowed. In fact, the statement is rather brief and contains only one section of the regulations concerning the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I thank the hon. minister for informing the House of this provision of the regulations, pending their full publication. The statement enables us to see a little better the situation of provincial employees.

However, there is something wrong in the regulations. For instance, employees such as teachers or hospital workers who, for all practical purposes, will never receive any unemployment insurance benefits, will have to contribute to the unemployment insurance fund. On the other hand, other workers—and here I believe the responsibility lies with the provincial governments—such as employees of the Quebec Departments of Roads and of Public Works, who for the most part are not on a full-time basis—for instance, they do not work during the winter—cannot receive any employment insurance benefits because they make no contributions to the fund.

Such is the ridiculous part of the situation, Mr. Speaker. I think we should engage in further negotiations with the provinces so as to enter into an early agreement likely to cover the workers that I have just referred to.

In conclusion, I would like to suggest to the minister that, in the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act as regards claims submitted by the unemployed, the delays between the application and the time when they draw benefits are much too long. Even though the minister often says that 98 per cent of cases are dealt with according to regulations, it takes at least five or six weeks to process requests for benefits and that is far too long. I think we ought to find ways to reduce the delay between the end of employment and the time when the claimant draws his benefits.

IMMIGRATION

SMUGGLING OF ALIENS FROM CANADA INTO UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose a motion under Standing Order 43. The pressing and urgent circumstances relate to the inability of government immigration laws and policies to cope with serious current problems, particularly the continuous illegal entry of many aliens from or through Canada into the United States with the participation of organized criminal elements. If unanimous consent is given I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Skoreyko):

This House, taking note of the failure of existing immigration laws and regulations and the refusal of the government to propose changes, which has resulted in many abuses and particularly large-scale smuggling of aliens from or through Canada to the United States, urges that immigration laws and regulations be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to inquire into the above practices and recommend suitable changes.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF 26 INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS CONCLUDED IN LAST 14 MONTHS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with leave of the House I would like to table in English and French a number of international agreements, to be exact 26, which have been concluded by Canada over the course of the last 14 months.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Few Canadian industries have been faced with as many and varied economic problems as have confronted the pulp and paper industry. The effects of the accumulation of ills have been evident this year in a series of plant closings, temporary shutdowns and lay-offs. The industry has been hit hard in all provinces where mill closings are accentuating an already serious problem of unemployment. Despite the gravity of the problem facing the mills, which employ about 75,000 workers in Canada, the government has shown little interest in doing anything to aid the industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows that the purpose of Standing Order 43 is not to make a speech and argue a case. Hon. members know that in basic fairness, inasmuch as the Standing Order does not provide an opportunity for a reply, they should respect the spirit of the Standing Order and limit themselves to indicating the urgency of the matter. The hon. member is going beyond the terms of the Standing Order. He should indicate what the motion is that he proposes for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Marshall: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle):

That the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs meet immediately to consider the state of the pulp and paper industry in Canada, to recommend projects to assist the unemployed workers, and to recommend measures to restore capacity of the mills affected.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

UNITED NATIONS

EXPEDITING OF DEBATE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, partly because time allocation is working effectively in this place I ask for unanimous consent under Standing Order 43 to move the following motion:

That the government of Canada urge the United Nations rules committee, or the relevant agency thereof which constitutes its equivalent, to limit time on debates to 20 minutes per speaker, except with the consent of the Chairman of the General Assembly or committees thereof, in order to speed up the work of the United Nations, and in order to stimulate interest in debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to address to the hon. member the remarks which I addressed a moment ago to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. The hon. member cannot argue a case. He has to indicate what the motion is.

Mr. Gibson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the reasons for the motion are very short and, if you will bear with me for one sentence, I shall continue.

—and in order to curtail existing expense and delay.

Further, that the government of Canada, through all existing publicity agencies give this recommendation wide publicity throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should respect the Standing Order. He should indicate to the House what the motion is. He may have been mentioning it up to this point but if so I did not understand. If he has done so he might indicate to the Chair that he has.

Mr. Gibson: I have done so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member. I did not realize that he was actually putting the motion at that point. Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING IGNORING OF DIRECTIVES BY OVERSEAS OFFICERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to the effect that overseas officers of his department have sometimes ignored the directives of the department outright by simply "not reading them or by dismissing them as propaganda"—I make no comment upon that—I should like to ask the Prime Minister what action the government is taking to ascertain the extent of the lack of control by the minister over the activities of his officers in carrying out the policies of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this particular complaint and I shall gladly discuss it with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. However, it has been the policy of this government to ensure that civil servants everywhere do carry out the policy decisions of the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this does not seem to be the case according to the statement of the minister. In view of the seriousness of the minister's charge if it is correct, and the seriousness of the damage to the morale of public officials if it is not correct, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether a full investigation is under way?

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since what seems to be attributed to me would seem to suggest a rather serious maligning of some very hard-working and efficient people, I should like to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition that what he seems to be referring to is some general conversation about why it is in a specific case someone may not have received a certain amount of information and it was related to speculating about specific cases, and nothing more than that. If anything in the report of what I said, which I have not yet seen, was anything more than that, I certainly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a further supplementary question for the Prime Minister or the minister. I should like to ask whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister or the minister to leave matters where they stand with these grave doubts as to the extent to which the policies of the government are being carried out or, on the other hand, grave doubts with regard to the insubordination of officials. In view of the statement by the minister, is it the intention of the Prime Minister and the government to carry out an investigation to clarify this matter which cannot be left in this intolerable position?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is not all that intolerable. It happens every day, I am sure—

Mr. Hees: In all your departments.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Trudeau: —in any civil service the size of Canada's that some officials somewhere, some time do not always carry out their instructions in the best possible way. This may be through human frailty, through delinquency or some other explanation.

Mr. Hees: Lack of direction.

Mr. Trudeau: The government tries to ensure the greatest possible efficiency in the civil service. The minister has said and it is recognized on both sides of the House that we have one of the best civil services in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Which you are doing your best to dilute.

Mr. Trudeau: So to state that there are sometimes, somewhere, some inefficiencies, Mr. Speaker, is no reason for the government to do like the Leader of the Opposition and charge on its mount toward windmills that seem to be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one further question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: I wonder which is the windmill that I am supposed to be charging? Is it the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Fairweather: How do you like that, Buster?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in order to find out what Buster meant, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he has found that immigration officers overseas ignore policy directives outright, either by not reading them or by dismissing them as propaganda? Is that a fact or is it not?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then why did the minister say it?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the very serious statement by the minister that he is unable to get his immigration officials or offices around the world to carry out policy directives, may I ask what steps he has taken to correct this very serious situation and whether, in fairness to the loyal civil servants in his department, he will make a statement in the House?

Mr. Lang: In fairness to those loyal civil servants, I wish the hon. member would not take a straightforward no, turn it into some kind of yes and continue this slur which is uncalled for.

ILLEGAL MOVEMENT OF ALIENS FROM CANADA INTO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does the government intend to take any action to meet the situation referred to in confidential American Department of Justice and FBI reports recently leaked to the press about the continuing problem of substantial movement of aliens from and through Canada into the United States?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated a number of times before in the House that Canadian authorities, both within the department and elsewhere, co-operate in every way possible in acting on a whole variety of illegal activities, and this conduct is continuing.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will return to the hon. member in a moment. I think we should try to limit supplementaries until we get the first round of questioning out of the way.

[Later:]

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one I originally directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As the minister has been unable to secure approval from his colleagues for amendments to the immigration laws promised in the Speech from the Throne in October, 1970, will he co-operate in bringing the matter referred to before the appropriate standing committee and include in that reference a draft of the bill which cabinet refused?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the question of any changes in legislation which have been required more to meet the problems of the appeal board has really nothing to do with this question of the control of visitors in our country. I do not think any of us would like to suggest measures which would in any way limit the relative freedom we extend in this country for visitors to come here. I know this can be a source of certain problems, but it is also a source of many advantages.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASE APPLICATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Is he aware of two applications for rate increases made by Bell Canada to the Canadian Transport Commission, one called a principal application to increase revenues by $78 million and the other an interim application for an increase to come into effect on January 1, 1972, and for which no hearing is planned? If he is aware of these two applications, what steps is he taking to make sure that the interim increase at least will not be granted to this well known, penurious organization?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, I think, that under our statutes the responsibility for making decisions on such applications is that of the Canadian Transport Commission and that the Minister of Communications cannot give any direction to that commission.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the Minister of Communications has not had occasion to read all the relevant sections of the act.

An hon. Member: Don't lecture.

Mr. Lewis: Since under the act the Governor in Council is given authority to require the commission to give it all information, to supply it with all applications and to require information from the corporation asking for rate increases, has the minister taken any steps at all or is he planning to take any steps to look into this outrageous demand by Bell Canada for an interim increase to come into effect without a hearing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister may reply briefly. However, the hon. member will appreciate that that was more a speech than a question. In any event, I suggest the minister should reply.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly interested in these applications, and the Department of Communications is certainly examining all available information concerning them, but that was not the hon. member's original question.

Mr. Lewis: Will the minister at least suggest, if he will not request of the Canadian Transport Commission, that the commission should not agree to any increase in rates by Bell Canada, not even on their interim application, unless there is a hearing?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian Transport Commission will no doubt take note of that representation.

Mr. Lewis: You should make it. That is what the minister is there for.

Mr. Stanbury: I think the hon. member should go back and look at the act again.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—MEASURES TO INCREASE MAXIMUM WEEKLY REMUNERATION IN QUEBEC—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in connection with the local initiatives program in effect during the winter.

In the Quebec construction field, weekly wages of $150 are compulsory under an order in council. Is the minister aware that such an order exists and what solution does the federal government or the minister himself intend to offer in order that the local initiatives program may be carried on in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are well aware that a number of regulations, whether governmental or union, require certain wage levels and that some of these people who are subject to such rules may take part in the local initiatives program. Our rule does not in any way stop this kind of payment being made. It is related to the amount of the grant we can make per week or month, per man employed. That is an average maximum upon which our grant is based and there is nothing to exclude more or less being paid. There is nothing to exclude money obtained from other sources being used in connection with programs.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister.

Does that mean that, if the province of Quebec decreed a weekly salary of $150 instead of the $100 stipulated by federal law, the federal government will not contribute in any way to make up the difference if the province of Quebec does not supplement the $50 in the case of youth projects, for instance?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the fact that a very large number of applications have come forward, most of them meeting our criteria, indicates that local and municipal groups in the province of Quebec can meet these criteria. The objective behind the criteria was to channel as many as possible of the jobs to those areas where they are needed most, areas where the people need them, which means—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

ALLEGED DEMAND BY UNITED STATES THAT CANADIAN DOLLAR BE PEGGED AT CERTAIN LEVEL

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Can the minister advise the House whether the United States has requested directly of Canada or demanded that Canada peg the value of the Canadian dollar, and whether that pegging should be in the upper ranges, relatively speaking, as between the major world currencies and the United States dollar?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no such demand has been made.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister advise the House whether the United States agreement in principle to devalue their dollar would be in exchange for a relaxation of certain non-tariff barriers by the Common Market? If that is the case, does Canada intend at tomorrow's meeting to back the United States actively in the demand for relaxation of these non-tariff barriers?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer that question because I was not at the meeting with Mr. Pompidou.

PULP AND PAPER—GOVERNMENT PROGRAM TO OVERCOME DIFFICULTIES AND ASSIST THOSE LAID OFF

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the unstable international exchange rates, the United States 10 per cent surcharge, the floating appreciation of the Canadian dollar, and the widespread lay-offs in the pulp and paper industry, has the government decided to implement a specific program of assistance to the industry and the individuals who are being laid off daily?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Without agreeing to the postulates, because some are false, may I repeat Mr. Speaker, what has been said on a number of occasions? We met on December 6 with representatives of the pulp and paper industry. We discussed ten different items. Ten ministers were present. I am to meet with the industry again in early February. In the meantime, a number of studies have been undertaken.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS ON AUTO AND DEFENCE-SHARING AGREEMENTS—POSSIBLE REMOVAL BY UNITED STATES OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL TARIFFS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that it appears likely there may be some solution to the question of the realignment of currencies, what progress is being made in the minister's discussions with the American government regarding what he calls irritants and, particularly, has any agreement been reached with regard to the Canada-U.S. auto pact or with regard to the defence-sharing agreement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. I can only say that the discussions are continuing.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact there is a wide variety of important agricultural products which under the Kennedy round will enter the United States duty free on January 1 and as a consequence will be exempt from the 10 per cent surcharge, has the minister in the course of his discussions ascertained whether the American government intends to comply with the Kennedy round provisions and remove these duties on January 1?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, we have put this question to the U.S. administration on a number of occasions. We have not yet obtained a firm decision on the subject of the removal of certain tariff items in accordance with Kennedy round implementation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for one last supplementary. I think I should remind hon. members that the number of supplementaries makes it difficult for other members to be recognized toward the end of the question period.

Mr. Douglas: Does the minister expect to be able to make a statement to the House, if possible before the recess, on any agreement that has been reached with regard to the removal of the irritants to which he has referred?

Mr. Pepin: I cannot promise that, Mr. Speaker, because I do not really know what the chronology of events will be in the following days.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For the moment the Chair will try to recognize hon. members who were not recognized yesterday. I think I remember most of them.

HEALTH

RECONSIDERATION OF CANCELLATION OF GRANT TO NATIONAL CANCER INSTITUTE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his absence, and because it is doubtful how much longer we will be here, I will direct it to the Prime Minister. It relates to a question I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare about three weeks ago concerning the cancelling of grants for cancer research. At that time the minister indicated he would reconsider this. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether these grants for cancer research in Canada have been reinstituted? It seems inexcusable that they should have been cancelled.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister lived up to his commitment. I do not know the result of that reconsideration. Perhaps the hon. member can ask the minister that question when he returns from the meeting he is presently attending with the provincial health ministers.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT NEGOTIATIONS—SUGGESTED CANADIAN PRODUCTION OF CARS PURCHASED IN CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that, if Canadians were producing in Canada that percentage of North American automobile products that they actually consume, such production would provide about 30,000 additional Canadian jobs, can the minister inform the House if in discussions with the Americans his officials have made a request for a change in the auto pact which would bring this about?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it would take half an hour to deal with the question raised by the hon. member. I hope to do so in due course. In the meantime, I might say that I have already given an answer to that question a few months ago. I suggested at the time it would not be wise to tie ourselves to this particular target. I will make the necessary analysis in the House in due course. I have said on a number of occasions that I will take the House into my confidence before we reach any final agreement with the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Can the minister inform the House if the state of negotiations on this subject is such that he expects an agreement to be reached before the Christmas recess and, if so, what form of announcement he plans to make in the House? Will it simply take the form of an announcement or is it the intention to have a debate on the issue?

Mr. Pepin: Presumably, Mr. Speaker, I will make a statement. My hon. friend will have a chance to reply, comment and disagree with me, I am almost sure.

Can the minister tell me why unemployed people from the Renfrew, Eganville and Killaloe areas are refused employment on this project, despite the fact they are in the same area and same country, while applicants from Pembroke are acceptable?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I respectfully suggest to the hon. member that the question can be interpreted as a representation for the consideration of the minister. To the extent it is a question, I think it can well be considered at the time of adjournment.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CONSOLIDATED-BATHURST LIMITED—MEASURES TO FIND JOBS FOR LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Have the government of New Brunswick or Consolidated-Bathurst Limited made a proposal to the minister in order to find a solution which would provide jobs for employees laid off last week in Bathurst, or has the province of New Brunswick made a suggestion for new programs to create jobs for these workers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I received a long telegram from the New Brunswick premier who is to meet me tomorrow morning in that connection.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DIFFICULTY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS AT MONCTON COMPUTER CENTRE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): My question is for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister in a position to indicate to the House the degree of the difficulties that have developed at the computer centre in Moncton with regard to the processing of unemployment insurance claims and the extent of the difficulties this is causing for claimants?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious doubts whether it is in order during the question period to refer to individual difficulties in relation to particular Unemployment Insurance Commission offices. Perhaps the hon. member might consider the possibility of having the question put on the order paper or of raising it at the time of adjournment. Possibly the minister might be prepared to reply quickly.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed the minister to reply quickly so that we can get on with the question period.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the computer in the Atlantic area broke down on Monday, December 13 at 4:30. It was operating again the next day at 11:30. In the meantime, a midnight shift was established. By the end of December 15, everything was back to normal and up to date.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see that several hon. members want to ask supplementaries and I suppose they will be related to similar problems in other parts of the country. For the present, in order to check on my assumption—

[English]

I will recognize the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): A supplementary question. Will the Minister of Labour consider discarding the computers and going back to manual operation in the preparation of these payments?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This, of course, is a representation for the consideration of the minister.

[Mr. Breau.]

DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC CONCERNING REGULATIONS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Labour.

Further to his statement of today in the House on unemployment insurance, could the hon. minister tell us whether he has had discussions since yesterday with the Quebec government and what is that government's attitude with regard to the new regulations the hon. minister has announced today?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I felt that in courtesy to the House of Commons I should first make the particular section of the regulations known to hon. members. I would imagine that events would flow accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

I would like to clarify my question and ask him if he has had, since yesterday, any consultations with Quebec in order to determine what position the government intends to take with regard to the decisions that his department is to announce soon.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I think I should make it very clear that the new act, as did the old act, provides for exception of public servants in each and every province in Canada. Some provinces, however, have taken advantage of another provision in the act, despite this exception, to request inclusion of all their public servants. The problem with the province of Quebec has been in defining precisely the public servants, and I could imagine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the minister would like to return to motions to make a statement. The hon. member for Assiniboia.

TRADE

EXHIBITION IN PEKING IN 1972—INCLUSION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS EXHIBIT

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the importance of the Canadian solo fair in China in 1972, has the minister considered an exhibit based on the agricultural products available to the People's Republic of China?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it has already been announced that we will have a Canadian exhibition in Peking in the summer of 1972. Applications from Canadian producers are being received now. I do not know whether there is a selection being made by categories of industries but I will find out and report further.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PARITY OF BENEFITS WITH UNITED STATES—SUGGESTION THAT MINISTER CONTINUE DISCUSSION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

Since the Unemployment Insurance Commission cannot pursue negotiations with the United States or any of the American states in order to establish unemployment insurance benefit parity, does the minister intend to carry on these negotiations at the ministerial level so as to reach that goal?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has raised this question on many occasions as a result of his concern for people in his riding. May I suggest to the hon. gentleman that early in the week we arrange a meeting with the hon. gentleman and the unemployment insurance commissioners in order to ascertain precisely what the situation is that is of concern to the hon. member.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

STEPS TO LOCATE AND PROSECUTE GROWERS OF MARIJUANA

Mr. P. V. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the reported fact that marijuana has now become the highest return cash crop per acre and its use is on the increase, would the Solicitor General state what steps are being taken by the RCMP, in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture and the Department of National Health and Welfare, to locate these growers and to prosecute the owners and distributors of these illicit crops?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I would like to consult the other departments concerned.

[English]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that Statistics Canada has found that marijuana has now become a national agricultural product, can the minister inform the House whether the government is considering this crop in a new agricultural income stabilization plan?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, and it is not listed under other crops.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR CANADA

SLOWDOWN BY GROUND PERSONNEL—ASSURANCE OF NO DISRUPTION OF PASSENGER SERVICE DURING CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the Air Canada slowdown. In view of the initiation of a work to rule campaign by ground personnel of Air Canada, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government has been assured there will be no major disruptions of passenger service during the Christmas holidays and, if not, are measures being undertaken so that such an assurance can be given in the next few days?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the hon. gentleman who is an industrial relations critic, is suggesting that I should bring in emergency legislation to remove from the workers their right to strike if that right becomes legal during the Christmas holidays. I have made it clear in television interviews that I think work to rule is self-defeating and I would suggest to the union members that they drop these tactics between now and the time the conciliation report is made public.

Mr. Alexander: I wonder whether the Minister of Labour can assure the House that there will be no major disruptions over the Christmas holidays? I think that is the important point.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the only way I can give that assurance is to take away from Canadian workers precisely what they are entitled to under the law of the land.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is becoming a debate between the minister and the hon. member.

SUGGESTED HIRING OF ADDITIONAL EMPLOYEES TO IMPROVE SERVICE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour, who seems to be doing the answering, whether, in view of the high unemployment level in Canada and in view of the fact it is extremely difficult and time consuming to obtain a reservation from Air Canada by calling their reservation number, 237-5000, the minister will undertake to improve both the unemployment situation and Air Canada's service by asking Air Canada to hire some people?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again that is a representation.

CIVIL LIBERTIES

REQUEST FOR ELABORATION OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE CONCERNING PRESSURE TO CURTAIL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question in reference to personal liberties. The Minister of Justice has been quoted as saying that he was under strong, very high-placed pressure to curtail certain personal liberties. What high places was he talking about and what civil liberties was he referring to?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have very serious doubts about this kind of question. Perhaps the hon. member might rephrase it, unless the minister can reply and give the information fairly quickly. It seems to me the question is more in the nature of debate or academic discussion between the hon. member and the minister. As I say, if the minister thinks he can reply quickly he can take the floor for that purpose.

Mr. Woolliams: Then may I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. The minister stated that personal liberties were in danger from pressure by certain people. Were these people within the government, and what personal liberties was he speaking of? This is a very important matter for the Canadian people.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In this interview, Mr. Speaker, I was striking a balance that I think every free society has to strike in the enforcement of the law between individual liberty, on the one hand, and the security of the people on the other.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see there are three hon. members who want to ask supplementaries on this subject. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that it is against the rules to debate in the House speeches that are made outside the chamber by ministers. Many ministers, I note from newspaper reports, make speeches outside the House from day to day, and if we were to spend most of our time during the question period inviting interpretations from ministers as to what they meant or did not mean, we would spend quite a bit of time debating this kind of issue. The hon. member has raised this matter so perhaps he might put his question directly.

Mr. Woolliams: I will make my question very short, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate your courtesy. Is the government thinking of re-enacting some public order act, and is the Minister of Justice differing with other members of the government with reference to the implementation of such a new act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is that there is a motion before the House allowing me, if called upon by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, or by the special committee contemplated by such motion, to express some views as to the balance to be struck between individual liberties and collective security. The answer to the second question is no.

[Later:]

PRESSURE TO LIMIT RIGHT TO DEMONSTRATE, PICKET AND TAKE PART IN MEETINGS—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Justice is supplementary to the question just asked him. Has he had any pressure placed on him by people who would like to see him introduce amendments to the Criminal Code to limit the right of citizens to demonstrate, to picket and to take part in meetings? Can he assure the House that he is not contemplating such legislation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I can give an assurance to the House that no legislation altering the balance between civil liberties and national security will be introduced, short of a crisis, without coming to Parliament in the way I have indicated to the hon. member for Calgary North.

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH OMBUDSMAN

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wonder whether the Minister of Justice, in planning new legislation, is considering legislation which would set up the office of ombudsman as this would really help to protect civil liberties?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The hon. member and I have debated this in every session of Parliament since we have both been here.

INCOME TAX

RETROACTIVITY OF POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS TO ACT NEXT YEAR

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of this question to the Minister of Finance and I think his answer might be helpful to the debate later today and tomorrow. Would the minister propose making retroactive certain of the amendments to the income tax legislation to be introduced in the new year?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that will depend on the nature of the amendments. I mentioned a few last Friday that were being contemplated by the government. For example, the one dealing with deferred profit-sharing plans would have to come into effect at the same time as Bill C-259, at the beginning of the year.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As more than a month has now passed since the government launched its investigation into the leak of the so-called Gray report, and as no report has been made to Parliament so far, can the Prime Minister advise us what results, if any, have been obtained from this investigation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will check to see whether any results have been obtained.

Mr. Hees: As, obviously, there are no results to be reported by the Prime Minister, I will ask him this supplementary: which member of his cabinet is he shielding and what is the reason for it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a proper question.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

USE OF SNOWMOBILES TO HUNT ANIMALS—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Bearing in mind the mean, despicable and unsportsmanlike actions of some snowmobilers who chase and kill animals from snowmobiles, would the hon. gentleman amend the Criminal Code to prohibit this cruel practice?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I would have to ascertain whether the existing provisions of the Criminal Code are sufficient to substantiate that type of prosecution. I will take the question under consideration.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE NEED FOR INCREASED STAFF TO MAKE SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask him whether his department will be acquiring extra help, or has it the use of a computer which makes it possible to make payments with respect to subsidies.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not understand the purport of the question. If it is whether we need additional staff to operate computers, I do not think there is such a need.

Mr. Korchinski: We were told by the minister in the Committee on Agriculture that subsidies could not be paid because there was an administrative burden. I wonder how the department is getting around this difficulty.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: There is something coming over from the States right now.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Obviously there is something wrong with the hon. member's microphone. Perhaps he could wait a moment while adjustments are being made. He will be recognized later, or perhaps he might, by leave of the House, move to another seat. Order, please. It might be useful if I were to suggest to hon. members that we proceed without the assistance of the microphones for a few moments and allow the hon. member to direct his question. If we are all peaceful and quiet we can hear the question and the answer can be heard also.

Mr. Korchinski: I have no difficulty there, Mr. Speaker. I should like to rephrase the question I put to the Minister of Agriculture a few moments ago, because he did not comprehend that I was referring to the payment of the butter subsidy. I am wondering whether he is employing extra staff, or whether his department has had the use of a computer in the last few years to calculate the amounts of money to be paid to these producers.

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Records of all producers are kept by a computer and we can draw this information from the computer tapes.

Mr. Korchinski: Bearing in mind the fact that some creameries have been closed, may I ask how the minister is able to cross-check to confirm that these creameries are closed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest we are entering upon debate at this point.

Mr. Korchinski: What is wrong with that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

DANGER OF CONFIDENTIAL PERSONAL INFORMATION BEING STORED IN COMPUTERS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. John Roberts (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Is my hon. friend considering action to deal with the rapidly accelerating take-over of credit agencies in Canada by United States firms and the consequent danger that personal and confidential information will be stored in the United States rather than in Canada?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): I have no mandate to deal with credit bureaux, but we are aware of the possibility of the transfer of personal information to computers and, particularly, to remote computers. We are studying the implications of this. I personally, would consider it a matter of concern if personal data on Canadians were transferred by Canadian companies to any foreign country.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I am not in a position to answer the question immediately. I am having my officials check the situation. I would like to answer the whole of the hon. member's question, not only by telling the House what has been distributed to date, but also what recommendations will be made in view of the new situation we face now with the collapse of the East Pakistan army and the recognition by India of the state of Bangla Desh.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED BAN ON USE OF NEWS MATERIAL FROM PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE BY EDITORS AT FORCES BASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of National Defence. It has to do with a directive issued recently to news editors on Canadian Forces Bases across Canada banning the use of news material from the Public Service Alliance. Can the acting minister tell us why a form of censure has been imposed upon the receipt and utilization of such news material at this time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of National Defence): I am sorry. This question is not answered in the minister's briefing book I was given a few minutes ago. I will check and answer the question tomorrow.

UNSOLICITED DISTRIBUTION OF CREDIT CARDS—POSSIBLE LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the extensive distribution of unsolicited credit cards by the Canadian Tire Corporation, charging 24 per cent interest, and does he intend to take any legislative action against the sending out of unsolicited credit cards?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no, it has not. If the hon. member will send me the credit card I would be happy to take a look at it. VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF REGULATIONS AFFECTING PAYMENTS TO VETERANS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It deals with a newspaper report that several hundred Canadian war veterans living in Great Britain are suffering undue hardship because of regulations governing the payment of war veterans allowances. Would the minister say whether or not his department is prepared to review the existing regulations to determine whether some veterans are being wrongfully denied pensions or allowances under the act?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no veteran is wrongfully denied his pension. A veteran's pension follows him wherever he goes in the world. However, with reference to war veterans allowances, which are a very special social measure, it is very difficult to administer them in other countries. This is why there is a qualification of at least one year's residence in Canada. The qualification was established by Parliament in 1962. All those who otherwise qualify, and who have lived for at least one year in Canada since the war, are receiving their war veterans allowances.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize one last supplementary and then call orders of the day.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise if he is prepared to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act to repeal the one-year residence rule for those veterans who are in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, this Parliament has already considerably enriched war veterans allowances and disability pensions. What the next Parliament will do I do not know, but we are always heading in a more generous direction.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the government House leader about the business. In my anxiety about the breakdown of communications I forgot to ask the government House leader about the business he has for the House for the remainder of this week, next week and following.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the business for tomorrow is fairly well known to hon. members but I should like to mention the remaining items on the order paper that I would like to have disposed of before we terminte this part of the session. These items are as follows: Bill S-9, which I understand will require a very short further discussion, Bill C-176, Bill C-260 and Bill C-261, the latter two being the budget bills emanating from the June budget. I should also mention that there will be a further budget bill arising from the so-called budget statement of the Minister of Finance in October, which will give effect to the tax changes that will take place in this calendar year, so that by proceeding in that way we will not run into the procedural difficulty that we might have encountered had we attempted to put in one single bill the total tax changes involving this year and next year. This is not necessarily the order in which I will call these items. I have already discussed with the House leaders opposite my wish to have the Northern Canada Power Commission bill and the Canadian Wheat Board bill, which are at the report stage, reinstated reasonably close to that stage or at that stage when we commence the new session.

The termination of this part of the session, Mr. Speaker, will depend upon the readiness of the House to deal with these items I have mentioned and also when we will have Royal Assent affecting these bills and particularly Bill C-259. I should say, to provide some reasonable certainty to members, that in the event we are still dealing with business on Thursday next at ten o'clock it would be my intention not to have the House sit the following day and to have transport arranged definitely for hon. members to travel to their respective constituencies with less difficulty than may be expected at this time of year. But that is looking a bit farther ahead than may be necessary at the moment. However, I did want to mention it so that hon. members will be certain that in any such contingency it will be possible for them to be in their homes for Christmas.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, could the minister also indicate, within the reasonable limitations which he has mentioned, when we may expect to come back following our departure and whether he has heard from his parliamentary neighbour, after we do come back, how long we will stay before we depart for other adventures.

Mr. MacEachen: I regard the last question as being really a frivolous one and not really serious. I have some tentative dates I would like to put in a motion indicating when we would come back and when we would commence the new session, but I would like to have a word first with the House leaders on that point before putting it in the form of a motion or before announcing it in the House. I have no idea concerning what is going on in the other place—

Mr. Bell: There is a wake on there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —but I hope they will follow their own lead.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does it follow from what the President of the Privy Council has said that such business as the government wants through in this session it wants completed before we break, and that at that time it is to be simply an adjournment leaving prorogation until the day on which we return?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I think that would be the intention for a number of reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I suggest we are "muzzled" by the sound system. When government members are talking, we can hear them, but whenever opposition members have the floor, we cannot hear a thing.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (page 10464).

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): In enumerating the very positive benefits which will result to the people of Canada from the new and improved tax legislation that we have before us now, one of the important items not to be overlooked is the employment expense deduction of 3 per cent of employment income up to a maximum of $150 a year for which no receipts will be required. This is something that the working people of Canada have long demanded. It is a real inequity when a person is required to purchase special equipment, tools or clothes in order to maintain a job and yet is not allowed to claim those expenses as legitimate expenses to earned income.

With this new provision in the Income Tax Act, anyone who has employment income will be able to claim up to $150 a year without receipts for those expenses. It will work very much like the medical expense claim which has existed in our income tax structure for many years. A claim for $100 for medical expenses is made as a matter of right by all taxpayers. Beginning next year all taxpayers in Canada who have employment income will be able to claim in addition either 3 per cent of their employment income or $150 as a legitimate deduction because that amount of money is considered to have been an expenditure they have made in order to carry on their employment. I think this is a very important improvement in the interests of working Canadians.

As I said earlier, the aspect of this bill which gives me the greatest satisfaction deals with the senior citizens of Canada, the people of Canada who have reached the age of 65 years or more. Up to now, taxpayers of 65 years or over have enjoyed only the same personal exemption as any other taxpayers. Those 70 years of age or over have an additional $500 personal exemption. When this bill is passed, not only will the taxpayers over 70 have that additional deduction but all taxpayers 65 years of age or over will have an additional exemption which will be increased from $500 to $650. In my opinion this represents another important step forward in the interests of our senior citizens.

There are a couple of other important improvements so far as the personal income tax structure is concerned. One is the allowance for moving expenses as a deductible item from income tax. Henceforth, from January 1, 1972 taxpayers who change jobs and are required to move will be able to claim the expenses of moving their households.

Lastly, the item I want to mention is the employer-paid living expenses for jobs at distant work sites. Until now, under our system, many employees were receiving living expenses when working at a distant work site. There are many people in my constituency who are in this category. The employer is paying the living expenses of that employee, and the employee must show those living expenses as an item of income and must pay income tax on the living allowances. The government has now recognized that in many cases this is an injustice. It is unfair to those taxpayers who are required to live at long distances from their home and for whom the employer pays the living expenses. In future, those living expenses will be a deductible item from the income tax.

I would like to touch briefly on some of the points that members of the opposition parties have made in the debate on this amendment and on some of the attitudes of the opposition parties which I believe should not go unanswered. I have described in some detail the benefits of this legislation for the average taxpayer in Canada. These benefits will result in a total tax reduction for the Canadian people of one and a half billion dollars, which represents about 10 per cent of the total federal budget. In fact, it represents a very substantial tax reduction taken as an aggregate. But despite this reduction, the very important programs of the federal government must continue and revenues must be raised in order to continue those programs.

In addition to that, any system of taxation which we have must be seen to be fair. The people who pay the taxes must not look at the system and say that it contains many loopholes which are available to certain categories of taxpayers. In order to bring about justice and to close these loopholes, it is perfectly clear that some categories of taxpayers, certain businesses, and certain special interest groups will have to pay more tax. No one is attempting to deny that. This is a fact that no one can hide.

However, what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is attempting to do is to protect those people who will be required to pay more taxes when he says that we should split the bill, give the benefits, but not pass any other portion of the bill until we study it further. I am sure that none of us really believe that the people of Canada are stupid, but that appears to be what the Leader of the Opposition is almost about to believe when he thinks that the people of Canada will accept that sort of suggestion. The people of Canada understand that when we are going to make massive tax cuts, as there are under the bill, someone will have to pay more. In searching for words to describe this lack of understanding on the part of the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Thompson: Don't search too hard, Allen.

Mr. Sulatycky: —the first word that came to my mind was "unaware". However, I would not want to accuse him of being unaware and it seems to me more appropriate to refer to the Leader of the Opposition as being "under-aware". I would think that the Leader of the Opposition is "under-aware" of the facts and of the wishes of the Canadian people. Especially in these cold winter months,—

Mr. McBride: He is long on johns and short on dollars.

Mr. Sulatycky: —people will think of the Leader of the Opposition as being "under-aware" when they think of his stand on this particular bill.

Mr. McCleave: What dignity you people add to this place.

Mr. Sulatycky: The Leader of the Opposition also said that it is a complex bill. Naturally it is complex. Any tax statute dealing with income tax in a complex, modern society must be complex. If it were not going to be complex why would it have required ten years to produce something that would obviously be regarded as fair?

• (3:30 p.m.)

There is only more point I want to make with respect to the attitude of the Conservative party and the Leader of the Opposition. Last week when speaking in this House, the Leader of the Opposition said he would hazard a guess that if the estate tax provisions were left in the bill they would produce the revenues necessary to make up the difference resulting from the tax cuts. That is a pretty hazardous guess, Mr. Speaker. It is almost as hazardous as the guess he made when he said that what Canada needs now is a tunnel to Newfoundland, or when he said Canada needs a guaranteed annual income, or when he said what it really needs is a heavy water plant in Glace Bay that will probably never work.

An hon. Member: Not even now?

Mr. Sulatycky: The wrong decision was in building it here. It should have been built in western Alberta.

I now wish to refer to the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he moved the amendment to which we are speaking. He took the time allotted to him in this debate to go through a history, but only a partial history, of the personal tax exemptions under our income tax laws. He tried to convince the House and the people of Canada that what is being done here does not, in fact, result in a substantial improvement in the personal exemptions allowed Canadian taxpayers. I want to go into a little fuller discussion than the hon. member did with respect to that particular aspect.

The hon. member started from a point in the 1920's. He said at that time the personal exemptions were $1,200 for a single person and $2,400 for a married taxpayer. During the depression years, in 1933, the exemptions were reduced to $1,000 single and $2,000 married. During the Second World War, they were reduced even further to approximately $600 single and $1,200 married. The hon. member then said that in 1949, when they were increased to $1,000 single and $2,000 married, they were only being brought back to the 1933 level. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the only way you can examine this logically is to go back to the beginning of the income tax system in Canada and look at how personal exemptions evolved in the Income Tax Act.

Under the first Income Tax Act passed in Canada the exemptions were $1,500 single and $3,000 married, or roughly the level that they will be after this bill is passed. Of course, tax rates were lower then, and governments provided few services. In addition to that, the general tariff rate was between 35 per cent and 40 per cent, and many of the taxes in this country were hidden taxes. They were not direct taxes, evident to everybody, as is the income tax.

If you follow the course of personal exemptions from 1917 on, it is very evident that as the government increased its programs and the benefits it provided to the Canadian people, the tax exemptions became lower. They reached their lowest point in the early 1940's at which time the government had become heavily involved in a number of very important social programs. But from that time on we have had a gradually increasing level of personal exemptions, and the increase in the exemptions being provided by this bill are the largest that have ever taken place under the income tax system in Canada.

It is also important that we remember, and that we point out that the personal exemptions in Canada are the highest of any country in the world. This is something of which any government could be proud, and of which even Canadians sitting on the other side of the House can be justifiably proud. We can be even prouder when we put that together with the fact that we now pay the highest old age pensions and the highest veterans allowances in the world.

Mr. Peters: I don't think those are the actual facts.

Mr. Sulatycky: If the hon. member has facts to contradict what I have stated, let him get up and disclose them. Mr. Speaker, I took part in this debate for a particular reason. I had not intended to, but I received one letter and one telegram telling me to get in and fight for the people, and vote against this bill. They came from very prominent Conservatives in my riding, so I decided I should get in and fight for the people, and see to it that this bill is passed as quickly as possible in order that the ordinary people of Canada will get the benefits when the bill is enacted on January 1, 1972.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, we had an interesting debate on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am told that the difficulty in the sound amplification system has not been solved, but if the hon. member could speak from the front row he would be heard. Would the House give consent to allow the hon. member to speak from a seat in the front row?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, we have had an interesting debate on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I fully endorse it. Unfortunately, government members have failed to deal with the substance of the amendment. They have talked about everything else, but have carefully avoided giving reasons this type of tax relief should not be accepted by the House. The amendment which we are debating contains a very important principle. It suggests that a tax credit system be used by the government to provide tax relief to those who really need it.

What will this amendment proposed by the NDP do to the legislation before us? It will reduce the income tax rate on the first $500 of taxable income from 17 per cent to 2 per cent. This will result in a reduction of tax payable on the first $500 of taxable income from $85 to $10. It will, in effect, increase the exemption levels to about $2,000 for a single person and to about $3,300 for a married couple. It will benefit the most those in the low income brackets, although all taxpayers in the categories outlined in the paragraphs of section 117(1) will benefit to the extent of $75.

Over the years we have had a series of studies on poverty in Canada. A number of groups have made surveys and listed recommendations for minimum income levels. It is time the government fully recognized this problem. It could at least set minimum income levels and then ensure that no income tax was levied on any income below those levels. This tax bill does not adequately meet in any sense the fair and equitable tax reform desired by most Canadians. May I point out to the House the sharp increase in the cost of living index over the years. Sometimes we forget this and do not relate it to the present-day conditions. I feel it is certainly an important factor in outlining the need for the tax reduction proposed by our amendment.

I will go back to 1949 when the income tax exemptions were raised to the $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for a married couple. At that time the cost of living index stood at 77.4. Today it stands at just over 135. This is almost a 75 per cent increase in living costs over the past 22 years. It means, in effect, that there has been a drastic reduction in the purchasing power of the dollar. it seems to me that exemptions in the present legislation should at least meet this increase in the cost of living over the past 22 years. Our amendment will do better than this, but even then I feel it will not be high enough to meet those minimum standards of income which should be met and which should be tax exempt. An example of the present purchasing power of the dollar will be found in the fact that an article or a service which today costs $1.35 could have been purchased in 1949 for 77 cents. This erosion of purchasing power hurts everyone, especially those in the very low income brackets. We feel that the acceptance of this amendment would be a step towards the implementation of a tax system that would recognize the income needs of those Canadians who are most in need of tax relief.

Two days ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out some of the tax exemptions which we have had in Canada over the years. The previous speaker did a little more research and went back even further than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I should like to say here that the figures given by the previous speaker substantiate the position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he pointed out that the exemptions proposed in the bill are not high enough. He pointed out that in the 1920's, the exemption levels were $1,200 for a single person and $2,400 for a married couple. In the 1930's, the exemptions were dropped to $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for a married couple. During the war, the levels dropped again to $660 for single people, but after the war in 1949 the exemptions were raised again, this time to $1,000 for single and $2,000 for a married couple.

Those exemptions will remain until the bill currently before us becomes effective, then the new exemptions will be $1,500 for single individuals and $2,850 for a married couple. When someone talks about these exemptions being the highest in the world, it rather amuses me. Someone is always taking credit for something. Out in British Columbia, we have a route over one of our lakes which is called "the largest free ferry trip in the world". I suppose it is of political interest to the governments of the day to make these claims. But this government really has no justification for turning down an amendment which is going to give some tax relief to those who need it most on the basis that we have the highest exemptions in the world.

[Mr. Harding.]

I cannot agree with the Liberal member for York North (Mr. Danson), and a number of his colleagues, who claim that the debate on this important issue is both repetitious and a waste of time. I point out that it was the initial detailed and informative discussion which the opposition forced on those sections of the tax bill dealing with the co-operatives and credit unions that finally forced the government to reconsider their original proposals. It gave the members of the co-operatives and the credit unions time to mount a full campaign against the legislation. The combined result was a complete reversal of proposed government policy and a victory for those who believe in the co-operative and the credit union movements.

There are just one or two more points that I should like to deal with before I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker. I have listened to members from the government side of the House debating the amendment currently before us. I am surprised that every speaker carefully avoided giving any reason why we should not endorse the principle of the tax deduction called for by the amendment. One of their chief arguments is that a reference back to committee which this amendment calls for will open up debate on the whole bill. This is not a fact, Mr. Speaker. If we refer this particular section, it is the only section that will be dealt with by the committee.

I should like to point out to our liberal friends who say it is wrong to refer this section to the committee that this is the only method open to us on third reading. I will tell my friends on the government benches that if they agree to the amendment, the section can be referred to the committee and passed within a few minutes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harding: I understand that all opposition groups endorse it, and if government members will do the same, we can pass it and get back to the general debate with very little delay. I urge government members to support the amendment or to object to it on sound grounds, rather than on the phony issue of referring it back and indicating that it would take weeks of time.

Mr. McBride: Don't get political.

Mr. Harding: Some of the inadequacies of this bill will be improved by the acceptance of the proposal to reduce taxation on the first $500 taxable income from 17 per cent to 2 per cent. A saving of an additional $75 in taxation means a great deal to anyone, especially those living at or below the poverty level. Not only should this amendment be accepted by the House, but we should go on to set adequate income standards for all Canadians and then ensure that we do not take back in taxes any part of the income required to maintain that standard. I fully endorse the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and urge the House to endorse it also.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The House divided on the amendment Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is on the main motion. The right hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did have a good party last night, but I hope the applause will not disturb the electronic system further.

I should like to say at the outset that I anticipate a twinge of disappointment when this bill passes into law. The disappointment will not be over the bill, for it is a very good one, but over the fact that this exercise in tax reform will fall short by several months from occupying one full decade.

It was in 1962 that the government of the right hon. member from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) established the royal commission on taxation. Now, in the closing days of 1971, more than nine years later, the exercise is coming to a conclusion. Has nine years been enough time? No, no, says the opposition. Let us keep at it still longer. The only thing that has dragged on as slowly in Canada in recent years is the heavy water plant started by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) when he was premier of Nova Scotia.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I might add that with Liberal assistance, both of these projects will conclude successfully.

This legislation will place Canada's tax system in the forefront of any of the industrialized nations. It is a reform of the present outdated act with its hodge-podge of amendments, loopholes, plugs, interpretations and confusion. All of this will be replaced by a single modern tax structure. That in itself is reason enough to pass this bill and to be proud of our efforts. Sweeping away the cluttered debris which has accumulated since 1949 and putting in its place a rational tax system is in itself an accomplishment of considerable merit. This bill, however, is much more than a comprehensive income tax statute. It is relevant to the day's needs and it is sufficiently flexible to permit it to adapt to the needs of tomorrow.

An hon. Member: You are reading.

Mr. Trudeau: Above all, it is fair and equitable. It is fair because it removes from low income groups much of the disproportionate income tax burden which they now bear. One million Canadians will be removed from the tax rolls. A further 4.7 million will pay less tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The legislation is fairer because the tax burden has been spread so as to include those persons who benefit through capital gains; no longer will the load be concentrated only on salary and wage earners and businessmen.

It is fairer to mothers who wish to work, because it permits deductions for child care expenses, removing a deterrent which has kept many women in the home.

An hon. Member: You are reading.

Mr. Trudeau: It is fairer to those who are mentally or physically handicapped or disabled. Payments to schools for the care and training of such persons will now be deductible.

It is fairer to the elderly. The existing exemption will be increased and applied at age 65 rather than age 70 as at present.

It is fairer to all members of the labour force for it permits broad deductions of expenses incurred in moving oneself and one's family to another part of the country in order to accept a new job. A new employment expense allowance provides deductions in respect of special clothes, books and tools required for a job, putting the wage and salary earner on a more equal footing with the self-employed.

An hon. Member: You are reading.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: All this may be too complex for the opposition. It may be incomprehensible to them. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is not incomprehensible to the Canadian taxpayer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is not incomprehensible to the low income groups, to the elderly, to the handicapped, to working mothers. But hon. members opposite will protest. They will say they are in favour of cutting taxes. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party is only opposed to taxing others. That is the essence of fiscal irresponsibility.

An hon. Member: You're reading.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I bring it to the notice of the House that any hon. member, even the Prime Minister, has a right to make a speech without being interrupted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Muir: Tell them all that.

Mr. Speaker: My remarks are addressed to all hon. members equally. I am saying this objectively and with all kindness. I am inviting hon. members to bear in mind that it is difficult for the Chair to follow the speech which is being made, and uphold the dignity of this institution, if hon. members do not have respect for the rules.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then let us take the speech as read, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether from now on it is permissible for any member of the House to read his speech, or does the present rule only allow hon. members on the front benches to read their speeches?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has referred to the rule which has often been quoted. My experience in the chair is that while a number of hon. members do make speeches without reference to notes, or copious notes, or prepared texts, other hon. members on both sides of the House do refer to texts from day to day. Hon. members on both sides of the House do refer to prepared texts at various times and I would think the leniency the Chair has exercised in this regard continues to apply. I would think it should apply in the present instance.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask again if it is the intention to shut off the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) when he is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: It is aimed in the direction of all hon. members. I can assure hon. members I will try, objectively and fairly, to invite all hon. members not to interfere with hon. members who have the floor. I am not suggesting of course that members are not entitled to make interruptions or are not entitled to some degree of heckling, because after all this is the House of Commons and I am prepared to accept this to some extent. However, there must be some measure of respect for the general rule that the member who has the floor is entitled to be heard. I appreciate that this applies to all hon. members and I shall continue to attempt to the best of my ability to enforce the rule in relation to all hon. members.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Let me help those gentlemen opposite who are not yet able, or willing, to grasp the essentials of this bill. One of its consequences will be an encouragement to Canadians to invest in Canada. It does this by substantially increasing deductions for contributions to retirement plans. This will raise substantially the level of personal savings available to finance capital investment in Canada.

The bill contributes to Canadian investment in still another way. Foreign investment of pension plans, deferred profit-sharing plans and registered retirement savings plans now may not exceed 10 per cent of assets if these plans are to qualify for tax-free treatment. This change will channel millions of additional dollars into Canadian investments.

The progressive reduction in the general corporate tax rate from 50 to 46 per cent in 1976 will bring this tax down to a level below that in the United States, our chief business competitor.

Canadian ownership of small businesses is encouraged by making the lower tax rate available only to Canadian-owned companies, and by penalizing non-resident control.

Canadians of all walks of life will be more likely to invest in risk activities because capital losses may now be set off against gains, and not lost totally as in the past. This feature of the United States tax system has long been cited as one of the main reasons why Americans invest in equity stocks while Canadians have sought the more assured shelter provided by life insurance and the bond market. Speculative losses incurred in the area of resource industries will be reduced.

An improved dividend tax credit will be an added incentive for Canadians of modest income to invest in shares of Canadian corporations.

And the bill puts Canadians on the same footing as some foreign nationals in mounting, or meeting, take-over bids. Heretofore Canadian corporations have not been able to deduct as an expense interest on funds borrowed to finance the purchase of shares in another corporation. American corporations have. Canadians will now be given an equal advantage.

Incentives in the resource industries will be related directly to exploration and developing carried out in Canada.

And in response to these incentives, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party cries shame. Bad for Canada, they claim. Their reaction shows what a poor idea they have about what is good for Canada.

[English]

Relevance, fairness, growth incentives—these are bad? No wonder the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) confessed, on television and in living colour to bloody-mindedness. Canadians would be hard pressed otherwise to figure out what he was up to. Until that confession was made, I was convinced that the hon. gentlemen did not know where they were going. The ingredients of Conservative tax policy seemed to be the text of paid advertisements by affluent interest groups, seasoned with the latest statistics from some mail-in pressure campaign, then cooked for two hours in the heat of the weekly Conservative caucus meeting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: When the white paper was published in the fall of 1969, the Conservative Party responded in that instinctive, reactionary fashion of all federal tories. "Attack it, attack it" they cried. "Don't believe the government", they said. "The government will not make changes; we must stop this whole exercise", they called out. And so, as early as 1969 the people of Canada learned just how those hon. members viewed participatory democracy. They learned, too, how accurate was their leader's political forecasting, for we did make changes, just as we had said all along we were prepared to do.

Chapter two in the incredible odyssey of these wanderers in pursuit of a political issue revolves about the work of the Standing Committee on Finance. Hon. members will recall that at this time most provinces submitted briefs. The NDP took a stand. Canadians by the thousands expressed their views. The Conservative Party, however, declined to vote either for or against the report. This was their way of showing leadership. This was the expression of a credible alternative to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps so many members of that party were out with fingers in the air testing the political wind that none could be spared for the committee on another matter. The opposition then claimed credit for the changes proposed by the committee. Their only worry, they said, was that the government would not accept them. The government, of course, did accept the bulk of those suggestions. Now, the hon. gentlemen argue against them. The road to glory is seldom without detours! I believe it was better stated by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who said "It is a long road that has no ashcans".

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister proved the truth of this when he evaded the constitution in 1968.

Mr. Trudeau: Those on the other side complain of lack of time; lack of time to study this bill and lack of time to debate it. The first point that they could not study the bill during the summer is not so much a complaint as an admission of their own inefficiency. Copies of the bill were distributed in the normal fashion to all hon. members and to the opposition parties' research staffs by July 12. If those on the other side were otherwise engaged throughout the summer, I cannot comment, but the facts are reasonably ascertainable. One can easily inquire concerning when the distribution office distributed this bill. It was done on July 12.

It is a matter of record that we are today on the 49th day of debate on this bill. Those cries from the other side, Mr. Speaker, come from those who do not feel that 50 House days of debate are sufficient on this item. I congratulate them on their ability to talk so steadily all that time. The taxpayers of Canada shall forever be grateful to certain Members of Parliament for contributing so much useful information to Hansard and the permanent record.

• (4:40 p.m.)

At times, however, Hansard readers will assume that they have opened the pages not to a debate on taxation but to one on foreign affairs. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) talked on October 22 about shortages of meat, fruit and fresh vegetables in the Soviet Union. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) was waxing eloquent about a room in a grocery store in Minsk when he was called to order on October 13. On October 20, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) was predicting difficulties in our relations with the United States as a result of something Premier Kosygin was reported to have said.

Some of the debate was even further out than that. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on October 18, delivered some remarks on witch doctors and about going to the bathroom.

Mr. Stanfield: It is always relevant.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what they use the bill for in Peace River.

Mr. Thompson: Don't talk about leaks over there.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure it was so much a political movement—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I rather suspect the hon. member wanted to deduct his expenses for such trips.

Mr. Baldwin: It was a Liberal movement.

Mr. Trudeau: The occult was also present in the speech of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) when, on November 15, he made references to the devil.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we on this side are proud of this important tax-reform measure.

We have little doubt that the vast majority of the Canadian people support our efforts.

For the first time in Canada, a government has invited the population as a whole to participate with it in the formulation of a major policy. That exercise in democracy has drawn from the opposition the charge, on the one hand, of uncertainty and, on the other, of arrogance. We leave it to the people of Canada to say what they think of such contradictory charges.

Mr. Speaker, the government created this opportunity for public participation more than two years ago; the public has responded during those two years, and this legislation, we believe, reflects that response. The two parliamentary committees held lengthy hearings and received submissions from thousands of Canadian individuals and organizations. As well, nearly every province put forward submissions.

This bill takes into account many of the basic concerns voiced by them. It reflects many of the recommendations of the Senate committee and it includes virtually all the important recommendations of the Commons committee. Above all, the government went as far as was feasible to accommodate the views of the public.

Still the opposition wants more. More debate, more time. Mr. Speaker, I say that they have more than made clear their indecisiveness. The government and the vast majority of Canadians are ready for decision.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Témiscamingue, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Before the amendment was put to the vote this afternoon, I was about to rise when a government member came to see me and ask me to postpone my intervention until after the vote. I agreed also to allow the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to make his statement after the vote. But now I am being ignored, without warning, and the floor is being given to a member of the Progressive Conservative party.

I wonder whether that was what was agreed upon before the vote was taken.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue will surely understand my problem. Of course, I was not aware of the agreement reached by the hon. member and the representative of another party. In any event, I doubt that such an agreement can be binding on the Chair. As far as I am concerned at this point, I believe I should give the floor to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), and then, to the hon. member for Témiscamingue. I could hardly do otherwise.

[English]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to express my appreciation for the courtesy in allowing me to use a place where the electronic apparatus in this House is still working.

It would be a temptation to deal at great length with the almost-maiden speech of the right hon. gentleman who has preceded me, but because it was an almost-maiden speech, and because I have some important things to say which I intend to say while at the same time keeping the debate on as high a level as possible no matter what the provocation, I will not be deterred long by what the right hon. gentleman did say. But he deserves correction, and correction he must receive. When he said that the tax reform procedure would fall short of a decade, he obviously forgot that his own Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was telling us on Friday that come next year, and early next year, we would be receiving amendments to the bill which we are now being asked to pass. Indeed, the Minister of Finance indicated this afternoon in answer to a question of mine that one of these would deal with deferred profit sharing plans. So, when the right hon. gentleman waxed lyrical about deferred profit sharing plans I was tempted to ask: which law is he referring to, the law that we are going to have imposed upon us in a few days or the law that will be suggested to us in a few weeks time by the Minister of Finance?

In short, Sir, we have not done the job in this Parliament which should have been done with regard to tax reform. I see no mystical properties in numbers. Whether we deal with it in 50 days or 500 days, the important thing surely is that we deal with it properly instead of leaving large segments of it—and I shall be pointing these out later on—to the future session of this parliament and indeed to future parliaments. If we have only tackled about one quarter or one third of the job properly, then surely there is a lot of catching up to do in our housekeeping in the years ahead. This is unfortunate, because so much of the stuff is technical that to get into it you really have to do a lot of homework, the results of which in time evaporate and you have to go back for a refresher course.

Then the right hon. gentleman, following the lead developed so ably by the parliamentary secretaries in the last few days, put in some thrusts, not germane to this debate, against the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). But I will tell the right hon. gentleman this. He may not have been aware of events in Canada when heavy water started its rather unusual history, but the first people bounding and capering about at that stage were the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and the present premier of the province of Nova Scotia. The laurels and halos with which they adorned themselves were somewhat wondrous to behold.

The third point in the Prime Minister's speech is one that has been used over and over again by government members. They are saying that next year one million people will be struck from the income tax rolls. What a confession of ineptitude that is, Mr. Speaker, an admission by the strangest yardstick of all that there simply isn't enough prosperity in Canada to go around.

When the Prime Minister talks about incentives to invest in Canada he forgets that the Patina Corporation has thrown up its hands because of the tax law, and has taken advantage of international taxation to move outside this country. It will treat us as hewers of wood and drawers of water because it can make more profit that way. This reminds me of a point that I will be making later, since it is a good example of the fact there are large parts of this tax bill that we have never properly dealt with in committee or on third reading. The flow of international capital and that sort of thing are matters we have not got our teeth into at all. Yet there has been concern about foreign investment in Canada. It is one of the liveliest issues of our time, but the record is pretty well silent with regard to it.

I do not know what kind of democracy the Prime Minister does visualize for Canada, or what he visualizes as the role of this place, but I thought it was a place to debate issues until they were properly resolved. I refuse to accept the fact that one man, or one man surrounded by 800 advisers in his office, or 165 trained seals in this Parliament, is going to tell me and my colleagues what is proper for Canada. We will play our role. They can play their role.

I come now to the main burden of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, but before doing so, and thinking about the wisdom that came out of the original white paper, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whatever became of those delightful creations known as the widely-held and the closely-held corporations? They were sunk without a trace, as common sense continued to improve on the original somewhat outlandish proposals put forward in the white paper. On that score, the record will clearly show that the Leader of the Opposition and other hon. gentlemen were responsible for raising alarms and cries at the first opportunity in order to get some kind of shape put into some pretty wild proposals.

Sir, I will be moving an amendment at the close of my address after the supper hour, and so that nobody will be surprised I can say it concerns an old friend that may be found at page 10,272. My first observation is that we are operating under a time allocation. In this respect I agree with that verbal purist, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson). It must be nice for him to have a friend in the House because this afternoon the government House leader didn't care a hoot for him. However, I must agree that it is time allocation and not closure.

Time allocation, Sir, in relation to closure, bears the same relationship as the devastation wrought by a hydrogen bomb bears to that wrought by old fashioned atomic bomb. Time allocation—what an innocent phrase; you can almost imagine it being used in proper debating societies. But what devastation it creates when brought into a Parliament where, within two hours, one can transform a meaningful type of debate into a hateful type of debate such as we have been asked to undergo for the last couple of days. And it is hateful. There is nothing more injurious to the spirit of a Member of Parliament than to be told that at some point in time the rope is to be applied to him and he will be hauled off stage, and particularly when so much of the work on this tax measure remains unfinished.

When I sat down to compose my speech—it is on this little piece of paper and will not be read—

An hon. Member: No speech writers?

Mr. McCleave: No, not even one. In the spirit of Christmas, I set down the points in this income tax bill that I thought would be acceptable to all of us in Parliament. The Prime Minister has covered some of them, but I will refresh his memory on what we have been dealing with in this House. We have been dealing with exemptions; extra exemptions for the elderly; extra deductions for the blind; the matter of moving expenses; the matter of child care expenses; medical expenses; the changes for the co-ops, credit unions and caisse populaires; the income averaging for those on the income escalator, but unfortunately not for those going down; capital gains not to be applied to principal residences; the federal estate tax to be eliminated. There is a bit of mixed blessing about the last one, Mr. Speaker, because the provinces now seem to be moving rapidly into that field, so that instead of the government getting rid of the double whammy with the capital gains tax, and the estate tax it is reduced to a 1½ whammy, in that the capital gains tax will apply plus whatever provincial rate of succession duty or estate tax that is decided.

I thought also that there was a remarkable amount of common sense in the proposals put forward by the finance committee. Some of us worked hard for them on that Finance Committee which has received such a kicking around in the last couple of days. I think the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie) made his contribution there. He did an outstanding job, as did other members in all parties. We worked, and much of our accomplishment was reflected in the legislation. Those, Sir, are the provisions that I think can be welcomed. I gather it is five o'clock, and when I resume at eight I may be permitted to discuss provisions that are abhorrent, that never did get a good going over in this Parliament. I will point out one of the breaches of faith with a former Liberal prime minister that the government has committed, and then I will move my motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—National Library; the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin)—Transport; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture.

It being five o'clock p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

MIC MAC OILS (1963) LTD.

The House resumed, from Thursday, September 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sulatycky that Bill S-16, respecting Mic Mac Oils (1963) Ltd. be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? Carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sulatycky: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder if I might have the unanimous consent of the House to have all stages of this bill passed this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion has been adopted. Accordingly, the said bill stands referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

UNITED BANK OF CANADA

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved that Bill S-22, to incorporate United Bank of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before us was proposed—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I understand this is also resumed debate.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I imagine there is some merit in this bill that the mover would like to mention and, if so, I should like to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that would be fair. The Chair apologizes to hon. members. I was under the impression that it was resumed debate and that the hon. member sponsoring the bill had spoken. Is there consent for the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, this is a proposal to create a new bank and it comes before the House in the standard form of the bill which is attached as an appendix to the Bank Act. This bill is sponsored by a group of eminent Canadians. One reason for advancing this particular proposal has been the feeling that there is room in the banking business in Canada for representation of a wider spectrum of Canadians than appear to be represented in the present banks.

The sponsors of the bill are those who are listed as provincial directors and their names are: Mr. B. V. Levinter, Q.C., a barrister and solicitor in the city of Toronto and his father Mr. Isadore Levinter, Q.C., of the same city; Mr. Zenon Gutkowski, a chartered accountant from the city of Toronto; Mr. Adiuto John Pianosi, a prominent resident of Copper Cliff presently associated with the University of Sudbury, and the building trades in that city and Dr. Gerald LaSalle of Sherbrooke.

The bill proposes an initial capital of $20 million and in all other respects it conforms with the requirements of the Bank Act and the Superintendent of Banking. It has been discussed at length in the other place where the provisional directors appeared and explained the proposed operation of the bank in detail.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the proposals which comes before us by way of being a bill for the incorporation of a bank or a private company. The most important thing from the standpoint of this House is to receive full explanation and full evidence from those who are making the proposal. This can only be done by the people who originated the proposal for the bank in evidence to the appropriate committee, in this case the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

I commend this proposal to the House and hope that the House will be disposed to permit the bill to come quickly to the Standing Committee so that a full exposition of all aspects of this new bank can be given to the committee and hence to this House.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, from time to time we have had banks, investment companies and agencies coming to us with a proposal to establish a new bank. In recent years most of these banks have failed, though one has been partially successful. This raises a very important problem which must be faced by Members of Parliament.

Unlike the United States where someone with a lot of money sets up a bank and is in the lending business, in Canada banks have been restricted by legislation as to the areas in which they can lend, the circumstances of lending, and have been restricted by law as to the proportion of reserves they must hold. There is also a responsibility on behalf of the Canadian public to see that no depositor may be in fear of losing his money. The history of Canadian banking is as good as that of any country in the world and we should take credit for that type of legislation, for the sense of responsibility of our legislators and the operation of the banking institutions, as well as the fact that in many, many years we have not seen any difficulty with the banking institutions in Canada. This record has not been duplicated in many countries. Our banking institutions are spread across many lands on several continents. They have joined with other banking institutions in Switzerland, the United States and Great Britain and have provided a service that is generally accepted to be of a very high level.

If this is so, and I think most people would agree that it is, then we have a responsibility to see that the situation does not change. Just the other day when someone remarked that money only comes from taxes and the government does not have any, the leader of the Social Credit party asked, "Why not?" I am sure most Canadians have asked themselves this question. When we need more building, more capital for agriculture, more capital in the area of resources and development why can the money not come from the banks? Why do we have to set up an Industrial Development Bank which says that before it will give approval to a proposition put forth by an entrepreneur, he has to have been rejected by two chartered banks? Obviously, we have not said that a proposition has to be turned down by six banks because if it is turned down by one it will probably be turned down by any number.

The question asked by the leader of the Social Credit party was about the role Canadian banks play in the development of our economy. He also asked, what role can they play in the expansion of industry and employment or are they only institutions to lend money, to make deposits and make investments on behalf of depositors? That is an important question and one to which I would like an answer. I really am not sure whether the banks have a right and, in fact, a responsibility to act in a larger sphere than that in which they now operate.

I know that in cases there may be a particular individual operating a particular bank which gets a reputation of being a collector. Sometimes, if a bank gets into serious difficulties in a community another bank manager is appointed. The new manager may be nice; that is, he may lend money more readily than the fellow he replaced. Then, when the bank has trouble collecting the money lent, another manager is installed and he might be known as a collecting manager. Under him the bank will start collecting and foreclosing mortgages.

In the main, however, there is absolutely no competition in the banking industry, as we know that industry. People who want to deposit their money will get the same rate of return at one bank as at another. Recently, however, there have been changes. The banks have been going into the small loans business because they are not under the same restrictions when lending small amounts that would otherwise apply. For instance, the rate on small loans does not have to be about half a percentage point within the rate set by the Bank of Canada. There is nothing like that in this field. The banks borrow this money at a certain rate, and lend it. They make a reasonable mark-up. Also, the banks have gone into other fields. I heard that the Bank of Commerce was talking about setting up a mortgage company. Apparently the bank will lend that company money for housing and investing, the idea being that such a company can lend money at rates higher than the bank would normally be able to charge. It seems that such subsidiary operations can be more valuable to the bank than its main banking operation.

According to my reading of the proceedings before the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, the people backing this bank want to go into the banking business to make lots of money. I know that they talk about social and economic conditions. Nevertheless, it is interesting to note this comment appearing in Issue No. 37 of Wednesday, October 6. On being asked why he thought the investment houses thought this bank would be worthwhile, Mr. Dennis Dwyer, President of Chartec Limited said in part:

> The comments made by those who were positive may be summarized as follows: One, investor interest in Canadian chartered bank shares in general is high, in view of the high return on capital investment. Investor interest in the United Bank, solely on the grounds of the provisional board's responsible and deliberate actions to date, has given the impression that the investor believes that the basic policies of the bank will ensure a profitable operation.

I am not interested in banking institutions being profitable investments. In this connection may I say I was shocked when I heard that a former member of this House advised a friend of his to buy Bank of Montreal stock because, as he said, that stock would soon be split and profits would be made. You know, for 20 years the banks did not split their stocks. The banks were considered blue chip investments. If you wanted an investment as safe as the rock of Gilbraltar, you bought bank stocks. Although you might not get rich, you at least were not buying speculative stock. I asked a number of people, because I thought that was pretty silly advice, what they thought of it. They agreed it was pretty silly advice. Well, it did not turn out that way. After this person had bought several thousand shares of Bank of Montreal stock, that stock was split and he made a considerable profit. What interested me was the fact that this particular bank stock proved as rewarding as any major speculative stock in the resource area.

Even though some may suggest that bank stocks are good investments and that if the free enterprise system is to work we should set up another bank, I am not at all sure that we need to set up any more banks. Actually, I am not convinced that the trend that has developed in banking in Canada during the last 20 years is not a good one. The Dominion Bank amalgamated with the Bank of Toronto, to become the Toronto-Dominion Bank. The Imperial Bank joined up with the Bank of Commerce. I could give more examples. I think most major banks seem to have amalgamated with other banks in the last few years. Now we are getting down to the point where there are only five or six major banks in this country, if we exclude one small bank in Canada that operates in a peculiar way under the Bank Act because it is not Canadian owned or controlled. By amalgamating, the banks have grown bigger. They have branched out into subsidiary operations, small loan operations and mortgage operations. The trend has not been towards the development of another bank.

I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that if I go to borrow money at the bank the rate I will pay on that money is fixed. That, however, is not quite true. If I do not need the money, the rate will be lower than if I need it badly. It is easier for me to borrow money when I do not need it badly. When I need it desperately, I may not get it, and when I do not need it the banks will lend it to me. That has been my experience. However, if I needed a loan desperately, I would be "hosed" with regard to interest rates no matter whether I borrowed from the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Royal Bank or any other bank. I think the financial pages will tell you what you normally have to pay for a loan. That is to say, you know how much the central bank charges the chartered banks. That rate does not vary as between banks. Of course, from an investor's point of view, bank stocks are lucrative, since banks are making considerable profits. However, speaking as an individual who does business with the banks, I say that if you discount the personality of the bank manager and ignore the makeup of the people who work in a bank, there is really no difference between one bank and another. Therefore, why should there be another bank?

It costs a great deal to set up banks. In my town, which has a population of 3,000, there are three banks. Other towns with populations of 17,000 or 18,000 enjoy the services of perhaps seven or eight banks. It appears that in some towns there are more banking institutions than companies that bank money. Old bank buildings are not abandoned. The banking operation is carried on in buildings which no longer belong to the bank that carried on business there. Even after amalgamation, old leases are kept in force. The banks like to operate a second branch in a community. For example, on Sparks Street there are two banks of the same name and occasionally when I just put "Sparks Street" on my cheques and not the full address of the bank, my cheques are sent back NSF. I do not have money in the big bank; I only keep it in the small one. Clearly, we have ended up with more buildings than we need in the area for the provision of banking services.

Surely, social reasons have not been a factor behind the setting up of banks. If you go to the caisse populaire or credit union to borrow money, you will be treated differently than you would be by the small loans department of one of the chartered banks. They have a different method of handling loan operations. Also, if you go to a finance company, you will be treated differently again. Of course, I am told that finance companies handle collections in a way that is totally different from the way credit unions, caisses populaires and banks handle those collections. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we must be very careful before we set up any vehicle for the making of money in banking. Frankly, I want to see a bit more competition in the banking field. I should like to be able to go to one bank and, after hearing they will only pay 4 per cent on my deposit, go to another bank which might offer 4.25 per cent, or to a third bank which might only offer 3.75 per cent. If that were possible there would be some competition in the banking field. At present I do not think there is. If one bank changes the rate on deposits, all other banks in Canada follow suit. There seems to be absolutely no value from the general public's point of view in having seven or eight banks in this country. There is a cost. It is a bit like an insurance company. If an insurance company moves into a town, it costs money to erect a building. Someone has to pay. I am inclined to believe this cost is added to my car or life insurance. It is added there and in the end, I may pay. If an insurance company is established, it will make money. It is a good investment. However, it may not be in the interests of the nation.

Members opposite talk about competition. I am sure no member opposite will indicate that he knows of competition in the field of banking. It may be a great way to make money on an investment, but as far as the general public is concerned there is no competition between banks. Banks do not serve the needs of the people to the level they should. If they did, we would not have the Industrial Development Bank or Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We are the people who are taking all the risks in the investment field in this country. We handle all the bad investments and allow the banks to handle the good ones. It seems foolish to allow a number of people to come before Parliament and say that they have talked to 80 investment companies, that these 80 investment companies have visited and questioned the people who invest with them and have decided that a new bank is a good investment, a good place to make money. It is a place where you can put your money with a good chance of a high rate of return.

I am no more sure than the member who asked the question whether the banking institutions should not play some role in the development of our industries. We have plenty of banks to supply the necessary competition. If we do not believe that, then members of Parliament in the past were derelict in their duty to Parliament and the Canadian public. I do not know of any banks merger that was turned down. There has never been any consideration given to turning one down.

We have decided that bank mergers do not come under the Combines Investigation Act. These mergers are not the type that will contribute to abuses of the competition system. You cannot use that argument, however, and at the same time maintain that we are a free enterprise oriented people and we want another bank. What is wrong with having 100 or even 1,000 banks? Are there any Members of Parliament who say that we have too many?

We have the same situation with gasoline outlets in every community. One outlet is a total necessity. You cannot run any motor vehicle without a gasoline outlet. It may even make sense for each major company to have an outlet in a community. In the small town where I live, most major companies have three outlets. There is no possibility whatsoever of each of them making money. Many are not being operated as service stations. Competition does not exist. The price of gasoline in my area is five cents or six cents more per gallon because the gallonage distributed in that area is so low. Service stations cannot afford to have a reasonable staff and pay their overhead. They regularly go broke. Some service stations perpetually have a "for lease" sign on them. With 1,000 banks in Canada, we could reach the point where many of their buildings would have vacancy signs on them. If members agree that 1,000 banks would be too many, then how many should we have?

To date there is no evidence to show that the number of banks we presently have is not sufficient to meet the needs of the Canadian public or that any additional banks, no matter for what purpose, operated under the Bank Act would serve any purpose that is not being served by the chartered banks now in existence. They have a very high proficiency. For many years they have provided good service to the depositors and others involved with those institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, the House is now considering Bill S-22 "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada" which was introduced in the Senate. The preamble of this bill reads as follows:

Whereas the persons hereinafter named have by their petition prayed that it be enacted as hereinafter set forth, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of the petition:—

Section 2 of the bill provides that:

The persons named in section 1 shall be the provisional directors of the Bank.

Mr. Speaker, the perusal of certain documents which we have received concerning this bill would lead us to believe that the establishment of this bank as provided by Bill S-22 would be the implementation of one of the most humanitarian programs.

Actually, the persons whose names appear in the bill have attempted to explain to us by other documents that they wish to operate the bank in an area which lacks appropriate banking services.

That may be so, Mr. Speaker. It is possible that the new bank will serve minority groups. Even then, however, I cannot ignore the fact that this bank would operate according to the provisions of Bills C-190 and C-222 which have been passed by this House thanks to the support of Liberal members who, as is the case today, were in power in March 1967.

Since business transactions in this country indicate that less than 10 per cent of banking operations are carried out with money released by the Bank of Canada, that is coins and bank notes, we have to conclude that the new bank which might open its doors if Bill S-22 were adopted would operate in the same manner as other chartered banks in Canada which means that it will have the authority to extend credit. If that bank receives, for example, bank notes that the saver was keeping at home, it will be able to use it to create further deposits in the form of loans. Considering that banks need to keep on hand only a certain amount of bills, roughly 7 per cent of their assets, they will be able to use the rest, keeping at the same time a statutory reserve, to create currency.

Mr. Speaker, I imagine that all hon. members know quite well that banks may not lend their deposits but that they can use coin and paper currency committed to them to create more credit by increasing their statutory reserve. This is what is called multiplication of credit pursuant to the federal act which allows them to do so. Under the authority presently granted to them the banks determine the amount of money in circulation in our country.

When a bank grants a loan, either to a contractor, to a businessman or a government, new financial credit is born. The banker writes down the amount of the loan granted in the account of the borrower as if he had deposited that amount. The borrower neither brought it in nor deposited it because he came to the bank to get money he did not have. The borrower may draw cheques on that account that he did not have when he went in but that he did have when he went out.

No other account of any other client of the bank has been reduced. So it is an account added to those already there.

It is correct to say that without any danger to the depositors banks can in this way create 16.6 times more currency. The chartered banks do not print bank notes but they open accounts and create new credit that they use to make loans as if they had saved the amounts of such loans.

This creation of credit can total up to 16.6 times the initial amount. The present federal act authorizes banks to issue, for example, $1,666 in the form of new credit provided that they increase their statutory reserve by $100.

A person makes a $100 deposit in his savings account. The bank will be able to issue, under the form of credit, as many $100 as there are $6 in the $100 savings. In short, that boils down to the fact that every year, the chartered bank can get an interest of 9 per cent on $1,666, namely $160, whereas it had at the outset only $100 as savings deposit.

You will agree with me that, when it comes to yield on an investment output, one can hardly find anything better.

By enabling the people whose names appear in section 1 of the bill, namely Messrs. Isadore Levinter and Benjamin Victor Levinter, barristers, as well as Mr. Zenon Gutkowski, chartered accountant of Toronto, and Mr. Adiuto John Pianosi, executive, of the town of Copper Cliff, in the district of Sudbury, to establish a bank, we are granting them a very special privilege, I think. Five years ago, one might have said they struck a gold mine. But as the price of gold is unsteady at the present time and as extracting it means hard work, the power that will be granted those gentlemen—if Bill S-22 ever goes through—to incorporate themselves in order to lend money is much greater than any of the benefits enjoyed by concerns other than banks.

And the British associate-secretary to the Treasury, Mr. Ralph W. Hawtrey, was aware of that kind of operation since he dared state once, and I quote:

Whenever a bank lends money, it creates money out of nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a few articles I have been reading in various pamphlets:

The multiplication of credit by banks is a recognized fact.

1—The Bank of Canada balance sheet for each year from 1957 to 1960 reveals that coins and paper currency make up 8.2 per cent of our money in circulation while credit created by banks accounts for 91.8 per cent.

2—We have many statements from authorities in this field:

(a)—A Canadian financial authority, Mr. M. W. Trimble from the Ryerson Institute of Toronto, wrote in his book Understanding the Canadian Economy: "We already know that the most considerable form of money is credit and that most of the credit is created out of nothing by banks. Banks lend money which comes from nowhere and which goes back nowhere when the loan is reimbursed. Practically all bank revenues derive from interest paid on money which does not exist."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize the last sentence by quoting it again:

Practically all bank revenues derive from interest paid on money which does not exist.

And I go on with the quotation:

(b)—The Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers, appeared in 1939 before the parliament committee on banking and commerce and revealed the extent of credit created by chartered banks.

Here is the text of an exchange between Mr. Graham Towers, former Governor of the Bank of Canada, and a witness during a meeting of the committee on banking and commerce:

Question: You say they cannot lend what they do not own?

Answer: That is true. Banks cannot make loans with depositors' money. They have no control over what depositors do with their savings.

Question: What if they happen to have deposits to lend?

MR. TOWERS: They do not lend those deposits.

Question: But there is no doubt that the bank provides a means of exchange?

MR. TOWERS: That is true. That is why they exist—These are banking transactions, in the same fashion as steel plants produce steel—Here the manufacturing process is to make an entry on a card or in a book with pen, ink and a typewriter. That is all.

Question: 95 per cent of our business consists in withdrawals on bank accounts, that is in entries in bank ledgers, against which people issue their cheques.

MR. TOWERS: I believe that this statement is true.

Question: When the government delivers a $1,000 bond to the bank, how does the bank purchase it? Does the transaction involve the creation of additional money?

MR. TOWERS: It involves the creation of additional money.

Question: In other words, when $1 million worth of bonds is offered to the banks, new money or the equivalent of $1 million is being created?

MR. TOWERS: Yes.

Question: The same happens when a municipality or a province borrows?

MR. TOWERS: Or an individual borrower.

[Mr. Godin.]

A distinguished English banker, Mr. Reginald McKenna, who was for some time Minister of Finance in his country and then many years as chairman of the Midland Bank, one of the larger banks of England, said at the 1934 annual meeting of the shareholders, and I quote:

People generally ignore that the money supply depends on the action of the banks. Any bank loan, direct or unsecured—increases outstanding credit, and any reimbursement of a bank loan cuts the supply by that much.

Having been a Minister of Finance, Mr. McKenna knew very well which of the two powers was stronger, the bank or the highest government of the country. He was even candid enough, a rare occurrence among bankers at that level, to declare:

They (the banks) control the nation's credit, direct government policies and hold in the hollow of their hands the fate of the populations.

Mr. Speaker, in short, if United Bank of Canada opens its doors, it will be empowered to issue money and credit, to condition the money and credit supply, to determine the duration of that credit supply, the power to demand reimbursement at a date set in advance, under the penalty of seizure of the debtor's assets which are the outcome of his labour, setting also the terms for the discharge or reimbursement and requiring some guarantees.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The bank, empowered to lend money originating from nowhere, will belong to the group of banks that control the national credit, establish government policies and hold in their hands the fate of the people. Even if there is another institution to help them, those who control money and credit will not grow a single stalk of wheat, sew up a pair of shoes, build a single house or part of a road.

Mr. Speaker, by allowing the creation of another bank, we are merely adding to the number of institutions exploiting all levels of governments as well as all classes of society.

As regards individuals, corporations and governments, this new bank will control the right to mobilize the talents, good wills and natural resources of the nation. It will grant or refuse, but it will get into debt all those who will come up to its counter.

Mr. Speaker, if Bill S-22 passes, it is obvious that the old parties will have one more institution that will subscribe to their electoral funds.

And since I have been elected with quarters collected by volunteers among my electors, I have no qualms about asking senators to prepare another legislation likely to make changes in the present system which enables banks to exercise their power like bandits.

For the information of Canadians, bills like Bill S-22 must be opposed. What we need to satisfy the requirements of the community is an act to improve the monetary system in Canada.

The state must get its financial sovereignty back, as well as its control over the issue and volume of money and credit.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian experts know it and, if they are honest, they will say that all we need now is to establish a commission with full authority which it could get from Parliament.

In 1935, the right hon. Mackenzie King stated, and I quote:

As long as control over currency and credit has not been restored to the government and acknowledged as being its most obvious and most sacred responsibility, any talk of democracy and Parliament supremacy is vain and futile.

If my party is re-elected, we will assert our monetary policy in the greatest battle between high finance and the people ever witnessed by Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the great battle announced by the right hon. Mackenzie King never took place. That is why, following a series of treasons, we are advancing rapidly towards the ruin that he predicted.

The very serious question of public debts on which high interests must be paid, and of the taxes unjustly imposed for this purpose and which will never be reimbursed, should make the Canadian people stop and think.

The public debt has reached such high proportions that one wonders whether the kettle will not explode.

The question is so serious that it can be said that it is the scandal that beats all scandals: the original source of subversion.

Mr. Speaker, we Créditistes are alone in denouncing this, while the opinions of one's father, one's mother, one's teachers, the school authorities, and the Church are all challenged. Everyone is proceeding blindly, being occupied with mere futilities. Nothing is said, however, about the scandal that beats all scandals, but the facts are there: the federal government, the provincial governments and the public bodies get into debt at an increasing and shocking rate. Their debts, together with personal debts total $100 billion.

A publication of the Treasury Board reveals the following, and I quote:

In 1867, the total debt of Canada amounted to slightly more than $93 million.

In 1900, it amounted to over $346 million.

In 1933, it reached $3 billion.

At the end of the war, it was close to $10 billion.

In 1971-72, it will amount to roughly $40 billion.

Mr. Speaker, what is true of Canada is also true of the individual. Le Devoir for March 9, 1971 reported, and I quote:

—consumer credit, at the end of 1970, amounted to over $11.3 billion.

With ever increasing personal debts, it will likely reach $12 billion by the end of the year. That is $12 billion of personal debts for 20 million Canadians.

All in all, Canadians owe to financial magnates these astronomical amounts: Canada, $40 billion; provinces, jurisdictions of all kinds, public societies, municipalities, school boards and hospitals, $48 billion; individuals, $12 billion, a grand total of $100 billion, Mr. Speaker.

Every Canadian is therefore doomed to pay taxes in order to pay interest on debts which will never be reimbursed but which are increasing at an incredible pace.

So as to pay interest on debts which governments will never reimburse, year in year out the taxpayer has to shell out the following approximate amounts: $2 billion for the national debt, $3.5 billion for provincial, municipal and school debts, a total of $5.5 billion in interest paid each year by the Canadian taxpayer, unfairly taxed. Such funds simply fill the coffers of banking and financial institutions here and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, in his book entitled "Demain, c'est l'an 2,000", economist Gaston Bardet stated, and I quote:

—the almost magical power of banks. Not only do they create and destroy currencies, but also business. They provoke booms, artificial crises, overactive periods or unemployment according as, like a coquettish woman, they fancy granting or not granting their favours . . . They are mistresses of the "trade cycle". Their power is invicible, no matter what political party is temporarily triumphant. They gradually concentrate everything in their hands, on the nations' ruin."

Mr. Speaker, that is why I say we don't need bills like this one, Bill S-22. We can do without them. And, once again, I say that the state must regain financial sovereignty and control over the supply of money and credit.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks apropos Bill S-22 introduced by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) to incorporate the United Bank of Canada. The measure was thoroughly studied by the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and was passed by the Senate on October 7.

I believe there is room today for another federally-chartered bank to serve our people and to introduce more competition. As the federal member for the cosmopolitan constituency of Parkdale, I was pleased to read the names of the provisional directors of the proposed United Bank of Canada and to learn of their aim to give representation to all the groups of our community and to involve all our people in the banking system. This is why I should like to commend the bill to all hon. members and have it referred to the appropriate committee of the House.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to talk out this bill. Members of the NDP are prepared to consent to the second reading of this bill and its reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) has just mentioned that he represents a cosmopolitan riding in Toronto. I do, likewise. The people who are incorporating this bank represent a broad spectrum of the different nationalities which compose this country. If we were to look at the history of chartered banks in Canada from confederation to the present time, we would find a strong flavour of Anglo-Saxon ownership and control.

I would think that many new Canadians have experienced difficulties when dealing with the present chartered banks. I had the privilege of sitting on the finance committee during its review of the Bank Act. I heard the observations of some of those who spoke on behalf of their banks. I saw the pressure that was applied in respect of the lifting of the 6 per cent ceiling on interest rates. I am very familiar with what has happened and the necessity of having credit unions and other organizations fill the gap that the chartered banks have failed to fill in this regard, and the needs of ordinary folk in Canada no matter whether they are Anglo-Saxon or any other nationality. If this bank could help fill the gap the chartered banks have not filled, then it would be performing a very useful function.

The credit unions have been criticized with regard to the interest rates they have charged on loans. Experience indicates that the net effective rates of credit unions have been much lower than the rates of chartered banks. I see the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) nods his head in assent. He has wide experience in respect of credit unions and I am sure he agrees with me.

If this bank can bring a competitive aspect to the almost monopoly control the chartered banks have, it will perform a useful social and economic function within the community. Therefore, on behalf of members of my party I ask members of the House to give second reading to this bill and have it referred to the standing committee where we can meet some of the problems raised by hon. members who have participated in this debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should not like to miss an opportunity of saying a few words about Bill S-22, incorporating a new bank, entitled: "An Act to incorporate United Bank of Canada".

This bill prescribes that certain persons, businessmen, have got together, carefully chosen among different nationalities, in response to a need—

Do you hear me well, Mr. Speaker? I notice that my microphone is not working.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member is being heard quite well, as the microphones of the first row of benches are working.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, they made a point of grouping people of different nationalities in response to a demand, apparently, for service to Canadians who are neither English-speaking nor French-speaking.

That is a very good idea. As the saying goes, the road to hell is paved with good intentions. The intentions of the promoters of this bank are certainly good. I never wondered whether they are about to take the first step toward the aim I just mentioned.

When I was very young I experimented the big crisis in the early 1930's. Before that, business was fair and people invested in land or in small businesses. When the crisis came, individuals promptly went bankrupt following the breakdown of the economy and the sharp decline in employment. Every time those people lost their land or their small business—

[English]

Mr. Blair: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. With regret and with great respect to the hon. member who is speaking, I call attention to the fact that we are nearing the end of private members' hour . I also call attention to the fact that because we are close to the end of the session it is unlikely this bill will progress to the committee unless it is given approval now. I appeal to hon. members to allow the people who are behind this bill an opportunity to make their presentations to the committee, after which Parliament can decide whether or not to pass the bill.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): As there is no question of privilege here, I will recognize the hon. member for Abitibi again.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have only a few minutes left, for I still have a number of things I would like to say.

I was extremely surprised to see this bill introduced right at the end of the session. We have been sitting for over 230 days. This is a situation I do not understand and cannot accept. I also regret that the sponsor of this bill and his colleague who supported it in the House did not explain to us more fully the purpose of this bill—the reason for establishing a new chartered bank. This is why we have a number of things to say concerning this bill. We have already had closure forced upon us twice this month, and I do not think we can accept it once more.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Robert Kaplan (Don Valley): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether it would not be possible to keep on discussing for a few minutes after six, in order to finish with this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. In order to do this, the unanimous consent of the House is required.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: It is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hour assigned for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will meet again at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, before private members' hour at five o'clock I listed several items in the new income tax bill which I thought could be welcomed by all sides of the House, although I ended up with one which might be a doubtful blessing, that is, the elimination of the federal estate tax. There were signs that the provinces would move into the field, so that estates, even with generous exemptions, would be put in an element of double jeopardy, first from the standpoint of capital gains taxation and second from the standpoint of provincial taxation through succession duties or the like.

Then I indicated that I would like to discuss some of the matters into which we never got our collective teeth by way of debate. I also indicated that I would like to list some of the things which I thought were abhorrent in the old legislation and on which no reform whatsoever was being carried out. May I now list them in perhaps rather brief fashion because there are others who want to make speeches and who have not taken part in the taxation debate, and I want to be fair to them.

The first item which was mentioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his speech this afternoon concerned corporations being allowed full deductions, income tax-wise, for interest on the money that they borrowed to buy shares in other corporations. The point here is that it might have been valuable to have a debate on the matter to determine how far reaching this rate should be. Should Canadian companies, for example, be allowed the right to buy companies operating in other countries, and what would be the effect of companies owned substantially outside of Canada trying to use that right to buy companies that are operated wholly within Canada? We all know the furore and intellectual ferment that has been caused on this matter of domestic versus foreign ownership. This subject might have provided a very useful debate, but we never had it because of the time allocation.

Then there is the very interesting section in the bill dealing with the sale of "nothings" and goodwill, which has never been discussed properly by us in committee. I do not think anybody touched on it very much at any stage of the debate, yet what the minister and the department have done is to set up a brand new type of language to cover a whole flock of new definitions.

A rather interesting question of commercial law is involved there. I am not a commercial lawyer and I make no pretence to be one. I could add very little, if anything, to such a debate but I would say that considering the over-all consideration by this chamber of the income tax law, perhaps the largest group who can complain about our perfunctory consideration and the fact that we have not considered all elements of income tax properly is the business group of this country. They are the backbone, the people who provide jobs, and I do not think they have been treated fairly because of the time allocation on this debate.

Then a matter in which I am very much interested and on which I would have liked to speak in the debate is rental property and the question of capital cost allowance classes and depreciation, and the fact that a separate class is created for each rental building costing $50,000 or more under the new legislation. We have had good, expert opinion both from the Toronto Real Estate Board and from a group in greater Vancouver who question whether the proposals in the white paper have been translated into the bill, whether these proposals are good enough at a time when Canada still has a substantial need for accommodation for its citizens, more particularly in the vast metropolitan areas where this point was made forcibly to us.

I would have liked to discuss that element alone and whether or not what is proposed by the government is a good measure. I say this because there are all sorts of people in the House who, if unleashed from the government whip and allowed to participate in such a debate, would be able to throw out a great many common sense ideas on the subject of rental accommodation. We never touched on the matter at all, yet I think only the other day the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) pointed out in this House, through questions to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Andras), the very serious accommodation problems now being faced in the city of Toronto.

I myself in the past have referred to the almost unholy explosion in population in the megalopolis that is developing between Montreal and Windsor. I am almost a Paul Revere in this regard, shouting, "The megalopolis is coming," trying to arouse some interest in the government so that it will be aware of a problem of mammoth proportions that is rapidly coming in the area of Canada between Montreal and Windsor. Surely somewhere along the line we should have had an opportunity to decide, after considerable debate, whether the proposals in this new income tax law with regard to rental property are sensible or not, and whether they should be modified.

Much has been made about the role of the finance committee of this House in dealing with the bill. With respect to the committee report, I accepted the recommendations of the majority in that regard, although it is true that some of that report was disregarded by the government. But I would hate to think that even a group of knowledgeable people, and I think they were knowledgeable people in that committee, should have the sole hand in suggesting the sort of tax legislation we should have. I think our housing problems are serious enough that everybody in this chamber should have had that right. But for some reason, within the last couple of weeks the government decided that time allocation, the most hideous weapon in the armament of the gag, should be invoked in this chamber.

As a result, for the next decade we will probably carry on the process of tax law reform because every year will turn up instances of where the legislation was imperfectly drafted or where the ideas were imperfectly conveived. It simply means that future parliamentarians may look back to this Parliament and wonder why the government chose the course it did and choked off meaningful debate on tax changes.

Sir, another thing we never really got our teeth into was the international capital business—I mentioned this earlier—foreign source income and dividends. We never really got our teeth into the manner of the treatment of the professional taxpayer who is now practically on the same basis as the fellow who peddles radios, TV's, other merchandise and the like, who could be classified in a different position. Those are only some of the things we did not debate. I think I have listed five or six, all very important, Mr. Speaker, but thanks to the divine right methodology of a few despotic people in this chamber we are not to have that kind of discussion.

Third reading would have been a very appropriate stage to bring in a new amendment every day, even up to a month, to test all the different ideas that should be put to the test and should be determined by the chamber because now, under the new rules, third reading is really the place where one decides on questions of principle. But a fat number of questions of principle we can decide, thanks to the time allocation rule that has been imposed upon us!

I also said that there are provisions in the bill that are absolutely abhorrent and that if we had any tax change that was worthy of the name of tax reform, surely changes could have been made in the areas that I will now proceed to list. One is the mamma and papa small business operation. I raised this question very early in the debate, so that the minister and his advisers had all the time in the world to try to come up with equity for this couple. Instead, mamma is to be the slave of papa, or papa the slave of mamma under the unique provisions of this bill lumping them together, and all we are told is that it is administratively difficult to separate mamma and papa. It should not be administratively difficult for mamma and papa to separate some of the Liberal members from their seats when the next election comes along, because they will know that they have been treated unjustly. This issue has been well scouted and I merely touch on it now.

The farming provisions of the bill are also the subject of debate here. I do not think the mistakes made in this legislation, which will become apparent when it comes into effect on January 1, 1972, can ever be sufficiently repaired by future amendments unless they are introduced very early next year. If such amendments are not introduced early, the family farm will have had it, and it will have been a deliberate decision by the government. We are all supposed to crowd into the cities, and a few large, baronial holdings will grow the food that we Canadians are to eat. That seems to be the effect of it. I don't know what everybody is expected to do when they get into the cities unless, I suppose, they sell insurance to each other.

Finally, there is the power given in the bill to the Minister of Justice whereby a person can be hauled into court on summary procedure for failing to deal properly with the Income Tax Act and, if convicted, faces a fine. But if the Minister of Justice says, "We will try you by indictment," then the mere fact of conviction means the miscreant must go to jail. What a power for any minister to have! In effect, if you have two similar cases he can say, "This one pays a fine, but that one goes to jail." All this could have been taken care of through the very simple amendment offered by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who has been a medium of common sense in this whole debate, leaving the option of how to proceed with the minister but leaving it to the judge to decide whether, in addition to a financial penalty, he should impose a jail sentence.

In other words, the judge is faced with the evidence and he decides whether the difficulties that the taxpayer is in are really of such a criminal nature that he should not only be punished with a fine but should go to jail as well. That is a decision that should not be made by the Minister of Justice, no matter how well intentioned he may be, nor should it be a matter decided by his officials. That point was made, and of course we got nowhere.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: Somebody cheers. I do not know who it was. If he is on this side, I imagine he would be endorsing the scorn in my remarks, but if he is on the other side he would be saying the Minister of Justice is right. In tax reform or in something like that I would sooner be a compassionate fool than a heartless idiot.

Earlier today I indicated that the government had not kept faith with a former Liberal Prime Minister in bringing in certain sections of this legislation. I now wish to deal with that matter and put it clearly on the record. Back in April, 1964, Mr. Speaker, this House was considering the social insurance number plan that was being piloted through by the President of the Privy Council, then Minister of Labour, and a great furor was made about whether the scheme would be widely used or would be restricted. People are very suspicious of being given a number and treated as part of a computer system.

I wish to read into the record part of the exchange that took place at that time. At page 1918 of Hansard dated April 8, 1964, appears the following:

MR. MACEACHEN: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will recall that the Glassco commission made a proposal that there be a common system of government record keeping and I am saying—and this is all the responsibility I can take—that this information is to be used for the unemployment insurance system and for the Canada Pension Plan.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: And nothing else?

MR. MACEACHEN: I am not in a position to indicate at this stage what system of government record keeping will be involved in the future, but that is the present attitude of the government.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: Oh; income tax, and so on?

MR. PEARSON: Certainly not.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: The Prime Minister is butting in. I ask him, will he give the undertaking on behalf of the government that this information will not be made available to other departments of government? We want to know that this is not a snooping operation for the use of the government.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

MR. PEARSON: Mr. Speaker, the same and, I would hope, more effective precautions will be taken in this regard as were taken under the regime of the right hon. gentleman.

MR. DIEFENBAKER: All this means is that it is going to be used.

As usual, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was not whistling Dixie when he said that, because that is precisely what will happen under this new Income Tax Act. Anybody who looks at the day care provisions will know this was a breach of faith in respect of a policy statement made by a former Prime Minister of this country.

Then as reported at page 1919 of Hansard for April 8, 1964, a member of the Ralliement Créditiste said:

MR. RAYMOND LANGLOIS (MEGANTIC): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister concerning this system. Is the government considering whether this system is going to be extended to other departments than those of the unemployment insurance commission and pensions?

MR. PEARSON: There is no necessity for extending this particular system for this particular purpose to any other department.

There it is. What a sorry commentary on smuggling something in and then gradually extending it for other purposes! A sorry record indeed.

Mr. Speaker, in a moment I intend to move an amendment but first, since it is the Christmas season and one likes to settle one's debts, I think that earlier in the debate I was wrong when I made a statement regarding a journalist in the press gallery, Mr. Dan Turner of Canadian Press. I thought about it and reviewed what I said, and am convinced that I was in error. I would not like to be unjust and, accordingly, in my place, I apologize without reservation for what I said at that time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: The amendment which I propose, Mr. Speaker, is an old friend, previously entered in debate by the Leader of the Opposition. It reinforces the point we have made over and over again in the debate, that this House is simply not giving full consideration to all the elements that make up the proposed Income Tax Act. We have given good consideration to some parts of the bill and amendments have been offered. I see the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) here this evening. He is responsible, with the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), for a very important amendment. These are small satisfactions, but important ones.

The fact is, we have covered parts of the field very thoroughly and other parts not at all. We know that the process of so-called tax reformation is by no means completed when the axe falls on our heads tomorrow afternoon and this measure is paraded to the other place for consideration. We know that if there is any intention to carry out meaningful tax reformation, it has to be a process which occurs over a considerable period of time. For example, on the deferred profit-sharing plans apparently the minister intends to bring in something to deal with them early in the new year. Why could not such an amendment be brought in now, so that at least that part of the tax story could be cleared up and people would not have to live with anxiety for months until the minister drops the other shoe, so to speak? The government has a strange way of operating, and I am glad to belong to a party that has resisted—

Mr. Danson: "Change."

Mr. McCleave: —utter foolishness. They can go around the country all they want, Mr. Speaker, saying that we should have cleaned up this bill in 50 days. If we started a criminal code from scratch, how long do you think it would take Parliament to deal with it, when everybody is interested in whether such and such an action should be designated a crime? It would probably take six months. While I do not recommend six months consideration in Parliament on tax reform measures, or tax change measures—there is not much tax reform in this bill—at least discussion should have had its full course and should not have been allowed to run to the end of the year and then be stifled.

I say, Sir, the government has not permitted us to do our job adequately with regard to tax retorm. We should be back in committee of the whole. I would not have minded being in committee of the whole on Christmas Day if we were going to have some kind of meaningful debate. I do not consider very meaningful what the parliamentary secretaries have been babbling in this House for the last couple of days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCleave: It was childish and filled with misstatements. I heard that "Guay" contributon again, Mr. Speaker. They must be proud of him in St. Boniface, for all his time spent uttering two words in the House of Commons. I wonder what kind of water he is going to get himself into.

An hon. Member: Water on the brain.

Mr. McCleave: In a moment of charity earlier I promised that I would try to be positive. Accordingly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard):

That Bill C-259, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, be not now read a third time but be referred back to committee of the whole with an instruction that the committee have power to consider amending the bill by providing:

• (8:30 p.m.)

That clause 1 of the bill be amended by deleting lines 1 to 3 on page 1 and substituting therefor the following:

"1. Parts I to IIIA and Parts V to VII of the Income Tax Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor so as to apply, subject to the said act as hereby amended and to Part III of this act, to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years but the said act as hereby amended, excepting thereout those portions thereof containing an arrangement, revision and consolidation of the provisions of the said act as the said act is amended by the application mutatis mutandis of the provisions of sections 6 and 8, subsection 12 of section 20, and sections 62, 63, 109, 110 and 117 of the said act as hereby amended, shall not come into force and have effect as law until a day to be fixed by a proclamation that shall be subject to affirmative resolution of the House of Commons:"

Mr. Mahoney: Is that one amendment?

Mr. McCleave: I understand that there may be difficulty about the last line, and if Your Honour should so decide, rather than touching off a procedural debate I would be willing to have all the words after "proclamation" struck out, because in the final hours of this debate it is more important for hon. members to make their contribution on the merits of the bill than for them to become enbroiled in procedural arguments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member was not trying to read the mind of the incumbent of the chair, principally because of what has been said in committee. I feel that there might be some reservations about the procedural acceptability of the amendment in its present form. After presenting his amendment, the hon. member suggested that he or his party would be ready to eliminate some of the words from the end of the motion. It is very difficult for the Chair to pass judgment on this amendment, either as it is now or as it might read if the last part were eliminated, and I think I ought to invite comments from hon. members who might have opinions to express about the procedural acceptability of the amendment.

Before inviting hon. members to comment, perhaps I ought to refer to something that happened in committee in connection with the acceptance of an amendment on one basis by the chairman of the committee. As hon. members may recall, the chairman of the committee at that time said quite plainly that it would be impossible for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to redraft the amendment he had presented because of the very limited time available. I am sure that this limitation does not apply any more because hon. members who may have heard the remarks of the chairman of committee afterwards had ample time to consider the drafting of the amendment in question. This is not to be taken as an argument in favour of acceptance of the present amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave).

I wish to refer to another basic difficulty with regard to the amendment. This is more a constitutional difficulty than a procedural one. I wonder to what extent the Chair can go beyond the constitution of Canada in accepting amendments that would more or less limit the powers of Parliament. After Parliament has passed a piece of legislation, can that power be limited by making that legislation subject to further affirmative resolutions of the House of Commons which makes up one part only of our parliamentary system? That is the point on which I should like to hear comments. I see the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) becoming somewhat impatient while I talk.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Your Honour has forgotten some legislation we have passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I do not want to decide without first hearing from hon. members. I wish to tell the hon. member that even though he may have expressed his views on that point in particular, I may not be ready to decide immediately, in view of this very important difficulty.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I will limit my remarks to the narrow point which seems to give Your Honour difficulty. I suggest that the argument used the other night in accepting or, shall we say, glossing over any difficulties was, frankly, one that I myself would never have accepted. I mean, a motion will either stand on its own feet or it will not. If one looks at the arguments advanced with regard to the Leader of the Opposition's motion, one will see that from the procedural point of view it was never attacked. That point was never commented upon. Therefore, it makes little difference saying that it is too late to accept a change or a redrafted version.

If there is any difficulty about the words "shall not come into force—until a day to be fixed by a proclamation that shall be subject to affirmative resolution," I would invite Your Honour to look at legislation we have passed during the present session. In the Statutory Instruments Act there is a statutory direction to that effect. There is a provision resulting precisely from the government's own use of language saying that if at any time in future bills are passed by this House whereby power is given to the governor in council to pass regulations, if the bill stipulates that there are to be these regulations, they may be passed. It is provided that these shall be subject to affirmative or negative resolution.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

One must be careful not to draw an artificial distinction between the granting of power by this House and the ability of the governor in council to pass certain orders in council that shall be subject to either affirmative or negative resolution. We are, by the changes to our standing orders, providing for affirmative and negative resolution with regard to what procedures must be followed.

The amendment moved by my colleague from Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) is perfectly legitimate. Its parentage is sound. It draws its inspiration from the government's own statutes. Although we may not have had, shall we say, in the immediate past precedents of this kind, I would invite Your Honour to look at what the government has done in the case of the Statutory Instruments Act. I think there is an exact parallel here. The amendment asks the committee to recommend to the government that certain sections of the act shall be proclaimed, as indicated—the motion is absolutely clean and impeccable in that respect—and that the remainder shall be subject to proclamation on a date fixed in the proclamation after there has been an affirmative resolution of this House.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hogarth: That is nonsense.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth)—

An hon. Member: The Queen city.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is a very fine place. I am only surprised that the hon. member does not shine any more brilliantly on behalf of his constituents when he wants to talk about procedure.

If it is in contemplation of an affirmative resolution or a negative resolution under the Statutory Instruments Act, as a matter of fact there is a motion on the order paper to set up a committee on statutory instruments which will make provisions for the rules because this House will have to decide precisely the procedures. We are not talking about something new or constitutionally strange. It is fully within the power of this House, if it is to have the power under any other act as provided for under the Statutory Instruments Act. If Your Honour is to rule that this type of amendment is out of order by reason of the fact that the constitutional powers exist, the Statutory Instruments Act is wrong and any action by this House following the procedure laid out in that act would be beyond its power.

I also ask whether the Chair does rule on the constitutionality or legality of certain actions. I submit the amendment of the hon. member is quite in keeping with this stage of the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Gibson: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and then the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson).

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Merlin.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what my friends need tonight—magic. I had intended to sit this one out, partly because I agree with the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) that in the closing hours of this debate the time should be spent on the substance of the bill rather than on procedure, and also because I always feel a bit uncomfortable taking issue with my friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). After all, as opposition members we have to make common cause most of the time.

Even so, I feel I must draw to the attention of Your Honour and the hon. member for Edmonton West that there is quite a difference between the references of the Statutory Instruments Act to regulations passed under an act that can be kept from coming into force until there has been an affirmative resolution of the House of Commons and the proposal that sections of an actual act shall not come into force until there has been an affirmative resolution of just one House.

Another reason I am uncomfortable on this point is that my attitude toward the Senate is well known. However, the fact is that under our constitution, statutes are not passed except by the action of both Houses, plus royal assent. If this amendment were passed and written into the act, we would be giving this House the power sometime next spring, by the action of this House alone, to delete from Bill C-259 certain sections that had been passed by both Houses.

Please give me credit for the fact that I am trying to make my remarks brief. That is the only point on which I shall speak. The hon. member for Edmonton West has failed to distinguish between regulations that can be made subject to an affirmative resolution of this House and sections of an act already passed by both Houses.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I tried to get the floor ahead of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In many respects, I agree with the point he has made. He has hit on the very kernel of the weakness in the argument of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The hon. member for Edmonton West, who did not sit on the statutory instruments committee, fails to realize the breadth and scope of that committee. It has very wide powers. Some of the recommendations made by that committee are wide enough to almost encompass all the weakness or flaws, or all the potential weaknesses or flaws that could be raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West, assuming that he was even in the ball park on the argument.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I thank hon. members for their learned opinions on the amendment before the House. I am sure they understand that the Chair must decide upon a very difficult question. Although I still have strong reservations as to the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and I still maintain these reservations strongly, I cannot accept the amendment as it stands. I leave the choice to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) to abide by the suggestion he made to delete part of the amendment, and because of the limited time for debate the House could proceed, or I will take the amendment under advisement, consider it and arrive at a decision. At that point I might have to refuse the amendment in its totality.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, if the House is agreeable, I will delete the words after "proclamation" so that debate on the substance of the amendment can proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): If there are no comments, the Chair will put the amendment to the House with the deletion made by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. It is moved by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants:

That Bill C-259, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, be not now read a third time but be referred back to committee of the whole with an instruction that the committee have power to consider amending the bill by providing:

That clause 1 of the bill be amended by deleting lines 1 to 3 on page 1 and substituting therefor the following:

> "1. Parts I to IIIA and Parts V to VII of the Income Tax Act are repealed and the follwing substituted therefor so as to apply, subject to the said act as hereby amended and to Part III of this act, to the 1972 and subsequent taxation years but the said act as hereby amended, excepting thereout those portions thereof containing an arrangement, revision and consolidation of the provisions of the said act as the said act is amended by the application mutatis mutandis of the provisions of sections 6 and 8, subsection 12 of section 20, and sections 62, 63, 109, 110 and 117 of the said act as hereby amended, shall not come into force and have effect as law > until a day to be fixed by a proclamation."

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the amendment just moved, once amended by its mover, does not make much sense. I shall therefore confine my comments to the general discussion on third reading of Bill C-259.

I listened this afternoon to the commments which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made concerning this famous tax reform bill which will have been under consideration for 50 days tomorrow.

The Prime Minister started by saying that the need for tax reform was indicated in 1962 by a Progressive Conservative government. There was talk then of tax reform, of the need for a new tax structure in order to assist the less privileged sectors of Canadian society. Strangely enough, the very economists who were suggesting tax reform to the Progressive Conservative government are now making the same suggestions to the present government. The economists have not changed.

A white paper was published two years ago which was the subject of endless comments and caused many disappointments, even legitimate misgivings among various groups of citizens: workers, farmers, professionals, industrialists and businessmen. Everyone was concerned.

The white paper proposals came out in the form of Bill C-259 which is presently before us. This bill is roughly four times thicker than the white paper that came out two years ago.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said this afternoon—and he was right—that the Progressive Conservative party was advocating tax reform. This is true. And we from the Social credit party realize that the two old parties are exactly identical.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): It is so true.

Mr. Caouette: They are exactly the same.

Mr. Rondeau: It is so true!

Mr. Caouette: If the Progressive Conservatives were sitting where the Liberals are presently sitting because they both use the services of the same economists we would have this same Bill C-259 before us.

Mr. Rondeau: It is so true!

Mr. Caouette: It is being discussed for the sake of discussion.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said that because of Bill C-259 one million citizens of this country would be taken off the tax rolls.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: There they go. This afternoon I saw people applauding like the one I see on the other side of the House.

An hon. Member: Do not look at me.

Mr. Caouette: They applaud and do not even know why they are applauding. The Prime Minister said this afternoon that the opposition did not understand this legislation but that everybody else in this country did.

Mr. Rondeau: Is that right!

Mr. Caouette: Everybody understands it. There are not even five Liberals in this House who understand this bill.

An hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. Caouette: Even the Prime Minister does not understand it.

As for the economists—one of them will speak after me, namely the former Minister of Communications—they do not agree more than he does on this bill because they know it is unfair.

The Prime Minister says that the Canadians do understand the bill. And yet we have received, as the government did, protests from all kinds of associations, from economists who do not share the views of the government economists, and from consumers organizations which object to Bill C-259. We have even received protests from the Institute of Chartered Accountants.

An accountant, the responsible member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc), spoke the other day about the dictatorship of the member for Témiscamingue. But who will impose this damn dictatorship in the House tomorrow by using the closure rule which will prevent us from debating this bill and taking exception to it? Let us speak about dictatorship! They are imposing it!

When they have nothing to say they attack people.

I can understand that the member for Laurier, as an accountant, has been able to attack the member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) by arguing that he was a chartered accountant. But when it comes to figures, the member for Shefford has nothing to learn from him. In fact there are a few things we know better than he does; he claims that two and two make five and we claim it makes four. There is a difference.

An hon. Member: What a strong argument!

Mr. Caouette: The member for Laurier should have presented valid arguments on Bill C-259. He does not understand anything in it.

An hon. Member: You cannot read it.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have read his speech. His arguments are as hollow as empty 20-pound buckets. So is the member for Laurier.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said this afternoon that everybody understands Bill C-259. I can well understand that the hon. member for Laurier can blush till his ears are red. He well deserves to have them redder still.

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): You did not see your own.

Mr. Caouette: No, because boys like the member for Laurier never got on my nerves, and moreover they are no match for me.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Tell us about your son.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to my son whom he defeated in his constituency, but he is not saying how he stole the election with his election organization.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): I defeated your son twice, in spite of the 500 Créditistes who tried to steal the election.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Laurier has his head full of telegraph poles. That's what people think of at election time, to defeat honest people.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the Chartered Accountants Association was against Bill C-259, as well as associations of professionals and industrialists. Businessmen and tradesmen are against Bill C-259. I was in western Canada, scarcely three weeks ago, and I also visited the Maritime provinces. I met Liberals who are opposed to Bill C-259.

The Prime Minister will now turn around and say to the House that the Canadian people want Bill C-259 to go through. It is not true. Nobody can prove that the Canadian people want this bill passed. It is being forced upon the people and this is called democracy.

An hon. Member: Ah, ha!

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, listen to the braying of the donkeys on the government side.

An hon. Member: A donkey—

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Look at yourself!

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon while the Prime Minister was speaking—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member for Témiscamingue, but I thought I might try to restore order to a certain extent. The hon. member for Témiscamingue has the floor and it would be much more simple to let him deliver his speech.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member for Témiscamingue attacks me constantly. However, I think I can answer him quite easily, and for doing so I avail myself of the freedom granted the members of this House.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not even familiar with the Standing Orders although he is called a chartered accountant. It might be more to the point to call him a feather-brained member.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member for Témiscamingue that he should rather revert to his text or to the views he intended to express.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, while the Prime MInister had the floor this afternoon, I too objected to interventions fromt he opposition side, hoping to hear him, and once you called the opposition members, to order so that the Prime Minister could get on with his speech. I agreed to that. However, when an opposition member has the floor, whom do we hear on the other side of the House?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I cannot enter into a debate with the hon. member, but may I remind him that if I interrupted the hon. member a while ago, it was precisely to urge the hon. members not to interrupt their colleague from Témiscamingue, since he has the floor.

The hon. member for Laurier could have realized that and I ask all hon. members to allow the hon. member for Témiscamingue to continue his remarks.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): I rise on a point of order.

I agree that we should listen to the hon. member for Témiscamingue, but if he launches out into personal attacks, I feel singled out and I cannot help answering. If the hon. member intends to discuss Bill C-259, I am ready to listen to him, even if he wishes to speak all evening.

Mr. Caouette: In fact, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is not happy, he can withdraw behind the curtains.

Incidentally, the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) made an observation that is true. Instead of calling him a "chartered accountant", we should say "retarded accountant". It is not quite the same thing!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Témiscamingue will admit that he is not making things easier right now. I invite the hon. members for Laurier and Témiscamingue to come back to the bill before the House.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister spoke of a million Canadians who will pay no income tax. He did not say those million Canadians represent people who earn the least amongst single people. In fact, they are single people who earn less than $1,500 a year, and married people who earn less than $2,850.

The Prime Minister should have told us how much those people will save by no longer paying income tax. They scarcely paid any previously. Now, between almost nothing and nothing at all, there might be a difference of about $7 or $8 a year or 10 to 15 cents a week.

However, the Prime Minister did not say so. He told us a million—it sounds good—Canadians will not be paying income tax and that 1,300,000 will pay less. How will the taxpayers pay less income tax? Even if it were only $100 a year, it comes to $2 a week. But not a word about it! No. It is mentioned in a general way that 1,300,000 Canadian taxpayers will pay less income tax. They are bamboozling the people!

And the Prime Minister tried this afternoon to suggest that the members of the opposition were talking about anything except Bill C-259. He said that the Progressive Conservative had talked about India, potato growing in New Brunswick, wheat exports to China, trade with India, and that we forgot to speak to Bill C-259.

An hon. Member: That is true!

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, that is correct, but I heard the speeches of certain Liberals which were not that much more substantial than those made by Conservative members. What is true, as I said it at the beginning of my remarks, is that if the Progressive Conservatives were in the place of the Liberals, we would be considering exactly the same legislation, because the economists of this government are the same as those of the government of ten years ago, who prepared the "gimmick". That is what we are dealing with now. So, let us not be timid. Others do not hesitate to say it.

Tuesday, during the debate on the motion to apply Standing Order 75c, I heard the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) say to the Leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), and I quote:

> I suggest that the intelligence of the Leader of the Opposition is exceeded by his sensitiveness to public opinion. No government has any money of its own.

That is an admission on the part of a minister of a sovereign government.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Why not?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, I said "Why not?" And why shouldn't I? Why can't the government, through Parliament, use the services of the Bank of Canada?

I will remind the House, Mr. Speaker—and I see the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) nodding his approval—that the former Liberal leader, whom the Minister of Public Works, himself a former Liberal leader of British Columbia, followed like a little dog, said in 1935, when I was a liberal:

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caouette: And the Minister of Public Works said yesterday—

Mr. Béchard: Those were the good old days.

Mr. Caouette: One thing is true perhaps: I have remained a true Liberal while the Liberals have become socialists.

Mr. Speaker, I quote what the Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King said in August 1935, and this, for the information of the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) since he finds Social Credit so funny.

[English]

Once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control will wreck any nation.

[Translation]

Let us see if the situation is not exactly the same as the one we find ourselves in with this Bill C-259.

An hon. Member: What date?

Mr. Caouette: In August 1935.

[English]

Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government, and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred responsibility, all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and democracy is idle and futile.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

A former Prime Minister of Canada said that.

An hon. Member: He is dead.

Mr. Caouette: He is dead. My hon. friend will die one day, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Everyone has to die.

Mr. Caouette: But one thing is true: that Prime Minister was right. And today, we believe that it is high time to proceed with a reform in depth, not a fictitious one, like this one, which is meant to take away from those who have and to give to those who have not. This is the objective of Bill C-259. The rich will benefit from exemptions, the poor will gain very little and the middle man will pay everything.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we are told by accountants and businessmen. Some accountants in western Canada say frankly: "It's pure confiscation of private property." For the hon. member's information, those are not Créditiste, but liberal or conservative accountants, and they all say the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, some time ago I suggested to the House the establishment of a social security program using the services of our financial institutions, particularly the Bank of Canada. Some people said it would be ridiculous to change the whole social security system which exists in Canada at present. No figures were given at the time. But we now have figures to show; we did the necessary research to get the official figures.

The federal government spends $7,722,661,607 every year on social security in Canada. Crown corporations spend $80,025,837 on social security. The total expenses of all Canadian provinces amount to $6,814,500,000, and those of municipalities, to $286 million—for a grand total of $14,903,249,444. That is what we pay at present in Canada for social security.

My colleagues and I urged that a single social security plan be set up for all Canada instead of 25 different schemes. We must set up a plan applying to every Canadian earning less than $15,000 a year because we consider that those earning that much a year have security! We have proposed giving, from age 18, $1,500 to all single people and $2,500 to married couples and an extra $250 for each child up to the sixth and up to a maximum of $4,000.

An hon. Member: For hon. members too?

Mr. Caouette: Not for hon. members, because their annual income exceeds $15,000.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we would cover students, people who are handicapped or disabled, who would, if they are alone, receive $1,500 a year, which is $125 a month, instead of $80, $75 or $65 as is now the case.

When students 18 to 23 years of age would reach the end of their studies, they would receive $125 a month. A family of four would get $3,000 a year. Of course, if they could make some money besides their social security, they would be entitled to it, without being penalized or deprived of the guaranteed social security up to $4,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, such a system would cost less than the present one, because we now make all kinds of expenditures without any reason and those who need it most do not get anything. The most needy are given as little as possible and we find thousands of examples throughout the country. This very day, welfare recipients from Montreal were in Parliament to complain about the lack of attention we give them. Try as we may tell them that this is the responsibility of the province of Quebec, Quebecers know that 50 per cent of welfare allowances come from Ottawa. Mr. Speaker, under that program, $200 a month would be paid everyone at age 60, and $150 a month to the spouse. That means that a married couple of 60 or more would receive $350 a month. I dare any member to tell me that $350 a month for old people or $125 a month for students, that is roughly $1,500 a year, is too much.

When I suggested the implementation of that program, I asked hon. members to study it seriously, not to win votes in the next elections but to achieve a just society in Canada. I urge, in all sincerity, the Liberals in power to adopt that social security program for the Canadian people as a whole. If they do so, I promise to vote for the present government in the next elections. It is as simple as that!

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Of course.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, if the policy outlined for the second or third time by the hon. member for Témiscamingue were implemented by the Liberal party, would he go back to their ranks?

Mr. Caouette: This would mean that the Liberal party is again becoming truly Liberal. And then, I have not—

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Honey): The hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Would the hon. member for Témiscamingue allow me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): After the statement that the leader of the Social Credit has just made—a most interesting statement by the way—I wonder what would happen if the municipalities which, at the present time, spend about $800 million, or some $200 million, on social welfare, were told by the federal government: As of tomorrow, we will administer all social security programs, and this will cost us $14, $15 or $20 billion; and then, the provinces and municipalities will have no say in the matter. I wonder how the provincial and municipal autonomy could be reconciled with such an interference by the central power?

Mr. Caouette: Frankly, I do not think there would be any discussion or debate. The provinces, of course, would not accept this scheme without discussion, but if we want for Canada as a whole a scheme which would succeed in reaching each individual, I think that it would be advisable for the provinces and municipalities to come to an understanding with the federal authorities in order to establish a single scheme for Canada. Moreover, I do not think that this would prevent Quebec from being Quebec or Ontario from remaining Ontario. We would have a comprehensive plan which would be less costly to finance than different schemes, that is one for each province. Such is my opinion and that of my colleagues. I understand that we—

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montréal-Bourassa): Would the hon. member for Témiscamingue allow me a question?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the hon. member for Témiscamingue makes this speach and blames us for not accepting his ideas or not listening carefully to what he is saying in the House.

The last time he made it, Mr. Speaker, I asked him a question. He told me that he had not managed to figure out the cost of the programs he was advocating. I wonder if he would be willing now to give the answer I was asking him then?

Mr. Caouette: I have just given that answer, Mr. Speaker. We are spending at the present time $14,903,000,000, and with just about $15 billion, we could apply the system I am advocating. So it comes to about the same thing.

An. hon. Member: Just about $15 billion?

Mr. Caouette: Just about $15 billion dollars, yes. At the present time, we are spending $14,903,000,000, which is not very far from $15 billion, but even if there were a difference of about $2 or $3 billion this year, we had to go to financial institutions in order to get $1.7 billion. And the Prime Minister told us that if we did not have enough, we would find more. And that billion dollars did not exist in Canada. It is a deficit that the government simply and purely created. We did not take it out of the pockets of the people. And they are ready to create another deficit.

I am asking a very simple question: Should war break out tomorrow, and should we have to take part in it, the government would not ask if there were enough money. We would find all the millions and billions of dollars that would be necessary for the war.

Why are we not doing the same thing to establish a peace system at home, a social security system that would allow everybody to feel at home? It seems to me that it is easy to understand.

An hon. Member: The poor man!

Mr. Caouette: Now, Mr. Speaker, there is—

An hon. Member: That is socialism!

Mr. Caouette: No, that is not socialism. We are not against private enterprise; on the contrary, we encourage it.

We do not intend to scuttle private enterprise.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. member in order to clarify a figure which he quoted a moment ago. In fact, he said that the federal government is now spending about $7 billion—that is 50 per cent of its total budget of $14 billion—on social benefits of all sorts. Could we have more detail to support the figure of $7 billion? The hon. member is certainly in possession of that information.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, I can give that information to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) but I feel that hon. members are straying considerably from the subject under debate. While his remarks are very interesting, I say with respect that the hon. member for Témiscamingue is straying from the subject matter. We have before us an amendment to the motion for third reading which in effect would delay the coming into effect of some parts of the bill. As this is the matter under debate, I invite hon. members to stay fairly close to that subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking for a breakdown and I can meet this request since I have all the necessary figures.

Federal expenditures for social security for thp fiscal year ended March 31, 1971, including National Health and Welfare—not including the transfer payments to the provinces—old age insurance, allowances for the blind or the disabled, family allowances, social assistance, unemployment insurance and medicare, amount to $2,359,534,000. Substracting from this amount the adminiytrative costs for the Food and Drug Directorate and the Amateur Sport program amounting to $23 million, the balance is $2,335,791,000.

The non-budgetary operations: old age security fund: $914 million; Canada Pension Fund: $1,024 million; unemployment insurance fund: $771 million; other accounts—annuities, insurance and pensions for federal civil servants, armed forces, members of Parliament, members of the Senate, Royal Canadian mounted Police, $999 million. Total: $7,043,791,000.

Manpower and immigration: retraining, manpower mobility and assiytance to the provinces: $340 million; Veterans $109 million; Indian and Eskimo Affairs (schools, housing, health and welfare, pension and annuities) $229 million. Grand total $7,722,661,107—

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): You said $14 billion a while ago.

An hon. Member: No, this was the total.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Limoilou—

Mr. Duquet: You said $14 billion.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, $14 billion is the total. I am now speaking of the federal government.

Mr. Duquet: I must say to the hon. member that there is no member for Limoilou. I am the member for Quebec East.

Mr. Caouette: I am speaking about the federal government. If the hon. member wants to add the amounts relating to the provincial government, it is about the same thing for the municipalities.

As for the grand total, the provincial expenses for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1972, they amount to $6,814,500,000.

Mr. Duquet: Yes, but are the 50 per cent included in the federal government expenses?

Mr. Caouette: No, they are not included; those are expenses shared equally by the province and by the federal government.

Mr. Duquet: Yes, by the federal government?

Mr. Caouette: When I say here—

An hon. Member: It is all figured out?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, it is substracted; everything is figured out here, the province pays and the federal government provides the total amount of $14,903,249,000. That is what social security is presently costing in Canada.

An hon. Member: Does that include municipalities?

Mr. Caouette: Yes, it includes municipalities, cities like Montreal, Quebec and Rouyn-Noranda.

Mr. Speaker, this is a plan we are submitting. It can be studied; the economists can wallow in it if they want, and figure it out.

Now, the point I want to make is that we must at all costs adjust the financial system to the physical requirements of our country, that is to say make financially possible what can physically be accomplished. Everybody can understand that easily. We used to hear Mr. Georges-Émile Lapalme, former provincial Liberal leader, say it over and over again on television and radio.

Mr. Duquet: That cost a lot.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, last week I was talking to students of three universities in Montreal, McGill, Loyola and Sir George Williams. Last summer, those students were looking for jobs and the government with its Opportunities for Youth program was supposed to get them some. We provided jobs for 400,000 young Canadians through programs set up by the government, but 900,000 students were unable to find a job during the summer.

I tell the younger generation in plain words, if a war was to break out tomorrow, each and everyone of you would find a job in the Canadian army. They would be dressed, fed and even paid to go and fight for Christianity and civilization. Why do we not start respecting Christianity and civilization at home, in Canada. Instead of meddling with financiers who dream up such bills as Bill C-259, let us bring about the necessary monetary reform by subordinating money to the human being and not the human being to money as would presently be the case should Bill C-259 be adopted.

[English]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to speak on the bill and also to take advantage of the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that the bill in its complexity obviously leaves some things to be desired and undoubtedly the government will be taking steps to amend the bill and to improve it. I should like to point out this evening some of the measures which I think the government should take the opportunity to improve as quickly as possible.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Now.

Mr. Kierans: I think there are certain elements in this bill which are the basis of creating even further problems for the Canadian people and the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Mahoney, you should listen to him.

Mr. Lefebvre: You can learn from a Liberal, so listen.

Mr. Kierans: These sections of the bill can lead to further concentration in the Canadian economy, which no one wants. They can lead to an increase in foreign ownership of Canadian industry, which no one wants—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kierans: —and they can also lead, by their continuing emphasis on the resource industries, to grave effects on the government's efforts to increase employment, income and growth in this country. A tax bill, and especially a bill that is called a reform bill, which comes before this House after ten years of work, or since 1962, can only be at the centre or the heart of an integral part of an over-all economic policy. Such a tax bill can only be formulated after a country knows what its objectives are, in what directions it is going, how the bill itself will integrate with monetary policy, with resource policy, with commercial policy and all the other elements. It does no good if a tax bill works in reverse to a commercial policy, or if a manufacturing policy works in reverse or is detrimental to resource policy, or vice versa.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I think everyone in this House is in agreement with the reduction in corporate rates from 50 per cent in 1972 to 46 per cent in 1976, and the reduction of federal tax on lower incomes from 17 per cent on the first $500 to 6 per cent by 1976. But this is not necessarily reform and is not the whole part of it. What is recognized here is that more buoyant tax revenues from personal and corporate income taxes in an expanding economy should lead to a reduction in tax rates and not necessarily increased federal expenditures. As Professor Daly has shown, Canada's gross national product in the 1953 to 1968 period grew at an average annual rate, compounded, of 7.2 per cent, while personal income taxes increased at a 10.4 per cent rate, compounded. Thus, the rate of growth of personal income taxes far exceeded the rate of the gross national product.

In July, 1971, my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), issued a statement of the financial operations for the country for the first four months of the current year. On page 16 of that statement, table III, one sees that in 1961-62 35 per cent of all federal government tax revenues came from the taxes on individuals. One also sees that in this last current year not 35 per cent of government taxes came from people, but 41.4 per cent. One sees at the same time, Mr. Speaker, that the government collected 23½ per cent of all of its tax revenues from corporations in 1961-62, but today it only collects 19½ per cent of its tax revenues from corporations. So the impact on persons has been gradually increasing during the last decade.

These reductions today, while welcome for the lower income groups, do not in fact ease the load on those with medium salary and wage income. And I would point out the following fact, that in the last ten years, with an increasing rate of tax revenues coming from the individual, from wages and salaries, and a declining percentage coming from the corporate sector, it is very little wonder that today our young people find it difficult to get into business for themselves, on two grounds, that governments now take more from personal income, which makes it that much more difficult to save, and on the other ground that they take very much less proportionately from businesses which are thus much more able to defend themselves from people who might want to enter particular industries.

Fairness in taxation, as it was conceived by the Carter commission, demands that persons with equal amounts of income pay equivalent amounts of tax and that persons with larger or smaller incomes pay proportionately different rates of tax. This principle was enunciated clearly in their report, but this principle no longer obtains. Income is still divided into two classes, income from labour and from enterprise and from effort, and income from rolling over wealth, that is, capital gains. And whatever the rate that applies to workers on wages and salaries, the gains on wealth are going to be taxed at exactly half that rate. Persons in similar circumstances are not treated in the same manner.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to insist that the argument that people would not invest because of a capital gains tax has been disproved over and over again. There is no reason to accept this kind of threat, because they have no choice. If they do not invest for gain, for income or for dividends, then they will have to live off and eat off their own capital, which is far worse.

A second measure here is in the "Summary of 1971 Tax Reform Legislation," where the Minister of Finance introduces for the first time a new exemption for corporations. Corporations will be allowed full deduction of interest if they borrow money to buy shares in other corporations. The primary effect of this clause will be to create conglomerates, firms whose only objectives are growth, growth of assets, growth of revenues and growth of net income. But growth and accumulation are wealth, and wealth is that part of annual income which is not taxed, which is not distributed. To favour wealth and accumulation is to favour size and the concentration of power, and this is neither fairness nor justice. This is the opposite of the main objective of the Carter commission, to make corporations more responsible to people, to shareholders and consumers alike.

How is this going to work? Take the example of major corporations. Imperial Oil had a net income in 1970 of $105 million, Union Carbide had $11 million, Noranda, a Canadian company, had $58 million, and Distillers Corporation, also a Canadian company, had $60 million. On the basis of this new act, Imperial Oil is making as a net income of $105 million on oil and gas and its various subsidiary activities, and it could borrow and reduce the tax burden on that net income something in the order of $500 million. And with $500 million they can buy out MacMillan Bloedel, Domtar, CPR, F.P. Publications and still have a lot of it left over.

This adds to concentration, and one of the curious things about this is that the investment they make in the companies that they buy out, or whose shares they buy, is non-taxable in their hands, but the costs, the interest on making that investment is deductible as a cost from whatever their current operation is. I do not think we have any objection to paying the real costs of gas and oil in this country. But I think we have reason to object when part of the costs that are deducted by the oil company, the distilling company or whatever it may be, is used to buy out other companies in the pulp and paper industry or whatever it may be.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that businessmen are too happy about this. When speaking recently to the president of a very large corporation who thought this was a good section in the act, I pointed out to him, "You are thinking of buying out so and so," and he said, "Yes." I asked, "Have you thought that so and so can also buy you out?" It just leads to more concentration in the Canadian economy at a time when the country itself is looking for more competition.

One could be surprised that we have a bill before this House, Mr. Speaker, which seeks to improve competition, to protect the consumer, to reduce mergers, and at the same time we have a section in the tax reform bill that serves only to force that concentration, and increasing mergers that will be inevitable as a result of this section. I think that the officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the officials of the Department of Finance might well get together to find out in which direction they are going, or if they are meeting each other in crossing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kierans: I should like to point out something else, Mr. Speaker. This particular exemption applies to all Canadian corporations—not just to Canadian corporations that are wholly owned or controlled, but to all Canadian corporations. On the basis of value alone, Distillers could buy a controlling interest in Imperial Oil, Imperial Oil could buy a controlling interest in MacMillan Bloedel and Distillers, and so on, but it only works one way. Imperial Oil could buy the controlling interest in the two Canadian companies, but the two Canadian companies could not buy the controlling interest in Imperial Oil because that resides in the United States. At a time when we are worried about foreign ownership we give an "open sesame" to foreign subsidiaries that are here already to go out and buy more Canadian companies. Then the Minister of Finance tells them, "We will pay half the cost by allowing you to deduct that interest cost from whatever profit you are making and whatever business you are in".

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, as most of my hon. colleagues know, I have been extremely concerned at the emphasis in this country for the last 20 years on the policy that we can build a strong Canada by selling our resources.

Mr. Rondeau: Selling, or giving away?

Mr. Kierans: When he returned from the Group of Ten meeting in Rome, the Minister of Finance said that he was congratulated by all the finance ministers in the group on having the most remarkable and modern tax bill. I do not think they read it, those other ten ministers of finance. And if they did read it, I do not think they understood it or that they agreed. But they did agree to one thing. If you, Mr. Speaker, were the minister of Finance for Japan, Germany or the United States, you would have said, "Have you done anything to change that give-away tax program on resources that you have in Canada?" The answer would have been no, and they would have been very pleased with the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kierans: They all depend on resources, Mr. Speaker—all of them. If Canada stays with cheap taxes—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Rondeau: He wants to make a speech.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is not a speech, but I could do that, Mr. Speaker. This is the only time that someone is making a point, and I should like to listen to it because members of the opposition have not contributed anything. We have listened to them, so I wish they would keep quiet.

Mr. Dinsdale: He is quoting the opposition, Joe.

Mr. Kierans: If Canada stays with cheap taxes—and by cheap taxes I mean the oil and gas industry in pipeline and oil wells which pay taxes of less than 6 per cent of the profits they earn; by cheap taxes I mean the mining industry in their metal mining operations which pay taxes on 13 per cent of the profits they actually make—and with this kind of policy, then the foreign ministers of finance who want these resources are going to like our tax policies very much. They can also use them to beat down developing nations in the world whose only possibility of ever taking off into industrial growth would be to obtain an adequate return when they come to sell their own resources so that they can industrialize even in the most modest way.

These ministers of finance know that the more we insist on selling our resources as we do in this way, we show our preference for taxing these kinds of exports at such phenomenally low rates and manufactured exports at much higher rates; as long as we are willing to do this they are willing to buy, and they know that every hundred million or billion dollars worth of our resources that they buy, that money coming into this country makes it that much more difficult for the Canadian manufacturing industry to compete, because our dollar goes up and Canadian manufacturing finds it more difficult to compete in the export markets that they may have, or to defend themselves against import competition at home.

When virtually every other nation in the developing, industrialized world follows a policy of conserving and reducing the drain on its industrial resources, by outrageous tax concessions accorded to no other sector of our economy we encourage the exploitation and sale of our resources. The official position of the Department of Finance has been and I quote:

> There is no inherent reason why Canada cannot be a major exporter of raw materials and of manufactured goods at the same time.

This is demonstrably false, Mr. Speaker. You cannot have both. When each of our major trading partners—and we know since August 15 the emphasis they place on balancing their trade account—is searching for a balance in their merchandise trade with us, they will be striving to pay for the import of our raw materials with their manufactured goods.

An additional $1 billion export of energy to the United States, for example, would give us in this country $68 million in wages and salaries. But that balancing inflow on which Mr. Connally and Mr. Nixon are insisting in manufactured goods could mean that we are importing anywhere from $200 million to $350 million in their wages and salaries, depending on the industry. If it is the furniture industry, we would be exchanging $68 million for $330 million. If it is the textile industry, 26 per cent or $260 million on an average of their output is composed of wages and salaries. If it is agriculture, wheat or products like that—and I am at no time speaking of pulp and paper or wheat and fish and hydroelectric power, which are renewable resources; I am speaking of non-renewable resources and agricultural products—the average is 26 per cent. If it is pulp and paper, the average is again 26 per cent. So we are exchanging 6.8 per cent or $68 million out of $1 billion, for $260 million. We cannot have our cake and eat it too. It is some exchange! There may be a balance of trade in dollar terms, but there is no balance of trade in jobs or wages and salaries.

Mr. Rondeau: Right. No wonder we are so poor.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, a nation's natural resources are not past-production; they are the wealth of its soil and waterways. As such, they cannot be viewed in the same light as current production, as goods and services that we produce each year. Those goods can legitimately be disposed of at will by the people who produce them currently in any given year. Resources are a trust. They have been received from the past. They are to be husbanded by the present generation and they are to be passed on to future generations. A generation that deliberately squanders a nation's natural wealth—I emphasize "deliberately squanders"—to enhance its own standard of living will have much to answer for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kierans: A government that deliberately pursues a policy of selling off the natural wealth of its people to achieve short-run gains breaks faith with its own future. It reveals, by the forced sale of its assets, its inability to devise the set of objectives and economic policies that will increase output and distribute it more equitably on an annual basis. It admits that the standard of living we enjoy today depends on the selling of our capital in natural wealth as well as on our own efforts.

Unfortunately, Canada decided in the late forties and early fifties to ensure a rapid rate of growth by selling off its non-renewable resources. This policy was permanently enshrined in our tax legislation in 1955 and still survives, despite the bill before us today. The current attempts of the resource industries—we have all received letters and been under pressure from these people, particularly from the Mining Association of Canada—to prove their unboubted value to the Canadian economy are based on considerable exaggeration and sometimes border on hysteria. Their use of the multiplier, which one sees so much of in their advertising would, if accepted and applied to all sectors of the economy, force on to conclude that there are between 12 million and 14 million people presently employed in this country instead of 8 million plus the half million unemployed.

I have been constantly amazed, Mr. Speaker, by the violent and vehement representations of the captains of our resource industries as they fight to maintain their existing exemptions. I realize that a privilege once enjoyed is hard to forgo. One can accept their self-interest; but they must also admit the rights to measure their private and immediate gains against the longrun social advantage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kierans: They exist, not by some divine right but by the will of the people as represented by the members of this House, and I think their current intransigence and threats could easily lead to nationalization. If we were to eliminate all the concessions, depletion, accelerated depreciation, capital cost allowances exceeding actual funds invested by between 15 per cent and 33-1/3 per cent, and so on, the federal government could reduce the corporate tax rate to 35 per cent on all firms in all sectors of the economy without any loss of revenue. At the present time, the outrageously low effective tax rates in the resource sector directs investment into those low employment sectors and discriminates against investment in the heavier employment manufacturing and service industries. A corporate tax rate that would affect equally all branches of economic activity would not distort the investment decision-making process to the extent that is achieved by our present system.

If the government should agree that a 35 per cent corporate tax rate without concessions, without exemptions and without special immunities would yield the same revenues, I see no reason why this rate cannot be confined to wholly-owned or controlled Canadian companies. Every nation favours its own citizens in one form or another. We have only to cite the most recent example, the United States with its investment allowance, its 10 per cent import surcharge and its DISC program. Those programs do not favour Canada by any means. So far as I know, they favour American firms. If we were intelligent and sovereign, we could devise tax rates that would favour our own Canadian firms in the very difficult situation in which they find themselves. Let the corporate tax rate on foreign subsidiaries be whatever that rate is in the home country of that subsidiary. If the rate is 52 per cent, as in the United States—and it is that high because of all their tremendous objectives, their military efforts and their flights to the moon—let the rate for American subsidiaries in Canada be 52 per cent.

If the rate is 40 per cent, as in the U.K., the rate for U.K. subsidiaries in Canada ought to be 40 per cent. In no instance, however, should we allow that rate to be less than the Canadian rate of 35 per cent. On the basis of their existing initiatives the Americans could only say that we are in accord with their policies because we would be avoiding encouraging new American subsidiaries to locate in this country and we would really be acting within the spirit of their DISC program.

Similarly, we could enlist the entire Canadian entrepreneurial community in trying to reverse and turn around the trend toward increasing foreign ownership. This cannot be done alone by a Canada Development Corporation, or by half a dozen such corporations. This would require the united effort of all elements in the Canadian business and financial community.

Mr. Benjamin: How would you get them to do that?

Mr. Kierans: It has not been my experience that the company with the 50 per cent tax rate drives out the Canadian company with the 35 per cent rate. Rather, the trend of the last few years would be turned the other way around. I should simply like to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Kierans: I would be only a few more minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: Let us not see the clock.

Mr. Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since as I understand the hon. member is about to conclude his remarks, I wonder whether there might be unanimous consent to allow him to do that.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Pierre: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that no less than six of the 130-odd members of the national press gallery are listening to the hon. member's speech. That is almost a record number.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I was about to ask if there was unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kierans: Let me quote what Professor Gordon, professor of finance at the University of Toronto, has said:

—on its own, Canadian industry cannot provide an adequate response to the challenge of foreign competition. Strong and efficient competition is required in the area of taxation and beyond it as well. The alternative is a drift down the road toward a Venezuelan type economy—a large modern resource extraction industry that provides very little employment, a large unproductive government bureaucracy,—

Those are his words, not mine.

—an inefficient weak manufacturing sector, increased imports of manufactured products, and rising government expenditures to provide for the unemployed.

Tax policy, Mr. Speaker, should be restructured. It should be neutral, but it should nevertheless favour those sectors of the economy that will give us the most employment and the most growth.

Mr. Benjamin: Then it cannot be neutral.

Mr. Kierans: The relative productivities of the Canadian and American economies are not equal. When one finds that the Canadian dollar is equal to the American dollar, one says at the same time that our productive capacity and our climate is the same as theirs, our financial resources are the same as theirs and the size of our markets is the same as theirs. Yet when one gets into business he knows it costs more to build a plant here, with our heavy construction and heavy heating costs. All of this would argue that our productivity, while as good as theirs in the abstract, cannot measure theirs in the concrete. When policies suddenly result in two equivalent dollars, when neither the resources nor the productivities of two nations are the same, one must argue that such monetary policy is itself at fault.

One only has to look at the tightness of our monetary policy in the last decade to find that we have caused a great deal of our own problems. The higher interest rates have forced provinces to go to New York, borrow there, bring the money back here and increase our exchange rate. Also, our resource policy emphasizes the exports of those industries.

I thank Your Honour for your patience, and I thank my colleagues in the House. I am aware that some of my colleagues will disapprove and will be disappointed in what I have said. But let me look at it on the positive side. Ten years ago a group of men were named to draft for Canada a fair and just taxation policy that would emphasize growth, employment and stability in the economy. I do not think that task is over. All I want to do is remind the Canadian people and the Canadian government tonight that after ten years that task is not over. This task has to be begun again. I sincerely believe this government can put together all of the elements of an economic policy that will give us growth and employment. In any event, I certainly hope so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Would the hon. member who has just resumed his seat allow me a question?

Mr. Kierans: Of course.

Mr. Rondeau: Would the hon. member tell us whether he will vote for or against the bill?

Mr. Kierans: We shall find out tomorrow when the question is put.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL LIBRARY—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ADVISORY BOARD

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, last week I directed a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) regarding the appointment of a board that would support the work of the national library as provided for in the National Library Act. The National Library Act was approved by this House some two years ago. One of the very vital parts of the act was the provision of an advisory board, council, or whatever you like to call it, that would assist the national librarian and his staff in providing the most effective library service for Canadians everywhere.

When I posed the question, rather flippantly, the Secretary of State replied that the board was going to be appointed quite soon. That was the same answer he gave a year ago almost to the day. When the act was being considered by a parliamentary committee, the National Association of Librarians came before us expressing concern that they were not going to be too closely involved in the functioning of the new national library. Those Members of Parliament who were on the committee strongly sympathized with the viewpoint expressed by the library association, and in his appearance before the committee the Secretary of State expressed his desire to seek the advice of representative librarians in all the provinces of Canada. This is why I think the matter of appointing the board has become one of extreme urgency.

The establishment of a national library in this country was far too long delayed. It was not until 1962 that the Conservative administration of the day cleared the way for the establishment of a library. Dr. Charles Lamb, who had been designated as the national librarian—he had been originally the dominion archivist—was appointed to head up the project, and it was regarded as the dawn of a new age in terms of the provision of unbiased information for Canadians concerning all aspects of life in Canada.

It was hoped that the national library would co-ordinate with the university libraries. It was also anticipated that the national library, through an advisory board, would be able to co-ordinate with the provincial libraries. I think that one of the reasons the national library, notwithstanding the fine accommodation that has been made available, has not been functioning at maximum effectiveness is the long delay there has been on the part of the government in appointing this advisory board.

Tonight I should like to know the reason for the delay from whoever will be speaking for the government. I suggested the other day during the question I asked that it might because the Secretary of State is preoccupied in establishing another information service known as Information Canada. I referred to that informational centre as the chosen instrument of propaganda for the government. Why so much emphasis on Information Canada, and why de-emphasize such an important institution as the national library of Canada?

I do not know what Information Canada is doing in terms of providing widespread knowledge to Canadians in all parts of the country. But I did examine the latest report that came out covering the activities of Information Canada for October and I noticed that in the national inquiry centre here in Ottawa there were some 176 items, amounting to about eight per day, including such important subjects as congratulations to the Hon. Martin O'Connell on his appointment to the ministry, one complaint that Toronto had to wait too long to receive government information out of the bookstore, and one complaint about the futility of Information Canada's feedback role.

Again it is a matter of emphasizing priorities. Surely the national library takes precedence as an unbiased source of information, as an information Canada centre, over the Johnny-come-lately government information propaganda bureau, if I may use that term, Information Canada. I trust we shall be given an assurance tonight that an advisory board will be appointed, not "very soon", which was the answer given a year ago, but immediately, so that this vitally important institution, the national library of Canada, may play its full role as a centre of genuine, unbiased information.

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, consultation with all interested parties with respect to the appointment of the national library advisory board is complete. We are at present urging that all vacancies in our agencies be filled, and the national library advisory board is considered a priority. Thus, the hon. member can expect action to be terminated before the spring of 1972.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Terminated?

TRANSPORT—METRO CENTRE DEVELOPMENT, TORONTO—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO WORK WITH PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES—STUDY OF TRANSPORTATION NEEDS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) a question concerning a project which would have a massive impact on metropolitan Toronto and, indeed, on southern Ontario generally—a billion dollar super-scheme which in ten or twenty years will dominate the future of the city. I refer to the metropolitan centre development project.

It is proposed to build a complex on 190 acres of the most important part of the land available in the neighbourhood of Toronto. There is talk of 50,000 offices to be constructed, of 20,000 housing units, of the use of the former Union Station, known to many visitors to Toronto, to be changed and the building to be incorporated somehow or other in the plan. I asked the minister whether, in light of the importance of this proposed billion dollar project, the government would set up an intergovernmental committee to work with the other authorities concerned in connection with the problems arising out of such a development.

The minister said that there had been consultation with parties to the project as far as the transportation aspects were concerned, though he was not sure he could say that a formal working party had been set up, either intergovernmental or interdepartmental. I found the minister's reply to be altogether unsatisfactory, although I appreciate his expressed willingness to discuss with any interested group the federal role in the project.

There are three major elements in the federal role. The first concerns transportation. This is a development of the railways, the CN and the CPR. Many studies have been made with regard to it, and what I should like to see is some disclosure to the public of the results of these studies, some consideration given to the way in which future development of the area will be affected. Has the minister sought, in discussion with the developers, to secure adequate safeguards for an extended passenger commuter train service? Is he considering the provision of rights-of-way for future developments in transportation, such as air-cushion vehicles?

The second area in which the government has an interest is housing. Only a few days ago the president of CMHC called attention to the acute housing shortage in Toronto. Does this scheme provide adequate accommodation of the kind most required? One of the great needs in this area is low cost housing. Will the scheme be developed on this basis, or will it be designed to produce the highest possible profit?

Another subject of extreme importance from the federal point of view is that of pollution. What will the sewage from 20,000 residences and 50,000 or more office workers do to the whole problem of pollution in that area, which is already something of a blighted area rendered unfit for human habitation by the foul stench which comes from the Ashbridge Bay sewage plant?

These three aspects, transportation, housing and pollution are all matters the federal government is concerned with, and what the public in our area wants to know is whether or not there is a co-ordinated approach, whether or not there is planning in respect of this matter and whether the project and the agreement the developers want to make with the city of Toronto will provide adequately for dealing with future developments in this field. It is of the utmost importance that there be public participation in this scheme. The planning staff of the city of Toronto was overridden by the council of that city. Safeguards in the planning legislation of the provincial government have been set aside by special legislation dealing with the subject. It is important that the federal aspect be one which is open to public participation, public knowledge and public concern.

I should like to conclude by saying my point is simply that such massive redevelopment of a vital piece of Toronto demands widespread critical attention and public scrutiny. The scale of this attention and scrutiny must match the colossal scale of the development itself. There is a philosophy which ought to lie behind an examination of this matter. It is that the quality of life has become a fundamental concern. Bigger is no longer better. Development does not reside in building more and growing bigger. Development must mean qualitative improvement of the working and living conditions of the citizens of this city, one of the great metropolitan areas of our country.

I want to hear from the minister. I know the parliamentary secretary will not be able to answer all these questions tonight, but I give him notice that I and members who represent other interested areas—I see one in the House tonight—will show our concern about this matter and will see that there is public participation in this massive project which will affect the future and the lives of a very large number of the citizens in this part of the country.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) raised two main points in his question of December 10 to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) concerning metro centre development in Toronto. The first one was whether there was inter-governmental liaison on matters such as transport in the metro centre development.

Mr. Speaker, several committees have been formed. The intergovernmental liaison committee includes federal, provincial, metro and city of Toronto representatives. In addition to this there is a second group called the intergovernmental technical co-ordinating committee. Again, it consists of senior representatives of various federal, Ontario, metro and city departments. Overlapping problems are discussed at this level and there is a full measure of co-ordination on matters of transportation policy.

The second question put by the hon. member was whether any studies had been undertaken by the government to establish the transportation needs of the Toronto centre region. The answer to this was, of course, yes. A good many studies under federal auspices are under way. The minister mentioned one, the Toronto commuter rail study. This involves representatives from both major railways, from Ottawa and the province, metro Toronto and the Toronto Transit Commission. There is a great deal of work being done at all levels to ensure effective liaison and co-operation between all those involved and between the public and private sectors.

As for the many other points that have been raised by the hon. member, there is no doubt in my mind that most of them must be part of the studies under way. Nevertheless, I have taken good note of the points mentioned and I shall bring them to the attention of the minister.

AGRICULTURE—SPECIAL LOANS TO EXHIBITIONS—EXTENSION OF PROGRAM TO INCLUDE CLASS D FAIRS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on December 15 was to ask him to extend the $10 million loan program recently announced for class A and B fairs to class C fairs and to the smaller communities of this country. You suggested that there is no urgency in this question because fairs are not held at this time of the year. However, I say to you that this money is part of the emergency budget brought forward by the Minister of finance (Mr. Benson) in October to provide winter employment, and therefore there is urgency in this question.

I applaud the action of the government to make low interest loans available to exhibition commissions, not only for winter works but as a continuing program, and I understand that the minister plans to make $100 million of loan funds available under this program over the next 15 years. The loans can be up to 90 per cent of the cost of the buildings, and paid over a 30-year period. With interest rates at a very minimum, just a fraction of a percentage point above the level at which the federal government can borrow money, it is easy to see that the value of this program cannot be questioned. These buildings will serve not only for agricultural purposes but for community activities, recreation and sports activities.

However, having said all these good things about the program, now I must tell the bad. This program is only available as announced to class A and B fairs. These are found only in the larger centres. The program as it is now will only be available, I believe, to one community in northern Ontario, that being Thunder Bay which happens to have a class B fair. However, communities that do not have any fair board will be ineligible for this program. There are five fairs in my constituency, all of which are of class C size. They are located at Bruce Mines, Iron Bridge, Massey, Providence Bay and Manitowaning. Each of these fairs makes an outstanding contribution to the community. Their directors work diligently every year to improve their annual exhibitions, fairgrounds and exhibition buildings. They do this without pay. The only reward they get is the satisfaction of improving and aiding their communities.

This program should be to serve these smaller fair boards as well as the large ones. The Ontario government gives grants of up to $10,000 on a total expenditure of $40,000 for community centre buildings. This is available to all communities and all sized fairs, big and small. This is a grant which the Ontario government provides, whereas the federal program is only a loan program. It really does not cost the federal government very much to provide this. All we are really doing with this program is using the federal government's borrowing power to aid communities to provide these public buildings at the lowest possible cost.

So I ask the minister to expand the program to help the smaller towns and communities across this country which need it. I would also ask that the regulations be brought forward immediately and that application forms be made available as well, so that the public may make use of this program and communities who need these funds will have them as soon as possible. For instance, the town of Bruce Mines in my constituency has an expansion undertaking going on at its fair exhibition building during the winter months. It needs this program. I would ask that the program not only be expanded but that the regulations, application forms, and ultimately the loan funds, be made available as soon as possible.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, since the minister announced this program a few weeks ago the department has received many representations from hon. members and from organizations throughout the country. I would first like to express my sincere appreciation and transmit the appreciation of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), to the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who has raised this matter on more than one occasion with the minister and who has written him on the subject.

Tonight it is my privilege to tell the hon. gentleman that his confidence in the department will bring him some pleasure, because within a few days the minister will be in a position to table the rules and regulations that will cover those grounds, and at the same time they will be applied to the type of fair about which the hon. member has been talking, and expressly to fairs in class C. I hope this program will be useful throughout the country and that we will be in a position to help as many people as possible. I thank the hon. gentleman for having pressed the matter so strongly with the department.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

TABLING OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION REPORT ON PROPOSED FLOODING OF SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the International Joint Commission's report on the environmental and ecological consequences in Canada of raising Ross Lake in the Skagit Valley on the west coast.

As hon. members know, the International Joint Commission was asked earlier this year to study a proposal to flood the Upper Skagit Valley in British Columbia. The commission's report, which I have just tabled, has been submitted to the governments of Canada and the United States in response to a request from Ottawa and Washington to review the environmental consequences of raising the Ross dam in the state of Washington on the other side of the border. I would like to thank the six-member International Joint Commission for preparing its report on such short notice. Since April, 1971, it has held hearings on the west coast and carried out various studies, the results of which are being made public in our two national capitals today.

The commissioners report that the High Ross reservoir, were it to be filled, would flood 10 of the 15 miles of the reach of the Skagit River that is the most suitable for fishing and recreational pursuits. It would inundate approximately 5,180 acres in Canada. This is more than 40 per cent of the 10,550 acres of reasonably flat land in the valley.

The commission finds that the Skagit Valley is an uncommon and non-restorable area and has important social values. It also finds that this flooding will result in the loss, in varying degrees, of some important elements of the local environment and, to use its own words, a simplification of the ecology. The commission also tells us that:

> The time limitations of this study precluded obtaining information on the cost of mitigating the effects of flooding in the valley. . . .

The quotation continues:

> In the absence of knowledge of the costs of protection and enhancement and having only rough estimates of the benefits that might accrue, the commission recommends that these mitigative measures be fully studied before the Ross dam is raised, and that they be undertaken to the extent that the government agencies concerned find them feasible.

Finally, the International Joint Commission tells us that:

> Under normal conditions, a study of environmental and ecological conditions should encompass three full years. In contrast, this study was conducted over a period of four months, from early June when public hearings were held, to early October. Therefore, the investigation of the advisory group consisted mainly of an interpretation of raw, and sometimes incomplete, data collected by others and to a review of published reports.

The Canadian government's position is that these environmental and ecological conditions should be fully understood and carefully assessed before any additional flooding is contemplated in the Upper Skagit Valley in British Columbia.

We shall, of course, be examining the International Joint Commission's report in detail, as will the government of British Columbia and the relevant authorities in the United States. After we have completed this review, we will again be discussing the future of the Skagit Valley with our opposite numbers in Victoria and Washington, D.C. The government will be making a further report to the House at that time.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the excerpts from the International Joint Commission's report quoted by the minister confirm the impression widely held in British Columbia, which I share, that the Skagit Valley is an uncommon and non-restorable area which has important social values. It also finds that flooding will result in the loss in varying degrees of some important elements of the local environment and a simplification of the ecology. In other words, the study confirms the impressions generally held in that region concerning the importance of preserving the environment in the Skagit Valley and the damage that would be done by flooding.

My impression from the brief excerpts the minister has read from the IJC report is that the commission did not consider banning or recommending indefinite postponement of the actual flooding. The commission did not consider recommending the deferment of the hydroelectric development. The commission's recommendations seem to be confined to the scope of measures which might be taken to mitigate the damage that would be done to the environment in the Skagit Valley. As I say, this is the impression one gets from the excerpts given us by the minister. It is disappointing to many, including myself, that the International Joint Commission did not recommend abandonment of the flooding and seems to confine its recommendations simply to mitigating the damages that might be caused by such flooding. However, the commission has emphasized the importance of preserving the valley. It has emphasized that the damage which it predicts would be done would be irreparable.

Flooding of Skagit River Valley

In these circumstances I think it is urgent that the minister and the government act with great vigour. When the minister speaks about studying the report and then taking action, quite frankly this does not suggest very much to me in the way of vigour. I would have thought the minister would promptly study the report and would have come before the House with a definite recommendation on how he and the government intend to proceed. It is necessary to act with vigour to preserve a valley that the International Joint Commission has recognized as important, a valley that it has recognized as being threatened. I hope, therefore, that the minister will in fact act with more vigour than his statement to the House this morning seems to indicate. Indeed, now that the Prime Minister has demonstrated that he has great success with President Nixon and he has been able to make breakthroughs there and to persuade the President to give fantastic assurances to Canada, perhaps the minister may be able to persuade the Prime Minister to take up the case directly with the President.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the issue of the Skagit Valley has been before the House for almost two years now and today the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has presented us with a very attractively wrapped Christmas present. Our problem is that we like the wrapping but we are not certain at the moment what is inside. We hope that some time we can open it up and perhaps even ventilate the whole issue. That would be nice.

The statement of the minister seems to be hopeful. The government seems to be saying rather piously that at the moment the flooding should not be proceeded with. The statement also seems to confirm what the people of British Columbia have felt for some time, that since this valley is one of the last remaining unspoiled recreational resources adjacent to a large population centre it should not be flooded.

Unfortunately, when the agreement of 1942 was reached and the decision to go ahead was made, environmental and recreational matters were not of the consequence that they are today. There was not general public appreciation of the value of this kind of unspoiled resource. The International Joint Commission because of the terms of reference given to it on April 7, 1971, could hardly reverse its position of 1942 even though it may have genuinely felt that the earlier decision was in error. The commission was locked in by government terms of reference so narrow that all it could comment on was the extent of the environmental consequences. I felt last April that this was a delaying tactic and that ultimately the axe would fall on the Skagit Valley and we were just going to be let down easily. I suppose today I am still suspicious or at least fearful that the flooding will occur eventually. I hope we can have an end to or at least an amelioration of the environmental irritants—that seems to be a popular word lately—in Canada-U.S. relations. There have been several environmental irritants lately, as well as economic ones, involving such things as nuclear blasts, oil tankers and the Skagit Valley.

I think it is important that the government indicate frankly what it is going to do. The minister's statement seems to say that more time is required to study this matter, that the government is going to wind it down, and diffuse the issue. It will not satisfy the people of British Columbia to learn before too long that the minister has allowed the flooding to be proceeded with. What BC citizens want to know is what the government is going to do to stop it. That is really the only solution that will be acceptable in British Columbia.

Perhaps the minister, as he hints in the last paragraph of the statement, might be encouraged to open up bilateral talks with the United States in the hope that the people in Washington, who are also aware of the public concern for environmental matters these days, will realize it is sheer lunacy to continue to flood recreational areas near large urban centres. This will be in keeping with the sentiment in Canada that as Canadians we are no longer content to be hewers of wood and storers of water.

[Translation]

Mr. Leonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I received at the very last minute the text of the report the minister has just tabled, and in English only. However, I shall not deprive myself of my right to congratulate the International Joint Commission on its study and on the report it has submitted.

We are glad the hon. minister has, according to his statement, committed himself to follow closely the consequences of construction of the dam and, if possible, to prevent it in order not to deprive the people of Canada again of their environment, their heritage and to ensure a sound environment for the future.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF MOTIONS—DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE MOTION RELATING TO 1971 TAXATION YEAR

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, pursuant to Standing Order 60 I am laying on the table two notices of ways and means motions which follow from the statement by the minister on October 14, 1971, and which supersede the notice of ways and means tabled that day.

One of these notices of ways and means relates to the 1971 taxation year and the other relates to the 1972 taxation year. I would be obliged, Mr. Speaker, if you would designate an order of the day for consideration on Monday of the notice of ways and means relating to the 1971 taxation year.

SUGGESTED PRESENCE OF MADAME DEFARGE FOR TAX BILL VOTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I ask unanimous consent for the purpose of presenting a motion the necessity of which is related to an event that will take place later this day. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the officers of the House be asked to make arrangements for the admission to the House of Commons gallery this afternoon at 3.45 of Madame Defarge, and that she be allowed to bring her knitting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would not think this is a motion which the Chair should be required to put to the House. I think the hon. member would agree with a ruling from the Chair in that direction.

AVAILABILITY OF NATURAL GAS TO CANADIANS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I wish to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Panarctic Oil Company, of which the government is the largest single shareholder, has recently brought in its fourth gas well which indicates the presence of a major gas field in the Arctic. This company is reported to have entered into an agreement giving certain United States companies first refusal of this gas despite the misgivings of the National Energy Board regarding the availability of sufficient natural gas to meet anticipated Canadian requirements. If there is unanimous consent I propose to move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the whole matter of making Canadian natural gas available to the Canadian people at the lowest possible price and the role of the Panarctic Oil Company in such a policy be referred to the Committee on National Resources and Public Works with instructions to report back its findings to this House at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

COST-PRICE CRISIS, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to seek consent under the terms of Standing Order 43 to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), in the following terms:

That the present cost-price crisis in the winter season fishery of the Northwest Territories and the role of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation in this situation, as outlined by Great Slave Lake Fishermen's Federation in a submission to the Minister of Fisheries on November 24, 1971, be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for investigation and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING BETWEEN CANADIAN AND BRITISH PRIME MINISTERS—TOPICS FOR DISCUSSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he can tell the House what topics he wishes to discuss with Prime Minister Heath today and if he has received any indication from Prime Minister Heath of the topics he would like to raise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in exchanges between officials the decision was put to us and we agreed that there be no specific agenda. The indication was given to me that on the British Prime Minister's part he would want to talk somewhat about Commonwealth problems. Particularly, he would want to talk to me about Rhodesia and the recent settlement for which they have been striving. We would want to talk about the British entry into the Common Market. On my side I want to report to him on Canada's progress in its negotiations with the Americans. We also decided to talk about Canada's position in some of the international moves toward disarmament in Europe.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to seek the support of Mr. Heath for the Canadian position with regard to the floating of the Canadian dollar—I apologize to the hon. member for St. Boniface, Mr. Speaker—and the desire of the Canadian authorities to maintain an appropriate relationship between our dollar and the United States dollar? Does the Prime Minister intend to seek the support of Mr. Heath for the Canadian view?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated I shall be discussing at some length Canada's position in these international monetary problems, and I hope that my arguments will appear convincing enough that the British will want to support our position.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the Prime Minister be discussing with Mr. Heath the India-Pakistan problem and, in particular, can the Prime Minister tell the House the position that he will be taking in the discussion of this question with regard to the recognition of Bangla Desh?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will obviously be discussing that question and perhaps exchanging what information we have on our positions on the future of that part of the world.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister feel confident that he will be able to wring from Mr. Heath one of those fantastic assurances that Britain has no intention of taking Canada over economically?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS DISCOVERIES IN ARCTIC ISLANDS—PANARCTIC AGREEMENT TO GIVE FIRST REFUSAL TO AMERICAN COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is on the roster but unfortunately not able to be here today, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Since the Canadian government is the largest single shareholder in Panarctic Oils Limited, may I ask whether the Canadian government concurred in the agreement which that company entered into to give first refusal of the gas discovered in the Arctic Islands by Panarctic to a consortium of American companies consisting of Tenneco Oils and Minerals Ltd., Columbia Gas Systems Inc., Texas Eastern Transmission Co., and Northern Natural Gas Co. Did the Canadian government representative on the board of Panarctic Oils Limited concur in this agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for a more complete answer I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister. But I must point out to the hon. member that, to my recollection, this does not apply to first refusal on all gas produced. For instance, gas for Canadian use would not be affected by this first refusal. It would be gas for export. I repeat, that is my recollection of the matter.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the concern contained in the report of the National Energy Board regarding the availability of gas to meet foreseeable Canadian requirements, would the Prime Minister undertake to have the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development make a statement to the House on what the government's policy is with respect to gas and, particularly, whether or not all or part of the gas produced by Panarctic has been hypothecated to the American consortium to which I referred?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as to the first part of the question, I will bring it to the minister's attention and perhaps he will make a statement. Perhaps the opposition would prefer to ask questions on specific points. Answering the other part of the question I reiterate that the negotiations with these American companies concern gas to be exported. This does not affect gas to be used in Canada.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since there seems to be some difference between the Prime Minister's statement and the reports on this agreement, would the Prime Minister undertake to have a copy of this agreement tabled in the House?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take notice of the question, Mr. Speaker.

NATURAL GAS—FEASIBILITY STUDY OF TRANSPORT FROM ARCTIC

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. We have referred before to the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been ill, unfortunately, and absent from the House. This is an important subject, and I would hope that a definite statement would be made on the appointment of a new minister. Until such time, perhaps the Prime Minister can answer this question which I think is very important. Is a feasibility study now being undertaken, in the interests of the people of Canada, to determine the feasibility of conveying and transporting natural gas from the Arctic, taking into consideration the ecological problems of the north, which the Prime Minister is aware of, and the economics of the project having in mind Canada's need to be able to export various commodities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister whether, as head of the government, he will use his position to recommend the setting up of such a study at this time that is so necessary for the benefit of Canada and Canadians. I am asking whether he, as the head of the government, will do that, not the minister.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that we have at various times reported that some studies were made in this regard. The reason I said I would take notice of the question was that it was a bit involved and I am not quite sure whether the hon. member is suggesting that we study things we already are or some others.

POST OFFICE

INTEGRATION OF URBAN TRANSPORTATION SERVICES—COMPLAINTS BY CERTAIN WESTERN CARRIERS ABOUT COMPENSATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Postmaster General. Has the Postmaster General replied to a letter from five western carriers outlining their complaints about inadequate compensation when the Post Office takes over their businesses in 1972? If not, can the minister assure the House that a positive reply will be sent shortly in order to avert an unnecessary discruption of service at this time?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I receive the letter, I shall answer it. However, I must remind the House that I have already said that we intended to be as fair as possible with the contractors, that we would give them a three-month notice and that we would purchase the equipment and trucks. However, we must also abide by the law as regards requests which they may submit to us concerning what they call "goodwill".

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Does the compensation contemplated by the minister include what is usually included in transactions of this kind, consideration for the good will of an ongoing business?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I have just answered, Mr. Speaker, that we must abide by the law concerning what they call "goodwill".

INTEGRATION OF URBAN TRANSPORTATION SERVICES—RETENTION OF WORKING CONDITIONS BY PRIVATE CARRIERS' EMPLOYEES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. What steps are being taken to ensure that the employees of these contractors retain their same standard of living and the same seniority and wages they had before these contracts became subject to cancellation?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or better.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, all the contractors' permanent staff will be integrated into the Post Office Department. As for union employees, we are currently negotiating and discussing with them the terms of their integration, as well as the services and benefits which they will enjoy.

IMMIGRATION

ILLEGAL MOVEMENT OF ALIENS FROM CANADA INTO UNITED STATES—LEGISLATION TO PREVENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister about a matter we were pursuing yesterday. In light of the admissions by Canadian immigration officials and American immigration officials that weaknesses, difficulties and slackness in Canadian laws and regulations are contributing to large-scale smuggling of aliens into the United States, does the government intend to do anything about this either by changing the law or by changing the regulations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the Prime Minister indicate whether this will be in the form of a statute or an amendment to a statute to be introduced in the next session?

Mr. Trudeau: We are giving that very serious thought, Mr. Speaker. We are looking at a memorandum for a new statute. I cannot say at this time whether it will be in that form, but we are looking at the question.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF RENT INCREASES IN 1972—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ACTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the momentarily displaced Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will the minister advise whether the prediction of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada that rent increases for 1972 will vary between 5 per cent and 15 per cent is consistent with government predictions and government policy? In any case, can he advise whether the government intends to enter into discussions with the provinces to the end that these very high increases might be forestalled?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by Mr. Shipp, the president of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, was made the other day. I have not had a chance to analyse the basis for his comments. We shall certainly do that. If indeed such increases are apparent which are not necessarily supported by our own studies at the moment, we will be very happy to sit down with the provinces to see what might be done. Essentially, though, it would primarily be the responsibility of the provinces to act.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON RATIONALIZATION OF HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure he can give us the information. Will the long-awaited report on studies into Canada's grain handling and transportation system by the grains group be released before the end of the year and, if not, when can we expect this report to be made public?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked a number of times in the House and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has replied to it in the House.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR TRANSPORT

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—LIMITATION OF PASSENGER SERVICE UNDER CLASS 4 LICENCES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): In view of representations made to the Prime Minister by persons in the Northwest Territories concerning the changes by the air transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission limiting the passenger carrying service of class four licencees in the Mackenzie river area because of first and second class licences, will the minister consider holding up this order until hearings can be held in that area because of the dislocation that has taken place in both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that the question was directed to me. The hon. member did not indicate it was addressed to the Minister of Transport. I am not sure what my authority is in this regard. As of yesterday, however, I made some inquiries of the Canadian Transport Commission asking for a full explanation. If I can accommodate in the way suggested by the hon. member or in some other way, I will be pleased to consider it.

Mr. Peters: I apologize for not mentioning the minister, who is the genial answerer of questions on that side. Will the minister assure the House that he will hold up the application of this regulation at least until hearings can be held in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Jamieson: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I have the authority to hold it up, but I am certainly disposed to do so or to ensure that there is no serious disruption of service.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY APPLICATIONS TO CLOSE STATIONS ON PRAIRIES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT COUNSEL TO OPPOSE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with preliminary meetings with representatives of the Canadian Transport Commission that are taking place in the Prairie provinces in connection with applications by the CNR and CPR for an almost wholesale closure of stations on the Prairies. Some meetings having taken place; there is a feeling from what has been said at these meetings that the transport commission may well be disposed to allow the applications. This would create a serious situation on the Prairies. Realizing that the minister has no power of direction over the Canadian Transport Commission, I ask him whether the government will appoint counsel on behalf of the government to argue against this wholesale closure and support closures restricted to a very few cases where there is no excuse for the continuance of the stations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the representation, but the right hon. member should know, perhaps better than anyone in this House, that it is unwise to anticipate the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission. I have no way of knowing what the recommendation is going to be, but I will be glad to take the matter under advisement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, members of the opposition are in full agreement with the statement concerning the chairman of that board after our experience in the House of Commons with him. I am not trying to anticipate the eccentricities in which his mind will operate. I am suggesting that the government should consider appointing counsel on behalf of the government of Canada so the western Prairies will not become a series of ghost towns.

Mr. Jamieson: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider it and see if there is something I can do.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—DECISION ON SITE FOR NEW FACILITY

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether he will announce this year the site of a second airport for the greater Toronto region. If not, will he inform the House who or what is the cause of this indecision?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was in conversation this morning with the Minister of Transport and Communications for the province of Ontario. As I have explained in the House on a number of occasions, the reason for the delay is the question of federal participation in the provision of some of the support services which may be required for such an airport. I have indicated in principle we are not opposed to this but that we have to make some determination as to the site before we can be more specific. I shall be meeting with the Ontario Minister of Transport and Communications on Wednesday night of next week, I believe. I hope we can make considerable progress at that time. I might emphasize that our conversations are amiable and we are both anxious to make progress as fast as possible.

TRADE

SUGGESTED NEW POLICY TO ASSIST MANUFACTURERS TO IMPROVE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN SALES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is based on representations made to the minister by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Since this important segment of our economy is seriously concerned that the methods employed by the government will not solve some of the problems of domestic sales and the penetration of foreign markets, can the minister tell us whether it is his intention, before the recess or early in the new year, to make a statement in the House defining some new and vigorous policy in which the manufacturers can have more confidence?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not think I can do that, Mr. Speaker, but when the hon. member returns to his office he will find there two news releases, one concerning an extension of the GAAP program, and one on a new feature of export market development which has to do with cost-sharing incentives for market identification and market assessment. So by a number of—I agree—limited supplementary moves, we are providing more and more support for Canadian industry and for Canadian exporters in particular. I expect to receive congratulations from the hon. member on these two moves.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the point at which I usually appeal for the co-operation of hon. members, not necessarily with the Chair but with one another, to try to limit supplementaries so as to allow as many hon. members as possible to ask their questions.

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN MISSIONS TO GREAT BRITAIN AND EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As Canadian exports have increased over all by only 5 per cent this year, and as there has been a very sharp decline in our exports to the European Economic Community and to Great Britain, markets which should have been expanding—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary, not to make a speech, even though it might be a brief speech.

Mr. Hees: I was just filling in the minister, Mr. Speaker. Are the minister and the department planning to increase greatly the number of trade missions they will be sending to these important areas during the next 12 months to give Canadian exporters the best possible chance to increase exports to these important markets?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think we have done very well in this regard, Mr. Speaker, although, of course, there is always room for improvement. In the last 12 months I have led missions to Germany, China, the Soviet Union and Algeria, and I am leaving tonight for Morocco. I expect to lead a mission to Japan in January. This just gives an idea of the number of missions we have sent abroad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Supplementary!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want the minister to miss the departure of his next trip. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: We are running short of time. The minister and the hon. member might continue their debate after the question period.

Mr. Broadbent: I hate to interrupt the minister's speech but I should like to ask him a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair refused a supplementary to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings in order that we might pursue the asking of questions. The hon. member might wait a moment or so. I will come to him in due course. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I am not sure whether she wishes to ask a question.

FINANCE

SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN PROGRAM—PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO ENABLE VANCOUVER AND VICTORIA TO PARTICIPATE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will. I was about to say this was so sudden. I wanted to address a question to the Minister of Finance yesterday who is not here today, but his parliamentary secretary is present. In view of the fact that the total amount of British Columbia's share of the money available under the special development loan program was allocated before the cities of Vancouver and Victoria could put in their applications, and in view of the fact that these two cities have about two-fifths of all those unemployed in British Columbia, will the parliamentary secretary ask the minister to consider increasing the amount of the special development loan fund so that these and other municipalities can be included in the program? Will he also ask him to make a statement on the matter before Christmas?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that this question has been asked previously. If not, it will be considered as a representation to the minister.

Mrs. MacInnis: I would point out that I addressed it before to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but I learned subsequently that he was simply administering the money and that the pursestrings were held by the Minister of Finance. That is why I addressed my question to that ministry.

EXPERIMENTAL MOVEMENT BY UNIT HOPPER CAR TRAIN—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Will a report be made available to all members of the House and interested parties on all aspects of the experimental grain handling project which took place recently between an inland terminal and the port of Vancouver with a unit hopper car train? Will this report be available soon?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I do not recall this particular experiment. I know that a number of experiments were carried out in connection with grain handling. I suspect they are part of the over-all study which is still going on. If there are data which we can make available to the hon. member and to others, I will see what we can do.

STUDY OF OFFSHORE STORAGE AND CONTAINER TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Does the government have any investigation under way into the merits of offshore storage of Canadian grain, or any study of the entire area of ocean transportation which would include container transportation of Canadian grain?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I believe that every aspect of transportation and all new ideas that have come forward are being examined, but whether the specific ones mentioned by the hon. member, which appear to be forward-looking to say the least, have been considered is something I will have to check.

POSSIBLE ABANDONMENT BY UNITED STATES OF JOB DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE CREDIT PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the Minister of Finance has said that one of the consequences of achieving an agreement on currency realignment will be that the Americans will abandon their job development incentive credit program, can the minister say whether the government has received a firm commitment on this point, or is it the case that the United States government has simply indicated that it might move in this direction?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): My understanding is that the elimination of the surcharge will carry the elimination of the discriminatory aspects of the job development tax credit, that is, the advantage given to U.S. producers under the "buy American" aspect of that incentive. That has been my understanding.

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, when I asked the Minister of Agriculture last Wednesday whether in preparing Bill C-176 the government had taken into consideration an almost similar bill which is to be implemented in the United States, he replied in the affirmative.

Did the minister mean by this that he would introduce certain amendments to Bill C-176 in order to provide appropriate instruments for controlling import and export of Canadian farm products?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Obviously Bill C-176 was prepared long before the United States bill to which the hon. member refers. When I said we had taken into account the laws of other countries and, indeed, our international commitments and treaties respecting trade, that was the case.

SPREAD OF RABIES AMONG DOMESTIC ANIMALS—PROVISION FOR MANDATORY SHOTS

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the widespread concern about the spread of rabies among domestic animals, especially household pets and particularly in the province of Ontario, may I ask whether the federal government intends to make it mandatory that all such animals receive rabies shots?

• (11:50 a.m.)

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are extremely concerned about the increase in the incidence of this disease. We have a joint program with Ontario with respect to controlling this disease. I shall certainly take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration and ascertain whether it can be helpful in bringing this disease under control.

FEEDER CATTLE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF DEATH OF ANIMALS IN TRANSIT

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I asked it some time ago and he said he would make a report. It has to do with the heavy losses of cattle shipped from western Canada, and his parliamentary secretary said that if necessary a report on the cruelty to dumb animals would be made to the House.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have attempted to get some additional information about some of the carloads that were shipped from western to eastern Canada. In the over-all average there is not a great increase in losses, but there were particular incidents where there were long delays and travelling time about which we would like a further explanation. When we have that I will try to make it available to the hon. member.

1973 LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—ADEQUATE REPRESENTATION OF INDUSTRY ON CANADIAN DELEGATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Present plans call for a Law of the Sea conference to be held in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1973. In view of the importance of this conference to fishermen in Atlantic Canada, will the minister give his assurance that the Canadian fishing industry will be adequately represented not only at the 1973 conference but also at all preparatory meetings?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, we always make provision for representatives of the industry to accompany our delegations abroad.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED BAN ON USE OF NEWS MATERIAL FROM PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE BY EDITORS AT FORCES BASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he shed some light on the directive from his department to Canadian Armed Forces base newspapers restricting them from using news emanating from the Public Service Alliance?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it has been a longstanding practice in the Canadian Armed Forces orders and regulations that service newspapers not be used either for polemics or political controversy but exclusively to inform members of the armed forces. The decision was taken by the director general of information services of my department that this particular documentation, which was very polemical in nature, should not be included in station newspapers. I might indicate that the polemics in it were primarily directed against the Canadian news media. I did notice one particular omission, and that was that the gentleman who wrote it did not refer to the survey conducted on this subject by the hon. member.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, would the minister be prepared to admit that in 1971 members of the Canadian Armed Forces are intelligent enough—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is debate.

PROPOSED TAPS TANKER ROUTE—POSSIBLE PUBLIC HEARING ON WEST COAST

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the serious environmental threat to our west coast posed by the proposed oil tanker route from Valdez, Alaska, to Cherry Point in the state of Washington, is the government planning to hold a public hearing on the west coast on this very important issue?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): Possibly, Mr. Speaker, but a number of studies are under way and until we have the results of these studies I doubt very much that a public hearing would provide all the information to the public that it should.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBLE PRIORITY TO PANARCTIC OVER ALBERTA IN EXPORT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the matter of the export of natural gas to the United States, is it now government policy to give the Panarctic consortium priority over Alberta producers and to reserve for Alberta producers the eastern Canada market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised by these questions since they imply that the National Energy Board does not exist any more. The National Energy Board is there to make this kind of decision regarding the export of gas which is surplus to Canadian needs, so it really does not matter who gets it after that. The board decides what is surplus and can be exported. The decision is made and it is then compiled in a book which is distributed across Canada and which the hon. member can read. It is all very open.

In regard to studies of a pipeline from the north, a number of ministers have stated on a number of occasions that such studies, private and governmental were going on. The hon. member for Calgary North is aware that the National Energy Board has studied the matter of reserves in depth in recent weeks and has accordingly made a number of decisions.

LIFT PROGRAM—DEADLINE FOR REPAYMENTS BY FARMERS—SUGGESTED INDEPENDENT REVIEW BOARD

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask him whether his department has set a deadline for repayments by some 4,500 farmers under the Lift program before they proceed with legal action, and has an independent review board been set up to study the cases of the farmers in question?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we already have guidelines in this regard, and we are obliged to attempt to collect any money paid out improperly under the law. Therefore we are going to try to collect any overpayments that were made which were at variance with the regulations. I do not think we need a board of inquiry. We will certainly be as lenient as we can but we also have to obey the law.

Mr. Korchinski: Has a deadline for collection been set?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not think a deadline arises. When money is owing it is owing at that time.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Has the minister met with our native people this morning regarding an incident at Williams Lake, B.C., involving the death of an Indian, which death is attributed to a beating administered by a Royal Canadian Mounted Police officer? Has the minister a statement to make in this regard?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I met with this delegation and we discussed various matters, including the one mentioned by the hon. member. I shall study it immediately and see what is the usual practice in such cases and what I can do about it.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: During the investigation that will be carried on by the minister, is it the intention of the minister to relieve the officer involved from his duties until such time as the investigation has been completed?

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—STUDIES OF AMOUNT AVAILABLE IN ARCTIC

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Dauphin of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It arises from the fact that two weeks ago today, the chairman of the National Energy Board appeared before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee and said that his board had no way of estimating the amount of gas situated in the Arctic. I am wondering whether the government has in fact some studies in this regard because the answer given to the hon. member for Dauphin would indicate this information is all available.

• (12 noon)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I meant to say that studies are now being conducted on the ecological and other aspects, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has reported fully on that a few months ago. I will find the page reference and give it to my hon. friend if he needs it. These studies are going on now. They will take the necessary number of years because the phenomena to be studied can only be observed over a period of time. Now, if someone wants to build a pipeline from the north through Canada he will have to have the authorization of the National Energy Board, and in order to obtain it he will have to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Board that the gas is surplus to Canadian needs. It will also have to be demonstrated that the pipeline would not damage the Canadian ecology. This will have to be demonstrated to the National Energy Board. All this is very regular, very normal, according to plan, and according to the law.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDIARIES SHARING IN ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the announcement made yesterday by the minister to the effect that his department is increasing its contribution to the export market development program by $250,000 this fiscal year, and by a further $1.5 million in 1972-73, and in view of the fact that these grants will be used for the purpose of exploring foreign markets outside of the United States, would the minister inform the House whether or not this assistance will be available to United States-owned subsidiaries operating in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we do not discriminate in my department on these matters. Should we or should we not is a debatable point. We have taken the position that what we want is Canadian exports and Canadian industrial production, so we do not make a distinction in respect of who brings it about, "it" being in the interest of Canada.

INFLUENCE OF DISC PROGRAM ON EXPORT POLICY OF UNITED STATES SUBSIDIARIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. In view of the fact that firms operating in the United States are now qualified for assistance under the DISC program and the job incentive program, assistance which will likely run into billions of dollars, would the minister give the House his reasons for believing that the newly announced subsidy, amounting to not quite $2 million, would influence the United States parent companies to shift their export strategy from United States plants to subsidiaries which operate in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is really one which invites debate. I do not think in those terms it is in order. I apologize to hon. members who have not yet had an opportunity to ask questions or supplementaries. We have now run out of time. I do not believe we should go too far beyond the time allotted to the question period this morning because of the allocation of time for the balance of this morning and this afternoon. Orders of the day.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which affects every member of this House. I wanted to ask the Prime Minister about this but since the Prime Minister is not here I will ask the Acting Prime Minister. This morning the CBC started wheeling up a fantastic number of heavy trucks and equipment and setting up in order to film the end of the government's disgraceful performance in imposing closure.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Hees: They have now been dispatched. We are interested in this and I want to know who is responsible for the despicable order to send them away so that the government's shame will not be seen by the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Hees: You are ashamed of what you are doing and do not want the people of Canada to see it.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for the third reading of Bill C-259, to amend the Income Tax Act and to make certain provisions and alterations in the statute law related to or consequential upon the amendments to that act, and the amendment thereto of Mr. McCleave (P. 10547).

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not able to be present. I understand this is not possible in view of the meetings with Prime Minister Heath. I wish he were present because I would rather say some of the things I am going to say in his presence than in his absence. I think I should begin by thanking the Prime Minister for his graciousness in delivering his speech to the House of Commons yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I was looking forward to the experience with great pleasure, since the Prime Minister speaks to us so rarely. But I was disappointed because I expected the right hon. gentleman to do better than read some excerpts from old speeches by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), with a little prologue on heavy water which seemed to have been written by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). The Prime Minister dilated considerably on the length of time the tax reform process had taken and said the only thing that dragged on so slowly in the country in recent years was the heavy water plant at Glace Bay. Obviously, Sir, the goal of attaining a just society has disappeared completely from the Prime Minister's mind. I, too, regret the time and cost involved in the heavy water plant, but I regret particularly that the Prime Minister of Canada has added years of time and tens of millions of dollars to the cost of completing that plant by refusing, for purely partisan reasons, to enter into an arrangement with a Conservative premier of Nova Scotia similar to the arrangement he has now made with the Liberal premier of Nova Scotia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Indeed, in order to find a comparably narrow, partisan behaviour on the part of a Canadian Prime Minister I think one would have to go back at least as far as Mackenzie King's famous "not one five-cent" speech. I regret, too, the length of time the tax reform process has taken. Not only do I regret the length of time, but also the completely inexcusable result of that process which we are now discussing. Both this monstrous bill and the behaviour of the government leading up to the presentation to this House of Bill C-259 are inexcusable.

Back in the fall of 1967 when I first entered this House I asked the then Minister of Finance, the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), when we were going to receive the white paper on tax reform arising out of the report of the Carter Commission. He said a white paper would be presented near the beginning of 1968. He later made the same kind of statement to the then leader of the NDP in the House that this white paper would be presented as nearly as possible to the commencement of 1968. But, of course, nothing happened.

Then we had a change of ministers of finance, and instead of the white paper on tax reform we had what you might call a mini tax reform package from the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) involving in particular consideration of estate and gift taxation. The Minister of Finance started this process late in 1968 when he overhauled and greatly increased the gift and estate taxes. The proposals were made in the mini-budget in the fall of 1968. There was a tremendous row in the country, a tremendous unsettlement, particularly among the backbenchers of the Liberal party, and following the Christmas recess, during which Liberal backbenchers consulted with their constituents, the minister modified his proposals to some degree. Nevertheless, he pushed through complex and rigid gift and estate tax changes, and obviously he put these forward very earnestly as an important reform in the permanent tax laws of this country.

Bear in mind that these changes came about 18 months after the previous minister of finance had promised a white paper on tax reform, and they came less than a year prior to the white paper of the present Minister of Finance. These changes in gift and estate taxes were put forward and fought for very earnestly by the minister as very significant changes in the tax laws of this country. Now, some two years later, the same minister introduces a bill repealing all federal gift and estate taxes, doing away with all of what he put before the House two years previously and all that he had fought for in the House. In other words, all the trouble to which the Minister of Finance put the House and the country with his gift and estate tax changes early in 1969 were a complete waste of the time of the House and of the time of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Yet, on the other side of the House they talk about the opposition wasting the time of the House. There you have a so-called mini tax reform which was completely abolished within two years—a complete waste of time. The Minister of Finance has been behaving like a whirling dervish.

Then, in the fall of 1969, nearly two years after the previous minister of finance had pledged the white paper on taxation, we get a white paper on so-called tax reform which was presented to us as one of the finest conceptions of the human mind, about the greatest document since Magna Carta, backed by a tremendous public relations effort. Pretty soon criticism developed.

Mr. Mahoney: This is an old speech.

Mr. Stanfield: I would not want to cut off the parliamentary secretary because his time to interrupt anyone in the House is exceedingly limited.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Criticism of the white paper on tax reform developed very quickly. The minister portrayed himself as the guardian of the common people fighting the big interests, and fighting for reform required for the ordinary people in Canada. In the main he defended his proposals for about a year and a half, and then he capitulated. I have never seen a capitulation to equal this one in this country. To whom did he capitulate? Did he capitulate to the big interests who he said originally criticized the white paper?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Mahoney: No.

Mr. Stanfield: Was it to the big interests that he capitulated? It is very difficult to say. I would hope not. The extent of the folly of the white paper on tax reform and the long defence conducted by the Minister of Finance, the extent of the abandonment of the basic concept put forward as being the fundamental wisdom, the whole business about narrowly and widely held corporations, the whole concept of the integration of corporate income and taxpayers income, were all abandoned. They talk about the time taken. They put forward a white paper on tax reform nearly two years after it was promised. They fought for it across the country for a year and a half, and then they abandoned most of it. When the Minister of Finance retreated last spring from the white paper I do not think there were many people on the other side of the House who thought he would retreat into something like this massive bill which we all have on our desks. I think it was as nasty a shock to them as it was to anybody else when it appeared.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: So, I say that the time taken down to last June when the government retreated, and when it introduced this bill, was time taken by the government, nearly four years of time, first by the delay in putting forward a program of reform, and then by putting out a white paper on reform which was most inappropriate to conditions in Canada and which was nothing more than a technocrat's dream to which the government expected the Canadian economy and the Canadian people to conform, rather than a reform appropriate to the priorities and complexities of Canadian economy and life.

When the minister retreated, the master minds on the other side of the House produced Bill C-259, another technocratic creation. Now, we are involved with a new monstrosity. I do not want to be too hard on the private members opposite because I am sure they had no idea that after they had succeeded—because I think they played a part along with the rest of us—in forcing the Minister of Finance to retreat from the white paper that this would be hung round their necks.

So far as the time taken is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we have had years of procrastination to start with, years of delay, followed by years of the white paper and the present bill, years which I would describe as years of folly on the part of the government, consuming untold energy so far as the Canadian people are concerned, creating continual uncertainty in the country, and doing terrible damage to the economy of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Pushing this bill through now cannot be justified in the name of tax reform. It is true the government took years to produce this bill. It is true we have discussed it for many weeks. But that it was ill-conceived is apparent from its very length and bulk, from its complexity, from the incomprehensibility of many of its parts. That the government did not know what it was doing is shown in the number of amendments that the government has produced this fall since the bill was introduced. There were some amendments very recently, and some amendments which the government has now promised it will have to pass to meet already recognized serious defects in the bill.

What does the Minister of Finance say, Mr. Speaker? In effect he says, "We don't know how badly this bill will work until we try it out on the Canadian people."

Mr. Hees: And the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says fuddle duddle.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, so far as the subject of tax reform is concerned, the Minister of Finance has been jumping around ever since he became Minister of Finance. He has been jumping around like a flea, if you can imagine it.

Mr. Bell: A funny looking flea.

Mr. Stanfield: As an example, I refer to the great fuss he made back in 1968 and 1969 about reforming estate and gift taxation, and the tremendous importance he attached to those changes at that time. Now, he has scrapped all that. When this bill comes into operation—I say when, not if, because I think the government is obviously determined to bull it through—there will be no estate or gift taxation imposed by the government. There will be no federal gift taxation or estate taxation.

I know some people have the impression that the recipient of a gift is the recipient of a capital gain, but that is completely erroneous, Mr. Speaker. There will be no gift taxation imposed upon a donor or donee under this bill. And no doubt, Sir, there will be hundreds of millions of dollars in Canada transferred or given away in the early part of 1972 because it will be possible to do so without any federal taxation.

Mr. Hees: They are looking after their rich contributors.

Mr. Stanfield: Yet in 1969, it was vitally important to the Minister of Finance and his colleagues that gifts should be taxed. It was basic to the tax philosophy of the government. One has to ask the question, Sir, when were the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance right, in 1968 and 1969 or in 1971? Were they right in proposing rigid, strict and complex tax laws with regard to gifts, putting this forward as a great tax reform two years ago, and now in what they describe as a great tax reform bill doing exactly the opposite, just within two years? When were they right, then or now? I say neither.

Clearly their behavior in putting forward this bill indicates they now think they were wrong in 1968 and 1969. And I think they are wrong in 1971. I doubt very much if any member on the other side of the House will rise to defend the taxation situation that will actually exist in 1972 with regard to gifts.

Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): We will.

Mr. Stanfield: Who has been wasting the time of the House and the country since 1969?

Mr. Hees: The Liberal party.

Mr. Stanfield: I just mention one example, the time taken by the government on estate and gift taxation. What about all the time spent on discussing the integration of corporate and shareholders' income, which the government has now completely abandoned? Again I ask, who has been wasting the time? But the saddest thing of all is not only that the government has wasted all this time but that we have wound up in the end with an abortion, if something the size of this bill could be called an abortion. If this bill passes this House today in its present form we will be making a pretty poor Christmas present to the Canadian people. It is the sort of package that not only won't look very good under the tree but it is liable to blow apart in the face of the person who opens it up.

The arguments have been gone over and over, Mr. Speaker, and there should be no need to repeat them today. There would not be any need if the government were willing to look at the situation with even a minimum amount of logic. I said it before, and I make no excuse for saying it here again because it is true, that most of this bill is incomprehensible, that much of it is irrelevant to the immediate problems facing the economy today; not only irrelevant but worse than that because when the bill comes into effect it will create a mountain of confusion in this country and in the economy of Canada, confusion this country can ill afford at this time. That is not the kind of present the government has any right to be giving to the Canadian people at the end of a session of Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Yesterday the Prime Minister said the bill was quite comprehensible to the taxpayers of Canada. If he were here, Sir, I would suggest to him: "Tell that to the tax experts, Buster."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Much of the bill is irrelevant, confusing and harmful. Indeed it is a sham. It is a sham because, after years of study, the Canadian people have a right to expect something that is tax reform rather than something that the government is calling tax reform. It is a sham because once the bill is passed the government will be able to make the claim that it has instituted tax reform when in fact it has done nothing of the kind. I say now, and I said before, that of course there are parts of the bill that are very welcome to everybody in this country. Basically, those are the parts which alleviate to some extent the burden on the lower income people of this country.

There are other provisions in the bill that deserve support, but you do not need this whole incomprehensible mess in order to achieve the things that are in the bill that are clearly of value. We have been willing and are still willing for the valuable aspects of this bill to go into effect immediately. It is a matter of simple justice and it would also add a stimulus to the economy. That is why I suggested splitting the bill for the purposes of proclaiming it and that is why I repeat that offer today. I am repeating it, Mr. Speaker. I think it is only sensible. When there are some points upon which there is agreement why not put them into effect? When there are other points on which even the government admits defects, and where even the government admits that changes have to be made, why not keep those points aside for future consideration and further discussion? That is what the provinces request and it is the only sensible course in order to avoid a tax jungle in this country. It would seem to be the logical way to proceed.

I suggest that this tax legislation has one thing in common with a good bottle of wine—the longer it stays unopened the better it will be for all concerned. I think our suggestions is the logical way to proceed but I would hardly expect a government preoccupied with claiming political points to worry very much about logic or common sense. Beyond logical procedure, this government is not even concerned about the parliamentary procedure. After brutally stopping debate in this House, this government is now stepping on all the toes it can find to stop the debate in the other place before that debate has even started.

Mr. McGrath: Just like it is denying the people of Newfoundland.

Mr. Stanfield: That is what you call a really good dose of participatory democracy.

Mr. Hees: Just like their treatment of the poor, if you speak up you get your grants cut off.

An hon. Member: Who is making the speech?

An hon. Member: Let your leader speak, George. You will have your chance.

Mr. Stanfield: We are able to participate over here; it is a joint effort.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: We are allowed to speak, we are not muzzled like you are.

Mr. Stanfield: It needs to be a joint effort over here when the government seems to be determined to walk on the face of everybody they can find. Consider the effrontery. It does not surprise me that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) would do this because it is his natural disposition, but consider the effrontery of the government when it presents the Senate with this tax bill, presumably later today—

Mr. Gibson: After two years with the people.

Mr. Stanfield: —and says it must go into effect on January 1. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the Minister of National Defence does not surprise me at all, I would only be surprised if he were to take a different attitude.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Why don't you tell the truth?

Mr. Stanfield: I cannot think of anything more insulting to the other place, or of any effort by any government more designed to try to reduce the role of the other place to that of a farce.

An hon. Member: Poor old Paul Martin!

Mr. Whelan: Nobody in a non-elected body should ever tell an elected body what to do.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has the floor.

Mr. Muir: Remember yesterday?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if I were a Liberal Senator right now, which of course I am not and it is something I could never hope to be, I would be considering not my status in the party, I hope—

Mr. Hees: Because that is assured.

Mr. Stanfield: —I would be considering my reputation as a member of that institution, which has a record of some independence and should be particularly anxious to maintain it at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Despite some of the comments opposite, this is not a question of a non-elected body trying to hold up the will of an elected body in this country, Mr. Speaker. This House has been prevented by closure from examining this bill fully.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: Black Friday again.

Mr. Stanfield: It is sad, Mr. Speaker. There are many sad aspects of this whole thing and the saddest is the frustration of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: You sail your hydrofoil, Don.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not want the Minister of National Defence to get too excited. I have not seen him so excited since he was ramming rule 75C through the House.

Mr. Hees: Tell us about the hydrofoil, Don.

Mr. Stanfield: The only time I see any sign of vitality in the hon. gentleman is when he is trying to push somebody around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: When he is trying to get his hydrofoil off the water.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of National Defence on a point of order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think that the Leader of the Opposition should be permitted to make his own speech without the intervention of his own members.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, when I feel that I need the support of the Minister of National Defence I think it will be time for me to leave this place—that is if he does not succeed in getting it closed down altogether in the meantime.

Mr. Muir: Better go and look after your uniforms, Don.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Senate does not have to run according to any strict timetable set by my hon. friends opposite. I hope it will not permit itself to be tied down to some political timetable that this government has prescribed. I hope it does not do that, Mr. Speaker.

Last Monday I explained why we were opposed to this bill and I will do so again.

Mr. Gibson: That is repetition. It does not do any good.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. Member: You would know all about repetition.

Mr. Hees: Please listen to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gibson: Make it perfectly clear.

Mr. McGrath: Don't get pushed aside by a mosquito.

Mr. Stanfield: I don't think it is fair to compare a mosquito to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which does nothing for the Canadian economy. I want to repeat, there are aspects of the bill that are desirable from every point of view, including stimulus to the economy, but the bulk of this bill does absolutely nothing for the Canadian economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It does nothing to help it. It is a bill that can adversely affect federal-provincial relations in this country. The two largest provinces in the country have asked for deferment, time to study, time to adjust and presumably time to make further representation after they succeed in understanding the bill. It is a bill that, in large measure, has been badly thought out and obviously badly drafted in view of the number of amendments that have been introduced, and badly presented. This bill, in the interest of the Canadian people, must be thought out again in large measure to ensure that it does not further damage the sense of initiative and the spirit of incentive upon which this country depends. We need tax reform in the interests of justice; we need it in the interests of economic progress; we need it in the interests of our national independence; and we certainly need to consider tax reform in the interests of ensuring full employment.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Again, I say, that is our No. 1 priority in this country. There are vast sections of this bill which not only do not help in the employment situation but which will discourage and militate against successful efforts to bring about full employment in this country. We may very well need tax reform in the interests of justice, independence and economic progress, but much of this bill, Sir, we just do not need. Above all we do not need and do not want a bill which will compound and increase confusion and uncertainty in this country.

That, in summary, is why I oppose this bill and that is why I support the amendment before the House at this time. I hope all other hon. members will do likewise, Mr. Speaker, and that even at the eleventh hour reasonable members on the government side will resist the despotic tendencies of the Minister of Finance and others in the government. I hope they will consider their position, accept the proposal, which is sensible, for splitting the bill for purposes of proclamation and thereby serve the country rather than trying to serve themselves.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to participate on this last day of debate on the tax bill, partly because it is the last day and partly because of the number of issues of a parliamentary character that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) raised in his speech. The government, to my knowledge, has never accused the opposition of wasting time, and neither has the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Schumacher: Then, what is the purpose of the government's motion?

Mr. MacEachen: Neither the government nor the country have accused the opposition of wasting time in discussing the all important question of tax reform. We, on this side of the House, believe that the passing of this bill will put an end to the uncertainty which bothers the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Dinsdale: What about the amendment?

Mr. MacEachen: We also believe that the passing of the bill will restore and produce greater equity in our taxing system, and that it will provide for greater growth and employment in the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: What about the amendments?

Mr. MacEachen: Speaking on the merits of the bill may I say that we, on this side of the House, are satisfied that we have produced the best possible product as a result of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —the intensive investigation by the royal commission appointed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), which was followed by investigation by parliamentary committees in this House and in the other place, the results of which are in this bill.

The Leader of the Opposition says to us, "Split the bill. We will pass those parts that are popular and put off the other parts, and some time later we may be able, as a party, to make up our minds about the other parts."

Mr. Ricard: That is nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I submit that the purpose of a further delay is merely to give the opposition an opportunity to reconcile its differences and to overcome the indecisiveness that has characterized the position of that party on tax reform. The Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about all the amendments the minister promised?

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about all the amendments?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Your Honour, I do not mind being "barracked" like this in the House. I have made it my policy, as a member of the House, to listen very carefully to every hon. member and I expect that courtesy to be extended to me occasionally. Every time I have risen in this House since this debate has commenced I have been "barracked" and shouted down by an opposition that talks about a free Parliament but that does everything possible to prevent this member from exercising his right to speak as a member of this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Come now; you are tougher than that.

Mr. MacEachen: I can take all you can give.

Mr. Hees: Well, you do not seem to be able to.

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to be heard and to put my thoughts on the record, and I cannot do it against noise. Nobody can in this House, and that is why I am all for letting everyone have his say.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We do not seem to be making much progress. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Alexander: Allan, don't lose your cool, baby. It is all right.

Mr. Hees: We will not bite you, Allan; keep going.

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the Opposition has stated that we, on this side, are not concerned about the parliamentary process. We believe that hon. members in the House have had plenty of opportunity to debate the tax bill. We believe that the long period of debate on second reading, the long period in committee of the whole and now, this further period for debate on third reading, have given members of the House ample opportunity to say everything that can properly be said on this particular subject. In the last ten days I have been trying to find out whether any new ideas or any new proposals would emerge from the debate, or if somebody would have a bright idea that had not been expressed before. If somebody can find a new idea or a new thought or a new proposal that has been expressed in the last ten days, please tell me what that idea, thought or proposal is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —because every important idea, every important subject has been brought before the House and I doubt whether further discussion will help any member in making up his mind. We have been totally respectful of the parliamentary process.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor. I see an hon. member standing. Obviously, the minister sees him also. If he will permit the hon. member to ask a question, the Chair will recognize the hon. member. For the sake of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), I will inquire whether the minister is prepared to receive a question at this time.

Mr. Alexander: The minister asked a question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member knows about rhetorical questions that one does not expect to be answered, at least not at the moment they are asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the Opposition says—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the minister who has the floor. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Here is that original thought.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is a simple one and merely requires the minister and members on his side of the House to do a little arithmetic. If the minister will consider the time allotted for the third reading debate of this bill and divide into that period the average time that an hon. member takes to make a speech, he will realize that not enough time has been allotted on third reading to enable all members to participate in the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. I suggest to hon. members that the minister should be allowed to continue making his speech.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis: I raised a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have ruled the hon. member out of order. That is not a point of order, that is a point of debate.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members feel this is the way the debate should be conducted, I will recognize the hon. member for all the points of order he wants.

Mr. MacInnis: I raised the other point of order because the minister made a statement to the effect that all members had an opportunity to participate in third reading. That is not the case.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows as well as I do that that is not a point of order. It is a point of debate. Hon. members who are trying to make a speech in the last few minutes of this debate should have a chance to make their speeches.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has stated that no member of the House understands the bill. When the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) spoke the other day, he took exception to that view expressed by the Leader of the Opposition, as I take exception to it. I believe it is an insulting comment to make about Members of Parliament who, gifted with ordinary intelligence, are capable of understanding and comprehending this bill.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) spoke 40 times in major interventions in the House. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) spoke about 18 times. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) spoke 12 or 14 times. To my knowledge, none of these members prefaced their comments by saying "Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House, but take note that I do not understand what I am talking about."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: They have been talking about this bill and making important contributions to the substance of the tax debate because they understand the bill all too well. They understand it because they have proposed amendments. The Leader of the Opposition understands it because he has decided that one part of the bill should go into law and the rest should be canned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Is he telling us now "I really do not know what I want to postpone. I do not understand it, but give me a little more time and I may understand it."? We know that is really not a serious commentary to make on the progress of the debate. We know that hon. members understand the bill and that the issues are clear in principle and crisp. When confronted with issues about which hon. members are uncertain as to which way to go, they say "Let us put if off." The members of the New Democratic Party are not more intelligent than my hon. friends opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order, please.

Mr. Hees: That is the only correct thing you have said all day.

Mr. MacEachen: They do not want any more time. They are ready to vote. They will vote against the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition because they know, as we know, that a decision ought to be taken now. The Leader of the Opposition said "Let's put it off because two provinces want it postponed."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite hon. members to use Parliamentary language. I am not referring to the minister who has the floor who seems to be worried about what I am saying. I will not pursue the matter further. Without referring to anyone in particular, I invite hon. members to not make these comments from the sidelines.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear what any hon. member said. I rely on Your Honour to deal with any comments which are in any way unparliamentary. I did not hear them.

Mr. MacInnis: They were said before.

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the Opposition told us that the bill ought to be held off because two provinces want it to be held off.

Mr. Stanfield: Six.

Mr. MacEachen: All right, let's make it six. Will the hon. member now undertake to pass Bill C-176 because nine provinces want to have it passed?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: No.

Mr. MacEachen: If that is the criterion to be applied to this legislation, we can get out of this session very fast because that group will pass Bill C-176 very fast since nine provinces want that bill and want it as agreed at the recent federal provincial conference.

The Leader of the Opposition stated that we are in some way denying the Senate an opportunity to discuss the whole question of tax reform, and that we have imposed upon the Senate some sort of political timetable. That is quite untrue and inaccurate. It has been dealt with in the other place by the government leader speaking to his colleagues in that place. When the white paper was produced in 1970, 60 meetings were held by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce in that place. Over 100 briefs were received. Following the receipt of well over 100 briefs, the Senate published its report.

Last September the tax bill in draft form was submitted to the Senate Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. That committee has been seized of the very subject matter of tax reform in all its details since last September 14.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the minister. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment for lunch I was dealing with the question of the consideration of this tax bill in the other place.

The suggestion had been made, indeed, I believe, a charge had been made by the Leader of the Opposition, that the government had imposed a political timetable on the other place with its respect to the consideration of the bill. Of course, that suggestion is totally unjustified. As the leader of the government in the other place has stated, and as was stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when he appeared before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other place, the Senate is the master of its own procedures, the master of its own rules and the master of what it will do with respect to the tax bill which, hopefully, it will receive later this day.

Moreover, I think that in considering at this time what opportunity for the study of this measure has already been available in the other place, one has to remember that the Senate Committee on Banking and Commerce examined the white paper, held 60 meetings, six of them in camera, heard 118 briefs involving 471 witnesses and, in addition, received 225 briefs which were not read aloud and in respect of which witnesses were not called. But the Senate Committee did publish its report. We know that in September of this year the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to study the summary of the 1971 tax reform legislation and the budget bills. This means that the substance of tax reform has been before that committee under extensive study. The committee began its deliberations on September 14 and the final report was presented by the chairman on December 13. Thirty briefs were presented and 139 witnesses were called, including the Minister of Finance.

This is an impressive record. The other place has been seized with the question of tax reform, the substance of the bill now before us, because it realized it would be a good thing to conduct a simultaneous study of the issue there while similar studies were proceeding in the House of Commons. So, I wonder why the Leader of the Opposition is weeping crocodile tears for the other place, defending the rights of the Senate. His reasons, whatever they are, are unknown to me. That body has already had a substantial opportunity to study all the issues involved in tax reform, and it will have a further opportunity when this bill has been given third reading here.

Mr. Baldwin: Under threat from the government.

Mr. MacEachen: Under no threat from the government! I deny categorically that the government has exercised any pressure whatever on the other place in terms of placing, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, a political timetable upon the Senate.

It was probably inevitable that at some time the Leader of the Opposition and I should tangle on the question of heavy water. Probably because of a self-denying ordinance, we have so far resisted that temptation. But I think today the Leader of the Opposition made some unjustified and, to my mind, vicious charges against the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which must be answered here and now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I have observed the Leader of the Opposition for many years and I have a healthy respect for his ability to strike at the jugular. At times, even though he presents a reasonable exterior, there is within his soul a ruthless capacity in the political field. I have held this view when members of his own party were saying that this leader certainly had no real instinct for political in-fighting. Today, the Leader of the Opposition said the Prime Minister had offered to the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Regan, assistance which he had denied to the previous premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Smith, and that he had done so for political reasons. This was analogous in its political cruelty to a speech made many years ago by a former prime minister of this country. I say that the charge of the Leader of the Opposition is inaccurate, unjustified and vicious in the extreme.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise on a question of privilege with documentary evidence to support the statement made by my leader and to categorically deny the statement which has just been made by the President of the Privy Council. I have in my hand—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I do not want the hon. member to open a debate on this point. If he has a point of order to raise, I invite him to raise it.

Mr. MacInnis: On that very point, Mr. Speaker, I continue to indicate to the House and to Your Honour that I now have in my hand a transcript concerning a program participated in by the Liberal House leader on October 11, 1970, to refresh his memory, with Dr. Stuart Marsh and Mr. Sandy Campbell of the Cape Breton Highlander—

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: There is one before us now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. minister on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacEachen: The effort of hon. members on the other side is obvious. It is to prevent me from participating properly in this debate. The hon. member has no point of order. He is raising a dispute over the facts as a point of order and by doing so he is denying me one of the privileges I enjoy in the House, that is, of addressing the chamber at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am sure hon. members will agree with me that the point made by the minister is valid, in the sense that if hon. members disagree or disapprove of remarks made by other members they should seek the floor and make their own speech. Unless the hon. member has a real point of privilege or point of order in the sense that either the rules of the House have not been abided by or that a substantial element of the speech of the minister constitutes more than just a disagreement and might adversely affect the House of Commons, the members of the House or civil servants, I do not think we should spend the time of the House listening to all kinds of disapproving comments that are not points of privilege or points of order.

Mr. MacInnis: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the guidance of the Chair. I ask the Chair whether it is proper, when a point of order is being put forward by one hon. member, for a second member to get up and put forward another point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): If the hon. member wants an answer to that, to my mind points of privilege take precedence over points of order; and the minister raised a point of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker, I raised it as a point of privilege and, with the guidance of the Chair, moved to a point of order because the Chair had suggested that I raise it as such. If we are now back on a point of privilege I shall continue it as such, since you have indicated to me that I am permitted to continue my remarks.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacInnis: My point of privilege arises from the fact that I have a transcript of the minister's own words which support my leader and deny the statement the minister has just made. As further proof of that, on October 19, 1970 this House dealt with a bill that further denies the allegations made by the Liberal House leader in this very program on the eve of an election in Nova Scotia. If the Chair wishes to deny me this opportunity, there will be many other occasions for me to contradict the statement made by the House leader and to show he has told lies to this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: He is lying to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. First of all, I must say to the hon. member that I still feel his point is basically one of disagreement. It is impossible for the Chair to judge the situation on the affirmation of one member or another. The Chair is here to apply the rules of the House. In applying these rules, I think the hon. member should withdraw his last remark, unless he wants to substantiate them by a charge against the minister. This would involve the House as a whole. I do not think that Mr. Speaker or any occupant of the chair, in applying the rules of the House, can allow such language to be used in this House.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. MacInnis: You suckers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis: The Chair is now asking me to withdraw—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Again the hon. member, for what reason I do not know, is making things very difficult for the Chair. As I have told hon. members many times, it is impossible for the Chair to apply the rules unless it has the co-operation of hon. members. Offensive language has never been tolerated in this House and has not been tolerated by its members. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) should be the first to regret such remarks. I would invite him to withdraw what he has said.

Mr. MacInnis: In co-operation with the Chair, Mr. Speaker—I hope that one word will get me a bit of silence from the other side of the House—Your Honour did refer to my choice of language and said that the Chair and the members of the House do not permit such language and that it has never been allowed. I would draw your attention to page 392 of Hansard for October 20, 1970. I should like to quote as authority, both the Chair and hon. members opposite, the bottom of the second column where the following appears:

MR. TRUDEAU: —or is he just interested in telling lies to the House?

MR. SPEAKER: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

MR. TRUDEAU: Is it a lie or not?

I stand on the same right as that accorded to the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister yesterday was permitted to read every word of a speech and also permitted to use that kind of language, then so am I. The rules of the House which are applied by the Chair apply just as much to the Prime Minister as to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: The House leader of the Liberal party is now lying.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacInnis: I have no intention of retracting my remarks in view of the precedent established by the party opposite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. In occupying the Chair while the hon. member has the floor, I am not here to judge what happened in one particular case. I am here to apply the rules of the House, and that is my first duty. As I said before, I cannot do it without the co-operation of hon. members. If the members of the House or the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond wants to destroy the institution which we all love and praise, that is his business; but I do not think he is helping the prestige of this institution by failing to agree with the Chair when the Chair tries to invite him to make his point clearly, and to do so in a way that is in accordance with the rules and Standing Orders of this House.

Mr. MacInnis: Again in co-operation with the Chair, Mr. Speaker, may I say just this. I have quoted Hansard for October 20, 1970 which reports the language the Prime Minister used on that occasion, and no point of order was raised at that time. Having said that, I leave it to the Chair, and I apologize to the Chair for the conduct of the members on the other side of the House.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for his apology. As I understand it, we are disputing facts. That is the purpose of debate in the House of Commons. The hon. member is entitled to dispute my facts, but at the same time I am entitled to put them on the record. I am not replying to any argument raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond—

Mr. MacInnis: You cannot.

Mr. MacEachen: —but I am replying to a statement made by the Leader of the Opposition this morning in which he said that the Prime Minister of this government had for political reasons accepted a request from Premier Regan of Nova Scotia having refused a similar request by the former Conservative premier of the province. I regard that as a very serious charge, and I want to answer it.

On March 4, 1970 the Premier of Nova Scotia, who was then Premier Smith, put in final form to the government of Canada a definite proposal for assistance in the rehabilitation of the heavy water plant at Glace Bay. In that proposal there was absolutely no request to the government of Canada to take over ownership and operation of the plant. On April 10 the Prime Minister announced in the House the full acceptance of the request made by Premier Smith of Nova Scotia. Later on in the same month, when the matter was discussed in the provincial legislature, Premier Smith made the following statement:

• (2:20 p.m.)

Once more I wish to express warm appreciation and thanks for the assistance to be made available by the federal government. It will be a very substantial help indeed. I want to thank the Hon. A. J. MacEachen for his help in the matter. I know he spent a good deal of time and effort on behalf of the province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I did for Premier Smith and the province of Nova Scotia on that occasion what I did later for Premier Regan. I supported the proposals which Premier Smith made to the government of Canada. They were accepted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Later on there was an election in Nova Scotia. The new government considered the situation, abandoned the former plan and made an entirely new and fresh approach to the government of Canada, and we accepted that. We treated both governments fairly and equally, and it is vicious and untrue to say we treated Premier Smith differently or unfairly for political reasons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was drawn into that detour because, as I said earlier, it is probably inevitable that the Leader of the Opposition and I should tangle on the question of heavy water. The occasion arose today. The next time he attempts to misinterpret the situation I will rise to answer him as I do now.

However, I want to get back to the amendment.

The amendment has been moved in all solemnity by the official opposition and today, in the final address made to the House by the Leader of the Opposition, he calls upon us to support that amendment. It is a motion of non-confidence in the government. If that amendment were carried we would be defeated and we do not intend to support that amendment. Not only would we be defeated, but the tax bill would probably be defeated. I want to tell the House why we cannot accept the amendment.

First of all, it is an incredible amendment. It belies any proper belief in the capacity of the opposition to formulate any reasonable proposition for the consideration of the House. For example, if this amendment were accepted, the provisions that we developed and which were approved in committee for the co-operatives and credit unions would not come into effect. Members of the official opposition have been crying to the government, and members of the NDP party have been crying to the government, to bring in new provisions. We did. We brought in good provisions which have been accepted by the co-operatives and credit unions. If this amendment were accepted,those provisions would be postponed until the government decided to proclaim them. Are they really serious? Were they really serious and are they serious now?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacEachen: That is what I wonder about when I say that we cannot accept this amendment. The NDP Party knows the consequence of accepting this amendment. I said earlier they would probably vote against it because they had enough time for debate. I must revise that because they do not think this. They will vote against the substance of the amendment because, among other things, it would deny to the co-operatives and credit unions the immediate relief under the tax law of this country. If they vote for the amendment they will be voting against the tax relief for the co-operatives. They will be saying, put if off into limbo, put it off until we the official opposition can make up our minds on the real difficulties of tax reform.

When I look at the amendment I think it is a nothing, it is a sham. It is a sham because it pretends to do something it does not do. If we as a government said that we would accept the amendment as written, then we would accept it and the bill would pass as written. The bill would receive Royal Assent. This amendment gives the government the power to proclaim all the rest of the bill the day after it receives Royal Assent. That is the effect of the amendment. We would go through all this and then they give the government the power by proclamation the day after Royal Assent to bring all the bill into effect. What a sham. What a bankrupt opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Waterloo. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond wishes to rise on a question of privilege. Before the hon. member rises on his question of privilege, I think I ought to remind him and all hon. members that there is just a little more than an hour before the end of the debate. No representative of the New Democratic Party has had an opportunity to speak since yesterday afternoon, and there is also a representative of the independent party who has been wanting to speak for the last four or five days. I think we should give them a chance to speak. I believe the hon. member for Simcoe North is also waiting for an opportunity to speak. For the moment, however, I will recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, may I say I am very sorry that the fact that I rise on questions of privilege from time to time is denying other members an opportunity to take part in this debate. One would think from the remarks made from the other side of the House that all the time in the world had been available. My question of privilege arises from the statement of the minister and the fact that the heavy water plant in my hometown is of great importance to the people in my constituency.

I want to show that the assistance available to the Smith government and later on to the Regan government was not the same. I have the transcript. The amount of the assistance was $40 million plus, but as the minister went on to say certain conditions were stipulated. The main one for my purpose at the moment is that the government of Nova Scotia would get a new operator, a new organization. He went on to say it was absolutely essential that a new organization be obtained to do this job. Yet, Mr. Speaker, you and I and the House are aware of the fact that on October 19, six days following the election in Nova Scotia, there was a plan before this House, a bill, which made available financial assistance to the same old organization.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will now recognize the hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the minister that this is debate between members. The minister himself a moment ago expressed his view about debate between people who may have different opinions concerning certain situations. I really think we should give an opportunity to other members who have been waiting for this opportunity. The hon. member for Waterloo.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the NDP will not be able to support the amendment before the House for two reasons. The first is that to the extent that it might be effective, and there is considerable doubt that it would be, it is a tremendous act of favouritism; second, it is probably not effective in the least, and therefore makes no sense and has no meaning in the examination of the bill before us.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) seemed to have directed his chief attack against the official opposition and seemed to have looked at this corner with some degree of favour. I am sorry that we will not be able to reciprocate. This debate has taken on the aspect of an auction sale between the Liberal and the Conservative parties to see who can give this country away faster to big business. It has been a complete disgrace. If we were to examine the course of this debate, read the minutes of the committee—and those volumes make a pile almost three or four feet high—we would see how much attention has been devoted to the problems of the ordinary taxpayer in this country, and how many briefs have been presented to the committee that dealt with the ordinary taxpayers of Canada. There were not many such briefs. If you were to examine Hansard, and I have not had a chance to comb through each line because it would be such a tremendous task, you would see how many words by either the government or the official opposition have been devoted to the problems of the ordinary people in this country and how many speeches were directed toward the problems of big business in Canada. There is a smell of an election in the air, and both the Liberals and the Conservatives are falling over each other to see who can most please the bagmen of the giant industries who pay their expenses. I know I am being political, but I also know that this is a political arena.

An hon. Member: The unions are paying your way.

Mr. Saltsman: I am quite happy to have the unions pay our way. I am quite happy to receive whatever donations the unions wish to give to this party.

When I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday delivering one of his rare speeches I noted that in three of his opening paragraphs he used the word "fair" at least six times in a desperate attempt to convince himself—he was not convincing anyone else—that the just society he talked about was being supported by this tax bill. In my view those words were hollow; they had no meaning whatsoever, and simply using the word "fair" does not make this bill fair at all. Essentially, we are continuing the same kind of tax system we have always had. The Liberal party does not need the Conservatives in to tell them of the dangers facing the country in trying to tax business. The Liberals have their own backbenchers who will do that. They have been running to the minister and making him back off from any such provision contained in the legislation. People in this country who have hoped for some significant tax reform cannot help but be disappointed with the bill that will come to a vote later on this day.

After nine years of study, reports and discussions, Canada has wound up with a tax system which is still grossly unfair and bears much too heavily on the lower and middle income groups. It does that, not because we have to tax these groups so heavily for government revenues but because we are giving benefits to many people, to the resource industries and to the investors of this country in order to make their lot in life much easier.

Last evening we heard the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) indicate the significant tax savings that could be effected, how rates could be lowered for the middle and lower income groups if special tax privileges were taken away from the mining and resource industries and the investors of Canada. To the extent that these benefits are being given to the privileged groups in Canada, every wage and salary earner must pay considerably more than the government is entitled to ask of him or her. We are continuing the system under the present legislation. The principles that the NDP endorses are ones of equity and redistribution of income. They have been watered down in successive reports, and in the Benson bill now before Parliament they have virtually been nullified.

I can well remember in the early stages the bold, brave Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I believed then, and I still believe today, that the Minister of Finance really wanted to see a genuine tax reform in this country. People often ask me, who do you think is the villain in the piece? It is fashionable to paint the pipe smoking Minister of Finance as the villain in the piece. He is the one who did away with tax reform. He is the one toward whom all ire has been directed. But I think that in the early days there was a real wish on the part of this man to bring in genuine tax reform, but there was no rapport between him and his party and pressures were continually being brought on him within his own party. His own backbenchers were going across the country saying how terrible this tax reform bill was, how they were going to do something about it, assuring their business supporters "do not worry, we will get to Benson and we will make him back off". They did get to the Minister of Finance and he has backed off.

The initial reforms were not significant to begin with, and the continuous watering down of those reforms has left us with a meaningless document which does nothing to further the cause of equity and fairness in our society. We have the lightweight capital gains tax. This government takes great pride in having brought in the capital gains tax and now they are bringing in arguments to show how useful this tax will be. This is the last country in the industrialized world which does not have a capital gains tax, and now they are taking pride in having introduced it. It is only a half-gains tax. If a person gets his income from wages or salaries, if he works for his income in one way or another, he has to pay tax on every single cent that he earns. But if he has a lot of money, either left to him or available to him, money which he can invest, he is spared the cost of giving his share to the tax collector. He has to pay on only half of that money. We say, in effect, that it is far nobler to collect money that way and that therefore we will reward the man who obtains his income in that way. If he works for it one way or another, either in a white or a blue collar job, if he sweeps the floor in a factory or teaches university students, he pays tax on every cent he earns.

But if a man is an investor, then he does not have to pay the same rate of tax. If he is even more fortunate and happens to have invested in the oil or mining industries, then his rate of tax is even lower. We say to him, that is great; go ahead and put your money in these industries and we will give you a special tax break. Yet, evidence is mounting that these industries are responsible for destroying our potential for growth in this country. Whatever benefit they may have brought, whatever justification there might have been for tax concessions in the early stages of the development of Canada—and I will not argue that there were no benefits from them and that there were no reasons for encouraging this kind of investment—there is no longer such justification.

We are a nation of 22 million people who desperately need to find jobs for almost 300,000 new entrants a year into our labour force, and we cannot find them if the emphasis continues to be on resource development. It would be bad enough if the tax system were completely neutral and we were still heavily emphasizing resource development. But to have a high level of unemployment, such as we have now, and to see young people coming into the labour force for the first time seeking jobs, and in the face of this to encourage the resource industries by tax concessions is positively insane. One wonders how any government could have brought in provisions of this kind, or could have failed to see the merit in reducing such benefits to the resource industries.

It can be argued that while the national interest would call for a diminution of encouragement to resource development, there are some provinces that need such development. This is a good argument. It is one I accept. But we have two choices. We can either say, "We are going to do this in the national interest regardless of the consequences to individual provinces," or say something that would be more fair, namely, that to the extent that any province is disadvantaged as a result of our taking action in the national interest, we will see to it that the revenues of the country are shared equally.

In that event, we would change our tax sharing agreements between the federal government and the provincial governments. We would secure the increase in manufacturing that we think needs to occur, and the increase in the service industries that we think needs to occur in order to provide jobs for our young people, and distribute the resultant increase in tax revenues all across the land so that there would not be a feeling of dissatisfaction. The people in the west would no longer see the actions taken as being only for the benefit of Ontario. We would have to make the case that they were for the benefit of the entire nation. Those are the kinds of tax sharing agreements that we should have. Unfortunately, we do not have them at the moment. The sell-out to the resource industry lobby is particularly shocking at this time because, Mr. Speaker, in the first place the government did not intend to do very much. The result is that the resource industries are almost back to enjoying the advantages they had at the beginning.

I can remember when estate tax legislation was discussed in the House of Commons. Today I listened to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), a man for whom I have a great deal of respect, and I wondered at his rather short memory of that debate. But maybe I just did not understand the hon. gentleman. It seemed to me as though he was deploring the fact that the federal government had dropped its role in estate taxation. That sounded a little strange. I know that many of the people in the Conservative party were quite happy to see the federal government get out of the field of estate taxation. I also know they will be happy to see the provinces get out of that field. But then I heard that the Leader of the Opposition is far more progressive than some of his followers. That is something I can understand. However, we should not forget that debate and the vigorous fight put up by the Conservative party against any increases or adjustments in estate taxes.

It is foolish to stand up in this House and cry over the fact that the federal government is getting out of the estate tax field. I think it is wrong for the federal government to get out of that field, and in an earlier speech I said that the decision to do so was made in an absent-minded fit of pique. The federal government was not deriving much revenue from that tax, and it got mad at the provinces. It asked, "Why should we collect this for the provinces? Let them stew in their own juices. Let them collect their own estate taxes." This will have an adverse effect on federal-provincial co-operation. This shattered egg will have to be restored in a new form. As other hon. members have pointed out, there will be a tremendous transfer of wealth take place when this legislation comes into effect.

Tax relief for old age pensioners and the immediate removal of some taxpayers from the rolls are a long-overdue recognition by the government that it should stop robbing the poor. This relief will do little more than partially compensate those taxpayers for their losses through inflation in recent years. The other day my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), made a fine contribution to this tax debate when he pointed out that the increase in exemptions was not even equivalent to the rise in inflation that has taken place since the last time the exemption levels were set.

Not only does the outcome of this tax debate leave us with a most unsatisfactory income and wealth tax structure, but nothing has been done to end the regressiveness of our tax system. Greater recognition of the financial requirements of the provinces, which are facing the growing costs of urbanization, educational and social needs, should have been a first step in any kind of tax reform. Almost nothing has been done in that area.

I would like to make another point about the taxation of resources. When the federal government abdicates its role to tax new resource industries at the same level as it taxes manufacturing, it must be remembered that the resource industries are not completely exempted from tax. The situation is not quite as it appears on the surface because resource industries do pay tax, although perhaps not as much as they should. The question then must be asked, to whom should they pay this tax? Should it be to the federal government which has a redistribution program which in fact takes wealth from some of the richer provinces and makes it available to the poorer provinces? Should it be to the provinces, under a tax system which permits the wealthier provinces to keep the bulk of the wealth for themselves? To the extent that the federal government abdicates its role to tax resource industries, it provides an opportunity for provincial governments to move in and take the lion's share of this tax wealth, which is not distributed but is used by the individual provinces concerned. This is a way for the richer provinces to avoid the responsibility that they have to the poorer provinces. Sharing does not take place to the extent that it should.

We have been very critical throughout this whole debate, and we think we have had good cause to be critical. But in summing up at the close of the debate, we do not want to leave simply the criticism. We also made many constructive proposals. We made many suggestions as to the shape that the country's tax system should have. I would like to summarize our views on the kind of tax system we would like for Canada.

First, we think a comprehensive income concept has to be adopted, with all forms of economic gain to be included and subjected to a graduated scale of income tax based on ability to pay. There has to be an elimination of the traditional double standard in our system. Taxes should be based on a person's ability to pay rather than on how he derives his income. We see no justification for saying that this kind of income will be taxed at one rate, another kind of income at another rate, and that a third kind of income will receive special preferential treatment. That is unfair. We accept the Carter Commission proposal that all income be taxed on the same basis.

Second, capital gains should be taxed at full rates, rather than at the half rates proposed in the bill, on realization, in the same way as salaries, wages and other forms of income, with adequate provision for averaging, exemptions for the family home and farm home, and safeguards to prevent the break-up of family farms and small businesses when passed on to sons and daughters. We look around this country, which has been more than generous in its tax system and tax treatment to business, and we see the results of that kind of favouritism. This country has the highest level of foreign ownership of any country in the world and, to a large extent, the tax system is to blame for that. The absence of a capital gains tax in Canada has encouraged our business men to sell out rather than operate their business because they could make a profit on which they paid no tax, but if they continued to operate they would have to pay tax.

We have offered a 20 per cent dividend tax credit to investors in the vain hope that these financial incentives would encourage Canadian ownership but that has failed. The pace of foreign acquisition is the greatest in the world.

Mr. Woolliams: It is an awfully good idea.

Mr. Saltsman: You like foreign investment?

Mr. Woolliams: You would recommend a full capital gains tax, yet you are against foreign investment. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot take all the capital gains from Canadians, and then cry about foreign investment; that is the anomaly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech while remaining seated. That is not in accordance with the Standing Orders or any kind of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I got involved in a little argument.

Mr. Saltsman: I am glad to see that the hon. member was paying attention to the debate, although I might say he was not paying much attention to the economy as the peculiar logic he has expressed demonstrates.

We in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, also believe there should be a system of tax credits instead of exemptions, because exemptions provide better benefits to those with higher incomes while tax credit makes it easier to maintain equity when making tax changes.

As a fourth point, we believe in the removal of unjustified tax concessions for natural resource industries, especially concessions relating to depletion allowances.

As a fifth point, we want to see strict limits on corporation capital cost allowances, advertising, entertainment and convention expenses. Some might argue that this is what the government is attempting but there is no real indication that they have made any substantial advance in curbing the excessive costs, despite the new legislation.

As a sixth point, we want to see the removal of the dividend tax credit, since it mainly benefits upper income groups and is not necessarily an incentive to growth. Abolition of the much abused dual rate, but adoption of other provisions to assist small businesses in obtaining credit, is desirable.

Throughout debate we have tried to make the point that there should be substantial assistance to small businesses trying to get established. We need more businesses, more entrepreneurship in Canada and that assistance should be forthcoming. We do not believe the way to do it is to reward businesses after they have made money, which is what the present tax system does; we believe it should be done through incentives and encouragement when those businesses need help the most. The present system is a "give away" program rather than a real assistance to business, and we think it is the wrong kind of incentive and works against the idea of assisting genuine small businesses which are trying to grow.

As a seventh point, we believe the same treatment for employment expenses should be allowed for wage and salary earners as is now allowed for the self-employed, plus tax credits for the cost of child care. The government proposes a $150 employment expense deduction. That is unsatisfactory, since in a few cases it might be too much but in most cases it is inadequate. Many employees incur expenses in excess of this amount. There are many special cases and extraordinary expenses which will not be met by this provision. When we contract that with the generous provisions for the self-employed who are allowed to deduct all the costs, we find the system grossly unfair.

The argument put forth by the government is not an objection to the principle of equity. They agree that the system is inequitable. They accept the argument that the treatment of the self-employed is much better than the treatment of employees, and that something should be done about it, but they offer the argument of administrative efficiency. They say that since there are many more employees than self-employed, it is not practical to examine the tax returns of every employee to permit them to include legitimate expenses. That is a spurious argument, Mr. Speaker, and surely a disgrace to any tax system. To say that it cannot be done because it is not easy or is not convenient will not be accepted by those persons being harmed under the system. Either we have a tax system which provides that everyone will be limited to a certain amount or we have a tax system which accepts legitimate employment expenses incurred by both the self-employed and employees, and we examine their tax returns to that end. Other countries do this, so surely it is not beyond the administrative ability of the Canadian government to work some kind of equity into our tax system.

As an eighth point, we think inheritances and gifts should be subject to a tax levy which would be paid by the recipient, not by the donor, to ensure that the state receives a fair share when transfers between generations occur. Particular arrangements would be made to prevent undue hardship when family farms or small businesses are transferred from parents to children. It does not seem that much argument can be made against an inheritance tax in our society. If a man's individual efforts were responsible for the creation of growth without any assistance from society, his employees or any of the other organizations that exist, there might be an argument against inheritance tax on the wealth to be passed on. But we know this is untrue; in our civilized society people cannot operate without assistance from each other. Business today is probably the largest recipient of benefits from the government. There are many programs for assistance and there is the provision of fire and police services, of roads and transportation networks, so there is a social input. Land does not increase in value simply because it sits there; it increases in value because of the social conditions which contribute to the growth of a country. For those reasons, I think that the government of a country has a claim on part of the wealth that is created. I do not think there should be too much objection, if that claim is a fair one, if some of it is paid to the government and the other people in the country, upon death.

Mr. Speaker, nine years ago many of us looked forward to seeing genuine tax reform and the events of the last couple of years have been a grave disappointment. We had hoped that the Carter commission, with its superb logic, its well documented cases, would have some influence on the minds of those in government. It has had little or no influence at all.

The thrust of the debate in this House was not to the effect that the government was being far too timid in implementing tax reform. The thrust was in the opposition direction. It was suggested that the government was being far too progressive. Committees like the Committee on Fair Taxation spent enormous sums of money trying to persuade the ordinary people of Canada that the new tax system would be too socialistic. The business community rose as a group and attacked the modicum of tax reform there is in the bill and said that the bill is too socialistic. Unfortunately, between elections, the ordinary people are not organized to make representations on this subject. It is our hope that at the next election they will cast their judgments and thereby say that this tax bill constitutes a sabotage of tax reform.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members will observe, three of our colleagues seek the floor and there are perhaps 40 minutes left for debate pursuant to the order under which we operate at the present time. The Chair has taken the liberty to put into operation this afternoon rule 75D which is a new rule. After consultation, there has been agreement to divide the time available among a minister, a spokesman for the official opposition and an independent member. For the time being the Chair will recognize the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray). I might say that these spokesmen will speak under an allocation of time determined by the Chair. The time will be watched closely.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by saying that points of the kind just made by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) have been previously raised and, I think, effectively rebutted by other speakers on behalf of the government earlier in the debate. None of his arguments can remove the fact that the government's proposals will bring about lower taxes for millions of Canadians, particularly those in the lower income groups. Therefore, these proposals deserve the support of the House at this time. Mr. Speaker, now that Parliament appears to be moving closer to the point of final decision on tax reform legislation, I think that the House would expect me to say something—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Say something.

Mr. Gray: —about the way the Department of National Revenue will approach the task of its administration of the new law when it receives final parliamentary approval and royal assent.

Any task of administration, Mr. Speaker, is, of course, governed by the provisions of the law in question. But it is unrealistic to expect that tax laws, both those which have been on the statute books for years and, more particularly, new laws such as we are considering now can be drafted so perfectly that there is no room for differing interpretations of them in some circumstances. Despite the best of intentions, it is inevitable that there are ambiguities to be resolved in the interpretation of laws of this kind. Therefore, in deciding upon an official interpretation the Department of National Revenue is guided by legal advisers and by considerations of reasonableness and practicality.

However, where two interpretations seem to have equal support, having regard to equity, reasonableness, statutory interpretation and the general intent of the legislation as a whole, the interpretation is adopted which gives the benefit of the doubt to the taxpayer. This is already the department's policy under the present law. I want to assure the House that this will certainly be the policy of the department when it starts applying the many new provisions contained in the bill which is presently before us, once, of course, it receives final parliamentary approval.

The underlying philosophy of the taxation division of the department, as hon. members know, has been evolving over the past several years to take account of increased taxpayer interest and participation in the process of tax administration. The main thrust of these changes has been in the direction of the most complete possible dissemination of taxation information to all taxpayers and the establishment of better communications between taxpayer and the department. When it adopted this approach the department knew it would likely be faced with the job of administering a new tax statute.

We recognized, of course, that in spite of efforts not to have them, inevitably there would be problems in adjusting to a new tax system, both for the taxpayer and the tax administrator. We have therefore been trying to anticipate what the major problems might be and to plan our administrative practices with a view to minimizing any possible difficulties for the taxpayer and the department.

The department acknowledges the inherent right of the taxpayer to all the information and all the assistance that it can give him. As well, it realizes that if its administrative mechanism is in any way high-handed, it is only adding to the problems of administration. The department cannot expect a taxpayer to accord it the co-operation it requires to maintain the efficiency and integrity of our voluntary compliance system if it does not extend the fullest co-operation to him. The department, therefore, intends to make a very special effort to ensure that the needs of the taxpayer under the new tax system are met fully and sympathetically. Therefore, I would like to describe to the House some of the steps we will be taking to assist taxpayers in the adjustment period to try to achieve as smooth a transition as possible from the old to the proposed new tax system.

While there are other measures which I shall describe later in my remarks, let me speak first about the public information program on the new law the department will begin to administer once the law receives royal assent. The department will be centering this public information program around a series of pamphlets covering the various topics of tax reform. In our view, this is the most effective way to handle material of this complexity. These printed publications are being written in as simple language as possible and in a form which is concise and to the point.

To lessen the possibility of confusion, the department has developed a selective mailing system so that most taxpayers will receive only the information they will want and require. Groups of taxpayers have been selected from our computer master file and direct mail packages containing topics affecting each group will be mailed, using computer-generated address labels. These publications will also be advertised nationally as being available from our head office or any of our 28 district taxation offices. The advertising messages will serve those taxpayers who for whatever reason are not on the tax roll, those who may mislay the publications they receive through the mail and those who cannot be selected as a distinct group.

In summary, what the department is endeavouring to do is give each taxpayer in every walk of life sufficient printed information in understandable terms so that he will be able to be aware of the changes brought about by the new law. What the department is trying to avoid is the flooding of the taxpayer's mail with information that he would not likely consider to be relevant and useful to him.

I would like to give the House more details of this publication program. Eleven pamphlets have been planned, each dealing with a different subject, and there will be additions to the list if the need arises. These subjects are: Highlights for individuals, Valuation Day, Child Care Expenses, Moving Expenses, Capital Gains, Partnerships, Rental Income and Undeveloped Land, Goodwill and Similar Assets, the Professions-Income Calculation, Basic Herds, and Corporate Tax Guide.

I have referred to the groups of taxpayers which will be selected from the computer master file. The groups are: married women, businessmen, professionals, farmers, rental property owners, corporations, and all other individuals. Each of these groups, some of which of course will overlap, will receive a package of pamphlets of direct interest, although some of the printed publications such as Valuation Day and Highlights for Individuals will go to most groups.

I will not take the time of the House to describe all the publications in detail, but it may be of interest to hon. members if I give some explanation of two of the pamphlets that I have mentioned, Highlights for Individuals, and Valuation Day. The Valuation Day pamphlet will attempt to achieve two purposes. First, it will point out in simple language that most people will not be affected by Valuation Day, and others may or may not be affected initially. This message will be prominently displayed on the first page. Taxpayers who are affected will be invited to read on, to find out what action they should take. As the publication will make clear, such action will be in their interest, and the bulk of the text will be used to explain this.

The pamphlet entitled Highlights for Individuals will outline all major changes that may affect the individual taxpayer. In addition, the taxpayer will be informed as to whether any immediate action is required on his part. If so, he will be directed by the text to one of the specialized pamphlets to which I referred earlier in my remarks.

Mr. Alexander: It sounds easy.

Mr. Gray: If not, the text will inform him that further information on how to file will be forwarded with his return and guide when it becomes necessary and he will be informed this will not be necessary until filing time in the early part of 1973.

Hon. members will have observed that in referring to pamphlet titles I have not mentioned a number of subjects of tax reform. In most instances, these are subjects that are of interest to a minority of taxpayers. We have planned to treat those subjects by the issuance of information circulars which will go on our regular mailing list and be available in our district offices, rather than publish separate pamphlets which would be required in comparatively small numbers. The department has tried to anticipate all the requirements for printed information. But, as I indicated earlier, the situation will be watched closely and if it appears other subjects should be dealt with by specialized pamphlets, resources will be available to act immediately.

We believe the distribution of these publications will serve to answer the vast majority of questions that will occur to taxpayers. At the same time, we realize that we can never anticipate all the questions and problems that may arise. As an additional means of providing increased assistance to taxpayers during the early stages of implementation of the new law, we are establishing a new informal consultation service.

I have mentioned that the taxation component of the Department of National Revenue has 28 district offices across Canada. We have one of the most highly decentralized departments of government, with 85 per cent of our taxation employees situated in the district offices to provide direct service to the public. Each district office now maintains an inquiry service. Taxpayers may inquire at the counter, telephone or write for information. Last year, for instance, these offices dealt with more than two million such inquiries. With the advent of tax reform, this service is being expanded and improved.

Taxpayers may visit, telephone or write their own district office for information. In most instances our regular information staff, augmented as the need arises, will be able to answer questions arising out of the new law. But some taxpayers will have difficult problems dealing, for instance, with a complex business operation. These taxpayers will be referred by the regular information staff to our informal consultation service which will be staffed by officers in each district office with special training and who will be particularly well informed about the new legislation. These expert advisers, in turn, will be in ready touch by telephone with a central group of experts in head office. As soon as an answer can be provided by this informal consultation service, the taxpayer will be contacted by telephone or by the quickest possible means. In this way we will be able to provide a relatively fast answering service for difficult problems, consistent with a proper consideration of them by knowledgeable taxation employees.

This advice will not be binding on the department but will merely be the best opinion that can be given without the detailed documentation that would be required for a binding advance income tax ruling. The aim is to provide the best quick service that we can. I referred earlier to efforts of the department to establish better lines of communication with the taxpayer so as to remove as far as possible the uncertainty as to his position under the law. One of several steps in that direction was the inauguration of an advance ruling system under which the department provides rulings binding on the department as long as the relevant law remains unchanged.

When I spoke to the Tax Foundation in Vancouver a few weeks ago I said it had been incorrectly reported in the press that the department will not give binding advance rulings under the proposed new law once it came into effect. Let me again confirm that these reports were not correct. The department will continue to give these rulings once the new law goes into effect, subject only to the same limitations and qualifications as in the past.

I know that many taxpayers are relying on the availability of this service to assist them in removing uncertainties. I have therefore directed that every effort must be made to expand the staff of the department's rulings division. This is being done in an endeavour to meet the concern about the degree of delay in the issuing of rulings that may be caused by the volume and complexity of the requests for them. The rulings division staff will be augmented with experienced officers from the district taxation offices and other branches at head office on a loan basis as well as by the recruitment of some additional personnel on a permanent basis. By these means there will be an expansion of about 50 per cent in the number of experienced accountants engaged in this work. As a result, we now anticipate that advance income tax rulings will be obtainable under the proposed new law, once it receives royal assent, within approximately the same span of time that they have been obtained under the present law.

It is certainly incumbent on the tax administrator to offer every assistance to taxpayers, especially when the laws are revised or new measures are introduced. I want to repeat that the department is most anxious to help taxpayers in every walk of life to become familiar with the new law in the form it is passed by Parliament. As a further means of trying to be helpful, the department is planning a series of special briefings in convenient locations across the country.

Some professional organizations have already held seminars on tax reform and others will be holding tax conferences in the months ahead. These meetings and the information disseminated by these organizations are of great assistance to their members. But there are other taxpayers and tax practitioners in relatively small practices who do not have such means of acquainting themselves with the new law. For the benefit of these taxpayers and for private practitioners or consultants who help them prepare their returns but who feel they are not able to get adequate information through professional organizations, we are proposing to hold special tax reform briefings in various communities. Videotape recordings and other such aids will be used at these briefings to explain the new law, and taxation officers will be in attendance to answer questions.

We propose to hold these briefings after the 1972 filing season has ended, that is, from next May on. Prior to that time taxpayers will be concerned primarily with filing under the present law and practitioners will be similarly engaged.

Whenever Parliament amends the Income Tax Act it is necessary to establish a definite starting date for the new or revised provisions in the law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but it is my duty to do so. As His Honour mentioned earlier today, under the new Standing Order there is an informal arrangement that I know all hon. members will want to follow.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, with the limited time at my disposal I will try to cover some of the points I want to make. The speech of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is what we expect from this particular member, certainly from a coastal constituency: it is filled with red herrings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: Some have been answered by my colleagues, but the remarks dealing with the amendment are the reddest and most odorous of all.

We have used a simple device on third reading to send the bill back to committee of the whole to review the proposal for splitting the bill, a proposal which has received universal approval from all over this land, from people in business, farming, industry and the press. Only the Liberals have rejected it. We do not seek to bind the hands of the committee as to the exact means of division. But our views are known and accepted. What we want is a division on lines acceptable to the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: I believe one of the saddest spectacles I have seen in this Parliament was the night the tax reform bill of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was passed in the House, 75 clauses, with less than one-quarter of the book of 735 pages reviewed. It required over 135 amendments to deal with corrections to this one-quarter that was reviewed. On the same basis, it would require well over 400 amendments to correct the whole of the bill.

A complex and complicated bill that even the tax accountants and tax lawyers could not understand was passed in a period of 3½ hours. The Members of Parliament were robots, forced to bow to a majority government run by a modern dictatorship. The hysteria of the cockpit was nothing compared with Parliament that night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: The government argued as its reason for bringing in closure that over 40 days were taken up with discussion and that was long enough. Mr. Speaker, what has that to do with it? The bill should be properly analysed on the floor of this House until it has been understood and until all of it has been reviewed.

• (3:20 p.m.)

One might accept the government's premise if the bill had been the usual short one, containing a few pages, but this was a 737-page document which required 137 amendments in a quarter of its length. To show the complexity of this legislation I am tabling an article by Marshall, Russell and White that bears this point out. Surely, the point has been entirely missed. Whether it required 10 days or 100 days for consideration is irrelevant. What matters is that it should be adequately discussed. In fact, the House and the committee of the whole made progress with reasonable speed by comparison with the time taken to consider other bills.

In any case, the government could have agreed to divide this long, ponderous bill, separating the non-contentious areas which were easily understood. But they flatly refused to do this. The government alone must accept responsibility for the fact that almost three-quarters of the measure has been forced through the House by closure. This was done despite the pleas of the Senate committee and the various other groups and institutions which counselled against approving parts of the legislation, and the wishes of the five Premiers who urged the government not to proceed with it. Incidentally, two of these Premiers represent the provinces of Ontario and Quebec which between them contain 75 per cent of the population of Canada. Perhaps the only analogy we have is the Domesday Bill put through by William the Conqueror almost 900 years ago.

In defence of these proposals, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made one of his infrequent speeches in this chamber during which he referred to the million people he was taking off the tax rolls. Mr. Speaker, those people should have been taken off long ago. Inflation, set off by this government, has proceeded at such a pace that the government was obliged to take this action. They had been asked over and over again by the opposition to do so, but they refused to act until they had no choice. This section could have been passed two months ago, three months ago, six months ago or two years ago. But the government did nothing about it. Now they put this little sugar pill in with all these other provisions. It is bitter aloes, though, because it should have come much sooner. They should have done this three years ago.

Members opposite claim that the press are behind them. They say their actions are supported by editorial writers. I wish to read from the Globe and Mail, Canada's national newspaper, which had this to say:

> What the government is saying to all of us is this: swallow what we hand you whether you understand it or not, or we'll use closure to make you swallow it. How bad this will be with the tax bill we cannot know till it hits us. But if the government employs the same tactics with the Competition Act and with legislation to control foreign and even Canadian investment, then both the economy that supports us and the freedoms we enjoy could be at grave risk. What has been proposed would deny many rights to individuals and could plunge us into depression. But if we ask for time to argue the points, the government can slap on closure and make us, in a very real sense, its prisoners.
> What we are fighting is not any longer the tax bill—bad as it may be—but this arrogant use of closure to shut Parliament and people out of the running of their own affairs.

Mr. Woolliams: Right.

Mr. Rynard: Now, Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight, may I remind the House that as reported in Hansard at page 2162 on March 26, 1962, my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) introduced a motion to do away with closure. He had this to say:

All of us agree that full and free debate is necessary in the parliamentary system, the examination without restraint of the programs and policies advanced not only by the government but by those in the opposition who would provide an alternative government. In the process of national decision-making the role of Parliament is pre-eminent and vital. I believe, in the light of the experience of the past, that the principle of closure need no longer be accepted under our system—

We in Parliament have a duty to preserve the freedom of debate because our freedom, the freedom of parliament, is essential to the freedom of the people we represent. When we have rules that confine or limit our freedom in debate we are permitting rules that also limit freedom in Canada outside Parliament as well.

Then he went on to refer to a statement by Mr. Ernest Lapointe:

It is the will of Parliament, not that of the government, that is the will of the nation.

If the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) has anything to say, let him get up and say it and not keep talking from his seat, as is a habit of his. Now I wish to read what Mr. Mackenzie King had to say on the same subject:

I want to make it perfectly clear that the battle which has been put up in connection with this measure is not merely over the rights of minorities or the rights of majorities; it is true that it has to do with the rights of both, rights which in the case of the majority no less than in that of the minority, are threatened.

Next I wish to read what Mr. Pickersgill had to say. He was one of the prominent members of this House. He learned his lesson, and this ought to be required reading for all members on the other side:

I believe that no government in its senses would ever again use the existing closure rule in our book. I therefore do not see any sense in leaving it there.

Mr. Mahoney: Did you buy that?

Mr. Rynard: I shall now put on record what the Winnipeg Tribune has to say about contempt for Parliament.

In the 1969 summer session, the Trudeau government delivered a one-two sneak punch to freedom of debate in the House of Commons. The government invoked closure to choke off debate on a bill that gave it even more drastic powers of closure—the notorious Bill 75c.

At the time Donald Macdonald, the Liberal House leader, contended that 75c would never be used to limit debate to the minimum allowed on a major bill. Today the Trudeau government is using 75c to choke off discussion of its 707-page tax bill before the first 200 pages of the measure have been given clause-by-clause scrutiny.

So much for assurances by autocrats that they will never use autocratic powers. And so much for Ron Basford's soothing assurances that the harsh provisions of his Competition Act will not be invoked.

During the 1969 debate, Prime Minister Trudeau made it clear that he regarded MPs on opposition benches as a bunch of nobodies. He made the smart-alec comment that the IQ of the Commons rose every time an opposition MP left the chamber. He showed his disdain for parliamentary process then, as he is showing it now, by ramming through tax legislation that will vitally affect every citizen and business firm in the country.

[Mr. Rynard.]

Even government spokesmen admit they do not understand all the ramifications of the bill. They even admit that the bill probably contains errors and mistakes. They are still making amendments to it. But Mr. Benson is so determined to get the measure on the statute books before the end of the year that the rights of both Parliament and ordinary citizens are being ridden over roughshod—

In any event, what is now unfolding in Ottawa is systematic contempt for Parliament.

While we are talking about the use of power, I would remind hon. members that Senator Gratton O'Leary spoke in the other place about the disturbing growth of the power of the Prime Minister, adding that the Prime Minister of Canada had more power than even the President of the United States whose actions were controlled by a system of checks and balances and who held office for a dated four-year term. Yes, the government of Canada is neither the House of Commons nor the cabinet: it is the million-dollar plus establishment of the Prime Minister and the office of the Privy Council. These are the ones who are gradually usurping the power of Parliament.

Why continue to have a Parliament, except as the heritage for which people have fought and died so that they might enjoy a system of government in which their voices be heard? The voice of the people will rise again to haunt this dictatorial government. The men in power who stride today across the field of politics are like passing shadows in the night—they come, they go. As Edmund Burke said in the British House of Commons on February 7, 1771: "The greater the power, the more dangerous the abuse." And as Lord Acton said in his "Essays on Freedom and Power": "All power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." We are seeing an example here today. I repeat, let us hope the voice of the people will be heard again after the next election and that once again the freedom of the people will be restored to Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a few minutes to express my views on the bill before the House, a bill of the utmost importance. We have reached the end of our many discussions on the bill, and in view of my status I feel I should explain the stand I must take on it.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to note the discussions we have held on the importance of this bill. It all began with a white paper. I thought such action was wise at the time, and I still think it was timely. That statement of policy allowed the people to analyse the importance of the bill. Obviously, since the white paper was published, several needed changes have been made to the proposed tax policy. I should like to point out especially the contribution of the opposition parties and the government to the changes made, if we go back to the early stages of the bill, that is to say the white paper.

I take the liberty of congratulating the opposition parties. They have often raised some valid points. I especially want to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who made a tour of the country to sensitize the people. It was a brilliant idea and the trip of the Leader of the Opposition had some good consequences, since several organizations and provincial governments made afterwards representations to the federal government which realized the importance of some proposed changes. It has therefore decided, as a result of valid points which had been raised, to propose some one hundred amendments.

We would surely be tempted to charge the government with taking a backward step because it has proposed those amendments. I would like, in all objectivity, to congratulate the government for having realized that it was necessary to make the changes proposed by the opposition parties as well as by responsible organizations in the interests of Canadians.

I would like also to recognize the fact that the minister and the government have shown a certain open-mindedness when they accepted the amendments aimed at improving the bill. It is obvious, of course, that this bill is not perfect. We must, however, in all objectivity, recognize the merits of several sections of this bill, as well as the advantages that it contains.

It can still be improved. The minister has even admitted to the House that in the light of experience, he expected to bring forward some amendments, and I hope that he will stick by his intention to make the required changes.

I would also like to express my appreciation concerning the discussions which dealt with the co-operative movement and the caisses populaires. The necessary amendments have been introduced and passed.

I am happy about the representations made in favour of such institutions by many hon. members and many organizations. I am especially happy to see that the government has felt the need to restore to the co-operative movement the particular character that it is necessary for it to have in order to attain its objectives.

I would have hoped that the basic exemptions would be much more than $1,500 and $2,850. In present circumstances, that is obviously insufficient. There is a fairly important improvement, but, as no change had been made in this area in the past 20 years, I feel that the basic exemptions are not high enough, and I hope that the government will seriously consider raising them further in the fairly near future, a move that would be completely justified, especially in the case of certain classes of wage-earners.

I would have hoped also that serious consideration would be given to a special tax allowing for the establishment of an old age security program for people 60 and over. I know that this would require large amounts of money, but as the government has the responsibility to create a proper social climate, it should not hesitate, I think, to develop a tax policy taking into account the establishment of a special tax so that pensioners 60 and over could enjoy a sufficient income. This, in my opinion, would surely constitute another step toward a more just society.

I do hope that within the next few months the government will seriously look into this matter.

I would also like to refer to the speech made last night by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans). I would have hoped, of course, that the government would give much more consideration to the comments of the hon. member for Duvernay. I think this is the best speech I have ever heard in the House regarding tax reform.

I believe the hon. member for Duvernay got to the sore spots of our economy and offered advice to which the government should give notice. His words should be considered not only by hon. members but also by the government.

I would like to comment a particular paragraph of his speech that reads as follows:

> —a nation's natural resources are not past-production; they are the wealth of its soil and waterways. As such, they cannot be viewed in the same light as current production, as goods and services that we produce each year. Those goods can legitimately be disposed of at will by the people who produce them currently in any given year. Resources are a trust. They have been received from the past. They are to be husbanded by the present generation and they are to be passed on to future generations. A generation that deliberately squanders a nation's natural wealth—I emphasize "deliberately squanders"—to enhance its own standard of living will have much to answer for.

I wish the government would carefully study the hon. member's speech , a speech that could be of direct interest to Canadians. I continue the quotation:

> Ten years ago a group of men were named to draft for Canada a fair and just taxation policy that would emphasize growth, employment and stability in the economy. I do not think the task is over. All I want to do is remind the Canadian people and the Canadian government . . . that after ten years that task it not over. This task has to be begun again. I sincerely believe this government can put together all of the elements of an economic policy that will give us growth and employment. In any event, I certainly hope so.

At any rate, it is obvious that the government respects the views of the hon. member for Duvernay and I believe his speech certainly deserves consideration by the government.

In conclusion, I should like to add that there has been much complaint about the motion of closure. I am among those who believe in limiting debates but I feel it is wrong to wait until third reading to limit the debates. It is difficult for parties to come to an agreement in the heat of debate.

Mr. Speaker, the present system may not compell us to commit blunders, but it permits them to exist. I trust we shall apply corrective measures to it, that will enable us to plan a legislative program before each session, so that all hon. members may be aware of the time allowed for debates.

During the forty days given to the consideration of the bill in committee of the whole, hon. members could have been more practical in the discussions. We would have progressed more than we did during the consideration of the bill in committee of the whole, since we were expecting the time of debate to be unlimited.

The government must do some planning; Parliament must plan its business. I believe in limiting debates, provided the limit is established at the beginning of each session, so that we may know how much time we will be allowed to discuss such or such a bill.

Such planning is necessary and once those changes are made we will not have to discuss the implementation of the closure rule which, in certain circumstances, may be fair.

I regret that, at the third reading stage, the debate lasted only four days. In view of the importance of this bill it is obvious that third reading required more time and I think that perhaps we over did it in committee of the whole. I am convinced that the adoption of a legislative program including a limit on debates would make hon. members more objective to the benefit of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote for the bill even though it is causing deep concern to the public at large. If I refer to the speech of the member for Duvernay, such concern is well known. However, the bill will have beneficial effects for a category of Canadians. I wish to say I am in favor of this tax reform. Even though it is not perfect it is providing some profitable changes for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the balance of this day, because of the late hour and the tragic circumstances of this Parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —I would suggest we not proceed with private members' hour.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion has been made that we do not proceed with private members' hour. The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, rather than abandon the hour, especially in this atmosphere, I understand that two members have bills which would propose to change the names of constituencies. Also, two members who spoke yesterday on the Bank of Canada bill are very anxious to continue debate until five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed in today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED IMPROVEMENTS TO COMMITTEES SYSTEM

The House resumed, from Friday, November 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rowland:

[Mr. Speaker.]

That, in the opinion of this House, there should be further improvements made in the operation of the committee system in order to enhance the influence of the House of Commons upon the policy-making process and in order to reduce the information gap between private members and cabinet ministers and to that end that the following subject-matters be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization for the purpose of study and the making of recommendations (a) the possibility of establishing a means whereby committees could take the initiative in recommending to the House matters which should be referred to them by the House; (b) adequate staff support for committees; (c) the advisability of making it mandatory for each committee to prepare at the end of each session a running record of recommendations it has made to the government and government action taken on its recommendations; (d) making it mandatory for a motion of concurrence to be moved in connection with all committee reports and discovering a means by which debate on such motions could be kept to a reasonable level, specifically the possibility of increasing the number of assigned days, the increase in number to be allocated to the discussion of committee reports, the reports to be considered to be determined by opposition parties; (e) making it possible for minority reports to be tabled together with majority reports from committees; (f) allowing standing committees to be constituted as committees of inquiry.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to say that I was here when the motion was first presented by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland). I completely agree with the motion to have the whole committee system reviewed. I want to take only a few minutes to present one or two points because I feel the motion should be brought to a conclusion before five o'clock.

The hon. member for Selkirk came to this House after 1968 and I suspect he has suffered some of the frustations of hon. members like myself and others who came in at that time. We have been active in committees since 1968. In the first year I remember the fisheries committee, for example, sitting for weeks on end discussing various pieces of legislation and the estimates. The members were desirous of clarifying the legislation and having people come before the committee to present their points of view. It has been a frustrating experience because over the last couple of years members have found that the committee system is being treated as an appendage to the House of Commons, with matters being dominated by the party in power to the extent that it becomes a useless exercise.

In the regional economic affairs committee and the fisheries committee we have often worked for weeks on a piece of legislation, only to find out that members who were in no way involved came before the committee and were used as a task force or a special force to get the legislation through without amendment. We found, no matter how much work we had done in connection with amendments and how much research had gone into them, the government was unwilling to accept any changes of substance.

I remember the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) presenting the point of view here that because under our parliamentary system it is necessary for the House to have confidence in the government, and because the will of the government is expressed in the committees, the committees have become an echo of the House of Commons and it is necessary for that confidence to be extended to committees. I challenge that. Like the hon. member for Selkirk, I am concerned about the role of our committees.

One of the major difficulties stems from the fact, I suggest to Your Honour, that almost every day members of the House request unanimous consent for certain subject matters to be referred to standing committees. Since coming here I can remember only one occasion when the House accepted a motion under Standing Order 43 and allowed a matter to be referred to a particular committee. There have been numerous occasions, occurring almost daily, when the House has felt it necessary to have a committee investigate a particular circumstance. The most recent example that comes to mind involves the fisheries committee and the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. That example arose because the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), as a result of a tremendous lack of sensitivity regarding the marine resources of Canada—a lack of knowledge, a lack of understanding, a lack of interest and a lack of political backbone necessary to bring into play the decision-making capability that is necessary to enforce obvious rules to conserve the resources of the continental shelf—went his own, unique, unconcerned way and negotiated a series of treaties with European countries. The treaty with Norway is the most recent of such treaties. We have tried to negotiate a treaty with Denmark. We have tried to negotiate one with Portugal and one with Spain. We have one with France and one with the U.K.

There have been motions and arguments by members from the Atlantic region, especially from the province of Newfoundland, suggesting that the whole business ought to be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. We feel that it is necessary for those committees to consider these questions because the few minutes available when the estimates are considered in the spring will not be enough. These opportunities have been denied us and, since the government has refused to accept legitimate motions calling for the reference of important subject matters to standing committees, I feel that the committee system is being seriously undermined.

We feel, also, that there might be changes in the question period. We wonder whether Canada has the right to go ahead and, without consulting the Atlantic provinces, to negotiate these kinds of treaties in a vacuum. We wonder whether the government has the constitutional or the moral right to make on behalf of Canada this kind of in-vacuum decision. We question whether it is in order for the government of Canada to make these kinds of decisions without referring them to the House of Commons, to the representatives of the Canadian people.

We have felt seriously that the consideration of such treaties would provide a prime opportunity for the various committees involved, the committee on external affairs and the committee on fisheries, to call before them representatives of the Save our Fisheries Association, commonly referred to as SOFA, to call before them representatives of our party coming from the Atlantic region, to summon representatives of the provincial authorities that are so vitally affected and to have the whole matter brought, by means of our committee system, before the Canadian people and before the members of the House of Commons.

We are worried about the lack of concern which does not allow such committee representation, because even if that process did not result in any firm resolution or firm decision on the part of the committee, at least it would provide the vehicle necessary for airing the grievances and concerns of frustrated people in the Atlantic region who have not been receiving a legitimate response from the government on this most vital issue that affects their whole future. That is one matter I wanted to put before this House.

I hope that some of the changes suggested by my colleague for Selkirk will be seriously considered and accepted. I recently heard the government House leader make a statement to the effect that it is contemplated there will be changes with respect to the committee system. I do not feel that there is any need for major changes in the rules in this regard if we accommodate some of the legitimate requests that arise from day to day for numerous issues to be referred to our committees.

Last year, in the fisheries committee, I recall we were discussing a particular piece of legislation, the end result being that the issue of conservation, when it came before that committee, could be discussed for only one day. The committee could afford to spend only one day of its time on the matter of fish conservation, principally because the estimates had to be put through by the next day. We had one day to discuss an issue which is one of the most important issues affecting the Atlantic region. When we were able to bring one of our spokesmen from the Atlantic provinces, Mr. Etchegary, President of the Save our Fisheries Association, before that committee to testify, even though he appeared only for a few hours I think the minister and some of his officials were shocked to hear the presentation of facts regarding the tragedy of Atlantic marine resources. We were hurried in that committee and discussed the estimates most inadequately. Actually, the Canadian people would be shocked with our whole parliamentary system if they knew how the committee handled estimates involving several hundred million dollars.

I feel that even within the present rules, Standing Order 43 ought to be utilized more effectively so that we could refer some of these matters to committee. Unless we do that, or unless we amend our procedures regarding the 40-minute question period so that these matters can be delved into in greater detail in the House and bring forward more legitimate responses from the government that is responsible for its behaviour during the question period to the Canadian people, I forecast that in the coming year, 1972, the House of Commons will hardly be a fit place to be in during the question period.

I have been watching, during the last couple of weeks, what has been going on. Speaking as a member who participates actively in the question period, I have watched closely the absolute frustration and demoralization of certain members on this side of the House which has stemmed from their inability to take part actively in the House of Commons proceedings during the question period. We have been getting responses from the government that have frequently misled the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: The government has been frequently misinforming the House and not informing the House. They are not opening up, so to speak, and giving us legitimate responses. Consider the inability of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to answer questions regarding our resource problems. His answers have given rise to much frustration. Unless some way can be found either to enlarge the scope of the question period and provide more legitimate responses from the government, or for more motions under Standing Order 43 to be accepted—many of these motions being on issues that ought to be referred to standing committees—I suggest that the last session of the twenty-eighth Parliament will be one involving great challenges for the Chair and other hon. members.

There is no way that we, the members from the Atlantic region, Mr. Speaker, will take a back seat on the issue of fish conservation and marine resource management. In view of our motions calling for reference of specific subject matters to certain committees, we feel that the government has a responsibility for tabling the documents relating to the treaties and other arrangements entered into with European countries. Under the terms of confederation I do not feel that the government of this country has the right, in a vacuum, to negotiate treaties that are so disadvantageous to the people of the Atlantic region.

That is my small contribution on the matter brought forward by my colleague for Selkirk. I congratulate him for presenting this marvellous motion. It was well researched and it deserves the support of all members of the House.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I was expecting some other notice of motion to be brought forward today. If you will excuse my unpreparedness, I should like to comment on this notice of motion in the name of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) which was discussed last month. Unfortunately, at that time I was not able to be present in the House. Many hon. members, of course, wish to speak on this matter. If you will forgive my relatively unprepared presentation today, I should appreciate saying a few words on it.

First, I should like to suggest to the hon. member for Selkirk that it would have been better if the notice of motion had not included in its wording almost everything that it is possible to suggest about our committees. It runs to many parts and contains just about everything but the kitchen sink. This is a complex question and I think there might be some difficulty voting on a motion which attempts to deal with all the frustrations the hon. member might harbour with regard to the committee system. He has included them all in one notice of motion.

I suggest that the motion could have been a little tighter. Even though it is not as tight as it might be, there is no doubt that following the revision of our rules the committee system of the House of Commons is now better than it was. However, I feel there are many areas where it could be improved. I would briefly like to note some of these along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk.

It should be borne in mind that many of my criticisms of the committee system are basically a criticism of Members of Parliament, essentially backbenchers, for not making use of the committee system as it now exists. There is great potential in the committee system which is not being used. I feel most strongly that if members of committees, mostly backbenchers with the odd parliamentary secretary who comes along to protect the minister, would attempt to use the committee system more intelligently, we could do a great deal more without any substantial change. An example given immediately prior to my intervention was the fisheries committee.

Much more could be done in the fisheries committee by the backbenchers. I exclude in this case the two parliamentary secretaries who always come prepared. Both are in the chamber, so I obviously have to exempt them. Backbenchers should be willing to do the preparatory work. They could write letters to members of the civil service who are going to appear before a committee and say that such and such a subject will be discussed, will they kindly arrange to have the people who know something about it there. They could write to the minister and say that such and such an area is of concern and would he be prepared to answer the following questions. In this way, the committee system would work a great deal better.

At present, members come to committees relatively unprepared. They hear a brief presentation by the minister or deputy minister and the officials who happen to be there. For the first time their mind is seized of the problem of the particular department. On the spur of the moment, they think that is interesting or may effect the boys back home. They feel they had better ask a question about a particular fish, fishery, boat, subsidy or whatever it may be.

I feel the committee system would work immeasurably better if Members of Parliament would take the trouble to prepare themselves for the meeting. The cry will understandably go up that they do not have time. I have made this complaint myself. Somehow or other there are too many things for Members of Parliament to do. They have to attend the House, the committees, visit their constituencies and, therefore, they feel it necessary to have a committee staff to help them in the real areas of concern. I do not deny that this argument has validity.

I notice that under paragraph (b) of his multisubdivided resolution, the hon. member refers to adequate staff. This is only an aim he is talking about. It is true that staff might be helpful. With the research assistants provided to the opposition and the government, too often the tendency is for members to pick up a piece of paper which some research assistant has prepared, read the question and get a reply from the minister which has been similarly prepared in a sort of limbo government department. There are men there who think up questions and answers. You have an exchange of views between two people, but this is not a meeting of minds. I see a member nodding in agreement. A member asks a question about a subject he knows very little about, through no fault of his own.

Mr. Peters: Researchers ask questions and researchers answer questions.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member has said that often the researchers ask the questions and the researchers answer the questions. He has phrased it better than I. A researcher, through the mouth of a member of the opposition, asks a minister a question and a researcher, through the mouth of a minister, replies. If there is a supplementary question, you are into a never-never land of lack of communication because neither really knows what their researcher is talking about. These words are simply being mouthed on both sides of the House. I appreciate the hon. member's assistance in making this point.

If we had committee research staff, the committees might operate in the same way. When an expert witness appears, a committee member may have a researcher sitting beside him and feeding him little notes. The researcher will tell him the thing to do is hit the witness on this subject. While the member is asking a question, the researcher writes out another question and slips it to the member. Once more the member is simply a mouthpiece for the researcher. This is not the most desirable situation. There is some balance between the two, some area where you can use a researcher to get assistance. I hope all hon. members will accept the blame. I place this blame on my own head as well as on the heads of other members. At present we do not do enough work for the committee system. We could do a great deal more. If we did more, we would not be so enthusiastic about getting extra staff.

I know that the time is short, but I would like to touch on one other aspect. With a functioning committee system, the committee is a small group which in my experience is generally very friendly. Even the member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who sometimes differs with me on the fisheries committee, will agree that we are a friendly, small group. That type of group tends to get seized with the subject of a committee and works out a program for the government or suggests an amendment to the bill. You then get into a very interesting constitutional area. It is the government which will take responsibility for it.

I would be the last to suggest that because the hon. member for Selkirk or the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) participated in a committee and made useful suggestions which the government accepted, and which later turned out to be not quite as good as we thought, that they should be stopped from criticizing us on the ground that they participated in formulating government policy through the committee system. This may sound a trifle esoteric to people in the gallery who are not parliamentarians. However, it is true that we function in this House in a somewhat partisan sense from time to time. I think this was demonstrated in the last hour. I think it is unfortunate if the suggestion is put forward that somehow or other committees can overcome this fact. I do not think it can be overcome. I do not think that under the British parliamentary system it should be overcome. I only make these comments more or less as a warning.

Even though theoretically the academic will quite often tell us that we should have committees which take the best ideas of the New Democratic Party, the Créditiste party, the member for St. John's East and members on this side of the House, and synchronize them in order to come up with the best thinking of the House, where would that leave the adversary system with the responsibility of questioning ministers? I do not know. I do not try to come down one way or another. All I do is raise it as a problem.

When the academics, who very often do not have any knowledge of this House, suggest how we should rearrange our affairs, they should bear in mind that this is a very realistic problem. I know the hon. member for Selkirk is aware of it. I do not say this as any real criticism of his motion but only to point out that it is something that cannot be overlooked.

The government takes responsibility for legislation. If the taxation proposals on which we just voted turn out to be bad, I do not think the members of the New Democratic Party who voted in the House of Commons committee on the white paper should in any way feel they must not criticize the government. Perhaps at one stage or another in the system of committees, they went along with such and such a proposal. I do not think it would be right for them to feel this way. I hope that people on the outside realize this.

There is another point I would like to mention. Basically, the motion by the hon. member for Selkirk refers to the possibility of establishing a means whereby committees could independently initiate investigations. I am the chairman of the only committee of the House of Commons which has a general reference. It is an accident of history. If anyone has forgotten it, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni knows a great deal about it. An accident led to the establishment of this committee. Its responsibility is to inquire into the problems of pollution in Canada and the plans of the federal government in relation thereto.

It is the only committee having a general reference. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, the other members of the steering committee, or the committee itself might well, with me, decide to look into the question of pulp mill pollution, pollution from gold mines, or mercury pollution. Then, of course, we are faced with the enormity of the subject, the number of matters which could be taken up. So if there are to be more committees having general terms of reference, a great deal more in the way of responsibility must be shown by committee members themselves.

Many times, instead of saying, "That nasty minister will not allow me to put in a motion to refer a certain subject to a parliamentary committee," or, "That miserable man, the parliamentary secretary or the leader of the House will not allow me to do so," members will have to say from time to time, "My local problem is important but there are even more important problems to be considered elsewhere in the country."

I know that as chairman of a committee having a general reference I am subject to certain pressures to do one thing or another thing. For example, I received a letter some time ago accusing myself, or members of the committee generally, of being paid off by the pulp and paper industry because we declined to look into pollution from a certain pulp mill in an area where the writer of the letter has his summer home. I am not worried that he accuses me and other members of the committee in this way; we politicians are used to the kicking we get. But if committees became independent, every member would have to bear a great deal more responsibility for what is done. Time is limited, and the committees themselves would have to come up with solutions which would from time to time go against the grain of an individual regardless of party.

Perhaps I have spoken too negatively on the hon. member's motion. I have no wish to do this, except to the extent of indicating that there are enormous difficulties associated with the committee system and that these difficulties cannot be resolved quickly. Glancing at the motion itself, I find I completely agree that committees should have more initiative in choosing subject matters for consideration instead of the minister telling them what to do on every occasion.

As to the recommendation that there should be adequate staff support, I agree, subject to the observation that though additional staff might well result in committees doing more work, it would not give them any more time in which to do it. Recommendation (c) has in mind making it mandatory for each committee to prepare at the end of each session a running record of the recommendations it has made to the government and of government action taken on those recommendations. I think this is a good proposal. There is no objection to that.

I am not decided about the suggestion that it should be mandatory for a motion of concurrence to be moved in connection with all committee reports, although I remember having myself brought a motion for concurrence before the House without great success. I think the hon. member's comments on minority reports are excellent and I agree with him that useful inquiries might well spring from the findings of standing committees.

Perhaps I might conclude by saying this. With the exception of those held by the present and former parliamentary secretaries to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and the other parliamentary secretaries who are here this afternoon, most of these jobs are not particularly onerous. If the committees are to be restructured and are to be given more staff, we should encourage the House and the country to regard committee chairmen as being of importance. I feel that a committee chairman should be just as important as a parliamentary secretary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: I notice there are some who are kind enough to indicate their approval. It is important that more responsibility be placed on a committee chairman. If he brings in a report at the end of the year saying, "we held no meetings because we could not figure out what to do," someone should be able to ask, "What did you do for your extra pay? You are being paid extra for a special job; for God's sake get off your backside and do it."

The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) says committee chairmen are not paid extra. That is true. My suggestion is that instead of paying parliamentary secretaries extra, the money should be paid to committee chairmen.

Mr. Isabelle: We'll send you a cheque tomorrow.

Mr. Anderson: Before I get into deeper trouble on this issue, perhaps I should resume my seat.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) on having brought this motion forward, particularly at a time when we are nearing the end of the session and possibly the end of a Parliament. This is a good occasion on which to assess what is happening in our committees.

I have been very interested in observing the changes which have been made in the committee system in the last few years and in reaching some conclusions as to the results of those changes. One thing has been most evident. Committees have become very tiring, very difficult and very time-consuming places into which to put a large number of people.

As to the advantages, I really do not see much change at all. There has been one improvement, though, to the extent that the provision for changes in personnel means that an hon. member can take part in the discussion of a specific subject in which he is interested without needing to be involved for a long period of time in the whole field under consideration. For example, should a member be interested in a particular problem which affects his own area, he has an opportunity to become well informed about the circumstances and take part in discussions concerning it without this involvement becoming an annual operation.

What really bothers me about the operations of committees is the way in which the government pursues the idea that it must always maintain its majority. Take, as an example, the agricultural committee, a committee which has had some very heavy legislation before it and which has travelled around the country hearing representations. I am sure there is not a single committee which has experienced a greater turnover in terms of membership. One cannot help noting that whenever a decision is to be made, the government whip ensures that bodies attend the committee meeting in order to participate in the voting.

It is very easy to make the switch that is necessary before a vote is taken. These people vote on subjects they know absolutely nothing about. Indeed, they do not care what the voting is about. They vote the way the minister or his deputy at the meeting wishes them to vote. To be fair about it, the other parties act in the same way, only to a lesser degree. I am sure there are members of the opposition who would be much more in favour of supporting changes in legislation than leaving things the way they were. Obviously, the government takes the position that things should remain as they are.

The previous speaker said a lot of the legislation referred to committees is civil service legislation and a large number of experts have to deal with collective problems which the minister, the deputy minister and others from the department who appear before the committee are not competent to discuss. If the officials are not competent to discuss such a matter, then all you can do is call for the vote and pass it in that way, because if it is discussed members might be convinced—perhaps wrongly—that the legislation should be changed.

I am sure this is true of the income tax bill. No matter what committee the bill had been sent to, the same decision would have been arrived at as the committee of the whole arrived at, which was to pass the bill in its totality. It would not have been cut up because it would never have been put together again. How would we know which provisions affected one department or another, or one particular taxpayer or another? One consideration of the government has always been as to whether we are changing the balance of ways and means.

If I may go back to the subject of the agricultural committee, that committee considered a number of fairly complex bills. For example, it discussed the labelling of poisons legislation and a number of other matters that affected not so much agriculture but allied fields. I think it is safe to say that the committee did make the decisions and they were made fairly quickly. The members of the committee knew something about the subject and sometimes knew more than the officials. The amendments proposed by the committee were not questioned by the officials and as a result were incorporated into the legislation and the legislation became law.

Where the committee witnesses are not competent in their own field, the committee system cannot honestly and effectively make changes to legislation. One area where in my opinion we have slipped backwards is in the sending of estimates to standing committees. Estimates are sent to the various committees for examination, but the system does not work because seldom is there anyone in the committee who is prepared to take responsibility for the theory behind the estimates. As a result, the chairman of the committee says it is a matter of policy and that since the minister is not there the committee cannot discuss it. If there is a technical discussion on a particular item and the official is not there, the chairman usually says that a written answer will be provided at a later date. I suggest the committee system does not work the way we thought it would.

Previously the minister had to come to the House with his estimates and they were before the House until everyone was satisfied that his estimates were acceptable, that they went far enough or that they did not go too far. If a member asked the minister a question on a specific estimate, he got an answer. The minister was allowed to have two officials sitting at a table. If they were unable to supply the answer, he called for another official from the gallery. This was why part of the gallery was reserved for departmental officials.

This is not the case any more. The minister does not have to take responsibility in committee. Some ministers attend the committees regularly, others do not. Some send their parliamentary secretaries, others do not. Some departments send a large number of officials. I am sure the members of the veterans affairs committee would agree with me that every official who could add or subtract anything from the committee's deliberations participated fully in the discussions.

Depending on the chairman of the committee, there are many ways in which officials can speak. On the other hand, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) came to the agricultural committee and told the committee that it had to damned well pass the bill and that it would sit until it did. We all know what happened. The country made the decision on that particular minister and piece of legislation. I am sure all members of that committee realize that the legislation itself was not all wrong. There were many good things about it, though sections of it were very bad. Surely if the committee system were functioning properly, the members of the committee would have been able to correct the bad things and strengthen the good things, in which case it would have been acceptable to the committee and to the country, and to hell with the minister. In my opinion, it is not really his business whether or not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I bring to Your Honour's attention the fact that there have been certain consultations among the parties. It is generally felt that since this motion did not get the full hour planned when it was stood over from November 19, it might retain its place for another occasion. I think you will find that there is general agreement to this.

Mr. McGrath: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that is substantially correct. Since I should like to make a submission to the House on this subject, if it meets with the approval of the House I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Walker: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, as I said the last time this order was before the House, that I consider this one of the most important topics in terms of parliamentary procedure that we parliamentarians during this finest hour in the week between four and five o'clock on a Friday afternoon have a chance to discuss. I support any assistance Your Honour can give to the House to seek unanimous consent for the motion to retain its position on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps it should be put into position No. 1.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has one doubt about this. Do I understand that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) used the terminology that he wished to adjourn the debate? I could not accept that motion because the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has the floor. I take it that the hon. member for St. John's East is indicating his agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker) that this motion retain its place on the order paper. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday afternoon next at 2 p.m.

At 5.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 20, 1971.

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MRS. MACINNIS—ANSWER TO QUESTION ON SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN PROGRAM

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning the manner in which we are being treated in this House by answers to questions with regard to an urgent matter.

Last Friday, in the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), I attempted to raise with his parliamentary secretary the serious plight of the cities of Vancouver and Victoria. Before they had submitted their applications under the special development loan fund, the entire sum available to the province of British Columbia had been allocated by the government of British Columbia, despite the fact that some 40 per cent of all those unemployed reside in those two cities. I urged that the minister consider increasing the total amount of the fund for Canada.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, you called me to order, saying that it was your impression that this question had been asked previously. You were quite correct, Mr. Speaker. Several of us had been trying to use this method to impress on the government the urgent need for help for these and other hard-pressed municipalities.

It is quite evident that up to this point the government is washing its hands of this whole matter and giving us the runaround here in the House of Commons.

I am now in receipt of further correspondence from the mayor's office, citing the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) as declaring:

> . . . I would appreciate knowing if you have any difficulty clearing your projects through either the federal government or the provincial co-ordinator.

The mayor also encloses a copy of a letter from the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) promising that the Minister of Finance will be in touch "very soon" but declaring that "this is a matter of provincial responsibility".

In view of the way in which Canada's third largest city is being given the brush-off and its representatives are being given the runaround, I feel that this whole matter should be examined by a committee of the House. Accordingly, if you find that I have a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

> That the matter of the administration of the federal-provincial employment loan program be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for immediate study and report.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has given the Chair the required notice under Standing Order 17. I have given the matter serious consideration, and of course the Chair has listened with attention to the representations just made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I have to suggest to the hon. member, with respect, that her complaint should not be raised by way of a question of privilege. I fail to see how parliamentary privilege is involved in any way in the complaint she has submitted to the House for the consideration of the Chair at this time. She may have a grievance but I suggest to the hon. member, with kindness, that this should not be raised by way of a question of privilege, and I cannot put the motion to which she has referred.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE

STATEMENT ON INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SETTLEMENT AND CONSEQUENCES FOR CANADA

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, an international monetary settlement was reached on Saturday, and I should like to report on it to the House.

With the permission of the House I will be tabling the communiqué issued at the end of the meeting of the Group of Ten. The principal features of the agreement may be summarized as follows:

1. The United States agreed to propose to Congress a devaluation of the dollar in terms of gold from $35 to $38 an ounce. This is an effective change of 8.57 per cent.

2. For the time being, Canada will maintain a floating exchange rate and will permit fundamental market forces to establish the exchange rate without intervention except as required to maintain orderly conditions.

3. Other countries in the Group of Ten agreed on new exchange rates for their currencies, and these are being announced by the governments concerned.

4. Countries other than those in the Group of Ten are reaching decisions with respect to their own exchange rates in consultation with the IMF.

5. It was agreed that there should be 2-1/4 per cent margins of fluctuations above and below the new fixed exchange rates.

6. The United States agreed to suppress immediately the 10 per cent import surcharge and the related provisions of the investment tax credit. I am informed that the White House has announced the suppression of the import surcharge with effect from midnight, Sunday, December 19.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: Under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1971, termination of the proclamation which established the surcharge automatically extends the investment credit to imported capital equipment which is ordered after the date of termination of the surcharge.

7. The United States administration will be seeking Congressional action on the gold price as soon as the results of the negotiations now under way on short-term trade issues are available for Congressional scrutiny.

8. Discussions will be undertaken promptly in the IMF on the reform of the international monetary system.

I should like to comment on the significance of this agreement for Canada. On the most general level it restores an orderly exchange situation on the basis of which world trade and financing can proceed with confidence. This will be of benefit to all countries, not least Canada, having in mind the vital importance of international trade to the Canadian economy.

The basis has been laid for the United States to restore its balance of payments to a sound and durable position. A serious obstacle to the expansion of the U.S. economy has been removed. When the United States prospers, Canada prospers also.

The Canadian economy has been advancing at a good pace this year. But the unsettled international situation has given rise to a sense of uncertainty in the business community. This has now been dispelled. We may therefore expect that the Canadian economy will move forward with even greater vigour.

In the field of our international relationships we also have reason to be satisfied. There have been anxieties and doubts about the direction of the United States trade and financial policies and, in particular, about the intention of the United States toward Canada. The agreement reached this weekend should help to remove these tensions. Our other partners in the Group of Ten have demonstrated a full understanding of Canada's position.

I now turn to some more particular questions relating to the consequences for Canada of this agreement.

First, the exchange rate. It will be determined by the fundamental forces in the exchange market. Our interventions will be limited to the maintenance of orderly market conditions. I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a large turnover in the foreign exchange market today, and the Canadian dollar is trading at precisely what it closed at on Friday last.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: I do not expect that the terms of the agreement will have a marked effect on the exchange value of the Canadian dollar. I would stress that the change in the gold price in itself will have no direct effect on the relative value of the American and Canadian dollars.

There are some reasons to expect a stronger growth in our exports. These include the removal of the surcharge and the discriminatory features of the investment tax credit. The appreciation of other currencies will improve our competitive position. But we can also expect a more rapid growth in our imports as a result of the restoration of confidence and a more rapid expansion of Canadian production and investment. The growth of the Canadian economy this year has already been reflected in a more rapid growth of our imports than of our exports and a consequent decline in the trade surplus.

Our policy has been to seek to reduce our imports of capital. I have been asking Canadian borrowers to look to Canadian markets for their needs. I repeat that request today. I continue to believe that it is both practical and appropriate for us to supply more of our financial needs from our own savings.

Second, I would refer to the bilateral discussions of trade questions between Canada and the United States. The monetary agreement demonstrates that these have not been directly related to the United States import surcharge or the realignment of currencies. There are indeed matters of concern to both sides in the trade field. Progress is being made in discussions of these matters, and it is the intention of the government to proceed expeditiously toward a settlement. Canada and the United States are the world's largest trading partners. We hope to get rid of any abrasive elements in our commercial relationships. When the time is ripe, my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), will report to the House on the outcome of these discussions.

Third, the suppression of the United States import surcharge will enable us to wind up the operations of the Employment Support Act.

Mr. Speaker, these negotiations have not been easy. Because of the inherent complexity of the subjects, there have been many meetings—bilateral and multilateral. Officials have met. There have been four meetings of the Group of Ten ministers and governors. I chaired the first two and through the rotation system the last two benefited from the energetic and determined chairmanship of Secretary Connally. Heads of government have met. There is no doubt that the meeting two weeks ago between our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and President Nixon contributed to the satisfactory outcome from the point of view of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: Our efforts have now been rewarded with a large measure of success.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benson: The agreement has been welcomed with enthusiasm throughout the world which I am sure is shared by all Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) I am pleased and I am sure we are all pleased that a general settlement of the world monetary crisis was achieved at Washington over the weekend. I am also pleased to see that other changes have been made such as the wider spread and more flexibility with regard to the fluctuation of currencies. I am also very pleased to see that the arrangements made did not involve the repegging of the Canadian dollar at a higher level, at this time at least, and, of course, that the United States surtax is going to disappear.

There are quite a few questions to be resolved, however. For example, the minister has not made entirely clear how long the Canadian dollar can float under this arrangement. Have we been committed not to intervene under any circumstances with regard to the floating of our dollar? Were any conditions at all attached to the floating of the Canadian dollar or have we acquired some kind of special status in the International Monetary Fund? These are matters on which the minister could perhaps shed some light. I assume the agreement made by this government with the United States a couple of years ago that we would maintain our United States holdings in connection with the exchange fund in non-negotiable securities stands as it was.

We now have a floating dollar, Mr. Speaker, a dollar which floated up from about 92½ cents to 98½ cents at the time President Nixon made his announcement last August with regard to his economic policies. Since mid-August it has floated up about two more cents to about half a cent above par. I would certainly agree with the Minister of Finance that moving up from 92½ cents to something above par is as much as anybody could reasonably expect the Canadian dollar to do. We are all aware, I believe, of the effect that this upward movement has had upon many of our export industries and therefore upon jobs. We must regard increasing the number of jobs in Canada as our No. 1 priority at the present time; certainly we are far from out of the woods in this regard.

• (2:20 p.m.)

One of our concerns, Sir, is whether our dollar will float higher. Will it continue to float upward in relation to the United States dollar? It has done so since August 15, during which time most other world currencies have been moving upward in relation to the United States dollar. Now we are entering a new phase of the upward movement of most currencies. Their value will increase in relation to that of the United States dollar. What assurance is there, therefore, that continued upward floating of the Canadian dollar will not take place, as has been the case since mid-August of this year? The Minister of Finance says that the value of the Canadian dollar ought not to move upward at all in relation to the value of the United States dollar. However, that has been the trend, and the United States Secretary of the Treasury seems to have said precisely the opposite to what the Minister of Finance has said. Others are expressing concern. I am concerned myself. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this time the Minister of Finance is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It will be the first time.

Mr. Stanfield: I am certainly pleased, as I say, to see that the Canadian dollar has not been pegged at a higher rate, but I emphasize, of course, that the mere fact our dollar is floating will not provide for us anything like Utopia. There is a very real danger that we will get into the same fix if the dollar floats higher than we would have got into if the dollar had been pegged at a higher rate.

Again, Sir, we do not yet know the price we will have to pay for the arrangement that was worked out over the weekend. Were concessions made with regard to other irritants such as the auto pact? The Minister of Finance has said no. But the more relevant question is, will the United States be particularly tough on Canada in these other areas such as the auto pact? The Minister of Finance said that what happened over the weekend shows that many of our fears regarding the United States attitude toward Canada were groundless. With great respect to the minister, I do not think we have yet got the answer to that question. Many of us will be concerned about just how tough the attitude of the United States administration will now be in areas like the auto pact.

We have not returned to the pre-August era. As I said, our dollar has risen in value by about 2 per cent since the middle of August, and there are still pressures around to push it up. The so-called DISC program is still on the books. For all we know, it will soon come into effect. The government is unable to tell us what the effect of that program will be upon Canada and what contingency plans it may announce. The government has no general development strategy. The minister spoke about this settlement increasing the confidence of the business community. If he is so concerned about confidence, he might take a look at some of the domestic policies this government is pursuing—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —which will have a substantial effect in diminishing the desire of people to commit money for investment.

The air of secrecy about these whole discussions is regrettable. I must say that I know more about what has been going on in the Common Market countries than about what has been going on in Canada in relation to these discussions with the United States.

Finally, without taking too much time may I say to the minister that I recognize that this must have been a time of great anxiety and pressure for him. I am pleased that a general settlement has been reached and I am pleased that he reached the objective he sought in connection with these discussions, a floating dollar. I am concerned, however, about what the achievement of this objective will mean for Canada, about what it will mean to the movement of our dollar and about what it will mean for employment in this country. I am concerned about these matters. Certainly we do not yet know what price will be exacted from this country for having been permitted to leave our dollar afloat. I can best describe my state of mind by saying that I am in a state of hopeful scepticism.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, nothing could demonstrate the failure of the policies of the Canadian government in any attempts it may have made to develop a viable and independent economy in Canada more than one short paragraph in the minister's statement. I quote that paragraph:

> The basis has been laid for the United States to restore its balance of payments to a sound and durable position. A serious obstacle to the expansion of the U.S. economy has been removed. When the United States prospers, Canada prospers also.

That is a damning indictment of the policies of the Canadian government as we witnessed them over the past 10 to 15 years.

It is fine for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to come before us today and say that the United States balance of payments and its economy are in a sound and durable position. What we are interested in is the state of the Canadian economy. What is the situation in Canada?

The minister starts off by saying that "when the United States prospers, Canada prospers also." In the next paragraph he shows the government's compliance with that sort of point of view. He deals with the Canadian economy and, with his usual bravado, he comes forward and says: "We may therefore expect that the Canadian economy will move forward with even greater vigour." If that statement had come from any other minister on the government benches, it would have had some credibility. However, coming from the Minister of Finance, with his record regarding forecasts, this statement is not worth the paper on which it is written.

We also have to ask what deals were made behind the scene, what concessions were made and what understandings have been reached which may not yet be in writing? At one point in his statement the minister reported that progress has been made in trade talks. This can only mean that there have been some concessions. It probably means there was some horse-trading in these trade talks. Whatever concessions and adjustments have been made are of critical importance to many thousands of Canadians with regard to their everyday livelihood.

There is no doubt that to some extent the immediate impact of the announcements made today and in the last couple of days will be to relieve some stress and anxieties with regard to the economic situation, but for the long run we have no answers. I say quite frankly that none of us expects to have all of the answers now. None of us expected all of these problems to be solved by this time. But we do need to have a better idea of in what direction government policy is moving and in what direction Canada is moving.

What is the government doing to develop long-run trade policies? The minister states there are reasons to expect a stronger growth in our exports. We would like to know what exports. Is this going to be a case of continued growth in exports of our natural resources, our primary resources? The latest trade figures which have been released, for the month of November, indicate that this is the case. We are exporting more and more of our raw materials. This is becoming a greater proportion of our trade.

We also take note of the fact that talks are being held with the United States. Of critical importance to Canada, of course, is the question of our relationship with that country. This is one of the questions with which we must grapple in dealing with our long-run trade policy. Up to the present time the government has followed a policy of commiting Canada to dependency on the United States greater than many of us would like to see.

The minister reports progress in dealing with certain irritants. We would like to know which ones—the auto pact, defence sharing or some of the other irritants which have been referred to from time to time during the discussions? What options is the government exploring with respect to the future direction and thrust of trade policy? Will the government continue on the simplistic course of simply looking for global tariff reductions, desirable as these might be? Are we to strengthen our relationships with some of the trading groups? Just where is Canada going in its trade policy? None of us can find out at the present time.

I note that the minister also commented on our international investment position. He says in his statement: "I have been asking Canadian borrowers to look to Canadian markets for their needs; I repeat that request today." The point I must make is that this is a step to curtail the wrong aspect of the flow of capital into Canada. What the minister is attempting to do is to restrict the inflow of borrowed capital into Canada rather than equity capital. I think all of us recognize that there are occasions on which some flow of capital into Canada is required. But the point must be made that to the extent that we must rely on imports of capital, that capital should be in the form of borrowed capital rather than equity capital. It is obvious that the minister is moving in the wrong direction.

The minister has told us that the surcharge has been removed, as well as the discriminatory features of the investment tax credit. We must also ask the question: What about the DISC legislation, what about the legislation concerning domestic international sales corporations? Where are we moving in this regard? Are there to be any changes in United States policy in this area?

I note the minister's comments to the effect that Canada will continue to operate a floating exchange rate. We certainly approve this decision, as we have for some time. But we are also concerned about what commitments might have been made in this respect. What concessions were made in this regard? I note one item which appeared in the Globe and Mail this morning—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This might be a good moment to interrupt the hon. member if he is going to quote the Globe and Mail. I have to remind the hon. member that he should note the terms of the Standing Order, which requires the comments of hon. members on ministerial statements to be brief. I realize that when an important statement has been made members then should be allowed some latitude when making their comments. Nevertheless, heed must be taken of the Standing Order which invites members to comment briefly. The hon. member for Regina East might give this some thought as he goes on to quote the newspaper and perhaps reach a conclusion at an early moment.

Mr. Burton: I shall certainly take your advice, Mr. Speaker. Concern has been expressed in some quarters because reference has been made to a temporary continuation of the floating exchange rate, and also that there will be only minimal concessions or interventions by Canadian authorities in the exchange market.

We also note the minister's statement that the Employment Support Act will be wound up. I hope we shall receive a report on its operations very shortly. I hope, too, that we shall also be given a report on the extent to which the agricultural stabilization fund was used to support the export situation with respect to a number of agricultural products.

Finally, the job situation will continue to be a cause of concern to the Canadian people over the winter months and next summer. To judge from the indications afforded us at the present time, and despite the cheery statement by the Minister of Finance, I think there is a long dark winter ahead for many thousands of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I perused the statement of the Minister of Finance only a few minutes before the House met, when I received the English text together with a memorandum explaining why we did not get the French text. I therefore accept the minister's apologies and I am sure he did his very best.

The minister's statement is brief, and so will mine be. It shows that with some goodwill it is possible to alter the monetary system, once it has been decided to do so. We have once more the proof that it is men who control money. This is a statement to be remembered, and which the people will be able to understand.

The devaluation of the American dollar and the re-evaluation of the currencies of other countries, while allowing the Canadian dollar to continue to float, show clearly that changes are necessary in the financial field in order to prevent economic disasters. The time has come for action; I hope that it is not too late and that it is still possible to repair the damage.

I am happy to learn that the American surtax will surely disappear. We will then be able to see whether this policy is liable to improve the Canadian economy so that the whole country may benefit.

However, I deplore the fact that our economy should to such an extent depend on that of the United States. I suggest that we should never let up in our efforts to establish our economy on a more solid basis, so that it be less dependent on the American economy and more on the potential of the domestic market.

We could—and such is the wish that I express for the New Year—make another reform which, further to providing Canadians with a higher minimum income, would boost their purchasing power so as to enable them to buy a greater part of Canadian production. We would thus ensure a better distribution of goods and a greater degree of independence in relation to export markets.

And were that wish to materialize, I would be able to say at the end of 1972 that it was the best year for the Canadian government and for Canadian consumers.

COMBINES

TABLING OF REPORT ON CONCENTRATION IN MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES OF CANADA—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table two copies, one in each official language, of a research report entitled "Concentration in the Manufacturing Industries of Canada", carried out by the combines investigation branch of my department. The report provides previously unavailable economic information concerning the level of concentration in Canadian manufacturing industries.

The study contains comprehensive data on the industrial structure of Canada. In essence, it indicates that the level of concentration in the manufacturing sector of Canadian industry appears to be growing and is significantly higher than in the United States. This has implications for Canada's industrial and commercial policies and has a direct bearing on any discussion of competition policy.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is tabling documents under Standing Order 41(2) he has no business at all to make an accompanying statement, and he should know that.

Mr. Speaker: My interpretation of the minister's action was that he was making a statement on motions. He has made a statement, and I see no difficulty about hearing comments from opposition members.

Mr. Baldwin: We knew nothing about the statement being made over here.

MANPOWER

REPORT ON TRAINING PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. The pressing and urgent circumstances relate to the evaluation report of the Canada Manpower training program, tabled in the House on December 16, 1971 by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, which purports to contain evidence that the training program results in higher wages and higher employment rates for the graduates.

This alleged evidence is in conflict with the analysis made by the Economic Council of Canada in its Eighth Annual Review published last September. If unanimous consent is given I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave):

That this House, taking note of the evident contradiction about the effectiveness of the Canada Manpower training program, urges that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to inquire into the appropriateness of a government department evaluating its own achievements.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

CANADA POISON PREVENTION PACKAGING BILL

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN FROM POISONOUS HOUSEHOLD SUBSTANCES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-274, respecting the protection of children from poisonous household substances.

Questions

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is simply to ensure that special packaging will be provided for household substances that are likely to cause serious harm or injury especially to children, so that the occurrence of all such incidents can be eliminated or minimized.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

STANDARD NUMBER OF WORKING HOURS IN A YEAR—NATIONAL STANDARD MINIMUM HOURLY WAGE

1. What does the Department of Labour consider to be the standard number of working hours in a year?

2. What does the Department of Labour consider to be the minimum hourly wage that should be paid as a national standard?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): 1. The Canada Labour Code, Part III, prescribes standard hours of eight in a day and 40 in a week, subject to averaging of hours over a period of time in certain circumstances. *Includes Work Annex.

Note: Answer 2(a) and (b) The figures given have been extracted, as of October 25, 1971, from inmate records held by each institution, and reflect as accurately as can be determined, the current Canadian Indian inmate population. Although admission forms record racial origin, many inmates of obvious Canadian Indian parentage declare themselves as Canadian. Also, many native Indian inmates, although admitting of Canadian Indian ancestry, do not divulge their status, i.e., Treaty Indian or otherwise. Accordingly, inmate records cannot accurately reflect the actual number of Canadian Indian inmates or their various categories. In addition, the time and cost factors which would be involved in searching back files to determine the approximate number of Canadian Indians in custody, as of December 1970, would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

POST OFFICE—INCREASE IN POSTAGE ON JUNK MAIL

Question No. 1,982—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider increasing the postage on "junk mail" in an effort to reduce the amount of such mail and the cost to the taxpayers in subsidy?

SURVEY OF RADIOACTIVITY IN COLOUR TV SETS

Question No. 2,028—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has the government surveyed a sampling of privately owned colour TV sets to determine radioactivity and, if so, how many owners participated in the survey?

2. What was the cost of the survey?

3. Have the results of the survey been obtained and evaluated?

4. According to the survey, is there any harm due to radiation from colour TV sets?

5. Does the government propose any further experimentation in this field in the interests of safety to Canadians?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In 1969, the Department of National Health and Welfare conducted a survey of about 500 privately-owned colour TV sets to determine the extent of X-ray emission.

2. Approximately $6,000.

3. The results of the survey were published in a scientific report available from the Department. Summary findings were disseminated to the media through news releases.

4. About 11 per cent of the colour TV sets tested were found to emit radiation somewhat above the recommended level. In view of this, the Department, through the media, recommended to the public TV habits that would avoid any possible harm.

5. It was determined that the excess radiation levels were largely caused by deficiencies in certain components. Subsequently, these were greatly improved by the Industry. Regulations governing design, construction and performance to ensure safety have been developed by the Department and are expected to be in force soon under the Radiation Emitting Devices Act.

PEI—GREEN GABLES GOLF COURSE

Question No. 2,191—Mr. MacLean:

1. Is it the intention of the government to redesign and rearrange the Green Gables Golf Course in the Prince Edward Island National Park and, if so, has any survey been carried out among persons who regularly golf on this course or among local residents as to the desirability of the proposed change and with what result?

2. What is the necessity or rationale of the redesigning?

3. What is the total estimated cost of the rearrangement of the golf course?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The National and Historic Parks Branch is presently engaged in a number of planning studies of Prince Edward Island National Park, particularly in the Cavendish area. Some of the alternative planning proposals being considered do involve modifications to the Green Gables Golf Course. However, no decision has been made as to what, if any, modifications will be necessary. Since the planning studies are still in the initial stages, surveys have not yet been carried out.

2. In order to meet the ever increasing demand for beach facilities and to prevent further deterioration of the park resources in the Cavendish area it is necessary to modernize and expand the capacity of existing beach facilities. In order to accomplish this redevelopment proposal certain lands now occupied by the golf course may be needed. In anticipation of this need the National and Historic Parks Branch is engaged in acquiring additional land which would facilitate any modifications to the golf course should they prove necessary.

3. Since planning studies are only in the initial stages and several alternatives are involved it is not possible at this time to make any estimation of cost related to possible golf course modifications.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SETTLEMENT—CONSEQUENCES FOR CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance about the agreement reached in Washington. Are there any restrictions, either imposed or understood, with regard to the length of time it is permissible for Canada to float its dollar?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): None whatsoever, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to understand that the Canadian dollar has a special status now under the International Monetary Fund and that Canada will, as a member of that fund, be permitted to allow its dollar to float indefinitely?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best thing is to read from the communiqué:

The Canadian Minister informed the Group that Canada intends to permit fundamental market forces to establish the exchange rate without intervention except as required to maintain orderly conditions.

This was agreed upon by the Group of Ten.

Mr. Stanfield: May I refer the minister to page 4 of this statement where he said:

I do not expect that the terms of the agreement will have a marked effect on the exchange value of the Canadian dollar.

I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to be a little more precise as to what he means by a marked effect. Does he means that under the terms of this agreement the Canadian dollar will not move upward more than, say, a cent?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, what I have been trying to explain to the Leader of the Opposition for some weeks now is that the market has been determining the value of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the United States dollar. The fact that the United States has devalued its currency in terms of gold should not in itself affect this relationship. Underlying market forces can affect this relationship, and therefore one cannot forecast from day to day what the value of the dollar will be while it is floating.

Mr. Stanfield: Recognizing that there is more to this agreement than a devaluation of the U.S. dollar in terms of gold and also a revaluation of other important currencies in the world, will the minister indicate what he means when he says that this agreement will not have a marked effect?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the value of the Canadian dollar in terms of the United States dollar, as I said, has been determined by its free market value. The fact that other currencies have floated upward in the period since August 15 and have now been revalued upward will, of course, react favourably with respect to Canada's dealings abroad.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question regarding the quotation the minister gave the Leader of the Opposition concerning Canada's situation in maintaining a floating exchange rate. Would the minister indicate whether use of the term "temporarily" has reference to a time period already established or to a particular set of circumstances? If so, could the minister elaborate on the matter for the benefit of the House?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, "temporarily" refers to a time period which I should not like to define.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF SCREENING AGENCY AND INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the close relationship between foreign investment in Canada and the exchange rate of our dollar, can the Prime Minister say whether the government will soon be announcing the screening agency to which he made reference in an interview broadcast yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the reference to which the hon. member alludes but the government's announcement on foreign investment will be made soon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will that announcement include a statement as to the government's proposal for industry in Canada—in other words, its industrial strategy—so that we will know in what direction the government wants this country to go?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to wait until the government makes its announcement to know its content, but I dare say it will be more precise than the policy of the New Democratic Party on foreign investment.

TRADE

POSSIBLE CANADIAN CONCESSIONS IN DISCUSSION OF IRRITANTS WITH UNITED STATES FOLLOWING INTERNATIONAL MONETARY SETTLEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to an earlier question. Can the Minister of Finance give an assurance to the House and to the country that Canada will make no concessions in respect of the so-called trade irritants which have been under discussion?

• (2:50 p.m.)

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the context of the settlement reached on Saturday no concessions were made by Canada whatsoever. The matter of trade is being discussed quite separately by my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A number of trade irritants on both sides of the border are being discussed and it is hoped that this discussion will move forward toward a conclusion because one thing we need in trade with the United States is reasonable affability between the two countries in trade matters.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer my question. Is he able to assure the House that no substantial concessions will be made by Canada in respect of these so-called trade irritants?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if there are concessions made by Canada in respect of trade irritants we will expect compensating concessions from the United States. This is the reason for the negotiation that is taking place. Both sides have trade irritants and we want to get rid of them so that trade may move in larger amounts even more freely back and forth across our borders.

CRIMINAL CODE

INTRODUCTION OF BILL RESPECTING RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

In view of the increasing number of murders in Canada and the obvious concern of the population in that regard as evidenced by the letters we receive, would the hon. minister tell the House, in order to comfort the population, whether he intends to introduce in due time a bill reinstating capital punishment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, anything relating to capital punishment should be considered by the Parliament of Canada perhaps before December 29, 1972, at which date the present legislation ceases to apply.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice.

In connection with the qualified murder of policemen or prison guards, I have just obtained an answer to the effect that since 1967, 16 policemen have been murdered and that capital punishment has not been carried out in any of those cases. Could the minister tell us under what regulation the legislation is not applied?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking the minister to give his interpretation of a statute and I do not think that question is in order.

TRADE

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND COMMON MARKET RESPECTING ACCESS FOR AMERICAN FARM PRODUCTS—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance referred to further consultations on trade between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his United States counterpart. In view of the fact that the President of the United States and the President of France in their meeting did discuss access to the Common Market for farm products from the United States, may I ask whether discussions are taking place between our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his counterpart in the United States to gain greater access for Canadian farm products?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this negotiation in the trade area with regard to agricultural products is to go on between the United States and the European Common Market. We have expressed our interest in any such negotiations. We will be in touch with the United States concerning the negotiations and we would expect any concessions which ultimately come out of these talks would be non-discriminatory.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Finance say we have merely expressed an interest in such negotiations or is Canada actively participating in negotiations with regard to this particular point? Also, are there other points such as the removal of non-tariff barriers by the Common Market which was one item that was a subject of discussion earlier, and is Canada doing anything to pursue actively the removal of these non-tariff barriers?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, these are bilateral negotiations between the United States and the European Common Market. We have been pursuing the same ends in our dealings with the European Common Market but the negotiations presently going on, as I understand it, are bilateral negotiations between the United States and Japan and between the United States and the Common Market. We, of course, have indicated our interest in them and would expect that any results would be non-discriminatory in nature. With regard to the Common Market, we have been dealing with them and expressing our opinions on various matters to them directly.

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE THAT LIFE SENTENCES SHALL BE SERVED BY THOSE WHO KILL POLICE AND CUSTODIAL OFFICERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to ask the Minister of Justice. The first arises out of questions which have been asked this afternoon with regard to the abolition of the death penalty. Has consideration been given on the part of the government to meeting the serious situation created by reason of the numbers of police and custodial officers who have been murdered in the last year and a half? Has any consideration been given to changing the Criminal Code to provide that those who kill police officers or custodial officers shall serve their life sentences rather than placing them in the position of having little to lose by killing officers charged with the administration of justice?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): As I said, Mr. Speaker, the whole subject of capital punishment will have to be reviewed in some way before the present law which is on a trial period of five years expires on December 29, 1972. At that time the government would make its intentions known.

SUGGESTED APPEAL AGAINST SENTENCES IMPOSED ON KINGSTON PENITENTIARY INMATES FOR MURDER DURING RIOT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have one other question. Normally I do not believe in harsh sentences, but the fact is that across this country public opinion has been aroused over the sentences imposed on certain inmates of Kingston penitentiary for murder and unspeakable cruelties. In view of the fact that there are fears in various penitentiaries across Canada that the sentences are so light as to constitute an invitation to some inmates to follow the same course taken by those at Kingston, has the government communicated with the Attorney General of Ontario to suggest that there should be appeals taken against those sentences? While I have great admiration for Mr. Justice Henderson, judges do make mistakes.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the responsibility for instituting or not instituting any appeal in this case, as the right hon. gentleman suggested, lies with the Attorney General of Ontario. It is my understanding there was a communication between the Solicitor General of Canada and the Attorney General of Ontario but the Attorney General does not intend to appeal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this speaking appliance was not working for the latter part of the minister's statement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I said it is my understanding that there was a communication between the Solicitor General of Canada and the Attorney General of Ontario but that the Attorney General of Ontario does not intend to appeal the sentences.

POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO ENSURE STRICTER CONTROL OVER GUNS IN LIGHT OF MURDER INCREASE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Justice. In view of the increasing number of murders that are taking place in which automatic weapons are used, is the minister considering making amendments to the Criminal Code in order to have much stricter control over these weapons and other types of guns which can be used to murder people?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will take that into consideration but of course Parliament reviewed quite thoroughly the so-called gun law in the Criminal Code review in 1968-69.

POLLUTION

DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES TO ACHIEVE UNIFORM NATIONAL STANDARDS OF CONTROL

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of the Environment but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. Since 250 employees now appear to be in danger of losing their jobs in Ontario because of an industry moving from that province to another where pollution control is less strict, is the government initiating talks with the provinces in an attempt to achieve uniform national standards to discourage actions of this type?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): I will have to take this question as notice.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TAKE-OVER OF CREDIT COMPANIES BY U.S. FIRM—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION—PROTECTION AGAINST STORAGE OF FALSE INFORMATION IN DATA BANKS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the recent takeover by an American firm of six Canadian credit companies after that firm had been served with an American federal court order forbidding the company to buy any more credit companies in the United States, can the minister tell the House whether his department is going to investigate these takeovers under the Combines Investigation Act and whether or not his department will review American controlled takeovers of Canadian data bank systems?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act examines all takeovers to see whether there are any implications under the Combines Investigation Act, but naturally it is the practice in inquiries of this kind not to reveal the nature or details of the investigation that is in progress.

Mr. McGrath: I would ask the minister whether he would review this whole area of data banks, especially in light of takeovers by American companies of Canadian data banks, and would he give consideration to bringing in regulations or legislation to protect Canadians from false and often misleading information stored in data banks either in Canada or abroad?

Mr. Basford: Some provinces have legislated with regard to credit data banks or are proposing to legislate. On the transfer of material from this country to others it is a matter of great concern and one about which my colleague, the Minister of Communications, is concerned and has already made statements.

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—RELEASE OF TECHNICAL STUDIES UNDERLYING ENVIRONMENTAL REPORT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is for the Prime Minister. It arises out of the statement made by the Minister of the Environment that the report on the James Bay environmental situation will be released. Would the Prime Minister undertake to make sure that when this report is released the full technical studies underlying this 40-page brief will be released to the public at the same time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not sure whether the hon. member is referring to a report made by the Quebec government or to the studies of the federal government. If it is the former—the hon. member is nodding his head—I cannot undertake anything on behalf of the province of Quebec, but I will ensure that they receive notice of the request of the hon. member.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN PRICE OF GOLD—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE REGULATIONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): My question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the United States has raised the price of gold to $38, is it the intention of the minister to change the regulations under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to provide the maximum benefit to those communities that are dependent on that industry?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): We will have to take a look at this matter. We have not done so yet.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister. On Thursday I asked the Prime Minister whether he could bring the House up to date on the results achieved by the investigation into the leak of the Gray report. He said he would look into the matter. I wonder whether, as a result of that investigation into the whole matter, he is now able to bring the House up to date on the results that have been achieved during the five weeks since the investigation was started?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. After the question was asked I did have the matter looked into and I was told the investigation is still proceeding at the departmental level.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BAIL REFORM ACT—DATE OF PROCLAMATION—INSTRUCTIONS TO POLICE FORCES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question to the Minister of Justice involves the pending proclamation of the bail reform bill. First, I should like to ask the minister regarding the date of proclamation and, second, whether the hon. gentleman has worked out in co-operation with his provincial counterparts a common handbook or method of instruction to all police forces across Canada dealing with this act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The bail reform bill will be proclaimed as a statute on January 3. Yes, I have worked out with all provincial Attorneys General at a meeting with the uniformity commissioners in August and in subsequent communications in October the use of a manual prepared by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which has been made available to all provinces that enjoy a contractual relationship with the RCMP. As for Ontario and Quebec, we have made the manual available to those two provinces to use as they see fit.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISPOSITION OF FUNDS TO ASSIST EAST PAKISTANI REFUGEES IN INDIA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is now in a position to answer my question of a few days ago regarding the government's projected program of aid for the suffering people of the Indian subcontinent.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): A series of discussions have been going on and I hope that before Parliament rises for the Christmas recess I will be able to make a report.

REPRESENTATIONS FOR RETURN OF SHEIK MUJIBIR RAHMAN TO EAST PAKISTAN

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): May I ask the minister whether he intends to make or has made representations to the government of Pakistan for the return of Sheik Mujibir Rahman to the area which gave him such support not too long ago?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it would be appropriate or particularly useful for us to make such representations at present. I have no doubt that in Pakistan very serious consideration is being given to the best way of promoting peace in that area and this will be one of the matters which will be given most serious consideration. After all, the Canadian government was probably the first of the governments to suggest that a political settlement was needed in East Pakistan.

BANGLA DESH—PROTESTS AGAINST ALLEGED ATROCITIES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs has taken any action on behalf of Canada in protesting against the cruelty and savagery that are taking place in the new country of Bangla Desh and whether or not any assurances have been received from the Indian government that atrocities will be kept under control?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not heard any suggestions that the Indian army itself is involved in anything except trying to maintain law and order and trying to suppress these atrocities. I do not know to which authority we could make these representations at present.

[Later:]

BANGLA DESH—POSSIBLE RECOGNITION BY CANADA

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I have a supplementary question to one asked earlier, and it is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If the Indian government is not responsible for the maintenance of law and order in Bangla Desh, can the minister inform us whether Canada has made any decision regarding the recognition of that country as India has requested?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, the government does not intend to recognize Bangla Desh as yet; since we are not satisfied that there is a government in that area responsible for administration. As far as I can see, the principal control now rests with the Indian army itself.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ACTION TO BE TAKEN CONCERNING REMARK BY PROVINCIAL JUDGE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the representations by the Native Council of Canada to the Minister of Justice last Friday, and in particular the racial slur on all the Indian people in Canada made by Judge Collins in Sudbury, and in view of the statement of the Minister of Justice to the leader of our party a short time ago that he was looking into the matter, what action has the minister decided to take against Judge Collins for this slander against the native people of Canada? Does he intend to refer the matter to the Judicial Council of Canada for investigation and report?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Since I replied in the House to the hon. gentleman's leader, as he puts it, I have received a report from Chief Judge Colin Bennett of the county and district courts of Ontario, enclosing the transcript and his report on the matter. I understand that a similar document was sent to the Attorney General of Ontario. The report is being analysed and I will be consulting with the Attorney General of Ontario as to what action, if any, should be taken.

UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC RESOLUTION FOR MIDDLE EAST SETTLEMENT—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. How did Canada vote at the General Assembly on the resolution proposed by the United Arab Republic for a possible Middle East settlement, and did Canada support the amendment to that resolution proposed by several African states, including Senegal?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): If the hon. member and I are referring to the same resolution, as I think we are, Canada abstained along with some 36 other countries. I cannot answer specifically the second of these questions, but if the hon. gentleman will allow me to take it as notice I will find the answer.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEW PROCEDURE TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I believe about a week ago he indicated to the House that a formula was being devised under which it was hoped that applications for unemployment insurance would be expedited and that an announcement to that effect would be made later. Has such a mechanism or formula been devised, and when can we expect a statement with respect to this very important and urgent matter?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be making a statement in a matter of a few days. A program has been devised to speed up the processing of claims as of January 15 when more computer time will be available.

EFFECT OF VACATION PAY ON RIGHT OF CONSTRUCTION WORKERS TO BENEFITS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which arises from the brief recently forwarded to the minister by the construction workers. As a result of the meeting between the minister and the building and construction trades representatives last Friday, I believe, has the government agreed to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the regulations so that savings accumulated for annual vacations by construction workers will not deny or delay individual claims for unemployment insurance benefits? In other words, does the government intend to remove any reference to vacation pay denying or delaying the right of an individual to collect unemployment

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the underlying philosophy of the commission is that it is not a welfare program, and we are not persuaded by those people who suggest that when you are on vacation your vacation pay should be supplemented by unemployment insurance benefits.

[Later:]

DIFFICULTY IN PROCESSING CLAIMS IN EASTERN CANADA—POSSIBILITY OF PAYMENT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this is supplementary to the previous question asked of the Minister of Labour. I realize the minister is probably on top of this subject, and he is usually most co-operative in all these matters, but in view of the numerous telephone calls, letters and wires that we are getting from the eastern part of Canada in regard to the hold-up of payments of unemployment insurance benefits—I realize there have been difficulties in Moncton—would he make an extra special effort to see that as many cheques as possible are issued before Christmas?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend we sent about 20 extra experts to the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices in the maritime area to do precisely that, to expedite distribution of cheques before Christmas.

INCOME TAX

ALLEGED TIME LIMIT ON PROCESSING OF BILL BY SENATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the speed with which the Senate is processing Bill C-259, can he inform the House whether or not, when the bill was forwarded to the Senate from this chamber, a stipulated time limit for consideration of it was attached to the bill?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has a supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's well known commitment to democracy, and in view of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a speech. Certainly, I had very serious reservations about the form of his first question but I allowed it. He is now making a speech. If he has a question to ask it should be asked directly. His preface goes beyond the terms of the procedural limitations.

Mr. Broadbent: I will come quickly to the point. In view of the speed with which the Senate is processing the bill, would the Prime Minister take steps in the early future that would result in the abolition of this absurd and undemocratic institution?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRYING—PAYMENT OF BUTTERFAT SUBSIDY TO CREAM SHIPPERS—POSSIBLE PRODUCTION INCREASE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Since he has announced that the butterfat subsidy will be paid to cream shippers and that computers were used in tabulating this information earlier, can he give us an indication of whether there will be an increase in butterfat production as a result of this change in policy and how soon these retroactive payments will be made to those who have not been paid since 1967?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, payments will be made at the end of this dairy year, that is, around April 1, and they will be retroactive for the shipments that have been made all during the 1971-72 dairy year but only up to the amount that the quota was paid before. So far as the other part of the question is concerned, I cannot estimate the amount of additional butterfat that will come forward, but presumably there will be some.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PULP AND PAPER—POSSIBLE MEETING WITH PREMIER OF NEWFOUNDLAND CONCERNING CLOSURE OF BOWATERS MILL

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In commending him for his co-operation with the Premier of New Brunswick in analysing, identifying and alleviating the difficulties arising out of the partial closure of the Consolidated Bathurst Company operation in New Brunswick, I wish to ask him if he would advise the House whether he has had a similar meeting with the Premier of Newfoundland arising out of the difficulties surrounding partial closure of Bowaters Pulp and Paper Mill in Corner Brook?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the Corner Brook mill will be closing down one machine on December 31, resulting in a crippling effect on the economy and many hundreds of citizens, would the minister initiate a meeting with the Premier of Newfoundland, to include the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, to try to alleviate this problem?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if the Premier of Newfoundland feels it might be helpful to meet with me I will be happy to meet him.

Mr. Bell: Who is the premier?

AID TO ACADIA FISHERIES PLANTS AT MULGRAVE AND CANSO

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Several days ago I had occasion to ask the minister a question concerning possible federal aid from his department for Acadia Fisheries plants at Mulgrave and Canso. Since that time there have been certain developments. One of the plants involved has been destroyed. Can the minister bring the House up to date with respect to what change, if any, there has been in contemplated federal aid?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think one of the plants is likely to reopen. The other just burned down, and we have received no application for the second one.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE RATES OF CANADIAN AND U.S. DOLLARS—DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY—FURTHER MEETINGS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to earlier questions I wonder if the Minister of Finance could comment on the substantial difference of opinion between himself and the American Secretary of the Treasury on the question of exchange rates between the Canadian and U.S. dollars?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that a question asked in those terms is hardly in order. The hon. member asks the minister to comment on a difference of opinion that may exist. In those terms the question cannot be allowed. The hon. member might like to rephrase it.

Mr. Anderson: Would the minister inform the House if he is planning further meetings with his American counterpart on this subject, and also whether he and Mr. Connally simply intend to allow events to take their course so that we will only find out from history who is right?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there was a joint statement issued by us in this regard. As I pointed out to the Leader of the Opposition, we are one of the few exchange markets open in the world today, and the information I have is that the Canadian dollar is trading at its closing price on Friday last, so there has been no change so far in the price of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar.

SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN FUND—ALLEGED INADEQUACY—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL AMOUNT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the inadequacy of the special development loan fund to handle the federal-provincial winter works program, is he considering increasing the total amount of that special development loan fund?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH DENMARK

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister now in a position to table the agreement or exchange of diplomatic notes between Denmark and Canada which was brought to his attention on Thursday of last week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asked me a question at that time which I was not in a position to reply to but I can do so now. An agreement has been reached at the official level ad referendum. I hope it will be coming before the cabinet in January.

FISHERIES AGREEMENTS WITH SPAIN, PORTUGAL, FRANCE AND UNITED KINGDOM—CONSULTATION WITH MARITIME PROVINCES BEFORE RATIFICATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): As a supplementary question, in view of the fact that Canada is also negotiating treaties with France, Spain, Portugal and the United Kingdom, would the minister agree not to proceed with formal ratification of those agreements until consultation takes place with the premiers of the four Atlantic Provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH

SHARED-COST PROGRAMS—PERMISSION TO PROVINCES TO OPT OUT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Following the meeting last week with the provinces on the matter of shared-cost programs, will the federal government allow other provinces as well as Quebec to opt out, as requested by Ontario and Alberta?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, the conference was not on that question at all. That matter was clearly laid to rest at the first ministers' conference.

Mr. Stanfield: In what way?

[Later:]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare supplementary to his statement that the question of opting out by the provinces was laid to rest at the conference of first ministers. Could the minister indicate in what manner it was laid to rest?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I meant that it was dealt with at that particular conference. The whole question of opting out did not arise at the health ministers' conference. The federal government heard proposals from the provinces and we countered with proposals of our own which they agreed to go home and consider seriously. None of these proposals included any discussion of opting out.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—TARGET DATE FOR INCREASES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): In view of the confidence expressed by the province of Quebec that they would be reaching agreement with the federal government with regard to the introduction of their family allowance program, is the minister now able to state whether he will be meeting the deadline of May 1 for increases in family allowance benefits?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that, as I have stated, in all likelihood the legislation will not come on until the next session it would all depend on when it was passed and with what speed. It would seem rather difficult to adhere to that type of deadline.

ENERGY

RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. My question refers to the Canada-United States discussions on matters of energy exports which were adjourned, I understand, during the monetary crisis. I should like to ask whether these talks have been resumed or when they will be resumed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not know when the talks will be resumed.

Mr. Rose: I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to report on any developments arising from these talks so far and/or what Canada's stand is during these discussions, and can we expect a statement in the near future?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF WOMEN WHO MARRY NON-INDIANS—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF ACT IN LIGHT OF LAVELL CASE

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the hon. members are applauding because there is a growing body of evidence that the number of Conservatives in this country is increasing. I am very pleased to say that my wife and I feel we are contributing our small part to this process through the birth of our new son.

I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the Ontario Supreme Court ruling that certain parts of the Indian Act are contrary to the Bill of Rights, in particular the part which provides that a woman loses her Indian status when she marries an non-Indian, in the interests of justice does the minister contemplate initiating any changes in the Indian Act?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the hon. member but also to assure him that all the fertility is not on his side of the House. I would suggest to him that it is certainly one way to impress upon one's constituents that one gets home from time to time.

Mr. Speaker, the Lavell case has now been appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada and I think it preferable to await that judgment before deciding what ought to be done. If any amendments are to be made to the Indian Act, they will be the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN LAVELL APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister which was originally intended for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who is absent. Will any special funds be provided to Indian persons in this case to assist them in their Supreme Court hearing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having missed the first part of the question I cannot give the answer but I shall refer the matter to the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1971

The House proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the statute law relating to the Income Tax Act.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide among other things:

(1) That with respect to taxable income earned after June 30, 1971, the tax payable under Part I of the said Act for the 1971 taxation year by every corporation liable to pay tax computed under section 39 or 69 of the said Act as it reads in its application to the 1971 taxation year be reduced by an amount equal to seven per cent of the tax so computed.

(2) That the tax payable under Part I of the said Act by an individual for the 1971 taxation year be reduced by an amount equal to one and one-half per cent of the basic tax referred to in subsection 33(1) of the said Act as it reads in its application to the 1971 taxation year.

(3) That there may be deducted in computing the income from a business of a taxpayer for a taxation year under Part I of the said Act an additional amount equal to sixty per cent of any expenses certified by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to have been incurred by the taxpayer in the period commencing on November 1, 1971, and ending on March 31, 1974 as salary or wages of persons employed by him, under a "training on the job program" as defined in the said measure, except that where any amount has been paid or has become payable to the taxpayer under any such program providing for direct payments to the taxpayer in respect of any such expenses so certified to have been incurred by him, no deduction may be made in respect of those expenses in computing his income from the business but the amount so paid or payable to him shall be exempt from income tax.

Motion agreed to.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-260, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not know just how this came about, but I would refer the hon. minister and the Chair to Bill C-260, section 3 which is not in conformity with the ways and means resolution. Paragraph 1(a) of the ways and means resolution, which appears at page 12 of Votes and Proceeding for June 18, 1971 reads as follows:

section 5 of Schedule I thereof be repealed.

Section 3 of the act reads as follows:

Section 4 of Schedule I to the said act is repealed.

On the night of the budget debate, the minister indicated that he was removing the special excise tax as it applied to those items which appear in section 5 of schedule I to the Excise Tax Act. That is quite understandable because we know that those items related to stereophonic and electronic equipment. However, I do not think that the minister wishes to delete, coin vending machines from the tax provisions.

I have a copy of the office consolidation of the Excise Tax Act. Schedule I, paragraph 4 reads:

Coin, disc or token operated games or amusement devices of all kinds 10 per cent.

I do not think the minister meant to remove the 10 per cent excise tax on slot machines, which may be what is being done by this bill. I therefore, think that perhaps the item on the order paper should stand, in order that it may be examined with a view to seeing how the government is to get out of this little mess. I know that this is a technical matter, but the bill either conforms to the Ways and Means resolution or it does not, and this bill does not.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to look into this matter. Section 4 of Schedule I of the said act is repealed. Section 5(a), (b), (c) and (d) deal with phonograph record playing devices, television receivers, electron tubes, cathode ray tubes, and so on.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps the copy I have is completely out of date, and perhaps these sections have been completely renumbered. If that is the case, I am prepared to accept the minister's explanation. I was not aware that we had eliminated paragraph 4 of any of the preceding paragraphs on a prior occasion. So far as I am concerned, slot machines are still covered by the excise tax. Perhaps the minister could explain this.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I will be pleased to look into the matter. The information I have is that section 5, Schedule I, includes items which I indicated under (a), (b), (c) and (d). If we could proceed with the bill, I will look into the matter. I am told that the bill is correct, as worded. It is correct, according to the present act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then, the Ways and Means resolution must be wrong. It is either one or the other. One refers to section 5 and the other to section 4 of schedule I of the act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is about par for the course for this debate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Either the Ways and Means resolution is wrong, or the bill is wrong. I am asking the minister to let us know which one he is going to abide by.

Mr. Benson: I will abide by the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We have already passed the Ways and Means resolution and we may be in the same kind of mess that we were in with regard to the tax bill.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I certainly have no idea about the actual situation. I would have to read both the Ways and Means resolution and the statute which is to be amended by this bill in order to determine which one is right and which one is wrong. The minister appears to wish to make a further contribution to the debate.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I should refer to the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1971. I think the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was referring to the previous statutes, from which this wording was taken. We are dealing with the Revised Statutes, 1971, and we are amending section 4 of Schedule I of the existing act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter could be looked into. In the meantime, there can be consultations with the parliamentary counsel and officers at the table to see whether the matter can be cleared up in some way. If we need to make technical changes or procedural changes because an error has been made, I am sure hon. members can devise a way to achieve that end.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there will be a further statement by the minister or his parliamentary secretary in order to amplify the remarks that were made on budget night. After all, these items were not among the more important ones of the budget because Bill C-259 was, shall we say, Schedule A in the Ways and Means motion. Nevertheless, these items certainly are important. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary or the minister could deal with the problem raised by the Ways and Means resolution?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a lengthy comment to make on the bill at the present time. It contains three amendments of substance to the Excise Tax Act. There are also amendments to the Old Age Security Act and to the Excise Tax Act in order to provide that the 3 percentage point of sales tax now imposed as an Old Age Security tax will, in future, be imposed under the Excise Tax Act. The amendments planned to the Excise Tax Act provide, first, that machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for purposes of reducing pollution are made exempt from sales tax; second, margarine and similar spreads are made exempt from sales tax and, thirdly, the special excise tax of 15 per cent on radios, television sets and electron tubes, is repealed. In addition, a technical amendment to the Excise Tax Act provides that a sales tax exemption for goods described in tariff item 69520-1 will remain as it was before the wording regarding this tariff item is changed by the bill to amend the customs tarrif.

The amendment to the Old Age Security Act will repeal the 3 per cent Old Age Security tax on sales imposed under that act. However, these 3 percentage points of tax will in future be imposed under the Excise Tax Act and this change will not result in any change in the total rate of sales tax.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we shall have a slow and desultory discussion on this particular bill. These items were introduced so long ago that I think most members of the House have forgotten that these measures actually exist. They have now come back to be considered at, shall we say, the fifty ninth minute before midnight.

The amendment is designed, first of all, to remove the excise tax on margarine. I remember thinking at the time of the budget that perhaps a freer use of margarine might make the contents of the budget and subsequent bills slide down, so to speak, a lot more easily. In any event, there will not be much saving. It is a question of whether or not savings that might have been effected by the manufacturers and retailers have been passed on to the consumer. Whether or not that saving has been passed on is a good question. We do not know whether the price of margarine reflects the exact change that was introduced in the budget. I have not canvassed the market to see whether the price of margarine is lower than it would have been if this particular provision had not been included in the budget. I thought the tax on margarine was an unsound tax and I am glad to see that it has gone. I thought it was an anachronism to have such a tax on a generally accepted foodstuff. It was imposed in the past in order to protect the dairy industry. I recall many years ago reading of the initial results of the bill that was brought in to this House from the other place and sponsored, I believe, by Senator Isnor. That bill legalized the sale of margarine in this country.

The one item I wish to talk about is the elimination of the excise tax on those items that are enumerated under paragraph 5 of the Ways and Means motion or section 4 of the bill. I believe the minister has given me a proper private explanation. The existing bill has come about as a result of the proclamation of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1971. The ways and means motion was based on the law as it then existed. This House passed the ways and means resolution on the law as it then existed, but sometime around July 15 the Revised Statutes of Canada 1971 were proclaimed. This effected a consolidation of what had heretofore been paragraph 5 of Section 1. It is now paragraph 4 of Section 1.

I think the point of order I raised has now had sufficient explanation. The question is, did the removal of the excise tax on these particular items, phonographs, record playing devices, radio-broadcasting receiving sets and combinations of these, television receiving sets, electronic tubes and other related items, have the effect which the minister hoped? I would like to have some information on this from the parliamentary secretary. Perhaps when we are discussing this in detail he will be able to tell us what expansion there has been of the market for the sale of these particular electronic devices. Have television sets sold in greater numbers? Has the price come down to reflect the removal of the sales tax, not 15 per cent of the retail price but 15 per cent of the manufacturer's price? If there has been a reduction in price, has there been a stimulation of sales? If there has been a stimulation of sales, has this been reflected in an increase in domestic production as hoped for by the minister? It will be the height of folly if, by the removal of this tax, all we do is stimulate the Japanese television industry. This could really be the result.

As we know, there are any number of television sets sold in this country under perfectly good Canadian names? The people believe they are made in Canada. However, they are actually made in Japan. If there has been an increase in sales as a result of the removal of the 15 per cent sales tax at the manufacturer's level, and we have seen no increase in production by Canadian manufacturers, what is the purpose of the exercise? All we have done has been to offer to the Japanese electronics industry a potentially lower market price to further penetrate the Canadian market. We need a full explanation of this.

We like to see tax reductions. True enough, people with lower incomes may benefit to the extent that small radio sets will have the 15 per cent sales tax removed from them. They benefit to that extent. I suppose many of them buy television sets, perhaps not the more expensive makes, but are they Canadian made? It was claimed that this was to be a stimulus to make Canadian industry more competitive. If the sales tax is not payable on an imported set, the actual saving on the retail price of an imported set will actually be more than the tax on the manufacturer's cost because the sales tax is on the duty paid value. There is no mention about reducing customs duty on these particular imported sets. The sales tax is actually effected at a higher level on an imported set than on a domestic set. I repeat, I would like this information from the parliamentary secretary.

There is some shifting around. Instead of the 3 per cent sales tax imposed by the Old Age Security Act and earmarked for the old age security fund, we are now getting a flat 12 per cent sales tax. The minister or the parliamentary secretary should give the House a full explanation as to how the old age security fund is to be funded from the 12 per cent put into the consolidated revenue fund or whatever it may be. After all, the old age security fund was supposed to have been contributed to by all persons. It was deemed to be a pension based on a fund that was to be contributed to by all segments of the population.

If there is a 3 per cent sales tax specifically earmarked for the old age security fund, every person who buys commodities in the Canadian market, except for most food items and until June 18, margarine, will contribute to that fund. However, unless it is specifically earmarked for the old age security fund, then individuals will feel that as far as they are concerned, it is no longer contributory. The taxpayer had certain rights at one time, but no longer. Under Bill C-259, we have a completely all encompassing provision. The funding of the old security fund will be strictly from the consolidated revenue fund. Presumably, it will be on an as needed basis.

There has been a removal or an expansion of the removal of sales tax on anti-pollution equipment. To that extent I say congratulations to the government. We can easily encourage much more anti-pollution effort by the way of incentives such as the removal of tax on certain equipment that will be used to control pollution, particularly in water and in the air. I suppose one could say that the proposals of this bill are counterproductive. They remove the sales tax on certain radios and other electronic equipment which, frankly, are among the greatest noise pollutants in this modern day. As a result, we are now asked to remove sales tax from equipment which will be used to control or eliminate pollution. Noise pollution is not mentioned in this particular section, otherwise they might double the tax on certain types of transistor radios and a few other loudspeaker items, particularly on those loudspeakers which amplify so-called musical sounds and which will crack glass and split plaster.

I feel there is a great deal to be gained by extensive discussion on second reading. I have drawn attention to the areas with which I should like the parliamentary secretary to deal. Then we shall proceed, in due course, to committee of the whole.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the parliamentary secretary has pointed out, the substantial part of this bill is to be found in those clauses which remove the excise tax from certain indicated commodities. For the most part, we welcome these changes. But in any case the discussion of the changes with respect to the excise tax on commodities will be entered into by two or three of my colleagues. I propose to spend my time on the second reading of this bill on the part of the measure which the parliamentary secretary said involved no real change, namely, that part dealing with the amendments to the Old Age Security Act.

I think it is necessary to relate the provisions in this bill, Bill C-260, in this regard, to the provisions of Bill C-259 which also have the effect of amending the Old Age Security Act. If we put these two together, clause 3 of C-259 and clause 5 of C-260, as well as some of the other clauses in this bill, we find that a substantial change is being made with regard to the manner in which taxes are collected for old age security. Although I accept the word of the parliamentary secretary to the effect that substantial tax changes are in the other parts of this bill, I think something substantial is being done with regard to the method of financing old age security.

Whenever taxes are eliminated or reduced one is usually expected to applaud. I might go further and say that when a change is made from a regressive to a progressive form of taxation one is expected to applaud. If I thought this was all that was happening in this case I would make my applause very evident, and sit down. But I confess I am consumed with a deep suspicion as to what is happening in connection with this matter. My suspicion is heightened by the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in his budget speech of June 18, did not make a single reference to this matter. He did not even say a change was being made. Only the tabling of the ways and means motion drew it to our attention. I thought the hon. gentleman presenting this bill on behalf of the government might have explained why this change in the method of taxation relating to old age security was being put into effect. But not a word was said. I did not even find anything about it in the red book containing a summary of the changes made in our tax legislation—if the hon. gentleman can tell me I have missed it, I shall be pleased to accept that advice.

Up till now, money has been obtained from the old age security fund—from which payments of old age security benefits are made—from three sources of taxation. There has been a 4 per cent tax on personal income with a ceiling of $240 a year as the most which can be paid. Second, there has been a 3 per cent tax on corporation income, and, third, there has been a sales tax of 3 per cent for old age security purposes. That 3 per cent has been part of the total sales tax, whether it is 11 per cent or 12 per cent, depending on what commodities are in question. In any event, the revenue from these three percentage points of sales tax has gone into the old age security fund. The Old Age Security Act has provided that in the event of there being a deficit in the old age security fund the Minister of Finance can make certain loans to the fund, and so on, but this has not happened for a long time. As a matter of fact, the fund was running with a credit balance of $687 million as of October, 1971, the last figure available to me.

I should like to make it clear that we opposed from the start the regressive nature of much of this old age security taxation. We felt it was regressive to impose a flat tax of 4 per cent—first it was 2 per cent, then it was 3 per cent, and latterly it was 4 per cent—on all income rather than impose a graduated tax. We pointed out that this had the effect of placing a disproportionate burden on those in the lower income brackets. We had no quarrel with placing a 3 per cent tax on corporations, but we did object to the sales tax being used, because, again, we felt this was taxing those in the lower income brackets to a disproportionate extent. This having been our position and since it has also been a fact of history that we have repeatedly tried to get the ceiling raised, I can understand that hon. members opposite will say: why are you now complaining when the 4 per cent tax on personal income has been removed, when the tax on corporations has been removed and when the three percentage points which were collected for old age security will no longer be collected for that purpose? The reason I am questioning all this is that I have been around here for a while and have learned to be suspicious of things that Liberals do, at least when they are in power. I find myself applauding the Liberals very strongly if they are on the opposition side of the House, but when they get over on the government side they do some strange things.

I think it is necessary that I point out that when the present Old Age Security Act was passed in 1951, and became law in 1952, it was passed on the basis of a report made by a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, a report on old age security tabled on June 28, 1950. I well remember the work we did in this committee. Some very distinguished people were members and I think the committee did an excellent job. It was this committee that recommended the removal of the means test from the old age pension, which was to be paid to everyone at age 70, which was the figure then, and amounted to $40 a month, as well as providing old age assistance for those between 65 and 69. I am happy to say that we have done a good deal since then in terms of improvement, such as getting the amount up and the age limit down. But the heart of our report of 1950 was its recommendation of universality.

In the course of our recommendations we dealt with the question of how the new universal pension was to be financed. At page 110 of the report, paragraph 64 reads as follows:

> The Committee is in favour of the contributory principle, not only because of the importance of this in raising total moneys required, but also because of the importance of establishing a close association in the mind of the individual between his contribution to the cost and the ultimate benefit he is to receive.

Although the members of the committee differed as to the rates of tax that should be imposed and that sort of thing, we were unanimous that there should be a contributory element in paying for old age security so that the Canadian people would know that they had contributed toward their pension and would be able to say the pension was theirs as a matter of right. Just interrupting my train of thought for a moment, since I am looking at this report perhaps I might also say that the committee in 1950 realized that in order to put in this kind of scheme a contributory arrangement it could well be necessary to amend the British North America Act. This was dealt with in paragraphs 71 and 72 of the report, and as a result of this recommendation an amendment to the British North America Act was passed. We now have section 94, which makes it possible for the federal Parliament, as well as the provincial legislatures, to legislate in the field of old age pensions.

The reason we made this recommendation, and that Parliament accepted it in 1951, was that we were making this change. Previous to that time old age pensions under the previous Old Age Pensions Act were simply paid out of the general revenue; there was no contributory element at all, and therefore no special authority was required. However, it was fully accepted that if we were going to establish a contributory relationship there would have to be authority for it in the British North America Act. This recommendation was made in 1950, and as I say it was accepted by Parliament in 1951.

So that from that time until the present the principle, the philosophy, the rationale, has been clear: the Canadian people make payments that are earmarked for old age security, and those payments go into the old age security fund. It is true that accounts for each individual are not kept separately, as is the case with the Canada Pension Plan, but the contributory relationship is there since all our people have made payments. Therefore, when the time comes to draw his pension each Canadian can say that this pension is his as of right, that he has paid for it not only by his contribution to the economy of the country as a whole but by the specific taxes he has paid.

I may say that this is further confirmed by a few of the statements made in the white paper entitled "Income Security for Canadians" which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) tabled in the House toward the end of 1970. At page 24 of the white paper the following statement appears:

> Yet it would not be easy simply to scrap these programs.

One of the programs referred to there is old age security.

> Many people have tailored their retirement incomes and made their retirement plans in the expectation that the Old Age Security pension would be paid them from age 65 on. This program has almost the nature of a separate social contract between the state and its citizens. It has been financed in part since 1952 by a highly visible earmarked personal income tax. It provides the basis for the retirement plans of almost all Canadians regardless of income levels. Private pension arrangements, and the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, have built benefit structures on the assumption that this payment will be made.

I realize that in that paragraph the minister was dealing with certain other arguments, but he confirmed the philosophy, the rationale, that is behind old age security, namely that there are earmarked payments going into the old age security fund, and that all our people have the benefit of a social contract. People can say, when it is time for them to go on old age pension, that the pension is theirs as a matter of right.

At page 42 of this same white paper, referring to suggestions that some people were making that the Old Age Security Act might be wiped out and replaced by something else, the white paper has this to say:

> To withdraw it now would force a reconsideration of retirement benefit levels under those Plans.

The reference there is to the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. I continue:

> Many people have planned their retirement on the expectation that they will get Old Age Security at age 65, and to deny them this benefit would be extremely unfair and a breach of faith. Personal income taxes as well as other earmarked taxes have been collected from people since 1952 to finance this program, establishing an expectation and a right to the pension. Under these circumstances, action to restrict the program's universality would be difficult to justify.

In that statement the Minister of National Health and Welfare fends off any suggestion to do away with old age security for, among other reasons, the important one that it is a social contract, that there is an element of faith, that people are making earmarked payments and therefore have a complete moral right to draw their pensions, and to enjoy them, as I say, not as a form of charity but as a matter of right.

If we were dealing with the question of rates, it is quite true that I would still have something critical to say about the ungraduated nature of the tax, the regressive nature of the sales tax, and so on. However, I am dealing with the basic principle whether or not there should be a contributory relationship between the taxes people pay and the old age pension that they draw. When all the changes are made that are now in contemplation, those that are in Bill C-259 which has gone over to the other place and those in this bill now before us, there will not be any more earmarked taxes going into the old age security fund.

My friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) expressed the hope that someone speaking for the government would tell us what is going to happen. I had hoped that explanation would be given before we became involved in this debate. This is part of what bothers me, the silence on this issue. No one has attempted to explain it. With all respect to my good friend the parliamentary secretary who did a good job in defending the government's position on Bill C-259, this should have been a ministerial statement. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) should be here, too, because what will happen is that the entire section 24 of the Old Age Security Act will be wiped out. That is the section which provides for the collection of the three taxes, the personal tax, the corporation tax and the sales tax.

The section that provides for an old age security fund still exists. It is there. There is still to be a fund into which certain money will go and out of which pensions will be paid. What money is to go into that fund? So far as I can ascertain, the only money to go into that fund is that which is referred to in clause 3 of Bill C-259 which says that once a year the Minister of National Revenue shall make an estimate concerning how much would have been collected in personal and corporation income taxes if the old earmarked law had been in effect. That estimate having been made, that amount of money is to be turned over by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to the old age security fund. There is one sense in which I like that and I believe I said so in respect of Bill C-259. This means that the money put into the old age security fund will be collected out of general revenue coming more along the line of ability to pay than in the other way. What bothers me, however, is that there is no money going into the old age security fund which individuals can say is money they put there. There is no earmarked contribution whatsoever.

As I say, according to clause 3 of Bill C-259 the Minister of National Revenue is required to make an estimate of how much would have been collected had the old law been in effect. But the old law in that respect is confined to the personal and corporation income tax. There is nothing anywhere which says that anything which would have been collected under the sales tax is to go into the old age security fund. So, from here on the only money going into the old age security fund will be the estimate of what would have been collected from the personal and corporation income taxes. To me there are two or three dangers about that. In the first place, there will be less money. After all, the take from only two taxes will be less than that from three taxes. Second, the earmarked situation, the clarity of relationship, will be gone. Third—and this is what I am afraid of and this is why I am suspicious—it would seem to me the government could well be laying the foundation for being able to say a few years from now, "Oh, well, old age security is just paid out of general revenue and this notion you used to have that you were entitled to it because of contributory payments is gone."

This will put the government in the position of being able to play fast and loose with the whole question of old age security and even abolish its universality. I hope I am wrong in this suspicion, but if there is good reason for all of this, if there is a philosophy behind it which can be exposed, why did the minister not say so on June 18 or when we were debating Bill C-259, because part of this is in clause 3 of that bill, or why did he not say so today and why is not the Minister of National Health and Welfare here to tell us what he thinks about this. It is only a year ago that the Minister of National Health and Welfare tabled his white paper on income security for Canadians. He accepted the fact, and in fact asserted, that one of the cardinal principles of old age security is that it is a social contract, that there is an element of faith between the people and the state and that because of that social contract and because payments are made by individuals on an earmarked basis, they have the right to count on old age security always being there.

Entirely apart from arguments I might make about the desirability of increasing the basic amount of the old age security, which is presently $80,—and everybody knows where I stand on that—I think there is particular merit in the point made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his white paper to the effect that the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan are based on old age security as a first deck. In fact, this was said at page 42 of the white paper:

> It is proposed that the old age security pension continue to be payable to people who meet the residence requirements when they reach age 65.
> For both the social insurance system and the guaranteed income system, the flat-rate old age security pension will continue to provide the base on which the second deck is built. In the former case the second deck is the earnings-related pension, in the latter it is the income-tested pension. But both are predicated on the continuing existence of the basic old age security payment for all who meet the residence requirements.

That is crucial and fundamental. Whatever changes we may make, whatever progress we may achieve in the field of old age security, we at least now have this basic first deck of $80 a month. Then we have the second deck, the Canada Pension Plan, and all the private pension plans and the other arrangements that people make. The Minister of National Health and Welfare was perfectly right in his white paper when he said that the people of Canada have a right to expect that first deck to remain. What was one of the main reasons he gave that we have the right to expect that first deck to remain? Because it was in the nature of a social contract and because the people are making earmarked contributory payments. To do anything to disturb that would be a breach of faith. Can you not see, Sir, that if all these earmarked taxes are removed, this philosophy begins to fade and a few years from now some government which wants to cut down on old age security, or put it on an income test, could say, "Well, it is just a payment made out of the general revenue". They would say there are no more earmarked taxes for it and so they are cutting it down. I think that before this debate is over we should have a statement on this. I would be quite happy to see my suspicions completely shot down, but they will not be shot down by silence on the government side but only by someone like the Minister of National Health and Welfare coming in and making clear that so far as he is concerned this change in the taxation basis for old age security does not have that kind of serious defect.

Back a few years, and in fact over a number of years, some of us argued that there was sufficient money in the old age security fund to pay much higher pensions under the Old Age Security Act. When we used to do that we were met with various answers. One was that the new programs that were being brought in, such as the guaranteed income supplement and so on, would soon eat up any surplus. But the figures I have on what is happening to the old age security fund show that over the past couple of years the balance at credit in that fund has not changed very much. It has gone in the last couple of years from a low of about $686 million to a high of about $730 million. But in round figures that is not much of a change, and if one looks at what happens each month, some months there is a surplus of collections over the amount paid out, and some months the amount paid out is in excess of the amount brought in.

In other words, I think it is correct to say that at present the taxes coming in from the three sources just about equal what is required to pay, on a month to month basis, the old age security payments and the guaranteed income supplement payments that are also paid out of that fund. We have said in the past that with the extra $687 million that was there at the last report this could be used to increase the payments. The argument that it would be eaten up by the guaranteed income supplement has not worked out, so I suppose now the government feels it is better to cut this fund down so that we will not be able to continue that argument. If you take away these three percentage points of the sales tax, it will not be long before this fund starts to go down. Then we will get some minister of finance or some minister of national health and welfare coming before us and saying that the fund is dropping, that it is just a welfare measure anyway, and we can lose what is a very important social gain, namely old age pensions on a universal basis.

As I have said, if the government can come in with a ringing speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who is the one who can ring the changes and bring down the rafters, and prove to me that my suspicions are completely groundless, I would be very happy. But it will take that to do it. Silence will not convince me; in fact, it is the silence that has disturbed me. Not a word has been said about this. The parliamentary secretary rose today with a statement which I suppose was prepared for him as a departmental explanation of what this is all about. It just says that some changes are being made in the three percentage points that had been collected under the Old Age Security Act which will now be collected under the Excise Tax Act. There was no explanation or defence of it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said nothing about it on June 18 or when he introduced Bill C-259, and we have heard nothing about it today on Bill C-260. The whole question of the future of old age security is wrapped up in this. I imagine some members are wondering how a bill having to do with the Excise Tax Act produces all this discussion on old age security, but, as Your Honour has recognized, it is in the bill and it is a very substantial change which alters the whole base.

I remind you again, Sir, of the references which I have drawn to your attention. The basic philosophy was set out in the report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Old Age Security in 1950. I remind you of the philosophy that was set out in the white paper tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare late in 1970 from which it was very clear that the reason people have the right to expect old age security to continue and the right to take these payments with a feeling of pride and honour is that, in addition to any contribution they have made to the economy as a whole, they have contributed earmarked taxes to a special fund.

I want to see some great improvements in the whole matter of old age security. I want to see the guaranteed annual income at a much higher level. I want to see it extended to certain groups, perhaps to housewives, to veterans, and to others whom I could name. But in the meantime let us not nibble away at what we have. I am afraid that the changes involved in Bill C-259 and Bill C-260 with respect to the financing of old age security have the effect of changing it from a contributory plan which gives all the rights there are to the people to a welfare plan because it will be paid out of revenues collected in a general way rather than revenues collected on an earmarked basis.

I know I am repeating myself but I feel very strongly about this. Everybody knows now how we pay old age security, out of the 4 per cent tax on personal income with a ceiling of $240 a year, plus a 3 per cent corporation income, plus the three percentage points that are built into the sales tax. The effect of these two bills will be to do away with the 4 per cent tax. There will be no more corporation tax, no more of any part of the sales tax going into the old age security fund, and therefore the whole position of people being able to say they are contributing to this pension which is theirs as a matter of right will be vitiated.

If the removal of the three percentage points from the Excise Tax Act so far as the old age security is concerned meant a reduction of the sales tax from 12 per cent and 11 per cent down to 9 per cent and 8 per cent, perhaps there would be something to crow about on the government side, but the sales tax rates are not being changed; the 12 per cent and 11 per cent continue. It does mean that the entire take from the sales tax will now go into the general revenue and none of it will go into the old age security fund. As I said a while ago, the removal of the personal and corporation taxes is at least matched by the requirement that the Minister of National Revenue once a year estimate what the take would have been. That much money must be paid into the old age security fund. But in the case of the sales tax there is no such provision. In other words, the government will have to put all the sales tax receipts into the general fund.

In so far as there is a shift from a regressive to a progressive way of taxation, of course I welcome it, and in so far as the personal income taxes that are used for this are those out of the general structure so that those in the upper brackets pay more than those in the lower, again I welcome that. But in so far as the contributing relationship is being completely wiped out, in so far as the philosophy of 1950 right down to 1970 is being denied by this legislation, I do not like it.

In due course we shall have the committee of the whole stage when we can consider the clauses, when the government can bring its people in here to answer questions, if it will and then third reading. I will be a very happy member if I can be shown that I am wrong, that I have nothing to be afraid of, but it looks to me as though the ground is being prepared for changes in the old age security so that it can no longer be said that individual Canadians have, among other reasons, the right to their old age pensions because they have contributed to these special funds.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) says that this will just become a transfer of payments. As I said earlier, some of my colleagues will deal with the other phases of this bill. Some of them may deal with this phase as well, and I hope they will, but they will be dealing with the changes of tax on spreads, on radios and televisions, on anti-pollution equipment, and so on. I want to say to the parliamentary secretary and to the government that I regard these changes being made in the methods of financing old age security as very important. I am disturbed most of all by the fact that, up to the present time, not one word has been said from the government side about these changes. We have a right to know what these changes really mean.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of this debate to make a suggestion to the government about Bill C-260.

I should like to bring up, in particular, two points concerning clause 4 on page 2 which deals with apparatus used in the fight against air and water pollution. I feel that the government could have, at the outset, gone a bit further in that field.

I have here a news release from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities at the time when Mayor Marcel D'Amour was president, in which it was pointed out that the municipalities too have duties with regard to the fight against pollution of all kinds, but that up to now the federal government has failed to encourage municipalities willing to fight it.

I would add that the minister said in the House on June 18 that in order to favour the purchase of equipment used against pollution, he was going to remove immediately the sales tax on it. Such new exemption would apply, according to him, to all kinds of machines which manufacturers or producers buy for use in the detection, prevention, removal or reduction of pollution, but it would reduce revenues by about $8 million a year.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has a part to play in that fight and that the government should have extended the tax exemption to the equipment which municipalities must use for that purpose.

I should also like to call the attention of the minister or of his parliamentary secretary to this point. They will have to read Hansard because I notice they are both absent from the House at this time. As reported in the press, they are fighting air pollution.

We all know that in the construction area, more and more people are using electricity for home heating. In the province of Quebec, Hydro-Quebec, which supplies electricity, is doing a great deal of advertising to push the use of electricity for home heating, since it is a way of fighting air pollution.

I have here an advertisement published in almost every newspaper; it appeared in Montréal-Matin of September 22 1971. I quote:

ELECTRICITY IS CLEAN

ELECTRICITY MEANS NO COMBUSTION, NO SMOKE, NO SOOT NO SMELL, CONSEQUENTLY NO POLLUTION. ELECTRICITY IN QUEBEC IS CLEAN AND EFFICIENT.

Hydro-Quebec researchers are continuously improving the methods for producing, transporting and distributing electricity. They are looking for new ways to use it. Everywhere the future is electric. Hydro-Quebec is working for you. Electricity is clean and efficient and it can be used in many ways.

Mr. Speaker, their publicity is trying to encourage people to use electricity to heat their homes, because it does not create pollution.

I know personally several people who reacted to that appeal and who switched to an electrical heating system or who are now installing such a system in new houses.

To my knowledge it costs some $500, $600 or even $700 to set up an electrical heating system in a house. People complain about the high cost of housing and the government, through the Central Mortgate and Housing Corporation, is trying by all possible means to reduce it. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) should include in that clause of Bill C-260 a provision to exempt all materials used for electric heating systems in dwellings.

The construction cost of family dwellings could thus be reduced and the new owners would pay less for a house. The monthly payments would be decreased, because for an average 2 or 3 bedroom-house the taxes on building materials would be $75 or $100 lower.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this government to further consider this suggestion and to grant an exemption concerning electrical home heating. This would benefit all homeowners, all Canadian families and, at the same time, it would be an efficient way to fight pollution.

This government, the minister and his officials should, as soon as possible, consider this proposal. I myself have considered moving an amendment to Bill C-260 to that effect. But, after study, any amendment that I might have moved on that subject would have been ruled out of order.

That is why I shall wait for another opportunity to move an amendment or a motion on this subject.

In my view, the government should immediately give consideration to that possibility and, during the study in committee of the whole, we shall see if it is possible to move an amendment with regard to this matter.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I must say that I am slightly disappointed that many of the questions raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) have not been answered. Hon. members continue to wonder just what is the intention with respect to the actual application of the clauses in the bill.

Dealing first with clause 1, and the transfer of the 3 per cent from the sales tax to the excise tax, one wonders whether the suspicions of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre are well founded. I can recall that upon the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan there was much discussion on whether the old age security pension should be dropped since, with payment of the Canada Pension Plan benefits, it possibly could be eliminated. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) made a statement to the effect that today many old people consider that they have a contract with the state for the old age security pension and that this pension has been increased by the guaranteed income supplement. But one had to contribute for ten years before qualifying under the Canada Pension Plan and had to contribute a minimum of five years before receiving even a portion of the moneys so contributed.

One cannot help but agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that perhaps the transfer of moneys places some question on the contract with the state and whether the senior citizens of this country have a right to expect that the old age security pension will continue for many years to come. The hon. member suggested that he is all in favour of a guaranteed annual income, and perhaps this is the final answer. I am also concerned with the suggestion that it would be easier to eliminate the old age security pension if it were funded by payments from the Excise Tax Act into the Consolidated Revenue fund, but I do not think that the guaranteed annual income would be sufficient for many of the senior citizens today. It would pay an equal amount of money to everybody whether or not they were able to earn money and whether or not they had contributed over a long time through sales tax, personal tax and corporation taxes. I remember very well the debate on the Canada Pension Plan. At that time many government members suggested that the old age security pension could be eliminated. I do not think so, and I am suspicious that this might be the first step along that road.

I have other suspicions when looking at this bill, Mr. Speaker. One can wonder how much of the reduction of the tax on television sets, electronic devices and margarine is reflected back to the consumer. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) dealt with this at length but did not get a satisfactory answer. Has the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) and the government looked into this question? Has the price of margarine been reduced? I am inclined to think not, and that the 15 per cent reduction in sales tax on television sets has not been passed on to the consumer. Perhaps the manufacturer in some way is able to absorb this, though I do not think it was intended for his benefit alone but rather to stimulate business through the money being in circulation in one form or another.

I am also suspicious of section 2(2) which reads:

> There shall be imposed, levied and collected only six-twelfths of the tax imposed by section 27 on the sale and delivery of the articles enumerated in schedule IV.

In looking at the explanatory notes I believe, and I may be wrong, that this takes the place of the section which provides that there shall be imposed a tax of only three-ninths of the tax imposed by section 27. One does not have to be a mathematical genius to realize that three-ninths is one-third and that six-twelfths is one-half—a substantial increase in the tax levied on articles falling under section 27, schedule IV.

When one looks at schedule IV, section 27 of which deals with a host of implements and farm produce from alfalfa meal, dried or otherwise, to traction engine parts, the increase in the levy is the difference between six-twelfths and three-ninths. The section covers 25 articles. I cannot understand why there is not an explanation for the change from three-ninths to six-twelfths, and I think we must have the answer before much progress is made on this particular section of the bill. If it is merely a change in the wording, and not in the effect, perhaps the parliamentary secretary or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) or someone from the government could say so. The parliamentary secretary can hardly speak for the government I suppose, but he is the only one who seems to be paying any attention to what is going on here. The government wonders why its bills do not get speedy passage but they allow the parliamentary secretaries to pilot the bills through in the absence of the ministers.

An hon. Member: Only four.

Mr. Horner: I did not catch that remark; speak a little louder.

An hon. Member: Only four Tories in the House.

Mr. Horner: I didn't know the Tories were responsible for putting forward this bill, Mr. Speaker. If we were there would not be so much confusion about it. The three hon. members who spoke this afternoon were not able to get any clarification. If the Tories had introduced this bill it would have been better drafted. There seems to be some response from the government side now, even though it is a bit meaningless. Perhaps they could clear up some of the points made by me and the three previous speakers.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I hope we shall be told how much money will be lost to the treasury as a result of the reduction of the tax on margarine. Actually, that tax is to be eliminated. How much will the treasury lose as a result of the removal of the 15 per cent sales tax on electronic equipment such as television sets, phonograph playing devices and so on? Perhaps the government could also clarify something with regard to the Old Age Security Act. Is this bill the first step towards removing the payment of old age security pensions? People will have to pay for years into the Canada Pension Plan. As soon as people reach pensionable age, they are entitled to draw benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. Will there be some hocus pocus, some playing around with figures and the guaranteed annual income, which will remove benefits that are available to our senior citizens. Is any strategy afoot that will take away these pensions from people who have contributed to them? I hope not.

Remembering what went on when the Canada Pension Plan was introduced, I can only suspect that this bill is the first step towards removing the old age security pension paid to many of our people. Our senior citizens have made major contributions to their pension fund by way of the sales tax. They have contributed 4 per cent of their personal income tax and there have been contributions from corporations in the form of tax. By these means, sizeable contributions have been made to the old age security fund. Our elderly people have a right to expect that, when they reach pensionable age, they will be able to draw benefits from that fund. They expect the state to honour a contract to which it has committed itself. Therefore, any suggestion of this contract being done away with should be squelched immediately.

A long time ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dealt with this subject at length. He begged the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) to make a resounding speech to reassure the House that the government had no intention of doing away with the old age security pension. The President of the Privy Council, who was in the House at the time, did not rise to the occasion. I believe another minister was also present in the House at that time, and he failed to reassure the House. The parliamentary secretary to the minister did not reassure us. If the government wants to make good progress with this bill I hope, before too many hon. members have spoken on it, that answers will be forthcoming to questions hon. members on this side of the House have raised. That is what the government must do if it expects quick passage of this confusing piece of legislation.

Mr. Mahoney: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; since I have already spoken in this stage of debate I cannot, of course, speak again, and I certainly am not in a position to answer questions at this time that may be asked by hon. members on the other side of the House. I wonder how the remarks of the hon. member relate to Schedule IV of the bill, to the Excise Tax Act and to the products and equipment mentioned there. Schedule IV of the Excise Tax Act I have in front of me refers to articles manufactured or produced by the labour of the blind, deaf and dumb. I am having difficulty relating these items to what the hon. member has been talking about.

Mr. Horner: That is all the more reason for explaining the provisions regarding six-twelfths and three-ninths.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I understand the difficulties of the parliamentary secretary. I suggest that perhaps his colleagues could help him. However, I cannot allow him to intervene again in this way. It would be inappropriate. According to my interpretation, such intervention would be tantamount to a second participation in the debate.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I was merely asking the hon. member a question, or I was trying to ask him a question. I wanted to relate what he was saying to the amendment to the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-260, which is before us, is an attempt to put into effect the measures heralded in the mini-budget speech of June 18. That speech was made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). The bill is divided into two sections. One section deals with amendments to the Old Age Security Act and the other removes from the excise tax list certain commodities. The tax reductions indicated in this bill are, generally, welcome. I say that on behalf of members of this party. I will return to the subject in a moment.

First, I should like to spend a few minutes on the section which deals with the amendment to the Old Age Security Act and which removes the 3 per cent of sales tax which has hitherto been earmarked for the old age security fund. That 3 per cent of sales tax revenue is now to be applied to general revenues. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) dealt at some length with his suspicions regarding this particular provision. He went into detail, and I do not intend to go into the same kind of detail in my remarks. I simply want to second what he said. Until the present time, the money necessary for payments under the Old Age Security Act has been collected from three sources: first, from the 4 per cent of personal income tax, the ceiling being $240, which money was paid into the old age security fund; second, from the 3 per cent levy on corporation taxes, which money was paid into the old age security fund; and third, from the 3 per cent of the sales tax levy which, again, was paid into the old age security fund.

We, of this party, have on numerous occasions opposed the regressive nature of two of the sources of income for the old age security fund, namely, the virtually flat rate levied on personal income and the 3 per cent sales tax. We have argued that these taxes were of a regressive nature. Nevertheless, we have always applauded the idea that there ought to be sources of income specially earmarked for payment into the old age security fund, so that it would be patently clear to all concerned that the old age security pension is paid to persons over 65 as of right. They have contributed to the fund during their working years in order to be assured of a pension in their retirement years. The old age security pension is theirs as of right, and the whole matter thus takes on the aspect of a social contract. We have always applauded that fact, even though we may not have approved of certain means used to raise that revenue.

Now, Bill C-259 will remove effectively the 4 per cent of personal income tax that is paid to the old age security fund. That bill will remove the 3 per cent corporation tax contribution which is paid to the same fund. Bill C-260, which we are examining this afternoon, will remove the 3 per cent of sales tax which was formerly paid into the old age security fund. The fund will now be supplied with moneys out of the general revenues, and will receive an income which will be computed on the basis of the taxes that would have been collected if provision for collecting them had still been in effect. That is how the money will be paid and, thus, the contributory nature of the old age security plan will now disappear. As I suggested earlier, the idea of a social contract as between the citizens of this country and the government will also disappear and I am worried, as is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, about the implications that this move may have for the pensioner. Are we to take it, now that the money for the old age security fund is to come out of the general revenues, that at some future date the government can come to this House and say that since the old age security pension is not a contributory scheme, since it is not a matter of social contract, that it is not paid to pensioners as of right and that the government, therefore, wishes to take that pension away? May I remind the House that one year ago, I believe, the amount of the old age security pension was frozen at $80 per month. That seemed to be the first step to removing the pension entirely. This bill may be the second step. The third step may be taken I do not know when. I hope the government does not intend at some time in the future to end the old age security pension. I hope that some one will get up and tell us that the government does not so intend. The thought that universal pensions may be terminated is very disquieting, and my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre and I are afraid this might happen.

One of the outstanding benefits of the old age security pension was this: it was paid on a demogrant basis. It was paid, as of right, to the senior citizen who had attained a certain age. The receipt of that pension was a source of pride. Previous to the Old Age Security Pension becoming universal, a person called himself a pensioner with great reluctance. A pension smacked of welfare. Once it became a demogrant and he contributed to it, it was a source of pride and dignity for the pensioner. Pensioners in this country could organize themselves to come to the government and demand the aid from their fellow citizens which they required and which was their right. They were able to do it on the basis of being pensioners. Their confidence arose from the fact the pension was paid to everyone as a right. If that is to be changed, I suggest it is a retrograde step. If it is to be changed in order to eventually remove the pension paid on a demogrant basis and if all pensioners are going to have to rely on the Canada Pension Plan, private plans and the guaranteed income supplement which is based on a needs test, we have taken a backward step. I hope someone from the government will assure this House that is not their intention and state the philosophy behind these tax changes.

I now turn to the other portion of the bill which deals with the removal of the excise tax from certain commodities. Before dealing with each of the specific items, I wish to make one general statement. In my remarks I will be repeatedly referring to the need for monitoring devices once the tax is removed. I make that demand for two reasons. First, I want to ensure that the benefits of the removal of the tax is passed on to the consumers through reduced prices of goods. The second deals with one of the major problems which every nation has had in managing its economy, that is, attempting to manage the economy through fiscal policies, the manipulation of taxes, which has been largely a by guess and by God operation. No one is ever quite certain what happens when you remove or increase a tax. Here is a real opportunity to do some monitoring and get some hard data about what actually happens when a tax is removed.

These excise taxes were removed effective June 19. We have now had almost six months to monitor the effect of the removal of the taxes to see if the removal did result in added industrial activity, added consumption of goods and more money being put into the economy thereby generating new activity. We have had that occasion presented to us. I hope the government has made use of it. I will be asking the same question again and again when I come to the individual items under these sections of the bill. It is necessary that we undertake such monitoring and collect the hard data about what happens when a tax is removed if we are to effectively use our fiscal policies in the future. I will now deal with the items.

The bill provides for the removal of the excise tax on margarine and similar products. As I indicated in my general remarks, I would like to know whether the removal of the excise tax has been passed on as a saving to the consumer. I received a letter from the Edible Oils Institute in which the Institute extended its thanks to the members of this House for removing the sales tax on edible oils. The Institute gave an undertaking that the saving would be passed on to the consumer. I have no way of knowing that has taken place except by sending my wife out periodically to see whether margarine has gone down in price.

[Mr. Rowland.]

There is available to the government an excellent way of monitoring to see if the removal of the excise tax has actually resulted in savings to the consumer. That way is through the monthly pricing surveys conducted by Statistics Canada. There are large numbers of people employed by Statistics Canada who go to the shopping centres and small grocery stores every month to see what is happening to the prices of various goods. It would take very little effort on the part of the Department of Finance to ask Statistics Canada to make a special effort to price margarine to see whether the saving resulting from the removal of the excise tax is being passed on to the consumer. They could monitor the price of margarine to discover whether the government's fiscal measures have had the desired effect. I would like to know from someone on the government side whether this was done, whether the savings anticipated have indeed been passed on to the consumer or whether they have simply been retained as increased earnings by the companies involved. I mention once again that the Edible Oils Institute assured various members of this House it was their intention to pass on the saving to the consumer. I would like to know if this has been done.

Another section of the bill provides for the removal of excise tax on machinery and products designed for, or related to, the control of pollution. This is a very welcome provision. If the removal of the excise tax does reduce the cost inherent in cleaning up our environment, it is a worthwhile step. I hope it will result in industries, municipalities, the provinces and the federal government being encouraged to purchase the devices necessary to begin cleaning up our environment. Once again, I suggest that, if it has not been done, it is necessary to monitor the effects of the removal of that tax to see that the saving to the companies involved, as the result of the tax being removed, was passed on to the consumer, whether it stimulated the production of anti-pollution devices and whether it stimulated the purchase of domestically produced anti-pollution devices and not simply the importation of anti-pollution devices designed and manufactured abroad. If it has not already been done, those three important aspects should be monitored. I ask whether this has been done and, if so, what were the results of the monitoring?

It would have been useful if the government had come up with a program of research and development in conjunction with this tax measure to ensure that Canadian companies fully benefited from the removal of the excise tax. Such a program would have been another means of ensuring that Canadian companies would undertake research and development into anti-pollution devices to enable them to produce the equipment necessary to clean up our environment and to reduce our dependence on imported goods for this purpose. Had there been a research and development program undertaken in conjunction with the removal of the excise tax, quite possibly we would have had a greater degree of stimulus to that industry than has taken place, if indeed any has taken place. Once again, we will not know precisely what has happened until we have seen the results of the monitoring of the effects of the removal of the tax and we do not know whether that monitoring has taken place.

I would also like to refer to the removal of the excise tax on the electronic equipment such as radios, phonographs and television sets. I come back to the need for monitoring to determine whether that saving has been passed on to the consumer and, being passed on to the consumer, whether that saving has stimulated the purchase of electronic equipment. Also, have the purchases which it has stimulated been of domestic manufacture rather than foreign manufacture. We require these facts, not only to judge the validity of the measures incorporated in this bill, but also to determine the effectiveness of the use of fiscal devices in an attempt to manage our economy.

I said earlier it is largely a by guess and by God operation to attempt to manage the economy through the manipulation of taxes. Monitoring devices would remove some of the elements of doubt from that operation. This was an excellent opportunity to establish monitoring devices. They could have been used to give us some hard information which we require in order to adjust our tax system in the future. As in the case of edible oils, the monitoring in respect of electronic equipment could have been done through Statistics Canada because the pricing of electronic devices takes place monthly in its pricing surveys. A simple request from the Department of Finance could have led to the provision of this information. If such a request has not been made, I suggest the department might approach Statistics Canada and ask for such information to be compiled. It is all there. We could then find out whether the consumer has benefited as a result of these taxation measures.

I have covered, in a sketchy way, most of the subject matter included in the bill. To summarize, there are certain matters in respect to which we should like to be given further information before we vote on this tax bill. First, we should like to know whether our suspicions, as to adjustments in connection with the Old Age Security Act are justified or not. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) is in the House. It would be interesting to hear him confirm or deny these suspicions. Second, we should like to know whether the removal of the excise tax from certain commodities have been monitored to determine whether removal has had the results intended, in terms of money saved by consumers, the generation of increased activity in the industry concerned, and increased domestic production, rather than an increase in the importation of manufactured goods.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I had no intention of entering this debate, and I would not have done so had not some of the comments and statements made by the hon. members to my left disturbed me slightly—indeed, they disturbed me a great deal. Several of them voiced a suspicion that because of a transfer of a 3 per cent tax from the Old Age Security Act to the Excise Tax Act there might be some thought in the mind of the government that at some time in the future the old age pension for senior citizens would be eliminated.

I do not know where hon. members to my left get these ideas. I know that there are about 1,700,000 old age pensioners in Canada. I realize, too, that in the future, maybe, there may be a better way of looking after our old age pensioners than the one we are now using. The fact is that old age pensions, old age security for senior citizens, who have made Canada what it is, is a fact of life, and no government, no matter what government it might be, would ever think of eliminating old age pensions as we know them in Canada today. It is absolute political hypocrisy for any member of any party in opposition to suggest that this government or any other is thinking of eliminating such pensions which are involved in our way of life in this country. I can see some of the newspapers picking up those speeches by members of the opposition, and by tomorrow morning, or within the next few days, suspicion will be placed in the hearts of many of our old age pensioners that the government is going to eliminate their pensions. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Peters: How do you know?

Mr. Whicher: I know, absolutely.

Mr. Peters: You are just guessing.

Mr. Munro: Don't be so cynical.

An hon. Member: You are only in the rump.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member says I am only in the rump. Let me point out to him that the rump is much larger than his own party. There is a great danger that after the next election we shall have so many members we shall move right down next to him.

I have often told these people that if it comes to a battle of wits they do not stand a chance. Let them keep quiet. They will have a chance to speak in a few minutes. In any event, I have been asked how it is I know that old age pensions will not be eliminated. I will give an answer. There are many too many revolutions going on in the world today. There is too much fighting going on at the present time. If any future government ever thought about eliminating a basic way of life such as old age pensions in Canada, the revolution here would compare with those taking place elsewhere in the world today.

Mr. Peters: Over 65 is not the age of revolutionaries.

Mr. Whicher: Of course, pensions will not be eliminated. I know spokesmen for the government will stand up and say so when we get to the committee stage when members can answer questions on this bill. Of course, it will be said that old age pensions will not be eliminated. How could a government such as this eliminate old age pensions? The only thing this government has done in the last year has been to increase them. And in another four years or five years, when we are still there, we will probably increase them still further. There is no thought of eliminating these things. I suggest that hon. members who plant these seeds in the hearts of old age pensioners are not doing them any good and are not doing their own party any good.

The trouble about hon. members to my left is this. After the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) not only this afternoon but on television last night, and after listening to what has been said by the President of the United States and other world figures, they cannot stand prosperity. That is what they fear. It is just a little bit too much, coming after the great success the Minister of Finance had enjoyed in Washington in the past few days. I am sure someone from the government will tell these hon.

members shortly that there is absolutely no chance of old age pensions being eliminated.

There is something else in this bill, too. The government is proposing to reduce taxes on such things as radios and television sets. Are hon. members to my left against this? The people of Canada are getting tired of such negative talk. When they go out to buy a television set they find they can get it 15 per cent cheaper than they could 12 months ago.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, they don't.

Mr. Whicher: As far as taxes are concerned, yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Nonsense.

Mr. Whicher: The tax has been eliminated and it has been eliminated, not by the financial critic of the Tory party but by the government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Then, too, the elimination of the tax on margarine and similar spreads may seem a small thing. A few years ago when I had the privilege of sitting in the Ontario legislature I was against the colouring of margarine in Canada. But now, new circumstances have come about. The fact is that margarine, like old age pensions, is a way of life in Canada. All this government is doing is eliminating the tax, and hon. members to my left are trying to stop it. It is high time that people knew exactly what is going on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: This bill provides for the elimination of the tax on radios and television sets, on margarine and similar spreads and on anti-pollution equipment. Are hon. members to my left against the control of pollution in Canada? I have been listening to their speeches for the last hour and it seems to me they are not only against this bill, but they are against everything. What the government is trying to do in this bill is to cut prices, admittedly in a small area, in this instance. The people of Canada will be able to say, at least in this area, that instead of taxes being increased, they are being reduced. I hope we get in the committee of the whole soon so that the parliamentary secretary can answer some of the questions which have been raised by members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT AND OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-260, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I want to join other hon. members who have expressed their thoughts on this bill and indicated their approval of these reductions in taxes. Contrary to what the previous speaker has just said, from the speeches I have heard this afternoon hon. members are in favour of doing away with the tax on anti-pollution equipment and the removal of other taxes provided for by the bill. Knowing this bill was to be debated this afternoon, I made some telephone calls to ascertain the facts in connection with the removal of the tax on electronic and television equipment and the tax on margarine. I talked to local people in Ottawa and found, indeed, there had been some price reduction of television sets. The tax reduction has been passed on to some extent.

However, my investigations do not indicate this is the case with the tax on margarine, which I believe was 12 per cent. The same brand of margarine that sold at 59 cents last spring sells today in Ottawa for 66 cents. Even though it may be a loss leader in some stores, and in some of the large chains there may have been large stocks, there should at least have been a maintenance of the price for which it sold before removal of the 12 per cent tax. This indicates to me that the department of the government responsible for implementing the tax reductions should have checked a little more closely, because the removal of the tax has not been reflected in the price of the product. I am sure all hon. members praise the government for removing the tax on anti-pollution equipment; this is a good move. All of us are very conscious of pollution, and before some of the statements made about pollution today become too common in the press some more investigation into pollution is required.

I had an interesting trip to Washington several weeks ago to participate in talks with the United States department of agriculture and other government departments about pollution control. There had been reports in the press that fertilizer used on farmland was causing pollution, and I was interested to note an experiment that had been carried out in this regard in the city of Washington. The experiment disclosed that the major source of pollution from fertilizer was the urban area. Some run-off tests had been made which indicated that urban dwellers, by and large, are ready users of fertilizer which is applied a little more than is generally required on lawns. Some of the chemical is washed off the soil and runs down asphalt driveways and pavements into the gutters and thence into streams, and pollution was caused in this way. I think this points to the need for specific investigation as to source of pollution rather than simply referring to pollution generally.

Many speakers this afternoon have referred to the application of the 3 per cent old age security tax to other areas. I have no fear that the government will remove the old age pension, but I think it is important to earmark the tax for this purpose. People like to know where their money is going. This particular tax is earmarked for old age pensions and thus we know where the money is going. People do not mind paying it because they know exactly what it is used for. However, when money is paid into a general revenue fund, payment out of the fund introduces the concept of welfare and one can well understand some stigma may attach to it.

I think it is also important to review incomes and income guarantees of one sort or another, and to find a better way of developing sources of second incomes for Canadians. This can be done by involving Canadians in some form of participation in our industrial growth. Unless we do this, at every election time politicians will go across the land each out-promising the other, and saying he will do more if he is elected; that the people will receive additional benefits through various government channels of distribution. In this regard, we could well use at the present time something along the lines of an industrial homestead act to develop a second income plan. This would help eliminate our constant worry over how to distribute funds and what to call various taxes that are applied.

I shall not continue at length at this time, but I should like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) in respect of old age pensions. I suggest that the increases the government had made in old age security payments do not warrant all the enthusiasm, wind and words he wasted on us. We all know it was an increase of 42 cents last year, and in view of the "generosity" which has been exhibited in the past we wonder what any increases might be in the future.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, lest there be any doubt in the mind of any hon. member as to where we stand on some of these matters, I should like to begin by saying we are exceedingly glad to see the repeal of the sales tax on margarine. We in the opposition for a long time have been pressing for its removal and are glad to see this brought about. We are also glad to see there is to be a removal of the tax on television sets and electronic equipment. I wish the hon. member to my extreme right had not left the chamber, but he has returned and I am glad. I would point out to him that I was saying we are very much in favour of the removal of the sales tax on margarine and the excise tax on television sets and electronic equipment, but we want to make sure that the removal of those taxes amounts to a real saving to the Canadian consumer. At the present time there is no guarantee of this.

As the hon. member who spoke a moment ago pointed out, the price of margarine has gone up. My colleague who spoke earlier also mentioned the need to make sure that these taxes which have been taken off result in savings to consumers. I wish to go a step further. I am sorry that at the present time only one member particularly concerned is in his seat, and indeed he is only the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney). This matter concerns at least two other ministers, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) who was here a few moments ago, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). I think both these gentlemen should be here to hear the comments of members of the opposition because, after all, we hear from a good many people and reflect what they believe and say.

I shall go a step further than my colleague who thought the Department of Finance could very easily work with Statistics Canada to monitor whether or not these savings are being passed on to the public. After such monitoring I believe the job of protecting the consumers in these matters falls squarely on the shoulders of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has been able to devise ways and means to protect consumers in a number of ways. I might mention inflammable materials and poisonous goods, among others. I think it is up to him, perhaps in conjunction with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and his department, to devise a method whereby the savings that are made are passed on to the consumers as would appear to be the intention of the government in making the changes in this legislation.

So I say to my friend to my right who has disappeared—he is again a little like the Cheshire cat with the grin, who appears and disappears—that because we are in favour of these changes we say to the government it is not good enough to go halfway in making them. The government must go the whole way in order to see that the provisions of the legislation are enforced so that the consumers receive the benefit. I say in this regard that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and its minister in particuler, should have the ultimate responsibility in seeing that these amendments are enforced.

Now I want to come to the matter which has concerned many of us here more than anything else in this bill. I refer to the removal of the excise tax which had been earmarked for the old age security fund. This worries us a great deal. Anybody who thinks this is parliamentary hypocrisy or is an attempt to make political capital out of this matter has a very short memory indeed. Many memories in this House do not go back beyond personal recollection, and that is not very far in many cases. Old age pensions have never been adequate, but those of us who have worked step by step to get them and to have them increased know that there is a good deal of ground for fear, distrust and suspicion. I do not blame the parliamentary secretary, but I say he was very shortsighted if he thought there would not be this suspicion when he did not explain why the change is being made.

We want to know the reasons. There may be good reasons, but we have not been told what they are. Our suspicions will remain until such time as we are told. If we are not told during this debate, our suspicions will remain. They are not only the suspicions of the New Democratic Party or of the party to my right. They are the suspicions of everybody in this country who knows the history of old age pensions. In the first place they were most reluctantly given. At first we had a pension of $20 a month at age 70, with a means test. Every increase, every improvement, step by step after that had to be fought for.

There is in this House no person who has as much right as my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to voice suspicion and to demand to know the reasons for this change in the legislation. Nobody in this House has been the stubborn fighter from the very beginning in respect of increasing the old age pensions that the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre has been. I look across at my friends and say again that no member of this House has been the stubborn fighter for the rights of old age pensioners and the improvement of those rights that my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre has been.

An hon. Member: I disagree with that.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): You can disagree all you like, but what are you and I against the facts? The facts speak much louder than you do in this matter. The facts are that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, along with people who are no longer in this House, carried on a stubborn fight for the old age pensioners. As I say, no one has as much right as he to demand of the parliamentary secretary the reason for these changes. The fact is that not until 1950 did we manage to get the universal old age pension. The battle had been fought step by step since 1924, and only in 1950 was it made a universal old age pension. The contributory feature in it makes it something that can be called a social contract, a contract with society, which gives it a semblance of right. The sweeping away of the contributory factor gives us every reason to feel that the right may be going with it.

It is all very well for my hon. friend sitting straight ahead of me to say that this government has no intention of removing the old age pension. Anybody who knows anything about how liberties are removed knows that very seldom are liberties taken away in a single bite. They are nibbled away. The first approach to the removal of liberty and freedom is not noticed, because it can be explained away as being a more efficient method and as being of benefit to the person who is receiving it. Step by step down the slippery road this continues to happen.

Do not think that some of us over here have forgotten what happened to the universal nature of the old age security pension, or have forgotten that by using fancy language and calling it a guaranteed income supplement the older people in this country were divided into two classes, those who are poor and those who are very poor indeed. The very poor were told that they were benefiting because those a little higher up the income scale did not get a guaranteed income supplement. We have not forgotten that, and we have not forgotten the deprivation of people being kept at a straight $80 a month no matter what happens to the cost of living. These people have no escalator clause, no collective bargaining through which to raise their income in accord with the cost of living. And they were placed in that position by this government. No wonder we are suspicious.

This was done in the smoothest way. The older people were told that they would be regarded as a special category of older people who were self-supporting, and the other people were kept quiet because they were given the so-called guaranteed income supplement and allowed to keep the escalator clause. Their poverty was so desperate that my friends across the way might well have had the revolution referred to by the last government speaker had the older people not been given that kind of sop to keep them quiet.

These are our reasons for wanting an explanation. I am sorry that the minister did not give them in his opening statement because under our rules of debate he is effectively gagged from taking further part in the debate. I warn him now—he probably knows this without my warning—that when we reach the clause by clause study we will again be asking him for an explanation as to why this has been done. Either there is good reason, or there is none. If there is good reason, let him remove the suspicion from the government's shoulders by telling us about it, and if there is no good reason—

An hon. Member: Political hypocrisy.

Mrs. MacInnis: Let the hon. gentleman across the way keep quiet about political hypocrisy. He should know that at least the older people have some champions here who will fight for their right to exist. There are certain rights in this country. The Americans used to refer to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. I will add a fourth right, the right of the old to have self-respect and to be self-respecting. That is a right in this country, or it should be. If this government insists on nibbling away at it with fancy language or with silence, that right will be eroded bit by bit.

We have every right to be given an explanation because there is value in earmarking a fund for the old age security pension. If no particular amount is earmarked for this purpose, every time old age pensions are paid the government will look at the consolidated revenue fund and think that it is a big bite out of the fund and that they had better find some way of chiselling away at it, of putting old age pensioners into another category where they could be given a smaller amount.

If you have a sum of money that you have set aside for a certain purpose and you have effectively said goodbye to that money, you are not tempted to use it for something else. But if you leave that money in a common pot, in your general expense fund, every time you wish to use the money for a special purpose you are tempted to nibble it away and not rob the common pot to that extent. This is why we want a certain amount of money to be set aside by statutory means for the old age security fund, something that cannot be used for another purpose. If suddenly the government tells us that they will take away the sales tax and that it will no longer be put into the old age pension fund, then we have every right to become worried.

At present the old people in this country have been demoted, they do not count any longer. Youth is everything. Once you are over the hill, which is around the age of 30, you are regarded as being of no account. When you get to the stage of receiving the old age pension, somehow this government believes that you are well able to exist on toast and tea and that you enjoy toast and tea more than nutritious food, that it is positively insulting to give you a full-bodied diet.

I would not trust the government round the corner unless it can give us an explanation as to why it is doing this. I say to the parliamentary secretary that I wish the minister had not muzzled himself for the rest of the debate. I appeal to him to go and find the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) before supper and if he cannot do so now, after supper, and ask him to give us an explanation. Presumably there is good reason or he would not have allowed the basis of payment for the old age security pension to be changed. Let him find the minister and persuade him to take part in the debate later on, so that he can dispel our suspicions and cut short our debate. I tell the parliamentary secretary that we have no intention of letting this change go by without knowing why the government made it.

Mr. Mahoney: Let us go on to committee of the whole stage.

Mrs. MacInnis: I would like to have an explanation now. It had better be a good explanation, because the elderly people of this country have been bitten so often that they recognize the bite when it is coming.

Mr. Whicher: Would you be satisfied if the explanation were good?

Mrs. MacInnis: Did I not say we were pleased to have these taxes cut? We are like Oliver Twist; we want to make absolutely sure there will be more and that not only the taxes are cut but that the consumer will obtain the benefit therefrom. We want the government to go the whole way and protect its first action by a second action. If the government has a good explanation, that is well and good; but silence is no answer. The old people of this country, and we on this side of the House, will not take silence for an answer on this very important matter.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), has suggested that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) should come to the House to tell us why this has been done. I am not sure that he is the right minister to do so, because if he must abide by the principles of cabinet solidarity I am not sure he is able to stand up and tell us why it is being done. I think it would be much more appropriate if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) were to come into the House and tell us exactly why this is being done. After all, this is his bill.

Perhaps I am being a little bolder than my colleagues, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I am going to suggest that from the facts available I already know what is being done. The Minister of Finance has been talking about reducing various taxes through this bill, yet when one looks at the bill it is quite evident that he is increasing the sales tax by 3 per cent. That is exactly what it says. I quote from clause 1:

"27. (1) There shall be imposed, levied and collected a consumption or sales tax of twelve per cent on the sale price of all goods".

The act at present in force provides:

There shall be imposed, levied and collected a consumption or sales tax of nine per cent on the sale price of all goods.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, what in my view and in the opinion of the Carter commission on taxation is a very regressive form of taxation is being increased by 3 per cent through this bill. That is what it says. There is a later clause in the bill which abolishes certain provisions of the Old Age Security Act. That, to me, is a purely incidental piece of legislation because in effect it abolishes the 3 per cent contribution to the old age security fund. But it is quite apparent, on the face of the facts of the legislation, that what is being done is to reduce the amount of money going into the old age security fund and on the other hand to permanently increase the sales tax by 3 per cent.

Hon. members may recall that the Carter commission report said if there was going to be a sales tax at all—and it said sales tax should continue—then sales tax both federal and provincial should be levied at the retail level, rather than continuing in our tax law this particularly iniquitous form of taxation that bears most heavily on the consumer and is one of the factors contributing to inflation.

If one compares this bill with Bill C-259 this was pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—he will see there is no parallel provision in regard to sales tax as there is in regard to income tax. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre remarked earlier, that legislation points out that an amount equal to the amount that might have been collected from income tax, under the direct 3 per cent and 4 per cent contributions from corporations and personal income tax, shall be put into the fund by the Minister of National Revenue. There is nothing in this bill which says that shall be done with the extra 3 per cent sales tax to be levied. It is quite clear to me what the government has in mind. It is going to rob the old age security fund of the 3 per cent that is now going into it and put that money into general revenues. The practical effect in the long run will be an increase of 3 per cent in this regressive form of taxation to be used for the general spending programs of the government.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) said there would be a revolution if the government were to tamper with this. But some of us recall the kind of suggestions that came from government and near-government sources during the period prior to the tabling of the white paper with the blue cover, called "Income for Canadians", by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). And some of us recall the relief and surprise—certainly pleasure so far as I was concerned—that was felt when he indicated in that white paper that for the time being at least the universal old age security pension was to be continued.

As I say, there had been widespread suggestions emanating from government and near-government sources that the universal old age pension plan might be changed. Now I am beginning to feel that in the internal discussions of the government this philosophy is winning out and this bill is a symbol and a sample of it. If one couples this with the earlier action mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway regarding the freezing of the old age security pension at $80, this at a time when because of cost of living increases obviously a substantial increase was warranted if one were continuing to accept the principle of universality, and puts these two things together it is evident that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if he does believe in the principle of universality of a basic old age pension, has been losing out in the arguments within government on this question.

This is what is emerging in this bill. The old age security fund is to be chopped by whatever the yield from this 3 per cent tax has been, and that presumably confirms the idea that the freeze of the pension at $80 is to continue into the indefinite future as long as this government remains in office. That is the only logical conclusion I can draw. I suggest it is the Minister of Finance, rather than the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who should come into this House and tell us whether or not that is happening with respect to the direction of government policy at this time. Some of us who have been members of a number of parliaments have seen well-meaning ministers put forward various kinds of programs, only to have them chopped out from underneath them by the real policymakers behind the scenes.

Mr. Munro: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Barnett: I think the minister has time to do so before six o'clock, and I will be glad to answer.

Mr. Munro: If the hon. member and other hon. members who have been speaking are asking for a declaration of governmental intent with respect to the old age security pension, I can say there is no intention whatsoever of the government to do away with the old age security pension. There is a question of the realignment of the tax designed to raise moneys for the government, but there is no intention at all to do away with the pension.

Mr. Barnett: I am a little uncertain as to the minister's question. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is six o'clock. I would just like to say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I had virtually concluded my remarks at six o'clock when I had that most interesting non-question from the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, without really attempting to ask any question that would be in order, made a short speech. However, I shall take it as a question. There is some doubt in my mind about his suggestion that I had been arguing that it was the intention of the government to do away with the old age security pension.

I should like to point out to the House, Mr. Speaker, that neither my colleagues nor I have suggested that this is implied in the legislation before us. I was pointing out that under the terms of this bill we are in effect reducing by 3 per cent the contribution from the sales tax to the old age security fund, an amount that is specifically set aside for that purpose, and at the same time we are indirectly increasing the effective sales tax for general purposes by 3 per cent. I suggested that taken together with the recent action of freezing the old age security pension at $80, this indicated that the government was saying that the old age security pension was to be put into limbo at $80 regardless of the cost of living and that it was therefore becoming a rather peripheral and irrelevant element in terms of total government policy.

It seems to me that this is implicit in the bill and this is why my colleagues and I have raised the question. We are not suggesting that the government has any immediate intent to abolish the old age security pension by the bill but are, rather, asking whether they are moving away from the principle of universal payments to all citizens of Canada as a matter of right, through this legislation. I submit that this is a very serious question and is deserving of an answer from the spokesmen for the government. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is, of course, bound by the general policy decisions of the cabinet, so I suggest that as we are dealing with a tax bill the most appropriate spokesman would be the Minister of Finance.

Before the intervention by the minister I had mentioned that on many occasions I had seen the good intentions of various ministers and departments overridden by general government policy. This has applied in the field of pensions and certain other fields of government policy in which I have been involved. The matter is of legitimate concern to members of this party who fought for the principle of universality of pensions as a matter of right payable at a level adequate to meet the needs of retired people.

As was said by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, this is not raised as a matter of idle politics but as a very basic question related to the well-being and future of the citizens of this country and, in particular, the older citizens.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak briefly on Bill C-260 because I presume we would like to get it into committee of the whole and receive answers to some of the questions posed this afternoon and this evening. One hon. member opposite has suggested that we were trying to frighten the old age pensioners by some of the matters which have been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I believe it is the purpose of the opposition to endeavour to find out from the government exactly what they intend to do through any piece of legislation before the House. If they cannot explain a bill when it is introduced then, of course, we become suspicious and wonder whether we have to obtain from them in writing—in fact, maybe in blood—exactly what they are doing.

In looking at the old age security pension and the areas of concern expressed this afternoon, I think it must be said that the question posed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) led us nowhere. It just posed another question—whether the universality of the old age security plan will be done away with. The government may be considering this, but of course they would not say so in debate in the House of Commons in the session before a federal election is called. But we need reassurance on this point, Mr. Speaker, and in committee of the whole we should find out from the government exactly what is meant by the legislation.

I realize that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) has muzzled himself to the point where it is difficult for him to answer questions. On September 23 a question was put to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in regard to manufacturers and producers being granted a blanket exemption from federal sales tax on anti-pollution equipment and the request from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities that similar exemption be granted.

I realize that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) has muzzled himself to the point where it is difficult for him to answer questions. On September 23 a question was put to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in regard to manufacturers and producers being granted a blanket exemption from federal sales tax on anti-pollution equipment and the request from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities that similar exemption be granted.

The question is, will the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities receive the favourable consideration that is necessary in this regard? If the parliamentary secretary will indicate by nodding his head that they will receive that favourable consideration, then of course our remarks at this stage of the debate may be somewhat limited.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Skoberg: By all means, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner: Is the hon. member not aware that the parliamentary secretary cannot speak for the government? Is he also not aware that there is not a cabinet minister present in the chamber and therefore no one is present who can speak for the government, and that he ought not to proceed with this line of debate until some person with authority to answer for the government comes into the House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I am a pretty young buck in the House of Commons.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Here comes the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skoberg: At the same time, I have lots of confidence in the abilities of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) who did a pretty good job in answering questions on the tax bill. I thought he could indicate by nodding his head whether municipalities are to be granted the same exemptions that are to be made available to manufacturers. Will the request of the municipalities receive favourable consideration? It seems strange—

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just spoken said there is not one minister in the House. The hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) was in the House but his presence was required in the lobby.

On the other hand, counting the number of Progressive Conservative members, we realize there are not many, and we can say the same thing of the NDP members. Then, why pick on government members regarding attendance in the House?

[English]

Mr. Peters: The hon. member need not worry. The House has enough business to keep him here for another hour at least.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With respect, that was not a point of order. If the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is rising on another point of order, I will hear him. Otherwise, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg).

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member who just rose questioned my word and that of my party. When I asked my original question of the hon. member who has the floor, not one minister was present who was able to speak for the government. People who are behind the curtains do not count. You know and I know, Mr. Speaker, that a member's presence behind the curtains does not constitute attendance in the House. There might be 17 members behind the curtains for all I know, but you cannot include them among those in the chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Although I indicated to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc)—

Mr. Jerome: Look, there is a man behind the curtain. Look behind the curtain on your side.

Mr. Horner: But he is not responsible for anything.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I was about to say that it seems to the Chair that the hon. member for Crowfoot who initially raised the point of order may not have had a legitimate point of order.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I asked a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member asked a question. As a result, there were certain changes in attendance in the chamber. I do not think that is a matter of concern for the Chair. Whether ministers or representatives of the government are present in the chamber is not a matter for the Chair to concern itself with. I appreciate the concern of hon. members. The Chair has no control over whether members of the government are or are not present during debate. The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Skoberg: Sometimes it is hard to see ministers when they are not in their proper places. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) occupying the seat in this House of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). Having tried membership in quite a number of parties, the Minister of Agriculture now appears to be trying the Prime Minister's seat.

In all seriousness, I want to know whether representations made with regard to Bill C-260 will be given favourable consideration. Will the government give favourable consideration to the requests of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, the body which represents the basic foundations of democracy in this country? The members of the federation are greatly concerned about where their tax dollars are being spent. It strikes me as passing strange that the people involved have not been told what they can expect.

Let us see what the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has said in a news release. Our search in this regard might be like a voyage of discovery because we may discover where democracy begins and ends. You see, Mr. Speaker, all sorts of concessions in the field of pollution control have been given to manufacturers but not, apparently, to municipalities. This fact has led to questions being raised in the House. The president of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities communicated to the Minister of Finance the concern of municipalities regarding a particular aspect of the budget and tax reform proposals submitted on June 18, 1971. The Minister of Finance wrote to the federation and in an attempt to answer their concern said:

> To further encourage the acquisition of anti-pollution equipment, I wish to announce the immediate withdrawal of the sales tax on such equipment used in production. This new exemption will apply to all machinery and apparatus which manufacturers or producers acquire to detect, prevent, remove or reduce pollutants of water, soil or air. The exemption will reduce revenues by about $8 million a year.

The letter, dated June 18, 1971, was sent from the House of Commons and bears the signature of the Minister of Finance. That is the type of correspondence that the federation is concerned about, because apparently little consideration is being given to extending the same advantages to municipalities as are to be extended to manufacturers. A news release dated December 17, 1971, and put out by the Department of the Environment says, in part:

> Environment Canada will take the lead among federal departments in elimination of pollution by government installations across Canada.

Since departments of the federal government are prepared to take the lead in eliminating pollution, and since the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has asked for the same privileges that are to be extended to manufacturers, I suggest that for not being prepared to assist municipalities across Canada in this regard the government stands condemned.

Mr. Alexander: Right.

Mr. Skoberg: This area needs consideration. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is prepared to give favourable consideration to the requests of the municipalities. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture, who should also be concerned about pollution control measures, will come to realize that the municipalities are the foundation of our society and that their needs should be considered. It is fine and dandy to say that federal government departments will be active in the area of pollution control. The basic unit of our society is the municipality. In common with manufacturers and producers, municipalities hope that they will be given blanket exemption from federal sales tax on the purchase of anti-pollution equipment.

No doubt many hon. members in this House have served on municipal councils. Others who have not so served have been associated with people active in municipalities and local communities. At present it appears that the federal government is not prepared—hopefully, I am wrong—to revise its schedule of exemptions and include municipalities as entities eligible for exemptions with regard to anti-pollution equipment. One must ask, exactly what is the government trying to do to the small municipalities across this country?

We have heard many times about pollution control measures, sewage disposal plants and all the rest that will assist in controlling pollution. At the same time the government has introduced Bill C-260 which does not provide pollution control measures or the machinery connected with those measures as far as municipalities are concerned. Surely this government is not insensitive to the concern of the municipalities. They must realize that municipalities need concessions along the same lines as those which manufacturers are receiving. Surely the submission made by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities bears considerable weight.

I look forward to questions being asked when this bill is before committee of the whole, so that we will hear the real reason for the government not including municipalities. I hope that responsible ministers of the government will be present and these questions will be answered in committee. These ministers, speaking for their departments, can tell the people of Canada that they will provide concessions along the lines to which I referred, similar to those granted manufacturers and producers.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate this evening. While I realize we are approaching the festive season, there is no reason why it should become a silly season. It has come close to being that. I found the speeches of members opposite almost incredible. I did not hear a word about the removal of sales tax on margarine. I wonder why. That is probably the most important feature.

Bill C-260 is a relatively insignificant bill, yet the members of the New Democratic Party are making speech after speech. I have been asking myself why they are doing this. What are they going to do? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), an experienced and able parliamentarian, spoke in the House this afternoon. He attempted to establish a link with the 1950 report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Old Age Security. He waved a blue document before us. I am familiar with that report. I worked for several years as a public servant in the Department of National Health and Welfare. We used that important document.

What was the link? The link was the great virtue of having a contributory pension plan. The report of the Senate and House of Commons committee included in its recommendations a contributory pension plan, the 3-3-3 formula. It was originally 2-2-2 but was later changed to 3-3-3, corporation income, personal income and sales tax. I can understand the hon. member talking about the psychological link between the individual's contribution of income tax and pension. The continuous link, which the member spent his entire speech trying to establish, was that putting 3 per cent earmarked from the sales tax into a fund was an absolutely necessary element of a pension scheme.

I have heard ridiculous speeches, statements and propositions before but in the period in which I have been a member of this House, never anything to quite equal that. To suggest that somehow part of a sales tax, when put into a fund, makes it a little more virtuous, conspicuous and does something for the great integrity of the individual is something that I never expected to hear from a responsible member of the House of Commons, especially the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

If we want to talk about contributory pensions, I can understand the point that has to be made in the proper scheme of things. But let us do it in a reasonable and sensible way. Let us not have speech after speech demanding that the minister say whether he is going to abolish the old age security program. That is complete and utter nonsense from serious members on the other side.

I keep asking myself "Why these speeches? Why this nonsense? Why this drivel?" I say it is drivel coming from members opposite who normally make good speeches. In this instance they are far wide of the mark in refusing to deal with the merits of a relatively insignificant piece of legislation. The legislation removes the sales tax on margarine, television sets and other electronic apparatus and amends the old age security financing formula to make sure that the sales tax portion is no longer labelled the way it was. It does not affect the incidence or the level of sales tax.

I suggest their purpose is to consume the time of the House to avoid a discussion on other legislation. They are wasting the time of the House. But the people of Canada, the taxpayers and the voters, have a right to recognize what hon. members opposite, those of the NDP bearing smiles on their faces, have done here this afternoon and are doing tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) rose in his place to ask if the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) will permit a question.

Mr. Francis: I will be happy to receive a question.

Mr. Horner: My question is very simple. If what the hon. member is saying is true, why does the minister not get up and state categorically that the government has no intention now or in the future to do away with the old age security pension?

Mr. Francis: I know that the minister is going to do so in his place. If this is the pretext on which hon. members are making their speeches, it can be quickly set to rest.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question? I wonder if the hon. member is aware of the fact that when I spoke about this matter this afternoon I related the removal of the sales tax to the concurrent removal of the personal old age security tax and the corporation old age security tax, in other words the whole package, and that under Bill C-259 we did not have a chance to discuss the matter.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-259 was debated in this House for over 40 days. The debate on that subject should stand on its merits. The issue before us, Bill C-260, relates to the reduction of sales tax and other matters. Surely the rule of relevance is as important in this debate as it is in any other.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on Bill C-176—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jerome: Bill C-176 does not start until tomorrow.

Mr. Peters: I know perfectly well on which bill I am speaking. The previous member was probably well aware on which bill he was speaking. I do not think there is any conflict on that matter.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Frankly, I am not one who is particularly involved in the question of sales tax. I am one who believes that a sales tax is a retrograde tax, a tax that must be paid by those who cannot really afford to do so and by those who can afford to do so, indiscriminately. Most governments have used it as an emergency measure to raise revenue but, unfortunately, it always seems to become permanent. The tax we are considering has not changed. It was levied at the rate of 11 per cent or 12 per cent, and under this bill it will continue to be 11 per cent or 12 per cent. Most people who advocate tax reform do not really approve of it as a long-term tax.

I differ from some of the statements made by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), but I agree with him that this bill is concerned with only a small portion of the sales tax which has been directed to old age security. Originally, in 1952, this money was raised in three ways and a good deal of consideration was given to whether or not part of the tax should be in the form of a sales tax. At that time, personal income tax accounted for 2 per cent, corporation tax for another 2 per cent and the sales tax for a further 2 per cent. As I recall it, there was a $60 maximum on personal tax contributions. This situation changed over the years. It went to three, three and three. Then for several years the tax was 4 per cent on personal income, 3 per cent on corporation income and 3 per cent on sales tax. I do not know whether many members realize that we have eliminated the 4 per cent personal contribution and the 3 per cent collected from the corporations. The hon. member for Ottawa West may have known.

I listened to much of the debate which took place on Bill C-259. I was lucky to keep up with discussions as they were going on. I never claimed I had spent my summer reading this bill and becoming totally familiar with it. I can honestly say that I was not personally aware that the old age security fund was to be eliminated as a contributory fund. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) shakes his head. I give him credit for having studied this bill. It pays him a little money to study this bill. I will say frankly that he has earned that money. He is one of the few parliamentary secretaries who has. He has earned it because he spent all the summer and all the fall and a great deal of the time of civil servants in obtaining some knowledge of that bill. But I believe as we look around us we would see many members in this chamber who just did not know what was being done. Why were we not told we were getting rid of the old age security fund as a contributory fund?

I have always been impressed by the attitude taken by many Conservatives and, indeed, by some of the older members of the New Democratic Party as well as by some of the older Liberals; they would not accept old age security pension if they thought it was a gift from the treasury. They were always told, and they believed, that they received a pension as of right because they had contributed toward it.

Since 1952, almost 20 years ago, they have made regular contributions of between $60 and $120 to a fund from which they could draw a pension as of right because they had contributed to it. There are thousands of people in this country who will not apply for an old age supplementary benefit simply because it is a hand-out from the government, and because to receive it they must show they are destitute. I am sure not many people in this House would say they do not know many older people in their constituencies who would not accept welfare, who would not accept a dole but who would accept the old age pension. It is a dishonest government, it is a dishonest Minister of Health (Mr. Munro) and a dishonest Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)—

Mr. Gibson: That is a completely false statement.

Mr. Peters: There is our friend from Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) again making lots of noise from his seat. He sounds better when he uses only one or two syllables at a time, because when he rises to make a contribution it really is not worth while. As long as he keeps quiet, nobody knows how stupid he is; it is only when he opens his mouth that people realize the full extent of his ignorance.

Mr. Gibson: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is overwhelmed by his own verbosity tonight.

Mr. Peters: Congratulations to whichever member informed the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth of those words of wisdom. They certainly did not come from him. His own seat has not developed that kind of wisdom. I believe there is great dishonesty attached to a government which would refuse to tell Parliament what it is doing in this field. I have not said anything about closure.

Mr. Gibson: You certainly have not. We have been waiting to hear you.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to get all the help I am getting from that particular direction. Closure was applied to a long and important bill. What we are seeing now is an indication of the way in which the public is not being protected. I am sure that if there had been an opportunity to go over the other sections of the bill, most of us would have concluded that there was to be a reduction of the personal income tax directed to the old age security pension to which we have contributed for many years.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, diligently and with a great deal of compassion and skill, was able to point out that the contributory section of the old age security legislation eliminated the last vestige of self-interest the people of Canada had in developing their own old age security program.

Mr. Francis: Not even you believe that.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says that not even I believe that. The sort of welfare assistance that is provided 50 per cent by the province and 50 per cent by the federal government is going to be the kind of pension we will be giving our old age pensioners. This will be money paid out of general revenue, just as if it were welfare. That is not a contributory plan and it is not the kind of plan that our old age pensioners like or will accept. A number of people will not accept this kind of charity from the state but would be willing to contribute to a fund from which they can draw.

I am sure the hon. member who raised that point realizes that in another field with which he is very familiar people do accept money when they feel it is their right to have it. They will not apply for money that is means-tested. Veterans only get veterans allowance if they meet other conditions. For example, I am sure all hon. members hear of widows who are in very serious straits before they apply for a benefit that their husband as a veteran did not apply for because he did not feel entitled to it.

Mr. Francis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. Francis: I have listened with interest to the hon. member's point, but is he suggesting that the absence or presence of a means test is going to be the only factor governing the decision to apply? If so, how does he rationalize this with old age security, where there is no means test?

Mr. Peters: I have not really gone into that, and it opens up another can of worms the government has been considering, namely, whether or not all benefits should be means-tested. The government has had a committee studying this question for a number of years and all kinds of piecemeal proposals have been made by the committee and fed to us by civil servants in the form of legislation.

My point, which I hope the hon. member is not going to miss, is that when people contribute to a fund that is earmarked for a specific purpose, they know what they are paying their money for. Having filed 20 or 30 income tax forms in their lifetime, they know certain amounts go to old age security, to the pension plan, and so on. My point is that they know these amounts are earmarked for that purpose.

Mr. Francis: They pay for the benefits anyway, whether earmarked or not.

Mr. Peters: There is no question that they have to pay. If I receive welfare I have contributed to the welfare fund while working. Part of my tax was used for that purpose. But it is still welfare, something that I am given. I do not think that the money is tainted; the taint comes from—

Mr. Francis: The means test.

Mr. Peters: Not entirely the means test, but partly from the idea that I had not directly contributed to that fund.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): I would ask the hon. member whether the suggestion that the amount of the old age pension be mentioned on the tax form or included in the basic rate is not merely a question of semantics or a technical point. I believe it comes to the same thing. In my opinion, the argument that a taxpayer willingly contributes to the old age security plan does not hold water because those who receive the old age pension generally do not contribute to the Canada pension plan.

[English]

Mr. Peters: That is not what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said. He said the principle of universality should be carried on. The minister has stated everyone would be entitled to a certain payment out of the fund. The only problem arises when the amount has to be increased. The government made an additional payment which it called a supplement, but applied a means test. But in both the government's white paper and the report on social services the case for universality is made. Family allowances, and I suggest old age security as well from now on, will drop the principle of universality and the government will only pay out when there is a need.

As far as unemployment insurance is concerned, all workers are going to contribute, but only a few will ever get money from the fund. But my point is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) did not tell us, or if he did I did not understand him, that the government was going to eliminate the contributory section from the old age security legislation and that the money would be paid out of a general fund. However, the government has not yet been able to design a scheme of income tax to get this money back again, though my colleague for Winnipeg North Centre hit upon an ingenious idea that eliminated most of the tax at the bottom end yet offered the same exemptions all the way up.

I suppose you would soon reach a Utopian system where everybody would be paid all kinds of dividends, or whatever you might care to call them, and only those who would need them would keep them. That is not what we are talking about when we speak about a guaranteed annual wage and a negative income tax structure. We believe that everybody has the right to at least a reasonable amount of money.

We believe that the tax structure should be such that when money is not needed it is returned to the state, so that if a demogrant is given to an old age pensioner who has $5 million or $6 million, he is entitled to it but obviously some of that money should come back to the state. Obviously when a demogrant is not needed, the money should be returned to the state. However, the government is obviously making a change in the whole field. They are telling the public that this is a just society in which a just amount would be given to those at the bottom of the scale, and going all the way up the scale.

This government was faced recently with a court action and was told in effect that the law must be obeyed in the same way by everyone. If the law says you must pay out money, then you must pay it out. I presume that so long as the old age security fund exists, the government has the obligation to pay out at least the basic old age security to everyone who has made a contribution to that fund. Of course, there are limits and exceptions depending on how long you have lived in the country and a number of other factors, but that was your money and you had a right to it.

I suppose that someone in the legal department said that if that fund is established it would have to be used for that purpose. However, if we wipe out the fund and we decide to pay the demogrant—and I agree that there has been no indication from the government that they will not pay it—of $80 to old age pension recipients, they will not receive less money. Nevertheless, if the old age pensioner decides that that is a hand-out, that that is money he has not earned and is not entitled to, then I suggest he will consider and I will consider that the system has been changed. There is nothing we can do about it. But I think that everybody in this country owes a great deal of gratitude to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who has brought this to our attention.

Mr. Hogarth: You must be kidding.

Mr. Peters: The hon. gentleman is one of those who believes, as do many Liberals, that so long as someone receives the money, it does not matter where it comes from. One can belong to the high church in the better part of the town, rent quarters in the slums at an exorbitant rent to poor tenants who cannot do anything about it, but the money is clean. This is like the Mafia. In my opinion it is very important where the money comes from and by what means it comes.

There is a great difference between receiving money from the Canada Pension Plan and receiving it from someone else because I do not have enough money to feed my wife and keep a roof over our heads. Every time I crawl to some civil servant who is a welfare officer I will certainly be made well aware of the difference between that money and the money which I receive in my own right and to which I have contributed. People who have not had to do without do not see the difference. The landlord who never goes to the slums does not feel bad. They hire people to go to the slums and to evict other people; they do not do it themselves. It is not dirty business because they do not come into contact with it. But in my opinion there is a considerable difference between that money and the money one gets as one's right. I hope that eventually the government will bring Parliament and the country up to date on their thoughts regarding the old age pension. They will have to do that so far as programs like the old age pension are concerned.

An hon. Member: "Is" concerned.

Mr. Peters: I have already indicated that we come from different sides of the track. The point I want to make for the people on my side of the track—

Mr. Fairweather: And there are more of them.

Mr. Peters: —is that they have a right to know what their future will be in terms of social security. This reminds me very much of a fellow getting a job in some of the industries in which I have worked, such as a mine which closes down after 19 years. It closes down just as the old age security fund is closing down. After 19 years your are out of a job, there is no money left in the fund, you do not have a pension—in those days pension plans were not portable—and you have to start all over again. You hope that the next job you get will be better.

I think the people have the right to know where Canada is going in terms of social security. They have the right to know why it is advantageous to drop the contributions to this fund. This was the first major piece of social security in this country. It was a fund which the government did not find obnoxious to administer. The money was not invested in some agencies. I am in agreement with those members who say that we should continue to pay the demogrant at the present time. However, I wonder why we wiped it out. Obviously, there must be a reason why the 4 per cent was wiped out.

I would have made some changes to that fund. I would have taken off the ceiling and I would have allowed enough money to accumulate in the old age security fund to allow us to pay greatly increased benefits to the older people of this country. There were a number of changes that could have been made. But I cannot see the reason for eliminating the old age security fund. Obviously, this is done for a purpose. My suggestion is that the government is eliminating it so as to change the whole idea of the demogrant and from now on more and more of our basic social legislation will be based on a means test.

This government will say to the people, "You have to establish a need no matter what kind of grant you get. We will not pay the old age security pension to people who are not in need, but we will pay more than $80, perhaps even more than $130 to people who will establish need." This does not answer the question which the older people of Canada will have to ask themselves concerning the removal of the sense of integrity which people feel they had under the old age security plan and which they now have with the Canada Pension Plan because they make contributions to it. They have put money into it. They have contributed in whatever way the government wanted them to contribute to the fund. It is their fund. They want to enjoy that fund as a right.

It seems to me the government has not done any good service by removing surreptitiously, through Bill C-259, the 4 per cent personal contribution and the 3 per cent corporation share, and now through Bill C-260 removing the sales tax as a contribution to the old age pension fund. This will not make people richer.

One hon. member said that the sales tax has been removed from oleomargarine and from some dairy spreads. That is a slippery move, as one of my colleagues says. I suppose the extent of its slipperiness depends upon whether you are a farmer or not. And the government has removed the tax from pollution control machinery. Municipalities have had to fight pollution, and in fact they have been large-scale sources of pollution themselves. It is good that the tax is removed in that respect. The government lends municipalities money to fight pollution. I believe it should provide municipalities with the necessary machinery at as low a cost as possible. If necessary it should undertake the manufacture of pollution control machinery itself, and give such machinery to municipalities.

If the bill did not contain this provision I am quite sure it would have passed without much debate. But I am certain that anyone who listened to the speech made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre must now be concerned. He pointed to the loss of something that most of us have grown fond of, the old age security program. Mr. Speaker, some of our own members are taking advantage of that program. An increase in salary does not prevent one from taking advantage of it.

As I say, most of us support the idea of an old age security pension fund built up in part by contributions from individuals and in part by contributions from corporations. Collecting such contributions through sales tax has worked well. We are unhappy that the pension will now be regarded as a government hand-out, rather than something to which pension recipients themselves contributed.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on the surface, what we are being asked to do through changing the source of this tax simply looks like an administrative matter to clean things up. But we have a duty to look beyond what appears on the surface and examine the full implications of such a move. I am concerned that something which may be of great importance to the future of the old age pension scheme is being put through in the dying hours of this session. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has sometimes been called the conscience of Parliament. As that conscience he is very much concerned about old age pensioners. There is no one in this country who has fought so well for old age pensioners as the hon. member, and he is to be excused if he wants to know what will happen with this kind of legislation.

This debate illustrates a fundamental difference between some of us on this side of the House and other hon. members. This difference is between looking upon some government activity in the redistribution of income as a form of charity, or as a matter of right. There is an important principle involved. We in this party have always argued that in seeking redistribution of income we should get people to look after their own needs by contributing to government programs. In short, we saw the state in competition with private insurance plans and felt the state could introduce far better insurance programs—fairer, more equitable, cheaper to administer, and providing more benefits to all—and we believed in public involvement in those programs.

One of the schemes for which we fought and in which we believe strongly is the old age security pension program. It is not a charity, not something to be buried in the general tax structure. It is a program that should be highly visible. People should see that they themselves are contributing to it, and when they collect their pension they should know the pension is theirs as a matter of right and not a charitable gesture.

We have much reason to be suspicious of what the government has been doing to universal programs recently. For example, the old age pension has been frozen at $80. It seems inconceivable that a large group of people will never receive any increase in their old age pension and that in future increments are to be based on a means test. The government can call this test whatever it wants, but it winds up being a means test. We believe it is grossly unfair.

We have argued that this discriminates against people who have small savings or a small pension from another source. Some of the predictions we made about the difficulties created by the introduction of such a means test have become realities. More and more old age pensioners are becoming resentful that the small amounts they earn from baby sitting or other sources disqualifies them from increases in their old age pensions. They feel cheated, betrayed and let down by the people who administer the program.

The government is taking the same approach to family allowances. On a number of occasions the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has said he intends to revamp the whole family allowances program. I will not deal with that question in this debate, but it indicates the direction in which the government is moving. It is trying to drop universal programs or turn them into programs that contain some kind of means test.

We are not opposed to increases being given to those in need. This is a cornerstone of our policy. But it seems to us that the additional resources needed to do this are not coming from those who have the ability to pay. They are not coming from industries like oil and gas which pays minimal tax. They are not coming from people who make their living from capital gains. The necessary tax is coming from those who can least afford to pay it. The redistribution is not from the well-to-do to the poor; it is from the near-poor to the poor. This is not a good way to redistribute wealth. If the old age pension is frozen at a low level and the same happens to family allowances, then it is the near-poor who are hurt.

We cannot give our approval to a program that abandons universality and moves toward the introduction of a means test, particularly when the necessary tax is being levied on those who can ill afford to pay it and when benefits are being taken away from people who are entitled to them by virtue of their contributions to the program.

One of the things that sets Canada apart is the intelligent use made up to now of both the old age pension and the family allowance. This makes us different from our neighbours to the south in terms of our social outlook and how we view justice as between people. I am very unhappy to see anything introduced that would work against such programs. If there is an advantage to the sales tax and to part of it going to pay for the old age pension, it is the argument that the program is not universal in its contributory form because the poor who collect it do not pay income tax or corporation tax. But everyone pays sales tax in some form, and everyone who collects the old age pension, even if they never file an income tax return, has in fact contributed because of the sales tax on their purchases over the years.

While most of us regard sales tax as regressive and have been looking for ways out of it, there is a realization that it is going to become a larger instrument of government revenues than it is at present. It has been the experience of many European countries that a tax on consumables, including the necessities of life but also at other levels, is a cheap way of raising taxes. By allocating a portion of the sales tax to the old age pension fund we can guarantee that it will increase and continue to serve old age pensioners in the future, but by trying for administrative ease the government will destroy the philosophical basis and the justification for a separate fund for old age pensions. I for one, Mr. Speaker, think that the government owes this House an explanation of its intentions and its reasons for wanting these particular changes made now. If we do not get an explanation then we must suspect that the government has other things in mind than trying to make things easy for civil servants.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in the debate on this very interesting bill. First, I must say that the changes dealing with the Old Age Security Act make one wonder where we are going. Therefore I look forward to hearing the real reasons behind the proposed changes.

I should like to speak briefly on those sections of the bill dealing with anti-pollution equipment. Our group has been pressing for the exemption of anti-pollution equipment from the sales tax as one of the incentives to encourage all groups in Canada to take a more active role in pollution abatement. The municipalities need the most assistance, but as I read the bill they are not covered by the exemptions in it. I feel that this matter should be of interest to every member of the House. Municipal groups have come to us from one end of Canada to the other asking for tax relief.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) asked the parliamentary secretary whether municipalities were covered in the exemptions, but to date we have not received the information. From the material we have received from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities it is my impression that the municipalities are not covered. I ask the parliamentary secretary and all members of this House, why should we give industry exemption from sales tax on anti-pollution equipment and not give it to municipalities which in my opinion need it most? This is one of the reasons we are interested in discussing the bill on second reading.

I wish to tell the parliamentary secretary through you, Mr. Speaker, that if they do not bring in an amendment to clause 4 giving some relief to municipalities on sales tax respecting anti-pollution equipment, we will bring in an amendment and have another debate on it. This is the very thing we have been preaching and urging. Groups have been appearing before our committees for months asking for some kind of relief, yet Bill C-260 does not cover the municipalities of Canada. Why is the exemption given only to industry? I think clause 4(2)(b) is the key to the whole thing. It provides:

> machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them directly in the detection, measurement, prevention, treatment, reduction or removal of pollutants to water, soil or air attributable to the manufacture or production of goods—

There are other clauses which can be dealt with in committee. The municipalities in many instances do not have the tax base to allow them to take adequate measures for control, and I see absolutely no reason why they are not included in this legislation. I trust the explanation will be given by the parliamentary secretary later in the debate.

I should like to refer again to the news release issued by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities on September 21, 1971. They reiterate what we have been trying to get across to the government, that changes must be made to the legislation, and made now. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) in his remarks said that we are talking nonsense and wasting time, trying to take time from debate on legislation coming in tomorrow and the next day. Mr. Speaker, nothing in Canada is more important than pollution and environmental problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: We ask members on all sides of the House to look at the legislation and ask themselves whether they want assistance for their municipalities. If they do, they must get to their feet and ask the government to make a change in the section which will make anti-pollution equipment for municipalities exempt from tax, as it is for industry.

That is all I have to say now, Mr. Speaker. I am not trying to talk out the bill, but I feel that the clause dealing with pollution equipment is not strong enough. I am in favour of taking the sales tax off equipment for industry because it is a step forward. But why leave municipalities out? We are sick and tired of privilege being given to those who make a tremendous profit on the sale of this type of equipment, and we are asking that the taxpayers of this country be given some relief at the municipal level. It can be done through this bill. That is what we are asking and what we will try to get when the bill comes to committee stage, because we are going to force a debate on this clause by moving an amendment.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1—

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, this is an amending bill and therefore the discussion must be relevant to the particular clauses being considered.

An hon. Member: That will be the day.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. gentleman who has just commented might look at the situation and see how members of his party have behaved themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. members for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, and New Westminster always make their noises from their seats. Their contributions in the present discussions have been precisely nil.

On the face of it, it would appear that in clause 2 there is an actual increase in the proportions. I want to say that this is not so. I fully agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I think the minister will agree, too, when I say that at this stage we are now doing away with what one might call a designated tax. I am not persuaded that we should do away with it. I think there was great psychological advantage in having the public understand that they were paying part of the sales tax as a contribution toward their old age security. This provision will eliminate that. It is true that under another clause of the bill it is provided that the consolidated revenue fund will make payments to the old age security fund, but that is not the same thing. The public will not understand that.

The hon. member for Laurier may shrug his shoulders. Will he ask his constituents about their contribution toward an old age pension that they considered as theirs by virtue of the contributions made? Now, of course, this payment is to be just another transfer payment from someone else. The individual cannot identify himself with it. I say that there was psychological value in having people identify the payments they were making in certain respects to retirement pensions. This idea was strongly advocated with regard to the Canada Pension Plan, which is identified with the individual. I think a retirement plan ought to be identified with the individual.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Certainly.

Mr. Hogarth: What about the great number of Canadians who do not contribute to the fund in the way the hon. member has suggested, under the auspices of the Income Tax Act, that is to say, those Canadians who have not yet paid income tax but by virtue of their age receive the old age pension?

An hon. Member: They pay sales tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is very simple. Those people are paying sales tax.

Mr. Downey: That was a very poor question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for New Westminster has precisely put his finger on the point. Mind you, he did not intend to. We recognize that there are many earning low incomes who do not pay income tax and that, therefore, they do not make their contribution of three points to the old age security fund. Nevertheless, they pay sales tax because there is no way that you can escape sales tax.

Mr. Hogarth: Would the hon. member permit another question? Is the hon. member suggesting that those who do not pay the 3 per cent surcharge on income tax pay sufficient sales tax to warrant the amount that they are being paid by way of pension?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not saying that, because there is no question here of an individual contributing amounts which will be equivalent in any way to his pension. After all, the person who is well-to-do contributes a great deal more than the pension he will receive. I was talking about the feeling of participation.

That point was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and many others. He and others talking about this sense of participation. You can see it under the Canada Pension Plan. The idea of participation is reinforced by the Canada Pension Plan, and it seems to me it is a good idea for the individual to identify the payments he makes as being contributions toward the old age security pension. If we ever come to the point of the guaranteed annual income, either by introducing the negative income tax or tax credits—and I always thought that Bill C-259 was wrong because it did not use the tax credit system—we will need to organize the income tax on a much more flexible basis if we are to take care of aspects of that kind. Some provinces are ready to move in that direction. However, we are opening up a much wider field for discussion than is contemplated by this clause.

As I understand it, tariff item 47600-1 deals with certain equipment. I am referring to the items listed under subparagraph (3). Tariff item 47815-1 deals primarily with surgical equipment and with driving kits that persons who are incapacitated because of physical infirmity may fit to their automobiles so that they may drive them. That is perfectly all right and I entirely support this provision.

There is one point that I should like to see developed more, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Kootenay West discussed it with some vehemence a short while ago and I wish to deal with it. I felt that removing the sales tax as an incentive for manufacturers to purchase anti-pollution equipment was a step in the right direction. In other words, manufacturers can now acquire such equipment without paying tax. The scope of this measure is very limited. According to clause 4, section 20 (2) (b) found on page 2 of the bill, such machinery and apparatus must be used directly in the detection, measurement, prevention, treatment, reduction or removal of pollutants to water, soil or air attributable to the manufacture or production of goods.

I think this provision may be fairly limited. I am not sure how far these people will be able to move. The hon. member for Kootenay West said that the provision should be given to municipalities, but the municipalities in the main are not in the business of producing goods. I think under the National Housing Act, and I would certainly like to see the government move in this direction, the credits could be improved and upgraded.

Rather than a sales tax credit, municipalities could be given an incentive for forgiveness features in loans for sewage treatment plants in the secondary and tertiary fields. This is a much better program than saying to the municipalities or provincial governments that they can take off the sales tax. There is a difficulty with the provinces. The federal and provincial governments have agreements whereby they each pay the sales tax to the other chap. If you start making exceptions, you get into difficulty. I do not think that is the way to approach it.

With regard to municipalities and provinces in connection with machinery, equipment and installations to deal with pollution control, it is far better to have a major incentive scheme of the kind that existed. Some may still exist although they are very limited. These provide forgiveness features on loans for programs with regard to these very expensive control systems. There are no two ways about it, they are very expensive. That is the only way that can be done. To say that municipalities and provinces should not have to pay sales tax on machinery or apparatus used in the production of goods is not feasible. It is another thing to put it in a category where you can undertake a major program that will bring results across the whole country, not just on a hit-or-miss basis as it might be.

I sympathize with the objective of inducing municipalities and provinces to enter the field of pollution control, but with the greatest of respect I do not think this is the place to do it. If I were in support of the idea of introducing an amendment, I might find some difficulty in limiting it within the terms of the ways and means motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, as the explanatory notes to this bill make clear, clause 1 is consequential to clause 5. I mention that as a prelude to making the statement that I think we should be entitled to discuss clauses 1 and 5 together since their combined effect is one operation, namely, the removal of the 3 per cent sales tax from the Old Age Security Act and the adding of 3 percentage points to the sales tax set out in the Excise Tax Act. As hon. members are aware, this area has concerned many of us who have taken part in this debate. We have done so because of a very real concern as to what use might be made of this change of tax policy in the future.

I say to the hon. member for Ottawa West that I listened with interest to his criticism earlier in this debate. However, I submit that there is one thing one has to watch around this place. That is the danger that victories that were won can be lost. As a matter of fact, I was quoting this afternoon from the report of the special joint committee on old age security that met in 1950. I remind any who were around at that time and those who have read history that one of the prominent members of that committee was David Croll, now a member of the other place. He was not only a prominent member of the joint committee, being then a member of the House of Commons, but he was one of the hardest fighters for the complete removal of the means test and for establishing old age security on a universal basis.

That same David Croll is now the chairman of a committee which recently issued a report stating, among other things, that the Old Age Security Act should be abolished, this proposal having been made in the context of his particular plan for a guaranteed annual income. I am simply making the point that things that were once won, and which one thought might have been established, can be lost if one does not watch out.

I expressed my fear this afternoon and I express it again tonight. By removing the direct relationship between individuals and the whole concept of old age security through the way in which they pay their taxes, there can be a lessening of the declared right to old age security on a universal basis. I again point out that one not only has material from as far back as 1950, but there is the white paper of the present Minister of National Health and Welfare which was tabled only a year ago. In it the minister said, among other things:

Personal income taxes as well as other earmarked taxes have been collected from people since 1952 to finance this program, establishing an expectation and a right to the pension.

The point I am trying to make is that this government has said time and again that one of the reasons that justifies the universality of the old age pension is that people pay for it through taxes that are identified for old age security. My fear is that if there is no such relationship, this or some succeeding government may go still further in terms of whittling away the universality that we wrote into the Old Age Security Act.

I remember a prominent deputy minister of welfare saying in a public address a few years ago that one of the real sources of pride in this country is the fact that we have established family allowances and old age pensions on a universal basis, and with this sort of thing having been won we can count on it being here for all time. That is not the case. That is my concern about this change in the tax basis.

At no time this afternoon did I or anyone else in this group suggest that this change envisages doing away with old age pensions. What it does envisage is the possibility of arguing against the universal right which has been related to the earmarked taxes. That is what I would like to fend off. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if we can now get the Minister of Finance to make a statement on this matter, it will be extremely welcome. He may have his reasons for not having referred to it in his budget speech of June 18, or when he introduced Bill C-259, or when this bill was introduced today.

We were told about these changes in respect of all three taxes in the resolutions and in the bills, but not one word has been said in explanation. But if the minister can now tell us that there is a philosophy behind this, that there is a rationale, and that it is not the intention of the government in the course of these changes in tax policy as far as old age pensions are concerned, to cut by one iota the right to universal pensions, I shall be pleased. I may even be satisfied.

But before he does that, may I correct one thing I said this afternoon and which I have since found to be wrong. Let me be the first to correct it. It was drawn to my attention by someone else, but I am happy to correct it. I made the statement this afternoon that the Minister of National Revenue would in the future be required to estimate the amount which would have been collected in personal old age security tax and in corporation old age security tax and that this amount would have to be transferred from the consolidated revenue fund into the old age security fund. Along with that I said this was not to be done with respect to sales tax. I now find that under the wording of Bill C-259 cross-related to section 24 of the Old Age Security Act the same thing would happen with respect to sales tax revenues.

Thus, an amount estimated to be what would have been derived had the old law still been in effect would be transferred to the fund. In other words, it is clear there is to be no change, in the immediate future at any rate, in the total amount of dollars going over. But this does not detract from the basic point we have made this afternoon, namely, that the earmarked relationship, the sense individuals have that they are paying for old age security and are therefore entitled to it, is to be wiped out by the way in which this is being done.

The Minister of Finance will probably tell us that the old age security fund as such is being retained. This, I might say, is a bit of fiction. It is just a matter of bookkeeping. I think that what is more important is to retain something which emphasizes each individual's right to a pension because of his contribution in one or two or three ways. I come back again to the report the committee made in 1950 and which the government accepted in 1951, namely, that it was a good idea to have this kind of relationship. I would not like to see it go, because the danger is created of the possibility that the government could get away from the universal concept, as has already happened in connection with the guaranteed income supplement. We have seen it happen, too, with respect to family allowances.

One of the reasons I am not unreservedly supporting the hon. member for Humber-St.-George's-St. Barbe in his frequent requests that the bill which deals with family security be enacted right away, is that although provision is made for improvement in the allowances to be paid it is accompanied by income tests which I think ought to be looked at very closely. This is my concern in connection with the legislation before us. I say to the hon. member for Ottawa West, despite his fun this evening, that it is a real concern. When I saw that this earmarked tax relationship, declared to be a prop for universality, was being removed, I was most concerned about what might happen in the future.

I hope that this debate, if it does nothing else, will produce a statement on what I suggest is an important subject and one on which we have heard not one word thus far from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Benson: I should like to say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that there is no intention to get rid of the universality of the basic old age pension. The government has often indicated this to be the situation.

When we were going through the process of reviewing personal and corporate income tax in connection with Bill C-259, one of the stated intentions was to get rid of designated taxes such as the old age security tax, the social development tax, and so on, and combine them in one system. At the same time, we did not want to get rid of the old age security fund. So what we have done in the bill before us, which takes care of the sales tax as well, is this:

we have authorized the Minister of National Revenue to transfer to the fund personal income tax, corporate income tax and sales tax in an amount equivalent to what would have been derived from the various percentages applied as special taxes. I believe this is a more efficient way of doing things. It makes it a little simpler for people to calculate their personal tax, and I think this is desirable.

As to people knowing that they contribute to the old age security fund, I doubt whether the majority of people even know they pay the sales tax, let alone that a certain percentage goes to the fund. The fund is to continue. There is no desire to get rid of universality. I think I have given the hon. member the assurance for which he is asking.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are one or two further points I should like to make. The minister states he has no intention of getting away from the present practice. I wish he would confirm statements which have been made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the right of entitlement, which has been based on the taxes the way they were, still hold? The Minister of National Health and Welfare has declared that it was because the taxes were earmarked there was a right which people could assert. Will that still hold?

Mr. Benson: The right is given to the pensioner by Parliament. The only way of changing this would be for the government to amend the Old Age Security Act in order to change the amount paid to people. I can assure the hon. member that we have no intention of changing the universality of the basic pension.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Francis: You knew that, anyway.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I did not know it, and I can tell the hon. member that before I leave this building tonight I shall index these statements which have been made by the minister for use at an appropriate time.

I have one other question. The minister seems to glory in the fact that the special taxes for the old age security fund and the social development fund have been done away with but that the fund has been kept in existence. Does he have any dealings with the Minister of Labour? Does he not realize that in the case of unemployment insurance the special taxes have been kept alive but that the fund has been done away with? Would not a little consistency over there be a good idea?

• (9:50 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member for Ottawa West rising on a point of order?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a question at some convenient point, if he will permit it.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has asked the minister a question and now the hon. member wants to ask him a question before he has had an answer from the minister. I will leave it to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are in committee of the whole, Mr. Chairman, so I would be happy to have the question.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to follow the logic used by the hon. member and I should like to ask him this question. Following his argument, does he contend that the most desirable way to deal with old age security is to have a record of individual contributions, the same as with the Canada Pension Plan? If so, what is his justification for an old age security program in addition to a Canada Pension Plan? Is he arguing that the two should be combined in one in order to guarantee what he considers to be an individual's right to receive benefits having made a contribution?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before I am through, Mr. Chairman, I will be making this afternoon's speech all over again. I pointed out this afternoon that old age security is not based on each individual's account. This is the way we recommended in 1950 and I accept that way. If my hon. friend reads about this matter in the white paper entitled "Income Security for Canadians" he will find the idea is expressed that old age security which is financed without individual accounts is the first deck of a total social security program. I approve of this arrangement whereby the first deck is financed without individual accounts but in a way that the people feel they have a right to the money.

Then the second deck, the Canada Pension Plan, is on an individual account or contributory basis. I think that these two together make a pretty good program. I do not want to see them destroyed by a government that nibbles away at the first deck, namely, universal old age security.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am still not convinced by the Minister of Finance of the advisability of retaining an account. Personally, I see little merit in it. I presume the minister issues these cheques out of general treasury and I cannot see any point in keeping money in the general treasury that is used for a specific purpose. If this country goes broke we just are not going to pay our old age pensioners their cheques; it is that simple.

The old system was based on a totally different concept. I know we are eliminating it, but my point is that I do not see the merit of retaining the money in a specific account. Previously the 3 per cent sales tax went specifically into this fund. Now it will not. The 12 per cent tax will be paid into the federal treasury and the Receiver General will turn the money over to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who will issue the cheques, but I do not think that this meets the point about the rights of individuals who have made contributions. I suppose that the 4 per cent on my income tax, which will of course be handled by the Minister of National Revenue in a somewhat different way, will not cost me any the less though I shall not be paying 4 per cent as such.

If I may talk on clause 1, I shall not talk on the other clauses. I should like to make a general plea to the minister. There are some people in this country who cannot speak very well for themselves but who nevertheless have a personal interest in these matters. One of these groups is that which receives old age security, and another is the group which receives family allowance. I think there would be much merit in the government shortly bringing together its legislation in the social security field. I do not discount in this the unemployment insurance legislation, though the payments are being treated in almost the same way but on a means test. For example, if a miner gets laid off and a benefit comes to him from the mine, this is deducted from the amount he receives from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Any money paid to him from the assistance plan also takes account of his income.

I think some confusion arises from the way these programs are being changed. There would appear to be two different systems which in many cases work against each other. I hope that before the end of this Parliament the government will bring together its social security legislation in order to allay the fears that I am sure many of us have when we change any items of social legislation in this nation.

Mr. Horner: Ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order. I would ask for consent to revert to motions in order to move a reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House has heard the proposal made by the minister. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray):

That the white paper entitled "Defence in the 70's", laid before the House on September 7, 1971, be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we agree to that. If there is anything that needs looking at, it is the defence policy of this government.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion includes the right to travel over the Christmas holiday.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: May I ask the government House leader when we may expect a similar motion referring to the Standing Committee on Regional Development the first report of the Atlantic Development Council which was tabled in the House in April of this year, because there is a great deal of interest in it, as the minister knows, and I think it would be an appropriate reference to the committee.

Mr. MacEachen: I really cannot say at the moment when such a reference will be forthcoming.

Mr. McGrath: Will it be forthcoming?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House has heard the motion just put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—PROGRAM TO ASSIST SMALL FARMERS—NATURE OF PLAN—ADJUSTMENT FOR SIMILAR PROVINCIAL PROJECTS

Mr. William Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House this evening because of the very insufficient answer I received from the Parliamentary Secretary to the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lessard) pertaining to the question of whether or not the House of Commons will have the opportunity to debate the government's program to supposedly aid small farmers in their attempts to expand their operations.

The answer I received is indicative of the negative attitude of this government to agriculture. Its performance in the last four years has been anything but good. To appreciate this hon. members need only look at the Lift program which proved to be a disaster, at the inadequacy of the stabilization program and the mess in which we find ourselves with regard to Bill C-176. It seems that the government is reluctant to discuss the merits or demerits of its program for small farmers. What is the definition of a small farmer in terms of the program? Is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) suggesting that he does not know?

If this government is really serious about aiding the small farmers in Canada, then it must create a viable agricultural economy that will show the small farmer that it is worth while for him to go further into debt in order to develop a sound economic unit.

There are two very important problems facing the farmers in Canada which the government must be prepared to tackle. First is the very low returns the farmer is getting for his products. Farmers are receiving only the same price, if not less, for their products as they were receiving decades ago. Therefore, the government should bring in a two-price system for wheat. The domestic price should be $1.25 a bushel more than the bushel being sold on the international market. This would mean an additional $70 million approximately for the producer, while the cost to the consumer would be minimal. After all, we on the Prairies have heard the Liberal party promise a two-price system for seven long years. It is time they introduced one.

In view of the rising costs of production the government should be prepared to bring in a price support program for other grains as well. This brings me to the second area of concern to farmers, the accelerating costs of production. The government spent thousands of dollars on the Barber Royal Commission on the Price of Farm Machinery to tell every farmer what he knows, namely, that the price of farm machinery is too high. It is time the government seriously examined the farm machinery industry in order to find means of curtailing the ever-rising costs which the farmer has to face.

In conclusion, if the government wants to encourage the small farmers to stay in the business of farming, it must come to grips with the cost-price squeeze in which the farmer finds himself.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is not very easy to reply to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) because the hon. gentleman asked me to define a small farm. Depending on the type of production in which a farmer is engaged, it might involve quite different implications. To decide tonight on a precise definition of a small farm is not possible. It is doubtful if debate on such a definition at this time would be a useful exercise, for at this stage it is to a large degree variable. This is one of the reasons for embarking on this endeavour as a program rather than as specific legislation. The government recognizes the complexity of the problem and prefers to obtain some experience in this field prior to introducing legislation.

The minister indicated on another occasion that funds for this program have been voted upon and approved by the House in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the past two fiscal years. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member would not wish to dispute the government's or Parliament's wisdom in proceeding with the program in this fashion rather than at a much slower pace.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—NEW PROCEDURES TO EXPEDITE PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on December 13 of this year I had occasion to question the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) concerning a more expeditious way of handling UIC payments. His answer was helpful and encouraging to some extent, but unfortunately it did not go far enough. There is a real problem in this country concerning the situation with regard to UIC benefits. It is not a subject which should be made a matter of political partisanship. It concerns all members and all parties. This evening I should like to put forward a few suggestions which I hope the minister or his representatives may look at in good faith.

In my constituency of Central Nova we have what I consider to be a unique problem. It is similar in many respects to that in the city of Sydney, Nova Scotia, where the department has taken a second look at the problem which exists in this particular area of the province and, as I understand it, has kept the Sydney office open, or at least it is largely undisturbed. I strongly urge the minister to take a second look at the Pictou County area of my constituency where we have heavy industry, a lot of labour unions and a lot of people adversely affected by the government's policy on this matter.

I do not like to take my allotted time reading things into the record, Mr. Speaker, but I do wish to quote from a letter sent by one of our municipal clerks which sums up the situation admirably. In her letter she states:

> I have taken the matter up with our welfare officer and she informs me that under the present system at least four weeks elapse before the cheques are received. This period has, at times, been extended to nine weeks.
> A great deal of the money expended for welfare in this county is spent on families who are waiting for their unemployment insurance cheque. In this day and age practically no families can finance themselves for from four to nine weeks.
> Our welfare costs this year have greatly exceeded the costs of previous years and also greatly exceeded our estimates.
> If anything can be done to shorten the waiting period, it certainly would be of great assistance in lessening the tremendous welfare costs which we are now up against.

The letter is from Helen Carson, municipal clerk of the municipality of Pictou County. The minister has received numerous representations from labour groups in my constituency. He has received telegrams and messages dating back to last spring when he was warned of the chaos that would result from closing the regional office in New Glasgow, or at least from making drastic changes in it.

Having said that, I would like to make a few suggestions. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it seems rather incongruous to me that with regard to the Income Tax Act a citizen of this country is in effect put on the honour system. When he applies for a driver's licence he is put on the honour system. As far as the UIC system itself is concerned, his interim statement or bi-weekly statement of his eligibility is taken, and yet as far as his original acceptability is concerned it appears that the administrative and investigative waiting period is largely the reason why there is so much unacceptable delay.

I would like to suggest that this waiting period, if it is attributable to the necessity to investigate people, be eliminated and that a person be permitted to sign an affidavit so that his benefits can start as soon as the necessary deemed period, whatever it may be in the government's opinion, has passed. If the applicability or suitability for the recipient's benefit is to be examined, let it be examined on the government's time instead of the time of the working man who is waiting for those benefits which he feels are due to him.

Another thing that concerns me is what I consider the perversion that is being used in regard to vacation with pay acts across this country. If a person has benefits accruing to him, it often means that his UIC benefits do not start until the waiting period occasioned by vacation pay lapses. The minister had something to say about that in the House today. The incongruity is that if a person receives the benefits some time before a lay-off occurs, then no waiting period is imposed in respect of funds made available to him when laid off.

I suppose that in future, labour organizers and union negotiators will make sure that the vacation with pay is made available on an accrual basis so that it is not included in the waiting period for the UIC benefits. It seems strange that a person could have $5,000 in the bank and receive UIC benefits or receive vacation pay moneys before he is laid off without undue interruption, but if $400 or $500 is due when his employment ceases he must wait until it is used up before the UIC benefit starts. If this is not bad enough, he must also wait four or five weeks after the benefits he has been allocated through vacation pay expire, once it is used up.

Surely there is no reason why, while he is receiving the moneys from his employer which represent his vacation pay and waiting for UIC, the administrative investigation could not be done then so that as soon as the vacation pay is used up he could begin receiving the UIC benefits. I think this is inexcusable. It seems to me analogous to what happened at DEVCO where the UIC Act was used to supplement DEVCO legislation. Here we have vacation pay used in effect to at least supplement if not modify provisions of the UIC regulations.

In this day and age, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why a person who is going to receive unemployment insurance benefits should not receive them immediately. I do not see why a person's simple affidavit or declaration would not be sufficient to determine his eligibility. If people are dishonest, then they can be caught while benefits are being paid to them and can be prosecuted in the same way as under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the minister stated that shortly he hoped to be in a position to describe in more detail procedures designed to speed unemployment insurance benefit payments. However, the Unemployment Insurance Act (1971), section 48(2) provides for assignment of benefits to provincial government or municipal authorities. I can tell the House, Mr. Speaker, that officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission have completed detailed discussions with all provincial governments in this regard and agreement has been reached on the administrative procedures that will be followed.

Briefly, the procedure will be that when an individual presents himself at a welfare agency with a request for financial assistance because his unemployment insurance claim has been delayed, the welfare officer will establish contact with the Unemployment Insurance Commission district office involved. If it is determined that a claim has been or will be delayed beyond four weeks through no fault of the claimant, the welfare officer can suggest to the claimant that he assign his entitlement to benefit to the agency for the week or weeks concerned. Each month the Unemployment Insurance Commission will send a list to the province showing details of the assignments that have been honoured, together with a cheque to cover the total amount. The details on the list will permit distribution to the local agencies concerned.

It is noteworthy that this procedure does not provide for assignment at the discretion of the welfare officer, but I am sure hon. members would agree that it does permit control over the possibility of duplication of payments.

CRIMINAL CODE—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT TO ENSURE STRICTER CONTROL OVER GUNS IN LIGHT OF MURDER INCREASE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) if he was considering amendments to the Criminal Code to restrict the availability of firearms and other dangerous weapons. The minister replied that the government and Parliament has taken serious action on this matter in 1968 and 1969 when we passed the Criminal Code omnibus bill. It is true that we took action on this matter in 1969 and that we passed amendments at that time which went in the right direction. However, I do not think they went far enough. I said so at the time and I repeat this tonight.

Last Thursday, a 35-year old Montreal policeman, Constable Jean-Guy Sabourin, was shot by a bandit with a machine-gun. This tragic incident took place when three bandits had just finished robbing Simpsons' department store in downtown Montreal. One might ask where these bandits got a machine-gun. Would the police constable have died if the machine-gun had not been available? Would the bandits have attempted the robbery if such weapons were not available?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the easy availability of dangerous weapons in this country is a scandal. There is no reason for it. It is a strange society where there is more control over the licensing of cars and car drivers than over weapons and there is more control over the sale of liquor than there is over the sale of guns and ammunition. Just down the street, here in Ottawa, a store has set out guns in its window as possible Christmas gifts.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Allmand: Earlier this fall I presented a motion in the House of Commons to have the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs conduct an investigation into the nature and causes of violent crimes in Canada and to report proposals to the House of Commons for correcting this situation. One of the matters that I would expect such an investigation to deal with is the availability and control of weapons. There are also many other matters it could deal with. I still urge the government to initiate such an investigation. In the meantime, however, I strongly urge the government to tighten up the control of dangerous weapons.

In particular, I should like to make the following suggestions. First, all firearms should be sold by retail only through government stores run under a gun control agency. Perhaps this agency could be under the authority of the RCMP or the Attorneys General of the provinces. Second, they should only be sold on application and there should be a delay of perhaps one or two weeks between the receipt of the application and the sale of the gun. There should be a separate application for each weapon, and there should not be a general permit to carry weapons for all purposes. Third, all such applications should be distributed to the police authorities and they should be given public notice. Citizens and public authorities should be allowed to file objections to any such sale or permit. Fourth, applications for sale should only be granted after the applicant has passed a test indicating that (a) he knows how to handle the weapon properly and safely; (b) that he knows the different laws and regulations relating to firearms, and (c) that he has assured the authorities that he needs the weapon for the defined legal purposes set out in the law.

Fifth, the application should only be granted where the applicant needs the weapon as a peace officer, where he needs it to hunt for his food and clothing, when he wishes to hunt for sporting purposes under controlled conditions or where he needs it to protect his life and property, in certain cases. Sixth, the holder of a permit for a firearm should file a report with the gun control agency each year indicating the use and present condition of the weapon. Seventh, no holder of any firearm should be allowed to sell, trade or give away a weapon. Once a weapon is no longer required, it should be turned back to the government-run gun control agency.

Eighth, under no circumstances should a person other than a peace officer be allowed to own, possess or use a handweapon, shortened rifle or shotgun or rapid-fire gun such as a machine-gun. These weapons are presently described as restricted weapons. I feel they should be described as prohibited weapons except for peace officers. Ninth, no one should be allowed to manufacture or import firearms unless they have the strict authorization of the government gun control agency.

Many people will state that these rules are not necessary, that they go too far and nothing is wrong with having a gun if it is used properly. It is probably true that most people who have guns are no threat to society, but on the other hand we have to measure the balance of benefits to society in permitting or restricting the availability of weapons. Despite the fact most people use weapons properly, we are still faced with the situation that they are too available for those who wish to use them for criminal purposes, such as happened last week.

Consequently, I suggest there is greater benefit to be gained by society in a stricter control of these weapons than the benefit now enjoyed by those who use guns under the present law. If such a law saved only one life per year, such as that of Constable Sabourin, it would be well worth it and would compensate for the inconvenience of those who do not have the full availability of guns.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I think, first of all, my two colleagues from Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) and Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) who constitute a most inspiring audience.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) brought up a matter from which stems the terrible tragedy which occurred last week in Montreal when police agent Jean-Guy Sabourin, in the course of his duties as agent of the peace, was savagely slain by a gangster armed with a submachine gun.

On behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and on my own behalf, I wish to offer Mrs. Sabourin and her three young children, as well as the other members of the family, our heartfelt and most sincere condolences.

The minister and the government are genuinely concerned with savage acts perpetrated against those who are invested with the duty of protecting society, people and goods.

The hon. member does know that in 1969, thanks to the present government and to the Minister of Justice in particular, substantial amendments were made to the Criminal Code in connection with firearms and particularly those with restricted uses like machine guns.

In this regard I shall refer the hon. member to section 83 of the Criminal Code and the following sections with which he is well acquainted and which appear in the 1970 edition.

When these amendments were being prepared, the idea of general registration of all firearms was examined from every angle and the RCMP was consulted in this respect. However, the conclusion arrived at was that such a procedure would be difficult if not impossible to enforce.

We appreciate the difficulty of producing faultless legislation whether in the field of criminal law or in any other. There will inevitably be imperfections.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would assure the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce that I shall consider it a duty to pass on his suggestions to the Minister of Justice.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED ABOLITION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of comments that have been made by members in all parties during the last day or so, I believe that this time there will be the necessary unanimous consent. The motion is also one that would save the taxpayers several millions of dollars. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch):

That this House urges that arrangements be made for the early consideration of Bill C-133, or that the government itself introduce a measure to abolish the Senate, and that the making of appointments to that body cease forthwith.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

Mr. Nowlan: The way they have acted they should be "debolished".

An hon. Member: "Debolished"?

Mr. Nowlan: "Debolished" and demolished.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

JOB VACANCY SURVEY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent necessity. I hope Your Honour will allow me the necessary minute to give a brief, succinct but necessary preamble.

Early in 1967 the Bureau of Statistics, now Statistics Canada, projected a large-scale program of occupational job vacancy surveys for the use of business, industry, the federal and provincial governments, and universities. The main purpose of the survey is to provide a measure of the demand for labour in Canada. The data can be used to assist in formulating manpower training, immigration policies, educational courses, and the development of career planning. Late in 1969—this is my last sentence, Mr. Speaker—the program began to operate. In the past two years Statistics Canada has supplied such data to the Department of Manpower and Immigration on a regular basis but has withheld this data from the provincial governments and the public. I would like to propose, seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House orders Statistics Canada and the responsible ministers to cease the suppression of this $3 million, 106-man job vacancy survey and immediately publish the survey together with all relevant and incidental material.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

PULP AND PAPER—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The continuing daily crisis experienced by the pulp and paper industry across Canada, resulting in unemployment and social problems for many thousands of Canadians, emphasizes the need for measures by government to consider the problem as a national emergency. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That the government appoint a joint committee consisting of members of Regional Development, Labour, Manpower and Immigration, Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to analyse the problem and identify the solutions which could alleviate the difficulties faced by the pulp and paper work force.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

CANADA-U.S. AUTOMOTIVE PACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which provides that in cases of urgent and pressing necessity a motion may be moved if unanimous consent is given. I should say, Mr. Speaker, that I have taken care to distribute copies of this motion to the House leaders and I expect that, given the urgency of the matter, I will get unanimous consent and no debate will be necessary.

The matter of urgent and pressing necessity arises out of statements made yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in which the minister suggested that a ceiling is to be placed on the level of Canadian automotive production. This position flatly contradicts the second stated purpose of the Canada-United States Automotive Agreement, Article 1(b), which asserts Canada is to have a "fair and equitable" share in the future growth of the total automotive market of the two countries.

Therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask leave to move, seconded by the member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House reasserts its commitment to Article 1(b) of the Canada-United States Automotive Agreement which reads:

"The liberalization of United States and Canadian automotive trade in respect of tariff barriers and other factors tending to impede it, with a view to enabling the industries of both countries to participate on a fair and equitable basis in the expanding total market of the two countries".

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

DESIGNATION AS RIDEAU PALACE

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-276, respecting the designation of Rideau Hall and Government House as Rideau Palace.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McBride: Mr. Speaker, the bill I put forward today does not basically alter anything. It clarifies what already exists. Its purpose is to designate as Rideau Palace the residence situated in the National Capital Region presently known as Government House and also referred to as Rideau Hall in order to indicate more accurately to both Canadian citizens and visitors from other nations that it is the home of the Queen's representative.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—EXEMPTION FROM UNITED STATES DISC LEGISLATION—MAINTENANCE OF AUTO PACT SAFEGUARDS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I would have liked to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I may be allowed to direct it to the Prime Minister because of his intimate knowledge of the subject. In view of the tremendous number of Canadian jobs at stake and the great importance to the immediate future of the Canadian automobile industry as a whole, can the government assure the House that every effort is being exerted to influence the United States government to exempt the automobile industry from the provisions of the new DISC legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been discussed. I do not know if discussions are now going on regarding DISC with our Washington counterparts. When the minister returns from a trade mission to Morocco, I believe later this day, I will refer the question to him.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the right hon. gentleman. Is the government taking a definite stand to safeguard the present provisions of the Canada-United States auto pact in the negotiations currently taking place, and are we advancing the proposition that the DISC provisions appear to be a direct violation of the GATT?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. According to my recollection, at the very outset when the DISC provisions were known about, although at that time we did not know in what form they would pass the American Congress or the American executive, we said that they were a contravention of GATT as we understood it.

CANADA-U.S. AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE CEILING ON CANADIAN PRODUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance, can the Prime Minister inform the House whether agreement has been reached between Canada and the United States to set a ceiling, either now or in future, on the level of automotive production in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. No agreement has been reached along those lines.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Minister of Finance referred to certain guarantees or protective devices that would ensure that a certain level of production would be maintained in Canada, can the Prime Minister inform the House as to what form these guarantees or protective devices are to take? Are they to be in the form of letters of commitment from the manufacturers or in the form of safeguards contained in a written agreement between Canada and the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this involves the whole matter of the negotiations between Canada and the United States which have been going on for many months. I do not think it would be appropriate at this time for me to say what stage they have reached, nor what final form they will take.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Labour but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the attention of his parliamentary secretary. Can the minister or his parliamentary secretary indicate what is the basic cause of the confusion in the payment of unemployment insurance benefits, particularly in the lower mainland of British Columbia, which has resulted in increased welfare costs in some cases? Would the hon. gentlemen look into this grievous situation immediately?

Mr. Alexander: That problem exists all over the country.

FEED GRAIN—MEASURES TO ESTABLISH PRICE PARITY BETWEEN EASTERN AND WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Considering the price difference eastern producers must pay for feed grains, can the hon. minister do something to improve the situation?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we spend over $20 million per year in assisting with transportation in order to bring the prices as close together as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Does he consider the millions of dollars the federal government has paid are enough to do justice to eastern and western producers on the same products?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Bellechasse invites the minister to express an opinion. As asked, the question is not acceptable.

I now recognize the hon. member for Joliette who has a supplementary.

FEED GRAINS—MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND CATHOLIC FARMERS UNION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Since an important UCC delegation will be in Ottawa tomorrow in order to discuss feed grains, is the minister going to meet with them?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think there will be several other members of the Liberal caucus as well as other ministers who will meet with them.

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS—AVAILABILITY OF TECHNICAL APPENDICES TO ENVIRONMENTAL REPORT

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the proposed James Bay water diversion and power project and the report expected thereon shortly. In the absence of the Minister of the Environment perhaps I could direct my question to the Prime Minister. Do I have the attention of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker? In view of the concern in many quarters, will the Minister of the Environment or the Prime Minister make a statement on motions, preferably tomorrow, on the status of negotiations between the federal and provincial governments on this project? The reason I ask the question is that there is a great deal of concern whether negotiations are proceeding without public knowledge.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question. He should allow the reply to be given.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that the minister will be able to make a statement tomorrow on motions. May I assure the hon. member that the report of the joint federal-provincial task force will be made public early in the new year. It will be a public report, and the technical papers which serve as a basis for the report will also be made available.

Mr. Aiken: When the report is made public, will all the detailed appendices to the report appear with it?

Mr. Corbin: As I said, Mr. Speaker, the technical appendices to the summary report will be made available.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—OBTAINING OF PERMISSION BY QUEBEC UNDER NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question. The parliamentary secretary might take notice of it for the minister. In light of the environmental tragedies which have taken place in other parts of Canada, is the government able to give an assurance that this project will not proceed until the province of Quebec has sought permission under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and/or such other federal regulations as may be applicable and that there will be no commencement of construction until these actions have been taken and completed?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member that all possible environmental consequences of the development of this project will be looked at very seriously.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—EFFECT ON CANADIAN DOLLAR OF FOREIGN CAPITAL INFLOW

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): May I direct a supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary. Will the study of the environmental effects of this project be accompanied by a study of the effects on the Canadian dollar from the massive inflow of capital for this project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask a supplementary and the Chair will then move on to the next subject.

Mr. Saltsman: As the parliamentary secretary does not seem to be in a position to answer that question, I will direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. Is some consideration being given to the effect this project will have on the value of the Canadian dollar?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take this matter up with the parliamentary secretary, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

THE SENATE

AMENDMENTS TO INCOME TAX LAW AT NEXT SESSION INDICATED TO MEMBERS—POSSIBLE TASK FORCE ON REFORM OF INSTITUTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister advise the House of Commons what sections of the so-called tax reform bill the Minister of Finance informed the Senate, if they passed the bill as it was, incomprehensible or otherwise, would be amended at the next session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize the question was directed to me. I think I caught the gist of it. The Minister of Finance has been saying all along that a complex bill of this size might happen to have some sections which might have to be clarified in the future. If so, as was the case with previous tax bills, we will clarify them in future sessions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the incomprehensible position in which the other place finds itself as a result of pushing through legislation it did not understand and which was bulled through the House of Commons—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —will the Prime Minister say whether now, 46 years after the Right Hon. Mackenzie King promised reform of the Senate, he intends to set up a task force in respect of the Senate?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the premise of the question about the ability of the Senate to understand or otherwise, I think it is premature for the right hon. member to speak in their name. As for the question itself, I would remind the House that the government did present a white paper on the constitution in which was included a proposal for reform of the Senate. It was linked with a series of other measures of constitutional concern but, as the right hon. member knows, agreement has not been reached.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of what the other place did yesterday in connection with the income tax bill, would this be one of the matters which would be taken into consideration in determining the nature of the reform of the Senate?

Mr. Trudeau: If the right hon. member would refresh his memory in connection with what we proposed by way of reforming the Senate he would see that what has happened in the past days in the other place would have little bearing on it.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister and it reverts to the statement he made that the Minister of Finance had indicated to the Senate banking and commerce committee that there were areas in which amendments would be brought forward. Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance and the administration to maintain the same standard of performance they displayed with regard to the Estate Tax Act, where the minister indicated to the Senate that amendments would be brought forward immediately to correct obvious deficiencies but no amendments were ever brought forward and the act was repealed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we always try to have the highest possible standard of performance.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In other words, there will not be any amendments.

TRADE

ENTRY OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—DISCUSSION WITH PRIME MINISTER HEATH—ASSURANCE OF BRITISH CO-OPERATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he raised the subject of trade in agricultural products with the European Common Market in the course of his recent discussions with Prime Minister Heath? If he did so, was he able to obtain assurances of British co-operation when that country enters the Common Market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This question was considered in general terms. When the Prime Minister of Britain and I discussed it I merely reiterated the position which had been taken on previous occasions by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The British Prime Minister indicated again that he thought the co-operation of the Canadian government or, rather, the understanding of the Canadian government with respect to the British position would be an incentive to them to try to keep our interests in mind when the whole matter is discussed in the European Common Market.

Mr. Benjamin: Since President Nixon has taken initiatives on behalf of United States agriculture in his meetings with both President Pompidou and Prime Minister Heath in connection with trade with the Common Market, would the right hon. gentleman tell the House whether he intends to involve himself on behalf of Canadian farmers in the discussions which are going on and, if so, would he be prepared to make a statement on motions?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. If any statement were to be made on this subject I think it would be made by the appropriate minister, not by myself.

ENTRY OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—DISCUSSION WITH PRESIDENT NIXON

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I ask the Prime Minister whether in his conversation with President Nixon the question of entry of agricultural products into the European Common Market was discussed? Was he aware of the intention of the President to take initiatives when he met with President Pompidou and Prime Minister Heath?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I was, of course, aware that one of the thrusts of Mr. Nixon's economic policies was to bring the Common Market countries to a realization that they would have to consider arranging for a different and better deal on the agricultural side with non-members of the Common Market. In this sense, not only was I aware of what the President had in mind but we referred briefly to that point. I am not sure whether the hon. member wants any further information.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET LEVY SYSTEM—POSSIBILITY OF SIMILAR ACTION BY CANADA

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Is the government giving any consideration—I shall address my supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture because the Prime Minister is not listening. Is the government giving any consideration to the setting up of a levy system in Canada to counteract the levy system under which producers have the privilege of operating in the European Common Market?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): It is well known that the government's position is to liberalize trading relations, not to add further restrictions.

In view of the increase in the price of gold, from $35 to $38 an ounce, can the government assure this House that the increase will not affect the subsidies now paid to Canadian gold producers?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE ON PAROLE BOARD AND COURT WORKERS TO ASSIST PERSONS CHARGED

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the representations made by the Native Council of Canada to the Solicitor General last Friday, and particularly the serious shortage of Indian court workers to help Indian inmates in their court appearances and their rehabilitation, and also in view of the absence of any Indians on the federal parole board, when will the Solicitor General be appointing Indian court workers and a representative on the federal parole board?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I was quite surprised at the comments of some delegates to the press because they were not at all in accordance with our agreement. The meeting was quite friendly.

To answer more precisely the point raised by the hon. member, I must say that the Senate is now considering the parole system and since we have not yet received its report and studied its recommendations, I do not think that it would be appropriate for me to comment on that suggestion. However, it is sure that if citizens are to take part in the operation of the Board, Indians as such will have their large share.

In winding up operations under the Employment Support Act, will applications made under the act that have not yet been approved still be given consideration for the period during which the 10 per cent surcharge remained in force?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Arrangements under the Employment Support Act are such that companies entered into agreements with the government to maintain a certain level of employment in return for which the government would pay a certain amount of money. So companies would be eligible to apply, and to continue to apply, for assistance for the period up until December 20, at which time the Employment Support Act no longer applied to the United States surtax.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In order to provide a restful season for the people of Ottawa who are mainly affected, would the Prime Minister announce before the end of the year the new appointment to the National Capital Commission of a balanced, forward-looking, sensible chairman?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the present one has not resigned, but if ever he should I will try to find one as good as he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

LEAKING OF CABINET DOCUMENTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's reference to trying to find something reminds me of certain outstanding leaks. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the government has succeeded in finding the source of the leaks of confidential documents that apparently took place about five weeks ago?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the seriousness of the matter to the government and certainly to the people of this country, may I ask whether the Prime Minister will make a statement to the House before the House adjourns, either before Christmas or the end of the year as the case may be, regarding the status of the investigation and as to how the government intends to proceed to trace the source of these leaks within the government service?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Raking the bottom of the barrel, Bob.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any statement is called for. I have answered the question as directly as possible when I said the investigation is proceeding and that there is nothing to report at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order in regard to the remark made by the hon. member for St. Boniface, Mr. Speaker, I was not even raking the Prime Minister, let alone the bottom of the barrel.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Leader of the Opposition. I will take his comments as notice and give him an answer at a future date.

DUTIES OF NEW APPOINTEE TO CABINET, W. R. LUYENDYK

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary or at least a related question for the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement of a few days ago that Mr. W. R. Luyendyk has been appointed Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet—Security and Intelligence—can the Prime Minister say whether this gentleman's functions are confined to this area or if he has other duties and can he also say what relationship there is between his duties and security and intelligence in the RCMP and in the Solicitor General's group as well?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer that in a few words. There has always been to my knowledge someone in the Privy Council office concerned with advising the cabinet on security matters and providing the secretariat for that area of government, much as there are other secretariats in the area of federal-provincial relations, economic policy, and so on. This is merely a matter, I believe, of replacing one gentleman who has left because of health reasons by another gentleman who is healthy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think at this point I should bring to the attention of hon. members that we will soon be running short of time and some hon. members to my left have been having quite a bit of exercise this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister has overlooked the fact that this gentleman's duties are not only security but also cabinet intelligence.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LA MACAZA—MEASURES TO ESTABLISH NEW USE FOR BASE

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

Considering that it was announced recently that the base at La Macaza was to be closed down, would the minister tell the House if anything has been done to dispose of this base, if the buildings and the land have been put up for sale, and if he intends to announce any such measures so that the people of the area may know what is going to happen?

Hon. Donald Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with representatives of the people of the area, in which I and my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, have taken part. It is true that we intend to close this base next September. Meanwhile, my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, is taking under consideration the suggestions that were made and the possible uses to which the base and its facilities could be put.

POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF POTATOES FOR EXTERNAL AID DISTRIBUTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture a question which is very like unto that I directed to his parliamentary secretary a few days ago. In consideration of the serious depression of the potato industry in this country, can the minister advise whether he is taking any steps or making any overtures to emulate the excellent example of the United States government which has just purchased vast quantities of potatoes for distribution in processed form for external aid welfare programs.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while we have offered to the world food program dehydrated potatoes in several forms we have no firm commitment that they wish to have them, but I can advise the hon. gentleman that several weeks ago we put forth a program to buy a large quantity of potatoes in Canada too.

PENITENTIARIES

DORCHESTER—ALLEGED DENIAL OF VISITING PRIVILEGES TO MEMBERS OF BLACK UNITED FRONT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to ask the Solicitor General whether he has an answer to the question I asked him last week concerning allegations by the Black United Front.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the Black United Front visited the Dorchester penitentiary twice. They were able to meet the inmates. Following statements of these representatives published in the press, to the effect that they had been misquoted, a meeting has been arranged for December 22 in Dorchester between representatives of the Black United Front and the penitentiary authorities in order to consider the grievances of the Black United Front and of the inmates, as well as the type of program recommended to the authorities by the Black United Front to assist in the rehabilitation of the inmates.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for clearing the air and simply request that after the meeting is held on December 22 perhaps a further public statement would be made. I realize we may not be meeting at that time, but it is important to have the air cleared on this matter.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES OF YEAR-ROUND OPERATION OF UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's suggestion recently that university education should be on a year-round basis, is he now prepared to discuss the necessary financial arrangements with the provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the member should know that we have contributed to the tune of nearly $1 billion a year to post-secondary education and this itself should be an indication of the government's willingness to participate in the financing of post-secondary education.

Mr. Nystrom: May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will discuss his specific proposal about year-round university education with the provinces and whether or not he will do so in the near future?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is not on any agenda of any meeting, if that is what the member is asking, but it seems to me this is the kind of thing the provinces should be able to do on their own. I am willing to remind them from time to time if the member wants me to.

ROCHDALE COLLEGE—SUGGESTED CLOSING IN LIGHT OF GRAND JURY REPORT

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs dealing with the report that a grand jury in Toronto has recommended the closing of Rochdale College. Would the minister say whether or not his department will now consider closing the college and seeking an alternative use for the facilities?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have explained this before. Last August we began proceedings toward foreclosure. The matter is now before the courts so I cannot go into great detail, but we are hopeful of obtaining possession and financial control at the end of this month. There is nothing we can do to speed up that process and still respect the law in this situation. I might say too that since last August, although far from perfect, the housekeeping, the behaviour pattern and a whole series of things at Rochdale have improved, so I fail to see why there should be so much gloom and doom about the whole situation.

POLLUTION

DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES TO ACHIEVE NATIONAL STANDARDS OF CONTROL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment, following a question asked by the hon. member for Kent-Essex concerning Union Carbide moving from Ontario to Quebec because of the less stringent pollution control standards there. Is the parliamentary secretary in a position to give us some indication as to the department's thinking in this regard? I am thinking of whether in fact meetings are to be held with the provinces in order to standardize pollution standards and prevent this sort of thing happening.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the department has been tackling this problem for quite a while now. We are working co-operatively with all the provinces to establish air pollution controls that would be uniform across Canada. On October 21 the Minister of the Environment tabled in the House of Commons proposed air quality objectives. If all provinces adopt legislation to enforce these objectives, uniform standards would be applied across Canada.

NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—NEW INITIATIVES TO ESTABLISH POLICY

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder if the right hon. gentleman can tell us whether there have been any new initiatives taken lately by his government, the government of Nova Scotia or the governments of the other maritime provinces respecting the issue of offshore mineral rights and, second, whether this is a matter of high priority so far as the Prime Minister is concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this time report any further measure of agreement. I am afraid the matter may have been slowed down a little bit because of the illness of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. But I have, as recently as two months ago, made my views known to the Premier of Nova Scotia who told me then that he was going to have a meeting with the other Atlantic premiers or Maritime premiers to see if we could make some advance. I must confess I have had no report of that further meeting. I do not know if it took place and if there has been a report. I will look into the matter.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION FORECLOSURES—PROVISION OF LEASE-BACK ARRANGEMENT FOR FARMERS AFFECTED

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Having regard to the large number of foreclosures being undertaken by the Farm Credit Corporation, particularly in the province of Alberta, can the minister say whether any consideration has been given to providing a temporary lease-back arrangement in order to allow the farmers affected to re-establish themselves?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think any particular attention has been given at the moment to that aspect of these foreclosures, but I must remind the hon. member again that no foreclosures are proceeding that are not several years in arrears.
