Blood's Attempt To Steal the Crown.

The Coronation of the King and Queen and the use of all the Royal jewels and insignia of office, so carefully guarded, recall the celebrated attempt of Col. Thomas Blood to steal these jewels and regalia on May 9, 1671. The Crown Royal jewels and regalia were then, as now, safely guarded in the Tower of London. Sir Evelyn Wood who has charge of the Tower and jewels at present, is, however, better prepared to guard these priceless emblems of British Royalty than was Talbot Edwards, who was the custodian 240 years ago. Col. Blood, who was the son of an Irish blacksmith, first saw the jewels as a visitor to the Tower, and was an adventurer, and even criminal, at that time. He had been the leader in the attempt to seize the Duke of Ormond, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; he had endeavored to worm himself in as a friend among the Scottish Covenanters, and in other instances had been a bold plotter always to the detriment of those he joined or sought to join. The story of the bold crime, which in its

THE WORLD LOOKS DARK To the Dyspeptic. How to Make it Bright.

Father Morricey, the learned priest-physician, realized that many of the difficulties and troubles of this world are due to indigestion. He believed that to get a proper mental and spiritual attitude, a normal digestive apparatus is very helpful. The good Father therefore gave much study to the important question of the stomach.
His famous prescription, "No. 11," for dyspepsia and indigestion, consists of simple tablets cleverly compounded from the materials in Nature's laboratory. Each tablet will perfectly digest a full meal of 1 1/2 pounds of food.
Father Morricey's "No. 11" has brought ease and continued health to thousands of sufferers who had previously tried other remedies in vain. It instantly relieves and in due time restores the stomach to full vigor.
If you suffer at times or regularly from a sick, sour, dyspeptic stomach, try No. 11, and see how quickly you can again enjoy hearty meals and how bright the world looks once more.

amongst the party, and they instantly decamped with the crown and orb, leaving the sceptre yet unlifted.

"The aged keeper now raised himself upon his legs, forced the gate from his month, and cried, "Treason! Murder!" which, being heard by his daughter, who was, perhaps, anxiously expecting for other sounds, ran out and retreated to the cry. The alarm now became general, and young Edwards and his brother-in-law, Captain Beckman, ran after the conspirators whom a wanderer put himself in a position to stop, but Blood discharged a pistol at him, and he fell, although unhurt, and the thieves proceeded safely to the next post, where one Still, who had been a soldier under Cromwell, stood sentinel, but he offered no opposition, and they accordingly passed the draw bridge.

"Horses were waiting for them at St. Catherine's Gate, and as they ran that way along the Tower Wharf they then selves cried out, "Stop! Lie roguers!" which they passed on unsuspected till Captain Beckman overtook them. At his head Blood fired another pistol, but missed him, and was seized. Under the cloak of this daring villain was found the crown, and, although he denied himself a prisoner, he had yet the impudence to struggle for his prey when it was finally wrested from him, said, "It was a gallant attempt, however unsuccessful; it was for a crown."

"Parrot, who had formerly served under General Harrison, was also taken; but Hunt, Blood's son-in-law, reached his horse and rode off, as did two other of the thieves, but he was soon afterwards stopped and likewise committed to custody.

"In this struggle and confusion the great pearl, a large diamond, and several smaller stones were lost from the crown; but the two former and some of the latter were afterwards found and restored; and the Ballas ruby, broken off and being found in Parrot's pocket, notating considerable was eventually missing.

"As soon as the prisoners were secured young Edwards hastened to Sir Gilbert Talbot, who was then master and Treasurer of the Jewellhouse, and gave him an account of the transaction. Sir Gilbert instantly went to the King and acquainted his Majesty with it; and his Majesty commanded him to proceed forthwith to the Tower to see how matters stood, to take the examination of Blood, and the others, and to return and to report to him. Sir Gilbert accordingly went; but the King in the meantime was persuaded by some about him to hear the examination himself, and the prisoners were in consequence sent for to Whitehall, a circumstance which is supposed to have saved these daring wretches from the gallows."

And now comes the astonishing part of the story. Not only did King Charles pardon Blood, but gave him a grant of land in Ireland worth 500 pounds yearly. The only recognition of the services of Talbot Edwards and his son was a grant of 300 pounds, which they had to sell for half that amount through the difficulty of obtaining payment from the Crown. Why Blood was so treated may never be known, but there are grave suspicions that King Charles would not have been averse to sharing the spoils with the thief had the latter succeeded in escaping with and selling the booty.

Blood remained a notorious character the rest of his days, and was finally run by the Duke of Westminster, who sued him for libel and recovered ten thousand pounds damages.
Blood died on August 24, 1680, and was buried in New Chapel ward, Westminster, but so persistent were the rumors that the notorious jewel thief was not dead that the body was exhumed and positive proof given the people of the man's death.

The Imperial Crown is the most priceless ornament that has ever existed in the history of the world. It contains 227 pearls, 2,782 diamonds, 5 rubies, 17 sapphires and 10 emeralds, besides the great South African diamond. Many of these priceless stones have a romantic history. The Black Prince's Ruby, the cross-immediately above the "Star of Africa" was presented by Don Pedro the cruel to the Black Prince, and was worn by Henry V at Agincourt in the helmet which may still be seen over his tomb in Westminster Abbey. In the cross at the top of the crown is the miraculous sapphire from Edward the Confessor's ring. The Orb, a masterpiece of the jeweller's art, dating from 1662 copied from the orb of the Saxon Kings, is symbolic of world sovereignty; over which rises the cross of Christ. St. Edward's crown, with which the actual coronation of coronation is performed, was occupied in 1662 from the ancient crown destroyed by Cromwell. This crown is worn only once during the life of each sovereign; then only for a few minutes. On other occasions the Imperial Crown is worn.

The Imperial Crown is unaltered from the time when King Edward wore it except in two respects. It has been fitted to the size required by King George and the largest part of the Cullinan diamond the "Star of Africa" has been placed in the front, the famous sapphire which used to be there having been moved to the back. Otherwise the crown today is as it was made, or remade, for the Coronation of Queen Victoria, the archbishop as they were in the time of Charles II, though many fine gems of more recent acquisition have been added during the last two centuries. The sapphire, for example, was bequeathed by the Cardinal of York to George III. The most interesting historical gem, however, is the great spinel ruby, placed in a Maltese cross of small brilliants above the "Star of Africa" for this stone has a history which dates back to the Black Prince's time and was worn by Henry V at the battle of Agincourt.

The Queen's crown is entirely new, and, except for the Koh-i-Noor and two of the smaller Cullinan diamonds is composed entirely of brilliants. It is a gracefully designed structure, the diamond arches tapering gracefully to the point where they meet for the support of the small diamond orb and cross. In all it weighs only 19 oz., scarcely more than a third of the weight of the King's crown, weight being a serious consideration in view of the fact that her Majesty will have to wear it all the time, from the moment when the Archbishop places it on her head till her arrival at Buckingham Palace. The Koh-i-Noor looks splendid in the front of the crown, a true "Mountain of Light" with a brilliancy that the finest African stones cannot quite equal. It is interesting to reflect that Queen Mary is the first of our Queens who has set foot on Indian soil, and it is therefore fitting that she should be the first to wear this famous Indian stone at her Coronation.

Only those who know by actual experience the great gulf that separates "the Church" from the chapel in England can appreciate the depth of patriotic fervor that led the Established and Free Churches to hold joint Coronation services in many parts of the country.

The Editor of the Toronto Globe on the Significance of the Coronation--For the First Time in History Representative Workingmen and Dissenting Clergymen Were Present.

By Dr. J. A. Macdonald.

London, June 12.—The King was crowned to-day.

It was a scene unique. The imperial meaning of all that is hallowed in British tradition, and all that gives significance to a thousand years of British history was gathered into one moment's intensity when the crown of Edward the Confessor touched the freshly anointed brow of King George. Not Britain's Voice Alone.

When the fanfare of trumpets that followed the ceremony was drowned by the people's shouts of "God Save King George" it was the voice, not of Britain alone, but of the Great Britain whose free nations swear allegiance over the seven seas.

From the gallery in the south transept overhanging the Poet's Corner four representatives of that Outer Empire watched the scene. We came from India, South Africa, Newfoundland and Canada. The position of vantage commanded a perfect view of the theatre of the Imperial drama, including the two thrones of the Coronation chair.

A Scene of Gorgeous Coloring. In the north transept sat in gorgeous array the Peeresesses, according to their rank, and within sight of the prelates, august and venerable, crimson and white. High over all, climbing to the matchless window of the north transept, ranged the pride and beauty of Britain's nobility. Never again, and nowhere else, may one look upon a scene of such gorgeous coloring, shot through with significant suggestiveness.

The coming of their Majesties shut out all lesser thought. To the Canadian the ceremonial of the anointing of the King, with its archaic rubric, savors of mysticism long outgrown and symbolism unreal to modern life. The portions of the service that are the remainders of feudal days were retransfigured, however, by the noble and reverent forms in which were expressed the pledges and the consecration of both King and nation to the glory of God, and of the Monarch to the service of his people.

"God Save the King."

The supreme moment came when the Archbishop of Canterbury placed the crown of sovereign authority upon the King's head. The vast multitudes filling the great abbey were so still that one's heart almost ceased to beat. Even a Canadian, with the politics of the democracy, was glad to join in the sudden shout "God Save the King." The voices from our gallery carried the note of allegiance from the ancient colony of Newfoundland, from the Union of South Africa that at the last Coronation was still rent and bleeding; from the mighty millions of India, and from the half continent of Canada.

One Thing Lacking.

There was one thing lacking. When homage was paid to the newly-crowned Sovereign, it was fitting that Princes, peers and prelates should bow the knee, to touch the crown and kiss the cheek. But has not the time come when the commonalty will join in the homage to their constitutional Monarch, whose throne is broad based upon the people's will? And is not the time coming when the premiers of Great Britain will have a place in the Coronation service, and pledge allegiance for those dominions overseas in whose keeping the future of the Imperial Crown will be?

The Coronation solemnity of the day was significant, not so much because of its gorgeous ceremonial, nor by reason of its unprecedented array of Royal guests and potentates, but by the genuine democratic touch given to it by the King himself. The Premiers and delegations of the self-governing dominions were present as guests. The free churches were recognized as never before even the press was given precedence of aristocratic birth. But more hopeful than all else, the representatives of British trade unionism, for the first time in history, were invited to be witnesses of the Coronation.

The Dominant Note.

The note that rang so dominantly through Coronation Day, and that will echo most hopefully in every land where men cry "God Save the King," was that struck so ringingly by the Archbishop of York in his sermon on the words of Jesus: "I am among you as He that serveth." It was a noble thing to challenge His Imperial Majesty to be a Sovereign of service in simple obedience to the Man of Nazareth. It was the prophet's duty to call the King, the Peers and the people to a knowledge of the greatness of our life's service. It was a statesman's word that rang out the stirring appeal to Britain, and to all the British dominions, to save the Empire from decay, by pledging the Empire to service in the cause of human freedom, of peace, and of good-will.

The King a Bond of Union.

No one could join this historic act of worship in the old Abbey Church of Westminster, or witness the return of King George or Queen Mary to their palace, amid the acclaim of hundreds of thousands of their people, without a sense of gratitude, stronger than pride, that the crown and sceptre had not departed from Britain, and that the King is not only Sovereign of this ancient realm, but that he is also a bond of union between the motherland and worldwide British Empire that has grown up under her beneficent shelter. Around him we of the outer nations gather. To his person and throne we pledge fealty as unselfish and unflinching as that of those who in the abbey swore to be his liegemen of life and limb.

"Now the day is dawning." The best for Britain is yet to be. A King and her people were today consecrated to service that will dignify the Empire and bless the world.—Tor. Globe.

Treasure of Ethiopian Kings
Has Been Unearthed.

Excavations at Meroe disclose Long Buried Riches in Gold and Bronzes. London, June 29. The ancient Meroe capital of the land known as Ethiopia, a vassal and eventually a master of Egypt, has had her long buried treasures brought to light by excavations under the direction of Professor Garstank, and of all the sites of antiquity which have been discovered by research in modern times none have been so fruitful in results as the Meroe excavations.
The London public has now the opportunity of viewing some of the wonderfully preserved relics of this important city, once the emporium of India, Arabia and Carthage, at the exhibition of the Society of Antiquaries, Burlington House. Including among the exhibits is an imperial Roman head dating at least from the age of Augustus. It is in splendid preservation. The eyes which are of alabaster with the iris and pupil inlaid and the eyelashes of bronze, are perfect. The contour of the face is beautifully moulded, the head being turned slightly downwards and to the right.
There is also a small cameo, a stone carving of two horses, one black and the other white, in the act of galloping. Of great interest to the general public are the specimens of the treasure of the Ethiopian kings, nuggets, and jewels of gold. In addition to these there are bronzes and fragments of sculpture.

The discoveries which have been made in the now underground Meroe have proved the truth of some of the ancient legends. Herodotus' Table of the Sun, said by tradition to be "in a green meadow outside the city," has been found in exactly that position outside the walls of Meroe, and, further, the great temple of Ammon, for which Meroe was famous has been laid bare and proved to be one of the finest of the ancient monuments upon the banks of the Nile.

Mexican Home Life

CARE OF DEPENDENT RELATIVES
--TRAINING OF CHILDREN
(Los Angeles Times)

Mexican families are proverbially large. Almost all of the actual care of children is turned over to servants, who are expected to humor every whim of their charges.

The existence of sharp caste distinctions and the preponderance of a slave-like element make a great difference between the atmosphere of American and Mexican homes. In the latter the children are little tyrants over those who serve them. Middle and upper class parents do not educate their offspring to respect and engage in wholesome labor. There is a notable absence of discipline in the training of children.

A Mexican family, besides wife and children, includes more often than not dependent relatives. A man is bound to call upon, as though under the old Hebrew law, to care for his parents, his wife's parents, the maiden sisters on either side, as well as orphan nieces and nephews. But the same custom which provides that a woman's male relatives shall care for her also places her under their control.

To Americans it seems that the only hope of freedom for our sister of the southern republic is to become a widow. As a girl she is under the surveillance of her parents. Till she marries, if she be of the upper middle or upper class, she does not to this day go upon the street unattended. The extent to which protection of women is carried may be seen from the fact that in the higher castes they never attend burials, the experience being considered too public and execrable for them.

The Mexican girl never sees her sweetheart alone excepting from the balcony. She knows nothing of athletics, of the independent and busy life enjoyed by the English or American girl. As to intellectual culture, some of the wealthiest seniors are educated in Europe and many at home in music, a smattering of painting and in the languages, but they do not attempt science, history or mathematics. The majority of the women of the country know little beyond reading and writing.

The Mexican girl never sees her more free from household cares than the women of most other countries would seem to have much opportunity for social life. But this phase with them is extremely quiet. They drive in their carriage and visit close friends or relatives. They entertain old friends on the occasion of family birthdays and saint's days. But there is lacking the busy system of calls, clubs, receptions and constant theatre going which obtains among American women.

Till a few years ago even the shopping was done largely at home, the stores obligingly sending quantities of silks, laces or other goods for the inspection of an intending purchaser on receipt of a message borne by a servant. The custom was modified by the buyers driving to the stores and having goods brought out to their carriages. Now Mexican women shop as Americans do.

In the capital of the nation and in the State capital there is more or less holding of official functions. Young people enter with romantic zest into their occasional balls and into garden parties held in the "alamedas" or parks of suburban towns and smaller cities. There are the peculiar Christmas festivities lasting for a fortnight. But on account of close chaperonage it all seems tame and oppressively formal to foreigners.

Mexicans homes are pretty well closed to foreigners. But when once a stranger is admitted to the family circle he is accorded not only warm hospitality but, what is more to be appreciated, a tolerant and unmeddlesome respect. Mexicans are thorough Catholics and live under a social regime which belongs to feudal and chivalric times rather than to modern days. Yet they leave a stranger in their midst to worship or fail to worship as he may choose, to come and go and live socially after his own bent.

When a woman wants to pronounce dire curses on man in general she issues the mild note to wear skirts or four consecutive days.

A man never realizes how much he has known till his young son reaches high school age.

When a woman discards all her comfortable home furnishings and gives up for polished floors and furniture built on cubic measure lines you know she is the victim of the "Good Taste and Bad Taste" column of the woman's magazines.

Old Grimes. Old Grimes is dead, that good old man. We are all sad to hear of his death. The neighbors all got sore.

Old Mrs. Grimes made butter and cheese. Grimes carried them to town. And every cent he sold them for. You bet he sat down.

Old Grimes he used to drink the whey. He didn't care for it. But at the very thought of waste Old Grimes he threw a fit.

His children had to drink it, too. And when they cried for bread. He gave to them a spanking time. And sent them off to bed.

Old Mrs. Grimes had one new dress. The year that she was wed. She had to make that garment do. Until old Grimes was dead.

He used to wear a long tailed coat. All buttoned down before. And so he didn't need a shirt. And thus he saved some more.

But when he went the neighbors said. "He was a good old guy." But that's the way it always goes. No matter who may die.

Dumb Man Says "Hello"

Removal of Bit of Bone from Brain Makes Recovery Likely.

New Haven, June 24. When Harry Wiltze, now of No. 154 Plymouth street this city, was fifteen years old twenty-one years ago, he was run over by a wagon when playing ball in 45th street, New York City. In a hospital it was found his skull was fractured. The injury left him insane and he spent a long time in the Middletown N. Y. Asylum. He was released as cured, but the insanity recurred at intervals.

Last December he became dumb. Recently he was removed to St. Raphael's Hospital, here. There an operation was performed on him yesterday by Dr. M. D. Slattery. A piece of the skull that had come in contact with the brain was removed. An hour afterward when Dr. Slattery returned to the room he was greeted from the bed with "Hello, doc!" Wiltze's complete recovery is expected.

WANT KING OF PRUSSIA TO GIVE UP $50,000,000.

Descendants of One of Frederick's Marshals say Royal Treasury "Holds Out." Berlin, June 16. A claim of $20,000,000 is being made against the King of Prussia in connection with a romantic lost fortune dating back to Frederick the Great's period.

Descendants of Marshal Muenich over that gigantic sum lies in the Prussian Treasury and it is stated that in view of certain facts the Government intends suing for an agreement.

The case opened in 1741 when Frederick gave the Marshal, his right hand man, vast estates and monetary rewards amounting to many millions of dollars. The landed property which had previously belonged to a certain infamous Duke of Courland, Ernest Biron by name, was placed in trust for Muenich's son the Marshal declining any personal gain.

Years after the King of Prussia, was called upon, as the donor to decide a dispute over the property between Ernst von Muenich, the son, and Biron. He awarded the first-named compensation, which the present claimants say never left the German Treasury and which should now represent roundly $20,000,000. A long legal tussle occurred in 1803 and again half way through the last century when the Prussian Government decreed that as the Muenichs, father and son, had been exiled, they had lost their right to any property they possessed. This was tantamount to admitting that the money lay in the treasury and is the present claimant's strongest argument.

Whirligig Of History.

A subscriber asks if the opponents of Canadian reciprocity with the United States have always been Conservatives, bankers and manufacturers. Not always. In 1849 Montreal was the head centre of the agitation for reciprocity, just as it is now for the agitation against it. In that year the leading merchants and citizens of Montreal signed a manifesto, urging as a remedy for the prevalent depression a revival of colonial protection by England and reciprocal free trade with the United States. It will be noticed that these two matters of Colonial protection by England and reciprocity with the United States have since become separated, but at that time they were bracketed. Incidentally, the people of Canada had about as much chance of getting a preference in the British free trade market then as they have now. At all events, the manifesto was signed by the Molsons, the Reilpaths, Lathier Holton, John Rose, David Lewis MacPherson and many others who were afterwards prominent in public life. Anyone who has read Canadian history knows just who these men were. The manifesto was followed up by Lord Elgin, the Governor-General who was, if any political label can be attached to so impartial a statesman, a Tory. Lord Elgin made reciprocity with the United States his personal care. He went to Washington in 1854 and came back with a treaty, the only one to do it until Fielding and Patterson turned the trick again 56 years later. This treaty exempted from customs duties on both sides of the line grain, flour, bread stuffs, animals, fresh, smoked and salted meats, fish, lumber of all kinds, there was no pulpwood to complicate matters in those days—poultry, cotton, wool, hides, ores of metal, pitch, tar, ashes, flax, hemp, rice and unmanufactured tobacco. The treaty lasted for twelve years, from 1854 to 1866, when it was abrogated by the Republicans of the United States, who were piqued at Gladstone's avowed sympathy with the Confederates in the Civil War. During the twelve-year period the aggregate interchange of commodities between the two countries rose from $14,230,763 in 1855 to $84,070,955 in 1867. Sir John Bourne, a Canadian historian with Conservative leanings, in his monograph on Lord Elgin, Makers of Canada Series, page 201, says:

Taking Native Wives.

German Colonists Marrying the Samoans Some Angry Women.

Berlin, June 24. Dr. Solf, the governor of Samoa, is very much worried over the proneness of German colonists on that island to take Samoan wives, according to advices received by the Colonial Office. Of the governor's twenty married German officials, twelve have native wives. According to the last mail reports from the island, a German colonist named Michaelis sent a letter to a local paper last April, in which he complained of this habit, and said the native women were unworthy helpmates of white men and more expensive than German girls. The following day hundreds of Samoan women, armed with whips, sticks, garden tools and other weapons, gathered for the purpose of making an attack on Michaelis. The police arrived just in time to smother the colonist to the jail. The women were not appeased and attempted to storm the jail and were only prevented from doing so by the officers of the troops, who had been called out, threatening to order the men to fire. In order to prevent further trouble, the governor was obliged to have Michaelis removed from the island.

Saving the Crystal Palace.

(New York World.)

Like Madison Square Garden, London's Crystal Palace has in recent years been a white elephant on the hands of its owners, and since 1909 has been in the hands of receiver. As a result it is now announced that the famous Palace of Glass which commemorates the glories of the early Victorian reign and the holding of the first great World's Fair in modern times is about to come under the auctioneer's hammer. The date of the sale has been placed for Nov. 1 next, unless in the meantime the government or the English people come to the aid of what for more than half a century has been regarded as a British institution. There is also a possibility of the building and grounds being sold at private sale before that date and to falling into the hands of speculative builders or ever, as the Times phrases it, "the hands of town-planning enthusiasts."

The Origin of Rocks.

The geologist divides rocks into three general classes—igneous rocks, originating from the molten magma forced upward from the bowels of the earth, such as granite and the various lavas; sedimentary rocks, consisting of igneous or sedimentary rocks which have been reformed into rocks themselves, such as sandstone; and metamorphic rocks, consisting of igneous or sedimentary rocks whose composition has been greatly changed by intense heat, chemical action or other causes, as for instance, a limestone that has been changed to marble. Sedimentary rocks, as stated in the geological atlas of the United States Geological Survey, are usually made of layers or beds which can be easily separated. These layers are called strata and rocks deposited in such layers are termed stratified. The surface of the earth is not immovable, over wide regions it very slowly rises or sinks with reference to the sea and shore lines are thereby changed. As a result of upward movement marine sedimentary rocks may become part of the land, and most of our land areas are in fact occupied by rocks originally deposited as sediments in the sea. Sandstone is perhaps the simplest ex-

Sardines Not Really Sardines.

F. W. Williams this city, a pioneer sardine packer, describes in a recent interview in the "Grocery World and General Merchant," a lawsuit he had when he first began to pack sardines in the United States under the name "sardine." The French sardine interests brought suit to prevent him from using the word "sardine," on the ground that the fish were not sardines, but herring. The answer of the American packers was that neither was the French sardine a "sardine" but a pilchard. The court decided that since the French use of the term was no nearer accurate than the American, the former was clearly not entitled to an injunction. To-day all over the world packers call their product sardines, though strictly speaking, none is sardines.—Eastport Cit.

Senator Nelson of Minnesota says his only hope from tariff relief is that it will lead to annexation, which goes to show that delusions are not confined to the Canadian side.

Walter McKenzie, Colin Dick, Chip Green and Arthur Dewar left on Wednesday for St. Andrews, enroute to the Cavalry Camp at Sussex. They took horses with them and on their arrival at St. Andrews were hospitably received in their future comrades at Camp. It is expected this seasons camp will surpass all previous Cavalry drills at Sussex.

The dredge which has been working in St. Andrews harbor in some manner sank at her Moorings Sunday about 1 a.m. in 20 feet of water 3 or 4 men who were aboard had difficulty in getting clear but fortunately all succeeded in doing so. It is not yet known just what caused the accident, but likely some of the miller water ports were left open, a diver an "wrecking" crew is being brought from Yarmouth, N. S.

The season at Camp Utopia as expected is proving a record breaker about 60 boys are now at the camp many of whom come down in the evenings for practice on the ball diamond with the town boys who are putting in good practice under the direction of F. Smith as coach.

On Saturday the 15th the Calais team have promised to come here for a game which should make an interesting game. The Club management are trying to arrange a game for Saturday with one of the St. John teams.

B. G. Murphy laid complaint before Chas. Johnson, P. M., against 5 or 6 of the strikers who last Sunday evening met three of the Back Bay men who had been working for him, and who were returning to their work after spending Sunday at their homes, persuaded two of them to go back, but who however, came back to work on Monday. The trial was to have been held on Wednesday morning, but on application of the defence it was postponed to Thursday 1 p. m. J. D. Baxter of St. John, for prosecution, came here by Wednesday's train leaving again in the afternoon. On Thursday the lawyers not arriving, it was again postponed to Friday 14th. D. Mullin of St. John will act for defence.

Saturday's ball game in which the home team were able to treat the St. Stephen's to a shut out, shows that we have succeeded in getting a first class batting in Woodcock and Gale, and also that the town can furnish an out and inner field to give them good support, and material that with the efficient help of Frank Smith as coach and captain, should during the coming season give the very best local teams work for their money. It is expected one of the crack teams from St. John will shortly come down for a game, and if they do no doubt the boys will make them hustle some. Woodcock is a beautiful clean and easy pitcher with fine control, and has some curves that will puzzle the best of the batsmen, while Gale is an artist in his position excelled by the very few.

Britannia still rules the waves.

The band boys are in hopes to have the new Band Stand ready in about 8 or 10 days. They are now making arrangements for having the work done.

The S. S. Connors Bros. got here Monday morning about 4 a. m., discharged a cool freight, leaving again early in the afternoon. The Viking also made a special trip here on Wednesday morning, leaving again on the same tide.

The Episcopal denomination of N. B. met with a serious loss in the destruction of the beautiful cathedral at Fredericton this week by fire, following a stroke of lightning. Nothing whatever was saved. The edifice cost $200,000 and a fine new organ was placed in it at a cost of several thousand dollars a short time ago. There was about $75,000 insurance.

The following is the standing of our Correspondents for the July distribution of prizes, with points made by each. Our Wilson's Beach and Beaver Harbor correspondents were so close that we have decided to divide the first prize. Wilson's Beach 1st with 57 points; Beaver Harbor 1st-55; Maces Bay 3rd 48; Back Bay 4th-32; Back Bay 5th-30; Mascarene 5th-27; Rolling Dam, 7th-25; Seelie's Cove, 8th 22; Letete, 9th-21; Lords Cove 10th-20; Letang 11th-19; New River Mills 12th-17; Pleasant Ridge 13th 15; Mascarene 14th 14; Dipper Harbor 15th-12; Leonardville 16th 11; Bonny River, 17th-10; Lamberts Cove, 18th-9 points.

besides there are a number of consolation prizes. Our correspondents will notice how very close the points run so that all with a little extra attention could very much better their standing. The prizes will shortly be distributed. We would take this opportunity to ask all our correspondents to start in now and make an extra effort during the next six months for the January distribution.

Dominion Day.

Last Saturday, Dominion Day was well observed in the town although the stores were all open most of the day and the mill and the Granite mills worked in the morning. The weather ideal although somewhat warm, quite early in the day people from the outside places began to arrive by boat, train, etc.

Messrs. Connors Bros. Auxiliary sloop Alpha brought the Black's Harbor ball team and several friends, landing here passengers a short distance below the mouth of the harbor, coming into the harbor on the rise of the tide.

The Auxiliary sloop Alice started with the Back Bay ball team and some of their admirers but coming up the river found a resting place on the mud banks of the river near Silver Island and did not get into the harbor till nearly noon, so that the game between Back Bay and Black's Harbor teams was unable to be called on although an effort was made to have it in the evening but the teams refused to wait over that long, and both parties left for their homes about 7 p. m.

Just before noon the motor boat Rambler arrived with the St. Stephen ball team having made a run in a little less than 4 hours.

In the afternoon after a long and tedious delay, shortly after 3 p. m. Senator Gilmore took a position in front of the Grand Stand made a brief address, suitable to the occasion and the day during which he made a strong plea for clean manly and honest ball, saying that all wished to have their own town win, but he would prefer them to lose every game of the season rather than questionable means should be resorted to gain a game in closing he welcomed the visitors from the different points, and Mayor McGee took his position in the box with Dr. Taylor M. P. P., behind the home plate and tossed the ball which was gracefully (or otherwise) snuffed by the Dr. who returned it back to the box where it shared the same fate.

The game then started with St. Stephen to the bat Woodcock and Gale as battery for the home team, and O'Brien and Tolan for the visitors, with Dawes Gilmore as Umpire, the first inning proved a whitewash as did all the others. The 1st inning for the home team gave them one run while a little goose egg represented the 2nd, the third got another run, and the 4th another 0, when they went to bat for the 5th another pitcher faced them the visitors having put Crawley one of their star pitchers in the box, but the boys soon got on to his curves and in a short time succeeded in piling up 8 runs making the score 10 to 0, at the end of the 5th inning the other 3-1-2 inning a united goose egg for both sides, although in the 9th inning it looked as if the visitors were to score but Woodcock with steady nerve, with 3 men on basis succeeding in putting his 5th man out, without letting in a run, this opening the season with shut out to a pretty strong team from the border towns, although not their top notch one.

St. Stephen will now understand that this year it will require the very best they can send to meet the St. George team.

Dawes Gilmore umpired in a very satisfactory manner one of the visitors putting up a couple of Kicks as he did not seem to realize the extreme curves that Woodcock was able to serve up to him.

THE GRANITE TOWN GREETINGS

Adventurous Voyage

A good many years ago—sixty at any rate—a man named Chute, of Chute's Cove, Annapolis, having some ten barrels of codfish to dispose of, and no disposition to pay freight for the same, or incur any unnecessary expense, put his fish and himself in an open sail boat of about 16 feet keel, and after a successful run through a rough sea, cast anchor at night at Partridge Island—the said anchor being a large stone—as he was unable to reach St. John owing to contrary winds.

There he slept that night, the sky his canopy, a cold dense fog his counterpane, a bundle of fish his pillow, and with the wind to moon a lullaby and the waves to rock him to sleep. Having in due time disposed of his fish he, on the following evening again put to sea having declined the friendly offer of Captain Gilliat, of the schooner Telegraph to take him as a passenger next day. The wind rose on that night, and on the following morning blew a dreadful gale. The Telegraph dare not put to sea, and the steamer Pilot, having ventured out was compelled to not back.

All who knew of his departure concluded that Chute must have been lost; so frail a craft could never survive such a tempest in the Bay of Fundy. But Chute and his little boat did live through the fearful gale, and on the next evening made land at Letten's cove, eight miles west of his place of destination, having carried away the step of his mast during the day. Next morning he again put to sea, the storm still raging, with his only job, which soon went to pieces. However he succeeded in reaching home in safety. This was but one of many extraordinary adventures in this man's history. His preservation in the instance related, seemed almost miraculous.—"An Occasional," in the Acadia Recorder.

Chief Crawford Advised Hyomei for Catarrh.

J. Wilfred Brown of Water St., Campbellton, N. B. says: "Hyomei cured me of a severe case of Catarrh and asthma after four years of suffering. I was constantly hacking and spitting from the head into my throat affected my stomach and I could not enjoy my meals. Chief Crawford having the same trouble advised me to try Hyomei. I did so and soon I was without a sign of the health racking disease that had troubled me for so long. I now recommend Hyomei to all catarrh sufferers. Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me) is guaranteed to cure asthma, bronchitis, croup, coughs and colds. A complete outfit consists of a hard rubber inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei and a unique dropper for filling the inhaler. Your druggists will supply you the outfit for $1.00 (extra bottles 50c.) or postpaid from the R. T. Booth Co. Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont. Money back if it fails. Sold and guaranteed by J. Sutton Clark."

Ranching in South America

In the cattle "camps" of the Entre Rios Province in the Argentine the native population is chiefly of an intermixed stock between the old Spaniards and the Indians, but there are a great many tribes of the Guarany Indians still existing in that part of the country.

The peon, as he is called, is a born rider, and will in case of need think nothing of riding 120 miles a day, which accounts for his sparse build and badly-developed legs. From the earliest days of boyhood he is accustomed to riding, and it is not uncommon to see a boy three years old on a very large horse, with a belt as big as a corset, in the back of which is stuck a large knife. The smaller the boy, the bigger the knife. The peon lives in a very primitive fashion in a habitation of wood branches and mud. He never takes off his clothes, and washes but seldom. In spite of this he defies the conventional teachings of civilized youth by turning out an extremely healthy person.

The peons are divided into two classes—the higher type of man, who is charged with the care of the bulls, an all-important matter, and the less intelligent specimens whose work is to look after the other cattle, bullocks or a willos.

The general breed used by the saladero as the primitive type of meat factories are called, comes from a mixture of the fairly wild native cow and Shorthorn bulls. With the march of progress the old kind of saladero has become antiquated, and companies are now putting up newer structures, and using up-to-date methods by which every part of the animal is made into a marketable article.

Story of the Brooch of Lorn

Writing in T. P.'s Weekly, W. G. gives the following account of his famous Brooch of Lorn:

One of the most interesting exhibits in the antiquarian and historical section of the Glasgow Exhibition will be the Brooch of Lorn, which at one time was the property of King Robert Bruce. It is not made of gold, as Scott represents it, but of silver, and consists of a circular plate about 4 inches in diameter, and having a tongue like that of an ordinary buckle on the under side. The upper side is magnificently ornamented. From the margin rises a neatly formed rim, with hollows cut in the edge at certain intervals. From a circle within this rim rise eight round, tapering obelisks about one inch and a quarter high, finely cut, and each studded at the top with a river pearl. Within this circle of obelisks there is a second rim, within which rises a neat circular case, occupying all the centre of the brooch, and slightly overtopping the obelisks. The exterior of this case projects into eight semi-cylindrical. The upper part is very elegantly carved, and in the centre is a large gem.

In the summer of 1306 Bruce was crowned King at Scone, but was almost immediately defeated in battle by the English, and was forced to become a fugitive. Accompanied by a few gentlemen, he was endeavoring to make his way across the Highlands when on Aug. 11 he was intercepted at Dalry, in Argyllshire, by Alexander of Argyll, ancestor of the Macdonalds of Lorn. He was in alliance with Edward I., and had another cause of enmity against Bruce in that he was uncle by marriage to John Comyn, who was slain by Bruce or a Kirkpatrick at Dumfries. A fierce combat ensued, and Bruce's party were forced to retreat. He himself being the last. Three of the Macdonalds—a father and his two sons—vowed that they would either kill or capture Bruce, and rushed to attack him. Bruce, however, killed the sons, but the father grasped him so tightly by his body that Bruce could not use his sword. With a small hammer he dashed out the man's brains, but the Highlander still kept his grip on the mantle, so that the King, to be free, had to unloose the brooch which fastened it and leave both it and the mantle behind.

Some time in 1809 it came into the hands of one of the Inverawe family, who later on appointed it to be sold for the benefit of his children. In 1819 accordingly it was sent to Messrs. Rundell & Bridge, London, to be sold, the price upon it being £1,000. George IV., then Prince Regent, offered it is said, £300 for it, but did not obtain it, and as no other offer was made the brooch was withdrawn from the market. In 1825 it was bought by General Campbell of Lochmell, and was presented by the Duke of Argyll to Macdonald at a social meeting. Thus after an interval the brooch found its way back to those who may be regarded as its rightful owners.

A Fish to Fear.

Summer visitors on the coast of Maine, especially in the neighborhood of Eastport, are advised to be cautious in wading at low tide among the rock-pools along the shore. If not on their guard they may be attacked and severely bitten by a wolf-fish.

This, according to Dr. Theodore Gill, is one of the most remarkable of finny creatures. Though rarely exceeding three feet in length, it seems to be much more ferocious than the average shark, promptly attacking anybody whom it may suspect of trying to meddle with it.

Anatomically, its most striking feature is its large and powerful teeth which must render it a dangerous antagonist in a fight with an other denizen of the ocean. Apparently, however, it does not feed on fishes, but prefers such delicacies as lobsters, crabs and whelks. In the stomach of one individual, caught at Eastport, four quarts of sea-urchins were found, most of them whole and with the spines on—an uncomfortable article of diet, one might imagine.

The Eskimos in Alaska catch the wolf-fish by baiting their hooks with grass roots—a habit of the fish in those waters being to tear sods of grass, that wash into the sea from the shore or cliff ledges into pieces, as if to eat them. It seems likely, however, that they really do not eat the vegetable stuff but the crabs and mollusks lurking into it.

Large numbers of wolf-fishes are taken by fishermen or cod and haddock lines, but usually they are thrown away, notwithstanding the fact that they are exceedingly good to eat. Their appearance is the reverse of attractive and they have an offensive odor which renders them unmarketable.—Ex.

Money-Trust Profits.

(New York World, Editorial)

How money breeds money, particularly as respects the profits from lending other people's money, is instructively set forth in the summary made by the Wall Street Journal of the reports of the national City Bank, the National Bank of Commerce, the First National and the Chase National to the Comptroller of the Currency. The National City Bank reported a four years' increase of surplus and undivided profits of $12,500,000 on a capital stock of $25,000,000. But it is the record of the First National that best exhibits the enormous potentiality of wealth in the use of depositor funds:

"For a number of years prior to 1901 the bank had dividends of 100 per cent. annually on a capital of $500,000. In 1902 a dividend of 1,900 per cent. was declared the largest ever paid by a banking institution up to that time, for the purpose of increasing the capital to $10,000,000. On this capitalization the bank paid a 20 per cent. dividend annually until 1905, when it was increased to 21 1/2 per cent. with an extra dividend of 3 per cent. In 1906 the rate was increased to 26 1/2 per cent. and in 1907 to 32 per cent.

"A dividend of 100 per cent. was declared in 1908, which, however, was never paid directly to the stockholders but was used to organize the First Security Company, the stock of which was issued in the name of the stockholders of the First National and then trustee to the bank. Since then two dividends have been declared, one on the bank stock amounting to 20 per cent. regular and 8 per cent. extra, and the other amounting to 12 per cent. on the First Security stock. This year the bank stock was put on a regular 28 per cent. rate, which added to the dividend on the security company, gives the stockholders a regular 40 per cent. dividend. On May 20, 1907, the surplus and dividend profits of the company amounted to $19,749,500, and it reported in the same items of June 7, $20,906,700. The dividends in those two years, including the 100 per cent. extra, totalled over $22,000,000."

Compare! with the profits of the Money Trust, the earnings of industrial trusts on their invested capital appear paltry. It is not from oil, steel and tobacco that the greatest gains come, but from money changing and the exploitation of the proceeds of industry.

As Woodrow Wilson said in his speech at Harrisburg recently: "The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly."

A large sugar company in Cuba is experimenting with a new process in which the cane is dried and handled in a manner similar to that adopted in making sugar from beets. This process promises to greatly increase the yield of sugar from cane.

The recent interpretation of Quebec's marriage law has already resulted in another attempt to annul a marriage: this time by a Protestant who wants to get rid of his Catholic wife. The Provincial Legislature may find it necessary to follow Ontario's example in a somewhat similar situation and legalize by a special act such marriages as have been contracted in good faith and in ignorance of the law.
